Female high school students stated § 1983 claim for violation of due process against teacher and county school system superintendent, alleging that teacher sexually harassed and molested them on school premises and that superintendent was aware of and condoned the activities, despite contention that liberty interests protected by Constitution were limited to those involving undue restraint, where alleged abusive acts were clothed in public authority and stature, taking place on school grounds, during school hours, and within context of teacher-student relationship. Wilson v. Webb, W.D.Ky.1994, 869 F.Supp. 496. Civil Rights 1395(2)

University student's allegations that she had intimate relationship with one of her professors and that professor failed to attend appointments, gave her lower grades and demeaned her after relationship ended was insufficient to state claim against professor for sexual harassment or discrimination based on gender; professor's conduct did not stem from his discriminatory action against women, but rather was the way he ended relationship with student. Ruh v. Samerjan, E.D.Wis.1993, 816 F.Supp. 1326, affirmed 32 F.3d 570. Civil Rights 1067(3)

1711. Sexual abuse by school employees, deprivation of education rights

School district's actions in entering into a confidential settlement agreement with teacher rather than terminating him outright for molesting student, and in providing him with a neutral letter of recommendation, did not rise to the level of deliberate indifference so as to warrant imputing liability to school district under § 1983 for teacher's sexual molestation of student in another district after he left his employment with district; school district did not have any actual knowledge of the extent of teacher's misconduct and did not know that another district would subsequently hire teacher or that he would molest a student there. Shrum ex rel. Kelly v. Kluck, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2001, 249 F.3d 773. Civil Rights 1351(5)

School board superintendent did not deprive high school student of her right to equal protection by failing to remedy teacher's sexual abuse of student, thus entitling superintendent to qualified immunity in his individual capacity, since, even assuming that failing to terminate or suspend teacher after learning of allegations of sexual abuse could have rendered superintendent liable under certain circumstances, student in fact suffered no injury following superintendent's awareness of her allegations of abuse; after superintendent learned of student's allegations, student did not suffer any further sexual abuse, sexual harassment, or harm of any sort while attending county's public schools. Hartley v. Parnell, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1999, 193 F.3d 1263, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(5); Constitutional Law 224(2); Schools 63(3)

School district's failure to adopt an official policy regarding steps to be taken in response to allegations of sexual abuse of student by school employee did not amount to deliberate indifference that would support § 1983 liability for alleged abuse of students by teacher, as there was no evidence that lack of policy was result of intentional choice by district, and custom of permitting principals to address particular allegations of abuse was reasonable. Doe on Behalf of Doe v. Dallas Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1998, 153 F.3d 211. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Individual school officials and school district were not liable under § 1983 for student's damages allegedly arising out of homosexual relationship with teacher where once alerted to possibility of sexual relationship between student and teacher, school officials attempted to monitor student's phone calls, they interviewed student, they administered two polygraphs to student, and they confronted teacher, and once they had conclusive proof of relationship, they immediately began proceedings to terminate teacher and revoke her teaching certification. Kinman v. Omaha Public School Dist., C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 94 F.3d 463. Civil Rights 1346; Civil Rights 1356

While high school teacher's alleged sexual abuse of student had satisfied § 1983 suit requirement that constitutionally protected right to victim be violated, in connection with suit on behalf of victim against another teacher for violating state statute requiring that teacher report sexual abuse within 48 hours after receipt of information, victim would be required to independently establish that teacher's inaction was conduct "under color of state law." Doe v. Rains County Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 66 F.3d 1402, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(6)

School district did not act with deliberate indifference in failing to remove from the classroom teacher accused of sexually molesting two students, and thus student molested after district instead decided to transfer teacher to another school could not recover against district under § 1983, where district's board of trustees immediately initiated investigation when presented with earlier abuse complaint, and conduct which formed basis for earlier investigation was much less egregious than that to which student was later subjected. Gonzalez v. Ysleta Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 996 F.2d 745, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 20 F.3d 471. Civil Rights 1066

Former student could maintain civil rights action against school officials for establishing and maintaining, with alleged deliberate indifference to the consequences, a policy, practice or custom of failing to take action with respect to complaints of sexual misconduct by teacher which allegedly directly caused former student constitutional harm. Stoneking v. Bradford Area School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 882 F.2d 720, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 840, 493 U.S. 1044, 107 L.Ed.2d 835. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Fifth-grade female student's allegations that teacher exposed and touched student's lower abdomen during unwanted ringworm examination, pressed student's abdomen in attempt to force her to urinate, coerced and manipulated student to kiss, hug, and sit on teacher's lap, and insisted on rolling lint brush over student's chest, were sufficient to support §§ 1983 claim based on violation of student's substantive due process right to bodily integrity. Doe v. D'Agostino, D.Mass.2005, 367 F.Supp.2d 157. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 147

Sexual molestation of a student by a teacher is a constitutional injury redressable in an action under § 1983. Bell ex rel. Bell v. Board of Educ. of County of Fayette, S.D.W.Va.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 701. Civil Rights 1066

Neither genital touching nor sexual intercourse are necessary to state a claim for sexual abuse against public school teacher under § 1983. Hinkley v. Baker, D.Me.2000, 122 F.Supp.2d 48. Civil Rights 1066

School principal showed deliberate indifference to student who was sexually abused by teacher, by waiting to pass report of teacher's prior sexual abuse on to her superiors, by failing to report a lap-sitting incident, and by choosing not to increase monitoring activities beyond her normal daily rounds of the school, after her superior instructed her to closely monitor teacher; therefore, supervisory liability against principal was proper under section 1983. Baynard v. Lawson, E.D.Va.2000, 112 F.Supp.2d 524, affirmed 268 F.3d 228, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1357, 535 U.S. 954, 152 L.Ed.2d 353. Civil Rights 1066; Civil Rights 1356

Actions alleged to have been taken by school administrators with respect to sexual harassment and abuse perpetrated by two teachers on student were objectively reasonable and did not exhibit deliberate indifference to student's constitutional rights, and could not form basis for action under § 1983, absent any evidence that administrators were aware of pattern of inappropriate sexual behavior pointing plainly toward conclusion that teachers were sexually abusing student, where all allegations against teachers were immediately and personally investigated and reported to supervisory personnel and police. Doe v. Granbury I.S.D., N.D.Tex.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 667. Civil Rights 1066; Civil Rights 1067(3)

School district's policy which did not require criminal background checks for substitute teachers did not result in violation of statutory right enjoyed by student sexually molested by substitute teacher, as required to impose liability on district under § 1983, even though state law required performance of criminal background checks on all prospective school employees, where even if teacher's record had been checked, it would have yielded no information that would have prevented his employment. Mirelez v. Bay City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1998, 992 F.Supp. 916. Civil Rights 1351(2)

For purposes of deciding summary judgment motion on former student's § 1983 claim against public school officials, district court would assume, without deciding, that former student had constitutional right to be protected from sexual abuse by school teacher, and that his right was clearly established in law by dates in question. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Even if student had raised issue of fact as to claim that school district maintained policy of transferring "troubled teachers" to schools predominantly populated with minority students, sexual assaults on student by such a teacher five to six months after the student withdrew from the school where the teacher taught were too remote a consequence of the transfer policies to hold the district liable under § 1983. Becerra v. Asher, S.D.Tex.1996, 921 F.Supp. 1538, affirmed 105 F.3d 1042, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 111 F.3d 894, supplemented on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 82, 522 U.S. 824, 139 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1066

Parents failed to state claim under § 1983, against gym teacher who allegedly exposed himself to children, for deprivation of parents' liberty interest in creation and maintenance of parent-child relationship; parents did not allege that teacher intentionally or directly acted to deprive them of or diminish their familial relationship with children, and parents suffered no permanent, physical loss of association. Divergilio v. Skiba, E.D.Mich.1996, 919 F.Supp. 265. Civil Rights 1066

Allegations that school board, principal, and superintendent were individually liable for sexual abuse of elementary students by public school teacher, alleged due process violation needed to state § 1983 civil rights claim; defendants were alleged to have had knowledge of teacher's continuous sexual contact with plaintiffs and failed to remedy problem. Does v. Covington County School Bd., M.D.Ala.1995, 884 F.Supp. 462. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Parents of eighth grader who became sexually involved with her basketball coach had no cause of action under § 1983 against school officials based on parents' constitutional right to care, custody and companionship of their child, as they had not lost physical custody, nor had severe and permanent injury rendered relationship meaningless. R.L.R. v. Prague Public School Dist. I-103, W.D.Okla.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1526. Civil Rights 1066

The law recognizes liability under § 1983 for sexual molestation or excessive punishment exacted on school student by public school employee. B.M.H. by C.B. v. School Bd. of City of Chesapeake, Va., E.D.Va.1993, 833 F.Supp. 560. Civil Rights 1065; Civil Rights 1066

1712. Shootings, deprivation of education rights

Student's voluntary attendance at school-sponsored function did not give rise to special relationship with school which would render school board and school principal liable for shooting of student by third parties while student was waiting for his ride home. Mitchell v. Duval County School Bd., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 107 F.3d 837. Schools 89.2

Even if state could be liable under § 1983 on theory that it created danger and even if decision of school district and high school principal to sponsor dance at high school despite their awareness of dangers posed thereby was negligent, conduct of state actors did not rise to level of deliberate indifference to rights of student killed by random gunfire in parking lot of school after the dance. Leffall v. Dallas Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.)

Black student shot while participating in a high school football game failed to state a cause of action under § 1983 against city officials for a due process violation resulting from failure to provide adequate security at interracial school events, as complaint alleged no more than simple negligence on part of officials and did not allege that officials had knowledge of impending attack or that there had been racial violence at previous athletic events. Williams v. City of Boston, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1986, 784 F.2d 430. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Allegations of § 1983 complaint brought by parents and siblings of victims of shooting at state university medical center were sufficient to infer that actions of administrator of security of medical center may have constituted gross negligence and willful, reckless and wanton conduct, and were sufficient to trigger protections of due process clause, for purposes of the § 1983 action. Beck v. Calvillo, D.Kan.1987, 671 F.Supp. 1555. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1713. Special education, deprivation of education rights

Student, who was denied special education services for handicapped under C.R.S. '63, 123-22-1 et seq. by Colorado State Board of Education, was not denied federal constitutional rights under this section since right to education is not among those rights guaranteed by federal Constitution. Flemming v. Adams, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1967, 377 F.2d 975, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 219, 389 U.S. 898, 19 L.Ed.2d 216.

Violation of procedural safeguards of the IDEA by school board and school officials entitled disabled student to IDEA remedies, but did not rise to level of constitutional violation, so as to support student's § 1983 claims. Smith ex rel. Duck v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 370, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 402 F.3d 468. Civil Rights 1069; Schools 155.5(5)

Paraplegic former student failed to state § 1983 cause of action against state officials for alleged deprivation of right to due process in connection with amendment of his individualized written rehabilitation program where paraplegic received prior notice and opportunity to be heard at time program was amended in accordance with challenged ceiling on tuition and maintenance expenses, even though he did not receive prior notice nor was given opportunity to be heard at time challenged policy was adopted. McGuire v. Switzer, S.D.N.Y.1990, 734 F.Supp. 99 . Civil Rights 1069; Constitutional Law 318(2)

Where parents of emotionally handicapped child provided no hint as to how their due process rights might have been abridged by New York State Department of Education's refusal to reimburse them for unilateral placement of their mentally handicapped child in private out of state institution, and parents did not show how they were treated unfairly, parents failed to state claim under this section. Smrcka by Smrcka v. Ambach, E.D.N.Y.1983, 555 F.Supp. 1227. Schools 155.5(2.1)

1714. Student loans, deprivation of education rights

Student debtors residing in four-county area in Western Pennsylvania and who had defaulted on student loans guaranteed by the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency were denied due process by practice of the Agency of bringing action on such debts in a distant forum within the state. Phillips v. Pennsylvania Higher Ed. Assistance Agency, W.D.Pa.1980, 497 F.Supp. 712, reversed on other grounds 657 F.2d 554, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1284, 455 U.S. 924, 71 L.Ed.2d 466. Constitutional Law 305(4.1)

1715. Testing, deprivation of education rights

That psychological test being given in elementary school might not be educationally valid one for a few individual children did not alone show constitutional deprivation. Murray v. West Baton Rouge Parish School Bd., C.A.5

1716. Textbooks, deprivation of education rights--Generally

School textbook purchase procedure which provided for input from faculty members assigned to instruct given courses, evaluation by citizens textbook committee and final consideration and selection by entire school board after consultation with its in-house professional and administrative staff was fair, equitable and logical. Minarcini v. Strongsville City School Dist., N.D.Ohio 1974, 384 F.Supp. 698, affirmed in part, vacated in part 541 F.2d 577. Schools 167

1717. ---- Racial discrimination, textbooks, deprivation of education rights

Action of textbook approval committee in rejecting specified textbook and thereby precluding the purchase of such textbook with state funds evidenced a racially discriminatory purpose, and thus violated this section, since reasons given by some committee members for rejecting the textbooks indicated that race was a motivating factor, those members who did not indicate that race influenced them in their decision did not indicate any other reason for their rejection, and the legislative history and background of the state textbook statutes demonstrated racially discriminatory policies as a motivating factor. Loewen v. Turnipseed, N.D.Miss.1980, 488 F.Supp. 1138. Civil Rights 1041; Civil Rights 1070

1718. Transportation, deprivation of education rights

Black and impoverished elementary school children residing more than 1.5 miles from schools to which they were assigned under desegregation plan did not have a constitutional right to free bus transportation where such students were not carrying any greater burdens than before the desegregation plan became effective, where busing had never been utilized by the school board, in a district coterminous with city limits, and where unitary school plan was effected by use of zones and no student was assigned to a school outside contiguous zone in which he resided. Sutton v. City of Hattiesburg, S.D.Miss.1973, 367 F.Supp. 1154. Schools 159.5(2)

1719. Transfer policy, deprivation of education rights

Ultimate failure of school district's punitive and preventative measures in response to incidents of pupils' racial name-calling and physical abuse of Asian-American elementary student, and district's refusal to allow student to either transfer schools or skip a grade, did not result in § 1983 liability for alleged violations of the student's right to equal protection; there was no evidence that student's transfer or skipping grade would alleviate problems, district's refusal to break long-standing policies regarding transfers and class acceleration was reasonable, and measures taken by district were reasonable attempts to address reported problems. Yap v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 284. Constitutional Law 220(3); Schools 154(1); Schools 163

Parents, whose children were subjected to the allegedly unconstitutional transfer policies, had standing to seek nominal damages and limited declaratory relief in civil rights suit challenging validity of school district's plan limiting a student's ability to transfer out of a neighborhood school. Comfort v. Lynn School Committee, D.Mass.2001, 150 F.Supp.2d 285, rescinded in part 283 F.Supp.2d 328, reversed 2004 WL 2348505, opinion withdrawn on grant of rehearing, on rehearing 418 F.3d 1, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 798, 163 L.Ed.2d 627. enrolled at university and from April, 1970 to June 1972, she held a series of jobs in Pittsburgh, after registering to vote in Pennsylvania in August, 1970, she qualified for resident tuition rates in June, 1971, notwithstanding an unfortunate separation from her husband in July, 1972 resulting in her returning to New Jersey in July, 1972 and remaining there after reconciliation with her husband at later date. Samuel v. University of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 538 F.2d 991. Colleges And Universities 9.20(2)

Right to pay residency tuition at state university is not concerned with one of fundamental rights so as to be tested against compelling state interest standard. Kelm v. Carlson, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1973, 473 F.2d 1267, 67 O.O.2d 275. Constitutional Law 82(12)

University board of regents did not deny student due process under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 by failing to classify him as resident student for tuition purposes where student introduced no evidence indicating that regulations, which permitted nonresident students to acquire residency status if, after becoming emancipated, they established bona fide residence in state for at least one year, were applied to him in vagarious, whimsical, uneven or capricious manner. Vanlaarhoven v. Newman, D.C.R.I.1983, 564 F.Supp. 145. Colleges And Universities 9.20(2); Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1)

1741. Deprivation of employment rights generally

First Amendment, equal protection and due process clauses of Fourteenth Amendment, and other provisions of Federal Constitution afford protection to employees who serve government as well as to those who are served by them, and section 1983 provides cause of action for all citizens injured by abridgement of those protections. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1027; Constitutional Law 82(11); Constitutional Law 238.5; Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

District of Columbia employee, who complained of sexual harassment by supervisor, did not as a result suffer any adverse employment action that rose to level of actionable retaliation merely because of alleged isolated insult by supervisor, change in work shift which was in accordance with policy for all probationary employees, lateral transfer without diminution in pay or benefits, or insistence by DOC that employee verify reason for seeking time off. Jones v. District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections, C.A.D.C.2005, 429 F.3d 276, 368 U.S.App.D.C. 279. District Of Columbia 7

When a plaintiff attempts to use § 1983 as a parallel remedy to a Title VII claim, the prima facie elements to establish liability are the same under both statutes. Rivera v. Puerto Rico Aqueduct and Sewers Authority, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 331 F.3d 183, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 141

Not every negative employment decision or event is adverse employment action that can give rise to discrimination or retaliation cause of action under section 1983. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1125; Civil Rights 1245

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether former assistant superintendent resigned from his employment with school district, whether his position was validly abolished following his purported resignation, and whether his fraudulent conduct justified education board's unilateral decision to rescind his executory contract to serve as superintendent, precluding summary judgment for assistant superintendent in his §§ 1983 claim alleging due process violations in connection with his termination and the rescission of executory contract. Nichiporuk v. Board of Educ. of Palmyra-Macedon Central School Dist., W.D.N.Y.2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 242. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

In order to succeed on § 1983 claim, employee of state commission had to prove that commission employees and officials were acting under color of state law and that they deprived her of a constitutional right. Verney v. Dodaro, M.D.Pa.1995, 872 F.Supp. 188, affirmed 79 F.3d 1140. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Property rights including legitimate expectancy of continuation of public employment, are within ambit of protection of this section. Alicea Rosado v. Garcia Santiago, D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 414 F.Supp. 709. Civil Rights 1071

1742. Public employees and civil servants, deprivation of employment rights

Evidence was sufficient for jury to conclude in civil rights lawsuit that mayor's termination of transitory employee in Puerto Rico municipality on basis that there was not sufficient funds for her social worker position was pretext for discrimination in violation of First Amendment political affiliation rights of employee, where replacement was hired only five months later from mayor's political party and municipality did not follow through on its obligation to summon employee to compete for her old job before it was again filled. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1430

City was not liable, under § 1983, for alleged violation of First Amendment rights of former director of city's social service department, through city's passage of ordinance that eliminated director's position, absent evidence that more than two of six members of nine-member city council who voted for ordinance acted with intent to punish director for protected speech or were subjected to widespread constituent pressure. Scott-Harris v. City of Fall River, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 134 F.3d 427, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 2430, 520 U.S. 1263, 138 L.Ed.2d 192, reversed 118 S.Ct. 966, 523 U.S. 44, 140 L.Ed.2d 79, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1184, 523 U.S. 1003, 140 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1128

If public employees resign of their own free will, even as result of employer's actions, they voluntarily relinquish their property interests and employer does not deprive them of property without due process of law in violation of § 1983. Yearous v. Niobrara County Memorial Hosp. By and Through Bd. of Trustees, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1997, 128 F.3d 1351, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1515, 523 U.S. 1074, 140 L.Ed.2d 669. Civil Rights 1125

"Public employee" standard for First Amendment claims against state-related defendants did not apply to First Amendment claims of owner of towing and wrecker service against city, city chief of police, and county sheriff, arising from revocation of permission for owner to use police radio frequency in business after owner complained to chief of police respecting bidding procedure for abandoned vehicles towing contract with city; relationship between owner and defendants did not rise to level of even quasi-employment relationship, and owner's speech was not work-related grievance. Blackburn v. City of Marshall, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 42 F.3d 925. Automobiles 370; Constitutional Law 90.1(9)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether failure to follow nine-step merit selection and recruitment process for acquiring permanent career status under Puerto Rico's Autonomous Municipalities Act of 1991 (AMA) when municipal employees had been initially appointed to permanent career positions, which was the reason proffered by mayor and other municipal officials for failing to reinstate employees to permanent career positions upon their separation from trust positions to which they had been appointed after their initial career appointments, was pretext for political discrimination precluded summary judgment for mayor and other municipal officials, in employees' §§ 1983 action alleging political discrimination in violation of First Amendment. Roman v. Delgado Altieri, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 94, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 3358906.

Merely juxtaposing his party affiliation with that of defendants and alleging unfair treatment is insufficient for public employee to establish prima facie case of political discrimination. Figueroa Montes v. Foy, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 168. Civil Rights 1421

Where important conditions of employment are involved, public employee will not be foreclosed from § 1983 relief for First Amendment violation merely because the impermissible retaliation did not result in termination of his or her employment. DeLeon v. Little, D.Conn.1997, 981 F.Supp. 728. Constitutional Law 82(11)

Former New Jersey-appointed motor vehicle agents who alleged that they were removed solely because of their political affiliation in violation of their constitutional rights were not "public employees" and were not entitled to injunctive relief and compensatory and punitive damages under the Civil Rights Act. Horn v. Kean, D.C.N.J.1984,

1743. Due process generally, deprivation of employment rights

Public employee, physician working in correctional facility, had not been deprived of his due process rights by manner that employer handled his numerous disciplinary proceedings, for purpose of employee's claim of constructive discharge due to harassing behavior, where employee had right to file grievance after any of alleged harassing disciplinary charges, but never did so, and there was nothing to suggest that such hearing would have been futile or unavailing. Witte v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 434 F.3d 1031. Prisons 7

Retired county sheriff's deputies had protected property interest in group health insurance coverage at same premium rate as for active deputies, as required for deputies' §§1983 action against county alleging that their insurance premiums had been raised above those for active deputies without due process; state statute expressly provided that continued group coverage be provided to retirees at same premium rate. Germano v. Winnebago County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 403 F.3d 926, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 277(2)

County's act of setting up separate employee benefit plan for retired sheriff's deputies which charged higher premiums than for active deputies, in contravention of state statute and without pre-deprivation hearing, was random and unauthorized, and thus did not constitute due process violation, precluding retired deputy's §§1983 action against county; act directly and concededly violated state law and thus was unpredictable by state. Germano v. Winnebago County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 403 F.3d 926, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 278.4(4); Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Sheriffs And Constables 32

Allegations of employee of Puerto Rico government administration that she was a career employee with a property interest in her job, that her duties and privileges were unilaterally curtailed following election, that a hearing on her demotion was a "sham," and that decision on the outcome of hearing was delayed in order to benefit a member of another political party who replaced her were sufficient to state a §§ 1983 claim based on procedural due process violation. Medina Diaz v. Gonzalez Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 77. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Territories 23

Failure to show any disparate treatment precluded claim by terminated cheerleading coordinator for state university that she was terminated without being provided due process, after she allegedly interjected her Christian religion into cheerleading activities and then read statement to squad expressing hostility after she was placed on probation due to religious activities. Braswell v. Board of Regents of University System of Ga., N.D.Ga.2005, 369 F.Supp.2d 1371. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

Employee of municipality stated claim that she was deprived of her due process rights when she was twice suspended without pay without receiving proper hearing. Figueroa-Garay v. Municipality of Rio Grande, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1395(8)

To properly assert a procedural due process claim under §§ 1983, plaintiff must show that: (1) he had a property interest, and (2) that defendants, acting under color of state law, deprived them of that property interest without providing him a constitutionally adequate procedure. Ramos Rodriguez v. Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 6. Civil Rights 1324; Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 278(1)

Police officer failed to state claim that he was deprived of property interest without due process of law because of his alleged permanent transfer to uniformed patrol unit, where he did not allege that he suffered any pecuniary loss resulting from his alleged permanent transfer. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Prison guard's allegations that his supervisors attempted to frame him for drug offense by persuading prisoners to lie about him, that his supervisors ordered prison guard to fabricate misconduct charges against prisoners and then assigned him to work with those prisoners, that supervisors took such actions because of prison guard's race and that supervisors' actions forced prison guard to take and remain on stress leave were sufficient to state § 1983 substantive due process claim against supervisors. Ware v. Curley, E.D.Mich.1996, 934 F.Supp. 259. Civil Rights 1395(8)

A public employee may not be deprived of his property or liberty interest in continued government employment absent some due process protection. Eley v. Morris, N.D.Ga.1975, 390 F.Supp. 913. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Director for county agency did not have right to have attorney present at pre-disciplinary hearing under due process principles, which required only notice and opportunity to respond prior to deprivation of job benefits. Speiser v. Engle, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 107 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 1745785, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Counties 67

1744. Property interest, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Former city employee had no federal constitutionally protected interest in future employment, and thus employee could not maintain § 1983 action against city for violation of due process based on allegedly false and defamatory statements made about him when city was asked for references by security agencies with whom he sought employment, absent showing that security agencies generally applied to city to seek their approval before hiring new security guards. Muniz v. City of Harlingen, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 247 F.3d 607. Constitutional Law 275(1); Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Municipal Corporations 218(10)

Electrician did not have protectible property interest in anticipated new job with city's water department, as required to state § 1983 claim based on city's alleged violation of his due process rights in depriving him of interest, given absence of enforceable written or oral employment contract. Zemke v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 100 F.3d 511. Constitutional Law 277(2)

For property interest to arise, as required for procedural due process claim, government employee must have legitimate claim of entitlement to continued employment, as opposed to mere subjective expectancy. Batra v. Board of Regents of University of Nebraska, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 79 F.3d 717. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Owner of towing and wrecker service failed to allege property interest in remaining on city's and county's rotating on-call list for accident wrecker service as required for his due process claims against city, its chief of police, and county sheriff, arising from revocation of permission for owner to use police radio frequency in business and owner's removal from on-call list after owner complained to chief respecting bidding procedure for abandoned vehicles towing contract with city; owner essentially claimed right to receive certain class of business referrals from local government, and did not allege that any governmental action prevented or restricted him from doing business with private citizens. Blackburn v. City of Marshall, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 42 F.3d 925. Civil Rights 1395(3); Civil Rights 1395(5)

Failure to provide due process to employee with property interest in state employment is actionable under § 1983. Buttitta v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1198, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1125

Public employee faced with termination is entitled to procedural due process if he or she can demonstrate that termination implicates a property interest protected by due process clause; such property right derives from the employee's legitimate claim of entitlement to continued employment, which arises from independent sources such as state laws, rules, or understandings that secure benefits to employees. Calhoun v. Gaines, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 982 F.2d 1470. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Given New Mexico Metropolitan Court's unrestricted authority to terminate court administrator for any reason, administrator had no constitutionally protected property interest in his job, regardless of any expectations by administrator that he would only be terminated by metropolitan court independently exercising its authority, rather than by order of state Supreme Court; procedures provided for his termination did not create property interest. Russillo v. Scarborough, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1991, 935 F.2d 1167. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Evidence in action by former directors of bank against Secretary of Treasury of Puerto Rico and successor directors was not sufficient to establish that directorship carried with it collateral benefits capable of economic valuation such that directorship would be property interest within meaning of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Rodriguez de Quinonez v. Perez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1979, 596 F.2d 486, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 78, 444 U.S. 840, 62 L.Ed.2d 51. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Allegation that former Puerto Rico housing department employee was removed from her career position by her supervisors supported claim that she was deprived of a property interest under color of state law, in violation of her right to due process. Gutierrez v. Molina, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 168. Territories 23

Alleged promises by Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) to promote employees, who were "acting" as supervisors, did not create property right under New York law, as required for employees' § 1983 claim for violation of their procedural due process rights; employees were not entitled to promotion, under civil service law, and city had broad discretion in matters of promotion. Bheemarao v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2001, 141 F.Supp.2d 446. Constitutional Law 277(2)

City board of education employee had no property interest in her interim position as high school's acting supervisor of special education and, therefore, could not assert § 1983 procedural due process claim based on her involuntary transfer from such position. Murray v. Board of Educ. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 984 F.Supp. 169. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Employee of state Department of Corrections (DOC) who had been transferred from his original position as drill instructor did not have property interest in continued employment as drill instructor and, therefore, could not state § 1983 claim for deprivation of property interest without due process of law. Gamper v. State of Ala. Dept. of Corrections, M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1483. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Municipal judge did not have vested right or property interest in his position, where city ordinance provided that term of municipal judge shall be by appointment of city council by majority vote of governing party. Salmon v. Miller, E.D.Tex.1996, 951 F.Supp. 103. Constitutional Law 102(1); Constitutional Law 277(2); Judges 7

Work responsibilities that are uncompensated do not create protectible property interest under § 1983. Wagner v. Texas A & M University, S.D.Tex.1996, 939 F.Supp. 1297. Constitutional Law 277(1)

State university employee on probationary status under terms of collective bargaining agreement had no interest protected by due process clause arising from his suspension during pending criminal investigation to establish claim under § 1983. Boykin v. Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.1995, 893 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 91 F.3d 122, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 739, 519 U.S. 1078, 136 L.Ed.2d 678. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Constitutional Law 277(2)

Employee could not base § 1983 action against state natural resources department upon due process clause, for department's alleged refusals to transfer employee due to disability; employee failed to identify state law, rule or regulation creating property interest in employee's right to be transferred or "classified according to his abilities." Bodiford v. State of Ala., M.D.Ala.1994, 854 F.Supp. 886. Civil Rights 1220

Whether plaintiff has constitutionally protected property interest in his employment depends upon whether state or some other independent source provided him with an expectation of continued employment; expectation of continued employment may arise through implied agreements or administrative regulations. Jackson v. Johns, D.Colo.1989, 714 F.Supp. 1126. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Former employees of a county detention center, who were terminated for allegedly violating a rule against entering the facility's walk-in refrigerator, had no substantial liberty or property interest in their jobs sufficient to support a cause of action under this section, and they received notice and an opportunity to respond to the charges against them sufficient to satisfy due process requirements. Fritz v. Norblad, D.C.Or.1983, 566 F.Supp. 1459. Civil Rights 1128; Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

For purposes of this section, person may have protected property interest in public employment if there is contractual or statutory guaranty of continued employment, except for removal for cause. Johnson v. Cushing, D.C.Minn.1980, 483 F.Supp. 608. Civil Rights 1128

Mayor's termination of municipal employee was intentional, a pre-termination process was in place, and no emergency situation existed, and therefore employee was deprived of procedural due process when she was fired, even if she did not avail herself of post-termination remedies; employee received no pre-termination opportunity to respond to her termination. Brown v. Town of LaBarge, WY, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2004, 97 Fed.Appx. 216, 2004 WL 370948, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 218(8)

1745. ---- State law generally, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

Whether government employee has sufficient property interest in employment to be protected by due process is a matter of state law. Calhoun v. Gaines, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 982 F.2d 1470. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Existence of property interest in public employment must be decided by reference to state law. Driggins v. City of Oklahoma City, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1511, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 129, 506 U.S. 843, 121 L.Ed.2d 84. Constitutional Law 277(2)

For purposes of showing property interest in continued employment necessary to assert § 1983 claim for violation of constitutional due process, property interests are not created by the Constitution, but are defined by state law. Couch v. Wilkinson, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1991, 939 F.2d 673. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Former municipal clerk did not have job protection, because she was not "reappointed" under New Jersey law, and, therefore, she did not have protectable property interest in her employment under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, even though she completed six month portion of her "6 month 3 year" term as acting municipal clerk and she started second three-year term as municipal clerk; to obtain job protection as reappointed clerk, she had to serve three years prior to being reappointed, and that did not occur. Rieger v. Township of Fairfield, D.N.J.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 648, reversed and remanded 121 Fed.Appx. 944, 2005 WL 293641. Constitutional Law 277(2); Municipal Corporations 218(8)

Determination of whether plaintiff has constitutionally protected property interest in continued public employment is question of state law. Pipkin v. City of Moore, Okl., W.D.Okla.1990, 735 F.Supp. 1004, affirmed 930 F.2d 34. Federal Courts 421

1746. ---- Statutes, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency Law creating Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency did not bestow upon agency right to enter into employment contract with its employees contrary to general rule that public employees in Pennsylvania had at-will status and were subject to summary removal by employing agency, and thus construction representative of agency had no property interest in his employment for purpose of § 1983 claim. Cooley v. Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1987, 830 F.2d 469. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Laid off state merit system employees who brought action under this section against State and certain officials thereof failed to prove existence of constitutionally protected liberty interest, since KRS 18.110(17), 18.210(14, 16) governing layoffs contains no requirement to show cause and permits layoffs due to reorganization, lack of funds or work, or abolishment of positions and, furthermore, though employees may have had expectation of continued employment, it was unilateral one and did not rise to level of constitutionally protected right. Riggs v. Com. of Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1984, 734 F.2d 262, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 184, 469 U.S. 857, 83 L.Ed.2d 118. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Town accountant who was not reappointed at end of fixed, three-year term did not have property interest in continued employment under town charter or Massachusetts statutes sufficient to require town authorities to give her due process hearing. Metivier v. Town of Grafton, D.Mass.2001, 148 F.Supp.2d 98, affirmed 283 F.3d 391. Constitutional Law 277(2); Towns 28

Town building inspector had protected property interest in his job, and therefore allegation that he was suspended without pay because of his refusal to misuse his authority in a harassment campaign by town officers against certain property owners supported a due process claim under § 1983; applicable statute made his position a three-year appointment that prohibited removal without cause, and then only after a hearing by the appointing authority. Columbus v. Biggio, D.Mass.1999, 76 F.Supp.2d 43. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Towns 28

1747. ---- Ordinances, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

City ordinance providing that employer contributions to employee's pension fund were to be equal in amount for all employees at same grade on pay range table gave city employees property interest in equal employer contributions, for purposes of § 1983 claim against city for refusing to pay employer contributions for overtime and bonus pay. Adamson v. City of Provo, Utah, D.Utah 1993, 819 F.Supp. 934. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1748. ---- Contracts generally, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

Any contract rights that state employee had in his job did not create property right that would support § 1983 claim against state for deprivation of property right, where contract was not made pursuant to statute or authorizing regulation. Koepping v. Tri-County Metropolitan Transp. Dist. of Oregon, C.A.9 (Or.) 1997, 120 F.3d 998. Civil Rights 1128

Whether employment contract permits dismissal solely for cause, for purpose of public employee's civil rights claim against employer, is matter of state law. Cummings v. South Portland Housing Authority, C.A.1 (Me.) 1993, 985 F.2d 1. Federal Courts 411

Where state officials violate terms of employment contract that does not create a "property" interest in job itself under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, proper remedy lies in suit for breach of contract, not an action under this section. Bleeker v. Dukakis, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1981, 665 F.2d 401. Civil Rights 1312

Former employees of Puerto Rico Department of Education, alleging political motivation for nonrenewal of their one-year contracts, failed to state claim for due process violation; employees lacked property interest in their positions beyond contractual term. rights action against Commonwealth of Puerto Rico alleging political discrimination, although he was considered for the position and interviewed, since employment contract documents were not signed and no appointment was made. Soto Gonzalez v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 418. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Physician's statement that he "was told, understood, and believed, that he was employed pursuant to a contract, formed by oral offer and acceptance, that was partially written, particularly as to terms and conditions of employment discipline and corrective actions" was inadequate as an evidentiary showing to create genuine issue of material fact as to existence of property interest in his employment and clinical privileges at county hospital for purposes of his § 1983 action; nothing in statement ascribed to hospital's authorized decisionmakers any contractual commitment running to physician. Draghi v. County of Cook, N.D.Ill.1998, 991 F.Supp. 1055, affirmed 184 F.3d 689, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Oral representation by hiring officer that state employee would not be removed without cause did not create property interest in position, so as to sustain employee's claim that her discharge violated her due process rights, when officer lacked statutory authority to enter into such employment contract. King v. Lensink, D.Conn.1989, 720 F.Supp. 236. Constitutional Law 277(2); States 53

School superintendent had property interest in continuation in his position sufficient to support civil rights action against school board for dismissing him where dismissal occurred during contractual period before expiration of the contract. Okeson v. Tolley School Dist. No. 25, D.C.N.D.1983, 570 F.Supp. 408. Civil Rights 1133

Plaintiff did not have a property interest in his employment under law of Pennsylvania which was enforceable under U.S.C.A. Amend. 14 and, hence, did not have a cause of action under this section for an alleged conspiracy on part of defendants to remove him from his position as supervising manager of public works and utilities for borough where, though plaintiff referred frequently to express provisions of his employment contract, plaintiff admitted that parties did not execute a written contract and, though an oral contract of employment was enforceable in Pennsylvania, plaintiff did not allege any acts or declarations demonstrating parties' intent that their agreement operate prior to or without regard for a written contract. Skrocki v. Caltabiano, E.D.Pa.1981, 505 F.Supp. 916.

Former employee of a private company operating a corrections facility under a state contract was a probationary employee at the time of her discharge, and thus, had no property right in continued employment, as required to support her §§ 1983 claim that her termination violated her rights under the Fourteenth Amendment, even though she had worked at the prison, albeit for two different employers, for a period longer than the company's probationary period; the employee specifically agreed in an employment contract that she was a probationary employee, and subject to the company's internal policies and procedures. Bell v. Management & Training Corp., C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 122 Fed.Appx. 219, 2005 WL 280465, Unreported. Constitutional Law 277(1); Prisons 7

1749. ---- Collective bargaining agreements, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

Discharged employee's claim that California State Commissioner of Labor's enforcement policy violated her right under NLRA to complete collective bargaining process and agree to arbitration clause was properly brought under § 1983; Commissioner's policy refused enforcement of state statutes requiring employers to pay all wages due immediately upon employee's discharge, and imposing penalty for refusal to promptly pay, if terms and conditions of employee's employment were governed by collective bargaining agreement containing arbitration clause. Livadas v. Bradshaw, U.S.Cal.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2068, 512 U.S. 107, 129 L.Ed.2d 93, on remand 30 F.3d 1252. Civil Rights 1136

Seasonal laborer who had been employed by city for more than six months, but less than one year, did not have property interest in his position that was protected by due process clause, even though city charter established six-month probationary period for city employees, where collective bargaining agreement (CBA) entered by city with laborer's bargaining unit established 12-month probationary period, which overrode inconsistent charter provision pursuant to Minnesota Public Employment Labor Relations Act (PELRA). Somers v. City of Minneapolis, C.A.8 (Minn.) 2001, 245 F.3d 782. Constitutional Law 277(2); Municipal Corporations 217.2

Where collective bargaining agreement with public employer did not create legitimate entitlement to be protected from layoffs other than by establishing seniority rights in such cases and by granting postdismissal remedies for violating those rights, violation if any might give rise to contractual or Commonwealth remedy but not to action which was cognizable in federal district court in action under this section. Union Insular De Trabajadores Industriales Y Construcciones Electricas v. Autoridad De Las Fuentes Fluviales De Puerto Rico, D.C.Puerto Rico 1975, 431 F.Supp. 435. Civil Rights 1128

1750. ---- Employee handbooks, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

Where employee handbook of municipally owned hospital specifically stated that permanent employee could not be discharged without cause, hospital's director of volunteer services, as permanent employee, had property interest in continued employment which was protected by U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14, and thus, her termination by hospital without hearing to determine whether cause existed constituted violation under this section as matter of law, and case was properly remanded for determination of appropriate compensatory and punitive damages, costs, attorney fees, and possible reinstatement. Vinyard v. King, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1984, 728 F.2d 428. Civil Rights 1128; Federal Courts 945

Allegation that university's faculty handbook contained procedures governing renewal or nonrenewal of contracts of year-to-year instructors asserted sufficient property interest in continued employment on part of nontenured instructor to plead claim under § 1983 for due process violations arising out of officials' failure to provide impartial decisionmaker with respect to decision not to renew instructor's contract. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Even assuming that county's employee handbook, or any of its provisions, was applicable to plaintiff in his position as high-level administrator at county community college, language of handbook did not support plaintiff's claim that, for due process purposes, he had property interest in his employment as vice president for administration at college, since there was no express assurance in handbook that termination would be for cause only, or that policy of progressive discipline endorsed by county would be followed in every case. McCarthy v. Board of Trustees of Erie Community College, W.D.N.Y.1996, 914 F.Supp. 937. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1751. ---- Grievance procedures, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

In absence of any evidence suggesting any substantive restriction on power of Housing Authority of Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma to discharge employee, her employment was terminable at will, and thus she possessed no property right in continued employment, notwithstanding claim that Authority's grievance procedure constituted an independent source supporting her claim of entitlement to future employment, since grievance procedure, at best, merely supported a claim of entitlement to such procedural protections. Asbill v. Housing Authority of Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1984, 726 F.2d 1499. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

1752. ---- Personnel guidelines, manuals and policies, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

Provisions of Personnel Policy Handbook stating that Pennsylvania township would take no disciplinary action against employee without "just cause" did not override default rule that public employees in Pennsylvania served at will; thus, township office manager bringing §§ 1983 action after she was fired without notice or hearing did not have property interest in her job sufficient to implicate Due Process Clause. Former county employee who did not properly present evidence of county's personnel guidelines did not show that he had a property interest in continued employment protected by procedural and substantive due process. Nolin v. Douglas County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 903 F.2d 1546. Constitutional Law 277(2)

County hospital authority's internal personnel manual did not give security officers legitimate claims of entitlement to continued employment under Georgia law, and thus, officers had no protectable property interests in their positions and could be discharged with or without cause, absent discriminatory purpose. Wofford v. Glynn Brunswick Memorial Hosp., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 864 F.2d 117. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Physicians have constitutionally protected property right in medical staff privileges where medical staff's bylaws present a detailed procedure for corrective action against staff members. Medeiros v. Randolph County Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1469. Constitutional Law 277(1); Health 273

Former city attorney employed in "unclassified" status as temporary employee did not have constitutionally protected right to continue employment; provisions of city's personnel policy upon which attorney relied to establish expectancy of continued employment applied only to "classified" service. Pipkin v. City of Moore, Okl., W.D.Okla.1990, 735 F.Supp. 1004, affirmed 930 F.2d 34. Constitutional Law 277(2); Municipal Corporations 217.2

Employee of circuit court staff was not a county employee and thus did not have any property interest protected by due process on the basis of county's personnel manual. Baker v. DuPage County, N.D.Ill.1989, 703 F.Supp. 735. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1752A. ---- Miscellaneous employment, property interest, deprivation of employment rights

School bus driver's employment relationship with private contractor could form the basis of a property interest protected by procedural due process when a government actor interfered with that employment. Fernandez v. Taos Municipal Schools Bd. of Educ., D.N.M.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 1040. Constitutional Law 277(1)

1753. Executive orders, deprivation of employment rights

Executive orders concerning government contractors' obligations not to discriminate in employment practices did not create right in any individual to seek injunctive relief or assert claim for damages. Jackson v. University of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1975, 405 F.Supp. 607. Injunction 114(2); United States 127(1)

1754. Contracts, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Claims by city employee union and its president that city and its officers had breached state statutory provisions and applicable labor contracts in abridging seniority, promotion and other rights could not form the basis of a civil rights action. Boston Environmental Sanitation Inspectors Ass'n v. City of Boston, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1986, 794 F.2d 12. Civil Rights 1258

If state had merely breached contract with former university employee, he would have no cause of action under this section since relief is predicated on a denial of a constitutional right. Braden v. Texas A & M University System, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 636 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1131

Even if hospital's employee manual created protected property interest in continued employment, nurse did not have due process claim against hospital following her discharge, where state law breach of employment contract action provided adequate postdeprivation remedy. 1755. ---- Necessity of contracts, deprivation of employment rights

Employment contract was not essential to cause of action brought by unincorporated labor association and two of its members under this section against county commissioners and superintendent of county home for discharging individual plaintiffs from employment solely because of their membership and activities in labor union. Service Emp. Intern. Union, AFL-CIO v. Butler County, Pa., W.D.Pa.1969, 306 F.Supp. 1080. Civil Rights 1122

1756. Equal protection, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Employer did not violate anti-discrimination statutes by requiring employee to disclose her social security number as condition of continued employment, even though her refusal was based on fear of identity theft; requirement applied equally to all employees and was necessary consequence of employer's obligations under federal law. Cassano v. Carb, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 436 F.3d 74. Civil Rights 1231

Fact that director of anesthesiology residency program at state university medical school terminated physician's residency because of physician's lack of candor with regard to his dismissal from another residency was insufficient to establish director's vindictiveness or malignant animosity necessary to state claim for relief under Equal Protection Clause, where director's decision was reached after consultation with his peers and was based upon legitimate academic concern for physician's prospective ability to be entrusted with care of patients. Fenje v. Feld, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 620, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Colleges And Universities 9.35(3.1); Constitutional Law 242.2(5.1)

To succeed on § 1983 claim against public employer for equal protection violation, plaintiff must show that employer made adverse employment decision with discriminatory intent and purpose. Timm v. Wright State University, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 375 F.3d 418. Constitutional Law 238.5

Court abused its discretion in withdrawing its judicial notice of information from the National Personnel Records Center's (NPRC's) website regarding health records maintained by site, in § 1983 action by employee, who had worked at state-run, federally-funded program for high school dropouts, against employer for allegedly violating his constitutional rights by requiring him to sign release of various documents as condition of his contract renewal, including medical records; although employee testified regarding his records, information on website was not duplicative of testimony. Denius v. Dunlap, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 330 F.3d 919. Evidence 14

Though there may be no constitutional right to public employment as such, there is a constitutional right to be free from unreasonably discriminatory practices with respect to such employment. Whitner v. Davis, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1969, 410 F.2d 24. Constitutional Law 238.5

Puerto Rico police officers failed to state §§ 1983 claim based on deprivation of equal protection from "Law 181" which forced them to retire at age 55; law was not irrational because it allowed police officers who had reached age 55 but had not completed their 30 years of service to remain on the force, and retiring superintendent's alleged order that retired police officers be recruited once again in order to counter rise in criminality did not render statute irrational as it allowed for retention of mandatorily retired police officers in the Police Reserves for up to two years. Correa-Ruiz v. Calderon-Serra, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 41. Territories 23

State police detective was not subjected to treatment different from others similarly situated, or to hostile work environment, in violation of his equal protection rights, when he was transferred from one casino to another, where he never requested transfer from second casino, he was only person who objected to tenor of sergeant's comments regarding transfer, sergeant made no more comments regarding transfer after meeting about detective's harassment complaint, sick leave audit analyzed sick leave taken by every officer in casino unit, and other officers were

Public employee whose employment was terminated upon allegations that he solicited bribery failed to allege that any other employee confronted with similar allegation was treated differently, as required to maintain § 1983 civil rights action against state on basis that termination violated his equal protection rights. Garcia v. State of N.M. Office of the Treasurer, D.N.M.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1426. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Genuine issue of material fact on municipality's motive in requiring employees with nonwork related injuries to pay for their medical certificates precluded summary judgment for municipality on employee's § 1983 claim against municipality for violating Equal Protection Clause through disparate treatment of handicapped employees injured off the job. Ali v. City of Clearwater, M.D.Fla.1996, 915 F.Supp. 1231, affirmed 138 F.3d 956. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Employment discrimination action cannot be maintained under section 1981 or section 1983 unless allegedly wrongful conduct was intentional. Gray v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.C.Kan.1985, 603 F.Supp. 872. Civil Rights 1137

Display in window of county park unit manager's office, which exhibited a life-size torso-length image of former employee placed next to a similar image of "Twilight Zone" host, although juvenile, mean-spirited, and insulting, was not prohibited by equal protection clause. Ritzel v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 7, 2004 WL 1435216, Unreported. Constitutional Law 238.5; Counties 146

Police officers' alleged conduct of notifying resident of intent to tow abandoned vehicle, and not notifying other residents of intent to tow, failed to support an equal protection claim under § 1983 brought by resident against officers, where resident's car was not towed and resident suffered no harm, and, further, resident failed to adequately identify the particular conduct of the named officers that allegedly injured him. Aultman v. Padgett, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 22358445, Unreported. Automobiles 12; Constitutional Law 292

Employee's claim of harassment based on national origin is actionable under § 1983. Boutros v. Canton Regional Transit Authority, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 997 F.2d 198, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1144

For purposes of state university hospital employee physician's §§ 1983 claim that employers' decision to revoke his clinical privileges was national origin discrimination, co-workers ignoring employee's wife at office parties and comments of co-workers that patients from rural Ohio could not understand employee because of his accent did not constitute direct evidence of discrimination, since co-workers were not decision-makers and were not involved in employers' decision-making process. Benjamin v. Schuller, S.D.Ohio 2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 1055. Civil Rights 1421

1758. ---- Racial discrimination, equal protection, deprivation of employment rights

This section provides a remedy for state action that purposefully discriminates on basis of race in violation of equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and the protection afforded includes relief from discriminatory employment practices of public employers; thus, the right to equal protection with regard to public employment does not depend on existence of a property interest in that employment. Poolaw v. City of Anadarko, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1981, 660 F.2d 459. Civil Rights 1125 violation; while he was actually capable of performing the tasks assigned, thus satisfying a threshold level of qualification, he failed to prove there were white employees that were similarly situated in all respects, as required for a prima facie case, and in any event, he failed to show that proffered reasons for his termination, four speeding incidents and an investigating agency's conclusion that an incident with a student constituted physical neglect, were merely a pretext for discrimination. Jenkins v. Area Cooperative Educ. Services, D.Conn.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 117, modified on reconsideration 2004 WL 413267. Constitutional Law 220(7); Schools 63(1)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether African American state Department of Correction employee was treated differently than similarly situated Caucasian and Hispanic employees when his employment was terminated based on his arrests on criminal charges precluded summary judgment on employee's §§ 1983 claim against supervisors and Commissioner of Correction alleging violation of Equal Protection Clause. Everson v. Lantz, D.Conn.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 578. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of white employee's right to equal protection through its alleged selective enforcement of disciplinary code against him because of his support for minority coworkers; even if employee had demonstrated city policy or custom of treating employee differently than other workers, employee's chosen comparator, his supervisor, was not similarly situated insofar as they did not have the same job responsibilities and supervisor's purported infractions were not the same as those of employee. Bond v. City of Middletown, D.Conn.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 319. Municipal Corporations 218(10)

Evidence that city's African-American mayor had told police department officials that he wanted white police officer fired due to pressure he was getting from black community over officer's involvement in certain racial altercation and that mayor had stated to the officials that he had been elected by black, not white, voters established that officer's termination had been racially motivated in violation of equal protection, absent showing that officer would have been terminated even in absence of racial discrimination. Wagner v. City of Memphis, W.D.Tenn.1997, 971 F.Supp. 308. Constitutional Law 219.1; Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Affidavit of county probate judge's acquaintance wherein he attested that judge, who was responsible for decision to terminate clerk, used derogatory racial and sexist term to refer to clerk, a potential employee of judge, constituted direct evidence of race and gender discrimination, satisfying clerk's initial burden of establishing prima facie case of race and gender discrimination, for purpose of Title VII and § 1983 equal protection claims, where derogatory reference was used in context of expressing how judge would exert authority to terminate clerk. Johnson v. Waters, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 991. Civil Rights 1421; Civil Rights 1545

Black prison guard's allegations that his supervisors failed to transfer him, unduly disciplined him and, through scheme to falsely discredit him and place his life in danger, forced him to leave his employment and go on stress leave, and that supervisors made such decisions because of prison guard's race were sufficient to state § 1983 claim for equal protection violation against supervisors. Ware v. Curley, E.D.Mich.1996, 934 F.Supp. 259. Civil Rights 1395(8)

"Sex plus" or "gender plus" discrimination, involving policy or practice by which employer classifies employees on basis of sex plus another characteristic, is actionable in a § 1983 case, inasmuch as Equal Protection Clause forbids sex discrimination no matter how it is labeled; relevant issue is not how claim is characterized, but whether plaintiff provides evidence of purposefully sex-discriminatory acts. Back v. Hastings On Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 365 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1166; Civil Rights 1171; Constitutional Law 224(3)

Discharged Virginia deputy sheriff stated equal protection claim against former sheriff in his individual capacity; she had not entirely failed to allege that similarly situated persons outside protected class were not discharged, and in any event she also stated equal protection claim based on existence of gender-based hostile work environment.

Briggs v. Waters, E.D.Va.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 508. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former state employee could maintain sex discrimination claims under both Title VII and § 1983; § 1983 claim alleged violation of former employee's Fourteenth Amendment rights which were independent of rights created by Title VII. Coller v. State of Mo., Dept. of Economic Development, W.D.Mo.1997, 965 F.Supp. 1270. Civil Rights 1502

To demonstrate intent to harass based upon employee's membership in a particular class of citizens in § 1983 cause of action for sexual harassment based on equal protection, employee must prove that discriminatory conduct was intentional, that is, was because of employee's status as male or female, rather than because of some other personal characteristic. Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, S.D.Fla.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1552, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 1155, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 83 F.3d 1346, affirmed in part, reversed in part 111 F.3d 1530, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 438, 522 U.S. 978, 139 L.Ed.2d 337, reversed 118 S.Ct. 2275, 524 U.S. 775, 157 A.L.R. This section permits action to redress unconstitutional sex discrimination in employment context as well as in other areas. Lyon v. Temple University of Commonwealth System of Higher Educ., E.D.Pa.1982, 543 F.Supp. 1372. Civil Rights 1165

Count charging employment discrimination on account of sex was sufficient to state a cause of action under this section even though it did not allege that plaintiff had been deprived of any "rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws." Curran v. Portland Superintending School Committee, City of Portland, Me., D.C.Me.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1532

1760. Speech freedom, deprivation of employment rights

Speech by attorney for the Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS), objecting to the OIDS procedure for approval of expert witnesses, touched on matter of public concern, for purpose of attorney's §§ 1983 free speech claim against public employer, because it dealt with proper investigation of criminal cases and provision of effective assistance of counsel to indigent defendants; the speech inquired about the qualifications of the supervisors to approve experts, and the inability to get timely decisions. McFall v. Bednar, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 2005 WL 896453, amended and superseded 407 F.3d 1081. States 53

Municipal employer's interest in maintaining relationship of trust between African-American community and police and fire departments outweighed expressive interests of police and fire department employees while off-duty in deliberately donning "blackface" and parading through streets in mocking stereotypes of African-Americans in community they served, for purpose of civil rights claim of police and fire department employees under First Amendment free speech clause; free speech clause did not require government employer to sit idly by while its employees insulted those they were hired to serve and protect. Locurto v. Giuliani, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 447 F.3d 159. Municipal Corporations 198(2)

A public employer may not retaliate against an employee who exercises his First Amendment speech rights; this prohibition extends to retaliatory transfers to a less desired position. Miller v. Jones, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 444 F.3d 929. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Assistant examiner for city civil service board occupied policymaking position, such that her interest in speaking out on matter of public concern involving city's diversity policy in letter to editor was overridden by city's interest in efficiently running government, and board members' alleged retaliatory action in terminating her did not constitute a First Amendment violation; position included policymaking tasks, such as authoring report on practical implementation of diversity rules, in addition to other tasks, such as taking minutes at board meetings. Silberstein v. City of Dayton, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 440 F.3d 306, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Genuine issues of material fact existed regarding whether fact that limited term employee (LTE) at state university spoke out to administration and newspaper about poor treatment of LTEs by university was substantial factor in university's decision to not hire employee for permanent position, precluding summary judgment in employee's §§ 1983 action against university alleging violation of First Amendment rights. Ashman v. Barrows, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 438 F.3d 781. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether revocation of county employee's full-time leave from his job duties, taken while serving as labor union official, constituted adverse employment action, whether employee's speech, criticizing public official's handling of a union grievance, was matter of public concern, and whether employee's leave agreement expressly prohibited such speech, precluded summary judgment, in employee's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim based on the revocation of his leave. Hoyt v. Andreucci, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 433 F.3d 320. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Interests of employee of state university division in making allegations to his supervisor and university officials of division's illegal financial dealings with state Department of Health, and division's violation of university procedure in hiring another employee, outweighed university's interest in regulating his speech, for purposes of determining whether employment action impermissibly infringed on public employee's First Amendment free speech rights; as manager of division possibly violating the law, employee had great interest in curtailing suspected wrongdoing, and university's interest in regulating his speech was minimal. Baca v. Sklar, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 398 F.3d 1210, on remand 2005 WL 2295671. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

State mental health facility's actions of assigning nurse supervisor to nonpatient duties pending the outcome of an investigation into allegations that one of her nurses used excessive force against a patient did not qualify as a penalty for speech, as required for supervisor's First Amendment retaliation claim brought under §§ 1983 alleging retaliation for speaking out in defense of the nurse, given that the decision to assign the supervisor to nonpatient duties was predetermined by facility's policy applicable to all employees. Carreon v. Illinois Dept. of Human Services, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 395 F.3d 786. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Health 266

In assistant state attorney general's action alleging that her termination violated the First Amendment, assistant's letter to attorney general and supervisors, detailing her disagreement with settlement of case and disagreement with office's enforcement of consumer protection laws, was sufficiently insubordinate for presumption in favor of government to apply, under which public employees could be discharged based on speech related to political or policy views without running afoul of First Amendment; speaking out against office's policies made it difficult for public employer to trust assistant to implement those same policies. Latham v. Office of Atty. Gen. of State of Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 261, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 420, 163 L.Ed.2d 320. Attorney General 2; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

When a business vendor operates under a contract with a public agency, the Court of Appeals analyzes its First Amendment retaliation claim under § 1983 using the same basic approach that it would use if the claim had been raised by an employee of the agency. Alpha Energy Savers, Inc. v. Hansen, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 381 F.3d 917, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1838, 544 U.S. 975, 161 L.Ed.2d 725. Constitutional Law 82(6.1)

If public employee who asserts First Amendment retaliation claim can show that her speech was constitutionally protected, and that discipline was motivated by that speech, burden shifts to defendant to prove that employee would have been disciplined regardless of the protected speech; if defendant carries that burden, then employee bears burden of persuasion to show that defendant's proffered reasons were pretextual, and that retaliation was the real reason for the discipline. Smith v. Dunn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 368 F.3d 705. Civil Rights 1405;

Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Errors and incidents of poor judgment demonstrated by agent of Puerto Rico Justice Department's Special Investigations Bureau (SIB) were legitimate, non-retaliatory reasons for his negative performance evaluations after agent had voiced concerns over mishandling of potentially important investigation and possibilities of police corruption and perjury, and thus, SIB officers were not liable under § 1983 to agent for First Amendment retaliation. Guilloty Perez v. Pierluisi, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 339 F.3d 43. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Territories 23

Dramatic downward shift in skill level required to perform job responsibilities can rise to level of adverse employment action, even if time required to perform duties remains constant, for purposes of § 1983 action alleging retaliation in violation of employee's free speech rights. Dahm v. Flynn, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 60 F.3d 253, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1249(1)

Eleventh Circuit analyzes First Amendment retaliatory discharge claims under four-part test which examines: (1) whether public employee's speech involves matter of public concern; (2) whether public employee's interest in speaking outweighs government's legitimate interest in efficient public service; (3) whether speech played substantial part in government's challenged employment decision; and (4) whether government would have made same employment decision in absence of protected conduct. Beckwith v. City of Daytona Beach Shores, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 58 F.3d 1554. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Public housing authority employee's speech, for which he was allegedly discharged, related to matter of public concern for First Amendment purposes; employee was allegedly fired for filing auditing reports critical of authority and its officials, purpose of reports was to ferret out and highlight any improprieties he found at authority, and disclosing corruption, fraud, and illegality in government agency is matter of significant public concern. Feldman v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 43 F.3d 823. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

County corrections officer was engaged in speech on matters of public concern, for purposes of determining whether his First Amendment rights were violated by his termination, when he expressed concern to his supervisors that fellow officer behaved illegally while accompanying inmate being extradited, and that overtime hours were being improperly curtailed. Shepard v. Wapello County, Iowa, S.D.Iowa 2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 1112. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Prisons 7

Police officer's participation in internal investigation of alleged criminal wrongdoing within police department constituted activity protected by the First Amendment right to free speech, for purposes of officer's §§ 1983 claim that his supervisors increased the discipline he received for a violation of department policy, and thereby effectively forced his retirement, in retaliation for his participation in the investigation. Reilly v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.2006, 427 F.Supp.2d 507. Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Alleged verbal attacks on county employee during meetings, consisting of four attacks over four months, did not constitute adverse employment action for purposes of employee's free speech retaliation claim under §§ 1983. Magilton v. Tocco, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 495. Counties 67

Accountant for city was engaging in protected speech on matter of public concern, as required for claim she suffered adverse employment action in retaliation for speech, in violation of First Amendment, when she complained to supervisors that federal grants were being misapplied and illegally distributed; speech regarding government waste was clearly of interest to community, no attempt was made to publicly disclose concerns, and they were expressed early in immediate supervisor's tenure and repeated thereafter. Hinton v. Conner, M.D.N.C.2005, 366 F.Supp.2d 297. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

If a public employee, alleging retaliation in response to exercise of protected First Amendment freedom of speech rights, satisfies the burden of showing that an improper motive played a substantial role in employer's action, then employer may either show that it would have taken exactly the same action absent improper motive, or that employee's speech was likely to disrupt government's activities and that likely disruption was sufficient to outweigh value of employee's First Amendment expression. Levich v. Liberty Central School Dist., S.D.N.Y.2004, 361 F.Supp.2d 151. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Public employees' free speech claims under §§ 1983 are subject to a broader standard for what constitutes an adverse employment action than are Rehabilitation Act claims. Osborne v. Elmer, M.D.La.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 620, affirmed 140 Fed.Appx. 509, 2005 WL 1444228. Civil Rights 1219; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

City employee's expression of allegedly inaccurate belief, that third worker was subjected to same supervisory sexual harassment experienced by herself and second worker, was speech protected by First Amendment, as employee did not show reckless disregard for truth in making statement. Thomas v. Ragland, W.D.Wis.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 950. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

African-American employee of city police department failed to establish that his filing of a complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) was a substantial or motivating factor in employer's alleged retaliation, as required to support employee's § 1983 claim alleging employer retaliated against him for filing an EEOC complaint in violation of his First Amendment rights to free speech. Jones v. City of Wilmington, D.Del.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 380. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Kansas corrections officer's statements did not relate to matters of public concern, for purposes of her § 1983 claim based on First Amendment retaliation; officer complained primarily of various forms of harassment directed at her during her own employment, and she made no allegations concerning harassment involving others. McCall v. Board of Com'rs of County of Shawnee, KS, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1216. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Prisons 7

Material issues of fact, as to whether speech delivered by county auditing office clerk running for county commissioner, that assessed property values were too low, was substantial and motivating factor in discharge, precluded summary judgment that county did not discharge clerk in retaliation for his assertion of First Amendment rights. Brominski v. County of Luzerne, M.D.Pa.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 591. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

City and its officials did not make substantial showing supporting claim that prediction that likelihood of employees' speech to cause disruption was reasonable as of date the decision to terminate employees was made, for purposes of determining whether city was liable for retaliatory discharge of police and fire department employees for participating in parade float depicting African-Americans in stereotypical manner in the exercise of free speech under the First Amendment; as of date termination decision was made, city did not have any information on community reaction or potential effects on minority recruitment to warrant prediction of disruption, city's ignorance of specific identities of employees who participated in float demonstrated that decision was made without consideration of employees' performance records, and city did not offer sufficient evidence that speech would cause workplace disruption. Locurto v. Giuliani, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 368, reversed and remanded 447 F.3d 159. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1); Municipal Corporations 198(2)

City could be held liable on First Amendment retaliation claim based on alleged retaliation against police sergeant who made charges of corruption and discrimination within police department where substantial evidence suggested that there was a longstanding custom on the part of responsible city officials of retaliation against employees for serious criticism of the police department. Wagner v. City of Holyoke, D.Mass.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 78, affirmed 404 F.3d 504, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 552, 163 L.Ed.2d 461. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City, mayor and police chiefs were not entitled to qualified immunity from police sergeant's § 1983 claims of retaliation for engaging in protected speech in violation of the First Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment; law was clearly established that public employer could not discipline employee for protected speech, and there was evidence that defendants did discipline or decline to promote sergeant. Bennett v. City of Holyoke, D.Mass.2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 207, affirmed 362 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Allegation by former executive director of General Council on Education of Puerto Rico that he was removed from office in retaliation for his continued denunciations of council members' alleged illegal activities stated § 1983 claim against council members who voted to remove him. Pandolfi de Rinaldis v. Llavona, D.Puerto Rico 1999, 62 F.Supp.2d 426. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Terminated college professor did not state claim for violation of her First Amendment freedom of speech rights by claiming that she was terminated in retaliation for her complaints regarding manner in which she was evaluated for retention; speech in question did not relate to political or social concerns of community, even though she claimed she was addressing public concerns of sex discrimination and ethical violations. Stein v. Kent State University Bd. of Trustees, N.D.Ohio 1998, 994 F.Supp. 898, affirmed 181 F.3d 103. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

State employee who alleged that she was replaced as Director of Consumer Utility in Alabama Attorney General's Office after she voiced concerns that settlement between telephone company and Public Service Commission (PSC) regarding consumer refund was not in good faith stated § 1983 First Amendment claim so as to survive motion to dismiss. Douglas v. Evans, M.D.Ala.1995, 888 F.Supp. 1536. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former director of dental services at state psychiatric facility was not deprived of his free speech rights in violation of § 1983; he did not allege that he was thwarted in attempt to speak out on a matter of public concern, but rather, appeared to have resigned in connection with intra-office dispute. Koch v. Mirza, W.D.N.Y.1994, 869 F.Supp. 1031. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); States 52

Depriving sheriff's department employee of use of county car upon transfer from multijurisdictional drug task force to investigations division was not "adverse employment action" sufficient to give rise to § 1983 action for burdening right of free speech; employee suffered no loss in pay, benefits, or classification as result of transfer. Smith v. Upson County, Ga., M.D.Ga.1994, 859 F.Supp. 1504, affirmed 56 F.3d 1392. Civil Rights 1135

Assistant professor at state university failed to show any causal link between speech allegedly protected by First Amendment and denial of tenure, thus defeating his claim that he was discharged in retaliation for exercising his First Amendment rights; his complaint against a dean was made more than a year before a report by an affirmative action office was inserted into his file, at which point the most recent complaints about a coworker's competence were four months old, and the two final decision-makers made their evaluations of the professor based purely on his scholarly work and he presented no evidence of pretext. Feterle v. Chowdhury, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 148 Fed.Appx. 524, 2005 WL 2233609, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Police department's interest in maintaining an effective police force, free from internal division, outweighed police officers' right to speak on matters of public concern, for purposes of officers' §§ 1983 claim alleging First Amendment retaliation, where officers used media coverage to create a divisive environment, and used disruptive tactics to obtain documents supporting their allegations of police department corruption. Graham v. City of Mentor, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 27, 2004 WL 2711031, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 340, 163 L.Ed.2d 51. quality of public education, for purposes of establishing prima facie case, under 1983, for retaliation for exercising her First Amendment right of free speech. Lander v. Summit County School Dist., C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 109 Fed.Appx. 215, 2004 WL 1809525, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Schools 147.12

Speech in which university employee reported alleged death threats made against her by a co-worker did not touch upon a matter of public concern, thus defeating her §§ 1983 claims of alleged retaliation in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments; the employee's statements to a human resources department and university officials concerned only her desire to see the co-worker fired and an official disciplined as a result of their treatment of the employee. Serrato v. Bowling Green State University, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 104 Fed.Appx. 509, 2004 WL 1543161, Unreported, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 896, 543 U.S. 1053, 160 L.Ed.2d 775. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Mayor's rude gesture and comment to city council employee was not adverse employment action which would have provided a basis for a § 1983 claim of retaliation for the exercise of First Amendment right to support a political opponent. Poppy v. City of Willoughby Hills, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 292, 2004 WL 771281, Unreported. Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 218(3)

State administrative finding that superintendent's conduct warranted termination was insufficient to satisfy board of education's burden in superintendent's First Amendment retaliation claim of proving that superintendent would have been fired regardless of whether the superintendent had spoken out publicly against mayor and board member; thus, remand was required for consideration of superintendent's evidence of retaliatory motive. Howard v. Board of Educ. of City of East Orange, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2003, 90 Fed.Appx. 571, 2003 WL 23173680, Unreported. Civil Rights 1421; Federal Courts 943.1

Lack of causal connection between anonymous electronic mail message in which city employee criticized coworker's job performance and any adverse employment action taken against employee precluded city's liability under § 1983 for First Amendment retaliation. Bracey v. Lawson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 73 Fed.Appx. 889, 2003 WL 21664286, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Continued harassment that city employee allegedly suffered after engaging in protected speech did not rise to level of "adverse employment action," and thus did not support claim of retaliation in violation of employee's First Amendment and state law rights, when employee asserted that she was not invited to attend department meeting on day that she was transferred to department, was required to provide documentation for her absences, and was subjected to more rigorous standards for providing medical documentation than others who were absent for continuous periods of time, but conceded that she and other managers often submitted supporting documentation, and failed to acknowledge significance of her sporadic attendance and inability to inform supervisors in advance of her medical appointments. Mullen v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21511952, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

1761. Association freedom--Generally, deprivation of employment rights

Freedom of association guaranteed by the First Amendment did not confer upon employee of state mental health facility the unconditional right to bring counsel to an internal investigational interview with the police concerning allegation that employee used excessive force in subduing a patient, as required for employee's claim alleging that he was retaliated against in violation of his freedom of association rights under the First Amendment for insisting that his attorney be present during the interview. Carreon v. Illinois Dept. of Human Services, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 395 F.3d 786. Constitutional Law 91; Health 266

State employee's relationship with her brother-in-law was not of the sort afforded special constitutional protection, despite assertion that they were also good friends, and thus she could not assert cause of action under civil rights statute on theory that state employer had violated her right to freedom of association by engaging in course of retaliatory harassment to deter her from associating with brother-in-law after he testified in favor of a black employee in a prior suit. Rode v. Dellarciprete, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1988, 845 F.2d 1195. Civil Rights 1250

In general, state may not condition hiring or discharge of employee in way which infringes his right of political association; exception to such protection of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 exists in case of state employees who formulate policy, such exception being designed to insure that representative government not be undercut by tactics obstructing implementation of policies of new administration, presumably sanctioned by electorate. Rosenthal v. Rizzo, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 555 F.2d 390, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 268, 434 U.S. 892, 54 L.Ed.2d 178. Constitutional Law 91

Former deputy sheriff failed to allege association protected by First Amendment, and thus, his §§ 1983 claim based on violation of association right brought against board of county commissioners, county prosecutors, and former and present deputy sheriffs failed; although former deputy asserted that adverse actions were taken against him because defendants perceived that he was affiliated with sheriff, who was removed from his position, former deputy made no claim that defendants discriminated against him on basis of his actual loyalty to political party, political candidate, or advocacy of ideas. Good v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Shawnee, Kan., D.Kan.2004, 331 F.Supp.2d 1315, affirmed 141 Fed.Appx. 742, 2005 WL 1714326. Constitutional Law 91; Sheriffs And Constables 21

Public employees stated cause of action under § 1983 in complaint against public officials for termination based on political affiliation in violation of First Amendment; information before court was insufficient for it to conclude that any reasonable government official would have believed that employee held position for which political loyalty was required. Milazzo v. O'Connell, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 1331, affirmed 108 F.3d 129, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(8)

City, county, and two supervisors did not violate city dispatcher's First Amendment rights as result of supervisor telling dispatcher that she could not contact co-worker while on duty; county had no ability and made no attempt to infringe on dispatcher's rights of association and free speech, and city's actions in demanding that employee not contact co-worker during working hours was justified in that it could create disruption in dispatch center. Hart v. Clearfield City, Davis County, D.Utah 1993, 815 F.Supp. 1544. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 218(3)

1761A. ---- Political affiliation, association freedom, deprivation of employment rights

Evidence was sufficient to support determination of municipal liability, in city employee's §§ 1983 claim for political harassment, in violation of his First Amendment rights; office where employee worked was turned into campaign headquarters for municipal assembly candidate, city policymakers did nothing to stop the transformation of the office into a partisan campaign headquarters, employee supported another candidate, and he was deprived of his work duties during the time period of the campaign as a result of city policymakers' failure to stop the transformation of the office. Bisbal-Ramos v. City of Mayaguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 467 F.3d 16. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether municipalities failed to hire former employee for not-for-profit corporation charged with administering federal workforce-training funds for municipalities for position with replacement workforce development system because of her political party membership precluded summary judgment in employee's §§ 1983 action alleging violation of her First Amendment right to free association. Krause v. Buffalo and Erie County Workforce Development Consortium, Inc., W.D.N.Y.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 352. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Allegations of employee of Puerto Rico government administration that she was demoted because of her political affiliation, that hearing on her demotion was a sham, that she was replaced by a member of another political party, and that her supervisor failed to take steps to prevent her demotion were sufficient to state §§ 1983 claim for political discrimination under the First Amendment. Medina Diaz v. Gonzalez Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 77. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Employee established prima facie case of political discrimination under the First Amendment against interim director of regional office of Puerto Rico agency by showing that motive for reduction of her work duties was her political affiliation, and interim director failed to rebut claim where he failed to show that alleged adverse employment action was justified. Velez-Herrero v. Guzman, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 62. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

1762. Stigmatization, deprivation of employment rights

There was sufficient nexus between statements by county District Attorney (DA) statements to village police chief's prospective employers and chief's termination for chief to state viable §§ 1983 "stigma-plus" due process claim against DA. Hoffman v. Kelz, W.D.Wis.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1007. Civil Rights 1359

Former Director of Pennsylvania Bureau of Blindness & Visual Services sufficiently pled, under liberal pleading standard, a "stigma-plus" claim under §§ 1983 by alleging that following her termination, numerous members of blind community protested and that Department of Labor and Industry along with Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR), issued statements in response to uproar, including one saying that her termination was justified by compelling, performance-based reasons involving behavior unacceptable from employee in a policymaking position. Boone v. Pennsylvania Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, M.D.Pa.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 484. Civil Rights 1395(8)

To establish liberty interest with regard to her employment, § 1983 plaintiff must show she was stigmatized in connection with alteration of her legal status as employee, stigma arose from substantially false characterizations of employee or her conduct, and damaging characterizations were made public through channels other than litigation initiated by employee. McCue v. State of Kan., Dept. of Human Resources, D.Kan.1996, 938 F.Supp. 718. Civil Rights 1128

1763. Favoritism, deprivation of employment rights

Employment decisions based upon favoritism to family members was not employment discrimination in violation of § 1983. Backlund v. Hessen, D.Minn.1995, 904 F.Supp. 964, reversed 104 F.3d 1031, rehearing denied, on remand 176 F.R.D. 316. Civil Rights 1120

Former state employee stated civil rights claim against state officials for violation of his First Amendment rights; employee alleged that officials maintained and operated patronage system in which political and financial supporters of political party were favored with respect to temporary employment as state highway maintainers, state classified job of permanent highway maintainer as position that was not subject to political patronage, and there was no vital governmental interest in requiring temporary workers to be affiliated with party in power when state acknowledged that it did not have such interest with respect to employees hired for same position on permanent basis. Vickery v. Jones, S.D.Ill.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1313, affirmed 100 F.3d 1334, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1553, 520 U.S. 1197, 137 L.Ed.2d 701. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1764. Hiring, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Individual was not entitled to be hired by railroad as locomotive engineer-trainee; thus, he could not maintain claim under this section on theory that refusal of railroad to hire him for that position constituted deprivation of civil rights secured by the Constitution and laws. Kaelin v. Long Island R. Co., E.D.N.Y.1980, 504 F.Supp. 656. Civil Rights 1121

1765. ---- Racial discrimination, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

City ordinance, which proscribed issuance of taxicab driver permit to any person convicted of smuggling marijuana, was job-related in determining who was to be entrusted to operate taxicab and was not invalid as utilizing a racially discriminatory employment testing device. Lane v. Inman, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 509 F.2d 184. Civil Rights 1072

Statement of school board's president that it was "board policy" to hire Black applicant if two applicants were equally qualified did not support inference of racial preference policy alleged by job applicant in his action under § 1983 based on alleged violation of Equal Protection Clause, where president clearly stated that only he himself held that view, and that he was unaware of other board members' views on subject. Reynolds v. Glynn County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ga.1996, 968 F.Supp. 696, affirmed 119 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1405

Evidence, including proof that State Division of Personnel consistently fell short in hiring blacks in numbers commensurate to their percentage of available work force, that hiring officer deliberately ignored fact that woman chosen for position of affirmative action officer had little, if any, visible knowledge or contact with very minority community she was supposed to be concerned with in job, and failure of hiring officer to investigate black applicant's job performance for four-year period prior to his making application for position, supported finding that decision not to consider seriously black applicant for position was based on intentional racial discrimination. Cooper v. Department of Administration, State of Nevada, D.C.Nev.1982, 558 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1544

Complainant may establish prima facie case of employment discrimination by showing that he belongs to a racial minority, that he applied and was qualified for a job for which employer was seeking applicants, that despite his application he was rejected and that after his rejection the position remained open and the employer continued to seek applicants from persons of complainant's qualifications. Alvarez-Ugarte v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1223. Civil Rights 1545

If disparate civil service examination performance results from candidates' relative qualifications for job, rather than their race, examinations are constitutionally adequate, in spite of their racially disparate impact. Jones v. New York City Human Resources Administration, S.D.N.Y.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1064, vacated in part, affirmed 528 F.2d 696, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 80, 429 U.S. 825, 50 L.Ed.2d 88, rehearing denied 97 S.Ct. 1341, 430 U.S. 923, 51 L.Ed.2d 602. Civil Rights 1142

"Apprenticeship" and "experience" prejob requirements employed by city in its "prevailing wage" skilled craft positions had a disproportionate adverse impact on minorities where only 1 percent of persons employed in building trades as craftsmen in construction industry were black, with as few blacks completing formal apprenticeships in skilled trades, and, with respect to skilled craft positions requiring a formal apprenticeship, none of the 72 employees of the city were black, and only 2 percent of the employees of the board of school directors were black. Crockett v. Green, E.D.Wis.1975, 388 F.Supp. 912, affirmed 534 F.2d 715. Civil Rights 1140

1766. ---- Sex discrimination, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection male employee, who interviewed for a supervisory position in Green Bay and one in Altoona, was not discriminated against on the basis of sex when female employee was offered position in Altoona and male employee was offered job in Green Bay after male had changed his mind and decided that he no longer wanted the Green Bay job but wanted the Altoona job. Stoner v. Wisconsin Dept. of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1995, 50 F.3d 481. Civil Rights 1179

Terminated female volunteer firefighter/paramedic sufficiently alleged unexpressed policy or custom of sex discrimination by fire protection district board of trustees and volunteer fire department so as to state § 1983 claim against board and department; firefighter/paramedic alleged that board and department refused to hire her as paid employee because she was a woman and then terminated her position as volunteer even though she had more fire calls than most men, discriminated against her by hiring less qualified male applicant, and fired her brother in retaliation for protesting sex discrimination. Vickery v. Minooka Volunteer Fire Dept., N.D.Ill.1997, 990 F.Supp. 995. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Use by California agencies of written and oral tests to qualify applicants for position of parole agent did not result in sex-based discrimination and did not violate this section. Bannerman v. Department of Youth Authority, N.D.Cal.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1273, affirmed 615 F.2d 847.

Unhired state job applicant's waning commitment to a political party, the family connections of the hired applicant to an allegedly influential member of the party, unhired applicant's alleged superior qualifications, the opportunity given to hired applicant to learn about the position before the interview, statement by hired applicant before the interview that he thought he had the job because of his political connections, and the statement made by one state official who made the hiring decision that unhired applicant would not get the job, were insufficient to prove that state officials who made the hiring decision actually considered the applicants' relative political involvement, as would establish employment discrimination based upon political motivation, in violation of the First Amendment. Hall v. Babb, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 389 F.3d 758. Constitutional Law 91; States 53

State job applicant failed to show that decision by officials of the state Department of Transportation (DOT) to hire another applicant rather than him was due to fact that other applicant was a more active member of a political party, for purpose of §§ 1983 action alleging violation of his First Amendment rights; there was no evidence that at least two of the three officials knew that the hired applicant's involvement in the party was more prominent than unhired applicant's involvement, or that the officials actually considered the applicants' relative political involvement in making the hiring decision. Hall v. Babb, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 389 F.3d 758. Constitutional Law 91; States 53

1767. ---- Application requirement, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

In employment discrimination suit brought under § 1981 of this title and this section, requirement that plaintiff have applied for position is a substantive element of plaintiff's cause of action. Tagupa v. Board of Directors, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1980, 633 F.2d 1309. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Unsuccessful female applicant for a position as a city police officer stated a claim against the city for violation of Title VII and §§ 1983 in connection with a "sit-and-reach" test, which the applicant claimed was non-predictive of job performance and discriminatory; there was no showing that the test was mandated by the State for certification, and in any event, a State mandate was no bar to the imposition of liability. Conroy v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 879. Civil Rights 1174

1768. ---- Conflict of interest, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

When city or town adopted specific conflict of interest regulations governing municipal employment, it was lawfully obliged to comply with procedures outlining those regulations and failing such adherence, municipality and participants were subject to suit in federal court under this section by person who had been injured by wrongful application of those regulations. Levine v. Town of West Hartford Police Dept., D.C.Conn.1982, 541 F.Supp. 741. Civil Rights 1351(5)

1769. ---- Examinations, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In action under this section based on allegedly intentional or purposeful discrimination, evidence of discriminatory impact of test given to prospective employees is evidence of intent. Richardson v. Pennsylvania Dept. of Health, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 561 F.2d 489. Civil Rights 1546

1770. ---- Legitimate reasons, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

Former state university employee failed to show that a similarly situated coworker was treated more favorably than she was when she was not informed that her former position would be offered as a part-time position following her retirement, as required for university and supervisor to be liable to employee under §§ 1983 for violation of Equal Protection Clause on theories of selective enforcement and class-of-one discrimination; none of the other retired university employees identified by former employee who were allowed to return to part-time employment worked in departments that reported directly to supervisor who supervised former employee's department. Thompson v. Connecticut State University, D.Conn.2006, 2006 WL 3702271. Constitutional Law 238.5

Former employee's failure to pay child support did not constitute "dishonorable conduct" proscribing municipal employment under Puerto Rico law, as required for municipality to establish a nondiscriminatory reason to justify decision to not rehire former employee following the expiration of his contract in employee's §§ 1983 claim alleging he was not rehired based on his political affiliation. Cruz-Baez v. Negron-Irizarry, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 326. Civil Rights 1128

Reasons articulated by state Board of Education for employment decisions with respect to female college administrator constituted legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons for decisions at issue, shifting burden to administrator, in her action against Board under Title VII, Title IX, and § 1983, to persuade court that such reasons were pretext for discrimination; Board stated that administrator lacked sufficient administrative experience compared to males who were appointed to positions sought by her, that some or all of such males had participated in their communities while plaintiff did not have much involvement in community, and that selection decisions were made before plaintiff expressed interest. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1170; Civil Rights 1405; Civil Rights 1537

1771. ---- Veterans' preference, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

Even if veteran's constitutional rights had been violated by school officials failure to apply veteran's preference in considering veteran's teaching application, officials were entitled to qualified immunity since no reasonable public official could have known that denying a veteran a preference would violate that veteran's property right under due process clause; furthermore, even if a constitutional right under Pennsylvania Veterans' Preference Act were clearly established, veteran was not entitled to that right because he was deemed as not qualified for the position. Basile v. Elizabethtown Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.1999, 61 F.Supp.2d 392. Civil Rights 1376(10)

1772. ---- Past discrimination, hiring, deprivation of employment rights

District Court's findings, made in course of issuing pretrial and partial remedial orders in class actions against state Board of Education alleging various forms of discrimination in hiring and employment, which findings included determination that immediate past history of discrimination in violation of Title VII existed in state college and university system, were sufficient to create rebuttable presumption on behalf of individual female plaintiffs in their causes of action under § 1983, and to subject defendants to heightened burden of justifying their employment decisions by clear and convincing evidence. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1405 agency and equal protection claim against supervisors under §§ 1983, alleging that he was demoted due to his race; although there was no direct evidence that agency and supervisors were motivated by racial bias when they demoted employee after he was found to have harassed a co-worker, agency memo drafted and approved by supervisors indicated that employee's violation was a category B violation, two white employees received far less severe penalties for category B violations, and testimony that supervisors thought employee's violation was more serious than category B came from supervisors rather than from disinterested witnesses and was not supported by documentary evidence. Davis v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 445 F.3d 971. Civil Rights 1548

Jury finding that Puerto Rico corrections administration employees' demotions were improper and the result of discrimination, as required to sustain jury verdict for employees' claims alleging that their political affiliations were a substantial or motivating factor behind their demotions, in violation of their First Amendment and due process rights, was supported by evidence that employees were long-standing, competent employees of the Puerto Rico corrections administration, that both were demoted without being given any notice or opportunity to defend their promotions, and that important documents were missing from their personnel files. Rodriguez-Marin v. Rivera-Gonzalez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 72. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Regional Director for Puerto Rico agency failed to establish prima facie case of political discrimination in connection with his demotion, given admitted facts and his failure to present any evidence of improper motive or discriminatory animus, aside from his own subjective belief that his political affiliation was motivation underlying his demotion. Figueroa Montes v. Foy, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 168. Civil Rights 1421

City employee failed to establish, in his action alleging that his demotion violated First Amendment and consent decree in prior civil rights action prohibiting city from taking adverse employment actions based on political factors, that his demotion was politically motivated, notwithstanding contention that he was demoted for refusal to hire three applicants from politically connected union; city was bound, under circumstances, by collective bargaining agreement to hire union applicants, and there was no evidence showing that members of union or union itself were in any way favored beyond rights in agreement. Shanahan v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1995, 875 F.Supp. 535, affirmed 82 F.3d 776. Civil Rights 1421

1774. ---- Status alteration, demotion, deprivation of employment rights

In civil rights suit charging the Secretary of Health for Puerto Rico, and various other officials, with conspiring to alter plaintiff's employment status from permanent to probationary for political reasons, and also charging defendants with infringing plaintiff's constitutional rights by subsequently discharging her, nothing in the record indicated that plaintiff's due process rights were violated. Ramirez de Arellano v. Alvarez de Choudens, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1978, 575 F.2d 315. Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

Demotion of state employee who had worked as chief legal counsel for state department of revenue to staff attorney position constituted a loss of property within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment; employee received a lower raise as an attorney than he would have as chief legal counsel, he lost his supervisory authority, had fewer responsibilities than he did as chief legal counsel, and demotion would likely have adverse effect on his upward mobility and future income. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2004, 307 F.Supp.2d 1036. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); States 53

1775. Disciplinary actions, deprivation of employment rights

Corrections officers failed to establish equal protection claim against corrections officials based on their instituting disciplinary charges against them and removing one officer from a privileged work assignment after the officers refused to assist in an internal investigation since there was no showing that officials intentionally treated them differently from other similarly situated corrections officers because of a personal dislike or malicious intent to injure them or that officials singled them out for discipline without any rational basis at all; initiation of disciplinary charges against officers was not arbitrary, or without basis in departmental policy, and was done to punish them for refusing to assist in the investigation and to deter other officers from similarly refusing to assist in investigations. Bizzarro v. Miranda, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 394 F.3d 82. Constitutional Law 238.5; Prisons 7

Lieutenant's alleged action of questioning inmates about corrections officer was not adverse employment action upon which retaliation claim under sections 1981 and 1983 could be based, where officer was not disciplined by lieutenant during such period, and officer's job requirement did not change. Henderson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 129. Prisons 7

Genuine issues of material fact existed regarding whether sex or age discrimination factored into police chief's decision to discipline female police officer, precluding summary judgment in favor of city and police chief on officer's equal protection claim. DiCicco v. Voccola, D.Conn.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 85. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Prima facie test for discriminatory application of disciplinary rules provided appropriate prima facie test for city firefighters' § 1983 claim for discriminatory application of sick leave policy. Felton v. City of Auburn, M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1476. Civil Rights 1421

Employee failed to submit any direct or inferential evidence of discrimination by his employer as would support prima facie case of race and national origin discrimination under California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) or § 1981 arising out of incidents in which coemployee attacked employee and was placed on 90-day final warning prior to termination, but employee was found to have provoked attack by making sarcastic remark, in which co-workers played practical joke on employee and employee was reprimanded for using profanity in reaction to joke, and in which employee's manager reprimanded employee for harassing co-worker. Rodriguez v. International Business Machines, N.D.Cal.1997, 960 F.Supp. 227. Civil Rights 1421; Civil Rights 1744

Absence of evidence that discipline imposed on Caucasian fire captain for commanding subordinate firefighters not to administer medical attention to infant trauma victim at accident scene, contrary to department's standard operating procedures, was unwarranted or was motivated by racial discrimination precluded department's liability for alleged reverse race discrimination based on decision to discipline captain. Monteverde v. New Orleans Fire Dept., C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 900, 2005 WL 673490, Unreported. Civil Rights 1234

1776. Drug testing, deprivation of employment rights

Metropolitan transit authority's drug testing of employee after bus she was driving collided with stationary object was reasonable under Fourth Amendment, notwithstanding absence of probable cause or some level of individualized suspicion; postaccident testing policy was reasonably related to compelling governmental interest in protecting public safety. Tanks v. Greater Cleveland Regional Transit Authority, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 930 F.2d 475 . Searches And Seizures 78

Blood testing of police officer to determine level of psychotropic medication in his blood did not serve police department's legitimate safety need for fit officers, as required for such testing under Fourth Amendment, since level of that medication in person's blood did not correspond to drug's efficacy, drug's side effects were uncommon or minor, and department doctor ordered test simply to determine if officer was taking the drug, when officer had already supplied documentation that he took the drug, that his doctors were monitoring its use, and that he was fit for duty. Krocka v. Bransfield, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1073, affirmed 203 F.3d 507. Searches And Seizures 78

Mechanic's helper discharged by county board of education after failing random drug test could not maintain § 1983 claim against board and education officials for board's alleged failure to follow procedural safeguards under Department of Transportation (DOT) regulations when conducting drug test, as mechanic's helper had mere property right in his employment, and state provided mechanic's helper adequate procedural safeguards to protect that right in view of fact that review panel had reinstated mechanic's helper with full back pay and benefits. English v. Talladega County Bd. of Educ., N.D.Ala.1996, 938 F.Supp. 775. Civil Rights 1320

Information received by school district from student's mother was sufficient to give rise to reasonable suspicion that school bus driver had recently used marijuana and, therefore, school district had reasonable cause to order that bus driver submit to urinalysis drug testing; bus driver did not show any reason to doubt reliability of parent, who identified herself and her child, and who reported that school bus arrived late and that she smelled marijuana when bus doors opened. Armington v. School Dist. of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1991, 767 F.Supp. 661, affirmed 941 F.2d 1200. Searches And Seizures 78

City transit authority drug testing policy, that prohibited drug use, required drug testing, and disciplined or refused to hire those who tested positive, applied to all employees or applicants and did not violate equal protection. Burka v. New York City Transit Authority, S.D.N.Y.1988, 680 F.Supp. 590, 97 A.L.R. Fed. 1. Constitutional Law 238.5

City's actions relating to mass urine testing of employees violated civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, depriving fire fighters and police department employee of constitutional rights and privileges secured to them. Capua v. City of Plainfield, D.N.J.1986, 643 F.Supp. 1507. Civil Rights 1126

In light of public interest in safety, public mass transit system rules providing that operating employees could be compelled by supervisors to submit to physical examinations, including blood and urinalysis testing, without probable cause, did not violate employees' civil rights. Division 241, Amalgamated Transit Union (AFL-CIO) v. Suscy, N.D.Ill.1975, 405 F.Supp. 750, affirmed 538 F.2d 1264, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 653, 429 U.S. 1029, 50 L.Ed.2d 632. Civil Rights 1126

1777. Harassment, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

County sheriff violated deputy's First Amendment rights by engaging in campaign of retaliatory harassment after deputy announced that he would run against sheriff in upcoming election; policymaker exception to ban on patronage dismissals did not extend to harassment. Wallace v. Benware, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1995, 67 F.3d 655, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 82(11); Sheriffs And Constables 17

Public employer who harassed an employee in order to induce him to give up a substantive constitutional right, such as freedom of speech, would be violating U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14 and this section. Brown v. Brienen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 722 F.2d 360. Civil Rights 1250; Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

Allegation that after public employee returned to work from leave of absence while running for public office, mayor and three of his subordinates subjected her to campaign of petty harassments in retaliation for her running for public office stated cause of action under this section for violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 insofar as it could be inferred that entire campaign of petty harassments was motivated not just by fact of her running for office but by views she espoused as candidate. Bart v. Telford, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1982, 677 F.2d 622. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Supervisor did not conduct campaign of harassment against city employee, in retaliation for her assertion of First Amendment rights by filing of complaints against him with city and state human rights agencies, when he notified city officials that she was late in producing accident report and had engaged in improprieties in connection with utilization of city credit card. Thomas v. Ragland, W.D.Wis.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 950. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Not all harassment is actionable under § 1983 as an equal protection violation, and only harassment that transcends coarse, hostile, and boorish behavior can rise to the level of a constitutional tort. Lyon v. Jones, D.Conn.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 507, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 196, 2004 WL 628879. Civil Rights 1147; Constitutional Law 238(1)

Former state employee's allegations that former governor expressed admiration for her curves, attempted to kiss her and pulled her towards him, placed his hand on her leg and slid it toward hem of her culottes, exposed his penis and requested her to kiss it, hugged her, described them as couple at state capitol and directed state trooper to inform her that his wife was out of town often and that governor would like to see her were sufficient to show intent to harass based on gender for purposes of stating § 1983 sexual harassment claim under Equal Protection Clause. Jones v. Clinton, E.D.Ark.1997, 974 F.Supp. 712, appeal dismissed 161 F.3d 528. Constitutional Law 224(3); Civil Rights 1190

1778. ---- Hostile work environment, harassment, deprivation of employment rights

New York village employees were not exposed to sexually hostile work environment, as alleged incidents did not meet threshold of severity or pervasiveness required therefor; village administrator's close monitoring of secretary assistant's work, his mild rudeness to her, and his failure to take advantage of all of her abilities were not motivated by gender discrimination, nor was administrator discriminating against her on account of her sex when he assigned responsibilities formerly handled by her to other female employees, and administrator's review of recreation supervisor's budget with fine-toothed comb and criticism of her for being five minutes late to department meetings even though male employees could skip meetings with impunity were insufficient. Demoret v. Zegarelli, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 451 F.3d 140. Civil Rights 1185

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether English-only policy was established with intent to create hostile work environment, precluding summary judgment on Hispanic employees' claims of hostile work environment under §§ 1981, §§ 1983, and Title VII. Maldonado v. City of Altus, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 433 F.3d 1294. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Hostile work environment claims do not turn on single acts but on aggregation of hostile acts extending over period of time, and consequently, statute of limitations will not exclude acts that are part of same unlawful employment practice, under § 1983, if at least one act falls within time period. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Section 1983 did not provide public employee with cause of action against her employer for alleged discriminatory transfer and hostile work environment created by coworkers and supervisors, where there was no evidence of any policy or custom that would warrant municipal liability. Rivera v. Puerto Rico Aqueduct and Sewers Authority, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 331 F.3d 183, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Federal right to be free of same-sex harassment in form of a hostile environment was not established in period covered by city employee's complaint, and, thus, individual supervisory officials could not be held liable on hostile work environment theory under §§ 1983 or 1985, although city itself could not claim qualified immunity. Kelly v. City of Oakland, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 198 F.3d 779, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether frequency and severity of incidents of county clerk's harassment of deputy clerk rose to level of hostility required by law, precluded summary judgment on deputy clerk's hostile work environment claim under §§ 1983. Manzolillo v. Cooke, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 311. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Caucasian attorney working for city police department was not exposed to hostile work environment based on race, in suit under §§ 1983 and in violation of Title VII, when he was forced by minority supervisors to relocate his office numerous times without justification, his work was subjected to "intense scrutiny," he was given increased case load and forced to work longer uncompensated hours, and his job title was downgraded; conduct was insufficiently hostile. Hoffman v. Baltimore Police Dept., D.Md.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 778. Civil Rights 1234

A §§ 1983 claim is actionable where a public official creates a hostile work environment; however, a §§ 1983 claim may not be brought to vindicate rights conferred only by a statute that contains its own structure for private enforcement, such as Title VII. Dawson v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 176. Civil Rights 1147; Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Material issues of fact, as to supervisor's motivation for removing city employee's computer access, precluded summary judgment that action was taken as part of campaign of harassment against employee, in retaliation for her assertion of First Amendment rights, through filing of complaint against supervisor with city and state human rights agencies. Thomas v. Ragland, W.D.Wis.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 950. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

To prevail on hostile work environment claim against school district under § 1983, teacher had to: (1) establish existence of hostile work environment and (2) show that it was policy or custom of District to maintain hostile work environment or that District had policy or custom of deliberate indifference to existence thereof. Sullivan v. Newburgh Enlarged School Dist., S.D.N.Y.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 689. Civil Rights 1147; Civil Rights 1351(5)

African-American employees, suing state department of human services under § 1983, failed to establish claim of hostile work environment, when they asserted that supervisors overly scrutinized their work and denied them promotions; actions were insufficiently egregious. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Civil Rights 1147

A claim for harassment which creates a hostile work environment in violation of the equal protection clause is cognizable under § 1983. Lyon v. Jones, D.Conn.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 507, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 196, 2004 WL 628879. Civil Rights 1147

Isolated anti-Semitic comment toward county corrections officer was insufficient to support a claim of hostile work environment based on religion under § 1983. Baron v. Hickey, D.Mass.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 66. Civil Rights 1161

Former state employee's allegations that former governor made sexual advances toward her in hotel room, used his position to facilitate his sexual harassment of her and later accosted her in state capitol, and that her supervisors treated her in hostile and rude manner and transferred her to job that had no advancement possibilities after she rejected his advances, were sufficient to show pervasive, intimidating, abusive conduct to state § 1983 hostile work environment claim. Jones v. Clinton, E.D.Ark.1997, 974 F.Supp. 712, appeal dismissed 161 F.3d 528. Civil Rights 1185

In deciding whether work environment is hostile or abusive, courts must look at totality of circumstances, including frequency of discriminatory conduct, its severity, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance, and whether it unreasonably interferes with employee's work performance. Williams v. Morris, W.D.Va.1996, 956 F.Supp. 679. Civil Rights 1147

District of Columbia Department of Corrections did not have actual knowledge of alleged racially hostile work environment created by African American coemployees' use of racial epithet when referring to fellow African Americans including employee who brought Title VII action; employee's memorandum to Department director contained no details, he failed to allege that management-level employees participated at roll calls in which he allegedly objected to use of epithet, and he failed to utilize Department's internal grievance process. Ridley v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1996, 945 F.Supp. 333. Civil Rights 1149

1779. ---- Sexual harassment, deprivation of employment rights

Fact that school principal could not be held liable under Title VII for sexually harassing teacher because he was not "employer" did not exempt him from § 1983 action for equal protection violation arising from same conduct. Molnar v. Booth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 2000, 229 F.3d 593. Civil Rights 1359

Female correctional employee's allegations that captain had stared at her before asking her to do typing job, that captain had told her that he "got what [he] wanted" and that he wanted her, that captain had unreasonably requested her to perform typing assignments and that captain had slammed office doors in her presence were insufficient to show sex-based harassment in support of claims under § 1983 and civil rights conspiracy statute. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1185; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Public employee failed to show that supervisory personnel acted with reckless indifference to sexual harassment of employee by coworker, as required to impose supervisory liability under § 1983; supervisors had warned coworker to stay away from employee even before filing of employee's first formal complaint with employer's Equal Employment Opportunity Office (EEOO), EEOO investigated each complaint employee filed against coworker and took prompt action on complaints, and coworker was reprimanded and ordered not to go near employee. Sanchez v. Alvarado, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1996, 101 F.3d 223, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1359

Dispatcher for city fire department was victim of sexual harassment amounting to sex discrimination, so as to have claim against supervisors under § 1983, where supervisors knew of sexually oppressive working conditions even before dispatcher was hired, where dispatcher repeatedly complained of sexual harassment through official channels, and where no corrective action was taken. Bohen v. City of East Chicago, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1986, 799 F.2d 1180, on remand 666 F.Supp. 154. Civil Rights 1189

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether female county police officer unreasonably failed to take advantage of any preventive or corrective opportunities provided or to avoid harm otherwise, precluded summary judgment for county and police chief on officer's sexual harassment claims on basis of Faragher affirmative defense. Ensko v. Howard County, Md., D.Md.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 502. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Kansas corrections officer was not subjected to sexually hostile work environment; refusal of county board of commissioners to honor doctor's order that she not work more than eight hours a day, and her retroactive termination, were not sufficiently pervasive or severe to alter terms, conditions, or privileges of employment and acts complained of were not gender based. McCall v. Board of Com'rs of County of Shawnee, KS, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1216. Civil Rights 1185

Former state employee's allegations that her former supervisor had berated and criticized her, had removed her duties and responsibilities, had made offensive sexual comments, had imposed additional work, had threatened her physically and emotionally, had harassed other women, had used female employees to find babysitters and had retaliated against her for filing complaint were sufficient to state § 1983 claim against former supervisor for sex discrimination in violation of Fourteenth Amendment. Coller v. State of Mo., Dept. of Economic Development, W.D.Mo.1997, 965 F.Supp. 1270. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Sexual harassment in workplace is actionable under § 1983 as a violation of Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection. Wise v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 355. Civil Rights 1182

harassment by supervisor by alleging that harassment was perpetrated under supervisor's authority as District of Columbia law enforcement official and harassment deprived employee of her constitutional civil rights under the Fifth Amendment. Williams v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1996, 916 F.Supp. 1. Civil Rights 1190

Allegation that investigator improperly investigated claims of sexual harassment because of sexual bias states a claim under § 1983. Houck v. City of Prairie Village, Kan., D.Kan.1996, 912 F.Supp. 1438, on reconsideration in part 924 F.Supp. 120. Civil Rights 1189

Cause of action under § 1983 for sexual harassment, as violative of equal protection clause of Fourteenth Amendment, is cognizable. Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, S.D.Fla.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1552, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 1155, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 83 F.3d 1346, affirmed in part, reversed in part 111 F.3d 1530, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 438, 522 U.S. 978, 139 L.Ed.2d 337, reversed 118 S.Ct. 2275, 524 U.S. 775, 157 A.L.R. Fed. 663, 141 L.Ed.2d 662, on remand 166 F.3d 1152. Civil Rights 1036

Complaint of former borough employee alleging that one defendant, in his position and capacity as president of the borough council, engaged in series of sexually discriminatory actions consisting of sexually explicit and vulgar comments and forcibly kissing her, and alleging that police chief to whom incidents were reported only laughed and told plaintiff to be "nice" to the council president or the chief would "bury" her, stated claim for relief under § 1983. Palace v. Deaver, E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1016. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Behavior of a major in a county sheriff's office toward a female employee did not constitute actionable hostile work environment sexual harassment violating Title VII and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, under §§ 1983; the employee pointed to only 16 specific instances of offensive conduct over a four-year period, most involved only offensive utterances, and there was no evidence that his behavior unreasonably interfered with the employee's job performance. Mitchell v. Pope, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 911, 2006 WL 1976011, Unreported. Constitutional Law 224(3)

Conduct of city employee's supervisor in allegedly demanding that employee develop an intimate relationship with him or he would fire or demote her, assaulting employee to convince her to stop associating with her boyfriend, converting women's locker room into an office, failing to provide employee with suitable equipment, thereby placing her in harm's way, and retaliating against her for filing an internal discrimination complaint supported employee's civil rights claims under §§ 1983, §§ 1985, and state law. Crivera v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 339650, Unreported. Civil Rights 1169; Civil Rights 1249(1); Conspiracy 7.5(1); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

1780. ---- Intent or knowledge, harassment, deprivation of employment rights

Genuine issues of material fact, as to whether county clerk was acting in bad faith in contacting fired deputy clerk and offering to rehire her after firing her, or whether her reemployment was to be conditioned on waiver of claim for county's past action, precluded summary judgment for county on deputy clerk's wrongful termination claim. Manzolillo v. Cooke, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 311. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact, as to whether city employee's filing of complaints against supervisor with city and state human rights agencies motivated supervisor to make false claims about her, precluded summary judgment that supervisor had launched campaign of harassment against employee. in retaliation for her assertion of First Amendment protected rights. Thomas v. Ragland, W.D.Wis.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 950. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Person may pursue sexual harassment claim under Fourteenth Amendment based solely upon acts of harassment directed towards her, but that claim must show intent to harass because of status as female and not because of characteristics of her gender which are personal to her. Jones v. Clinton, E.D.Ark.1998, 990 F.Supp. 657, appeal dismissed and remanded 138 F.3d 758, on remand 12 F.Supp.2d 931, on reconsideration in part, appeal dismissed 161 F.3d 528. Constitutional Law 224(2)

1781. ---- Job detriment, harassment, deprivation of employment rights

Former state employee's claim that, "reading between the lines," she "knew what the Governor meant" when he allegedly indicated that employee's ultimate superior was his "good friend," was insufficient to show tangible job detriment as essential element of quid pro quo sexual harassment claim arising out of encounter between Governor and employee in hotel room; Governor's alleged statements did not in any way communicate clear threat that conditioned concrete job benefits or detriments on compliance with sexual demands. Jones v. Clinton, E.D.Ark.1998, 990 F.Supp. 657, appeal dismissed and remanded 138 F.3d 758, on remand 12 F.Supp.2d 931, on reconsideration in part, appeal dismissed 161 F.3d 528. Civil Rights 1184

Former state employee suffered no tangible job detriment establishing hostile work environment sexual harassment after she allegedly rebuffed Governor's sexual advances; although employee claimed that she suffered adverse employment actions, including being transferred to a position that had no responsible duties for which she could be adequately evaluated to earn advancement and failing to receive raises and merit increases, she received every merit increase and cost-of-living allowance for which she was eligible during her job tenure, her job was upgraded, and she consistently received satisfactory job evaluations. Jones v. Clinton, E.D.Ark.1998, 990 F.Supp. 657, appeal dismissed and remanded 138 F.3d 758, on remand 12 F.Supp.2d 931, on reconsideration in part, appeal dismissed 161 F.3d 528. Civil Rights 1185

Behavior of a major in a county sheriff's office toward a female employee did not rise to the level of tangible employment actions, so as to support claims of sexual harassment violating Title VII and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, under §§ 1983; the employee claimed that she changed her work schedule several times to avoid the major, that she had her desk moved to avoid his stares, that he forbade her from using a spare office for her polygraph equipment, and that he gave her two assignments normally not given to officers in her position. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14; Mitchell v. Pope, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 911, 2006 WL 1976011, Unreported. Civil Rights 1190

1782. Medical leave, deprivation of employment rights

Availability of postdeprivation proceeding did not excuse city official's failure to follow established predeprivation procedures before placing employee on involuntary medical leave of absence; had employee received required written notice, she might have successfully contested her placement on medical leave according to established procedures or received suggested medical treatment and returned to work. Roach v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 782 F.Supp. 261. Civil Rights 1128

1783. Pension, deprivation of employment rights

Summary proceeding to review administrative decisions that is available under New York law offered postdeprivation hearing at meaningful time and in meaningful manner sufficient to satisfy due process with respect to widow of former city employee claiming denial of constitutional rights, because of failure to pay survivor benefits under former employee's pension; if widow had timely sought review under New York law, New York court would have had authority to remand case for appropriate administrative proceeding by New York City employees' retirement system. Campo v. New York City Employees' Retirement System, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 843 F.2d 96, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 220, 488 U.S. 889, 102 L.Ed.2d 211. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Beneficiaries of county pension benefit plan had no § 1983 claim against county for contract clause violation. Andrews v. Anne Arundel County, Md., D.Md.1996, 931 F.Supp. 1255, affirmed 114 F.3d 1175, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 600, 522 U.S. 1015, 139 L.Ed.2d 489. Civil Rights 1041

Male police officers' alleged lewd and offensive statements about women did not constitute discriminatory intimidation, ridicule, and insult that was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter conditions of female officer's employment and create abusive working environment that was actionable under §§ 1983, where statements were not directed at officer. Davison v. City of Lone Jack, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 671, 2005 WL 195589, Unreported. Civil Rights 1185

1784. Pretext, deprivation of employment rights

Recreation supervisor for New York village satisfied fourth element of prima facie case of disparate treatment, insofar as circumstances surrounding the alleged adverse employment actions she experienced gave rise to inference of gender discrimination; actions had to be seen in context of village administrator's micromanagement and offensive comments and mayor's failure to respond to her expressed concerns. Demoret v. Zegarelli, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 451 F.3d 140. Civil Rights 1537

Evidence was sufficient for jury to conclude in civil rights lawsuit that mayor's termination of transitory employee in Puerto Rico municipality on basis that she was not qualified for her social worker position was pretext for discrimination in violation of First Amendment political affiliation rights of employee, where employee had been continually rehired and had received excellent ratings and municipality did not follow through on its obligation to summon her to compete for her old job before it was again filled. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Territories 23

Evidence of racially tinged statements by school system's decision-makers, the relative superiority of white male employee's qualifications over successful black female candidate, school system's disregard of its own employment regulations, and white employee's rebuttal of many of school system's proffered justifications raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether school system's articulated reasons for rejecting white employee for interim coordinator position were pretextual, precluding summary judgment in favor of school system on white employee's race discrimination claim based on failure to promote him to interim coordinator position. Vessels v. Atlanta Independent School System, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 408 F.3d 763, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 159 Fed.Appx. 183, 2005 WL 2179495. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact, as to pretextual nature of county clerk's proffered reasons for dismissing deputy clerk, relating to her interest in purchasing van previously leased by county, precluded summary judgment for county on deputy clerk's §§ 1983 claim that she was wrongfully terminated from her position on basis of her gender and appearance. Manzolillo v. Cooke, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 311. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Reasonable jury could not have found from evidence adduced at trial in case under Title VII and §§ 1983, viewed in light most favorable to employee, that gender discrimination played any part in decision of chancellor not to renew employee's contract in her position as assistant chancellor, which was made on stated basis that employee's management style was having adverse effect on staff morale, where number of people told chancellor that they found employee's management style intimidating and not supportive and that it was one of reasons they were leaving university or thinking of leaving, and deficiencies of other administrators were not comparable to hers. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 1018, amended 2004 WL 1688342, affirmed 410 F.3d 387, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1170

Connecticut's Office of the Attorney General's proffered reason for failing to hire Caucasian attorney as an assistant attorney general, that attorney had previous failures of the bar exam, poor work performance as a paralegal in the Office of the Attorney General, and lacked recommendations, were not pretext for race discrimination under Title VII, § 1983 or the Connecticut Fair Employment Practices Act (CFEPA), or age discrimination under § 1983 or CFEPA. Burbank v. Office of Atty. Gen. of Connecticut, D.Conn.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 167, affirmed 75 Fed.Appx. 857, 2003 WL 22229428. Civil Rights 1137

Temporal proximity between African-American state employee's complaint to Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), which asserted that agency practice had disparate impact on African-American employees, and agency's subsequent promulgation of regulations prohibiting him and other employees from accessing certain data for non-work-related purposes was insufficient, without more, to satisfy employee's burden to bring forward some evidence that his termination for violation of disciplinary rules was pretextual, in violation of §§ 1983. Simpson v. New York State Dept. of Civil Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 166 Fed.Appx. 499, 2006 WL 93011, Unreported. States 53

Fact that county employer created opening on morning of employee's transfer did not establish that transfer was a pretext for discrimination against employee who was a union activist claiming that she was discriminated against for exercising First Amendment rights, given that employer needed to move employee out of computer department where a security breach, with which employee appeared to have had some involvement, took place. Wells v. O'Malley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 319, 2004 WL 1662035, Unreported. Constitutional Law 82(11); Counties 67

Failure of Puerto Rico Department of Education to give employee any duties because he refused to accept proposed transfer to equivalent position with duties was not pretext for political affiliation discrimination, absent evidence that similarly situated employees with different political affiliation were treated differently. Lopez Hernandez v. Fajardo Velez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 55 Fed.Appx. 576, 2003 WL 105365, Unreported. Territories 23

1785. Privacy, deprivation of employment rights

Police department employee's constitutional right to privacy was not violated by questions on required background questionnaire as to sexual history, marital history, family's criminal record, and financial background. Walls v. City of Petersburg, C.A.4 (Va.) 1990, 895 F.2d 188.

No constitutional rights or rights of housing authority employees under this section and §§ 1981 and 1985 of this title were violated by mere taping of conversation by defendants, who were connected in various capacities with the housing authority and who were parties to the conversations, even if the recording was done surreptitiously. Holmes v. Finney, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1980, 631 F.2d 150. Civil Rights 1126

Government attorney did not violate privacy rights of government employee, in connection with her investigation of employee's sexual harassment claim against supervisors, so as to provide basis for § 1983 action; privacy violation would entail forced disclosure of information about private sexual matters, and none were alleged. Marrero Rivera v. Department of Justice of Com. of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 821 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1506; Constitutional Law 82(11)

1786. Promotion, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Jury's verdicts in favor of city police department employee on her Title VII claim against city for retaliatory failure to promote, and in favor of city on employee's §§ 1983 claim of failure to promote in retaliation for exercise of free speech right were reconcilable; jury instructions permitted Title VII verdict for employee based on retaliation either for her filing of charges with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and state Human Rights Department or for her complaining about and opposing discrimination within police department, and permitted interpretation that filing of charges was not protected speech. Deloughery v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 422 F.3d 611. Civil Rights 1554

At the prima facie stage, for a § 1983 plaintiff alleging workplace discrimination to show she was qualified, she only needed to demonstrate that she met the basic criteria established by the employer; she was not required to show at the prima facie stage that her qualifications were demonstrably better than others applying for the job.

Franz v. Five Rivers MetroParks, S.D.Ohio 2002, 254 F.Supp.2d 753. Civil Rights 1121

Federal enforcement of municipal promotions procedures is neither contemplated nor warranted under § 1983. District Counsel 33, American Federation of State County and Mun. Employees, AFL-CIO v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1995, 944 F.Supp. 392, affirmed 101 F.3d 690. Civil Rights 1135

Generally, prospective promotion is not a property or liberty interest protected by Fourteenth Amendment; only if promotion to specific position is matter of right under governing substantive law will protected property interest exist. Hunter v. City of Warner Robins, Ga., M.D.Ga.1994, 842 F.Supp. 1460. Constitutional Law 254.1; Constitutional Law 277(1)

Job promotion was not a fundamental right under § 1983, as it constituted neither a liberty nor property interest. Brown v. County of Jackson, E.D.Mich.1992, 804 F.Supp. 939. Civil Rights 1135

City employee who was promised but never officially appointed to career service position, as required by city regulations, had no property interest in position, for purpose of bringing § 1983 claim; there was no evidence that any city employee with authority made enforceable promise to provide employee with title, which could only be conferred via formal steps that were never taken. Santella v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 721 F.Supp. 160, affirmed 936 F.2d 328. Civil Rights 1135

While it may be perfectly legitimate for a private superior not to promote an employee whom he personally dislikes, a government employer may not stand in the way of the developing career of a subordinate for personal reasons not related to job functioning. DeLuca v. Sullivan, D.C.Mass.1977, 450 F.Supp. 736. Officers And Public Employees 11.7

1787. ---- Racial discrimination, promotion, deprivation of employment rights

Unsuccessful firefighter applicants could not show that teamwork portion of exam, which was facially race-neutral and applied non-discriminatorily, nevertheless had racially discriminatory impact on them and was adopted by New Jersey, New Jersey Department of Personnel (NJDOP), and NJDOP officials with intent to discriminate, for purposes of equal protection claims under §§ 1983, since passing rate on teamwork component was remarkably similar for African-American, Hispanic, and white applicants and had no adverse impact on basis of race. Antonelli v. New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 419 F.3d 267. Municipal Corporations 197

Regardless of whether city had improperly used race as consideration in its promotions process for police officers, officers who would have been rejected for promotion even without allegedly discriminatory process lacked standing to bring § 1983 equal protection challenge against that process. Petit v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 352 F.3d 1111, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2426, 541 U.S. 1074, 158 L.Ed.2d 984. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Although consent decree, entered in settlement of prior racial discrimination suit against sheriff's department and mandating a policy that at least 50% of all annual promotions in department be awarded to black officers, did not preordain the race of the officer receiving any one promotion, it did demand a racial allocation of the promotions conferred annually, thus potentially creating the equal protection infraction identified in the Supreme Court's Croson decision. Thigpen v. Bibb County, Ga., Sheriff's Dept., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2000, 223 F.3d 1231. Constitutional Law 219.1; Federal Civil Procedure 2397.2

Municipal water works was not liable under § 1981 for allegedly discriminatory denial of promotion to African-American employee; § 1983 provides exclusive federal remedy to violation of § 1981 when claim is against state actor, and employee offered no facts or evidence of policy or custom on part of water works of racially disparate treatment in promotion process which would subject water works to municipal liability under §

County community service board proffered neutral, non-discriminatory reasons for its allegedly adverse actions in passing over African-American employee for promotion, as required to rebut employee's prima facie racial discrimination claim under § 1983; board expressed concerns about morale issues and staff dissatisfaction with employee, indicated its belief that other candidate for interim directorship of board was better choice, and suggested concern at surreptitious manner in which employee and other person attempted to confer status of interim director on herself. Collier v. Clayton County Community Service Bd., N.D.Ga.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 1345, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 222, 2003 WL 22227530. Civil Rights 1135

Black employee could not use § 1983 to assert a claim of race discrimination in connection with failure to promote; if such a violation of Title VII could have been asserted through § 1983, the employee could avoid most, if not all, of Title VII's detailed requirements for bringing such a claim. Middlebrooks v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 970 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Evidence that black firefighters had consistently received satisfactory performance ratings, that the firefighters had been praised while temporarily working in position of captain and that fire chief had been involved in assessment center promotion process, which had been established pursuant to consent decree entered in prior employment discrimination lawsuit, did not show that city's proffered reason for not promoting the firefighters to position of captain, that they had received low ratings from assessment center program, was pretext for intentional race discrimination in violation of § 1983. Felton v. City of Auburn, M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1476. Civil Rights 1135

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether individual supervisory employees of Delaware Department of Public Instruction deliberately denied African-American employee a promotion due to his race, precluding summary judgment on § 1983 claim against employees individually. Lewis v. State of Del. Dept. of Public Instruction, D.Del.1996, 948 F.Supp. 352. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Employee of youth services division of county probate court, who alleged that she was discriminated against on basis of race in failing to be granted promotion to director of youth services division, did not have liberty or property interest in promotion that was protected under § 1983. Douglas v. County of Jackson, E.D.Mich.1992, 804 F.Supp. 944. Civil Rights 1135

Captain with city fire department failed to show that department's nondiscriminatory reason for promoting African-American candidate to position of district chief, that he was better qualified, was pretextual and that failure to promote captain, who was Caucasian, resulted from race discrimination, precluding department's liability for alleged race discrimination. Monteverde v. New Orleans Fire Dept., C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 900, 2005 WL 673490, Unreported. Civil Rights 1234

1788. ---- Sex discrimination

Female employee of a park failed to rebut overwhelming evidence that other, more qualified individuals, were hired into the various sergeant openings, or to show how the defendant chief ranger himself played any significant and material role in the decision-making process leading to the filling of the various job openings she sought, thus defeating her claim of sex discrimination under § 1983 regarding the denial of a promotion to the position of sergeant. Franz v. Five Rivers MetroParks, S.D.Ohio 2002, 254 F.Supp.2d 753. Civil Rights 1421

African-American employee of city did not establish that he was subjected to racially hostile work environment, as required for claims under §§ 1981 and 1983 employee did not allege any conduct of overtly racial character by city or its officials, and alleged menial work that employee was required to do was shared by all employees in his department. Jessamy v. City of New Rochelle, New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 498. Civil Rights 1147

Female employee of a park failed to rebut overwhelming evidence that other, more qualified individuals, were hired into the various sergeant openings, or to show how the defendant chief ranger himself played any significant and material role in the decision-making process leading to the filling of the various job openings she sought, thus defeating her claim of sex discrimination under § 1983 regarding the denial of a promotion to the position of sergeant. Franz v. Five Rivers MetroParks, S.D.Ohio 2002, 254 F.Supp.2d 753. Civil Rights 1421

Employee's allegation that county and county city-county planning commission "did not promote" her from her position as "planning technician solely on the basis of her sex," standing alone, was not sufficient to allege that her failure to be promoted was the result of a pattern and practice of discrimination and thus, employee failed to establish § 1983 municipal liability claim. Hammer v. Hillsborough County Through Bd. of County Com'rs, M.D.Fla.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1540. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Mayor did not engage in employment sex discrimination against female city employee, in violation of Title VII and §§ 1983, when he awarded new unclassified position of assistant director of city's recreation department to male employee who conceived of position, submitted idea to mayor, and pressed matter until mayor agreed to create new position, which he was legally empowered to do unilaterally. Long v. Congemi, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 115 Fed.Appx. 190, 2004 WL 2537087, Unreported. Civil Rights 1169

Racial classification imposed by county's police cadet program, which excluded nonminorities in favor of blacks and Hispanics, was not narrowly tailored to achieve asserted compelling governmental interest of remedying past race discrimination and, therefore, did not pass equal protection strict scrutiny test; cadet program was not required by court order or terms of prior consent decree, other remedies were available to increase minority police exam performance, continuation of cadet program until achievement of racial balance goals would be of unreasonable duration, statistical evidence showing disparity between number of minority police officers and minority percentage of general population had little probative value, and program's impact on rights of third parties was attenuated. Hiller v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1238; Constitutional Law 219.1

Compelling government interest justified city's affirmative action plan, promoting black and Hispanic firefighters out of rank to captain; city was under continuing obligation to comply with prior consent decree, city was required under existing collective bargaining agreement to follow promotion policies designed to increase number of blacks and Hispanics in higher positions, and city commissioner of personnel concluded that city's commitment to equal opportunity required adoption of reasonable affirmative action measures. McNamara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 870, affirmed 138 F.3d 1219, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 444, 525 U.S. 981, 142 L.Ed.2d 398. Civil Rights 1238

1790. ---- Seniority systems, promotion, deprivation of employment rights

Although use of seniority as tie breaker for promotion and assignment preferences in city police department was facially gender neutral, use of seniority as tie breaker could be challenged as violation of § 1983 if it resulted in perpetuating past offenses of sexual discrimination in hiring and promotion. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1169

1791. ---- Litigation, promotion, deprivation of employment rights

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former employee of Rhode Island Department of Business Regulation failed to establish that actions of departmental officials, either in not promoting him or in allegedly removing all of his job duties, were in retaliation for or substantially motivated by his prior lawsuits and thus could not support his claims that his First Amendment speech and petition rights had been violated. Corrigan v. State of R.I., Dept. of Business Regulation, D.R.I.1993, 820 F.Supp. 647. Civil Rights 1421; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91

1792. ---- Political contributions, promotion, deprivation of employment rights

Conduct by persons in official positions whereby denial of employment or promotion is conditioned on making of a financial contribution to a political party is an unacceptable invasion of constitutional rights, actionable under this section. Cullen v. New York State Civil Service Commission, E.D.N.Y.1977, 435 F.Supp. 546, appeal dismissed 566 F.2d 846. Civil Rights 1135; Civil Rights 1231

1793. ---- Public employees, promotion, deprivation of employment rights

State agency's failure to select African-American employee for promotion on ground that he did not have highest interview score was not pretext for race discrimination, in violation of Title VII and §§ 1983, even if employee was only candidate who met minimum requirements for position, where there was no evidence that agency did not believe that individual selected was better qualified. Woods v. Illinois Dept. of Corrections, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 553, 2006 WL 122405, Unreported. Civil Rights 1137

While 58-year-old Hispanic employee of county alleged that she was unfairly passed over for two positions in favor of younger white employee and younger Hispanic employee, she failed to rebut employer's substantial showing that both of the chosen candidates were better qualified than plaintiff for the respective positions, as required for age and race discrimination claims under § 1983 and New York Human Rights Law (NYHRL). Nesbitt v. Morganthau, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31385828, Unreported. Civil Rights 1135; Civil Rights 1207

1793A. Retaliation, promotion, deprivation of employment rights

Even if city water department employee met with supervisor and discussed his claims of corruption by other employees and his fears of retaliation for reporting wrongdoing by other employees, employee failed to show that the conversation had an effect on any subsequent decision by supervisor to deny him promotions, as required for supervisor to be liable to employee under §§ 1983 for retaliation against employee for protected speech, in violation of First Amendment; employee was denied only two promotions after his meeting with supervisor, and both of those promotion decisions, and the hiring processes that preceded them, occurred after supervisor had resigned from her position. Healy v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 450 F.3d 732. Municipal Corporations 218(3)

1794. Safety of work environment, deprivation of employment rights

Neither fact that plaintiff's decedent was government employee nor characterization of city's deliberate indifference to his safety as something other than "abuse of governmental power" was sufficient reason for refusing to entertain plaintiff's section 1983 claim that city violated due process clause by failing to train or warn its employees. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1126

Correctional facility and officers' alleged inadequate remedial and preventative measures to stop the spread of Methicilin Resistant Staphylococcus aureus infections within the correctional facility did not rise to a level of deliberate indifference that could be characterized as conscience shocking, as required for employee's §§ 1983 claim alleging that his working environment lead to his infection in violation of his substantive due process rights; the Department of Corrections found the jail substantially in compliance with state standards, giving defendants reason to believe the measures were adequate, only two of 170 corrections officers tested positive for colonization of the infection, and the facility had in place policies and procedures to ensure sanitary conditions in the jail, including requirements that cells be regularly cleaned with an all-purpose detergent and that showers be disinfected with a bleach and water solution. Kaucher v. County of Bucks, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 418. Prisons 8

State officials' reckless failure to provide prison guard with safe working environment did not violate constitutional or federal right for which prison guard could recover damages under section 1983. Washington v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1986, 802 F.2d 1478, 256 U.S.App.D.C. 84. Civil Rights 1039

Civil rights claimant who allegedly suffered from respiratory and cardiovascular ailments and who sought damages and injunctive relief against his employer, the state of Oklahoma, and various officers and employees thereof failed to prove that he was deprived of a federal right by defendants' failure to prohibit smoking in the area where he worked. Kensell v. State of Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1983, 716 F.2d 1350. Civil Rights 1421

Public employee alleged actionable deprivation of substantive due process rights, as actions of public employer shocked conscience, where public employee alleged that public employer and its employees knew he would face risk of almost certain injury if he changed switch near high voltage power lines as he was instructed to do. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Bus drivers and bus mechanics did not have legally cognizable constitutional right to minimal level of workplace safety in public employment necessary to support their due process claims in § 1983 suit against school district. Murray v. Connetquot Cent. School Dist. of Islip, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 54 Fed.Appx. 18, 2002 WL 31832735, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 67, 540 U.S. 815, 157 L.Ed.2d 30. Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1); Schools 63(1); Schools 159.5(6)

1795. Salary, deprivation of employment rights

State employee made prima facie showing that supervisor discriminated against her based on gender in determining her raise amount, in violation of her equal protection rights, inasmuch employee was in protected class as a woman, she received evaluation of "accomplished" for pertinent year and was meeting employer's legitimate employment expectations, she suffered adverse employment action in form of raise at allegedly discriminatory rate, and was treated differently from similarly situated male employees who received higher raise despite receiving same employment evaluation. Hildebrandt v. Illinois Dept. of Natural Resources, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 1014. Constitutional Law 224(3); States 63

Since school board's implementation of new salary structure and reading requirement for new janitor position was not an adverse employment action, board's alleged failure to promote and pay employees at appropriate rate and its alleged use of inappropriate reading test to block employees' rightful positions did not constitute "adverse employment action," as required to support employees' claim, under § 1983, that they were retaliated against for their participation in state court lawsuit alleging sex discrimination. Banks v. East Baton Rouge Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 320 F.3d 570, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 82, 540 U.S. 817, 157 L.Ed.2d 34. Schools 63(1)

County clerk's claim to a pay raise did not indicate an entitlement sufficient to constitute a property interest under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Estes v. Tuscaloosa County, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1983, 696 F.2d 898. Civil Rights 1136

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether male county employees' positions were in fact comparable to that of female county deputy clerk, or whether county had succeeded in establishing existence of seniority pay system or other rationale to explain difference in pay, precluded summary judgment for county on deputy clerk's wage discrimination/equal pay claim. Manzolillo v. Cooke, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 311. Federal Civil Procedure 2498

Fire protection district employee's allegations of constitutional violations based on defendants' unjustified failure to pay her at same rate as younger coworkers and age discrimination in failing to increase her salary to reflect her seniority stated claim for age discrimination under §§ 1983. Aucoin v. Kennedy, E.D.La.2004, 355 F.Supp.2d 830 . Civil Rights 1207

A § 1983 claim has two elements: (1) the defendant acted under color of state law; and (2) as a result of defendant's conduct, plaintiff suffered a denial of a federal statutory or constitutional right or privilege. Sharif v. Buck, W.D.N.Y.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 435, affirmed 152 Fed.Appx. 43, 2005 WL 2650070. Civil Rights 1304

School administrators had protected property interest in salary increase approved by school board, for purposes of § 1983 action brought after board rescinded increase. Rockford Principals and Sup'rs Ass'n v. Board of Educ. of Rockford School Dist. No. 205, N.D.Ill.1989, 721 F.Supp. 948. Civil Rights 1136

African-American 51-year-old employee of county failed to establish that her salary increases were incommensurate with salary increases of younger, white employees in same position, as required for age and race discrimination claims under § 1983 and New York Human Rights Law (NYHRL); employee failed to adduce any admissible evidence as to what salary increases were for comparators. Nesbitt v. Morganthau, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31385828, Unreported. Civil Rights 1138; Civil Rights 1210

1796. Seniority systems, deprivation of employment rights

In action under this section, application of seniority system that gives present effect to a past act of discrimination but is itself neutral in operation and makes no impermissible distinctions, does not give rise to an independent civil rights claim. Fiesel v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1981, 524 F.Supp. 48. Civil Rights 1141

1797. Suspension, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

State employer did not violate the United States Constitution or federal law in the various suspensions and dismissals of claimant, refusals to reinstate him, or in any possible conspiracy instant thereto occurring after claimant was indicted for and convicted of murdering a fellow employee, and thus claimant was not entitled to redress under this section. Ybarra v. Bastian, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1981, 647 F.2d 891, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 309, 454 U.S. 857, 70 L.Ed.2d 153. Civil Rights 1128; Conspiracy 7.5(2)

It was inherent in employment relationship as a matter of common sense that probation officer did not have right to place on wall of his office a poster favorably depicting persons who were fugitives from justice, and his supervisor could reasonably conclude that poster was unprofessional, in poor taste, and inconsistent with proper performance of plaintiff's duties as a probation officer and was acting within discretion in directing plaintiff to remove objectionable poster within two days or face suspension. Phillips v. Adult Probation Dept. of City and County of San Francisco, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 491 F.2d 951. Officers And Public Employees 69.12

In order to succeed on claim that he was denied property interest without due process of law by being denied opportunity to be heard prior to suspension and termination, public employee must show that adverse employment action deprived him of property interest, and employer failed to provide him with notice of charges against him and meaningful opportunity to respond to those charges, unless exigent circumstances compelled employee's immediate removal or suspension. Sterling v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 926 F.Supp. 65. Constitutional Law 272(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

could harm his political candidacy for local office was clearly insufficient to show involuntary resignation so as to state § 1983 claim against township and members of board of township supervisors who had previously voted to suspend employee from his position pending Attorney General's investigation. Lahaza v. Azeff, E.D.Pa.1992, 790 F.Supp. 88. Civil Rights 1128

Wrongful suspension from county job in contravention of civil service rules and regulations is not a violation of a federal right or privilege within this section. German v. Killeen, E.D.Mich.1980, 495 F.Supp. 822. Civil Rights 1128

1798. ---- Suspension with pay, deprivation of employment rights

School principal's suspension with pay did not implicate constitutionally protected property interest. Pierce v. Engle, D.Kan.1989, 726 F.Supp. 1231. Constitutional Law 277(2); Schools 147.28

1799. ---- Suspension without pay, deprivation of employment rights

Unlawful suspension of city housing authority employee without pay constituted denial of due process actionable under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Hilf v. New York Housing Authority, S.D.N.Y.1982, 550 F.Supp. 1000. Civil Rights 1128

Claim that even if 71 P.S.Pa. §§ 741.803, 741.905a, 741.951(a, b), did provide for review of disciplinary proceeding against probationary employee, a reasonable lay person, upon reading the statutory provision, could easily conclude that appeal of suspension based on performance of job-related duties could not be had and that no presuspension opportunity to contest the charges was afforded, stated a cause of action for denial of due process to probationary employee who was suspended without pay for alleged misconduct. Bagby v. Beal, M.D.Pa.1977, 439 F.Supp. 1257. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1800. Training and supervision, deprivation of employment rights

City's alleged failure to train or warn its sanitation department employees did not violate due process clause, and thus, § 1983 did not provide remedy for widow of municipal employee who was fatally injured in course of his employment as a result of that alleged failure; due process clause did not impose independent substantive duty upon municipality to provide certain levels of safety and security in workplace, and city's alleged failure to train its employees, or to warn them about known risks of harm, was not omission that could properly be characterized as arbitrary, or conscience-shocking, in constitutional sense. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1352(5); Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

Town's alleged failure to implement sexual harassment training did not render it liable under § 1983 for town councilwoman's alleged sexual harassment of male employee; there was no evidence that town knew of any harassment by councilwoman or otherwise. Perks v. Town of Huntington, E.D.N.Y.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1143. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Blind employee's allegations that he was required to train and hire reading aides without assistance from his employer, the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare (DPW), and that DPW refused to supply him with updated computer software, or training manuals and seminar materials in braille, were sufficient to state claims against DPW under Rehabilitation Act and § 1983. Nelson v. Com. of Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare, E.D.Pa.2002, 244 F.Supp.2d 382. Civil Rights 1220; Civil Rights 1225(3)

officials conspired together to deprive him of his pretransfer hearing, as required to state a claim against developer under § 1983; record indicated that mayor and city commissioners had various reasons to transfer plaintiff including citizen complaints about employee's behavior, and there was no evidence of agreement between developer and city officials. Moore v. City of Paducah, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1989, 890 F.2d 831, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(11)

If executive director of hospital transferred director of nursing and vice-president for corporate affairs of municipal corporation which operated hospital fired director of nursing because she brought evidence of malfeasance and corruption to hospital corporation's inspector general, they established hospital corporation policy and, therefore, municipal hospital corporation could be held liable for violating civil rights of director of nursing. Rookard v. Health and Hospitals Corp., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1983, 710 F.2d 41. Civil Rights 1340

Supervisor's reduction of city employee's duties, following her complaints filed with local and state agencies alleging improper sexual conduct, could not be sustained over claims of First Amendment and Title VII retaliation violations on grounds that reductions were caused by problems arising from relationship of trust and confidence between supervisor and employee; appropriate response for personal conflicts of sort presented in instant case was transfer, not duties reduction, and employee's interest in free speech outbalanced any government efficiency interest. Thomas v. Ragland, W.D.Wis.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 950. Civil Rights 1249(1); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Police officer was not victim of "adverse employment action," precluding Title VII or other Civil Rights Act suit challenging her transfer from administrative sergeant to beat sergeant, which involved no reduction in pay or benefits, despite claim that she preferred types of work done by administrative sergeant and that beat sergeant was less prestigious position. O'Neal v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 823, affirmed 392 F.3d 909. Civil Rights 1135

Municipality's sports director was not liable in § 1983 action for political discrimination against municipal employee, whose request for transfer was denied and request for resignation was deferred until after local elections took place, allegedly due to employee's membership in political party, absent evidence that director supervised, carried out, or participated in any of the alleged discriminatory acts. Rivera Torres v. Ortiz Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 306 F.Supp.2d 76, appeal denied 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Civil Rights 1359

Reasons articulated by state Board of Education, in female college administrator's suit alleging gender discrimination in employment in violation of Title VII, Title IX and § 1983, for employment decisions at issue were pretext for discrimination; campus reorganizations cited as reason for administrator's removal from her position as dean of students on two campuses and reassignment as dean of student services on one campus did not lead to demotion of any other administrators, one successful candidate for position sought by administrator had been fired from position profferred as partial justification for his preferment over her, plaintiff administrator's academic credentials were equal or superior to those of successful candidates, and at least one individual responsible for appointments harbored some animus toward administrator. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1171

Assuming that African-American counselor employed by community college established prima facie case of racial discrimination in, inter alia, transfer to different job assignment at different campus and administrators' attempts to contact her during leave of absence, college officials articulated legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons for employment decisions, which were not adequately rebutted, by stating that she was contacted during leave of absence to determine when she would return to work, that she was transferred to place her in work environment where she would not have perception of harassment, and that there were numerous problems with her job performance. Mosley v. Houston Community College System, S.D.Tex.1996, 951 F.Supp. 1279. Civil Rights

Interests of Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority in having an efficiently run internal security office free from political dissension and distrust outweighed First Amendment rights of former employee and justified transfer based on political affiliation; internal security of authority implicated partisan issues. Pietri Bonilla v. Alvarado, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 762 F.Supp. 451. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Medical professor at state university who had been assigned to university's department of family medicine had no "property interest" protected by due process clause in not being reassigned or transferred to any other department in college of osteopathic medicine, and could not maintain civil rights action based on his brief, ten-day interdepartmental transfer, which did not result in loss of salary or status. Farkas v. Ross-Lee, W.D.Mich.1989, 727 F.Supp. 1098, affirmed 891 F.2d 290. Civil Rights 1135; Constitutional Law 277(2)

Employee failed to offer proof from which reasonable fact finder could conclude that employer's motive for transferring her was discriminatory, as required for employer's liability under Title VII, §§1981, §§1983, and New York State Human Rights Law; employee failed to contravene employer's proof that transfer was part of general reorganization plan, nurses were transferred to new areas to improve morale, employee's replacement in job from which she was transferred was senior to her, other African American nurse with rank equivalent to employee remained on day shift, and employee had recommended reorganization. Roberts v. County of Nassau, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 140 Fed.Appx. 277, 2005 WL 1588786, Unreported. Civil Rights 1137

County employee, a union activist, failed to establish a prima facie case of retaliation when she was transferred to a data entry position from a PC specialist position; although she established she engaged in protected First Amendment activity and her transfer may have been adverse action, employer presented non-retaliatory grounds for transfer through undisputed evidence that employer had conducted an investigation of computer-security breach and determined that employee was involved in it. Wells v. O'Malley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 319, 2004 WL 1662035, Unreported. Constitutional Law 82(11); Counties 67

City employee's transfer from one department to another was lateral, both in form and substance, and thus was not "adverse employment action" supporting claim that transfer was retaliation for employee's protected speech, in violation of her rights under First Amendment and state law. Mullen v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21511952, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

1802. Unions, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Discrimination against public employees because they are members of a labor organization is actionable under this section. Thomas v. Younglove, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1976, 545 F.2d 1171. Civil Rights 1125

Process provided to a teacher aide/driver employed by a regional educational service center in connection with his discharge was constitutionally sufficient to protect his property interest in his continued employment; collective bargaining agreement and its grievance procedure provided substantial post-deprivation procedures and rights, and the center's board heard an appeal of the decision to terminate him, thus affording adequate pre-termination review. Jenkins v. Area Cooperative Educ. Services, D.Conn.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 117, modified on reconsideration 2004 WL 413267. Constitutional Law 278.5(4); Schools 63(1)

City's requirement that nonunion employees pay voluntary agency fee to union in order to be eligible for enrollment in dental insurance plan under employer-provided flexible benefits plan constituted unlawful coercion to join union, in violation of nonunion employees' First Amendment free association and free speech rights, where bargaining units had expressly voted against agency shop, and agency fee covered all charges union incurred for representational, collective bargaining, and contract enforcement activities in general, not just costs involved in negotiating, securing, and administering optional insurance plans. Brannian v. City of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2005,

364 F.Supp.2d 1187. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91; Labor And Employment 1474

Actions taken by county during labor negotiations with union were not in retaliation for union's failure to endorse one of defendants in his election bid for county office and thus, union was not entitled to recover under § 1983 civil rights deprivation claim; union failed to demonstrate that any retaliatory motive existed much less that any such motive was substantial factor in county defendants' actions. Rockland County Sheriff's Deputies Ass'n, Inc. v. Grant, S.D.N.Y.1987, 670 F.Supp. 566. Civil Rights 1033(2)

Right of association under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14, § 1 protects right of public employees to join union and action under this section is proper vehicle for vindication of such right. Castleberry v. Langford, N.D.Tex.1977, 428 F.Supp. 676. Civil Rights 1126; Constitutional Law 91; Constitutional Law 274.1(2.1)

1803. ---- Dues, unions, deprivation of employment rights

Although nonunion public employees cannot be required to submit their constitutional claims with respect to agency fees to an arbitrator, if notice issues are addressed in course of reasonably prompt decision by arbitrator on chargeability issues, and nonunion employees have option of presenting those claims anew before court in civil rights action, their constitutional rights have been protected. Weaver v. University of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 970 F.2d 1523, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1274, 507 U.S. 917, 122 L.Ed.2d 668. Labor And Employment 1039(5); Labor And Employment 1599

If collective bargaining agreement is with public employer that deducts union's agency fee from its employees' wages and part of the fee is used to advance union's political or ideological goals, as distinct from defraying union's expenses of negotiating and administering collective bargaining agreement, both public employer and union can be held liable in civil rights suit under § 1983 for violating nonunion employees' right of free speech under First Amendment. Gilpin v. American Federation of State, County, and Mun. Employees, AFL-CIO, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1989, 875 F.2d 1310, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 278, 493 U.S. 917, 107 L.Ed.2d 258. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Nonunion public employees would likely prevail on their § 1983 claim against a university's union for providing them with inadequate information in a notice prior to making union payroll deductions; notice failed to indicate amount of the fee, there was no independent verification of the chargeable and nonchargeable union expenses, nonmembers were required to request an audit in writing to receive a copy, and the union's deduction-escrow-rebate procedure would likely be found unconstitutional because there was a delay of nearly a year before a member would receive the rebate after request. Swanson v. University of Hawaii Professional Assembly, D.Hawai'i 2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 1252. Labor And Employment 1039(4)

Requirement that nonmembers used certified mail to file their objections to county employees' union's calculation of fair-share fee in order to invoke arbitration was unconstitutionally burdensome. Laramie v. County of Santa Clara, N.D.Cal.1992, 784 F.Supp. 1492. Labor And Employment 1039(5)

If public employer deducts union's agency fee from its employees' wages, and part of fee is used to advance union's political or ideological goals, as distinct from defraying union's expenses of negotiating and administering collective bargaining agreement, both public employer and union can be held liable for violating nonmembers' rights of free speech under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. for his filing of auditing reports critical of authority was supported by evidence that employee had been reprimanded for filing reports, employee was discharged on day that report revealing wrongdoing on part of officials was to be filed, after being discharged, he was escorted to his office by two police officer and prevented from either circulating report or retrieving his work, and officials told employee that he was being discharged as part of reorganization of audit department, but, except for few minor changes, department was substantially same after employee left, notwithstanding authority's attack on employee's job performance. Feldman v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 43 F.3d 823. Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Putting prison corrections officer on probation and reducing her pay for disclosing confidential information over telephone was not attributable to officer's exercise of her free speech rights in engaging in whistleblowing activity, as required to maintain First Amendment retaliation claim under § 1983, where officer admitted making unauthorized call to union representative after inmate had sexually assaulted another female officer, phone call violated Department of Criminal Justice guidelines, it was officer's second disciplinary violation in year, and sanctions given were light in comparison to maximum actions allowable under guidelines. Pierce v. Texas Dept. of Criminal Justice, Institutional Div., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 37 F.3d 1146, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1957, 514 U.S. 1107, 131 L.Ed.2d 849. Civil Rights 1252

Plaintiff asserting First Amendment whistle-blower claims under § 1983 must show that expressions that are alleged to have provoked retaliatory action related to matters of public concern, that alleged retaliatory action deprived him of some valuable benefit and that, but for protected expression, employer would not have taken alleged retaliatory action. Huang v. Board of Governors of University of North Carolina, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1990, 902 F.2d 1134, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1243

Police officer claiming he was subjected to First Amendment retaliation for whistleblowing activity sufficiently alleged that captains, deputy chief, and chief of police took "adverse employment action" against him by failing to promote him, placing him on administrative leave, and refusing to reinstate him despite fact three psychologists declared him fit for duty. Neveu v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1159. Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Unsuccessful applicant did not show that rejection of his job application by police psychologist was in retaliation for his prior allegations that officers in his neighborhood had organized crime connections, as required to support First Amendment retaliation claim; psychologist's scrutiny of applicant's motive for making such allegations, which were part of his file, in determining his psychological fitness did not show retaliatory animus, nor did proximity between psychologist's rejection of his application and her learning of allegations. Golub v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 399. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 184(1)

Issue of whether motivating factor for discharge, following publication of newspaper articles detailing his corruption allegations, of former agent for Special Investigations Bureau (S.I.B.) of Puerto Rico Department of Justice (D.O.J.) was agent's exercise of free speech rights was for jury in § 1983 action, with respect to claims against director of S.I.B., who discharged employee, supervisor who wrote memos to director recommending employee's discharge after he went to press and including domestic abuse conviction as alternative basis for employee's termination, supervisor of intelligence at S.I.B.'s Corruption and Organized Crime Investigation Division (C.O.C.I.D.) who was also personally alerted of employee's allegations of corruption and safety concerns and did nothing, and individual in charge of evaluating and recommending to Secretary of Justice the course of action respecting employee's future at DOJ. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1048. Civil Rights 1430

A tax attorney terminated by the state failed to state a claim that his Fourteen Amendment rights were violated when he was terminated for whistleblower activities; while he sufficiently alleged an injury to his liberty interest in his good name, resulting from charges made in connection with his termination, he did not make the further necessary allegation that he was deprived of an adequate name-clearing hearing, as required by due process.

Prager v. LaFaver, D.Kan.1998, 5 F.Supp.2d 906, affirmed 180 F.3d 1185, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 405, 528 U.S. 967, 145 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1805. Wrongful death, deprivation of employment rights

City sewer worker, who was instructed to enter manhole to clear a line and who died of asphyxia before he could be removed, did not die as result of any abuse of government power and, thus, widow of worker could not maintain § 1983 action against city. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 916 F.2d 284, certiorari granted 111 S.Ct. 1579, 499 U.S. 958, 113 L.Ed.2d 644, affirmed 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1126

1806. Dismissal, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Physician's dismissal from anesthesiology residency program at state university for failing to disclose his participation in and dismissal from another residency program did not violate physician's due process liberty interest in pursuit of his occupation, absent showing that program director made false, defamatory statements of fact about physician and reasons for his termination. Fenje v. Feld, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 620, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Colleges And Universities 9.35(3.1); Constitutional Law 278.5(6)

Without an allegation of violation of constitutional rights, federal court had no jurisdiction to hear case brought by county employees arising from their alleged illegal dismissal. Mulherin v. O'Brien, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1978, 588 F.2d 853. Civil Rights 1128

Alleged unfair termination of state juvenile justice department employee was not a substantive due process violation, for purposes of § 1983 claim; loss of employment did not amount to a deprivation of a fundamental right. Levinson v. Mucker, W.D.Ky.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 848. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Infants 17

Secretary of Puerto Rico Department of Justice (D.O.J.) was not liable under § 1983 or First Amendment to former agent for Special Investigations Bureau (S.I.B.) for his discharge after publication of newspaper articles on corruption allegations made by agent; Secretary, who took office the month before agent's termination, had in signing termination letter adopted recommendation that agent be discharged for domestic abuse conviction, and there was no evidence Secretary was motivated in any way by publication of articles or agent's denouncement of corruption. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1048. Civil Rights 1359

The employment of a public employee may not, in general, be terminated for the employee's exercise of constitutionally protected rights. Sprague v. Fitzpatrick, E.D.Pa.1976, 412 F.Supp. 910, affirmed 546 F.2d 560, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 2649, 431 U.S. 937, 53 L.Ed.2d 255. Officers And Public Employees 66

Board members of community action association did not conspire with state officials to terminate association's executive director in retaliation for exercising her First Amendment rights regarding legality of state's method of distributing federal funds, and thus director's termination by board members was not under color of state law, as required for § 1983 claim, even if state officials threatened to withhold funding, where state official who had ultimate authority for disbursement of funds played no role in director's termination. Spencer v. Illinois Community Action Ass'n, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 51 Fed.Appx. 973, 2002 WL 31408895, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

environment claim under due process clause in civil rights lawsuit, since employer did not take those actions solely to harass him, but, instead, employer was responding to complaints from both inmates and staff, and employer did not violate its own policies when it looked into those matters. Witte v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 434 F.3d 1031. Prisons 7

State university employee was not constructively discharged, and thus did not establish prima facie case of racial discrimination in his Title VII, §§ 1981, and §§ 1983 wrongful termination claims against university; although supervisor requested employee's resignation twice, employee refused both times, and at mediation to resolve his dispute with supervisor, employee volunteered that he wanted to leave and find another job, and he rejected university's offer of continued employment, with caveat that he move his office, in favor of deal that compensated him for six months while he looked for another job. Baca v. Sklar, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 398 F.3d 1210, on remand 2005 WL 2295671. Civil Rights 1123

Former civil service employee was not constructively discharged when employer, Puerto Rico Tourism Company, appointed new supervisor for employee and ordered employee to report directly to supervisor, barring employee's claim of political discrimination in violation of the First Amendment, where employee failed to proffer any evidence suggesting that new work conditions were inferior to norm or that requiring him to respond to supervisor was result of political animus. Mercado-Alicea v. P.R. Tourism Co., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 396 F.3d 46. Constitutional Law 82(11); Territories 23

Among factors court considers in determining voluntariness of public employee's resignation, for purposes of § 1983 constructive discharge claim, are whether employee was given some alternative to resignation, whether employee understood nature of choice she was given, whether employee was given reasonable time in which to choose, and whether she was permitted to select effective date of resignation. Yearous v. Niobrara County Memorial Hosp. By and Through Bd. of Trustees, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1997, 128 F.3d 1351, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1515, 523 U.S. 1074, 140 L.Ed.2d 669. Civil Rights 1123

Supervisory municipal employee failed to establish that city deprived him of any due process property interest, for purposes of § 1983 claim, by assigning him to more manual labor and less managerial and administrative work, even assuming that such conduct violated New Jersey statutory and common law; employee did not allege that he was discharged actually or constructively, that his salary or benefits were affected, or that he was stripped of his job title or transferred to different agency. Ferraro v. City of Long Branch, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1994, 23 F.3d 803. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Dispatcher who claimed sexual harassment by police officer failed to establish constructive discharge such as would support § 1983 claim; dispatcher made no complaint to management until after she had quit, and there was no showing that such complaint would have been futile. Woodward v. City of Worland, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1992, 977 F.2d 1392, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 3038, 509 U.S. 923, 125 L.Ed.2d 724. Civil Rights 1123; Civil Rights 1189

Physician at District of Columbia health clinic failed to establish she was constructively discharged, for purposes of §§ 1983 claim, in connection with her resignation from position of Clinic Chief and "retreat" to position of Medical Officer; physician's development of illnesses of hypertension, allegedly attributable to unreasonable physic demands, stress and duress of her former position, did not amount to "constructive discharge," and alleged promises of impending improvements in staffing were more likely made to keep her in her position as Clinic Chief than to force her to quit. Turner v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 157. Civil Rights 1123

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether District of Columbia mental hospital and its officials deliberately made psychologist's working conditions intolerable, and thus constructively discharged her, precluding summary judgment as to her claim that officials of District mental hospital denied her due process by retaliating against her for recommending 12-hour-per-month conditional release of patient who had attempted to assassinate

Jury in § 1983 action could reasonably have found that constructive discharge of corrections officer was caused by unofficial custom in sheriff's office of deliberate indifference to retaliatory peer-to-peer harassment against corrections officers who breach "code of silence" by exercising their First Amendment right to speak about infractions by fellow officers; there was evidence that officer repeatedly informed high ranking officers that he was continually harassed after he reported fellow officer for rules infraction, and no action was taken. Baron v. Hickey, D.Mass.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 248, affirmed 402 F.3d 225. Civil Rights 1430

School district employee failed to show under intolerable circumstances test that he was constructively discharged, in lawsuit alleging that school district was state actor that deprived him of his constitutional rights by violating his Fourteenth Amendment due process property and liberty interests; although superintendent asked employee to prepare job description and failed to provide guidance as to what form description should take, and superintendent reassigned his job duties, those circumstances were not so unpleasant that reasonable person would have felt compelled to resign. Speziale v. Bethlehem Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 366. Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Schools 63(1)

Former special investigator for Kansas Human Rights Commission (KHRC) was not constructively discharged through alleged discriminatory denial of "reward" in form of top performers' attendance at national convention, executive director's alleged suspension of normal office procedure and direct supervision of another investigator, or written reprimand for unauthorized telephone calls. Delatorre v. Minner, D.Kan.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1280. States 53

State prison guard who had been living with convicted felon could not have relied reasonably on any misrepresentation by her supervisor that guard might be treated differently under prison's anti-fraternization policy if guard married the inmate, for purpose of determining whether guard's resignation was involuntary so as to deprive her of property interest protected under due process clause; guard was already subject to termination for her cohabitation with inmate, and even if she was induced to marry inmate, she was not induced to violate prison regulation prohibiting such associations. Wolford v. Angelone, W.D.Va.1999, 38 F.Supp.2d 452. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Prisons 7

Employee's resignation will be involuntary and coerced when totality of circumstances indicate that employee did not have opportunity to make free choice, and circumstances to be considered are whether employee was given some alternative to resignation, whether employee understood nature of choice he was given, whether employee was given reasonable time in which to choose, and whether he was permitted to select effective date of resignation. Singer v. Denver School Dist. No. 1, D.Colo.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1325. Labor And Employment 826

Evidence did not support finding that corrections officer's immediate supervisor for two days a week constructively discharged corrections officer by his sexual harassment, considering that supervisor's conduct was sporadic and, at most, distasteful, that corrections officer and supervisor ceased working together several months before corrections officer's resignation, and that corrections officer testified she was not subjected to any harassment or discrimination at her new position. Stafford v. State, W.D.Mo.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1136. Civil Rights 1421

To determine whether there is constructive discharge of public employee in § 1983 action, court must inquire into objective feelings of employee and intent of employers; employee may not be unreasonably sensitive to working environment; and employer is held to intend foreseeable consequences of conduct. Meyers v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1990, 728 F.Supp. 477, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 934 F.2d 726. Civil Rights 1123 deliberate and calculated attempt to remove him from his position was an actionable "deprivation" of property within meaning of this section. McAdoo v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1983, 564 F.Supp. 1215, affirmed 774 F.2d 1168. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1150

Resignation by a female employee of a county sheriff's department was not a constructive discharge, so as to constitute a tangible employment action supporting claims of sexual harassment violating Title VII and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, under §§ 1983; the employee never formally complained in writing about the behavior of a major, never complained orally to the sheriff, and did not establish any causal link between her resignation and the alleged harassment, but rather, the record demonstrated that she resigned due to health problems, a dispute over her leave time, and a concern that she would lose insurance if terminated. Mitchell v. Pope, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 911, 2006 WL 1976011, Unreported. Constitutional Law 224(3)

Female police officer was not constructively discharged, for purposes of §§ 1983, as result of male officers' alleged lewd and offense statements about women, where there was no evidence that officers deliberately made offensive remarks with intent to force her to resign because of her gender, and officer did not give town opportunity to resolve situation. Davison v. City of Lone Jack, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 671, 2005 WL 195589, Unreported. Civil Rights 1123

Former teacher at facility for juvenile delinquents failed to show that he was constructively discharged, in § 1983 lawsuit against state alleging employment discrimination; teacher alleged that his supervisors deliberately created conditions that made his continued employment intolerable, but there was long period between incidents that were alleged to be intolerable, outbursts and disruption were to be expected in setting in which teacher worked, and teacher had assistance of other persons during outbursts to extent that help was available. Linden v. Sherman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 79 Fed.Appx. 458, 2003 WL 22441998, Unreported. Civil Rights 1123

Female clerical employee of municipal housing authority failed to establish constructive discharge, in violation of Title VII and New York Human Relations Law, or under § 1983, when she alleged that sexual harassment by supervisor and memoranda critical of her work created such an intolerable environment she was forced into early retirement; harassment had ceased, and year had elapsed since issuance of memoranda, before retirement decision was made. Parisi v. Buffalo Mun. Housing Authority, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21382893, Unreported. Civil Rights 1123

1808. ---- Property interest, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Where city employee has no Fourteenth Amendment property interest in continued employment, adequacy or even existence of reasons for failing to rehire him present no federal constitutional question, but only if employer creates and disseminates false and defamatory impression about employee in connection with his termination is such hearing required. Codd v. Velger, U.S.N.Y.1977, 97 S.Ct. 882, 429 U.S. 624, 51 L.Ed.2d 92. Municipal Corporations 218(8)

City employee who was terminated from her classified position after lengthy deliberation by city's civil service board was not subject to random, unauthorized deprivation of property interest, and thus her right to due process concerning loss of property interest in her position could not be satisfied through post-deprivation proceedings. Silberstein v. City of Dayton, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 440 F.3d 306, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Municipal Corporations 218(8)

Discharge for cause of state employee from his position as deputy director of the Utah Department of Corrections by the Department's director did not render employee ineligible for reappointment to a career service position, under Utah law, and thus the director could not be liable in employee's § 1983 claim asserting deprivation of due process in connection with his ineligibility for reappointment; certification of employee's eligibility for reappointment was within sole province of Utah's Department of Human Resource Management (DHRM). Morgan

v. McCotter, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 365 F.3d 882. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Prisons 7; States 53

To support former employee's allegation that he was deprived of his due process rights when he was terminated by his employer without a hearing, confrontation or review, employee was required to allege facts showing that he had been deprived, by force of state action, of a liberty or property interest protected by due process clause. Ogilbee v. Western Dist. Guidance Center, Inc., C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1981, 658 F.2d 257. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Human Resources employee with Puerto Rico Government Development Bank (GDB) had no valid property interest in position held, absent reasonable expectation under Puerto Rico Personnel Act of retaining employment based on illegal appointment. Velez Rivera v. Agosto Alicea, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 72, affirmed 437 F.3d 145. Constitutional Law 277(2); Territories 23

Emergency room physicians, challenging their termination, were afforded due process appropriate to their property interest in continued employment, when they were notified year in advance that physicians not board certified in designated medical specialties would be terminated, had pre-termination opportunity of hearing, together with option of pursuing union grievance, and also post-termination opportunity to pursue Article 78 proceeding, none of which they pursued. Gonzalez v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2001, 135 F.Supp.2d 385. Constitutional Law 275(2.1); Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

County sheriff violated county employee's Fourteenth Amendment right to procedural due process when he terminated her employment without pre-termination notice or opportunity to be heard; although there was question of whether sheriff knew that employee had completed her probationary period, cursory check of employee's timesheets and relevant provisions of work rules would have shown that she had completed her probationary period and as permanent employee had property interest in her position as defined in county civil service rules. Smith v. Milwaukee County, E.D.Wis.1997, 954 F.Supp. 1314. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Sheriffs And Constables 24

Absent allegation that, after being discharged from his position as vice president for administration at county community college, plaintiff requested and was denied opportunity to clear his name, plaintiff could not maintain claim that he was deprived of liberty without due process based on his allegations that his termination was grounded on false accusations of misconduct or incompetence. McCarthy v. Board of Trustees of Erie Community College, W.D.N.Y.1996, 914 F.Supp. 937. Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

Neither property nor liberty interest of city employee was infringed by his termination, for purposes of § 1983 claim premised on due process clause; employee failed to allege violation of liberty interest, and failed to show that he suffered deprivation of protected property interest, since he failed to establish that he was not employed at will. Brown v. City of Galveston, Tex., S.D.Tex.1994, 870 F.Supp. 155. Civil Rights 1128

Former director of quality assurance at county hospital stated claim for violation of substantive due process arising from her discharge. Anglemyer v. Hamilton County Hosp., D.Kan.1994, 848 F.Supp. 938. Civil Rights 1395(8); Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Public employee alleged no facts indicating that she had property right in her position, as was required for her claim that she was denied procedural due process in connection with her discharge. Wright v. Glover, N.D.Ill.1991, 778 F.Supp. 418. Civil Rights 1395(8)

A public employee who has a property or liberty interest in public employment and is discharged without being afforded requisite due process may vindicate his rights in an action under civil rights statute. McCracken v. City of Chinook, Mont., D.Mont.1987, 652 F.Supp. 1300. Civil Rights 1128 made to chief veterinarian when he was initially hired as to anticipated duration of his employment with Commission created a reasonable inference that there was a mutually expressed understanding that in year in which chief veterinarian was dismissed he would not be terminated without cause before the end of the year; thus, chief veterinarian had no property interest in continued employment that was protected by U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14. Paice v. Maryland Racing Com'n, D.C.Md.1982, 539 F.Supp. 458. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1809. ---- Racial discrimination, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Decision to terminate black city employee was based on fact that he was permanently disabled, that city needed capable vehicle mechanic in his position, and that city had no permanent light duty work that he could perform at that time, so that failure to give employee permanent light duty job when he became permanently disabled could not be basis for employment discrimination action, where only white employee who received permanent light duty was not similarly situated. Hervey v. City of Little Rock, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 787 F.2d 1223. Civil Rights 1128

African-American city employee did not establish that he was discharged under circumstances giving rise to inference of race discrimination, as required for prima facie case of race discrimination against city and its officials under §§ 1981 and 1983 white female project manager was also discharged at the same time as employee, both employee and white manager received six months notice that their positions were being eliminated, and neither the employee's position, nor the manager's position, were subsequently filled. Jessamy v. City of New Rochelle, New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 498. Civil Rights 1128; Civil Rights 1405

Employee of state training school who was discharged for striking nine-year-old resident in the back with her first was not entitled to monetary or injunctive relief on grounds that her discharge was based solely on her race; fact that employee's past work record had been excellent, and employee's bare allegation that her story concerning incident was not believed because she was black did not support her claim of racial discrimination. Mickles v. Lynchburg Training School and Hospital, W.D.Va.1976, 422 F.Supp. 672. Civil Rights 1448

Record as whole in fired male state employee's discrimination case negated any reasonable inference of sex discrimination; employee was hired less than six months before his termination by agency's female executive director based on female human resources controller's recommendation and the same two individuals later decided to fire him, employee was replaced with another male, and testimony made clear that executive director had problems with both male and female subordinates, and hired and fired both. Steinhauer v. DeGolier, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 359 F.3d 481. Civil Rights 1537

In order to prevail on § 1983 sex discrimination claim based on alleged equal protection violations, probation officer, who was demoted and subsequently discharged, was required to prove purposeful and intentional acts of discrimination based on her membership in particular class, not just on individual basis. Forrester v. White, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 846 F.2d 29. Civil Rights 1171

Female employee demonstrated that city's reasons for terminating her were pretextual for purposes of employee's §§ 1983 claim alleging that city violated her Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection under the law by terminating her because of her gender; mere fact that city's mayor offered an additional twenty reasons "after the fact" of employee's firing supported inference of pretext, and employee's duffel bag purchase was not reason for her termination in that the purchase request had not yet been approved at the time of employee's termination, and thus, no city funds had been expended on this alleged improper purchase. Scott v. City of Minco, W.D.Okla.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1180. Municipal Corporations 218(3) clause and Title VII, despite claim that he was only male in office with eight females, that office was referred to by supervisor as "the girls and Jim," and that he was fired and replaced by female; there were differences in duties held by director and assumed by replacement, and there was unrebutted nondiscriminatory reason for termination, inability of director to get along with fellow employees. Van Arkel v. Warren County, S.D.Iowa 2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 979. Civil Rights 1179; Constitutional Law 224(3); Counties 67

Reasonable jury could not have found from evidence adduced at trial in case under Title VII and §§ 1983, viewed in light most favorable to employee, that gender discrimination played any part in decision of chancellor not to renew employee's contract in her position as assistant chancellor, where employee refused to carry out directives of reducing her administrative staff meetings and assisting chancellor in building enrollment, and no other administrator had been asked to engage in recruiting and refused. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 1018, amended 2004 WL 1688342, affirmed 410 F.3d 387, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1170

Evidence that the motivating reason for deputy court clerk's firing was the fact that she gave birth, conduct which was constitutionally protected conduct, established a right to recover under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983; there was no evidence at trial of legitimate reason for discharge or any argument that circuit clerk would not have discharged deputy circuit clerk absent protected activity. Paxton v. Bearden, N.D.Miss.1992, 783 F.Supp. 1011. Civil Rights 1421

1810A. ---- Religious discrimination, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Former school employee failed to establish that he was discriminated against or harassed on the basis of his religion prior to his discharge, in violation of §§ 1983, given that he presented no evidence that change to his work schedule affected his attendance at Friday religious services, nor did he challenge the accuracy of union's determination that the schedule change was made to accommodate other, non-discriminatory purposes. Sharif v. Buck, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 43, 2005 WL 2650070, Unreported. Civil Rights 1161

1811. ---- Seniority systems, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

City fire department, which had been operating under affirmative action decree requiring it to bring ratio of minority employment within department to level reasonably reflecting ratio of each minority group to total population of city, was enjoined from reducing number of minority firemen, pursuant to economically dictated layoffs, below percentage ratios of minorities before layoff, despite the fact that layoffs were to be based on neutral factor of seniority, where affirmative action consent degree unqualifiedly proposed to eliminate existing discrimination in fire department and seniority rule had disparate effect on minority firemen. Brown v. Neeb, N.D.Ohio 1980, 523 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 644 F.2d 551. Civil Rights 1560

1812. ---- Speech and writings, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Former employee of city housing authority who brought §§ 1983 suit alleging he was terminated in violation of First Amendment for speaking out on a matter of public concern failed to establish that superior who made termination decision had final policymaking authority for personnel matters, and thus her single action did not constitute official policy which could trigger §§ 1983 liability; aside from various officials of authority who could overrule employee's superior, authority had a three-phase grievance procedure which allowed employee to request and obtain a hearing before executive director or three-person committee. Gelin v. Housing Authority of New Orleans, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 456 F.3d 525.

Pickering balancing test weighed against terminated state employee, an education department psychologist who had consulted on state disability benefits claims, in his First Amendment retaliation action, which claimed that termination was result of his disagreement with new methods for approving claims for speech and language pathologies; employee had been involved in heated argument ending in supervisor's ultimatum to employee, and had written to management accusing supervisor of fraud and legal and ethical violations, and speech in question was more concerned with conflicts over internal procedures than with public interest. Bailey v. Department of Elementary and Secondary Educ., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 451 F.3d 514. Schools 47

Factual finding by district court was clearly erroneous, in civil rights lawsuit under First Amendment free speech clause, that municipal officials did not terminate employment of police and fire department employees for their racially offensive off-duty expression in response to any reasonable concern for disruption of operations of police and fire departments; evidence was overwhelming that content of racist expression did not bring about dismissal in absence of notoriety which reasonably was seen to affect public perception of quintessential public employees and government. Locurto v. Giuliani, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 447 F.3d 159. Civil Rights 1420

Former school administrator failed to establish that her protected speech, involving accusations of improper governmental actions before the school board, was a substantial or motivating factor for the initiation of disciplinary action against administrator, as required for administrator's §§ 1983 claim of First Amendment retaliation; more than a year passed between administrator's accusations and the initiation of disciplinary proceedings, special counsel was immediately appointed to investigate the accusations made before the board, administrator was placed on a paid leave basis, and school board directed a series of medical examinations, as justified by the developing diagnoses, and permitted administrator's doctors to observe these examinations, and, only after receiving the final medical report, indicating that administrator was suffering from mental disorders and instability, were disciplinary proceedings initiated. Burkybile v. Bd. of Educ. of Hastings-On-Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 411 F.3d 306, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 801, 163 L.Ed.2d 628. Schools 63(1)

State agency head acted reasonably in terminating employee who had reported sexual harassment of employee's coworkers by employee's supervisor, and thus could not be liable in employee's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation action; internal investigator's report stated that alleged victims all denied harassment and that employee was angry because supervisor had demoted him, there was no evidence of bias on part of agency head or investigator, and employee failed to present any evidence in support of his allegations when asked to do so by agency head, and thus agency head's interest in promoting efficiency clearly outweighed employee's interest in commenting on matter of public concern. Johnson v. Louisiana, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 369 F.3d 826. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); States 53

Former public employee failed to establish causal connection between his discharge and his allegedly protected speech in criticizing procedures of committee on which he served, for purposes of his § 1983 claim that his discharge was in retaliation for exercising his First Amendment rights, where former public employee merely alleged his belief that he was discharged in retaliation for such speech, former public employee was not terminated until over year after he finished serving on such committee, and supervisor who recommended former public employee's discharge was not employed by the government agency at time former public employee served on committee. Hom v. Squire, C.A.10 (Utah) 1996, 81 F.3d 969. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Officers And Public Employees 66

To prove § 1983 violation based on violation of public employee's First Amendment rights, once public employee's speech is determined to be protected under Connick two-part test, public employee must show that speech was a motivating factor in discharge decision. Barnard v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1218, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 17. employee's rights, benefits, relationship, or status with state, notwithstanding facts that employee did allege that she was defamed by officer and that her termination was retaliation for her exercise of First Amendment rights. Gini v. Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Dept., C.A.9 (Nev.) 1994, 40 F.3d 1041. Civil Rights 1395(8)

If public employee's writing of novel was the only cause of his being fired and there was no legitimate reason for his supervisors to discourage him from writing the novel, he stated a claim that his rights under the First Amendment had been violated. Eberhardt v. O'Malley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 17 F.3d 1023. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Determining whether public employee was fired because of her constitutionally protected speech requires three-step analysis: employee must show she was engaged in protected activity; if she makes this showing, she must show activity was substantial or motivating factor in her discharge; and, if both showings are made, defendants have opportunity to defeat her claim by demonstrating they would have taken same action absent protected conduct. Swineford v. Snyder County Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1258. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

First Amendment rights of registered nurse at state correctional center infirmary were violated by her discharge after she reported violations of nursing practices; nurse's speech involved matter of public concern, disruption from nurse's "whistle-blowing" was minimal interest when weighed against exposure of unethical medical practices affecting hundreds of inmates, and warden's warning that nurse would lose her job if she filed complaint with State Board of Nursing was sufficient evidence that her speech motivated decision to fire her. Frazier v. King, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 873 F.2d 820, rehearing denied 878 F.2d 1435, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 502, 493 U.S. 977, 107 L.Ed.2d 504. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

There was insufficient evidence to support conclusion that county board's action in adopting budget cuts, causing county employee's being laid off, was motivated by county employee's letter writing activity, or that desire to "get rid" of employee was substantial factor or causative factor in board's decision, such as would render discharge improper under First Amendment. Pilarowski v. Macomb County Health Dept., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1988, 841 F.2d 1281, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 133, 488 U.S. 850, 102 L.Ed.2d 106. Civil Rights 1421; Counties 67

Speech by county employee at public meeting of county board alleging inefficiency, false reports, duplication and unnecessary work on and parts for vehicles under jurisdiction of Division of Motor Vehicles in which he worked was protected under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1, and thus defendants were liable for suspending employee in retaliation for that speech, as information conveyed by employee was of significant public, and not merely personal or private, interest, and as county's chain-of-command policy could not be used to justify that retaliatory action under rubric of county's interest in promoting efficiency of public service. Czurlanis v. Albanese, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1983, 721 F.2d 98. Counties 67; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Jury which heard testimony of circumstances of employee's termination from federal emergency employment program, proximity of termination in relation to city personnel officer's awareness of critical article written by employee, fact that city personnel officer had entire article before him at time he terminated employee, and fact that city personnel officer had discussed article with a colleague shortly before summoning employee to his office could properly infer that city personnel officer had terminated city employee for writing an article critical of emergency employment program in city, thus violating employee's rights under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1. Crawford v. Garnier, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1983, 719 F.2d 1317. Municipal Corporations 218(9)

Even if independent contractor's letter to special education committee, expressing support for continuing services for special education student at an integrated day care center, was constitutionally protected speech, the government's interest in terminating her contract outweighed the interest in the speech, for purposes of contractor's §§ 1983 retaliation claim, given that contractor was not following procedural requirements in writing the letter and had been reprimanded in the past for her failure to do so. McGuire v. Warren, S.D.N.Y.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 530.

Claim was stated that athletic association, as employer of athletic director for state university, and assistant athletic director were responsible for wrongful termination of cheerleading coordinator, after she allegedly interjected Christianity into cheerleading activities and read statement to squad critical of her placement on probationary status as result of those activities. Braswell v. Board of Regents of University System of Ga., N.D.Ga.2005, 369 F.Supp.2d 1371. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Purely private speech by a public employee cannot be the basis for a §§ 1983 action alleging retaliation in violation of the First Amendment. Tasadfoy v. Ruggiero, S.D.N.Y.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 542. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether state university officials terminated employee because of his public statements accusing university of improper conduct in handling intellectual property dispute with third party precluded summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in employee's §§ 1983 action alleging that he was terminated in retaliation for exercise of his First Amendment rights. Biby v. Board of Regents of University of Neb. at Lincoln, D.Neb.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 1063, amended in part 340 F.Supp.2d 1031, affirmed 419 F.3d 845. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Former deputies established prima facie case of First Amendment retaliatory discharge under §§ 1983 when they showed that they were not recommissioned as deputies under newly elected sheriff, that they had participated in campaign against newly elected sheriff by exercising their speech rights in support of opposing candidate, that four of deputies had participated in prior lawsuit against town police department, that speech in prior lawsuit and in sheriff election involved matters of public concern, and that their interest in speaking out on matters of public concern outweighed interests of newly elected sheriff and his deputy sheriff in promoting efficiency. Smith v. Parish of Washington, E.D.La.2004, 318 F.Supp.2d 366. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Sheriffs And Constables 21

City and its officials did not demonstrate that governmental interest in avoiding potential disruption to community and police and fire departments outweighed First Amendment right of free speech of police and fire employees who participated in parade float that depicted African-Americans in stereotypical manner, for purposes of determining whether city was liable for retaliatory discharge of police and fire department employees under § 1983; employees' expression was on matter of public concern of racial integration in community, there was no evidence of actual or potential disruption to departments' internal operations as result of employees' speech, and only evidence offered as to external disruption to community relations and minority recruiting was based on anticipated reaction to speech by certain offended groups in city and did not justify employees' termination for their exercise of constitutionally protected conduct while off duty. Locurto v. Giuliani, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 368, reversed and remanded 447 F.3d 159. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1); Municipal Corporations 198(2)

School district employee's allegations that supervisor's retaliatory policy resulted in filing of unwarranted negative job evaluations and disciplinary charges, termination from his position as bus driver trainer and, ultimately, termination of his employment with district, were sufficient to satisfy "adverse employment action" element of employee's § 1983 retaliation claim. Branch v. Guilderland Cent. School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 242 . Schools 63(1)

A terminated state tax attorney stated a prima facie case of First Amendment deprivation when he alleged he was disciplined and then terminated in response to his disclosures of misinterpreted tax laws resulting in illegal refunds, and a tax administrative procedure susceptible to political influence, and his assertion that many taxpayer perceived they were unfairly treated; the statements covered matters of public concern, the state failed to show disruption of the tax department as a result of the statements, and the timing of disciplinary actions, following incidents of disclosure, provided circumstantial evidence that the adverse employment actions were caused by the disclosures. Prager v. LaFaver, D.Kan.1998, 5 F.Supp.2d 906, affirmed 180 F.3d 1185, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 405, 528 U.S. 967, 145 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Discharged employees' allegations that their complaints about official malfeasance at county hospital authority constituted constitutionally protected speech and were substantial or motivating factor in adverse action taken against them by county hospital authority officials were sufficient to state § 1983 claim against the officials in their individual capacities, notwithstanding officials' asserted defense of qualified immunity, as allegations indicated it was possible for discharged employees to prove that officials' conduct violated clearly established constitutional right of which reasonable person would have known. Ketron v. Chattanooga-Hamilton County Hosp. Authority, E.D.Tenn.1996, 919 F.Supp. 280. Civil Rights 1398

Former county employee, alleging § 1983 retaliatory discharge in response to her complaints about Animal Control Unit, did not meet burden of showing that First Amendment activity was substantial or motivating factor in county's decision to discharge her; although supervisor who terminated employee was aware that employee was dissatisfied with management of Unit, this was not sufficient to prove that supervisor was aware that employee had lodged formal complaints with county officials resulting in public investigation into Unit and even if supervisor was aware of complaints, such complaints were fully investigated several months prior to her termination. Addison v. Gwinnett County, N.D.Ga.1995, 917 F.Supp. 802, affirmed 78 F.3d 600. Civil Rights 1251

Former school district employee stated a § 1983 action against school district, board of education members, her immediate supervisor, and supervisor's supervisor for termination in violation of First Amendment free speech rights by alleging that she was terminated for speaking about her supervisor's including by mistake in his salary, school district's Medicare contribution on supervisor's behalf so as to raise retirement benefits to which supervisor would be entitled, even though employee attempted to speak with school district superintendent only after her bonus was revoked and defendants claimed that this established she was acting out of private concern at the time; had employee been acting out of personal concern, she most likely would have refrained from raising issue a second time with her supervisor, and she acted against her own best interest by furthering pursuing matter. Rojicek v. Community Consol. School Dist. 15, N.D.Ill.1995, 888 F.Supp. 878, on reconsideration in part. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Person cannot be denied employment because of the legitimate exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, particularly a person's interest in freedom of speech; the denial of employment because of constitutionally protected speech in effect penalizes and inhibits free speech and thereby permits employer to achieve by indirection that which employer could not command directly. Gilbreath v. East Arkansas Planning and Development Dist., Inc., E.D.Ark.1979, 471 F.Supp. 912. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.1)

Public employee may not be discharged or demoted for exercising his right of free speech. Alicea Rosado v. Garcia Santiago, D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 414 F.Supp. 709. Officers And Public Employees 66

Former city employee established prima facie case that she was terminated in retaliation for protected speech, in violation of her First Amendment rights and state law, when former employee was terminated after complaining about possible misuse of state grant funds and showed that her speech was likely motivating factor in city's termination decision, in that her supervisors discussed and prepared for her termination shortly after becoming aware of her request for whistleblower status and termination occurred only 80 days after her initial complaint to investigations department. interpretation of that policy caused retaliation against and termination of public employee for openly favoring fluoridation, would suffice as basis for imposing liability upon city under civil rights statute, even though policy itself was not unconstitutional. Bartholomew v. Fischl, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1986, 782 F.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1244

Given that state magistrate's criticism of clerk of court's delegation of microfilming duties to her was protected and was not a proper basis for dismissal, decisions of clerk and superior court judge not to reappoint her were made in retaliation for that speech entitling her to relief under this section. Lewis v. Blackburn, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1984, 734 F.2d 1000, on rehearing 759 F.2d 1171, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 228, 474 U.S. 902, 88 L.Ed.2d 228. Clerks Of Courts 7

Former county building inspector identified specific speech or expressive conduct for which his employment was allegedly terminated sufficient to state § 1983 claim against county for violation of his First Amendment rights; rather than general dispute with supervisors over general building code enforcement, inspector alleged that his refusal to pass specific contractors' substandard work, despite his supervisor's direction to do so, prompted his termination. Roper v. County of Chesterfield, Va., E.D.Va.1992, 807 F.Supp. 1221. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1814. ---- Political contributions, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

In civil rights action brought by public employees discharged by county clerk for alleged failure of employees to comply with custom of making political contributions, county could be held liable. Burkhart v. Randles, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1985, 764 F.2d 1196. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether discharge of probationary public employee was motivated by political discrimination, precluded summary judgment in favor of public employer, in employee's claim against employer, for political discrimination. Reyes Canada v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 174, reconsideration denied in part 221 F.R.D. 294. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

1814A. ---- Political appointments, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Puerto Rico public employee did not present sufficient evidence that would lead a reasonable jury to conclude that actions taken against him were motivated by political discrimination in violation of the First Amendment; although employee's duties were taken away, he was transferred, his salary was reduced substantially and he had less desirable working environment after change in administration, his duties and salary had been systematically increased by prior administration in concerted attempt to protect him from reinstatement to lesser duties and salary of his last legal career position upon coming change in administration, and comments made generally around office as to employment future of employees of his party affiliation did not bear sufficient connection to employment actions taken. Cardona Martinez v. Rodriguez Quinones, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 89, affirmed 444 F.3d 25. Civil Rights 1430

Genuine issues of material fact, as to motivation behind investigation into and termination of Puerto Rico public employee and legality of his appointment, precluded summary judgment for defendants on Fourteenth Amendment due process claim on basis that, because appointment was illegal, employee had no protected property interest therein. Orraca Figueroa v. Torres Torres, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 176. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

1815. ---- Political affiliation, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Jury finding that Puerto Rico corrections administration employees' demotions were improper and the result of discrimination, as required to sustain jury verdict for employees' claims alleging that their political affiliations were a substantial or motivating factor behind their demotions, in violation of their First Amendment and due process rights, was supported by evidence that employees were long-standing, competent employees of the Puerto Rico corrections administration, that both were demoted without being given any notice or opportunity to defend their promotions, and that important documents were missing from their personnel files. Rodriguez-Marin v. Rivera-Gonzalez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 72. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Evidence was sufficient for jury to conclude in civil rights lawsuit that administrator helped mayor to design and implement privatization of Puerto Rico municipal sanitation department in discriminatory manner in violation of First Amendment political affiliation rights of career employees, where defendants themselves characterized privatization decision as one made by both men together and there was evidence that administrator harbored political animus himself. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1430

Sufficient circumstantial evidence existed for jury to find that mayor's decisions regarding chief clerk's termination as part of budget cuts were in retaliation for clerk's political support of mayoral rival in violation of First Amendment, including evidence that clerk received warnings about her political activities from supervisor, who also told her that mayor was furious about her activities, that mayor's attitude toward clerk changed after she supported rival candidate in opposing party's primary, that most permanent employees were returned to payroll, and that four part-time persons were hired to perform clerk's old duties. Gronowski v. Spencer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 424 F.3d 285. Civil Rights 1421

Civil service employee did not show that his dismissal was related to his political affiliation, as required to establish §§ 1983 political discrimination claim, under the First Amendment; although employee was a known member of a different political party than party to which his supervisors belonged, his employer, Puerto Rico Tourism Company, claimed that employee was fired because he cashed a check made out to his political party while performing his official duties, in violation of employee rules regarding conflict of interest, and employee failed to proffer evidence of any specific discriminatory conduct which proved that his political patronage was substantial or motivating factor in his dismissal. Mercado-Alicea v. P.R. Tourism Co., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 396 F.3d 46. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Former employee with the Puerto Rico Department of Labor and Human Resources (DLHR), who alleged in § 1983 action that her employment was improperly terminated on the basis of her political affiliation, would suffer irreparable injury, absent the issuance of a preliminary injunction ordering reinstatement of employment, given that back pay or other monetary damages against the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico were unavailable, and it was unclear whether claim against DLRH officials in their individual capacities would yield an award of compensatory damages equal to the employee's lost wages. Rosario-Urdaz v. Rivera-Hernandez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 350 F.3d 219. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Lack of evidence that county sheriff's department officials sought filing of criminal charges against former employee in order to retaliate against her for politically supporting former sheriff, to gain political advantage against former sheriff or to retaliate against her for filing notice of tort claim justified dismissal of former employee's § 1983 vindictive prosecution claim. Wolford v. Lasater, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 78 F.3d 484. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Assertion by clerks, investigators, dispatchers, jailers and process servers in sheriff's office that new sheriff replaced all employees who had opposed his election stated claim for violation of sheriff's department employees' civil rights. of their political affiliation, and who sought compensatory or punitive damages in addition to their requests for back pay, reinstatement and declaratory and injunctive relief, stated cognizable claims under this section and their complaint was sufficient to entitle them to a jury trial. Laskaris v. Thornburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1984, 733 F.2d 260, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 260, 469 U.S. 886, 83 L.Ed.2d 196. Jury 14(1)

Employee and his wife failed to sustain a prima facie case of political discrimination against Puerto Rico's State Insurance Fund Corporation (SIFC), under §§ 1983, based on allegations that their constitutional rights were infringed when the hearings granted to them by SIFC were merely informal, non-adversarial, administrative proceedings held by agency, which, in turn, only afforded employee the opportunity to present evidence to contradict employer's purported reasons for dismissal. Silva Rivera v. State Ins. Fund Corp., D.Puerto Rico 2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 218. Civil Rights 1231

Former transitory public employees established prima facie case of political discrimination against officials of governmental agency, in civil rights lawsuit under First Amendment, by presenting statements evidencing charged political environment at agency and statements that supported inference that officials at agency were aware of employees' political affiliation, by successfully impeaching officials' proffered nondiscriminatory rationale for not renewing their contracts and, in turn, proffering evidence supporting conclusion that politically discriminatory animus was at play, and by presenting evidence which showed that they were all replaced by supporters of officials' political party. Martinez-Baez v. Rey-Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1421

Former transitory employee of the Office of Superintendence of the Capitol in Puerto Rico failed to establish causal connection between government's alleged discriminatory conduct and his political affiliation, as was required to maintain action for political discrimination under First Amendment; letters notifying employee of termination of his contract did not make any reference to employee's political affiliation, employee's final notice of appointment had expired, government determined there was no need for employee's services, and his position remained vacant after termination of his contract. Desiderio-Ortiz v. Frontera-Serra, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 381. Territories 23

Assertion by municipal employee, that she was discriminated against for supporting opponent of mayor in election, was claim of First Amendment deprivation rather than claim of Equal Process violation under Fourteenth Amendment, as pleaded. Figueroa-Garay v. Municipality of Rio Grande, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former municipal employees failed to establish that municipality would not have refused to rehire them following the expiration of their contracts but for their political affiliation, as required for §§ 1983 political discrimination to satisfy burden of rebutting municipality's proffered nondiscriminatory reasons for the adverse employment action, namely, that both employees had received a written reprimands for physically assaulting a supervisor and disorderly conduct. Cruz-Baez v. Negron-Irizarry, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 326. Civil Rights 1137

Terminated employee who sued former supervisors at Puerto Rican government agency failed to rebut supervisors' argument that they would have taken same corrective action regardless of her political affiliation, as required to maintain First Amendment political discrimination claim; notwithstanding purported illegality of employee's initial appointment, reasonable minds could have differed as to whether she would have qualified to receive career status under Puerto Rican law. Lopez-Sanchez v. Vergara-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 48. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Elrod-Branti doctrine was applicable to director of territorial Department of Education's sexual harassment complaints office, in director's and others' §§ 1983 First Amendment action against Department and individual officials alleging discrimination based on political affiliation; director was responsible for executing public policy in area where there was room for political disagreement, history of director's political affiliation and of her appointment to directorship gave rise to inference that appointment was because of political affiliation, and representation of Department secretary was function inherent to directorship. Reyes Canada v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 142. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Town employee, an Assistant Building Inspector, who claimed he was fired, not rehired and denied compensation for accrued vacation, personal and sick time because he was active participant in Republican Party, in violation of his First Amendment speech and associational rights, failed to satisfy causal connection requirement for § 1983 claims; not all board members knew of employee's political affiliation and activities and there was no evidence, beyond conclusory allegations, that any such knowledge affected their employment decisions in any way or that reasons given for those decisions, such as need to reorganize employee's department, employee's acceptance of free truckloads of firewood from local developers and contractors for his personal use in violation of town Code of Ethics, and town's general policy of requiring departing employees to sign release before receiving accrued compensation, were merely pretextual. Zdziebloski v. Town of East Greenbush, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 194. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91; Towns 28

Terminated Human Resources employee at Puerto Rico Government Development Bank (GDB) did not establish prima facie case of political discrimination, where she did not present any specific evidence indicating existence of political discriminatory animus other than blanket assertion of being member of opposing political party and her interpretation regarding her dismissal, or evidence that she was treated differently than other similarly situated employees because of her political affiliation. Velez Rivera v. Agosto Alicea, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 72, affirmed 437 F.3d 145. Constitutional Law 82(11); Territories 23

Employees and former employees of municipality failed to produce evidence of discriminatory animus, based on their political affiliation, for adverse employment actions, and thus, municipality, its current mayor, and former head of its human resources department were entitled to qualified immunity from employees' § 1983 claim alleging violation of their First Amendment free speech rights; employees did not provide any factual support to show that they were treated differently due to their political ideas. Aldarondo-Lugo v. Municipality of Toa Baja, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 221. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Elrod-Branti doctrine, which protected government officials who made employment decisions based upon political affiliation, was not applicable to particular trust position, which related to investigations of rape or sodomy of minors by teachers and teachers who were charged with other criminal conduct, in civil rights lawsuit brought by employees and former employees of Puerto Rico government agency against agency and individual officials alleging discrimination based upon political affiliation; although position had confidential nature, position did not relate to partisan political interests or concerns. Reyes Canada v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 255. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Puerto Rico public employee's allegations regarding comments to effect that employees of her party affiliation would have to leave following change in administration were insufficient to maintain cause of action for political discrimination under the First Amendment; employee did not show connection between those comments and her return to her last legal career appointment, which represented attempt to correct previous illegal personnel transactions. Cardona Martinez v. Rodriguez Quinones, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 89, affirmed 444 F.3d 25. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Municipal employee established prima facie case that defendant mayor's act of declining to accept employee's resignation and deferring acceptance until after elections that included mayoral race in which employee and mayor were candidates was political discrimination in violation of First Amendment; mayoral campaign was heated, and mayor allegedly made public statement that he would not "accept the resignation of the candidate because he's being investigated on some sick leave days he took. He's a crook." Rivera Torres v. Ortiz Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 306 F.Supp.2d 76, appeal denied 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543

U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Constitutional Law 82(11); Territories 23

Former employee of the Puerto Rico Highway Authority (PRHA) who alleged that his termination constituted political discrimination failed to demonstrate that proffered nondiscriminatory reason for his termination is merely a pretext; Executive Director of the PRHA stated that employee was terminated because he had obtained privileged and confidential information from personnel files in violation of PRHA regulations, and employee did not attempt to deny the charges against him, arguing only that they were time-barred. Rivera v. Fagundo, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 103, affirmed 414 F.3d 124. Constitutional Law 82(11); Territories 23

Former territorial employees established prima facie case of political discrimination under § 1983 against their former employer, where they testified that they were members of opposition political party, that their job performance was satisfactory, and that they were substituted with members of new administration's political party. Flores Camilo v. Alvarez Ramirez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 440. Civil Rights 1126

Evidence of highly charged political environment coupled with parties' competing political persuasions may be sufficient to show discriminatory animus, especially in instance where public employee was conspicuous target for political discrimination; nonetheless, merely juxtaposing protected characteristic, someone else's politics, with fact that public employee was treated unfairly is not enough to state constitutional claim and what is required is fact specific showing that causal connection exists that links adverse employment action to public employee's politics. Gonzalez Pina v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 195, affirmed 407 F.3d 425. Civil Rights 1421

Official of Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was qualifiedly immune from political discrimination claim under § 1983 arising from his decision to reclassify position of Vice President of Human Resources and Labor Relations of Government Development Bank of Puerto Rico (GDB) from career position to trust position, and his decision to transfer holder of that position and to place person of his same political affiliation in it. Huertas Morales v. Agosto Alicea, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 164. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Workforce Investment Act (WIA) did not impliedly foreclose § 1983 claim of political discrimination by employees against municipal consortium; predecessor statutes and corresponding caselaw did not support conclusion that WIA complainants were barred from bringing § 1983 claims without first exhausting administrative procedures. Delgado-Greo v. Trujillo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 189, appeal dismissed as improvidently granted 395 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1320

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether superintendent's political affiliation was a substantial or motivating factor in decision not to reappoint him, precluded summary judgment on § 1983 claim predicated on political discrimination; deposition statement of newly elected mayor of different party that it was "time for a change" could mean either a change in political affiliation or something else, and undocumented record did not support mayor's claim of superintendent's poor job performance. McKeever v. Township of Washington, D.N.J.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 400. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Allegations of city employee's complaint, including allegation that mayor's volunteer campaign director told employee that employee would lose his job as result of his failure to support mayor's election, were sufficient to support inference that director was acting jointly with public officials who themselves acted under color of law, as required to state claim against campaign director in § 1983 political patronage case. Roche v. Donahue, D.Mass.1997, 985 F.Supp. 14. Civil Rights 1396

Defendants bore substantial burden of showing that political affiliation was appropriate requirement for discharged public employee's position, and any doubt would be resolved in employee's favor for purposes of her § 1983 First Amendment claim. Catone v. Spielmann, N.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1288, appeal dismissed 149 F.3d 156. Constitutional Law 91

Former county employee stated § 1983 cause of action against county by alleging that county conspired with county legislators and county executive to pass a resolution that denied employee his job due to his political affiliation. Turner v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 175. Conspiracy 18

Fact that mayor refused to overrule supervisor's decision to dismiss two city employees or that he relied on opinion of corporation counsel that their firings were justified were insufficient to show requisite degree of supervisory encouragement, or deliberate indifference on mayor's part, necessary to support § 1983 claim against mayor for violating First Amendment free speech and free associate rights of employees allegedly fired for want of dedication to mayor's political interests. Flynn v. Menino, D.Mass.1996, 944 F.Supp. 81, affirmed in part, vacated in part 140 F.3d 42, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 403, 525 U.S. 961, 142 L.Ed.2d 327. Civil Rights 1359

Discharge of paramedic and coordinator of patient transportation for county agency for failing to support candidate for county sheriff would violate First Amendment; employee's political affiliation was of no significance to operation of sheriff's office or to operation of agency. Burns v. County of Cambria, Pa., W.D.Pa.1991, 764 F.Supp. 1031, motion to amend denied 788 F.Supp. 868, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part on other grounds 971 F.2d 1015, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1049, 506 U.S. 1081, 122 L.Ed.2d 357. Constitutional Law 91; Counties 67

Allegation of mayor's personal involvement in discharge of city employee in retaliation for political association through his personal identification of those senior executive service employees of city who were not his political supporters stated valid cause of action under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] against mayor in his individual capacity as well as his official capacity. Salkin v. Washington, N.D.Ill.1986, 628 F.Supp. 138. Municipal Corporations 218(8)

Former public employee claiming that he was discharge solely because of his membership in Democratic party stated cause of action under this section; employee's political activities were protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 , and actions of county and county officials in discharging him were clearly under color of state law. Mitman v. Glascott, E.D.Pa.1983, 557 F.Supp. 429, affirmed 732 F.2d 146. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Cause of action by state or municipal employees who alleged they have been discharged solely because of their partisan political affiliation constitutes a cognizable claim directly under U.S.C.A.Const.Amends. 1, 14 as well as under this section. Moorhead v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.C.Virgin Islands 1982, 542 F.Supp. 213. Civil Rights 1128

Evidence that former employee of Commonwealth's Office of Civil Defense was a member of one political party, that the director of civil defense was a member of another political party, and that there was a prohibition against active partisan political activity by employees was insufficient to show that discharge of the employee, who had been given a temporary appointment as an executive officer in the office, was for political reasons. Colon Velez v. Santiago de Hernandez, D.C.Puerto Rico 1977, 440 F.Supp. 432. Territories 23

1816. ---- Patronage positions, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

In determining whether, for purposes of political patronage discharge claim, political affiliation was appropriate job requirement for position of hearing examiner with Office of the Commissioner of Municipal Affairs (OCMA) in Puerto Rico, nature of certain advisory tasks assigned to hearing examiner by Commissioner's predecessor were not related to inherent duties of hearing examiner and could not be considered in determining whether position entailed policymaking, despite catch-all "other assigned duties" provision in hearing examiner's job description. Roldan-Plumey v. Cerezo-Suarez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 115 F.3d 58. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Inherent duties of a referee in the service of an Ohio Domestic Relations Court are political in character, and thus political patronage considerations may justifiably influence or control court's appointment to that post, and any First Amendment claim initiated under § 1983 by a former referee for alleged patronage discharge is nonviable as a matter of law. Mumford v. Basinski, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 105 F.3d 264, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 298, 522 U.S. 914, 139 L.Ed.2d 229. Constitutional Law 91; Divorce 143(.5)

To make her case for political discrimination under §§ 1983, the plaintiff must allege that defendants deprived her of federally protected rights while acting under color of state law, and that she engaged in constitutionally protected conduct and that this conduct was a substantial or motivating factor in the adverse employment action. Gutierrez v. Molina, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 168. Civil Rights 1231

Former prosecutor with Puerto Rico Department of Justice (PRDOJ) sufficiently pled case for political discrimination under §§ 1983 against PRDOJ officials; he alleged defendants were affiliated with opposing political party, that his party affiliation was known to them, and that he was dismissed because of that affiliation. Calderon-Garnier v. Sanchez-Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 229. Civil Rights 1395(8)

County was not estopped to assert Elrod-Branti policymaker defense to terminated employees' First Amendment patronage dismissal claim by virtue of having litigated that issue in unemployment compensation proceeding and lost; policymaker exempt from unemployment benefits under New York law was not shown to be identical to that exempt from patronage protection, and county's incentive to litigate unemployment claims was insignificant relative to its incentive to litigate civil rights claims. Alberti v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 151. Unemployment Compensation 301

Record established that state employee who claimed he was demoted because of his membership in political party was not fired because of his beliefs or association but because of his position in prior administration involving patronage appointments and such activity was not constitutionally protected. Aufiero v. Clarke, D.C.Mass.1980, 489 F.Supp. 650, affirmed 639 F.2d 49, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3052, 452 U.S. 917, 69 L.Ed.2d 421. States 53

1817. ---- Insubordination, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Terminated employee failed to rebut city housing authority's proffered legitimate, non-discriminatory reasons for terminating her, namely insubordination and tenant complaints, and she thus failed to establish age or gender discrimination, where she asserted she did not think she was terminated because of age, and she gave equivocal answers when asked whether she was terminated because of gender. Allen v. City of Pocahontas, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 340 F.3d 551, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1420, 540 U.S. 1182, 158 L.Ed.2d 85. Civil Rights 1169; Civil Rights 1207

Termination of legislative auditor for disseminating audit and investigation results to press to providing it to legislature did not violate his First Amendment rights; early disclosure prior had adverse impact on legislators' ability to efficiently carry out legislative tasks, auditor's refusal to adhere to guidelines for discussing audit results with press was viewed as act of insubordination and misconduct, and auditor's interests, if any, in disclosing conclusions of not-yet-released audit prior to informing legislature of results was substantially outweighed by legislature's right to demand that its employees follow its procedures and its need to possess information contained in audits before being contacted by press or constituents about them. Barnard v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1218, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 17. because of the employee's insubordination in refusing to submit to legitimate authority, the discharge was not a civil rights violation. Quarles v. North Mississippi Retardation Center, N.D.Miss.1978, 455 F.Supp. 52, affirmed 580 F.2d 1051. Civil Rights 1122

1818. ---- Strikes, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

State Road Commission employees who initiated work stoppage were engaged in illegal strike against state, and the governor and state Road Commissioner had right, if not indeed responsibility, to terminate employees' employment with the state, and this action not only comported with law of state, but violated no federal constitutional rights of employees so discharged. Kirker v. Moore, S.D.W.Va.1970, 308 F.Supp. 615, affirmed 436 F.2d 423, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 49, 404 U.S. 824, 30 L.Ed.2d 51. Labor And Employment 1457(1)

1819. ---- Theft, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

School employee's liberty interests were not violated when she was terminated based on accusations of purloining several items from cafeteria where she was given more than one opportunity after her discharge to present her side of the story. Strother v. Columbia-Brazoria Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1993, 839 F.Supp. 459, affirmed 32 F.3d 565. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

1820. ---- Legitimate and illegitimate reasons, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Former employee of the Puerto Rico Highway Authority (PRHA) who alleged that his termination constituted First Amendment political discrimination failed to demonstrate that proffered nondiscriminatory reason for his termination was merely a pretext; Executive Director of the PRHA stated that employee was terminated because he had obtained privileged and confidential information from personnel files in violation of PRHA regulations and employee did not attempt to deny the charges against him. Cepero-Rivera v. Fagundo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 414 F.3d 124. Civil Rights 1421

Ample evidence supported jury's finding that city housing authority which was host agency under senior aide program, which sought to employ low income seniors in nonprofit businesses and municipal agencies and which was operated by nonprofit corporation, violated employee's civil rights in violation of § 1983; authority's director requested employee's transfer from authority because of her testimony against housing authority commissioner at public hearing, director stated that employee's testimony was problem with commissioners, and commissioner refused at authority board meeting to consider reinstating employee due to her testimony against fellow commissioner. Andrade v. Jamestown Housing Authority, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1996, 82 F.3d 1179. Civil Rights 1421

If public employee makes showing that speech protected by First Amendment played a substantial role in his discharge, then burden shifts to defendant, in § 1983 action based on alleged violation of First Amendment rights, to prove that it would have reached same decision even in absence of protected conduct. Barnard v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1218, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 17. Civil Rights 1405

Employee showed that county employer's allegations of his improper management techniques and collection of supporting affidavits from disgruntled employees to support charges were response to county's fear of adverse publicity that would accompany lawsuit if subordinate employee pursued sexual harassment claim against employee, and, thus, reasonable jurors could conclude that proffered reasons for discharge were pretextual and violated his substantive due process rights. Adams v. Sewell, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 946 F.2d 757. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Counties 67

In case of illegal discharges from employment, wrong done by employer consists not of discharging employee, but of discharging him for illegal reasons; it is irrelevant to consideration of remedy for that wrong that the wrong might have been avoided by a discharge for a legal reason. Beazer v. New York City Transit Authority, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 558 F.2d 97, certiorari granted 98 S.Ct. 3121, 438 U.S. 904, 57 L.Ed.2d 1146, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1355, 440 U.S. 568, 59 L.Ed.2d 587. Labor And Employment 1451

An employee's deliberate promotion of and participation in a massive and prolonged disruption of the telephone communications system of a county departmental office is "hard core" conduct which any reasonable person must know would be cause of discipline or dismissal from employment whether described in a rule or not. Herzbrun v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1974, 504 F.2d 1189. Counties 67

A plaintiff in a civil rights action must be prepared to show that he has been acted against for a constitutionally prohibited reason, or under a constitutionally repugnant standard, or for no reason whatsoever, and he does not prevail in federal court if he can show only that he was dismissed from a job because the reason was not "weighty" enough to support "industrial capital punishment." Wishart v. McDonald, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1974, 500 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1405

Investigation indicating that corrections officer had used excessive force was legitimate, nonretaliatory reason for his termination, and was not pretext for discrimination in violation of sections 1981 and 1983. Henderson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 129. Prisons 7

County's assertion that over-40 county budget director was terminated because he could not get along with fellow employees, including his supervisor, was unrebutted nondiscriminatory and nonpretextual reason for termination, precluding claim under equal protection clause or Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA). Van Arkel v. Warren County, S.D.Iowa 2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 979. Counties 67

Assuming that terminated Human Resources employee at Puerto Rico Government Development Bank (GDB) had established prima facie case of political discrimination, President and other GDB officials had objective and legitimate nondiscriminatory basis to dismiss her; officials explained that employee was terminated because her appointment was in violation of GDB personnel regulations and merit principle, insofar as she did not comply with requirements of formal job announcement. Velez Rivera v. Agosto Alicea, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 72, affirmed 437 F.3d 145. Constitutional Law 82(11); Territories 23

In opposing former deputies' retaliatory discharge claims asserted under First Amendment, §§ 1983, and Title VII, sheriff and deputy sheriff provided sufficient evidence to support nondiscriminatory reasons for deputies' terminations, thereby shifting burden to former deputies to establish that reasons were pretext for discrimination, given assertions that former deputies were terminated for such legitimate business reasons as past work history, quality of work, relations with co-workers and members of the community, personal attacks made against sheriff, and concerns that former deputies would not accept authority of sheriff, who was newly elected. Smith v. Parish of Washington, E.D.La.2004, 318 F.Supp.2d 366. Civil Rights 1405; Civil Rights 1541; Sheriffs And Constables 21

Recommendation for job elimination from puisne officers, including assistant city comptroller acting in his or her administrative role, was not an "employment decision" in a § 1983 case involving a budgetary job elimination in city. Burtnick v. McLean, D.Md.1997, 953 F.Supp. 121. Civil Rights 1128

Employer's explanations that it discharged employee for his failure to come to work for two months, to present sufficient medical evidence of his inability to work, and to attend fitness for duty examination were nondiscriminatory reasons employee failed to show that employer's articulated reasons were pretextual so as to prevail on his race discrimination claims under §§ 1981 and 1983. performance, even if she had not made donation which was allegedly protected by First Amendment, even though employee was informed of her discharge 11 days after donation and allegedly received only one mixed performance review before discharge; review mentioned performance problems, notes and memorandum documented poor performance prior to donation, supervisor stated that draft of evaluation which led to discharge was completed prior to donation and that she did not consult employee's immediate superior because superior had been on vacation most of three weeks employee worked in superior's division, discharge was based on evaluation of employee's performance for three months in another division, supervisor's memoranda recommending discharge detailed poor performance, employee's own evaluation of her performance was immaterial, and employee, as probationary employee, was not entitled to notice of defendants' opinion of her work. Meyers v. Simons, S.D.N.Y.1995, 896 F.Supp. 132. Civil Rights 1421

Former court administrator failed to establish that her complaint to judicial commission regarding judge was substantial or motivational factor in elimination of her position, so that she failed to establish First Amendment violation; judge who was subject of complaint and county commissioners did not learn of complaint until after position was eliminated, and second judge who knew of complaint before elimination of position did not initiate that decision. Keenan v. Allan, E.D.Wash.1995, 889 F.Supp. 1320, affirmed 91 F.3d 1275. Civil Rights 1421

Hispanic correctional specialist failed to establish that his protected speech was a motivating factor in the decision to terminate him, and, thus, failed to establish claim of retaliation based upon exercise of his First Amendment rights; termination occurred seven months after the allegedly protected speech, the specialist was fired after an incident in which he admittedly used unnecessary force on an inmate, and the specialist acknowledged that he should have been terminated for the incident. Gutierrez v. Board of County Com'rs, Shawnee County, Kan., D.Kan.1992, 791 F.Supp. 1529. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Prisons 7

Correctional officials in civil rights action brought by terminated Hispanic correctional specialist established legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the termination on basis of violating jail policies concerning use of restraints and use of unnecessary force on inmates. Gutierrez v. Board of County Com'rs, Shawnee County, Kan., D.Kan.1992, 791 F.Supp. 1529. Civil Rights 1128

Sheriff established independently effective motive unrelated to any political motivation in discharging chief jailer whose loyalty was to former sheriff, not to office of chief jailer, precluding jailer from prevailing on political discharge claim; jailer had been involved in automobile accident involving alcohol, evidence given to jailer for custody and safekeeping had disappeared and been unavailable for trial and jailer had turned records of sheriff's department over to former sheriff. Wright v. Phipps, W.D.Va.1990, 765 F.Supp. 1544, affirmed 935 F.2d 268. Civil Rights 1137

City attorney was not deprived of due process when, after brief reinstatement pursuant to arbitrator's decision, he was again removed from city payroll pending appeal of arbitrator's decision; city attorney was removed because, in absence of signed release from him, city planned to appeal arbitrator's award pursuant to which city attorney had been reinstated, since that time parties had agreed that arbitration award would be without effect, and city attorney was removed for same reasons as were previously stated in connection with termination, reasons which were fully discussed at hearing of grievance which preceded his second termination. Jones v. City of Topeka, D.Kan.1991, 764 F.Supp. 1423. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 159(4)

Chief clerk in county clerk's office was not discharged for purely political reasons in violation of her First Amendment rights; county clerk who discharged her had won office by defeating her husband who had been the incumbent, and First Amendment did not require new county clerk to retain as his principal assistant wife of his political rival. Former employees of sheriff's department were not entitled to relief under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for deprivation of their First Amendment rights where their employment would have been terminated irrespective of reasons for employee's absence on afternoon in question; employee attending political function had left jail without supervisor during critical time of day with consent of other employee and at a time when, partly on account of illness, jail was understaffed. Price v. Townsend, W.D.Ark.1986, 631 F.Supp. 106. Civil Rights 1128

Discharged city employee could not maintain a civil rights action alleging wrongful termination from employment by city for no other reason than that employee was a transsexual where moving affidavits of city defendants established that plaintiff was discharged for insubordination after written notice and warning of other, work-related charges, and plaintiff's proofs in opposition to such affidavits failed to meet any of such facts. DeTore v. Local No. 245 of Jersey City Public Emp. Union, D.C.N.J.1981, 511 F.Supp. 171. Civil Rights 1421

Even assuming that plaintiffs, who alleged that their termination from employment was motivated by their efforts to promote union organization among ports authority employees, had made out a prima facie showing of discrimination, the defendants had articulated a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for their actions which was unrebutted by plaintiffs, where there was no sound basis for questioning good faith of defendants in their conclusion that a serious policy violation in falsifying time records supporting termination had been committed by the plaintiffs, and thus no antiunion animus contributed to the decision to terminate the plaintiffs to support their claims under this section and the Railway Labor Act § 151 et seq. of Title 42. Hodges v. Tomberlin, S.D.Ga.1981, 510 F.Supp. 1287. Labor And Employment 1455(7)

City employee established prima facie case of wrongful discharge under this section by showing that he engaged in a protected activity and that this conduct was a substantial motivating factor in his discharge, and was entitled to relief where employer failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have reached the same decision in the absence of the protected activity. Goodwin v. City of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1979, 480 F.Supp. 627, affirmed 624 F.2d 1090. Municipal Corporations 218(9)

Evidence, in mental hospital administrator's civil action for injunctive date declaratory relief and damages claiming his summary discharge from employment with Rhode Island Department of Mental Health violated his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14, indicated that administrator would not have been discharged in absence of protected activity and that he was entitled to be reinstated to his position. Pilkington v. Bevilacqua, D.C.R.I.1977, 439 F.Supp. 465, affirmed 590 F.2d 386.

Even if one of stated reasons for dismissal of school superintendent was arbitrary and capricious, another stated reason may have been adequate and thus support termination during contract term. Miller v. Dean, D.C.Neb.1976, 430 F.Supp. 26, affirmed 552 F.2d 266. Schools 147.9

Bankruptcy court properly decided issue of whether Chapter 13 debtor was discharged by employer because of his race at close of debtor's civil rights case, where employer established its legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for adverse employment decision during debtor's case in chief. Shaw v. Housing Authority of Town of Lake Providence, W.D.La.1993, 158 B.R. 400. Bankruptcy 2162

Former paraprofessional at school failed to establish a prima facie case of employment discrimination in violation of equal protection under §§ 1983, alleging he was terminated on the basis of his religion, given that the evidence demonstrated that the employee's performance was unsatisfactory, he had received numerous written and verbal disciplinary complaints and two poor annual evaluations, and there was no evidence that gave rise to an inference that the termination occurred on the basis of his religion. Sharif v. Buck, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 43, 2005 WL 2650070, Unreported. Schools 147.12

1821. ---- Continuing violation, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Unconstitutional refusal by a state official to reinstate wrongfully fired employee is continuing constitutional violation. Brook v. Thornburgh, E.D.Pa.1980, 497 F.Supp. 560. Constitutional Law 82(11)

1822. ---- Drug testing, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Terminated New York City Transit Authority (NYCTA) employee failed to state cause of action in § 1983 complaint for deprivation of liberty or property interest in violation of his due process rights, in connection with mandatory drug test, where complaint, in alleging that he was notified of action that was taken against him, was given explanation, was afforded opportunity to present evidence on his behalf, and availed himself of that opportunity, demonstrated that he was afforded all process due him. Straker v. Metropolitan Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 91. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 218(8)

In § 1983 search and seizure action by former employees of city transit authority challenging their dismissals following positive drug tests, evidence that drug testing company under contract with transit authority failed to report positive drug test, that testing company stored urine specimens in cardboard boxes near window, that one employee who was not plaintiff had placed tea water, rather than urine, in specimen cup when he was tested with positive results sixteen months after plaintiffs' tests, and that one plaintiff had not received confirmation test results when he requested them, did not establish that drug testing procedures employed by testing company were flawed and/or that test results should not have been relied upon by transit authority. Laverpool v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1440, affirmed 41 F.3d 1501. Civil Rights 1421

Former employees stated claim under § 1983 based upon alleged violation of their Fourth Amendment rights by reason of employer's drug testing policy allegedly requiring mandatory urinalysis of employees without any degree of reasonable suspicion and without regard to whether position was safety related. Laverpool v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.1991, 760 F.Supp. 1046. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1823. ---- Malicious prosecution, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Discharge of state agency employees did not "shock the conscience," so as to give discharged employees § 1983 civil rights claim for malicious prosecution, after employees successfully challenged discharge, where employees were never subjected to possibility of incarceration and could not point to any invidious reason for discharge. McMaster v. Cabinet for Human Resources, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1987, 824 F.2d 518. Civil Rights 1249(2)

1824. ---- Reputation injury, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

City did not violate discharged employee's liberty interest in his reputation in violation of his due process rights, given absence of showing that city disseminated reasons for his termination to future potential employers or the community at large; neither fact that coworkers discussed employee's arrest for possession of marijuana and subsequent termination, nor inclusion of information regarding arrest in discharged employee's personnel file, was sufficient to support claim. Franklin v. City of Evanston, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 384 F.3d 838, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1696, 544 U.S. 956, 161 L.Ed.2d 539. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Municipal Corporations 218(8)

Former university employee did not establish his § 1983 claim alleging that he was deprived of Fourteenth Amendment liberty interest in obtaining future employment by university officials in that they, by checking "no rehire" on his termination report, "blackballed" is future opportunities for employment; employee failed to present evidence that stigmatizing statements were made and published and that such statements caused loss of employment opportunities. Walker v. Elbert, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 75 F.3d 592. Civil Rights 1421

Only if city officials themselves published defamatory material about discharged employee could employee recover for deprivation of his occupational liberty interest in civil rights action. McMath v. City of Gary, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 976 F.2d 1026, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1128

There was no violation of New Mexico Metropolitan Court administrator's liberty interest in his reputation when he was discharged in connection with theft of funds from accounting department without name-clearing hearing, as defendants did not disseminate any false and stigmatizing charges against him; any impression that he was fired for financial wrongdoing was created by newspaper's juxtaposition of his discharge with news about missing funds, not by discharging judge's statements and, moreover, article did not suggest that he actually stole money, but may only have implied that he was fired for mismanagement. Russillo v. Scarborough, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1991, 935 F.2d 1167. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Only where alleged stigmatization from employment termination results in inability to obtain other employment does alleged loss of reputation and esteem in community rise to constitutional level which may be remedied in § 1983 civil rights action. Allen v. Denver Public School Bd., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1991, 928 F.2d 978. Civil Rights 1122

Publication of charge which stigmatizes a public officer can give rise to a claim that the public officer's liberty interest has been impaired when the employee is dismissed on other grounds, even though the stigmatizing charges are not the basis for dismissal. Melton v. City of Oklahoma City, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1989, 879 F.2d 706, rehearing granted in part 888 F.2d 724, on rehearing 928 F.2d 920, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 296, 502 U.S. 906, 116 L.Ed.2d 241, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 297, 502 U.S. 906, 116 L.Ed.2d 241. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Mere publication of false stigmatizing reason for discharge, intentional, or otherwise, is not actionable under § 1983 unless injured party was denied opportunity to refute charge. Nelson v. City of McGehee, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1989, 876 F.2d 56. Civil Rights 1122

Injury to former city employee's reputation was not compensable under § 1983, even assuming that termination procedures employed by city were somehow deficient, to extent that charges circulated in connection with dismissal were true. Myrick v. City of Dallas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 810 F.2d 1382. Civil Rights 1038

Stigma to reputation in conjunction with failure to rehire a nontenured public employee states claim under this subchapter for deprivation of liberty interest without due process under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1. Dennis v. S & S Consolidated Rural High School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 577 F.2d 338. Civil Rights 1395(8)

When government employee is dismissed without hearing, having been publicly charged with dishonesty or other wrongdoing that will injure his or her liberty to obtain other work, the federal tort is not the defamation, but the denial of hearing and opportunity to refute the public charge; federal remedy thus must be related solely to employee's loss resulting from discharge without hearing. Cox v. Northern Virginia Transp. Commission, C.A.4 (Va.) 1976, 551 F.2d 555. Civil Rights 1448

Statement in memorandum in county employee's personnel file, that employee was charged with committing particular crime and which provided relevant disciplinary code section in event employee was subsequently convicted, was not "false statement," for purpose of employee's § 1983 claim that county violated his liberty interests under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment by not giving him name clearing hearing; although charge was dismissed, employee was criminally charged. Cotton v. Martin County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 1182, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 977, 2004 WL 2805781. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Counties 67

Probationary police officer who was discharged by superintendent of city police department did not establish § 1983 claim for deprivation of liberty interest in his postemployment reputation against superintendent, absent evidence that superintendent or anyone else within the police department disclosed to any of officer's prospective employers that officer had been terminated due to allegations of sexual harassment. Olivieri v. Rodriguez, N.D.Ill.1996, 944 F.Supp. 686, affirmed 122 F.3d 406, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1040, 522 U.S. 1110, 140 L.Ed.2d 106. Civil Rights 1128

To prevail on § 1983 claim for stigmatizing statement in connection with discharge from governmental employment, plaintiff must prove false statement of stigmatizing nature attending governmental employee's discharge made public by governmental employer without meaningful opportunity for name clearing. Foster v. Jackson County, Fla., N.D.Fla.1995, 895 F.Supp. 301. Civil Rights 1128

Former director of dental services at state psychiatric facility failed to state § 1983 claim against State Department of Mental Hygiene employees based on alleged due process violation in his forced resignation without pre or posttermination hearing, even if damage to reputation alone was sufficient to find constitutional violation, where he failed to allege that those employees damaged his reputation in connection with his resignation. Koch v. Mirza, W.D.N.Y.1994, 869 F.Supp. 1031. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Newspaper articles referring to undercover investigation into former employee's department did not create impression of criminal activity in conjunction with his discharge to support his § 1983 action against municipality. Doe v. Village of Oak Park, N.D.Ill.1994, 863 F.Supp. 797. Civil Rights 1128

County controller's allegations that she was deprived of her constitutionally protected liberty interest in employment-related reputation and good name without due process when her supervisor informed her that she was being terminated for misuse of public funds and that door to supervisor's office was open at time accusations were made and that other employees could hear his charges were sufficient to state deprivation of liberty claim under federal civil rights statute. Warzon v. Drew, E.D.Wis.1994, 855 F.Supp. 1017, affirmed 60 F.3d 1234. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Terminated city employee could not recover from city in § 1983 action based on violation of liberty interest where allegedly stigmatizing statement that employee was terminated for theft of services was not disclosed publicly and statement was not false. Copple v. City of Concordia, Kan., D.Kan.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1529. Civil Rights 1128

Public employee who has been dismissed has cognizable liberty interest under federal civil rights statute when dismissal is based upon charges which stigmatize employee and employer creates and disseminates defamatory impression about employee in connection with termination; defamation must occur in course of terminating individual's employment. Freeman v. McKellar, E.D.Pa.1992, 795 F.Supp. 733. Civil Rights 1128

To state claim for deprivation of liberty interest in pursuit of occupation, defamation must come in context of unfavorable employment decision, must carry the kind of stigma which could substantially curtail individual's employment possibilities and must have communicated, or have the potential for being communicated, to possible employers. Golbeck v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1992, 782 F.Supp. 381. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Damages for mental anguish and reputational harm directly caused by denial of due process may be awarded in discharged public employee's action against public employer, alleging wrongful discharge violated his constitutionally protected liberty interest. Willbanks v. Smith County, Tex., E.D.Tex.1987, 661 F.Supp. 212. Civil Rights 1472

Former public health official, who alleged that he was subject to barrage of defamatory remarks, including charges of immorality or dishonesty, that were aimed at him by city in successful effort to oust him from his employment and that such attack was directed against him because he advocated fluoridation of water, could maintain action under this section; he was not limited to state defamation remedy. Bartholomew v. Fischl, E.D.Pa.1981, 534 F.Supp. 161. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where only reason given for dismissal of county probation officers was that they proved to be "unsatisfactory" employees, there was no actual defamation implicating probation officers' liberty interests entitling them to hearing prior to dismissal, and mere fact that officers were dismissed would not damage their reputations sufficiently to warrant hearing. Shore v. Howard, N.D.Tex.1976, 414 F.Supp. 379. Courts 55

Even if county hospital employee was defamed in process of her termination by hospital, alleged defamation had no connection with any federally protected right under this section, but solely affected right arising out of state law. Large v. Reynolds, W.D.Va.1976, 414 F.Supp. 45. Civil Rights 1038

Absence of admissible evidence that superintendent of county correctional facility made alleged defamatory statements about deputy superintendent in connection with deputy superintendent's forced early retirement precluded superintendent's §§ 1983 liability for allegedly depriving deputy superintendent of due process-protected liberty interest in his professional reputation. Pierce v. Netzel, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 148 Fed.Appx. 47, 2005 WL 2176010, Unreported. Civil Rights 1359

1825. ---- Threat of dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Threatening public elementary school secretary with discharge for putting her child in private, all-white school violated her civil rights, even if the secretary were never actually fired. Fyfe v. Curlee, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1990, 902 F.2d 401, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 346, 498 U.S. 940, 112 L.Ed.2d 310. Civil Rights 1131

Depending on circumstances, even threat of dismissal for political motivations is enough to trigger a civil rights cause of action and entitlement to immediate and specific relief. Velazquez v. Chardon, D.C.Puerto Rico 1980, 500 F.Supp. 10. Civil Rights 1128

1826. ---- At-will positions, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Enactment of rule providing that judges' secretaries were not entitled to normal termination procedures of notice and hearing accorded regular county employees since they served at pleasure of judges could not terminate secretary's protectible job security interest by changing status of her employment without her knowledge and consent and, not having been accorded such notice or opportunity, secretary was entitled to damages. Gabe v. Clark County, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1983, 701 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1128

City librarian held position at will and pleasure of city with no contractual or other arrangement limiting right of termination and hence was subject to summary discharge with or without cause, and without formal notice or hearing, so long as it was not in retribution for exercise of some constitutionally protected right. Hodgin v. Noland, C.A.4 (Va.) 1970, 435 F.2d 859, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 2846, 408 U.S. 942, 33 L.Ed.2d 766. Municipal Corporations 155; Municipal Corporations 159(4); Municipal Corporations 218(1); Municipal Corporations 218(8)

Where superintendent's employment contract with city utility commission was void, because it was entered into without express authority of city, superintendent was employee at-will, who had no property interest in his position, and thus superintendent could not establish claims under §1983, arising from his termination. Williams v. City of London, E.D.Ky.2003, 252 F.Supp.2d 388, affirmed 375 F.3d 424. Civil Rights 1128

Director of mathematics program was "position of trust," and, therefore, terminable without cause, for purpose of prospective employee's political discrimination claim against Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, since position was intertwined with policymaking; job description clearly established that mathematics program director position was sufficiently close to education department policymakers to warrant its trust status, and person who held that position collaborated and participated in development, interpretation, and implementation of public policy of educational system. Soto Gonzalez v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 418. Civil Rights 1133

College basketball coach and assistant coach were at-will employees of university system, and as such had no constitutionally protectable property interest in their employment entitling them to procedural due process prior to their termination; coaches were classified employees, and as such could be dismissed, demoted or suspended by their immediate supervisors upon determination that their performance of duty or personal conduct was unsatisfactory. Wallace v. Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia, S.D.Ga.1997, 967 F.Supp. 1287. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

At-will employee typically will not be able to establish § 1983 claim alleging violation of procedural due process because there is no property interest to protect. Merritt v. Brantley, S.D.Ga.1996, 936 F.Supp. 988. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

In civil rights action brought against library and its board of trustees by former library employees, whose discharges were motivated by fact that they were living together in state of "open adultery," evidence did not indicate existence of any promise, implied or otherwise, of continued employment of male plaintiff, who was employed by library as janitor, but, to contrary, established that he was strictly an at-will employee, and as such, could have had his employment terminated without a pretermination hearing. Hollenbaugh v. Carnegie Free Library, W.D.Pa.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1328, affirmed 578 F.2d 1374, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 734, 439 U.S. 1052, 58 L.Ed.2d 713. Civil Rights 1421

1827. ---- Reduction in force, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Public university professor's procedural due process rights were not violated when she was terminated because of a reduction-in-force (RIF), where professor was provided with 30-day notice of her termination and was afford administrative process through which she could challenge decision, coupled with a judicial appeal. Guerrero v. University of Dist. of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 13. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

1827A. ---- Retaliation, dismissal, deprivation of employment right

Material issues of fact concerning whether a policymaker ordered that criminal charges be filed against officer for theft and whether the borough had probable cause to file the charges precluded grant of summary judgment to borough on officer's §§ 1983 claim alleging that the borough filed criminal charges against him in retaliation for his pursuit of posttermination remedies in violation of his First Amendment rights. Koltonuk v. Borough of Laureldale, E.D.Pa.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 685. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Corrections officer's termination was not causally related to his deposition testimony in sexual harassment suit, and thus did not constitute retaliation, as required to support his section 1981 and section 1983 claims, where more than four years separated such incidents. Henderson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 129. Prisons 7

Employee's alleged discharge because of his whistleblowing activities did not violate §§ 1983, where he would have been terminated for violating confidentiality rules prescribed by company policy and Arizona law regardless of his whistle-blowing activities. Gerberry v. Maricopa County, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 781, 2006 WL 774929, Unreported. Civil Rights 1247

Responsibilities of hearing examiner with Office of the Commissioner of Municipal Affairs (OCMA) did not entail policymaking, although Commissioner designated position as "confidential" under Puerto Rico Public Service Personnel Act, and thus party affiliation was not appropriate job requirement, since narrow duties outlined in job description required technical and professional skills and did not provide discretion to formulate or implement policy; hearing examiner was charged only with investigating and holding hearings into possible irregularities in municipal functions, and reporting them to Commissioner, in whom authority rested to take action. Roldan-Plumey v. Cerezo-Suarez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 115 F.3d 58. Constitutional Law 91; Territories 23

Personnel officer occupying policymaking position in city government could not assert that reduction of his duties and personal harassment by administration from other party violated his substantive due process rights; scope of substantive due process was governed by First Amendment, as complaint was basically one of restrictive free speech, and officer had failed to state claim for relief under § 1983 on First Amendment grounds. Kaluczky v. City of White Plains, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 57 F.3d 202. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Municipal Corporations 170

Where first assistant district attorney, who was the direct administrative and policy-making subordinate of the district attorney, declared in public that his immediate superior had not told the truth with respect to certain matters, thus completely undermining the working relationship between them, district attorney could discharge assistant without incurring liability for damages, despite contention that discharge was for exercise of rights protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14 in violation of this section, and though assistant's criticisms concerned matters of grave public import. Sprague v. Fitzpatrick, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 546 F.2d 560, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 2649, 431 U.S. 937, 53 L.Ed.2d 255. Civil Rights 1249(2)

Town park manager who was terminated from employment did not establish § 1983 municipal liability claim since there was no evidence in the record to support the conclusion that park commissioners, although they had discretionary authority to hire and fire, were responsible for establishing town's overall employment policy and since manager did not even assert that park commissioners were the ultimate policy makers for town. Krennerich v. Inhabitants of Town of Bristol, D.Me.1996, 943 F.Supp. 1345. Civil Rights 1351(5)

1829. ---- Probationary positions, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Iowa Veterans Preference Act did not give armed forces veteran sufficient expectation of continued employment on which to base § 1983 claim of discharge without due process where special and later-enacted Iowa statute limited to first six months of employment provided that probationary employees could be discharged at discretion of appointing authority without right of appeal; special statute controlled over general statute providing discharged veteran with protected property interests. Couch v. Wilkinson, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1991, 939 F.2d 673. Civil Rights 1331(5); Constitutional Law 277(2)

Under California law, probationary civil service employee ordinarily has no property interest in continued public employment and may be dismissed without hearing or judicially cognizable good cause, but public employee who can establish existence of rules and understandings promulgated and fostered by state officials that justify legitimate claim to continued employment has a property interest in that continued employment within the purview of due process clause. McGraw v. City of Huntington Beach, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 882 F.2d 384. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Probationary employee of city's public utilities commission had no interest in his employment which would entitle him to any hearing beyond that provided for in the controlling regulations of the Civil Service Commission and applicable city charter. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

"Temporary" employees, who were hired to fill positions for only limited period of time and who were not given any guarantee that they would not be dismissed except for cause, did not have property interest in their position sufficient to entitle them to contend that procedures for termination of employment for failure to comply with county assessor's office grooming regulation were not adequate under due process clause. Jacobs v. Kunes, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1976, 541 F.2d 222, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1109, 429 U.S. 1094, 51 L.Ed.2d 541. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1831. ---- Bias or prejudice of decisionmaker, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Even if supervisor harbored retaliatory animus toward city water department employee as a result of employee's complaints of corruption and illegal activities by other employees, employee failed to show that supervisor was responsible for decisions to deny promotions to employee, as required for supervisor to be liable to employee under §§ 1983 for retaliation against employee for protected speech, in violation of First Amendment; each time employee applied for promotion, he was given low ranking by an interview panel, and higher-ranking applicants were given promotions, there was no indication that supervisor influenced questions asked by panels, and supervisor's recommendations to city personnel department regarding promotions mirrored panels' recommendations. Healy v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 450 F.3d 732. Municipal Corporations 218(3)

For purposes of state university hospital employee physician's §§ 1983 claim that employers' decision to revoke his clinical privileges was national origin discrimination, supervisor's statement that she needed to be blunt with employee because he was not American and did not understand the American way did not constitute direct evidence of discrimination, since supervisor did not play a part in initiating employee's peer review and did not even begin working for employer until after peer review process began, and statement was made a few months before supervisor recommended employee's primary suspension. Benjamin v. Schuller, S.D.Ohio 2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 1055. Civil Rights 1421

Reasonable jury could not have found gender bias from evidence adduced at trial in case under Title VII and §§ 1983, viewed in light most favorable to employee, that gender discrimination was motivating factor in decision of chancellor not to renew employee's contract in her position as assistant chancellor, on evidence that person whom employee supervised received merit increases after complaining about reorganization plan while chancellor thought she was trying to sabotage reorganization even before it started by complaining about it; employee and subordinate were not similarly situated because subordinate was carrying out directives that chancellor gave him while employee refused to do so. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 1018, amended 2004 WL 1688342, affirmed 410 F.3d 387, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1172

Reasonable jury could not have found gender bias from evidence adduced at trial in case under Title VII and §§ 1983, viewed in light most favorable to employee, that gender discrimination was motivating factor in decision of chancellor not to renew employee's contract in her position as assistant chancellor, on evidence that chancellor stripped her of her authority to exert leadership in matter involving women's basketball coach; natural inference of anti-female bias could not be made because employers may have plethora of reasons for deciding what employee should handle particular issue. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 1018, amended 2004 WL 1688342, affirmed 410 F.3d 387, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1405; Civil Rights 1537

County employee failed to show supervisor's bias to support claim that supervisor was not unbiased decisionmaker in his final decision to dismiss claimant as would support § 1983 due process violation claim; supervisor's failure to follow personnel commission's decision was not dispositive since commission decision was merely advisory and evidence that employee proffered relating to decision supported defendant's position that he attempted to maintain objective viewpoint in making decision. Gray v. Laws, E.D.N.C.1994, 915 F.Supp. 747, on reconsideration in part 915 F.Supp. 762, affirmed in part, vacated in part 51 F.3d 426. Civil Rights 1421

Rule of necessity did not excuse due process violation in nature of unbiased tribunal hearing charges against now terminated executive director of city housing authority, in that state law allowed the authority to appoint an independent hearing examiner; considering overwhelming bias of authority members, the authority should have appointed an impartial hearing examiner, attempted to submit the matter to arbitration or otherwise avoided acting in a quasi-judicial capacity. Salisbury v. Housing Authority of City of Newport, E.D.Ky.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1433. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

1832. ---- Incompetence of decisionmaker, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

Alleged failure of State Commissioner of Department of Employee Relations to adequately familiarize herself with case of dismissed state employee and causing undue delay of hearing procedures did not rise to level of due process violation actionable under § 1983, where the dismissed employee failed to show that the Commissioner was "more than" negligent. Deretich v. Office of Administrative Hearings, State of Minn., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1986, 798 F.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1039

1833. ---- Procedural requirements, dismissal, deprivation of employment rights

City violated procedural due process rights of employee arrested for possession of marijuana when, pursuant to its express policy, city refused to continue employee's disciplinary hearing until after his criminal case was resolved and asked employee to respond at hearing to criminal charges against him without advising him that his responses could not be used against him in his pending criminal proceedings, thereby effectively forcing employee to choose between his job and his Fifth Amendment rights; it did not matter that Court of Appeals' Atwell decision compelling such warnings was decided after employee's disciplinary hearing. Franklin v. City of Evanston, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 384 F.3d 838, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1696, 544 U.S. 956, 161 L.Ed.2d 539. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 218(8)

On former police officer's claims for violation of his procedural due process rights based on failure to provide him with unbiased procedures through which he could grieve his constructive discharge claim and adequate name-clearing hearing to protect his reputation, district court should have examined adequacy of all remedies available to him, including arbitration and any possible state court relief, in order to ascertain whether arbitration and any other remedy available were so inadequate as to violate clearly established law. Bussinger v. City of New Smyrna Beach, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 50 F.3d 922. Civil Rights 1320

Discharged hospital employee received more process than she was due under personnel manual, where in addition to providing her with three-step grievance procedure outlined in manual's "Fair Treatment Policy" hospital provided her with further opportunities to resolve dispute with supervisor and remain a hospital employee. Carnes v. Parker, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1506.

Director's failure to follow procedures required by Alabama law in discharging state employee by failing to give him required regular service ratings did not rise to level of a constitutional deprivation, and thus did not entitle employee to relief under this section authorizing civil actions for deprivation of rights. Thompson v. Bass, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 616 F.2d 1259, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 399, 449 U.S. 983, 66 L.Ed.2d 245. Civil Rights 1448; Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Former state Department of Correction employee failed to state a claim under §§ 1983 against supervisors and Commissioner of Correction for violation of his right to procedural due process by alleging that Department failed to follow its own internal rules in deciding to terminate his employment, since employee conceded that defendants provided him with notice of the charges against him, an explanation of the evidence, and an opportunity to present his side of the story. Everson v. Lantz, D.Conn.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 578. Prisons 7

the hearing did not actually occur only because officer withdrew his request for the hearing, and thus, officer's due process right to a posttermination hearing was not violated for purposes of his §§ 1983 due process claim. Koltonuk v. Borough of Laureldale, E.D.Pa.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 685. Municipal Corporations 185(4)

Alleged stigmatizing statements in memorandum in county employee's personnel file did not "attend" employee's discharge, for purpose of employee's § 1983 claim that county, as employer, violated his liberty interests under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment by not giving him name clearing hearing, since county laid off employee with other county employees due to budgetary concerns, even though both events occurred within same year. Cotton v. Martin County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 1182, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 977, 2004 WL 2805781 . Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Counties 67

Kansas corrections officer's Fourteenth Amendment due process rights were not violated, as alleged in § 1983 claim, when she was terminated without hearing as of date county was notified her disability benefits took effect; termination did not deprive officer, who conceded she was totally disabled from performing her job, of property interest, and hearing could not have provided her any relief. McCall v. Board of Com'rs of County of Shawnee, KS, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1216. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Prisons 7

Merits of termination of government employees are not judicially reviewable, with court's function in such actions limited to determination whether applicable procedures were substantially complied with in effecting termination. Thacker v. Whitehead, E.D.Tenn.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1111, affirmed 548 F.2d 634. Officers And Public Employees 72.53

In the absence of allegations tending to show that contract of employment with housing authority included specific procedures for discharge, that employee was holding his position under permanent appointment, or that there was some other source which could provide employee with a right to be heard before his discharge, failure to provide notice and an opportunity to be heard before discharge did not provide basis for claim of denial of civil rights. Holden v. Boston Housing Authority, D.C.Mass.1975, 400 F.Supp. 399. Civil Rights 1128

Physician's dismissal from anesthesiology residency program at state university for failing to disclose his participation in and dismissal from another residency program fell within ambit of "academic dismissal," rather than disciplinary dismissal, and thus physician did not have due process right to hearing before decision-making body, either before or after termination decision; physician was specifically asked to disclose anything in his background that might have bearing on his candidacy for program, program director informed physician of his concerns and provided opportunity to give his side of the story, and anesthesiology faculty members interpreted physician's dishonesty in application process as undermining his future credibility as source of information concerning care of seriously ill patients. Fenje v. Feld, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 620, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Colleges And Universities 9.35(4); Constitutional Law 278.5(7)

Career civil service employee with protected interest in employment was not deprived of pre-termination hearing, in violation of due process, where employee failed to attend the proffered hearing, despite fact that it was rescheduled on three separate occasions, and employee did not file any written objections to his discharge when employer, Puerto Rico Tourism Company, specifically granted the opportunity to do so. Mercado-Alicea v. P.R. Tourism Co., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 396 F.3d 46. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Territories 23

Evidence was sufficient to support jury's finding that medical examiner was denied procedural due process by his discharge without public hearing, notwithstanding his lack of property interest in continued employment, where discharge was accompanied by public charges of dishonesty implicating the examiner's liberty interest; examiner introduced testimony about publicity of the dishonesty charges, that the charges were contested by him, and that the charges were indeed false. Brady v. Gebbie, C.A.9 (Or.) 1988, 859 F.2d 1543, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1577,

Claim by classified civil service employee that he was denied the right to argue his case before decision makers at a posttermination hearing raised at least a colorable claim of denial of due process. Carter v. Western Reserve Psychiatric Habilitation Center, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 767 F.2d 270. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

County, which afforded discharged at-will employee of board of commissioners a posttermination hearing before a tribunal composed of board members, afforded employee a constitutionally adequate opportunity to clear her name only 14 days after her dismissal and therefore she was not entitled to damages under this section. Campbell v. Pierce County, Ga. By and Through Bd. of Com'rs of Pierce County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1984, 741 F.2d 1342, rehearing denied 747 F.2d 710, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1754, 470 U.S. 1052, 84 L.Ed.2d 818. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Discharged school official could establish his claim under this section of denial of procedural due process, i.e., lack of name clearing hearing, by showing district's publication of the allegedly defamatory charges, injury to employment and denial of a hearing, and publication could be shown by revelation of the charges and official interviews with the press and it was not necessary to also show a prior secret disclosure to the press, although such was immaterial to claim for punitive or exemplary damages against individual school officials. In re Selcraig, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 705 F.2d 789. Civil Rights 1133

Complaint which alleged that probationary employee was terminated following review hearing by Civil Service Commission [now Merit Systems Protection Board] at which Commission did not follow its own rules was sufficient to state cause of action for violation of this section. Sherman v. Yakahi, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1977, 549 F.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where members of road maintenance crew had been discharged for insubordination and they had been granted hearings on charges placed against them, there was no denial of procedural due process or any other federally secured right that would entitle crew members to bring action under this section. Chism v. Price, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1972, 457 F.2d 1037. Civil Rights 1122; Civil Rights 1128

Failure to give discharged municipal employee a hearing required by state law was not ground for relief under this section, but hearing was required under federal law so that employee would have opportunity to protect interests other than state employment inextricably connected with his removal. Birnbaum v. Trussell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 371 F.2d 672. Civil Rights 1128

Puerto Rico police officers who were forced to retire at age 55 failed to state §§ 1983 claim based on deprivation of their property rights without due process; even if they could establish a property interest in their employment that would expire in ten years given that retirement age established under previous law was 65, Commonwealth did not have to provide hearing to each retiree subject to mandatory retirement. Correa-Ruiz v. Calderon-Serra, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 41. Territories 23

State department of revenue secretary's misinterpretation of state law in demoting state employee from chief legal counsel to staff attorney, which denied employee of a meaningful opportunity to be heard before being demoted, was not reasonably foreseeable, and therefore, it was unlikely that predeprivation procedures would have improved the correctness of secretary's decision to demote employee, for purposes of determining whether predeprivation procedures violated employee's due process rights. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2004, 307 F.Supp.2d 1036. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); States 53

Community college's refusal to give discharged employee a post-termination hearing did not constitute a denial of due process; employee's termination, coupled with college's dissemination of the reasons for his dismissal, constituted an "adjudication" under Pennsylvania's Local Agency Law, so that he had available to him the procedural rights afforded by that statute, and even if he was not accorded the hearing required by the Local Agency Law, he had the right to avail himself of judicial review. Demko v. Luzerne County Community College, M.D.Pa.2000, 113 F.Supp.2d 722. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

County administrator was entitled to hearing to clear his name on his claim of reputational injury from stigmatizing statements made in connection with his discharge; although state law remedy was adequate to address administrator's property interest, it did not address alleged liberty interest to his reputation. Foster v. Jackson County, Fla., N.D.Fla.1995, 895 F.Supp. 301. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Quantity of information assimilated by news media regarding misconduct charges against employees of state agency did not suggest that agency made charges known to media, and thus that agency had obligation subsequent to discharge of employees to provide liberty interest name-clearing hearing, where information which another employee communicated to media was specific and, with one possible exception, contained all details subsequently revealed in media coverage. Dubose v. Oustalet, S.D.Miss.1990, 738 F.Supp. 188. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Plaintiff, who was discharged without a hearing from her position as director of nursing at county nursing home, had no "liberty" or "property" interest under state law in the expectation of continued employment, and there was thus no deprivation of due process, or of rights under this section, when plaintiff was terminated without a hearing. DeFrank v. Pawlosky, W.D.Pa.1979, 480 F.Supp. 115, affirmed 633 F.2d 209. Constitutional Law 254.1; Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

1835. ---- Pre-dismissal hearing, deprivation of employment rights

Nontenured city employee was not entitled to hearing prior to dismissal due to stigmatizing effect of certain material placed in his personnel file where employee did not challenge substantial truth of material in question, because hearing required where nontenured employee has been stigmatized in course of decision to terminate his employment is solely to provide that person an opportunity to clear his name and, if he does not challenge substantial truth of material in question, no hearing would afford promise of achieving that result for him. Codd v. Velger, U.S.N.Y.1977, 97 S.Ct. 882, 429 U.S. 624, 51 L.Ed.2d 92. Municipal Corporations 218(8)

Because employees in public defender's office were state and not county employees, failure of county to hold evidentiary hearing before discharging employees, which would have violated county disciplinary procedures, did not violate due process rights of employees. Warren v. Stone, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1419. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); States 53

Borough accorded police officer adequate pretermination process, and thus, officer did not establish §§ 1983 due process claim; borough provided officer notice of the charges against him, an explanation of the borough's evidence, and an opportunity to explain his side of the story. Koltonuk v. Borough of Laureldale, E.D.Pa.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 685. Municipal Corporations 185(6)

Park manager's allegations that co-workers were terminated involuntarily without being given notice or opportunity for a hearing did not serve as a basis for municipal policy or custom of terminating employees in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment because there was no evidence in the record that co-workers had just cause protection entitling them to any due process prior to termination and as such, park manager did not establish § 1983 municipal liability claim. Krennerich v. Inhabitants of Town of Bristol, D.Me.1996, 943 F.Supp. 1345. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Any contractual defense that state transportation authority might rely on through collective bargaining agreement was susceptible to factual arguments, and thus authority's contention that procedures used to dismiss employee, as set forth in union contract, met requirements of due process, and that employee's post-termination hearing satisfied

due process, did not allow dismissal of employee's § 1983 claim, alleging that authority failed to grant him pre-termination hearing, in violation of his due process rights. Frederick v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1995, 892 F.Supp. 122. Federal Civil Procedure 1793.1

Due process rights of "permanent" director of social services of county could not be satisfied by posttermination hearing, where predeprivation process was possible and state delegated to local board of social services the power to effect the termination about which the director complained. Bockes v. Fields, W.D.Va.1992, 798 F.Supp. 1219, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 999 F.2d 788, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 922, 510 U.S. 1092, 127 L.Ed.2d 216. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Counties 67

Probation officers were not entitled to hearing prior to dismissal by county probation office absent binding understanding with probation office or indication that office followed de facto policy of providing such hearings. Shore v. Howard, N.D.Tex.1976, 414 F.Supp. 379. Courts 55

Hearing prior to termination of employment is required as matter of procedural due process only if state, or persons acting under color of state law, act to deprive an individual of the security of interests that he has already acquired in specific benefits. Muir v. County Council of Sussex County, D.C.Del.1975, 393 F.Supp. 915. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1836. Reinstatement, deprivation of employment rights

State employee failed to state § 1983 claim against state Attorney General for declining to prosecute superintendent of state clinic to force superintendent to comply with order of State Personnel Board of Review (SPBR) to reinstate employee with back pay and benefits. Collyer v. Darling, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 98 F.3d 211, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2439, 520 U.S. 1267, 138 L.Ed.2d 199. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Fact that civil servant, who was terminated from his position following probationary period, had his name restored to the list for further employment and that Civil Service Commission could not have returned him to his original job regardless of its findings did not show that the employee did not suffer damage as result of alleged denial of civil rights in connection with the hearing before the Civil Service Commission where, even though his name had been restored to the list for further employment, there was attached thereto a proviso that he not be rehired by the employer which had just discharged him and where the Commission could have restored him to the list without such a proviso. Sherman v. Yakahi, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1977, 549 F.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1482

Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority (SEPTA) did not deny employee, who was reinstated with back pay following his discharge for alleged gross negligence, a post-termination hearing, as would constitute denial of due process, where judge terminated administrative hearing, holding that proceedings were moot upon employee's reinstatement with back pay. Krenzel v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 199, 2004 WL 188091, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Officers And Public Employees 72.16(1)

1837. Firefighters, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Fire chief was not entitled to qualified immunity against liability for allegedly retaliating against volunteer firefighter for raising questions as to safety of a controlled burn, as firefighter's right to comment on matters of public safety was clearly established. Cooper v. Town of Bar Nunn, D.Wyo.2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1363, affirmed 101 Fed.Appx. 324, 2004 WL 1281491. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Evidence that several white firefighters had been allowed to return to light duty work, while black firefighters had been forced to remain on sick leave, was sufficient to establish prima facie case under § 1983 of discriminatory application of sick leave policy by city and fire department. Felton v. City of Auburn, M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1476. Civil Rights 1421

1838. ---- Property interest, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Unsuccessful firefighter applicants, who alleged they were excluded from firefighter eligibility lists without due process, did not have a protected "property interest"; applicants did not pass exam and did not have any protected interest in being placed on eligibility lists. Antonelli v. New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 419 F.3d 267. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Firefighter did not have property interest in competitive examination for promotion, as required for his § 1983 claim for violation of his Fourteenth Amendment procedural due process rights; although New York law required a competitive examination, it did not create a cognizable property interest in a competitive examination, and firefighter did not have any legitimate claim of entitlement to the position to which he aspired. McMenemy v. City of Rochester, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 241 F.3d 279. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Volunteer fire company, which had contracted with county to provide fire protection and emergency medical services, was qualifiedly immune from any claims associated with its decisions to either dismiss or demote management employees without affording them due process hearings, since company's employment decisions were indisputably within its scope of discretionary authority, and, given parties' terminable-at-will employment relationship, company did not violate any "clearly established" property interest in rendering those decisions. Mitchell v. Lealman Volunteer Fire Co., M.D.Fla.1996, 985 F.Supp. 1436. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Plaintiffs, who were either terminated or demoted as management employees of volunteer fire company, failed to demonstrate any protected property interest in their employment, thus defeating their § 1983 due process claims, where plaintiffs did not have written employment contracts, fire chief testified that company's board of directors specifically considered disciplinary procedure for management personnel but did not officially adopt one, and company policy manual, delineating disciplinary terms and review procedures, applied only to rank-and-file employees. Mitchell v. Lealman Volunteer Fire Co., M.D.Fla.1996, 985 F.Supp. 1436. Constitutional Law 277(2); Municipal Corporations 198(3)

Employee of fire protection district did not have protected property interest in his continued employment where personnel procedure manual in effect at time of his discharge specifically stated that its provisions did not apply to positions of chief and assistant chief. Williams v. Castlewood Fire Protection Dist., D.Colo.1991, 755 F.Supp. 956 . Constitutional Law 277(2)

Terminated fire chief did not have claim of entitlement to continued employment, and thus could not maintain § 1983 civil rights claim against fire district, where his employment contract with previous board was not unitary one for doing of particular and specified act, but rather was of personal nature as it involved variety of duties, including hiring and firing of personnel, and thus, employment contract did not bind subsequent board members. Tryon v. Avra Valley Fire Dist., D.Ariz.1986, 659 F.Supp. 283. Civil Rights 1128

1839. ---- Sex discrimination, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Allegations by city fire department employee, who was born male and subsequently was diagnosed with gender identity disorder, that employee was discriminated against based upon employee's gender non-conforming behavior and appearance, sufficiently constituted claim of sex discrimination grounded in Equal Protection Clause pursuant to § 1983. Smith v. City of Salem, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 378 F.3d 566, rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 224(2); Municipal Corporations 198(2)

Evidence supported awarding damages to female applicant for fire fighter position who was not hired, although defendant city commission claimed that there was no evidence that female applicant would have been hired if she had been certified as eligible for hire; evidence established that female applicant could be considered very qualified for fire fighter position, except for her poor credit record, which was found to be pretext for discrimination against the female applicant, fire chief recommended applicant for certification and stated that, in his opinion, nothing precluded female applicant from being fire fighter, and male applicants with poor credit records and additional problems were certified and hired by city. Scott v. City of Topeka Police and Fire Civil Service Com'n, D.Kan.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1434. Civil Rights 1470; Civil Rights 1765

Claim of intentional discrimination in violation of civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, by city and city officials with respect to selection of women as fire fighters could not be sustained based on fact that before 1975 job announcements for position of fire fighter were restricted to males, only five of 832 fire fighters were women, director of training academy, who had been removed due to bias against women, had been biased against them, and physical and mechanical reasoning tests were used to select fire fighters, where there was substantial evidence that city made efforts to encourage women to apply as fire fighters and to complete selection process, no evidence of discriminatory treatment was offered by two incumbent female fire fighters who testified, and there appeared to be no discrimination against women in administration of physical examination. Brunet v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 1986, 642 F.Supp. 1214, appeal dismissed 826 F.2d 1062, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1593, 485 U.S. 1034, 99 L.Ed.2d 908. Civil Rights 1421

1840. ---- Speech and writings, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Fire marshal's internal arson investigation report, which was used as grounds for demotion of fire marshal, addressed matters of public concern and thus, was constitutionally protected speech, particularly where Kansas law mandated that report be filed in office of state fire marshal and explicitly gave public access to such report, and thus, jury verdict awarding marshal $100,000 damages in action alleging demotion abridged marshal's right of free speech had to be upheld. Koch v. City of Hutchinson, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1987, 814 F.2d 1489, rehearing granted 847 F.2d 1435, on rehearing 847 F.2d 1436, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 262, 488 U.S. 909, 102 L.Ed.2d 250. Civil Rights 1473; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Dismissal of fireman for his participation in circulation of a petition protesting recent promotion in fire department, and for his presenting same to city manager, was an impermissible infringement upon fireman's exercise of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14, and defendants failed to show sufficient justification for penalizing him because of his exercise of such rights. Jannetta v. Cole, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1974, 493 F.2d 1334. Municipal Corporations 198(2); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Actions of fire chief in allegedly terminating volunteer firefighter in retaliation for his protected First Amendment speech could form basis for municipal liability under § 1983, where fire chief had been delegated final policymaking authority for department through municipal ordinance. Cooper v. Town of Bar Nunn, D.Wyo.2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1363, affirmed 101 Fed.Appx. 324, 2004 WL 1281491. Civil Rights 1351(5)

1841. ---- Political affiliation, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Firefighter's allegations that city officials conspired to bypass him for promotion to battalion chief in retaliation for his criticism of mayor during his own mayoral campaign alleged deprivation of a federally protected right, as required to support firefighter's civil conspiracy claim under § 1983. Fioriglio v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.1998, 996 F.Supp. 379, affirmed 185 F.3d 861, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 789, 528 U.S. 1075, 145 L.Ed.2d 666. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Fire fighter bringing § 1983 action against fire department did not sufficiently allege causal connection between his political activities in opposition to principal elected official of fire department and his having been assigned to a position with hours which were unfavorable to him. F.2d 1344. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1842. ---- Constructive discharge, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Threatened demotion and resignation of assistant fire chief for allegedly telling an organization that it was helping unqualified persons to obtain jobs were "constructive discharge" of chief who was claiming violation of procedural due process and First Amendment in § 1983 actions; demotion would have required chief to take orders from persons who were previously of equal rank and would have made reasonable chief feel compelled to resign; chief was given two days to make decision to resign; adverse publicity had surrounded threatened demotion; and city could reasonably foresee that chief would feel compelled to resign. Meyers v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1990, 728 F.Supp. 477, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 934 F.2d 726. Civil Rights 1123

1843. ---- Promotion, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

New Jersey, New Jersey Department of Personnel (NJDOP), and NJDOP officials did not administer facially race-neutral firefighters' exam in intentionally discriminatory manner, for purposes of equal protection claim asserted by unsuccessful applicants under §§ 1983, where all applicants took same exam, all exams were scored using same scoring key, all applicants were required to achieve same minimum cut-off score on each exam component, and all applicants who passed each component of exam were ranked according to final score with each component equally weighted. Antonelli v. New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 419 F.3d 267. Municipal Corporations 197

Black firefighters sufficiently demonstrated that they were qualified for promotion to captain, notwithstanding their low ratings in assessment center program, so as to establish prima facie case under § 1983 of discriminatory failure to promote; firefighters had consistently received satisfactory job performance ratings and had received praise while temporarily working in position of captain. Felton v. City of Auburn, M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1476. Civil Rights 1135

1844. ---- Medical leave, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

HIV-positive fire fighter who was assigned to light duty following his resignation and then subsequently discharged when he refused to perform light duty assignments failed to establish that he was denied equal protection or due process, inasmuch as fire fighter was treated differently only to extent of providing him with alternative to his initial voluntary resignation due to his HIV status, and fire fighter was discharged because of his refusal to perform assigned duties, not because of his medical condition. Severino v. North Fort Myers Fire Control Dist., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 935 F.2d 1179. Constitutional Law 238.5; Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Municipal Corporations 198(2)

Fire fighter who sustained back injury could not recover in action under this section on ground that he was denied due process when he did not receive an immediate hearing on denial of initial application for indemnification of medical expenses. Packish v. McMurtrie, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1983, 697 F.2d 23. Civil Rights 1126

While injured fire fighter had vested property interest under New York law in receipt of disability payments equal to his regular salary, city's mistaken policy of withholding taxes from those payments did not deprive fire fighter of procedural due process; fire fighter had opportunity to contest amounts withheld by filing appropriate withholding and exemption certificates and could have refused to report payments made as income on his tax returns and demanded reimbursement from government for amounts withheld. DiGiovanni v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.1988, 680 F.Supp. 80. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 200(5)

Right to travel was not in any matter at issue in case respecting decision of defendant trustees of pension board to reinstate plaintiff on a late duty basis in absence of evidence that governing Indiana statute, IC 1976, 19-1-37-17, contained any restrictions on a disabled fireman's right to travel, but even if right to travel was at issue with respect to alleged conduct of defendants in calling plaintiff back to Indiana from Florida for reexamination, a cause of action under this section for violation of right to travel was not stated in absence of evidence that reexamination was unjustifiable for purpose of preventing one who was retired for medical reasons from taking advantage of such retirement if disability no longer existed. Danaher v. Michaw, N.D.Ind.1977, 435 F.Supp. 717. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1845. ---- Reputation injury, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Communication by employer-city fire department of reasons for discipline of employee, who was considered to have committed unprofessional conduct and grievous breach of her obligations to maintain confidentiality of investigations conducted by inspector general's office warranting dismissal, could violate employee's liberty interest, so as to permit her to maintain civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Morciglio v. New York City Fire Dept., E.D.N.Y.1986, 628 F.Supp. 134. Civil Rights 1040

1846. ---- Unions, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Fire department employees failed to establish that union retaliated for employee's employment discrimination charges and promotion lawsuit when union attorney failed to represent employee on her claim against fire fighter's benefit fund, that union attorney's conflict of interest was pretextual reason for denying representation, and that denial of representation was retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights. Herhold v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 723 F.Supp. 20. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Civil Rights 1249(1)

1847. ---- Wages, firefighters, deprivation of employment rights

Fire department's original denial of wages to fire fighter for day when he was absent from work while responding to witness subpoena in federal court was neither procedural nor substantive constitutional violation, and therefore did not give rise to colorable claim under federal civil rights statute, even though refusal to pay wages would deprive fire fighter of property right in violation of state law which entitled him to wages, where deprivation was rectified by state under effective administrative procedure by time that civil rights suit was filed. Genusa v. Mumphrey, C.A.5 (La.) 1991, 931 F.2d 11. Civil Rights 1320

1848. Police officers, deprivation of employment rights--Generally

Determination whether city policeman had property right in continued employment, protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, was determined by state law, in absence of allegation that policeman was suspended for constitutionally impermissible reasons or in violation of this section. DeBono v. Vizas, D.C.Colo.1977, 427 F.Supp. 905. Federal Courts 411

1849. ---- Property interest, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Police officer lacked property interest in continuing public employment for purposes of procedural due process claim against town and town administrator under §§ 1983; officer was probationary employee who could be terminated without cause under terms of town charter, and the very nature of probationary employment meant that officer could not be permanent employee with property interest in continuing employment without further testing. Dodd v. Sheppard, D.R.I.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 326. Towns 28

Police officer had no property right, protected by due process clause, to promotion by Commonwealth of Puerto Rico to position of first lieutenant; officer was ineligible for promotion while ongoing complaint or administrative investigation was pending against him. Ramos Rodriguez v. Puerto Rico, D. Puerto Rico 2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 6. Constitutional Law 277(2)

State police detective was not deprived of property interest, in violation of his due process rights, when he was transferred from one casino to another, where there existed no independent source under Connecticut law supporting his claim of entitlement to be left at first casino, and he lost no pay or benefits when he was transferred. Mercer v. Brunt, D.Conn.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 21, reconsideration denied 304 F.Supp.2d 334. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); States 53

North Carolina public policy exception to employment-at-will doctrine did not give at-will police officer property interest in continued employment sufficient to support § 1983 claim against city. Beck v. City of Durham, M.D.N.C.2000, 129 F.Supp.2d 844. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Special law enforcement officer (SLEO) employed by city did not have property interest, pursuant to Special Law Enforcement Officers Act, in his reappointment after his suspension, once his final term had expired, as required to support his §§ 1983 claim, that city's alleged failure to give proper notice, either that administrative proceedings in connection with his misconduct could result in his suspension, or of suspension itself, violated his right to due process. Nance v. City of Newark, New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 722, 2005 WL 348365, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 185(3)

Former members of village police department had no property right, under Ohio law, to continued employment in police department that village legally and completely abolished to provide its citizens with more professional law enforcement via county sheriff's department, for purposes of §§ 1983 claim based on alleged due process violations; village did not fire department members to replace them with agreeable officers, and there was no probative evidence suggesting abolishment was a subterfuge. Wanless v. Village of South Lebanon, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 118 Fed.Appx. 967, 2005 WL 14984, Unreported. Constitutional Law 277(2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

1850. ---- Disparate treatment, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Constitutionality under equal protection clause of consent decree, entered in settlement of prior racial discrimination suit against sheriff's department and mandating a policy that at least 50% of all annual promotions in department be awarded to black officers, was evaluated according to the analytical framework set forth in the U.S. Supreme Court's Croson decision, the Eleventh Circuit's Birmingham II decision, and commensurate decisions, not by the McDonnell Douglas standard; department's employment promotion policy constituted an affirmative action plan. Thigpen v. Bibb County, Ga., Sheriff's Dept., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2000, 223 F.3d 1231. Constitutional Law 219.1; Federal Civil Procedure 2397.2

Probationary police officers' complaint charging due process and equal protection violations, but failing to identify any property or liberty interest or any prior or subsequent history of disparate treatment failed to state claim under § 1983. Perkins v. Silverstein, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 939 F.2d 463. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Fact that white police officers were not qualified for promotion to sergeant because they did not have associates degree, which was condition precedent for taking sergeant exam, and that one officer was not qualified until he had five years' experience with police department did not preclude officers from establishing prima facie case of discriminatory promotion under §§ 1981, 1983, and Michigan's Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act, where officers' principal point was that these requirements were imposed with discriminatory animus. Kresnak v. City of Muskegon Heights, W.D.Mich.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1327. Civil Rights 1234

City officials' allegation that police officer was held to higher standard of professional conduct than subordinate because of difference in their ranks provided sufficient indication of rational basis for disciplining officer more harshly with respect to his review of report which contained racially intemperate remarks, and officer's claim for violation of his right to equal protection was denied. Boone v. Mingus, S.D.Ala.1988, 697 F.Supp. 1577, affirmed 880 F.2d 419. Constitutional Law 238.5; Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Former state trooper, who complained that he had been subject to more severe sanction by Virginia Department of State Police than was imposed upon other Department personnel who had also engaged in similar or identical conduct, could not recover under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights on equal protection grounds where he admitted that conduct he engaged in from which his alleged injuries arose was in violation of state law and Department regulations. Suddarth v. Slane, W.D.Va.1982, 539 F.Supp. 612. Civil Rights 1126

Allegations in city police detectives' complaint supported federal civil rights claims that city failed to adequately protect minority undercover officers based on race and national origin when complaint and referenced documents asserted that overwhelming majority of undercover assignments were given to black and Hispanic officers, that city knew this fact when it failed to provide adequate protection for such officers, and that superiors who failed to follow proper safety procedures acted with discriminatory intent. Tamayo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 137198, Unreported, adhered to in part on reconsidertaion 2004 WL 725836. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1851. ---- Age discrimination, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

West Virginia statute establishing 18 to 35-year age limit for applicants for original appointment to police force of any city with population of 10,000 or more did not violate Equal Protection Clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1, and thus unsuccessful applicant for employment as police officer whose application was denied on sole ground that he was 40 years of age could not prevail in civil rights action brought against Constitutional Law 238.5; Municipal Corporations 176(3.1)

1852. ---- Racial discrimination, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

White, male, police training cadets, who were discharged from academy for cheating on examinations, failed to establish that they were treated differently from minority and female recruits and that discharge was based on gender or race; discharged cadets were involved in more instances of exchanging answers during examination; and police department was entitled to differentiate between discipline given to discharged cadets and other recruits who were only peripherally involved in cheating. Friedel v. City of Madison, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1987, 832 F.2d 965. Civil Rights 1544; Civil Rights 1549

Practice of sheriff in preferring applicants for deputy jobs who had been policemen in various townships of county was not discriminatory, notwithstanding claim that practice resulted in excluding blacks as candidates in that all township police officers of county were white, where less than one percent of population of townships was black and, aside from a demonstrated rational relationship between preference and successful performance on job, there was no showing that preference resulted in perpetuation or carrying forward of past discriminatory practices. Shack v. Southworth, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1975, 521 F.2d 51. Civil Rights 1127

Where arbitrary requirement of service in next preceding rank was required for promotions to levels of police lieutenant and police captain, district court could reasonably conclude from evidence that requirements for promotion to lieutenant and captain tended to perpetuate past discriminatory practices at entry level. Afro Am. Patrolmen's League v. Duck, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1974, 503 F.2d 294, on remand. Civil Rights 1548

Former police officer could not recover on claim of racially hostile work environment with respect to claims of pressure to write tickets, harassment of officer, pressure to keep silent, and promotions and firing; police officer offered no evidence indicating he was pressured to write tickets because of his race, he offered no evidence he was harassed because he was black but, rather, stated that harassment was done to make an example to other officers who might disclose police irregularities, he offered no evidence that pressure was placed only to keep black officers silent, as opposed to any officer who had allegedly threaten to disclose information, and he gave a good deal of evidence indicating that much of alleged discrimination with respect to promotions and firings was based on taking actions to lie or cover up. Williams v. Morris, W.D.Va.1996, 956 F.Supp. 679. Civil Rights 1147

Black police officer who alleged that town mayors discriminated against him on basis of his race had to show a purpose or intent to discriminate in order to prevail on his § 1983 equal protection claim. Lightner v. Town of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1489. Civil Rights 1137

City's desire to have more black sergeants or other high ranking black officers on police force, standing alone, was not sufficiently compelling reason to justify passing over of qualified white officers in order to make room for promotion of lesser qualified black officers to sergeant, where there was no evidence of any constitutional or statutory violations and, therefore, no governmental interest in preferring one group over another. Hayes v. City of Charlotte, N.C., W.D.N.C.1992, 802 F.Supp. 1361, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 10 F.3d 207. Civil Rights 1234; Civil Rights 1238

Hispanic employees of police department failed to raise inference of discriminatory intent required to establish prima facie case of employment discrimination under §§ 1981 and 1983 in connection with department's alleged custom or policy of requiring them to use their Spanish language skills, and of considering Spanish language skills in its employment decisions. Cota v. Tucson Police Dept., D.Ariz.1992, 783 F.Supp. 458. Civil Rights 1421

Hispanic police lieutenant did not establish prima facie case of discrimination as result of his failure to be appointed acting captain absent showing that he applied for and was qualified for job for which employer was seeking applicants, that he was rejected despite his qualifications, and that position remained open and other applicants were sought after his rejection; city had not sought application for position in question, lieutenant did not apply for position before appointment was made, and he was not qualified for assignment where he had not been working within the division in which the vacancy occurred. Garza v. City of Inglewood, C.D.Cal.1991, 761 F.Supp. 1475, affirmed 967 F.2d 586. Civil Rights 1548

City's refusal to hire black plaintiff as a city police officer was not shown to be racially motivated, where the state developed information through its routine background investigation that the applicant had been fired from one job for shoplifting, that she misrepresented that history in subsequent employment applications, that she abandoned another job without notice, that one of her former co-workers gave her a negative reference, and that, upon being given a successive polygraph examination concerning the shoplifting incident, the examiner opined that her denial was deceptive. Drayton v. City of St. Petersburg, M.D.Fla.1979, 477 F.Supp. 846. Civil Rights 1127

Existence of alleged deal between attorney and city manager that three of black patrolmen that attorney represented in prior case would be promoted, did not, under circumstances, support police officer's allegation that decision not to promote him to sergeant was based on consideration of his white race. Burns v. Sullivan, D.C.Mass.1979, 473 F.Supp. 626, affirmed 619 F.2d 99, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 256, 449 U.S. 893, 66 L.Ed.2d 121. Civil Rights 1135

Actions taken by Pennsylvania state police pursuant to consent decree in prior civil rights action with respect to employment of minorities did not constitute an appointing of cadets on the basis of a "fixed quota" but was merely the following of procedures which prevented additional discrimination against minority applicants during the temporary period while constitutional selection procedures were developed. Oburn v. Shapp, E.D.Pa.1975, 393 F.Supp. 561, affirmed 521 F.2d 142. Civil Rights 1127

African-American police officer failed to set forth any evidence from which inference could be drawn that county intentionally discriminated against Blacks in termination during probation, training, or Sheriff's Emergency Response Team (SERT) participation, in lawsuit claiming equal protection violation; even though officer alleged specific incidents of racial slurs and mace-shaving cream assault by fellow officers, incidents were not reported to someone in supervisory position, and special firearms training was given only to select few officers who were more senior than African-American officer. Patterson v. County of Oneida, N.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31677033, Unreported, affirmed in part, vacated in part 375 F.3d 206. Civil Rights 1405

1853. ---- Sex discrimination, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Evidence, although conflicting, did not compel conclusion that internal departmental investigation of female state police officer's conduct would have been conducted even without consideration of her sex; although investigations concerning allegations that female officer slapped fellow trooper, about party she hosted at her parents' home, and about automobile accident raised questions of legitimate concern to state police, there was at least circumstantial evidence that similar incidents involving male troopers were not investigated internally. Pontarelli v. Stone, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1991, 930 F.2d 104. Civil Rights 1421

Police commissioner's remarks to discharged police officer that women had no business being police officers and that he did not want police officer there provided sufficient evidence of discriminatory intent to support employment discrimination claim under statute, which prohibits deprivation of federal constitutional right under color of state law. Webb v. City of Chester, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 813 F.2d 824. Civil Rights 1421

Female police officer stated claim under § 1983, when she claimed that police department and police chief treated her differently than similarly situated males, interfered with her promotional opportunities, interfered with her opportunity to attend executive management program, gave her demeaning assignments and unfairly reprimanded her, that the acts were taken under color of state law in that they were rules and/or policies mandated and/or approved by the state, and that they were ongoing; the key unlawful employment practices were alleged to have occurred within the two-year period prior to claim, and acts occurring prior to that two-year period were covered by the continuing violation standard. Kielczynski v. Village of LaGrange, Ill., N.D.Ill.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 877. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1383; Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Police officer's failure to show that city had policy or custom of sexual harassment within police department was fatal to her § 1983 claim against city for violation of her equal protection rights under Fourteenth Amendment. Sharp v. City of Houston, S.D.Tex.1997, 960 F.Supp. 1164. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Supervisor's actions in subjecting female police officer to close scrutiny and keeping meticulous track of her whereabouts, which was not done with male officers, did not constitute "disparate treatment" in terms of employment for which city could be held liable, even if conduct could be considered harassment; female officer was not removed from her position and there was no adverse employment action taken against her due to complained of conduct. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1172

1854. ---- Sex harassment, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Police officer stated § 1983 cause of action against fellow police officers for sexual harassment and retaliation in violation of Fourteenth Amendment, based on alleged incidents that occurred when all three officers worked off-duty as security guards in apartment complex; officer might be able to recover on claim if she could prove that, in committing alleged sexual harassment, fellow officers had supervisory authority over her or in some other way exercised state authority over her. David v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1344, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 157, 522 U.S. 858, 139 L.Ed.2d 102. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Female police officer presented sufficient evidence of hostile work environment to survive motion for summary judgment in § 1983 action alleging hostile work environment in violation of equal protection clause; female employee alleged not only a training room incident in which male police officers were reading a pornographic magazine and made comments about magazine calculated to get her attention, with other officer's allegedly laughing, hooting, and making kissing sounds and cat calls, but also that she was harassed, propositioned, physically touched, and spoken to in sexual manner by numerous police officers over course of five years before training incident, that she was subjected to training films containing pornography, that pornographic materials were routinely posted at station house, and that other women were subjected to similar circumstances. Wise v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 355. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Female police lieutenant, bringing claim that city engaged in gender and pregnancy discrimination, in violation of her constitutional rights, Title VII and California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), when it did not promote her to captain while she was on eligibility list, failed to show that reason, freezing of positions, was pretextual, even though freeze was lifted as soon as eligibility list including lieutenant expired; lieutenant failed to show any causal connection between gender and pregnancy and fact she was not promoted. Glenn-Davis v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21244061, Unreported, reversed 126 Fed.Appx. 375, 2005 WL 663436, on remand 2005 WL 2373726. Civil Rights 1171; Civil Rights 1176

1855. ---- Speech and writings, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Under Pickering balancing of interests test, potential disruptiveness of guard's outburst regarding insufficient officer coverage during evening meal at maximum security prison outweighed whatever First Amendment value her speech might have had, for purposes of her retaliation claim under §§ 1983 guard had complained in loud, profane and unprofessional manner and in presence of staff and inmates, endangering both groups by exposing them to opportunistic acts of violence and undermining authority of supervising officer in presence of other officers and inmates. Cygan v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 388 F.3d 1092. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Prisons 7

Assistant police chief's memorandum, stating that, based on temporary restraining order (TRO) issued by state court, officers should temporarily disregard earlier police department directives prohibiting officers who had made charges against other officers from discussing those charges, did not render moot officers' federal § 1983 action alleging that earlier directives violated their free speech rights, inasmuch as there was no reasonable basis to conclude challenged conduct would not reoccur; memorandum was nothing more than effort to comply with TRO and was by its terms temporary. Milwaukee Police Ass'n v. Jones, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1999, 192 F.3d 742. Federal Courts 13.10

Former deputy sheriff's proposed letter to editor of local newspaper wherein deputy disputed article dealing with recent solving of burglary case by police department, wherein only named investigator was given credit for cracking the case, was not constitutionally protected speech inasmuch as police department was small organization in which mutual confidence and cooperation were essential and letter related to matter of internal administration of that organization, not to any matter of public debate and, thus, deputy sheriff was not impermissibly dismissed from job for exercising his constitutional right to speak on issue of public concern. Cooper v. Johnson, C.A.4 (Va.) 1979, 590 F.2d 559. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Firefighter's speech at union meeting regarding city's favorable treatment of lieutenant was not of public concern, and thus city's decision to place firefighter on administrative leave after speech did not constitute retaliation for protected speech, in violation of First Amendment. Langlois v. City of Deerfield Beach, Florida, S.D.Fla.2005, 370 F.Supp.2d 1233. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 198(2)

Former deputies who allegedly were discharged in retaliation by sheriff and deputy sheriff for their participation in prior lawsuit against town police department established prima facie claim of retaliation under Title VII by showing that they were engaged in protected activity of exercising their First Amendment rights and that they suffered adverse employment action when their employment was terminated. Smith v. Parish of Washington, E.D.La.2004, 318 F.Supp.2d 366. Civil Rights 1249(2); Sheriffs And Constables 21

Police officers' objections to orders instructing them to carry "ghost" employee on daily duty roster so that he would be paid, which would have been a clear misuse of public funds, qualified as speech on a matter of public concern for purposes of determining whether officers stated claim under § 1983 for violation of First Amendment rights; officers' objections did not appear to have been motivated by unfavorable personnel decision or personal grievance, nor did context of officers' objections indicate a personal vendetta. Sanders v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 10. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); District Of Columbia 7

Allegations of misconduct in police department were matter of public concern, as required to support deputy police chief's claim that he was terminated in violation of his free speech rights for appearing at news conference called to expose misconduct. Wallace v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1996, 956 F.Supp. 965. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 196

Police officer's failure to show causal connection between his allegedly protected expression and his termination was fatal to his claim of retaliatory discharge in violation of First Amendment. Singleton v. Cecil, E.D.Mo.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1164, affirmed 133 F.3d 631, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 155 F.3d 983, rehearing en banc granted, on rehearing 176 F.3d 419, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 402, 528 U.S. 966, 145 L.Ed.2d 313. Civil Rights 1421

Police officer stated cause of action for violation of her First Amendment freedom of speech rights, when she complained that she was discriminated against on basis of her sex and informed police department's office of equal employment opportunity that three other women in her precinct had been similarly treated; allegation of pattern of sexual discrimination made her speech that of a citizen complaining about a matter of public concern, to which First Amendment applied, rather than speech regarding individual grievance, to which it was inapplicable. Domenech v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 919 F.Supp. 702, on reargument 927 F.Supp. 106. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 180(1)

Police dispatcher and police officer stated claims against city, department, and city employees for deprivation of right to free speech for firing dispatcher for speaking to media about police misconduct and for forcing officer to retire for complaining to supervisors about police misconduct; dispatcher and officer demonstrated that they engaged in protected speech, that their interest in engaging in speech outweighed any interest of defendants, and that speech was motivating factor in defendants' actions. McDonald v. City of Freeport, Tex., S.D.Tex.1993, 834 F.Supp. 921. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Police academy cadet stated cause of action against city and community college based on deprivation of his First Amendment rights to free speech and free association, by alleging that chief of police decided to withdraw sponsorship required for police academy attendance in retaliation for cadet's refusal to make untrue allegations against police officer and that community college officials agreed to cadet's removal from college based on their dislike of statements cadet made about past or present police, military, and intelligence positions. Perez v. City of Key West, Fla., M.D.Fla.1993, 823 F.Supp. 934. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91

Testimony given by former school police officer in coworker's sex discrimination case, and officer's filing of civil rights lawsuit which resulted in his reinstatement, did not involve matters of public concern and, therefore, alleged retaliation against officer for his speech did not involve independent violation of First Amendment that could have been actionable in § 1983 action separate from Title VII; speech which involved whether officer or coworker owned marijuana cigarette found in officer's van was made solely to further interests of officer and coworker. Arvinger v. Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, D.Md.1993, 811 F.Supp. 1121. Civil Rights 1502

County sheriff was not liable under § 1983 for dismissal of deputy sheriffs who had attended public county board meeting of supervisors to complain about proposed decrease in mileage allowance; subject of deputies' mileage allowance was not matter of public concern. Leonard v. Fields, W.D.Va.1992, 791 F.Supp. 143. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Statements made by police officer relating only to internal departmental employment matters were not statements of public concern protected by Constitution from employer's hostile actions and could not be basis for § 1983 action. Broderick v. Roache, D.Mass.1990, 751 F.Supp. 290. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Enforcement officer for domestic relations section of county court of common pleas was not engaged in any protected activity when he expressed to other officers his concerns that his duties required him to violate laws.

Former police chief was not entitled to damages and declaratory and injunctive relief under this section in his action alleging that he lost his job due to a letter he had written lodging charge against a magistrate which was protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 where previously close working relationship between police chief and mayor had been seriously damaged by controversy which followed letter, in that fact that deterioration in relationship with mayor occurred was itself sufficient to support police chief's dismissal, and even without the letter, police chief would not have been renewed under the circumstances. Wood v. Town of Frederica, D.C.Del.1982, 529 F.Supp. 403, affirmed 688 F.2d 828. Municipal Corporations 182; Civil Rights 1470

Police officer's expression of his concern over police department's response to September 11, 2001 terrorist attack during his conversation with police chief was outweighed by public interest in maintaining obedience, order, and discipline in the police department, especially in time of crisis, and thus could not serve as basis for claim that he was retaliated against for exercising his First Amendment free speech rights; officer's concern took the form of challenging chief's orders, persistently, flagrantly, and in front of others. Bradshaw v. Township of Middleton, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 763, 2005 WL 2077137, Unreported. Municipal Corporations 185(1)

City's failure to reappoint special law enforcement officer (SLEO), following his suspension due to firing warning shot and failing to have his weapon fully loaded, in violation of departmental policies, was not in retaliation for his engaging in any protected speech activity related to advocacy of rights of minorities in police department; SLEO was not treated differently from similarly situated individuals who were not commissioned as SLEOs due to alleged misconduct, and city would have taken action even in absence of allegedly protected activity. Nance v. City of Newark, New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 722, 2005 WL 348365, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

1856. ---- Policy disputes, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Deputy police chief established that police chief and mayor retaliated against him for his testimony in employment discrimination case brought against the mayor and chief; deputy chief gave testimony extremely critical of mayor and his policies, and shortly thereafter, the deputy chief, who had previously discussed possibility of soon retiring, was effectively replaced, which had never been done in past situations where officers were preparing for retirement; moreover, the mayor lashed out at the deputy chief in a radio talk-show for the deputy's "disloyalty." Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Constitutional Law 82(11); Municipal Corporations 182

1857. ---- Political contributions, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Where section of Louisiana Constitution and statute prohibited certain classified employees from engaging in political activity and where a police officer in city's classified service had allegedly sponsored postelection banquet honoring city councilman and had signed two checks, as president of policemen's association, payable to councilman and other political candidate, provisions were not unconstitutional as applied by city civil service commission against the officer. Bruno v. Garsaud, C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 1062. Elections 311

1858. ---- Political affiliation, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

A police corporal established that he was retaliated against for his exercise of free speech and association rights, where corporal was transferred to a less desirable position shortly after mayor had learned that the corporal had been seen at headquarters of mayor's opponent. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 180(2)

Although deputy sheriff who was not reappointed by newly elected sheriff had openly supported an opposing candidate, the nonreappointment decision did not violate this subchapter where there was no contradiction of sheriff's testimony that he twice asked the deputy to speak with him about remaining with the department and that when deputy never appeared he concluded that he was not interested in remaining with the department. Soileau v. Zerangue, W.D.La.1982, 553 F.Supp. 845. Civil Rights 1128

Evidence did not support jury's finding that police department had custom of retaliation against individuals for challenging incumbent in political party's primary, criticizing police department, speaking out on issues of public concern, or any combination thereof, so as to support imposition of municipal liability on city in § 1983 suit brought by former police officer claiming retaliation in violation of his First Amendment rights, despite testimony that police department engaged in surveillance of groups that engaged in public criticism of department, and evidence that city had previously been held liable for unlawful and retaliatory firing of employee. Davis v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 75 Fed.Appx. 827, 2003 WL 22173046, Unreported. Civil Rights 1421

1859. ---- Association, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Lack of any property interest or contractual right in county undersheriff's public employment did not defeat his claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 alleging retaliation against him for exercise of his right under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 of association and assistance in his wife's preparation of sex discrimination charge against sheriff's department. Owens v. Rush, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1981, 654 F.2d 1370. Civil Rights 1244

State trooper who alleged that he was terminated for associating with convicted felon and felon's family whom he had known since childhood did not state § 1983 First Amendment associational claim; trooper did not describe any details regarding his association with felon's family that closely resembled a family relationship, such as relative smallness and seclusion from others in critical aspects of the relationship, for purposes of the First Amendment's right of intimate association. White v. Florida Highway Patrol, Div. of Florida Dept. of Highway Safety & Motor Vehicles, M.D.Fla.1996, 928 F.Supp. 1153. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1860. ---- Self-incrimination privilege, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Police officer who was fired when he refused to testify at a criminal trial on basis of his right against self-incrimination but whose dismissal was reversed by the Court of Appeals established that he was retaliated against by the mayor for evoking his constitutional rights, where mayor personally assigned the officer to a series of dead end jobs following his reinstatement, and reasons mayor gave for the assignments were not credible. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Constitutional Law 82(11); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

1861. ---- Hiring, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Daughter of town selectman, whose application for employment with summer police force was denied, failed to establish that town's articulated legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for not hiring her, town's anti-nepotism policy, was pretext for gender discrimination in violation of equal protection, for purpose of § 1983 claim, where daughter's statistical analysis failed to provide evidence that policy disproportionately affected female applicants and even if daughter did not socialize with appointing authority, policy was directed at public perception of how employees were hired, rather than under whose direction and discretion they performed. Roche v. Town of Wareham, D.Mass.1998, 24 F.Supp.2d 146. Constitutional Law 224(3); Towns 28

Applicants for positions on police force failed to state claims under § 1983 for deprivation of interest in being considered for employment based on borough's substitution of police chief for civil service commissioner as grader of civil service examination, where even if police chief's evaluations were excluded from computation of applicants' scores, applicants still would not have been eligible for the positions they sought under applicable agency regulations. Schmidt v. Borough of Stroudsburg, M.D.Pa.1993, 841 F.Supp. 639, affirmed 17 F.3d 1431. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Where new methods of selection of police officers had been approved on the basis of their nondiscriminatory results by the court, where a new roster had been compiled, and where to permit persons on old list to be hired would make validating the new hiring system difficult, city would be directed to hire from the new roster rather than from the old roster. U.S. v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1977, 437 F.Supp. 256, affirmed 567 F.2d 730, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 2832, 436 U.S. 932, 56 L.Ed.2d 777. Municipal Corporations 184(2)

Alleged facts which indicated nothing more than a brief interview by appointing officials with respect to plaintiff's application for position of patrolman were insufficient to support cause of action, under this section proscribing the deprivation of rights, based upon denial of position to plaintiff. Evans v. Town of Watertown, D.C.Mass.1976, 417 F.Supp. 908. Civil Rights 1127

1862. ---- Demotion, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Former police chief received substantially similar salary and fringe benefits upon demotion to assistant chief, retained his employment, and thus failed to allege deprivation of due process liberty interest sufficient to overcome city officials' motion to dismiss civil rights claim on qualified immunity grounds, despite any stigma arising from any injury to former chief's reputation. Schultea v. Wood, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1112, rehearing en banc granted, on rehearing 47 F.3d 1427. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City-county personnel board's issuance of single sentence statement, affirming district fire chief's demotion, with no findings of fact, did not preclude district court from determining whether demotion was in retaliation for chief's allegations of departmental misconduct, and thus violated chief's First Amendment rights. Wallace v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1996, 956 F.Supp. 965. Municipal Corporations 196

Police officer had no protectible property interest in rank of major, for purposes of his § 1983 claim which was based on his demotion without a hearing; rank of major was upper level policy-making position which, under state law, was subject to demotion without hearing, and, although local government resolution could confer property interest and officer had been promoted pursuant to local government resolution, under state law, local government had lacked authority to enact resolution promoting police officer. Allen v. City of Carmel, Ind., S.D.Ind.1993, 830 F.Supp. 482. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Police lieutenant failed to establish that he was stripped of certain responsibilities in retaliation by police chief and mayor for findings he made in investigation of alleged mismanagement of petty cash by police officers in the narcotics and intelligence bureau, even though his claim may have had some merit; evidence was not sufficient to draw reliable inferences regarding whether report could be characterized as addressing matter of public concern, whether lieutenant actually suffered a tangible adverse treatment, or whether, if the lieutenant's duties were limited, limitation of the duties occurred because of the report. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Civil Rights 1405

1863. ---- Medical leave, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Fact that policeman who was generally required under police department rules to remain in his apartment while on sick leave was subject to disciplinary action, including possible fine or dismissal, for exercising his normal right to travel created a justiciable claim with respect to enforceability of such rules, within purview of this section. Gissi v. Codd, E.D.N.Y.1974, 391 F.Supp. 1333. Civil Rights 1126

1864. ---- Off-duty conduct, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Although police officer had right to engage in speech and activities with respect to firearms safety education, police department's prohibiting officer from engaging in secondary employment in this area, namely teaching classes on firearms safety to people applying for concealed handgun permits, did not impinge upon these rights, and as such, officer did not state § 1983 free association claim; officer was still free to advocate this cause or to participate in weapons safety classes on volunteer basis. Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, E.D.N.C.1997, 981 F.Supp. 406, affirmed in part, vacated in part 178 F.3d 231. Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 185(1)

For state governmental bodies to justify controlling the private off-duty conduct of policeman, such body must show that the employee's usefulness as a police officer would be substantially and materially impaired by the conduct in question. Smith v. Price, M.D.Ga.1977, 446 F.Supp. 828, reversed on other grounds 616 F.2d 1371. Municipal Corporations 185(1)

1865. ---- Privacy, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

City police officers did not have constitutionally protected right of privacy to engage in sexual relations with prostitutes while on duty, in that officers' job performance was threatened by obvious conflicts of interest and possibility of blackmail, officers' activities were carried on openly and were widely known, and officers' activities threatened to undermine police department's internal morale and community reputation. Fugate v. Phoenix Civil Service Bd., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1986, 791 F.2d 736. Constitutional Law 82(11)

Court's finding that, as matter of law, conduct of telephone company in installing and maintaining "call director" at police department which was used to intercept police officers' oral and telephone communications could not give rise to finding, for purposes of Federal and New Jersey Wiretap Acts and §§ 1983 and 1985, that telephone company violated police officers' privacy rights also mandated summary judgment in favor of telephone company in officers' state constitutional and common law invasion of privacy claims. PBA Local No. 38 v. Woodbridge Police Dept., D.N.J.1993, 832 F.Supp. 808. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Former police officer did not have legitimate expectation of privacy preventing disclosure of circumstances surrounding resignation, as needed to establish violation of right to privacy in support of § 1983 civil rights claim against city in connection with article published in police newsletter, where officer's suspension and remand for on-duty conduct were matters of public information, disclosed matters were not of highly personal and sensitive nature, newsletter article was not widely circulated, and officer resigned prior to public disclosure. Worden v. Provo City, D.Utah 1992, 806 F.Supp. 1512. Civil Rights 1040

Police officer and his wife, as subjects of confidential police investigative reports, had right to privacy in contents of report that could serve as basis for civil rights claim after reports were published by newspaper. Scheetz v. Morning Call, Inc., E.D.Pa.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1515, affirmed 946 F.2d 202, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1171, 502 U.S. 1095, 117 L.Ed.2d 417. Civil Rights 1040

That defendant police officers entered plaintiff police officer's home without consent in attempt to serve subpoena on plaintiff officer to appear before grand jury investigating police misconduct did not rise to the level of gross negligence or deliberate indifference on part of municipality so as to render municipality liable to plaintiff officer and his family under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, even if entry was a violation of plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights. Reed v. Schneider, E.D.N.Y.1985, 612 F.Supp. 216. Civil Rights 1376(6)

1866. ---- Promotion, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Police officers failed to establish First Amendment retaliation claim against police chief based on a failure to promote where they offered no facts supporting a retaliatory motive on the part of chief, only wide-ranging speculation; officers did not offer any evidence to contradict chief's testimony that he did not exercise independent judgment when presented with the promotion choices of the selection committees, but rather relied on the committees' recommendations. Deters v. Lafuente, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 368 F.3d 185. Civil Rights 1421

Female police officer did not have a protectable property or liberty interest in her promotional opportunities, and thus, she could not allege due process violation by means of § 1983 based on her claim that she had a protected property and liberty interest in her promotional opportunities generally and in her opportunity to compete for a sergeant's position in the police department. Kielczynski v. Village of LaGrange, Ill., N.D.Ill.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 877. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(2); Municipal Corporations 184.1

Police officer failed to show city policy or practice that controlled who would receive promotions or criteria that mayor would apply in selecting candidate for promotion from list of eligibles, and, thus, actions of city and city officials in not placing police officer on eligibility list for promotion and mayor's failure to promote him did not violate officer's due process rights under Fourteenth Amendment or Connecticut Constitution, where city personnel rules established mayor as final appointing authority, with final approval of all promotions, and gave him unfettered discretion to decide promotions. Violissi v. City of Middletown, D.Conn.1998, 990 F.Supp. 93. Constitutional Law 278.4(2); Municipal Corporations 184.1

Insertion of associates degree requirement for eligibility to take sergeant's exam into collective bargaining agreement was not motivated by race, designed to narrow those eligible to take exam to two black officers, and thus, city's motion for judgment as matter of law in white officer's discrimination action under §§ 1981, 1983, and Michigan's Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act was granted, where requirement impacted both black and white officers, there was no evidence police chief acted out of personal or institutional racial bias in requesting requirement, and statements officer relied upon were isolated statements that should not have been considered as direct proof of discrimination. Kresnak v. City of Muskegon Heights, W.D.Mich.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1327. Civil Rights 1234

Police officer who was passed over for promotion to captain failed to establish that he was denied the promotion on basis of his giving a favorable performance evaluation to an employee who mayor was encouraging retaliation against and because officer had expressed opposition to a mayor's emergency promotion plan; the officer did not communicate with either mayor or police chief about upcoming emergency promotions, there was no evidence as to whether the officer's name was ever mentioned to mayor in connection with the emergency promotions and it was equally plausible that mayor was referring to another officer who had given the employee higher marks in a then-recent evaluation. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 184.1

Where, under "rule of three," superintendent of police had authority to pass over person at head of eligible list and had additional authority, after passing over name three times, to request personnel director to omit that name from any subsequent certification to superintendent from that list, promotion was matter of discretion with superintendent of police and could not be mandated for plaintiffs. Hardouin v. City of New Orleans, Civil Service Comm., E.D.La.1980, 487 F.Supp. 1148. Municipal Corporations 184.1

Allegations did not support civil rights claims that city intentionally discriminated against minority undercover officers in failing to promote such officers to detective, given absence of allegation that failure to promote was based on race or national origin, or that white undercover officers were promoted sooner or in accordance with city code. Tamayo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 137198, Unreported, adhered to in part on reconsidertaion 2004 WL 725836. Civil Rights 1395(8)

City sued for gender and pregnancy discrimination, by police lieutenant denied promotion to captain, alleging violation of her constitutional rights, Title VII and California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), provided legitimate non-discriminatory reason for action, decision to restructure police department and freeze hiring, causing eligibility list to expire. Glenn-Davis v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21244061, Unreported, reversed 126 Fed.Appx. 375, 2005 WL 663436, on remand 2005 WL 2373726. Civil Rights

1867. ---- Punishment duty, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Fact that no state other than Massachusetts imposed punishment duty on policemen could not invalidate M.G.L.A. c. 31 § 43(g), on ground of denial of equal protection, since state was entitled to make its own choice if the standard of rational connection is met. Ahearn v. DiGrazia, D.C.Mass.1976, 412 F.Supp. 638, affirmed 97 S.Ct. 225, 429 U.S. 876, 50 L.Ed.2d 160. Constitutional Law 238.5; Municipal Corporations 176(3.1)

1868. ---- Salary, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Massachusetts law provided means by which patrolman could seek review of town retirement board's action in instructing town treasurer to withhold contribution, which board concluded patrolman owed as result of receiving back pay under settlement agreement with town, from patrolman's salary and, therefore, patrolman could not be said to have been deprived of property without due process for purposes of civil rights claim. Moody v. Town of Weymouth, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1986, 805 F.2d 30. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Former city police officers did not state § 1983 equal protection claim against city when city denied officers compensation for accrued, unused vacation time, but paid one disabled police officer for such time pursuant to arbitration ruling; city did not take that first step necessary for a constitutional violation, that is to classify, and city treated all permanently partially disabled police officers alike to the extent that it had a choice and the only variation in treatment occurred when arbitrator ordered it. Kirby v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1995, 905 F.Supp. 222. Constitutional Law 238.5; Municipal Corporations 186(1)

1869. ---- Suspension, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

City police officer's allegations that his suspension with pay resulted in him being stigmatized in connection with denial of rights and status recognized under state law, that his state-created rights and status were distinctly altered, that he was deprived of liberty interest by virtue of police chief's placement of defamatory material in his personnel file and that he had property interest in his position as police captain were insufficient to state § 1983 claim against city and city police chief for violation of substantive due process; none of alleged liberty or property interests rose to level of fundamental right. Arenal v. City of Punta Gorda, Fla., M.D.Fla.1996, 932 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Under Texas law, deputy sheriffs had no protected property interest in their employment and, thus, there was no deprivation of constitutional due process in connection with their suspensions. Senegal v. Jefferson County, E.D.Tex.1992, 785 F.Supp. 86, affirmed 1 F.3d 1238. Constitutional Law 277(2); Sheriffs And Constables 21

Patrolman's civil rights action against municipal employer and municipal chief of police, alleging that his suspension violated municipal police civil service rules and regulations and thereby resulted in deprivation and taking of his property interest in 30 days of paid employment without due process of law under color of state law, stated claim sufficient to withstand motion to dismiss, despite claim of municipality and chief of police that any deprivation of rights occurred because chief failed to apply prescribed procedure and that regulations provided adequate means of redress for chief's error, where patrolman might be able to prove custom or usage on part of municipality and chief that would remove chief's action from category of random and unauthorized acts. Young v. Municipality of Bethel Park, W.D.Pa.1986, 646 F.Supp. 539. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Even assuming truth of borough police officer's allegations that he was suspended from employment prior to his trial and conviction of indecent assault charges, that no public notice was given of his termination hearing and that minutes of the hearing were not recorded, where the officer did not request a hearing with respect to his suspension and where there was no allegation that statutorily specified procedures were not followed by the borough or that the officer was terminated for an impermissible reason, complaint failed to state a claim under this section for deprivation of constitutionally protected rights. Olson v. Borough of Homestead, W.D.Pa.1976, 417 F.Supp. 784, affirmed 568 F.2d 769. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1870. ---- Transfer, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Alleged conduct of state highway patrol officer's superiors in pressuring officer to change traffic report, verbally abusing officer, investigating officer's conduct and then transferring officer to another post without notice did not implicate any federally protected liberty or property interest, for purposes of officer's § 1983 claim that such conduct deprived him of liberty or property interest without due process of law, as officer made no showing or allegation that he had right not to be transferred or that conduct complained of amounted to constructive demotion or discharge. Stiesberg v. State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 80 F.3d 353. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

City corrections officers failed to demonstrate that their transfers in alleged retaliation for exercising their First Amendment rights in working on election campaign were pursuant to city custom or policy, so as to subject city, city's Department of Corrections (DOC) and DOC officials in their official capacities to § 1983 liability; officers did not demonstrate that there was anything more than single decision to transfer certain individuals in context of specific investigation, and some corrections officers who had worked on campaign had not been transferred. Soto v. Schembri, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 751. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Sheriff's office detective who claimed that her transfers were demotions stated a § 1983 cause of action against sheriff, undersheriff, and colonel in sheriff's department by alleging that their actions chilled the exercise of her First Amendment right to free speech, and that the defendants acted under color of state law. Morris v. Crow, M.D.Fla.1993, 825 F.Supp. 295. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Police officer who was commander of traffic division failed to establish that police chief's refusal to assign him command of detective division was retribution for the officer's First-Amendment activities and initiation of a lawsuit; decision was based on professional judgment that appointing captain with extensive experience in the detective division as its temporary commander would be less disruptive than transferring the officer and being compelled to find a new commander for the traffic division. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Constitutional Law 82(11); Municipal Corporations 184.1

1871. ---- Unions, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

City police chief's directive, stating that officers normally would not be entitled to union representation in connection with internal investigations, did not supplant earlier directives prohibiting officers who had made charges against other officers from discussing those charges with anyone, including union, and later directive thus did not render moot officers' § 1983 claim that earlier directives violated their free speech rights; later directive did not refer to earlier directives, and later directive addressed only one issue that was raised in earlier directives, i.e., union representation. Milwaukee Police Ass'n v. Jones, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1999, 192 F.3d 742. Federal Courts 13.10

Police department employee established that he was denied several opportunities to attend police training courses in retaliation for his extensive involvement in organization of law enforcement employees; employee's supervisor warned him that if he wished to succeed in police department, he should avoid the organization, supervisor peremptorily denied recommendations that the employee be allowed to attend training courses, and supervisor commented, at least on one occasion, that if officers attended organization meetings and directed criticism at police chief, they would not be permitted to attend any training courses. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 180(1)

1872. ---- Dismissal, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

In Fifth Circuit, deputy sheriff cannot be terminated for exercise of his First Amendment rights unless sheriff alleges a disruption of governmental functions. Brady v. Fort Bend County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 58 F.3d 173, rehearing en banc granted, dismissed. Sheriffs And Constables 21

Evidence did not show that mayor and town council eliminated police department using pretext of financial savings as means to avoid required showing of good cause to terminate employment of police officers who had due process property interests in their jobs. Farnsworth v. Town of Pinedale, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1992, 968 F.2d 1054. Civil Rights 1421

Dismissed police officer was not deprived of property interest without due process of law where his dismissal was due to civil service commission error and state provided means of correcting such administrative level errors, notwithstanding that officer waived his state law avenues of relief by his inaction. Cohen v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1984, 736 F.2d 81, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 434, 469 U.S. 1019, 83 L.Ed.2d 360. Civil Rights 1128

If deputy sheriff would have been fired once juvenile incident had been uncovered, absent the allegation that he lied by failing to disclose the incident on his employment application, then his dismissal could not be challenged under this section, even though he may have been deprived of a liberty interest without due process of law by the allegation that he lied. White v. Thomas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 660 F.2d 680, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1731, 455 U.S. 1027, 72 L.Ed.2d 148. Civil Rights 1128

Terminated police chief stated cause of action in complaint for conspiracy under § 1983; facts alleged supported claim that municipality and individuals conspired to violate his First Amendment rights. Shoemaker v. City of Lock Haven, M.D.Pa.1995, 906 F.Supp. 230. Conspiracy 18

Deputy sheriff's liberty interest was not violated by his termination when he was formally bound over for trial on criminal charges, although he contended his discharge stigmatized him in eyes of law enforcement agencies making employment difficult to secure; sheriff made no false statements concerning deputy in connection with his termination, and deputy was effectively allowed a due process opportunity to clear his name publicly in his jury trial on criminal charges. Seeley v. Board of County Com'rs for La Plata County, Colo., D.Colo.1987, 654 F.Supp. 1309. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Conduct of city officers, as pursued in good faith, in dismissing police officer from his employment because of his practice of plural marriage did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known at the time of the dismissal; thus, city officers could not be held liable for termination. Potter v. Murray City, D.C.Utah 1984, 585 F.Supp. 1126, affirmed as modified on other grounds 760 F.2d 1065, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 145, 474 U.S. 849, 88 L.Ed.2d 120. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officer seeking preliminary injunction to enjoin hearing before police pension fund's medical board, was likely to succeed on merits of claim that city police department's application to medical board to involuntarily retire him due to psychological unfitness was in retaliation for exercising his right to petition and violated reinstatement orders by state court, which found substantial evidence of retaliation against him. Buric v. Kelly, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22990082, Unreported. Injunction 138.46

1873. ---- Reinstatement, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Although state Retirement Board had returned police officer to active service upon concluding that his disability had ceased, officer was given opportunity to demonstrate his fitness for active duty, and thus he was not deprived of any property interest created by Illinois Pension Code when police department nonetheless refused to reinstate him, where department regulation required that all officers under similar circumstances submit to physical examination, and department's examining physicians found that officer suffered from disabling liver condition. Buttitta v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1198, rehearing denied. Municipal Corporations 187(11)

A police corporal failed to establish his transfer and rejection of his request to be rehired by police department were taken in retaliation for the corporal's active participation in organization of law enforcement employees; transfer decision was engineered by records and communications commander, who did not indicate any hostility towards organization, and decision not to hire corporal was arrived at by vote of all members in police department. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Municipal Corporations 180(1)

Employment discrimination claimant failed to show that metropolitan police department's decision not to reinstate him to his job was a purposely discriminatory act and, thus, he could not recover under this section. Monroe v. St. Louis Metropolitan Police Dept., E.D.Mo.1981, 524 F.Supp. 1009. Civil Rights 1421

1874. ---- Pension, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Merely erroneous application of state statute to particular case does not present question of federal constitutional dignity, and police officer was not constitutionally entitled to have from pension board a decision that, in abstract, was "correct" or "right." Hirrill v. Merriweather, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1980, 629 F.2d 490. Civil Rights 1136

1875. ---- Constructive discharge, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

No constructive discharge, needed to support § 1983 civil rights claims by female police officers alleging race and sex discrimination, occurred when officer subjectively felt that police department was not taking complaints seriously; there was no evidence presented that investigation of complaint was anything other than legitimate. Redpath v. City of Overland Park, D.Kan.1994, 857 F.Supp. 1448. Civil Rights 1123

Even if a probationary police officer, who chose to resign in the face of threats by police chief that he would be fired and the reason for his firing made public, was constructively discharged, he had no valid claim against the city and the police chief for deprivation of a liberty interest since he was not faced with continuing employment on unlawful terms but with resigning to avoid a lawful discharge. Hoffman v. McNamara, D.Conn.1986, 630 F.Supp. 1257. Civil Rights 1123; Civil Rights 1128

Acting or temporary chief of police did not enjoy a "property interest" under Illinois law in his position sufficient to raise a federal constitutional question under this section in connection with his alleged constructive discharge. Dakuras v. Wagrowski, N.D.Ill.1982, 559 F.Supp. 636. Civil Rights 1123

1876. ---- Malicious prosecution, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

County corrections officers who were disciplined for improper use of force against an inmate had no cause of action under § 1983 for malicious prosecution, nor for wrongful use of proceedings or abuse of process under Pennsylvania law, even though at least two defendants allegedly contacted the county district attorney's office and may have tried to institute a criminal investigation against the officers and internal disciplinary hearings were conducted, where no charges were ever filed against the officers and no process or proceedings, either civil or criminal, were ever initiated as a result. Keim v. County of Bucks, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 628. Civil Rights 1126; Malicious Prosecution 5.1; Malicious Prosecution 10; Process 171 officials for initiating grand jury investigation of his involvement in allegedly unlawful abandoned car scheme, where officer had not identified any facts establishing any process, such as arrest or filing of criminal charges, that deprived him of a constitutionally protected liberty interest without due process of law. Puricelli v. Borough of Morrisville, E.D.Pa.1993, 820 F.Supp. 908, motion to vacate denied 1993 WL 303285, affirmed 26 F.3d 123, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 321, 513 U.S. 930, 130 L.Ed.2d 282. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1877. ---- Reputation injury, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Municipal police chief's comment to local newspapers that police officers were discharged because their services did not meet expectations of police department was not a comment of such damaging effect as to impair the officers' standing in the community so as to implicate their liberty interests and give rise to cause of action under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Bunting v. City of Columbia, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1981, 639 F.2d 1090. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Municipal officials named as defendants in a civil rights action did not injure any constitutionally protected interests in a police officer's reputation when they disclosed information about his criminal record and made statements about his involvement in activities under investigation by the county grand jury; officer had not discussed whether he suffered any tangible injury, and reputation alone did not support a finding that there was a constitutionally cognizable claim for harm to reputation. Puricelli v. Borough of Morrisville, E.D.Pa.1993, 820 F.Supp. 908, motion to vacate denied 1993 WL 303285, affirmed 26 F.3d 123, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 321, 513 U.S. 930, 130 L.Ed.2d 282. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Alleged injury caused by deputy sheriff and employees of his office to deputy sheriff's honesty, reputation, public status, and employment status did not constitute a deprivation sufficient to state § 1983 claim in the absence of dismissal from the job. Rios v. Navarro, S.D.Fla.1991, 766 F.Supp. 1158. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former police chief's allegations that city officials' publicized allegedly stigmatizing facts four months after police chief's discharge did not state claim under this section for deprivation of liberty interest without due process. Duggan v. Town of Ocean City, D.C.Md.1981, 516 F.Supp. 1081. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Assuming that police captain was stigmatized by his suspension, his ultimate retention of employment (the suspension being rescinded and his back pay awarded) negated his claim that he was deprived of a "liberty" interest in his reputation without due process. Sparks v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1980, 496 F.Supp. 770. Civil Rights 1088(1)

This section proscribing the deprivation of rights could not provide a remedy for actions in the nature of defamation brought by plaintiff who had been denied position of patrolman by reason of actions of defendants. Evans v. Town of Watertown, D.C.Mass.1976, 417 F.Supp. 908. Civil Rights 1038

1878. ---- Policy-making positions, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Deputy sheriff who was placed on unpaid leave after announcing his intention to run against sheriff in upcoming election did not establish violation of his First Amendment rights; sheriff could restrict free speech rights of deputy sheriff, who was policy-making employee, by placing him on unpaid leave based on disruptive potential of deputy's candidacy. Wilbur v. Mahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 3 F.3d 214. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Sheriffs And Constables 21

1879. ---- Persons liable, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

There was a causal link between violation of provisional police officer's First Amendment right to petition the government for redress and the actions of the final policymaker at the New York State Division of Criminal Justice

Service (DCJS) denying her request for an extension of time in which to complete basic course at police academy, as required to hold DCJS liable under § 1983; deputy commissioner of DCJS did not ensure that officer's filing of discrimination claim did not prevent her from completing basic course at police academy and from receiving a certificate of completion from the DCJS within the appropriate time frame. Lathrop v. Onondaga County, N.D.N.Y.2002, 220 F.Supp.2d 129. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Former deputy sheriff did not have § 1983 due process claim against sheriff or county for deprivation of deputy sheriff's employment with city police department, despite allegation that actions of sheriff and county caused deputy sheriff to lose city police job in indirect fashion; even if deputy sheriff had property interest in city police department employment, sheriff and county were not deputy sheriff's employers for that position and, thus, were not in position to terminate deputy sheriff, and deputy sheriff had adequate state remedy for defendants' actions. Heideman v. Wirsing, W.D.Wis.1992, 840 F.Supp. 1285, affirmed 7 F.3d 659. Civil Rights 1128; Civil Rights 1320

Where police officer brought civil rights action arising out of his termination and decision of city not to grant him a hearing, where complaint averred merely that city council was responsible for all policy matters and controlled "appropriation of funds, levies, taxes and contracts debts," but where neither pleadings nor affidavits suggested that any members of council personally participated in matter of police officer's termination, city council members could not be held liable under this section for failing to take action with respect to officer's termination and decision not to grant officer a hearing. Himmelbrand v. Harrison, W.D.Va.1980, 484 F.Supp. 803. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1880. ---- Procedural requirements, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Police officer who declined city's offer of reinstatement was not entitled to name-clearing hearing in connection with allegedly defamatory statements made about him during administrative appeal from discharge, for purposes of § 1983 claim based on denial of request for name-clearing hearing; officer was given meaningful opportunity to be heard, and he prevailed. Gillum v. City of Kerrville, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 3 F.3d 117, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 881, 510 U.S. 1072, 127 L.Ed.2d 76. Civil Rights 1128

State highway patrolman's supervisor and latter's superior were immune from money damages for failing to afford highway patrolman a pretransfer and presuppression hearing, in that at time of 1978 transfer/suspension it was not clearly established that the right to be transferred or suspended only for cause would be assimilated to other rights falling within the Fourteenth Amendment's meaning of property. Howe v. Baker, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1986, 796 F.2d 1355. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Placement of reprimand letter in acting police chief's file without affording acting police chief hearing and other procedural safeguards did not constitute violation of his civil rights under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, where acting police chief did not lose his job as sergeant and therefore was not excluded from his profession, village did not owe it to plaintiff to make him police chief, and plaintiff did not cite any authority for proposition that he was entitled to hearing. Linhart v. Glatfelter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 771 F.2d 1004. Civil Rights 1126

Actions of town administrator and town police department toward police officer in terminating his employment, including allegedly failing to perform thorough, independent investigation into officer's alleged misconduct, was not "conscience-shocking" conduct as required for officer to state a substantive due process claim in his action under §§ 1983. Dodd v. Sheppard, D.R.I.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 326. Towns 28

Terminated police officer stated §§ 1983 claims against Utah municipality for violation of procedural due process based on her alleged failure to be given pretermination hearing before her protected property interest in continued employment was taken away, and to receive fair and impartial posttermination hearing before impartial appeal board. Sivulich-Boddy v. Clearfield City, D.Utah 2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1174. Constitutional Law 278.4(5);

Municipal Corporations 185(4)

Terminated police officer's allegation that city officials failed to conduct reasonable investigation into sodomy charges against officer before terminating his employment failed to state claim under § 1983; allegation amounted to claim for relief based upon negligence of defendants, and liability under § 1983 will not be found to exist where government official is merely negligent in causing injury. Williams v. City of Albany, M.D.Ga.1990, 738 F.Supp. 499, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 936 F.2d 1256, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1128; Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former police officer was denied procedural due process when city failed to afford him opportunity to be heard before or after he was terminated, although city officials contended that officer had opportunity to present his side of story during two internal affairs investigations conducted before termination; officer did not have opportunity at that time to respond to official departmental charges of conduct unbecoming an officer and insubordination, and civil service commission discussed matter in officer's absence after receiving officer's request for continuance. Barkley v. City of Jackson, Tenn., W.D.Tenn.1988, 705 F.Supp. 390. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 185(4)

Due process rights of tenured police officer who was suspended for reviewing report of subordinate which contained statements offensive to minorities were satisfied; officer was served with notice of predisciplinary hearing, at which he was entitled to explain and refute charges against him, and, after grievance committee ruled in favor of officer when he appealed suspension, matter was heard before county personnel board at hearing at which officer was represented by counsel. Boone v. Mingus, S.D.Ala.1988, 697 F.Supp. 1577, affirmed 880 F.2d 419. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Municipal Corporations 185(6); Municipal Corporations 185(8)

Allegations of discharged policeman, bringing civil rights action against officials of borough which discharged him following his criminal conviction, that the proceedings were tainted by failure of borough council to advertise hearing to general public or by failure to record hearing in minute book as an official council meeting were not of such magnitude as to state a claim in federal court. Olson v. Murphy, W.D.Pa.1977, 428 F.Supp. 1057, affirmed 568 F.2d 769. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1881. ---- Miscellaneous claims, police officers, deprivation of employment rights

Evidence that included police chief's involvement in highly visible controversy over whether he had tampered with arrest records in attempt to protect mayor's daughter presented sufficient proof of retaliatory motive to support jury's finding that police chief's discipline of officer was in retaliation for that officer's show of support for fellow officer who made arrest, rather than for that officer's own unpreparedness for trial in another case. Morro v. City of Birmingham, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 117 F.3d 508, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 127 F.3d 42, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1299, 523 U.S. 1020, 140 L.Ed.2d 465. Civil Rights 1421

City did not violate police officer's First Amendment rights by ordering him to stop his own investigation of police chief and to cooperate with that being conducted by police department; although police chief's alleged violations of the law were matter of public concern, police officer's focus on that issue only extended to its impact on his wish to continue his own investigation. Gillum v. City of Kerrville, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 3 F.3d 117, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 881, 510 U.S. 1072, 127 L.Ed.2d 76. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 180(1)

Remarks made by capitol policeman's supervisor regarding lack of physical and professional qualifications of members of capitol police force did not give rise to cause of action under this section, since the comments did not cause the policeman's dismissal, nor did they result in loss of recognized property interest. Bradford v. Bronner, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1982, 665 F.2d 680. Civil Rights 1038 deprivation of a property interest in violation of his right to procedural due process, failed to overcome presumption that his resignation from employment was voluntary, even though officer was not permitted to select the effective date of his resignation; officer was given a choice during meeting with superiors of whether to resign or be terminated, officer had reasonable time in which to make decision and was under no coercive time pressure, officer acknowledged his choice in his letter attempting to revoke his resignation, and employer had good cause to reasonably believe grounds for officer's termination existed. Dodd v. Sheppard, D.R.I.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 326. Towns 28

New York State Division of Criminal Justice Service (DCJS) was deliberately indifferent to female police officer's First Amendment right to petition government, as required to hold DCJS liable under § 1983 when deputy commissioner did not ensure that officer's filing of discrimination claim did not prevent her from completing basic course at police academy and from receiving a certificate of completion from the DCJS within the appropriate time frame; deputy commissioner's decision not to respond police chief's request for an extension of time on officer's behalf was patently unreasonable given the information he had regarding the police academy's retaliation against her. Lathrop v. Onondaga County, N.D.N.Y.2002, 220 F.Supp.2d 129. Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 184(2)

County sheriff's department's three-day unpaid suspension of African-American deputy sheriff and three-month transfer of her to another courthouse after she had complained of allegedly discriminatory assignment practices within department, was adverse employment action likely to chill exercise of constitutionally protected speech, as required for deputy's § 1983 claim; suspension cost deputy three days of lost wages, and transfer caused her inconvenience in getting to and from work. Carlisle v. Lopresti, N.D.Ill.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 973. Civil Rights 1249(3)

Police officials' initiation of criminal investigation by district attorney into alleged credit card fraud by police officer was not "adverse employment action," as required to support officer's § 1983 action against officials alleging First Amendment retaliation for officer's allegations of evidence tampering and other improprieties against officials, where no action was taken against officer as result of investigation. Boylan v. Arruda, S.D.N.Y.1999, 42 F.Supp.2d 352. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 180(1)

Former police officer's evidence of unfavorable work assignment did not rise to level of being sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter conditions of his employment and create abusive working environment; officer's beat was unpopular and stressful assignment, but assignment was there for someone to do, and city did not create abusive work environment. Williams v. Morris, W.D.Va.1996, 956 F.Supp. 679. Civil Rights 1147

Police officer could bring § 1983 claim based on Title VII and ADEA violations against current and former chiefs of police in their official capacities; policy at issue requiring that officers pass physical fitness test was one adopted and implemented by city and its police department. Morrow v. City of Jacksonville, Ark., E.D.Ark.1996, 941 F.Supp. 816. Civil Rights 1359

City and mayors were not entitled to dismissal of former police chief's § 1983 claim for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted on the ground that Title VII contained sole remedy, where city and mayors could not demonstrate that circumstances surrounding Title VII claim could not also constitute violations of the Constitution for which § 1983 provided an additional remedy. Lightner v. City of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 884 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1502

Fact that wife and daughter of president of county police officers' union were present at confrontation between president and officials of county sheriff's department did not amount to abridgement of wife's and daughter's liberty interests in personal security that would have been actionable under § 1983. Flood v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1990, 748 F.Supp. 595. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer did not suffer injury of constitutional dimension resulting from administrative review of his use of his service weapon in shooting incident, where officer had not been deprived of any employment-related benefits and was not dismissed, demoted or suspended. Hairston v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1986, 638 F.Supp. 198. Civil Rights 1126

1882. Miscellaneous adverse actions, deprivation of employment rights

Lieutenant's alleged action of adding to evaluation that corrections officer "would benefit from being able to perform the tasks w/ less complaints from inmates," was not adverse employment action upon which retaliation claim under sections 1981 and 1983 could be based, where lieutenant never downgraded evaluation, and officer's termination did not occur until years later. Henderson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 129. Prisons 7

Allegedly "forced" change in job description of Medical Officer was not "adverse employment action" for purposes of §§ 1983 claim, in light of District of Columbia health clinic physician's acknowledged awareness of changed job description prior to assumption of position. Turner v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 157. Civil Rights 1126

1911. Deprivation of teachers' rights generally

Determinations about such matters as teaching ability, research scholarship and professional statute are subjective and, unless they can be shown to have been used as mechanism to obscure discrimination, must be left for evaluation by professionals. Gurmankin v. Costanzo, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 626 F.2d 1115, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1375, 450 U.S. 923, 67 L.Ed.2d 352. Civil Rights 1130

Courts are loathe to intrude on the internal affairs of local school authorities in such matters as teacher competency. Blunt v. Marion County School Bd., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1975, 515 F.2d 951. Schools 147.44

Taken collectively, school district's alleged delaying tactics during dispute with high school teacher did not rise to level of adverse action cognizable in teacher's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation action; district waited to receive finalized and official version of settlement agreement regarding teacher's request for sabbatical before formally approving sabbatical and paying sabbatical back pay, delayed 19 days in paying back pay after teacher prevailed in his arbitration against district regarding length of disciplinary suspension, and waited 10 months after that payment to update pay information in public employees' retirement plan, and district provided uncontroverted innocent explanations for all delays. Schneck v. Saucon Valley School Dist., E.D.Pa.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 558. Constitutional Law 82(12); Schools 147.12

One acting under color of state law may not substantially impair the interest of a school teacher in his ability to pursue his teaching career by action having no basis in fact. Morris v. Board of Ed. of Laurel School Dist., D.C.Del.1975, 401 F.Supp. 188.

1912. Legislative powers, deprivation of teachers' rights

State boards of education created to review subordinate decisions in their own ranks, such as the grant or denial of a teaching certificate, are exercising a strictly legislative function with which a federal court cannot interfere. Baron v. O'Sullivan, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1958, 258 F.2d 336. Constitutional Law 74

1913. Property interest, deprivation of teachers' rights

Tenured Connecticut public school teacher, who was required to take sick leave when he refused to comply with school board's conditions for his return to work following administrative leave, was not deprived of meaningful property right protected by due process until his sick pay ran out, and at that time grievance procedure under collective bargaining agreement (CBA) was adequate postdeprivation remedy for his loss of sick pay. O'Connor v. Pierson, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 426 F.3d 187. Schools 147.31

Absent unusual circumstances, teacher in position without tenure or formal contract does not have legitimate entitlement to continued employment, as required for procedural due process claim. Batra v. Board of Regents of University of Nebraska, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 79 F.3d 717. Constitutional Law 277(2); Schools 147.6

Teacher failed to state § 1983 claim against school superintendent, director of visual arts department, employee of complaints division and Secretary of Department of Education regarding teacher's assignment to courses, her refusal to accept assignment, and her suspension; teacher did not have property interest in teaching particular course and any departures from procedures for disciplinary hearing did not deprive teacher of any protected property interest. Reyes-Pagan v. Benitez, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 910 F.Supp. 38. Civil Rights 1131; Civil Rights 1133

In suit by discharged teacher for deprivation of property without due process of law, whether requisite property interest, which may arise from de facto or from quasi tenure if circumstances are such to support implied reasonable expectation of continuing employment as well as from de jure tenure, arose in connection with teacher's employment is question of state law. Summers v. Civis, W.D.Okla.1976, 420 F.Supp. 993. Federal Courts 421

1914. Racial discrimination, deprivation of teachers' rights

A board of education is obligated to use objective nondiscriminatory standards in employment, assignment and dismissal of teachers; a board may also consider established and previously announced nondiscriminatory subjective factors in making of such decisions; subjective standards carry little weight in meeting the board's burden to prove clearly and convincingly that it is not discriminating where there has been a history of racial segregation. Moore v. Board of Ed. of Chidester School Dist. No. 59, Chidester, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1971, 448 F.2d 709. Schools 133; Schools 147.2(2)

Black female college instructor failed to establish § 1981 claim that her rights to contractual equality were violated, or § 1983 claim that her equal protection rights were violated by community college, when she asserted that she did not receive annual performance evaluation while white instructors were given evaluations, that unlike white instructors her probationary period was extended, that conflicts with students were investigated and evaluated while student claims against white instructors were not, and that she suffered discriminatory discharge, was demoted to part time status and denied bookstore management position; there was either lack of sufficient supporting details or nondiscriminatory reason for each action. Jenkins v. Trustees of Sandhills Community College, M.D.N.C.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 432, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 819, 2003 WL 22715091, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1459, 540 U.S. 1199, 158 L.Ed.2d 115. Civil Rights 1131; Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Constitutional Law 220(7)

1915. Religious discrimination, deprivation of teachers' rights

To prove prima facie case of employment discrimination, tenured university professor who was Jewish was entitled to prove that similarly situated nonminority faculty members received more favorable treatment, rather than being required to prove that defendants replaced him with comparably qualified person; at heart of this inquiry is whether cited nonminority employees have comparable work records and engaged in misconduct of comparable seriousness. Wexley v. Michigan State University, W.D.Mich.1993, 821 F.Supp. 479, affirmed 25 F.3d 1052. Civil Rights 1421

1916. Sex discrimination, deprivation of teachers' rights

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Action wherein female teacher challenged constitutionality of regulation of school board regarding employment status of pregnant, female employees was properly brought under this section governing deprivation of civil rights; and subject-matter jurisdiction of court was properly invoked under this section as well as § 2201 of Title 28. Heath v. Westerville Bd. of Ed., S.D.Ohio 1972, 345 F.Supp. 501, 32 Ohio Misc. 6, 61 O.O.2d 25. Civil Rights 1511; Declaratory Judgment 274.1; Federal Courts 221

1917. Speech freedom, deprivation of teachers' rights

Nontenured lecturer's First Amendment rights to free speech and academic freedom were not implicated or violated when tenured faculty member at univesity required her to communicate more clearly to her students what was required to complete the coursework in a class she taught; lecturer was not required to communicate the ideas of evaluations of others as if they were her own, lecturer was not told what grades to assign students, lecturer was not told what requirements for class should be, but instead, lecturer was simply required to spell out in detail the requirements she had devised. Johnson-Kurek v. Abu-Absi, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 423 F.3d 590, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1342, 164 L.Ed.2d 56. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Elementary schoolteacher who claimed she was disciplined and reprimanded in retaliation for her protected speech, including her expressed concerns at meeting of Local School Committee about lack of textbooks and other materials at school, failed to establish that her speech was substantial or motivating factor for disciplinary actions taken by principal, even though she had never been disciplined prior to school year in which she both publicly criticized principal and was subjected to multiple acts of discipline; each suspension and reprimand followed well-documented cases of misconduct or insubordination, and adverse action generally came either before or long after allegedly protected speech. Smith v. Dunn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 368 F.3d 705. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Schools 147.12

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether school district's letters to seventh grade history teacher, threatening "further disciplinary action," and threatening termination in part for lack of adherence to district curriculum, were intended to chill his exercise of First Amendment rights by preventing him from teaching non-Christian history, and established "pall of orthodoxy" over his classroom, precluding summary judgment as to whether teacher met adverse action requirement for §§ 1983 action alleging Free Speech and Establishment Clause violations. Cole v. Maine School Administrative Dist. No. 1, D.Me.2004, 350 F.Supp.2d 143. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Teacher's allegations that he was member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), that he was outspoken member of community who criticized school district's policies and conduct, and that school system brought disciplinary proceeding seeking his termination in retaliation for this criticism were sufficient to state § 1983 claim against school district, board of education and various school officials for violation of teacher's free speech rights. Taylor v. Brentwood Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.1995, 908 F.Supp. 1165. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former assistant professor stated First Amendment claim under § 1983 against dean and faculty members of state university school of architecture in their individual capacities; professor alleged that he engaged in protected speech by advocating minority recruitment and minority-related scholarship and engaging in race-conscious community work, and that dean and faculty members denied him tenure on basis of that speech. Collin v. Rector and Bd. of Visitors of University of Virginia, W.D.Va.1995, 873 F.Supp. 1008. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Denial of tenured teacher's request to use students to distribute copies of a letter to parents and guardians with respect to reduction of time available for parent-teacher conferences was not, given nonpublic nature of communications facility and availability of alternative means of disposition, violative of teacher's rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Reid v. Barrett, D.C.N.J.1979, 467 F.Supp. 124, affirmed 615 F.2d 1354. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

1918. Association freedom, deprivation of teachers' rights

This section provides remedy against state interference with constitutionally protected rights of teachers to free association. Orr v. Thorpe, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1970, 427 F.2d 1129. Civil Rights 1130

Husband and wife showed at most a possibility of success on their § 1983 claim that schools' antinepotism policy violated their First Amendment rights to freedom of association, and thus were not entitled to preliminary injunction to prevent schools from transferring wife after their marriage; schools presented evidence that transfer was in best interest of schools, and husband and wife thus did not show that transfer decision was unconstitutional. Montgomery v. Carr, S.D.Ohio 1993, 848 F.Supp. 770. Civil Rights 1457(6)

1919. Voting rights, deprivation of teachers' rights

Refusal of school board to grant permission to teacher's aide to serve as election clerk at school board election did not abridge her constitutional right to vote. Evans v. Page, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1975, 516 F.2d 18. Elections 1

1920. Hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights--Generally

School board's discretion in the hiring and termination of its employees may not be exercised in an arbitrary and capricious manner, nor may a board exercise its discretion in a discriminatory manner. Bradford v. School Dist. No. 20, Charleston, S. C., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1966, 364 F.2d 185. Schools 63(1)

1921. ---- Property interest, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Successful applicant for principalship had protectible property interest in his employment, notwithstanding fact that he had not yet begun to serve as principal when his appointment was cancelled, by reason of his oral acceptance of school board's offer, where his unsigned employment contract provided for termination only in cases of good and just cause. Kirschling v. Lake Forest School Dist., D.Del.1988, 687 F.Supp. 927. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1922. ---- Racial discrimination, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Absent proof of pattern of past discrimination, informal "word-of-mouth" method used by president of county community college to select new associate dean would not be violative of black faculty member's civil rights. Gresham v. Chambers, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 501 F.2d 687. Civil Rights 1132

Fact that black teacher was employed under "Title I" contract for federally funded program, rather than under normal contract, together with fact that superintendent failed to consider her for certain position of that district and failed to reimburse her for expenditures made in attending summer school did not establish discrimination actionable under this section. Thomas v. Board of Ed. of Plum Bayou-Tucker School Dist. No. 1, Wright, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1972, 457 F.2d 1268. Civil Rights 1544

Public school teachers have right to demand and to be shown that race is not the criterion by which employment is granted or denied. Walton v. Nashville, Ark. Special School Dist. No. 1, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1968, 401 F.2d 137. Schools 133.1(1)

Negro school teachers, as a class, were entitled to an order requiring school board, which decreased number of positions open to Negro teachers from 24 to 8, to set up definite objective standards for employment and retention of teachers and to apply them to all teachers alike in a manner compatible with requirements of due process and equal protection. Chambers v. Hendersonville City Bd. of Ed., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1966, 364 F.2d 189. Constitutional Law 219.1; Constitutional Law 278.5(8)

1923. ---- Desegregation, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Regardless of opposition and impediments, board of education was under continuing obligation to remedy faculty situation with respect to racial imbalance, and until it did so, system could not be regarded under existing law as unitary, and board was not entitled to exemption for certain schools from judicial desegregation requirements on ground that efforts to place Negro faculty in all-white facilities had met with opposition. Mays v. Board of Public Instruction of Sarasota County, Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1970, 428 F.2d 809. Schools 147.2(2)

School board, after closing of all-Negro junior high school and dismissing Negro teachers therefrom, had engaged in an unconstitutional selection process in hiring replacements for the 14 vacancies in system which were required to be filled in the summer following the closing. Smith v. Board of Ed. of Morrilton School Dist. No. 32, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1966, 365 F.2d 770. Civil Rights 1421; Civil Rights 1544; Injunction 128(9)

1924. ---- Affirmative action, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Affirmative action plan concerning hiring by community college of faculty members was permissible under this section. Cohen v. Community College of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1980, 484 F.Supp. 411.

1925. ---- Sex discrimination, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

In sex discrimination action in which minority female with doctorate degree sought to enjoin state university school of medicine from denying her employment as instructor on basic sciences faculty, evidence established that chairman of biochemistry department at the university entered into contract with the minority female during meeting for her to be hired as an instructor in the department of biochemistry in the school of medicine, and not as research assistant as the chairman contended. Hunter v. Ward, E.D.Ark.1979, 476 F.Supp. 913. Civil Rights 1549

1926. ---- Unwed mothers, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

School district's practice of refusing employment to unwed mothers was not justified on ground that it was necessary in order to create properly moral scholastic environment, because unwed parents are improper communal models after whom students might pattern their lives, or because presence of unwed parents in scholastic environment would materially contribute to school girl pregnancies. Andrews v. Drew Municipal Separate School Dist., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 507 F.2d 611, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 33, 423 U.S. 820, 46 L.Ed.2d 37, certiorari dismissed 96 S.Ct. 1752, 425 U.S. 559, 48 L.Ed.2d 169. Schools 55

1927. ---- Disabilities discrimination, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

In action by blind person against school district, alleging that hiring practices of school district discriminated against visually handicapped teachers in violation of equal protection and due process, evidence established that school district's oral interview of blind person was not graded fairly because of interviewer's lack of information concerning capabilities of blind teachers and kinds of adjustments that blind teacher can make to overcome apparent problems. Gurmankin v. Costanzo, E.D.Pa.1976, 411 F.Supp. 982, amended, affirmed 556 F.2d 184, on remand. Civil Rights 1544

1928. ---- Speech and writings, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Assuming, arguendo, black principal applicant prevailed on first three steps of test for determining if board of education retaliated against him on basis of protected speech, board of education established that it would hire same person for principal, rather than applicant, even in absence applicant's speech and, therefore, evidence was insufficient to support jury verdict on applicant's behalf with regard to § 1983 free speech claim; person hired had nine years of experience as principal, held AA School Administration certification, was named outstanding secondary school principal in state and elected president of state secondary principals' association, whereas applicant had no principal experience and was only candidate for certification. Harris v. Shelby County Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1078. Civil Rights 1421

Fact that various university regents considered factors impermissible under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 in determining not to hire faculty applicant did not necessarily mean that applicant's civil rights had been violated and that he was entitled to appointment; rather to be entitled to appointment because of those impermissible considerations, applicant was required to establish that one or more of them was paramount reason for regents' refusal to hire. Franklin v. Atkins, D.C.Colo.1976, 409 F.Supp. 439, affirmed 562 F.2d 1188, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1645, 435 U.S. 994, 56 L.Ed.2d 83. Civil Rights 1132; Civil Rights 1405; Colleges And Universities 8(2)

1929. ---- Legitimate reasons, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Although some future case might demonstrate improper application of the standard, standard which was adopted by school board as one of the objective criteria for employment, promotion, and transfers of teachers of staff and which called for examination of the "Potential for Working Harmoniously with Parents, Peers, Pupils, School Administrators, Principals, Supervisors, and Trustees as Indicated by Previous Employers and Others" was not facially deficient, as the characteristic toward which it was directed was capable of objective assessment based on recorded reports concerning specific overt acts. Lee v. Chambers County Bd. of Ed., C.A.5 (Ala.) 1976, 533 F.2d 132. Schools 133; Schools 147.2(1)

1930. ---- Miscellaneous claims, hiring, deprivation of teachers' rights

Where two school district provisional employees failed civil service examination, passage of which was required to continue in their positions, and district terminated both, but then created new part-time position outside scope of civil service rules for one of the two, district thereby took adverse employment action against other, non-rehired employee, as required to support that employee's § 1983 action against district alleging retaliation for protected speech. Wheeler v. Natale, S.D.N.Y.2001, 137 F.Supp.2d 301. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Schools 63(1)

Where superintendent of schools originally decided to offer full-time teaching position to one nontenured teacher, his reversion to his original decision to hire other teacher was not violation of any right enjoyed by second teacher, when he conferred with second teacher and determined that she was not receptive to idea of job sharing. Renfroe v. Kirkpatrick, N.D.Ala.1982, 549 F.Supp. 1368, affirmed 722 F.2d 714, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 98, 469 U.S. 823, 83 L.Ed.2d 44. Schools 147.4

1931. Assignment, deprivation of teachers' rights--Generally

Under law, school districts may not assign staff and faculty to certain schools on basis of race or ethnicity. Diaz v. San Jose Unified School Dist., N.D.Cal.1981, 518 F.Supp. 622, affirmed 705 F.2d 1129, on rehearing 733 F.2d 660, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2140, 471 U.S. 1065, 85 L.Ed.2d 497. Schools 147.2(2)

1932. ---- Transfer, assignment, deprivation of teachers' rights

Even assuming that tenured professor's position in particular department was right subject to substantive review under due process clause, professor's transfer to second department did not violate his right to continued employment in department free from arbitrary state action as university officials responsible for transfer acted in exercise of their professional judgment and did not venture beyond pale of reasoned academic decision making.

Huang v. Board of Governors of University of North Carolina, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1990, 902 F.2d 1134, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

Statements made by assistant high school football coaches concerning corporal punishment imposed on students by head coach were protected by U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 where assistant coaches spoke in a restrained and moderate manner to parents at school and at school board meetings in context of a public debate over actions of head coach; thus, involuntary transfers of assistant coaches violated their right to free speech, entitling them to restoration to their original positions. Bowman v. Pulaski County Special School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1983, 723 F.2d 640. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Where teacher had intentionally withheld from his application information concerning his homosexuality, teacher who had been transferred to administrative position could not maintain suit seeking return to his teaching position. Acanfora v. Board of Ed. of Montgomery County, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 491 F.2d 498, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 64, 419 U.S. 836, 42 L.Ed.2d 63. Schools 147.47

School board's failure to obtain tenured principal's approval before transferring him to newly created, untenured position of superintendent of instruction, deprived principal, without due process of law, of entitlement established by statute pertaining to tenure upon transfer or promotion; thus, deprivation could support federal claim under § 1983. Farley v. North Bergen Tp. Bd. of Educ., D.N.J.1989, 705 F.Supp. 223. Civil Rights 1134; Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Civil Rights 1135

1933. Attire, deprivation of teachers' rights

Not every dispute between school board and teacher relating to teacher's personal appearance or choice of apparel raises questions of constitutional proportions which must stand or fall depending upon a court's view of who was right. Tardif v. Quinn, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1976, 545 F.2d 761. Schools 133.1(1)

1934. Harassment, deprivation of teachers' rights

Supervisor's verbal harassment of teacher was not so outrageous as to shock the conscience as necessary to show substantive due process violation of teacher's rights for purposes of stating § 1983 claim; offensive conduct was not conscience-shocking merely as result of trespassing on some fastidious squeamishness or private sentimentalism. Santiago de Castro v. Morales Medina, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1991, 943 F.2d 129. Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Schools 63(3)

Tenured teacher had no federal constitutional right, redressable in § 1983 action, to perform her job free from "unwarranted practices" of school director presented in teacher's complaint; allegations setting forth series of petty acts of harassment by director did not state civil rights claim. Santiago-De-Castro v. Morales-Medina, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 737 F.Supp. 729, affirmed 943 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1150; Civil Rights 1395(8)

1935. Maternity leave, deprivation of teachers' rights--Generally

While advance notice provisions of school board maternity leave policies are rational and may well be necessary to serve the objective of continuity of instruction, absolute requirement of female teacher's termination of employment at the fourth or fifth month before expected birth of child is violative of due process as having no valid relationship to state's interest in preserving continuity of teaching. Cleveland Bd. of Educ. v. LaFleur, U.S.Ohio 1974, 94 S.Ct. 791, 414 U.S. 632, 39 L.Ed.2d 52, 67 O.O.2d 126. Constitutional Law 278.5(3) was able to resume her duties following birth of her child did not discriminate against teacher because of her sex in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1 and this section. Lewis v. Los Angeles City Unified School Dist., C.D.Cal.1977, 429 F.Supp. 935. Civil Rights 1176; Constitutional Law 224(3)

1936. ---- Unwed mothers, maternity leave, deprivation of teachers' rights

Teacher's constitutional right of privacy was violated when she was forced to take leave of absence for becoming pregnant while she was unmarried. Ponton v. Newport News School Bd., E.D.Va.1986, 632 F.Supp. 1056. Constitutional Law 82(12)

1937. Medical leave, deprivation of teachers' rights

Retired teacher's claim that she was deprived of property without due process when school board reduced number of accumulated sick leave days when she retired was a common-law claim for breach of employment contract and was actionable under state law rather than under § 1983. Ramsey v. Board of Educ. of Whitley County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1988, 844 F.2d 1268. Civil Rights 1131

1938. Outside employment, deprivation of teachers' rights

Law school faculty members of state university did not have isolated constitutional right either to participate in Legal Services Program of Office of Economic Opportunity or to engage in part-time employment while teaching part-time at law school, but they did have constitutional right to be treated no differently by state agency than other faculty members of such law school. Trister v. University of Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1969, 420 F.2d 499. Constitutional Law 242.2(4)

1939. Personnel files, deprivation of teachers' rights

Former public school teacher had not established violation of his protected liberty interest in good name, reputation, honor, or integrity sufficient to permit him to maintain § 1983 action against government defendants based on presence of allegedly false and defamatory charges in his personnel file, after stigmatizing allegations had been removed from personnel file without having been disclosed; the fact that potential employers could have gained access to the personnel file while it contained the stigmatizing allegations was not of sufficient consequence in itself to implicate liberty interest, and the teacher could show no likelihood of future disclosure of the stigmatizing allegations. Brandt v. Board of Co-op. Educational Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 845 F.2d 416. Civil Rights 1038

As to correspondence and memoranda in personnel file of former assistant professor of university concerning his criticism of public official, professor was entitled to relief under this section pertaining to deprivation of constitutional rights on basis that university's retention of the correspondence and memoranda would violate his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, since file contained statements that professor's letters concerning official contained inaccuracies and distortion of the truth so that prospective employer reading statements would question professor's veracity and prospective employer whose request to see the files was refused by professor would likely view him in unfavorable light. Croushorn v. Board of Trustees of University of Tennessee, M.D.Tenn.1980, 518 F.Supp. 9. Constitutional Law 82(11)

1940. Privacy, deprivation of teachers' rights

Police officer's disclosure in television news broadcast of expunged prior sexual abuse conviction of teacher did not breach teacher's privacy rights; teacher was on notice that violations of laws proscribing sexual abuse did not fall within constitutionally protected privacy realm, and expunged arrest and conviction did not erase firsthand knowledge of officer as to teacher's arrest and conviction, and thus teacher did not have legitimate expectation of privacy in his expunged criminal records. Nilson v. Layton City, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 45 F.3d 369. Constitutional Law 82(10); Criminal Law 1226(3.1)

School committee's requirement, that principal see a psychiatrist or remain on leave, did not violate principal's right to privacy, where committee had sufficient reason to worry about principal's ability to supervise children, committee provided for second examination if first report was unfavorable, disclosure of psychiatrist's report was not made public, and principal was immediately reinstated upon issuance of favorable report; requirement was prudent in light of principal's physical altercations with administrators, altercation with child which resulted in criminal charges, principal's admission he was under stress and in need of tranquilizers, and numerous parental complaints about the principal. Daury v. Smith, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1988, 842 F.2d 9. Constitutional Law 82(12); Schools 133.14

Former principal failed to state cause of action in §§ 1983 complaint for deprivation of liberty interest protected by Due Process Clause, where she alleged that school officials disclosed confidential information, but she failed to identify any defamatory statements made by officials. Lassiter v. Topeka Unified School Dist. No. 501, D.Kan.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 1033, reconsideration denied 2004 WL 3048842. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1941. Promotion or demotion, deprivation of teachers' rights--Generally

Where Tennessee teacher or principal was not entitled to specific job to which he was assigned under Teacher Tenure Act, T.C.A. § 49-1401 et seq., action of school board in transferring principal without notice of charges or hearing constituted routine transfer of personnel within school system in interest of administrative efficiency and did not amount to punitive demotion, action of board did not result in deprivation of property rights and did not violate principal's civil rights. Coe v. Bogart, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1975, 519 F.2d 10. Schools 147.28

1942. ---- Property interest, promotion or demotion, deprivation of teachers' rights

University law professor who had voluntarily resigned his employment pursuant to settlement agreement was not denied any "property right" protected by Fourteenth Amendment, for purpose of § 1983 claim, when law school failed to grant him emeritus status; professor had no "property right" to force faculty to vote on issue absent some language to that effect in settlement agreement. Samad v. Jenkins, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1988, 845 F.2d 660. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Constitutional Law 277(2)

In absence of a statute, ordinance or institutional regulation, a faculty member has no property entitlement to a promotion and, therefore, lacks any constitutional basis for requiring some kind of hearing upon a nonpromotional decision on that ground. Clark v. Whiting, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1979, 607 F.2d 634. Colleges And Universities 8(1)

Faculty handbook setting forth criteria which should generally result in promotion of faculty members did not create a property interest in promotion on the part of faculty members who met the criteria. Colburn v. Trustees of Indiana University, S.D.Ind.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1268, affirmed 973 F.2d 581, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 277(2)

1943. ---- Racial discrimination, promotion or demotion, deprivation of teachers' rights

Black school teacher failed to establish racial discrimination in failure of board of education to promote him to position of principal. Webster v. Redmond, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1979, 599 F.2d 793, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 712, 444 U.S. 1039, 62 L.Ed.2d 674.

promotion and salaries, properly declined to award relief relating to promotions with respect to certain individual plaintiffs where it did not appear that any of seven teacher plaintiffs sought or was qualified for any of positions filled in allegedly discriminatory manner and where administrator plaintiffs testified that they did not believe that they had been discriminated against and disclaimed any interest in recovering damages. Clark v. Mann, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1104. Civil Rights 1564

Middle school principal failed to establish he was victim of race discrimination in school district's failure to promote him to principal of high school, though former superintendent employed as consultant advised member of interviewing committee, whom he saw on break in hallway, to return to interview room and choose another candidate, where former superintendent claimed he was joking and committee member said he was not influenced by comment. Senigaur v. Beaumont Independent School Dist., E.D.Tex.1991, 760 F.Supp. 1200.

1944. ---- Sex discrimination, promotion or demotion, deprivation of teachers' rights

Black school guidance counselor was not victim of race or sex discrimination where decisions made by school officials concerning different aspects of plaintiff's employment, consisting of various reassignments, were fairly arrived at on the basis of administrative judgment as to school needs and consistent with plaintiff's qualifications and training, and not influenced by impermissible reasons. Jones v. Birdsong, N.D.Miss.1980, 530 F.Supp. 221, affirmed 679 F.2d 24, rehearing denied 683 F.2d 417, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 1186, 459 U.S. 1202, 75 L.Ed.2d 433. Schools 147.2(2)

1945. ---- Strikes, promotion or demotion, deprivation of teachers' rights

Tenured elementary school principals could not maintain action under this section with regard to their demotion to classroom teachers in retaliation for their support of teachers' strike where such strike was illegal. Bates v. Dause, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 502 F.2d 865. Schools 147.12

1946. Religious holidays, deprivation of teachers' rights

Free exercise of Roman Catholic school teacher's religious rights were not violated by school district's refusal to give teacher paid leave of absence to observe Feast of Immaculate Conception and Feast of the Ascension where teacher was permitted to observe the holidays under guise of a personal day. Di Pasquale v. Board of Educ. Williamsville Cent. School Dist., W.D.N.Y.1985, 626 F.Supp. 457. Constitutional Law 84.5(3); Schools 144(1)

School district's granting only two paid personal leave days per year did not equate to denial of worship rights of tenured Jewish teacher, notwithstanding that it is important to observe Yom Kippur and Rosh Hashanah by attending temple for two days on each holiday, where teacher was not required to risk his job in order to attend synagogue, although his attendance at services would cause him to lose pay, and where policy was even more stringent, i.e., only one paid day, at time teacher assumed employment, notwithstanding that scheduling of December vacation was designed specifically to concur with Christmas. Pinsker v. Joint Dist. No. 28J of Adams and Arapahoe Counties, D.C.Colo.1983, 554 F.Supp. 1049, affirmed 735 F.2d 388. Constitutional Law 84.5(3)

1947. Salary, deprivation of teachers' rights

University did not retaliate against teacher for protesting her base salary and filing discrimination complaint, when it reduced her base salary, gave her only a "good" performance rating, and failed to rehire her, so as to violate § 1983; teacher failed to show that her actions were substantial factor in alleged retaliatory actions, and protest regarding base salary was not constitutionally protected conduct, in that it related solely to resolution of personal problem. Johnson v. University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1995, 70 F.3d 469. Civil Rights

1249(1)

Mere fact that assistant coach lost no salary as the result of school district's actions taken in response to his letter to members of the school board did not require that his action against them be treated as one for defamation not maintainable under this section. Anderson v. Central Point School Dist. No. 6, C.A.9 (Or.) 1984, 746 F.2d 505. Civil Rights 1038

1948. Sanctions, deprivation of teachers' rights

Alleged harms suffered by tenured associate math professor at university, who claimed that after he had challenged several departmental decisions and publicly supported professor allegedly attacked by administration for refusing to lower academic standards, he was retaliated against in teaching assignments, pay increases, administrative matters, and departmental procedures, did not rise to level of First Amendment deprivation; professor was not fired or even threatened with termination. Dorsett v. Board of Trustees for State Colleges & Universities, C.A.5 (La.) 1991, 940 F.2d 121. Colleges And Universities 8(1); Colleges And Universities 8(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Imposition on tenured university professor of a sanction that was less severe than the one specified in faculty handbook (dismissal) was not constitutionally offensive and therefore was not actionable under this section. Garrett v. Mathews, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 625 F.2d 658, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1349. Civil Rights 1131; Colleges And Universities 8.1(1)

1949. Seniority, deprivation of teachers' rights

No denial of a constitutional right to plaintiff discharged community college teacher resulted from the community college's determination of seniority for staff reduction purposes based on day teacher's contractual duties first commenced rather than date on which initial contract was signed. Hibbs v. Board of Ed. of Iowa Central Community College, N.D.Iowa 1975, 392 F.Supp. 1202. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1)

1950. Suspension, deprivation of teachers' rights

Tenured Connecticut public school teacher received all the process he was due in connection with his placement on involuntary sick leave after he refused to submit to school board's conditions for his return to work following administrative leave pending investigation; by the time his sick leave was about to expire, teacher knew both that he was on sick leave and that his sick leave was running out and had voiced his objections to placement on sick leave through informal communications from his attorney to school board and later through lawsuit, and hearing before superintendent, to which teacher argued he was entitled, would have been futile. O'Connor v. Pierson, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 426 F.3d 187. Schools 147.38

Minor siblings and their father did not put forth sufficient evidence that employees of the Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) knew of or suspected that minors were at risk of sexual abuse in foster homes in which they were placed to support § 1983 action against employees; evidence that foster homes were overcrowded, that foster homes were not properly licensed, that foster parent had been accused of child abuse twice, and that both accusations were determined unfounded did not indicate a risk of sexual abuse. J.H. ex rel. Higgin v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 346 F.3d 788, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1891, 541 U.S. 975, 158 L.Ed.2d 470. Civil Rights 1057

Although nature of charge, i.e., touching junior high school student's girlfriend on the buttocks and poking her breast with fork as she stood in lunch line, were such that they could stigmatize a person and thus give rise to a liberty interest, tenured teacher/coach, who was suspended for one week with pay before neutral school board member determined that suspension should continue pending full school board hearing, failed to establish a protected liberty interest and, also, there was no substantial evidence that the school board ever published the charges. Hardiman v. Jefferson County Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1983, 709 F.2d 635. Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

Middle school teacher was afforded sufficient due process rights, in connection with his suspension with full pay and benefits pending investigation of claims that he acted inappropriately toward female students, even though presuspension process consisted of notification one day prior to suspension that some students accused him of "inappropriate language and touching" and that child protection team would be consulted; while teacher had significant interest in impact of suspension on his reputation, school acted to reduce possibility of erroneous determination by not taking action until complaints were received from three students deemed credible by school, by holding postsuspension hearing at which teacher was informed of specific charges and given opportunity to respond, and by scheduling second hearing prior to settlement of matter, and school had compelling interest in removing teacher from scene quickly, in view of nature of charges against him. Tweedall v. Fritz, S.D.Ind.1997, 987 F.Supp. 1126. Constitutional Law 278.5(4); Schools 147.34(1); Schools 147.38

Though, under Ohio law, tenured teacher had protected property interest in continued employment by board of education, alleged acts of school district superintendent and certain board members in attempting to have teacher's contract suspended did not constitute "deprivation" of that property interest so as to state cause of action under this section for violation of the due process clause of U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14. Thomas v. Farmer, S.D.Ohio 1983, 573 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1951. Tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights--Generally

Civil rights action by teachers at public community college challenging abrogation of tenure occurring after State of Maryland took over college presented substantial federal question, inasmuch as teachers were not "public officials" whose office could be modified or abolished by state to serve public good. Gardiner v. Tschechtelin, D.Md.1991, 765 F.Supp. 279. Federal Courts 221

Grant of tenure to member of university faculty is privilege, an honor, which is not to be accorded to all assistant professors, but is to be awarded in course of search for fundamental merit, and such decision, by its very nature, cannot be made by court but must be made by faculty, administration and trustees of university. Johnson v. University of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1328. Colleges And Universities 8.1(2)

1952. ---- Property interest, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

In civil rights action brought against president of state university system and board of regents by terminated assistant professor who challenged defendants' refusal to grant him tenure, the right of plaintiff to substantive due process was no greater than his right to procedural due process; and since plaintiff had no property or liberty right entitling him to procedural due process, there was no basis upon which court of appeals could say that the denial of tenure was error. Stebbins v. Weaver, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1976, 537 F.2d 939, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 741, 429 U.S. 1041, 50 L.Ed.2d 753. Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1)

Faculty handbook stating that "tenure shall be granted" to those faculty whose professional characteristics indicate that they will continue to serve with distinction did not create a property interest in tenure where the criteria also indicated that tenure would generally not be conferred unless a faculty member achieved or gave strong promise of achieving promotion and there was no guaranty of promotion. Colburn v. Trustees of Indiana University, S.D.Ind.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1268, affirmed 973 F.2d 581, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 277(2) to be protected by the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause for purposes of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 civil rights action based on Association of American University Professors-recommended tenure policies prevalent at other institutions and her alleged understanding that she would be considered for permanent tenure in accordance with those prevalent tenure guidelines, where the school never agreed to any policy of permanent tenure and did not adopt informal policy of tenure along those lines. Sabet v. Eastern Virginia Medical Authority, C.A.4 (Va.) 1985, 775 F.2d 1266. Colleges And Universities 8.1(2); Constitutional Law 277(2)

University employee did not have a protected property interest in attaining tenure, for purposes of her Fourteenth Amendment claim, where her contract with the university specifically stated that she was being employed under a probationary appointment and that the opportunity to attain tenure was subject to satisfactorily performing her duties, approving the evaluations, obtaining the faculty recommendations, and meeting the qualifications and all other criteria imposed by the applicable laws, regulations and norms of the university. Modesto v. Lehman, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 245 F.Supp.2d 340. Colleges And Universities 8.1(2); Constitutional Law 277(2)

1954. ---- Alienage discrimination, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

Restriction on granting tenure to alien teachers on college faculty could not be justified as bearing some rational relationship to a legitimate state end or so-called national interest of state in providing its own citizens with work, nor could it be justified on ground that other public bodies discriminated against aliens nor on ground that allegiance of aliens to principles of United States remained questionable. Younus v. Shabat, N.D.Ill.1971, 336 F.Supp. 1137, affirmed. Colleges And Universities 8.1(2)

1955. ---- Racial discrimination, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

Sufficient evidence was presented from which reasonable jury could find that law school chancellor and professor engaged in employment discrimination in violation of §§ 1981 and 1983, by denying white professor tenure track position; departures of other tenured professors, together with offer of tenure to black professor with less experience than white professor and comments about need to maintain black majority on faculty provided evidence that tenured positions were available to black applicants but not to white professor. Arenson v. Southern University Law Center, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 911 F.2d 1124, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1417, 499 U.S. 949, 113 L.Ed.2d 470. Civil Rights 1544

Former assistant professor stated § 1983 claim against dean and faculty members of state university school of architecture in their individual capacities for violation of professor's right to equal protection; professor alleged that dean and faculty members discriminated against him by altering tenure process and denying tenure on basis of race and race-related association, and that dean later discriminated against professor by giving his grievance on equal treatment. Collin v. Rector and Bd. of Visitors of University of Virginia, W.D.Va.1995, 873 F.Supp. 1008. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1956. ---- Sex discrimination, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

Evidence supported jury's conclusions that university department chair and tenure committee chair intentionally discriminated against female professor on basis of gender, caused negative tenure recommendation, and violated equal protection; professor was told of need to publish additional book independent of her dissertation, even though no male member of department needed to publish second book; professor met or exceeded number of publications of every tenured faculty member, except committee chair; committee chair treated professor unequally in selection of outside evaluators; chairs gave consistently negative interpretations to generally favorable evaluations of professor's scholarship; and department chair stated opposition to professor, affirmative action, and women in tenured positions. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1957. ---- Speech and writings, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

To extent that professor's remarks may tend to diminish collegiality of the department, one may, without offending the Constitution, base decision not to recommend tenure on content of remarks, although they enjoy U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 1 protection; Mayberry v. Dees, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 663 F.2d 502, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 69, 459 U.S. 830, 74 L.Ed.2d 69. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Court of appeals does not sit as a reviewing body of the correctness or incorrectness of state Board of Regents' decision in granting or withholding tenure; although a nontenured teacher is entitled to due process consideration of claims under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 mere assertion of such a claim does not convert the federal procedure into a plenary administrative review. Megill v. Board of Regents of State of Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 541 F.2d 1073 . Colleges And Universities 8.1(6.1)

Assuming, arguendo, that the complaints made to her superiors by former nontenured assistant professor concerning her difficulties with one colleague and one student constituted the exercise of a protected right under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, nevertheless, the ultimate action taken by the university, to-wit, failing to offer plaintiff tenure and instead offering her a terminal employment contract for the 1970-71 academic year, was not shown to have been provoked by any complaints plaintiff may have registered. Frazier v. Curators of University of Missouri, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1974, 495 F.2d 1149. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3)

Teachers' contention that they were denied their rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 in not being granted fourth year teaching contracts tantamount to tenure because of activities disapproved of by administration could not be defeated by argument that officials only allowed the teachers' contracts to expire since right sought to be vindicated was not a contractual one but a constitutional one. Pred v. Board of Public Instruction of Dade County, Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 415 F.2d 851. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Public university instructor's § 1983 First Amendment claim was not defeated by fact that he did not have tenure; even though instructor could have been discharged for no reason whatever and had no constitutional right to a hearing prior to the decision not to rehire him, he could nevertheless establish claim to reinstatement if decision not to rehire him was made by reason of his exercise of constitutionally protected First Amendment freedoms. Scallet v. Rosenblum, W.D.Va.1996, 911 F.Supp. 999, affirmed 106 F.3d 391, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2482, 521 U.S. 1105, 138 L.Ed.2d 990. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Professor who alleged that he was denied tenure in retaliation for his having previously grieved adverse personnel actions did not establish a First Amendment violation, considering that professor's complaint did not relate to a matter of political, social or other concern to the community, but involved only individual grievances. Singh v. Lamar University, E.D.Tex.1986, 635 F.Supp. 737. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Denial of tenure to state university teacher because of the teacher's efforts to improve the situation of women at the university would be actionable under this section. Lieberman v. Gant, D.C.Conn.1979, 474 F.Supp. 848, affirmed 630 F.2d 60. Civil Rights 1134

1958. ---- Legitimate and illegitimate reasons, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

Even if the tenure denial was due, in part, to the department chairman's disagreement with statements of professor protected by the constitution, professor had no cause of action for deprivation of civil rights where he would have been denied tenure regardless of his protected activities. Hildebrand v. Board of Trustees of Michigan State University, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1981, 662 F.2d 439, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1760, 456 U.S. 910, 72 L.Ed.2d 168. Civil Rights 1252

Where tenure regulation provided for a probationary period of at least five years and did not explicitly require that president of institution make his decision whether to recommend tenure before end of fifth year, plaintiff who at end of fourth year was told that a contract would be discontinued at conclusion of fifth year but who was promoted from instructor to assistant professor had not acquired an implied right to tenure, and was not entitled to relief after she was granted an additional one-year contract to comply with board of regents' construction of its regulations. Sheppard v. West Virginia Bd. of Regents, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1975, 516 F.2d 826. Colleges And Universities 8.1(2)

1960. ---- Procedural requirements, tenure, deprivation of teachers' rights

Had state university gratuitously afforded tenure aspirants procedural safeguards not constitutionally mandated, deviations from those procedures would not support a claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 due process guarantee or this section, and fact that additional procedural safeguards were provided by employment contract did not distinguish case from those where procedures were provided gratuitously. Kilcoyne v. Morgan, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 664 F.2d 940, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1976, 456 U.S. 928, 72 L.Ed.2d 444. Colleges And Universities 8.1(4.1); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

In suit under this section brought by nontenured public high school teacher charging that he was denied tenure because of his exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, the determination of whether any constitutional rights of the teacher, who complained that some of the reasons assigned by school authorities for denying tenure occurred during his first year of employment as a probationary teacher, were violated was not controlled by M.C.L.A. § 38.83 requiring minimum of 60 days notice of whether a probationary teacher's work has been satisfactory. Manchester v. Lewis, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1974, 507 F.2d 289. Federal Courts 411

University instructor was not entitled to have reconsideration of his application for tenure subject to the same criteria as had been applied in consideration of his first application, where arbitrator's decision directing reconsideration had also directed that application should be considered and reviewed strictly in conformity with presently existing rules and procedures. Ishigami v. University of Hawaii, D.C.Hawai'i 1979, 469 F.Supp. 443. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

Probationary, nontenured professor who was denied tenure at state university could not claim federal constitutional protections for defects in hearing process or failure of university to formally inform her of contract termination a year in advance as required by university procedures. Perham v. Ladd, N.D.Ill.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1101. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

1961. Unions, deprivation of teachers' rights

Tutor, who was the only Native American employed by school district in a historically nonunion position, failed to establish that her race was a motivating factor in school defendants' decision to not allow her into union. Crowe v. School Dist. of Webster, W.D.Wis.2003, 300 F.Supp.2d 787. Civil Rights 1137; Civil Rights 1255

Adverse effects of policy of university which prohibited use of university facilities, including use of campus mailing system, to groups which were deemed to be labor organizations or which had as their goal organization of university employees for purposes of collective bargaining were not so slight as to fail to rise to level of a deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. uniform set of procedures for meeting that emergency, and the retrenchment was not arbitrary or capricious, and the actions taken were clearly within the discretionary area reserved to the governing officials by Constitution. Klein v. Board of Higher Ed. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1113. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1)

1963. ---- Desegregation, reduction in force, deprivation of teachers' rights

Adoption of requirement that teachers pass national teachers examination is impermissible when shown to have been motivated by discriminatory purpose, but, absent such showing, use of such scores in evaluating teachers is generally permissible, and dismissal of teacher for refusing to take test did not violate principle that school boards when converting from dual system to unitary one must establish and abide by written, nonracial criteria for promotion, retention, etc., of faculty. Moore v. Tangipahoa Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 489. Schools 127; Schools 147.2(2)

Obligation of school board not to engage in discriminatory demotion or dismissal of faculty and professional staff displaced by unification of previously segregated system does not accrue only after integration-related dismissals or demotions have occurred; if there is a reduction in the number of principals, teachers and other professional staff as result of unification, staff member to be dismissed or demoted must be selected on the basis of objective and reasonable nondiscriminatory standards from all the staff of the school district. Campbell v. Gadsden County Dist. School Bd., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 534 F.2d 650, rehearing denied 539 F.2d 710. Civil Rights 1133; Civil Rights 1135

Transfer of school district employee from position of assistant attendance supervisor to that of classroom teacher, a position with the same salary but less responsibility, constituted a "demotion" for purposes of decision requiring that any reduction in professional staff resulting from transition from a dual to a unitary school system be accomplished on a nondiscriminatory basis and that no staff vacancy be filled through recruitment of a person of a different race, color, or national origin than the individual who has been demoted until such individual has had an opportunity to fill the vacancy if qualified. Lee v. Chambers County Bd. of Ed., C.A.5 (Ala.) 1976, 533 F.2d 132. Schools 147.2(2)

Where no cuts were made in the total professional staff of school system in order to accommodate desegregation effort, it was not necessary that school district, in seeking to dismiss teacher on ground of incompetency, compare her qualifications with those of all other teachers in the system. Blunt v. Marion County School Bd., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1975, 515 F.2d 951. Schools 147.2(2)

Where there was no reduction or anticipated reduction in number of teachers and staff employed by school district which had recently been subject of integration order, discharge of black, nontenured teacher was not constitutionally invalid even if school board had not applied valid objective criteria in making the decision not to retain the teacher. Griffin v. Lancaster, W.D.La.1975, 400 F.Supp. 421. Schools 147.2(2)

1964. Renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights--Generally

Reemployment of untenured high school teacher, who was employed under a one-year contract, could be refused for any reason or for no reason at all. Ball v. Board of Trustees of Kerrville Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 584 F.2d 684, rehearing denied 588 F.2d 828, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1535, 440 U.S. 972, 59 L.Ed.2d 788 . Schools 147.9

Even if a teacher or other public employee does not have a contractual right to continued employment, he may not be dismissed nor denied renewal of contract on basis that infringes his constitutionally protected interests. Hastings v. Bonner, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 578 F.2d 136. Officers And Public Employees 66; Schools 147.12; Schools 147.4

Decision not to retain nontenured professor employed by state university may not rest on basis wholly unsupported in fact or on basis wholly without reason. Cook County College Teachers Union, Local 1600, Am. Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO v. Byrd, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 456 F.2d 882, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 56, 409 U.S. 848, 34 L.Ed.2d 90, rehearing denied 94 S.Ct. 29, 414 U.S. 883, 38 L.Ed.2d 131. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3)

Reasons for nonrenewal of nontenured teacher's contract may not be arbitrary and capricious. Drown v. Portsmouth School Dist., C.A.1 (N.H.) 1971, 451 F.2d 1106. Schools 147.9

Nontenured public school teacher claiming that school district's failure to rehire her deprived her of rights guaranteed by the Constitution was not entitled to damages. Drown v. Portsmouth School Dist., C.A.1 (N.H.) 1970, 435 F.2d 1182, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 1659, 402 U.S. 972, 29 L.Ed.2d 137. Schools 147.54

1965. ---- Property interest, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Fact that state university faculty member did not have tenure was not dispositive of faculty member's due process claim for wrongful dismissal in connection with rescission of his sabbatical leave contract on theory that faculty member had no property right or interest entitling him to due process of law. Bruce v. Board of Regents for Northwest Missouri State University, W.D.Mo.1976, 414 F.Supp. 559. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Where written terms of plaintiff's one-year contract specifically provided that his right of employment ended on June 30, 1973, his last day of work, and bylaws of private college provided that all faculty members were subject to annual reappointment by board of trustees, plaintiff had no constitutionally protected property right in employment by such college. Sament v. Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1976, 413 F.Supp. 434, affirmed 547 F.2d 1164. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1)

1966. ---- Expectation of renewal, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Community college instructor could have property interest protected by due process in continued employment as chairperson of home economics department, despite lack of California law creating such expectation of continuation in administrative positions; interest could arise from college official's statements indicating mutually explicit understandings. Roberts v. College of the Desert, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 870 F.2d 1411. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Coach and athletic director, who had two-year employment promise, was deprived of his legitimate expectation of continued employment when school board voted not to renew his contract for a second year and such deprivation was a violation of due process actionable under this section. Vail v. Board of Educ. of Paris Union School Dist. No. 95, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 706 F.2d 1435, certiorari granted 104 S.Ct. 66, 464 U.S. 813, 78 L.Ed.2d 81, affirmed 104 S.Ct. 2144, 466 U.S. 377, 80 L.Ed.2d 377. Civil Rights 1133

Former superintendent of schools, who was denied reemployment, failed to show, in his suit under this section, that he had a "legitimate claim of entitlement" or "reasonable expectancy of re-employment"; rather, he established, at best, a unilateral expectation of continued employment. Tatter v. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 306, D.C.Minn.1980, 490 F.Supp. 494, affirmed 653 F.2d 315. Civil Rights 1421

Assistant professor's mere expectancy that she might be retained at university if she did certain things is not enough to invest her with property right in her employment. Johnson v. University of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1328. Colleges And Universities 8(2)

1967. ---- Racial discrimination, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Members of school council sufficiently offered nondiscriminatory reasons for voting not to renew contract of white high school principal and subsequently deciding not to rehire him, as required to rebut principal's prima facie case of reverse discrimination; members claimed that principal had closed school without authority, allowed unsafe conditions to exist in laboratory, responded inadequately when white teacher made racial slur, and did not work well with school departments. Pilditch v. Board of Educ. of City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 3 F.3d 1113, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1065, 510 U.S. 1116, 127 L.Ed.2d 385. Civil Rights 1421

Professor failed to establish that financial accountability analysis was flawed as asserted to prove alleged financial reasons for non-renewal of her contract were pretext for race discrimination, where professor did not provide evidence to establish that accounting methods were not actually relied on by college. Lewis v. Chattahoochee Valley Community College, M.D.Ala.2001, 136 F.Supp.2d 1232.

African-American instructor's race was more likely than not primary reason for community college's decision not to renew her contract, where chair of her department made racially discriminatory remarks and harbored racial prejudices, instruction was only African-American instructor ever employed in her department, and decision not to renew her contract was made by all white supervisory officials; fact that she received her Ph.D. degree from nonaccredited university was not credible reason for nonrenewal, since Ph.D. was not requirement for position and issue of accreditation was never discussed in any of instructor's hiring interviews. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1133

1968. ---- Sex discrimination, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

School board which did not renew teacher's contract was not liable to teacher under § 1983 for employment discrimination; school board produced evidence that they did not intentionally discriminate against teacher on basis of sex, and teacher merely questioned credibility of board members who testified, rather than producing evidence which showed that board did intentionally discriminate against her. Suber v. Bulloch County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ga.1989, 722 F.Supp. 736. Civil Rights 1421

1969. ---- Speech and writings generally, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Public university instructor's advocacy of "diversity" through the materials he taught in class related to matters of public concern for purposes of his § 1983 First Amendment claim and fact that instructor's statements were made in the classroom and not in the public square did not strip them of their inherently public quality; context of instructor's classroom speech, that is as part of the curriculum at university's graduate business school, did not metamorphosize speech addressing social issues into parochial musings unrelated to the world beyond ivy towers of the business school. Scallet v. Rosenblum, W.D.Va.1996, 911 F.Supp. 999, affirmed 106 F.3d 391, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2482, 521 U.S. 1105, 138 L.Ed.2d 990. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Fact that a teacher did not have tenure does not suffice to defeat such teacher's claim under this section that teaching contract was not renewed because teacher exercised rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Cherry v. Burnett, D.C.Md.1977, 444 F.Supp. 324. Civil Rights 1133

1970. ---- Policy disputes, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

In action by nontenured teacher challenging university's nonrenewal of her contract, evidence did not establish that university did not renew her contract because she made speeches attacking alleged sexually discriminatory practices of university. Decker-Gregg v. Scarlett, M.D.Tenn.1975, 392 F.Supp. 1352, affirmed 524 F.2d 1405. Colleges And Universities 8.1(6.1)

1971. ---- Political affiliation, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Teacher who worked under contract failed to show that nonrenewal of her contract with Department of Education was due to political discrimination; teacher who took over her classes was a regular employee who had priority over contract employees and following first semester after her nonrenewal, courses were cancelled and career employee was assigned to another district. Saquebo v. Roque, D.Puerto Rico 1989, 716 F.Supp. 709. Colleges And Universities 8.1(4.1)

Former vocational school teacher, who taught on basis of a yearly provisional contract but who was not hired for the ensuing year after another applicant was selected, failed to prove in action under this section, that the nonrenewal of teaching job was politically motivated. Amador Hernandez v. Chaar, D.C.Puerto Rico 1975, 392 F.Supp. 964. Civil Rights 1421

1972. ---- Association, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Nontenured university instructor's contention that university officials refused to renew her contract as attempt to "punish her association" with her husband was sufficiently detailed to state claim under § 1983 for violation of her constitutional right to intimate association, where instructor supported such contention by citing her consistently above-average performance evaluations, faculty grievance committee's recommendation that her contract be renewed, and fact that her husband, tenured professor and member of faculty union, engaged in vocal criticisms of both university and its School of Music. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Lack of contractual or tenure right did not defeat claim of nontenured public school teacher that nonrenewal was based solely on a reason that infringed her constitutionally protected interest, specifically, that nonrenewal based on animosity of school officials towards her husband for his activities on behalf of teachers' association violated plaintiff's rights to freedom of speech, privacy and association within the marital contract. Newborn v. Morrison, S.D.Ill.1977, 440 F.Supp. 623. Constitutional Law 82(12); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Constitutional Law 91

1973. ---- Unions, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Determination of school board after having had teacher before it that it would not renew teacher's contract on grounds that he had persistently failed to observe announced administrative policies regarding discipline of students was a matter within discretion of school board, and plaintiff teacher did not make a sufficient factual showing to justify conclusion that school board even so much as inquired into matter of teacher's participation in organization of school room teachers associations. Mitchell v. Alma School Dist. No. 30, W.D.Ark.1971, 332 F.Supp. 473. Schools 147.4

1974. ---- Certification requirement, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Requirement of appropriate certification is a valid nondiscriminatory reason for nonretention of a teacher by a school district so long as the requirement is applied in a nondiscriminatory manner. Lyons v. Board of Ed. of Charleston Reorganized School Dist. No. 1 of Mississippi County, Missouri, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1975, 523 F.2d 340. Schools 147.9

Lack of a proper teaching certificate for upcoming school year constituted a valid and nondiscriminatory basis for action of school board in refusing to renew teaching contract. Jackson v. Wheatley School Dist. No. 28 of St. Francis County, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1970, 430 F.2d 1359. Schools 147.9

1975. ---- Recommendation withheld, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In view of county school superintendent's failure for good cause to give recommendation required by state law for reemployment of plaintiff as a teacher, board's refusal to renew plaintiff's contract was not due to plaintiff's civil rights activities, and she was not entitled to injunction requiring reinstatement. Henry v. Coahoma County Bd. of Ed., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1965, 353 F.2d 648, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 1586, 384 U.S. 962, 16 L.Ed.2d 674. Schools 147.47

1976. ---- Refusal of renewal, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

State university's board of regents and chancellor's decision not to renew former assistant chancellor's contract with university was an adverse employment action, for purposes of assistant chancellor's employment discrimination action against board and chancellor, alleging claims under §§ 1981, 1983, and Title VII. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 836. Civil Rights 1133

Where, during controversy concerning outside employment by teacher, teacher was offered a renewal contract through her attorney for following school year and declined it and her refusal was made known to school board through the respective attorneys, she could not recover for nonrenewal of her contract. Gosney v. Sonora Independent School Dist., D.C.Tex.1977, 430 F.Supp. 53, reversed on other grounds 603 F.2d 522. Schools 147.54

1977. ---- Retaliation, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Three-month delay between time school teacher filed Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) complaint and date that school officials increased their supervision of her, coupled with fact that increased supervision immediately followed a parent's complaint about teacher's in-class behavior, were insufficient to show causal connection between EEOC complaint and increased supervision for purposes of retaliation claim under Title VII, § 1981 or § 1983. Salvadori v. Franklin School Dist., E.D.Wis.2001, 221 F.Supp.2d 957, affirmed 293 F.3d 989. Civil Rights 1252; Schools 147.12

1978. ---- Residence requirement, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Even though school counselor whose contract was not renewed because of his failure to comply with county school district's continuing residency requirement lived only 11 miles from the school where he worked, counselor was not denied equal protection of the law by school district's policy requiring counselors to live in proximity of their schools or by school board's decision not to renew his contract where reasons given for residency requirement were related to counselor's role and were not wholly insubstantial. Mogle v. Sevier County School Dist., C.A.10 (Utah) 1976, 540 F.2d 478, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1157, 429 U.S. 1121, 51 L.Ed.2d 572. Constitutional Law 242.2(4)

1979. ---- Legitimate and illegitimate reasons, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

State university professor's constitutionally protected speech criticizing university's expenditure of public funds and implementation of programs was not substantial and motivating factor in university's decision one year after speech not to renew professor's contract and thus, professor could not recover against university under § 1983 for violation of his First Amendment rights; university's stated reason for not renewing contract was marked and persistent decline in enrollment that occurred prior to professor's speech and there was evidence that university chancellor did not even know about professor's speech until termination appeal process had begun. Hamer v. Brown, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1987, 831 F.2d 1398. Civil Rights 1252

Where there was just cause to terminate teacher, regardless of free speech issue, school board could reach decision not to rehire on basis of her performance record, even if protected conduct, i.e., speech, made employer more certain of the correctness of its decision. Rocker v. Huntington, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 550 F.2d 804. Schools

Although only seven days intervened between meeting at which nontenured associate professor of foreign languages accused acting chairman of suppressing application of another for the chairmanship and meeting at which it was decided not to renew the associate professor's contract, the nonrenewal decision was not in violation of the professor's constitutional rights where it was not made in retaliation for exercise of any valid right of free speech but because of work practices which created administrative hardships and delays as well as inadequate classroom performance and failure to get along amicably in the department. Roseman v. Indiana University of Pennsylvania, at Indiana, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 520 F.2d 1364, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1128, 424 U.S. 921, 47 L.Ed.2d 329. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Notice from dean to nontenured faculty member which stated that faculty member's appointment for coming academic year would be terminal appointment because, although his research project had been supported for considerable length of time, nothing had yet been presented in the nature of an article or paper did not proffer a constitutionally impermissible basis for the nonreappointment. Watts v. Board of Curators, University of Missouri, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1974, 495 F.2d 384. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3)

Where state provided that teacher's contract would be renewed unless she was notified of nonrenewal and teacher was notified of nonrenewal and her rights to hearing, federal court would not overrule school board's determination not to renew teacher's contract based on board's finding that test showed teacher's pupils had below average scholastic accomplishments. Scheelhaase v. Woodbury Central Community School Dist., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1973, 488 F.2d 237, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 3173, 417 U.S. 969, 41 L.Ed.2d 1140. Schools 147.44

Refusal by board of education to reemploy teacher, who wrote letter on board's stationery to state legislator criticizing department of education for failing to allot funds for certain program, who signed letter as "Supervisor of Physical Education and/or Motor-Perceptual Skills.", and refusal to reemploy teacher's supervisor, who refused to sign evaluation showing that teacher was unsatisfactory in her performance, did not violate rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 of teacher or supervisor, who instituted civil rights action as result of refusal to reemploy, where teacher, who did not have authority on behalf of board to write such letter, failed to make it clear that she was not acting on behalf of board. Long v. Board of Ed. of City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1972, 456 F.2d 1058. Schools 147.12

Denial of teaching contract to nontenured teacher, who had been employed as high school counselor, on basis of lack of self-direction and cooperation in relation to extracurricular duties did not deny equal protection, absent indication that retained teachers shared dismissed teacher's view that there was no obligation to perform any duty that was not written into teacher's contract. Simcox v. Board of Ed. of Lockport Tp. High School, Dist. No. 205, Will County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1971, 443 F.2d 40. Constitutional Law 242.2(4)

State university's board of regents and chancellor's proffered reason for failing to renew former assistant chancellor's contract, namely, her alleged resistance to chancellor's reorganization efforts, was not a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason, as would shift burden to assistant chancellor to show that articulated reason was pretext, in her action alleging race and sex discrimination in violation of §§ 1981, 1983, and Title VII, where there was no evidence that assistant chancellor resisted chancellor's reorganization efforts, or that chancellor found fault with her concerns regarding such efforts. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 836. Civil Rights 1133; Civil Rights 1170

Evidence of profitability of criminal justice program did not demonstrate that articulated reason for non-renewal of professor's contract was pretextual as required to prove race discrimination, although college alleged that reason for non-renewal was financial and evidence showed that department produced more revenue than expenditures, where program was profitable during professors final year only because she was replaced with a part-time instructor. Lewis v. Chattahoochee Valley Community College, M.D.Ala.2001, 136 F.Supp.2d 1232. Civil Rights

Community college satisfied its burden of proffering race-neutral reasons for its decision not to renew African-American instructor's contract, where it contended that its decision was based on instructor's academic credentials, nonadherence to her work schedule, and general incompatibility with college administrators. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1133

If decision to nonrenew teacher's contract is based even partially on constitutionally impermissible ground, decision cannot stand unless constitutionally impermissible ground is merely incidental. Sheets v. Stanley Community School Dist. No. 2, D.C.N.D.1975, 413 F.Supp. 350, affirmed 532 F.2d 111. Schools 147.12

Former high school football coach, who was a white male, failed to show that school board's and black female school principal's proffered nondiscriminatory reason for declining to renew his coaching contract, which was that school principal sincerely believed coach had made derogatory remarks to students, was a pretext for racial discrimination in violation of Title VII and §§ 1983; although coach offered evidence that he made no such statements, he offered no evidence that called into question sincerity of principal's belief that he had done so. Riley v. Birmingham Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 2005, 154 Fed.Appx. 114, 2005 WL 2981869, Unreported. Civil Rights 1234

1980. ---- Reputation injury, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Any damage or stigma to instructor's good name with regard to disclosure of information concerning school board's decision not to rehire instructor was caused not by school board's action, but by instructor, who made school board's actions public by commencing litigation, and thus, relief under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 would be inappropriate, where no information concerning decision not to rehire instructor was contained within his personnel file, and information relevant to investigation was maintained in separate file not subject to disclosure except as mandated by law. Sherrod v. Palm Beach County School Bd., S.D.Fla.1985, 620 F.Supp. 1275, affirmed 792 F.2d 1125. Civil Rights 1038; Civil Rights 1040

1981. ---- Threat of non-renewal, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Where state gave plaintiff right to be employed as superintendent of school district for one year, he was employed by district for that year and, while there was a period when board of education intended not to renew the contract, the contract was renewed and no break in employment occurred, plaintiff could not recover under this section for deprivation of constitutionally protected property right. Elbert v. Board of Ed. of Lanark Community Unit School Dist. No. 305, Carroll County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 630 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1741, 450 U.S. 1031, 68 L.Ed.2d 226. Civil Rights 1133

1982. ---- Procedural requirements generally, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Even if contract grievance proceedings concerning nonrenewal of state college teacher's contract accorded neither with that process which would have been required had teacher had a constitutionally protected interest nor with provisions specified in federation agreement, departure from the contractual grievance procedure did not violate the Civil Rights Act. Lovelace v. Southeastern Massachusetts University, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1986, 793 F.2d 419. Civil Rights 1258

Untenured instructor at state college had no constitutional right to notice and hearing in respect to his nonretention; however, if the college's own rules dictated that certain procedures had to be used when an untenured instructor was not reappointed, it was bound to follow them. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Substantive due process rights generally do not apply to an untenured teacher, such as a teacher's aide, who has no right under state law to procedural process, or was not afforded a hearing, prior to dismissal or nonrenewal of his or her employment contract. Evans v. Page, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1975, 516 F.2d 18. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Nontenured professor, whose contract was not renewed, who was found to have had no expectancy of continued employment, who was not retained because vice-president for academic affairs found that his professional relations with individual students failed to meet minimum standards, with the university appearing to have followed procedures suggested by American Association of University Professors in a statement of procedural standards for faculty retention, had not been deprived of minimum standards of due process and was not entitled to reinstatement pending due process hearing. Blair v. Board of Regents of State University and Community College System of Tennessee, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1974, 496 F.2d 322. Colleges And Universities 8.1(7); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

1983. ---- Statement of reasons, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

A prosecutor's actions connected with initiation of prosecution, even if those actions are patently improper are immunized from civil liability under §§ 1983; however, purely administrative or investigative actions that do not relate to the initiation of a prosecution do not qualify for absolute immunity. Schenk v. Chavis, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2006, 461 F.3d 1043. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Where Ohio nontenured industrial arts teacher had been employed for eight successive years under series of one year certificates, it was not shown that teacher had submitted evidence of his completion of two courses on which his 1969 certificate had been conditioned and there was nothing in the record that could be construed to establish an expectancy of continued employment and it was not disputed that teacher had been notified in writing that Board did not intend to renew his contract for 1970-1971 school year, failure of Board to give statement of reasons for nonrenewal or to accord an opportunity to be heard did not violate due process. Patrone v. Howland Local Schools Bd. of Ed., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 472 F.2d 159, 67 O.O.2d 371. Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

Government employment as a teacher is neither life, liberty, nor property within due process clause, and a nontenured teacher's interest in knowing reasons for nonrenewal of contract and in confronting board on those reasons is not sufficient to outweigh interest of board in free and independent action with respect to employment of probationary teachers. Orr v. Trinter, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1971, 444 F.2d 128, 29 Ohio Misc. 149, 58 O.O.2d 467, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 2847, 408 U.S. 943, 33 L.Ed.2d 767, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 95, 409 U.S. 898, 34 L.Ed.2d 157.

To prevail on an Eighth Amendment failure to protect claim, a prisoner is required to show that (1) he is incarcerated under conditions posing a substantial risk of serious harm (the objective element); and (2) prison officials acted with deliberate indifference, i.e., that prison officials knew of and disregarded an excessive risk to inmate health or safety. Dickens v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 2006 WL 3190344. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Nontenured high school principal, as "initial contract teacher" under amended provisions of Wyoming Education Code, had no statutory right to statement of reasons nor to hearing prior to school board's decision not to rehire him for another year. Schmidt v. Fremont County School Dist. No. 25, State of Wyo., D.C.Wyo.1976, 406 F.Supp. 781, affirmed 558 F.2d 982. Schools 147.34(1) protectable property interest cognizable in civil rights action, though they had not received timely notice of nonrenewal and thus claimed they were automatically under contract for the next school year, and further claimed that, when their district was annexed by another, the annexing district was obliged to honor their contracts, where the claim sprang from school district's failure to comply with the statutory nonrenewal scheme. Hilton v. Pine Bluff Public Schools, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 796 F.2d 230. Civil Rights 1133

Failure to give former women's varsity basketball coach at college 12 months' notice that she would not be rehired did not amount to denial of coach's constitutional rights where coach served under temporary restricted appointment and was not covered by tenure, probationary and notice provisions of college handbook and regulations. Jacobs v. College of William and Mary, E.D.Va.1980, 517 F.Supp. 791, affirmed 661 F.2d 922, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 572, 454 U.S. 1033, 70 L.Ed.2d 477. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

College's failure to give former women's basketball coach and instructor notice of decision not to renew her contract at least 12 months before expiration of her appointment, as required by college's regulations, stated claim for relief under this section for deprivation of her constitutional rights. Jacobs v. College of William and Mary, E.D.Va.1980, 495 F.Supp. 183, affirmed 661 F.2d 922, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 572, 454 U.S. 1033, 70 L.Ed.2d 477. Civil Rights 1395(8)

1985. ---- Hearing, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

State university did not deprive nontenured associate professor of a liberty interest in connection with nonrenewal of his employment contract and denial of tenure without a pretermination hearing where even if challenged decision was based on allegedly false charges of unethical conduct in "secret file" reports, the university did not state publicly its grounds for termination. Davis v. Oregon State University, C.A.9 (Or.) 1978, 591 F.2d 493. Civil Rights 1133

School district officials' interpretation and application of Mississippi law in denying a hearing to teacher, whose contract was not renewed, did not raise any federal issue cognizable in action under this section. Roberts v. Arledge, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1129. Federal Courts 221

Tenured college instructor whose employment contract was not renewed for the 1973-74 school year should have been permitted, in his civil rights suit, to establish his entitlement to a hearing, the purpose of which would be to assure that his position was in fact "discontinued" within the meaning of his teaching contract and, if he was instead the victim of a "reduction in force," that the college trustees made a decision pursuant to their previously announced criteria. Collins v. Wolfson, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1100. Civil Rights 1424

Procedural due process issue presented by civil rights action of nontenured teacher who was not rehired by school district was whether the reasons given to plaintiff and circumstances surrounding the nonrenewal of his contract so besmirched his professional reputation and standing in community as to implicate his liberty interest and thus require a hearing at which he could attempt to clear his name. Springston v. King, W.D.Va.1975, 399 F.Supp. 985. Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

1986. ---- Pre-nonrenewal hearing, renewal of contract, deprivation of teachers' rights

Under circumstances not constituting a deprivation of liberty, there is no constitutional right to a hearing before discharge of nontenured teachers who have no property interest in continued employment. Kelly v. West Baton Rouge Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1975, 517 F.2d 194. Schools 147.6

Court's role in action by discharged teacher is not to second guess school administrators but to determine whether teacher's constitutional rights were transgressed. Hibbs v. Board of Ed. of Iowa Central Community College, N.D.Iowa 1975, 392 F.Supp. 1202. Schools 147.44

1988. ---- Property interest, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Persons who had been dismissed from positions as director of municipal school of nursing and as staff teaching nurse at that school sufficiently pleaded, for purposes of motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action, a property interest in continued employment and a liberty interest in the safeguarding of their reputation, honor and integrity so as to warrant protection of due process in their termination from employment. State of Mo. ex rel. Gore v. Wochner, E.D.Mo.1979, 475 F.Supp. 274, affirmed 620 F.2d 183, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 218, 449 U.S. 875, 66 L.Ed.2d 96. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(2)

1989. ---- Substantive due process, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Former university basketball coach's claim that he was denied employment and other property interests by university and university officials without due process of law did not support substantive due process claim. Mackey v. Cleveland State University, N.D.Ohio 1993, 837 F.Supp. 1396. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1)

Public school teacher had no substantive due process right to employment at a public school, for purpose of teacher's §§ 1983 claim, arising from his termination. Jerrytone v. Musto, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 295, 2006 WL 162656, Unreported. Schools 147.2(1)

1990. ---- Racial discrimination, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Finding that some of teachers hired by defendant school district to replace plaintiff black faculty members were black does not foreclose finding of racial discrimination in plaintiffs' terminations at least where termination and selection of replacement are accomplished separately. Clark v. Mann, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1104. Civil Rights 1555

In determining whether termination of employment of school teacher was racially motivated, each case must be decided upon basis of its own peculiar facts mindful of the historical background. Walton v. Nashville, Ark. Special School Dist. No. 1, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1968, 401 F.2d 137. Schools 147.2(2)

Negro schoolteacher's discharge was discriminatory where, after it became necessary to discharge a teacher because of decrease in school enrollment, her qualifications were compared only with those of other teachers in all Negro school involved, rather than with all other teachers in the county system. Hill v. Franklin County Bd. of Ed., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1968, 390 F.2d 583. Civil Rights 1133

Native American tutor did not show that race played a part in the decision to fire her, and therefore was not entitled to recover on her civil rights claims; tutor presented little or no evidence to establish a connection between school superintendent's racial views and her termination, failed to show that others similarly situated to her, from outside the protected class, were treated more favorably, and did not show that defendants' reasons for her termination, tutor's failure to follow administrative procedures and poor communication with parents, staff and students, were pretextual. Crowe v. School Dist. of Webster, W.D.Wis.2003, 300 F.Supp.2d 787. Civil Rights 1133

Tenured state university professor's constitutional rights were not transgressed when he was discharged where evidence supported finding that he was removed due to his inadequate performance and not because of his race. King v. University of Minnesota, D.C.Minn.1984, 587 F.Supp. 902, affirmed 774 F.2d 224, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1491, 475 U.S. 1095, 89 L.Ed.2d 893. Civil Rights 1134

1991. ---- Speech and writings generally, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Teachers' speech, as result of which they suffered adverse employment action, was on a matter of public concern, for purposes of First Amendment retaliation claim, where teachers, as elected representatives of the faculty at meeting of committee formed by superintendent to create an improvement plan for high school in response to faculty's concerns about principal, told superintendent that many of the faculty believed the principal was not following the improvement plan, that her replacement was necessary to alleviate the problems, and that the faculty would revolt if superintendent did not do something, and comments were made against a backdrop of widespread concern in the community. Harris v. Victoria Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1999, 168 F.3d 216, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 336 F.3d 343, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 533, 528 U.S. 1022, 145 L.Ed.2d 413. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Schools 147.12

Speech of former employee of public colleges organization speech did not address "matters of public concern" so as to support her § 1983 action against community college district board of trustees and employee's superiors for retaliation for her exercise of free speech; employee's speech related predominantly to her personal interest in resolving friction between herself and superior, rather than her concern as citizen over sexist behavior of organization official. Hartman v. Board of Trustees of Community College Dist. No. 508, Cook County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 4 F.3d 465, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Nontenured art professor's criticism of head of department did not per se lose its protection merely because it was private expression directed at his superior. Hillis v. Stephen F. Austin State University, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 665 F.2d 547, rehearing denied 669 F.2d 729, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 2906, 457 U.S. 1106, 73 L.Ed.2d 1315. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

In action for conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of his civil rights, evidence failed to establish that defendants had dismissed plaintiff as a law professor or otherwise penalized him because of his advocacy of Blacks or other minorities. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Improper operation and implementation of new special education program at elementary school involved matter of public concern, such that teachers stated civil rights claims against elementary school principal by alleging that he retaliated against them in response to their criticisms, where they spoke out at open meetings, their complaints were not centered on personal disputes, and they alleged no reasons why their interests in expressing themselves might be outweighed by any injuries caused to school. Love v. City of Chicago Bd. of Educ., N.D.Ill.1998, 5 F.Supp.2d 611. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Schools 147.12

Teacher's statements, including criticisms of school's policies regarding changing of student grades, student placement, locking lavatories, and ground maintenance, were not protected speech, for purposes of § 1983 action challenging alleged retaliatory dismissal; criticisms were made in teacher's capacity as employee. Storlazzi v. Bakey, D.Mass.1995, 894 F.Supp. 494, affirmed 68 F.3d 455. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Teacher's federal civil rights suit was an effort to seek redress of and compensation for alleged wrongs done to him individually by the school district and did not relate to a matter of public concern, and thus was not protected by the First Amendment. Sweeney v. Board of Educ. of Mundelein Consol. High School Dist. 120, Lake County, Ill., N.D.Ill.1990, 746 F.Supp. 758. Constitutional Law 82(12)

County community college dean of instruction had no constitutionally protected right to express himself in unbusinesslike and unreasonable manner, and where he was terminated for publicly expressing his anger, making physical threats towards other people with whom he had to work and publicly making derogatory comments about his supervisor and other administrative personnel, termination being caused by manner in which opinion was expressed rather than because of expression of opinion, there was no termination by reason of expression protected under U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 1. Russ v. White, W.D.Ark.1981, 541 F.Supp. 888, affirmed 680 F.2d 47. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Where a discharged teacher brings a civil rights action in which he alleges that he was terminated because he exercised his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, court's obligation is to determine from all the evidence the real reason for the teacher's termination. Williams v. Day, E.D.Ark.1976, 412 F.Supp. 336, affirmed 553 F.2d 1160 . Schools 147.12

1992. ---- Policy disputes, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Speech by tenured associate math professor at university, who challenged several departmental decisions and publicly supported another professor allegedly attacked by administration for refusing to lower academic standards, did not address matter of "public concern" protected by First Amendment; complaints were not directed to anyone outside university, and professor expressed belief that administration's procedures were detrimental to public interests in education only after filing of suit. Dorsett v. Board of Trustees for State Colleges & Universities, C.A.5 (La.) 1991, 940 F.2d 121. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

1993. ---- Unions, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Had superintendent of schools and members of board of education terminated employment of husband for his negotiating activities on behalf of school teachers or employment of wife, secretary to school district, for exercise of her freedom of speech, terminations would have violated husband and wife's constitutional rights and would have been prohibited. Hayes v. Cape Henlopen School Dist., D.C.Del.1972, 341 F.Supp. 823. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Schools 63(1)

New York City teacher who was allegedly terminated because of her union activities failed to establish Monell liability under § 1983 for violation of her First Amendment free association rights grounded on municipal custom in form of "lettering" of employees' files, i.e., placement of multiple negative reviews in files so that terminated employees faced significant obstacles in challenging basis for their termination; regardless of whether practice was commonplace, teacher made no showing it existed due to antiunion animus. McDonald v. Board of Educ. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21782685, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

1994. ---- Character or integrity, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

School committee did not act arbitrarily or capriciously in dismissing small town elementary teacher who allegedly carried in public view on his property located in town where he taught, in a lewd and suggestive manner, a dress mannequin that he had dressed, undressed and caressed, notwithstanding claim that reasons for the dismissal were unrelated to the educational process or to the working relationship within the educational institution. Wishart v. McDonald, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1974, 500 F.2d 1110. Schools 147.20

Conclusions that school board draws from inquiries into character and integrity of its teachers must not be trival or unrelated to the educational process or to working relationships with an educational institution in order to warrant dismissal of teacher. Sullivan v. Meade County Independent School Dist. No. 101, D.C.S.D.1975, 387 F.Supp. 1237, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 530 F.2d 799. Schools 147.9

1995. ---- Curriculum, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Discharge of three eighth grade teachers for distributing poem, thrust of which was alluring invitation and beckoning to throw off disciplines imposed by moral environment of their homelife and enter a new world of love and freedom, including freedom to use drugs, to take their clothes off and get an early start in use of certain vulgarities, which was not shown to have been relevant to subject matter of courses being taught and which had not been submitted to or approved for distribution, did not violate teachers' civil rights; there was good cause for termination. Brubaker v. Board of Ed., School Dist. 149, Cook County, Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 502 F.2d 973, clarified 527 F.2d 611, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1953, 421 U.S. 965, 44 L.Ed.2d 451. 1996. ---- Disruptions, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Professor who played a prominent role in unauthorized student protest activities during school hours on school property, who continued to lead raucous catcalls after the university president had asked the audience to be quiet, who attempted to stop governor's motorcade, and whose acts caused a substantial and material disruption of a duly constituted university function which created a danger of violence was not, by reason of his discharge, denied freedom of speech, nor of assembly, nor of equal protection. Adamian v. Lombardi, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1979, 608 F.2d 1224, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2158, 446 U.S. 938, 64 L.Ed.2d 791. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Constitutional Law 91; Constitutional Law 242.2(4)

Fact that high school teacher made statements to group of assembled students that by themselves and in a different context might have constitutional protection did not insulate such teacher from sanctions for noncompliance with school board regulation requiring him to assist in quieting students disruptions. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

The valid termination of teacher's teaching license for reasons unrelated to teacher's suit alleging that board of education discriminated on basis of sex in its policy of granting child care leave precluded court from enjoining board from discharging teacher or from ordering board to grant him child care leave. Ackerman v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1974, 387 F.Supp. 76. Civil Rights 1452

1999. ---- Legitimate and illegitimate reasons, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Even assuming that pretermination hearing afforded to professor was a sham because administrators used sexual harassment complaint to get rid of highly paid professor to save money, and thus were not impartial, professor was not denied due process because he had sufficient posttermination protection by way of appeal of college's decision to state court, an impartial decision maker. McDaniels v. Flick, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1995, 59 F.3d 446, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1017, 516 U.S. 1146, 134 L.Ed.2d 97. Colleges And Universities 8.1(6.1); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

Jury could find that school district employee's discharge occurred with deliberate indifference to her First Amendment rights based on evidence that one school board member believed that the employee's public opposition to a bond issue was the reason that superintendent had recommended her removal, that the bond issue and the employee's termination were raised from the floor at school board meeting, and that at least one school board member had raised the possibility at an executive session that the recommendation that the person be discharged was tied to the bond issue and that the proffered reasons for the discharge were not valid. Ware v. Unified School Dist. No. 492, Butler County, State of Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1990, 902 F.2d 815. Civil Rights 1421

Although black faculty members and administrators, in civil action for deprivation of rights alleging that Arkansas school district discriminated racially with respect to their terminations, did not need to prove that impermissible reason formed sole basis for their dismissals in order to establish their claims, showing falling short of that standard would leave defendants opportunity to escape liability by showing that plaintiffs would have been dismissed even if impermissible factors had not been considered. Clark v. Mann, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1104. Civil Rights 1544

Even assuming that teacher's report to teachers association relative to school board's ability to pay salary increase may have been only partially a factor in his subsequent dismissal, if that report was a protected activity then his dismissal was still constitutionally impermissible. Gieringer v. Center School Dist. No. 58, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1973, 477 F.2d 1164, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 165, 414 U.S. 832, 38 L.Ed.2d 66. Schools 147.12

School committee established legitimate justification for actions that teacher alleged to be retaliatory, including transferring students from his classes and requiring him to justify his teaching methods, in teacher's § 1983 action alleging that retaliatory discharge resulted from his exercise of free speech rights; rational bases for taking actions included complaints from parents and teachers, adjustments in scheduling due to declining enrollment, teacher's own desire for 80 percent course load, and internal administrative procedures. Storlazzi v. Bakey, D.Mass.1995, 894 F.Supp. 494, affirmed 68 F.3d 455. Civil Rights 1249(2)

In the absence of violation of constitutional rights, decision of school board to dismiss school superintendent was neither unreasonable nor arbitrary where evidence, including disclosure that school superintendent's relationship with faculty and principals had been destroyed and that school superintendent's effectiveness as a superintendent was also destroyed, could support conclusion that situation was due to school superintendent and some of his policies. nonteaching job was not "constructive resignation," but, rather, was "discharge" depriving instructor of tenured employment without due process; instructor made it clear that he did not want to resign and that he was at most willing to take leave without pay, state college required that instructor show up for nonteaching job as condition to continued employment, and, when instructor did not show up, chancellor told him that he had resigned. Patterson v. Portch, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 853 F.2d 1399. Civil Rights 1123; Civil Rights 1133

College's academic dean and associate dean, who occupied positions whose authority extended to supervision and disciplining of faculty members, did not deliberately, or with gross negligence, fail to adequately supervise faculty members, and thus, were not liable under § 1983 for alleged constructive discharge of professor and departmental chairman arising from internal disputes, where the deans never took positions opposing the professor, and repeatedly tried to negotiate settlement between the professor and member of faculty with whom he had dispute; furthermore, the deans were not required to take sides among disputatious colleagues absent evidence that the internal dispute was based upon or motivated by unlawful reasons. Kline v. North Texas State University, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 782 F.2d 1229. Civil Rights 1123; Civil Rights 1359

State university professor was constructively discharged, despite his retirement, for purpose of due process claim, if he was unjustly given sub-par teaching evaluations which were publicly disclosed to other members of the faculty, berated by department chair, removed as chair of the department of promotion and tenure, relegated to teaching freshman level courses, not given credit for being overloaded with courses, and listed as academically unqualified in department paperwork. Stiner v. University of Delaware, D.Del.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 106. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

Teacher who did not show that his resignation was so involuntary that it amounted to constructive discharge or that he had no real choice but to resign did not establish § 1983 due process claim that he was deprived of his property interest in continued employment; there was no violation of due process since teacher chose to end his employment without hearing and not to avail himself of available due process procedures. Singer v. Denver School Dist. No. 1, D.Colo.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1325. Civil Rights 1123

2001. ---- Future employment opportunities, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

High school football coach's discharge for allegedly improper racial remark did not give rise to claim under § 1983 for denial of substantive due process, even though coach alleged that defamatory nature of school Board's charges and findings would seriously impugn his character, undermine his associations, and damage his ability to seek employment elsewhere as head coach; breach of contract by public employer does not give rise to claim for denial of substantive due process. Holthaus v. Board of Educ., Cincinnati Public Schools, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 986 F.2d 1044. Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Schools 147.2(1)

Public school guidance counselor's alleged loss of reputation and esteem in community because of her termination did not give rise to § 1983 civil rights action where counselor made no claim that her future employment was restricted or that she was harmed through public dissemination of information regarding her termination. Allen v. Denver Public School Bd., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1991, 928 F.2d 978. Civil Rights 1133

Public employee must show how employer infringed upon his liberty interest in his good name and reputation as it affected his protected property interest in continued employment, and to be actionable, statements must impugn good name, reputation, honor, or integrity of employee, be false, occur in course of terminating employee or must foreclose other employment opportunities, and be published. Singer v. Denver School Dist. No. 1, D.Colo.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1325. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Former probationary teacher's conclusory assertion in his complaint against school officials under § 1983 that officials' allegedly defamatory statements impaired his ability to pursue his career, in that since his termination he was unable to secure teaching position, was insufficient to demonstrate that his difficulty in securing employment resulted from stigma placed upon him by officials, as required to establish claim for stigmatization amounting to deprivation of liberty interest. Federico v. Board of Educ. of Public Schools of Tarrytowns, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1395(8)

In order to prevail on § 1983 claim based upon violation of due process with respect to allegedly defamatory statements of school officials, plaintiff teacher is required to prove: that officials published stigmatizing information which is at least arguably false; and that as result of stigma, he has been foreclosed from range of other employment opportunities. Federico v. Board of Educ. of Public Schools of Tarrytowns, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 194. Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1)

Allegedly defamatory statements about teacher's dismissal did not impose stigma or other disability upon teacher that foreclosed other employment opportunities and, therefore, there was no deprivation of liberty interest in violation of due process; although statements addressed teacher's professional skills and his morality, teacher did not show that he suffered permanent exclusion from or protracted interruption of employment. Vukadinovich v. Board of School Trustees of Michigan City Area Schools, N.D.Ind.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1325, affirmed 978 F.2d 403, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 133, 510 U.S. 844, 126 L.Ed.2d 97. Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

2002. ---- Recommendation of dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

School principal's recommending to board of education the discharge of probationary teacher, made in the course of his official duties, did not violate teacher's constitutional rights so as to give rise to cause of action by teacher against principal. Lombard v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1166. Civil Rights 1131

2003. ---- Probationary teachers, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Assistant professors lacked property interest in continued employment with public university due to board of regents bylaws provision stating that their appointments were probationary and carried no presumption of renewal, thus precluding procedural due process claims arising from nonrenewal and denial of tenure, despite professors' contention that bylaws provision, by also stating that specific term could not exceed three years, created reasonable expectation of special status when their specific term appointments were renewed beyond three years; appointment letters stated, consistent with bylaws, that specific term appointments could not exceed total of seven full academic years, putting professors on notice that probationary appointments could last up to seven years before tenure consideration. Batra v. Board of Regents of University of Nebraska, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 79 F.3d 717. Colleges And Universities 8.1(1); Colleges And Universities 8.1(2); Constitutional Law 277(2)

Allegations of probationary instructor at community college that his department head deprived him of his right to free speech under color of state law by causing his termination, based on instructor's outspoken support of Persian Gulf War, were sufficient to state § 1983 claim against department head based upon First Amendment. Grady v. El Paso Community College, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 979 F.2d 1111. Civil Rights 1395(8)

School district did not take adverse employment action by terminating provisional employee who had failed civil service exam, passing grade on which was required under state statute to continue beyond limit of provisional period; thus, employee was precluded from recovering against district on claim that she was terminated in retaliation for her exercise of free association rights. Wheeler v. Natale, S.D.N.Y.2001, 137 F.Supp.2d 301. Constitutional Law 91; Schools 63(1)

By alleging that school superintendent and members of school board acted under color of state law to punish probationary teacher for the exercise of right of free speech under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1, probationary teacher stated a cognizable civil rights claim. Dennis v. County School Bd. of Rappahannock County, W.D.Va.1984, 582 F.Supp. 536. Civil Rights 1395(8)

2004. ---- Student teachers, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

State high school and its principal owed no duty to private college student, who had been student teacher at high school, and therefore student was entitled to no relief under this section against principal who terminated student's status as student teacher with result that student was denied college degree and certification to teach. Rowe v. Chandler, D.C.Kan.1971, 332 F.Supp. 336. Civil Rights 1070; Civil Rights 1072

2005. ---- Tenured teachers, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Where public college faculty member has tenure procedural and substantive due process must be provided before employment may be terminated. Shaw v. Board of Trustees of Frederick Community College, D.C.Md.1975, 396 F.Supp. 872, affirmed 549 F.2d 929.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff served as chairman of mathematics department of a school for certain years, acquired tenure, and that defendant members of a school committee deprived her of such position without cause and without affording her notice and a hearing as required by the due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 stated a claim on which relief could be granted under this section. Needleman v. Bohlen, D.C.Mass.1974, 386 F.Supp. 741. Civil Rights 1395(8)

2006. ---- Nontenured teachers, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Nontenured professor has no enforceable right to hearing absent protected property interest or liberty interest. Hillis v. Stephen F. Austin State University, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 665 F.2d 547, rehearing denied 669 F.2d 729, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 2906, 457 U.S. 1106, 73 L.Ed.2d 1315. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

A discharged president of a community college had adequate remedy under Michigan law for loss of his employment, and, thus, federal civil rights cause of action alleging violation of due process could not be maintained; president was not a tenured employee, but, rather, was employee pursuant to four-year contract. Heath v. Highland Park School Dist., E.D.Mich.1992, 800 F.Supp. 1470. Civil Rights 1312

A nontenured teacher at a public institution does not have the right to be insulated from review by superiors merely because he or she engages in constitutionally protected conduct. Cherry v. Burnett, D.C.Md.1977, 444 F.Supp. 324 . Colleges And Universities 8.1(3)

2007. ---- Procedural requirements generally, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Ultimate reversal of school board's decision to dismiss tenured teacher did not federalize her claim, for Constitution demanded due process, not error-free decision-making. Franceski v. Plaquemines Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 772 F.2d 197. Civil Rights 1455

Where tenured school teacher received adequate notice, specification of the charges against her, and hearing at which she was able to present her defense, procedural due process under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14 did not require that teacher be given three evaluations in accordance with local school board's written evaluation procedures before being notified of her termination and, thus, did not permit her to enforce such procedures under this section; enforcement of the regulations was to be done through the state court system. Goodrich v. Newport News School Bd., C.A.4 (Va.) 1984, 743 F.2d 225. Constitutional Law 278.5(4); Schools 147.31

Mere fact that plaintiff's discharge from his position as superintendent of school district may not have been in accordance with conference procedures outlined in 1953 Comp. § 77-8-18 (repealed) and set forth in a regulation promulgated by State Board of Education did not necessarily mean that there was a federal constitutional violation for which relief was afforded under this section where plaintiff was given a hearing by local board and was entitled to a further de novo hearing before State Board of Education and an appeal to New Mexico Court of Appeals. Atencio v. Board of Educ. of Penasco Independent School Dist. No. 4, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1981, 658 F.2d 774. Civil Rights 1133

A mere departure from university regulations occurring when board of regents failed to review record of discharge hearing pertaining to tenured faculty member of university, standing alone, could not deprive faculty member of any right which could be asserted under this section, notwithstanding claim that board of regents' violation of its own regulations by itself violated due process. Bates v. Sponberg, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1976, 547 F.2d 325. Civil Rights 1133

School board accorded teacher due process by contacting her, on first becoming aware of her conduct, and asking about facts and suggesting compromise solution, and thereafter, on rejection of suggestion, giving notice of charges and of time and place of hearing, by attempting to avoid adverse publicity which might prejudice case and dealing directly with counsel retained by teacher, by allowing teacher to testify personally, by honoring her refusal to discuss details with her relationship with unmarried male, by permitting counsel to make closing statements and to submit briefs and by preparing written findings and thereafter making one last effort to persuade her to change her living arrangement, all before dismissing her. Sullivan v. Meade Independent School Dist. No. 101, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1976, 530 F.2d 799. Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

State college president did not violate college rules in not remanding issue with respect to termination of untenured teacher to faculty committee for further deliberation until committee reached definite decision where committee had reached decision that matter should be reviewed by president and rules did not limit committee's recommendation to favoring or opposing retention. Jablon v. Trustees of California State Colleges, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 482 F.2d 997, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 926, 414 U.S. 1163, 39 L.Ed.2d 116. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

Where a discharged public employee is given notice of the charges, an adequate explanation of the evidence, and an adequate opportunity to present his side of the story, his due process rights are not violated. Stiner v. University of Delaware, D.Del.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 106. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Teacher received adequate procedural protections throughout the termination process and, thus, did not establish §§ 1983 due process claim against school district, superintendent of the district, and the board members of school district; letters describing the evidence supporting the charges against teacher and explicitly providing teacher an opportunity to tell his side of the story satisfied the notice requirement, and there was no bias or lack of impartiality among the board members. Martin v. School Dist. No. 394, D.Idaho 2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1028. Schools 147.36

Even if university professor had property right, protected by due process clause, in continued employment with university, termination of professor pursuant to reduction in force (RIF) did not deny professor due process, where professor was provided with 30-day notice of her termination and was afforded an administrative process through which she could raise any challenges to the decision before her termination became effective, coupled with a judicial appeal to the local trial court. Guerrero v. University of District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 32, withdrawn from bound volume, amended and superseded 251 F.Supp.2d 13.

A nontenured teacher may be discharged for no reason or for any reason not impermissible in itself or as applied, and he has no constitutional right to statement of reasons or hearing on university's decision not to rehire him. Sament v. Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1976, 413 F.Supp. 434, affirmed 547 F.2d 1164. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

2008. ---- Grievance procedures, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State university professor's allegation that grievance procedures were not fully followed stated due process claim, even though grievance procedures were in place at university and professor utilized procedures in grieving his academic evaluations, particularly where professor was never given criteria under which faculty were evaluated, and thus was not given adequate explanation of evidence against him. Stiner v. University of Delaware, D.Del.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 106. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

2009. ---- Notice, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Even if rule of public and parochial school athletic association which prohibited member schools from engaging in football practice before a specific date each year provided notice that violation might subject the school to punitive sanctions, imposition of sanction which resulted in football coach's loss of coaching and teaching position denied due process where rules of the association provided no notice that the association could directly or indirectly punish the coach personally. Wright v. Arkansas Activities Ass'n (AAA), C.A.8 (Ark.) 1974, 501 F.2d 25. Constitutional Law 298.5

Letter that teacher received stating that his probation was "extended indefinitely" satisfied the notice element of federal due process; letter specifically stated the circumstances giving rise to the reprimand and what later became one of the bases for teacher's termination, namely teacher's time out of his classroom, letter alerted teacher to the possibilities of suspension and/or termination, and letter concluded with an invitation to contact superintendent to discuss the problems addressed therein. Martin v. School Dist. No. 394, D.Idaho 2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1028. Schools 147.34(1)

2010. ---- Hearing, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Record, in civil action for deprivation of rights filed by black faculty members and administrators alleging defendant school district discriminated racially with respect to teacher terminations, recruitment, promotions, and salaries provided no basis for holding that one named plaintiff, who was dismissed with two or three weeks remaining on his contract and thus was arguably deprived of property interest protected by due process, was denied due process where there was no contention that such plaintiff should be treated differently from other plaintiffs with respect to due process claim and where record was silent as to whether such plaintiff was afforded due process hearing or opportunity therefore. Clark v. Mann, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1104. Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1)

Tenured or certified faculty members, who were terminated because of retrenchment program as city university and who were advised of review committee decisions at least after review by chancellor or his designee, were not entitled to a second hearing before chancellor or his designee upon his review of committee decision. Klein v. Board of Higher Ed. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1113. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

2011. ---- Pre-dismissal hearing, deprivation of teachers' rights

Complaint alleging that Secretary of Education of Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and board of trustees of state college failed to afford tenured professor a hearing prior to summary termination and that such was done in bad faith and in violation of professor's constitutional rights failed to state claim for relief absent allegation as to what actions the Secretary and board took to terminate the employment and when they were taken. MacMurray v. Board of Trustees of Bloomsburg State College, M.D.Pa.1977, 428 F.Supp. 1171. Civil Rights 1395(8)

2012. ---- Statement of reasons, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights district had, by failing to attend the hearing, waived her opportunity to require the board to list reasons for its determination not to rehire her; thus, secretary could not be heard to complain that she was denied procedural due process by failure to provide her with a list of reasons for her dismissal. Hayes v. Cape Henlopen School Dist., D.C.Del.1972, 341 F.Supp. 823. Constitutional Law 43(1); Schools 63(1)

2013. ---- Miscellaneous claims, dismissal, deprivation of teachers' rights

Fact that college president, who scheduled two teachers for dismissal for violations of policy manual if they did not submit letters of contrition by specified date, could have accepted letters he received some two days late on the same terms as if they had been submitted earlier and without inconvenience to the administration did not make his refusal to do so a violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 since he was under no obligation to accept letters of contrition at any date. Shaw v. Board of Trustees of Frederick Community College, C.A.4 (Md.) 1976, 549 F.2d 929. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3)

2014. Reinstatement, deprivation of teachers' rights

School board's demand that Connecticut public school teacher seeking reinstatement release his medical records to board and its representatives, in addition to independent psychiatrist they wanted him to be examined by, was arbitrary; board was not competent to independently evaluate those records, so requesting them could serve no legitimate purpose. O'Connor v. Pierson, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 426 F.3d 187. Schools 147.47

Teacher, who voluntarily resigned during first year of three-year contract and was not rehired, was not denied any federally protected right by school district and had no cause of action against district based on § 1983. Hankins v. Dallas Independent School Dist., N.D.Tex.1988, 698 F.Supp. 1323. Civil Rights 1132

2041. Police activities generally

If police engage in illegal activity in concert with a defendant beyond the scope of their duties the remedy lies, not in freeing the equally culpable defendant, but in prosecuting the police under the applicable provisions of state or federal law. (Per Mr. Justice Rehnquist with the Chief Justice and one Justice concurring and two Justices concurring in the judgment.) Hampton v. U. S., U.S.Mo.1976, 96 S.Ct. 1646, 425 U.S. 484, 48 L.Ed.2d 113. Criminal Law 36.6

District court erred in analyzing all of plaintiff's civil rights claims from standpoint of single question of whether strip search of plaintiff violated her constitutional rights, where plaintiff stated claims for wrongful arrest, wrongful search and seizure, deliberate indifference to her constitutional rights by virtue of city's failure to train and supervise police officer, false imprisonment, assault and battery, malicious prosecution, abuse of process, intentional infliction of emotional distress, defamation, and invasion of privacy. Cottrell v. Kaysville City, Utah, C.A.10 (Utah) 1993, 994 F.2d 730. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Acts of police officers in ambit of their personal, private pursuits fall outside of this section. Stengel v. Belcher, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1975, 522 F.2d 438, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 1505, 425 U.S. 910, 47 L.Ed.2d 760, certiorari dismissed 97 S.Ct. 514, 429 U.S. 118, 50 L.Ed.2d 269. Civil Rights 1326(8)

For acts of chief of police to be actionable under this section, they must have been done under color of state or local law and amount to a deprivation of a federal constitutionally protected right. Dewell v. Lawson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1974, 489 F.2d 877. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Acts of local police officers, under authority of a local ordinance are within the scope of the protection of this section. Sheridan v. Williams, C.A.9 (Or.) 1964, 333 F.2d 581. Civil Rights 1326(8)

This section was not enacted to discipline local law enforcement officials. Smith v. Dougherty, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1961, 286 F.2d 777, certiorari denied 82 S.Ct. 180, 368 U.S. 903, 7 L.Ed.2d 97. See, also, Roberts v. Pepersack, D.C.Md.1966, 256 F.Supp. 415, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 175, 389 U.S. 877, 19 L.Ed.2d 165; Basista v. Weir, D.C.Pa.1964, 225 F.Supp. 619, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 340 F.2d 74.

Officer accused of unconstitutionally using deadly force is entitled to qualified immunity if his or her conduct was objectively reasonable. Cunningham v. Hamilton, E.D.Va.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 457, affirmed 84 Fed.Appx. 357, 2004 WL 48857, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 68, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 25. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Female high school athlete could not proceed with § 1983 suit against police officer, in his individual capacity, seeking damages for alleged gender discrimination in enforcement of ban on sports participation by smokers, in violation of Title IX, when monetary damages were unavailable under Title IX. Schultzen v. Woodbury Cent. Community School Dist., N.D.Iowa 2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1309; Civil Rights 1356

In § 1983 action, conduct of police officers should be analyzed under Fourth Amendment, not under due process standard. Frane v. Kijowski, N.D.Ill.1998, 992 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Injuries arbitrarily inflicted by police are constitutionally cognizable and remediable. Simms v. Reiner, N.D.Ill.1976, 419 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Misconduct on part of public police officer, to extent that it infringes constitutionally protected rights, gives rise to civil rights action for deprivation of rights under color of state law. Glover v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1975, 401 F.Supp. 632. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2042. Accident reports, police activities

Allegations that police deliberately filed false accident report tending to defame victim's reputation, that report assessed victim with blame for accident, that intent of defamatory statements in report was to inflict emotional and physical distress, and that police gave license to medical personnel to look upon victim with contempt and to mistreat her could not provide basis for § 1983 civil rights action; alleged conduct did not violate rights entitled to constitutional protection under § 1983. Griggs v. Lexington Police Dept., D.Mass.1987, 672 F.Supp. 36, affirmed 867 F.2d 605. Civil Rights 1395(5)

2043. Arrest and detention, police activities--Generally

That undercover police officer who alerted other officers to suspicious appearance of parade protester issued citation to protester upon visiting him at jail, following his arrest by other officers, did not make undercover officer the arresting officer for purposes of § 1983 liability for alleged false arrest. Graves v. City of Coeur D'Alene, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2003, 339 F.3d 828. Civil Rights 1358

Off-duty police officer's conduct of displaying his shield, identifying himself as police officer to arrestee, physically restraining arrestee, transporting him at gunpoint and detaining him until police officers arrived constituted an arrest, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 false arrest claim. Jocks v. Tavernier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 128. Arrest 68(3); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Tort of false arrest supports claim against state police under § 1983 because it violates Fourth Amendment. Cook v. Sheldon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 41 F.3d 73. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Tort of false arrest supports claim against state police under § 1983 because it violates Fourth Amendment. Cook v. Sheldon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 41 F.3d 73. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Individual's right to be free from unlawful arrest and imprisonment implicates liberty interest protected by Constitution and federal laws, violation of which may give rise to cause of action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Motes v. Myers, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1987, 810 F.2d 1055, rehearing denied 837 F.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1088(4)

An individual's right to be free from unlawful arrest is a right protected by Federal Constitution and a violation of such right may be ground for a suit under this section proscribing a deprivation of rights. Duriso v. K-Mart No. 4195, Division of S. S. Kresge Co., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 559 F.2d 1274. Civil Rights 1088(4)

On proof that there was no legal basis for arrest of plaintiffs, the filing of charges against them and their imprisonment, this section authorized relief against each policeman and state official who, acting under color of state law, was responsible for those wrongs; also, any conspiracy to commit such wrongs was actionable. Hampton v. City of Chicago, Cook County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 484 F.2d 602, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1413, 415 U.S. 917, 39 L.Ed.2d 471, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1414, 415 U.S. 917, 39 L.Ed.2d 471. Civil Rights 1326(8); Conspiracy 7.5(2)

To recover damages from police officer under this section for wrongful arrest it must be shown that arresting officer was acting under color of state law and that he deprived plaintiff of a constitutional right. Giordano v. Lee, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1970, 434 F.2d 1227, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 2250, 403 U.S. 931, 29 L.Ed.2d 709. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Under Nebraska law, sheriff was not a policy maker for his county, and therefore complaint, in Native American arrestee's § 1983 action alleging that sheriff's involvement in order preventing a protest march, and his apprehension of arrestee for violating such order, while failing to zealously pursue crimes committed against Native American victims, violated arrestee's First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights, failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted; sheriff had no authority to set policy regarding apprehension of individuals violating criminal laws. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police officer sufficiently participated in arrest to be held liable in arrestee's § 1983 action for false arrest, even though he stayed with her car after the arrest while another officer took her to the police station where she was placed in a holding cell, where, after the officer's car allegedly rammed the arrestee's car from behind as arrestee was driving the car in reverse at a very slow speed, the officer allegedly stood outside her car door with his gun pointed at her and told her not to move, and later searched her car incident to her arrest. Mack v. Town of Wallkill, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 552. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiffs who brought § 1983 action based on claims of unlawful detention and malicious prosecution could maintain claims, if at all, based only on alleged violation of their Fourth Amendment rights, and could not maintain claims pursuant to substantive due process protections of Fourteenth Amendment. Swales v. Township of Ravenna, N.D.Ohio 1997, 989 F.Supp. 925. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

To state cause of action for "wrongful arrest" in violation of federal rights, plaintiff must show that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law; that this conduct deprived plaintiff of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Federal Constitution; and that defendant's acts were proximate cause of injuries and consequent damages sustained by plaintiff. Cornish v. Papis, C.D.Ill.1997, 962 F.Supp. 1103. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1326(8)

Civil rights claims based on arrest and continued seizure of arrestee were not actionable under substantive due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, because Fourth Amendment governed pretrial deprivations of liberty. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Individual has federally protected right to be free from unlawful arrest and detention resulting in significant restraint of liberty, and violation of such right may be grounds for suit under § 1983; arrest or detention may be unlawful if it is accomplished without due process of law as required by Constitution. Swenson v. Culberson County, W.D.Tex.1996, 925 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1088(4)

To prove constitutional violation for false arrest and malicious prosecution under § 1983 civil rights statute, plaintiff must establish elements of state law torts of false arrest or malicious prosecution and must show that defendants were acting under color of state law. Reid v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1990, 736 F.Supp. 21. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1326(1)

Individual has federally protected right to be free from unlawful arrest and detention resulting in significant restraint of liberty, and violation of this right may be grounds for suit under federal civil rights statute. Duckett v. City of Cedar Park, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 950 F.2d 272. See, also, LaBate v. Butts, E.D.Mich.1987, 673 F.Supp. 887, affirmed 865 F.2d 258.

An arrest must meet constitutional standards to relieve law officer from possible civil liability under this section. Bur v. Gilbert, E.D.Wis.1976, 415 F.Supp. 335. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations of unlawful arrest and imprisonment, if established as true, would constitute proof of deprivation of constitutional rights. Dennis v. Hein, D.C.S.C.1976, 413 F.Supp. 1137. Civil Rights 1420

An individual's right to be free from unlawful arrest is clearly such a constitutionally protected right as, if violated, may be basis for suit under this section. Lamb v. Cartwright, E.D.Tex.1975, 393 F.Supp. 1081, affirmed 524 F.2d 238. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Action for false arrest and detention and use of unreasonable force in the course of an arrest may properly be brought under this section. Everett v. City of Chester, E.D.Pa.1975, 391 F.Supp. 26. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2044. ---- Seizure requirement, arrest and detention, police activities

Where arrest by justice of the peace at landfill was invalid, subsequent chase of one of arrestees was but a continuation of an unlawful detention, not a separate violation of arrestee's civil rights. Brewer v. Blackwell, C.A.5 (La.) 1982, 692 F.2d 387. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers' arrest of arrestee was not a seizure for Fourth Amendment purposes, and thus arrestee could not assert a §§ 1983 claim for malicious prosecution predicated on a violation of his Fourth Amendment Rights, where the arrest occurred as a result of an arrest without a warrant and therefore was not pursuant to a legal process and after the legal process was initiated, arrestee had to go to court in at least two occasions but did not even have to endure trial. Cabrera-Negron v. Municipality of Bayamon, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 49. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officer's accidental shooting of arrestee while officer was reholstering his weapon after handcuffing arrestee did not constitute Fourth Amendment "seizure" so as to be basis for excessive force claim under § 1983; officer did not intend bullet to bring arrestee within his control. Troublefield v. City of Harrisburg, Bureau of Police, M.D.Pa.1992, 789 F.Supp. 160, affirmed 980 F.2d 724. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officer's shooting of victim, whom he suspected of involvement in a shoplifting incident, was wholly accidental and was not a "seizure" within meaning of Fourth Amendment so that victim could not recover on his § 1983 claim based on excessive use of force; officer observed victim near site of shoplifting incident, with a can of corned beef and a twinkie in his pocket, and shot victim when his firearm accidentally discharged while officer was attempting to put his car in park in order to exit the car and question the victim. Glasco v. Ballard, E.D.Va.1991, 768 F.Supp. 176. Arrest 68(4); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Hunters were not arrested under either federal or state definition of arrest, where deputy stopped hunters, asked for identification, and warned them that they were trespassing and that legal consequences would ensue but did not prevent them from walking away or from continuing to hunt or even from continuing to cross land in question. Skipper v. Phipps, N.D.Fla.1980, 483 F.Supp. 1213. Arrest 68(3)

2045. ---- Supervisory personnel, arrest and detention, police activities

Whether police officer's supervisor played affirmative part in unlawful arrest of parade protester and search of protester's backpack, or whether officer decided to make arrest independent of supervisor, was question for jury in protester's § 1983 action for false arrest when, in response to officer's radio communication that protester had refused to consent to search of backpack, supervisor told officer to arrest protester if he did not consent to search, but officer did not provide supervisor with any information as to why he wanted to conduct search. Graves v. City of Coeur D'Alene, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2003, 339 F.3d 828. Civil Rights 1429

Coordinator of State police drug interdiction unit was not a supervisor of State police officers who had allegedly stopped and detained African-American and Hispanic motorists based on their race, and thus was not subject to supervisory liability under § 1983, where coordinator was not part of State police chain of command, but rather, conducted training sessions that the officers attended. Chavez v. Illinois State Police, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 251 F.3d 612. Civil Rights 1358

Police chief's alleged failure to train officers or monitor their training was not affirmatively linked to off-duty officer's altercation with plaintiff, as required for plaintiff's claim of supervisory liability under § 1983. Ousley v. Town of Lincoln through its Finance Director, D.R.I.2004, 313 F.Supp.2d 78. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee failed to allege that sheriff had requisite personal involvement in deprivations of arrestee's constitutional rights, associated with incidents in which arrestee was allegedly falsely arrested by deputies, subjected to excessive force, and defamed, as required to impose liability on sheriff under § 1983; although arrestee alleged that sheriff failed to adequately train or supervise deputies, knew about and tolerated deputies' allegedly unlawful behavior, and failed to institute proper system of review and reprimand of his deputies, arrestee did not allege any facts to support his claims. Houghton v. Cardone, W.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 268. Civil Rights 1395(5); Civil Rights 1395(6)

A supervisory official may be liable under § 1983 for the behavior of his subordinates if: (1) the behavior of the subordinates results in a constitutional violation, and (2) the official's action was affirmatively linked to that behavior such that it could be characterized as supervisory encouragement, condonation, or acquiescence, or gross negligence amounting to deliberate indifference. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1355

Detainee claiming he was wrongfully arrested for failing to identify himself stated claim for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights under § 1983, against supervisor of arresting police officer, by alleging that supervisor had authorized officer to arrest for failure to provide identification and had implemented custom and policy of arresting persons on that ground. Risbridger v. Connelly, W.D.Mich.2000, 122 F.Supp.2d 857, reversed and remanded 275 F.3d 565, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2046. ---- Intent to violate rights, arrest and detention, police activities

To withstand a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff in a § 1983 suit challenging alleged racial discrimination in traffic stops and arrests must present evidence from which a jury could reasonably infer that the law enforcement officials involved were motivated by a discriminatory purpose and their actions had a discriminatory effect. Marshall v. Columbia Lea Regional Hosp., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 345 F.3d 1157. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer's specific intent in arresting plaintiff was not required by either § 1983 or Fourth Amendment; therefore, district court erred in instructing jury that, to prevail on § 1983 claim for false arrest, plaintiff was required to show that police officer specifically intended to deprive him of his constitutional rights. Caballero v. City of Concord, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 956 F.2d 204. Arrest 58; Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1437

City police officer did not intend to harm or worsen the legal plight of a fleeing suspect or anyone else, thus precluding imposition of §§ 1983 liability in connection with the death of a motorist struck by the suspect's vehicle; the fact that no narcotics were found in the suspect's car did not negate the possibility that the suspect was conducting a narcotics transaction, or more importantly, that the officer had reason to believe that he was so involved. Anagnos v. Hultgren, D.Mass.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 184. Civil Rights 1088(1)

City police officers could not be held liable for punitive damages in § 1983 suit arising from arrest of plaintiffs for violating residential picketing ordinance, absent evidence indicating that officers' acts were motivated by evil motive and intent or that acts constituted oppression, fraud, malice or callous or reckless indifference to rights of others. Veneklase v. City of Fargo, D.N.D.1995, 904 F.Supp. 1038, reversed in part, appeal dismissed in part 78 F.3d 1264, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 178, 519 U.S. 867, 136 L.Ed.2d 118. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Section 1983 plaintiff alleged "intentional," rather than "negligent," acts by city police officers in effecting his arrest; complaint alleged that officer hit plaintiff on head, yanked plaintiff's arms up and down, lifted plaintiff three inches off ground, smashed him on hood of police car, and threatened him with physical violence. Mahon v. City of Bethlehem, E.D.Pa.1995, 902 F.Supp. 76. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer is liable under federal civil rights statute if officer deliberately arrests someone without probable cause. Ruiz v. Herrera, S.D.N.Y.1990, 745 F.Supp. 940. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2047. ---- Unreasonable seizure, arrest and detention, police activities

Individual's allegations that he was forcibly removed from his parents' home by county employees when he was a minor due to relatives' knowingly false allegations of child neglect, and that he was removed without an investigation, a pre-deprivation hearing, or exigent circumstances, stated a procedural due process claim under § 1983. Brokaw v. Mercer County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1000. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 17

A § 1983 claim for false arrest, resting on the Fourth Amendment right of an individual to be free from unreasonable seizures, including arrest without probable cause, is substantially the same as a claim for false arrest

under New York law. Weyant v. Okst, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 101 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1088(4)

False arrest claim against highway patrolman was governed by Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable seizures, rather than general substantive due process standard under Fourteenth Amendment, even though Fourth Amendment protections applied to state officials through due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment. Larson v. Neimi, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1397. False Imprisonment 2

Police officers did not violate arrestee's due process or Fourth Amendment rights by towing and storing his motor vehicle, pursuant to California's impoundment statute; arrestee was lawfully arrested for violation of seat belt law, impounding an unattended vehicle advanced a number of legitimate government purposes, including public safety, and due process did not prevent an officer from making the administrative decision to impound vehicle without judicial review. Hupp v. City of Walnut Creek, N.D.Cal.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 1229. Constitutional Law 262

Even if false arrest claims were subject to favorable termination requirement under Heck, arrestee's pretrial diversion was not a criminal conviction, and, thus, her suit under §§ 1983 against city and police detective, alleging that her Fourth Amendment right to be free from arrest without probable cause was violated, was not barred on ground that it could invalidate a conviction, where, pursuant to Kentucky law, charges against arrestee were dismissed when she successfully completed provisions of pretrial diversion agreement. Butts v. City of Bowling Green, W.D.Ky.2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 532, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 2099805. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest made in violation of Fourth Amendment standards will give rise to action under § 1983. Baltz v. Shelley, N.D.Ill.1987, 661 F.Supp. 169. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Unlawful arrest of individual by police officers, who were acting under color of state law, deprived him of his U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 rights. Morrison v. Fox, W.D.Pa.1979, 483 F.Supp. 390. Civil Rights 1088(4)

An action for unlawful arrest and detention may be brought under this section as it represents an unconstitutional deprivation under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4 and 14. Zurek v. Woodbury, D.C.Ill.1978, 446 F.Supp. 1149. See, also, Brainerd v. Potratz, N.D.Ill.1976, 421 F.Supp. 836. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Warrantless arrest, that is made without probable cause, can give rise to § 1983 claim against erring officers, as such arrest is "unreasonable seizure" under Fourth Amendment. Smith v. Dowson, D.Minn.1994, 158 F.R.D. 138. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee was barred under Heck v. Humphrey from bringing illegal seizure and wrongful arrest claims against police officers, where success on claims would have necessarily implied invalidity of his convictions, and arrestee had not demonstrated that those convictions had been overturned. Johnson v. Arndt, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 514, 2005 WL 348409, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2048. ---- Advisement of grounds for arrest, arrest and detention, police activities

Arrestee did not have Sixth Amendment or Fourth Amendment right to be informed of reason for his arrest, for purposes of civil rights action by arrestee against police officers; Sixth Amendment protection did not come into play until government had committed itself to prosecution, and state was not committed to prosecuting arrestee during brief period he remained in custody; Fourth Amendment required only that police have probable cause to believe individual had broken the law before arresting him or her, and evidence was sufficient to support finding that police had probable cause to believe that arrestee had committed crime. Kladis v. Brezek, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 823 F.2d 1014. Arrest 68(1)

2049. ---- Chase, arrest and detention, police activities

Intent-to-harm standard, rather than the deliberate indifference standard, applies to all § 1983 substantive due process claims based upon the conduct of public officials engaged in a high-speed automobile chase aimed at apprehending a suspected offender; overruling Feist v. Simonson, 222 F.3d 455. Helseth v. Burch, C.A.8 (Minn.) 2001, 258 F.3d 867, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 924, 534 U.S. 1115, 151 L.Ed.2d 888. Automobiles 175(1); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Police officer's high-speed pursuit of suspect which resulted in suspect's vehicle colliding with injured motorist's automobile did not constitute "seizure" of motorist under Fourth Amendment actionable under § 1983 as termination of motorist's freedom of movement was caused by suspect's collision with motorist's automobile, and not means that police officer meant to apply, flashing lights and continuing pursuit. Jones v. Chieffo, E.D.Pa.1993, 833 F.Supp. 498, affirmed 22 F.3d 301. Arrest 68(4)

Because police officer's collision with automobile during high-speed chase was "unknowing act" and not willful detention, widow of driver failed to show that driver had been "seized" as necessary to bring civil rights action based on violation of driver's Fourth Amendment rights. Hicks v. Leake, W.D.Va.1992, 821 F.Supp. 419. Arrest 68(7)

2050. ---- Child care following arrest, arrest and detention, police activities

Temporary care of minor children by arresting officers was mere unavoidable consequence of lawful arrest of individual engaged in supervising children and, in and of itself, could give rise to no claim against officers as matter of law, where individual was not immune from arrest otherwise called for, and children were not subject to unreasonable or injurious treatment. Witherspoon v. U.S., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1988, 838 F.2d 803, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 150, 488 U.S. 858, 102 L.Ed.2d 122. False Imprisonment 5

Law enforcement officers' conduct in leaving arrestees' minor daughter alone in camper trailer at campground, causing her to be placed in great fear for her safety as result of her parents having been arrested, handcuffed, and taken into custody in the middle of the night, demonstrated exercise of extremely poor judgment, but did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation which could support section 1983 claim on minor's behalf for emotional distress. Moore v. Marketplace Restaurant, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 754 F.2d 1336. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Actions of State park and planning commission police officers who kept two-year-old child, who had been riding without safety seat required by Maryland law in automobile driven by motorist who was arrested for drunken driving, in heated police automobile at scene of arrest for two hours until child safety seat was brought by child's mother, did not give rise to liability on part of commission in federal civil rights action; even assuming that actions were pursuant to custom, policy, or procedure, actions were reasonable as matter of law. Barnes v. Maryland Nat. Capital Park and Planning Com'n, D.Md.1996, 932 F.Supp. 691. Civil Rights 1088(4)

After driver had been arrested, abandonment of driver's child and grandchild in parked car was actionable under § 1983; arresting officer had been told by driver that children had no way of getting home alone and that they had only 20 cents in change between them, child became ill after driver's arrest and grandchild was left in wet diapers for approximately six hours in parking lot. Walton v. City of Southfield, E.D.Mich.1990, 748 F.Supp. 1214, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 995 F.2d 1331. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2051. ---- Conspiracy, arrest and detention, police activities

Detectives did not conspire to deprive suspect of his constitutional rights in violation of § 1983 by virtue of their actions throughout investigation; their actions did not provide factual basis for agreement to deprive suspect of his constitutional rights, and their conduct in finding probable cause and investigating shooting was not unconstitutional. Green v. City of Paterson, D.N.J.1997, 971 F.Supp. 891. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Police officer was not liable on § 1983 civil rights complaint alleging that defendant officer and other officers had mutual understanding to deprive arrestee of his Fourth Amendment rights by arresting him, holding him in subway station, and holding and processing him at police station when he had allegedly violated no law; officer's assistance in detaining and processing arrestee amounted to nothing other than doing his job, as there was nothing in record to suggest that officer knew that arrest was sham. Humphrey v. Demitro, N.D.Ill.1996, 931 F.Supp. 571, reversed in part 148 F.3d 719, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee's allegations that no probable cause existed for arrest and that police officers, police chief, deputy chief, and mayor engaged in coverup of omissions and misrepresentations in arrest warrant affidavit and refused to investigate arrestee's report of theft stated claim of conspiracy to deprive arrestee of constitutional rights by false arrest. Lo Sacco v. City of Middletown, D.Conn.1990, 745 F.Supp. 812. Conspiracy 18

Prisoner's civil rights claim against city and police officers for allegedly illegal arrest and illegal search was barred under Heck v. Humphrey, as prisoner's allegations that defendants conspired to use fruits of arrest and search to convict him and that prisoner suffered loss of income and property as result of his subsequent conviction questioned validity of prisoner's conviction. Copus v. City of Edgerton, W.D.Wis.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1047, affirmed in part, reversed in part 151 F.3d 646. Civil Rights 1088(3); Civil Rights 1088(4)

City police officers' alleged participation in entrapment of inmate, leading to his indictment, following arrest on other charges, for attempted murder based on misrepresentations by confidential informant, did not rise to level of constitutional violation, as required to support conspiracy claim under §§ 1983. Almonte v. Florio, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 60306, Unreported. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

2052. ---- Cruel and unusual punishment, arrest and detention, police activities

Holding jail inmate in holding cell for minimal period of time, less than 20 hours, while sheriff's department checked on whether detainer was still lodged by another court, following one court's order for inmate's release, did not rise to level of cruel and unusual punishment and did not violate due process, especially when no evidence of negligence of malice existed, although inmate claimed he was taken from regular assigned cell and put in drunk tank. Edwards v. Oberndorf, E.D.Va.2003, 309 F.Supp.2d 780, affirmed 63 Fed.Appx. 756, 2003 WL 21224212. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1527

Plaintiff had no claim for cruel and unusual punishment against deputy who arrested her and charged her with crimes. Williams v. DiVittoria, E.D.La.1991, 777 F.Supp. 1332. Sentencing And Punishment 1442

Even if arrestee's request for medical attention was a constitutionally protected statement, for purposes of maintaining §§ 1983 action for retaliation, delays in processing and receiving food and water alleged by arrestee were de minimis inconveniences not unique to her circumstances or singularly directed at her, but of the kind normally experienced by other persons under arrest. Maxwell v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2053. ---- Discrimination, arrest and detention, police activities

Section 1983 claims of racially discriminatory traffic stops and arrests should be held to a clear evidence standard. Marshall v. Columbia Lea Regional Hosp., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 345 F.3d 1157. Civil Rights 1420

Police officers called to investigate possible use of stolen credit card did not deny credit card holder equal protection of law when they arrested him for disorderly conduct after he became angry about allegedly being profiled as wrongdoer because of his race, and refused to quiet down; there was no evidence that officers would have treated white person any differently, in similar circumstances. Scott v. Macy's East, Inc., D.Mass.2002, 2002 WL 31439745, Unreported. Arrest 63.4(15); Constitutional Law 223

2054. ---- Display of warrant, arrest and detention, police activities

Arrestee's claim that sheriff failed to show warrant to him before or contemporaneously with his arrest failed to state claim under federal civil rights statute, since no constitutional provision obligated sheriff to display proof of authority to arrest. Bradley v. Extradition Corp. of America, W.D.La.1991, 758 F.Supp. 1153. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2055. ---- Equal protection, arrest and detention, police activities

County, sheriff, and undersheriff were not liable under §§ 1983 to shareholder in land-owning corporation for class-of-one equal protection violation consisting of failure to adequately investigate and prosecute persons who trespassed on land held by corporation, absent showing that defendants enforced trespassing laws in any different fashion with respect to other, similarly situated county residents. Grubbs v. Bailes, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 445 F.3d 1275. Sheriffs And Constables 100

Arrestee failed to prove that city, city police chief, police officers and others violated his equal protection rights, in connection with the arrest, absent any showing that they burdened a fundamental right, which he was exercising, targeted a suspect class, of which he was a part, or treated him any differently than others similarly situated without any rational basis. Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 291. Arrest 63.1; Constitutional Law 250.1(3)

Police captain's alleged issuance of an all points bulletin for plaintiff's arrest, and placement of plaintiff's name and the fact that he was "driving black" into police computer system, with the result that the police surrounded plaintiff's house and frightened his children did not give rise to an equal protection claim based on selective enforcement; captain had a legitimate basis for issuing the all points bulletin, given the information provided by the nursing home and the conservator that plaintiff had kidnapped his mother from her nursing home, even if the accusations ultimately were found unwarranted. Collins v. West Hartford Police Dept., D.Conn.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 83. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Complaint failed to state claim that Native Americans were denied equal protection by Nebraska officials' adoption of policy of minimal criminal law enforcement when victims of crimes were Native Americans, absent allegation of existence of similarly situated people for whom the laws were vigorously enforced. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Allegations by woman who had participated with police internal affairs office in sting operation aimed at police officer who had sexually assaulted woman that internal affairs office had policy of requiring additional proof to arrest police officers, as opposed to private citizens, failed to state claim under equal protection clause in woman's federal civil rights action; no facts were alleged to support subjective view of favored treatment of officers accused of crimes, and department had set up sting operation to secure arrest of officer who assaulted woman. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Landowners failed to state claim for violation of their right to equal protection of the laws; owners alleged that sheriffs, due to personal animus against them, refused to enforce restraining orders owners had obtained against their neighbors, but they failed to specifically allege that sheriffs treated them differently from similarly situated landowners. Marino v. Mayger, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 393, 2004 WL 2801795, Unreported. Constitutional Law 211(1); Sheriffs And Constables 99

2056. ---- Falsification of reports, arrest and detention, police activities

Evidence presented question for jury as to whether arresting police officer falsified arrestee's statement following arrest, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 malicious prosecution claim; arrestee claimed that the statement written by the officer was false, that it had been edited to favor the police, and that arrestee refused to sign the statement for that reason, and officer testified that the statement was an accurate account of what arrestee told him. Jocks v. Tavernier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 128. Civil Rights 1429

Police officers' allegedly wrongful arrests for having defied officers' supposed authority, and then falsifying police report in order to support those charges, could form basis of subsequent civil rights suit by arrestees, even if that conduct could have been deemed mere "simple negligence." Borunda v. Richmond, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 885 F.2d 1384, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

If detective manipulated the identification process before the victim selected a photograph of her assailant, manipulated it after the identification, and ignored and concealed evidence inconsistent with the eyewitness's supposed unequivocal identification of arrestee as her assailant, he would have violated arrestee's constitutional due process right not to be subjected to criminal charges on the basis of false evidence that was deliberately fabricated by the government. Ramirez v. County of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1208. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police chief participated in warrantless deprivation of arrestee's liberty before arraignment by telling arresting officer to inflate amount of damage to police vehicle allegedly caused by arrestee so that she could be arrested and prosecuted for felony criminal mischief, precluding summary judgment for police chief on qualified immunity grounds in arrestee's § 1983 action for false arrest. Mack v. Town of Wallkill, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 552. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Intentionally false report, directly causing parolee's loss of liberty, can state a cause of action for deprivation of a parolee's constitutional rights; parolee has liberty interest in not having his conditional release unfairly revoked to extent that his initial confinement, prior to a probable cause hearing, is a direct result of the parole officer's actions. Taylor v. Sullivan, S.D.N.Y.1997, 980 F.Supp. 697, affirmed 166 F.3d 1201. Pardon And Parole 56

Deputies had qualified immunity from § 1983 plaintiff's claim that they filed false police reports. White v. Tamlyn, E.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1047. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Defamation/perjury claim concerning detective's alleged presentation of false statements and documents to court and to grand jury did not involve violation of any of arrestee's federally protected rights and, thus, was not actionable under § 1983. Franklin v. City of Kansas City, D.Kan.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1380. Civil Rights 1038; Civil Rights 1088(5)

Falsified police reports are only actionable under § 1983 if those reports result in deprivation of life, liberty or property. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Arrestee's claim against state game and fish officer for malicious prosecution, on ground that the officer knowingly made false statements in his incident report and at arrestee's criminal trial in an attempt to obtain a conviction for evading, eluding and/or obstructing an officer and for driving off of an established road, was not cognizable under § § 1983 even though arrestee was acquitted on all but the driving off of an established road offense, where the driving off-road offense and the evading and eluding offense arose out of the same events, and the charges were based on the same finding of probable cause and the same testimony at trial. Wheeler v. Scarafiotti, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 85 Fed.Appx. 696, 2004 WL 37976, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether police officers planted evidence on citizen and falsely pursued prosecution, precluding summary judgment on citizen's malicious prosecution and malicious abuse of process claims under § 1983 related to his arrest. Henry v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22077469, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2057. ---- First amendment violations, arrest and detention, police activities

In § 1983 action alleging First Amendment violations by police officer, "but for" standard of proof applied; plaintiff was not required to prove that defendant's sole motive was to chill plaintiff's protected expression, but only had to show that officer's intent or desire to curb expression was determining or motivating factor in making the arrest. Tatro v. Kervin, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1994, 41 F.3d 9. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police requirement that protestor at presidential appearance not cross intersection was valid time, place and manner restriction on speech that did not violate First Amendment; restriction was content neutral, protection of president was significant government interest, and there were ample opportunities to communicate messages, including other three corners of intersection. Burnett v. Bottoms, D.Ariz.2005, 368 F.Supp.2d 1033. Constitutional Law 90.1(4); Municipal Corporations 703(2)

Owners, employees, and customers of Latino-owned business who brought §§ 1983 action against city and police officers, stemming from execution of search warrant at premises, failed to establish that raid was product of bigotry toward Latinos and Catholic religion, as required to maintain First Amendment religious discrimination claims; there was no evidence that officers targeted business because of association with Catholicism, or that officers were aware that plaintiffs were in fact Catholic. Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., D.Utah 2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 1013. Constitutional Law 84.5(1); Searches And Seizures 101

Native American arrestee's § 1983 action alleging that sheriff pursued criminal prosecution of Native Americans for their religious practices, but not others, failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, despite claim that the "white majority" in the county had not been prosecuted for their religious beliefs; arrestee failed to allege that the "white majority" was similarly situated to the Native Americans and that they had engaged in conduct similar to that described in the complaint. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Assuming that arrestee engaged in protected speech when she insisted that she receive medical treatment for injuries allegedly suffered in altercation that precipitated her arrest, arresting officer did not unconstitutionally retaliate against arrestee in violation of her First Amendment rights in taking approximately three hours to process her arrest through central booking after she was returned from hospital; time span did not fall outside normal time period necessary for processing arrestees. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Arrest 70(1); Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

2058. ---- Forced entries, arrest and detention, police activities

Conduct of deputy sheriffs in attempting to force open locked bathroom door in order to serve arrest warrant did not rise to level of gross negligence and could not support civil rights claim based on alleged substantive due process violation, although arrestee shot herself as result of deputies' actions, where deputies did not know that arrestee was mentally disturbed or that she had a gun in the bathroom. Wilson v. Northcutt, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1993, 987 F.2d 719, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Although family members did not have vicarious § 1983 claim based on arrestee's allegedly illegal arrest and detention, family members had their own § 1983 claims arising from allegedly illegal entry where arrest was accomplished by nonconsensual, warrantless entry into family home. Buenrostro v. Collazo, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 777 F.Supp. 128, affirmed 973 F.2d 39. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Arrestee's allegations that police arrested him in his home and searched his residence without a warrant stated claim against police under § 1983. Hunt v. Jaglowski, N.D.Ill.1987, 665 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2059. ---- Informant's arrest, arrest and detention, police activities

Where police officers had no idea that plaintiff's decedent might be an informer until after their arrest of him, they incurred no liability by deferring ascertainment of his informer claim until the arrest process had been completed. O'Neal v. Esty, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 637 F.2d 846, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 2050, 451 U.S. 972, 68 L.Ed.2d 351. False Imprisonment 10

2060. ---- Length of detention, arrest and detention, police activities

Although county was entitled to combine probable cause determination following warrantless arrests with arraignment it was not immune from systemic challenges for failure to afford prompt probable cause determinations, where county's current policy was to offer combined proceedings within two days, exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays, and thus delays could exceed 48-hour period permissible under the Fourth Amendment. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, U.S.Cal.1991, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 500 U.S. 44, 114 L.Ed.2d 49, on remand 943 F.2d 36. Arrest 70(2); Criminal Law 228

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether witnesses to police shooting volunteered information to police or refused to provide when requested to do so, and as to amount of time reasonable necessary to secure scene and insure safety of officers and witnesses present, precluding summary judgment for county in section 1983 action arising out of detention of witnesses to shooting. Walker v. City of Orem, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 451 F.3d 1139. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Four-day incarceration period between arrest and presentation to magistrate violated arrestee's right to prompt presentation, for purposes of her § 1983 action; county made no showing of justification for delay other than as course of measure to force her to cooperate with booking procedures, and refusal to cooperate with booking procedures did not excuse extended detention. Hallstrom v. City of Garden City, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1993, 991 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 549, 510 U.S. 991, 126 L.Ed.2d 450. Arrest 70(2)

Arrestee had constitutionally protected liberty interest in being free from incarceration without prompt pretrial court appearance, by virtue of state statute requiring that defendant be tried within 60 days or released and statute providing defendant with right to prompt pretrial court appearance. Oviatt By and Through Waugh v. Pearce, C.A.9 (Or.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1470. Constitutional Law 263

Arrestee may state constitutional claim if, after police officers make arrest pursuant to warrant, police officers fail to release arrestee after they receive information upon which to conclude beyond reasonable doubt that such warrant has been withdrawn. Duckett v. City of Cedar Park, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 950 F.2d 272. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Deputy sheriff's detention for approximately 30 minutes of passenger in vehicle that deputy had stopped for speeding, the majority of which time was spent awaiting assistance, was not unreasonable for investigatory stop so as to deprive deputy of defense of qualified immunity; the vehicle was similar to one that deputy had noticed earlier in evening in the vicinity of marijuana fields, driver did not respond initially to his siren and blue light, and after stopping the vehicle, passenger and her companions did not respond to deputy's loud instruction to exit vehicle. Courson v. McMillian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 939 F.2d 1479. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's allegation that he was detained for an excessive period following his arrest because there was shortage of fingerprint technicians on duty to perform job of fingerprint clearance was insufficient to state civil rights claim based on procedural due process violation, in view of adequate state tort law remedies. Hood v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 927 F.2d 312. Civil Rights 1319

another person did not rise above level of negligence, precluding arrestee from recovering in civil rights action after he was released; although arrestee's fingerprints did not match those found on cigarette packages at scene of robbery and third party was implicated in robbery, arrestee's detention was based on his identification in photographic lineup in which third party was not identified. Simmons v. McElveen, C.A.5 (La.) 1988, 846 F.2d 337. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where prisoner was detained by sheriff in jail for almost nine months after dismissal of indictments against him through failure of sheriff to properly process dismissal, action for deprivation of civil rights was improperly submitted to jury on basis of negligence since sheriff was chargeable with constructive notice of termination of proceedings against plaintiff or alternatively absence of such notice was not legal justification for plaintiff's continued imprisonment. Whirl v. Kern, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1968, 407 F.2d 781, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 210, 396 U.S. 901, 24 L.Ed.2d 177. False Imprisonment 13

Genuine questions of material fact, regarding whether detention of owners, employees, and customers of Latino-owned business, pursuant to search warrant, was unduly prolonged precluded summary judgment on §§ 1983 claims brought by detainees against city and police officers. Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., D.Utah 2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 1013. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Failure to provide arrestees with citation release or a post and trial release option did not constitute a deprivation of due process or equal protection on basis of lengthy post-arrest detention, and therefore mayor and police chief were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestees' §§ 1983 action; the unavailability of citation release was due to unintended technological failures, and there was no evidence that the plaintiffs were treated differently than other groups of arrestees as to the availability of a post and trial release option. Barham v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 48, affirmed in part 434 F.3d 565, 369 U.S.App.D.C. 146. Arrest 70(1); Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6); Constitutional Law 250.2(1); Constitutional Law 262

Duration of traffic stop of vehicle with six passengers which took about 30 minutes was not unreasonable, as required to support passengers' § 1983 claim against officers for unreasonable detention; none of the passengers were wearing seat belts in violation of state law, officer decided to check identifications, and two passengers were eventually removed from vehicle and arrested. Lewis v. City of Topeka, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1209 . Civil Rights 1088(4)

Prison administrative assistant's failure to investigate detainee's claim that detainee was being erroneously held and was victim of case of mistaken identity did not constitute deliberate indifference amounting to violation of detainee's civil rights where administrative assistant had no authority to release detainee from custody, detainee was being held pursuant to warrant from another state, administrative assistant had relatively little access to information which would have exonerated detainee, and, had administrative assistant successfully investigated detainee's claims, there was no way to guarantee that requisite application to court would have resulted in earlier release from custody. Roa v. City of Bethlehem, Pa., E.D.Pa.1991, 782 F.Supp. 1008. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee stated claim for violation of his federal civil rights against arresting officers who detained him for more than 31 days based solely on fact that his name, birthdate and eye color corresponded with person wanted in New York, without taking time to compare his fingerprints and photographs, which would have indicated their mistake; defendants did not show that failing to take simple steps of verifying photo or fingerprints at some point prior to 31 days after arrest was not clearly established as violation of due process at time that it occurred, so as to entitle them to qualified immunity. Buenrostro v. Collazo, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 777 F.Supp. 128, affirmed 973 F.2d 39. Civil Rights 1395(6); Civil Rights 1398

Woman's detention at sheriff's department for approximately five hours following her arrest was not unreasonable per se, where she refused to provide certain information requested in booking procedure; arresting officer's alleged evil motive in extending woman's detention was not relevant. Thomas v. Frederick, W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540

. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2061. ---- Manner of transportation, arrest and detention, police activities

Police officers did not violate constitutional rights of prisoner by transporting him, while handcuffed, in squadrol rather than padded police car. Magayanes v. Terrance, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 739 F.2d 1131. Civil Rights 1095

Handcuffing youth, who prior to his arrest for motorcycle traffic offenses had been arrested on approximately five occasions and was known to arresting officer, and then transporting him in cage of patrol car did not make out a case of constitutional proportions required by this section. Gandy v. Panama City, Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1974, 505 F.2d 630. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers did not create dangerous condition that led to shooting victim's death, in violation of substantive due process, when they decided to transport critically wounded victim to nearby hospital in police wagon rather than waiting for ambulance crew; death was not foreseeable result of officers' actions, absent any evidence that ambulance crew might have done better job of saving life of unresponsive victim than staff at hospital, which officers reached within few minutes, and officers did not increase opportunity for harm to victim or act with willful disregard or deliberate indifference for his safety. Hansberry v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 404. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

One and one-half day detention between postarrest administrative steps on misdemeanor charge of attempted theft and arrestee's appearance in front of judge was reasonable, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 action for alleged violation of civil rights, even though person arrested on misdemeanor charges normally would have been released on bond without having been brought before judge, where there was outstanding arrest warrant for arrestee's failure to appear in court on previous charge for aggravated criminal sexual assault. Cemond v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1990, 753 F.Supp. 713. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police department's fingerprint clearance process, under which defendant is not taken for probable cause hearing until check of his fingerprints has been made, aids in making positive identification and obtaining the prior record of the defendant, is justifiable and the delay does not violate a defendant's Fourth Amendment rights. Brown v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 713 F.Supp. 250. Arrest 70(2)

Violations of Fourth Amendment requirement of judicial determination of probable cause as prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest are redressable under § 1983. Katona v. City of Cheyenne, D.Wyo.1988, 686 F.Supp. 287. Civil Rights 1088(4)

There is no state of mind requirement in excess of simple negligence to establish violation of an arrestee's right to receive a reasonably prompt determination of probable cause, and thus negligence will support an action under civil rights statute based on such a violation. Austin v. City of East Grand Rapids, W.D.Mich.1988, 685 F.Supp. 1396. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegation that law enforcement officials infringed arrestee's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights by holding him more than 24 hours without a hearing while they sought to build a case against him stated claim against officials under § 1983. Hunt v. Jaglowski, N.D.Ill.1987, 665 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee did not have constitutional right to be released on bail before various booking procedures attending the arrest could be completed and, even if he were detained somewhat longer than he should have been before he was allowed to post bail, he had a tort remedy under Illinois law and, therefore, he was not deprived of due process of law and had no claim under this section. Rodgers v. Lincoln Towing Service, Inc., N.D.Ill.1984, 596 F.Supp. 13, affirmed 771 F.2d 194. Bail 42

If plaintiff police officer could show that law enforcement officers, without lawful authority, intentionally detained him at interrogation room for any significant period of time, he could show a denial of his right to liberty cognizable under this section. Chrisco v. Shafran, D.C.Del.1981, 507 F.Supp. 1312. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2062. ---- Mass arrests, arrest and detention, police activities

Pursuant to principle that mass arrests without investigation go far beyond permissible limits of police conduct, police could not make mass arrests of "hippies" in park where primary motive for various arrests and interrogations was desire to rid park of "hippies", or at least those "hippies" thought to be especially undesirable, nor could police lawfully arrest on basis of suspicion, or even probable cause to believe, that arrestee occupied status of being homosexual or narcotic addict. Hughes v. Rizzo, E.D.Pa.1968, 282 F.Supp. 881.

2063. ---- Pretext, arrest and detention, police activities

Police officer's detention of arrestee for 30 minutes at hospital where arrestee was taken following arrest for driving under the influence of alcohol, after blood tests revealed no trace of alcohol in arrestee's system, did not violate arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights, and so officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging unlawful detention, where arrestee was detained so another officer could drive to hospital and serve complaint for resisting arrest and ticket for failing to maintain single lane of traffic; there was no evidence suggesting that arrestee was held on pretext, and, even if resisting arrest charge was "trumped up," traffic ticket was legitimate. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Motorist arrested for speeding stated § 1983 claim against village and police officer for violation of Fourth Amendment by alleging that he was seized pursuant to illicit law designed purposefully to create pretext for seizing citizens and trying to collect fines from them based on false appearance of wrongdoing created by illicit speed limit signs. Rose v. Village of Peninsula, N.D.Ohio 1993, 839 F.Supp. 517. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2064. ---- Reputation injury, arrest and detention, police activities

Because plaintiff could not establish unconstitutional deprivation of his liberty on basis of his arrest for theft, he could not maintain action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 with regard to his separate claim for injury to his reputation resulting from arrest. Mark v. Furay, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 769 F.2d 1266, on remand. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where members of political and social group alleged that defamatory statements by police captain were made in connection with their unconstitutional arrest and prosecution, injury to members' reputations constituted "deprivation of liberty interest," and was therefore actionable under statute governing deprivation of civil rights. Stevens v. Rifkin, N.D.Cal.1984, 608 F.Supp. 710. Civil Rights 1038

2065. ---- Resistance, arrest and detention, police activities

Accused who asserted that his arrest was unlawful, that he had right to resist such arrest and that result of doing so was that he was badly beaten by police had claim to federal right under this section. MacDonald v. Musick, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 425 F.2d 373, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 54, 400 U.S. 852, 27 L.Ed.2d 90. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Not only may an individual not be deprived of a federally protected right by an unlawful arrest and detention, but he has an undoubted right to resist an unlawful arrest, and courts will uphold the right of resistance in proper cases. Basista v. Weir, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1965, 340 F.2d 74.

Plea of nolo contendere, to charges that he disturbed the piece, precluded civil rights claimant from establishing, in §§ 1983 action, that police officers engaged in unlawful detention or false arrest. Reynolds v. Smythe, E.D.Pa.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 724. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officer who was directed by other officers to make arrest and second officer who did not become involved until arrestee resisted, and who had not witnessed arrestee's prior conduct, were not acting in retaliation for arrestee's protected speech and thus could not be liable under §§ 1983 for violation of First Amendment rights. Birdine v. City of Coatesville, E.D.Pa.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 182, vacated in part, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1358

2066. ---- Search related detentions, arrest and detention, police activities

Driver could not maintain § 1983 claim alleging that sheriff violated his Fourth Amendment rights by detaining him in order to photograph driver and his vehicle, since sheriff's actions did not detain driver; city police officers already were detaining driver, after valid traffic stop, for purpose of searching his vehicle when sheriff arrived on scene, and there was no evidence that officers had completed their search and were prepared to release driver before sheriff finished taking his photographs. Valance v. Wisel, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 110 F.3d 1269. Civil Rights 1088(4)

There was no Fourth Amendment violation by police officers in detaining individuals not mentioned in search warrant for apartment, and thus, individuals who were detained had no § 1983 cause of action against police officers based on their detention, where individuals were present at premises while search was being conducted. Liggins v. Morris, D.Minn.1990, 749 F.Supp. 967. Arrest 63.5(3.1); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Federal civil rights plaintiff stated cause of action under Fourth Amendment, where she alleged that she and five other individuals were confined by police to a small two-person room for approximately two hours, even though confinement occurred during search undertaken pursuant to valid search warrant; detention may have been inordinately prolonged or may have gone beyond measures necessary to protect officers and prevent plaintiff from fleeing. Jacobs v. Paynter, N.D.Ill.1989, 727 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2067. ---- Territorial jurisdiction of police, arrest and detention, police activities

Florida's arrests of defendant, a citizen subject to conservation regulations, outside Florida territorial limits did not transmute otherwise proper efforts of state officials in enforcing regulations, limiting taking of crawfish, into violation of constitutional rights in violation of this section. Felton v. Hodges, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1967, 374 F.2d 337, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 467, 389 U.S. 971, 19 L.Ed.2d 461. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2068. ---- Training, arrest and detention, police activities

Civil rights claims against city, county, and other defendants in their official capacities for inadequate training were properly dismissed, where district attorney and police officer acted as reasonable officers in determining that there was probable cause to obtain warrant for plaintiff's arrest. Kohl v. Casson, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1993, 5 F.3d 1141. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Sheriff's failure to train his officers adequately regarding reliable techniques for identifying arrestees, along with his failure to account for incarcerated suspects, subjected sheriff to liability for violating civil rights of detainee, who was misidentified as probationer and was unnecessarily detained for six days for alleged probation violation, where there was evidence that sheriff knew of prior instances of mistaken identity, but failed to establish appropriate policies and continued to allow his deputies to detain persons even when discrepancies existed. Rivas v. Freeman, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 940 F.2d 1491. Civil Rights 1358

County's incarceration of arrestee, who had been arrested pursuant to facially valid bench warrant, did not amount to constitutional violation, even though arrestee had already been allowed to plead guilty before city magistrate on underlying charges; there was no indication that any county official acted with deliberate indifference or callous disregard to arrestee's rights, nor was there any claim that county failed to train its officers or prosecutors. Erdman v. Cochise County, Ariz., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 926 F.2d 877. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Town that did not possess information about risks of cocaine-induced excited delirium and potential serious health consequences of prone restraint of arrestees was not deliberately indifferent, with respect to resisting arrestee who death was attributed to drug-induced delirium and positional asphyxia, in failing to train its officers regarding such information. Watkins v. New Castle County, D.Del.2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 379. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Allegations by parents of mentally ill suspect, who died of positional asphyxia, that suspect was apprehended by police officers, handcuffed, hog-tied, and transported to the hospital via patrol car while in a face-down position, that officers noticed suspect's irregular breathing, but did not adjust his position or inform the hospital, that city acted with deliberate indifference in failing to provide adequate training for officers handling encounters with mentally ill persons, and that failure resulted in suspect's death stated §§ 1983 claim for violation of suspect's substantive due process rights, for violation of the Rehabilitation Act, and for discrimination against the mentally ill, in violation of the ADA. Arnold v. City of York, M.D.Pa.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 550. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Town and police department's alleged failure to train officer who was involved in altercation with plaintiff while officer was off-duty did not amount to deliberate indifference, as required for municipal liability under § 1983; fact that officer received little training in non-violent restraint in addition to his police academy training did not by itself indicate that the town made a deliberate, conscious choice not to provide its officer with the appropriate training. Ousley v. Town of Lincoln through its Finance Director, D.R.I.2004, 313 F.Supp.2d 78. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Citizen failed to show that municipal agency was deliberately indifferent to citizen's constitutional rights, in context of Monell liability for civil rights claim alleging improper training in making arrest of deranged persons, on evidence that citizen boarded commuter train dressed in army fatigues, wearing mask over his nose, and he carried wooden staff and military sword, citizen repeatedly refused police officers' directions to put staff down and leave the train, officers then sprayed citizen with pepper spray without effect, citizen swung sword at officers, and then officers shot citizen without killing him. Stevens v. Metropolitan Transp. Authority Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2003, 293 F.Supp.2d 415. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's training of its police officers did not demonstrate deliberate indifference that could support municipal liability claim by public intoxication arrestee who claimed that officers were not trained to distinguish drunkenness from panic disorder or certain physical infirmities; officers had attended training program, were certified law officers, and no showing was made of how arrestee's arrest was product of city policies. Newell v. City of Salina, D.Kan.2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Town and its police chief did not fail to train police officers on extradition matters, and thus, could not be held liable in extradition detainee's § 1983 action for alleged failure to train officers, where town's officers received training in how to perform and interpret National Criminal Information Center (NCIC) results. Cuba-Diaz v. Town of Windham, D.Conn.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 221. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

Municipality was not liable, in § 1983 action by motorist who was detained for investigation by police officers, for failure to properly train and supervise officers; officers did not violate motorist's constitutional rights, and no evidence was presented that officers were not properly trained or that municipality was deliberately indifferent to need for such training. Flowers v. Fiore, D.R.I.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 173, affirmed 359 F.3d 24. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's failure to train its police officers regarding possible benefits of providing immediate psychiatric care to pretrial detainees or about risks facing arrested police officers with histories of mental illnesses did not constitute deliberate indifference to medical needs of arrested police officer who had history of mental illness and suicide attempts, and therefore city's failure to train its officers was not actionable under § 1983. Houck v. City of Prairie Village, D.Kan.1997, 978 F.Supp. 1397, affirmed 166 F.3d 347. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Arrestee who suffered head injury when he fell after being pushed by officer, who sought to keep arrestee from lunging police dog, failed to establish that city's failure to adequately train officers demonstrated deliberate indifference on part of city to constitutional rights, as required to support recovery in § 1983 action against city; arrestee made only speculative assertions concerning how improved training program might have prevented injury. Palacios v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1997, 970 F.Supp. 732, affirmed 152 F.3d 928. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Allegations by woman who had been sexually assaulted by police officer were insufficient to state claim against city for failure to train officer; woman made only conclusory allegations that police chief failed to instruct, supervise, or control officer and should have known of officer's illegal acts and misuse of official power, and alleged no facts which suggested specific deficiencies in supervision or training of officer which caused officer to rape woman or continue to sexually harass her. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City's alleged failure to train, supervise, and discipline police officers who arrested abortion protestor did not proximately cause allegedly unlawful arrest or alleged deprivation of right to freedom of speech and peaceable assembly, and, thus, city was not liable in § 1983 action for allegedly unlawful arrest or violation of First Amendment; temporary restraining order (TRO) against yelling, shouting, or screaming that substantially interferes with services at abortion clinic modified officers' understanding of First Amendment principles and essentially superseded any training, and since order was issued only a few days before arrest, there was no time to train officers about constitutional intricacies potentially involved. Habiger v. City of Fargo, D.N.D.1995, 905 F.Supp. 709, affirmed 80 F.3d 289, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 518, 519 U.S. 1011, 136 L.Ed.2d 407. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestee presented no evidence that city had policy or custom allowing or encouraging allegedly unconstitutional arrests or that city inadequately trained or supervised police officers and, thus, city could not be held liable for alleged constitutional violation. Carnell v. Grimm, D.Hawai'i 1994, 872 F.Supp. 746, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 74 F.3d 977. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

City and county's police department did not exhibit deliberate indifference to adequately training its police officers as to requirements of warrantless stop or arrest, precluding city and county from being held liable on inadequate training theory after two of its officers made warrantless arrests without probable cause; police officer trainees were required to take 18 hours of classroom instruction on laws of arrest and were given examinations requiring 70% passing grade. Tokuhama v. City and County of Honolulu, D.Hawai'i 1989, 751 F.Supp. 1385. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestee failed to put forward any evidence demonstrating that inadequacy of police training amounted to deliberate indifference to arrestee's rights so as to render city liable in civil rights action. Turton v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1419. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Allegedly negligent and grossly negligent conduct of city police officers and city personnel in negligently refusing to provide medical assistance, failing to adequately screen, train, supervise and discipline subordinate law enforcement officers, in breaching duty of care to public by failing to protect them from risk of bodily harm and in failing to properly investigate altercation at nightclub so as to result in arresting of patrons without probable cause, using excessive force, and falsely imprisoning patrons did not trigger protections of due process clause under § 1983. Martinez v. Cordova, D.N.M.1987, 676 F.Supp. 1068. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2069. ---- Basis for arrest, arrest and detention, police activities

City's plan to enforce ticket-scalping ordinance, consisting of arrests and detentions of those selling tickets close to sports arena, was not cause of allegedly improper arrest, precluding arrestee's § 1983 false arrest claim against city; plan required plainclothes officers to observe violators and maintain eye contact with them until arrest was made by uniformed officer, and thus if arrestee was mistakenly arrested it was due to plainclothes officer's failure to follow plan, not plan itself. Arlotta v. Bradley Center, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 349 F.3d 517. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Involuntary confinement of detainee at detoxification facility overnight did not constitute confinement for status of being alcoholic in violation of due process, for purposes of § 1983 claim, but rather constituted confinement for conduct of being drunk in public place. Halvorsen v. Baird, C.A.9 (Or.) 1998, 146 F.3d 680. Chemical Dependents 10; Constitutional Law 255(5)

Rule prohibiting wearing of mask in county courthouse was reasonable rule, and citizen's arrest for violating rule by wearing paper air-filtration mask did not violate any of his constitutional rights; wearing of mask inside courthouse implied intimidation and implicated security problems and otherwise lawful arrest was not forbidden merely because objective of arrest could have been achieved by alternative means. Ryan v. County of DuPage, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 45 F.3d 1090. Courts 80(1)

City did not violate civil rights of indigent defendant by attempting to jail her for failure to pay traffic fines; defendant repeatedly failed to appear and assert her indigency, thereby depriving court of opportunity to inquire into her reasons for not paying or to offer alternatives. Garcia v. City of Abilene, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 890 F.2d 773 . Civil Rights 1088(5)

A warrantless and malicious arrest based on no probable cause violates liberty and, hence, this section. Reeves v. City of Jackson, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1979, 608 F.2d 644. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In evaluating police conduct relating to an arrest for purpose of determining whether the conduct violated the arrestee's civil rights, the court's guideline is good faith and probable cause. Landrum v. Moats, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1978, 576 F.2d 1320, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 282, 439 U.S. 912, 58 L.Ed.2d 258. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee's guilty plea to assault charge barred false arrest claim in civil rights action. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where decedent had been adjudicated guilty of misdemeanor of neglecting his children and sentenced to jail and a fine, where commitment orders had been issued to sheriff but stayed at various time for various reasons, and where sheriff had been ordered to place decedent in jail because of failure to comply with court orders, attempt to arrest decedent was not an attempt at a false arrest in violation of decedent's civil rights. Singer v. Wadman, D.C.Utah 1982, 595 F.Supp. 188, affirmed 745 F.2d 606, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1396, 470 U.S. 1028, 84 L.Ed.2d 785. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Defendant deputy was liable under this section where he arrested the plaintiff when he did not have and knew he did not have probable cause to believe Florida's disorderly conduct statute, F.S.A. § 877.03, was being violated and where defendant was not immune in that his actions were deliberate, made with full knowledge that plaintiff was not breaking the law, and were not done in good faith. Carr v. Bell, N.D.Fla.1980, 492 F.Supp. 832. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Former inmate was not entitled to recover under this section on ground that he had been wrongfully and arbitrarily arrested and detained after his parole, in view of affidavit stating that arrest was occasioned by incident in which fellow tenant of plaintiff's complained that plaintiff was creating noisy disturbance and had ripped lock and doorknob off of his apartment door and that such conduct was prompted by use of alcohol. Arrest does not give rise to cause of action for deprivation of civil rights under this section if it is made with valid warrant or with probable cause. Pritz v. Hackett, W.D.Wis.1977, 440 F.Supp. 592. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiffs who were subject to warrantless arrest not founded on probable cause and under circumstances where arresting officers could not reasonably believe that there was probable cause were denied due process, rendering officers liable therefor. Butler v. Goldblatt Bros., Inc., N.D.Ill.1977, 432 F.Supp. 1122. Civil Rights 1088(4); Constitutional Law 262

2070. ---- State law, arrest and detention, police activities

Existence of state tort cause of action for malicious prosecution does not preclude § 1983 Fourth Amendment action for wrongful arrest and detention arising from same arrest. McCullah v. Gadert, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 344 F.3d 655. Civil Rights 1319

City and its police officers did not customarily discriminate against domestic violence victims as a class by arresting purported domestic violence victim pursuant to Colorado's mandatory arrest law in domestic violence situations, as would establish an equal protection violation to support purported victim and her son's action under § 1983, where officers were justified in believing purported victim had assaulted alleged abuser since officers at scene noticed alleged abuser's bloody mouth and shirt, as well as abrasions on purported victim's right hand. Eckert v. Town of Silverthorne, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2001, 258 F.3d 1147, withdrawn from bound volume, republished at 25 Fed.Appx. 679, 2001 WL 1152781.

Arrestee could not recover under § 1983 for arrest which violated Kentucky law, prohibiting warrantless misdemeanor arrests unless misdemeanor is committed in officer's presence, but which was supported by probable cause; such an arrest did not implicate any federal constitutional right. Pyles v. Raisor, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1995, 60 F.3d 1211. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest by state actor that is not authorized by state law is actionable under § 1983 as seizure contrary to Fourth Amendment, and, thus, warrantless arrest of Nebraska parole violator is actionable unless it complies with Nebraska statute permitting warrantless arrest of parole violator, only if officer has reasonable cause to believe that parolee will attempt to leave jurisdiction or will place lives or property in danger. Cole v. Nebraska State Bd. of Parole, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1993, 997 F.2d 442, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Federal civil rights action will not lie for warrantless misdemeanor arrest in violation of state law. Fields v. City of South Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1183, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Warrantless arrest of homeless man who was material witness to murder and who expressed reluctance to testify at trial, and his subsequent detention after he was unable to post bond did not give rise to § 1983 action against arresting detective; homeless man's reluctance to testify and his inability to post low bond, together with his homelessness and alcoholism, offered ample grounds, within meaning of Tennessee reluctant witness statute, to arrest and detain him. White by Swafford v. Gerbitz, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 892 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Because arrestee alleged equal protection violation, officers' mere compliance with procedural requisites of state law would not shield them from liability for violation of civil rights. Tanner v. Heise, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 879 F.2d 572. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where criminal offense was committed in presence of arresting officer, thereby justifying arrest without a warrant under Georgia law, arresting officer could not be held liable for false arrest or for civil rights violation. Hunter v. Clardy, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1977, 558 F.2d 290. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 7(3) from county youth court before incarcerating a juvenile was a violation of a state-created right which did not reach constitutional proportions and, therefore, was insufficient to constitute a rights violation cognizable under this section. Hamilton v. Chaffin, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 506 F.2d 904. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Even if police officer violated state arrest law, he would not be liable under this section unless he also violated federal constitutional law governing warrantless arrests. Street v. Surdyka, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 492 F.2d 368. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact that an arrest is made under authority of S.H.A. ch. 38, § 31-1 providing for fine or imprisonment on conviction of resisting or obstructing a peace officer does not preclude the possibility of abuse of authority in effecting an arrest. Williams v. Liberty, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 461 F.2d 325. Civil Rights 1088(4)

A finding of liability for false arrest under New York law also gives rise to liability under §§ 1983. Breitbard v. Mitchell, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 237. Civil Rights 1088(4)

For purpose of a qualified immunity analysis in a § 1983 action, identification of policymaking officials is a question of state law. Mack v. Town of Wallkill, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 552. Federal Courts 411

Police officer's noncompliance with state-mandated arrest procedure does not in and of itself give rise to claim cognizable under § 1983. O'Brien v. Borough of Woodbury Heights, D.N.J.1988, 679 F.Supp. 429. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Even if police officer violates state arrest statute, he would not be liable under this section unless he also violated federal constitutional law governing warrantless arrest. Diamond v. Marland, S.D.Ga.1975, 395 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2071. ---- Department policy or practice, arrest and detention, police activities

Sheriff's department policy of ignoring an arrestee's claims of mistaken identity after arrestee had appeared in court and judge had ordered him held in custody did not violate arrestee's right to due process, as required for department to be liable under §§ 1983 to arrestee who was held by department for 13 days after his arraignment on warrant that had been issued for someone else, since judge did not abdicate responsibility to determine arrestee's identity or delegate that responsibility to department, and there was no doubt that arrestee was the person that judge ordered held at arraignment. Hernandez v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 455 F.3d 772. Constitutional Law 262

Police officers' alleged violation of police department policy that required warning to be given prior to arrest for making unreasonable noise did not give rise to deprivation of rights secured by Constitution, as required to state claim for false arrest under § 1983. Mangieri v. Clifton, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1012. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City did not employ an unconstitutional policy that resulted in inadequate investigation of citizens' complaints, and therefore was not liable in §§ 1983 action brought by plaintiffs who allegedly complained repeatedly about police harassment; policy of sending verbal abuse and lack of service complaints to district captains for investigation was consistent with best practices employed by comparable police departments and consistent with the chain-of-command structure. Glass v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Absent showing of existence of widespread municipal policy or practice of maintaining allegedly inhumane conditions in central booking, arrestee could not prevail on claim that city violated her due process rights by confining her under allegedly unconstitutional conditions. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented

108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Provision in police field manual allowing arrest with supervisor's approval for three or more hazardous moving traffic violations did not conflict with Fourth Amendment by providing for physical arrest of misdemeanants under exigent circumstances where probable cause exists, and because policy reflected in manual was facially constitutional, city could not be held liable on Fourth Amendment claim under § 1983 for arrest of traffic violator. Young v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1986, 631 F.Supp. 1498. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2072. ---- Computer-generated information, arrest and detention, police activities

Person who is mistakenly arrested on basis of information law enforcement officer obtains from computer system cannot maintain cause of action for false arrest under § 1983 when officer acted reasonably and consistent with information obtained from computer system. Howard v. Regional Transit Authority, N.D.Ohio 1987, 667 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Absent actual knowledge that an arrest warrant was no longer valid or in effect, Michigan state troopers acted reasonably and in good faith in arresting plaintiff based upon information received through a computer system and therefore the troopers were immune from civil liability under this section and common law. Taggart v. Macomb County, E.D.Mich.1982, 587 F.Supp. 1080. Civil Rights 1376(6)

2073. ---- Good faith, arrest and detention, police activities

Police officer was not liable under this section on account of arrest of plaintiff on bad check charges where he had ample probable cause to file complaint and acted in good faith. Strutt v. Upham, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1971, 440 F.2d 1236 . Municipal Corporations 189(1)

Police officer did not violate individual's civil rights in arresting him, even if probable cause had been lacking, due to good faith where officer did not arrest him until after learning vehicle individual was driving had been reported stolen, thus making belief that arrest was lawful and entirely reasonable. Lindsey v. Loughlin, E.D.N.Y.1985, 616 F.Supp. 449. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2074. ---- Hot pursuit, arrest and detention, police activities

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether reasonable suspicions existed that criminal activity was afoot so as to establish probable cause for officers' warrantless entry into a private dwelling in "hot pursuit" of a suspect, precluding summary judgment in favor of officers on owner's unlawful entry claim. Webster v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 184. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer's warrantless arrest of plaintiff in plaintiff's residence in connection with alleged sexual assault did not violate plaintiff's clearly established constitutional rights so as to permit plaintiff's recovery on civil rights claim against the arresting officer, because two of alleged participants in the attack had already taken flight when arresting officer returned with victim to the scene of the crime, neither officer nor victim knew if the premises in which the crime was committed was the residence of any of the suspects, and officer was engaged in "hot pursuit" at the time of plaintiff's arrest. Jones v. Waters, E.D.Pa.1983, 570 F.Supp. 1292. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2075. ---- Probable cause generally, arrest and detention, police activities

An alleged arrest without probable cause was insufficient to establish a deprivation of liberty without due process, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 291. Arrest 63.4(1); Constitutional Law 262

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

For § 1983 claims, the existence of probable cause is a question for the jury if reasonable persons might reach different conclusions on the facts. Graves v. City of Coeur D'Alene, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2003, 339 F.3d 828. Civil Rights 1429

Arrest made with probable cause constitutes absolute bar to § 1983 claim for false arrest. Ortega v. Christian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 1521. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In civil rights cases arising out of police arrest, arrest challenged as unsupported by probable cause is deemed "objectively reasonable" unless there clearly was no reasonable cause at time arrest was made. Topp v. Wolkowski, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1993, 994 F.2d 45. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In § 1983 actions for false arrest, probable cause need not exist on charge for which plaintiff is arrested, so long as probable cause exists for arrest on closely related charge. Biddle v. Martin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 992 F.2d 673. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest without probable cause is constitutional violation actionable under this section prohibiting violations of civil rights under color of law. Patzig v. O'Neil, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 577 F.2d 841.

Once probable cause to arrest is established, law enforcement officer cannot be held liable for false arrest or civil rights violation, and any collateral bad motive on part of arresting officer is immaterial. Hunter v. Clardy, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1977, 558 F.2d 290. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

An arrest without probable cause is violative of rights secured by the Constitution and can be the basis of recovery in a suit pursuant to this section. Sartin v. Commissioner of Public Safety of State of Minn., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1976, 535 F.2d 430. Civil Rights 1088(4)

There is no cause of action for "false arrest" under this section unless arresting officer lacked probable cause. Street v. Surdyka, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 492 F.2d 368. Civil Rights 1088(4)

The existence of probable cause to arrest constitutes justification and is a complete defense to an action for false arrest, whether that action is brought under state law or under §§ 1983. Breitbard v. Mitchell, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 237. False Imprisonment 13

There can be no §§ 1983 claim for false arrest, in violation of Fourth Amendment, where the arresting officer had probable cause to arrest the claimant. Vines v. Callahan, D.Conn.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 211. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations that an arrest made pursuant to a warrant was not supported by probable cause are analogous to the common-law tort of malicious prosecution, and as a result, §§ 1983 actions seeking damages for unconstitutional arrest or confinement imposed pursuant to legal process must allege and prove a termination of the criminal proceedings favorable to the accused. Elkins v. Broome, M.D.N.C.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 596, affirmed 122 Fed.Appx. 40, 2005 WL 361761. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Existence of probable cause to arrest is complete defense to false arrest claim, whether under New York law or under § 1983. Vasquez v. McPherson, S.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 334. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

Section 1983 claim of false arrest based on the Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizures may not be maintained if there was probable cause for the arrest. Colon v. Ludemann, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 747 . Civil Rights 1088(4)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether officer who made arrest for breach of the peace had probable cause to believe that arrestee was the person wanted in another state and to continue to hold him on a fugitive from justice charge, precluding summary judgment for town and police officers in arrestee's § 1983 action for false arrest. Cuba-Diaz v. Town of Windham, D.Conn.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 221. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Civil rights activists who brought § 1983 action against police officers, stemming from their arrests while attempting to film traffic stops, pleaded facts suggesting that they were not interfering with traffic stop when officer allegedly threatened to arrest them, rushed at them and attacked them, as required to allege that officers lacked probable cause to arrest them under Kansas statute prohibiting obstruction of legal process or official duty, and thus officers were not entitled to qualified immunity as to activists' Fourth Amendment claim; activists alleged that they were merely protesting and recording traffic stop from public property prior to their arrests. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 1292, amended 289 F.Supp.2d 1264, affirmed 130 Fed.Appx. 987, 2005 WL 1221632. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1395(6)

Presence of probable cause to make arrest is complete defense to action for false arrest whether that action is brought under state law or under § 1983. Taylor v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 68, clarified 2003 WL 21781941. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

As long as officer has established probable cause for charge, absent element of malice or mendacity, he will not be found liable for false arrest for lack of probable cause simply because subsequent investigation reveals exculpatory information which officer could have found had his investigation been more complete. Ahlers v. Schebil, E.D.Mich.1998, 994 F.Supp. 856, affirmed 188 F.3d 365. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Even malicious motives will not support § 1983 plaintiff's claim of false arrest if probable cause exists. Sarantakis v. Village of Winthrop Harbor, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1095. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Proper inquiry in § 1983 claim based on false arrest is not whether person arrested actually committed offense, but whether arresting officer had probable cause to believe that he had. Lemons v. Lewis, D.Kan.1997, 969 F.Supp. 657. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee pleaded constitutional violation in his § 1983 action by alleging that officers entered his residence, searched premises, seized his property, and arrested him, all without probable cause, and that officers used excessive force. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Officer is not permitted to retaliate against suspect for invoking his Fifth Amendment rights by refusing to conduct proper investigation before making arrest. Spiegel v. Cortese, N.D.Ill.1997, 966 F.Supp. 684. Arrest 63.1

Section 1983 claims for false arrest and false imprisonment require that plaintiff demonstrate lack of probable cause to make initial arrest. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee who was acquitted of rape charges was not denied due process, for purposes of his civil rights claims against prosecutors and arresting officers, where officers obtained arrest warrant and judge found there was probable cause to submit case to grand jury. Jackson v. Jackson County, Miss., S.D.Miss.1995, 956 F.Supp. 1294, affirmed 95 F.3d 47. Arrest 65; Constitutional Law 257.5; Constitutional Law 262

Police officer's judgment as to probable cause to justify arrest, unlike a criminal complaint, may be based on hearsay evidence, upon suspicious circumstances, and upon probabilities. Velaire v. City of Schenectady, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 774. Arrest 63.4(7.1)

If police officer arrests someone with probable cause, but by mistake, there is no constitutional violation and officer is not liable under federal civil rights statute. Ruiz v. Herrera, S.D.N.Y.1990, 745 F.Supp. 940. Arrest 63.4(1); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claim for false arrest or false imprisonment as an unconstitutional deprivation of civil rights under § 1983 may be established only if there was no probable cause to support plaintiff's arrest and detention. Simpson v. Saroff, S.D.N.Y.1990, 741 F.Supp. 1073. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer can be liable in civil rights action based on alleged wrongful arrest only if there clearly was no probable cause at time arrest was made. Marx v. Gumbinner, S.D.Fla.1989, 716 F.Supp. 1434, affirmed 905 F.2d 1503. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee will not prevail in § 1983 action for claims arising out of arrest supported by probable cause. Terrones v. Allen, D.Colo.1988, 680 F.Supp. 1483. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Question of whether individual has been unlawfully detained and arrested centers on whether probable cause to arrest exists, and if presence of probable cause is merely questionable at time of warrantless arrest, police officers should not be found liable under § 1983; rather, liability should only result when there clearly was no probable cause at time of arrest. LaBate v. Butts, E.D.Mich.1987, 673 F.Supp. 887, affirmed 865 F.2d 258. Civil Rights 1088(4)

If arrest challenged in § 1983 case is effected for which police officer had reasonable cause to arrest on any related statutory provision, acquittal of offense charged does not vitiate probable cause for arrest. Hall v. St. Helena Parish Sheriff's Dept., M.D.La.1987, 668 F.Supp. 535, affirmed 862 F.2d 872. Civil Rights 1088(4)

By virtue of its incorporation into the Fourteenth Amendment, the Fourth Amendment requires the states to provide a fair and reliable determination of probable cause as a precondition to any significant pretrial restraint of liberty; therefore, an arrest will be actionable under § 1983 if it is made without probable cause. Keller v. U.S., S.D.Cal.1987, 667 F.Supp. 1351, affirmed 930 F.2d 920. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was arrested without probable cause and for reasons of personal animosity based on his interracial marriage stated Section 1983 cause of action. Williams v. Tansey, E.D.Pa.1985, 610 F.Supp. 1083. Civil Rights 1088(4)

If probable cause to arrest is established, a plaintiff may not recover for a violation of civil rights arising out of the arrest even if the police had time to get an arrest warrant. Greene v. Brown, E.D.N.Y.1982, 535 F.Supp. 1096. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest without probable cause to believe that accused has violated criminal statute confers right of action for deprivation of federal constitutional privileges under this section. Diamond v. Marland, S.D.Ga.1975, 395 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestees' § 1983 claim that sheriff's deputies did not have probable cause to arrest them was not barred by Heck v. Humphrey on ground that it attacked validity of underlying state court's pretrial probable cause determinations, where arrestees were not convicted. Miller v. Riser, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 417, 2003 WL 23021576, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City was not liable for alleged false arrest by law enforcement officers, barring arrestee's § 1983 action against city, where officers had probable cause to support arrest. Pitiger v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22251207, Unreported. Civil Rights 1348

precluded §§ 1983 suit against officers claiming false arrest. Sepulveda v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21673626, Unreported. Civil Rights 1404

City police officer had probable cause to arrest sexual assault suspect, and thus could not be held personally liable under § 1983 for false arrest, even though suspect had protested his innocence; officer was entitled to rely on victim's complaint identifying suspect, investigation by college security officers, and his own observations. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1809471, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Existence of probable cause for arrest on state misdemeanor charge of filing false instrument, which precluded arrestee's § 1983 false arrest/malicious prosecution action against police officers, was not negated by fact that initial complaint had been filed by police officer acting as private citizen, or by fact that portion of investigation had been conducted by officer § 1983 defendant who was related by marriage to complainant; subjective motivations were irrelevant to probable cause analysis, and had to be asserted in context of equal protection claim, not false arrest claim. Middelem v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 145247, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

2076. ---- Probable cause in particular cases, arrest and detention, police activities

Remand to Court of Appeals was required for determination as to whether arrest of driver for impersonating an officer or obstruction of justice, in connection with driver's use of wig-wag lights on his car and providing evasive answers to police officers during traffic stop, was supported by probable cause, for purpose of driver's §§ 1983 action against officers; Court of Appeals decided that officers lacked probable cause to arrest driver for stated offense of state Privacy Act violation based upon his tape recording of traffic stop, but did not decide whether probable cause existed to support arrest on the impersonating and obstruction offenses, because such offenses were not closely related to the Privacy Act offense, and Supreme Court subsequently determined that probable cause inquiry did not depend on whether offense invoked by officer at time of arrest was closely related to facts that provided probable cause to arrest for another offense. Devenpeck v. Alford, U.S.2004, 125 S.Ct. 588, 543 U.S. 146, 160 L.Ed.2d 537, on remand 418 F.3d 1004, on remand 446 F.3d 935. Federal Courts 462

Warrantless seizure of countertop gaming machines from businesses was justified under plain view doctrine, and thus, did not violate the Fourth Amendment, for purpose of businesses' §§ 1983 claim, where police had probable cause to believe, based on prosecutor's opinion, that the machines were contraband under state law. Skokos v. Rhoades, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 440 F.3d 957. Gaming 60

Police officers had probable cause to make arrest based on information provided by eyewitnesses, that arrestee had threatened them with a knife, precluding arrestee's §§ 1983 action against officers; officers received report from dispatcher that a black man in a maroon car had pulled a gun, upon arriving at scene they found arrestee's maroon car stopped in median of busy street, officers asked arrestee if he had gun, a frisk turned up a knife, and eyewitnesses stated that during a road-rage incident arrestee had brandished knife and threatened to kill them. Askew v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 440 F.3d 894. Arrest 63.4(12)

City police detective who allegedly told owner of residence that he could change the locks to prevent tenant's entry, approximately three weeks before tenant was arrested for burglary for breaking into residence, did not violate tenant's Fourth Amendment rights, for purpose of tenant's §§ 1983 wrongful arrest claim, absent showing that detective was actually involved in placing tenant under arrest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4; Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 291. Civil Rights 1358

Convictions in state court were conclusive proof of existence of probable cause for police officer to make arrests, and thus arrestees were unable to establish the elements necessary to maintain §§ 1983 action against officer alleging they were arrested without probable cause, even though on appeal to state circuit court the convictions were dismissed for lack of speedy trial, where convictions were not overturned upon finding of innocence following trial on merits. Brown v. Willey, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 391 F.3d 968. Civil Rights 1088(4)

County sheriff's deputies had probable cause to arrest bail bondsmen for assault in connection with their conduct in revoking bond issued to offender, barring bondsmen's § 1983 unlawful arrest claim; although bondsmen told deputies they entered offender's home to revoke bond and handcuffed offender because she attacked them, offender told deputies that she had been assaulted, and her face and neck were red and swollen, as was consistent with claims of assault. Anderson v. Cass County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 367 F.3d 741. Arrest 63.4(7.1); Arrest 63.4(13)

Jury's conclusion that police officer's supervisor did not act affirmatively and set parade protester's arrest into motion was supported by evidence that officer did not provide supervisor with information as to why he wanted to search protester's backpack, which made it plausible that officer did not interpret supervisor's statement that he should arrest protester if protester did not consent to search as assessment of legality of arrest, and therefore protester was not entitled to new trial on § 1983 claim that supervisor violated his Fourth Amendment rights. Graves v. City of Coeur D'Alene, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2003, 339 F.3d 828. Federal Civil Procedure 2338.1

Evidence presented question for jury as to whether off-duty police officer lacked probable cause to arrest assault suspect, in suspect's § 1983 false arrest and malicious prosecution claims against officer; suspect testified that he struck officer with telephone receiver after officer pulled gun and threatened suspect with it, so that officer would know that suspect was acting in self-defense, under New York law, but officer testified that suspect struck him first and then the officer identified himself as a police officer and drew his weapon. Jocks v. Tavernier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 128. Civil Rights 1429

Arrestee's complaint alleging, inter alia, that city and police officials arrested him as fugitive without probable cause, in that no reasonable police officer could have believed he was same person as fugitive in light of his obvious mental incapacity and fact that his fingerprints and other identifying characteristics did not match those of fugitive, and that officials recklessly and with deliberate indifference failed to compare fingerprints and other characteristics, stated cause of action under § 1983 for deprivation of suspect's Fourth Amendment right to be free of arrest without probable cause. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 250 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1395(6)

City jailers did not violate constitutional rights of tribal members by detaining them, in accordance with cross-deputization agreements with tribe, based upon representations of tribal officers that offenses had been committed; absent any objectively apparent lack of basis for detention, jailers had no constitutional duty to question tribal officers as to their probable cause for arrest, verify validity of grounds for detention under tribal law, or conduct independent constitutional and historical analysis to determine whether tribe's assertion of jurisdiction over detainees was legitimate. Dry v. U.S., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1249. Prisons 9

Police officer was entitled to rely to meaningful degree on statements by three-and-a-half-year-old sexual abuse victim in determining that probable cause existed to arrest plaintiff pre-school employee for that abuse; child's mother indicated to officer that mother and school staff were only people with access to child during two-week period covering both potential incidents of abuse, further information provided by mother suggested that plaintiff was guilty party, and, despite inconsistencies in child's statements, those statements--considered along with other supporting evidence--were sufficiently reliable and trustworthy at their core to form basis for probable cause. Rankin v. Evans, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1998, 133 F.3d 1425, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 67, 525 U.S. 823, 142 L.Ed.2d 52 . Arrest 63.4(7.1)

Police officer had probable cause to believe that detainee was attempting to commit suicide, or at least might injure himself if not taken to hospital, so that mental health seizure did not violate detainee's Fourth Amendment rights, though detainee appeared coherent and denied that he was attempting to commit suicide, where officer was responding to radio dispatch that detainee told mental health worker that he ingested some pills and was drinking alcohol in effort to commit suicide, detainee in fact was drinking alcohol and appeared intoxicated and depressed, and count of pills revealed that at least 20 were missing. Monday v. Oullette, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1997, 118 F.3d 1099. Mental Health 40

Officers had probable cause to arrest motorist at roadblock, and such seizure did not violate his civil rights, where officer received report that possibly intoxicated driver was slumped over steering wheel of vehicle parked on shoulder of interstate, motorist's appearance indicated that he had been drinking, motorist declined to answer officer's questions and drove away without explanation, motorist failed to stop when officer engaged his emergency equipment, bumped motorist's vehicle, and shot out his tires, and motorist swerved to prevent officer from passing him. Latta v. Keryte, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1997, 118 F.3d 693. Automobiles 349(6); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers had probable cause to arrest murder suspect, and were not liable to suspect on unlawful arrest theory under federal civil rights statute, based on information in their possession at time of arrest, including evidence that victim knew her killer and that killer was filled with rage against her, evidence of suspect's jealousy and former romantic relationship with victim, and evidence that suspect had lied to officers regarding presence near crime scene at roughly the time murder was committed. Booker v. Ward, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1052, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 952, 519 U.S. 1113, 136 L.Ed.2d 840. Arrest 63.4(13); Arrest 63.4(15); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee who was detained after being arrested by police officer without probable cause stated § 1983 claim against arresting officer for false imprisonment, as facts and circumstances under arresting officer's consideration demonstrated that he lacked probable cause to arrest arrestee, and arrestee was detained for five months following his false arrest without being provided opportunity to conduct lineup or otherwise prove his innocence. Ortega v. Christian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 1521. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers' reliance on child's story of her near-abduction, in determining that they had probable cause to arrest claimant for attempted kidnapping, was not objectively unreasonable, for purposes of claimant's § 1983 action against officers for wrongful arrest, where child gave police officers specific description of automobile, its license plate number and detailed account of incident, where claimant's automobile matched child's description of automobile used in attempted abduction, and where claimant's automobile was found in immediate vicinity where child was allegedly accosted. Brodnicki v. City of Omaha, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 75 F.3d 1261, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 179, 519 U.S. 867, 136 L.Ed.2d 119. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer had probable cause to arrest restaurant customer for violating Massachusetts criminal trespass statute, such that officer was not liable under § 1983 for arresting customer in violation of Fourth Amendment; officer effected arrest based on eye witness report from manager that customer had created "unwarranted disturbance" and refused to leave the premises and on representation by employee that there had been "problem" with customer in the past and reasonable person so informed could fairly conclude that the implied license extended to customer had been revoked and that her continued presence constituted criminal trespass. Alexis v. McDonald's Restaurants of Massachusetts, Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1995, 67 F.3d 341, on remand 1996 WL 463675. Arrest 63.4(7.1); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact that police officer responding to individual's first aid call told backup officers that individual had punched her was sufficient for backup officers to have believed that probable cause existed for individual's arrest and thus, backup officers were not liable under § 1983 with respect to individual's false arrest and false imprisonment claims. Groman v. Township of Manalapan, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 47 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police had probable cause for arrest based on information provided by arrestee's acquaintances, absent showing that such statements were not reasonably trustworthy information sufficient to lead prudent police officer to conclude that arrestee had committed the crime at issue; accordingly, arrestee could not recover from officers under § 1983. Romero v. Fay, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1995, 45 F.3d 1472. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In civil rights action involving allegations that police lacked probable cause for arrest and used excessive force during arrest, trial court erred in instructing jury that plaintiffs had to prove that defendant police officers "clearly" lacked probable cause to arrest and "clearly" used excessive force in arrest; extra language may have erroneously misled jury into believing plaintiff faced heightened burden of proof with respect to those elements of his claim and extra language was not otherwise required by law or fact. Tatro v. Kervin, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1994, 41 F.3d 9. Civil Rights 1437

Police had probable cause to arrest motorist, thus precluding motorist's recovery in civil rights action; police followed motorist for several seconds in patrol car with calibrated speedometer, police knew that motorist had been driving with suspended license, and motorist's flight and forceful resistance to arrest provided sufficient probable cause for arrest. Vukadinovich v. Zentz, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 995 F.2d 750. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Reasonable police officers would have believed that probable cause existed to arrest suspect for attempted rape of 12-year-old girl and, thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in suspect's civil rights action; reasonable police officer could have believed, based on detailed story and physical description by girl, together with corroboration by her friends and witness, that they had probable cause to arrest, even though story by girl was later found to be false. McDonnell v. Cournia, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1993, 990 F.2d 963. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had arguable probable cause to arrest pregnant motorist who drove around traffic barricade in his presence, a misdemeanor under Georgia law, and, thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity against motorist's unlawful arrest claim. Moore v. Gwinnett County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 967 F.2d 1495, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1049, 506 U.S. 1081, 122 L.Ed.2d 357. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer had probable cause to arrest automobile passenger after finding handgun loaded with metal-piercing bullets in automobile trunk and additional bullets on another passenger in vehicle, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from passenger's false arrest/imprisonment claim; no registration of gun was produced and absent explanation to contrary, bullets could have been property of any occupant of vehicle or might have been jointly possessed; officer was not required to believe statements of individual who had already been caught with metal piercing bullets in his pocket that gun and additional bullets belonged to him. Fernandez v. Perez, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 937 F.2d 368. Arrest 63.4(16); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not arrest suspect for ethnic intimidation without probable cause and, thus, did not violate suspect's civil rights, where officer received information from 12-year-old alleged victim that suspect had been shouting racial slurs and other expletives at her, and that she was afraid he would hit her, officer heard through his brother-in-law that suspect had history of making racial insults and engaging in racial confrontations, and officer knew that bus stop which was site of alleged offense was scene of racial confrontations in past. Grimm v. Churchill, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 932 F.2d 674. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Statement made by arrestee's four-year-old daughter after she was raped, that "Daddy did this to me," together with arrestee's incriminating statement and failure of polygraph examination, gave police officers probable cause to make arrest, precluding officers from being held liable in civil rights action after blood test proved that arrestee was not the rapist. Marx v. Gumbinner, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 905 F.2d 1503. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee's admission to officer that she had told someone to paste sign on automobile's windshield gave officer probable cause to make warrantless arrest for misdemeanor of tampering with automobile and, thus, arrestee could not show that she had been deprived of right secured by Constitution, as required to state civil rights claim, even if misdemeanor did not occur in arresting officer's presence. Barry v. Fowler, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 902 F.2d 770. Automobiles 349(2.1); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Abortion protester could not maintain civil rights action against officers arising from her arrest where evidence established that officers had reasonable belief that she had violated defiant trespass and criminal conspiracy laws in venturing onto portion of clinic's property. Dowling v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1988, 855 F.2d 136, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

Police had probable cause to arrest suspect for arson and, therefore, suspect was barred from maintaining action for deprivation of civil rights, where police had reasonable cause to believe at time of arrest that fire was of incendiary origin, that suspect had ownership interest in burning building that was to be sold in foreclosure sale later that day, that suspect had purchased gasoline for use other than in automobile, and that suspect had time to start fire after purchase of gasoline. Williams v. Kobel, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1986, 789 F.2d 463. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where items legally seized from doctor's unoccupied residence included controlled substances which doctor was no longer registered to possess in state, health officers had probable cause to arrest doctor for possessing controlled substances without proper registration, notwithstanding doctor's contention that they had "ulterior motive" for arrest, and thus, arresting officers could not be held liable for false arrest under this section or Gen.Laws 1956, § 12-7-5. Mann v. Cannon, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1984, 731 F.2d 54. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

Fact that store customer had been taken into police custody and charged with petty theft, despite fact that no stolen merchandise was found on his person thus precluding probable cause for belief that customer was a shoplifter, was protected right which could afford basis for federal civil rights action for deprivation of rights. Duriso v. K-Mart No. 4195, Division of S. S. Kresge Co., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 559 F.2d 1274. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Sheriff's deputy had probable cause to arrest father for rape of daughter based on daughter's report, and thus arrest was privileged and could not form basis for § 1983 false arrest claim, notwithstanding daughter's history of drug abuse and discovery of "to do" list written by daughter which listed framing father for abuse as one of her tasks, where daughter reported alleged rape within 24 hours of incident and physical examination was consistent with rape occurring within time frame reported by daughter. Donovan v. Briggs, W.D.N.Y.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 242. Arrest 63.4(8); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arresting officer had probable cause to believe that civilian employee of police department had fraudulently received overtime wages from the department, for purposes of employee's § 1983 action, in light of evidence that employee had been teaching aerobics while signed-in for overtime work in department's crime lab, that employee was required to be present at crime lab while earning overtime, that there were no supervisors on duty during overtime shifts, and that employee's supervisors were unaware that employee had a second job as an aerobics instructor. Dintino v. Echols, E.D.Pa.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 255, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 783, 2004 WL 474134. Arrest 63.4(13); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers lacked probable cause to arrest plaintiffs on basis of traffic violation of having improper tags, and thus were liable in plaintiffs' §§ 1983 action; it had been confirmed that the vehicle belonged to plaintiff, and nothing identified plaintiffs as being the men reported to have fled from another officer two nights earlier. Glass v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 302. Automobiles 349(4)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county law enforcement officers were engaged in an official function when they attempted to enter arrestee's back yard, so as to have probable cause for arrest for New York offense of second-degree obstructing governmental administration when arrestee attempted to prevent that entry, precluded summary judgment on arrestee's §§ 1983 false arrest claim against officers. Houghton v. Culver, W.D.N.Y.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 212. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Jury could reasonably conclude that police officer was liable under §§ 1983 for violating sexual assault victim's mother's right to be free from arrest without legal justification in violation of her constitutional rights, since jury found officer liable for falsely arresting mother who was allegedly taken into custody while visiting victim in hospital, even though jury also found that officer was not liable for assault and battery against mother. David v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 83. Civil Rights 1429

Municipal police officers had probable cause to believe that arrestee had committed the crime of damaging a complainant's car, and thus his arrest did not give rise to a claim under §§ 1983 for false arrest, where the officers made the arrest after receiving a complaint about an altercation between arrestee and the complainant, in which, per the complainant's, account, arrestee had hit the complainant's car with a nightstick and there was nothing to suggest that at the time the municipal police talked with the complainant prior to the arrest they had any reason to believe that the complainant was lying. Cabrera-Negron v. Municipality of Bayamon, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 49. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police detective had probable cause to arrest suspect for rape and robbery, and thus detective was not liable under § § 1983 or New York law for false arrest, even though victim did not identify suspect at lineup, there was no physical evidence tying suspect to crime, and suspect was ultimately acquitted, where victim provided detailed description of crime, eyewitness's account corroborated victim's account, and statements obtained from informants corroborated victim's description of events almost exactly and specifically named suspect as rapist. Golden v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 226. False Imprisonment 13

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether off-duty county police officer caused neighbor's arrest and prosecution for simple assault with malice and without probable cause, precluded summary judgment for off-duty officer on arrested neighbor's §§ 1983 claim against her for malicious prosecution. Payne v. DeKalb County, N.D.Ga.2004, 414 F.Supp.2d 1158. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officer had probable cause to place terminated employee into custody, pursuant to Connecticut statute, for purpose of psychiatric examination, after employer's security manager reported that employee had stated that he had nothing to live for if he lost his job and that employee had threatened co-workers in past, precluding summary judgment in §§ 1983 action as to whether officer subjected employee to unreasonable seizure. Saliby v. Kendzierski, D.Conn.2006, 407 F.Supp.2d 393. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Probable cause existed to issue arrest warrant for sexual assault, and thus arresting officer enjoyed qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 unreasonable seizure action, even though officer when applying for warrant had omitted from application telephone call logs and other records furnished by arrestee's friend, purportedly indicating alleged victim's history of erratic behavior and demands for hush money from friend and arrestee; even viewed in light most favorable to arrestee, omitted information was not sufficiently exculpatory to outweigh alleged victim's positive identification, accuracy of which was not in question since alleged victim knew arrestee. Russo v. Voorhees Tp., D.N.J.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 352. Criminal Law 213

Probable cause for assault arrest existed, precluding arrestee's subsequent §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action against arresting and investigating officers; officers had received call to assist ambulance with combative diabetic male, individual in question was yelling when officers approached, and, according to both officers and eyewitnesses, individual lunged at one officer. Imbergamo v. Castaldi, M.D.Pa.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 686. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officers had probable cause to arrest arrestee for repeatedly calling and harassing her former employer and employer's wife, and therefore, confinement of arrestee was privileged, precluding arrestee's false arrest claim under New York law; former employer complained of the harassment to police and alleged that arrestee had recently been fired, and officers had no reason to doubt former employer. Breitbard v. Mitchell, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 237. False Imprisonment 13

Police officer had probable cause to arrest driver for violation of California's safety belt statute, upon observing driver wearing his seat belt under his left arm and not across his upper torso, barring driver's §§ 1983 unlawful arrest claim, where driver requested to be taken before a magistrate instead of signing the promise to appear portion of citation issued by officer. Hupp v. City of Walnut Creek, N.D.Cal.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 1229. Automobiles 349(15)

Police detective who arrested rape suspect at hospital, based upon alleged victim's in-person identification of suspect and her description of alleged rape, had probable cause to make arrest, and thus could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for false arrest and false imprisonment after charges were dismissed for lack of evidence; apart from victim's identification and description, detective relied on collective information from other police personnel concerning pertinent events. Smith v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 179. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Under New York law, uniformed police officers, who came on the scene in response to a 911 call placed by mall security guard and who were told by off-duty police officer moonlighting as security guard that a crime had been committed, had probable cause to arrest shopper for his part in an altercation with security guard; thus, city was not liable on §§ 1983 false arrest claim. Wahhab v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 277. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Absent circumstances that raised doubts as to former wife's veracity, her sworn accusation that former husband violated temporary order of protection provided officers with probable cause to arrest former husband, and therefore officers could not be held liable for false arrest and/or false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution under Section 1983 or New York law. Coyle v. Coyle, E.D.N.Y.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 207, affirmed 153 Fed.Appx. 10, 2005 WL 2812255. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5); False Imprisonment 13; Malicious Prosecution 18(5)

Probable cause existed to arrest suspect for commission of three robberies during course of one evening, precluding claims of false arrest, or malicious prosecution under Connecticut law; arrest was made pursuant to warrant, creating presumption of probable cause, there was witness and forensic evidence linking suspect to those robberies, and conclusory statements that police had coerced inculpating evidence from witnesses was insufficient rebuttal. Vines v. Callahan, D.Conn.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 211. False Imprisonment 13; Malicious Prosecution 18(5)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether as to whether police officers procured or initiated arrestee's prosecution on the basis of false information, whether probable cause was lacking for the prosecution initiated against arrestee, and as to existence of actual malice, precluding summary judgment in favor of officers on malicious prosecution claims brought under federal and New York law. Webster v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 184. Federal Civil Procedure 2515

Arrestee's prayer for judgment continued (PJC) did not indicate that he was innocent of charge against him, i.e., delaying a police officer in the performance of his duties, as would support arrestee's Fourth Amendment unlawful arrest claim alleging that officer obtained a warrant for his arrest without probable cause; PJC was issued after judge found arrestee guilty, at conclusion of trial in which both parties presented arguments and testimonial evidence. Elkins v. Broome, M.D.N.C.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 596, affirmed 122 Fed.Appx. 40, 2005 WL 361761. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer had probable cause under Indiana law to arrest motorist for driving while intoxicated, and for resisting arrest, precluding §§ 1983 claim that arrest violated motorist's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights; motorist was making unsuccessful effort to parallel park in narrow space, and drove across curb quickly in order to flee when he saw police car. Tilson v. City of Elkhart, Ind., N.D.Ind.2003, 317 F.Supp.2d 861, adhered to on reconsideration 2003 WL 23509313, affirmed 96 Fed.Appx. 413, 2004 WL 901545. Arrest 63.4(15); Automobiles 349(6)

There was probable cause to arrest motorist for driving with a suspended license, thus defeating his false arrest claim, where city department of motor vehicles' computer records reflected that the motorist's license had been suspended for failure to pay his fine, and there was no evidence that the information on the computer was false or inapplicable. Evans v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 316, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 433, 2005 WL 348377. Automobiles 349(4); False Imprisonment 13

Police had probable cause to make arrest, thus precluding arrestee's § 1983 causes of action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment; officers had received a 911 call stating that domestic battery was occurring at the home of arrestee's girlfriend, and girlfriend admitted that arrestee hit her and that swelling and redness were visible on her face when the officers entered the home. Saunders v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 869. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer had probable cause to arrest credit card holder for making false report, under Connecticut law, precluding false arrest claim under § 1983, when holder reported that merchant submitted $6,000 charge to credit card issuer on $6.90 purchase and charge was denied and not verified by issuer, even though holder claimed his grant of permission to police officer to contact issuer negated statutory requirement that holder know information he was transmitting was false. Perrelli v. Burke, D.Conn.2003, 297 F.Supp.2d 441. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officer had probable cause to arrest motorist believed to be the operator of vehicle that fled scene of three-car accident; although neither eyewitness was able to positively identify motorist in photo line-up, prior to preparing the probable cause affidavit, officer thoroughly investigated the accident by interviewing and taking written and signed statements from eyewitnesses who informed him that the woman driving the vehicle that started the chain reaction strongly resembled motorist's physical description, one eyewitness provided description of and registration number of the car that fled the scene, and the arrest warrant was issued by a neutral magistrate judge. Weinstock v. Wilk, D.Conn.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 241, adhered to on reconsideration 2004 WL 367618. Automobiles 349(2.1)

Police had probable cause to arrest house occupant for disorderly conduct, under New Jersey law, precluding false arrest claim under § 1983, when they approached him as he chopped wood, to question him regarding neighbors allegation of bizarre behavior, and he responded by shedding shirt, assuming aggressive position and shouted that police were to get off his property. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Arrest 63.4(15)

Police had probable cause to arrest house resident for simple assault, precluding false arrest claim under § 1983, when he scuffled with police officers attempting to arrest him for disorderly conduct. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Arrest 63.4(15)

Arrestee failed to demonstrate that the insertion of omissions or the excision of assertions made with reckless disregard for the truth in affidavits supporting an arrest warrant materially affected the existence of probable cause, thus defeating the arrestee's § 1983 claim of unlawful arrest and seizure; "corrected" affidavits would have indicated that officers were contacted with information that a confidential informant could purchase cocaine from the arrestee, that the informant had previously provided confirmed information about drug dealers, and that he entered a building with money and exited with cocaine, which he said was given to him by the arrestee. Wychunas v. O'Toole, M.D.Pa.2003, 252 F.Supp.2d 135. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee's complaint contained sufficient factual allegations to undermine police defendants' assertion of unambiguous probable cause, and complaint thus stated claims for false arrest and malicious prosecution under New York law and § 1983; complaint alleged that on each of four arrest occasions arrests were grounded entirely upon accusations of fellow tenants in his apartment building, made under circumstances calling into question credibility of accusers. Bullard v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 292. Civil Rights 1395(6); False Imprisonment 20(1); Malicious Prosecution 49

Fact that claimant was arrested and transported to county jail on charges of battery and resisting police officer did not establish deprivation of liberty, as required to support malicious prosecution claim under § 1983, even if probable cause was lacking for such charges; claimant was also arrested for resisting arrest, so that arrest and transportation would have occurred regardless of additional two charges. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrest of individual by officers who had responded to call of domestic dispute was supported by probable cause, and thus did not give rise to § 1983 claim based on wrongful arrest; officer's observations of both individual's assault of officer, and his violent behavior earlier in evening, created probable cause for arrest. Gaschler v. Scott County, Kan., D.Kan.1997, 963 F.Supp. 971, affirmed 141 F.3d 1184. Arrest 63.4(15)

Evidence raised genuine issue of material fact as to whether police officers had probable cause to arrest based on violation of order of protection requiring arrestee to turn loft over to his form wife at particular time, precluding summary judgment in arrestee's civil rights action based on alleged wrongful arrest; although arrestee was present at loft beyond time permitted by order of protection, evidence conflicted as to whether arrestee was willing to leave loft, and arrestee was present only a short time after time established by order of protection expired. Brawer v. Carter, S.D.N.Y.1996, 937 F.Supp. 1071. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers had probable cause to arrest § 1983 plaintiff for committing assault with firearm against officer; evidence showed that police officer was in plaintiff's used car lot engaging in surveillance, that plaintiff, holding pistol, approached officer, and that plaintiff failed to drop pistol even after officer ordered him to do so, plaintiff read officer's badge, and uniformed officers arrived. Kelly v. Bencheck, E.D.N.C.1996, 921 F.Supp. 1465, affirmed 107 F.3d 866. Arrest 63.3

Evidence in § 1983 action for application of unreasonable force and malicious prosecution supported conclusions that police officer acted with malice and lacked probable cause to file police report stating that arrestee assaulted police officer and resisted arrest; arrestee denied touching officer, officer testified that arrestee turned around, punched him, and ripped his jacket, and the competing scenarios required jury to make credibility assessments. Lee v. Edwards, D.Conn.1995, 906 F.Supp. 94, vacated 101 F.3d 805. Civil Rights 1420

Police officers had knowledge or reasonably trustworthy information sufficient to warrant person of reasonable caution in belief that offense had been committed by arrestee, and, thus, officers had probable cause to make arrest and to take arrestee to barracks at which alcosensor test and drug test could be administered, and officers could not be held liable to arrestee under federal civil rights statute, where arrestee had been driving with high beams, and officers' assertions concerning arrestee's inability to perform some field sobriety tests were necessarily undisputed. Haussman v. Fergus, S.D.N.Y.1995, 894 F.Supp. 142. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police had probable cause to arrest suspect for murder, and suspect thus did not have § 1983 claim for false arrest; police had witnesses' identification of suspect available to them at time of arrest, and fact that police were informed by suspect's father two hours after arrest that father would bring witnesses to exonerate suspect did not eliminate probable cause that existed at time of arrest. Dukes v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1995, 879 F.Supp. 335. Arrest 63.4(12)

Police had probable cause for warrantless arrest for attempted abduction based on facts and circumstances within officers' knowledge at time of arrest despite inconsistencies in complainant's description and allegedly suggestive nature of "showup;" nine-year-old complainant's description was generally consistent with evidence found by police including license plate number, color and location of arrestee's car, property seized in car included sunglasses like those described by complainant, complainant positively identified arrestee during "showup" while in his front yard, and arrestee did not have corroborating alibi at time of his arrest. Brodnicki v. City of Omaha, Neb., D.Neb.1995, 874 F.Supp. 1006, affirmed 75 F.3d 1261, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 179, 519 U.S. 867, 136 L.Ed.2d 119. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Allegedly negligent acts of deputy sheriff in pursuing suspect in high-speed chase which resulted in accident in which pedestrian was killed did not shock judicial conscience, and did not give rise to action under federal civil rights statute on part of pedestrian's personal representative; deputy had sound basis for probable cause that suspect had committed felony and was charged with enforcing law, and it was not reasonable to assume that deputy could have known that suspect would cause fatal accident. Carroll v. Greenville County Sheriff's Dept., D.S.C.1994, 871 F.Supp. 844. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Arrestee could not recover under § 1983 from police officer for warrantless arrest which was based on probable cause consisting of facts that officer's police radar indicated that arrestee's vehicle was traveling at 50 miles per hour in 35-mile per hour zone, that, when stopped, arrestee refused to produce driver's license, and that arrestee eventually stated that he did not have a driver's license and then drove away. Schilling v. Swick, W.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer acted in objectively reasonable manner in stopping motorist for traffic violation and subsequently arresting her for drunk driving, and officer was entitled to qualified immunity, notwithstanding motorist's contention that officer's action in telling her that she had passed field sobriety tests and then placing her under arrest demonstrated malicious intent to cause deprivation of constitutional right to be free from unreasonable arrest and seizure; officer had probable cause both for stop and for arrest, and possibility that motorist's behavior was result of medication she was taking did not alter fact that motorist's conduct was also consistent with intoxication. Wynn v. Morgan, E.D.Tenn.1994, 861 F.Supp. 622. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Allegations that police officer arrested plaintiff for soliciting prostitution without ascertaining purpose of plaintiff's stop of car stated claim under § 1983 that police officer deprived plaintiff of rights by arresting plaintiff without probable cause, even though magic words "objectively reasonable" were not used. Borges v. City of West Palm Beach, S.D.Fla.1993, 858 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer had probable cause to arrest plaintiffs, members of church who disrupted service, on charge of aggravated disorderly conduct based upon information supplied to him by church members as to events which took place on morning of his investigation, even if police officer did not make any further investigation beyond talking with church members nor ask plaintiffs for their side of story before making arrest. Hahn v. County of Otsego, N.D.N.Y.1993, 820 F.Supp. 54, affirmed 52 F.3d 310. Arrest 63.4(6)

City police officers employed by community college district board of trustees as college security officers had probable cause to arrest college student for committing battery on officer under Illinois law so as to provide absolute defense to student's § 1983 claims against officers for malicious prosecution, false arrest, and false imprisonment in alleged deprivation of student's First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments rights, despite dispute as to whether officer identified himself as police officer and placed student under arrest at beginning of incident; student struck officer in chest with at least soft blow. Myatt v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1992, 816 F.Supp. 1259. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Kansas police officer had probable cause to arrest complainant's former business partners for making terroristic threats and was thus qualifiedly immune from liability in his individual capacity for false arrest, even though complaints subsequently proved false; complainant had detailed telephone calls in which former partners threatened to "kill" and "gut" him and explained motive for their making such threats, and arresting officer also reasonably relied upon statement of another officer corroborating complainant's statements. Harris v. Evans, D.Kan.1992, 795 F.Supp. 1060. Arrest 63.4(8); Arrest 63.4(11); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Although police officers did not consider facts indicating that arrestee lacked mens rea, it was objectively reasonable for them to believe that they had probable cause to arrest him for sodomy based on the fact that he was in the same room in which his roommate assaulted and raped the complaining witness and the fact that he admitted to participating in nonconsensual deviate sexual acts with complaining witness, and they were entitled to qualified immunity. Cox v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1991, 780 F.Supp. 103. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee had no civil rights claim against arresting officers for unlawful arrest, illegal seizure of his person or illegal detention because officers had probable cause to arrest him for assaulting police officer and resisting arrest; not only did arrestee resist authority of police officers who had valid warrant for his arrest in their possession, but he also struck officer in the nose as he was attempting to escape from his custody. Valenti v. Sheeler, E.D.Pa.1991, 765 F.Supp. 227. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police had probable cause to arrest a pedestrian following an altercation with the driver, after they were summoned to altercation site by driver; driver identified pedestrian as assailant, pedestrian was in the immediate vicinity, officers observed dent in car door and saw driver's swollen lip, which corroborated complaint that pedestrian had punched driver and kicked car. Kruppenbacher v. Mazzeo, N.D.N.Y.1990, 744 F.Supp. 402. Arrest 63.4(12); Arrest 63.4(13)

State trooper had no reasonable basis for believing that motorist had committed crime of assault with intent to kill with which trooper charged him, and, thus, trooper was liable in civil rights action for depriving motorist of Fourth Amendment right to be free from unlawful arrest; trooper testified on several occasions he did not believe motorist intended to do any harm, much less kill him, and facts did not reasonably support intent to kill. Moody v. Ferguson, D.S.C.1989, 732 F.Supp. 627. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City officials had probable cause to arrest city employee who allegedly used city computer facilities for his personal business without authorization precluding officials from being held liable in employee's civil rights action arising after New York trial court dismissed theft of services charges on grounds that computers of sort used by employee were not "business" equipment subject to criminal use under New York law. Weg v. Macchiarola, S.D.N.Y.1990, 729 F.Supp. 328. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact that arrestee was driving without valid license when stopped by officer supplied probable cause for his arrest and precluded recovery in civil rights action for unlawful arrest. Parker v. Strong, W.D.Okla.1989, 717 F.Supp. 767. Automobiles 349(4); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Grocery store owner's civil rights were not violated when police officers searched his person and arrested him following discovery of ledger book containing lottery numbers during search of his business for evidence of numbers operation conducted pursuant to search warrant where officers had had probable cause to search and arrest owner, notwithstanding fact that search of owner's person was not authorized in search warrant. Washington v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1988, 685 F.Supp. 264. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff's allegations, that although a state investigator may have had probable cause to arrest a person with his name, there was no probable cause to arrest him, were insufficient to state a cause of action under § 1983; although the investigator may have been negligent in identifying the suspect named in the valid arrest warrant, such negligence was not a violation of the Fourth Amendment. Keller v. U.S., S.D.Cal.1987, 667 F.Supp. 1351, affirmed 930 F.2d 920. Civil Rights 1395(6)

County sheriff and deputies had probable cause to arrest individual for criminal trespass where individual refused to leave residence one week after date she was ordered to do so by state court in connection with divorce proceeding and forcible entry and detainer under Illinois law was unavailable because trial court in divorce proceeding retains jurisdiction to enforce its decree; thus, individual could not recover under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 from county sheriff and deputies in action arising out of arrest. Thornton v. Wahl, N.D.Ill.1985, 618 F.Supp. 1043, affirmed 787 F.2d 1151, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 181, 479 U.S. 851, 93 L.Ed.2d 116. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where lessee of automobile failed to return automobile within 30 days of proper demand for its return by lessor, and lessor arranged for preparation of a theft report, which was subsequently assigned to officer, facts known to officer warranted a prudent person in believing that lessee violated S.H.A.Ill. ch. 38 ¶ 16-1.1, and thus there existed probable cause for lessee's arrest, and no action under this section lay against arresting officer or lessor. Anderson v. Continental Illinois Nat. Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1984, 577 F.Supp. 872. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest of plaintiff by police officer without a warrant did not violate plaintiff's constitutional rights under color of state law and violation of this section where at time he arrested plaintiff, officer knew that a controlled substance had been found in a residence owned by plaintiff, there were indications that plaintiff either lived in the residence or spent enough time there to have knowledge of the fact that marijuana was present, plaintiff admitted his ownership of the property, and state law forbade possession of marijuana and intentional maintenance of a dwelling frequented by users of controlled substances or used for manufacturing, keeping or delivering such substances, since officer had reasonable grounds for his belief that a crime had been committed and that plaintiff was guilty of the crime, and thus probable cause existed for plaintiff's arrest. Johnson v. Petersen, W.D.Wis.1983, 563 F.Supp. 672. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Sufficient evidence supported jury's conclusion that police officers lacked probable cause to arrest plaintiff, in plaintiff's §§ 1983 action against officers alleging wrongful arrest without probable cause; informant was taken into custody after trying to commit suicide and witnesses described him as drunk, sobbing, rambling, and scared, it was in this state when informant allegedly gave statement inculpating plaintiff and according to informant the following day he had to be coached and intimidated into again inculpating plaintiff. Scribner v. Dillard, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2005, 141 Fed.Appx. 240, 2005 WL 1199567, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

Existence of probable cause to arrest, established by arresting officer's hearing suspect tell store clerk that suspect had had too much to drink, observing suspect swerve over road lines while driving, smelling alcohol on suspect's breath, and administering field sobriety test which suspect failed, precluded arrestee's §§1983 action against officer alleging malicious prosecution and unreasonable search incident to arrest. Joseph v. West Manheim Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 833, 2005 WL 1164207, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1624, 164 L.Ed.2d 354, rehearing denied 126 S.Ct. 2376. Automobiles 349(6)

There was probable cause to arrest videographer for disorderly conduct, under New York law, as he attempted to pass through door of courthouse on way to film court proceeding, precluding §§ 1983 claim of false arrest in violation of Fourth Amendment, and false arrest under New York law; videographer was involved in struggle with guards, causing inconvenience or annoyance to public trying to enter or leave courthouse, and his conduct was either knowing or reckless. Posr v. Killackey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22962191, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

Citizen failed to state claim in civil rights action that police officer falsely arrested him, where citizen affirmatively alleged in his complaint that he was arrested on allegations of person who claimed to be victim of assault, and citizen did not allege any facts suggesting that putative victim should have appeared unreliable to reasonable police officer; although citizen asserted that putative victim's statement to police was false at time of incident, once putative victim complained to police about assault, officer had probable cause to arrest citizen, and he was not required to investigate further. Daniels v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22510379, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(6)

State police investigator had probable cause to arrest suspects thought to have attempted to break into a vehicle for purpose of theft, and thus, qualified immunity precluded imposition of liability on the investigator in the suspects' § 1983 suit for false imprisonment; facts available to the investigator immediately before the arrest included eyewitness statements, the vehicle's damaged condition, and the unavailability of the vehicle's owner to provide further information. Benjamin v. Nuzzo, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22176001, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had probable cause to arrest citizen, thus citizen's claim of false arrest under § 1983 against officers failed; police were called to scene because of a possible struggle at address, once police arrived at scene they were directed to back apartment by an upstairs home-dweller, providing further evidence of criminal activity, and officers saw an individual with his hands bound and a pillowcase on his head. Henry v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22077469, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officer had probable cause to believe, under New York law, that tenants had committed petit theft and that one tenant's mother had committed criminal possession of stolen property in the fifth degree, precluding officer's liability for false arrest, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution under § 1983, when officer received landlady's report that refrigerator was missing from house after tenants vacated premises, landlady denied giving tenants permission to remove refrigerator from house, officer learned from tenant's brother that tenants had given refrigerator to mother, and mother initially denied knowledge of refrigerator's whereabouts, but subsequently admitted that she had had it in her possession. Ingersoll ex rel. Estate of Ingersoll v. LaPlante, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 350, 2003 WL 21949752, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police had probable cause to arrest lawyer for aggravated harassment in the second degree under New York law, so as to provide defense to lawyer's § 1983 claims of false arrest and malicious prosecution, where complainant told the police about numerous threatening phone calls and other communications made by the lawyer to the complainant, police detective followed up on the initial complaint by contacting complainant again and reconfirming his initial accusations, and there was no information that should have alerted the police to any possible malfeasance on the part of complainant sufficient to create a demonstrable ring of untruth to strip the circumstances of probable cause to arrest and require further investigation into complainant's veracity. Nazaire v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21738607, Unreported. Arrest 63.4(8); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee, who was arrested after faxing pictures that allegedly had been altered by superimposing faces of famous couple on bodies of nude models, failed to establish requisite lack of probable cause to arrest and prosecute arrestee for harassment, and thus, arrestee's civil rights claim that was based on his allegedly false arrest had to fail, where probable cause was established by the many complaints lodged against arrestee for allegedly faxing nude photographs, as well as by arrestee's previous history of harassment of famous couple. Jones v. Trump, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 71 Fed.Appx. 873, 2003 WL 21511770, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Reasonable officer investigating accident in 2001 would not have believed, in context of qualified immunity analysis in § 1983 lawsuit under Fourth Amendment, that it was lawful to arrest citizen under Pennsylvania law for driving under influence (DUI) on observation that citizen was walking toward scene of accident with limp but otherwise unimpeded, he had no odor of alcohol about him, it was too dark to see that person's eyes, and that person merely confirmed that he was involved in accident. Ankele v. Hambrick, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21223821, Unreported, affirmed 136 Fed.Appx. 551, 2005 WL 1532436. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had probable cause to arrest individual who was blocking subway entry gate and had not paid his fare, on basis that he had outstanding arrest warrant and was in possession of marijuana, and thus arrestee could not maintain false arrest claim under § 1983 and state law; police issued summons for subway infraction, consequently ran warrant search, discovered outstanding arrest warrant, which they arrested individual on, and then during search incident to arrest, police discovered marijuana. Nance v. New York City Police Dept. ex rel. McKay Chung, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1955164, Unreported. Arrest 63.4(16); Arrest 65; False Imprisonment 13

Campus security officers had probable cause to detain college student accused of sexually assaulting classmate, and thus could not be held liable for false arrest under § 1983; officers' reliance on victim complaint was justified, even though student claimed to be innocent. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1809471, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Probable cause existed to arrest and charge school bus driver with driving while intoxicated (DWI) and endangering the welfare of a child (EWC) and to recharge driver with reckless driving, for purposes of driver's § 1983 false arrest and false imprisonment claims against town; driver failed four field sobriety tests and exhibited coordination problems and police officer and civilian witness observed driver driving erratically, while a child was passenger on the bus. Otero v. Town of Southampton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 409, 2003 WL 1025795, Unreported. Arrest 63.4(15); Automobiles 349(6); Civil Rights 1088(4)

City police officer had probable cause to arrest sexual assault suspect, and thus could not be held personally liable under § 1983 for false arrest, even though suspect had protested his innocence; officer was entitled to rely on victim's complaint identifying suspect, investigation by college security officers, and his own observations. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 715749, Unreported, opinion corrected and superseded 2003 WL 1809471. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Probable cause existed for prosecution of indicted sexual assault defendant, despite his protestations of innocence, and thus arresting officer could not be held personally liable under § 1983 for malicious prosecution, absent showing that indictment had been obtained in bad faith. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 715749, Unreported, opinion corrected and superseded 2003 WL 1809471. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Campus security officers had probable cause to detain college student accused of sexually assaulting classmate, and thus could not be held liable for false arrest under § 1983; officers' reliance on victim complaint was justified, even though student claimed to be innocent. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 715749, Unreported, opinion corrected and superseded 2003 WL 1809471. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Probable cause existed for arrest of realtor on state misdemeanor charge of filing of false instrument, precluding realtor's § 1983 action against county police officers for false arrest and malicious prosecution; affidavits filed by realtor in connection with building permits were undisputedly false in material respect, circumstances indicated that realtor had procured affidavits on behalf of owner to facilitate issuance of permits without having to obtain zoning variance, and circumstances also indicated that realtor solicited affidavits knowing of their false statements. Middelem v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 145247, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officer had probable cause to arrest apparent participant in residential apartment building altercation for assault, precluding claims of false arrest and imprisonment under federal and New York law; victim, who appeared credible, informed officer that participant had beaten him up, neighbors corroborated claim, and participant's appearance, bloodied and with broken glasses, belied his denial of involvement. Rowe v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31974537, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

Police officers had probable cause to arrest participant in altercation between neighbors, precluding false arrest claim under § 1983, based upon statement of neighbor that participant had cracked windshield of her vehicle, and inspection of vehicle that revealed crack. Hughes v. Shestakov, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1742666, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 450, 2003 WL 22234866. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2077. ---- Warrant, arrest and detention, police activities

Complaint filed by plaintiff who was arrested pursuant to valid warrant and detained in jail for three days despite his protests of mistaken identity failed to allege cause of action against county sheriff under civil rights statute affording liability for deprivation of rights under color of law, since plaintiff's detention was pursuant to a warrant conforming to constitutional requirements and thus did not amount to a deprivation of liberty without due process of law. Baker v. McCollan, U.S.Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 443 U.S. 137, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, on remand 601 F.2d 903

. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arresting officers did not violate arrestee's rights by taking him into custody on an outstanding warrant and handing him over at the lockup for detention, in §§ 1983 action related to arrestee's suicide. Bradich ex rel. Estate of Bradich v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 413 F.3d 688. Civil Rights 1088(4)

As sheriff committed no Fourth Amendment violation when he presented arrest warrant affidavit to judge, county was not liable in arrestee's § 1983 action based on arrest. Taylor v. Meacham, C.A.10 (Utah) 1996, 82 F.3d 1556, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 186, 519 U.S. 871, 136 L.Ed.2d 125. Civil Rights 1348

Fact that jail visitor told deputies who had learned of outstanding arrest warrants against her on bad check charges that she had reported checks in question as stolen and forged did not establish that officers violated clearly established right in executing warrants, which were facially valid and supported by probable cause; officers did not have duty to investigate visitor's claim of innocence. Pickens v. Hollowell, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 59 F.3d 1203. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee failed to establish that police officers violated arrestee's civil rights by manufacturing evidence to obtain arrest warrant, absent presentation of any evidence beyond mere conclusionary allegation that arrestee's thumbprint was obtained during questioning in police station rather than from crime scene. Booker v. Koonce, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 2 F.3d 114. Civil Rights 1420

In order to prevail in his civil rights action against undercover narcotics agent on his unreasonable seizure claim predicated on challenge to affidavits of probable cause used to secure warrants for his arrest, arrestee was required to show that agent, who was maker of affidavit, either stated deliberate falsehood or acted with reckless disregard for truth; proof of negligence or innocent mistake was insufficient. Lippay v. Christos, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1490. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Deputy sheriffs did not violate due process when they made arrest pursuant to bench warrant that had been recalled, and could not be held liable to arrestee in civil rights action; although arrestee allegedly alerted deputies that charges against her had been dropped, warrant was facially valid, and mistake in making arrest was inadvertent. Mitchell v. Aluisi, C.A.4 (Md.) 1989, 872 F.2d 577. Civil Rights 1088(4); Constitutional Law 262

Assuming that officer who procures issuance of otherwise valid warrant may be subject to section 1983 liability for some omission or some improper state of mind in procurement process, deputy sheriff who arrested plaintiff for battery did not make false arrest, and thus was not subject to section 1983 liability, since, contrary to plaintiff's assertions, inter alia, deputy was not required to reject out of hand neighbor's complaint which led to arrest as frivolous or not credible, his failure to have in his possession second offense report filed by another deputy was at most negligence not of type or sufficiency to form basis of section 1983 claim, and it was not improper for deputy on previous occasion to warn that anyone who broke the law would be arrested. LeSavage v. White, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1985, 755 F.2d 814. Civil Rights 1088(4)

There was probable cause to support application for and execution of arrest warrant, and warrant was valid, and therefore issuance of warrant for a wrong person did not constitute a violation of arrestee's constitutional rights cognizable under § 1983, where identity of first name, confirmation of first name by police informant, and close connection with vehicle registered in that name met warrant's description. Thompson v. Prince William County, C.A.4 (Va.) 1985, 753 F.2d 363. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Before an arrest is made pursuant to an invalid warrant, rule in Baker that there can be no unconstitutional deprivation of liberty when an individual is arrested pursuant to a valid arrest form cannot be applied to preclude an arrestee's claim in a civil rights action of an unconstitutional deprivation of liberty. Powe v. City of Chicago,

C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 664 F.2d 639. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer, who, based on photographic identifications together with other information that placed defendant in area of crimes about time they occurred, had ample probable cause to swear out warrant for plaintiff's arrest, could not be held liable in subsequent action for unlawful arrest nor could officer be held liable for any subsequent incarceration of plaintiff over which officer no longer had any control. Mundy v. State of Ga., C.A.5 (Ga.) 1978, 586 F.2d 507. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee stated civil rights claim for violation of Fourth Amendment right to be free from false imprisonment by alleging that officers who arrested him for failure to pay alimony had no authority under arrest warrant to immediately incarcerate him, but should have caused his appearance before judge. Garcia Rodriguez v. Andreu Garcia, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Owners, employees, and customers of Latino-owned business who brought action against city and police officers, stemming from execution of search warrant at premises, failed to establish that raid was racially motivated, as required to maintain racial discrimination claims under Equal Protection Clause and federal civil rights statutes; allegation that nearby white-owned businesses were treated more favorably by police provided no evidence that particular action was based on racial animus, and plaintiffs failed to identify officers that allegedly used racist language in conducting raid. Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., D.Utah 2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 1013. Constitutional Law 215.2; Searches And Seizures 101

Where police officer's probable cause determination has been ratified by prosecutor's presentation of case to neutral magistrate, who ultimately issues arrest warrant, officer can be held liable for false arrest only if he stated deliberate falsehood or acted with reckless disregard for truth. Ahlers v. Schebil, E.D.Mich.1998, 994 F.Supp. 856, affirmed 188 F.3d 365. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations by arrestee that police officer had used arrest warrant request form which was pre-signed by prosecutor to secure warrant for his arrest, and that prosecutor did not review request form prior to its presentation, as officer had represented, were sufficient to state claim for violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights in § 1983 action. Gibson v. Sain, W.D.Mich.1997, 979 F.Supp. 557, reversed 159 F.3d 230. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Evidence of police chief's ignorance of case law requiring affidavit for arrest warrant to be consistent with underlying police reports, police department's lack of policy requiring accuracy in reports, and its lack of procedure to reconcile inconsistent reports at most established negligence, not deliberate indifference, of city, and, thus, city could not be held liable under § 1983. Mutter v. Town of Salem, D.N.H.1996, 945 F.Supp. 402. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee failed to show that warrant authorizing his arrest for his involvement in suspected drug transaction was not based on probable cause, as required to support civil rights claim against arresting officer; although warrant was based in part on statement of witness given through interpreter and police did not actually see defendant give drugs to witness, there was no evidence that interpreter was incompetent or that witness' statement was otherwise unreliable, and witness possessed drugs following apparent drug transaction with defendant. Artis v. Liotard, S.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 101. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether recalled arrest warrant would have been removed from sheriff's computer listing in time to prevent erroneous arrest if sheriff had implemented reasonable warrant validation procedure, precluding summary judgment in arrestee's civil rights action. Ruehman v. Village of Palos Park, N.D.Ill.1996, 916 F.Supp. 782. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In order to support § 1983 claim that false information was used to get arrest warrant, plaintiff must show that defendant made false statements knowingly and intentionally or with reckless disregard for truth. Moran v.

Police officer was justified in arresting arrestee pursuant to arrest warrant, despite fact arrestee's name was listed as alias on warrant and warrant's description of suspect's age did not match arrestee's appearance and, thus, police officer was not liable in arrestee's § 1983 and false imprisonment action; arrestee was same race and lived at same address as suspect named on warrant, and fact that arrestee's name was listed as alias on warrant did not make arrest illegal. Fairley v. Zelenik, N.D.Ill.1995, 888 F.Supp. 89. Arrest 65

Arrest warrant issued by judge based on affidavit of suspect's wife was facially valid, precluding § 1983 action against arresting officer based on claim that he procured warrant without probable cause; although wife alleged that she was intoxicated at time warrant was procured, she had told arresting officer she had been beaten by her husband, and issuing judge had opportunity to assess wife's relative state of intoxication and bruises and swelling on her face. James v. City of Chester, D.S.C.1994, 852 F.Supp. 1288. Civil Rights 1088(4); Criminal Law 212

Sheriff's policy in not maintaining accurate records of traffic warrants was deliberately indifferent to constitutional rights of persons being subjected to arrests and detention on recalled warrants; steps taken by sheriff to improve system were so meaningless in face of known inadequacies that they showed deliberate indifference to those inadequacies and to inevitable harm imposed on those subjected to arrests on recalled warrants. Hvorcik v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1994, 847 F.Supp. 1414. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police department which erroneously arrested and held detainee, based upon information received from police department in another jurisdiction that there was active warrant for detainee's arrest in that jurisdiction, had not violated detainee's civil rights; even though police officer had reason to know of some incongruities in information concerning detainee and person sought in arrest warrant, officer did not act intentionally, recklessly, or in grossly negligent manner in either disregarding discrepancies or determining that they were of minimal importance. Roa v. City of Bethlehem, Pa., E.D.Pa.1991, 782 F.Supp. 1008. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee who was charged with issuing bad checks did not have claim for false arrest or malicious prosecution under § 1983 against arresting officer, although officer was allegedly motivated by desire to discredit arrestee in upcoming election; checks provided to officer by complaining witness were grounds for issuance of arrest warrant, regardless of officer's underlying motives. Thomas v. Frederick, W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Person mistakenly arrested pursuant to outstanding felony arrest warrant for suspect with same name did not suffer deprivation of constitutional proportion by his detention and prosecution resulting from city's failure to implement more effective suspect identification procedure, irrespective of how common his name was; city had no duty to verify every claim of innocence made by suspect, and Constitution did not guarantee that only guilty would be detained or charged in criminal complaint. White v. City of Muskegon, Mich., W.D.Mich.1990, 749 F.Supp. 829. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff had no cause of action under civil rights statute against deputy sheriffs who arrested him based on a valid arrest warrant. Bennett v. Batchik, E.D.Mich.1990, 743 F.Supp. 1245, affirmed 936 F.2d 572. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Material misrepresentation in probable cause affidavit is actionable under § 1983; police officer who knowingly or recklessly submits affidavit containing false statements concerning arrestee violates arrestee's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights and, accordingly, qualified immunity does not protect that officer. Pennington v. Hobson, S.D.Ind.1989, 719 F.Supp. 760. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Alleged arrest and assault of plaintiff pursuant to valid arrest warrant provided no basis for claims of false arrest and false imprisonment under federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights, where arresting federal agent, who allegedly executed warrant against wrong person, was not required by Constitution to independently investigate every claim of innocence, whether claim was based on mistaken identity or defense such as lack of requisite intent, agent was not required by Constitution to perform error-free investigation of such claims, and arrest made pursuant to valid warrant was not deprivation of Fourth Amendment rights. Lopez v. Modisitt, W.D.Mich.1980, 488 F.Supp. 1169. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Evidence in arrested person's action against sheriff and another officer for violation of an arrested person's constitutional right showed that defendant sheriff and other officer had valid arrest warrants for plaintiff and another when they searched plaintiff's premises and when they subsequently arrested plaintiff and that in execution of the warrants they did not violate any of plaintiff's constitutional rights. McCloud v. Tester, E.D.Tenn.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1271. Civil Rights 1420

Police officers had probable cause to arrest citizen, thus citizen's claim of false arrest under § 1983 against officers failed; police were called to scene because of a possible struggle at address, once police arrived at scene they were directed to back apartment by an upstairs home-dweller, providing further evidence of criminal activity, and officers saw an individual with his hands bound and a pillowcase on his head. Henry v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22077469, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2077A. ---- Warrant application, arrest and detention, police activities

Police officer's omission from arrest warrant application in sexual assault investigation of telephone call logs and other records furnished by arrestee's friend, purportedly indicating alleged victim's history of erratic behavior and demands for hush money from arrestee and friend, potentially constituted reckless disregard for truth on officer's part, as required to support arrestee's §§ 1983 unreasonable seizure action against officer; judge hearing application would wish to know about omitted information. Russo v. Voorhees Tp., D.N.J.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 352. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2078. ---- Innocence, arrest and detention, police activities

Plaintiff's innocence of charge contained in arrest warrant, while relevant to a tort claim of false imprisonment in most jurisdictions, is largely irrelevant to his claim of deprivation of liberty without due process of law, since Constitution does not guarantee that only the guilty will be arrested. Baker v. McCollan, U.S.Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 443 U.S. 137, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, on remand 601 F.2d 903. Constitutional Law 262

A police officer who arrests someone with probable cause or a valid warrant is not liable for false arrest simply because the innocence of the suspect is later established. Atkins v. Lanning, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1977, 556 F.2d 485. False Imprisonment 7(3); False Imprisonment 13

Where probable cause for arrest exists, civil rights are not violated by arrest even though innocence may subsequently be established, and, if investigation succeeds in producing evidence of crime, probable cause for arrest is not nullified by fact that otherwise successful investigation was maliciously inspired. Beauregard v. Wingard, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1966, 362 F.2d 901.

Having been convicted in state court of failing to wear his seatbelt properly, arrestee could not validly assert a §§ 1983 claim in federal court, alleging that it was unconstitutional for police officer to arrest him for not wearing his seatbelt properly. Hupp v. City of Walnut Creek, N.D.Cal.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 1229. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City police officials were grossly negligent and violated guarantees of due process in incarcerating innocent and nondangerous minor children in locked detention cell after arrest of their mother for impeding traffic, and thus, city was liable to children, who suffered negative psychological effects, for denial of their constitutional rights under this section. Martini v. Russell, C.D.Cal.1984, 582 F.Supp. 136. Civil Rights 1348

Police officers do not incur liability under civil rights laws merely because a court subsequently acquits arrestee of particular charge cited by officers. Heslip v. Lobbs, E.D.Ark.1982, 554 F.Supp. 694. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2079. ---- Conviction, arrest and detention, police activities

In civil rights suit to recover damages resulting from plaintiff's arrest on charges of disorderly conduct, the district court correctly ruled that, as a matter of law, the arrest of plaintiff by a city policeman was made upon probable cause, since a municipal court, while it acquitted plaintiff on the disorderly conduct charge, convicted him of resisting arrest, since the municipal court jury therefore must have concluded that the arrest was legal, and since plaintiff failed to show that the verdict was obtained by fraud or perjury and therefore failed to overcome the presumption stemming from the resisting arrest conviction, that the arrest was made upon probable cause. Bergstralh v. Lowe, C.A.9 (Or.) 1974, 504 F.2d 1276, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1131, 420 U.S. 930, 43 L.Ed.2d 402. Civil Rights 1429

Arrestee's claims related to his arrest, prosecution, and conviction were not cognizable under §§ 1983, absent showing that conviction had been invalidated or otherwise judicially called into question. Velez v. Hayes, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 557. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

To extent that Native American plaintiff's § 1983 claims for monetary, declaratory, and injunctive or equitable relief, based on his arrest following a prayer march, would render his criminal conviction or sentence, for Nebraska offense of violating the lawful order of law enforcement officers, invalid, claims were barred; plaintiff did not show that his criminal conviction or sentence was reversed on appeal, expunged by executive order, or otherwise declared invalid. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claimant could not establish § 1983 claim against police officer for false arrest on robbery charge, despite fact that he was not convicted on such charge and despite minor inconsistencies in accounts of three eye-witnesses who identified claimant as perpetrator of robbery; officer's involvement was limited to sending case file to prosecutor's office to review for possible prosecution, eye-witness identification supported finding of probable cause to arrest, and claimant was arrested pursuant to warrant issued by associate circuit judge and was indicted by grand jury. Lemons v. Lewis, D.Kan.1997, 969 F.Supp. 657. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Section 1983 claimant's criminal conviction was conclusive evidence of good faith and reasonableness of officer's belief in lawfulness of arrest as defense to claims for false arrest, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution; presumption continued to exist even though indictment was eventually dismissed, but was rebuttable by showing that conviction itself was result of fraud, perjury, or other acts effecting integrity of the prosecution. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Section 1983 claim for damages resulting from alleged illegal arrest on state charges was cognizable, in that determination that arrest was illegal would not imply that resulting conviction on federal charges of bank robbery and firearms violation was invalid and complaint alleged compensable injuries independent of conviction and imprisonment on federal charges, where plaintiff alleged that he was embarrassed by being arrested in front of his family, was kept in jail for over two weeks, including his birthday, posted bond, and suffered mental anguish and emotional distress. Braxton v. Scott, N.D.Ohio 1995, 905 F.Supp. 455. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Whether arrestee actually committed charged offense and outcome of prosecution are irrelevant to false arrest claim under § 1983. Kis v. County of Schuylkill, E.D.Pa.1994, 866 F.Supp. 1462. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Civil rights action based on false arrest or false imprisonment is barred by plaintiff's conviction for offense for which he is arrested. Giannini v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1988, 700 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1088(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Defendant police officers, who were acting under color of state law at all relevant times, did not violate any constitutional or civil rights of plaintiffs where, rather than conspiring to deprive plaintiffs of their civil rights, or being motivated by racial prejudice, defendants legally arrested plaintiffs for striking police officers and for obstructing and interfering with that arrest, blows struck by defendants were necessary to effect arrest and confinement, excessive force was not used by any defendant in effectuating arrests, charges brought against plaintiffs were not false and unfounded, and defendants did not testify falsely against plaintiffs. Redding v. Medica, W.D.Pa.1976, 411 F.Supp. 272. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2080. ---- Pardon, arrest and detention, police activities

By virtue of full pardon he received from Missouri governor, former inmate's conviction was invalidated and "expunged by executive order" within meaning of Heck rule barring § 1983 as remedy when judgment for plaintiff would necessarily imply invalidity of his state conviction or sentence; thus, former inmate could pursue § 1983 relief from county and law enforcement officials for wrongful arrest and incarceration. Wilson v. Lawrence County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1998, 154 F.3d 757, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 799, 525 U.S. 1069, 142 L.Ed.2d 661. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Pardon will be deemed to "invalidate" or "expunge" a conviction, for purposes of maintaining § 1983 claim seeking monetary relief for a wrongful conviction, if effect of pardon is to support finality of judgments and to eliminate risk of conflicting resolutions arising out of same transaction. Wilson v. Lawrence County, Mo., W.D.Mo.1997, 978 F.Supp. 915, reversed 154 F.3d 757, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 799, 525 U.S. 1069, 142 L.Ed.2d 661. Civil Rights 1088(5)

2081. ---- Guilty plea, arrest and detention, police activities

Pro se litigant whose guilty plea under Colorado law prevented him from bringing claim for what the facts clearly alleged was malicious prosecution stated valid § 1983 claim for unlawful arrest and illegal search and seizure in violation of Fourth Amendment in connection with authorities' efforts to close his topless donut shop. Cortese v. Black, D.Colo.1993, 838 F.Supp. 485. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Where plaintiff entered a plea of guilty to disorderly conduct, her false arrest claim under this section was barred. Keyes v. City of Albany, N.D.N.Y.1984, 594 F.Supp. 1147. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiffs could not maintain action under this section against police officers in the nature of common law tort actions of false arrest and false imprisonment, in the face of judgments of conviction which the state obtained on charges growing out of the arrests, particularly where those convictions resulted from voluntary pleas of guilty after the present plaintiffs acknowledged substantial elements of the probable cause which they now challenge and present plaintiffs never attempted to attack those convictions, despite contention that guilty pleas were tendered to avoid higher penalties that were anticipated if they went to trial and encountered the allegedly perjurious testimony of the present defendants. Pouncey v. Ryan, D.C.Conn.1975, 396 F.Supp. 126. Civil Rights 1369

2082. ---- Pending charge, arrest and detention, police activities

Stay was required for § 1983 claim of unlawful arrest where state court criminal proceedings were pending, as judgment in arrestee's favor would border on determination that he was not guilty of state charge, but if arrestee was convicted of offense for which he was arrested, he might be collaterally estopped from asserting that he was arrested without probable cause. Manning v. Tefft, D.R.I.1994, 839 F.Supp. 126, 142 A.L.R. Fed. 795. Action 69(5)

An arrest may support a cause of action for damages under this section notwithstanding pendency of a criminal charge or trial. Zurek v. Woodbury, N.D.Ill.1978, 446 F.Supp. 1149. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2083. ---- Complainant's liability, arrest and detention, police activities

Mere arrest of plaintiff by police officer who was asked to arrest plaintiff for trespassing by owner of the property on which the arrest occurred did not bring plaintiff's action against the property owner within ambits of this section. Curtis v. Rosso & Mastracco, Inc., E.D.Va.1976, 413 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2084. ---- Release from liability, arrest and detention, police activities

District court, in § 1983 action alleging unlawful arrest, excessive force and malicious prosecution, failed to conduct required analysis regarding enforceability of release-dismissal agreement, pursuant to which civil rights claims were released in exchange for dismissal of criminal charges, instead effectively treating release as presumptively valid. Coughlen v. Coots, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 5 F.3d 970. Release 20

2085. ---- Miscellaneous claims, arrest and detention, police activities

Suspect's actions in throwing telephone receiver at off-duty police officer after telling officer to get off the phone so he could use it because there was an emergency created by a stalled truck on the highway did not constitute emergency measures, under New York law, barring suspect's defense to assault on that ground, as would show lack of probable cause to arrest suspect, for purposes of suspect's § 1983 false arrest claim. Jocks v. Tavernier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 128. Arrest 63.4(2); Assault And Battery 9; Civil Rights 1088(4)

City and its police officers did not customarily discriminate against domestic violence victims as a class by allegedly failing to arrest alleged domestic violence offender based on purported domestic violence victim's complaints of threats, property damage, and violation of restraining order, as would establish an equal protection violation to support purported victim and her son's action under § 1983, although Colorado's mandatory arrest law in domestic violence situations required arrest of anyone who committed domestic violence, where officers' decision that probable cause did not exist to arrest alleged offender was within their discretion. Eckert v. Town of Silverthorne, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2001, 258 F.3d 1147, withdrawn from bound volume, republished at 25 Fed.Appx. 679, 2001 WL 1152781.

In determining for qualified immunity purposes whether prosecutor's alleged manufacture of false evidence violated a constitutional right, defining the right as the right not to be deprived of liberty as a result of any governmental misconduct occurring in the investigative phase of a criminal matter would be too broad, but the right need not be identified at such a level of particularity as to focus only on fabrication of evidence by a prosecutor acting in an investigating capacity; rather, the right at issue is appropriately identified as the right not to be deprived of liberty as a result of the fabrication of evidence by a government officer acting in an investigating capacity. Zahrey v. Coffey, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 221 F.3d 342. Civil Rights 1376(9); Constitutional Law 257.5; District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

Police officer had probable cause to believe motorist had committed crime, as required for investigatory stop, and thus motorist failed to show violation of constitutional right against unreasonable seizures, and thus could not state maintain § 1983 civil rights cause of action against officer, where officer observed motorist turn left without yielding to oncoming driver. Lanigan v. Village of East Hazel Crest, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 110 F.3d 467. Automobiles 349(3)

Arrest of driver for failure to furnish satisfactory evidence of identity did not violate driver's civil rights, for purposes of her § 1983 action against arresting officer, where arrestee's actions demonstrated that she was likely to continue driving without license. Hallstrom v. City of Garden City, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1993, 991 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 549, 510 U.S. 991, 126 L.Ed.2d 450. Civil Rights 1088(4) allow children to "hug and kiss" him goodbye at time of his arrest did not constitute violation of any right to "familial associated privacy" or "court access" protected by substantive due process; there was no evidence that any act of the police with respect to alleged threats to the mother was directly aimed at relationship between parent and child. Pittsley v. Warish, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 927 F.2d 3, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 226, 502 U.S. 879, 116 L.Ed.2d 183. Constitutional Law 274(5)

Evidence established that defendant police officers had no realistic opportunity to prevent another officer's attack on arrestee in police station booking room that was over in a matter of seconds and, therefore, defendant officers did not violate Fourth Amendment. Gaudreault v. Municipality of Salem, Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1990, 923 F.2d 203, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2266, 500 U.S. 956, 114 L.Ed.2d 718. Civil Rights 1420

Fact that motorist prevailed in his tort action against police officer for false arrest, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution did not establish that motorist's arrest violated substantive due process, for purposes of determining whether motorist had federal civil rights cause of action. Braley v. City of Pontiac, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1990, 906 F.2d 220. Constitutional Law 262

Police officers and employees of county district attorney's office did not violate arrestee's civil rights by arresting him based on grand jury indictment resulting from charging disposition that erroneously named him as perpetrator of hotel theft; arrestee suffered no constitutional injury from defendants' postarrest actions, and their prearrest actions constituted no more than negligence. Herrera v. Millsap, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 862 F.2d 1157. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiffs did not have claim against city, police department, or individual officers for deprivation of civil rights arising from encounter with police, who were engaged in arresting plaintiffs' son for driving while intoxicated. Barnier v. Szentmiklosi, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1987, 810 F.2d 594. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers were not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged false imprisonment of arrestee after filing of criminal complaint, where officers did not subject prosecutor to unreasonable pressure to charge, withhold information, or provide false information, but instead alerted prosecutor to subsequent evidence that there was no basis for charge of vehicle theft. Ingram v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 1182. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Constitutional rights of detainee, enforceable under §§ 1983, were not violated when he was arrested pursuant to warrant valid on its face, and brought before judge, who held him over after being informed of earlier proceeding terminated by decision that detainee had been arrested, and held for 25 days, when police made same mistake about identity of arrest warrant subject allegedly made in present case. Echols v. Unified Government of Wyandotte County, Kansas City, Kan., D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1088(4)

State statute governing fingerprinting after an arrest mandated fingerprinting and photographing of criminal contemnor after she was found guilty of criminal contempt, and thus, she suffered no violation of her constitutional rights when she was fingerprinted and photographed after being found in criminal contempt by city court. Qader v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 466. Contempt 64

Failure of District of Columbia's Metropolitan Police Department (MPD) to discipline officer for her conduct in allegedly assaulting and arresting her brother-in-law did not amount to deliberate indifference sufficient to maintain §§ 1983 suit against District, where MPD conducted investigation after receiving brother-in-law's complaint during which officer's police powers were revoked, MPD interviewed all participants in incident, and officer was subsequently counseled about being involved in domestic disputes. McRae v. Olive, D.D.C.2005, 368 F.Supp.2d 91. Civil Rights 1352(4) disciplinary proceedings was not cognizable in civil rights action. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5); Constitutional Law 82(6.1); Municipal Corporations 185(7)

Sheriff deputies' detention, pursuant to state statute, of African-American hospital patient for psychiatric evaluation after she allegedly became unruly in emergency room while awaiting treatment for suspected heart attack, was not result of county policy of providing insufficient training to its deputies on subject of diversity, and thus county could not be liable under § 1983 for deputies' alleged violations of patient's Fourth Amendment rights to be free from unreasonable seizures and uses of force. Harvey v. Alameda County Medical Center, N.D.Cal.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 960, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 823, 2005 WL 662645. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Alleged delay in the providing arrestee with food, water, and sanitary needs, as well as alleged refusal to voucher arrestee's money, involved de minimis inconveniences typically experienced by arrestees and were not legally sufficient to constitute unconstitutionally retaliatory actions taken in response to arrestee's purported exercise of First Amendment free speech rights. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Arrest 70(1); Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

City was liable under § 1983 for violations of plaintiff's constitutional rights arising from her false arrest and closure of bar and seizure of its liquor inventory; police department's custom or policy of closing licensed premises without notice or hearing and without checking with the authorized state agency to determine whether a target premises was operating without a valid license was unconstitutional, as it directly authorized the police to disregard the due process rights of corporate and individual licensees in violation of Fourteenth Amendment, and the policy was affirmatively linked to the alleged constitutional violations because plaintiff's arrest was the vehicle through which the bar's closure was accomplished. Sulkowska v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2001, 129 F.Supp.2d 274. Civil Rights 1352(4); Constitutional Law 287.2(3); Intoxicating Liquors 257

Arrestee's allegation that police officer fabricated a confession did not identify any federal statutory or constitutional right the deprivation of which could give rise to civil rights claim, where officer had probable cause to arrest even without the alleged confession, the alleged confession did not result in deprivation of liberty or property interest because criminal charges were dismissed before trial, and to the extent that the officer's conduct caused other forms of injury, such as extra defense costs, injury to reputation, prosecution with malice, and emotional distress, such injuries were not of constitutional dimension and could not form the basis of a civil rights claim. Hennick v. Bowling, W.D.Wash.2000, 115 F.Supp.2d 1204. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claimant's allegation that he was imprisoned by county officials pursuant to a warrant issued for another individual stated claim for violation of the Fourth Amendment and due process clause supporting claimant's § 1983 action against such officials. Ramirez v. U.S., D.N.J.1998, 998 F.Supp. 425. Civil Rights 1088(4)

No substantive due process violation arose from arrest or prosecution of § 1983 plaintiff, who was arrested for assault with firearm on police officer, as officers' conduct did not "shock the conscience"; evidence showed that officer dressed in street clothes was conducting surveillance from defendant's business premises, that plaintiff, while armed with pistol, confronted officer concerning his presence, and that plaintiff refused to drop his pistol even after officer asked him to do so, plaintiff read officer's badge, and uniformed officers arrived. Kelly v. Bencheck, E.D.N.C.1996, 921 F.Supp. 1465, affirmed 107 F.3d 866. Constitutional Law 257.5; Constitutional Law 262

Police officers had probable cause to arrest suspect for purposes of § 1983 false arrest claim where evidence showed that suspect was formally arrested by officers after failing polygraph examination and admitting that he had lied where officers had additional knowledge that suspect had been untruthful about his whereabouts at time of murder and evidence supported that victim's murderer knew her and her work schedule and suspect was one of few people known to fall within that category. Booker v. Ward, N.D.Ill.1995, 905 F.Supp. 483, affirmed 94 F.3d 1052, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 952, 519 U.S. 1113, 136 L.Ed.2d 840. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Single incident of police misconduct in connection with arrest and detention of former pretrial detainee was insufficient to establish that municipal policy, custom, or usage caused civil rights violations of which pretrial detainee complained. Nelson v. Strawn, D.S.C.1995, 897 F.Supp. 252, affirmed in part, vacated in part 78 F.3d 579. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Evidence was insufficient as a matter of law to establish that city's training of jail personnel and policies regarding monitoring of arrestees amounted to deliberate indifference to substantial risk that arrestee would commit suicide such that city could be held liable under § 1983; although plaintiff's expert opined that operation of police department was grossly deficient, that department provided no training in recognition of mental illness, and that monitoring of arrestee was inadequate even in light of prior custodial suicide, conduct of officers in question was objectively reasonable, and city's failure to take preventive measures following earlier suicide at most amounted to negligence. Bowen v. City of Manchester, D.N.H.1991, 894 F.Supp. 561, affirmed 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1420; Evidence 571(3)

Because county police officer did not unlawfully arrest resident of condominium for harassment of manager of condominium complex, county could not be liable to resident for unlawful arrest under § 1983. Fraser v. County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 1994, 855 F.Supp. 1167. Civil Rights 1348

Sheriff's policy in not maintaining accurate records of traffic warrants was proximate cause of unlawful arrests of class of plaintiffs, who were subjected to arrests and detention on recalled warrants, and thus municipality was liable for § 1983 violations as to class; failure to wash dead warrants from system was substantial factor in causing type of unlawful arrest and detention complained of. Hvorcik v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1994, 847 F.Supp. 1414. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arresting officer had probable cause to make arrest for trespassing, and false arrest civil rights claim by arrestee was untenable; officer relied on trespassing complaint, positive identification of arrestee as trespasser referred to therein, and disruptive behavior exhibited by arrestee. Miloslavsky v. AES Engineering Soc., Inc., S.D.N.Y.1992, 808 F.Supp. 351, affirmed 993 F.2d 1534, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 68, 510 U.S. 817, 126 L.Ed.2d 37. Arrest 63.4(12); Arrest 63.4(15); Civil Rights 1088(4)

State prisoner's allegation based on officers' threats, derogatory remarks, and conduct in effecting arrest were not actionable under § 1983. Bey v. Bridgeton Police Dept., E.D.Mo.1991, 775 F.Supp. 1255. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claims of malicious prosecution of motorist by police officers who were covering up fact that police officer involved in collision was intoxicated and claims of false arrest were not actionable under federal civil rights statute. Fisher v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1990, 753 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Township police officers' attempted arrest of suspect at his home for violation of township ordinances did not involve even remote violation of suspect's constitutional rights which could give rise to § 1983 civil rights claim against police officers or township; suspect alleged that police officers came to his home to arrest him, refused to inform his family why they were attempting to arrest him, but failed to arrest him because he was not home. Tillio v. Montgomery County, E.D.Pa.1988, 695 F.Supp. 190. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee's allegations, that property was taken from his apartment after police officers who arrested him failed to secure apartment before taking him to police station, were insufficient to state actionable § 1983 claim for relief;

failure to secure apartment before leaving amounted to nothing more than negligence, which does not implicate due process clause, and, even if officers intentionally left apartment open to allow third parties to remove property, arrestee had state postdeprivation remedy available, thus barring any constitutionally cognizable claim for relief. Slaughter v. Anderson, N.D.Ill.1987, 673 F.Supp. 929. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Even if arrestee was never brought before judge or magistrate, never charged with crime, never allowed to make bail, post bond, or be released on his own recognizance, and never allowed to call an attorney, there was no constitutional violation which could support action for damages under this section, inasmuch as arrestee was not interrogated in violation of Miranda, was given reasonable opportunity to consult with his attorney when he left sheriff's office to return home, and was released from custody within two hours of his arrest. Wilson v. Walden, W.D.Mo.1984, 586 F.Supp. 1235. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where police officer did not know of student's religious beliefs or sexual orientation, and officer appeared to have acted in good faith in telling student that if student continued to cause trouble at student union, student would be removed from building and if necessary taken to jail, police officer did not violate any of student's constitutional rights, despite allegations of student, that police officer had threatened student as punitive measure because of student's religious beliefs, racial ancestry and sexual orientation. Sanders v. Ajir, W.D.Wis.1983, 555 F.Supp. 240. Civil Rights 1088(1)

City police officers' participation in alleged entrapment of inmate, leading to his indictment, following arrest on other charges, for attempted murder based on misrepresentations by confidential informant, did not rise to level of constitutional violation, as required to support inmate's §§ 1983 claim against officers. Almonte v. Florio, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 60306, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestees had no constitutionally protected liberty interest in the issuance of desk appearance tickets, or in an individual assessment prior to denial of a ticket, thus defeating their § 1983 claim that police chief's refusal to issue desk appearance tickets violated their substantive due process rights; New York state law did not create a protected right in the issuance of a desk appearance ticket, but rather, its issuance was purely discretionary. Bryant v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22861926, Unreported, affirmed 404 F.3d 128. Arrest 70(1); Constitutional Law 265

Absence of evidence that officer acted with unlawful purpose, harmful intent, or collateral objective precluded officer's liability to arrestees, under § 1983, for abuse of process. Ingersoll ex rel. Estate of Ingersoll v. LaPlante, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 350, 2003 WL 21949752, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Municipality was not liable under § 1983 for damages arising out of alleged false arrest; arrestee failed to cite any unconstitutional activity or official policy under which arrest was accomplished. Sepulveda v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21673626, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

2086. Assault and battery, police activities--Generally

Citizen, alleging that, without provocation and without placing him under arrest, defendant police officers detained him, threw him to the ground, punched, kicked and handcuffed him stated a § 1983 claim for deprivation of substantive due process, notwithstanding existence of a basis for liability under state tort law. Rutherford v. City of Berkeley, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1986, 780 F.2d 1444. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer's holding can of mace at his side as he entered divorced husband's apartment to retrieve child allegedly held in violation of child custody decree did not amount to assault in violation of this section. Wise v. Bravo, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1981, 666 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1088(3) apprehending a boy during a Mardi Gras parade, with officer also striking the camera and smashing it into plaintiff's face and lacerating his forehead, was a violation of constitutional dimension for which redress could be had under this section as plaintiff was not involved in the arrest incident and did not interfere with the police and assault was unprovoked and unjustified and transcended bounds of ordinary tort law. Shillingford v. Holmes, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 634 F.2d 263, on remand 512 F.Supp. 656. Civil Rights 1088(2)

On motion for summary judgment in civil rights action under § 1983, arrestees' allegation that arresting officer sexually assaulted them during search incident to arrest failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to arrestees' claim that they were subjected to unreasonable search under the Fourth Amendment, since objective reasonableness of search was determined without regard to officer's underlying intent or motivation. Wyatt v. Slagle, S.D.Iowa 2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 931. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police chief's slapping 13-year-old boy whom chief arrested for operating motorcycle without license was unreasonable as matter of law, thus subjecting chief to § 1983 liability; offense for which boy was arrested was not particularly heinous transgression, and chief did not contend child attempted to avoid arrest or posed immediate threat, but admitted that he had no idea why he struck boy. Courville v. Town of Barre, Mass., D.Mass.1993, 818 F.Supp. 23. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations by travelers that police officer pushed them during dispute at airport regarding inspection for possible tax violations of large, unmarked boxes travelers were attempting to bring into Puerto Rico failed to state claim for violation of § 1983. Salas Garcia v. Cesar Perez, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 777 F.Supp. 137. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Assault and battery against pretrial detainee do not become constitutional deprivations under Fourteenth Amendment for purposes of § 1983 analysis merely by reason that defendants are police officers; constitutional protections do not extend to cover every common-law tort action for battery and much less so for assault. Brooks v. Pembroke City Jail, E.D.N.C.1989, 722 F.Supp. 1294. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Illinois Wrongful Death Act [S.H.A. ch. 70, ¶ 1, et seq.] did not bar federal civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for alleged police shooting of victim seven times without provocation while he was in bed, if act was either intentional or reckless, since both intentional and reckless deprivation of life violate substantive constitutional guarantee. Doty v. Carey, N.D.Ill.1986, 626 F.Supp. 359. Civil Rights 1319

Even if police officer had threatened to withhold medical assistance from wounded plaintiff or to kill him if he failed to go to hospital chosen by police or to lie quietly on sidewalk after his arrest, inasmuch as such threats did not result in any physical contact or any physical injury to plaintiff, they could not amount to actionable assaults under this section. Simms v. Reiner, N.D.Ill.1976, 419 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1088(4)

An alleged assault by law enforcement officers is a claim cognizable under this section. Rogers v. Fuller, M.D.N.C.1976, 410 F.Supp. 187. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Auxiliary police officer was not acting under color of law when he attacked a minor who was loitering outside restaurant owned by officer's parents, by brandishing handgun, firing four shots into the air, throwing minor to ground, and striking him several times with his handgun, so as to subject city or police commissioner to liability for damages under § 1983; officer was off-duty and out of uniform, did not flash his badge or announce he was auxiliary officer or acting in that capacity, used gun to inflict beating that was not issued by police department, and did not act through limited power to arrest given that he had no power to arrest beyond that of a private citizen. Miqui v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22937690, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(8)

2087. ---- Verbal abuse, assault and battery, police activities

put to him by officers seated in front seat, one of officers uttered racial slur and threatened to "knock [arrestee's] remaining teeth out of his mouth" if he remained silent failed to allege conduct rising to level of "brutal" and "wanton act of cruelty" so as to state cognizable constitutional claim under § 1983; officer never threatened to kill arrestee, and arrestee did not allege that he was physically assaulted by officer or that officer raised his fists or made any type of physical gesture toward him. Hopson v. Fredericksen, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 961 F.2d 1374. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Verbal threat is actionable under § 1983 only if it amounts to assault, results in physical harm, or is part of a pattern of unnecessary and wanton abuse. Guzinski v. Hasselbach, E.D.Mich.1996, 920 F.Supp. 762. Civil Rights 1036; Civil Rights 1035

Taunts, insults and racial slurs allegedly hurled at white arrestee by black police officers, while reprehensible if true, did not comprise infringement of constitutional guaranties and give rise to liability of police officers under federal civil rights statute. Haussman v. Fergus, S.D.N.Y.1995, 894 F.Supp. 142. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Verbal harassment and abusive language by police officer, although unprofessional and inexcusable, were simply not sufficient to state constitutional claim under § 1983. Slagel v. Shell Oil Refinery, C.D.Ill.1993, 811 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 23 F.3d 410, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 611, 513 U.S. 1031, 130 L.Ed.2d 520, rehearing denied 115 S.Ct. 958, 513 U.S. 1137, 130 L.Ed.2d 900. Civil Rights 1088(1)

In tense and hostile atmosphere following shooting of policeman, it is not unreasonable to expect occasionally vehement verbal outbursts; thus where colloquy between police and arrestee does not rise to level of physical harm, there is no violation of constitutional right actionable under this section. Simms v. Reiner, N.D.Ill.1976, 419 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Verbal abuse by correction officers was insufficient to support inmate's §§ 1983 action. Harvey v. Stalder, C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 654, 2005 WL 564391, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 77, 163 L.Ed.2d 98. Civil Rights 1098

Detainee's § 1983 claims against city detectives for allegedly verbally and sexually assaulting him while transporting him accrued at time of incident, rather than when criminal charges against him were dismissed, where detainee's allegations of assault were unrelated to criminal charges underlying warrant that prompted his arrest. Warren v. Altieri, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 426, 2003 WL 1191173, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

2088. ---- Municipal liability, assault and battery, police activities

Town's failure to perform background check on police applicant was not cause of deprivation of citizen's constitutional rights when he was subjected to police brutality by town police officer, where officer had five years of unblemished service as police officer, and there were no facts supporting inference that town's motives were contrary to constitutional standards. Stokes v. Bullins, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1988, 844 F.2d 269. Civil Rights 1348

Municipality was not liable for failing to train police officers in use of attack dogs, resulting in trauma arising when dog bit detainee; there were insufficient incidents of canine problems to establish need for training. Tilson v. City of Elkhart, Ind., N.D.Ind.2003, 317 F.Supp.2d 861, adhered to on reconsideration 2003 WL 23509313, affirmed 96 Fed.Appx. 413, 2004 WL 901545. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Personal representative of teacher, who alleged sheriff's final policymaker status, his conduct underlying alleged constitutional violations, injury inflicted, and requisite intent, sufficiently set out essential elements for municipal liability in lawsuit under § 1983 that alleged violation of teacher's substantive due process rights. Sanders v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Jefferson, Colorado, D.Colo.2001, 192 F.Supp.2d 1094. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City's alleged policy of never questioning persons subjected to chemical spray by police officers, and of failing to speak with officers about use of spray, was not "deliberate indifference" to the rights of persons with whom police would come into contact, as required for arrestee's § 1983 claim against city; city provided officers with training and supervision with respect to application of chemical spray, and arrestee could have filed citizen's complaint with police department, which would have automatically started an investigation of his complaints. Horrington v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1999, 49 F.Supp.2d 1022. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Even if there were evidence of "deliberate indifference" on part of town in connection with fatal shooting of allegedly mentally ill individual during course of attempt by deputy and town officer to execute involuntary commitment order, town was not liable under § 1983, absent causal connection between actions of officer and alleged negligent death of individual; there was no evidence that officer used any type of force against individual, who was shot by deputy, and there was no proof that town endorsed, encouraged or facilitated deputy's actions or that the two entities routinely acted in concert to deprive citizens of their constitutionally guaranteed rights. Dowdell v. Chapman, M.D.Ala.1996, 930 F.Supp. 533. Civil Rights 1348

Allegation that § 1983 civil rights plaintiff was assaulted by police officer without provocation failed to state claim against municipality in absence of alleged improper municipal policy, practice or procedure, or that police officer possessed final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to action ordered. DeJesus v. O'Connor, S.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 131. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Whether police officer was negligent in discharging his gun or committed intentional assault upon individual shot during armed robbery investigation was an entirely separate matter for which conduct the city could not be held liable under this section which provides cause of action to any person who under color of state law is deprived of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the constitution or federal law. Whitley v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1981, 518 F.Supp. 1318. Civil Rights 1348

There was no evidence that city police department had policy or custom of violating citizens' constitutional rights through use of excessive force, so as to support municipal liability under § 1983 for damages suffered by minor for beating by off-duty auxiliary police officer with officer's own handgun after he discovered minor loitering outside restaurant of officer's parents, even though officer had previously been disciplined twice for unauthorized excursions in auxiliary police cars; police department's alleged failure to discipline officer more severely in no way implicated any constitutional deprivation, and police department did not demonstrate deliberate indifference to officer's prior misconduct but instead suspended him for it. Miqui v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22937690, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

2089. ---- Supervisory personnel, assault and battery, police activities

Complaint in class action by citizens and civic groups which alleged violation by police of constitutional rights and that various members of city police department had engaged in systematic pattern of abusive conduct which was condoned or encouraged or permitted by mayor and police chief of city was sufficient to state claim against mayor and police commissioner for declaratory and injunctive relief and for monetary damages under this section. Build of Buffalo, Inc. v. Sedita, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 441 F.2d 284. Civil Rights 1395(5); Declaratory Judgment 319; Injunction 118(3)

Personal representative of teacher, who alleged that supervisory law enforcement officers not only had knowledge of and acquiesced in their colleagues and subordinates alleged constitutional violations, but personally participated in such conduct, sufficiently set out essential elements for supervisory liability in lawsuit under § 1983 alleging violation of teacher's substantive due process rights. Sanders v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Jefferson, Colorado, D.Colo.2001, 192 F.Supp.2d 1094. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Supervisor of emergency telephone dispatcher was not liable under § 1983 for injuries suffered by victim when he was shot by police officers who observed victim pointing gun at his wife in couple's kitchen, based on dispatcher's alleged failure to tell officers that victim had a dart gun rather than a real gun; supervisor was not supervising dispatchers who were working on day of incident, and there was no indication that different training of dispatchers would have averted incident. Frane v. Kijowski, N.D.Ill.1998, 992 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations by woman who had been sexually assaulted by police officer and who participated in sting operation aimed at officer which was set up by internal affairs department that internal affairs officers had allowed officer to remove her clothing and make sexual contact before attempting to arrest officer were insufficient to state claim against internal affairs officers in federal civil rights action based on failure to supervise; alleged failure to intervene amounted to isolated instance of negligence or error of judgment not rising to level of deliberate indifference. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Arrestee's allegation that police chief failed to prevent alleged harassments and assaults of arrestee while he was free on bail was insufficient to state civil rights claim for supervisory liability, absent allegation of any assaults or harassment after arrestee's release on bail which rose to level of constitutional deprivations. Bieros v. Nicola, E.D.Pa.1994, 860 F.Supp. 226. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2090. Automobile accidents, police activities--Generally

No "constitutional deprivation" arose from automobile collision between plaintiff motorists and defendant deputy sheriff, even if deputy's driving at high rate of speed in nonemergency or nonpursuit situation revealed gross negligence rather than negligence; thus, plaintiffs could not maintain § 1983 action against deputy, as their cause of action was state tort claim. Rooney v. Watson, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1378, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 412, 522 U.S. 966, 139 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Mere negligence involving only lack of due care by state official is not sufficient to give rise to liability pursuant to § 1983, including police actions in injuring motorists through negligent operation of their vehicles. Johnson v. Colgate, M.D.Fla.1988, 687 F.Supp. 573. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Negligent operation of automobile by deputy sheriff did not give rise to claim under this section for wrongful death of motorist killed in collision with deputy sheriff. Ellsworth v. Mockler, N.D.Ind.1983, 554 F.Supp. 1072.

2091. ---- Chase, automobile accidents, police activities

Even if city's policies, training, and supervision of officers with respect to high-speed pursuits were unconstitutional, city could not be held liable under § 1983 for deaths of motorists killed in collision with fleeing suspect in the absence of constitutional violation by officers conducting pursuit. Trigalet v. City of Tulsa, Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2001, 239 F.3d 1150, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 40, 534 U.S. 814, 151 L.Ed.2d 13. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police conduct in pursuit during which suspect's vehicle struck and injured pedestrian did not shock the conscience so as to give rise to substantive due process claim by pedestrian, where chase lasted no more than two minutes, covered only about half a mile, and vehicles' speed never exceeded 50 miles per hour; although chase occurred in densely populated area at time when people would likely be ambling about and officers did not seriously consider alternatives to hot pursuit, those points added up to no more than possible negligence. Evans v. Avery, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1033, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1693, 520 U.S. 1210, 137 L.Ed.2d 820, rehearing denied 117 S.Ct. 2533, 521 U.S. 1129, 138 L.Ed.2d 1032. Automobiles 175(1); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Municipality can be liable under § 1983 and the Fourteenth Amendment for failure to train its police officers with respect to high-speed automobile chases, even if no individual officer participating in chase violated Constitution.

Fagan v. City of Vineland, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1994, 22 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police officer's high-speed pursuit of suspect and his standing on brakes in attempt to stop when suspect lost control of his vehicle resulting in police officer's vehicle striking that of plaintiff's vehicle did not shock the judicial conscience and did not rise to the level of violation of substantive due process cognizable under § 1983. Temkin v. Frederick County Com'rs, C.A.4 (Md.) 1991, 945 F.2d 716, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1172, 502 U.S. 1095, 117 L.Ed.2d 417. Automobiles 175(4); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Widow of bystander who was killed during high-speed chase of furloughed prisoner could not maintain § 1983 action against police for high-speed pursuit leading to accident; governmental conduct did not rise to requisite level of gross negligence and outrageous conduct, given officers' choice to protect public safety by attempting to apprehend obviously dangerous driver. Jones v. Sherrill, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1987, 827 F.2d 1102. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer's conduct during chase of drug suspects, in which pursued vehicle struck victim, did not "shock the conscience," or reach level of "callous or reckless indifference" to rights of third parties, in violation of victim's substantive due process rights. Evans v. Avery, D.Mass.1995, 897 F.Supp. 21, affirmed 100 F.3d 1033, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1693, 520 U.S. 1210, 137 L.Ed.2d 820, rehearing denied 117 S.Ct. 2533, 521 U.S. 1129, 138 L.Ed.2d 1032. Automobiles 175(1); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Police officer was not reckless or grossly negligent in engaging in high-speed pursuit of traffic offender and, thus, there was no basis for § 1983 substantive due process claim by occupants of automobile struck by offender; it was not unreasonable for officer to turn on his siren and lights or chase after offender for 90 seconds. Dismukes v. Hackathorn, N.D.Miss.1992, 802 F.Supp. 1442. Civil Rights 1088(4)

No § 1983 cause of action existed for gross negligence of police officer in pursuing suspected thief who was in stolen car and in colliding with car of accident victim. Britt v. Little Rock Police Dept., E.D.Ark.1989, 721 F.Supp. 189. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Allegations that police officer's conduct in maintaining high-speed pursuit of fleeing misdemeanant beyond city limits for no emergency was conduct that shocked the conscience did not allege negligence that rose to level of conduct that was actionable under § 1983. Roach v. City of Fredericktown, Mo., E.D.Mo.1988, 693 F.Supp. 795, affirmed 882 F.2d 294. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Town constable who allegedly blocked road with his vehicle during high speed chase of motorcyclist, and who moved vehicle in front of motorcycle when motorcyclist changed lanes did not necessarily act in reasonable or negligent manner so as to preclude section 1983 action for injuries resulting from collision with vehicle, as constable could be found to have acted unreasonably or with slight degree of care for motorcyclist's well being. Stanulonis v. Marzec, D.Conn.1986, 649 F.Supp. 1536. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2092. Concealment or suppression of evidence, police activities

Alleged concealment of evidence by police officers in prior criminal prosecution did not violate arrestee's due process rights, for purposes of subsequent §§ 1983 claim brought after his convictions were reversed, where allegedly suppressed evidence, including time at which police officers actually ran records check during initial traffic stop, was not material to extortion, racketeering, and weapons charges and was either readily available to arrestee before his criminal trial or was type of evidence that arrestee could have testified to at trial. Ienco v. Angarone, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 429 F.3d 680. Criminal Law 700(3) lineup and then warned witness that he risked jail time if he informed prosecutors of officers' manipulation were not entitled to absolute immunity, in § 1983 due process action brought against officers by former suspect/pardoned prisoner, on theory that officers were being accused of suborning perjury and were within rule granting witnesses absolute immunity from civil liability on account of their testimony; officers' liability was under Due Process Clause owing to their concealment of exculpatory evidence. Newsome v. McCabe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 319 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2621, 539 U.S. 943, 156 L.Ed.2d 630. Civil Rights 1375

Evidence that narcotics officer allegedly withheld from prosecutors was not patently exculpatory and, thus, did not support § 1983 claim for damages stemming from two-week detention of individual; officer admitted that target of investigation was individual's neighbor and that he visited individual in jail to encourage her to provide information against neighbor, but individual had spent much time in neighbor's trailer that was littered with drugs, drug paraphernalia, and cash. Hart v. O'Brien, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 127 F.3d 424, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 154 F.3d 419, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 868, 525 U.S. 1103, 142 L.Ed.2d 770. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers who failed to set forth in their police reports alleged facts that officer, inter alia, "jumped onto [arrestee's] back with a large amount of force" did not deny arrestee effective and meaningful access to courts, so as to violate his constitutional rights, particularly as arrestee was personally involved in incident and thus had first-hand knowledge of all facts and circumstances surrounding his arrest; facts known to arrestee were sufficient to enable him to promptly file § 1983 lawsuit. Thompson v. Boggs, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 33 F.3d 847, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1692, 514 U.S. 1063, 131 L.Ed.2d 556. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Defendant did not show that any policy of refusing to disclose police internal investigation files harmed him in prosecution for resisting arrest and aggravated battery where he was convicted only of resisting arrest and statements which would have been revealed related only to incidents after his arrest. Stachniak v. Hayes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 989 F.2d 914. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police officers satisfied their constitutional obligation to turn over exculpatory information by providing information to prosecutor; their failure to contact defendant directly to alert him to existence of such evidence could not form basis for holding municipality liable under § 1983. Walker v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 974 F.2d 293, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1387, 507 U.S. 961, 122 L.Ed.2d 762, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1412, 507 U.S. 972, 122 L.Ed.2d 784. Civil Rights 1088(5); Criminal Law 700(5)

Whether a criminal defendant is incarcerated is not decisive in determining whether he has suffered an abridgment of constitutional rights in action under § 1983; being subjected to a prosecution because an officer withheld exculpatory evidence from prosecutor while urging that prosecution should go forward can work a deprivation of due process. Goodwin v. Metts, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1989, 885 F.2d 157, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1812, 494 U.S. 1081, 108 L.Ed.2d 942. Civil Rights 1088(5); Constitutional Law 268(5)

Because plaintiffs were not prevented from pursuing, and in fact obtained, relief in action seeking damages for allegedly unlawful search committed by police officers, plaintiffs suffered no deprivation of federal right, actionable under this section, based on officers' attempts to conceal police reports prepared in connection with challenged search. Dooley v. Reiss, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1984, 736 F.2d 1392, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 518, 469 U.S. 1038, 83 L.Ed.2d 407. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Claim that police deprived homeowners of their constitutional right to meaningful access to civil courts by losing all evidence of a theft from their home was viable under § 1983. Harrell v. scene of crime who was never tied to crime or shown to be witness, such negligence could not support cause of action against officers for violation of constitutional rights. Cooks v. County of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1989, 710 F.Supp. 732. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Civil rights plaintiff who failed to show that alleged misconduct, consisting of law enforcement officials' "leaking" of "false" information and their alleged "concealment" of a page of the plaintiff's police logbook, had any prejudicial effect on the plaintiff's defense to murder charges or showing that the trials were fundamentally and ultimately unfair, failed to establish that he was deprived of his civil rights. Schertz v. Waupaca County, E.D.Wis.1988, 683 F.Supp. 1551, affirmed 875 F.2d 578. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2093. Defamation, police activities

Plaintiff whose name and photograph appeared on flyer which was captioned "Active Shoplifters" and which was distributed by police chiefs to merchants did not have any legal guarantee of present enjoyment of reputation which was altered as the result of police chiefs' actions and thus suffered no deprivation of any "liberty" or "property" interests within due process guarantee. Paul v. Davis, U.S.Ky.1976, 96 S.Ct. 1155, 424 U.S. 693, 47 L.Ed.2d 405, rehearing denied 96 S.Ct. 2194, 425 U.S. 985, 48 L.Ed.2d 811. Constitutional Law 255(2); Constitutional Law 277(1)

Sheriff's statement, upon arrest of lessor for leasing commercial premises used for prostitution, indicating that law enforcement officials were attacking those with money backing prostitutes, as misleading as statement might have been, did not extinguish or significantly alter any right guaranteed to lessor by the United States Constitution or by Florida law and, accordingly, lessor alleged no state action sufficient to invoke due process guarantees and stated no § 1983 claim against sheriff; evidence established only that lessor suffered temporary, partial loss of income as result of sheriff's statement, given determination on appeal that deputies did not act unreasonably in arresting lessor. Von Stein v. Brescher, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 904 F.2d 572. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee who was found innocent of attempted kidnapping failed to allege sufficient evidence to show elements of defamation claim against police officers after notice of arrest was published in local newspaper where newspaper gleaned information from police daily log which was public record and arrestee made no allegation that police disseminated any information other than information accessible to public as matter of right. Tomczak v. Town of Barnstable, D.Mass.1995, 901 F.Supp. 397. Libel And Slander 49

A defendant who pleaded guilty to drug offenses pursuant to plea bargain could not recover for allegedly slanderous statements made by police officers to his employer under civil rights statute or Bivens based on state tort law. Ludolph v. Wright, N.D.W.Va.1992, 791 F.Supp. 607. Libel And Slander 6(1)

In suit brought against federal and state officials allegedly responsible for disseminating to law enforcement agencies a telex message that erroneously accused plaintiffs of devising a plan to kill police officers, no cause of action was stated for an alleged violation of plaintiffs' constitutional right of privacy; more broadly, the Supreme Court's Paul decision established that the interest which plaintiffs claimed had been invaded--their interest in preserving their good reputations--was not protected by the federal Constitution, though it might be safeguarded by the tort law of one or more states. Gonzalez v. Leonard, D.C.Conn.1980, 497 F.Supp. 1058. Torts 351

That police officers may have provoked Negro to commit offense of disorderly conduct which resulted in his arrest, i.e., that they in effect entrapped him into commission of offense, afforded no basis for claim under this section. 2094. Emergency dispatchers, police activities not liable under § 1983 for injuries suffered by victim when he was shot by police officers who observed victim pointing gun at his wife in couple's kitchen, based on dispatcher's alleged failure to tell officers that victim had a dart gun rather than a real gun; there was no allegation of a policy or custom that was actionable under § 1983, there was only one allegation of a constitutional violation, and there was no demonstration of a causal nexus between agency's alleged policies and injuries to victim. Frane v. Kijowski, N.D.Ill.1998, 992 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Emergency telephone dispatcher was not liable under § 1983 for injuries suffered by victim when he was shot by police officers who observed victim pointing gun at his wife in couple's kitchen, based on dispatcher's alleged failure to tell officers that victim had a dart gun rather than a real gun; dispatcher was not at residence, dispatcher's knowledge of scene came from account given by victim's daughter, dispatcher did not know that victim was wielding what appeared to be a real pistol, and dispatcher did not act with deliberate disregard for victim's rights. Frane v. Kijowski, N.D.Ill.1998, 992 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2095. Emotional distress, police activities

Child who brought federal civil rights action against police officer and his superiors did not have liberty interest under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment to be free of emotional trauma suffered as result of observing allegedly excessive police force which was directed entirely at his father during father's arrest. Archuleta v. McShan, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1990, 897 F.2d 495. Constitutional Law 274(2)

Shooting victim's sister and niece did not have standing to maintain civil rights action, even though they were in same room when victim, who had armed himself with machete, was shot and killed by police where sister and niece were not caught in cross-fire and their lives were not endangered by police action. Borrero-Rentero v. Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 761 F.Supp. 5. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Claims bought by bystanders against police, which alleged that they suffered emotional and psychological stress as result of witnessing alleged disturbance between family members and police was not cognizable under § 1983, though bystanders were in close proximity to altercation, where there was little risk to bystanders' personal security, in that altercation did not involve use of weapons and allegations of police misconduct with respect to bystanders did not shock conscience. Plambeck v. Stone, N.D.Ill.1986, 662 F.Supp. 298. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2096. Excessive force, police activities--Generally

Validity of excessive force claims brought under § 1983 is not governed by single generic standard; rather, court must identify specific constitutional right allegedly infringed, and then judge the claim by reference to specific constitutional standard which governs that right. Graham v. Connor, U.S.N.C.1989, 109 S.Ct. 1865, 490 U.S. 386, 104 L.Ed.2d 443. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Error in failing to give deadly-force instruction as to police officers who used deadly force against suspect while attempting to arrest him following a credit-union robbery was not harmless, in §§ 1983 excessive-force action, in which sole issue at trial was whether officers' use of force was justified. Rahn v. Hawkins, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 464 F.3d 813. Federal Courts 911

Violations of state law and police procedure generally do not give rise to a §§ 1983 claim for excessive force. Marquez v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 399 F.3d 1216. Civil Rights 1088(2)

The Court of Appeals analyzes an excessive force § 1983 claim under the Fourth Amendment's objective reasonableness standard. McCoy v. City of Monticello, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 342 F.3d 842. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(2)

The validity of an excessive force claim brought under § 1983 must be judged by reference to the specific constitutional right allegedly infringed by the challenged application of force, rather than to some generalized excessive force standard. McCoy v. Harrison, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 341 F.3d 600. Civil Rights 1035

In making excessive force inquiry under § 1983, reasonableness of officers' actions depends both on whether officers were in danger at precise moment that they used force and on whether officers' own reckless or deliberate conduct during seizure unreasonably created need to use such force. Allen v. Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 119 F.3d 837, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1165, 522 U.S. 1148, 140 L.Ed.2d 176. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Reasonableness of police officer's use of deadly force, for purposes of § 1983 civil rights claim, depends upon whether officer was in danger at precise moment that force was used and whether officer's own reckless or deliberate conduct unreasonably created need to use such force. Sevier v. City of Lawrence, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1995, 60 F.3d 695. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Use of excessive or unreasonable force by police officers in exercise of their authority gives rise to cause of action under the federal civil rights statute, § 1983. Russo v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 953 F.2d 1036. Civil Rights 1088(2)

For arrestee to state federal cause of action under § 1983 for use of excessive force by law enforcement officers making arrest, conduct of officers must sufficiently cross constitutional line to state civil rights claim; assault or bodily harm caused by police officer is not actionable under § 1983 unless conduct is egregious and reckless. Dale v. Janklow, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1987, 828 F.2d 481, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1486, 485 U.S. 1014, 99 L.Ed.2d 714. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In some circumstances, use of excessive force or violence by law enforcement personnel violates victim's rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5, 8, 14. Landrigan v. City of Warwick, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1980, 628 F.2d 736. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Local law enforcement officers who act under color of state law and who use excessive force in the enforcement of state laws are subject to civil rights liability when their acts deprive person of rights guaranteed by the constitution and laws of the United States. Bellows v. Dainack, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 555 F.2d 1105. Civil Rights 1358

The use of excessive force by police officers in effecting an arrest is ground for liability under this section. Clark v. Ziedonis, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1975, 513 F.2d 79.

To determine whether force was excessive, a court facing a §§ 1983 claim must consider any safety threat perceived by the officers, the need for the application of force, the relationship between that need and the amount of force used, the extent of the injury inflicted and the efforts made by the officers to mitigate the severity of the force. Jenkins v. Wilson, W.D.Wis.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 808. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Arrestee's uncertainty as to which of two officers placed knee on his neck, coupled with lack of other evidence as to identity of officer who did so, precluded finding that either officer used excessive force in connection with arrest that was accomplished by multiple officers. Birdine v. City of Coatesville, E.D.Pa.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 182, vacated in part, reconsideration denied. Arrest 68(2)

Not every push or shove by a police officer, even if it may later seem unnecessary in the peace of a judge's chambers, violates the Fourth Amendment and is actionable under § 1983. Eberle v. City of Newton, D.Kan.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1269, motion to amend denied 296 F.Supp.2d 1276. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(2)

For purposes of a § 1983 action alleging excessive force, a plaintiff must show that the alleged use of force is objectively sufficiently serious or harmful enough to be actionable; not every push or shove, even if it may later seem unnecessary in the peace of the judge's chambers, violates a prisoner's constitutional rights. Perkins v. Brown, E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 279. Civil Rights 1035; Civil Rights 1093

A police officer is personally involved in the use of excessive force, as required for award of damages under § 1983, if he either: (1) directly participates in an assault; or (2) was present during the assault, yet failed to intercede on behalf of the victim even though he had a reasonable opportunity to do so. Jeffreys v. Rossi, S.D.N.Y.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 463, affirmed 426 F.3d 549. Civil Rights 1358

Civil rights claims of excessive force by a police officer arising outside the context of a seizure, and thus outside the Fourth Amendment, are analyzed under substantive due process principles. Herrera v. Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 154. Constitutional Law 253(1)

Deadly force complaint under civil rights statute is analyzed according to Fourth Amendment standards, such that "reasonableness" of particular use of force must be judged from perspective of reasonable officer on scene, rather than with 20/20 vision of hindsight; calculus of reasonableness must include allowances for fact that police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments, in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving, about amount of force that is necessary in particular situation. Wicker v. City of Galveston, S.D.Tex.1996, 944 F.Supp. 553. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Excessive force claims brought under federal civil rights statute are not governed by single generic standard but, rather, specific constitutional right allegedly infringed by challenged use of force must be identified. Wallace by Wallace v. Batavia School Dist. 101, N.D.Ill.1994, 870 F.Supp. 222, affirmed 68 F.3d 1010. Civil Rights 1035

Although charges against plaintiff were later dropped, city was not liable under § 1983 claim that plaintiff's constitutional rights were violated upon her arrest and confinement, absent evidence of excessive use of force or that officers otherwise acted unreasonably. Velaire v. City of Schenectady, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claims of excessive use of force during arrest of free citizens are governed by reasonableness standard of Fourth Amendment, rather than by due process standards of Fourteenth Amendment. Gibson v. City of Clarksville, Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1993, 860 F.Supp. 450. Arrest 68(2)

Use of excessive force during an arrest, investigatory stop, or other seizure of a free citizen violates that person's Fourth Amendment rights and is actionable under Federal Civil Rights statute. Cox v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1991, 780 F.Supp. 103. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations of brutality by law enforcement personnel apprehending suspect or effectuating arrest are cognizable in suit brought under § 1983. In re Scott County Master Docket, D.Minn.1987, 672 F.Supp. 1152, affirmed 868 F.2d 1017. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff, who alleged that borough police officer directly and intentionally violated her right to be free from violence and injury by state's own agents, was not alleging a due process claim, but a deliberate and intentional invasion of a substantive constitutional right, and thus plaintiff had right of action against officer for violation of her civil rights, under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, without showing that postdeprivation due process was not available. Gant v. Aliquippa Borough, W.D.Pa.1985, 612 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1088(1)

If a police officer can perform his duties without use of force at all, then even use of minimal force is actionable. Donaldson v. Hovanec, E.D.Pa.1979, 473 F.Supp. 602. Municipal Corporations 189(1)

Claims against county sheriff and deputy sheriff for excessive force in arresting plaintiffs could be brought under this section. Manis v. U. S., E.D.Tenn.1979, 467 F.Supp. 828. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Federal civil rights action will lie against police officers for use of unnecessary or unreasonable force in effecting an arrest. Wyland v. James, N.D.Tex.1977, 426 F.Supp. 304. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Deprivation of life by a state or local enforcement official clearly constitutes a claim cognizable under this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law if the deprivation of life results from an illegal use of force by the officer. Phillips v. Ward, E.D.Pa.1975, 415 F.Supp. 976. Civil Rights 1088(2)

This section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law neither permits police brutality nor allows police conduct which shocks the conscience. Brudney v. Ematrudo, D.C.Conn.1976, 414 F.Supp. 1187. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Use of excessive or unreasonable force by a police officer in the exercise of his authority is actionable under this section. Durkin v. Bristol Tp., E.D.Pa.1980, 88 F.R.D. 613. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police officer did not apply "excessive force" in his lawful seizure of motorist, by grabbing motorist's left arm and attempting to pull him out of his vehicle, and then, after motorist exited vehicle, by pulling motorist's wrist behind him and up to his neck, for purpose of civil rights action against county and deputy sheriff under Fourth Amendment, where motorist refused to produce his driver's license when officer requested it, motorist was combative and irrationally angry, and fact that vehicle was in motion as motorist argued with officer could have led reasonable officer to believe that motorist was attempting to evade arrest or that motorist was posing danger to pedestrians and stopped traffic in area. Lawrence v. Kenosha County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 391 F.3d 837. Arrest 68(2)

Claims of postarrest excessive force against arrestee who has been detained without a warrant and not yet brought before a judicial officer are governed by "objective reasonableness" standard of Fourth Amendment, under which question is whether defendants' actions were objectively reasonable in light of the facts and circumstances confronting them, without regard to hindsight or underlying intent or motivation. Frohmader v. Wayne, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1024. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Not every instance of force proscribed by state law rises to level of constitutional violation so as to support § 1983 action; constitutional violation is shown only by proving use of force that was objectively unreasonable under Fourth Amendment. Finnegan v. Fountain, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 915 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Force used during arrest may be so excessive as to support cause of action under § 1983 and Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments. Brown v. Borough of Chambersburg, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 903 F.2d 274. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Town's police officer's alleged actions in effecting arrest on misdemeanor warrant were objectively unreasonable, in terms of force and humiliation, as required to support arrestee's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment action against officer; despite minor nature of crime, fact that arrestee posed no immediate threat to safety and did not resist or flee, officer allegedly threw arrestee on bed while arrestee was naked from waist down, handcuffed him so tightly that his wrists bled and refused to remove cuffs, and hurried him out of house without permitting him to cover himself. Armstead v. Township of Upper Dublin, E.D.Pa.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 188. Arrest 68(2)

Fourth Amendment rights, rather than due process rights, were implicated in arrestee's § 1983 claim that sheriff's officers violated her constitutional rights by making unlawful arrest and using excessive force; all claims that officers used excessive force in course of "seizure" are properly analyzed under Fourth Amendment's "reasonableness standard," rather than under substantive due process standard. Myers v. Becker County,

2098. ---- Cruel and unusual punishment, excessive force, police activities

Eighth Amendment had no application with respect to shooting of plaintiffs' decedent by police officer where decedent had not been arrested and had not been convicted. Baker v. Putnal, S.D.Tex.1994, 865 F.Supp. 389, affirmed in part, reversed in part 75 F.3d 190. Sentencing And Punishment 1444

Where light blows are administered by a police officer, they may be considered a mere tort under state law and not subject to suit under this section; however, conduct and manner of administering blows may constitute "cruel and unusual punishment." Com. of Pa. v. Porter, W.D.Pa.1979, 480 F.Supp. 686, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 659 F.2d 306, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 3509, 458 U.S. 1121, 73 L.Ed.2d 1383. Civil Rights 1088(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1440

2099. ---- Due process, excessive force, police activities

Police were liable under § 1983, on substantive due process theory, for beating and shooting death of decedent by means of excessive police force. Gilmere v. City of Atlanta, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1495, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1970, 476 U.S. 1115, 90 L.Ed.2d 654, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1993, 476 U.S. 1124, 90 L.Ed.2d 673. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Resident established, for purposes of motion for summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds, that village's animal control officer violated resident's substantive due process rights through use of excessive force during purported attack that was unjustified by any government interest, given allegations that officer went to resident's home to inquire about reported skunk problem, officer yelled at resident, with whom he had history of personal animosity, after resident declined his help and began to walk away from officer's vehicle, officer hit resident's arm with metal baton after resident noticed and attempted to take tape recorder in officer's lap, and officer then pursued resident on his property, striking him with baton and kicking him in the groin, until resident retreated to his house. Tate v. Fish, D.N.M.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 1049. Civil Rights 1376(6); Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(1)

Police officer who arrived on scene of car stopped by other officers because it matched description of car in reported carjacking was not liable, under § 1983, to car's passenger for failing to intervene sooner than he did to stop officer who pulled passenger from the car from kicking, kneeing, and stripping the passenger after the passenger was handcuffed, in alleged violation of his Fourth Amendment right against use of excessive force, where the arriving officer arrived after the passenger was pulled from the car, and absent any evidence that the arriving officer had a realistic opportunity to intervene earlier. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claim of excessive use of force in making an arrest is actionable under § 1983 as a violation of Fourteenth Amendment right to substantive due process. United Steelworkers of America v. Milstead, D.Ariz.1988, 705 F.Supp. 1426. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Abuse of a suspect in police custody is a clear violation of due process guarantees of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and thus such conduct is actionable under this section. Classon v. Krautkramer, E.D.Wis.1977, 451 F.Supp. 12. Civil Rights 1088(4); Constitutional Law 262

In effecting an arrest, force found to be reasonable or not excessive under the circumstances is deemed to be in conformity with, and not in contravention of, due process of law, and hence does not create liability of the police officer under this section. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2100. ---- Racial discrimination, excessive force, police activities

Driver's failure to prove or allege that similarly situated nonminorities would have been treated differently during course of traffic stop was fatal to federal civil rights claim against state patrol officer where his claim of racial slurs, by itself, could not state violation of equal protection. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiffs could not proceed against city because of shooting by city police officers to vindicate their rights declared in this section, where action was not based on city's alleged prejudice against plaintiffs because of race. Folk v. Wilson, D.C.Del.1970, 313 F.Supp. 727. Civil Rights 1088(2)

2101. ---- Departmental regulations, excessive force, police activities

Intradepartmental regulations of police department did not create constitutionally protected interest on part of fleeing felony suspect with respect to use of deadly force against him and did not preclude police officer from asserting qualified immunity in view of existing state and federal law permitting use of deadly force under the circumstances. Washington v. Starke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1988, 855 F.2d 346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputies' alleged uses of excessive force, in violation of the Fourth Amendment, which allegedly occurred while they were detaining hospital patient, pursuant to state statute, for psychiatric evaluation, were not undertaken pursuant to policy or custom of county, and thus county could not be liable under § 1983 for deputies' conduct. Harvey v. Alameda County Medical Center, N.D.Cal.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 960, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 823, 2005 WL 662645. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Interdepartmental policies or regulations of city police department and county sheriff's department did not have force and effect of state law or administrative regulation, and thus, could not and did not create a protected liberty interest in individual not to be shot as a fleeing felon, for purposes of negating defense of qualified immunity available to public officials in civil rights action against public officials based on shooting death during law enforcement pursuit. Washington v. Starke, W.D.Mich.1986, 626 F.Supp. 1149, appeal dismissed 791 F.2d 936, affirmed 855 F.2d 346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Preseizure conduct was not relevant in determining whether officer's use of force against mentally ill individual violated Fourth Amendment, and thus district court did not abuse its discretion in §§ 1983 excessive force action in excluding police department's general order on handling mentally ill persons. Rollins v. Smith, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 513, 2004 WL 1636933, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1710, 544 U.S. 954, 161 L.Ed.2d 534, rehearing denied, rehearing denied 125 S.Ct. 2538, 162 L.Ed.2d 288. Arrest 68(2)

2102. ---- Factors governing, excessive force, police activities

Property owner failed to show that she actually yielded to a show of authority, as required to establish a "seizure" for purposes of her excessive force claim under § 1983, alleging that state animal welfare investigator violated her Fourth Amendment rights when he struck her while investigating dog kennels on her property, where investigator did not try to restrain her after he knocked her down, he did not order her to remain where she was, and he asserted no authority as to her person. McCoy v. Harrison, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 341 F.3d 600. Arrest 68(4)

Excessive force inquiry under § 1983 not only includes officers' actions at moment threat was presented, but also may include their actions in moments leading up to suspect's threat of force if those actions are "immediately connected" to such threat of force. Allen v. Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 119 F.3d 837, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1165, 522 U.S. 1148, 140 L.Ed.2d 176. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Whether officer's specific use of force in connection with arrest is excessive for civil rights purposes turns on factors such as severity of crime, whether suspect poses immediate threat, and whether suspect is resisting or fleeing. Post v. City of Fort Lauderdale, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 7 F.3d 1552, modified 14 F.3d 583. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In evaluating excessive police force claim in context of § 1983 civil rights action, factors such as need for using force, relationship between need for using force and amount of force used, reason for using force, that is, whether officer applied force in good faith or with malicious intent, and extent of injuries suffered, are considered. Samples on Behalf of Samples v. City of Atlanta, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1988, 846 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1088(2)

In determining if police officer's conduct rises to level of constitutional deprivation, factors such as need for force, relationship between need and amount applied, extent of injury inflicted, motivation of police officer in applying force, and circumstances surrounding use of force must be considered. Lewis v. Downs, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1985, 774 F.2d 711. See, also, Roberts v. Marino, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 656 F.2d 1112; Jordan v. Five Unnamed Police Officers and Agents, E.D.La.1981, 528 F.Supp. 507. Civil Rights 1412

In determining whether an individual's constitutional rights have been violated through use of excessive force by a law enforcement official in completing an arrest, court must look at such factors as the need for application of force, relationship between the need and the amount of force that was used, extent of the injury inflicted, and whether force was applied in a good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline or maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm; use of any force by officers simply because a suspect is argumentative, contentious, or vituperative is not to be condoned and force can only be used to overcome physical resistance or threatened force. Bauer v. Norris, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1983, 713 F.2d 408. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer who used no force against mentally ill individual during confrontation between individual and police officers seeking to take him into custody could not have used unreasonable force against individual and thus could not be liable in his individual capacity for violation of mentally ill individual's Fourth Amendment rights. Herrera v. Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Dept., D.Nev.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 1043. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1358

For purposes of § 1983 Fourth Amendment excessive force claim, calculus of reasonableness of force must embody allowance for fact that police officers are forced to make split-second judgments in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving. Huong v. City of Port Arthur, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1003. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In determining whether force used to effect arrest was objectively reasonable, court must look at particular circumstances involved and not at officer's underlying intent; surrounding circumstances to which court must look include severity of crime, whether suspect posed immediate threat to safety of officers or others, and whether he was actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight. Crooms v. P.O. Mercado, No. 41, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 985. Arrest 68(2)

In order to prevail on excessive force claim, plaintiff in § 1983 action must show: (1) significant injury, (2) which resulted directly and only from use of force that was clearly excessive to need, the excessiveness of which was (3) objectively unreasonable, which is standard measured with reference to law as it existed at time of conduct in question. Swenson v. Culberson County, W.D.Tex.1996, 925 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Factors to consider in determining whether force used by police officers in making arrest was excessive include severity of crime at issue, whether suspect poses immediate threat to officers or others, and whether suspect actively resisted arrest or attempted to evade arrest by flight. Brawley v. Sapp, D.Del.1993, 811 F.Supp. 172, affirmed 6 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In determining whether excessive force has been used in violation of plaintiff's civil rights, court must inquire into need for application of force; relationship between need and amount of force used; extent of injury inflicted; and whether force was applied in good faith effort to effect arrest or maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm. Lindsey v. City of St. Paul, D.Minn.1990, 732 F.Supp. 1000. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2103. ---- Balancing test, excessive force, police activities

In determining whether state officers have crossed constitutional line that would make physical abuse actionable under section 1983 [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] because of seizure of person, proportions of injury must be gauged by balancing nature and quality of intrusion on individual's Fourth Amendment [U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4] interest against importance of governmental interest alleged to justify the intrusion. Jamieson By and Through Jamieson v. Shaw, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1985, 772 F.2d 1205, rehearing denied 776 F.2d 1048. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2104. ---- Objective standard, excessive force, police activities

Objective reasonableness is test to determine whether particular use of force to effect arrest is excessive. Kopf v. Wing, C.A.4 (Md.) 1991, 942 F.2d 265, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1179, 502 U.S. 1098, 117 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Under Fourth Amendment analysis of excessive force claim, which applies at least to the period prior to the time when the person arrested is arraigned or formally charged, and remains in the custody of the arresting officer, question is whether the officers' actions are objectively reasonable in light of the facts and circumstances confronting them, without regard to their underlying intent or motivation; among the factors the jury should consider in determining the objective reasonableness of the officer's conduct are the severity of the crime at issue, whether the suspect poses an immediate threat to the safety of the officers or others, whether the suspect is actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight, the need for the use of force, the relationship between the need for force and the amount of force used, and the extent of any injury. Turner v. White, E.D.N.Y.2005, 443 F.Supp.2d 288. Arrest 68(2)

Reasonableness inquiry in excessive force civil rights case is objective one: whether officers' actions are objectively reasonable in light of facts and circumstances confronting them, without regard to their underlying intent or motivation. Brown v. City of Bloomington, D.Minn.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 889, appeal after remand from federal court 706 N.W.2d 519, review denied. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police officers' use of force in arresting motorist following traffic stop and ensuing struggle was objectively unreasonable, as would support motorist's excessive force claim under § 1983 against officers, where a reasonable officer would have recognized that kicks and knee strikes administered to motorist after he was subdued were unnecessary. Coleman v. Rieck, D.Neb.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 1101, affirmed 154 Fed.Appx. 546, 2005 WL 3068056. Automobiles 349(17)

Analysis of a § 1983 claim of excessive force in violation of constitutional prohibition against unreasonable seizures requires a review of the objective reasonableness of the defendants' actions in light of the totality of circumstances surrounding the incident. Raymond v. Bunch, N.D.N.Y.2001, 136 F.Supp.2d 71. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Determining whether force used is "reasonable" under Fourth Amendment for purposes of civil rights claim for excessive force requires objective inquiry as to whether defendant's actions were objectively reasonable given totality of circumstances, regardless of defendant's underlying intent or motive. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1088(4)

"Objective reasonableness" test determines whether excessive force was used in making of arrest or seizure, under which court must examine (1) severity of crime at issue; (2) whether suspect posed immediate threat to safety of officers and others; and (3) whether he actively resisted arrest. Caridi v. Forte, S.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 97. Arrest 68(2)

Whether use of force was reasonable, for purposes of § 1983 Fourth Amendment excessive force claim, is judged from perspective of reasonable officer on scene; test of reasonableness requires attention to facts and circumstances of case, including whether crime was severe, whether subject posed immediate threat to safety of officers, and whether he was actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight. Huong v. City of Port Arthur, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1003. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Excessive force claims are analyzed under Fourth Amendment objective reasonableness standard, and police officer's use of force to arrest individual is unconstitutional if, judging from totality of circumstances at time of arrest, officer used greater force than was reasonably necessary to make the arrest. Crooms v. P.O. Mercado, No. 41, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 985. Arrest 68(2)

Under Fourth Amendment, police officer's use of force must be objectively reasonable in light of facts and circumstances surrounding arrestee's actions; thus, even unreasonable force applied without malice violates Fourth Amendment and may be challenged under § 1983. Smith v. Delamaid, D.Kan.1994, 842 F.Supp. 453. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Inquiry whether police officer's use of force in making arrest is reasonable is an objective one, i.e., whether officer's actions are objectively reasonable in light of facts and circumstances confronting him without regard to his underlying intent or motivation. House v. New Castle County, D.Del.1993, 824 F.Supp. 477. Arrest 68(2)

2105. ---- Injury, excessive force, police activities

Whether minor arrested by police officer suffered long-term or permanent physical injury from officer's improper application of handcuffs was question for jury in minor's §§ 1983 action alleging use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment, given testimony of treating orthopedic surgeon that minor suffered 1.3 percent permanent impairment of his upper right extremity, vocational rehabilitation expert's testimony that minor suffered 13 percent vocational disability, and economist's testimony that minor's life-time economic loss was $180,063. Hanig v. Lee, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2005, 415 F.3d 822, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1429

Although arrestee was not required to show that he suffered significant injury before he could prevail in civil rights action for alleged use of excessive force, arrestee was required to prove that he suffered some injury, even if insignificant. Knight v. Caldwell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 970 F.2d 1430, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1298, 507 U.S. 926, 122 L.Ed.2d 688. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Serious injury was not an essential element of § 1983 action predicated on allegations that pretrial detainee was beaten and injured by officers during custodial interrogations. Gray v. Spillman, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 925 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In regard to due process claims arising from excessive force in pretrial detention, it is not necessary that detainee suffer severe injury. Titran v. Ackman, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 893 F.2d 145. Constitutional Law 262

Objectively severe physical injury was necessary element of civil rights claim under § 1983 alleging arresting officer used undue force. Johnson v. Moral, C.A.5 (La.) 1988, 843 F.2d 846, rehearing granted, on rehearing 876 F.2d 477. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer's having slapped arrestee several times with open hand amounted to more of an affront than an injury, given testimony that arrestee was not injured by the slaps and that they caused no bleeding, required no medical attention, and were too weak to knock him down, and even assuming truth of arrestee's account and however reprehensible such conduct by a policeman may be, it did not rise to such level that redress could be had for it under section 1983. Mark v. Caldwell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 754 F.2d 1260, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 310, 474 U.S. 945, 88 L.Ed.2d 287. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Extent of injuries received does not necessarily determine whether unconstitutional punishment was inflicted to one in custody of police. Howell v. Cataldi, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 464 F.2d 272. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to existence or extent of arrestee's mother's injuries, and whether the force employed against mother in two instances was necessary and reasonable, precluding summary judgment in favor of officers on mother's excessive force claim. Webster v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 184. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Section 1983 complaint which failed to allege any physical injury as result of arrest did not state a claim against police officers for use of excessive force. Shultz v. Smith, D.Md.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations that minor child was handcuffed, thrown to the floor, and threatened by police officers when they took child into custody after arresting his mother and that child suffered psychological injuries as a result failed to state civil rights claim for excessive use of force. Thompson v. City of Galveston, S.D.Tex.1997, 979 F.Supp. 504, affirmed 158 F.3d 583. Civil Rights 1088(2)

To successfully state excessive force claim under Fourth Amendment, plaintiff must establish that he or she suffered significant injury or that defendant's actions were sufficiently reprehensible. Pride v. Kansas Highway Patrol, D.Kan.1992, 793 F.Supp. 279, affirmed 997 F.2d 712. Arrest 68(2)

Complaint alleging that plaintiff suffered a punched stomach, swollen and bleeding wrists from tight handcuffs, and faintly detectable scar on wrist alleged sufficient injury to state a § 1983 civil rights claim based on claim of excessive force in connection with arrest. Simpson v. Saroff, S.D.N.Y.1990, 741 F.Supp. 1073. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Plaintiff seeking to impose civil rights liability on police officers because of the use of excessive force must show that the injury inflicted rose to the level of a constitutional tort, i.e., that it was so egregious as to exceed the boundaries of wrongful injuries redressable under tort law and that it deprived the victim of a liberty interest without due process of law. Skevofilax v. Quigley, D.C.N.J.1984, 586 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Evidence in §§ 1983 action that deputies stopped detainee's truck, struck him in the mouth, pulled him out of the truck, and slammed his head to the ground, that one deputy got on top of detainee, put a gun to his head, and made a statement that he ought to kill him, together with psychotherapist's testimony that this experience caused detainee to suffer from flashbacks, anxiety, stress, and the loss of sleep, was sufficient for a reasonable fact finder to conclude that deputies harmed detainee by the use of excessive force. Bias v. Lundy, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 188 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 1877275, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2106. ---- Malice requirement, excessive force, police activities

In order for arrestee to state § 1983 action pursuant to the Fourteenth Amendment based upon alleged excessive force used by police officer in detention of arrestee after lawful arrest, action by officer must be not only grossly disproportionate under circumstances, but must have been inspired by malice, so as to amount to abuse of official power that shocks conscience. Stevens v. Corbell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 832 F.2d 884, rehearing denied 838 F.2d 1214, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 2018, 486 U.S. 1033, 100 L.Ed.2d 604. Civil Rights 1088(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Civil rights plaintiff was not required to show malice to prevail on claim of excessive force in connection with arrest. Palmer v. Williamson, W.D.Tex.1989, 717 F.Supp. 1218. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2107. ---- Willfulness requirement, excessive force, police activities

Civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] provides a remedy for excessive use of physical force by state agents whether or not unauthorized conduct of state agents was "willful." Kidd v. O'Neil, C.A.4 (Va.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1252. Civil Rights 1035

Persons who were intentionally sprayed with pepper spray by police officers were "seized" within meaning of Fourth Amendment, for purpose of lawsuit under §§ 1983 alleging excessive force, since officers dispersed pepper spray in attempt to gain physical control over those individuals. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Arrest 68(4)

Police officer had reasonable notice of failure to intervene claim brought by juvenile in §§ 1983 action stemming from fellow officer's beating of juvenile; allegations in complaint indicated that officer was present during, and contributed to, the juvenile's beating, and pretrial motions indicated that police officer "aided and assisted" in the brutal attacks on the juvenile instead of preventing them. Torres-Rivera v. O'Neill-Cancel, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 406 F.3d 43. Civil Rights 1397

Arrestee who was part of crowd socializing on railroad property did not sustain sufficiently severe injury to support § 1983 action for excessive use of force, by virtue of being slapped in the face with the back of the hand, having his arms jerked behind his back and being thrown to the ground, and being placed in a headlock and choked by police officer; only medical treatment was soft foam rubber collar which he wore for a week, and there was no long term injury. Pfannstiel v. City of Marion, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 918 F.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee's being pushed against wall twice on way to holding area did not give rise to constitutional claim of excessive force under Fourth Amendment, particularly in light of arrestee's testimony that he sustained no injury as result of being pushed. Foster v. Metropolitan Airports Com'n, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1990, 914 F.2d 1076. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Alderman stated claim that police officers used excessive force in arresting him, for refusing to leave meeting when ordered to do so by other aldermen, by allegedly slamming his head against brick wall and concrete floor, when alderman was not resisting arrest in any way, precluding any need to engage in physical violence. King v. Jefferies, M.D.N.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 624. Arrest 68(2)

Evidence, in arrestee's federal civil rights action against police officers for injuries sustained after resisting alcohol confiscation at public fireworks display, supported findings that officers used excessive force in applying handcuffs, beating him with baton and deliberately driving police van so as to throw him about. Hogan v. Franco, N.D.N.Y.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1313. Civil Rights 1420

Arrestee's allegations that he was beaten by arresting officer after his arrest because he would not sign Miranda warnings and requested to make a telephone call was sufficient to state civil rights claim against officer, regardless of whether Fourth or Fourteenth Amendment applied; beating arrestee for refusing to sign Miranda warnings or in retaliation for requesting phone call was not objectively reasonably and "shocked the conscience." Bieros v. Nicola, E.D.Pa.1994, 860 F.Supp. 226. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Deputy sheriff used excessive force when he threw black woman against car after woman protested arrest of her husband for passing bad check, where woman suffered severe back injury as result, had not threatened deputy, was unarmed, and made no aggressive move which would have justified deputy's actions. Thomas v. Frederick, W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer who struck arrestee in face after being struck light blow by arrestee during struggle was liable under § 1983 for using excessive force; officer's blow rendered arrestee unconscious, causing him to strike his head on pavement and sustain serious brain damage. Braud v. Painter, M.D.La.1990, 730 F.Supp. 1. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Civil rights claim which alleged that officers kicked arrestee in the head and between the legs and hit him with a night stick was sufficient to state a claim for use of unreasonable force in violation of civil rights. East v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 719 F.Supp. 683. Civil Rights 1093

State trooper's seizure of arrestee was unreasonable and actionable under § 1983 to extent that trooper used excessive force to make arrest; before arrestee was handcuffed, trooper vented his anger after high-speed chase, struck arrestee on head, arms and ribs, and kicked arrestee in groin while he was lying on his stomach. Pastre v. Weber, S.D.N.Y.1989, 717 F.Supp. 992, affirmed 907 F.2d 144. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff's rights under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 were not violated where although during course of arrest he was struck on head with a pistol and by fist and received broken nose and wounds requiring 21 stitches, the plaintiff struggled violently against arresting officers and attempted to seize officer's pistol and four men were required to subdue plaintiff who had been a high school wrestler and football player; amount of force used was not unreasonable. Melton v. Shivers, M.D.Ala.1980, 496 F.Supp. 781. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where deputy with probable cause told husband plaintiff that he was under arrest and he pulled away and made some move with his hands which deputy interpreted as threatening, deputy's action in striking husband plaintiff with his fist, knocking him to the ground, was reasonable under the circumstances and was not an excessive use of force. Lamb v. Cartwright, E.D.Tex.1975, 393 F.Supp. 1081, affirmed 524 F.2d 238. Arrest 68(2)

2109. ---- Dogs, excessive force, police activities

Issue of whether officer's actions of ordering his police service dog to apprehend arrestee were objectively reasonable was for jury in §§ 1983 action brought by arrestee alleging that the use of the police dog constituted excessive force in violation of her Fourth Amendment rights; evidence demonstrated that officer had reason to believe that arrestee was an armed burglary suspect, a high-speed chase immediately preceded the arrest, at the conclusion of the high speed chase arrestee attempted to evade arrest by running from officer and trying to climb a fence, and, at the time of the arrest, the officer was the only officer at the scene and was required to secure two felony suspects. Marquez v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 399 F.3d 1216. Civil Rights 1429

Even if use of police dog to apprehend suspected felon involved use of deadly force, use of such force to seize burglary suspect in automobile dealership was not unreasonable, precluding suspect's estate from recovering in civil rights action after police dog grabbed suspect by neck, resulting in suspect's death; suspect was hiding in darkened building in middle of night and had been warned that dog would be used if he did not surrender. Robinette v. Barnes, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1988, 854 F.2d 909, 102 A.L.R. Fed. 605. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer did not use excessive force, precluding detainee's §§ 1983 action claiming violation of his Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, when he dispatched canine to catch and subdue motorist who fled on foot after being ordered out of validly stopped automobile. Tilson v. City of Elkhart, Ind., N.D.Ind.2003, 317 F.Supp.2d 861, adhered to on reconsideration 2003 WL 23509313, affirmed 96 Fed.Appx. 413, 2004 WL 901545. Arrest 68(2)

2110. ---- Chase, excessive force, police activities

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where high-speed chase had terminated without injury to automobile driver, and chase by members of various law enforcement agencies was authorized under IC 18-1-11-4 which provides that officers may pursue person who has committed a misdemeanor in their presence and may assist another officer in doing so, regardless of whether warrant has been issued, no liability could attach to law enforcement agencies or individual members thereof for participation in chase under this section. Richardson v. City of Indianapolis, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1981, 658 F.2d 494, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1442, 455 U.S. 945, 71 L.Ed.2d 657. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officers' actions in shooting and killing suspect following motor vehicle chase could not support municipal liability claim under §§ 1983 against city, where officers did not use excessive force in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Ingle v. Yelton, W.D.N.C.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 578, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 439 F.3d 191. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Assuming that police officer involved in arrest of 14-year-old driver who had forced vehicle off the road and then fled hit driver or that an officer placed foot on driver's neck as he was being handcuffed, such force was not so unreasonable as to be violative of driver's constitutional or civil rights; in addition to fleeing after forcing vehicle off the road, when driver arrived at his home, he apparently attempted to flee on foot. Matasic v. City of Campbell, Ohio, N.D.Ohio 1997, 954 F.Supp. 156. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Conduct of police officer in pursuing motorist at high speed was not of the egregious or reckless type which would amount to constitutional violation of excessive force so as to support civil rights claim by persons in automobile with which motorist collided. Keller v. Truska, E.D.Mo.1988, 694 F.Supp. 1384, affirmed 882 F.2d 294. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Administratrix of motorcyclist's estate failed to state civil rights cause of action against police officers, who engaged in high-speed chase with motorcyclist causing motorcyclist to lose control and to sustain injuries ultimately leading to his death; officers' chase to stop motorcyclist fleeing in violation of Ohio law did not shock conscience of court, and administratrix had a remedy in state court. York v. Lamantia, N.D.Ohio 1987, 674 F.Supp. 17. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Deputy sheriff's alleged negligence, in connection with high-speed pursuit, in relaying purportedly erroneous information to dispatcher, encouraging police officer giving chase to continue pursuit, trying to intercept fleeing vehicle, and calling for roadblock by police officers, did not amount to constitutional deprivation, such as could render deputy liable in civil rights action in connection with accident during pursuit and occupant's subsequent death. Allen v. Cook, W.D.Okla.1987, 668 F.Supp. 1460. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Finding, in §§ 1983 action, that arrest involved the use of constitutionally permissible force was supported by sufficient evidence, including deputy's testimony that as he drove behind arrestee to make a traffic stop, arrestee slowed his car to a standstill, jumped out, and ran toward the front of the car, that, as arrestee did this, deputy drove around arrestee's car and stopped his vehicle ahead and to one side, hoping to prompt arrestee to run in the other direction, where deputy expected backup assistance to be arriving, and that, instead, arrestee tried to run through the space between the two vehicles and, as his idling car rolled forward, his leg was pinned. Herrera v. Board of Bernalillo County Com'rs, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 670, 2004 WL 1730381, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

2111. ---- Drawing and pointing of guns, excessive force, police activities

Police officer's actions in pointing his shotgun at arrestee's head and ordering him to roll over were not unreasonable under the circumstances and therefore did not give rise to excessive force claim; regardless of how arrestee's struggle with fellow officers started or whether there had been wrongdoing by fellow officers, officer was entitled to rely on his fellow officers' determination that the arrest in process was lawful. Davis v. Rodriguez, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 364 F.3d 424. Arrest 68(2)

Deputy sheriff's requiring automobile passenger to lie on ground while he directed shotgun toward her and her companions in course of investigatory stop did not constitute excessive force for purpose of defense of qualified immunity; deputy was alone late at night at vacant construction site when he stopped vehicle, occupants appeared to be uncooperative and not all occupants exited vehicle until deputy's third command, deputy suspected that occupants might have been connected with marijuana fields that he had under surveillance, and one of passenger's companions was abusive. Courson v. McMillian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 939 F.2d 1479. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not use excessive force in seizing auto theft suspect in violation of suspect's Fourth Amendment rights, when officer did not reholster his weapon which he had reasonably drawn when suspect began to flee; had officer taken time to put gun away suspect would have escaped. Pleasant v. Zamieski, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1990, 895 F.2d 272, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 144, 498 U.S. 851, 112 L.Ed.2d 110. Arrest 68(2)

Evidence in civil rights deprivation case supported conclusion that officer in charge of three-man police squad doing "preventive rounds" on drug detail acted with reckless or callous indifference to constitutional rights when he had the squad, all of whom were in plain clothes and had alighted from an unmarked police car, approach a parked automobile with guns drawn without identifying themselves as policemen. Gutierrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 882 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1420

Federal civil rights claim for use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment was stated by driver's claim that state parole officer in arresting him for reckless driving pointed gun to his head and kicked him in his legs, causing him to fall, despite lack of any provocation or wrongdoing. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officers' actions in making arrest were objectively reasonable under circumstances and did not constitute use of excessive force, and therefore officers could not be held liable for violation of federal civil rights statute, even though officer drew and pointed weapon at automobile passenger and allegedly threatened to blow her head off, where officers reasonably believed that automobile was stolen, and another occupant had exited automobile and surrendered himself. Lodato v. Township of Evesham, D.N.J.1992, 782 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2112. ---- Drownings, excessive force, police activities

Police officers did not, as matter of law, use excessive force against arrestee who drowned in dredge pond after resisting arrest and attempting to flee; there was no evidence that officer carried arrestee against his will into water over his head or that officer had any way of knowing that arrestee could not swim, and officer's attempts to subdue arrestee left no significant abrasions, bruises or other injuries on arrestee's body. Franklin v. City of Boise, D.Idaho 1992, 806 F.Supp. 879. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2113. ---- Forced entries, excessive force, police activities

Evidence raised triable issue of fact as to whether police officers used excessive force in effecting arrest, precluding summary judgment in arrestee's civil rights action; evidence indicated that arrestee was arrested for littering, attempted to evade arrest by fleeing to her home, and that officers broke down door to arrestee's home, tackled and choked her, and dragged her from her home by handcuffs and her hair. Berry v. City of Phillipsburg, Kan., D.Kan.1992, 796 F.Supp. 1400. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Since sheriff acted pursuant to legal authority in allegedly breaking window and lock on storm door of petitioner's house in serving arrest warrant issued by parole officer and did not act in a flagrant manner, neither sheriff's department nor the parole officer were liable in damages under this section. Alger v. Page County Sheriff's Dept., W.D.Va.1976, 408 F.Supp. 978. Civil Rights 1376(6)

2114. ---- Mace, excessive force, police activities

Police did not use excessive force in arresting house occupant for disorderly conduct, on lawn while he was chopping wood, precluding civil rights violation claim under § 1983, when he ordered them off property, and removed shirt as if to fight, and police sprayed him twice with pepper spray and wrestled him to ground, to apply handcuffs. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Arrest 68(2)

Conduct of police officers, who, upon responding to call that apparently drunken couple was engaged in loud and boisterous confrontation on public street outside bar, took plaintiff, on her insistence, to jail with her yelling and screaming all the way, who after leaving plaintiff momentarily in car and returning to find her kicking and pounding on window directed two slight squirts of mace in her direction to calm her down and who were forced to physically carry her to cell and to use reasonable force in effort to push her in, was reasonable, based upon probable cause, and did not violate any of her civil or constitutional rights. Hanks v. Weddle, E.D.Wash.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1150. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

2115. ---- Restraints, excessive force, police activities

Allegations that city's handcuff policy required that all detainees wear handcuffs, regardless of the circumstances, supported § 1983 claim of arrestee who allegedly suffered pain and injury from being restrained with handcuffs that were too small for his wrists, pursuant to city policy, despite being arrested for non-violent misdemeanor offense. Kostrzewa v. City of Troy, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2001, 247 F.3d 633. Civil Rights 1395(6)

"Hog-tie" restraint of arrestee who had been running around naked and jumping up and down and yelling, in which arrestee's tied ankles were bound to his handcuffed wrists behind his back, constituted use of excessive force, in violation of Fourth Amendment, where diminished capacity of arrestee was obvious to arresting officers, as arrestee was yelling continuously about swarming insects and was swatting at invisible objects, and after his eyelid was opened, arrestee's pupil was constricted but did not constrict further in response to sunlight, which led officers to surmise that he was on some type of drug. Cruz v. City of Laramie, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2001, 239 F.3d 1183. Arrest 68(2)

For purposes of § 1983 excessive force claim, state trooper's conduct in placing her hand around arrestee's neck and applying force to restrain him was reasonable, where arrestee had been arrested for disorderly conduct based on altercation at state fair, trooper had been told that arrestee had been drinking and that he was suspected of slapping barmaid, trooper observed that arrestee was intoxicated and combative, and trooper perceived that arrestee was acting in threatening manner; relevant question for court was not whether arrestee acted in threatening manner but whether trooper reasonably believed so. Pride v. Does, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 997 F.2d 712. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer who merely put his hands around pregnant motorist to restrain her as she attempted to flee from him for second time to avoid arrest on misdemeanor traffic infraction was entitled to qualified immunity on motorist's claim of excessive force. Moore v. Gwinnett County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 967 F.2d 1495, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1049, 506 U.S. 1081, 122 L.Ed.2d 357. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Assuming the Fourteenth Amendment standard applied to an arrestee's excessive force claim under § 1983, standard was not violated by police officer's pulling arms of arrestee through bars of her cell and holding her in place while police matron performed pat down search; search was not intended as excessive force to punish but rather was intended to meet legitimate government interest of insuring that prisoner was not in possession of contraband or any means by which to hurt herself. Culver v. Town of Torrington, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1991, 930 F.2d 1456. Prisons 4(7)

Use of handcuffs to temporarily detain arrestee suspected of rape during execution of search warrant of home and transportation in automobile was reasonable and justified under Fourth Amendment, for purpose of arrestee's §§ 1983 claim, since police officer had legitimate concern that allegedly violent criminal would have tried to escape before collection of potentially incriminating evidence or could have posed danger to officer executing warrant, and officer did not use handcuffs at any time where concerns justifying their use were not present and officer did not use any force to detain occupant once search was completed. Barrows v. Coleman, D.Conn.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 276. Arrest 68(2)

Arresting officer's conduct in allegedly roughly pushing arrestee into squad car, which caused arrestee's forehead to scrape against partition between front and back seats, was too minimal a use of force to be constitutionally excessive. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Arrest 68(2)

Handcuffing arrestee to bar on wall at police station during his detainment and striking him in thighs with baton in attempt to subdue him after he became violent did not constitute use of excessive force, and conduct of detaining officers was in any event protected from arrestee's § 1983 suit by good faith immunity, where arrestee posed enormous threat to officers' safety, in that he repeatedly attacked arresting officer, appeared to be on drugs, ingested more drugs upon arriving at station, struck arresting officer in face with metal handcuffs, and hurled racial invective at arresting officer throughout whole incident. Caridi v. Forte, S.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 97. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

City's policy to require nearly all arrestees to be handcuffed with their hands behind their backs, unless there is physical limitation, was reasonable, and thus officers' handcuffing of arrestee's hands behind his back after he had been shot did not constitute Fourth Amendment deprivation for purposes of § 1983 action brought by administrator of arrestee's estate. Frazier v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1996, 927 F.Supp. 881. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Force used by sheriff's officers to make arrest was reasonable, so that officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action; it was reasonable for officers to believe that arrestee was attempting to escape when she began moving away from them as she did not indicate her intent when she did so, arrestee had access to potential weapons, only force applied to arrestee before she began struggling was grabbing of her wrists, force then escalated in response to arrestee's attempts to break free, force used was minimal, and there was no further use of force once arrestee succumbed to officers' authority, even though arrestee's alleged offense was neither violent nor serious. Myers v. Becker County, D.Minn.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1424. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Use of handcuffs to restrain arrestee did not amount to use of excessive force after arrestee had fled from lawful custody and resisted arrest and, therefore, police officer could not be held liable in civil rights action for alleged use of excessive force. Jones v. Village of Villa Park, N.D.Ill.1993, 815 F.Supp. 249. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Sheriff did not use excessive or unreasonable force in grabbing arrestee by neck with one hand, placing him up against vehicle, and handcuffing him, after arrestee, following verbal altercation with sheriff, stopped vehicle in middle of driving lane, jumped out of it, ignored another officer's request to move vehicle to side of road, ran towards sheriff's vehicle yelling obscenity; there was no evidence that sheriff continued to squeeze arrestee's neck or to use any other gratuitous force after arrestee was secured with handcuffs; therefore, arrestee could not recover from sheriff in suit under § 1983. Swanson v. Fields, D.Kan.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1007, affirmed 13 F.3d 407. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officers did not violate any of rape suspect's clearly established rights with regard to excessive force at time of his lawful arrest, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity for their alleged use of excessive force in arresting suspect and transporting him to police station; suspect suffered bruise and swollen left wrist and pain in back of neck as result of being handcuffed and from hitting his head on door frame or roof of police car. Boyd v. Angarone, N.D.Ill.1990, 729 F.Supp. 1194. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Detainee whose hands were handcuffed behind his back and who was allegedly injured after being placed in police

van on metal benches was entitled to maintain § 1983 action against city and police officers; allegations raised reasonable inferences as to whether city and police officers acted with reckless disregard for detainee's constitutional rights. Montgomery v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1987, 670 F.Supp. 230. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Force used by police officer in arresting plaintiff, who had been stopped for speeding, for resisting law enforcement, battery on a law enforcement officer, failure to obey a law enforcement officer and disorderly conduct, was not excessive, did not violate plaintiff's right to due process, and was not actionable under this section, notwithstanding that plaintiff sustained a slight injury to his left wrist upon being handcuffed, in view of evidence that plaintiff physically resisted officer's efforts to take him into custody, that a custom and practice existed whereby everyone taken to jail was handcuffed, and plaintiff put pressure on the handcuffs when he sat in police vehicle. Bovey v. City of Lafayette, Ind., N.D.Ind.1984, 586 F.Supp. 1460, affirmed 774 F.2d 1166. Arrest 68(2); Constitutional Law 262

Roadblock established by sheriff's deputies, which motorist swerved to avoid resulting in disabling car crash, did not constitute unreasonable use of deadly force for purposes of motorist's § 1983 claim, as roadblock became deadly force only because motorist chose to continue high-speed chase, rather than pull his car to side of road or slow down. Reed v. Allegan County, W.D.Mich.1988, 688 F.Supp. 1239. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where motorcyclist made no allegation that state conservation officers used excessive force as part of effort to detain motorcyclist, only that one officer intentionally blocked motorcyclist's path so as to cause collision which gave rise to personal injuries or that officers acted in concert, motorcyclist could not, by mere allegations of malice, transform routine auto accident involving state officials into constitutional claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. LeCuyer v. Weidenbach, N.D.Ill.1985, 613 F.Supp. 509. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer's use of deadly force was reasonable, and thus, widow of suspect who was fatally shot could not prevail in §§ 1983 excessive force claim; officer received dispatch for domestic disturbance at same residence to which he had been dispatched eight days earlier on a similar call, officer was aware that suspect had history of violence and an extensive arrest history, when officer confronted suspect outside residence, suspect told officer that he would have to kill him, when officer told suspect to stop advancing toward him, suspect disregarded warning and kept advancing, and suspect lunged toward officer when officer stumbled, at which point officer fired one shot. DeLuna v. City of Rockford, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 447 F.3d 1008. Arrest 68(2)

Identity of individual who robbed bank was irrelevant in assessing whether police officer was justified in shooting suspect to death, in action by suspect's father under § 1983 and Illinois Wrongful Death Act, given that suspect had threatened officer and his partner with gun subsequent to time officers knew that armed robbery of bank had been completed. Muhammed v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 316 F.3d 680. Civil Rights 1088(4); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Police officers' use of deadly force was reasonable where intoxicated arrestee who was handcuffed and sitting in front seat of police car pulled out gun, had his finger on trigger and pointed it at officers who were only a few feet away, officers ordered arrestee to drop weapon and arrestee refused to do so even though officers fired multiple shots. Elliott v. Leavitt, C.A.4 (Md.) 1996, 99 F.3d 640, rehearing en banc denied 105 F.3d 174, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2512, 521 U.S. 1120, 138 L.Ed.2d 1015. Arrest 68(2)

Police officer could have reasonably believed that armed robbery suspects posed imminent, deadly threat to officer or others and, thus, officer's use of deadly force by shooting at suspects was objectively reasonable, which precluded suspect's § 1983 claim regardless of officer's subjective state of mind; another suspect was pointing gun at police officer, and suspects were exiting van following high speed chase during which van had struck pedestrian. Stroik v. Ponseti, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 35 F.3d 155, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1692, 514 U.S. 1064, 131 L.Ed.2d 556. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Issue in § 1983 action against city in connection with police officer's fatal shooting of victim was not whether there may have been failure to discipline officers in certain instances but, rather, for plaintiff to prevail, there had to be sufficient evidence for jury to conclude that city's failure in that regard amounted to deliberate indifference to rights of its citizens, which failure proximately caused victim's death. Berry v. City of Detroit, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 25 F.3d 1342, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 902, 513 U.S. 1111, 130 L.Ed.2d 786. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Finding that police officer's use of deadly force against suspect was unconstitutional was supported by witness' testimony that officer had his gun out while suspect was facing away from him, that suspect's hands were in air, and that suspect did not charge officer, second witness' testimony that she saw nothing in suspect's hands, that suspect was not charging officer, and that suspect made no slicing or stabbing motions toward officer, testimony of officer's partner that she saw nothing in suspect's right hand, that suspect was walking forward at slow pace and was approximately four to five feet from gun when shot, and that she was surprised when she heard first shot as she had not expected officer to shoot suspect, and medical testimony concerning powder burn marks on suspect's arm and chest which indicated that suspect was not approaching officer with arm extended in threatening manner when shot. Zuchel v. City and County of Denver, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 997 F.2d 730, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

Police officer who entered dark hallway of private residence at 2:45 a.m. and who failed to give any indication of his identity was more than merely negligent and could be held liable in civil rights action for use of excessive force against shooting victim. Yates v. City of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 941 F.2d 444, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police officer was justified in using deadly force to defend himself and others around him, where, after pursuing suspects in bank robbery in high-speed chase, passenger in vehicle repeatedly reached down below police officer's sight line in defiance of police officer's orders to raise his hands and officer could reasonably have believed that passenger had retrieved gun and was about to shoot, even though vehicle was totally surrounded by nine police officers and passenger was actually unarmed. Reese v. Anderson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 926 F.2d 494. Civil Rights 1088(4)

District court's finding that police officers were negligent under Florida law in shooting security guard was supported by the evidence, even though guard was carrying pistol and even though officers' allegedly yelled "police, freeze"; guard testified he did not hear officers yell and that he did not raise his right hand as he turned or act in threatening manner toward officers. Ansley v. Heinrich, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 925 F.2d 1339. Municipal Corporations 742(5)

Question whether police officers serving peace warrant made adequate preparations was improperly submitted to jury in lawsuit brought by estate of victim killed by officer during service of warrant; actions of police would be at worst ordinary negligence, which does not form basis for claim of deprivation of constitutional rights. Brandenburg v. Cureton, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 882 F.2d 211. Civil Rights 1437

Police officer's action in shooting a second time at hospital patient who had gone on rampage through hospital and stabbed seven people, immediately after first volley of gunfire while patient was still on his feet and holding his knife was not excessive and did not violate patient's civil rights; second shot was part of initial reaction to patient's attempt to stab officer. O'Neal v. DeKalb County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1988, 850 F.2d 653. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Deceased burglar's estate could not maintain § 1983 action against city, based on accidental shooting of burglar during struggle with police during handcuffing, despite city's policy of requiring officer to hold gun on arrestee during handcuffing process, where police officer did not violate burglar's Fourth Amendment rights. Dodd v. City of Norwich, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1987, 827 F.2d 1, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 701, 484 U.S. 1007, 98 L.Ed.2d 653. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police were liable under § 1983, under the Fourth Amendment, for the beating and shooting death of decedent by means of excessive police force; harms visited on decedent while in officers' custody were only minimally, if at all, necessary to enable them to carry out their official duties, police had little cause to believe decedent to be dangerous, and decedent had done little to provoke the officers to beat or shoot him. Gilmere v. City of Atlanta, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1495, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1970, 476 U.S. 1115, 90 L.Ed.2d 654, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1993, 476 U.S. 1124, 90 L.Ed.2d 673. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Motorist who was injured during his arrest by deputy sheriff when deputy's gun accidently discharged after deputy slipped on a patch of ice was not entitled to recover from deputy, county sheriff, or county board for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights where deputy's conduct was not result of established state procedure, and deputy drew his gun because he had reason to believe that motorist was emotionally disturbed. Leber v. Smith, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 773 F.2d 101, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1466, 475 U.S. 1084, 89 L.Ed.2d 722. Civil Rights 1088(4)

A negligent action resulting in personal injury does not become a constitutional violation merely because tortfeasor is state or local police officer, and thus, even assuming simple negligence on part of police officer in shooting escaping jail inmate in the back while attempting to handcuff him, inmate could not recover in his civil rights action for such shooting since there was no deprivation of right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Mills v. Smith, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 656 F.2d 337. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where police officers who pursued and fatally shot burglary suspect did not believe that the crime for which they were seeking to arrest the suspect involved the use or threatened use of deadly force or that a substantial risk existed that the suspect would cause death or serious bodily harm if his apprehension were delayed, the police officers exercised unreasonable force as a matter of law, under R.R.S.1943, § 28-839, in firing at the suspect as he fled. Landrum v. Moats, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1978, 576 F.2d 1320, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 282, 439 U.S. 912, 58 L.Ed.2d 258. Municipal Corporations 188

Minor injuries consisting of bruises and cuts received by defendant off-duty policeman on his face which did not require hospitalization did not support his claim of self-defense or justify his use of excessive force in killing two young men and permanently maiming a third. Stengel v. Belcher, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1975, 522 F.2d 438, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 1505, 425 U.S. 910, 47 L.Ed.2d 760, certiorari dismissed 97 S.Ct. 514, 429 U.S. 118, 50 L.Ed.2d 269. Municipal Corporations 189(1)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether off-duty police officer shot bar patron during altercation, whether officer was acting under color of law, and whether officer was acting within scope of his employment precluded summary judgment in favor of city in patron's action to recover for injuries received during altercation. Coles v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2005, 361 F.Supp.2d 740. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Contention that female officer at scene would also have discharged her firearm had suspect presented real threat to male officer, who shot suspect after suspect allegedly charged him with knife, did not create factual issue precluding summary judgment for male officer on § 1983 claim for use of excessive force when plaintiffs did not contest officers' assertion that they were on opposite sides of doorway when suspect exited house, such that suspect's back would have been to female officer and suspect presented greater level of threat to male officer, and when female officer testified both that department policy prevented her from firing her weapon due to presence of dwelling behind male officer, and that it was not necessary for her to fire when she heard male officer fire his own weapon in self-defense. Santana v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 720. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Officer was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit for his alleged negligence in employing deadly force, in firing second shotgun slug at citizen who was holding knife to her own throat, in mistaken belief that it was also beanbag, non-lethal round like his first shot; negligence could not establish civil rights claim. Brown v. City of Bloomington, D.Minn.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 889, appeal after remand from federal court 706 N.W.2d 519, review denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who fired shots into car in which arrestee was a passenger were not liable to arrestee under § 1983 for excessive force; although officers fired total of ten shots into car, arrestee was not hit or hurt by any of the shots. McAllister v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1999, 49 F.Supp.2d 688. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Survivors of victim of fatal shooting allegedly perpetrated by police officer stated § 1983 claim against superintendent of police by alleging that he failed to implement existing disciplinary system intended to detect unconstitutional behavior, and that, had superintendent implemented that policy, shooting would have been avoided because officer's previous conduct would have warranted his dismissal from force and/or his reassignment to position in which he would not come into contact with citizens. Rivera v. Medina, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 963 F.Supp. 78. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Officer's use of deadly force was objectively reasonable, and thus, shooting victim's relatives did not have any claim under § 1983 for violation of victim's Fourth Amendment rights; victim had knife in his hand for more than two hours and continuously threatened to harm himself and others during this period, victim had knife in one hand and pot of hot grease in other hand, and officer shot victim when victim made movement as though he was going to throw grease at officer. Huong v. City of Port Arthur, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1003. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Township was not liable under § 1983 in connection with police officer's accidental fatal shooting of suspect during execution of arrest and search warrants; while plaintiffs claimed that police department had custom of permitting use of excessive force without fear of a reprisal and improperly trained officers regarding maintaining safe distance, it was acknowledged that shooting was accidental and, as to second argument, there was no evidence of officers previously accidentally discharging their guns while subduing suspects. Clark v. Buchko, D.N.J.1996, 936 F.Supp. 212. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Town's policies, or lack thereof, did not constitute "deliberate indifference," so as to support imposition of § 1983 liability on failure to train theory in action arising from deputies fatal shooting of allegedly mentally ill individual during attempt by deputy and town officer to execute involuntary commitment order; there was no evidence that town had actual or constructive notice that any particular omission was substantially certain to result in violation of individuals constitutional rights, and while town had no written policy for handling "mental pickups," officer acted within guidelines of barricade policy, which was sufficient for situation presented. Dowdell v. Chapman, M.D.Ala.1996, 930 F.Supp. 533. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police department and city could not be held liable for failure to train police, in civil rights action by suspect who was shot by officer while fleeing, since officer was found to have acted reasonably and did not use excessive force. Ridgeway v. City of Woolwich Tp. Police Dept., D.N.J.1996, 924 F.Supp. 653. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Law enforcement agents' shooting of individual during raid of individual's and suspect's home which was conducted in effort to arrest suspect was not excessive force, as it was reasonable under existing circumstances, thus, shooting did not violate Fourth Amendment or § 1983; agents could reasonably have feared for their safety where agents were aware that firearms and at least two potentially violent individuals could be present in home, officers found individual shooting gun from second-floor window, and several officers were stationed outside of home. Maravilla v. U.S., N.D.Ind.1994, 867 F.Supp. 1363, affirmed 60 F.3d 1230. Arrest 68(2)

Traffic violator stated § 1983 claim against police officer by alleging that officer shot violator, without cause or provocation, after chase, and that violator was thereby subjected to excessive force during course of his arrest, in violation of his Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Moser v. Bascelli, E.D.Pa.1994, 865 F.Supp. 249. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Genuine issues of material fact regarding excessiveness of force used by police officers who shot and killed man who was brandishing knife precluded summary judgment for police officers in § 1983 action. Sevier v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.1994, 853 F.Supp. 1360, appeal dismissed 60 F.3d 695. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Complaint alleging that deceased was ambushed and fired upon by officers without warning stated claim under civil rights statute, § 1983. Roxbury v. Paul, W.D.Mich.1992, 838 F.Supp. 1204, affirmed 7 F.3d 234. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Reasonable law enforcement officer in defendant's officer's position could have believed that deadly force was necessary, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from claim of excessive force in violation of unarmed decedent's Fourth Amendment rights, where officer, responding to emergency call, observed suspect who was "well-built" and larger than officer and whose arm was covered with blood and who continually shouted death threats to officer, and where suspect chased officer for several minutes, officer did not believe he could personally subdue the suspect given suspect's larger size and highly agitated and abnormal state, suspect failed to respond to order to stop, and officer believed that suspect was reaching behind himself for a weapon. Wyche v. City of Franklinton, E.D.N.C.1993, 837 F.Supp. 137. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Force used by police officers to subdue man who came at them with knife after police officers entered his apartment following report of neighbors that man was breaking windows and throwing things from windows was, as matter of law, not excessive; thus, police officers were not liable to estate of man in their individual capacities in civil rights action due to qualified immunity defense. Thornton v. City of Albany, N.D.N.Y.1993, 831 F.Supp. 970. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff's split-second decision to use deadly force to protect himself from suspect was objectively reasonable, for purposes of civil rights actions, even though suspect was handcuffed; suspect was armed with fireplace poker (a two to three foot steel rod with hook on one end) and had already assaulted one officer with that weapon, evaded arrest, fled from police, and claimed that he would not be taken alive, and officers were unable to calm suspect or to get him to surrender after speaking to him for almost 30 minutes. Plakas v. Drinski, N.D.Ind.1993, 811 F.Supp. 1356, affirmed 19 F.3d 1143, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 81, 513 U.S. 820, 130 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer did not use excessive force in connection with his shooting of § 1983 plaintiff; plaintiff had previously shot at officer with rifle, thereby intending to inflict serious bodily harm or deadly force upon him, and plaintiff, at minimum, was seeking to escape at time of shooting and was fired upon only after warning had been given. Daniels v. Terrell, E.D.Mo.1992, 783 F.Supp. 1211. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Because state police and corrections officers were authorized under Illinois law to choose time and place of arrest of murder solicitation suspect, their use of deadly force in response to suspect's firing of guns did not violate suspect's civil rights, even if use of deadly force could have been avoided by attempting arrest at another time or place. Carter v. Buscher, C.D.Ill.1991, 763 F.Supp. 392, affirmed 973 F.2d 1328, rehearing denied. Arrest 68(2)

Shooting by police could give rise not only to Fourth Amendment claim of excessive force, but also Fourteenth Amendment claim on ground that officers allegedly created dangerous situation victim found himself in shortly before he was shot. Ward v. City of San Jose, N.D.Cal.1990, 737 F.Supp. 1502, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 967 F.2d 280, amended on denial of rehearing. Constitutional Law 255(2)

City police officer did not violate substantive due process when he fatally shot arcade patron after patron threatened officer with knife for purposes of civil rights action arising from the shooting; officer did not display his weapon until patron refused to obey officer's command to remove his hand from chest area of his jacket, and officer did not fire at patron until patron lunged at him with raised knife. Estate of Jackson v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.1989, 705 F.Supp. 779. Civil Rights 1088(2); Constitutional Law 262

Force which defendants, consisting of a police officer and a student observer, used against plaintiff in attempting an arrest was not excessive where it was confined to instances of firing shots from a handgun at or near plaintiff and was done in reasonable belief that defendants were in imminent danger of serious bodily injury. Dolan v. Golla, M.D.Pa.1979, 481 F.Supp. 475, affirmed 633 F.2d 209. Arrest 68(2)

Where city police officer who was searching crime scene for additional suspects commanded person concealed in closet to come out with his hands up and where suspect, who was hiding under blankets and clothing, did not respond verbally but instead quickly reached his hand upward and outward toward the officer, circumstances were such as to warrant officer in believing that use of deadly force was necessary to prevent death or great bodily harm to himself and, therefore, officer's action in shooting at suspect's hand did not constitute unreasonable or excessive use of force in violation of the suspect's civil rights. Willis v. Tillrock, N.D.Ill.1976, 421 F.Supp. 368. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where deputy sheriff shot citizen who was escaping from arrest for misdemeanor, such shooting was without justification and subjected citizen to deprivation of right secured by constitution, and deputy was thus liable to plaintiff for injuries. Fults v. Pearsall, E.D.Tenn.1975, 408 F.Supp. 1164. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2118. ---- Thrown objects, excessive force, police activities

Jury in civil rights action could find that police officer did not violate fleeing minor suspect's constitutional rights by throwing heavy metal flashlight which struck suspect in back of head, notwithstanding officer's admission that his act constituted battery and use of "excessive force," where officer also testified that act was spontaneous reaction, that he did not intend to harm suspect, and that throwing flashlight was mistake; use of force was not necessarily inspired by unwise, excessive zeal amounting to abuse of official power that shocked conscience or by malice rather than mere carelessness. Trujillo v. Goodman, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1987, 825 F.2d 1453. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2119. ---- Failure to enforce law or regulations, excessive force, police activities

Complaint filed against city, police officer, mayor and police commissioner, based on police officer's use of force against plaintiff, alleging that mayor and police commissioner repeatedly and knowingly failed to enforce state laws and police department regulations pertaining to police officers' use of force, thereby creating within police department an atmosphere of lawlessness in which police officers employed excessive and illegal force and violence, was sufficient to state cause of action against mayor and police commissioner under this section, plaintiff's additional allegation that police officer's acts implemented policies endorsed by mayor and police commissioner having constituted sufficient causal link between alleged negligence and plaintiff's injury. Norton v. McKeon, E.D.Pa.1977, 444 F.Supp. 384, affirmed 601 F.2d 575. Civil Rights 1395(5)

2120. ---- Training, excessive force, police activities

To establish failure to train claim under §§ 1983, plaintiff must show prior instances of unconstitutional conduct demonstrating that municipality has ignored history of abuse and was clearly on notice that training in particular area was deficient and likely to cause injury. St. John v. Hickey, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 411 F.3d 762, on remand 2006 WL 293790. Civil Rights 1352(1)

For excessive force by a police officer to occur in circumstances constituting a usual and recurring situation with which officers must deal, as required for a § 1983 claim against a city for failure to train officers, the situation need not be frequent or constant; it must merely be of the type that officers can reasonably expect to confront. Brown v. Gray, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2000, 227 F.3d 1278. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To establish a city's liability under § 1983 for inadequate training of police officers in use of force, plaintiff must show: officers exceeded constitutional limitations on use of force; use of force arose under circumstances that constitute usual and recurring situation with which police officers must deal; inadequate training demonstrates deliberate indifference on part of city toward persons with whom police officers come into contact; and there is direct causal link between the constitutional deprivation and inadequate training. Allen v. Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 119 F.3d 837, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1165, 522 U.S. 1148, 140 L.Ed.2d 176. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County's failure to adequately train its deputies as to constitutional limits of use of force was deliberate indifference to safety of county inhabitants as matter of law for purposes of imposing municipal liability under § 1983; sheriff department's "field training program" for deputies, although apparently adequate on paper, was never followed in practice. Davis v. Mason County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 927 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's failure to train police officer who was involved in fatal scuffle with plaintiffs' decedent did not rise to the level of deliberate indifference so as to fasten liability on the city on a failure to train theory, where officer had years of experience before joining the city's police force and received extensive training over the course of his career; whether that training was the best and most comprehensive available had no bearing on the failure to train claim. Lewis v. City of Irvine, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1990, 899 F.2d 451. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Although there was evidence from which jury could reasonably conclude that patrolman was grossly negligent in causing severe permanent injuries to plaintiff and that city police chief was grossly negligent in sending patrolman on patrol without additional training, city could not be held liable for plaintiff's injuries under this section where there was no evidence that city police force in general was inadequately skilled or experienced, that there had been other actual or claimed incidents of police misconduct or negligence, that city had any general policy or custom of sending unskilled or inexperienced officers on patrol or that members of city's governing body were themselves grossly negligent in failing to prevent patrolman's going on patrol without additional training. Languirand v. Hayden, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1983, 717 F.2d 220, rehearing denied 721 F.2d 819, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 2656, 467 U.S. 1215, 81 L.Ed.2d 363. Civil Rights 1420

Police sergeant was not subject to liability in arrestees' § 1983 due process action for allegedly failing to ensure that patrolmen received proper and special training regarding excessive force, absent allegation that sergeant's acts or omissions caused alleged constitutional violations or that police training was in fact inefficient. Santiago Irizarry v. Maldonado Aponte, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 146. Civil Rights 1358

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to extent of training for felony stops that city provided to its police officers, and as to police department's policy for reporting constitutional violations by other officers, precluding summary judgment on Monell claim of police detainee bringing § 1983 action against police officers, police chief, and city for alleged use of excessive force in violation of detainee's Fourth Amendment rights. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police chief could not be found liable on failure to train theory for officer's conduct in firing shotgun rounds at citizen where officer was entitled to qualified immunity for his actions. Brown v. City of Bloomington, D.Minn.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 889, appeal after remand from federal court 706 N.W.2d 519, review denied. Civil Rights 1358

To establish a claim under § 1983 for inadequate training of police officers in the use of force, a plaintiff must show (1) the officers exceeded constitutional limitations on the use of force; (2) the use of force arose under circumstances that constitute a usual and recurring situation with which police officers must deal; (3) the inadequate training demonstrates a deliberate indifference on the part of the city toward persons with whom the police officers come into contact, and (4) there is a direct causal link between the constitutional deprivation and the inadequate training. Newell v. City of Salina, D.Kan.2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Failure to show that sheriff's office had policies or customs that led to inadequate training and supervision barred suit against sheriff in his official capacity, seeking to impose liability for alleged false arrest and use of unnecessary force. Seegars v. Adcox, S.D.Ga.2002, 258 F.Supp.2d 1370, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 381, 2003 WL 22769277. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Administrator of police shooting victim's estate failed to prove municipal liability under § 1983 on a failure to train theory; the municipalities submitted affidavits and other evidence showing that the individual officers from the municipalities received training in the use of force, and the administrator introduced nothing into the record to show that she could prove that the training was inadequate. Easley v. Kirmsee, E.D.Wis.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 945, affirmed 382 F.3d 693. Civil Rights 1352(4)

The inadequacy of police training may serve as the basis for § 1983 liability only where the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights of the persons with whom the police come into contact. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Parents and their child, whose leg was broken during scuffle when the twelve-year-old, 87-pound boy attempted to flee arrest and a 270-pound county deputy sheriff allegedly intentionally fell on the boy, failed to prove that county failed properly to train and discipline its officers and that such alleged policy of failing to train and discipline its officers was the proximate cause of alleged deprivation of child's constitutional right to be free from excessive force, where county produced documentation from the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Standards and Education (TCLEOSE) showing that the ten deputies employed by county met and exceeded training requirements set forth by TCLEOSE. Gonzales v. Westbrook, W.D.Tex.2000, 118 F.Supp.2d 728. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Any lack of city policy or training in use of choke hold, when viewed in light of use of force training as a whole, did not rise to level of deliberate indifference as required to hold city liable for excessive force allegedly used by police officer in subduing suspect. Jackson v. City of Albany, Ga., M.D.Ga.1998, 49 F.Supp.2d 1374. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's training of its police officers in crowd control techniques did not amount to deliberate indifference to rights of striking workers, thereby precluding city from being held liable for inadequate training in civil rights action brought by worker who was struck on hand with police baton while participating in strike, where city attempted to give its officers supplemental training in face of impending strike by bringing in outside consultants and implementing detailed plan to handle strike, city's standing policy permitted officers to use only minimum amount of force necessary, and there was no specific evidence of deprivation of constitutional rights of striking workers prior to incident. Secot v. City of Sterling Heights, E.D.Mich.1997, 985 F.Supp. 715. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Fact that police officer wrote letter expressing desire or even need to gain more knowledge about alternative uses of force and fact that response was that police department would not pay for him to attend such course did not establish inadequate training or supervision so as to give rise to municipal liability under § 1983. Huong v. City of Port Arthur, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1003. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Material issues of fact as to whether city was deliberately indifferent to inadequate training of police officers precluded summary judgment in civil rights action brought after plaintiff was shot by officer; factual issue of excessive force existed, practice of dealing with drunken, rude, and potentially violent suspects was "usual and recurring," and expert opined that all four officers completely mishandled situation. Diaz v. Salazar, D.N.M.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1088. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether lack of policies on whether police officers are to carry back-up weapons when suspects are in custodial arrest, and whether city provided officers with inadequate training on use of force were fact questions precluding summary judgment in § 1983 civil rights suit arising from fatal shooting of arrested suspect during escape attempt. Garrison v. City of Texarkana, Tex., E.D.Tex.1995, 910 F.Supp. 1196. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police department was not liable under § 1983 for failing to adequately train their police officers, absent evidence demonstrating that police department made conscious or deliberate choice not to train its officers; conclusory allegation that regulations concerning use of force were so ambiguous as to represent conscious choice not to train police officers did not amount to factual support for improper training claim. House v. New Castle County, D.Del.1993, 824 F.Supp. 477. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Family members and trustees of heirs of Asians shot by police could not recover from city in § 1983 action based on any failure of city to train officers in racial sensitivity; family members and trustees failed to develop any factual record concerning prevalence and effectiveness of racial sensitivity training and there was no evidence of causation between lack of training and shooting. Yang v. Murphy, D.Minn.1992, 796 F.Supp. 1245. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Failure of county to investigate alleged use of excessive force by sheriff's deputies in connection with arrest of plaintiff was insufficient to support plaintiff's § 1983 claim against county and sheriff for failure to adequately train and supervise deputies, where only notice to county of alleged misconduct were remarks of criminal defense lawyer to assistant prosecutor during plea negotiations, plaintiff made no formal or informal complaint of police brutality, and failure of county to investigate was not willful, reckless, or grossly negligent. Tompkins v. Frost, E.D.Mich.1987, 655 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Question of whether city's failure to discipline adequately police officers involved in prior beating of suspect created atmosphere whereby police department tolerated misconduct and even police brutality was for jury in arrestee's § 1983 action seeking to hold city liable for officer's use of excessive force. Disorbo v. Hoy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 74 Fed.Appx. 101, 2003 WL 22037275, Unreported. Civil Rights 1429

Sheriff's department policies and training did not evidence deliberate indifference too the rights of citizens who came into contact with deputies, as required to support property owner's § 1983 failure to train claim arising from deputy's alleged use of excessive force in arresting her; department provided training on use of force issues at least two or three times over two year period, each lasting about 30 minutes, use of force was typically discussed at supervisor meeting, a formal written use of force policy existed, and each officer's use of force would be reviewed under policy. Collin v. Stephenson, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31409874, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

2121. ---- Supervisory personnel, excessive force, police activities

Neither Constitution nor any federal statute imposes duty upon municipality or its chief of police to supervise its police officers, and thus § 1983 liability cannot be invoked on that basis alone. Hale v. Vance, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 725. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

In § 1983 action for excessive force, sheriff and county were not liable under supervisory liability theory, absent liability on the part of one of the deputies. Harrell v. Purcell, M.D.N.C.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 526. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

The standards applicable to a determination of municipal liability under § 1983, requiring a showing of a policy impairing the federal constitutional rights of a claimant, did not apply to a police brutality action brought against an officer who was the supervisor of the police involved in the incident but took no direct part in it. Martinez v. Wolferseder, D.Mass.1998, 997 F.Supp. 192. Civil Rights 1358

To establish prima facie claim of supervisory liability for police brutality based on allegation that supervising officer failed to adequately screen/supervise applicants and officers, plaintiff must demonstrate that current screening/supervision mechanisms utilized by police department are deficient, that supervising officer knew or should have known that deficiencies existed, and that supervising officer failed to reasonably address those deficiencies. Sanchez v. Figueroa, D.Puerto Rico 1998, 996 F.Supp. 143. Civil Rights 1358

To establish prima facie claim of supervisory liability for police brutality based on allegation that supervising officer failed to adequately train officers in use of weapons and deadly force, plaintiff must demonstrate that officers were not adequately trained, supervising officer knew or should have known of that deficiency, and that supervising officer failed to take obvious steps to remedy problem. Sanchez v. Figueroa, D.Puerto Rico 1998, 996 F.Supp. 143. Civil Rights 1358

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether a reasonable supervisor could have believed he was not being deliberately indifferent to existence of an excessive risk of an intentional dog bite, precluding summary judgment for police department officials, on basis of qualified immunity, with respect to supervisory liability claim under §§ 1983 brought by suspect who was injured by a police dog as he fled on foot from allegedly stolen motor vehicle. Rosenberg v. Vangelo, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 93 Fed.Appx. 373, 2004 WL 491864, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Supervisor of arresting officers could not be held liable to arrestee for officers alleged use of excessive force absent evidence of his personal involvement in misconduct; conclusory allegations of deliberate indifference to prior misconduct were insufficient. Harris v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 554745, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1420

2122. ---- Good faith, excessive force, police activities

Liability under this section will not arise from use of deadly force in an arrest if officers involved reasonably believed in good faith that such force was necessary to protect themselves or others from death or great bodily harm. Maiorana v. MacDonald, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1979, 596 F.2d 1072. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Even if police officer used unreasonable force against suspect when he discharged his firearm six times after suspect charged him with knife, officer made reasonable mistake as to amount of force allowed by the law in his situation, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim for use of excessive force. Santana v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 720. Civil Rights 1376(6)

2123. ---- Legality of arrest, excessive force, police activities

Action under § 1983 in which prisoner alleged that police officers had used excessive force in arresting him did not require overturning his conviction on drug charges, which was based in part on evidence seized in a search that accompanied arrest, and thus was not barred by Heck v. Humphrey; police might have used excessive force in effecting a perfectly lawful arrest. Robinson v. Doe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 272 F.3d 921, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1976, 535 U.S. 1084, 152 L.Ed.2d 1033. Civil Rights 1088(4)

"Illegal act defense" is inapplicable in § 1983 excessive force suits; to hold otherwise would effectively license law enforcement agents to use objectively unreasonable force to make arrests whenever person being arrested committed crime precipitating arrest. Heflin v. Town of Warrenton, E.D.Va.1996, 944 F.Supp. 472. Civil Rights 1088(4)

For purposes of § 1983 claim arising from alleged use of excessive force during arrest, issue presented was one of reasonableness of force used, and not validity of arrest; thus, fact that jury found lack of probable cause to support arrest on related claim did not automatically entitle arrestee to verdict in its favor on claim of use of excessive force. Watchorn By and Through Christenson v. Town of Davie, S.D.Fla.1992, 795 F.Supp. 1112. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1424

Even a legal arrest may be accompanied by excessive force which can form the basis for a subsequent action for damages under this section. Delaney v. Dias, D.C.Mass.1976, 415 F.Supp. 1351.

The use of excessive force in the context of an arrest, albeit an arrest that is itself lawful, is actionable under this section. Bur v. Gilbert, E.D.Wis.1976, 415 F.Supp. 335. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2124. ---- Conviction, excessive force, police activities

Validity of arrestee's Pennsylvania conviction for resisting arrest, establishing that arresting officer was justified in using "substantial force," would not be thrown into doubt by judgment in arrestee's favor on his § 1983 claim of excessive force, so as to bar claim; "substantial force" could be objectively reasonable or excessive and unreasonable, and finding that officer used excessive "substantial force" would not imply that arrest was unlawful. Nelson v. Jashurek, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 109 F.3d 142. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Prisoner who had entered plea of guilty under Alford to charge of assault with a deadly weapon was not barred under Heck from bringing federal civil rights action alleging that police officers had used force far greater than that required for his arrest and out of proportion to threat which he posed to officers, even though his conviction had not been reversed, expunged, invalidated, or called into question by issuance of writ of habeas corpus by federal court, as successful civil rights action would not necessarily imply invalidity of prisoner's conviction. Smithart v. Towery, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1996, 79 F.3d 951. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact that claimant was convicted on charge of resisting arrest did not preclude § 1983 claim against officers for excessive force used during such arrest; jury in criminal prosecution could have found that resistance to arrest was not physical in nature, or that resistance preceded or succeeded excessive force, and therefore, finding of excessive force in § 1983 action would not necessarily be inconsistent with conviction for resisting arrest. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2125. ---- Self-defense, excessive force, police activities

If a police officer attacked by a prisoner uses more force than reasonably necessary in defending himself, officer can be subject to liability for the use of excessive force. Williams v. Liberty, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 461 F.2d 325. Civil Rights 1093

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether security guards at public hospital acted in self-defense when they were involved in altercation with motorist who illegally parked while picking up his wife at hospital precluded summary judgment in motorist's civil rights action. Monge v. Cortes, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 42. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Force used by police officers to effect arrest was not excessive under Fourth Amendment, in context of claim under § 1983, where police officers had reasonable belief that citizen posed imminent risk to lives of police officers and other persons; citizen boarded commuter train dressed in army fatigues, wearing mask over his nose, and he carried wooden staff and military sword, citizen repeatedly refused police officers' directions to put staff down and leave the train, officers then sprayed citizen with pepper spray with no effect, citizen swung sword at officers, and then officers shot citizen without killing him. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Lethal force used against a police shooting victim was reasonable and did not violate the victim's Fourth Amendment rights, and thus, the officers involved were entitled to qualified immunity in a § 1983 suit brought by the administrator of the victim's estate; the officers were dispatched to search for the victim, who had left his home in a rage, inebriated, spattered with blood from self-inflicted cuts, and armed with a knife, and when the officers closed in on him, he refused to relinquish the knife and began to charge an officer who, fearing for his life, shot and killed the victim. Easley v. Kirmsee, E.D.Wis.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 945, affirmed 382 F.3d 693. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee who was mentally disturbed and caused damage to hospital failed to state excessive force claim under civil rights statute against police officers who subdued him; arrestee threatened officers with physical harm and actually injured them, arrestee was physically strong man and suffered from bipolar chemical imbalance which caused him to become grossly agitated, arrestee struck officers before they struck him, it took eight officers to subdue arrestee, and officers were called to hospital by hospital's own frightened staff to prevent arrestee from doing further damage and to restore order. Nicholson v. Kent County Sheriff's Dept., W.D.Mich.1993, 839 F.Supp. 508. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2126. ---- Retroactive application of court decisions, excessive force, police activities

In determining in civil rights action whether university police used excessive force when they arrested professor, excessive force standard in use when case came to trial, rather than excessive force standard in use when incident occurred, applied; new standard applied retroactively. Martin v. Thomas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 973 F.2d 449. Courts 100(1)

2127. ---- Miscellaneous claims, excessive force, police activities

Evidence failed to establish that sheriff's isolated decision to hire deputy without performing adequate screening reflected deliberate indifference by sheriff to high risk that deputy would use excessive force, and thus, county could not be held liable for sheriff's decision in § 1983 action brought by automobile passenger who was injured when deputy used excessive force in removing her from vehicle after it was stopped; while deputy's record may have made him poor candidate for position, it did not create obvious risk of use of excessive force, as primary charges in deputy's record arose from single incident while he was college student. Board of County Com'rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, U.S.Tex.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1382, 520 U.S. 397, 137 L.Ed.2d 626, rehearing denied 117 S.Ct. 2472, 520 U.S. 1283, 138 L.Ed.2d 227, on remand 117 F.3d 239. Civil Rights 1420

In arrestees' §§ 1983 action against arresting police officers, evidence was sufficient to support jury's conclusion that officers used excessive force; arrestee and his fiancee testified that officers attacked arrestees without any provocation and savagely beat them, and evidence included photographs depicting the physical injuries inflicted by officers and medical records describing those injuries. Casillas-Diaz v. Palau, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 463 F.3d 77. Civil Rights 1420

A reasonable jury could have found that, even without an additional show of authority by police officer, arrestee was seized within meaning of Fourth Amendment when officer punched him in the face, knocking him to the ground, and thus, officer was not entitled to judgment as a matter of law on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim against him alleging seizure by use of excessive force; officer's use of force caused arrestee to reel backwards and fall to the ground, and force of blow caused arrestee to black out momentarily. Acevedo v. Canterbury, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 457 F.3d 721. Civil Rights 1429

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officers' actions in shooting suspect violated suspects

Fourth Amendment right to be free from excessive force, precluding summary judgment for officers in §§ 1983 claim brought by suspect's personal representative of his estate. Walker v. City of Orem, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 451 F.3d 1139. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Medical testimony from four doctors that cause of death of detainee who died while police officers were attempting to subdue and arrest him was chest and neck trauma consistent with crushing of his chest, and one doctor's testimony that detainee's injuries almost certainly happened during struggle with officers, raised genuine issue of material fact as to whether officer who knelt on detainee's back while he was lying on ground used unreasonable amount of force, precluding summary judgment in §§1983 action against officer by detainee's estate alleging use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment. Abdullahi v. City of Madison, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 423 F.3d 763 . Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer's conduct in tackling arrestee and forcing him to the floor was not unreasonable, and thus did not violate the Fourth Amendment, although arrestee sustained head trauma when he hit the floor, and the head injury led to arrestee's death, where arrestee was disoriented and exhibiting signs of lacking mental control, and he was barreling toward glass doors that officer knew were locked at time of the tackle. McVay ex rel. Estate of McVay v. Sisters of Mercy Health System, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 399 F.3d 904. Arrest 68(2)

Single blow from walkie-talkie of hospital security guard to head of former employee was reasonable use of force to detain employee, and, consequently, guard did not deprive employee of her Fourth Amendment civil right to be free from use of excessive force, where employee admitted that she acted in unreasonable manner, she threatened bodily harm to persons at hospital, she provoked breach of the peace, she battered guard, and she created dismay. Johnson v. LaRabida Children's Hosp., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 372 F.3d 894. Arrest 68(2)

Allegations that police officers, who were seeking to execute an already-executed arrest warrant, threatened to break down the door and gates of plaintiff's house, used foul language, exacerbated plaintiff's prior injuries by pushing his arms up behind his back while handcuffing him, and did so in front of plaintiff's children, failed to state a claim, in §§ 1983 action, for excessive force; allegations demonstrated no more than the degree of physical coercion typically attendant to an arrest. Pena-Borrero v. Estremeda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 365 F.3d 7. Arrest 68(2)

Officer's split-second judgment to administer a single kick to subdue arrestee was objectively reasonable as a matter of law, and thus did not support recovery under either § 1983 or California law of battery, where another police officer had been shot and wounded and was engaged in a gun battle, arresting officer noticed an individual who matched the description given of a suspect and he had no way of knowing whether the individual was armed, and that individual began to comply with officer's commands to get down on the ground, but then suddenly jumped to his feet as officer approached him. Saman v. Robbins, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 173 F.3d 1150. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer's use of single burst of pepper spray to subdue detainee believed to pose suicide risk did not per se involve use of excessive force, in light of detainee's size and inebriation, his adamant refusal to go to hospital, and officer's reasonable belief that detainee had taken overdose. Monday v. Oullette, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1997, 118 F.3d 1099. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Motorist stated § 1983 cause of action for unreasonable seizure against police officer who, during traffic stop, administered one violent poke and push, and said to motorist, "[w]e know what to do with you." Lanigan v. Village of East Hazel Crest, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 110 F.3d 467. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officers did not use "excessive force" in securing arrestee's fingerprints; arrestee made fist with his thumb tucked inside in order to prevent fingerprinting, officer then seized arrestee, pressed his thumb against arrestee's mandibular nerve junction below his jaw, and repeatedly pushed his thumb forward toward arrestee's nose in effort to compel him to open his hand, and officer repeated that maneuver two or three times next day before arrestee finally relented. Joos v. Ratliff, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 97 F.3d 1125. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Evidence supported jury's finding that police officer used excessive force after arrestee failed to remove her wedding ring when she was ordered to remove all of her personal property, even if alleged use of force was not life threatening and did not leave extensive marks; officer admitted pulling ring from arrestee's finger and arrestee claimed that she did nothing to provoke officer's abusive behavior and was subjected to intense physical pain from his actions. Holmes v. City of Massillon, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 78 F.3d 1041, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 312, 519 U.S. 935, 136 L.Ed.2d 228. Civil Rights 1420

Force used against arrestee was not excessive, for purposes of arrestee's claim under § 1983, even though during initial investigatory stop police officer drew his gun, reached for arrestee's keys, and grabbed arrestee and tried to pull arrestee out of truck; officer's actions were eminently reasonable in light of information from radio dispatcher that owner of truck was suspected to be armed and dangerous and in light of arrestee's suspicious movements while inside the truck. Foote v. Dunagan, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 33 F.3d 445. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Evidence did not support wife's claim under § 1983 that officer used excessive force in arresting husband; wife's counsel earlier stipulated to dismiss assault and battery claims against officer because discovery disclosed that officer never touched husband, and second officer's statement that "it took five of us to subdue [husband]" was insufficient to show excessive force. Hancock v. Dodson, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1367. Civil Rights 1420

Police officers who were found to have used excessive force against each other in altercation at scene of arrest, during which both were in plain clothes and neither knew other was police officer, were not precluded from recovering on their respective constitutional claims raised under § 1983. Graham v. Davis, C.A.D.C.1989, 880 F.2d 1414, 279 U.S.App.D.C. 341. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Although there was sufficient evidence to support finding that state official maliciously caused use of excessive force in arresting farmer, that state officials implemented an operation to enforce a civil statute that utilized too many bodies and too many guns and that those officials maliciously planned needlessly dramatic and coercive operation knowing it would surprise, frighten, upset and anger farmer, state officials' conduct did not amount to a constitutional violation redressable under Section 1983 where farmer was not struck, pushed, mistreated or threatened during the incident and did not suffer even any minor physical injuries as result of the incident. Gumz v. Morrissette, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1985, 772 F.2d 1395, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1644, 475 U.S. 1123, 90 L.Ed.2d 189 . Civil Rights 1088(4)

Genuine issues of fact, as to whether deputy sheriffs acted reasonably in hitting pretrial detainee about the head in attempting to handcuff him and transport him to segregation, precluded summary judgment on excessive force claim. Jenkins v. Wilson, W.D.Wis.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 808. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether officers' alleged use of taser gun and other force during arrest was excessive and unreasonable in light of the facts and circumstances confronting the officers precluded summary judgment for officers on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim for excessive force. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 395. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Arrestee stated excessive use of force claim against police officer where he alleged that officer arrested him without a warrant or probable cause and intentionally pushed him to a brick wall, causing a six-inch cut on his back. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officers' use of pepper spray against patrons of restaurant and nightclub without warning to break up fight was excessive, for purpose of officers' assertion of qualified immunity to patrons' Fourth Amendment excessive force claim in lawsuit under §§ 1983, since officers' use of force was substantial, in that pepper spray caused pain, irritation, swelling, and difficulty in breathing, and no strong governmental interests were at stake, in that character of offense was minor, risk to officers' safety or their ability to control group was not high, and patrons were not forcibly resisting arrest or interfering with officer's attempt to make arrest. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Arrest 68(2)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether police officers used reasonable force to arrest, by allegedly spraying arrestee with pepper spray, and hitting him with a baton, precluded summary judgment in favor of officers, in arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force claim against officers. Reed v. City of Lavonia, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1347. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer's use of force against arrestee was justified, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force case, even though arrestee complied with officer's order to lie on his stomach and place his hands behind his head, and officer allegedly had four unarmed officers stand on arrestee's extremities, pulled hard on handcuff, causing it to cut through arrestee's flesh to bone, pulled arrestee's head up while another officer sprayed him with mace, and kicked arrestee in ribs, where arrestee had just wrestled baton away from one officer and grabbed groin of another. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 385, subsequent determination 379 F.Supp.2d 475. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Force used by officers, who deployed pepper spray and executed control holds, tripped, hit and handcuffed a hallucinating and obviously deranged suspect and placed him in a prone position pending the arrival of paramedics, was reasonable; suspect was highly erratic, had armed himself with two weapons, had previously wounded his wife with a knife, had disregarded the officers' attempts to pacify him and refused to surrender, and demonstrated an intent to harm when he rushed at the officers with the screwdriver. Wheeler v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2005, 367 F.Supp.2d 737. Arrest 68(2)

Use of plastic "flexi-cuffs" to detain arrestees being temporarily held in a gymnasium, by cuffing one wrist to the opposite ankle, did not constitute a use of excessive force, even though the arrests were unlawful, and therefore mayor and police chief were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestees' §§ 1983 action alleging use of excessive force during their detention; officers' actions were objectively reasonable given that they faced a crowd of several hundred arrestees. Barham v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 48, affirmed in part 434 F.3d 565, 369 U.S.App.D.C. 146. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

"No use of force" standard, rather than the "reasonable force" standard, applied in nightclub owner's civil rights action in determining whether Puerto Rico treasury agent used unreasonable force in conducting warrantless administrative inspection of nightclub. Alvarez Sepulveda v. Colon Matos, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 100. Searches And Seizures 79

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether two police officers, who handcuffed driver of car that they stopped because it matched description of car in reported carjacking, could see third officer on the other side of the stopped car as he allegedly kneed passenger in the groin several times and stripped passenger of his pants and underwear in public, after he had already ordered passenger to the ground, handcuffed him, and allegedly kicked him several times, precluding summary judgment on the two officers' qualified immunity defense against the passenger's § 1983 claim for failing to intervene to stop the third officer's kneeing and stripping of the passenger in alleged violation of his Fourth Amendment right against use of excessive force. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Officer's act of inquiring into whether arrestee had a permit for the gun discovered in his automobile before reading him his Miranda rights could not support arrestee's excessive force claim, in § 1983 action against officer, where officer used absolutely no force against arrestee. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers did not use excessive force in seizure and arrest, although arrestee may have suffered some bruises and a black eye, where arrestee admitted to physically resisting arrest, arrestee did not suffer any serious physical injuries, and arrestee did not need medical attention. Raymond v. Bunch, N.D.N.Y.2001, 136 F.Supp.2d 71. Arrest 68(2)

Genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for police officers on arrestee's § 1983 excessive force claim, existed as to whether defendant officers were ones who committed alleged acts, and whether those acts were reasonable under circumstances. Jonelis v. Russo, D.Conn.1994, 863 F.Supp. 84. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Arrestee's allegations that arresting officer hit him with a soccer ball while arrestee was in holding cell to coerce arrestee to answer questions and sign his Miranda warnings was sufficient to allege claim for use of excessive force in violation of Fourth or Fourteenth Amendments. Bieros v. Nicola, E.D.Pa.1994, 860 F.Supp. 226. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Federal protection officer acted reasonably in arresting the motorist who had committed misdemeanor by illegally parking in federal building parking lot, and in allegedly poking him in the stomach with his finger to force him inside building and to office of U.S. attorney; degree of force used was objectively reasonable in view of motorist's belligerent attitude and refusal to provide any identification. Perreault v. Thornton, D.R.I.1991, 781 F.Supp. 873. United States 50.10(3)

No more force was used than was reasonably necessary to effectuate arrest of § 1983 plaintiff who had already shown his willingness to ram police car with his tractor trailer; scuffle had ensued as defendant and other officers subdued plaintiff, handcuffed him and placed him in police car to transport him to jail. Williams v. Adams, E.D.Mo.1991, 780 F.Supp. 635, affirmed 989 F.2d 506, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1103, 510 U.S. 1132, 127 L.Ed.2d 415. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arresting officer exercised reasonable force against police sergeant who resisted arrest, unnecessarily honked car horn, refused to show license and registration, and almost struck an officer with her vehicle in trying to flee, and, thus, arresting officer did not violate Fourth Amendment or commit assault and battery under District of Columbia law. Stevens v. Stover, D.D.C.1990, 727 F.Supp. 668. Arrest 68(2); Assault And Battery 10

Evidence adequately established violation of federal law in arrestee's right to be free from unlawful arrest by person acting under color of state law where arrestee's evidence showed police officers used excessive force in subduing arrestee in transporting him to police station, and filed untimely and unfounded charges against him. Odato v. Vargo, W.D.Pa.1988, 677 F.Supp. 384. Civil Rights 1420

For purposes of civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, deputy sheriff used excessive force by breaking arrestee's finger, where immediate task of photographing arrestee did not require breaking his finger, three or four police officers present could have handcuffed or otherwise subdued arrestee without intentionally hurting him, if he was disruptive, and arrestee's conduct in pointing at deputy sheriff and stating that he did not want deputy sheriff near him did not require discipline by breaking arrestee's finger as conduct occurred in presence of other police officers only. Bowman v. Casler, N.D.N.Y.1985, 622 F.Supp. 836. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Assuming there was intentional deprivation of plaintiff's physical liberty when state trooper told him not to move after trooper stopped plaintiff's car at shopping mall, trooper was not liable to plaintiff under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, in that there was no use or threat of force, no official arrest was made, plaintiff was not taken into custody, and state court action provided plaintiff with adequate due process protections. Ferry v. Bergbigler, W.D.Pa.1985, 615 F.Supp. 90. Civil Rights 1088(4) with hostile and uncooperative subjects, at various times, all three plaintiffs attempted to hinder and obstruct officers in execution of their duty, and one plaintiff's injury was directly related to his struggle with officer, all three defendants responded with only that force which was reasonable and necessary in light of resistance which they faced, and thus officers could not be held liable to plaintiffs in civil rights action. Smith v. Garrett, N.D.W.Va.1984, 586 F.Supp. 517. Civil Rights 1088(4)

An action under this section arising from plaintiff's arrest and confinement by defendant police officer was not established in that, though plaintiff alleged that defendant officer, individually and as an agent of the police department and the city, violated plaintiff's civil rights by arresting her without cause and with excessive force and by causing her to be imprisoned without justification, evidence showed that defendant's action was commensurate with plaintiff's increased resistance and, therefore, reasonable in light of existing need and that, without minimizing the physical discomfort felt by the plaintiff at the time of her arrest, the injuries sustained by her during the course of the arrest required neither medication nor subsequent medical treatment. Bailey v. City of New Orleans, E.D.La.1982, 533 F.Supp. 193. Civil Rights 1420

Whether police used excessive force in connection with a fatal shooting was a question for the jury in a §§ 1983 suit, despite claim that the victim was handcuffed and in police custody before he was shot; there was sufficient evidence to support a verdict consistent with a defense theory that the victim was physically capable of crawling underneath a house and that, after doing so, he was shot while running through a yard. Palma v. Edwards, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 3, 2004 WL 1435213, Unreported. Civil Rights 1429

Officers of sheriff's department were entitled to use deadly force in attempting to arrest arrestee and thus arrestee's § 1983 claim against officers for use of excessive force during arrest failed; arrestee fled officers, during pursuit arrestee struck a utility pole, lost control of his car and slid into a ditch, climbed out of ditch and fled on foot, arrestee then stole a truck, he saw officer try to grab onto truck so arrestee drove faster, arrestee saw officer fall off back of truck, and arrestee accelerated into another officer. Barboa v. Baird, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 81 Fed.Appx. 301, 2003 WL 22719562, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2916, 542 U.S. 941, 159 L.Ed.2d 820. Arrest 68(2)

State trooper did not use excessive force in arresting citizen for driving under influence (DUI), although trooper unnecessarily slammed citizen over hood of patrol car and proceeded to handcuff him; citizen was backing away from trooper when trooper asked citizen if he was other driver involved in accident, and alleged injuries suffered by citizen were limited to soft tissue injuries, and were not substantiated with any medical documentation. Ankele v. Hambrick, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21223821, Unreported, affirmed 136 Fed.Appx. 551, 2005 WL 1532436. Automobiles 349(14.1)

Police officer's conduct of striking another officer on chest with his open hand during confrontation did not constitute excessive force, so as to be cognizable constitutional tort under § 1983; conduct interfered with no civil rights of plaintiff and caused no physical harm, injury, or consequence. Rosenfeld v. Egy, D.Mass.2003, 2003 WL 222119, Unreported, affirmed 346 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1088(2); Civil Rights 1126

2128. Execution of judicial orders, police activities

There may be a "deprivation" within meaning of this section not only when there has been an actual taking of property by a police officer, but also when the officer assists in effectuating a repossession over objection of the debtor or so intimidates a debtor as to cause him to refrain from exercising his legal right to resist repossession. Harris v. City of Roseburg, C.A.9 (Or.) 1981, 664 F.2d 1121. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Law enforcement officials who took person into custody and transported him to mental hospital in good faith reliance on state civil commitment law without reason to believe that person had been committed without notice and hearing were not liable to that person under this section. certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 153, 429 U.S. 856, 50 L.Ed.2d 133. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County sheriff in levying distraints, serving summonses and conducting sheriff's sale incident to enforcement of judgments for rent was carrying out mandatory routine functions of his office and was not liable to tenants for such acts. Steinpreis v. Shook, C.A.4 (Md.) 1967, 377 F.2d 282, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 811, 389 U.S. 1057, 19 L.Ed.2d 858. Sheriffs And Constables 111

Plaintiff did not establish § 1983 Fourth Amendment excessive force claim against county deputy sheriff who executed writ of possession for the premises and evicted plaintiff therefrom: notice was posted on the premises advising plaintiff that writ of possession had been issued and that she had no lawful right to be on the premises; plaintiff had opportunity to remove herself and her possessions from the premises before she was evicted; at no time was plaintiff placed under arrest or in handcuffs; and plaintiff did not show that she suffered any physical injury during eviction. Busch v. Torres, C.D.Cal.1995, 905 F.Supp. 766. Civil Rights 1088(2)

2129. Familial association, police activities

Police officer did not unduly interfere with wife's right of familial association with her husband by telling wife, falsely, that husband had confessed to child abuse; wife consensually talked to officer, and officer's conduct did not involve physical coercion and did not shock the conscience. Griffin v. Strong, C.A.10 (Utah) 1993, 983 F.2d 1544. Constitutional Law 82(10)

Siblings of black victim of fatal shooting by city police officer did not have constitutionally protected liberty interest in continued association with their deceased brother so as to entitle them to recover under this section. Bell v. City of Milwaukee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1984, 746 F.2d 1205. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Police officer who fatally shot driver after driver fled on foot from scene of investigative stop of his vehicle was not liable under §§ 1983 to driver's son for violation of son's right to due process, absent showing that officer's actions were directed at parent-child relationship between driver and son. Remillard v. City of Egg Harbor City, D.N.J.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 766. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Police officers' actions in removing daughter from school grounds and releasing her to custodial father did not deprive mother of any constitutional right, as required to support § 1983 action against police officers and municipality. Rubin v. Smith, D.N.H.1996, 919 F.Supp. 534. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer's alleged negligence in obtaining background information about juvenile informant and in using juvenile as informant without his mother's consent, did not amount to violation of mother's constitutional right to care, custody, and management of her child and his affairs; there was no indication that police officers intended to interfere with mother's rights or to usurp mother's role. Williamson v. City of Virginia Beach, Va., E.D.Va.1992, 786 F.Supp. 1238, affirmed 991 F.2d 793. Constitutional Law 82(10)

Parents' alleged constitutionally protectible liberty interest in the continued companionship and association with their children within the rubric of substantive due process was not implicated by parents' allegation that their then 17-year-old son suffered from emotional and psychological harm by virtue of a brief four-hour detention by the police. Willard v. City of Myrtle Beach, SC, D.S.C.1989, 728 F.Supp. 397. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Brothers of decedent who was killed by police officer did not have constitutionally protected liberty interest in their association, if any, with decedent, so that brothers did not have cognizable civil rights claim. de la Cruz LaChapel v. Chevere Ortiz, D.Puerto Rico 1986, 637 F.Supp. 43. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Civil rights claim of father whose son was fatally shot by police officer based on his alleged "parental right" to have his son freely associate, which could be construed to allege that father had been deprived of the constitutional right to associate with his son, stated a cause of action under the civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, where complaint alleged conduct involving reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights of parent of decedent son, rather than to decedent son's constitutional rights. Trejo v. Wattles, D.Colo.1985, 636 F.Supp. 992. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was threatened by police defendants and was told that she would lose custody of her son if she did not sign a statement implicating her husband in firebombing did state claim under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Wilkinson v. Ellis, E.D.Pa.1980, 484 F.Supp. 1072. Civil Rights 1395(5)

2130. Fingerprints, police activities

Where heart of plaintiff's complaint was that he was deprived of his liberty because state authorities failed to promulgate, put into effect and monitor enforcement of appropriate rules applicable to return of photographs and fingerprints when a criminal proceeding is terminated in favor of accused, when illegally retained photograph was used to arrest him in a subsequent prosecution, adequacy of postdeprivation remedies did not control question whether complaint stated a cause of action under section 1983 for violation of procedural due process. Anderson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1985, 611 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1319

2131. Harassment, police activities--Generally

Allegations by nightclub and individuals that government officials conducted campaign of harassment and intimidation, including unreasonable searches and seizures and deprivation of right to assemble and right to profits from nightclub were conclusory and thus insufficient to state § 1983 claim for relief. L.S.T., Inc. v. Crow, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 49 F.3d 679. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Where plaintiffs in civil rights action failed to allege that they were singled out for discriminatory enforcement of town law and municipal ordinance or that police permitted others to engage in same activity with impunity while plaintiffs were harassed and arrested, complaint failed to state cause of action under this section. Reilly v. Doyle, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1973, 483 F.2d 123. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City employed a custom of investigatory detentions that violated plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights, and thus was liable in §§ 1983 action; on one occasion officers brought plaintiffs involuntarily to police station in the back of a police car, handcuffed, and held them in a cell for two to three hours without having probable cause to arrest, and on second occasion officers brought one plaintiff involuntarily to police station, without probable cause to arrest, and placed him in a cell to investigate whether he was driving a stolen car. Glass v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Allegations that police officers had on several occasions arrested private security guard, attempted to arrest guard, and subjected guard to unreasonable searches without probable cause for purposes of harassing him failed to state equal protection violation for purposes of federal civil rights action; no allegation was made that intentional discrimination occurred due to impermissible classification such as race. Crawford By and Through Crawford v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.Kan.1997, 952 F.Supp. 1467. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Mother of minor who was allegedly questioned in his home by police officer who entered without mother's permission or knowledge stated claim under § 1983 against police chief by alleging that chief violated plaintiff's equal protection rights in that chief, as policymaker, evinced deliberate indifference or gross negligence in failing to investigate fully and thoroughly allegations of police misconduct; those allegations manifested policy of harassment towards juveniles and teenagers that was selectively applied in order to punish plaintiffs for exercising their First Amendment rights by filing civilian complaint against police officer. Johns v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.1996, 942 F.Supp. 99. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Deputy's conduct toward parents and son of target of investigation did not violate their constitutional rights and thus did not support action under § 1983; though deputy was allegedly rude and unprofessional in manner that harassed and humiliated parents and son, deputy did not physically touch or threaten parents and son, was invited into parents' home, and was never asked to leave. Jackson v. Liberty County, E.D.Tex.1994, 860 F.Supp. 360. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Alleged police harassment of bank customers, without more, could not form basis for § 1983 cause of action, absent invocation of protected life, liberty or property interests; police conduct of telling customer's children that customers would be prosecuted if they did not pay debt, and letting it be known at customers' places of employment that they owed $18,000 to bank, was rude and obnoxious, but not violative of any constitutional right. Arnold v. Truemper, N.D.Ill.1993, 833 F.Supp. 678. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Record in federal civil rights suit by tavern owner against members of county sheriff's department and South Carolina Highway Patrol showed, as matter of law, that defendants' alleged actions in harassing plaintiff and plaintiff's business did not result in violation of his civil rights in manner actionable under this section. Plampin v. U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co., D.C.S.C.1978, 463 F.Supp. 972. Civil Rights 1420

2132. ---- Chilling effect, harassment, police activities

Genuine issue of material fact, precluding entry of summary judgment for police officer in civil rights action, existed as to whether police officer's warnings to gas station proprietor about speaking to press actually had chilling effect on proprietor's protected activity, even though proprietor participated in approximately 30 media interviews without rejecting any interview requests subsequent to meeting with police officer, where proprietor claimed that because of officer's threats he no longer made comments to media concerning conduct of police. Bennett v. Village of Oak Park, N.D.Ill.1990, 748 F.Supp. 1329. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2133. Hostage situation, police activities

Mother, who brought § 1983 claim against city after her house was destroyed and her children were killed during hostage situation created by mother's former boyfriend, failed to establish that city violated her rights to substantive due process, as required to support claim; city did not have constitutional duty to preserve mother's property under these conditions, or to train its officers to deal with "barricaded hostage" situations. Smith v. City of Plantation, S.D.Fla.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 1323, affirmed 198 F.3d 262. Constitutional Law 253(1); Constitutional Law 320; Municipal Corporations 628; Municipal Corporations 747(3)

2134. Identification procedures, police activities--Generally

Detective's actions in mistakenly identifying plaintiff as drug dealer using police department identification equipment and procedures five months after he made undercover purchase of crack cocaine did not violate plaintiff's due process rights; plaintiff had no constitutional right to be protected from detective's merely negligent conclusion that she was suspect who had sold him crack cocaine. Campbell v. City of San Antonio, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 43 F.3d 973. Constitutional Law 266(3.1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Arrestee who alleged that his rights were violated when police used his photograph in identification array after they had been ordered, pursuant to New York law, to release photograph to him upon termination of prior criminal proceeding in his favor did not state § 1983 claim for deprivation of property without due process of law; even if he had property right in photograph, he did not allege that state court remedy was inadequate or unavailable. Grandal v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 197. Civil Rights 1319

Suspect included in photographic lineup had no cause of action under § 1983 even if lineup was unduly suggestive, absent actual criminal trial of suspect and use of evidence of lineup to support allegation of violation of right to fair trial, and absent constitutional right to be free from unduly suggestive lineups; rule against unduly suggestive lineups was mere procedural safeguard to protect constitutional right to fair trial. Sejnoha v. City of Bisbee, D.Ariz.1993, 815 F.Supp. 1300. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Criminal defendant's right to be free from suggestive lineup is intended to protect right to fair trial and thus was not separately actionable as constitutional violation under federal civil rights statute. Mack v. Butler, N.D.Ill.1990, 742 F.Supp. 1007. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officers did not violate civil rights of attempted rape suspect, whose prosecution was nolle prosse after identification testimony was suppressed, on ground officers influenced or coerced victim into making identification of him, absent evidence officers knew defendant was not attempted rapist when they arrested him and had him submit to visual lineup, that visual lineup was misleading or unnecessarily suggestive, that visual lineup, if misleading, caused victim to make positive voice identification, that officers engaged in coercive or suggestive conduct encouraging victim to identify defendant, or that voice identification and visual lineup made it possible for victim to connect pieces at preliminary hearing at which she identified defendant. Brooks v. Fitzsimmons, N.D.Ill.1987, 658 F.Supp. 840. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee's claim that his constitutional rights were violated when victim's testimony identifying him as perpetrator was admitted at preliminary hearing failed to state a cognizable § 1983 claim against police officers who conducted lineup at which arrestee was selected by victim, as police were not responsible for admission of victim's testimony at preliminary hearing, and thus their actions were not directly linked with any violation of arrestee's civil rights. Hensley v. Carey, N.D.Ill.1986, 633 F.Supp. 1251, affirmed 818 F.2d 646, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 456, 484 U.S. 965, 98 L.Ed.2d 395. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2135. ---- Arrest and detention, identification procedures, police activities

City police department's procedure for verifying that arrestee held in custody on warrant was actually person named in warrant did not violate Fourth Amendment or due process clause by requiring only double checking and not triple checking of identity of arrestee, so as to subject city to liability under §§ 1983 to arrestee who was held in custody by police for two days after his arrest and prior to his arraignment on warrant that had been issued for someone else, since warrant itself was valid, and arrestee was only held by police for two days. Hernandez v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 455 F.3d 772. Constitutional Law 262

Expert report that probable cause to arrest suspect was based on three identifications that violated police department procedure did not preclude finding of probable cause, so as to give rise to § 1983 claim. Green v. City of Paterson, D.N.J.1997, 971 F.Supp. 891. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Mistakenly arresting plaintiff for theft of carpet from hotel did not violate plaintiff's constitutional rights, as needed to state civil rights claim under § 1983, given that police had no reason to question eyewitness identifications of defendant as perpetrator when arrest was made. Davis v. Tamburo, E.D.Ark.1993, 849 F.Supp. 1294. Civil Rights 1088(4)

If persons are taken from the streets, detained and placed in lineups against their will and without any charges being brought against them, they have been subject to illegal arrest, and suit pursuant to this section is proper. Butcher v. Rizzo, E.D.Pa.1970, 317 F.Supp. 899. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2136. Inaction, police activities--Generally

There was insufficient evidence that discrimination against women was motivating factor behind police department's alleged policy or custom of providing less protection to women victims of domestic abuse, as required to establish mother's § 1983 claim that police inaction, following her report of physical abuse, permitted father to kill her children and thus violated equal protection; there was no evidence that officer's motivation in telling father about mother's visit to police station was based on gender discrimination, and police superintendent's expression of disagreement with domestic abuse law and failure to meet with Women's Affairs Commission, while some evidence of discriminatory intent, was not enough to meet strict standards for showing discriminatory intent in equal protection claims. Soto v. Flores, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 103 F.3d 1056, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 71, 522 U.S. 819, 139 L.Ed.2d 32. Civil Rights 1420

A law enforcement officer can be liable under this section when by his inaction he fails to perform a statutorily imposed duty to enforce the laws equally and fairly, and thereby denies equal protection to persons legitimately exercising rights guaranteed them under state or federal law, and state officials are not entitled to rely on community hostility as an excuse not to protect, by inaction or affirmative conduct, the exercise of fundamental rights. Smith v. Ross, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1973, 482 F.2d 33. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1369

Police officer cannot be held liable in damages under §§ 1983 for failure to intercede to protect constitutional rights of citizens from infringement by other law enforcement officers unless such failure permitted fellow officers to violate suspect's clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 385, subsequent determination 379 F.Supp.2d 475. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Failure of Nebraska State Patrol Superintendent to protect Native American marchers from private violence by intoxicated individuals did not violate marcher's due process rights. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Constitutional Law 253(1); States 78

A police officer who fails to intercede on behalf of a citizen whose constitutional rights are being violated in the officer's presence by other officers is liable for the preventable harm caused by the actions of the other officers where that officer observes or has reason to know (1) that excessive force is being used, (2) that a citizen has been unjustifiably arrested, or (3) that any constitutional violation has been committed by a law enforcement official. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1088(2); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Law enforcement officer has duty to intercede on behalf of citizen whose constitutional rights are being violated in officer's presence, and officer who does not intercede on behalf of citizen in such situation can be liable to that citizen under § 1983. Jonelis v. Russo, D.Conn.1994, 863 F.Supp. 84. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Section 1983 plaintiff did not have constitutional right to see his purported tormentor punished for threatening to assault him so as to state § 1983 claim against police officer who failed to investigate charge. Slagel v. Shell Oil Refinery, C.D.Ill.1993, 811 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 23 F.3d 410, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 611, 513 U.S. 1031, 130 L.Ed.2d 520, rehearing denied 115 S.Ct. 958, 513 U.S. 1137, 130 L.Ed.2d 900. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Spectators who were attacked at downtown fireworks display had no civil rights claim against city based on theory that its alleged policy and official actions regarding management of fireworks event were grossly negligent or in reckless disregard of constitutional right to freedom from bodily harm, absent some affirmative obligation of care and protection on part of city; policy or custom could not create any right, but only went to proving that state action, if city had affirmative obligation of care and protection, was grossly negligent or deliberately indifferent. Was v. Young, E.D.Mich.1992, 796 F.Supp. 1041. Civil Rights 1039; Civil Rights 1351(6)

State does not have affirmative obligation under federal civil rights statute to protect individual against private violence. Smith v. Dodrill, N.D.W.Va.1989, 718 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1039

Complaint alleging that city deprived wife of undercover narcotics officer by negligently failing to provide her with

24-hour police protection with the result that she was beaten unconscious by unknown assailant shortly after her eight-hour police guard had left failed to state claim for relief since unknown assailant was not within control of city and, while city might be liable under state law for failing to take positive action, its conduct did not deprive wife of her liberty in any constitutional sense. Ellsworth v. City of Racine, E.D.Wis.1984, 592 F.Supp. 1262, affirmed 774 F.2d 182, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1265, 475 U.S. 1047, 89 L.Ed.2d 574. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Even if members of police department failed or refused to take action with regard to plaintiff's allegations of wrongdoing in connection with unsolved murder and alleged cover-up of identity of murderer, such failure or refusal, if actionable at all, did not rise to level of deprivation of plaintiff's constitutional or other federal rights. Sellner v. Panagoulis, D.C.Md.1982, 565 F.Supp. 238, affirmed 796 F.2d 474, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 962, 479 U.S. 1069, 93 L.Ed.2d 1009, rehearing denied 107 S.Ct. 1595, 480 U.S. 941, 94 L.Ed.2d 784. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officers against whom civil rights plaintiff alleged dereliction of duty in failure to investigate and prosecute alleged offenses against him had not acted in violation of the civil rights plaintiff's constitutional rights. Clark v. Brandom, W.D.Mo.1976, 415 F.Supp. 883. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Sheriffs' alleged conduct, involving inaction in prolonged dispute between property owners and their neighbors over administration of irrigation ditch running along subdivision border, if accurately portrayed, was inconsistent with what was expected from public officials, but was not so egregious or fraught with unreasonable risk as to shock the conscience, as required for property owners to state claim for violation of substantive due process; to extent that sheriffs permitted potentially volatile situation to persist, their cumulative inaction did not rise above level of negligence. Marino v. Mayger, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 393, 2004 WL 2801795, Unreported. Constitutional Law 253(1); Sheriffs And Constables 99

Police officers' alleged conduct of failing to "do anything" with respect to third-party, who allegedly went to resident's home and threatened to harm resident and his family and who allegedly stole resident's car and dog, failed to support a claim under § 1983 for violation of due process. Aultman v. Padgett, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 22358445, Unreported. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

2137. ---- Conspiracy, inaction, police activities

Acquiescence can amount to § 1983 conspiracy agreement when one police officer watches open breach of law by other officers and does not seek its prevention. Hafner v. Brown, C.A.4 (Md.) 1992, 983 F.2d 570. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Complaints by administrators of estates of pedestrians killed by police officer who was driving while intoxicated sufficiently alleged joint action between police benevolent association (PBA) and city, as required to state § 1983 conspiracy claim against PBA to violate plaintiffs' due process rights to be free of state-created danger and to deny them access to courts; plaintiffs alleged specific agreements between city and PBA to prevent police officers from facing legal sanction for their illegal activities, and plaintiffs further alleged specific agreement between several individual officer defendants and individual PBA representatives to prevent officer from facing legal consequences of his drunk driving activities on day of accident, and joint activity in furtherance of that agreement. Small v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 271, opinion clarified on denial of reconsideration 304 F.Supp.2d 401 . Conspiracy 18

An officer who fails to intercede is liable under § 1983 for the preventable harm caused by the actions of other officers where that officer observes or has reason to know: (1) that excessive force is being used, (2) that a citizen has been unjustifiably arrested, or (3) that any constitutional violation has been committed by a law enforcement official. Mack v. Town of Wallkill, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 552. Civil Rights 1088(2); Civil Rights

Evidence was insufficient to support arrestee's claim that police officers conspired to deprive him of his constitutional rights in violation of § 1983; officers arrived on scene of arrestee's beating and arrest separately, no officer was ever alone with any other officer, later arriving officers were entitled to rely on statement by first officer on scene that arrestee had assaulted him and to participate in arrest, and neither later arriving officer had any involvement with filing or signing of complaint against arrestee. Fantasia v. Kinsella, N.D.Ill.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1409. Conspiracy 19

Mother failed to show that police chief and deputy sheriff engaged in civil rights conspiracy to withhold mother's constitutional right to protective service and assistance of law enforcement in "retrieving" mother's minor daughter from paternal grandparents; mother contacted police and sheriff's department separately, sheriff did not speak with or discuss situation with chief, grandparents testified that they had no conversation with any representative of sheriff's department regarding matter in question, and right to protective service was not firmly established constitutional right. Van Loo v. Braun, E.D.Wis.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1390. Conspiracy 19

Evidence did not establish that key decision-makers, including chief of police and mayor, considered, mentioned, or were aware of store owners' nationality when they decided to move police forces two to three blocks beyond store owners' businesses in response to mob violence, and thus store owners could not prevail on their § 1983 claim that city, police chief, and mayor violated their equal protection rights by making conscious decision to withhold protective services of police based upon their nationality. Park v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1996, 938 F.Supp. 836, reversed 120 F.3d 1157. Civil Rights 1420

Complaint, filed by participants in anti-Ku Klux Klan rally who were attacked by members of the Ku Klux Klan and American Nazi Party, alleging that city police had advance knowledge of time and location of rally and had advance knowledge that the Klan was planning to attack the rally and that, in furtherance of conspiracy between the police and the Klan, the police failed to arrive at the rally site until well after the attack took place, allowing the violence to go unchecked and many of the perpetrators to flee, stated cause of action under this section. Waller v. Butkovich, M.D.N.C.1984, 584 F.Supp. 909. Conspiracy 18

2138. ---- Creation of danger, inaction, police activities

Allegations by family members of pedestrians, who were killed when an intoxicated off-duty police officer drove his car through several red lights and struck them, that other officers merely stood by and watched him drink to excess, and that the officers did nothing to prevent him from driving in that condition, failed to state §§ 1983 claim against those other officers for violation of substantive due process rights, under the state-created danger theory. Pena v. DePrisco, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 432 F.3d 98. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

State did not deprive murder witness of her substantive due process right to life or liberty, for purpose of estate's §§ 1983 lawsuit under substantive due process clause on state created danger theory, by identifying her as witness and taking her witness statement in course of investigating murder, since both were necessary law enforcement tools. Rivera v. Rhode Island, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2005, 402 F.3d 27. Constitutional Law 255(2); States 112.2(2)

City police officers did not affirmatively place, in a more dangerous position, injured motorist who had fled into desert following his involvement in two-car collision, and were not liable under § 1983 for violating motorist's due process rights by allegedly failing to conduct adequate search operation, where motorist had already fled into desert before officers arrived on scene; mere fact that officers had ordered curtailment of any civilian "rescue" efforts did not impose on them any greater duty to protect motorist from harm, where these civilian "rescue" efforts consisted of little more than a few passing drivers who had stopped on side of road to help search immediate surroundings, and there was no reason to believe that their rescue efforts would have been successful had police not intervened. Estate of Amos ex rel. Amos v. City of Page, Arizona, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2001, 257 F.3d 1086.

Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Borough police officers did not act with degree of culpability that shocked the conscience when they released citizen after stopping his vehicle and conducting field sobriety tests, as required for liability for citizen's death in subsequent car accident under §§ 1983 for substantive due process violation of state-created danger; after administering field sobriety tests, which citizen passed, officers believed that they did not have probable cause to detain him further, officers' actions were not tainted by an improper or malicious motive to harm or kill citizen, and officers confiscated ammunition from gun that was in citizen's possession. Hoffman v. Borough of Avalon, W.D.Pa.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 395. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether police officer authorized perpetrator to attack victims, and whether force used by perpetrator was excessive precluded summary judgment in victims' §§ 1983 action alleging that police officer violated their due process rights by failing to timely intervene while they were being attacked. Garcia v. Brown, S.D.N.Y.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 132. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers, by allegedly failing to intervene in ongoing violence during neighborhood celebration, did not affirmatively place in a more dangerous position crowd members who were injured by other crowd members, and therefore, city was not liable under §§ 1983 for violating injured crowd members' due process rights by failing to intervene; officers did not place injured crowd members in harm's way, there was no evidence that officers had any contact with injured individuals or their assailants, nor did officers compel crowd members to interact in any way. Johnson v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 1091. Municipal Corporations 740(1)

For purpose of determining the applicability of the state-created or enhanced danger doctrine, in § 1983 action, by student who was wounded during attack on high school by two armed students, against law enforcement officers for substantive due process violation based on alleged improper responses to attack and lack of rescue efforts, student met requirement of alleging that officers' actions put student at risk of harm; officers instructed people in library to stay put, thus enhancing danger student would be shot, and officers ordered SWAT teams and rescue units not to enter building for several hours after attackers had committed suicide, thus enhancing danger that student's injuries, which resulted from his being shot, would be aggravated. Ireland v. Jefferson County Sheriff's Dept., D.Colo.2002, 193 F.Supp.2d 1201. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

For purpose of determining the applicability of the state-created or enhanced danger doctrine, in § 1983 action, by student who was wounded during attack on high school by two armed students, against law enforcement officers for substantive due process violation based on alleged improper responses to attack and lack of rescue efforts, student met requirement of being a member of a limited and specifically definable group; student alleged he was one of students shot and seriously injured in the library. Ireland v. Jefferson County Sheriff's Dept., D.Colo.2002, 193 F.Supp.2d 1201. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Discouragement of firefighters by law enforcement officers was not type of affirmative conduct such as would subject officers to liability, under state-created danger exception to DeShaney rule, for violation of individual's due process rights by failing to protect him from dying in house fire which individual himself had set; officers, who were displaying drawn weapons, delayed firefighting efforts by refusing to allow firefighters to rescue individual until scene was considered secure, resulting in altercations with firefighters. Lansdown v. Chadwick, W.D.Ark.2000, 152 F.Supp.2d 1128, affirmed 258 F.3d 754, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

State had not affirmatively placed school principal in danger so as to give rise to duty under due process clause to protect principal by responding to principal's call for help in providing security to school at time of protest, where demonstrators would have come to school whether police had come to help principal or not. Evan v. Morales, N.D.Ill.1991, 775 F.Supp. 271. Constitutional Law 274(2); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Property owner failed to state substantive due process claim against sheriffs for creating the danger that caused the harm when one of two neighbors with whom he had been involved in long-standing dispute and against whom he had obtained restraining order assaulted him with shovel; sheriff's issuance of concealed weapon permit to the other of the two neighbors against whom owner had obtained restraining order, allegedly knowing that situation was volatile and that someone could get hurt, was not affirmative conduct that created or increased danger that the neighbor who had not been issued the permit would assault owner. Marino v. Mayger, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 393, 2004 WL 2801795, Unreported. Constitutional Law 253(1); Sheriffs And Constables 99

2139. ---- Detention of child, inaction, police activities

Chief of police and deputy sheriff did not violate mother's due process rights or her constitutional right to associate with her child by allegedly withholding police assistance in "retrieving" mother's minor daughter from her paternal grandparents, thus precluding mother's recovery under § 1983; First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments imposed no duty upon police chief and deputy sheriff to provide mother with assistance in retrieving her daughter, and no special relationship existed between them and mother that would create such duty. Van Loo v. Braun, E.D.Wis.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1390. Constitutional Law 82(10); Constitutional Law 274(5); Child Custody 967

2140. ---- Discrimination, inaction, police activities

Although there is no general constitutional right to police protection, state may not discriminate in providing such protection. Watson v. City of Kansas City, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1988, 857 F.2d 690. Constitutional Law 83(1); Constitutional Law 211(4)

Police officers did not unlawfully arrest or use excessive force against Lebanese citizen, as legal resident of United States, for purpose of citizen's civil rights claim that was made on theory of bystander liability, where officers did not have opportunity to prevent events that already had occurred before their arrival; officers arrived while citizen was sitting on ground after events which gave rise to alleged unlawful arrest and use of force had passed. Mazloum v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Evidence that police officers who responded to 911 domestic violence call laughed and made silly faces when the male complainant told them when they arrived that he and his male cohabitant were ending a relationship did not establish either that the officers treated him differently because he was a homosexual, or that similarly situated heterosexuals were treated more favorably than he was, as required to establish a § 1983 claim against the officers for violation of his equal protection rights; other than laughter, the officers made no verbal comments about sexual orientation, their treatment of the complainant was removing him from the premises, and no evidence presented showed that the officers treated him differently in that respect because he was a homosexual. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.D.Ill.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 893, reversed in part 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Constitutional Law 224(2); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Native American arrestee's claim for monetary damages or declaratory relief for Nebraska officials' alleged policy of minimal criminal law enforcement, including lax enforcement of liquor control laws, when victims of crimes were Native Americans, was barred by Eleventh Amendment. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Federal Courts 269; Federal Courts 272

There was no evidence of disparate treatment between Hispanic plaintiffs and non-Hispanics in similar situations, as required to support Hispanic plaintiffs' equal protection claim that they had been subjected to numerous traffic stops and unreasonable searches and arrests on account of their race. to prevent father of owner of neighboring property from interfering with her use of abandoned street over neighboring property, failed to show that police verbal harassment and abusive language, and failure to arrest or prosecute father of property owner, were motivated by intent to discriminate against her on basis of her race, or to show existence of city policy or custom of selective enforcement of laws based on race, as required to establish municipal liability. Crenshaw v. City of Defuniak Springs, N.D.Fla.1995, 891 F.Supp. 1548. Civil Rights 1039; Civil Rights 1351(3)

City could not be held liable under civil rights statute for injuries sustained by public housing resident who was shot in face and neck by two assailants in hallway of project, although resident alleged that failure to protect her was based on discriminatory motive of her status as Hispanic woman and victim of domestic violence; resident adduced no proof of discrimination against Hispanics, intentional or otherwise, and charge of discrimination against women was premised solely on basis that women are more often victims of domestic violence and while that was true, resident presented no proof of other claims made by battered women that were met with indifference by police. Merced v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1994, 856 F.Supp. 826. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Viable equal protection claim was made out against police officials and city based on allegations that officials failed to detain or file criminal complaints against those who attacked persons from India and intentionally discriminated against Indians, and that city engaged in custom or practice of discrimination against Indians. Mody v. City of Hoboken, D.N.J.1991, 758 F.Supp. 1027. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Discriminatory police department policy providing favored treatment to police officers accused of domestic violence could support municipal liability under § 1983 for assault on child by off-duty police officer. Sherrell By and Through Wooden v. City of Longview, E.D.Tex.1987, 683 F.Supp. 1108. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Rape victim's allegation that police officers' failure to arrest rapist and to continue investigation was result of her being a woman, was sufficient to state claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14. Lowers v. City of Streator, N.D.Ill.1985, 627 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1395(5)

If police officers knew that member of religious group had been abducted by his parents and held for deprogramming, but failed to take any action because of their opinion of that particular church, their action would violate member's civil rights. Cooper v. Molko, N.D.Cal.1981, 512 F.Supp. 563. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2141. ---- Failure to adopt policies, inaction, police activities

Civil rights claimant raped by police officer failed to show city policy or custom of failing to act on or investigate prior complaints of sexual abuse by police officers, as required to establish § 1983 claim against city for such failure, given evidence that city officials, when informed of prior incidents of misconduct, had immediately requested officers' resignations, as it did with officer who raped claimant, and that police chief had acted upon rumors regarding unidentified officer's improper conduct in stopping female drivers, notwithstanding evidence that police chief failed to take remedial action regarding two specific complaints against offending officer. Andrews v. Fowler, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1996, 98 F.3d 1069. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Sheriff could not be held liable under this section for failure to adopt policies to prevent constitutional violations on part of his deputies. Wanger v. Bonner, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 621 F.2d 675. Civil Rights 1358

2142. ---- Special relationship, inaction, police activities

Mere fact that police officer observed beating of one man by another without intervening did not establish "special relationship" between officer and victim such that victim obtained constitutional right to state intervention and officer could be held liable in civil rights action under § 1983 for failure to intervene. Tucker v. Callahan, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 867 F.2d 909, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(1)

No "special relationship" existed between woman, who had been assaulted by police officer and who was participating in internal affairs department sting operation aimed at officer, and internal affairs officers who participated in sting, and woman could not recover on basis of violation of duty to protect her based on special relationship in federal civil rights action brought in which woman alleged that target of sting was allowed to have sexual contact with her before internal affairs officers made arrest; woman was not in custody, but had voluntarily agreed to participate in sting. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Even if police officer has special relationship with victim, imposing duty on officer to affirmatively act to protect victim, existence of special relationship in itself is not sufficient to establish liability under § 1983; victim must also show that police acted with deliberate indifference, since there is no liability for merely negligent nonfeasance. Rogers v. City of Port Huron, E.D.Mich.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2143. ---- Domestic violence, inaction, police activities

Police officers' failure to enforce temporary detention order against victim's brother was not proximate cause of injury suffered by victim when he was stabbed by brother over two weeks later, as required to support victim's federal civil rights claim against officers; although brother committed kind of violence mentioned in petition for detention order, family members did not attempt to obtain another detention order in intervening two weeks, and detention order only authorized detention of brother for at most 24 hours. Rodriguez-Cirilo v. Garcia, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 115 F.3d 50. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Abused wife and her father did not establish that husband's violent acts, in sexually assaulting wife and murdering her mother, would have been avoided had husband been arrested for earlier incidents of harassment, as required to impose § 1983 liability on police department, where arrest for earlier harassment might as easily have spawned retaliatory violence from husband, there was no realistic chance for police to provide protection when violence occurred, and there had been no reports of violent acts committed by husband to make rape and murder foreseeable to police. Ricketts v. City of Columbia, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 36 F.3d 775, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1838, 514 U.S. 1103, 131 L.Ed.2d 757. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Domestic violence victim was not in deputy sheriff's "protective custody" at time that she was shot and killed by her husband, and therefore county, sheriff, and deputy sheriff could not be held liable on that basis in civil rights action alleging due process violation, where victim had been neither coerced nor persuaded by State to accept its protection when returning to trailer house to retrieve victim's belongings. Losinski v. County of Trempealeau, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1991, 946 F.2d 544, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Actions of police officers was not such as to create for woman due process right to receive assistance in gaining access to civil courts by advice, as required by New Jersey's Domestic Violence Act, of right to receive restraining order against former live-in boyfriend who had attacked her, where officer, though failing to advise woman as required by the Act, did not act to create or exacerbate the danger or in any way constrain woman's general liberty or freedom on her own accord to seek protection in the courts, and officers had not had custody of the boyfriend prior to his initial assault. Brown v. Grabowski, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1990, 922 F.2d 1097, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2827, 501 U.S. 1218, 115 L.Ed.2d 997. Constitutional Law 305(2)

Employees of police department and employees of district attorney's office did not falsify or suppress evidence, and therefore did not deprive child's father of his due process rights as a parent under Maine law, when they failed to find probable cause to arrest child's biological mother for kidnapping, even if tapes submitted by father might have indicated that mother repeatedly lied to law enforcement officers and filed false reports. Burrell v. Anderson, D.Me.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 55. Constitutional Law 274(5); District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10; Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether city councilman attempted to use his authority as a city councilman to avoid arrest when his male cohabitant called 911 to report an alleged domestic violence incident, and as to whether police officers who responded to the call and the city police chief failed to arrest the councilman because of his position, precluding summary judgment on the cohabitant's § 1983 claim against the councilman, the police officers, and the police chief for violation of his equal protection rights as a class of one. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.D.Ill.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 893, reversed in part 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

On § 1983 claim alleging gender-based discrimination, municipality's official policy of treating domestic disputes less seriously than other disputes did not cause estranged husband to murder friend of wife or to sexually assault wife; cause of murder and assault were independent criminal acts of husband, municipality, through police department, was not present at time of acts nor was it notified as to immediate danger prior to acts, and despite general evidence that policy may have emboldened husband, murder and assault were not shown to be natural and probable results of emboldenment. Ricketts v. City of Columbia, Mo., W.D.Mo.1993, 856 F.Supp. 1337, affirmed 36 F.3d 775, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1838, 514 U.S. 1103, 131 L.Ed.2d 757. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Material issue of fact as to whether police department had policy of treating domestic assaults differently than other assaults precluded summary judgment for city, police department and officers on equal protection claim based on membership in the class of victims of domestic violence, rather than on gender, brought under § 1983 by representative for estate of wife who was killed by husband following reported incidents of domestic violence. Cellini v. City of Sterling Heights, E.D.Mich.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1215. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A protective order issued to prevent relative or household member from abusing other family members creates property right that incurs duty on part of government irrespective of whether the right is created by judicial function at statutory behest of the state legislature, and government has duty to protect beneficiary of such order, and failure to perform the duty may constitute denial of right to procedural due process. Siddle v. City of Cambridge, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1991, 761 F.Supp. 503. Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

Victim was not deprived of liberty without due process of law by sheriff's negligence in leaving only deputy to protect victim from her ex-boyfriend while she was retrieving her property from his residence as Fourteenth Amendment did not create duty upon state to provide police protection, and victim's death therefore did not result from any breach of state's duty to provide protection; thus, there was no liability on part of sheriff under civil rights statute. Thompson v. Lancaster, M.D.Ga.1987, 652 F.Supp. 703. Civil Rights 1088(1); Constitutional Law 255(2)

Special relationship existed between murder victim and city police department and officers that vested in victim the right to adequate police protection, and thus, administrator of victim's estate stated cause of action against department and officers pursuant to 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for deprivation of her Fourteenth Amendment right to due process, in light of allegations that city had actual notice of boyfriend's violent conduct directed toward victim by virtue of protection order entered by county court, that victim had contacted city numerous times to obtain assistance pursuant to such order, and that victim had personally informed individual officers shortly before her death of her boyfriend's continuous harassment and threats of murder and suicide. Dudosh v. City of Allentown, E.D.Pa.1985, 629 F.Supp. 849. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Ex-wife's allegations that a borough failed to properly train its police in "domestic relations disputes" and in applying the law "equally and fairly without bias," and that it had a policy of allowing its police to "sid[e] with one party in [a domestic relations] dispute and deny[ ] protection to the other," failed to allege a deprivation of her Equal Protection rights under the Fourteenth Amendment, so as to state a claim under § 1983; the ex-wife merely alleged evidence of a contentious domestic relations and custody dispute between two private individuals, and did not allege any facts in support of a claim that the borough intentionally treated her differently from a "similarly situated" person in the incidents at issue. Garrison v. Yeadon, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21282115, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(5)

2144. ---- Drunk driving, inaction, police activities

Motorists' allegations that police officers arrested sober driver and left behind obviously drunk passenger who subsequently drove vehicle and was involved in collision with motorists was sufficient to state civil rights claim against officers based on due process violation. Reed v. Gardner, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 986 F.2d 1122, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 389, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer who lawfully arrested the designated driver of drinking group on outstanding warrant did not have duty to provide for safety of other members, who were left alone in car outside police station, given complete lack of evidence that officer knew that other members were intoxicated; no § 1983 action would lie based on officer's failure to provide for other members, who drove away from police station and were involved in fatal accident. Gregory v. City of Rogers, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 974 F.2d 1006, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1265, 507 U.S. 913, 122 L.Ed.2d 661. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer's use of city police department's driving under the influence (DUI) check sheet, which provided that implied consent breathalyzer or blood test had to be offered to persons under 21 who were suspected of operating motor vehicle after illegally consuming alcohol/DUI, did not support § 1983 cause of action for age discrimination by driver not offered breathalyzer or blood test upon arrest for DUI. Edwards v. Oberndorf, E.D.Va.2003, 309 F.Supp.2d 780, affirmed 63 Fed.Appx. 756, 2003 WL 21224212. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Deputy sheriff's failure to arrest or otherwise restrain driver, who officer rescued from ditch and who was later involved in fatal accident after which it was determined that he had been intoxicated, did not deprive accident victims of their alleged constitutional right to protection by state from harm caused by intoxicated or otherwise impaired driver absent allegation of special relationship between victims and state from which duty to protect could have arisen. Patel by Patel v. McIntyre, D.S.C.1987, 667 F.Supp. 1131, affirmed 848 F.2d 185. Sheriffs And Constables 102

Police officer's alleged failure to enforce driving while intoxicated laws against the driver of a vehicle subsequently involved in an accident with a motorist did not violate any substantive due process right of the motorist, thus precluding imposition of §§ 1983 liability on township on the theory that it had an unconstitutional policy and/or custom of allowing its police officers unbridled discretion in the enforcement of the law; while the officer's decision not to investigate the state of intoxication of the driver, a go-go dancer who kissed him in gratitude for having previously not ticketed her for speeding, may have seemed unsavory, the officer had no specific duty to conduct such an investigation under the circumstances. Hall v. Feigan, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 104 Fed.Appx. 247, 2004 WL 1588176, Unreported. Constitutional Law 253(1)

2145. ---- Other officers committing violation, inaction, police activities

Allegations by family members of pedestrians, who were killed when an intoxicated off-duty police officer drove his car through several red lights and struck them, that other officers implicitly communicated to him that he was free to drink to excess and drive in that condition, that officers were encouraged to excessively drink alcohol while on and off duty, and that many supervisors routinely drank with intoxicated officer and other officers in bars and in the precinct parking lot, were sufficient to assert that other officers created a serious danger through state action and with deliberate indifference to it, as would state §§ 1983 claim against those other officers for violation of substantive due process rights, under state-created danger theory. Pena v. DePrisco, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 432 F.3d 98. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether it would have been clear to a reasonable officer that police officer's actions in kneeling on back of detainee that he and other officers were attempting to subdue and arrest constituted unreasonable force under the circumstances, thus triggering a duty to intervene on the part of the other officers, precluded summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in §§1983 action by detainee's estate against officers alleging that detainee died as a result of use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment. Abdullahi v. City of Madison, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 423 F.3d 763. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer has affirmative duty to intercede on behalf of citizen whose constitutional rights are being violated in his presence by other officers, and failure to intercede to prevent unlawful arrest can be grounds for § 1983 liability. Ricciuti v. N.Y.C. Transit Authority, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 124 F.3d 123, on remand 70 F.Supp.2d 300, reargument denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer could not be held liable for failure to prevent fellow officer from using excessive force, when fellow officer allegedly struck arrestee in head with butt of shotgun, in absence of any evidence that he actually observed or should have known of fellow officer's actions. Turner v. Scott, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1997, 119 F.3d 425. Civil Rights 1088(4)

County investigator who allowed military police officer to ride in his vehicle during joint drug patrol did not have duty to intervene and prevent officer's alleged use of excessive force while arresting passenger of truck stopped by investigator, and could not be held liable for passenger's shooting death; while military officer was dealing with passenger, investigator was on opposite side of truck arresting driver, and investigator observed no use of excessive force before passenger was shot. Riley v. Newton, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 94 F.3d 632, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 955, 519 U.S. 1114, 136 L.Ed.2d 842. Civil Rights 1358

Evidence established that nonarresting officer did not have realistic opportunity to prevent arresting officer from any use of excessive force, precluding imposition of liability on arrestee's § 1983 claim against nonarresting officer for failing to prevent use of excessive force by arresting officer; undisputed testimony established that nonarresting officer did not have opportunity to participate in physical apprehension of arrestee or to assist or prevent arresting officer from acting as he did, as such acts were accomplished before nonarresting officer even had opportunity to get out of his squad car. Thompson v. Boggs, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 33 F.3d 847, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1692, 514 U.S. 1063, 131 L.Ed.2d 556. Civil Rights 1420

Sheriff's department deputy was not liable under § 1983 for police officer's shooting of unarmed arrestee at sobriety checkpoint after deputy had warned officer that a man had acquired a gun, despite contention that deputy violated duty under Virginia law to protect arrestee from violence. McLenagan v. Karnes, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1002, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1088(4)

One who is given the badge of authority of a police officer may not ignore the duty imposed by his office and fail to stop other officers who summarily punish a third person in his presence or otherwise within his knowledge; such responsibility obtains when the nonfeasor is a supervisory officer to whose direction misfeasor officers are committed; likewise, the same responsibility must exist as to nonsupervisory officers who are present at the scene. Byrd v. Brishke, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 466 F.2d 6. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police official and his wife stated § 1983 claim against police supervisors who were in charge of precinct during time when official and wife were allegedly harassed and threatened by officers working out of that precinct, by alleging that official informed supervisors of officers' behavior and that supervisors disregarded risk of harm to official and wife by failing to take any action to sanction officers or to abate risk. ultimately caused his death, could be found liable under § 1983 for violating arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights; officer was aware the arrestee had been in extended struggle with officers, and did not intervene to alleviate risks posed by hog-tie restraint. Garrett v. Unified Government of Athens-Clarke County, M.D.Ga.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 1262, reversed in part 378 F.3d 1274. Arrest 68(2)

Corrections officer was liable under the Eighth Amendment in prisoner's §§ 1983 action, arising from use of excessive force by other officers, based upon officer's failure to intervene; even though officer did not directly participate in using force against prisoner, and the altercation in which other officers grabbed prisoner, pushed him to floor and handcuffed him lasted only one minute, officer had opportunity to intervene, and officer had actual knowledge of risk to prisoner's safety. Jackson v. Austin, D.Kan.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 1313. Prisons 10; Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Arrestee's allegations that police officers had opportunities to intercede on his behalf to prevent the excessive use of force and the unreasonable seizure but, due to their intentional conduct or deliberate indifference, declined or refuse to do so stated a cause of action under §§ 1983 for bystander liability. Chavez v. McIntyre, W.D.Va.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 858. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer who participated in investigative stop of vehicle was not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged use of excessive force by second officer who pursued driver of vehicle when he fled on foot, and then fatally shot driver, since officer did nothing more than instruct second officer to pursue fleeing driver, and there was no evidence that officer was present during shooting or that he otherwise acquiesced to shooting. Remillard v. City of Egg Harbor City, D.N.J.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 766. Civil Rights 1358

Failure to make showing that police officer witnessed any alleged attempt by fellow officers to get civil rights claimant, bringing false arrest charge under §§ 1983, charged with extortion by arranging for payment of money to him in return for convincing girl friend to drop rape charges against friend of officer, precluded claim that officer failed to intervene, in violation of his duty to do so. Dawkins v. Williams, N.D.N.Y.2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 161. Civil Rights 1088(4)

There was no evidence that two officers were in such position outside gymnasium so as to affect conduct of third officer who allegedly used excessive force on town meeting participant, nor evidence that they had realistic opportunity to intervene, as required to support §§ 1983 claim that two officers failed to prevent use of excessive force. Nolan v. Krajcik, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 447. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Two police officers who handcuffed driver of car that they stopped because it matched description of car in reported carjacking, which report was later discovered to be a hoax, were not liable under § 1983 for failing to intervene as a third officer, who, on the other side of the stopped car, ordered passenger to the ground, handcuffed him, and allegedly kicked him in the head and face several times, in alleged violation of passenger's Fourth Amendment right against use of excessive force, absent any evidence that the two officers were aware of or able to see the third officer's alleged beating of the passenger, or that, even if they knew of the kicking, they had a realistic opportunity to intervene. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where first officer did not violate citizen's constitutional rights in firing one non-lethal, beanbag shotgun round and one regular, lethal slug at citizen, second officer could not be found liable under § 1983 for failing to intervene. Brown v. City of Bloomington, D.Minn.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 889, appeal after remand from federal court 706 N.W.2d 519, review denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer present at scene of civil rights violation who does not take reasonable steps to protect victim from fellow officer's excessive use of force may be liable under § 1983 for his nonfeasance. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer may not be liable under § 1983 for his failure to intercede in fellow officer's excessive use of force if he did not have realistic opportunity to prevent use of force. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police officer's failure to prevent another officer from beating arrestee during course of arrest did not constitute failure to prevent excessive use of force, where officer alleged to have failed to prevent beating would have had opportunity to intervene only if he had not been calling for backup units, call for backup was prudent move and objectively reasonable course of action under circumstances, and officer intervened at first realistic opportunity to do so. Fantasia v. Kinsella, N.D.Ill.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1409. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegations by woman who had been sexually assaulted by police officer were insufficient to state claim in federal civil rights action based on alleged deliberate indifference to officer's actions; woman made only conclusory allegations that police department was aware of officer's past history and failed to arrest him, and prompt response of internal affairs department in setting up sting operation after woman made report of rape indicated that city was in fact responsive to citizens' complaints. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Genuine issue of material fact, precluding summary judgment for police officer who was not identified by name in plaintiff arrestee's § 1983 action, existed as to whether that officer failed to intervene when fellow officers allegedly used unnecessary force to detain plaintiff, who allegedly was not fleeing or resisting arrest. Zempel v. Cygan, E.D.Wis.1996, 916 F.Supp. 889. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Personal participation in, or physical presence at, fellow officer's attack on pretrial detainee is not element of a claim under § 1983 for failure to intervene to protect a pretrial detainee from an attack by a fellow officer. Medley v. Turner, N.D.Ill.1994, 869 F.Supp. 567, amended 1995 WL 23522. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Personal participation in, or physical presence at, fellow officer's attack on pretrial detainee is not element of a claim under § 1983 for failure to intervene to protect a pretrial detainee from an attack by a fellow officer. Medley v. Turner, N.D.Ill.1994, 869 F.Supp. 567, amended 1995 WL 23522. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Evidence was sufficient to support finding that police officer was aware that arrestee was being kicked by other officers in jail elevator, and thus violated arrestee's civil rights by failing to attempt to prevent arrestee's injuries; arrestee's testimony that he was kicked in elevator was credible, and it was not reasonable that officer could have failed to observe infliction of serious injuries in confined space. Diebitz v. Arreola, E.D.Wis.1993, 834 F.Supp. 298. Civil Rights 1420

2146. ---- Hostages, inaction, police activities

City and police officers did not violate women's due process rights by failing to protect her from criminal actions of private actor absent special relationship between city and woman; woman was never in custody of city, at most city and police officers failed to rescue woman, they did not create danger in which she found herself when she was abducted by car wash employee and died in trunk of car from starvation, dehydration and methanol poisoning. Gazette v. City of Pontiac, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 41 F.3d 1061. Constitutional Law 254(4); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Once police officers knew that hostage had been shot in leg, they were obligated to act; if they had not and hostage had bled to death, or condition had deteriorated because of their inaction, officers conceivably could be held liable under civil rights statute. Taylor v. Watters, E.D.Mich.1986, 636 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2147. ---- Witnesses, inaction, police activities

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Section 1983 claim could not be maintained against city based on police department's failure to protect witness and her son, who were murdered by brother of person against whom she was to testify; there was no evidence that police chief or any other identified city policymaker was aware of decision not to afford protection to victims and the basis for it until after the homicides, nor any evidence that city or any of its policymakers ever received any complaints about failures to protect witnesses or about related constitutional violations that could have been remedied by instituting a better witness protection policy. Clarke v. Sweeney, D.Conn.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 277. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Witness who had agreed to testify in criminal prosecution in exchange for grant of immunity and who was killed by his accomplices had no liberty interest in freedom from bodily harm to be afforded by adequate police protection which could form basis for civil rights action by his survivors. Bernstein v. Lower Moreland Tp., E.D.Pa.1985, 603 F.Supp. 907. Civil Rights 1039

2148. Involuntary confession, police activities--Generally

Physical violence is not a necessary adjunct to a civil action based on the extraction of an involuntary confession. Duncan v. Nelson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 466 F.2d 939, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 116, 409 U.S. 894, 34 L.Ed.2d 152, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 175, 409 U.S. 894, 34 L.Ed.2d 152. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Even if police officers obtained coerced confessions from juvenile suspects, they could not be held civilly liable under § 1983 for violation of their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, where compelled statements were not used against suspects in a criminal trial, but only in grand jury proceeding which led to their indictment and in subsequent hearing to determine whether they should be tried in adult court. Crowe v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 1050. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officer did not use unreasonable force to coerce an involuntary statement by failing to allow arrestee to eat for the eight hours of the 24- hour period prior to the taking of his statement during which arrestee was in officer's custody; arrestee did not assert he ever complained to officer about missing meals or being hungry, and he was not in officer's custody during time normally associated with eating, with the exception of lunchtime on the day of the arrest. Gonzalez v. Tilmer, N.D.Ill.1991, 775 F.Supp. 256. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2149. ---- Advising accused of rights, involuntary confession, police activities

Failure to read Miranda warnings did not, standing alone, give rise to constitutional violation of § 1983 plaintiff's rights, as Miranda warnings were prophylactic only, not constitutional rights in themselves. Weaver v. Brenner, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 40 F.3d 527. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Any failure to give Miranda warning would not subject police officers to liability under this section. Bennett v. Passic, C.A.10 (Utah) 1976, 545 F.2d 1260. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Miranda warnings are not a constitutional right, and officer's failure to issue Miranda warnings cannot form basis for civil rights claim under § 1983. Lemons v. Lewis, D.Kan.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1038. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Violation of suspect's Miranda rights does not support civil rights action under § 1983. James By and Through James v. Unified School Dist. No. 512, D.Kan.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1407. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Assertion that officers violated arrestee's constitutional rights by failing to read her Miranda rights to her did not support claim for constitutional violations, where no statement made by arrestee was offered in evidence at trial or otherwise used against her. Ippolito v. Meisel, S.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 155. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Violation of Miranda rights did not give rise to § 1983 claim. Bey v. Bridgeton Police Dept., E.D.Mo.1991, 775 F.Supp. 1255.

Fact that officers did not give occupants of vehicle Miranda warnings prior to searching vehicle pursuant to valid arrest based upon probable cause did not give rise to § 1983 cause of action. White v. O'Leary, N.D.Ill.1990, 742 F.Supp. 990. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Assuming that individual who was arrested for fishing without a license was not read his Miranda rights, individual's claim of violation of due process clause of U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14 was not cognizable under this section. Estes-El v. State of N.Y., S.D.N.Y.1982, 552 F.Supp. 885. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claim under this section may not be based upon alleged failure of police to give Miranda warnings. O'Hagan v. Soto, S.D.N.Y.1981, 523 F.Supp. 625.

Failure to give Miranda warnings to plaintiff, who was subject to custodial interrogation, did not, standing alone, give rise to damages action for violation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5. Chrisco v. Shafran, D.C.Del.1981, 507 F.Supp. 1312. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Failure to give the Miranda warnings does not give rise to an action cognizable under this section. Dunkin v. Lamb, D.C.Nev.1980, 500 F.Supp. 184. Civil Rights 1088(4)

If state prisoner was not prejudiced at his trial by any violation of Miranda v. Arizona which may have occurred, he could not base a constitutional tort claim on the alleged violation. Davis v. Hudson, D.C.S.C.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1210. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2150. Investigation, police activities

Qualified immunity precluded police lieutenant's liability under § 1983 based on his alleged participation in conspiracy to cover up purported unconstitutional conduct of subordinate officers during suicide intervention that ended in subject's death; there was no clearly established constitutional law requiring lieutenant to make sure that officers involved wrote individual reports of incident, and lieutenant's authorized preparation of joint report on incident, which he reasonably believed did not involve criminal investigation, did not support conclusion that lieutenant joined cover-up, if one existed, or failed to act in objectively reasonable manner. Ford v. Moore, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 237 F.3d 156. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Police officer could not be held liable, under § 1983, for allegedly failing to conduct adequate investigation at scene of suicide intervention attempt, which ended in subject's death, notwithstanding contention that investigation could have provided support for later-constructed theory that one of officers involved in intervention shot subject. Ford v. Moore, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 237 F.3d 156. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Absent evidence that officers were motivated by improper purpose, police officers did not violate constitutional rights of city civil service commission member who had had prior disagreements with police department who was target of police investigation when they did no more than was expected of competent police officers by investigating suspected criminal activity and by turning the case over to assistant district attorney for decision regarding filing of criminal charges once they collected sufficient information. Rakovich v. Wade, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 850 F.2d 1180, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 497, 488 U.S. 968, 102 L.Ed.2d 534. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1088(1)

Alleged confrontation wherein defendant in his capacity as deputy director of multicounty narcotics bureau allegedly told plaintiffs that he was going to see that their tavern was closed was not a basis for establishing a deprivation of civil rights under color of state law when plaintiffs were investigated for violating state's dangerous drug laws where investigation began five months prior to confrontation and, hence, was not a product thereof. Coffy v. Multi-County Narcotics Bureau, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1979, 600 F.2d 570. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Arrestee had no due process right to pre-trial DNA testing, and thus officers could not be held liable under § 1983 for their alleged failure to promptly obtain such testing, even though delay prolonged arrestee's detention for some twenty-two months. Jimenez v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 584. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 4(7)

County deputy sheriff's alleged negligence in his initial investigation and in providing information from informant after arrestee who had been misidentified by informant as a drug dealer had already been arrested did not amount to necessary, deliberate, or intentional action required to support arrestee's claim for violation of his right to due process, in civil rights action under §§ 1983. Caldwell v. Green, W.D.Va.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 811. Constitutional Law 262

Parents of children who were killed after being struck by vehicle while they were attempting to cross street failed to establish that police officer's alleged failure to investigate was based on their race or some other suspect classification, and that others had been treated differently and more favorably, as required to establish claim of inadequate investigation, in violation of Fifth Amendment's right to equal protection under the laws, so as to give rise to liability under § 1983. White v. City of Toledo, N.D.Ohio 2002, 217 F.Supp.2d 838. Constitutional Law 215.2; Constitutional Law 250.1(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

To maintain a § 1983 claim against police officer for his or her investigation of case, plaintiff must show that officer's conduct violated clearly established federal constitutional or statutory right of which reasonable official, in defendant officer's position, would have known. Ahlers v. Schebil, E.D.Mich.1997, 966 F.Supp. 518. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Federal obstruction of justice statute could not support § 1983 claim against police officials based on their allegedly improper investigation of plaintiff's arrest; there was no allegation that defendants attempted to obstruct or did obstruct any judicial proceeding, as their investigation occurred after criminal charges against plaintiff were stricken and before plaintiff filed his original § 1983 complaint. David v. Village of Oak Lawn, N.D.Ill.1996, 954 F.Supp. 1241. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Group of young, black males detailed overt acts of communication among state defendants in compiling list of black males on college campus as part of violent crime investigation which could reasonably lead to inference of formation or furtherance of conspiracy to support § 1983 conspiracy to violate Federal Education and Privacy Rights Act (FEPRA) charge. Brown v. City of Oneonta, N.D.N.Y.1996, 911 F.Supp. 580, on reconsideration in part 916 F.Supp. 176, reversed in part, appeal dismissed in part 106 F.3d 1125. Conspiracy 18

If individual was not selectively prosecuted in retaliation for exercise of First Amendment speech rights, there was nothing improper in preprosecution activities including commencement of surveillance of individual, opening a "notorious persons file" on him, and establishing standing order to arrest him on handgun charges. Bennett v. Village of Oak Park, N.D.Ill.1991, 769 F.Supp. 1035. Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

Allegedly negligent conduct by police officers in investigation of the crime for which plaintiff was prosecuted was not actionable under this section as such actions were not enough to make out any constitutional claim. Von Williams v. City of Bridge City, Tex., E.D.Tex.1984, 588 F.Supp. 1187, affirmed 760 F.2d 267. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Initiating an enforcement campaign against the largest and most visible violator of a criminal statute does not constitute an unjustified abuse of prosecutorial discretion. Black Jack Distributors, Inc. v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1977, 433 F.Supp. 1297. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 8

City police officers did not violate arrestee's constitutional rights by failing to investigate child abuse complaint he claimed he filed against mother of his child, before she reported to police that he was harassing her through telephone calls at her home and place of employment, as required for arrestee to be entitled to damages under § 1983; officers' alleged failure to respond to arrestee's child abuse complaint did not constitute a federal statutory or constitutional claim, and there was no evidence that officers' alleged failure to investigate violated his rights. Sheehan v. New York City Police Dept. 78th Precinct Officers, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22859947, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2150A. Interrogations, police acitivities

Evidence that police detective may have misled suspect, during allegedly coercive interrogation, by telling him that his statements would remain confidential, that charges were not serious, and that charges would lead to little or no consequences, did not shock the conscience, as basis for substantive due process claim under §§ 1983, relating to elicitation of false confession to unlawful sexual contact with a minor. McConkie v. Nichols, D.Me.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1, affirmed 446 F.3d 258. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

2151. Medical care, police activities

Plaintiffs stated Fourteenth Amendment violation to which police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity by claiming that officers placed individual, who later died, in danger in deliberate indifference to his medical needs; officers allegedly took affirmative actions that significantly increased risk facing individual after finding him to be in serious medical need, by cancelling 911 call to paramedics, removing individual from public view and taking him into empty house, locking door, and leaving him there alone, thereby making it impossible for anyone to provide emergency medical care. Penilla v. City of Huntington Park, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 115 F.3d 707, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2059, 524 U.S. 904, 141 L.Ed.2d 137. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who offered arrestee medical assistance which arrestee consistently and obstinately rejected were not deliberately indifferent to arrestee's medical needs so as to be liable under § 1983 for failure to provide necessary medical treatment. Groman v. Township of Manalapan, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 47 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee could maintain § 1983 action against arresting officer for deliberate indifference to known medical need in violation of Fourteenth Amendment based on officer's disregard of her repeated requests to move handcuffs to alleviate pain in light of case law establishing constitutional protection against deliberate indifference to prisoner's serious medical needs. Howard v. Dickerson, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1994, 34 F.3d 978. Civil Rights 1088(4)

State trooper did not exhibit deliberate indifference to arrestee's medical needs, which rose to level of violation of arrestee's constitutional rights under § 1983 when trooper refused to immediately call an ambulance following arrestee's exposure to pepper spray; less than hour and a half elapsed between arrestee's exposure to pepper spray and arrival of ambulance, during delay, arrestee refused trooper's offers to provide him with towel and water to flush out his eyes, and there was no medical evidence that delay in treatment caused arrestee to suffer harm which he would not have suffered had ambulance been immediately called to scene. Mantz v. Chain, D.N.J.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 486. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrestee stated a claim against municipality under §§ 1983 for false arrest and denial of medical aid by alleging that county had in a place a custom or policy requiring the police to detain DWI suspects regardless of their requests and apparent need for medical attention, or, failed to train its officers to recognize when a DWI suspect was suffering from a serious medical condition, the symptoms of which might parallel some symptoms of intoxication, or, to appropriately respond to situations in which motorists suspected of vehicle and traffic infractions require immediate medical attention. Aguilera v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 601 . Civil Rights 1395(6)

The refusal to provide or the excessive delay in providing a post-arrest detainee with needed medical attention may give rise to a constitutional violation actionable under § 1983 on due process grounds. Herrera v. Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 154. Constitutional Law 262

Allegations that officers violated shooting victim's rights to equal protection and carried out municipal policy in failing to summon medical care for shooting victim for nearly an hour and a half after being summoned to scene of shooting, although conclusory in nature, were sufficient to state claim against municipality for violation of Section 1983, where no facts were pled that were inconsistent with those allegations. Torres v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2000, 123 F.Supp.2d 1130. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Arrestee failed to state § 1983 claim against arresting police officers for denial of medical care, absent allegation of sufficiently serious wounds that reasonable officer would determine that wounds required immediate treatment, and absent allegation that officers actually denied care; defendant was taken to hospital when he requested medial attention, and defendant's allegations of swollen face, black eyes, and bruised ribs and back at most pleaded simple negligence rather than deliberate indifference necessary to state claim. Ford v. Davis, N.D.Ill.1995, 878 F.Supp. 1124. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Even assuming as true the doubtful proposition that plaintiff stated cause of action under Arkansas law for deputy sheriff's alleged refusal to assist plaintiff in getting home or to a hospital after plaintiff injured his leg in a fall, there was clearly no federal cause of action stated thereby under this section. Hart v. Cash, W.D.Ark.1984, 585 F.Supp. 344. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Failure of police officers to give shooting victim first aid treatment at scene could not form basis of civil rights action against police chief and city where, when faced with victim's apparently fatal wounds to his neck and chest, officers responded in best way they could by transporting victim to hospital themselves instead of waiting for ambulance and risking further delay. Jordan v. Five Unnamed Police Officers and Agents, E.D.La.1981, 528 F.Supp. 507. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer who ran over a victim lying in the road did not violate the victim's due process rights by failing to afford medical aid for the victim; officer was not attempting to exercise any affirmative authority over the victim through incarceration, institutionalization, or other similar restraint of personal liberty when the injury occurred. Hayes v. Garcia, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 858, 2005 WL 165445, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 71, 163 L.Ed.2d 95. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Arrestee did not have any serious medical needs that police officers were deliberately indifferent to when they refused to provide him medical care at police station, as required for his § 1983 claim; arrestee did not seek medical care until more than a month after his arrest, and then he only sought care for a pre-existing condition. Nance v. New York City Police Dept. ex rel. McKay Chung, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1955164, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff did not have § 1983 claim against police officer for allegedly violating his constitutional right to privacy, where he did not demonstrate how intrusion he experienced when officer called and sent written notes asking for money in exchange for losing evidence in drug case against his son implicated privacy rights. Roach v. City of Evansville, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 111 F.3d 544. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Statements made by university police officer, who was investigating report of alleged sexual assault, to friends of victim of alleged assault after conducting interviews with friends that incident did not seem like rape, that victim "had the hots" for alleged assailant, and that he would interview victim and arrest her if he thought she was lying did not violate victim's right to privacy, and officer was entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action by victim; officer was commenting upon information initially spoken of by friends, and had considerable latitude in exploring veracity of complaint. Cantu v. Rocha, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 77 F.3d 795. Civil Rights 1376(6); Constitutional Law 82(7)

Informant's claim, that police officers who had promised her confidentiality violated her right to privacy by viewing videotape of her engaging in sexual activity and allowing others to view tape, alleged violation of clearly established constitutional right, and, thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity. James v. City of Douglas, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1991, 941 F.2d 1539. Civil Rights 1376(6)

If defendant while acting as city police officer caused plaintiff, who had come to station to complain of assault, to be photographed in indecent positions, over her objections, and such defendant and another defendant as police officers circulated the photographs among police personnel, defendants were liable under this section for invading privacy without due process. York v. Story, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1963, 324 F.2d 450, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 794, 376 U.S. 939, 11 L.Ed.2d 659. Torts 351

Section 1983 plaintiff claiming deprivation of Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable search or seizure may only recover damages directly related to invasion of privacy resulting from deprivation, such as compensation for physical injury, property damage, or injury to reputation. Driscoll v. Townsend, W.D.N.Y.1999, 60 F.Supp.2d 78. Civil Rights 1462

2153. Racial discrimination, police activities

Allegations by black woman who had participated with police internal affairs office in sting operation aimed at police officer who had sexually assaulted woman were insufficient to state claim of violation of her equal protection rights in woman's federal civil rights action where no allegations of wrongdoing were made with respect to treatment of black females by city police department and pleadings referred to race and gender only in connection with officer alleged to have committed assaults. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1395(5)

2154. Rape, police activities

Police officer who was raped by fellow officer failed to show that city's hiring practices that led it to employ fellow officer constituted gross negligence amounting to conscious indifference to welfare of public, precluding officer from recovering from city and city officials in civil rights action; although city did not verify officer's employment record to age 16 and did not conduct polygraph examination, city followed recommended guidelines in checking officer's background and required officer to be certified as physically and psychologically fit by licensed physician. Wassum v. City of Bellaire, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 861 F.2d 453. Civil Rights 1349; Civil Rights 1352(4)

2155. Records, police activities

Police department detective's release of arrest records of union organizers to the management of supermarket chain undergoing a unionization campaign did not constitute a deprivation of rights of the organizers actionable under this section, since, even assuming that the release of the records by the detective supplied the prerequisite action under color of state law, the record was devoid of any evidence to support a conclusion that the organizers were in fact deprived of their constitutional right to travel, on ground that the union would be reluctant to assign any of them to organizing campaigns in other states, or of their right not to be deprived of liberty and property without due process of law, on ground that the release of the records damaged their reputations. Tosh v. Buddies Supermarkets, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1973, 482 F.2d 329. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer did not violate citizen's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures

by initiating unauthorized search of citizen's criminal record and department of motor vehicle (DMV) record, since citizen did not have any legitimate expectation of privacy in those records; criminal record was matter of public record and DMV records were akin to criminal records maintained by courts and law enforcement agencies. Phillips v. Bailey, W.D.Va.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 804. Searches And Seizures 76

Evidence did not show that city had a policy of deliberately failing to train itself with respect to confidentiality of police booking records, so as to permit city to be held liable when booking information concerning the fact that prisoner was suspected of having AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) was improperly disclosed. Doe v. City of Cleveland, N.D.Ohio 1991, 788 F.Supp. 979. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police sergeant's allegedly negligent failure to determine that one charge on computer printout given to reporter had been expunged did not violate due process or equal protection. Morton v. City of Little Rock, E.D.Ark.1989, 728 F.Supp. 543, affirmed 934 F.2d 180. Constitutional Law 225.1; Constitutional Law 274(2); Criminal Law 1226(3.1)

2156. Search and seizure, police activities--Generally

"Seizure" alone is not enough for section 1983 liability; seizure must also be unreasonable. Brower v. County of Inyo, U.S.Cal.1989, 109 S.Ct. 1378, 489 U.S. 593, 103 L.Ed.2d 628, on remand 884 F.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Because an illegal search or arrest may be followed by a valid conviction, a successful § 1983 action for Fourth Amendment search and seizure violations does not necessarily imply the invalidity of a conviction, and, as a result, Heck does not generally bar such claims. Hughes v. Lott, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 350 F.3d 1157. Civil Rights 1088(3); Civil Rights 1088(4)

To establish a violation of the Fourth Amendment in a § 1983 action, the claimant must demonstrate a seizure occurred and the seizure was unreasonable. McCoy v. City of Monticello, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 342 F.3d 842. Arrest 68(4)

Deputy sheriff could not reasonably have thought, even under deputy's caretaking or public safety function under Illinois law, that motel manager's desire to have uncooperative motel guest move his truck allowed the deputy to kick open the door to the guest's room when the guest did not respond to the deputy's knocking on the door and the manager used her key to open the door but found the door's security chain engaged, where the guest was not doing anything to disturb the public order, and thus, the deputy was not entitled to qualified immunity against the guest's § 1983 claims for unlawful search, excessive use of force, and false imprisonment. Finsel v. Cruppenink, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 326 F.3d 903. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Inevitable discovery exception to exclusionary rule is no bar to § 1983 suit arising from allegedly illegal search when there has been no prior state trial. Chatman v. Slagle, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 107 F.3d 380. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Assuming that actions of police officers who responded to 911 domestic violence call, in ordering the complainant to leave the premises under threat of arrest and to surrender his house key and garage opener amounted to a "seizure," the seizure was not unreasonable, as required for the complainant to establish a § 1983 claim against the officers for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights, even though he told the police that he owned the house and even if the police had probable cause to arrest his male cohabitant for domestic violence, where the complainant, who had a bloody lip and appeared to be in a confrontation with the cohabitant, was in the process of packing boxes to move out; the police needed to separate the parties and it was logical to ask complainant to leave. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.D.Ill.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 893, reversed in part 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Arrest 63.1

Plaintiff who did not claim that defendants searched her or seized her property could not state § 1983 claim for violation of her right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Santos v. County of Los Angeles Department of Children and Family Services, C.D.Cal.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1088(3)

No Fourth Amendment "search" or "seizure" occurred where police officer wearing "street" clothes entered plaintiff's used car lot to engage in surveillance of undercover officer, and thus, plaintiff could not recover on trespass claim under § 1983; police did not exercise control over, otherwise dispossess plaintiff of, or prevent plaintiff from entering, his property, and plaintiff did not sufficiently restrict public's access to lot so as to possess reasonable expectation of privacy therein, as lot was lit and plaintiff acknowledged that members of public came into lot "at all times of the day" to look at vehicles. Kelly v. Bencheck, E.D.N.C.1996, 921 F.Supp. 1465, affirmed 107 F.3d 866. Searches And Seizures 16

Sheriff's department's request for warrant to search home of arrestee, based on allegedly false affidavit, and request to be present during search, allegedly for purpose of planting illegal items, did not support arrestee's § 1983 claim based on those incidents, absent evidence that sheriff actually conducted search or allegation that search ultimately conducted by Federal Bureau of Investigation violated Fourth Amendment. Gerakaris v. Champagne, D.Mass.1996, 913 F.Supp. 646. Civil Rights 1088(3)

A cause of action will be recognized under this section where a person's right to be free from illegal searches and seizures of himself and his property has been violated. Skrocki v. Caltabiano, E.D.Pa.1981, 511 F.Supp. 651. Civil Rights 1088(3); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claim for damages resulting from unconstitutional search and seizure falls squarely within cause of action provided by this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Keller v. Hilgendorf, E.D.Wis.1978, 79 F.R.D. 687. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Town police officers did not violate homeowner's legitimate expectation of privacy in curtilage and therefore did not violate Fourth Amendment, where officers, without warrant, proceeded from front to back of house; officers had received report that minor might be consuming alcohol in house, officers could tell people were in house but nobody responded to knocking at front door, and walking to back door was legitimate method to carry out objective of locating minor and checking on underage drinking. Galindo v. Town of Silver City, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 459, 2005 WL 762120, Unreported. Searches And Seizures 27

2157. ---- Seizure requirement, search and seizure, police activities

Motorist claiming civil rights violation was "seized" only when officers stopped him at roadblock, and not during initial encounter on roadside or during pursuit on interstate, where motorist's vehicle was on side of road when officer approached to ascertain his well-being, officer did not display weapon or make physical contact, motorist drove away while officer attempted to comply with request for identification, and pursuit was unsuccessful until motorist was stopped at roadblock. Latta v. Keryte, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1997, 118 F.3d 693. Arrest 68(4)

Allegation that police officers stopped plaintiff's friend's vehicle to threaten retribution for plaintiff's complaint did not amount to deprivation of liberty or search or seizure, which would implicate constitutional concerns to support civil rights action. Daniels v. Southfort, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 6 F.3d 482. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officer's decision to swear out warrantless arrest probable cause affidavits to Magistrate Court was not enough to meet Fourth Amendment "seizure" requirement for purposes of arrestee's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment malicious prosecution claim; arrestee was arrested without warrant and was held for several hours at airport precinct before being transported to jail, and officer executed warrantless arrest probable cause affidavits, setting forth facts of arrest and claiming arrestee violated state law, and probable cause affidavits were signed only by officer and not by a Magistrate Judge or prosecutor. Love v. Oliver, N.D.Ga.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 1336. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Individuals charged with misdemeanors were subjected to sufficient deprivation of liberty to constitute "seizure" necessary to support their § 1983 malicious prosecution claims against police officer, even though they were never placed in custody and no restrictions were placed on their right to travel, where they were required to submit to processing and to attend court hearings as result of charges. Roskos v. Sugarloaf Tp., M.D.Pa.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 480. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Two members of county emergency response team (ERT) participating in hostage-rescue exercise at public high school were not liable, under § 1983, for illegal seizure of and excessive force used on teachers in adjoining performing arts center, who were not informed of exercise, where the two ERT members had no direct contact with the teachers during entire exercise. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1358

2158. ---- Negligence, search and seizure, police activities

In § 1983 action alleging that police officers conducted illegal search of home and office, whether officers were merely negligent in relying upon repossession order to conduct searches was irrelevant to determination of whether constitutional violation occurred. Specht v. Jensen, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1987, 832 F.2d 1516, rehearing granted in part 837 F.2d 940, on rehearing in part 853 F.2d 805, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 792, 488 U.S. 1008, 102 L.Ed.2d 783. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Negligence of police, if any, in searching suspected felon who resisted arrest, handcuffing him, and securing him in police car did not offend principles of decency and justice embodied in due process clause; thus, claim based on the alleged negligence failed to state constitutional deprivation remediable by section 1983. Hewitt v. City of Truth or Consequences, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1985, 758 F.2d 1375, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 131, 474 U.S. 844, 88 L.Ed.2d 108. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Although violation of Fourth Amendment is still deprivation of rights even if done negligently, question of officer's "objective good faith" will come into play in determining whether remedy is available for deprivation, or, in other words, whether officer may assert defense of qualified immunity. Edwards v. Cabrera, N.D.Ill.1994, 861 F.Supp. 664, reversed 58 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' allowing third parties to enter home during exigent circumstances of investigation into shooting death was at most mere negligence, which was insufficient to establish culpability under §§ 1983. Smith v. Busby, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 123, 2006 WL 328368, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(3)

2159. ---- Arrest related search, search and seizure, police activities

County was not liable under § 1983 for its alleged negligence in hiring, training, and supervising police officers who effected warrantless search and arrest at residence, where officers did not commit any constitutional violations. Couden v. Duffey, D.Del.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 379, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 446 F.3d 483. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Under civil rights laws, arrestees who are arrested for driving without license and who fail to post bond may not be strip-searched merely because officials are unable to verify arrestees' criminal history. Kelly v. Foti, E.D.La.1994, 870 F.Supp. 126, affirmed in part and remanded 77 F.3d 819, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 85 F.3d 627. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Federal employee's claim that he was searched by federal agents incident to pretextual arrest was constitutional claim cognizable under § 1983; although agents' actions could also have been tortious under common law, that did not preclude action under § 1983. Terrell v. Petrie, E.D.Va.1991, 763 F.Supp. 1342, affirmed 952 F.2d 397. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Because arrest was lawful, search of arrestee's person incident to that arrest was also lawful and precluded arrestee from recovering damages in civil rights action. Parker v. Strong, W.D.Okla.1989, 717 F.Supp. 767. Civil Rights 1088(4)

State prisoner's claim that he was physically abused while being searched after arrest stated cause of action under this section. Stacey v. Ford, N.D.Ga.1982, 554 F.Supp. 8. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2160. ---- Body cavity search, search and seizure, police activities

Suspected drug trafficker did not have clearly established constitutional right to be free from manual body cavity search conducted by licensed physician, in private and hygienic setting in medically approved manner, pursuant to warrant issued on probable cause; thus, for purposes of suspect's § 1983 action against police officer to whom warrant was issued, search was not unreasonable by its very nature within meaning of Fourth Amendment. Rodriques v. Furtado, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 950 F.2d 805. Civil Rights 1088(4)

No reasonable officer could have believed that supervising police officers did not violate arrestees' civil rights under Fourth Amendment in executing no-knock search warrant, either by their actions or by their failure to intercede, by allegedly conducting, authorizing, or witnessing various invasive body cavity searches of two women in front of male officers and visual body cavity searches of three men, or by kicking, punching, choking, stepping on, and threatening them with guns without any provocation during conduct of search, precluding application of qualified immunity to officers in lawsuit under §§ 1983. Bolden v. Village of Monticello, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 407. Civil Rights 1376(6)

2161. ---- Body intrusion, search and seizure, police activities

Police officer was not liable under § 1983 for any deprivation of arrestee's rights arising from catheterization of arrestee at hospital to which officer took him for blood test, even though officer allegedly waived warrant for blood test in arrestee's face, grabbed arrestee's arm, and told medical technician to "just do it"; physician ordered catheterization due to arrestee's alleged combativeness and inability to provide urine sample, technician testified that he never catheterized anyone in police custody without authorization from doctor or nurse, and officer exerted no influence over physician's decision. Rudy v. Village of Sparta, W.D.Mich.1996, 990 F.Supp. 924, affirmed 129 F.3d 1265. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2162. ---- Pat-down searches, search and seizure, police activities

Arresting officer's pat-down searches outside opposite sex arrestees' clothing were not so egregious or outrageous to shock the contemporary conscience, as would support arrestees' due process claim in civil rights action under § 1983 against officer. Wyatt v. Slagle, S.D.Iowa 2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 931. Arrest 63.5(8); Constitutional Law 262

2163. ---- Chase, search and seizure, police activities

No Fourth Amendment "seizure" occurred, precluding § 1983 civil rights damages claim, when fleeing motorist crashed and suffered fatal injuries after going around curve at extremely high rate of speed while being chased by sheriff's deputy; absence of contact with deputy's cruiser and failure of motorist to voluntarily stop vehicle established, as matter of law, that government did not terminate motorist's freedom of movement required for seizure. Estate of Story Through McNair v. McDuffie County, Ga., S.D.Ga.1996, 929 F.Supp. 1523, affirmed 110 F.3d 798. Arrest 68(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officer's high-speed pursuit of motorcyclist who committed traffic violation was not "seizure" of motorcyclist in violation of Fourth Amendment, though motorcyclist was injured in crash which occurred while negotiating curve during pursuit, where officer did not take direct action likely to halt motorcycle in violent or sudden manner likely to cause injury, but merely followed motorcycle with siren and lights activated; thus, motorcyclist could not maintain § 1983 action against officer based on alleged seizure. Carroll v. Borough of State College, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 47 F.3d 1160. Automobiles 349(10)

2164. ---- Consent search, search and seizure, police activities

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether arrested driver consented to blood test, precluding summary judgment for police officers who allegedly ordered test, in driver's § 1983 action alleging that administration of warrantless blood test violated Fourth Amendment. Marshall v. Columbia Lea Regional Hosp., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 345 F.3d 1157. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers who were given permission by defendant's grandmother, in whose house defendant lived, to search unlocked room in which defendant slept acted properly in making the warrantless search on the basis of the grandmother's consent to the search so that parolee could not recover from police officers in civil rights action based on alleged illegality of the search. Wolfel v. Sanborn, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1977, 555 F.2d 583. Civil Rights 1088(3); Searches And Seizures 178

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether homeowners consented to search of home by surety bail bond agent and bail enforcement agent precluded summary judgment on homeowners' claims against bond agent and enforcement agent alleging unreasonable search under §§ 1983, and negligence under Connecticut law. Tirreno v. Mott, D.Conn.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 562. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Encounter between police officer and plaintiff at public bus station was consensual and thus was not Fourth Amendment seizure, as required for prima facie showing of unlawful detention under § 1983, where officer approached plaintiff at station and asked if she could talk with him, plaintiff consented to do so, officer was by herself at first, her service weapon was holstered, and she did not yell at or frisk plaintiff, no police officer touched plaintiff, and officer's later request for plaintiff to accompany her to bus on which plaintiff's brother was sitting was not coercive. Edwards v. Cabrera, N.D.Ill.1994, 861 F.Supp. 664, reversed 58 F.3d 290. Arrest 68(4); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Actions of defendant police officers in gaining entry into plaintiff officer's home under false pretenses, namely, by representing that they belonged to police department's "medical unit," although they were actually there to serve plaintiff officer with a subpoena to appear before grand jury investigating police misconduct, exceeded limits of technical trespass, and instead constituted an unreasonable search for purposes of Fourth Amendment, cognizable in suit under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 by plaintiff police officer and his family, if consent to enter was involuntarily obtained. Reed v. Schneider, E.D.N.Y.1985, 612 F.Supp. 216. Civil Rights 1088(3)

2165. ---- Plain view, search and seizure, police activities

Where defendants had a warrant to search plaintiff's home, where stolen articles therein were in plain view, and where plaintiff's wife consented to their seizure, search and seizure were not unreasonable, and defendants were not liable for damages. Robbins v. Bryant, W.D.Va.1972, 349 F.Supp. 94, affirmed 474 F.2d 1342. Searches And Seizures 85; Searches And Seizures 149; Searches And Seizures 171

2166. ---- Probable cause, search and seizure, police activities

Search warrant requiring suspect to provide saliva sample for DNA test, as part of serial murder investigation, was not supported by probable cause, for purpose of suspect's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment claim against law enforcement officers; although officers received two anonymous tips that suspect should be checked, suspect had two out of several traits that matched the FBI profile of the killer, and he had prior burglary conviction, there was no corroboration of the anonymous tips, the burglary conviction was 20 years old, and there was no specific evidence connecting suspect to any murder. Kohler v. Englade, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 470 F.3d 1104. Searches And Seizures 114

Strip-search of mother and her minor daughter in the course of execution of a search warrant for drugs at their home exceeded scope of the warrant, and, in the absence of probable cause, violated their Fourth Amendment rights, where face of the warrant did not grant authority to search either of them, and where, although accompanying affidavit requested permission to search all occupants of the residence, the warrant made no reference to the affidavit, other than references that described the date of the violation and the supporting probable cause. Doe v. Groody, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 361 F.3d 232, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 111, 543 U.S. 873, 160 L.Ed.2d 121. Controlled Substances 126; Controlled Substances 151

City police commissioner whose officers had, on 300 occasions over 19 days, searched third persons' homes, without search warrants and on uninvestigated and anonymous tips, for suspects, in accordance with routine practice and plan conceived by high ranking officials, would be enjoined from conducting such searches on uncorroborated anonymous tips and thus without probable cause, although searches for particular suspects had ceased and commissioner had ordered that there be no further searches without probable cause; injunction against any such search without search warrant was not deemed necessary. Lankford v. Gelston, C.A.4 (Md.) 1966, 364 F.2d 197. Civil Rights 1454

In view of the responsibility of the police to find evidence of a crime, and in view of evidence that search of student for drugs was undertaken not merely to maintain discipline in the classroom but also to find evidence of crime, standard of probable cause applicable to student's civil rights action against school officials was that necessary to justify the search under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4, civil rights violation could be found if police proximately caused student to be searched without probable cause to believe she was breaking the law by possessing an illegal substance on her person. Picha v. Wielgos, N.D.Ill.1976, 410 F.Supp. 1214. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Exigent circumstances existed, and thus, warrant was not required under Fourth Amendment before town police officers entered home through back door and searched for minor; officers had received report that minor might be consuming alcohol in home, nobody responded to knocking at front door, at back of home officers observed minors who could not be aroused by repeated knocking on patio door and yelling through open door, and officers feared for safety and welfare of minors, due to possible alcohol poisoning. Galindo v. Town of Silver City, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 459, 2005 WL 762120, Unreported. Searches And Seizures 42.1

Crime of complicity was not sufficiently related to crime of unlawful restraint, as required for sheriff defendants' probable cause defense to property owner's §§ 1983 unreasonable seizure claim; defendants argued that property owner was responsible for her husband's concerted efforts to restrain telephone worker through overt threats of force. Collin v. Stephenson, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31409874, Unreported. Arrest 68(2)

2167. ---- Warrantless search, search and seizure, police activities

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether probation officers reasonably believed that citizen was still on probation when officers executed warrantless search on citizen's residence, precluding summary judgment on citizen's civil rights claim under Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments. Trask v. Franco, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 446 F.3d 1036. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State actors administering a blood test without warrant or consent may be subject to suit under § 1983. Marshall v. Columbia Lea Regional Hosp., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 345 F.3d 1157. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Though federal civil rights plaintiffs' contended state bureau of investigation agent subjected them to a warrantless search of their home without probable cause, where their brief offered no explanation or argument as to why warrant was illegal or not supported by probable cause, Court of Appeals took that omission as a concession that the officers entered the premises in reliance on a valid warrant. Jenkins v. Wood, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1996, 81 F.3d 988 . Federal Courts 714

Judgment as matter of law was not warranted and jury was justified including that officers' entry into plaintiff's home was unreasonable in light of evidence that officers entered without consent, without warrant, and with no documents establishing custody of child for whom they were searching and that, when plaintiff insisted that officers leave, they refused to do so, despite officers' contention that concern for welfare of child justified entry. Caruso v. Forslund, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1995, 47 F.3d 27. Civil Rights 1429

Police did not violate Fourth Amendment rights of house occupant by making warrantless entry to attached garage, for purpose of facilitating evaluation of occupant's mental health by experts who accompanied them; father who owned house answered front door, led them to garage and admitted them. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Searches And Seizures 174

Exigent circumstances exception to search warrant requirement precluded need by police to obtain warrant before pursuing occupant into house from garage, which they had validly entered, precluding civil rights suit under § 1983; occupant assumed aggressive attitude when he first caught sight of officers, as he went from house into garage, and had seized wood splitter before going back into house, creating imminent danger situation. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Searches And Seizures 43

Exigent circumstances justified police officer's warrantless search of room adjoining one into which officer had been invited by detainee, and thus, detainee could not establish § 1983 claim that his Fourth Amendment rights were violated by search; detainee and suspect hiding in adjoining room were involved in violent assault believed to be a felony, officer had probable cause to believe that detainee was lying to him about whereabouts of suspect, officer had strong indication that suspect was on premises, suspect would probably escape unless apprehended immediately, and officer was peacefully and lawfully present in detainee's house. Mann by Parent v. Meachem, N.D.N.Y.1996, 929 F.Supp. 622. Searches And Seizures 186

No warrant was required to conduct inventory search, in accordance with standard police procedures, of impounded automobile; accordingly, warrantless search did not give rise to any claim for relief under § 1983. Schilling v. Swick, W.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1088(3); Searches And Seizures 66

Warrantless entry into business premises by private entity responsible for preventing cruelty to animals (a "state actor") and city fire fighters violated business owner's Fourth Amendment and civil rights where six hours transpired between fire fighters' initial rescue efforts and later joint effort by fire fighters and animal protection officers, and no attempt was made to obtain warrant or to even contact building owner. Suss v. American Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, S.D.N.Y.1993, 823 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1032; Searches And Seizures 31.1; Searches And Seizures 42.1; Searches And Seizures 79

Guardian of children, who brought §§ 1983 action against social worker and others related to warrantless entry into her home and removal of children, failed to establish that social worker encouraged or incited police officer's alleged assault, battery, and false arrest of guardian during search of home, as required to support civil conspiracy claim against social worker; social worker reasonably relied on police officer's assessment that deplorable conditions in home justified warrantless entry and after entry social worker remained on first floor while officers searched house for children. Jordan v. Murphy, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 513, 2005 WL 1869506, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied. Conspiracy 7.5(1) suspect's §§ 1983 action; suspect had assaulted several people at his cousin's home with machete and threatened to chop up his cousin's small dog, he fled from the scene when his cousin called police, patrol car spotted suspect's car and gave chase to his residence, where he got out of his car, refused to drop machete at pursuing officer's command, and escaped into his house, officers, who could not reach suspect by telephone, were not aware of whether anyone else was in house, and they eventually entered it by force, based upon county prosecutor's opinion that warrant was unnecessary. Cuffy v. Van Horn, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 112 Fed.Appx. 438, 2004 WL 2297855, Unreported. Arrest 68(9)

2168. ---- Warrant issuance, search and seizure, police activities

Information about the FBI profile of the serial killer, which police detective knew but failed to include in his affidavit to support a warrant requiring suspect to provide saliva sample for DNA test, was irrelevant to the question of whether the detective's affidavit provided the issuing judge with a substantial basis for determining the existence of probable cause, for purpose of suspect's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment claim against detective and others. Kohler v. Englade, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 470 F.3d 1104. Searches And Seizures 114

Claims of negligence are insufficient to prove constitutional violation for purposes of impeaching otherwise valid warrant in § 1983 action on ground that it was issued on specified information that was false and critical to finding of probable cause. Beard v. City of Northglenn, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1994, 24 F.3d 110. Criminal Law 219

Police officers were not required to know for a certainty that each item of jewelry was stolen before they could seize it pursuant to warrant sworn by them, but were only required to possess probable cause for associating jewelry with criminal activity and, as long as they did, could not be held liable to owner of store in civil rights action for damages based on deliberate misrepresentation of facts in warrant affidavit. Perlman v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1986, 801 F.2d 262, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1349, 480 U.S. 906, 94 L.Ed.2d 520. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Law enforcement officers are not liable, under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, for their actions in executing search warrant that was obtained by making negligent statements or omissions of fact to issuing magistrate. Donta v. Hooper, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 774 F.2d 716, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 3261, 483 U.S. 1019, 97 L.Ed.2d 760. See, also, Hill v. McIntyre, C.A.6, (Mich.) 1989, 884 F.2d 271, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Negligence of police officers who acted in good faith in obtaining search warrant would not support action under this section for damages for illegal search and seizure. Madison v. Manter, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1971, 441 F.2d 537. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fourth Amendment rights of homeowner, bringing §§ 1983 action against police, were not violated as result of search of home looking for drug activity, despite claim that affidavit in support of search warrant contained false statements regarding response to premises burglar alarm, where evidence of drug involvement was found; even if false statements were redacted from affidavit, there was probable cause to search, based on later trash analysis which turned up drug paraphernalia, and a later emergency call, during which homeowner's girl friend and 15 year-old daughter were found in comatose condition, apparently under influence of drugs. Gibbons v. Lambert, D.Utah 2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 1048. Controlled Substances 146; Controlled Substances 147

Discrepancies between original search warrant affidavit and "corrected" affidavit under Franks, in rape victim's description of attacker and arrestee's appearance, were not so great so as to render arrestee obviously innocent of suspicion, and dispute over time of arrestee's departure from area that was subsequently designated as crime scene was not resolved by "corrected" affidavit, and, consequently, presumption that probable cause existed to execute search warrant for arrestee's home was not overcome by "corrected" affidavit, for purpose of arrestee's §§ 1983 claim under Fourth Amendment. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Searches And Seizures 112

Section 1983 plaintiff who challenges validity of search warrant by asserting that law enforcement agent submitted false affidavit to issuing judicial officer must show that: (1) officer knowingly and deliberately, or with reckless disregard for truth, made false statements or omissions that created falsehood in applying for warrant, and (2) such statements or omissions were necessary to find probable cause. Douris v. Schweiker, E.D.Pa.2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 391, reconsideration denied, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 126, 2004 WL 1396209. Searches And Seizures 112

Evidence that assistant state's attorney saw search warrant applications allegedly permitting unconstitutional prior restraint of allegedly obscene materials could not, without more, justify holding her liable under § 1983 based on unconstitutionality of warrant applications. Hicks v. Cassilly, D.Md.1997, 971 F.Supp. 956, reversed 153 F.3d 720, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1037, 525 U.S. 1143, 143 L.Ed.2d 45. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Civil rights plaintiff could not maintain action against police officer for execution of search warrant, on basis of material misrepresentation or omission in affidavit that supported search warrant, where there was no evidence of any deliberate falsehood or reckless disregard for truth by officer, or any omission of information in officer's possession. Aleotti v. Baars, D.D.C.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 107 F.3d 922, 323 U.S.App.D.C. 289. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Law officer who obtains invalid search warrant by making material false statements in warrant affidavit, either knowingly or in reckless disregard for truth, is liable under § 1983; however, if sufficient untainted evidence was presented in affidavit to establish probable cause, warrant is valid. Hartzler v. Licking County Humane Soc., S.D.Ohio 1990, 740 F.Supp. 470. Civil Rights 1088(3); Searches And Seizures 112

Property owners failed to state claim that deputy in sheriff's department violated their Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches, absent allegation that he knowingly or recklessly gave false information in obtaining the otherwise valid warrant; owner's allegations that deputy made false statements regarding thoroughness of search of crime scene did not impugn his integrity as affiant, and his alleged omission of certain information was not critical to probable cause finding. Marino v. Mayger, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 393, 2004 WL 2801795, Unreported. Searches And Seizures 112

Property owners' mere showing that statements in search warrant affidavit as to who spoke directly with confidential informant and that informant saw truck of person police were looking for at owners' property were false was insufficient to preclude summary judgment for county and deputies in §§ 1983 action; other than conclusory allegations contained in complaint, property owners offered no evidence that errors in affidavit resulted from a deliberate attempt to mislead magistrate judge. Mason v. Lowndes County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 203, 2004 WL 1540766, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(3); Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2169. ---- Warrant execution, search and seizure, police activities

Alleged ease with which contraband could be concealed on those present in residence while search warrant for drugs was executed did not, alone, provide probable cause for strip-search of mother and her minor daughter who were present and for whom the search warrant did not authorize a search. Doe v. Groody, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 361 F.3d 232, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 111, 543 U.S. 873, 160 L.Ed.2d 121. Controlled Substances 126

Even if search warrant that police officer possessed when he entered motel room were invalid, officer was entitled to rely on authority provided by arrest warrants he also possessed, thus defeating arrestees' § 1983 claim based on alleged invalidity of search warrant, even though officer did not deny that he entered room to execute search warrant. Simms v. Village of Albion, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1098. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Plaintiff did not have claim against police officer under § 1983 for violation of his constitutional right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures, where search of his residence was pursuant to warrant directed against activities of his son, nothing belonging to plaintiff was seized during search. Roach v. City of Evansville, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 111 F.3d 544. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Illegality of search based on a warrant containing description that fit two adjacent houses was not so clearly established that officer executing warrant could not reasonably have believed his search was lawful and, thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by plaintiffs whose home was mistakenly searched; at time officer obtained warrant, it was not clear that he knew description of property in the warrant fit two houses. Richardson v. Oldham, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 12 F.3d 1373. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability for violations of plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights during search and seizure conducted on plaintiff's business and residence, as the extended search, after two television sets which were all that was named in warrant were discovered, and seizure of objects at random were not justified under either exception to general rule that only items described in search warrant may be seized, and officers should have been aware that search conducted was in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Creamer v. Porter, C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 754 F.2d 1311. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers and correction officers are not shielded by search warrant from liability under this section if the warrant was executed in an unreasonable manner. Galluccio v. Holmes, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1983, 724 F.2d 301. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Law enforcement officers having good faith and reasonable belief in validity of search warrant may nonetheless incur liability under this section if warrant is executed in unreasonable manner. Duncan v. Barnes, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1979, 592 F.2d 1336. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Police officer who acts in good faith and in reasonable manner in executing search warrant issued by judicial officer is not liable in damages under this section upon showing that the judicial officer erred. Com. of Pa. ex rel. Feiling v. Sincavage, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 439 F.2d 1133. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether, when police officers responded to 911 domestic violence call at home of city councilman, there was an agreement between the councilman, the police officers, and police chief, whom the councilman telephoned when the police arrived at his house, to deprive the councilman's male cohabitant, who made the 911 call, of his right to equal protection, precluding summary judgment on his § 1983 equal protection "class of one" claim. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.D.Ill.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 893, reversed in part 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers defending § 1983 action had made an objectively reasonable mistake in executing valid search and seizure warrant, by entering apartment which was across hall from apartment covered by warrant; recipient of drug delivery had initially entered complainant's apartment rather than apartment covered by warrant, officers entered building from rear through open door and believed they were in a common entry hall, and there is recognized need to allow some latitude for honest mistakes made by officers in dangerous and difficult process of making arrests and executing search warrants. Samuels v. Smith, D.Conn.1993, 839 F.Supp. 959. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Despite fact that police officers may have reasonably relied on patently valid search warrant conduct of police officers in executing search warrant is always subject to review as to reasonableness, and officers may be held liable under statute governing deprivation of civil rights for executing warrant in unreasonable manner. Brown v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1986, 638 F.Supp. 1479. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Actions of police in executing search warrant with guns drawn and forcing occupants of home to ground and placing them in handcuffs was reasonable and not excessive, where officers entered home with an unknown number of occupants and with expectation of encountering a dangerous suspect who was known to be involved with drug activity, when officers entered home one property owner attempted to retrieve a firearm, property owners were detained at gunpoint for only a short period of time, and officers immediately retreated from home upon learning that suspect was not there. Mason v. Lowndes County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 203, 2004 WL 1540766, Unreported. Arrest 63.5(9); Controlled Substances 151

2170. ---- Admissible evidence, search and seizure, police activities

State prisoner could not maintain civil rights action for damages based upon alleged constitutional infirmities of his arrest, search of his apartment and seizure of property which was introduced at trial which resulted in his conviction. Alexander v. Emerson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1973, 489 F.2d 285. Civil Rights 1088(3); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Section 1983 claim of prisoner which challenges legality of search that occurred prior to conviction is not barred merely because fruits of that search are introduced in criminal trial that leads to conviction, as ruling that search was illegal would not invalidate subsequent conviction if evidence would have been admissible at trial under independent source or inevitable discovery doctrines or if admission of evidence was harmless error; proper consideration is whether challenged conduct had effect on plaintiff's custody. Copus v. City of Edgerton, W.D.Wis.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1047, affirmed in part, reversed in part 151 F.3d 646. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Plaintiff could not recover in civil rights action for money and ring allegedly seized pursuant to an invalid warrant which had already been judicially declared sufficient. Smith v. Sinclair, W.D.Okla.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1108. Judgment 648

2171. ---- Suppressed evidence, search and seizure, police activities

When evidence derived from illegal search would have to be suppressed in state-court criminal case if judgment in § 1983 claim were to be applied to criminal case and suppression would necessarily invalidate criminal conviction, stated principle of Heck would apply, and § 1983 claim would have to be dismissed; there would be no cause of action under § 1983. Ballenger v. Owens, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2003, 352 F.3d 842. Civil Rights 1088(3)

A defendant in a criminal prosecution who succeeds in having evidence suppressed because it was unlawfully obtained may later bring action for damages for violation of his right under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 to be free of unlawful searches and seizures. Williams v. Codd, S.D.N.Y.1978, 459 F.Supp. 804. Searches And Seizures 85

2172. ---- Vehicle seizures, search and seizure, police activities

Police officer did not violate car owners' due process rights by failing to promptly notify prosecutor's office directly about seizure of car under Missouri Criminal Activity Forfeiture Act (CAFA) and county's "zero tolerance" drug policy; initial traffic stop and subsequent search of car was valid, officer followed departmental protocol by reporting seizure to prospector by indirect means, and, although protocol deviated from technical directives of CAFA, this did not support imposition of § 1983 liability. Putman v. Unknown Smith, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 98 F.3d 1093, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 303; Controlled Substances 177

Deputy sheriff who acted within his discretionary authority when he stopped vehicle in which plaintiff was a passenger did not violate clearly established constitutional law in May, 1985, for purpose of defense of qualified immunity, in impounding vehicle, arresting plaintiff's companions, and leaving plaintiff alone beside highway at night without transportation home. Courson v. McMillian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 939 F.2d 1479. Civil Rights

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officer's stop of a motor vehicle and search of a passenger was impermissibly motivated by racial bias, precluding summary judgment for officer in passenger's §§ 1983 action alleging an Equal Protection violation; other officers testified that defendant exhibited racial bias towards African-Americans while performing his duties and regularly engaged in racial profiling. Johnson v. Anhorn, E.D.Pa.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 338. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Municipality was not liable to arrestee under Fourth Amendment when police towed vehicle to impound lot, where vandalism allegedly occurred; damage, consisting of nail through tire and theft of electronic equipment, was insufficient to support claim of constitutional violation, there was no policy or practice of municipality supporting actions in question, and municipality could not be held liable under Massachusetts common law tort of conversion. Sheppard v. Aloisi, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 478. Searches And Seizures 66

Truck owner could not maintain an action under this section against two policemen who had impounded his truck for alleged negligence in failing to complete release forms or in allowing damage to the truck and removal of personal property therefrom, including alleged negligent failure in preventing unknown third person from intentionally committing such acts. Ragusa v. Streator Police Dept., N.D.Ill.1981, 530 F.Supp. 814. Civil Rights 1376(6)

If state policemen, acting under color of state law, seized motorists' automobiles in such a way as to deprive the motorists of any opportunity to challenge the lawfulness of the seizure, the police officers acted in a way which deprived the motorists of due process. Watters v. Parrish, W.D.Va.1975, 402 F.Supp. 696. Constitutional Law 319.1

Police officer did not deprive house resident of property, without due process of law, supporting §§ 1983 action by resident, when he allegedly scratched door of bathroom in process of extricating resident who had barricaded himself in room; any damage to property was far too insignificant to rise to constitutional dimensions. Policky v. City of Seward, Neb., D.Neb.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 1013. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Claimed violations of plaintiffs' rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 arising when county law enforcement officer allegedly acting under county policy of discrimination against Negroes undertook search and arrest of occupants of residence located across street from plaintiffs' home and during course of search fired revolver and bullet passed through front door of plaintiffs' home were immaterial to real controversy of city's liability for injuries and property damage allegedly negligently inflicted by officer; thus, claimed constitutional violations could not serve as basis for giving federal question jurisdiction. McCarther v. Grady County, Okl., W.D.Okla.1977, 437 F.Supp. 828. Federal Courts 244

If state prisoner could show the requisite amount of damages proximately caused by a warrantless, late night entry into his home under conditions that revealed arbitrary or unreasonable force or damage to property on the part of the law officers, prisoner might have a valid federal claim; in such event, prisoner should submit allegations of police misconduct under oath or affirmation under pain and penalty of perjury and should take care to state specific facts rather than conclusory allegations. Davis v. Hudson, D.C.S.C.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1210. Civil Rights 1088(3); Civil Rights 1395(6)

2174. ---- Disposal of seized property, search and seizure, police activities

Failure of officer, who impounded truck when prior owner reported it stolen, to inform city officials of claim of plaintiff who bought truck at abandoned vehicles auction, or to tell buyer that the "hold" had been released was not proximate cause of buyer's due process injury, where officer was not responsible for determining merits of buyer's claim to the property. Williams v. Soligo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 104 F.3d 1060, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(1)

City was liable under § 1983 for loss sustained through city's disposal of property which had been seized in criminal investigation without providing adequate due process notice to owners of property prior to disposal pursuant to city ordinance and police department custom; practices which reduced rather than increased possibility of notice were so common and well settled so as to constitute municipal policy and further, city could have provided predeprivation procedure. Matthias v. Bingley, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 906 F.2d 1047, modified on other grounds on denial of rehearing 915 F.2d 946. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee from whom property was seized stated valid § 1983 due process claim through allegations that his seized property was disposed of without notifying him of procedures for reclaiming property, although actual procedures followed with regard to disposition of seized items were constitutionally valid, where such procedures were not in municipal code and pertinent municipal ordinance misled affected persons as to what procedures were and how they were to be invoked. Butler v. Castro, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 896 F.2d 698. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2175. ---- Return of seized property, search and seizure, police activities

Police department's refusal, without court order, to return to resident ammunition and firearms that were seized from resident's home pursuant to search warrant, after it was determined that items were not contraband or required as evidence in court proceeding, was not random or unauthorized act, and thus could be subject of § 1983 action for alleged due process violation, regardless of whether resident had adequate state postdeprivation remedy. Lathon v. City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2001, 242 F.3d 841. Civil Rights 1319

Neither county nor sheriff, in his official capacity, could be held liable under § 1983 to licensee for allegedly wrongful retention of his driver's license, given licensee's failure to allege or present any evidence that county officials acted pursuant to county policy or custom when they refused to return license; nothing suggested that retention of license was more than one-time isolated event for which county was not responsible. Fox v. Van Oosterum, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1999, 176 F.3d 342. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police officer's release of automobile seized from arrestee to automobile's title holder was actionable under § 1983, as violation of due process clause, based on city's established procedure for releasing items held by property clerk, which did not provide for notice to arrestee or for resolution of ownership disputes prior to release of vehicle to lienholder. Alexandre v. Cortes, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 140 F.3d 406. Civil Rights 1088(1)

State statutes afforded adequate postdeprivation process for recovery of property seized pursuant to lawful search, and therefore, claimants could not prevail on § 1983 claim alleging that city failed to provide reasonable procedure for recovery of such property in violation of due process clause. Perkins v. City of West Covina, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1004, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 1690, 523 U.S. 1105, 140 L.Ed.2d 812, reversed 119 S.Ct. 678, 525 U.S. 234, 142 L.Ed.2d 636, on remand 167 F.3d 1286. Civil Rights 1319

State trooper who executed warrant for seizure of cattle which were subject of cruelty to animals complaint, and then turned cattle over to humane society, was not liable to owners in § 1983 civil rights action based on subsequent sale of cattle by humane society without notice to owners; state police lacked adequate facilities to care for cattle, prosecutor had informed court the humane society would do so, and statute permitted court to award neglected animals to a humane society. unspecified property allegedly taken from plaintiff but which failed to identify property or indicate who had it was properly dismissed in light of fact that unlawful detention of one's chattels is not sort of wrong to which this section is applicable. Carter v. Chief of Police, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1971, 437 F.2d 413. Federal Civil Procedure 1741

No cause of action lay against city predicated upon alleged deprivation of rights and privileges secured by federal Constitution on complaint putting particular emphasis on alleged unlawful seizure and retention of plaintiff's out-of-state driver's license. Puett v. City of Detroit, Dept. of Police, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1963, 323 F.2d 591, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 978, 376 U.S. 957, 11 L.Ed.2d 975. Civil Rights 1072; Civil Rights 1395(1); Conspiracy 13

This section is not proper vehicle for request for return of noncontraband items seized when no constitutional rights have been violated, and, further, defendants who were involved only in seizure, not retention, of the property in question are not proper targets of order for return. Lucien v. Roegner, N.D.Ill.1983, 574 F.Supp. 118. Civil Rights 1088(3); Forfeitures 10

District attorney's failure to provide on a request a release, following completion of criminal proceedings, so that plaintiff could secure return of $1,000 seized at the time of his arrest did not give rise to cause of action against the district attorney where he thereafter provided a release and where failure to provide release immediately did not itself cause plaintiff to be unable to recover his $1,000 or otherwise injure him or deprive him of his civil rights. Cooper v. Police Property Clerk of the City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1976, 416 F.Supp. 49. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

State criminal investigator, who allegedly told owner of seized vehicles, held by state subject to pending forfeiture action, that their release was conditioned on his agreement to testify falsely, did not deprive owner of any due process right he had in return of vehicles absent evidence that investigator actively interfered with dismissal of forfeiture action or had any affirmative duty to recommend dismissal of action; there was no evidence investigator actually caused complained-of deprivation. Wrench Transp. Services, Inc. v. Bradley, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 136 Fed.Appx. 521, 2005 WL 1503887, Unreported. Forfeitures 5

State-law remedies for various torts, including replevin and trespass to chattels, were adequate to address injury suffered by motorist due to police officers' alleged failure to return knife and all of money confiscated from motorist during search, and therefore alleged random and unauthorized seizure of such property did not support due process claim under §§ 1983. Alexander v. Hodell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 665, 2005 WL 78787, Unreported. Constitutional Law 319.5(1); Searches And Seizures 84

Sheriff and deputy sheriff did not deprive business owner of due process by allegedly seizing, then refusing to release, equipment from business in connection with investigation of charge of receiving stolen vehicles, given evidence that deputy did not issue police order forbidding owner from selling allegedly stolen equipment, but rather requested that business cooperate with police by refraining from selling equipment until police verified its ownership, equipment remained at all times in possession and control of business, and owner waited more than a year after being asked to cooperate to raise issue of equipment's status with police or prosecutor. Speiser v. Engle, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 107 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 1745785, Unreported. Constitutional Law 319.5(1); Criminal Law 1224(1)

2176. ---- Racial motive, search and seizure, police activities

Jury in § 1983 action could find that drug enforcement task force, inspecting convenience stores for presence of drugs, did not violate search and seizure and equal protection rights of Arabic store owners by selecting their stores for drug searches due to owner's ethnicity; task force officers testified that ethnicity was never discussed when determining which stores to inspect. Saleh v. City of Buffalo, W.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31655002, Unreported, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 119, 2003 WL 22490186. Civil Rights 1429

2177. ---- Training, search and seizure, police activities

Residents of house which was searched by police officers pursuant to search warrant which mistakenly identified that house as suspected "dope house" could not recover under § 1983 against city, despite allegation that police officers were not trained in proper methods for obtaining search warrants by any formal classroom training. Hill v. McIntyre, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1989, 884 F.2d 271, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1088(3)

County had no § 1983 liability for failure to train in connection with fatal shooting of homeowner by officers executing search warrant, where officers underwent substantial training program in use of deadly force and additional training as members of special response team and nothing suggested that death was attributable to any inadequacies in county's program. Wingrove v. Forshey, S.D.Ohio 2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 808. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Plaintiffs' whose house was allegedly unlawfully searched, resulting in seizure of items not named in search warrant and destruction of other items, stated claim for relief under section 1983 against state's attorney and county's state's attorney's office by alleging that state's attorney failed to train his employees to respect constitutional guarantee against unreasonable searches and seizures, since plaintiffs' allegations identified policy or custom and indicated how it caused complained-of behavior and plaintiffs' resulting harm. McCrimmon v. Kane County, N.D.Ill.1985, 606 F.Supp. 216. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2178. Sex discrimination, police activities

In order to show that police violated equal protection rights of women victims of domestic abuse by allegedly treating victims of domestic violence differently from victims of nondomestic violence, plaintiff would be required to show intent, purpose or effect of discrimination against women. Hynson By and Through Hynson v. City of Chester Legal Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1988, 864 F.2d 1026, on remand 731 F.Supp. 1236. Constitutional Law 224(2)

2179. State created danger, police activities

Special relationship did not arise between murder witness and state, for purpose of estate's §§ 1983 lawsuit under substantive due process clause on duty to protect theory, by assuring witness that she would be protected after she was subjected to numerous threats upon her life. Rivera v. Rhode Island, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2005, 402 F.3d 27. Constitutional Law 253(1); States 112.2(2)

Deputy sheriff's conduct of instructing bystander to assist him in subduing suspect during struggle for possession of deputy's gun and fleeing to bushes after suspect gained possession of gun, leaving bystander to be fatally shot by suspect, did not shock the conscience as required to give rise to § 1983 claim based on violation of bystander's substantive due process rights; deputy was confronted with emergency situation and had no time for deliberation, and deputy did not act with intent to harm bystander. Radecki v. Barela, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1998, 146 F.3d 1227, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 869, 525 U.S. 1103, 142 L.Ed.2d 771. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Borough police officers did not use their authority in a way that created a danger to citizen or that rendered him more vulnerable to danger than he would have been had officers not acted at all when they released citizen after stopping his vehicle and conducting field sobriety tests, as required for liability for citizen's death in subsequent car accident under §§ 1983 for substantive due process violation of state-created danger; officers did nothing to make citizen more vulnerable to danger, and they improved safety of his situation by confiscating ammunition from gun that was in his possession. Hoffman v. Borough of Avalon, W.D.Pa.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 395. Municipal Corporations 747(3) student who was wounded during attack on high school by two armed students, against law enforcement officers for substantive due process violation based on alleged improper responses to attack and lack of rescue efforts, student met requirement of alleging that risk to him was obvious or known to officers, even though officers did not know that he specifically had been shot in the library and was in need of medical treatment; student alleged that officers knew emergency medical treatment was needed for persons in library. Ireland v. Jefferson County Sheriff's Dept., D.Colo.2002, 193 F.Supp.2d 1201. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

City police officers did not create danger by refusing to forcibly enter apartment based on neighbors' reports of screaming and dog barking from apartment, and thus city was not liable to family of woman murdered in apartment after police left under § 1983 under state-created danger theory; family members' loss of right to associate with victim was not foreseeable result of failing to enter, apartment was peaceful when officers arrived, officers had no contact with family members, and officers did not create opportunity for harm to occur to victim. White v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2000, 118 F.Supp.2d 564. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officers did not create danger that individual would be shot by other officer when, in responding to report of possible burglary, officers returned gun to individual who was resident after initially taking gun due to his anxious behavior, despite their knowledge of his anxiety and discovery that he suffered from psychological problems, and thus, officers were not liable in individual's civil rights action premised on violation of his right to substantive due process; it was not foreseeable that other officers would return in response to barricaded person situation, officers did not act in willful disregard of individual's safety, there was no relationship between individual and state, and officers did not create opportunity for other officer to shoot individual. DiJoseph v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1997, 953 F.Supp. 602, new trial denied 968 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Allegations that police officer forced intoxicated individual to ride bicycle which had no lights at night were sufficient to allege special relationship between victim and state, as required for due process claim, to support § 1983 action against motion to dismiss; complaint alleged police officer placed intoxicated individual in position of danger and then did nothing to protect him from being struck and killed. Estate of Tittiger by Tittiger v. Doering, E.D.Mich.1988, 678 F.Supp. 177. Civil Rights 1395(5)

2180. Sting operation, police activities

Allegations by woman who had participated with police internal affairs office in sting operation aimed at police officer who had sexually assaulted her that policy of internal affairs office of utilizing private individuals to further investigations of criminals and police officers violated her due process rights of individuals used were insufficient to state claim in federal civil rights action; police had not refused to act or to arrest officer, and woman voluntarily participated in sting operation. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Constitutional Law 255(2); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

2181. Surveillance, police activities

Consent decree entered in 1981 civil rights litigation, which imposed detailed and onerous restrictions on city's powers of investigation of subversive activities, would be modified to permit police to protect public safety by allowing police to keep tabs on incipient terrorist groups; core of the decree, which the city did not seek to modify, forbade investigations intended to interfere with or deter the exercise of the freedom of expression that the First Amendment protects, and required the city to commission independent periodic audits of the city's compliance with the decree. constitutional violation with respect to plaintiff whose public meetings were the subject of police surveillance. Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Religious Soc. of Friends v. Tate, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1335. Municipal Corporations 189(1)

Alleged improper vagrancy observation practices by the District of Columbia police furnished no basis for federal jurisdiction by virtue of this section. Gomez v. Wilson, C.A.D.C.1973, 477 F.2d 411, 155 U.S.App.D.C. 242.

Allegation that retail store, its personnel and police officers violated plaintiff's rights by permitting deficiencies in closed toilet stalls that facilitated observation of plaintiff by employees and by police officers in violation of his Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights was sufficient to establish that defendants' conduct deprived plaintiff of constitutional or federal rights for purposes of § 1983 claim. Gilbert v. Sears, Roebuck and Co., M.D.Fla.1993, 826 F.Supp. 433. Civil Rights 1395(1)

2182. Theft, police activities

Claim that law enforcement officers who participated in search of plaintiffs' residence took rare coins in plaintiffs' possession did not state cognizable federal civil rights claim. Rogers v. Fuller, M.D.N.C.1976, 410 F.Supp. 187. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2183. Third parties injured by police actions, police activities

City could not be liable in § 1983 civil rights action arising from injuries to pedestrian struck by suspect's vehicle during police pursuit, absent a constitutional violation by the officers. Evans v. Avery, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1033, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1693, 520 U.S. 1210, 137 L.Ed.2d 820, rehearing denied 117 S.Ct. 2533, 521 U.S. 1129, 138 L.Ed.2d 1032. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2184. Traffic control, police activities--Generally

Alleged breach of sheriff's duty to provide adequate traffic control to corporation, which conducted concert on rented county fairgrounds, did not present a substantial cognizable constitutional claim for alleged violations of rights of peaceful assembly, equal protection and due process upon which relief could be granted. W. J. A. Productions, Inc. v. Barnett, N.D.Ohio 1977, 449 F.Supp. 690. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2185. ---- Citations, traffic control, police activities

Act of police officer in issuing to motorist a citation charging motorist with violation of an inapplicable speed limit statute did not render him liable to motorist under this section. Gabbard v. Rose, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1966, 359 F.2d 182. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer did not violate equal protection clause when he ticketed vehicle of black motorist bringing §§ 1983 action, for being in handicapped parking spot, while allegedly ignoring illegally parked vehicle driven by white motorist; as motorist did not approach officer until ticket writing process had begun, officer could not have known race of motorist before deciding to issue ticket. Kelly v. Rice, S.D.N.Y.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 203. Automobiles 349(1); Constitutional Law 223

Claimants failed to state §§ 1983 claim that village officials violated federally protected rights of motorists by engaging in practice of illegally ticketing and fining them; allegedly violative conduct was not adequately explained, and allegations of negligence were made that could not be pursued in §§ 1983 action. Wood v. Incorporated Village of Patchogue of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 344. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1395(5)

2186. ---- Roadblocks, traffic control, police activities

Action by motorcyclist injured when he hit car stopped at alleged roadblock established by city police officer at best alleged negligence on part of city police officers not cognizable as Fourteenth Amendment deprivation of liberty in civil rights action brought under § 1983. Chesney v. Hill, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1987, 813 F.2d 754. Civil Rights 1088(1)

2187. Training and supervision, police activities--Generally

Inadequacy of police training may serve as basis for § 1983 municipal liability only where failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact; only where municipality's failure to train its employees in relevant respect evidences "deliberate indifference" to rights of its inhabitants can such shortcoming be properly thought of as city "policy or custom" that is actionable under § 1983. City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, U.S.Ohio 1989, 109 S.Ct. 1197, 489 U.S. 378, 103 L.Ed.2d 412. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Inadequacy of police training may serve as basis for municipal liability under § 1983 only where failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact. Dunn v. City of Elgin, Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 641, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Constitutional claim could not be maintained against city under § 1983 for inadequately training and supervising police officers where plaintiff did not demonstrate that she suffered a constitutional deprivation by police officers. Dahl v. Holley, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2002, 312 F.3d 1228. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To prevail on "failure to train" municipal liability claim under § 1983, plaintiff must show that city's employee violated his constitutional rights, that city had policy or custom of failing to train its employees, and that failure to train caused constitutional violation. Roach v. City of Evansville, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 111 F.3d 544. Civil Rights 1352(1)

"Deliberate indifference" test is employed to determine when inadequate training can justifiably be said to represent city policy for purposes of imposing municipal liability under § 1983. Garner v. Memphis Police Dept., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1993, 8 F.3d 358, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1219, 510 U.S. 1177, 127 L.Ed.2d 565. Civil Rights 1352(1)

For § 1983 plaintiff to prevail against municipality, plaintiff must show that inadequate training of city employees represented city policy and that need for better training was so obvious and inadequacy so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights, that municipality can be said to have been deliberately indifferent to the need. Barber v. City of Salem, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 953 F.2d 232. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Where constitutional violation was not alleged to be part of pattern of past conduct, supervisory official or municipality may be held liable in civil rights case only where there is essentially complete failure to train police force, or training that is so reckless or grossly negligent that future police misconduct is almost inevitable or would properly be characterized as substantially certain to result. Hays v. Jefferson County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1982, 668 F.2d 869, rehearing denied 673 F.2d 152, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 75, 459 U.S. 833, 74 L.Ed.2d 73. Civil Rights 1358

Due Process Clause did not impose on city or police officials duty to train African-American police officer regarding his off-duty responses and risks posed to African-American officers in such circumstances; thus, no constitutional violation occurred when officer was mistakenly shot and killed by fellow officers allegedly as result of his inadequate training in those areas, and officer's survivor had no § 1983 cause of action based on lack of training. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 163, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 404 F.3d 4, on remand 396 F.Supp.2d 125. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

A city's failure to train is a violation of § 1983 only when the city's failure to train its employees in a relevant respect evidences a deliberate indifference to the rights of its inhabitants can such a shortcoming be properly thought of as a city policy or custom that is actionable under § 1983. Eberle v. City of Newton, D.Kan.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1269, motion to amend denied 296 F.Supp.2d 1276. Civil Rights 1352(1)

A municipality is liable under § 1983 for policies made by its lawmakers or by those with policymaking authority, and for customs or unofficial policies derived from circumstantial proof, which includes liability for a deliberate government policy of failing to train or supervise its officers, when this failure to train amounts to a deliberate indifference to the rights of the persons with whom the police come into contact. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1352(1)

In the absence of an explicit policy or an entrenched custom, the inadequacy of police training may serve as a basis of § 1983 liability where the failure to train amounts to a deliberate indifference to the rights of persons with whom the police come into contact. Newell v. City of Salina, D.Kan.2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality was not liable under § 1983 for failure to train and supervise police officer, who shot driver of vehicle as he emerged following high speed chase, when officer's action was not supported by any municipal policy, and officer had received training in use of deadly force. Parker v. Town of Swansea, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 92. Civil Rights 1352(4)

When there is evidence that police officers undertaking arrests were trained to act recklessly in manner that created high risk of death, and that officers acted consistently with their training, need for different training may be deemed so obvious and inadequacy of training so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights that municipal policymakers may be found deliberately indifferent to victim's need, resulting in liability in § 1983 action. Parker v. Town of Swansea, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 92. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Complaint was sufficient to state a claim against superintendent under § 1983 based on failure to properly evaluate, select, train, instruct and supervise police officer, who sexually molested female student; superintendent's alleged negligence could have resulted in deliberate indifference if superintendent knew or had reason to know that officer was prone to such improper behavior. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Section 1983 plaintiff seeking to establish municipal liability on basis of failure to train and supervise must show recurring situations presenting obvious potential for constitutional violation at issue, and violation must be plainly obvious or highly predictable consequence of failure to train or supervise. Jacobs v. City of Port Neches, E.D.Tex.1998, 7 F.Supp.2d 829, affirmed 193 F.3d 516. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipal liability based on failure to train and supervise could not be established by allegations that individual officers engaged in corrupt activity, without evidence that such activity was highly predictable consequence of failure to train. Jacobs v. City of Port Neches, E.D.Tex.1998, 7 F.Supp.2d 829, affirmed 193 F.3d 516. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Training inadequacies of law enforcement personnel may serve as basis for § 1983 liability only where failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom law enforcement comes into contact. Hightower v. Harris, N.D.Ill.1997, 963 F.Supp. 716, reversed 161 F.3d 485. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality's failure to train its police may form basis for municipal liability under § 1983, but only where failure exhibits deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of persons with whom police encounter. Lester v. City of

Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 950 F.Supp. 870. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Lack of adequate training of police officers may support claim for municipal liability under § 1983 only where failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact. Johnson v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 944 F.Supp. 586. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Inadequacy of police training may serve as basis for municipal liability under § 1983 if failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact; to meet deliberate indifference standard, failure to train must reflect deliberate or conscious choice made by city policymakers. Frazier v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1996, 927 F.Supp. 881. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality may be held liable under § 1983 for failure to train police officers, but only if failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact. Roberts v. City of Forest Acres, D.S.C.1995, 902 F.Supp. 662. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To hold city liable for allegedly unconstitutional acts of police officers, it is necessary to show that officials with authority for making policy promulgated, adopted, or ratified policy or custom of constitutional violations, or that officials knowingly acquiesced in longstanding practice or custom, and that constitutional injury was direct result of inadequate training or supervision. Carnell v. Grimm, D.Hawai'i 1994, 872 F.Supp. 746, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 74 F.3d 977. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

To establish § 1983 claim for failure to train, plaintiff must show that supervisor failed to supervise or train subordinate officer, failure to supervise or train was closely related to violation of plaintiff's rights, and failure to supervise or train amounted to deliberate indifference; single incident, standing alone, is insufficient as to matter of law to establish failure to train. Craig v. St. Martin Parish Sheriff, W.D.La.1994, 861 F.Supp. 1290. Civil Rights 1355

Inadequacy of police training may serve as basis for § 1983 liability only when failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to persons with whom police come in contact. Hudson v. Maxey, E.D.Mich.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1223. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Generic claims of inadequate training are not enough to establish municipal liability under § 1983 civil rights statute; plaintiff must identify specific training that municipality did not give, explain how lack of that training actually caused ultimate injury, and show that alleged failure to train was part of official municipal policy of deliberate indifference. Herman v. Clearfield County, Pa., W.D.Pa.1993, 836 F.Supp. 1178, affirmed 30 F.3d 1486 . Civil Rights 1352(1)

To support a claim of municipal liability based upon a failure to train, a plaintiff must show inadequate training, that the inadequate training represented a policy which reflected a deliberate indifference to plaintiff's constitutional rights, and the policy caused the alleged violation of constitutional rights. Cooper v. Merrill, D.Del.1990, 736 F.Supp. 552. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipal policy condoning or encouraging police misconduct for civil rights liability purposes may be inferred from police department's failure to train, supervise, or discipline its officers, but fact finder may not draw such inference unless need for training, supervision, or discipline is so obvious and inadequacy so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights that policymakers of city can reasonably be said to have deliberately indifferent to need. Reid v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1990, 736 F.Supp. 21. Civil Rights 1404

Allegations of improper hiring, training and supervision were not a recognized basis for imposing liability under this section on director of Michigan Department of State Police and head of the Michigan state police post based on alleged failure to properly supervise the allegedly offending police officers. Stefaniak v. State of Mich., W.D.Mich.1983, 564 F.Supp. 1194. Civil Rights 1358

2188. ---- Perjury, training and supervision, police activities

Municipality could be liable under § 1983 for failing to train its officers not to commit perjury, though obligation not to commit perjury should have been obvious to any reasonable police officer, to extent that officers had history of committing perjury of which municipal policymakers were aware. Walker v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 974 F.2d 293, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1387, 507 U.S. 961, 122 L.Ed.2d 762, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1412, 507 U.S. 972, 122 L.Ed.2d 784. Civil Rights 1352(4)

2189. ---- Suicide prevention, training and supervision, police activities

City's failure to provide training and education for police officers in suicide detection and prevention was not "deliberate indifference" in violation of § 1983; city's training and policies regarding suicide prevention were in accord with requirements of state law at time of detainee's suicide, and there was no basis for finding that his suicide was closely related to city's failure to train officers in suicide prevention. Manarite By and Through Manarite v. City of Springfield, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 957 F.2d 953, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 113, 506 U.S. 837, 121 L.Ed.2d 70. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County was immune from liability on federal civil rights claim arising out of detainee's suicide, absent sufficient evidence that policy of failure to train officers in suicide prevention actually and proximately caused that harm. Buffington v. Baltimore County, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1990, 913 F.2d 113, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1106, 499 U.S. 906, 113 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County jail's suicide prevention policy appeared reasonable and comprised an effort to prevent suicides, and thus, county was not deliberately indifferent to training its employees on inmate suicide prevention in violation of the Eighth Amendment, even if the policy had not been updated in recent years and the jail was not accredited by the American Correctional Association (ACA), where, inter alia, the policy set forth a detailed list of factors to identify potentially suicidal inmates, set forth a procedure for identification and screening of inmates, and required on-going training in the implementation of suicide prevention and intervention for all staff. Harvey v. County of Ward, D.N.D.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 1003. Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546

2190. ---- Miscellaneous claims, training and supervision, police activities

County did not have widespread practice of inadequately training its police officers in assessing probable cause for searches and arrests, as would support holding county liable, under § 1983, for officers' alleged unconstitutional conduct towards arrestee during search of apartment and arrest; county had training program in place that was specifically designed to instruct police officers in assessing probable cause for searches and arrests. Holmes v. Kucynda, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 321 F.3d 1069. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Suspect did not show that training or supervision provided by county to police officer and prosecutor was inadequate, for purpose of suspect's civil rights claim under Monell, where officer stated that he knew when he joined investigation that he was required to secure and deliver to prosecutor all evidence relating to crime, including exculpatory evidence, and prosecutor stated that he knew of his obligation to disclose exculpatory evidence to defense before investigation of suspect and that it was policy of county prosecuting attorney's office to disclose all Brady materials. Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 447 F.3d 569. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Sheriff was not deliberately indifferent to the rights of citizens who came into contact with deputies, as required for suspect's §§ 1983 claim against sheriff in his official capacity alleging a failure to train and supervise his deputies, stemming from suspect's arrest; evidence demonstrated that the officers received police training from the state peace officers training academy, and one officer trained for two months under the supervision of two sergeants. Fisher v. Harden, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 398 F.3d 837, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 828, 163 L.Ed.2d 706, on remand 2006 WL 1697538. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City was not liable under § 1983 for actions of police officers who, while on "standby service," removed minor daughter from mother's custody pursuant to unenforceable custody order issued by court in another state, in violation of mother's and daughter's constitutional rights; officers had been instructed in field training that standby service required officers to keep the peace but not take any other actions, and had received training on city's standard operation procedure (SOP) which informed officers that civil orders generally were not to be served or enforced by officers. Dunn v. City of Elgin, Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 641, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Issues of fact existed as to whether police chief was negligent in hiring, training, and supervision of police officer, and whether city had an official policy or custom of, or was deliberately indifferent to, civil rights violations by its officers, precluding summary judgment for city in § 1983 action brought by driver allegedly targeted for traffic stop and arrest on basis of his race. Marshall v. Columbia Lea Regional Hosp., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 345 F.3d 1157. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Sheriff's failure to instruct police on handling of dangerous people who appeared to be irrational did not amount to deliberate indifference, as would support § 1983 claim, where sheriff instructed police not to use deadly force absent threat of death or great bodily harm; failure to instruct that special measures should be taken for apparently irrational people could amount to no more than mere negligence, absent showing that there had been rash of such killings that could have been avoided by special measures. Pena v. Leombruni, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1999, 200 F.3d 1031, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2207, 530 U.S. 1208, 147 L.Ed.2d 240. Civil Rights 1358

District court's failure to consider whether city's program for training police officers was adequate, whether city was deliberately indifferent to any deficiency in training, and whether deficiency caused police officers' indifference to pedestrian's intoxication and need for assistance warranted remand of legal guardian's § 1983 action to hold city liable based on its alleged acquiescence in policy, custom or practice of not granting officers "activity credits" for taking intoxicated persons into custody and failing to adequately train officers in proper care of intoxicated persons. Kneipp v. Tedder, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 95 F.3d 1199, 159 A.L.R. Fed. 619. Federal Courts 939

Arrestee could not show that injuries he suffered, when he was bitten in presence of regular police officers by police dog whose handler had fallen during pursuit, were result of deliberate indifference on part of city in failing to adequately train police officers; city's program was not obviously inadequate, where it trained officers to deal with routine arrests involving police dogs and handlers, and loss of canine handler during chase was very unlikely scenario. Holiday v. City of Kalamazoo, W.D.Mich.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 732. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Lack of similar past occurrences involving police dogs precluded showing of deliberate indifference to support civil rights claim that city's training programs were inadequate because they did not teach regular officers how to proceed with apprehension in presence of police dog whose handler had become incapacitated; dog bites occurred in only 0.002% of service calls and there was no evidence of occurrence of incidents similar to one in which arrestee was bitten, after dog's fell during pursuit and regular officers had to complete arrest. Holiday v. City of Kalamazoo, W.D.Mich.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 732. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Victim of alleged assault by officer of state department of public safety stated claim of supervisory failure, under § 1983, against officer's supervisors, in their individual capacities, by stating that officer had history of misconduct in Marines, and in prior and present police positions, known to supervisors, and they failed to provide training and supervision required under circumstances. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Mere fact that city allegedly had knowledge of alleged constitutional violations and assaults occurring against municipal police officer and "failed to do anything" was insufficient to show failure to train police department officials, precluding officer's § 1983 claim against city; officer made no showing specifying what training city had failed to provide or demonstrating that city's actions were deliberate and conscious. Brown v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 152. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1352(5)

Negligent conduct alleged by arrestee did not give rise to a constitutional claim cognizable under § 1983; she alleged that the warrant clerk for a county sheriff's office negligently entered incorrect data into the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) database, that the clerk's supervisor negligently failed to verify the information, that unnamed employees of the sheriff's office, when contacted by police officers, failed to compare the bench warrant with the NCIC database, and that the county sheriff's office negligently failed to train and supervise its employees about correct methods to enter and verify information in the NCIC database. Johnson v. Scotts Bluff County Sheriff's Dept., D.Neb.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 1056. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Parents' claim that failure of police commission and police chief to enact proper policies and procedures for dealing with mentally ill persons or to train police officers to peacefully deal with mentally ill persons resulted in police officers shooting their mentally ill son during his involuntary committal was properly characterized as Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process claim, rather than Fourth Amendment excessive force claim, and thus could serve as basis for § 1983 liability if failure to train amounted to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police came into contact. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 232. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

Overwhelming weight of evidence showing that police officer who threw flash-bang device into apartment while executing search warrant had received training in use of such devices rendered discrepancy caused by omission of that training from one of city's training reports for officer immaterial as a matter of law, and thus, discrepancy did not create genuine issue of material fact so as to preclude summary judgment in favor of city on occupants' §§ 1983 claim of municipal liability for inadequacy of police training; officer stated in affidavit that he took the course, he produced certificate of completion signed by training manager indicating he completed course, and another city training report stated that officer completed course. Taylor v. City of Middletown, D.Conn.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 377.

County sheriff and district attorney were not liable, in §§ 1983 action, for conduct of police and prosecutors conducting search of homeowner's premises and charging him with controlled substance possession and dealing in harmful material to minor, on grounds that they failed to properly train subordinates; conduct of subordinates was not so bad as to reflect essentially complete failure to train, or training that was so reckless or grossly negligent that future misconduct was almost inevitable. Gibbons v. Lambert, D.Utah 2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 1048. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisory liability under section 1983 could not be imposed against police chief based on "personal involvement" in police department's failure to protect witness and her son, who were murdered by brother of person against whom she was to testify, or failure to take corrective action after learning of a subordinate's unlawful conduct; since there was no evidence that chief was aware of the events preceding victims' homicides, he could not be held liable for failing to take corrective action after learning of a subordinate's unlawful conduct or for failing to act on information regarding the unlawful conduct of subordinates, and because he did not have knowledge of subordinates' alleged unlawful acts, chief could not be held liable for gross negligence in supervising subordinates. Clarke v. Sweeney, D.Conn.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 277. Civil Rights 1358

Town police chief was not liable under § 1983 for federal negligent supervision claim brought by pitbull dog owner after police officer shot and killed pitbull that escaped from residence and ran toward officer and police canine as they were attempting to track a fleeing suspect; dog owner suffered no constitutional injury because officer acted reasonably, and there was no evidence to support dog owner's conclusory allegations that police chief violated federal law by failing to instruct, supervise, control, or discipline the police officer on a continuing basis. Warboys v. Proulx, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 111. Civil Rights 1352(3); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Expert report stating in conclusory fashion that death of off-duty, plainclothes police officer had resulted from inadequate training of uniformed officers, who mistakenly shot off-duty officer during parking-lot confrontation with armed suspect, failed to satisfy causation requirement of off-duty officer's survivor's § 1983 inadequate training claim against city and police officials; areas of inadequacy in training procedures were not specified, nor a causal connection made between that training and uniformed officers' actions. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 163, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 404 F.3d 4, on remand 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1420

Expert report stating in conclusory fashion that death of off-duty, plainclothes police officer had resulted from inadequate training of uniformed officers, who mistakenly shot off-duty officer during parking-lot confrontation with armed suspect, failed to satisfy causation requirement of off-duty officer's survivor's § 1983 inadequate training claim against city and police officials; areas of inadequacy in training procedures were not specified, nor a causal connection made between that training and uniformed officers' actions. Former executive assistant chief of police who was responsible for day-to-day operations of department was not liable under § 1983 for failing to investigate alleged constitutional violations committed by police department officers against fellow officer who was misidentified as perpetrator of carjacking and armed robbery, prior to his departure from department, in absence of evidence that he acted with deliberate indifference or failed to take corrective action; there was no evidence that assistant chief had individual duty to oversee pending investigation of incident of alleged officer misconduct, to discover results of such an investigation, or to discipline officers upon resolution of an investigation, and assistant chief was aware of the allegations and believed that there was ongoing criminal investigation at time of his departure. Byrd v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 297 F.Supp.2d 136, affirmed 2004 WL 885228. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1359

Neither town nor town police chief were liable under § 1983 for damages claimed in homeowners' civil rights action alleging that town and police chief failed to properly train and supervise police officers who allegedly violated homeowners' rights under Fourth Amendment and state constitution by mistakenly entering residence to arrest suspect who had previously lived there; homeowners did not suffer constitutional injury at hands of town police officers as required to support claim that town and chief failed to train, supervise, or discipline officers for engaging in allegedly unconstitutional conduct, and chief and town were not personally involved in federal investigation that led to determination of suspect's address, had not participated in process of obtaining arrest warrant, and had not attempted to execute warrant. Tyson v. Willauer, D.Conn.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

District court considering summary judgment motion of defendants in police detainee's § 1983 action against police officers, police chief, and city for alleged use of excessive force in violation of detainee's Fourth Amendment rights could properly consider letters to city's counsel requesting, pursuant to Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), copies of all settlement agreements entered into on behalf of the city police department and its officers and all pending cases against city's police, to show that the city and the police department knew that citizens were accusing its officers of using excessive force in the course of their duties, and that the city acted with deliberate indifference, as required to support detainee's Monell claim, and for the scope of the FOIA requests. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Federal Civil Procedure 2545 against debtor's premises was not liable under § 1983 for any Fourth Amendment violations arising when another officer left creditor in possession of premises after inventory was completed. Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat. Bank, S.D.Iowa 2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1159. Civil Rights 1358

Allegedly unreasonable seizure, under the Fourth Amendment, of hospital patient that occurred when sheriff deputies assisted hospital employees in using restraints to strap patient on gurney after deputy detained her for psychiatric evaluation, pursuant to state law, because she was allegedly unruly in emergency room while awaiting treatment for suspected heart attack, was not undertaken pursuant to county policy or custom, as required to hold county liable for deputies' actions under § 1983. Harvey v. Alameda County Medical Center, N.D.Cal.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 960, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 823, 2005 WL 662645. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City that employed police officers who improperly seized and transported arrestee to premises of search warrant failed to establish that there was insufficient evidentiary basis to support verdict against city and officers in arrestee's § 1983 action, or that jury was misinstructed as to relevance of state oversight and certification, and thus city's motions for judgment as matter of law and for new trial would be properly denied; city trained its officers to seize individuals thought to be associated with premises for which they had search warrant, and officers' actions were taken pursuant to such faulty training. Pappas v. New Haven Police Dept., D.Conn.2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1420; Civil Rights 1437; Federal Civil Procedure 2336; Federal Civil Procedure 2339

Municipal defendants and other subdivisions of the state were not liable under Due Process Clause for murder and rape committed by parolee after police officers failed to arrest parolee for violation of parole condition after he entered police station to surrender on a bench warrant, since they were not the moving force behind any constitutional violation; there was no municipal policy, practice, or custom that caused the deprivation of any constitutional right, even though county and borough practice of "checking" and "confirming" warrants could be seen as fostering parolee's release, county board of prison inspectors acquiesced in the transfer of responsibility for retrieving warrants to poorly-trained entry-level workers, and the lax training of the entry-level workers tasked with handling the warrants led directly to the booking specialist missing parolee's warrant. Leidy v. Borough of Glenolden, E.D.Pa.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 547, affirmed 117 Fed.Appx. 176, 2004 WL 2677158. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

School personnel who exhibit deliberate indifference by failing to take appropriate action when they have knowledge that abuse of student is occurring can be held liable under § 1983 for failure to protect. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1065

Mere fact that city allegedly had knowledge of alleged constitutional violations and assaults occurring against municipal police officer and "failed to do anything" was insufficient to show failure to train police department officials, precluding officer's § 1983 claim against city; officer made no showing specifying what training city had failed to provide or demonstrating that city's actions were deliberate and conscious. Brown v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 152. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1352(5)

City's failure to provide more training to police officers in prisoner-rights law or regulation of jail correspondence was inadequate to support civil rights liability of city under failure-to-train theory after police officer allowed mailing of prisoner's letter identifying informant in murder investigation, where release could not be shown to have resulted in informant's death, and informant's death, absent special relationship or state-created danger, did not give rise to violation of constitutional rights. Gatlin ex rel. Gatlin v. Green, D.Minn.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 1064, affirmed 362 F.3d 1089, appeal after remand from federal court 2006 WL 1320467. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Brain-damaged motorist who alleged that township police officer used excessive force during his arrest failed to show pattern of excessive force violations or inadequate training sufficient to establish municipal liability in §§ 1983 action; although township had no written policy concerning arrests of disabled suspects, all officers received training on how to cope with individuals with physical and mental impairments, and explicit township policy prohibited excessive force. Pahle v. Colebrookdale Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

City was liable under § 1983 for violations of plaintiff's constitutional rights arising from her false arrest and closure of bar and seizure of its liquor inventory based on its failure to properly train its officers regarding laws relating to display of liquor licenses and proper procedures associated with closing a premises and seizure of inventory; given that photocopying of liquor licenses was a frequent practice of New York bar owners, the failure of police to properly train officers with regard to laws related to the forgery of liquor licenses was evidence of city's deliberate indifference to the rights of licensees and bar employees, such as plaintiff, who initially presented a photocopy of a liquor license and subsequently produced valid original license. Sulkowska v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2001, 129 F.Supp.2d 274. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Mother's allegation that her home was destroyed and her children were killed as result of city's failure to train police officers to properly deal with barricaded hostage situations was insufficient to support § 1983 claim, absent evidence regarding frequency of "barricaded hostage" situations, extent of existing training program, or causal connection between deficiency in training program and incident. Smith v. City of Plantation, S.D.Fla.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 1323, affirmed 198 F.3d 262. Civil Rights 1420

Evidence was insufficient as a matter of law to establish that alleged inadequacies in city's training of its police officers rose to level of deliberate indifference to rights of residents so as to support claim of municipal liability under § 1983 based on conduct of officer in engaging in high-speed chase and ultimately shooting suspect; while city relied on state's basic training and in-service classes and perhaps should have taken independent steps to maintain its officers' familiarity with more specific department procedures, state training provided officer with "basics" regarding high-speed pursuits and use of force, and state training was modeled on minimum legal standards under state law. Anderson v. City of Glenwood, Ga., S.D.Ga.1995, 893 F.Supp. 1086. Civil Rights 1420

Civil rights plaintiff injured in connection with the arrest of a third party failed to prove a municipal policy of inadequate training, deliberate indifference, and causation, as required to prevail on her failure-to-train claim against township under § 1983; it was insufficient for her to point out alternatives which could have been pursued by the police department. Padilla v. Township of Cherry Hill, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 110 Fed.Appx. 272, 2004 WL 2241024, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

No constitutional violation occurred in police officers' use of allegedly deadly force when a truck was being driven at them at a high rate of speed, and therefore city was not liable, in §§ 1983 action, for allegedly failing to train its officers and lacking a custom or policy to insure that its officers avoided the use of unnecessary deadly force. Herman v. City of Shannon, Mississippi, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 104 Fed.Appx. 398, 2004 WL 1576559, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Even if arrestee had established that city police officers had violated his constitutional rights, he failed to make out claim of municipal liability under § 1983 against city, where he did not offer any evidence suggesting a specific failure in police officers' training. Williams v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22434151, Unreported, affirmed 120 Fed.Appx. 388, 2005 WL 154275. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Members of city council were not subject to supervisory liability under § 1983 for officers' alleged use of excessive force in connection with arrest of motorist, absent evidence that council members themselves caused motorist's injuries, or that they directly supervised any of arresting officers or ratified or condoned any of their alleged wrongful conduct. Fitzpatrick v. Gates, C.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22385397, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Constitutional rights of intoxicated individual, who was removed from fairground and released in parking lot of police station, after which he was struck and killed by automobile, were not violated by police officer or park rangers, and thus survivors could not recover under § 1983 from members of board of police commissioners. Sellers By and Through Sellers v. Baer, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 28 F.3d 895, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 739, 513 U.S. 1084, 130 L.Ed.2d 641. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officers who affixed coroner's seals to premises, precluding anyone's entry, as result of malfunctioning gas stove, could not be liable under federal civil rights statute for deprivation of owners' due process, in that deprivation occurred as result of failure to remove seals when emergency passed, in which police officers were not implicated. Tavarez v. O'Malley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 826 F.2d 671. Civil Rights 1088(3)

If police officer, knowing that burning car was occupied and wanting occupants to be burned to death, directed traffic away from scene in order to prevent any passing driver from saving them, he would be liable under this section for having, under color of city ordinance making him a public officer, deprived plaintiffs' decedents of their lives without due process of law. Jackson v. City of Joliet, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 715 F.2d 1200, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 1325, 465 U.S. 1049, 79 L.Ed.2d 720. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Jury verdict finding that police officer violated motorist's rights under §§ 1983 but not Massachusetts Civil Rights Act (MCRA) was not inconsistent; if §§ 1983 liability was based on state-created danger, jury could have found officer's order to motorist to move or push her car along roadway did not constitute a threat, intimidation, or coercion under MCRA but was, nevertheless, recklessly indifferent to her safety under §§ 1983. Lockhart-Bembery v. Town of Wayland Police Dept., D.Mass.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 11. Civil Rights 1746

Patrons of restaurant and nightclub, who suffered secondary exposure from police officers' use of pepper spray on other persons who were fighting on another floor of building, were not "seized" within meaning of Fourth Amendment, and thus persons who suffered from secondary exposure could pursue excessive force claims only under substantive due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, since officers did not intend to effect those individuals who were not sprayed directly. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Complaint alleging that two officers of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey violated airline passenger's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure by removing her from a plane, after she made cell phone calls reporting that she was being held hostage, and taking her to a psychiatric hospital, stated no cognizable claim against the Port Authority, where complaint merely lumped that claim in with claims against the officers. Turturro v. Continental Airlines, S.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 383. Civil Rights 1395(1)

State police officers did not violate plaintiff's equal protection or due process rights or inflict emotional distress on plaintiff when officers allegedly ordered landowner's removal of chain across dirt road on landowner's premises to allow access to nearby property owners, threatened landowner's arrest for keeping chain on premises, and had landowner's vehicle towed off premises to facilitate neighbor's trespass, where plaintiff did not join landowner as fee owner of parcel until after such incidents occurred and officers' conduct was not alleged to have been directed

Prisoner's allegations that he had spent additional five years in prison for murder he did not commit as result of police officers' failure to comply in good faith with court order requiring them to run fingerprints found at murder scene through automated fingerprint identification system stated § 1983 claim for violation of due process. Newsome v. James, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1318. Civil Rights 1395(5)

There was no evidence that city's process of hiring correction officers, including psychological evaluations and consideration given to the results of those evaluations, was inadequate, much less so faulty as to demonstrate city's deliberate indifference to rights of persons such as plaintiff, who was shot by off-duty correction officer, for purposes of imposing liability on city under civil rights statute, § 1983. Longin by Longin v. Kelly, S.D.N.Y.1995, 875 F.Supp. 196. Civil Rights 1348

Police sergeant who authorized officer to accompany mother to residence of father "to keep the peace" when mother informed police that she intended to retake custody of child did not deprive father of constitutionally protected right, even if officer who accompanied mother illegally deprived father of his liberty interest in custody and control of minor illegitimate child without due process of law. Anderson v. Roberts, C.D.Cal.1986, 659 F.Supp. 19. Civil Rights 1358

Deprivation by defendants, certain law enforcement officers and other individuals engaged jointly with such law-enforcement officials in driving plaintiffs, a black couple, from their home by a heavily damaging and dangerous barrage of gunfire from several different types of lethal weapons on the heels of having been terrorized by the scare-tactic of a forewarning that they were being "watched" by Ku Klux Klan, of plaintiffs' right to security was proscribed by this section. 2221. Prisons and prisoners generally

Though rights of prisoner may be diminished by the needs and exigencies of the institutional environment, he is not wholly without the protections of the Constitution and the due process clause. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Civil rights action is proper remedy for state prisoner who is making constitutional challenge to conditions of his prison life but not to fact or length of his custody. Preiser v. Rodriguez, U.S.N.Y.1973, 93 S.Ct. 1827, 411 U.S. 475, 36 L.Ed.2d 439. Civil Rights 1090

The Heck v. Humphrey rule provides that where success in a prisoner's § 1983 damages action would implicitly question the validity of conviction or duration of sentence, the litigant must first achieve favorable termination of his available state or federal habeas opportunities to challenge the underlying conviction or sentence. Muhammad v. Close, C.A.6 2004, 379 F.3d 413. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1319

District court erred in finding prisoner's § 1983 claims for Fourth Amendment search and seizure violations barred under Heck where circumstances surrounding prisoner's convictions for burglary and receipt of stolen property were unknown from the record; under such circumstances, it was impossible for the district court to determine that a successful § 1983 action for unreasonable search and seizure necessarily implied the invalidity of those convictions. Hughes v. Lott, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 350 F.3d 1157. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Inmates are entitled to environment that does not threaten their mental and physical well-being. Madyun v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 657 F.2d 868. Prisons 13(2)

Prison administrators must be sensitive and alert to protections afforded prisoners by developing judicial scrutiny of prison conditions and practices. Knell v. Bensinger, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 522 F.2d 720. Prisons 9

Limitations on fundamental rights of prisoners must be supported by legitimate and reasonable needs and exigencies of the institutional environment. Sostre v. Preiser, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 519 F.2d 763. Prisons 13(2)

Allegations that prison guards deprived prisoner of sleep, by keeping him up with their singing, talking, and other noise, and that prisoner's segregation cell had roaches, leaky toilet, peeling paint, and writing on wall, did not rise to level of Eighth Amendment claim; claims did not lie outside scope of ordinary discomfort accompanying prison life, and prisoner neglected to report plumbing problems or to use roach traps, which would have resulted in the prison providing additional pest control if any roaches were caught. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593. Sentencing And Punishment 1539; Sentencing And Punishment 1553

To prevail in claim under civil rights statute, prison inmate must demonstrate that inmate possessed liberty or property interest protected by United States Constitution or federal statutes and that, without due process, inmate was deprived of that interest. Husbands v. McClellan, W.D.N.Y.1997, 957 F.Supp. 403, motion to amend denied 990 F.Supp. 214. Civil Rights 1090

In order to prevail in action based on § 1983 and Fourteenth Amendment, prison inmate must demonstrate deprivation of liberty interest protected by Due Process Clause itself or violation of state-created liberty interest. Cespedes v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 454, on reconsideration 969 F.Supp. 254. Civil Rights 1028; Constitutional Law 272(2)

Eighth Amendment does not mandate comfortable prison conditions, and only those deprivations denying minimal civilized measure of life's necessities are sufficiently grave to state a cognizable § 1983 claim based on the Eighth Amendment. Kropp v. McCaughtry, E.D.Wis.1996, 915 F.Supp. 85. Sentencing And Punishment 1532

Responsible state officials cannot be allowed to operate prison facilities that are barbaric and inhumane albeit that prisoners are not to be coddled and that prisons are not to be operated as hotels or country clubs. Pugh v. Locke, M.D.Ala.1976, 406 F.Supp. 318, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 559 F.2d 283, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 97, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 98, certiorari granted in part, reversed in part 98 S.Ct. 3057, 438 U.S. 781, 57 L.Ed.2d 1114, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 3144, 438 U.S. 915, 57 L.Ed.2d 1160. Prisons 17(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prisons are public institutions, the conduct and conditions of which are matters of legitimate public concern. Burnham v. Oswald, W.D.N.Y.1972, 342 F.Supp. 880. Prisons 1

2222. Prison Litigation Reform Act, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison inmate's § 1983 in forma pauperis complaint alleging that prison officials forced him to work outside in inclement conditions on two occasions five months apart did not fall within the exception under the Prison Litigation Reform Act's (PLRA) three-strikes provision for a prisoner under imminent danger of serious physical injury, absent specific fact allegations, other than conclusory assertions that the prison officials were trying to kill him by forcing him to work in extreme conditions despite his blood pressure condition, of serious physical injury, or of a pattern of misconduct evidencing the likelihood of imminent serious physical injury. Martin v. Shelton, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 319 F.3d 1048, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

"Three strikes" provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) precluded inmate from proceeding in forma pauperis in § 1983 action alleging that city attorney had, in inmate's three prior § 1983 suits against police officers for wrongful arrest and excessive force, conspired to conceal officers' misconduct, withheld information supporting inmate's claims, and knowingly misled court, where two of inmate's prior suits arising from incident had been dismissed on res judicata grounds, appeals from those dismissals were summarily dismissed, and inmate was not in imminent physical danger. Higgins v. Carpenter, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2001, 258 F.3d 797, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1803, 535 U.S. 1040, 152 L.Ed.2d 659. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Civil rights complaint brought by pro se prisoner in forma pauperis against state officials seeking relief from order of back-time for parole violation was legally frivolous, and thus subject to dismissal under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), where prisoner failed to plead that parole revocation deprived him of any right created by federal constitution or federal statute. Thomas v. Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 406. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether inmate sufficiently exhausted his administrative remedies prior to instituting suit, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), precluded grant of summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action against correctional officers for allegedly assaulting him in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights. Evans v. Jonathan, W.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 505. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) did not deprive court of subject matter jurisdiction over inmate's § 1983 claims against prison officials for deliberate indifference to his medical needs and excessive use of force, even if some claims within complaint had not been exhausted. Johnson v. True, W.D.Va.2000, 125 F.Supp.2d 186, appeal dismissed 32 Fed.Appx. 692, 2002 WL 596403. Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner, who had had three or more prior prisoner actions dismissed for failure to state claim, was statutorily barred from bringing in forma pauperis § 1983 action alleging that he was "rousted after a riot" at jail where he was no longer detained; current complaint did not seek relief from imminent danger of serious physical injury, within meaning of exception to multiple filing bar. Young v. Sisneroz, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22159059, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

2223. Loss of rights upon imprisonment, prisons and prisoners generally

Although prisoners' rights must necessarily accommodate needs and objectives of prison regime to which they are committed, prisoners still enjoy generally protection of constitution, and thus if constitutionally protected interest can be made out, and some harm thereto is shown which is sufficiently grievous and which cannot be justified by exigencies of incarceration, then proper case for relief exists. Shimabuku v. Britton, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1974, 503 F.2d 38. Civil Rights 1090; Convicts 1

One does not loss all his constitutional rights when he enters prison. LeVier v. Woodson, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1971, 443 F.2d 360. See, also, Brown v. Brown, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1966, 368 F.2d 992; Stiltner v. Rhay, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1963, 322 F.2d 314, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 678, 376 U.S. 920, 11 L.Ed.2d 615, rehearing denied 84 S.Ct. 972, 376 U.S. 959, 11 L.Ed.2d 978; Cook v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y. 1984, 578 F.Supp. 179; Bethea v. Daggett, D.C.Ga.1970, 329 F.Supp. 796, affirmed 444 F.2d 112; Seale v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1971, 326 F.Supp. 1375; U.S. ex rel. Diamond v. Social Service Dept., D.C.Pa.1967, 263 F.Supp. 971. Convicts 1

Lawful incarceration brings about the necessary withdrawal or limitation of many privileges and rights, a restriction justified by the considerations underlying the penal system. Childs v. Duckworth, N.D.Ind.1981, 509 F.Supp. 1254, affirmed 705 F.2d 915. Prisons 4(1)

Prisoners do not forfeit all constitutional protections by reason of their conviction and confinement; however, their retained rights are necessarily limited by the fact of confinement as well as by legitimate goals and policies of the penal institution. Brown v. Hilton, D.C.N.J.1980, 492 F.Supp. 771. Convicts 1

Prisoner does not retain constitutional rights which are inconsistent with his status as a prisoner or with legitimate penological objectives of corrections system; imprisonment unavoidably results in forfeiture of certain rights and privileges commonly exercised in a free society. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Convicts 1

2224. Reluctance of courts to interfere, prisons and prisoners generally

Policy of judicial restraint on part of federal courts in refraining from interference with state penal authorities in their administration of a state's penal system is not a justifiable basis for failure to take cognizance of valid federal constitutional claims relating to rights secured to inmates by Federal Constitution and laws of United States. Battle v. Anderson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1977, 564 F.2d 388. Prisons 4(3)

However reluctant federal courts may be to interfere with the administration of state prisons by state officials, they may not avoid determination of whether rights protected by Constitution have been violated. Fox v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1976, 539 F.2d 1065. Prisons 4(3)

While federal courts are usually reluctant to interfere in matters of state prison administration, they are not unwilling in all situations to review the actions of state prison administrators to determine the existence of possible violations of constitutional rights. Parker v. McKeithen, C.A.5 (La.) 1974, 488 F.2d 553, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 67, 419 U.S. 838, 42 L.Ed.2d 65. Prisons 4(3)

Generally, regulation of prison is administrative matter for prison officials and officials' action in regard thereto is not subject to judicial review except under most unusual circumstances. LeVier v. Woodson, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1971, 443 F.2d 360. See, also, Baldwin v. Smith, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1971, 446 F.2d 1043; Landman v. Royster, D.C.Va.1971, 333 F.Supp. 621, supplemented 354 F.Supp. 1302. Prisons 4(2.1)

A federal court should be reluctant to interfere with operation of state prison and intervention is warranted only upon clear showing of violation of federally guaranteed constitutional right. Holt v. Sarver, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1971, 442 F.2d 304, on remand 363 F.Supp. 194. See, also, Martinez v. Mancusi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 443 F.2d 921, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 1202, 401 U.S. 983, 28 L.Ed.2d 335; Burns v. Swenson, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1970, 430 F.2d 771, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 743, 404 U.S. 1062, 30 L.Ed.2d 751, rehearing denied 92 S.Ct. 1178, 405 U.S. 969, 31 L.Ed.2d 245. Prisons 12

2225. Discretion of prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Constitutionally protected liberty interests may be created in favor of prisoners even when the prerequisite which limits the discretion of prison officials is a predictive judgment based on certain guidelines rather than a specific factual finding; therefore, the fact that prison officials are required to make a predictive determination does not preclude the existence of a protected liberty interest even though the predictive determination inherently involves a large measure of discretion. Bills v. Henderson, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1980, 631 F.2d 1287. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Discretion that a jailor may lawfully exercise in imprisoning an individual is more limited in scope than the discretion that a policeman may exercise in effectuating an arrest and much more limited than the discretion accorded a prison administrator in managing prison. Douthit v. Jones, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 619 F.2d 527, rehearing denied 641 F.2d 345. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Federal courts employ policy of minimum intrusion into affairs of state prison administration, and state prison officials enjoy wide discretion in operation of state penal institutions; such deference will be tendered, however, only as to necessary or essential concomitants of incarceration, and policy of judicial restraint will not encompass any failure to take cognizance of valid constitutional claims. Williams v. Edwards, C.A.5 (La.) 1977, 547 F.2d 1206. Prisons 4(3)

Prison officials have broad discretion in area of conditions of confinement. Hill v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 537 F.2d 214. Prisons 17(1)

2226. Duty of prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

The Department of Corrections was under no duty to verify or otherwise review correctness of judicially issued commitment order, nor were guards under any duty to act when prisoner under their custody asserted his innocence, no matter how forcefully, and thus failure to take such actions could not form basis for federal civil rights action. Buenrostro v. Collazo, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 777 F.Supp. 128, affirmed 973 F.2d 39. Civil Rights 1098

The task of determining the rights and deprivations of state prisoners falls principally upon the prison authorities, whose judgment in the exercise of this responsibility, federal courts will not ordinarily question. Poe v. Werner, M.D.Pa.1974, 386 F.Supp. 1014. Prisons 4(2.1)

State correctional officer and deputy superintendent who were not present for alleged assault by other officers on prisoner could not be liable under § 1983, for failure to investigate assault, without showing of their personal involvement; there was no evidence that either officer or deputy superintendent created policy or custom under which assault occurred, that they were grossly negligent in the management of subordinates who caused assault, or that they failed to remedy violation when they had authority to do so, and lack of investigation itself did not result in deprivation of constitutional right. Harris v. Skinner, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22384794, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

2227. Discipline and security in prison generally, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison inmate's alleged detailed conditions of placement in disciplinary segregation at state prison, including inability to participate in prison programs, educational programs, work programs, loss of contact visits, and reduction in personal items, were not so atypical and significant as to constitute a deprivation of a liberty interest, and thereby failed to trigger procedural due process protections. Lekas v. Briley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 405 F.3d 602. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(5)

Rule giving prison officials discretion to act for any reason, but placing restraints on their options if their motive is disciplinary, creates neither a liberty nor a property interest; overruling Abdul-Wadood v. Duckworth, 860 F.2d 280 . Wallace v. Robinson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 940 F.2d 243, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1563, 503 U.S. 961, 118

L.Ed.2d 210. Constitutional Law 272(2); Constitutional Law 277(1)

Unless an infringement upon constitutional or fundamental rights is involved, courts are reluctant to interfere with a prison's internal discipline methods. Glick v. Sargent, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1983, 696 F.2d 413. Prisons 13(10)

Maintenance of discipline in a prison is an executive function with which judicial branch ordinarily will not interfere. Wetzel v. Edwards, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1980, 635 F.2d 283. Prisons 13(10)

Prison discipline is generally a matter for prison authorities and not for the courts, but where constitutional infirmities exist, the prison deference rule will yield to the remedial power of the federal court. Thompson v. Capps, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 626 F.2d 389, rehearing denied 632 F.2d 894. Prisons 13(3)

State has compelling interest in maintaining security and order in its prisons and, to extent that it furthers this interest in reasonable and nonarbitrary ways, property claims by inmates must give way. Sullivan v. Ford, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 609 F.2d 197, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2950, 446 U.S. 969, 64 L.Ed.2d 829. Prisons 13(2)

Prison administrators are required to deal in a constitutional manner with convicts who are violent and unruly as well as with those whose conduct is exemplary or at least peaceful, and while prison officials must have some latitude in imposing conditions reasonably necessary to control prisoners' behavior, the contributory fault of an inmate does not necessarily deprive him of his right to relief from deprivations of constitutional dimension. Wycoff v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 572 F.2d 1260. Prisons 13(2)

Because the sentence imposed for the violations following disciplinary hearing did not include recommended loss of good time, the favorable termination rule set forth in Heck, which precluded a §§ 1983 action based on alleged procedural defects during an inmate's disciplinary hearing where the sanction imposed could affect credits toward release based on good-time served, unless the inmate succeeded in obtaining a favorable result, did not apply to prisoner's due process claim arising from disciplinary hearing. Shell v. Brzezniak, W.D.N.Y.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 362. Civil Rights 1092

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether prison disciplinary action against Muslim inmate who refused to assist in preparation of pork while working in prison kitchen constituted substantial burden on inmate's religious exercise and did not further institutional interests in security or prompt food preparation, and as to whether action was reasonable in light of potential burden on prison officials and alternatives available to further penological goals, precluded summary judgment on inmate's §§1983 claim against corrections employees and officials alleging violation of right to free exercise of religion. Williams v. Bitner, M.D.Pa.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 370. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County could not be liable to detainee under § 1983 with respect to imposing discipline for possession of shank, where it was within discretion of disciplinary hearing official to find officer who found shank more credible than detainee, and there was no pattern of prison officials planting evidence in cells in order to bring false charges. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1348

Prisoner who violated prison rule and was placed in keeplock as result of disciplinary charges had no standing to bring civil rights claim alleging deprivation of his constitutional right to due process; prisoner had no liberty interest in not being confined in keeplock pending investigation into alleged disciplinary violation. Uzzell v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1995, 893 F.Supp. 259. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Prison inmate had no claim against correctional officials for constitutional deprivation merely because they charged him with disciplinary violation. Meadows v. Miller, W.D.Tenn.1994, 855 F.Supp. 219. Civil Rights 1092

Maintaining institutional security and preserving internal order and discipline are legitimate goals which justify restrictions on prison inmates' constitutional rights, and, to achieve such goals, prison administrators must be accorded broad leeway to implement and execute policies which they believe are necessary. Griffin v. Smith, W.D.N.Y.1980, 493 F.Supp. 129. Prisons 13(2); Prisons 13(3)

Maintaining institutional security and preserving internal order and discipline are legitimate and essential goals of prison administration which may require limitation of prisoners' retained rights. Brown v. Hilton, D.C.N.J.1980, 492 F.Supp. 771. Prisons 4(1)

2228. Reasons for not remedying deprivation, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether state prison officials' refusal to secure Sukkah booth in prison yard due to security concerns was merely pretext for interfering with Jewish inmate's right to freely exercise his religion precluded summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action alleging violation of his First Amendment free exercise rights. Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1237. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison officials could not be permitted to continue to inflict unconstitutional hardships on great majority of inmates because officials were incapable of remedying conditions they relied upon to justify their actions, and prisoners could not be made to suffer unconstitutional deprivations because of lack of management capability found in corrections department. Jefferson v. Southworth, D.C.R.I.1978, 447 F.Supp. 179, affirmed 616 F.2d 598, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 115, 449 U.S. 839, 66 L.Ed.2d 45. Prisons 12

2229. ---- Inadequate resources, reasons for not remedying deprivation, prisons and prisoners generally

Perpetuation of unconstitutional conditions of confinement cannot be excused by inadequate funding or by an allegedly contrary duty at state law. Smith v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1039. Prisons 4(1)

Inadequate resources can never be an adequate justification for state's depriving any person of his constitutional rights. Rhem v. Malcolm, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 507 F.2d 333, on remand 389 F.Supp. 964. Constitutional Law 82(1)

Individual or class may not be deprived of constitutional rights simply because of economic considerations, and lack of funds is not acceptable excuse for unconstitutional conditions of incarceration. Owens-El v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1978, 442 F.Supp. 1368. Prisons 4(1)

State may not justify denial of pretrial detainee's rights for budgetary reasons. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(4)

Inadequate funding by legislature was no answer to existence of unconstitutional conditions in state penal institutions especially where legislature had had ample opportunity to make provision for state to meet constitutional responsibilities in area. Pugh v. Locke, M.D.Ala.1976, 406 F.Supp. 318, affirmed and remanded 559 F.2d 283, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 97, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 98, certiorari granted in part, reversed in part 98 S.Ct. 3057, 438 U.S. 781, 57 L.Ed.2d 1114, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 3144, 438 U.S. 915, 57 L.Ed.2d 1160 . Prisons 4(1)

2230. Juvenile offenders, prisons and prisoners generally

District of Columbia owed duty of care to delinquent youth in its custody not to act with deliberate indifference to his care and protection, a violation of which might support substantive due process claim against the District under §§ 1983; District had assumed position of the youth's legal custodian and primary caregiver, and had placed him in independent living program which constrained his liberty by limiting, among other things, where he lived and what he could do. Smith v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2005, 413 F.3d 86, 367 U.S.App.D.C. 86. Infants 280

Juveniles transferred to county jail and detained pending trial as adults may not be subjected to devastating psychological and reprehensible physical conditions. Swansey v. Elrod, E.D.Ill.1975, 386 F.Supp. 1138. Infants 68.3

State inmate's § 1983 claim against jail officials for improperly placing him in adult facilities, rather than in youth facilities, and for failing to provide adequate education services accrued when inmate became aware of existence of his illiteracy and violent, anti-social, hardened-criminal behavior. Edwards v. Jasper County Youth Court, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 94 Fed.Appx. 224, 2004 WL 764084, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

2231. Constitutional rights affected, prisons and prisoners generally

Courts are limited in their exercise of power in area of prison administration to deprivations which represent constitutional abuses and they cannot prohibit a given condition or treatment in prison management unless it reaches the level of an unconstitutional deprivation. Sweet v. South Carolina Dept. of Corrections, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 854. Prisons 4(2.1); Prisons 12

Alleged constitutional deprivation relating to conditions of a prisoner's confinement presented a matter cognizable under this section. Cooper v. Lockhart, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1973, 489 F.2d 308. Federal Courts 227

Prisoner had no federal constitutional right to have arresting officer or defense attorney prosecuted for alleged crimes, and thus claim seeking injunction directing such relief was not cognizable in civil rights action. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5); Constitutional Law 82(6.1)

Allegation that prison officials limited number of grievances allowed prisoner presented no constitutional claim to support § 1983 suit, as prisoner had no right to any grievance procedure, and right of access to courts was not compromised by any limitation on grievances. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593. Prisons 13(6)

General policies, rules, and regulations of prison did not violate constitutional rights but, rather, were designed merely to regulate the daily lives of the inmates and to preserve institutional security and challenge to the rules did not state a viable claim under this section. Allen v. Coughlin, N.D.N.Y.1981, 527 F.Supp. 1096. Civil Rights 1098

Civil rights action is a proper remedy for a state prisoner to make a constitutional challenge to the conditions of his prison life. Wilson v. Nevada Dept. of Prisons, D.C.Nev.1981, 511 F.Supp. 750. Civil Rights 1090

State inmate did not have a liberty interest in his work assignment, family visits, or housing assignment that would implicate due process concerns, for purposes of §§ 1983 claim alleging that he did not receive due process at disciplinary hearing. Nash v. Wilkinson, C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 254, 2005 WL 419484, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(7.1)

Protections afforded by the Due Process Clause do not extend to every change in the conditions of confinement which adversely affects prisoners. Bridges v. Lee, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 225, 2005 WL 14991, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2)

2232. Cruel and unusual punishment, prisons and prisoners generally

State prisoner convicted of capital murder was not entitled to preliminary injunction or stay of execution, in §§

1983 action challenging the lethal injection protocol as violative of the prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment; prisoner unreasonably delayed, in that he waited years to pursue any state remedy, despite knowing that he faced death by lethal injection and being aware of other legal challenges to the protocol, the Eighth Amendment did not require the use of medically optimal execution methods, and there was no showing that prisoner faced risk of harm that rose to the level of cruel and unusual punishment. Hamilton v. Jones, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2007, 472 F.3d 814. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Female prison guard's alleged solicitation of a male prisoner's manual masturbation, even under the threat of reprisal, did not present more than de minimis injury, and therefore did not give rise to a claim under the Eighth Amendment. Boxer X v. Harris, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 437 F.3d 1107. Sentencing And Punishment 1554

Conditions at county jail did not pose a "substantial risk of serious harm," as required to show violation of Eighth Amendment rights of inmate who was beaten and injured by three other inmates in his cell over alleged money dispute, even if inmates were allowed to keep money in their cells, play cards and gamble, jail had history of inmate-on-inmate attacks, and jail's layout presented some difficulty in continuous observation of inmates, where inmates were segregated based on particularized factors, including kind of crime committed and potential personal conflicts, jail was not understaffed at time of attack, serious inmate-on-inmate violence was not the norm, fights that did occur were linked to no recurring specific cause, and jailers had history of punishing inmate violence. Purcell ex rel. Estate of Morgan v. Toombs County, GA, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 400 F.3d 1313. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Alleged lead contamination in water at correctional facility was not cruel and unusual punishment, for purposes of state prison inmate's § 1983 action against prison officials, where presence of lead in water was due to corrosion of water pipes, but only when water was still overnight, and inmate was told to let water run before drinking it in the morning. Carroll v. DeTella, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 255 F.3d 470. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Evidence in § 1983 action brought by prison inmates who had been held out-of-doors while prison officials searched buildings after quelling disturbances, for four days in the summer and 17 hours in the winter, was sufficient, if believed, to show that the defendant prison officials had actual knowledge of the inmates' exposure to the elements and need for sanitation, edible food, and adequate drinking water, and that they intentionally disregarded these conditions, in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Johnson v. Lewis, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2000, 217 F.3d 726, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 2215, 532 U.S. 1065, 150 L.Ed.2d 209. Civil Rights 1420

Inmate's testimony that correctional officer struck him in head and face 20 to 25 times while four other officers were restraining his limbs, after inmate complied with order to lie face down on floor without resisting efforts to restrain him, and evidence of serious injuries sustained by inmate, supported district court's conclusion that correctional officer used force maliciously and sadistically for purpose of causing inmate harm, thereby inflicting cruel and unusual punishment in violation of Eighth Amendment. Estate of Davis by Ostenfeld v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1388. Sentencing And Punishment 1548; Prisons 13(4)

Absent any definition of "physical injury" in Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), which requires prisoner to make prior showing of physical injury before bringing any federal civil action, court will be guided by established Eighth Amendment standards in determining whether prisoner has sustained necessary physical injury to support claim for mental or emotional suffering, and, thus, injury must be more than de minimis, but need not be significant. Siglar v. Hightower, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 112 F.3d 191. Civil Rights 1090

Prison librarian's supervisor was not deliberately indifferent toward and did not tacitly approve librarian's act of striking inmate, and, thus, supervisor was not liable to inmate in § 1983 action alleging cruel and unusual punishment, even though librarian had been admitted to psychiatric hospital for bipolar disorder due to chemical imbalance; following the hospitalization, supervisor contacted librarian's physician and was assured of fitness to return to work, librarian had no prior history of aggressive behavior problems at work, and supervisor intervened to stop librarian's conduct. White v. Holmes, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 21 F.3d 277, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

For purposes of determining tort liability under § 1983 for violation of Eighth Amendment's prohibition against infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, "punishment" has both objective and subjective component; objective component is nature of acts or practices alleged to constitute cruel and unusual punishment, and subjective component is intent with which acts or practices constituting alleged punishment are inflicted. Jackson v. Duckworth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 955 F.2d 21. Civil Rights 1090

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether corrections officers acted with deliberate indifference to prisoners' health or safety in transport of prisoners by using restraints during prolonged transport that were secured more tightly than usual, causing greater pain than was necessary to ensure that they were securely restrained, precluding summary judgment on prisoners' civil rights claim alleging cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth Amendment. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Pretrial detainee proceeding in forma pauperis failed to state a nonfrivolous claim upon which relief could be granted against parish sheriff under §§ 1983 by alleging that manner and timing of his evacuation from flooded prison system medical unit following a hurricane constituted cruel and unusual punishment, since detainee did not allege that sheriff personally acted with deliberate indifference to detainee's safety. Tate v. Gusman, E.D.La.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 519. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

To state an Eighth Amendment "conditions of confinement" claim under §§ 1983, a prisoner must satisfy two prongs, in that, first, the deprivation alleged must be, objectively, sufficiently serious, in that a prison official's act or omission must result in the denial of the minimal civilized measure of life's necessities, and the second requirement, which follows from the principle that only the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain implicates the Eighth Amendment, is that a prison official must have a sufficiently culpable state of mind, and that state of mind is one of deliberate indifference to inmate health or safety. Walker v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2006, 448 F.Supp.2d 719. Sentencing And Punishment 1532

In light of substantial questions in §§ 1983 action regarding whether, pursuant to California's actual practice in carrying out lethal-injection protocol, there was undue risk that death row inmate would still be conscious following administration of five grams of thiopental sodium, so that inmate might suffer cruel and unusual punishment from pain following injections of pancuronium bromide and potassium chloride, district court would use equitable powers to fashion the following remedy, and if prison officials declined to implement the remedy, district court would grant preliminary injunction staying the execution and hold hearing on merits of inmate's claims within 90 days: district court would ask prison officials either to either certify they would use only sodium thiopental or another barbiturate or combination of barbiturates in inmate's execution or to agree to independent verification by qualified person that inmate is unconscious before either pancuronium bromide or potassium chloride is injected. Morales v. Hickman, N.D.Cal.2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 1037, affirmed 438 F.3d 926, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1314, 163 L.Ed.2d 1148. Sentencing And Punishment 1796

Court in §§ 1983 action would not issue temporary restraining order, barring administration of three drug lethal injection protocol to prison inmate, on grounds that inmate would suffer pain constituting cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth Amendment; intravenous sodium pentothal, administered in massive dose, would ensure profound unconsciousness, before lethal drugs pancuronium bromide (Pavulon) and potassium chloride were administered, while there were problems with inmate's veins caused by years of drug abuse medical experts confirmed they were adequate, and placement of medically trained observers in room next to execution chamber was acceptable compromise between need to have them available and need for them to remain anonymous. Evans v. Saar, D.Md.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 519.

Absent allegations regarding conditions of his confinement, arrestee who alleged that he was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment in violation of Eighth Amendment when he was incarcerated upon his arrest failed to state civil rights claim. Garcia Rodriguez v. Andreu Garcia, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1395(6)

For purposes of screening provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prisoner stated §§ 1983 claim for violation of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment based on deliberate indifference of corrections officer alleged to have repeatedly harassed and threatened prisoner for not being a good "snitch." David v. Hill, S.D.Tex.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 749. Civil Rights 1395(7)

County jail officers' use of force against inmate was within scope of jail's policy for maintaining and restoring order, and thus, officers were not liable under §§ 1983 to inmate for cruel and unusual punishment; inmate had refused to return to cell as ordered, he had verbally abused officers, an officer fired two Taser gun shots rather than one continuous-trigger shot, officer decided not to fire third shot, inmate suffered only minor injury, and inmate had a history of self harm. Manier v. Cook, E.D.Wash.2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 1282. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Correctional officer was not liable to inmate under §§ 1983 for violating Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment by failing to intervene to protect inmate from attack by another officer, where officer had no reasonable opportunity to prevent the other officer's initial blow to inmate, and thereafter attempted to intervene. Orwat v. Maloney, D.Mass.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 146. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Death row inmate was not likely to suffer irreparable harm as result of state's mechanism for carrying out sentence of death by lethal injection, and thus inmate was not entitled to preliminary injunction in §§ 1983 action to delay his execution, despite inmate's contention that there was possibility that sedative used would not function properly, where state administered skeletal muscle relaxant after sedative, followed by lethal injection, chance that inmate would be conscious of any pain associated with second two drugs and of his death was less than 6/1000 of one percent, inmate selected lethal injection over constitutionally acceptable alternative of electrocution, and inmate waited over five years before raising claim. Reid v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 543. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Prison officials did not treat inmate in cruel and unusual manner, in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights, when they placed him on his back in five points restraint on mattress, with arms and legs secured and belt over chest, after he shoved plate of food back at guard serving it to him, causing contents to spill on to guard, and began yelling. Sadler v. Young, W.D.Va.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 689, reversed 118 Fed.Appx. 762, 2005 WL 19486. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1549

State prison inmate's § 1983 complaint, alleging that members of the lockup unit staff deprived him of food and recreation, that they gave him rotten food, reduced his ration every day, and gave him trays with food missing, and that these actions caused him to lose twenty-five pounds and caused him stomach pain and headaches, was sufficient, when inmate was given the benefit of the inferences to which he was entitled at the pleadings stage, to state a claim against the members of the lockup unit staff for violating the Eighth Amendment by depriving him of food and exercise. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison inmate's claims that prison officials violated Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment, through verbal abuse, denial of medical attention after he was struck in leg with basketball, and officer's act of slamming him against wall and rubbing against him, were insufficient to support constitutional or civil rights violation; inmate's medical records showed that he was examined half an hour after basketball incident occurred and was determined to have full range of motion with no swelling or bruising, inmate's verbal abuse claims were not cognizable under § 1983 and were insufficient to show viable constitutional violation, and officer's alleged use of force against inmate was de minimis and insufficient to violate Constitution. Govan v. Campbell, N.D.N.Y.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 289. Sentencing And Punishment 1546; Sentencing And Punishment 1548; Sentencing And Punishment 1554

In challenging conditions of his confinement, prisoner is in effect claiming that they constituted cruel and unusual punishment under the Eight Amendment. Baker v. Lehman, E.D.Pa.1996, 932 F.Supp. 666. Sentencing And Punishment 1532

Inmate failed to state cause of action in complaint for violation of Eighth Amendment guarantee against cruel and unusual punishment, when he alleged that he was placed in section of prison where he was denied education programs, rehabilitative programs, state pay, and access to games or television, was given limited access to showers, and was required to share one sink, one water fountain, two urinals, and four toilets with 49 other inmates; inmate was not deprived of minimal civilized measure of life's necessities. Brown v. McBride, N.D.Ind.1996, 929 F.Supp. 1132. Sentencing And Punishment 1532; Prisons 17(1)

Material issue of fact as to whether deceased inmate's constitutional rights to be free from cruel and unusual punishment and to due process were violated by city, city corporation, and city employees precluded summary judgment in administratrix's federal civil rights action arising from inmate's death. D'Angelo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 929 F.Supp. 129. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

When claim is asserted that particular conditions or treatment in prison constitute cruel and unusual punishment, § 1983 is means by which prisoners may gain redress for conditions which result in unquestioned and serious deprivations of basic human needs or for conditions which deprive prisoners of minimal civilized measure of life's necessities. Hudgins v. DeBruyn, S.D.Ind.1996, 922 F.Supp. 144. Civil Rights 1090

Prisoner alleging in civil rights action that prison official inflicted cruel and unusual punishment must prove both subjective and objective component. Walker v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1995, 912 F.Supp. 307. Sentencing And Punishment 1532

Dirty showers which did not pose serious risk to inmate's health were not cruel and unusual punishment in violation of Eighth Amendment and could not be basis for § 1983 civil rights claim against various state prison officials. Ishaaq v. Compton, W.D.Tenn.1995, 900 F.Supp. 935. Sentencing And Punishment 1539

Analysis of Eight Amendment civil rights claim involves both subjective aspect, whether prison officials acted with sufficiently culpable state of mind, and objective factor, whether alleged wrongdoing was harmful enough to establish constitutional violation. Moyers v. Buescher, E.D.Mo.1992, 806 F.Supp. 218. Sentencing And Punishment 1532

Actions which contravene prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment guaranteed by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8 may be enjoined under this section. Ahrens v. Thomas, W.D.Mo.1977, 434 F.Supp. 873, affirmed in part, modified in part on other grounds 570 F.2d 286. Civil Rights 1454

State department of corrections officials did not violate inmate's Eighth Amendment rights by distributing free tobacco and then allegedly failing to provide smoking cessation programs when prisons became smoke-free, where inmates were informed they could purchase nicotine patches or gum and were offered smoking cessation classes. Woodberry v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 362, 2004 WL 2651299, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1599, 544 U.S. 909, 161 L.Ed.2d 285. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

State correctional officers' failure to seatbelt prisoner in van during transport to jail did not pose substantial risk of serious harm, as would support prisoner's Eighth Amendment claim based on officers' failure to insure his safety, in his action under §§ 1983 seeking to recover damages following van rollover in which he was ejected and sustained injuries resulting in quadriplegia; even though severity of harm should motor vehicle accident occur could be exacerbated by failure to seatbelt, risk of accident was dependent on host of factors unrelated to use of seatbelts. Dexter v. Ford Motor Co., C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 637, 2004 WL 254753, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Prison official did not act maliciously, as required for excessive use of force claim under Eighth Amendment, when he allegedly pressed state prisoner's face into wall, to attempt to secure compliance of prisoner, who was arguing with him about manner in which he was conducting pat frisk; amount of force used was not significantly disproportional to need to conduct search, rather it was consistent with good faith attempt to maintain prison discipline and order. Kalwasinski v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22973420, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Even if inmate did not exhaust his available administrative remedies, in his § 1983 claim that corrections official's alleged forgery of request for extension of time for inmate's disciplinary hearing resulted in inmate's continued confinement in special housing unit (SHU), no Eighth Amendment violation occurred; deprivation of being housed in SHU was not so serious as to constitute cruel and unusual punishment. Khalild v. Reda, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 42145, Unreported. Prisons 13(5); Sentencing And Punishment 1553

Allegations by estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during riot at state prison that review board conducted an inadequate investigation failed to raise inference that former prison officials promoted a custom or pattern of inadequate investigations, or encouraged review boards to exonerate staff members who violated use of force policy as a matter of course, and thus, officials were not liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107950, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2233. Shocks the conscience test, prisons and prisoners generally

Standard of liability in civil rights action based on alleged cruel and unusual punishment with respect to operation of county jail was whether plaintiff proved exceptional circumstances and conduct on part of defendant so grossly incompetent, inadequate or excessive as to shock the conscience or to be intolerable to basic fairness. Clappier v. Flynn, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1979, 605 F.2d 519. Civil Rights 1462

2234. Deliberate indifference standard, prisons and prisoners generally

Whether the District of Columbia's deliberate indifference to care and protection of delinquent youth in its custody, in not promulgating any standards for selecting or monitoring third parties providing independent living programs for such youths, with result that youth was placed in program run by unlicensed providers and required to live in allegedly unsafe facility with no locks on outer doors and allegedly inadequate security, was moving force behind youth's murder by unidentified third party while present in that facility was question for jury, so as to prevent grant of the District's motion for judgment as matter of law in civil rights action brought by youth's grandmother for alleged violation of his substantive due process rights. Smith v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2005, 413 F.3d 86, 367 U.S.App.D.C. 86. Civil Rights 1431

Louisiana prison's maintenance of policy requiring judicial approval of elective medical procedures did not evidence deliberate indifference to rights of female prisoner seeking non-therapeutic abortion, as required to impose liability under §§ 1983; prison officials attempted to assist prisoner's compliance with policy. Victoria W. v. Larpenter, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 369 F.3d 475. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Prison official's acting or failing to act with deliberate indifference to substantial risk of serious harm to prisoner is equivalent of recklessly disregarding that risk, for Eighth Amendment purposes. Street v. Corrections Corporation of America, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 102 F.3d 810. Sentencing And Punishment 1533

Test for "deliberate indifference" by prison officials to rights of prisoner, as will allow recovery by prisoner in federal civil rights action, is twofold; first, prisoner must demonstrate that he is incarcerated under conditions posing substantial risk of serious harm, and second, prisoner must demonstrate that defendant prison officials possessed sufficient culpable intent. Hayes v. New York City Dept. of Corrections, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 84 F.3d 614. Civil Rights 1090; Sentencing And Punishment 1533

To prove actionable violation of Eighth Amendment for harm suffered in prison, inmate must demonstrate that deprivation suffered was objectively, sufficiently serious, and must establish that prison officials had sufficiently culpable state of mind in allowing deprivation to take place; "sufficiently culpable state of mind" means being deliberately indifferent to inmate's health or safety. Wallis v. Baldwin, C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1074. Sentencing And Punishment 1532

Deliberate indifference which will result in finding of violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights does not require a finding of express intent to harm, but must involve more than ordinary lack of due care for the prisoner's interests or safety; it is lower than the intentional and malicious infliction of injury and less than the degree of recklessness required for conviction of second-degree murder; official or municipality acts with deliberate indifference if its conduct or adopted policy disregards a known or obvious risk that is very likely to result in the violation of prisoner's constitutional rights. Berry v. City of Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 900 F.2d 1489. Sentencing And Punishment 1533

Former pretrial detainee had to demonstrate in civil rights suit that challenged restrictions were used intentionally by jail officials to punish detainees; intent could either be expressed or could be inferred from restrictions that were not reasonably related to legitimate governmental objective. Kincaid v. Rusk, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1982, 670 F.2d 737. Civil Rights 1092

Within context of prisoner's civil rights action against prison officials to recover for officials' alleged deliberate deprivation of prisoner's constitutional rights, term "deliberate deprivation" denotes two species of culpability: actual intent and recklessness; "actual intent" encompasses both the special intent to deprive prisoner of constitutional rights as well as general intent to perform conduct whose natural consequence is deprivation of prisoner's constitutional rights, and "recklessness" comprehends objective standard of whether officials' conduct is with such disregard of prisoner's clearly established constitutional rights that the action cannot be reasonable characterized as being in good faith. Little v. Walker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1977, 552 F.2d 193, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1507, 435 U.S. 932, 55 L.Ed.2d 530. Civil Rights 1090

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether city police officers had subjective knowledge of a pretrial detainee's highly intoxicated state and whether they acted with deliberate indifference when they left him with his hands handcuffed behind his back precluded summary judgment for the officers, even on qualified immunity grounds, in the detainee's §§ 1983 suit claiming a Due Process violation in connection with injuries sustained in a fall. Carroll v. City of Quincy, D.Mass.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 215. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In cases where a prisoner is challenging prison conditions in violation of the Eighth Amendment, the subjective-requirement analysis should focus on whether the prison official acted with deliberate indifference to inmate health or safety, not whether defendants were motivated by a malicious and sadistic intent to harm prisoner. Jones v. Garcia, S.D.Cal.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 1095. Sentencing And Punishment 1533

Material issues of fact, as to whether jail commander ratified or encouraged practice of "pencil-whipping," involving making false entries on records showing observations of cell occupants that were not actually made, precluded summary judgment that commander was not liable in §§ 1983 action alleging deliberate indifference resulting in substantive due process violation of rights of detainee who hanged himself in cell. Estate of Abdollahi v. County of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 1194. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison official, who never had any direct or indirect contact with inmate and had no involvement regarding his housing assignments and classification and who had no knowledge that inmate ever complained to any correctional officer that he feared for his safety or requested orally or in writing to be placed into protective custody, could not be held liable to inmate under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to inmate's safety in violation of the Eighth Amendment; there was no evidence that official was subjectively aware that inmate faced a substantial risk of serious harm and no evidence of a longstanding and well-documented risk of inmate attacks, nor evidence that official was exposed to information concerning the risk. Thompson v. Spears, S.D.Fla.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 1224, affirmed 129 Fed.Appx. 497, 2005 WL 901871. Civil Rights 1358

In order to establish a claim for deliberate indifference in a civil rights lawsuit under the Fourteenth Amendment, a plaintiff must show that he was detained under conditions posing a substantial risk of serious harm, and a prison or jail official knew of, and disregarded, an excessive risk to his health or safety; if the jail official knew of the risk to the plaintiff's safety and responded reasonably, the plaintiff's claim fails, even if the harm was not ultimately averted. Layman v. Alexander, W.D.N.C.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 784. Constitutional Law 262

To show "deliberate indifference" by prison official, it is enough that official acted or failed to act despite his knowledge of substantial risk of serious harm; deliberate indifference standard reflects § 1983 standard, requiring both deprivation and intent, nuanced to fit Eighth Amendment's requirements. Velazquez-Martinez v. Colon, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 961 F.Supp. 362. Civil Rights 1090

To state claim under § 1983 for violation of rights afforded by Fourteenth Amendment, inmate must allege facts sufficient to support his claim that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to those rights. Herrera v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1993, 815 F.Supp. 713. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Deliberate indifference to deprivation of state prison inmate's rights is actionable under this section where it can be shown that prison's authorities manifested an actual intent to so deprive him of his rights, or recklessness in ignoring threats. Burr v. Duckworth, N.D.Ind.1982, 547 F.Supp. 192, affirmed 746 F.2d 1482. Civil Rights 1090

Since state prison officials took steps to correct conditions in which inmate was allegedly not given enough time to eat his meals and was forced to eat spoiled food, they did not act with deliberate indifference to inmate's health or safety, as required for inmate to prevail on his §§ 1983 claim alleging Eighth Amendment violation. Strope v. McKune, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 123, 2005 WL 768781, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2916, 162 L.Ed.2d 304. Sentencing And Punishment 1540

Requiring state inmate to lie in prone position during emergency situations did not rise to level of Eighth Amendment violation supporting inmate's deliberate indifference claim under §§ 1983. Perry v. Kramer, C.A.9 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 191, 2005 WL 81176, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1550

2235. Concealment of misconduct, prisons and prisoners generally

Fact that municipal jail guards sought to conceal incident during which they forced female inmate to perform striptease in front of other inmates and male and female guards did not insulate municipality from § 1983 liability based on its deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of inmate; fact that municipality's investigative committee charged 14 guards with aiding and abetting sexual misconduct and charged several more guards and supervisors with negligence indicated that misconduct was not confined to small group of rogue employees acting surreptitiously, and, whatever participants did to cover up forced striptease, series of similar incidents that preceded it was open and notorious. Daskalea v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2000, 227 F.3d 433, 343 U.S.App.D.C. 261. Civil Rights 1352(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2236. Negligence, prisons and prisoners generally

Municipalities may not be held liable under § 1983 for mere negligence in oversight, although prison officials may not ignore obvious dangers to inmates. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1090

While mere inadvertence or negligence on the part of prison officials cannot support a prisoner's civil rights action raising U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8 issues, deliberate indifference regardless of how evidenced, either by actual intent or recklessness, will provide a sufficient foundation. Little v. Walker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1977, 552 F.2d 193, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1507, 435 U.S. 932, 55 L.Ed.2d 530. Civil Rights 1090

Claim by prison inmate that prison officials were negligent as to their statutory responsibilities under Florida law did not state cause of action under § 1983. Raske v. Dugger, M.D.Fla.1993, 819 F.Supp. 1046. Civil Rights 1098

Courts must be responsive to complaints by prison inmates of conditions of incarceration which overstep bounds of federal constitutional limitations and where negligence of prison warden leads to violation of constitutional rights of prisoners, it must be assumed that under the proper circumstances this section provides a remedy. LeBlanc v. Foti, E.D.La.1980, 487 F.Supp. 272. Civil Rights 1090

2237. Retaliation generally, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner stated First Amendment retaliation claim based on allegation that he was punished for filing a grievance concerning the conditions of his imprisonment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1915A; Boxer X v. Harris, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 437 F.3d 1107. Civil Rights 1395(7)

District court abused its discretion, for purpose of consideration of prisoner's civil rights complaint under statute that governed proceedings in forma pauperis, in concluding that there was no arguable basis that state prison officials retaliated against prisoner on allegations that prisoner complained about his placement in administrative segregation and threatened to file suit, prison official told him that if he did not stop complaining he would be transferred to long-term administrative segregation at another facility, prisoner did not stop protesting, and he was subsequently transferred. Fogle v. Pierson, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 435 F.3d 1252. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Temporal proximity alone may be significant enough to constitute indirect evidence of a causal connection so as to create an inference of retaliatory motive in an inmate's § 1983 action against a corrections officer. Muhammad v. Close, C.A.6 2004, 379 F.3d 413. Civil Rights 1404; Civil Rights 1420

In order to prevail on retaliation claims brought under § 1983, prisoner had the burden of showing, first, that he engaged in constitutionally protected conduct and, second, that the conduct was a substantial or motivating factor for the adverse actions taken by prison officials; if prisoner made these showings, prison officials could evade liability if they demonstrated that they would have disciplined or transferred prisoner even in the absence of the protected conduct. Bennett v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 343 F.3d 133. Civil Rights 1404

A prisoner alleging retaliation in violation of his civil rights must show (1) constitutionally protected conduct, (2) an adverse action by prison officials sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness from exercising his constitutional rights, and (3) a causal link between the exercise of his constitutional rights and the adverse action taken against him. Mitchell v. Horn, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 523, on remand 2005 WL 1060658. Civil Rights 1090

constitutionally protected rights, inmate bears initial burden of proving that his constitutionally protected conduct was a substantial or motivating factor in the decision to discipline him; once inmate makes this demonstration, prison officials may still prevail by proving that they would have made the same decision absent the protected conduct for reasons reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest. Rauser v. Horn, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2001, 241 F.3d 330. Civil Rights 1404

Prisoner was precluded from bringing claim against guard, based upon alleged retaliation for his filing grievance against guard; punishment had been based on actual violation of prison rules against gambling, and there was support for legitimacy of complaint based upon testimony of other members of football pool which prisoner had allegedly organized and of confidential informants. Earnest v. Courtney, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 64 F.3d 365. Civil Rights 1092

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether corrections officers attempted to chill prisoners' participation in pending civil lawsuit against officers by subsequently applying restraints to prisoners during transport in manner calculated to cause discomfort and pain for numerous hours that trips lasted, and denying food, water, timely dispensation of medicine, and toilets, precluding summary judgment on prisoners' First Amendment civil rights claims of denial of access to courts and denial of redress of grievances. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Denial of food during bus ride that lasted some 10 to 15 hours was insufficiently serious to state stand-alone cruel and unusual punishment civil rights claim under Eighth Amendment, especially where prisoners did not identify any serious harm suffered as result. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Sentencing And Punishment 1540

Corrections officer's alleged nasty remark to state prisoner concerning his litigious proclivities did not rise to the level of retaliation, for purposes of prisoner's retaliation claim under the First Amendment, in civil rights action under §§ 1983 alleging that he was denied needed pain medication in retaliation for two lawsuits he had previously brought against DOCS staff members, where there was no evidence that officer ever had any medication in his possession, or that he had the ability to procure prisoner's medication for him. Davidson v. Bartholome, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 436. Prisons 17(2)

Inmate's filing of grievance was not substantial or motivating factor in his suspension from prison shop, so as to support his retaliation claim against prison employees; inmate's initial removal from the shop occurred prior to his filing of the grievance, and evidence indicated that the refusal to authorize inmate's return to the shop was based on finding that he was a security risk, rather than on his pursuit of the grievance. Bussey v. Phillips, S.D.N.Y.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 569. Prisons 13(6)

Detainee failed to sufficiently state a retaliation claim against jail where he failed to identity the act or acts claimed to have constituted retaliation, identify what he reported, and identify to whom he reported. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609. Civil Rights 1395(6)

For purposes of screening provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), inmate stated claim of retaliation under §§ 1983 against corrections officer who, on the very day inmate said he did not want to work as prison informant or "snitch," verbally threatened him, forced him to strip and be subjected to body cavity search, pushed him over, and denied him his medication who repeatedly came to his cell while he was in solitary confinement and threatened him with physical abuse for failing to provide names of prison employees involved in drug trafficking, and who rifled through his mail, took possession of his property, and filed two grievances against him in twelve-day period. David v. Hill, S.D.Tex.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 749. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Corrections officer's alleged retaliatory planting of evidence and retaliatory filing of misbehavior report against prisoner, after prisoner filed grievance alleging sexual assault by officer, was in violation of prisoner's civil rights under First and Fourteenth Amendments, since prisoner had constitutional right of access to courts and to petition government for redress of grievance and prisoner provided circumstantial evidence of officer's retaliatory motives. Rodriguez v. McClenning, S.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 228. Prisons 4(5)

Prison officials established a proper basis, in inmate's disciplinary infractions, for inmate's removal from inmate liaison committee, and thus officials were not liable to inmate under §§1983 for removing him from committee in retaliation for his protected First Amendment conduct of making complaints to prison and church officials while incarcerated. Gonzalez v. Narcato, E.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 486. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3); Prisons 13(7.1)

Genuine issues of material fact regarding motivations of prison librarian in denying prisoner timely access to binder in order to bind petition for writ of certiorari precluded summary judgment on prisoner's retaliation claim under §§ 1983. Phillips v. Hust, D.Or.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 1148. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Inmate's allegation, that he was retaliated against numerous times after he filed a grievance against a guard who showed him a racially insensitive drawing, failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted; it was unclear that the incidents related to the conduct underlying the grievance, and the inmate's allegations lacked specificity and did not appear to rise to the level of a constitutional violation. Graves v. North Dakota State Penitentiary, D.N.D.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 1009, affirmed 2006 WL 1343223. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner alleging First Amendment retaliation claim has the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) he was engaging in activity protected by the First Amendment and (2) his activity was one of the reasons for defendants' decision to take action against him; if prisoner can meet that standard, burden of persuasion shifts to the defendants to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that they would have taken the same action anyway. Johnson v. Kingston, W.D.Wis.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1404; Civil Rights 1420

Prisoner stated legally viable § 1983 claim against corrections officials for retaliating against him for his involvement in other lawsuits against prison employees; complaint chronicled a series of events, including prisoner's transfer and each defendant's involvement in that transfer, and alleged that prisoner had suffered from ongoing retaliation for his participation in other civil suits, and although prisoner did not state specifically that the transfer was retaliatory, such claim could be inferred from the broad language of the complaint. Johnson v. Kingston, W.D.Wis.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1395(7)

To state § 1983 claim for retaliatory treatment, prisoner's complaint against prison officials need only allege a chronology of events from which retaliation may be inferred. Baltoski v. Pretorius, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 807. Civil Rights 1395(7)

In order to state a prima facie claim under § 1983 for retaliatory conduct in a prison context, a plaintiff must advance non-conclusory allegations establishing that (1) conduct at issue was protected, (2) defendants took adverse action against plaintiff, and (3) there was a causal connection between the protected activity and the adverse action--in other words, that the protected conduct was a substantial or motivating factor in the prison officials' decision to take action against plaintiff. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1090

In context of a prison inmate's § 1983 claim for retaliatory conduct, if alleged conduct was taken for both proper and improper reasons, then state action may be upheld if the action would have been taken based on the proper reasons alone. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1090

In inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging that corrections officials retaliated against him for filing grievances, any violation of inmate's rights under New York statute prohibiting disciplining of inmates for raising grievances did not necessarily state a claim for a constitutional violation, as required in § 1983 claim. Gill v. Hoadley,

N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate's § 1983 complaint, alleging that corrections officials retaliated against him for filing grievances, did not warrant federal court exercise of pendent jurisdiction over state claims based on violation of inmate's rights under New York statute prohibiting disciplining of inmates for raising grievances. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Federal Courts 15

In general, a prisoner may establish retaliation by demonstrating that the prison official's actions were the result of his having filed a grievance concerning the conditions of his imprisonment; the prisoner must, however, come forward with more than "general attacks" upon a defendant's motivations and must produce affirmative evidence of retaliation from which a jury could find that plaintiff had carried his burden of proving the requisite motive. Pate v. Peel, N.D.Fla.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 1326. Civil Rights 1092

Only those retaliatory acts that are likely to chill a person of ordinary firmness from continuing to engage in activity protected by the First Amendment are actionable under § 1983; on the other hand, deprivations that are not sufficiently serious to constitute a due process violation may be sufficient to constitute a First Amendment violation, as different considerations come into play. Rivera v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 735. Constitutional Law 82(3)

Where an inmate has violated an actual prison rule, no retaliation claim can be stated under § 1983 for a resulting disciplinary action. Williams v. Manternach, N.D.Iowa 2002, 192 F.Supp.2d 980. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate, in his § 1983 action, sufficiently pleaded facts to support his claims that prison officials retaliated against him, and conspired to retaliate against him, by imposing disciplinary sanctions for his "jailhouse lawyering" activities, such that dismissal of complaint was not warranted; pleadings did not allege whether inmate had actually committed prison rule violations, as would defeat retaliation claim. Williams v. Manternach, N.D.Iowa 2002, 192 F.Supp.2d 980. Civil Rights 1395(7); Conspiracy 18

Acts taken against prisoner in retaliation for exercise of constitutional right can state claim under § 1983, even when retaliatory acts do not themselves violate constitutional right. Thomas v. Hill, N.D.Ind.1997, 963 F.Supp. 753. Civil Rights 1090

Inmate's claim that corrections officer issued inmate false disciplinary ticket to prevent inmate from seeking redress for earlier assault by corrections officers, in violation of the First Amendment, failed to state claim for retaliation under civil rights statute where inmate failed to allege or show how false disciplinary ticket prevented him from pursuing First Amendment rights to seek redress from government. Husbands v. McClellan, W.D.N.Y.1997, 957 F.Supp. 403, motion to amend denied 990 F.Supp. 214. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prisoner's failure to allege any facts supporting his retaliation assertions, other than fact that certain events followed certain other events, defeated his § 1983 claim asserting that prison officials took unconstitutional actions based on desire to retaliate against him for his activism in procuring vocational rehabilitation classes and building access for handicapped inmates and for his activities as jailhouse lawyer. Garrett v. Angelone, W.D.Va.1996, 940 F.Supp. 933, affirmed 107 F.3d 865. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's claim of filing of disciplinary charge in retaliation for his complaints about prison conditions. Geder v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1995, 875 F.Supp. 1334. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate alleging that prison officials retaliated against him was required, in response to interrogatory, to identify lawsuits alleged in his § 1983 complaint to have been reason for officials' alleged retaliation, where complaint and exhibits were devoid of such information. Davidson v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2003, 215 F.R.D. 73, appeal denied 259

F.Supp.2d 238. Federal Civil Procedure 1502

Prisoner could not establish causal link between his prior lawsuit against prison official and the official's decision to transfer him to restricted housing unit (RHU), as required to show unlawful retaliation under §§ 1983, where prisoner's suit against official was decided several years earlier. Sims v. Vaughn, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 139, 2006 WL 2038748, Unreported. Civil Rights 1095

Complaint supported state inmate's §§ 1983 retaliation claim against investigator for state corrections department, given inmate's allegations that investigator issued rule violation report (RVR) against inmate in retaliation for inmate's conduct in sending letters critical of prison and prison officials to family members of prisoner who committed suicide, that inmate would have been allowed to return to general prison population had RVR not been issued, and that RVR did not issue for more than one month after inmate admitted violation, and issued only after local newspaper published article quoting anonymous inmate. Cressionnie v. Hample, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 184 Fed.Appx. 366, 2006 WL 1582714, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate's conjecture that since he alone was punished for violating prison regulations, prison officials and correctional officers must have been retaliating for filing grievance against a prison guard was insufficient to sustain his burden at summary judgment in §§ 1983 action. Irby v. Siedschlag, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 499, 2005 WL 3479210, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State inmate's assertion that corrections officer retaliated against him and conspired with others to retaliate against him because inmate ended affair with her did not state actionable claim of retaliation or conspiracy under §§ 1983. Johnson v. Jones, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 132 Fed.Appx. 97, 2005 WL 1220371, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Prisoner who sued state prison officials and employees failed to establish that actions purportedly taken in retaliation for his conduct would have been sufficient to deter person of ordinary firmness from exercising his constitutional rights, as required to maintain First Amendment retaliation claim; although prisoner's daily caloric intake was allegedly reduced, he did not suffer any detrimental effects, and search of prisoner's cabinet constituted minimal intrusion in light of security checks. Branch v. Russian, M.D.Pa.2005, 2005 WL 1137879, Unreported. Prisons 4(7)

State inmate failed to assert §§ 1983 claim for retaliation against prison officials when he did not allege that officials retaliated against him for filing prison grievance, filing his district court action, or performing any other protected act, and did not allege that his constitutional rights were chilled by officials, in that inmate was able to timely pursue his prison grievance through the highest level and timely file his action in district court. Perry v. Kramer, C.A.9 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 191, 2005 WL 81176, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092; Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner stated valid claim of retaliation under § 1983 based on allegations that prison doctor revoked his necessary medical rehabilitative treatment because he filed a grievance against prison security personnel; allegations showed a causal connection between the constitutionally protected activity of filing a grievance and the adverse action. Williams v. Fisher, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22170610, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Absent evidence that state prison inmate's protected conduct of filing prison grievance was a "but for" cause of his placement in temporary lockup, inmate could not prove retaliation in violation of civil rights laws; inmate's mere speculation that prison employee retaliated against him for filing a complaint against another employee was insufficient to undermine prison employee's explanation for placing him in lockup, and evidence showed that employee would have placed inmate in lockup regardless of whether the other employee knew of the complaint against him. Charles v. Reichel, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 950, 2003 WL 21377500, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

State prisoner's § 1983 complaint stated claim for retaliatory transfer; complaint alleged chronology of events from which causal connection between protected speech and adverse action could plausibly be inferred. Soto v. Iacavino, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21281762, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison inmate sufficiently stated claim of retaliation, in violation of his First Amendment right to redress of grievances, against prison officials by alleging that prison officials shook down his cell "in retaliation of my complaining" about being denied a shower and "my filing law suits and grievances." Walker v. Page, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 52, 2003 WL 21018002, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison inmate who alleged that he had been transferred and his property confiscated in retaliation for his actions in filing lawsuits failed to show that the transfer would not have occurred but for his actions in filing lawsuits, as required to recover in § 1983 action based on alleged retaliation. Eaton v. Dooley, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1362, Unreported. Civil Rights 1095

2238. Totality of circumstances considered, prisons and prisoners generally

Where constitutional deprivations are established, either in specific instances or by the totality of conditions within a penal institution, the federal courts may, and must, if the issue is appropriately presented, intervene. Smith v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1039. Prisons 4(2.1)

2239. Isolated cases, prisons and prisoners generally

To establish "episodic act or omission" jail condition claim, detainee must establish only that due process violation complained of was done with subjective deliberate indifference to that detainee's constitutional rights. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 51. Prisons 4(4)

Former prosecutor for Puerto Rico Department of Justice (PRDOJ) stated claim for First Amendment retaliation under §§ 1983 by alleging he was fired in retaliation for protesting 24-hour work shifts. Calderon-Garnier v. Sanchez-Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 229. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Pretrial detainee did not state claim for violation of equal protection rights by alleging isolated incident of bigotry at correctional institution without reference to other groups in institution; pretrial detainee did not allege that other Jews either were or being denied certain rights that were offered to others at institution. Messina v. Mazzeo, E.D.N.Y.1994, 854 F.Supp. 116. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2240. Arbitrary or unreasonable deprivations, prisons and prisoners generally

Louisiana prison's policy of requiring judicial approval of elective medical procedures was reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and thus did not violate Fourteenth Amendment rights of female prisoner seeking non-therapeutic abortion; policy helped maintain inmate security, avoid prison liability, and conserve prison resources. Victoria W. v. Larpenter, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 369 F.3d 475. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 17(2)

Judicial interference with prison administration should be avoided whenever possible and prison regulations sustained unless they are unreasonable and arbitrary. Sullivan v. Ford, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 609 F.2d 197, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2950, 446 U.S. 969, 64 L.Ed.2d 829. Prisons 4(2.1)

Where prisoner regulations are neither unreasonable nor arbitrary, federal courts will not interfere with administration of state prisons. Hill v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 537 F.2d 214. Prisons 4(3)

rather than a § 1983 action. Mitchell v. Department of Corrections, M.D.Pa.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 464. Civil Rights 1311

2241. Conspiracy, prisons and prisoners generally

Correctional officer was not liable to inmate under §§ 1983 for conspiring with another officer to violate Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment by physically attacking inmate, absent evidence that officer knew of and participated in the other officer's plan to enter inmate's cell to confront and assault him. Orwat v. Maloney, D.Mass.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 146. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Inmate's allegations regarding acts of retaliation prison employees took against him after he filed state court action, including two cell fires, his transfer to another prison, and "bogus" misbehavior reports, were sufficient to state claim for conspiracy under §§1983. Hernandez v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 537. Conspiracy 18

Prisoner did not state claim for civil rights conspiracy against public defender based on mere assumption that public defender must have conspired with prosecutor to obtain his conviction. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Conspiracy 18

Prosecuting attorneys and prison officials did not conspire to violate constitutional rights of inmate, by providing false information regarding details of crime and denying his requests for work release; no constitutional rights were violated, and in any event conclusory allegations regarding conspiracy did not prove required meeting of minds. Romer v. Morgenthau, S.D.N.Y.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 346. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

2242. Supervisory personnel, prisons and prisoners generally

Mere linkage in the prison chain of command is insufficient to implicate a state commissioner of corrections or a prison superintendent in a § 1983 claim. Richardson v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 347 F.3d 431. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate could not recover against superintendent of correctional facility and director of State Department of Corrections under § 1983 for corrections officers' alleged use of excessive force, absent evidence that officials were deliberately indifferent or personally involved in incident, or had tacitly authorized alleged misconduct. Burgess v. Moore, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 39 F.3d 216, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1358

The personal involvement of a supervisory prison official, as element for § 1983 liability to an inmate, may be shown by evidence that: (1) the defendant participated directly in the alleged constitutional violation; (2) the defendant, after being informed of the violation through a report or appeal, failed to remedy the wrong; (3) the defendant created a policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed the continuance of such a policy or custom; (4) the defendant was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed the wrongful acts; or (5) the defendant exhibited deliberate indifference to the rights of inmates by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Durran v. Selsky, W.D.N.Y.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1358

Prison superintendent could not held liable under § 1983 for Eighth Amendment violation arising out of guard's alleged assault of inmate, absent indication that superintendent was personally involved in incident, or had knowledge of, or reason to have knowledge of, any danger to inmate prior to incident, or that it was custom or practice at prison to deprive inmates of their rights. Torres v. Mazzuca, S.D.N.Y.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 334. Civil Rights 1358 supervisory encouragement, condonation or acquiescence, or gross negligence amounting to deliberate indifference to support claim for supervisory liability under §§ 1983. Collins v. Graham, D.Me.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 241. Civil Rights 1355

Correctional facility supervisory officials were not liable to inmate under §§ 1983 in their individual capacities for failing to prevent or intervene in corrections officers' alleged retaliatory issuance of a misbehavior report; although inmate had complained to officials about various matters, most of his complaints did not involve officers in question, his complaints about those officers did not allege retaliatory activity, officials took proper steps to investigate and properly handle inmate's complaints, and he was afforded right to appeal misbehavior report, which led to a reversal. Withrow v. Donnelly, W.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 273. Civil Rights 1358

Change in state prisoner's security status after she refused to make admissions required for participation in sex offender treatment program did not result in atypical and significant hardships, and thus were not so severe as to amount to compelled self-incrimination, even though change resulted in restrictions on her phone use, prevented her from keeping refrigerator and cooking supplies in her cell, prevented her from receiving clearance to work outside confines of prison, and prevented her eligibility for transfer to prison located closer to her friends and family. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Criminal Law 393(1); Prisons 13(5)

In lawsuit under § 1983 alleging that supervisor violated prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights, estate and survivors of deceased prisoner failed to show that supervisor was deliberately indifferent to substantial risk that prisoner would attempt to commit suicide, even though supervisor was subjectively aware of prisoner's suicidal state; supervisor was not aware that corrections officer had ordered prisoner to be given regular blanket and placed in hard lockdown cell rather than rubber room and supervisor was not aware that officer was not conducting required periodic checks. Estate of Sisk v. Manzanares, D.Kan.2002, 262 F.Supp.2d 1162. Civil Rights 1358; Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1547

County corrections supervisor was subject to supervisory liability under § 1983 based on acts of his subordinates, which resulted in inmate's death, when supervisor instructed subordinates to control inmate by force if necessary, supervisor saw two officers enter inmate's cell and heard banging and thuds coming from cell while officers were beating inmate, and also felt vibrations from beating and heard inmate moaning and crying, supervisor testified that he believed subordinates were using excessive force against and inflicting physical injury upon inmate, supervisor testified that he did not act to stop beating, and supervisor acceded to one subordinate's suggestion that no injury report be filed and failed to check immediately on inmate's medical condition; such course of conduct was, at minimum, gross negligence in violation of supervisor's duty to protect inmates from foreseeable risks of harm. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Civil Rights 1358

Pro se inmate's claims against prison officials that his removal from sex offender treatment program and accompanying reduction in privileges and prejudice to his chances for parole violated his due process rights, and that officials' failure to provide adequate law library and adequate legal assistance violated his constitutional right of access to the courts, failed to state a claim under § 1983. Pagel v. Utah State Prison, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 259, 2003 WL 22222210, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1425, 540 U.S. 1186, 158 L.Ed.2d 92, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2199, 541 U.S. 1057, 158 L.Ed.2d 759. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate did not state cognizable Eighth Amendment claim against Kansas Department of Correction employees and health care providers alleging his civil rights were violated under § 1983 by the demonstrated deliberate indifference to his serious medical condition; inmate was not barred from seeking medical treatment, and abundant evidence demonstrated he obtained medical treatment for his needs. Baker v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 231, 2003 WL 21008830, Unreported. Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546 absent any allegation that Commissioner was personally involved in constitutional violations arising from taking blood sample from prisoner. Zaire v. Barringer, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 57918, Unreported, subsequently affirmed 108 Fed.Appx. 689, 2004 WL 2029986. Civil Rights 1358

2243. Discriminatory treatment, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Inmate sufficiently pleaded equal protection violations, based on his treatment as a "lifer," to state a claim, and therefore dismissal of his complaint in his § 1983 action against prison officials was inappropriate; facts pleaded by inmate, asserting disparate treatment of "lifers" as to jobs and level advancements, as well as that he had been reclassified so as to be barred from prompt reinstatement to such jobs or level status by the quotas imposed on "lifers," sufficiently pleaded that "lifers" were treated differently from other inmates, and that discriminatory intent could be inferred from the imposition of such quotas. Williams v. Manternach, N.D.Iowa 2002, 192 F.Supp.2d 980 . Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate failed to state § 1983 claim for violation of equal protection against officials, of county and of State Department of Corrections, and county by alleging merely that inmates at Department intake center were afforded different privileges than inmates at other Department institutions; inmate did not allege that he was personally singled out for disparate treatment. Canell v. Bradshaw, D.Or.1993, 840 F.Supp. 1382, affirmed 97 F.3d 1458. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Courts will not interfere with uniformly applied prison regulations which are designed to achieve discipline and which are indispensable to the orderly operation of state penal institutions. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Prisons 4(2.1)

State prisoner's allegations that other prisoners received more favorable treatment than he received did not present constitutional issue. Fowler v. Graham, D.C.S.C.1979, 478 F.Supp. 90. Prisons 13(1)

2244. ---- Racial discrimination, discriminatory treatment, prisons and prisoners generally

Even though black prisoner may have received rather harsh punishment for apparently trivial offenses, where punishment he received was not unusual and was administered in nondiscriminatory manner and black prisoner posed disciplinary problem to institution, black prisoner who brought civil rights action against warden was not entitled to relief from punishment. Johnson v. Wolff, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1974, 501 F.2d 407. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate failed to state § 1983 and § 1985(3) claims against sentencing judge, inmate's appellate and post-conviction counsel, and clerk of court, by alleging that inmate was treated more harshly than white defendants because he was black, and that inmate thus suffered restraint of liberty, false imprisonment, loss of employment, and pursuit of happiness; inmate was actually attacking legality of his conviction and confinement, and they had not been invalidated, but rather, had been affirmed repeatedly. Horton v. Marovich, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1088(5); Conspiracy 18

Future wrongs were not beyond the scope of prison conditions case in which grievance machinery was established because of past wrongs involving incidents of racial harassment, intimidation or insult. Taylor v. Perini, N.D.Ohio 1977, 431 F.Supp. 566. Prisons 13(6)

It is impermissible for prison authorities to discriminate against inmates on account of their race. Murphy v. Wheaton, N.D.Ill.1974, 381 F.Supp. 1252. Prisons 12

There were no racially discriminatory practices in county jail justifying injunctive relief in favor of plaintiff inmates charging discrimination. Stroman v. Griffin, S.D.Ga.1971, 331 F.Supp. 226. Civil Rights 1454; Injunction 94

2245. ---- Sex discrimination, discriminatory treatment, prisons and prisoners generally

Iowa female prison inmates failed to state claim by alleging that their equal protection rights were violated on ground that prison services and programs provided to them differed substantially from those provided to Iowa male inmates; female inmates were not similarly situated to male inmates in Iowa due to female prison's small population and segregation of female inmates from male inmates, and plaintiffs did not establish that reason for difference in programming was due to gender-based discrimination or that differences were not rationally related to legitimate governmental interests. Pargo v. Elliott, S.D.Iowa 1994, 894 F.Supp. 1239, vacated 49 F.3d 1355, on remand 894 F.Supp. 1243. Constitutional Law 224(5); Prisons 17(.5)

Incarceration of female District of Columbia Code offenders at federal facility approximately 260 miles from District of Columbia, due to lack of District of Columbia facility for female offenders, was not alone sufficient to raise fundamental constitutional issue; although female offenders were placed at substantial disadvantage as compared to male offenders with respect to proximity of homes and families and access to certain programs, confinement at federal facility was within constitutional limits, and female offenders could not be found to have had justifiable expectation that they would be incarcerated at facility within District of Columbia or its metropolitan area. Pitts v. Meese, D.D.C.1987, 684 F.Supp. 303, affirmed 866 F.2d 1450, 275 U.S.App.D.C. 332. Civil Rights 1098

2245A. Fugitive disentitlement doctrine, prisons and prisoners generally

Evidence was insufficient to demonstrate that plaintiff's fugitive status had a connection to his § 1983 action against prison officials for treatment he received while he was an inmate, as required for dismissal of action based on Fugitive Disentitlement Doctrine; plaintiff alleged in his civil action that he was subjected to unreasonably high levels of environmental tobacco smoke and subjected to physical and verbal abuse by prison guards, while fugitive status was allegedly due to plaintiff's failure to report and to inform his probation officer of a new address. Atkinson v. Taylor, D.Del.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 382. Action 13

2246. Manner of execution, prisons and prisoners generally

State inmate's challenge to method of execution, alleging that death by electrocution was cruel and unusual punishment, would be construed as petition for habeas corpus, even though inmate brought challenge as "conditions of confinement" action under § 1983, and challenge was thus subject to procedural requirements for bringing second or successive habeas claim. In re Sapp, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1997, 118 F.3d 460, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2536, 521 U.S. 1130, 138 L.Ed.2d 1035. Habeas Corpus 666; Habeas Corpus 891

Denial of bathroom breaks during bus trip from one prison to another prison that lasted some 10 to 15 hours, without more, did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth Amendment. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Sentencing And Punishment 1539

In a §§ 1983 action alleging that a certain method of execution constitutes cruel and unusual punishment, the District Court will not usurp the legislature to determine whether there is a more humane execution procedure if the current procedure does not violate the Constitution. Walker v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2006, 448 F.Supp.2d 719. Sentencing And Punishment 1796

Action under § 1983 was appropriate for death row inmates to challenge constitutionality of execution by lethal gas. Booker v. Murphy, S.D.Miss.1997, 953 F.Supp. 756. Civil Rights 1098

2247. Notice of rules and regulations, prisons and prisoners generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prison's failure to provide inmate with prison rules, regulations and penalties for violations thereof violates prisoner's civil rights. Duckett v. Ward, S.D.N.Y.1978, 458 F.Supp. 624. Civil Rights 1098

Prison inmates have right to notice of rules which govern prisoner conduct, rights and privileges. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(1)

The concept of due process requires at the least that persons confined in institutions be informed of the rules and of the procedures by which they may be disciplined for a breach thereof; placing a copy of the regulations in the library to which access is limited does not meet the constitutional standard. Martinez Rodriguez v. Jimenez, D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 409 F.Supp. 582, stay denied 537 F.2d 1, affirmed 551 F.2d 877. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Absent showing of prejudice to inmate, prison's alleged failure to post rules and regulations and prescribed punishments for violations was not deprivation of constitutional rights even if such failure violated corrections department guidelines. Russell v. Oliver, W.D.Va.1975, 392 F.Supp. 470, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 552 F.2d 115. Prisons 13(1)

State prisoner's § 1983 claim against prison employee who had allegedly signed memorandum authorizing prisoner's suspension from prison upholstery shop accrued for limitations purposes when he was first notified of the suspension. Allah v. Juchnewioz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1535623, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(14)

2248. Compliance with state law, prisons and prisoners generally

Mere failure of a jailer to comply with a state regulation is not a constitutional violation. Roberts v. City of Troy, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 773 F.2d 720. Civil Rights 1090

Claim that state officials have failed to follow procedural provisions of state law does not aver cause of action for violation of prisoner's civil rights. Shields v. Hopper, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1131. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2249. Least restrictive regulation, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison officials need not choose least restrictive regulation consistent with prison discipline. St. Claire v. Cuyler, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 634 F.2d 109, rehearing denied 643 F.2d 103. Prisons 13(2)

2250. Privacy generally, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner stated a §§ 1983 claim for violation of his privacy rights where he alleged that he was forced to strip and masturbate for female guard's entertainment. Boxer X v. Harris, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 437 F.3d 1107. Civil Rights 1098

Inmate's constitutional "right to privacy" was not violated when state correctional officer exhibited nude photographs of inmate's wife to two other inmates and made derogatory comments to desk sergeant regarding wife's anatomy; rather, officer's actions presented controversy squarely within ambit of state tort law protections. Davis v. Bucher, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1988, 853 F.2d 718. Constitutional Law 82(13)

Because reporter could not have been prevented from reporting statements, made by defendant while he was in jail, which the reporter easily overheard while at the jail, use of a device to record them did not create a claim for invasion of privacy when one would not otherwise exist. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

The Due Process Clause did not afford a remedy under § 1983 for alleged invasion of privacy of county jail inmate who was placed in administrative segregation in cell which did not have a privacy partition next to the toilet and in which the toilet was allegedly situated such that three female inmates in another cell could, at separate intervals, have a direct view of the inmate while he was performing bodily functions, absent evidence that jail officials were aware that the inmate was viewable by female inmates during his use of the toilet, and where, when the matter was brought to their attention upon the inmate's later return to the jail, the privacy problem in the segregation cell was investigated and mitigated. Simpson v. Penobscot County Sheriff's Dept., D.Me.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 75. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(6)

Prison superintendent did not violate Spanish-speaking inmate's right to privacy by failing to provide medically qualified interpreters of Spanish rather than inmate interpreters or non-medically qualified, non-inmate interpreters when consulting with prison medical staff about his leg and back pain; inmate was afforded the luxury of determining whether he wanted a particular inmate or even a non-inmate to serve as his interpreter and failed to present any evidence or even any allegation that knowledge of his condition was disseminated to inappropriate persons. Cortes v. Johnson, W.D.N.Y.2000, 114 F.Supp.2d 182. Constitutional Law 82(13); Prisons 17(2)

Unwanted but nonegregious publicity may be an actionable invasion of privacy under state law but does not support a claim under this section. Mimms v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., E.D.Pa.1972, 352 F.Supp. 862. Civil Rights 1040

Use of female officers to supervise male prison living areas did not violate male prisoner's First or Fourth Amendment rights, since policy was reasonably related to legitimate penological interest; prisoner had minimal right to privacy, state had legitimate interest in maintaining flexibility in security personnel staffing and in pursuing equal employment opportunity practices, and prisoner did not suggest in § 1983 action any ready and effective alternatives to state's policy. Sinclair v. Stalder, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 78 Fed.Appx. 987, 2003 WL 22436063, Unreported. Constitutional Law 82(13); Prisons 4(6); Prisons 4(14)

2251. Detainers, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's action to enjoin New Jersey prison officials from utilizing detainer of New York to cause him harmful collateral consequences during his confinement in New Jersey presented a colorable civil rights claim, but claim that he was denied "minimum custody status" was not sufficiently specific. Mokone v. Fenton, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1983, 710 F.2d 998. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Though prison officials delayed approximately 61 days in forwarding prisoner's request for final disposition of detainer to prosecuting officials of the state which requested the detainer, this did not demonstrate a violation of a right secured by the United States Constitution and laws, for which redress is provided by this section, in case in which detainer was disposed of by trial in the other state within 180 days as required by Interstate Agreement on Detainers, set out in the Appendix to Title 18. Rhodes v. Schoen, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1978, 574 F.2d 968, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 195, 439 U.S. 868, 58 L.Ed.2d 178. Civil Rights 1094

Since the Interstate Agreement on Detainers and Uniform Criminal Extradition Act are constitutional and comport with requirements of due process, prisoner's action under this section against superintendent of correctional institution and records clerk for their roles in transferring the prisoner to Maryland to face criminal charges there must be predicated on a failure to comply with the provisions of the Extradition Act. Wallace v. Hewitt, M.D.Pa.1976, 428 F.Supp. 39. Civil Rights 1095

Where prisoner to be extradited from North Carolina was in custody of New York authorities and outside jurisdiction of North Carolina when prisoner's counsel served unsigned and unverified copy of purported show cause order on warden of North Carolina prison, and where requirements of Interstate Agreement on Detainers had been met and North Carolina governor had approved New York's temporary custody permit and warden of North Carolina prison had acted pursuant to valid executive order when he transferred prisoner to New York authorities, prisoner had no cause of action under this section against warden in North Carolina or against district attorney in New York. Mabery v. Garrison, E.D.N.C.1975, 405 F.Supp. 134. Civil Rights 1095

Where federal prisoner incarcerated in Atlanta federal penitentiary under sentence of federal court in New York sought leave to file a civil action to dismiss detainer-warrant issued by the Parole Division of the State of New York Department of Correctional Services on ground that the existence of the detainer affected conditions of his prison confinement in preventing him from being transferred to a facility closer to his home, denied him the opportunity of participating in a prerelease program available to other prisoners, and denied him access to other rehabilitative programs, the alleged constitutional deprivation related to conditions of his confinement cognizable under this section. Pavia v. Hogan, N.D.Ga.1974, 386 F.Supp. 1379. Civil Rights 1098

2252. Classification, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate who was incarcerated in another state pursuant to Interstate Corrections Compact (ICC) had no liberty interest entitling him to application of sending state's classification and recreation rules in receiving state, as application of receiving state's procedures did not impose an atypical or significant hardship, and thus application of those procedures could not form basis for §§ 1983 due process claim. Garcia v. Lemaster, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 439 F.3d 1215. Prisons 13(5)

Deliberate indifference of prison officials, required for § 1983 civil rights claim by inmates alleging that randomly assigning cellmates substantially increased risk of violence was cruel and unusual punishment, was supported by evidence that level of violence and number of inmates requesting protective custody had increased, prison officials were aware that construction of cells made monitoring impossible, prison rules were disincentive to reporting assaults, and prison officials knew increase in misconduct reports was substantial. Jensen v. Clarke, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1191. Civil Rights 1420

Operational classification regulations which state prison officials put in place, with prior court approval, pursuant to obligations imposed by consent decree settling class action suit brought by inmates to rectify prison conditions in South Carolina did not create "liberty interest" in inmates' custody and security classifications, for purposes of prison inmate's § 1983 action against prison officials; regulations failed to impose substantive limitations on official discretion in making classification decisions, but instead, though they provided procedural safeguards and substantive criteria for making baseline classification decisions, such decisions were only recommendations that were subject to discretionary review and rejection by higher level prison officials. Slezak v. Evatt, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1994, 21 F.3d 590, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 235, 513 U.S. 889, 130 L.Ed.2d 158. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(5)

Failure to adequately classify inmates, with result, inter alia, that pretrial detainees were not segregated from convicted felons, violated Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Pembroke v. Wood County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 225, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2965, 508 U.S. 973, 125 L.Ed.2d 665. Sentencing And Punishment 1534

Prison's alleged failure to properly classify inmate pursuant to state law was not a constitutional violation redressable by § 1983 action. Glick v. Walker, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1987, 834 F.2d 709. Civil Rights 1092

In state prisoner's complaint of institutional reclassification and transfer, without notice or hearing, in violation of due process, district court should have allowed prisoner to present evidence that Florida state regulations created liberty interest for sort of transfer and reclassification which occurred. Bullard v. Wainwright, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 614 F.2d 1020. Prisons 13.5(3)

Placement of inmates who have sought protective custody classification and number of inmates who may be safely assigned to a cell is a matter resting within the sound discretion of prison administration. Crowe v. Leeke, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1976, 540 F.2d 740. Prisons 12

Although federal courts are extremely reluctant to limit freedom of prison officials to classify prisoners as they, in their broad discretion, determine appropriate, where prison officials have failed to control or separate prisoners, whether homosexual or not, who endanger physical safety of other prisoners, officials may be required to take steps to protect prison population from these dangerous prisoners. McCray v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1975, 509 F.2d 1332, on remand 399 F.Supp. 271, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 114, 423 U.S. 859, 46 L.Ed.2d 86. Prisons 12; Prisons 17(4)

Not every error in classification of state prisoners by prison classification board gives rise to an infringement of a constitutionally protected right. Palmigiano v. Mullen, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1974, 491 F.2d 978. Prisons 13(5)

If assignment to appropriate cell block based on reason for detention is ministerial act of warden, absent some breach of or threat to discipline, negligence in performing that ministerial duty resulting in infringement of constitutional right might be actionable. U. S. ex rel. Jones v. Rundle, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 453 F.2d 147. Civil Rights 1092

Prisoner's classification while confined in out-of-state correctional facility to a restrictive or harsh classification was not adverse, for purposes of prisoner's First Amendment retaliation claim under §§ 1983, where the classification was not significantly more severe than his classification while confined at in-state correctional facility. Price v. Wall, D.R.I.2006, 2006 WL 3254530. Prisons 13(5)

Inmate did not have a protected liberty interest in either maintaining a current classification or obtaining a new classification, as required to prevail on §§ 1983 claim challenging state prison's classification system on due process grounds; inmate's alleged drug infraction resulted in reducing the good-time credits he might earn in the future, but did not result in his losing any already-earned credits. Gaskins v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 800. Prisons 15(3)

State inmate had no cause of action under § 1983 in connection with upgrading of or failure to reduce his security classification, despite contention that classification decisions were motivated by inmate's political and religious beliefs and legal activities; under state law, inmate had no liberty interest in his security classification, and thus no action pertaining to classification could be maintained under § 1983. Siddiqi v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1991, 763 F.Supp. 284, affirmed 972 F.2d 352. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate was not unlawfully deprived of any constitutionally protected interest because information concerning his alleged escape remained in his individual prison personnel file, even though he was never tried or convicted for escape, where only "harm" suffered by inmate was denial of his request to be housed in "honor dormitory" and inmates in Indiana correctional facilities have no state-created or recognized constitutionally protected right to be assigned to any particular security classification. Martin v. Duckworth, N.D.Ind.1984, 581 F.Supp. 1282. Civil Rights 1092

Illinois prison regulation which sets forth procedures for assigning and reassigning inmates to work, training and study programs indicates that assignment committee has complete discretion over security classification decision, and therefore regulation does not create justifiable expectation that inmate will receive or retain any particular classification so as to give rise to a constitutionally protected entitlement; thus, correctional officer's unilateral decision to use allegedly false information provided by deputy director of Illinois Department of Law Enforcement as basis for changing inmate's security classification was not subject to challenge under this section. Larson v. Mulcrone, N.D.Ill.1982, 575 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 723 F.2d 914. Civil Rights 1092; Constitutional Law 272(2)

Except to the extent that some independently protected right is implicated, inmates have no constitutional claim to any particular security classification, housing or job assignments; rather, classification system is matter ordinarily left to expertise and discretion of prison administrators. Grubbs v. Bradley, M.D.Tenn.1982, 552 F.Supp. 1052. Prisons 13(5); Prisons 17(1)

Inmate classification policy at a county correctional facility, at which an inmate was allegedly harassed and sexually assaulted by other prisoners, including a trustee, did not evince deliberate indifference to an unreasonable risk of serious injury to the inmate, so as to support an Eighth Amendment claim under §§ 1983; an expert's criticisms of the facility's policies and practices with respect to classification evinced only negligence, if any misfeasance at all. Counterman v. Warren County Correctional Facility, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 2006 WL 929366, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

State prisoner's challenge, which was to amendment of his indictment or conviction and his classification as violent offender, constituted challenge to his custodial classification, in which he had no protectable property or liberty interest, as required to state claim under §§ 1983. Epps v. Epps, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 108 Fed.Appx. 150, 2004 WL 1842639, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

State inmate did not have constitutionally protected liberty interest in his prison classification, and mental anguish he allegedly suffered as a result of error in his classification as medium-security inmate did not impose atypical and significant hardship in relation to ordinary incidents of prison life or threaten to lengthen inmate's term of confinement, and therefore erroneous classification did not violate inmate's due process rights. Bey v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 69 Fed.Appx. 931, 2003 WL 21480693, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(5)

State inmate could maintain § 1983 suit challenging his demotion in status as result of disciplinary charges, where demotion did not affect fact or duration of his sentence. Russell v. Washington, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 52 Fed.Appx. 862, 2002 WL 31805206, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

2253. Speech freedom, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner stated a legally cognizable claim for violations of his First Amendment right to freedom of expression by alleging that prison regulation that banned all literature from outside organizations unless those organizations had been approved did not authorize corrections officers' confiscation of prisoner's political literature, and accordingly, that such confiscations were improperly made for reasons of personal prejudice as opposed to legitimate penological interests. Shakur v. Selsky, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 391 F.3d 106. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3); Prisons 4(8)

Allegations in inmate's pro se civil rights complaint, that prison official on two occasions opened his legal mail outside of his presence, were insufficient to state a claim for violation of his free speech rights, where inmate alleged neither facts that would establish ongoing practice by prison officials of interfering with his mail nor facts that set forth any harm he claimed to have suffered from such tampering. Davis v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 320 F.3d 346. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Causal nexus existed between protected speech of prisoners in bringing civil lawsuit against corrections officers and subsequent alleged retaliation by officers during transport of prisoners, as required for First Amendment civil rights claims of denial of access to courts and denial of redress of grievances, where allegedly harsh conditions on bus rides were imposed by officers, prisoners were participating in class action lawsuit against officers, and litigation was protected speech activity. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Prisons 4(10.1)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether prison authorities could have reasonably interpreted state prisoner's draft of §§ 1983 lawsuit against correctional officer as threat to security and safety of prison precluded summary judgment for prison authorities as to prisoner's claim that prison authorities' decision to place prisoner in administrative segregation constituted retaliation for prisoner having exercised his First Amendment free speech rights by drafting the lawsuit against officer. Bacon v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 475. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A prisoner alleging a First Amendment retaliation claim under § 1983 must show that the protected conduct was a substantial or motivating factor behind the alleged retaliatory conduct. Rivera v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 735. Constitutional Law 82(13)

Reasonable officer could have objectively believed that disciplining inmate for stating in grievance that female correctional officer was rumored to have engaged in sexual activities with male officers did not offend Constitution, and thus prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 suit alleging violation of his First Amendment right to petition for redress of grievances, where there was no binding precedent on point addressing discipline for false or insolent statements in grievances, and analogous cases applied different approaches and reach different results. Hale v. Scott, C.D.Ill.2003, 252 F.Supp.2d 728, affirmed 371 F.3d 917. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State policy prohibiting prisoners from possessing "any gang literature" was reasonably related to legitimate penological interests in gang suppression. Koutnik v. Brown, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 546, 2006 WL 2053025, Unreported. Prisons 4(8)

2254. Religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Inmate who alleged that another inmate had excluded him from religious group and that Department of Corrections officials had contracted with that other inmate to help them determine whether particular inmates should be classified as members of that religious group stated a claim for violation of civil rights. Swift v. Lewis, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1990, 901 F.2d 730. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Giving "wide-ranging deference" to decisions of prison officials, test on review of regulations curtailing prisoners' rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 is whether there is reasonable relation to security requirements in officials' exercise of informed discretion. St. Claire v. Cuyler, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 634 F.2d 109, rehearing denied 643 F.2d 103. Prisons 13(2)

So long as prison authorities provide inmate with a reasonable opportunity for the exercise of his religious tenets in a form that is substantially warranted by the requirements of prison safety and order, there is no violation of the inmate's constitutional rights. Sweet v. South Carolina Dept. of Corrections, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 854. Prisons 4(14)

It is impermissible for prison authorities to discriminate against inmates on account of their race or religious faith. Tilden v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1968, 390 F.2d 614. Prisons 4(14)

Relief may be granted under this section to state prisoners subjected to deprivations and hardships solely because of their religion. Weaver v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1968, 390 F.2d 145. Civil Rights 1098

Where it is asserted that state prison authorities have so greatly impaired prisoner's federally protected freedom of religion as to give rise to cause of action under this section complete deference would not be given to administrative discretion but weight would be given to judgment of administrators in determining practices which were necessary and appropriate in conduct of prison. Cooper v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1967, 382 F.2d 518. Civil Rights 1098

Corrections officers and officials were not liable under §§ 1983 for violating inmate's First Amendment right to free exercise of religion by prohibiting him from attaching religious materials to door and windows of his cell, absent showing that prohibition interfered with inmate's ability to observe a central practice of his religion. Mark v. Gustafson, W.D.Wis.2006, 2006 WL 845851. Prisons 4(14)

County sheriff's department, sheriff, undersheriff, and county attorney did not interfere with constitutional rights of pretrial detainee with respect to his Asatru religion, where no one ever saw detainee practice his religion in county jail, and detainee's fiancee would have refused to bring religious materials to jail had detainee asked her to do so. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Prisons 4(14)

State prisoner failed to state equal protection cause of action in complaint of being prevented from practicing his religion, in that facts he alleged did not indicate that his religion was treated any differently, that similarly situated inmates of other religions were treated differently, or that he would have been treated differently if he had been attempting to practice different religion; prisoner merely stated generally that his rights under the Fourteenth Amendment were violated. Shidler v. Moore, N.D.Ind.2006, 409 F.Supp.2d 1060. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether Jewish inmate's oral request for Sukkah booth was legitimate method of requesting religious accommodation at state prison facility precluded summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action alleging violation of his First Amendment free exercise rights on ground that inmate had not made proper request for accommodation. Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1237. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issues existed as to whether prayers at "group closures" that concluded meetings of voluntary drug treatment program, conducted by private contractor at city corrections facility, constituted city endorsement or coercion of religious activity, precluding summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 Establishment Clause action against city and contractor; although participation via verbalizing prayer was not required, inmates were required to stand together as group while prayer was recited or face loss of good time credits. Clanton v. Glover, M.D.Fla.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 1360. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State prison's restrictions on Taoist prisoner's practice of Tai Chi were reasonably related to legitimate penological objective of limiting inmate practice of martial arts. Adams v. Stanley, D.N.H.2003, 237 F.Supp.2d 136. Prisons 4(14)

State has burden of justifying policies or practices which prevent prison inmates from engaging in religious or spiritual practices which do not present a threat to security, discipline and good order of institution. Battle v. Anderson, E.D.Okla.1978, 457 F.Supp. 719, remanded on other grounds 594 F.2d 786. Prisons 4(14)

Where prison regulation of certain religious practice is challenged, there is no necessity that religious practice at issue be absolutely mandated by doctrinal requirements of religious observance in order to bring challenge within ambit of constitutional protection, and proof that practice at issue is deeply rooted in religious belief is sufficient, for it is not for courts to decide which practices or observances are strict requirements of a particular faith. Monroe v. Bombard, S.D.N.Y.1976, 422 F.Supp. 211. Constitutional Law 84.5(14)

Allegation that deputy county sheriff used abusive language regarding prisoner's religious background was insufficient to establish §§ 1983 claim, absent evidence that alleged epithet rose to the level of a constitutional violation. Karboau v. Purnington, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 137 Fed.Appx. 18, 2005 WL 1473935, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether Islamic Affairs Coordinator for New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) engaged in policy of hiring only Sunni Muslims, engaged in an active campaign of hostility towards Shi'ite Muslims, and was involved in removal of Shi'ite Muslim prisoner from DOCS' "call-out list," thereby prohibiting him from celebrating special services and religious holidays, precluding summary judgment in favor of prisoner on his Establishment Clause claims, or in favor of Coordinator on claims arising before his retirement. Cancel v. Mazzuca, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1702011, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2255. ---- Black Muslims, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Practice of Black Muslim religious beliefs was subject to reasonable regulations necessary for protection and welfare of the prison community. Long v. Parker, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1968, 390 F.2d 816.

Plaintiff, a "Black Muslim" confined in state correctional institution would not be entitled to relief in federal courts because of alleged deprivation of free exercise of religious beliefs unless state correctional authorities and courts failed in their efforts to work out within a reasonable time a sound compromise, based on careful factual study, between the freedom of worship and prison discipline. Muhammad v. McGinnis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 362 F.2d 587 . Courts 495; Prisons 4(14)

Muslim inmate's claim that fund of state prison's chaplain was used only to fund Christian activities failed to establish equal protection violation to support inmate's § 1983 action; inmate never requested disbursements from such fund, funds used solely for Christian activities were raised by Christian inmate group, and all inmate groups had opportunity to establish sub-accounts for their own use. McGlothlin v. Murray, W.D.Va.1997, 993 F.Supp. 389, affirmed 151 F.3d 1029, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1261, 526 U.S. 1022, 143 L.Ed.2d 357, on remand 54 F.Supp.2d 629. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 4(14)

Refusal of defendant New York State Commissioner of Corrections to recognize Muslimism as a religion and his failure to promulgate regulations enabling Black Muslims incarcerated in state prison to enjoy at least some religious rights during period from Oct. 24, 1964, date the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari in Sostre v. McGinnis, thus finally resolving question of whether Muslimism was a religion, until May 6, 1966, when commissioner filed revised rules and regulations with federal district court, constituted an unconstitutional deprivation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 of plaintiff Black Muslim inmates to practice their religion. Bryant v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.1978, 463 F.Supp. 373. Constitutional Law 84.5(14)

State prison warden could proscribe Black Muslim congregations and activities within institution on ground that the racial antipathy implicit in their teachings might create racial tension and inflammatory hostility among the population of over 1400 inmates, one-fourth of which was Negro. Lee v. Crouse, D.C.Kan.1967, 284 F.Supp. 541, affirmed 396 F.2d 952. Prisons 4(14)

2256. ---- Books, magazines or other periodicals, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Situation in which a state prisoner, solely because of his religious beliefs, was denied permission to purchase certain religious publications and denied other privileges enjoyed by other prisoners was one covered by this section. Cooper v. Pate, U.S.Ill.1964, 84 S.Ct. 1733, 378 U.S. 546, 12 L.Ed.2d 1030, on remand 382 F.2d 518.

A prisoner who is denied access to certain religious publications or legal materials may bring suit under this section for violation of his constitutionally protected interests. Drollinger v. Milligan, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1977, 552 F.2d 1220. Civil Rights 1094; Civil Rights 1098

Experience of prisons which have permitted Muslim literature should have substantial probative value on question of state interests in forbidding prisoners access to such literature and should be considered together with opinions of prison officials in determining effect of access to such publications. Brown v. Peyton, C.A.4 (Va.) 1971, 437 F.2d 1228. Prisons 4(14)

Where prison officials reasonably determined that distribution of book and newspaper asserting Negro superiority and supremacy would be inflammatory and subversive of discipline, officials could ban publications from penitentiary. Abernathy v. Cunningham, C.A.4 (Va.) 1968, 393 F.2d 775. Prisons 4(8)

Correctional facility's policy prohibiting unapproved vendors from sending free softbound, Christian literature, compact discs and tapes to prisoners who had requested those materials violated prisoners' free exercise and free speech rights under First Amendment; asserted penological goals of preventing receipt of contraband, reducing fire hazards, increasing efficiency of random cell inspections or enhancing prison security did not justify the policy, and the distinction between approved vendors and unapproved vendors was arbitrary and not reasonably related to legitimate penological interests. Jesus Christ Prison Ministry v. California Department of Corrections, E.D.Cal.2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 1188. Prisons 4(14)

State prisoner's civil rights claim based on alleged removal of "various appeals materials" and Bible from his cell for period of 19 days while he was confined to suicide watch did not state cognizable claim, particularly where materials were seized pursuant to established policies concerning suicide watch and prisoner had not shown harm caused by alleged seizure. Morrison v. Martin, E.D.N.C.1990, 755 F.Supp. 683, affirmed 917 F.2d 1302. Civil Rights 1098

Absent allegation or showing that inmate was deprived of religious material, no violation of rights protected under this section occurred when Bible delivered to inmate by her attorney was inspected by prison chaplain pursuant to prison policy. Batton v. State Government of North Carolina, Executive Branch, E.D.N.C.1980, 501 F.Supp. 1173 . Civil Rights 1098

For prison officials properly to exclude religious literature from prisoners, presence of literature must create a clear and present danger of breach of security of prison or discipline or some other substantial interference with orderly functioning of the institution. Wilson v. Prasse, W.D.Pa.1971, 325 F.Supp. 9, affirmed 463 F.2d 109. Prisons 4(14)

Prison inmate was entitled to receive, at his expense on regular basis, newspaper entitled "Muhammad Speaks" unless it could be clearly demonstrated that a specific issue would substantially disrupt prison discipline. Northern v. Nelson, N.D.Cal.1970, 315 F.Supp. 687, affirmed 448 F.2d 1266. Prisons 4(14)

2257. ---- Clergymen or ministers, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

That Orthodox Jewish inmate would have access to Orthodox rabbi if he were moved to different prison was insufficient to justify finding that prison infringed upon inmate's right to free exercise by not providing Orthodox rabbi, where inmate was maximum security prisoner and prison was only maximum security prison in Nevada prison system. Ward v. Walsh, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1993, 1 F.3d 873, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1297, 510 U.S. 1192, 127 L.Ed.2d 649. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

Prison was not required to pay for full-time imam to serve Muslim inmates. Al-Alamin v. Gramley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 926 F.2d 680. Prisons 4(14)

Requirement that state interpose no unreasonable barriers to free exercise of inmate's religion cannot be equated with suggestion that state has affirmative duty to provide, furnish or supply every inmate with clergyman of his choice. Gittlemacker v. Prasse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1970, 428 F.2d 1. Prisons 4(14)

Permitting Black Muslim prisoners to visit with ministers of their faith, subject to prison rules, did not pose such danger to prison security as to warrant prison administrators' refusal to permit visiting. Cooper v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1967, 382 F.2d 518. Prisons 4(14)

Muslim inmate's claim that outside Muslim volunteers were refused permission to counsel Muslim inmates failed to establish equal protection violation to support inmate's § 1983 action; denials complained of were result of prospective volunteer's criminal record, which standard was applied equally to all who sought entry into prison facility. McGlothlin v. Murray, W.D.Va.1997, 993 F.Supp. 389, affirmed 151 F.3d 1029, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1261, 526 U.S. 1022, 143 L.Ed.2d 357, on remand 54 F.Supp.2d 629. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 4(14)

Oklahoma prison officials were directed to afford native American inmates desiring to have traditional tribal religion, spiritual or cultural services the same opportunity for exercise of their religion as other inmates; such inmates were entitled to access to spiritual leaders on group and individual basis, access to religious paraphernalia such as gourds, beads, feathers and drums and access to religious literature. Battle v. Anderson, E.D.Okla.1978, 457 F.Supp. 719, remanded 594 F.2d 786. Prisons 4(14)

While prison officials should impose no barriers which are unreasonable, under circumstances of the particular case, to free exercise of inmate's religion, they are not under duty to supply each inmate with clergyman of his choice. Wilson v. Prasse, W.D.Pa.1971, 325 F.Supp. 9, affirmed 463 F.2d 109. Prisons 4(14)

Prison authorities would be required to pay Muslim minister, if available and otherwise authorized to perform religious services pursuant to and in accordance with department of corrections and institutional rules, at hourly rate comparable to that paid to chaplains of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths. Northern v. Nelson, N.D.Cal.1970, 315 F.Supp. 687, affirmed 448 F.2d 1266. Prisons 4(14)

2258. ---- Confiscation of religious objects, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Confiscation of inmate's rosary with attached hard plastic crucifix did not violate his constitutional right to exercise freely his religion, even though inmate had sincere religious belief in crucifix, where confiscation was reasonably related to legitimate penological interests of preventing inmates from using hard plastic crucifixes to unlock their handcuffs. Mark v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 983 F.2d 138, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

State prisoner seeking to possess Taoist religious articles was not discriminated against, in violation of either his free exercise or equal protection rights; number of religious article permitted to Taoists was similar to most other religious groups in prison, and there was no evidence that prisoner had been denied any article which he had shown to be essential to religious Taoism. Adams v. Stanley, D.N.H.2003, 237 F.Supp.2d 136. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 4(14)

2259. ---- Diet, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Budgetary concerns and need for nondiscriminatory and consistent prison staffing appeared to be legitimate penological interests precluding relief from summary judgment in favor of prison officials in inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging that officials violated his religious freedom by requiring him to work in prison kitchen where he could not avoid ingestion of non-kosher odors and handling of non-kosher food, although inmate had presented sufficient evidence of sincerity of his beliefs. Searles v. Dechant, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2004, 393 F.3d 1126. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

That other prisoners might perceive inmate as being favored if he were provided special kosher diet and other prisoners were not similarly accommodated, while not irrelevant, was not in itself dispositive as to whether prison's denial of kosher diet violated Orthodox Jewish prisoner's constitutional right of free exercise. Ward v. Walsh, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1993, 1 F.3d 873, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1297, 510 U.S. 1192, 127 L.Ed.2d 649. Prisons 4(14)

Where it appeared that prisoner could obtain balanced ration by voluntarily avoiding pork or food cooked in grease or lard, prison was not required to provide special diet to prisoner obliged by religious belief to abstain from such foods. Abernathy v. Cunningham, C.A.4 (Va.) 1968, 393 F.2d 775. Prisons 12

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether denial of prisoner's request for a vegetarian diet, which allegedly was required by his Muslim religion, was reasonably related to legitimate penological concerns, precluding summary judgment on prisoner's §§ 1983 claim for prison officials' alleged violation of his rights under the free exercise clause of the First Amendment. Shaheed-Muhammad v. Dipaolo, D.Mass.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 80 . Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether issuance of misconduct against Muslim inmate who refused to assist in preparation of pork while working in prison kitchen, and his placement on cell restriction for 30 days, constituted a substantial burden on his exercise of his sincere religious beliefs, and as to whether ordering him to assist in pork preparations and issuing him a misconduct for refusing to comply were least restrictive means of furthering compelling government interests, precluded summary judgment on inmate's §§1983 claim against corrections employees and officials alleging violation of RLUIPA. Williams v. Bitner, M.D.Pa.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 370. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State officials' plan to require copayment for kosher meals provided to Orthodox Jewish civilly committed inmate of state institution was not reasonably related to legitimate penological interests of maintaining fixed budget for food at institutional facilities and preventing adverse effects on other inmates, and thus copayment plan unduly infringed inmate's rights under Free Exercise Clause; officials provided no figures or calculations to demonstrate financial impact of providing free kosher meals, warranting inference that cost was de minimis, nor did they present any evidence to support their assertion that copayments would reduce tension between kosher and non-kosher meal recipients. Thompson v. Vilsack, S.D.Iowa 2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 974. Constitutional Law 84.5(17); Mental Health 73; Mental Health 78.1

No rational connection existed between state officials' plan to require copayment for kosher meals provided to Orthodox Jewish civilly committed inmate of state institution and asserted penological interest of teaching financial responsibility to inmates, and thus plan's infringement of inmate's Free Exercise Clause rights could not be justified on that basis, in inmate's §§1983 action challenging copayments. Thompson v. Vilsack, S.D.Iowa 2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 974. Constitutional Law 84.5(17); Mental Health 73; Mental Health 78.1

State prisoner was not denied religious diet consistent with his Taoist beliefs, in violation of either his free exercise or equal protection rights; prison was providing vegetarian-no egg diet and, although prisoner was not provided with holiday meals like other religious groups, he had not identified and substantiated any Taoist special meal days. Adams v. Stanley, D.N.H.2003, 237 F.Supp.2d 136. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 4(14)

For purposes of entitlement to injunctive relief, prisoner failed to demonstrate likelihood of success on merits of claim that "nutriloaf" he was served in prison was not kosher and thus violated First Amendment religious rights, where prisoner merely made naked assertion that the loaves were not kosher, and where prison officials submitted evidence that the loaves were prepared under supervision of two rabbis who certified them as kosher. Davidson v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1996, 914 F.Supp. 1011. Injunction 138.60

Pretrial detainee was not denied free exercise of religion by corrections officer's alleged refusal to mark him as Jewish on intake sheet and provide him with identification card that granted prisoners access to kosher food where detainee did not allege that he requested kosher food and that request was denied; First Amendment did not, in context of prison confinement, protect detainee's status or identity, without more, as member of particular sect. Messina v. Mazzeo, E.D.N.Y.1994, 854 F.Supp. 116. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

Courts cannot be concerned with prison menu or the lack of medical care to which prisoners believe they are entitled or the lack of exercise or the lack of access to special religious service; such matters involve internal prison administration. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Prisons 4(14); Prisons 17(1)

Since kosher food was made available to Jewish inmates, those meals should also be made available to Muslims on days when pork was the meat portion of the menu for the rest of the prison population; it was discriminatory to offer Muslims only an extra helping of vegetables in place of the pork. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(14)

Prisoner is not entitled to special diet if adequate nourishment can be obtained by him from other foods which are not objectionable to him on religious grounds. Wilson v. Prasse, W.D.Pa.1971, 325 F.Supp. 9, affirmed 463 F.2d 109. Prisons 17(3)

Denying Muslim prisoner's request in §§ 1983 action to order scientific testing to determine if certain Kosher food items contained meat was not an abuse of discretion, where prisoner failed to offer any evidence that these items did contain meat. Jackson v. Hill, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 595, 2005 WL 823876, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1581

2260. ---- Grooming requirements, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

State prisoner was not precluded from pursuing as-applied challenge for injunctive and declaratory relief to prison grooming regulation by fact that prison officials had qualified immunity from civil liability because any free exercise right to grow beard and sidelocks in conformance with Hasidic Orthodox faith was not clearly established at time officials enforced regulation; resolution of damage claim through application of qualified immunity did not resolve whether officials could continue to enforce regulation in future. Flagner v. Wilkinson, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 241 F.3d 475, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 678, 534 U.S. 1071, 151 L.Ed.2d 590. Declaratory Judgment 84

Prison policy of refusing to permit inmates to wear any beard, even quarter-inch beard, except for medical reasons did not violate free exercise rights of Muslim inmate who desired to wear quarter-inch beard for religious reasons; policy served legitimate penological interests, such as preventing prisoners from quickly altering their appearance, and did not deprive inmate of all means of expressing his religious beliefs. Green v. Polunsky, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 229 F.3d 486. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

Prisoner's claim that prison regulation prohibiting facial hair unconstitutionally restricted his right to free exercise of religion was civil case in which prisoner did not have right to bring ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Friedman v. State of Ariz., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1990, 912 F.2d 328, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 996, 498 U.S. 1100, 112 L.Ed.2d 1079. Federal Civil Procedure 1951

Denial of shaving exemption did not violate equal protection rights of Taoist prisoner, though Muslim inmates were given such exemption, absent showing that facial hair was required or central to religious Taoism. Adams v. Stanley, D.N.H.2003, 237 F.Supp.2d 136. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 4(14)

2261. ---- Providing religious objects, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Texas Department of Corrections was not required to furnish Jewish inmate with certain religious materials, such as six books and a prayer shawl, a tallit, sermon tapes and a kippah, free of charge, for his use; refusal to provide demanded religious articles was within latitude in administration of prison affairs which prison officials must be accorded. Frank v. Terrell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 858 F.2d 1090. Prisons 4(14)

Muslim inmate's claim under § 1983 that state prison officials refused to recognize Islamic prayer beads and other holy symbols was actually claim regarding property lost during inmate's transfer between prison facilities, and therefore, such claim should have been brought under Virginia Tort Claims Act rather than § 1983. McGlothlin v. Murray, W.D.Va.1997, 993 F.Supp. 389, affirmed 151 F.3d 1029, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1261, 526 U.S. 1022, 143 L.Ed.2d 357, on remand 54 F.Supp.2d 629. Civil Rights 1319

Material issues of fact as to sincerity of prisoner's religious beliefs precluded summary judgment for either party in prisoner's § 1983 action against prison officials for violating his freedom of religion by preventing his use of candles, incense, tarot cards, and access to Wiccan chaplain and bible, and by refusing to permit group worship and use of chapel by adherents of Wiccan faith. Rouser v. White, E.D.Cal.1996, 944 F.Supp. 1447. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2262. ---- Retaliatory transfers, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Complaint alleging that prison inmate was transferred from medium security institution to maximum security prison solely to punish him for his religious views stated claim for relief under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Murphy v. Missouri Dept. of Correction, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1985, 769 F.2d 502. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2263. ---- Services, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison officials did not violate Muslim inmate's equal protection rights by allegedly failing to give him and other Muslim inmates 10-15 minute notice prior to services, or by requiring them to sign attendance sheets at such services; such conduct did not deny inmate reasonable opportunity to pursue his faith comparable to opportunity afforded other prisoners who were given customary alert and who were not required to sign attendance sheet. Freeman v. Arpaio, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1997, 125 F.3d 732. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 4(14)

Cancellation of Muslim religious services on no more than six occasions over a five-year period in favor of recreational activities which required use of the same facility was action in furtherance of important governmental interest and did not violate Muslim inmates' First Amendment rights. Hadi v. Horn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 830 F.2d 779 . Constitutional Law 84.5(14)

In civil rights action brought by inmate in Nebraska prison under sentence of death alleging that prison regulation prohibiting inmates subject to death penalty from attending corporate worship services impermissibly infringed on his right under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1 to free exercise of religion, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that the regulation was based upon a justifiable concern for institutional security, especially since inmate had been allowed visits by religious leader, and had been provided with special meals during Muslim holy month, religious literature, and national Muslim broadcasts. Otey v. Best, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1982, 680 F.2d 1231. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

Decision of corrections officials not to provide Catholic group religious service to departmental segregation unit for safety reasons was neither arbitrary nor without reason. McDonald v. Hall, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1978, 579 F.2d 120. Prisons 4(14)

Requirement that state interpose no unreasonable barriers to free exercise of inmate's religion cannot be equated with suggestion that state has affirmative duty to provide, furnish or supply every inmate with religious services of his choice. Gittlemacker v. Prasse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1970, 428 F.2d 1. Prisons 4(14)

State prisoner stated cause of action in complaint against prison officials under §§ 1983 seeking monetary damages for First Amendment violations, by alleging that all inmates in his housing units were denied communal worship.

Shidler v. Moore, N.D.Ind.2006, 409 F.Supp.2d 1060. Prisons 4(14)

Prison officials' decision to prevent inmate from attending ceremony in prison chapel conducted by Catholic cardinal was reasonable, and thus did not violate inmate's First Amendment rights to petition government for redress of grievances and to free speech; inmate had made hostile requests that prison chaplain contact cardinal to request cardinal's support in challenging his conviction, inmate told chaplain he intended to attend ceremony despite prohibition and confront cardinal there, and Catholic church official reported that inmate had written belligerent letters to cardinal and might act inappropriately at ceremony. Gonzalez v. Narcato, E.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 486. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3); Constitutional Law 91; Prisons 4(14)

Muslim inmate's claim that he was not allowed to use prison chapel for Friday night muslim inmate group's religious services, but was required to obtain a pass for religious services in another building failed to establish violation of his right to free exercise of religion under First Amendment and Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), for purposes of inmate's § 1983 action; inmate was never denied pass to attend religious services and could show no impingement on his ability to attend religious services other than minor inconvenience, and there was no security available for chapel on Friday nights. McGlothlin v. Murray, W.D.Va.1997, 993 F.Supp. 389, affirmed 151 F.3d 1029, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1261, 526 U.S. 1022, 143 L.Ed.2d 357, on remand 54 F.Supp.2d 629. Civil Rights 1098; Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

Although it would be preferable that there be a chapel or other arrangements for inmates of the same faith to congregate, in view of fact that no prisoner could be involuntarily held at federal correctional facility for longer than 60 days, opportunities for religious observances were met by provisions of religious service for Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Muslims, and Christian Scientists, even though Jewish inmates, scattered among various modular living units, were often unable to assemble a minyan. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(14)

State prisoner's claim that he was denied the right to attend Jewish services could not serve as basis for granting relief in action under this section, where Jewish services were available on request and prisoner never made such request. Lingo v. Boone, N.D.Cal.1975, 402 F.Supp. 768. Civil Rights 1098

While prison officials should impose no barriers which are unreasonable, under circumstances of the particular case, to free exercise of inmate's religion, they are not under duty to supply each inmate with religious services of his choice. Wilson v. Prasse, W.D.Pa.1971, 325 F.Supp. 9, affirmed 463 F.2d 109. Prisons 4(14)

Where neither warden's memorandum nor regulations applicable to separate unit for death sentence prisoners made mention of prisoner's right to participate in religious services and plaintiff testified that he had not been permitted to go to Mass or Communion as any other Catholic prisoner since he had been in confinement and warden testified that religious services as such were not made available to condemned prisoners, court would order that plaintiff be permitted to attend mid-week services or regular Catholic Sunday services under appropriate supervision. Glenn v. Wilkinson, W.D.Mo.1970, 309 F.Supp. 411. Prisons 4(14)

2264. ---- Holidays, religious practice, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner stated a §§ 1983 claim for violations of his First Amendment right to the free exercise of religion by alleging that corrections officers refused to allow him to attend Muslim holiday feast of Eid-ul-Fitr. Shakur v. Selsky, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 391 F.3d 106. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

Allegations by state prisoner that prison chaplain interfered with free exercise of his religion by intentionally interfering with his ability to observe a particular religious holiday, and that chaplain's interference was motivated by his personal animus towards followers of prisoner's religion, stated claim for violation of free exercise clause of the First Amendment, for purposes of prisoner's § 1983 action. Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2265. Integration of prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Housing of white inmates who objected to living with blacks in cell house in which there were no black prisoners was not justified on ground that it was needed to maintain order and that trouble would result if black inmates were housed with such white inmates. McClelland v. Sigler, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1972, 456 F.2d 1266. Prisons 12

Constitution does not require assignment of prisoners to integrated cells where such assigning cannot be safely made. Holt v. Hutto, E.D.Ark.1973, 363 F.Supp. 194, reversed on other grounds 505 F.2d 194, on remand 410 F.Supp. 251. Prisons 12

Racial segregation, for limited purpose of avoiding imminent prison violence, is at discretion of prison authorities. Rentfrow v. Carter, N.D.Ga.1968, 296 F.Supp. 301. Prisons 13(5)

Prisoner at federal reformatory seeking to enjoin integration of all-white dormitory, not required for security, health or other penal reasons, established discrimination in housing of white prisoners who were not given choice of living in all-white dormitories while Negro prisoners were given choice of living in all-Negro dormitories. Dixon v. Duncan, E.D.Va.1963, 218 F.Supp. 157. Civil Rights 1420; Injunction 128(9)

Proposed complaint alleging that state officials charged with administration of state prisons violated inmate's right to equal protection and due process of law under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 by discriminating against him by reason of his race by requiring him to join an exclusively Negro line formation when proceeding to his assigned cell block for daily lineup, lodging him in an exclusively Negro cell within said cell block, requiring him to join an exclusively Negro line formation for tally purposes, requiring him to join an exclusively Negro line when proceeding into prison dining hall and to eat in a walled-off and exclusively Negro compartment in dining hall, did not show a sufficiently grave and substantial interference with any right of inmate reaching such constitutional magnitude as to justify intervention of federal district court. Nichols v. McGee, N.D.Cal.1959, 169 F.Supp. 721, appeal dismissed 80 S.Ct. 90, 361 U.S. 6, 4 L.Ed.2d 52. Constitutional Law 223; Constitutional Law 272(2)

2266. Telephones, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Temporary loss of prison privileges, such as use of telephone, did not implicate liberty interest cognizable under Fourteenth Amendment. Warren v. Irvin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 985 F.Supp. 350. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(4)

Evidence from which jury could conclude that plaintiff was held in jail until he had quieted down and not for reason that he was unfit to care for his own safety or was danger to safety of others and from which jury could also conclude that defendants' denial of his right to make telephone call, as provided in rule of police department, was arbitrary permitted recovery under this section. Syarto v. Baker, E.D.Wis.1980, 500 F.Supp. 888. Civil Rights 1420

Occasional abuse consisting of coin cheating or fraudulent reference to credit cards allegedly attributable to telephones presently at county jail could not justify an "across the board" denial or limitation of telephone access; adequate number of telephones should be sufficiently proximate to modules that each inmate desiring to use them could make at least one call per day. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 4(6)

Requirement that inmates sign up to make long distance telephone calls, whether they were to be collect or prepaid, was reasonable and valid. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118,

2267. ---- Collect calls, telephones, prisons and prisoners generally

Equal Protection Clause was not violated by 45% commission paid to county by county corrections facility's telecommunications providers on surcharged collect telephone calls from inmates, pursuant to contract between county and providers, even assuming that commission amounted to tax imposed on friends and relatives of inmates, and even assuming that recipients of inmates' calls were similarly situated to recipients of collect calls from general public; contract was aimed at generating revenue to defray costs of providing inmates with telephone service, not at treating recipients of inmates' calls differently from others, and thus had rational basis. Gilmore v. County of Douglas, State of Neb., C.A.8 (Neb.) 2005, 406 F.3d 935. Constitutional Law 242; Telecommunications 947

To state § 1983 claim based on violation of Equal Protection clause, recipients of inmate collect calls, who alleged that public operators of jail facilities and telephone companies treated the recipients differently than recipients of non-inmate collect calls with regard to rates for such calls, had to establish that state discriminated against similarly situated parties without rationally related legitimate penological interest. Daleure v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, W.D.Ky.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 683, appeal dismissed 269 F.3d 540. Constitutional Law 242

Prison and telephone services contractor were not liable to inmate, under § 1983, for policy requiring provider to identify calls as collect calls from correctional institution, absent showing that any constitutional right had been impinged by practice; fact of inmate's incarceration was matter of public record, and thus practice implicated no constitutional privacy interest. Griffin-El v. MCI Telecommunications Corp., E.D.Mo.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1114, affirmed 43 F.3d 1476. Civil Rights 1098; Constitutional Law 82(13)

2268. ---- Solitary confinement or segregation of prisoners, telephones, prisons and prisoners generally

A prisoner in maximum security has no right to unlimited telephone use. Fowler v. Graham, D.C.S.C.1979, 478 F.Supp. 90. Prisons 13(2)

2269. Visitation, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Convicted prisoner has no absolute constitutional right to visitation; privilege of visitation is subject to discretion of prison authorities, provided visitation policies of prison meet legitimate penological objectives. Evans v. Johnson, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1987, 808 F.2d 1427. Prisons 4(6)

Visitation privileges are a matter subject to discretion of prison officials. McCray v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1975, 509 F.2d 1332, on remand 399 F.Supp. 271, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 114, 423 U.S. 859, 46 L.Ed.2d 86. Prisons 4(6)

Prisoner failed to state cause of action under § 1983 against assistant warden for allegedly denying his protected liberty interest in visitation; although prisoner outlined violation of liberty interest, he failed to sufficiently connect alleged violation to assistant warden, in that he did not allege that widespread abuses had occurred and that assistant warden had failed to respond repeatedly, and he merely alleged that he sent one letter to assistant warden, who replied two weeks later. Gavin v. McGinnis, N.D.Ill.1994, 866 F.Supp. 1107. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Although prison officials must be accorded latitude in setting visitation ground rules, they nonetheless must assure that reasonable and effective means of communication remain open. Massey v. Wilson, D.C.Colo.1980, 484 F.Supp. 1332. Prisons 4(6)

With respect to entry of people into prisons for face-to-face communication with inmates, institutional considerations, such as security and related administrative problems, as well as accepted and legitimate policy objectives of corrections system itself, require that some limitation be placed on such visitations, and so long as reasonable and effective means of communication remain open and no discrimination in terms of content is involved, in drawing such lines, prison officials must be accorded great latitude. Ali v. Gibson, D.C.Virgin Islands 1979, 483 F.Supp. 1102, reversed on other grounds 631 F.2d 1126, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 951, 449 U.S. 1129, 67 L.Ed.2d 117. Prisons 4(6)

Promulgation of visiting regulations is matter properly left to competence and discretion of prison officials. Louis v. Ward, S.D.N.Y.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1107. Prisons 4(6)

Visitation policies employed by Alabama penal institutions did not serve valid penal objectives where restrictions on visitation from family and friends were so unreasonable as to frustrate ability of inmates to engage in rehabilitation. Pugh v. Locke, M.D.Ala.1976, 406 F.Supp. 318, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 559 F.2d 283, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 97, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 98, certiorari granted in part, reversed in part 98 S.Ct. 3057, 438 U.S. 781, 57 L.Ed.2d 1114, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 3144, 438 U.S. 915, 57 L.Ed.2d 1160. Prisons 4(6)

2270. ---- State-created right, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Ill.S.H.A. ch. 38, § 1003-8-7, providing that disciplinary restrictions on visitations, work, education or program assignments, and use of prison library shall be related as closely as practicable to abuse of such privileges or facilities, conferred on inmate state-created liberty interest in preserving his visiting privileges against imposition of excessive restraints; therefore, inmate, who alleged such interest was deprived without due process when visitor was barred from visiting inmate without hearing and defendants failed to hear his grievance seeking review of order, stated cause of action under this section. Jackson v. Illinois Dept. of Corrections, N.D.Ill.1983, 567 F.Supp. 1021. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2271. ---- Discriminatory denial, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Challenge by prisoners to proposed visitation regulation at women's prison which permitted officials to permanently deny all visitation privileges to prisoner upon commission by prisoner of two major misconducts involving substance abuse was not ripe for court to adjudicate and was not considered in federal civil rights action; regulation was discretionary, and prisoners could not demonstrate that any person of their class would be permanently deprived of all visitation upon commission of two major misconducts. Bazzetta v. McGinnis, E.D.Mich.1995, 902 F.Supp. 765, affirmed 124 F.3d 774, supplemented 133 F.3d 382, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2371, 524 U.S. 953, 141 L.Ed.2d 739. Federal Courts 13.15

The manner in which visitation privileges are granted rests within discretion of prison administrators, and it is only when visitation is denied in an unreasonable or discriminatory manner that an actionable fact exists. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Prisons 4(6)

Since individual whom prisoner was allegedly denied privilege of seeing on one occasion as punishment for being intoxicated was presently on prisoner's visiting list, issue as to whether prisoner's constitutional rights had been abridged by discriminatory application of visiting regulations was no longer of severe enough quality to necessitate federal intervention. Underwood v. Loving, W.D.Va.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1214. Prisons 4(6)

2272. ---- Death penalty inmates, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Rational basis existed for prison regulation which limited condemned prisoners to visits with only two persons who were not members of their family, while allowing other prisoners to have more nonfamily member visitors, in that condemned men were the most incorrigible of the inmates and constituted the highest escape risk, thus necessitating limits on their opportunities to obtain contraband or make arrangements for escape. Wilson v. Nevada Dept. of Prisons, D.C.Nev.1981, 511 F.Supp. 750. Prisons 4(6)

2273. ---- Bailbondsmen, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

County officials reasonably excluded bailbondsman from county prison, where he was unlicensed and he had a lengthy criminal record, including recent conviction for criminal activity growing out of bonding business, and a recent state report documented criminal activity in that business. Carey v. Beans, E.D.Pa.1980, 500 F.Supp. 580, affirmed 659 F.2d 1065. Prisons 4(6)

2274. ---- Family members, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's various complaints as to his not being permitted to receive visits by his wife and daughter were matters within scope of prison discipline and security and did not state a claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 6 and 14, or this section. Walker v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1966, 356 F.2d 502, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 1598, 384 U.S. 966, 16 L.Ed.2d 678. Civil Rights 1094; Constitutional Law 272(2); Criminal Law 641.12(1); Prisons 4(6); Civil Rights 1098

County detention center did not violate civil rights of prisoner by denying him visitation rights with his six-year-old son during approximately seven-month period of incarceration; while policy of blanket exclusion of visitation rights with young children would ordinarily be subject to careful scrutiny, center was revising its policy during period of prisoner's incarceration and informally allowed him visitation for last two months, even though liberalized policy had not been formally adopted. Smith v. McDonald, D.Kan.1994, 869 F.Supp. 918. Civil Rights 1098

Pro se inmate's allegations that prison officials refused to admit his family to prison for visitation purposes and revoked their visitation privileges for a six-month period, thus preventing him from receiving visitors, were sufficient to state claim under § 1983 for violation of civil rights. Gavin v. McGinnis, N.D.Ill.1992, 788 F.Supp. 1012, order vacated in part on reconsideration 866 F.Supp. 1107. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Absent extraordinary circumstances, internal concerns such as visiting regulations should be resolved by jail officials, but every effort should be made to allow visitations by children, and length of visits should be extended to allow inmates benefits of visiting with friends and family. Lovern v. Cox, W.D.Va.1974, 374 F.Supp. 32. Prisons 4(6)

2275. ---- News media, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison regulations under which inmates had opportunity to participate in individual interviews with member of press and, additionally, to communicate by mail were adequate, and regulations were not constitutionally deficient in banning group press conferences. Main Road v. Aytch, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 565 F.2d 54. Prisons 4(6)

Decisions of prison authorities regarding access and security are to be accorded high degree of deference and rational policy decisions which restrict entry by news media, incarcerated spouses and paralegals will not be disturbed, unless there is substantial evidence to indicate that officials have exaggerated their response to perceived problem. Carey v. Beans, E.D.Pa.1980, 500 F.Supp. 580, affirmed 659 F.2d 1065. Prisons 4(6); Prisons 4(8); Prisons 4(11)

Restriction whereby persons, who were incarcerated in state institution in lieu of bail, were not permitted to talk to reporters without express approval of Commissioner of Corrections was reasonable, in light of belief that limitation of interviews was required to prevent prisoners from gaining such notoriety that they would become "wheels" within institution. Seale v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1971, 326 F.Supp. 1375. Prisons 4(6)

2276. ---- Psychologists, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Denial of contact visits between prisoner and his psychologist by county jail officials neither shocked general conscience nor violated established standards of fundamental fairness, and thus denial of contact visitation did not constitute denial of prisoner's rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, in view of total absence of any allegations which could support claim that denying prisoner contact visits with his psychologist was sufficiently harmful to evidence deliberate indifference to serious medical needs. Mingo v. Patterson, D.C.Colo.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1358. Constitutional Law 272(2)

2277. ---- Contact visits, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Visiting policy at county jail limiting number of visitors and length of visits and prohibiting "contact" visits was justified by small size of jail and limited number of people to be accommodated, and did not violate constitutional rights of pretrial detainee, even though, on one occasion, detainee's mother was denied opportunity to visit with him because she arrived on day when no visits were scheduled. Martin v. Tyson, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1988, 845 F.2d 1451, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 162, 488 U.S. 863, 102 L.Ed.2d 133. Prisons 4(6)

Denial of contact visits at county jail was a permissible restriction of inmates' right to privacy, where prohibition of contact visits was reasonable response to legitimate concerns of prison security and where restriction prohibiting physical contact was specifically tailored to meet perceived security problem. Inmates of Allegheny County Jail v. Pierce, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 612 F.2d 754, on remand 487 F.Supp. 638. Prisons 4(6)

Restrictions on contact visits in county jail were reasonably related to the legitimate penological purpose of security and thus did not provide basis for relief in civil rights action concerning conditions at the jail. Johnson v. Galli, D.C.Nev.1984, 596 F.Supp. 135. Civil Rights 1098; Prisons 4(6)

Jail inmates had no constitutional right to contact visits. Owens-El v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1978, 457 F.Supp. 984, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 612 F.2d 754, on remand 487 F.Supp. 638. Prisons 4(6)

2278. ---- Conjugal visits, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Question of whether there may be conjugal visits in federal jails or prisons is for Congress and the executive to decide. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Constitutional Law 70.3(9.1); Constitutional Law 72

2279. ---- Smoking, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Officials at Virginia prison did not violate inmate's civil rights in connection with alleged smoke-filled condition of visiting room; officials had taken adequate measures to alleviate inconvenience of occasional incidents when room had several smokers, and inmate had not alleged any serious medical problems resulting from room's condition. Harris v. Murray, E.D.Va.1990, 761 F.Supp. 409. Civil Rights 1091

2280. ---- Time restrictions, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Whether individual visitors to county jail should stay only 20 minutes as presently allowed or could be allowed more time did not raise constitutional issue that required district court to second guess sheriff, who along with his staff fully recognized value of visitation and were to be commended for attention and effort that they had devoted to accommodating large number of visitors. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 4(6)

Prison officials did not violate inmate's constitutional rights in rejecting grievances which were not filed under his legal name; rather, they were only enforcing prison regulations. Green v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 24, 2004 WL 1445831, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 927, 543 U.S. 1074, 160 L.Ed.2d 813. Prisons 13(7.1)

2281. ---- Weekdays or weekends, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Where prison superintendent informed inmate's visitor of regulation against weekday visitors and was not informed by visitor of visitor's inability to visit on weekends, superintendent's failure to make special arrangements to enable visitor to visit inmate on weekdays pursuant to prison practices did not deprive inmate of constitutional rights. Russell v. Oliver, W.D.Va.1975, 392 F.Supp. 470, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 552 F.2d 115. Prisons 4(6)

2282. ---- Monitoring conversations, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Monitoring county jail inmate's conversations with visitors violated no right of privacy possessed by inmate. Christman v. Skinner, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 468 F.2d 723. Prisons 4(6)

2283. ---- List of visitors, visitation, prisons and prisoners generally

Missouri Department of Corrections Rule, which stated that those persons whose names appear on inmate's visiting list "shall" be allowed to visit, created liberty interest protected by Fourteenth Amendment, and thus inmate could bring federal civil rights action after he was denied visitation with his son, who was on approved visiting list. Taylor v. Armontrout, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 894 F.2d 961, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1098; Constitutional Law 272(2)

2284. ---- Abuse of visitation right, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoners and members of their families and designated friends did not have right of visitation protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 which was unduly limited by suspension by reason of prisoners' being found in possession of contraband immediately after visits. White v. Keller, C.A.4 (Md.) 1978, 588 F.2d 913. Constitutional Law 91; Prisons 4(6)

Where state prisoner had abused rights of visitation when he accepted narcotic drug from wife during visit, subsequent limitations imposed on prisoner's visitation rights were made with good cause and gave no basis to suit by prisoner under this section. Patterson v. Walters, W.D.Pa.1973, 363 F.Supp. 486. Civil Rights 1092; Prisons 4(6)

2285. Conversations with other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Record disclosed no error in district court's finding that prison inmate who claimed denial of right to have other inmates to converse with was loud and boisterous in his relations with others in the protective custody cell block. Sweet v. South Carolina Dept. of Corrections, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 854. Prisons 4(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Complaint of prison inmates against the state legislator, state prison official, and newspaper writer and editor alleging that the disparaging comments on value of inmate testimony made by prison official and legislator as contained in newspaper article were false, malicious and defamatory failed to state a federal claim, since inmates were free to express views with regard to reliability of inmate testimony regardless of whether the views were supported or not and the inmates were free to express their views by letter or in person when legislative committee toured penitentiary. Smith v. Klecker, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1977, 554 F.2d 848. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prisoner could not maintain civil rights action against prison employee on allegations that employee defamed his reputation by calling him obscene name; prisoner had not been deprived of any right, privilege or immunity secured him by Federal Constitution or laws of the United States. Ellingburg v. Lucas, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1975, 518 F.2d 1196. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Defamatory statement made by member of state parole board relative to defendant's propensity for committing rape, which statement was made at parole hearing and included in memorandum placed in prisoner's file, could not be basis for action by prisoner under this section authorizing action for deprivation of rights. Sorenson v. Zapien, D.C.Colo.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1207. Civil Rights 1097

2287. Infliction of emotional distress, prisons and prisoners generally

Intentional infliction of emotional distress, by prosecuting attorneys and prison officials, could not form basis of claim that prison inmate's federal due process rights were violated, which could be brought under § 1983; claim should have been brought under state law. Romer v. Morgenthau, S.D.N.Y.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 346. Civil Rights 1098

2288. Grievance procedures, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate's pursuit of grievances against Department of Correctional Services was activity clearly protected by Federal Constitution. Hendricks v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 114 F.3d 390. Prisons 13(6)

Issue of whether inmate availed himself of the inmate grievance procedure prior to bringing § 1983 action in district court for treatment he received in county jail could not be resolved at motion to dismiss phase because of factual dispute as to whether inmate filed a grievance, and if so, whether correctional facility responded to it. Sweet v. Wende Correctional Facility, W.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 492. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Prison grievances are constitutionally protected conduct for purposes of inmate retaliation claim under § 1983. Justice v. Coughlin, N.D.N.Y.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1312. Civil Rights 1092

Inmates do not have a constitutionally protected right to a grievance procedure. Brown v. G.P. Dodson, W.D.Va.1994, 863 F.Supp. 284. Prisons 13(6)

Any failure of prison officials to provide inmate with informal resolution request form was not cognizable in § 1983 proceeding because inmate grievance procedure was not constitutionally required. Davis v. Sancegraw, E.D.Mo.1993, 850 F.Supp. 809. Civil Rights 1092

Alleged failure of state prison officials to respond to inmate's grievances within time periods provided by grievance procedure set up within state prison system did not give rise to a deprivation of federal constitutional rights actionable under civil rights statute. Spencer v. Moore, E.D.Mo.1986, 638 F.Supp. 315. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate's complaint that prison officials' failure to comply with grievance procedure mandated by Illinois Department of Corrections regulation violated his rights under Ill.S.H.A. Const. Art. 1 § 1 et seq. and statutes did not give rise to claim cognizable in federal civil rights action. Azeez v. DeRobertis, N.D.Ill.1982, 568 F.Supp. 8.

Civil Rights 1092

Administrative insensitivity to state prison inmates' complaints does not constitute a constitutional violation. Fisher v. Woodson, E.D.Va.1973, 373 F.Supp. 970. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate failed to prove that he was retaliated against for filing a grievance requesting the use of a larger room to conduct meetings of a religious organization, thus defeating the inmate's First Amendment claim; correction officer's requiring the inmate to clean pesticide residue was not an adverse action, and in any event was not shown to be causally related to the grievance, and the superintendent was not shown to have disregarded the request, would have moved the meetings to another location if necessary, and was not involved in a transfer of the inmate. Croswell v. McCoy, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 962534, Unreported. Constitutional Law 91; Prisons 4(14)

2289. Unions, prisons and prisoners generally

With presumably effective path available for transmission of grievances from prison inmates to correctional officials, fact that prisoners' union grievance procedures might be more "desirable" would not convert prohibitory regulations directed at the union into unconstitutional acts. Jones v. North Carolina Prisoners' Labor Union, Inc., U.S.N.C.1977, 97 S.Ct. 2532, 433 U.S. 119, 53 L.Ed.2d 629. Prisons 4(5)

2290. Political activity, prisons and prisoners generally

While some questioning relating to "political" activity may have relevance to prison security classification, punitive prison action on the basis of pure political belief is constitutionally prohibited. Nimmo v. Simpson, E.D.Va.1974, 370 F.Supp. 103. Prisons 4(5)

2291. Protests, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmates of penal institution have no judicially enforceable right to advocate open defiance of authority within the prison walls. Long v. Harris, D.C.Kan.1971, 332 F.Supp. 262, affirmed 473 F.2d 1387. Prisons 4(5)

2292. Petitions or writings, prisons and prisoners generally

Presence of defendants' reasoned belief that it was necessary to prohibit circulation of protest petitions by prisoners in light of legitimate prison security concerns, and existence of alternative means for prisoners to communicate grievances justified suppression of prisoners' group petition because of special problems of prison administration, despite evident restriction of prisoners' right to freedom of expression. Nickens v. White, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 622 F.2d 967, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 581, 449 U.S. 1018, 66 L.Ed.2d 478. Prisons 4(5)

Punishment of state prisoner for putting his thoughts on paper, with no prior warning and no hint that he intended to spirit writings outside his cell, was improper even if the writings were inflammatory and racist, and any threat to prison security that prisoner's possession of his writings might have posed could have been met by confiscation rather than punishment. Sostre v. McGinnis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 442 F.2d 178, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 719, 404 U.S. 1049, 30 L.Ed.2d 740, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1190, 405 U.S. 978, 31 L.Ed.2d 254. Prisons 13(4)

An attorney may not invoke constitutional protection for prison inmate to circulate petitions or other printed material within the prison simply by sending them to an inmate in an envelope bearing the attorney's office letterhead. Paka v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1974, 387 F.Supp. 111. Prisons 4(5)

2293. Books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Questions of fact existed as to whether there was valid and rational connection between state prison's ban on inmates' receipt of gift publications or subscriptions, dollar limit on publication purchases, and complete ban on some inmates' receipt of publications, and asserted legitimate governmental interests of security and behavior management, precluding summary judgment in inmates' and publisher's §§1983 due process and First Amendment action against corrections officials; there was expert testimony that limitation of access served no legitimate purpose, no behavior-management justification was demonstrated for complete ban for some inmates, no link was drawn between dollar limit and increased payment of restitution or other obligations, and weak link was drawn between gift subscriptions and "strong arming" security risk. Jacklovich v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2004, 392 F.3d 420, on remand 401 F.Supp.2d 1181. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State prison authorities must affirmatively justify the withholding of a given publication from complaining prisoner, and only in the limited circumstances when legitimate governmental interests are involved, that is, where receipt of publication would constitute a threat to prison security or order or inmate's own rehabilitation, may the withholding of same be justified. Morgan v. LaVallee, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 526 F.2d 221. Prisons 4(8)

State inmate's claim that state correctional officials failed to follow institutional grievance procedures did not demonstrate denial of constitutionally or federally protected right, and thus was not cognizable in § 1983 action. Hunnicutt v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 175, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 152 Fed.Appx. 34, 2005 WL 2573525. Civil Rights 1092

Determination of which prisoner-penned articles will be circulated throughout the prison population via an inmate periodical is clearly a matter of prison administration within the discretion of state authorities. Jones v. Rouse, M.D.Fla.1972, 341 F.Supp. 1292. Prisons 4(6)

Inmate's possession of reading materials may be preceded by careful examination to detect contraband, and considerations of space, sanitation and orderliness may require certain limitations which would otherwise be constitutionally offensive if an ordinary citizen were involved. Seale v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1971, 326 F.Supp. 1375. Prisons 4(8)

2294. ---- Black magazines, books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally

Refusal, based solely on race, to allow black prisoners to subscribe to nonsubversive black magazines violates U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Martin v. Wainwright, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 525 F.2d 983. Constitutional Law 223

Complaint by Negro prisoner alleging that although one-half of prison population was Negro only two Negro magazines were allowed in prison while 123 magazines catering to taste of white inmates were allowed, and that when prisoner requested leave to subscribe to a certain Negro national magazine request was denied because magazine was not on official list of approved magazines issued by prison officials stated claim within jurisdiction of the court and stated claim upon which relief could be granted. Owens v. Brierley, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 452 F.2d 640. Civil Rights 1395(7); Federal Courts 244

2295. ---- Newspapers, books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison inmate newspaper prepared for distribution both within and without correction facility may be subjected to prepublication review and in appropriate circumstances objectionable articles may be edited. Chiarello v. Bohlinger, S.D.N.Y.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1153, affirmed 573 F.2d 1288. Prisons 4(8)

State prison officials may unilaterally enact regulations pertaining to publication of newspaper by prison inmates, but such regulations must be no broader than necessary to protect legitimate governmental interests of security, order and rehabilitation. The Luparar v. Stoneman, D.C.Vt.1974, 382 F.Supp. 495. Prisons 4(8)

2296. ---- Paperbacks, books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally

Since county jail officials did not show that a ban on paperback books was in any way justified to promote jail security or other legitimate governmental ends, court would direct said officials to lift the ban on receipt of paperback books by inmates. Parnell v. Waldrep, W.D.N.C.1981, 511 F.Supp. 764. Prisons 4(8)

2297. ---- Loaning to other inmates, books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally

State penitentiary rule prohibiting the unauthorized loaning of books to other inmates is reasonable, and there was no showing that action by prison officials in confiscating a prisoner's books which were found by prison authorities in cell of another inmate was arbitrary so as to warrant further inquiry by federal court. U. S. ex rel. Duronio v. Russell, M.D.Pa.1966, 256 F.Supp. 479. Prisons 4(8)

2298. ---- Notice of rejection of publication, books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally

Rather than merely advising inmate, when publication has been rejected, of number of guideline that publication violates, better practice would be for rejection notice to contain brief statement of reasons, in meaningful language, why inmate may not receive publication, specifying offending portion if less than entire publication was objectionable; such a requirement would promote thought by decision maker, focus attention on relevant points, and further protect against arbitrary and capricious censorship decisions grounded upon impermissible or erroneous considerations. Jackson v. Ward, W.D.N.Y.1978, 458 F.Supp. 546. Prisons 4(8)

Jail authorities may exercise discretion in denying an inmate the right to receive publications having a deleterious effect upon institutional control and discipline, but written notification should be given to the inmate of rejection of such a publication stating the reasons therefor. Sykes v. Kreiger, N.D.Ohio 1975, 451 F.Supp. 421. Prisons 4(8)

Procedure for screening literature for receipt by state prison inmates whereby committee made up of prison officials from number of fields decided censorship disputes, such evaluation was guided by presumption that literature should be freely available and by list of seven specific criteria of nonacceptability, and decisions were required to be reached within certain time limits was deficient, in that prisoners were not given notice of reason for delays in receipt of literature and notice that they could present argument to committee. Sostre v. Otis, S.D.N.Y.1971, 330 F.Supp. 941. Prisons 4(8)

2299. ---- Objection to rejection of publication, books, magazines or other periodicals, prisons and prisoners generally

A prisoner in a state correctional institution has the right to the aid of the publisher in submitting written objections to rejection of publications mailed to him in institution inasmuch as the prisoner has not seen the offending issue and, thus, cannot be expected to marshal arguments in favor of its admission without the assistance of someone familiar with the material. Cofone v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1976, 409 F.Supp. 1033. Prisons 4(6)

2300. Copying machines, prisons and prisoners generally

No basis exists in the Constitution or federal law for challenging transactions between prison and its inmates simply because transactions return profit to prison administration, and thus fact that prisoners paid price for photocopying that resulted in profit to prison administration did not violate federal rights of prisoner, who did not alleged that profit making had any impact on his constitutional rights aside from asserted right to make photocopies at price that did not include a profit margin. Rhodes v. Robinson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 612 F.2d 766. Prisons 4(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2301. Libraries, prisons and prisoners generally

There was no violation of constitutional rights in denying state prisoner's request that inter-library loan procedure be used to obtain certain titles, specifically, satanism, where prison officials had not interfered with plaintiff's purchase of such books and he wanted to use the inter-library loan procedure to obtain extra copies, there was no evidence that inmates had or could obtain materials through the inter-library loan procedure for use in religious groups, as plaintiff wanted to do, and books were obtained for personal study and library did not stock titles on a certain subject matter and only one inmate expressed interest in such material. Childs v. Duckworth, N.D.Ind.1981, 509 F.Supp. 1254, affirmed 705 F.2d 915. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3); Constitutional Law 272(2)

2302. Recreation, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Women prisoners in District of Columbia were denied equal protection, and District and correction officials were liable under civil rights statute for not providing equal opportunities in areas of recreation, work details and work training, in that inequality resulted from implementation of policy decision of Department of Corrections; there was no justifiable reason why women could not perform more skilled, less traditional chores within their own facility as similarly situated men did in their facilities, and inequality could not be justified by pointing to differences in the physical structures of the facilities or the proportion of men and women in the facilities. Women Prisoners of District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1995, 899 F.Supp. 659, remanded 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S.App.D.C. 247, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1552, 520 U.S. 1196, 137 L.Ed.2d 701, on remand 968 F.Supp. 744. Civil Rights 1098; Constitutional Law 224(5); Convicts 7(1); Prisons 17(5)

Jail inmates were provided with adequate recreation and exercise areas and opportunities where there was day room which inmates were free to use for meals and limited recreation, including television, radios, and limited forms of exercise. Hopkins v. Campbell, D.Kan.1994, 870 F.Supp. 316. Prisons 17(5)

Under all the circumstances, including jail officials' apparent good faith desire to provide for adequate recreation for county jail inmates, one hour per day recreation would be considered a goal, rather than a constitutionally mandated minimum, with court retaining jurisdiction in order to assess progress toward such goal; in the meantime, all prisoners, including those considered "high power" and those in administrative segregation, had to be allowed not less than two and one-half hours of roof recreation per week. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 17(5)

Prison superintendent's failure to spend funds in inmate canteen fund to purchase arts, crafts and hobby equipment as authorized by division of corrections, because he learned that another grant was forthcoming for same purpose, did not violate prisoners' civil rights. Matthews v. Reynolds, W.D.Va.1975, 405 F.Supp. 50. Prisons 4(5)

In view of evidence that weightlifting, boxing, outdoor ball games in organized leagues, hobby crafts, library facilities, indoor games, classrooms, individual and group study, and musical groups were provided for inmates, restrictions upon ability of inmates to obtain physical exercise or engage in recreational activities did not approach severity of cruel and unusual punishment. Collins v. Haga, W.D.Va.1974, 373 F.Supp. 923. Sentencing And Punishment 1541

2303. ---- Exercise, recreation, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claim that officials violated Eighth Amendment by offering him only three hours of exercise per week in enclosed outdoor area where inmate stated in his complaint that he refused to make use of exercise opportunities and that any ill effects arising from lack of exercise stemmed from his own, rather than officials', actions or inactions. Hosna v. Groose, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 80 F.3d 298, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 164, 519 U.S. 860, 136 L.Ed.2d 107. Civil Rights 1376(7)

While a restriction of two exercise periods of one hour each during a week might not ordinarily transgress the constitutional standard as fixed by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8 if confined to a relatively short period of maximum confinement, an indefinite limitation on exercise may be harmful to a prisoner's health, and, if so, would amount to "cruel and unusual" punishment. Sweet v. South Carolina Dept. of Corrections, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 854. Sentencing And Punishment 1541

Denial of outdoor exercise to state prisoner, following racial tension and violence culminating in another inmate's murder, was not result of warden's deliberate indifference, and thus did not violate defendant's Eighth Amendment rights, in that restrictions were instituted for primary purpose of preventing further race-based attacks, injuries, and homicides. Hayes v. Garcia, S.D.Cal.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 1198. Prisons 17(5); Sentencing And Punishment 1541

Suspension of outdoor exercise at state prison for 150 days was not motivated by prison officials' deliberate indifference or malicious and sadistic intent to harm or punish inmate, and thus did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment in violation of Eighth Amendment, where entire unit was locked down as result of riot between African-American and Caucasian inmates, and restrictions on outdoor exercise were instituted for primary purpose of preventing further race-based attacks, injuries, and homicides. Hurd v. Garcia, S.D.Cal.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 1032. Sentencing And Punishment 1541

Lack of outdoor exercise for pretrial detainee at small county jail did not violate due process, where cells were large, detainee did a wide variety of inside exercises during stay at jail, and no physical deterioration occurred due to failure to obtain outdoor exercise. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280 . Prisons 17(5)

Although there was a genuine issue as to whether prisoner was unconstitutionally deprived of a basic need for outdoor exercise for approximately thirty-five weeks, prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights were not violated since period without exercise, which began as a result of racial tension and violence and culminated in an inmate's murder, was not the result of prison defendants' deliberate indifference or motivated by malicious and sadistic intent to harm or punish him, but rather, was motivated by a desire to ensure the safety and security of the staff and inmates. Jones v. Garcia, S.D.Cal.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 1095. Sentencing And Punishment 1541

There was no showing that warden and deputy warden of correctional institution were deliberately indifferent to condition of inmate claiming he was sexually assaulted during pat down search by sergeant at facility, as required for Eighth Amendment claim; there was evidence that officials did investigate claim, including checking whether city police had any information, and there were no further sexual assault incidents, suggesting that remedial action had been taken. Reimann v. Frank, W.D.Wis.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1059. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

For purposes of entitlement to preliminary injunction, prisoner demonstrated likelihood of showing that he was unconstitutionally denied opportunity to exercise outdoors, where he made undisputed allegation that inmates, such as he, housed in special housing unit were issued only summer weight pants, short sleeve shirts, a sweatshirt and noninsulated, nonwaterproof footwear despite cold winter weather, and alleged additionally that inmates of that unit shared "community" lightweight jackets; for prison to refuse to provide adequate clothing for outdoor exercise during cold weather was tantamount to refusing to provide outdoor exercise, and such refusal would constitute "cruel and unusual punishment." Davidson v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1996, 914 F.Supp. 1011. Injunction 138.60

Allegations of county jail inmates that inmates were provided inadequate opportunity for exercise stated claim under this section, in light of inmate's assertion that during approximately seven months he was confined in jail he was only permitted to exercise outside his cell on two occasions. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

F.Supp. 245.

Inmate's allegation that he was denied one hour's exercise did not amount to a constitutional violation for purposes of a complaint under this section. Nelson v. Herdzik, W.D.N.Y.1983, 559 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1098

Gaston County, North Carolina and its Board of Commissioners were liable under this section for past and continuing injury to county prisoners as regard unconstitutional conditions with regard to lack of exercise facilities and they were subject to any lawful equitable remedies that the court might order to prevent further injury, especially as such defendants knew shortly after suit was filed in 1979 that unconstitutional conditions existed at jail and failed to correct such conditions although they were not served until August, 1981. Parnell v. Waldrep, W.D.N.C.1982, 538 F.Supp. 1203. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Expense of providing exercise facilities for inmates at county jail did not absolve jail officials from meeting the constitutional requirement to provide exercise opportunities. Parnell v. Waldrep, W.D.N.C.1981, 511 F.Supp. 764 . Prisons 17(5)

In view of fact that no prisoner could involuntarily be kept at federal correctional center for more than 60 days, physical exercise available through one hour each day in the rooftop area and weight machines, exercise bicycles, and other such items available in the multipurpose areas of the modular living units provided adequate physical exercise opportunities for the inmates. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 17(5)

Regulation which allotted all inmates under sentence of death the same amount of exercise time although less than that afforded to noncapital prisoners was reasonable with respect to prisoner under death sentence in view of necessity for maximum security in case of inmates under sentence of death. U. S. ex rel. Raymond v. Rundle, E.D.Pa.1967, 276 F.Supp. 637. Prisons 13(4)

In prisoner's pro se § 1983 complaint, allegation that he was injured in softball game as result of dangerous condition posed by recreational area due to its small size, was sufficient to satisfy objective element required to state Eighth Amendment claim. Slacks v. Grenier, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22232942, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2304. ---- Movies, recreation, prisons and prisoners generally

Allegation by state prisoner who brought action that was treated as if brought under this section that he should not have been subjected to misconduct report by prison guard for attending movie in prison did not indicate extraordinary circumstances with respect to exercise of prison discipline that would warrant adding such guard as party defendant. U. S. ex rel. Pope v. Williams, E.D.Pa.1971, 326 F.Supp. 279. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2305. ---- Television, recreation, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmates confined to wheelchairs were similarly situated with other prisoners who had in-cell cable television service, for purposes of § 1983 actions by wheelchair-bound inmates challenging refusal of prison to provide in-cell cable service to unit in which inmates were housed. More v. Farrier, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 984 F.2d 269, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 74, 510 U.S. 819, 126 L.Ed.2d 43. Civil Rights 1098

State prisoners' contentions regarding such matters as absence of television or radio and mingling of military and civilian prisoners were matters entirely within purview of jail officials and, though involving matters which were naturally of vital concern to inmates, did not pertain to paramount federal constitutional rights and thus were not cognizable under this section. Lovern v. Cox, W.D.Va.1974, 374 F.Supp. 32. Civil Rights 1395(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2306. Educational or vocational training, prisons and prisoners generally-- Generally

Failure to provide inmates with educational programs or to allow them to participate in charitable organization did not rise to level of a constitutional deprivation. Burnette v. Phelps, M.D.La.1985, 621 F.Supp. 1157. Prisons 4(5)

Prisoner failed to establish that the conditions of prison dining hall and the manner in which vocational training was offered violated his civil rights. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Civil Rights 1420

Control of prison educational programs is a matter of prison administration which will not give rise to a federal claim in most instances. Hayes v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1979, 475 F.Supp. 1347. Prisons 12

Educational program available at federal correctional facility, which would not involuntarily hold any prisoner longer than 60 days, which included high school equivalency diploma program, English as a second language, adult basic education, college courses, and classes in art, dance, creative writing, human sexuality and family dynamics, life skills, world politics, sculpture, and drama was adequate. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(5)

There is no federal constitutional right to vocational training for inmates in correctional system and state had no obligation to provide inmate with vocational materials. Russell v. Oliver, W.D.Va.1975, 392 F.Supp. 470, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 552 F.2d 115. Prisons 4(5)

Denial of attendance at prison school is a restriction on activity incidental to lawful incarceration and necessarily within discretion of prison administration; it does not raise constitutional question or constitute proper subject for relief under this section. U. S. ex rel. Cleggett v. Pate, N.D.Ill.1964, 229 F.Supp. 818. Civil Rights 1098; Prisons 4(5)

2307. ---- Legal education, educational or vocational training, prisons and prisoners generally

Michigan was required to institute legal education program at women's prison, despite existence of prison legal services program, since assistance offered by legal services program did not extend to civil rights suits and criminal appellate matters that could be handled by public defender. Glover v. Johnson, E.D.Mich.1979, 478 F.Supp. 1075. Prisons 4(13)

2308. ---- Licenses and permits, educational or vocational training, prisons and prisoners generally

Complaint wherein Pennsylvania state prison inmate alleged that he had accumulated over 1,250 barbering credit hours at the prison, working as a student barber and an institutional barber, that he had attended a prison barber school but that neither the months that he spent in the school nor his credit hours of barbering were ever recorded by the defendant prison official and that, as a direct result of the prison official's conduct, the Pennsylvania State Board of Barber Examiners had denied him eligibility to take the state licensing examination did not charge any defendants with conduct depriving the inmate of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States and, therefore, the complaint did not state a claim for relief against the prison official under this section. Hayes v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1979, 475 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2309. Rehabilitation programs, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

State prison policy requiring inmates participating in sex offender treatment program to fully disclose past sexual behavior, including uncharged, potentially prosecutable conduct, did not violate inmate's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, even though inmate's failure to participate in program resulted in negative parole recommendations, where participation in program was voluntary, and policy did not automatically deprive inmate of consideration for parole. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Criminal Law 393(1); Prisons 4(5)

Prisoner's § 1983 claim against prison officials for failing to provide him with sex offender treatment and to allow him to participate in rehabilitation program was frivolous as prisoner does not have protected liberty interest in receiving treatment while in prison. Richmond v. Cagle, E.D.Wis.1996, 920 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1098

While courts have declined to elevate a positive rehabilitative program to level of a constitutional right, it is clear that a penal system cannot be operated in such a manner that it impedes an inmate's ability to attempt rehabilitation, or simply to avoid physical, mental or social deterioration. Pugh v. Locke, M.D.Ala.1976, 406 F.Supp. 318, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 559 F.2d 283, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 97, rehearing denied 564 F.2d 98, certiorari granted in part, reversed in part 98 S.Ct. 3057, 438 U.S. 781, 57 L.Ed.2d 1114, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 3144, 438 U.S. 915, 57 L.Ed.2d 1160. Prisons 4(1)

Prisoner's claim concerning inability to participate in rehabilitative programs due to conditions of his confinement did not state deprivation of constitutional dimensions. Penn El v. Riddle, E.D.Va.1975, 399 F.Supp. 1059. Civil Rights 1098

Persons convicted of felonies do not acquire by virtue of their conviction a constitutional right to services and benefits unavailable as of right to persons never convicted of criminal offenses; so long as treatment, rehabilitation and reformation services and facilities may not be demanded of the state as of right by her free citizens, such services may not be demanded by convicted felons. James v. Wallace, M.D.Ala.1974, 382 F.Supp. 1177. Prisons 17(2)

2310. ---- Detainers, rehabilitation programs, prisons and prisoners generally

Wisconsin's per se exclusion of prisoners with detainers from minimum security status and from participating in certain rehabilitation programs requiring minimum security status does not bear a rational relationship to legitimate governmental purpose. Reddin v. Israel, E.D.Wis.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1215. Prisons 12

2311. Employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally-- Generally

Illinois prison regulation which allowed transfer of prisoner's work assignment for any reason except punishment had put restrictions on only one ground of action, and the remaining field of discretion was so large that no prisoner had a legitimate claim of entitlement to a particular job placement no matter what the facts might be. Wallace v. Robinson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 940 F.2d 243, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1563, 503 U.S. 961, 118 L.Ed.2d 210. Convicts 7(1)

Allegation that prisoner's work assignment amounted to classification error under state law did not state cause of action for violation of prisoner's civil rights. Shields v. Hopper, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1131. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Alleged imposition of unreasonable punitive work assignments and solitary confinement with deliberate and knowing effect of activating prisoner's tubercular condition gave rise to cause of action in light of the cruel and unusual punishment prohibition of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8. Woolsey v. Beto, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1971, 450 F.2d 321. Civil Rights 1092

In order to induce county jail inmates to work at menial chores that had to be performed regularly if jail was to operate, sheriff was entitled to "hold out the carrot" of certain privileges that from a practical standpoint could not,

or constitutionally need not, be accorded general jail population, such as allowing those inmates that agreed to work to enter and leave their cells at will, have virtually unrestricted access to day room and many other areas of jail, and to attend weekly movies. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 12

Although jobs were not available for many inmates at federal correctional facility, which would not involuntarily hold any prisoner longer than 60 days, prisoners were not entitled to have constructive employment made available to all inmates wishing it or to have those inmates paid at the federal minimum wage. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 12

Administration of programs such as work assignments involve discretion which prison officials must exercise for management of their institution. McNeil v. Latney, E.D.Va.1974, 382 F.Supp. 161. Prisons 12

2312. ---- Mandatory work, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Requiring state prisoner to work while in prison even though conviction was being appealed did not violate this section. Stiltner v. Rhay, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1963, 322 F.2d 314, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 678, 376 U.S. 920, 11 L.Ed.2d 615, rehearing denied 84 S.Ct. 972, 376 U.S. 959, 11 L.Ed.2d 978. Civil Rights 1098

2313. ---- Choice of employment, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's expectations of prison employment did not amount to a property or liberty interest entitled to due process protection, since prison regulations described work reductions as "discretional." Torres Garcia v. Puerto Rico, D. Puerto Rico 2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 373. Convicts 7(1)

Illinois administrative regulation governing removal of prison inmates from work assignments did not vest inmate with protected liberty and property interest in his prison job so as to give rise to § 1983 action for reassignment of inmate to less desirable job, where regulation left decision to remove inmate from job assignment to unfettered discretion of prison officials. Jackson v. O'Leary, N.D.Ill.1988, 689 F.Supp. 846, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1098

State penitentiary inmate was not entitled to a job assignment of his choice in the prison. Hill v. Anderson, E.D.Okla.1974, 381 F.Supp. 906. Convicts 7(1)

Right to have job of his choice was not within constitutional protected liberty of convicted felon, and he was entitled to relief if, but only if, his work assignment at prison was decided arbitrarily or capriciously. Beatham v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1973, 369 F.Supp. 783. Constitutional Law 88; Convicts 7(2)

State prisoner did not have a constitutional right to a particular prison job or classification and, thus, his allegations that he was found guilty of violating prison's drug policy, after which his class status was reduced, he lost his prison job, and he was placed in punitive isolation for 30 days and that his disciplinary conviction was later reversed could not form the basis for §§ 1983 relief. Sanders v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 153 Fed.Appx. 403, 2005 WL 2861952, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1780. Prisons 13(5)

2314. ---- Personal benefit of prison official, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner provided sufficient circumstantial evidence to withstand summary judgment on his claim that corrections officer retaliated against him by planting evidence in his cell and filing misbehavior report against him, after prisoner filed grievance alleging sexual assault by officer, in violation of prisoner's civil rights under First and Fourteenth Amendments; alleged retaliation occurred only two days after officer responded in writing to prisoner's grievance, prisoner generally had good disciplinary record, and weapons charges against prisoner were dismissed for lack of sufficient evidence. Rodriguez v. McClenning, S.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 228. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Where prison superintendent was authorized to use his own automobiles in his work because there were not enough state-owned vehicles for use, requiring inmates to work on superintendent's vehicles did not constitute using inmate labor for superintendent's own benefit or violate inmates' civil rights. Matthews v. Reynolds, W.D.Va.1975, 405 F.Supp. 50. Convicts 7(1)

2315. ---- Dismissal, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's removal from his job assignment as an inmate nurse in a psychiatric ward is not cognizable under this section. Gardner v. Johnson, E.D.Mich.1977, 429 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1098

State prisoner's § 1983 claim against prison employee who had allegedly signed memorandum authorizing prisoner's suspension from prison upholstery shop could not relate back to filing of his retaliation claim against other prison employees, where prisoner knew identity of that employee at time of his original filing. Allah v. Juchnewioz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1535623, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 124

2316. ---- Racial discrimination, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner, who alleged that several times he asked deputy to permit him to work as orderly in jail kitchen and was told that he would be appointed as soon as there was an opening for a "white boy," and who also alleged that deputy said that he did not like whites to work in kitchen and would only permit blacks to work there, had constitutional right to be free from racial discrimination, and thus had right to have his application for position of kitchen orderly not be denied solely because of his race. Bentley v. Beck, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 625 F.2d 70. Convicts 7(1)

2317. ---- Retaliatory assignments, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

That inmate did not have constitutional right to prison employment did not prevent him from stating civil rights claim against prison officials for allegedly terminating his prison employment in retaliation for his refusal to sign fiscal agreement that purported to deprive him of constitutionally protected property interest in earnings on his prison account. Vignolo v. Miller, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1997, 120 F.3d 1075. Civil Rights 1098

Prison inmate stated claim by allegation that he was retaliated against in job assignments for exercising his First Amendment rights. Williams v. Meese, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1991, 926 F.2d 994, on remand. United States 50.10(3)

Loss of inmate's library job after he filed class action lawsuit against governor and parole board members did not support inmate's retaliation claim against prison officials, absent showing that inmate's discharge adversely impacted his right of access to courts or that class action was cause of his discharge; following inmate's discharge, his class action was voluntarily dismissed and inmate was able to file civil rights complaint and two habeas petitions, and inmate had had disagreements with official in charge of law library even before filing class action suit. Talbert v. Hinkle, E.D.Va.1997, 961 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1094

2318. ---- Heavy labor, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Where prisoner at bar was essentially complaining only that a prison doctor should not have found him fit to do heavy manual labor, there was clearly not presented an instance calling for judicial interference. Granville v. Hunt, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 411 F.2d 9.

2319. ---- Dangerous conditions, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Correctional officials acted with deliberate indifference, as required for inmate to establish actionable violation of Eighth Amendment, by forcing inmate to tear off loose pipe covering and insulation at prison with insufficient protection from exposure to asbestos, even if officials did not actually know about asbestos in area; asbestos assessment report had detailed locations of and dangers posed by exposed asbestos, fire marshal had ordered prison to remove "material" hanging from pipes prior to work detail being assigned to clean area, supervisor testified that he was aware of presence of asbestos, and inmate had attempted to notify defendants that he was being exposed to asbestos. Wallis v. Baldwin, C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1074. Convicts 7(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1535

County inmates who were involved in cleanup of sewage at correctional facility hospital were not subjected to "cruel and unusual punishment" when correctional officers failed to warn that sewage could be contaminated with AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) virus and other infectious diseases; nothing indicated correctional officers' knowledge that sewage was contaminated with infectious diseases and presented dangerous health risk to inmates. Burton v. Armontrout, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 975 F.2d 543, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2960, 508 U.S. 972, 125 L.Ed.2d 661. Sentencing And Punishment 1535; Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Inmates disciplined for refusing to assist prison maintenance supervisor in cleaning out wet-well portion of prison's raw sewage lift-pump station without protective clothing and equipment established prima facie Eighth Amendment violation on part of prison officials, sufficient to withstand motion to dismiss at close of their evidence, irrespective of whether officials had actual or constructive knowledge of presence of toxic or explosive gases in wet-well, in view of evidence presented regarding danger of heat stroke, risk of contracting disease from contact with raw sewage, and general undesirability of being in close proximity to human waste; forcing inmates to work in shower of human excrement without protective clothing and equipment would be inconsistent with any standard of decency. Fruit v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1990, 905 F.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1429; Sentencing And Punishment 1536; Sentencing And Punishment 1535

Correctional officer's alleged misconduct in requiring prison inmate to use unsafe ladder to perform job at the prison did not rise to the level of constitutional violation on which inmate could base civil rights claim but at most constituted negligence for which there were adequate remedies under state law. Wright v. Collins, C.A.4 (Md.) 1985, 766 F.2d 841. Civil Rights 1098

Inmate's death in cave-in of sewer ditch resulting from alleged negligent action of prison officials in failing to formulate safety measures and to implement safer conditions for digging the ditch did not raise constitutional claim, as required for claim to be cognizable under this section. Major v. Benton, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1981, 647 F.2d 110. Civil Rights 1098

Supervisor of state prison unit overseeing prison jobs was not shown to have known of and disregarded risk to inmate, who had chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, from dust and smoke accompanying his work as welder, precluding recovery in inmate's §§ 1983 Eighth Amendment action against supervisor alleging unsafe working conditions; inmate did not complain directly to supervisor about his working conditions or file grievance relating to those conditions, and declined to wear dust mask he was given, and prison's accreditation required compliance with safe-working-area standards. Flanyak v. Hopta, M.D.Pa.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 394. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Inmate failed to state actionable § 1983 claim on theory that he was subjected to dangerous conditions in prison paint factory, where inmate's only specific allegation concerned quality of wiring in paint factory and that defendants had conspired to defraud accreditation officials, but such conduct would not give rise to violation of the inmate's constitutional rights. Haney v. Stephan, D.Kan.1993, 817 F.Supp. 87. Civil Rights 1098

Contemnor's assigned tasks of washing clothes, mopping floors, and delivering meals while incarcerated for civil contempt were not comparable to dangerous working conditions subject to constitutional scrutiny. Wronke v. Champaign County Sheriff's Office, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 132 Fed.Appx. 58, 2005 WL 1220487, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1535

Conditions of confinement did not violate state inmates' Eighth Amendment rights, notwithstanding inmates' challenge to environmental conditions at print shop at which they worked and minor health problems they experienced, including headaches, nausea, and skin irritations, given that prison's work programs were voluntary and that inmates were fully aware of potential health risks stemming from their working conditions, yet chose to continue working under those conditions, even during litigation of their claims. Wooten v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 441, 2005 WL 387971, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

2320. ---- Cold weather, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's allegation in civil rights action that he was forced to work outside during dangerously cold conditions was not, standing alone, enough to state claim for cruel and unusual punishment; prisoner did not dispute information provided in investigatory report that appropriate clothing was issued and available to prisoners during winter work. Pendergrass v. Hannigan, D.Kan.1992, 788 F.Supp. 488. Sentencing And Punishment 1554

2321. ---- Personal injury, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

A personal injury action against certain state prison officials for injuries sustained by state prisoner who had been forced to work on a press was not cognizable under this section on theory that acts complained of subjected prisoner to deprivation of rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Kent v. Prasse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1967, 385 F.2d 406. Civil Rights 1098

2322. ---- Wages, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Missouri prison regulations did not create due process property interest in prison wages for Missouri prisoner incarcerated in Arkansas under Interstate Corrections Compact given that in-state incarceration was triggering event for right to receive prison wages in Missouri and, thus, withholding prison wages for work performed in Arkansas could not be basis for § 1983 civil rights claim; Missouri wages were based on value of labor to institution, payment would not further positive behavior incentive objective, and Compact provided that inmates would be paid on same basis as inmates of receiving state. Jennings v. Lombardi, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 70 F.3d 994. Constitutional Law 277(1); Convicts 7(1); States 6

District court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing as frivolous inmate's claim that new prison wage scale deprived him of protected property interest without due process, where there was no constitutional right to prison wages and inmate pointed to no Missouri statute granting him property interest to previous higher wage scale. Robinson v. Cavanaugh, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 20 F.3d 892. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Prisoner had no constitutionally protected interest in wages he earned while in prison pursuant to I.C.A. § 218.42 since, according to Iowa law, payment of prison wages is a matter subject to discretion of director of institution and amount paid, if any, is subject to condition that it may be reduced to repay court costs; thus, prison officials' conduct in reducing wages to pay court costs was not actionable under § 1983. Hrbek v. Farrier, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1986, 787 F.2d 414. Civil Rights 1098

Allegation that prison official intentionally cut in half federal stipends given state prisoners for certain work assignments stated claim for relief based on intentional taking of prisoners' property. Yusuf Asad Madyun v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 657 F.2d 868. Prisons 10

Forfeiture of normal prisoner's pay and all privileges of general prison population for 90 days following escape did not amount to deprivation of the constitutional right for which damages were justifiable under this section. Gregory v. Wyse, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1975, 512 F.2d 378. Civil Rights 1092

Cancellation of future credits in Nebraska state prisoner's spending account derived from payments received for prison labor was not a deprivation of federal constitutional rights. Sigler v. Lowrie, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1968, 404 F.2d 659, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 2010, 395 U.S. 940, 23 L.Ed.2d 456. Convicts 3

Prevailing wage provision for transportation in interstate commerce of goods produced by prisoners, under the Ashurst-Sumners Act, had primary purpose of benefitting society in general by eliminating unfair competition, rather than being enacted for "especial benefit" of prison inmates, and thus, inmates may not enforce provision under § 1983. McMaster v. State of Minn., D.Minn.1993, 819 F.Supp. 1429, affirmed 30 F.3d 976, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1116, 513 U.S. 1157, 130 L.Ed.2d 1080. Civil Rights 1090; Convicts 13

Inmate's refusal to participate in the inmate financial responsibility program warranted reduction of prison earnings to maintenance pay of $5 per month; program required inmates to cooperate with prison staff to develop plan to meet financial obligations, including court ordered assessments, costs, and restitution. Muhammad v. Moore, D.Kan.1991, 760 F.Supp. 869. Prisons 17(1)

Inasmuch as prison inmates did not have claim for minimum wage for work performed at privately owned plasma center in prison against owner of center under either state or federal law, they did not have colorable claim against private owner under § 1983 for alleged deprivation of liberty interest without due process of law. Young v. Cutter Biological, a Div. of Script Miles Laboratories, D.Ariz.1988, 694 F.Supp. 651, affirmed 931 F.2d 1320. Civil Rights 1098

Prisoners stated cause of action for violations of due process rights arising out of prison officials' deducting room and board charges from wages of those participating in available work programs earning gross monthly wages in excess of $75 at least as to money deducted prior to approval of new Nevada statute [N.R.S. 209.461] which allowed such deductions. Turner v. Nevada Bd. of State Prison Com'rs, D.Nev.1985, 624 F.Supp. 318. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Former inmate could not maintain claim under this section for damages for reduction of his prison pay. Gahagan v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, E.D.Pa.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1326.

Classification whereby those work activities which, in opinion of correctional officials in charge of pay incentive program, produced some measurable production or savings from which monies for program were earned or saved were included in pay incentive program, while those activities not thought to do so, such as those at prison hospital, were excluded, was based upon valid state objective. Newell v. Davis, E.D.Va.1976, 437 F.Supp. 1059, affirmed 563 F.2d 123, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1455, 435 U.S. 907, 55 L.Ed.2d 498. Convicts 7(1)

Mental anguish which state prisoner allegedly suffered as a result of initial difference in compensation that he received upon transfer from state penitentiary to a field unit was not of such magnitude as to rise to level of a constitutional deprivation as would empower federal court to act pursuant this section. McNeil v. Blankenship, W.D.Va.1973, 377 F.Supp. 191. Civil Rights 1095

Right, if any, of state prisoner to be paid by the state for his services as prison barber was not a "right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States" within the meaning of this section and the prisoner could not recover in action under this section for the services. Borror v. White, W.D.Va.1974, 377 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1098

System whereby seniority pay scale rights earned by inmates at Enfield correctional institution were not

"dovetailed" with seniority of transferees from Somers correctional institution was rational and permissible and involved no deprivation of due process or equal protection. Beatham v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1973, 369 F.Supp. 783 . Constitutional Law 272(2)

Prison inmate who was illegally confined in administrative segregation was entitled to compensation, if any, to which he might have been entitled as a prisoner in general population during period of illegal confinement. Claybrone v. Thompson, M.D.Ala.1973, 368 F.Supp. 324. Prisons 10

Amount of compensation, if any, to be paid to state prisoners is within discretion of prison administration. White v. Sullivan, S.D.Ala.1973, 368 F.Supp. 292. Prisons 17(1)

Where transfer of state prisoner from one correctional institution to another was accomplished under proper and lawful court order, fact that prisoner lost prison wages as result of transfer did not result in deprivation of his civil rights. Patterson v. Walters, W.D.Pa.1973, 363 F.Supp. 486. Civil Rights 1095

Failure to pay state prison inmates, who were compelled to work in research clinic operated in prison by private drug manufacturers, for their labor at its reasonable value was not a denial of any fundamental constitutional rights following prisoners into their cell. Sims v. Parke Davis & Co., E.D.Mich.1971, 334 F.Supp. 774, affirmed 453 F.2d 1259, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1196, 405 U.S. 978, 31 L.Ed.2d 254. Convicts 7(1)

Prison inmate, who brought civil rights action against prison food contractor and prison officials based on contractor's use of inmate labor to prepare and serve food, failed to show that his constitutional rights had been violated or that he was otherwise entitled to minimum wage for his work with the food contractor, and thus, summary judgment was properly entered in favor of contractor and prison officials. Laventure v. Aramark Correctional Services, Inc., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 870, 2003 WL 21978624, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

2323. ---- Honor farms, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate's allegations that prison officials denied his request to be allowed to work on honor farm on ground that he was not within three years of parole eligibility while permitting other inmates who had more than three years to serve before parole eligibility to work on honor farm and that inmate thereby possibly lost university scholarship did not state cause of action under this section. Madison v. Sielaff, N.D.Ill.1975, 393 F.Supp. 788. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2324. ---- Health personnel, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Only persons meeting job descriptions for positions related to provision of medical care to inmates at Minnesota State prison shall be so employed at prison. Hines v. Anderson, D.C.Minn.1977, 439 F.Supp. 12. Prisons 7

State prison inmate's complaint alleging that prison officials exposed him to environmental tobacco smoke when he was transferred to a smoking cell block failed to state a §§ 1983 claim for violation of the Eighth Amendment absent any allegation that the defendant prison officials had personal involvement in his transfer. Jones v. Maher, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 813, 2005 WL 1155914, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

2325. ---- Miscellaneous employments, employment during confinement, prisons and prisoners generally

Mother of inmate who died following his collapse from heat exhaustion while working could not show that prison official knowingly compelled inmate to perform physical labor that was beyond his strength, dangerous to his health, or unduly painful before inmate collapsed, so as to establish deliberate indifference to inmate's medical needs, for purposes of § 1983 action alleging violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights; there was no evidence showing that inmate displayed any signs prior to his collapse to alert official to medical need. Mays v. Rhodes, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2001, 255 F.3d 644. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1535

Any violation of M.C.L.A. § 800.305, by virtue of furnishing of prison labor to drug companies for use in their research clinics at prison pursuant to contract between manufacturers and state prison officials did not create a cause of action for money damages in favor of inmates working in clinic. Sims v. Parke Davis & Co., E.D.Mich.1971, 334 F.Supp. 774, affirmed 453 F.2d 1259, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1196, 405 U.S. 978, 31 L.Ed.2d 254. Convicts 10(1)

Allegation by state prisoner, who brought action that was treated as if brought under this section, that prison guard, after excusing prisoner from work for completing job assignment, "call[ed] me back to work and ordered me to polish the Brass Facing of a door--work in an area not previously assigned to me." did not indicate extraordinary circumstances with respect to exercise of prison discipline, and thus action would be dismissed. U. S. ex rel. Pope v. Williams, E.D.Pa.1971, 326 F.Supp. 279. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2326. Trustees, prisons and prisoners generally

Both Vernon's Ann.Tex.Civ.St. art. 6184k-1 outlawing placement of any inmate in supervisory or administrative capacity over other inmates and administration of disciplinary action by any inmate to other inmates and U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 8, 14 were violated by building tender system as operated at Texas Department of Corrections. Ruiz v. Estelle, S.D.Tex.1980, 503 F.Supp. 1265, stay denied in part, granted in part 650 F.2d 555, stay denied in part, granted in part 666 F.2d 854, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 679 F.2d 1115, opinion amended in part, vacated in part 688 F.2d 266, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 1438, 460 U.S. 1042, 75 L.Ed.2d 795. Prisons 12

Retraction of position of trusteeship, which was privilege and reward for good conduct and was not required to be bestowed on any inmate, did not warrant interference by federal district court whether retraction was arbitrary or for just cause. Rosson v. Weatherholtz, W.D.Va.1975, 405 F.Supp. 48. Prisons 13(10)

Wardens of a county correctional facility, at which an inmate was allegedly harassed and sexually assaulted by other prisoners, including a trustee, did not know that leaving a trustee block unsupervised exposed prisoners to an excessive risk of harm, thus defeating the inmate's Eighth Amendment claims against the wardens under §§ 1983 for supervisory deliberate indifference; practice of leaving trustee blocks unattended did not appear to have given rise to a pattern of violence among inmates, and there were procedures for screening inmates for suitability as trustees. Counterman v. Warren County Correctional Facility, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 2006 WL 929366, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

2327. Financial transactions, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Claim that prison authorities conspired to prevent prisoner from converting government bond into cash did not set forth grievance of such quality as would support claim for relief under this section. Aragon v. Wathen, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1965, 352 F.2d 77. Conspiracy 1.1; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Telephone services contractor's payment of commission to Department of Corrections' "general revenue fund," rather than "inmate canteen fund" as contractually required, did not give rise to § 1983 liability to inmate; contractual obligation did not create constitutionally protected property interest, prosecutable by inmate, in contractor's placing of money in canteen fund, in that inmate had no legitimate expectation that local prison fund would ever receive any money from contract. Griffin-El v. MCI Telecommunications Corp., E.D.Mo.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1114, affirmed 43 F.3d 1476. Civil Rights 1098

Inmate's allegation that money due him was held up by prison's administrator in effort to deter inmate from proceeding with his various legal actions failed to state civil rights claim based on denial of his right to access to courts, in view of prison superintendent's allegation that delay was result of inadvertent action of state official. Gittens v. Sullivan, S.D.N.Y.1987, 670 F.Supp. 119, affirmed 848 F.2d 389. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2328. ---- Business operations, financial transactions, prisons and prisoners generally

State's rules, regulations and encouragement of "hobby crafts" did not create constitutionally protected interest in prisoners' operation of business within penal institution. Garland v. Polley, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1979, 594 F.2d 1220. Prisons 4(5)

When person is lawfully incarcerated in a penal institution, he loses the right, except as granted specially by court before entering incarceration, to enter into, engage in, or conduct ordinary business ventures, and he does not have the right to set up his own business ventures or to require that special rules and regulations be tailored to accommodate such ventures. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Convicts 1

2329. ---- Buying or selling between inmates, financial transactions, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison policy limiting the source of acquisition and the market for sale by or to an inmate did not constitute clear abuse on the part of prison officials; indeed, the Sherman Antitrust Act, §§ 1 to 7 of Title 15, notwithstanding, it is appropriate for prison officials to impose such controls over the buying and selling of property by inmates and especially over buying and selling between inmates. Velarde v. Ricketts, D.C.Colo.1979, 480 F.Supp. 261. Prisons 4(5)

Prison rules forbidding economic transactions between prisoners and requiring that books be purchased from vendors outside of prison were reasonable, and prison employees were justified in confiscating legal papers and books allegedly acquired by prisoner by gift or purchase from other inmates. McKinney v. DeBord, E.D.Cal.1970, 324 F.Supp. 928, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 507 F.2d 501. Prisons 4(13); Prisons 12

2330. ---- Spending accounts, financial transactions, prisons and prisoners generally

Conduct by California Department of Corrections (DOC) director in affording city and county inmates a $300 exemption of funds held in their trust accounts from collection to satisfy restitution orders, pursuant to California statute, but not affording same exemption to state prisoners, was rationally related to legitimate government interest in collecting restitution fines, and thus, did not violate Equal Protection Clause; the difference in the length of incarceration terms and nature of convictions suggested that jail inmates would be able to satisfy restitution fines more quickly because they would be released into the workforce sooner than state prisoners. Abney v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 1221. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Convicts 3

There is rational, legitimate reason supporting state prison's restrictions on inmates' individual trust fund account disbursements sufficient to preclude inmate from any disbursement to nonfamily members, even to charitable religious contributions; safety and contraband considerations, as well as fears of donation pressures from other inmates were sufficient, particularly since other means were available to inmates to make such donations. Blankenship v. Gunter, D.Neb.1988, 707 F.Supp. 1137, affirmed 898 F.2d 625. Prisons 4(5)

Ability of an inmate in the Maryland House of Correction to control funds in his spending account, subject only to official approval for commissary purchases in excess of $25, precluded a finding that the inmate's money placed in such account has in fact been unconstitutionally confiscated. Gray v. Lee, D.C.Md.1980, 486 F.Supp. 41, affirmed 661 F.2d 921. Convicts 3

Prison officials' practice of endorsing inmates' checks and money orders and depositing them in the facility's bank account was arbitrary and capricious and constituted a taking of property without due process of law. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

State prisoners' allegation that they were denied right to maintain a savings account and were required to accept their pay in canteen tickets which had to be spent within the correctional unit involved a matter entirely within purview of prison authorities and did not merit consideration in federal court. Collins v. Haga, W.D.Va.1974, 373 F.Supp. 923. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Defendants' contention that prison rule preventing prisoners from transferring money from their restricted prison accounts to their open prison accounts was reasonable as a means of preventing prisoners from spending their money unwisely did not sufficiently show why prisoners could be subjected to such a regulation that could not be constitutionally imposed upon the general public. Berry v. Schmidt, W.D.Wis.1972, 341 F.Supp. 1025. Civil Rights 1098

2331. ---- Welfare funds, financial transactions, prisons and prisoners generally

Work-release participant stated § 1983 claim for retaliation against state officials who revoked his participation after he applied for public assistance benefits; participant had statutory and constitutional right to apply for benefits and to petition government, and participant explicitly alleged that officials revoked his work release in retaliation for that protected conduct. Friedl v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 210 F.3d 79. Civil Rights 1096; Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison officials' denial of inmates' request to make available portion of inmate owned welfare fund for mailing leaflet to voters in state could not be sustained, against claim of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 right, on ground that fund had never been used previously for such purposes, on ground that distribution of leaflet would not be a proper use of inmates' funds, or on ground that such use of funds would not be beneficial for the inmates as a whole as required by rules, in light of fact that there was a large surplus in the fund and that no rules had been made limiting percentage of fund to be used for U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 purposes prior to attempted distribution of leaflet criticizing governor's policies and administration of prison. O'Connell v. Southworth, D.C.R.I.1976, 422 F.Supp. 182. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3)

2332. Shopping, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison officials' withholding of food from inmate when he wore sock on his head when meals were delivered to his cell was a reasonable condition to the receipt of food, in light of security issues presented by possibility that sock could be used as a weapon if something was inside it, and thus, prison officials' withholding of food from inmate when he refused to remove sock from his head did not constitute the use of food deprivation as punishment, for purposes of Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Freeman v. Berge, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 441 F.3d 543. Sentencing And Punishment 1540

Fact that prisoners were permitted to order items from only three large catalogue sales chains and not from other sales establishments did not deprive prisoners of their civil rights. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Civil Rights 1098

Prohibition forbidding inmates in administrative segregation for visiting commissary and requirement that they secure goods by order only, while general population could "shop" at commissary, was justified by security risk which would be incurred by allowing segregated prisoners to mingle with general population if they visited commissary. Giampetruzzi v. Malcolm, S.D.N.Y.1975, 406 F.Supp. 836. Prisons 4(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2333. Diet, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Prisoner stated claim under § 1983 when he alleged that imposition of seven-day bread diet violated his Eighth Amendment right against cruel and unusual punishment. Phelps v. Kapnolas, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 123 F.3d 91. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prisoner's complaints with respect to prison menu, censorship of his mail, lack of medical care, infrequency of shower facilities, lack of exercise, and lack of access to legal materials, library and religious services involved only matters of internal prison administration with which federal court would not interfere. Krist v. Smith, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1971, 439 F.2d 146. Prisons 4(5)

Alleged deficiency of food served at state prison did not rise to level of a constitutional violation requiring intervention of a federal court in suit under this section. Freeman v. Trudell, E.D.Mich.1980, 497 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1098

It was beyond office and duty of federal district court to investigate the various general allegations of bad food, racism, institutional theft and other conditions of confinement in federal institution. Coats v. U. S., W.D.Okla.1975, 405 F.Supp. 1107. Federal Courts 6

Inmate failed to allege that his health was in immediate danger based on the allegedly nutritionally deficient diet provided to him while he was incarcerated or that prison officials knew that the diet was inadequate, as required to state a § 1983 claim for violation of his Eighth Amendment rights against the commissioner and director of nutritional services of the New York State Department of Correctional Services, despite speculative assertion that the diet he advocated would reduce the risk of "chronic maladies." O'Keefe v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 77 Fed.Appx. 42, 2003 WL 22273060, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2334. ---- Caloric requirements, diet, prisons and prisoners generally

Assertion of inmate bringing pro se § 1983 action, that he was continuously deprived of food, stated cognizable claim for Eighth Amendment violation. Cooper v. Sheriff, Lubbock County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1078. Sentencing And Punishment 1540

Court will not countenance depriving inmate in isolation of diet of same caloric content as received by other isolation inmates by knowingly serving him food that he will reject, at least when the rejection is based upon arguably religious grounds; in such case every effort should be made to ensure that reasonable substitutes are available to meet minimum daily caloric requirements. Jones v. Superintendent, W.D.Va.1974, 370 F.Supp. 488. Prisons 17(3)

2335. ---- Contamination, diet, prisons and prisoners generally

Contamination of inmate's food states cause of action under civil rights statute governing deprivation of civil rights. Malik v. Tanner, S.D.N.Y.1988, 697 F.Supp. 1294. Civil Rights 1098

Occasional incident of foreign object discovered in prison food does not raise question of constitutional proportions. Lovern v. Cox, D.C.Va.1974, 374 F.Supp. 32. See, also, Boston v. Stanton, W.D.Mo.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1049.

2336. ---- Special diets, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's complaint alleging that prison officials refused to control prison's insect population or provide him with adequate vegetarian diet stated federal civil rights claim under Eighth Amendment. Harris v. Ostrout, C.A.11

(Fla.) 1995, 65 F.3d 912. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison officials' refusal to put inmate, who lost his dentures, on soft food diet because inmate was to be transferred to institution equipped to provide diet did not rise to level of deliberate indifference as would entitle inmate to bring § 1983 action against prison for refusal to provide soft food diet. Hunt v. Dental Dept., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1989, 865 F.2d 198. Civil Rights 1091

Even if prison officials were not giving prisoner with heart disease exact diet recommended by cardiologists, their conduct was not such reckless failure to inform themselves of prisoner's medical needs as to give rise to a cause of action under this section where they were making a sincere and reasonable effort to handle prisoner's problem and were making effort to assist him to choose proper foods, along with medication. Startz v. Cullen, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1972, 468 F.2d 560. Civil Rights 1091

State prisoner's complaint against warden under this section claiming deprivation of ulcer diet and seeking $1,500 damages for physical pain and mental anguish and an order requiring warden to cease and desist from refusing to give him ulcer diet pleaded no claim for relief. Snow v. Gladden, C.A.9 (Or.) 1964, 338 F.2d 999. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegation that detainee was deprived of medical care stated claim for violation of civil rights under § 1983, even if period of detention was brief, in view of evidence that prison officials were aware of detainee's need for prescription medication and special diet. Gerakaris v. Champagne, D.Mass.1996, 913 F.Supp. 646. Civil Rights 1088(4)

For period after physician determined that inmate no longer required low sodium diet for treatment of his high blood pressure, inmate's complaint that he had been denied adequate medical treatment did not state a constitutional claim under § 1983; however, before that time, there was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether inmate was actually provided the recommended diet, precluding summary judgment. Riddick v. Bass, E.D.Va.1984, 586 F.Supp. 881. Civil Rights 1091; Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Since any pain suffered by state prisoner because of failure of state criminal officials to forward ulcer diet and medication to officials of county jail in which prisoner was incarcerated for eight days awaiting postconviction case was result of possible negligence by Department of Corrections personnel, there was no violation of prisoner's civil rights; also, any pain caused by mere negligence is not that deliberate indifference to a serious medical need compensable under this section. Russell v. Enser, D.C.S.C.1979, 496 F.Supp. 320, affirmed 624 F.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1091

Whether an inmate has a legitimate, medically prescribed diet is a question wholly within the province of the prison administration. Jefferson v. Douglas, W.D.Okla.1979, 493 F.Supp. 13. Prisons 4(5)

Failure to provide diabetic prisoner with a special diet did not warrant granting of relief to prisoner who brought civil rights action, where general diet furnished prisoner whose diabetic condition was controlled with medication was adequate. Lingo v. Boone, N.D.Cal.1975, 402 F.Supp. 768. Civil Rights 1098

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether state corrections officials, while providing to Jewish inmate combination kosher/therapeutic diet, had on religious designation grounds refused to honor Muslim inmate's request for same diet, which allegedly would have satisfied both Muslim religious requirements and inmate's low-cholesterol and low-fat dietary requirements, precluding summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action against officials alleging violation of Free Exercise and Equal Protection clauses; officials proffered no legitimate penological interest for denial. Brown v. Johnson, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 360118, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State prisoner failed to establish that prison officials acted with retaliatory motive in taking him off special diet, allegedly for having filed grievance against official; although prisoner repeatedly speculated about defendants' motives and conversation, he presented no actual evidence of their motives or of what transpired during their conversation about his request to be moved from his regular cell to special diet unit, there was no evidence that doctor who removed prisoner from special diet even knew about grievance, and defendants presented evidence establishing legitimate penological purposes for their actions, namely, that special diet was no longer medically necessary and that there was thus no basis to grant prisoner's request to be moved. Gray v. Terhune, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31819232, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

2337. ---- Number of meals, diet, prisons and prisoners generally

Denial of food during bus ride that lasted some 10 to 15 hours was insufficiently serious to state stand-alone cruel and unusual punishment civil rights claim under Eighth Amendment, especially where prisoners did not identify any serious harm suffered as result. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Sentencing And Punishment 1540

Claim that plaintiff did not receive any breakfast on morning following his incarceration in city jail did not raise any constitutional issue in Act suit brought against superintendent of the jail. Herring v. Superintendent, Danville City Jail, W.D.Va.1974, 387 F.Supp. 410. Civil Rights 1098

2338. ---- Water, diet, prisons and prisoners generally

Alleged radium contamination in water at correctional facility was not cruel and unusual punishment, for purposes of state prison inmate's § 1983 action against prison officials, where remedial action on part of prison officials was not necessary, because the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) did not believe potential radium hazard required remedial measures since radium level was less than half the maximum in a proposed revision of existing standards. Carroll v. DeTella, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 255 F.3d 470. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

In light of prisoner's threat to plug up commode in cell into which he was being moved and flood county jail, superintendent of jail exercised compelling state interest in directing that water supply to cell be interrupted for brief period even though prisoner was deprived of drinking water for period of six hours. Frazier v. Wilson, E.D.Tenn.1977, 450 F.Supp. 11. Prisons 17(1)

Former inmate failed to prove that prison officials placed unhealthy chemicals in the drinking water supply, thus defeating his claim of cruel and unusual punishment, despite the inmate's claim that prison staff did not drink the prison's water, but brought their own drinking water to the facility; prison officials proffered evidence that chemicals in boiler water were properly kept separate from the potable water, and that the potable water supply was consistently tested for safety and satisfied a health department's sanitary standards. Labounty v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21692766, Unreported. Prisons 17(3); Sentencing And Punishment 1540

2339. Dining privileges, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison's feeding rule requiring that, when meals were delivered to an inmate's cell, the inmate had to be wearing trousers or gym shorts was a reasonable condition to the receipt of food, in light of security issues and respect for female security officers' privacy, and thus, prison officials' withholding of food from inmate when he refused to put on trousers or shorts did not constitute the use of food deprivation as punishment, for purposes of Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Freeman v. Berge, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 441 F.3d 543. Sentencing And Punishment 1540

Detention for Men v. Malcolm, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 520 F.2d 392, on remand 421 F.Supp. 832. Prisons 4(5)

Prisoner cannot sue under § 1983 to recover amounts that he claims have been improperly deducted from commissary account. Meadows v. Gibson, W.D.Tenn.1994, 855 F.Supp. 223. Civil Rights 1098

Privilege of prison inmate to eat with his fellow inmates on a particular evening did not rise to the level of a protected liberty interest, and thus he did not have a valid due process claim when he was deprived of that privilege because of alleged infraction, without being removed from the general prison population, and could not maintain civil rights action against prison guards who allegedly inflicted such deprivation. Sierra v. Lehigh County Pennsylvania, E.D.Pa.1985, 617 F.Supp. 427. Civil Rights 1092; Constitutional Law 272(2)

Denial of access to canteen during state prisoner's eight-day stay at county jail awaiting postconviction case and alleged unavailability of bed linen did not rise to constitutional deprivations; also, although conditions were most probably unpleasant, it did not represent cruel and unusual punishment, notwithstanding lack of a shower or claim of lack of running water. Russell v. Enser, D.C.S.C.1979, 496 F.Supp. 320, affirmed 624 F.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1098; Sentencing And Punishment 1538; Sentencing And Punishment 1539; Sentencing And Punishment 1554

Cancellation of prison inmate's canteen privileges by prison officials concerned about the diet which he was receiving for his diabetes did not constitute a deprivation of any secured right, privilege or immunity. Jefferson v. Douglas, W.D.Okla.1979, 493 F.Supp. 13. Civil Rights 1098

County jail inmates should be allowed not less than 15 minutes at meal table. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 17(3)

This section rendering liable persons who, under color of law, subject another to deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by Constitution and laws of the United States does not create cause of action inuring to benefit of state prisoners who would challenge institution's disregard for mess hall seating preferences. Birch v. Vincent, S.D.N.Y.1974, 368 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1098

2340. Clothing, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Prisoner complaints relating to conditions concerning clothing issues, or repairs of facilities and the like are matters of internal concern and should be presented to administrators of institution to correct them on each occasion when and where they occur. Tunnell v. Robinson, W.D.Pa.1980, 486 F.Supp. 1265. Prisons 17(1)

2341. ---- Strip cells, clothing, prisons and prisoners generally

Eighth Amendment is violated in strip cell cases only if, after viewing totality of the circumstances, including extent of plaintiff's injuries, fact finder concludes that defendant's conduct was so inhumane, base, or barbaric as to shock one's sensibilities; not every use of strip cell for control purposes will violate that standard. Johnson v. Boreani, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 946 F.2d 67. Sentencing And Punishment 1553

The 14-day incarceration of state prisoner in a strip cell which had a light and some ventilation and which was equipped with a toilet which could be flushed from within the cell by prisoner who was furnished clothing, bedding, soap, towels and toilet paper did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment of state prisoner who was found to be in possession of drug paraphernalia. Clements v. Turner, D.C.Utah 1973, 364 F.Supp. 270. Sentencing And Punishment 1553

After prison psychiatrist was informed that prisoner had attempted to harm himself and to block view into his cell, psychiatrist's recommendation that correctional officers remove any items from prisoner's cell with which he could harm himself did not amount to Eighth Amendment violation against cruel and unusual punishment, despite prisoner's claims that, as a result, his cell was stripped and he was left naked in his cell for five days, where recommendation was made not to humiliate or harm prisoner, but to ensure his safety and further legitimate penal concerns. Jetter v. Beard, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 183 Fed.Appx. 178, 2006 WL 1489201, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1553

2342. Grooming requirements, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison officials violated inmate's civil rights by ordering them to cut their hair; although officials had legitimate penological interest in curbing gang activity, district court's determination that proffered explanation that hairstyle at issue was gang-related was pretextual was not clearly erroneous, where officials never told inmates why their hairstyle was considered extreme and officials did not receive memo depicting gang-related hairstyles until after they ordered inmates to get haircuts. Quinn v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 983 F.2d 115. Civil Rights 1098

State prison haircut and shaving regulations, which allegedly promoted cleanliness and personal identification, and prison regulations pertaining to making telephone calls and decorating cells did not constitute abuse of discretion enjoyed by prison authorities so as to warrant interference by federal court with administration of state prison. Hill v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 537 F.2d 214. Prisons 4(7)

Jailer who directed jail employee to cut plaintiff's hair even though jailer knew that plaintiff was about to be released deprived plaintiff of his constitutional rights in violation of this section. Carter v. Noble, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1976, 526 F.2d 677. Civil Rights 1098

Hair length regulations of Iowa State Penitentiary were not unconstitutional as an unwarranted infringement of a right of prisoners to govern their own personal appearance. Rinehart v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1974, 491 F.2d 705. Prisons 4(7)

Federal court would not entertain prisoner's civil rights action against warden and other state officials in order to second guess the state authorities on the length of prisoners' hair. Daugherty v. Reagan, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1971, 446 F.2d 75. Civil Rights 1098

Prison regulation requiring petitioner to shave and cut his hair, however annoying it may have been to petitioner personally, did not deprive him of any federal civil or constitutional right. Blake v. Pryse, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1971, 444 F.2d 218. Prisons 4(7)

Prison regulation requiring prisoners to be clean shaven did not deprive inmate, who alleged that he was demigod, that his mustache was gift from his creator, and that he was an established religion, of religious liberties guaranteed by the Constitution. Brown v. Wainwright, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1970, 419 F.2d 1376. Constitutional Law 84.5(14)

Prison officials did not violate equal protection rights of pre-operative transsexual inmate suffering from gender identity disorder by refusing to permit inmate to grow long hair, even if other inmates were allowed to grow long hair for religious reasons, in light of potential for institutional disruption and violence if inmate were allowed to express feminine gender identity. Wolfe v. Horn, E.D.Pa.2001, 130 F.Supp.2d 648. Prisons 4(7)

Prisoner's claim, under this section, that he was told to get haircut or he would be sent to isolation was nuisance, to be dealt with as such. Sloan v. Southampton Correctional Center, E.D.Va.1979, 476 F.Supp. 196. Civil Rights 1098; Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

Utilization of haircut rule as means of discipline fell clearly within ambit of administrative discretion held by prison officials, with which court would be loathe to interfere in absence of extreme circumstances. Hill v. Estelle,

Fact that, if state correctional facility did away with its "non-beard" rule, alternative of taking postbeard identification photographs of inmates might be administratively inconvenient or financially burdensome, was insufficient to excuse state from according basic constitutional rights to inmates required by their religion to grow beards. Monroe v. Bombard, S.D.N.Y.1976, 422 F.Supp. 211. Constitutional Law 84.5(14)

Action by prisoners contesting practice of barring visits from family and friends to inmates refusing to shave presented issues as to impact of the practice and the constitutional dimensions of prison visitation, requiring hearing on the merits. Agron v. Montanye, W.D.N.Y.1975, 392 F.Supp. 454. Prisons 4(7)

Hair grooming regulation which was promulgated by sheriff with respect to correctional officers at county jail and which forbade hair touching the ears or collar and mustaches extending over the top of the upper lip and beyond the corners of the mouth could not be sustained as reasonably related to legitimate state interest in jail discipline, jail safety, and rehabilitative effect of exemplary conduct. O'Doherty v. Seniuk, E.D.N.Y.1975, 390 F.Supp. 456. Prisons 6

Prison regulations prohibiting beards and hair styles that appeared unsanitary and impaired identification of inmates were directed to achievement of valid objectives and any resulting restriction on inmates' personal preferences was justified. Collins v. Haga, W.D.Va.1974, 373 F.Supp. 923. Prisons 4(7)

North Carolina prison regulation that inmates must keep their hair neatly cut and properly groomed and which required inmates to be clean shaven was justified for identification, hygienic and security reasons and, as it was applied with uniformity throughout the North Carolina system and was not instituted to block black inmates from wearing "Afro" haircuts, black inmates were not deprived of right to practice their religion, were not subjected to cruel and unusual punishment nor deprived of property without due process of law because they were not permitted to wear "Afro" haircuts or to wear mustaches and goatees. Williams v. Batton, E.D.N.C.1972, 342 F.Supp. 1110. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Constitutional Law 272(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1534; Prisons 4(14); Sentencing And Punishment 1551

2343. Hygienic conditions, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Pro se prisoner's allegations that District of Columbia knew or should have known about constitutional violations taking place in private prison that had contract with the District, including prison officials' alleged use of common needles to draw blood from prisoners, were sufficient to allege that violations were caused by District custom or policy, as required to state § 1983 claim under deliberate indifference theory. Warren v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2004, 353 F.3d 36, 359 U.S.App.D.C. 179. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Prisoner's claims regarding unsanitary conditions in his cell, which included allegations that mice were constantly entering his cell, and that for several consecutive days area directly in front of his cell was filled with human feces, urine, and sewage water, were sufficient to allege inhumane conditions in violation of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment, and thus to state § 1983 claim against prison officials allegedly responsible for conditions. Gaston v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 249 F.3d 156. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1539

Former inmate failed to demonstrate that former prison officials had actual knowledge of alleged substantial risk of harm presented by conditions in former inmate's prison unit, as was necessary to establish violation of constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment, where former inmate did not complain or file grievance about any condition in his unit and also failed to offer any circumstantial evidence from which former prison officials' actual knowledge could be inferred. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate was not subjected to "unconstitutional conditions of confinement," for purposes of his claim under § 1983, by prison employee who swept water and garbage into inmate's prison cell, absent showing that volume or depth of water and garbage posed substantial risk of serious harm and that employee actually knew of the risk. Baker v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 38 F.3d 1024. Civil Rights 1098

Alleged inadequate temperature-control and ventilation, presence of insects, and a lack of cleaning at county jail did not violate due process rights of pretrial detainee, where jail cells were heated and cooled by air conditioning on same ventilation system as rest of courthouse, detainees had ability to open cell windows and had fans to use in summer, detainees were allowed additional blankets in winter, jail and courthouse were treated for insects on a monthly basis, and cleaning materials were provided to detainees to use in cells. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Prisons 17(1)

Inmate who sued prison officials failed to establish that he was exposed to unreasonably high levels of contaminated water while incarcerated, as required to maintain deliberate indifference claim under Eighth Amendment; although water from cell sink was allegedly discolored, and inmate fainted shortly after he drank water, sample taken to laboratory for independent testing met or exceeded requisite standards. Brown v. Williams, D.Del.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 558. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Neither state prison's director of special housing and inmate discipline nor acting hearing officer at inmate discipline proceedings were deliberately indifferent to conditions which posed substantial risk of serious harm to inmate, as required to establish Eighth Amendment violation for which they were liable under § 1983, where, although inmate was subject to inmates who threw feces, set fires, and flooded cells with overflowing toilets, both officials spent great deal of time addressing those acts, cleaning and disinfecting cells, moving inmates behind plexiglass shields, and punishing the violators, and where inmate was not particularly victimized by such acts, which were primarily directed at prison officials or prison population in general. Porter v. Selsky, W.D.N.Y.2003, 287 F.Supp.2d 180, affirmed 421 F.3d 141. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

County jailer and her supervisor violated inmate's Eighth Amendment rights, for purposes of inmate's § 1983 claim, by acting with deliberate indifference to complaints about filth in cell and nonfunctioning toilet and sink, lack of toilet paper, and shower head which produced only thin stream of cold water; jailer left inmate in cell for six days while written maintenance request was processed, and jailer's supervisor told inmate he could not receive cleaning supplies until cleaning day. Sanford v. Brookshire, W.D.Tex.1994, 879 F.Supp. 691. Sentencing And Punishment 1539; Prisons 17(1)

Refusal to allow prisoner to shower for three days reached level of cognizable claim under federal civil rights statute, even though, under ordinary circumstances, denial of shower for three days would not be actionable, where prisoner alleged that jail personnel allowed other inmates to shower, that prisoner had been sexually assaulted, and that jail personnel knew of assault. Huffman v. Fiola, N.D.Cal.1994, 850 F.Supp. 833, vacated 110 F.3d 68. Civil Rights 1098

Pretrial detainee's allegations that he was confined to solitary cell under sheriff's control and that cell was coated with human feces and urine and had no source of drinking water stated cause of action under § 1983 against sheriff with respect to conditions of detention. Majette v. Butterworth, S.D.Fla.1988, 699 F.Supp. 882. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison medical staff members were not deliberately indifferent to medical needs of prisoner who suffered from bowel and urinary incontinence in refusing prisoner's request for daily showers, even though prior to prisoner's arrival at prison, one physician had recommended daily showers, and thus, staff did not violate prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights; staff considered prisoner's conditions and made special provisions for him, including permission to shower more frequently than ordinary inmates. De La Paz v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 909. Sentencing And Punishment 1546; Prisons 17(2)

Federal prisoner clearly alleged prison conditions were substandard and subhuman, and he further described facilities as safety hazard and so unsanitary as to breed disease, and such conditions, if true, were sufficient to constitute a claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8. Botway v. Carlson, E.D.Va.1979, 474 F.Supp. 836. Sentencing And Punishment 1536; Sentencing And Punishment 1539

Fact that beds in unit in which prisoner slept were kept close together, that, after every man had taken a shower, there was hardly enough water to flush the toilets, and that cups and utensils were sometimes dirty did not constitute denial of constitutional rights. Turner v. Plageman, W.D.Va.1976, 418 F.Supp. 132. Prisons 17(1)

Alleged failure of prison officials to supply soap, toothpaste, and some writing materials, alleged failure of prison officials to provide jobs within the prison at wages comparable to what would be earned in medical research programs, alleged failure of prison officials to adequately supervise medical experiment conducted by drug firm, and alleged failure of prison officials to provide proper medical treatment and to provide a warm and dry cell did not, individually or in combination, constitute infliction of cruel and unusual punishment such as would give rise to civil rights claim. Roach v. Kligman, E.D.Pa.1976, 412 F.Supp. 521. Civil Rights 1098

General claim of state prisoner that warden of house of detention failed to properly enforce health regulations was insufficient to support a claim of deprivation of constitutional rights under this section. Bussue v. Lankler, S.D.N.Y.1972, 337 F.Supp. 146. Civil Rights 1091

Warden and corrections officers who allegedly either denied inmate's requests for personal hygiene items or had reviewed and rejected his challenge to those denials could be held liable in § 1983 action for withholding of personal hygiene items in violation of inmate's right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. James v. O'Sullivan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 62 Fed.Appx. 636, 2003 WL 1466486, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1539

State inmate's complaints regarding conditions of his confinement in state correctional facilities, including that cells were small, cold, dirty, smelly, and overcrowded, that noise level was too high, and that he was incorrectly classified, did not rise to level of constitutional violations, as required to state § 1983 claims against prison officials. DeFoe v. Correction Officers Tucker, D.Del.2002, 2002 WL 31422864, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092; Civil Rights 1098

2344. ---- Second hand smoke, hygienic conditions, prisons and prisoners generally

An unreasonably high level of environmental tobacco smoke, required for a prisoner to prove that second-hand smoke constitutes deliberate indifference to serious medical needs, is one that poses an unreasonable risk of serious damage to his current or future health. George v. Smith, W.D.Wis.2006, 2006 WL 3775929. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Former inmate's allegations, that while he was in jail he was subjected to an intolerable level of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS), that such exposure caused health problems at time he was confined and posed a risk to his future health, and that individual defendants were deliberately indifferent to his condition, were sufficient, if true, to establish an Eighth Amendment violation, for purposes of determination whether individual defendants were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's §§ 1983 action. Williams v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 34. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Inmate's allegations that he was subject to an intolerable level of second-hand tobacco smoke while confined at jail, and that jail officials were deliberately indifferent to his condition because they did not resolve the numerous grievances he filed on the issue, were sufficient to support an Eighth Amendment claim based on exposure to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS). Abdullah v. Washington, D.D.C.2006, 437 F.Supp.2d 137. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

State prisoner's allegations that correctional officer, on one occasion, smoked a cigarette on the tier by another inmate's cell and blew smoke into that inmate's cell, and that on several occasions the correctional officer smoked in the isolated control pod, did not sufficiently allege that objectively, the plaintiff prisoner was exposed to unreasonably high levels of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS), as element for stating a claim under §§ 1983 for violation of Eighth Amendment prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment, relating to involuntary exposure to ETS. Bacon v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 475. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Prison officials' subjecting inmate, with deliberate indifference, to levels of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) that pose unreasonable risk of serious damage to inmate's future health is cognizable under Eighth Amendment; showing of aggravation of existing medical condition is not required. Bartlett v. Pearson, E.D.Va.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 626. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Corrections officials were not deliberately indifferent to state prison inmate's request for non-smoking housing, precluding recovery in inmate's §§ 1983 Eighth Amendment action against officials alleging that exposure to smokers endangered his future health; prison had policy aimed at limiting, when practicable, inmates' environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) exposure, officials twice offered inmate option to reside in special or segregated housing, and inmate was moved to non-smoking area after being housed with smokers for total of 17 weeks, which was not unreasonable given level of crowding at prison and fact that safety concerns took precedence over smoking preferences. Bartlett v. Pearson, E.D.Va.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 626. Prisons 17(1)

Under objective standard governing determination of whether prisoner was exposed to inhumane conditions of confinement, prison warden did not violate Eighth Amendment rights of state prisoner under § 1983 by placing him in cell with inmate who allegedly smoked 20 cigarettes a day, resulting in prisoner's exposure to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS); there was no scientific or statistical evidence as to the seriousness of potential harm and likelihood of alleged injury to prisoner's health, and there was no evidence that inmate actually smoked in cell shared with prisoner or that prisoner was otherwise exposed to unreasonably high level of ETS. Washington v. Davis, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 1873272, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 147, 2003 WL 22170675. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Prisoner stated Section 1983 claim that his exposure to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) in prison constituted an Eighth Amendment violation, where he claimed that he was exposed to ETS for approximately six weeks and that prison officials exhibited deliberate indifference toward the risk that this exposure constituted a threat to his future health. Sanders v. Kingston, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2002, 53 Fed.Appx. 781, 2002 WL 31856352, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

2345. ---- AIDS transmission, hygienic conditions, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate could not recover on his § 1983 civil rights claim against prison officials based on allegations that he was exposed to risk of contracting AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) from use of his drinking cup and cigarette roller by allegedly HIV-positive (human immunodeficiency virus-positive) inmate, who was assigned to his cell, since possibility of transference of AIDS through these means was too remote. Marcussen v. Brandstat, N.D.Iowa 1993, 836 F.Supp. 624. Civil Rights 1098

Prison authorities did not violate inmate's constitutional rights simply by placing him in same cell as inmate who had tested positive for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), where first inmate did not contend that there were any instances of sexual contact or intravenous drug use among inmates or any other activities that could pose serious risk of transmission of AIDS. Welch v. Sheriff, Lubbock County, Tex., N.D.Tex.1990, 734 F.Supp. 765. Prisons 17(2)

2345A. ---- Hepatitis C, hygienic conditions, prisons and prisoners generally

Placement of pretrial detainee in jail cell with inmate known to be infected with Hepatitis C did not pose substantial risk of harm, as element of Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual punishment claim in §§ 1983 action against county sheriff and county jail administrator; Hepatitis C was not spread through airborne transmission or casual contact and instead was spread only through exchange of bodily fluids, and there was no evidence that infected cellmate had history of violent or risky behavior that would increase the likelihood of transmission of Hepatitis C to other inmates. McMahan v. Wilder, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 125, 2005 WL 827145, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1536

2346. ---- Toilet facilities, hygienic conditions, prisons and prisoners generally

Allegations of petition in nature of civil rights action that inmates on "death row" at state penitentiary were denied sunshine and exercise, that many toilet facilities located in cells constantly bubbled over, that inmates came in contact with excessive amounts of bacteria, that drinking water was full of rust, and that inmates were fed from filthy food cart and were forced to eat off trays stained with grease went beyond matters exclusively of prison discipline and administration and required consideration by federal district court. Sinclair v. Henderson, C.A.5 (La.) 1970, 435 F.2d 125, on remand 331 F.Supp. 1123. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Denial of bathroom breaks during bus trip from one prison to another prison that lasted some 10 to 15 hours, without more, did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth Amendment. Anderson-Bey v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3579341. Sentencing And Punishment 1539

Purported withholding of toilet paper from pretrial detainee while incarcerated did not deny him minimal measure of necessities required for civilized living, as required to establish Fourteenth Amendment violation; only evidence supporting allegation consisted of complaint that detainee was regularly made to wait over one hour for toilet paper, and there was no evidence regarding frequency of such events. Beltran v. O'Mara, D.N.H.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 140, reconsideration denied 2006 WL 240558. Prisons 17(1)

State prison inmate did not exhaust administrative remedies, as required by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), before bringing §§ 1983 claim that prison did not furnish mandated quantities of toilet paper, when he did not appeal administrative dismissal of complaint. Cole v. Litscher, W.D.Wis.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 733, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 318819. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoners' right to adequate and hygienic means to dispose of their bodily wastes was clearly established in 1991, and thus facility's superintendent and administrator were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for failing to ensure that chemical toilets in facility were properly cleaned and maintained, despite state trial court's ruling in 1991 that conditions attending chemical toilets at facility did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment under Eighth Amendment, and their attorney's opinion that the conditions at facility were constitutional, where state court required prison officials to inspect toilets at least twice per month and issued specific directions regarding their inspection, cleaning and replacement, but officials allegedly did nothing to alleviate obvious sanitation problems associated with cleaning and maintenance of chemical toilets. Masonoff v. DuBois, D.Mass.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 54. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State's commissioner of correction was not individually liable under §§ 1983 for violations of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights as result of inadequate cleaning and maintenance of chemical toilets, even though conditions were obviously harmful, where commissioner did not have day-to-day contact with operations and conditions at facility, and did not have actual knowledge of conditions. Masonoff v. DuBois, D.Mass.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 54. Sentencing And Punishment 1539

Although inmate's claim of unsanitary conditions of toilet area, existence of roaches and bed bugs, and lack of weekly bedding supplies stated unpleasant conditions, conditions themselves did not rise to level of constitutional violation and did not state actionable § 1983 claim particularly absent any allegation that inmate suffered injuries result as of conditions. Robinson v. Illinois State Correctional Center (Stateville) Warden, N.D.Ill.1995, 890 F.Supp. 715. Civil Rights 1098

Allegations of prison officials' deliberate denial of toilet paper and soap for extended period of time was more significant than de minimis intrusion and constituted denial of minimal civilized measures of life's necessities so as to state claim under § 1983 for violation of Eighth Amendment. Williams v. ICC Committee, N.D.Cal.1992, 812 F.Supp. 1029. Sentencing And Punishment 1539; Prisons 17(1)

While normalization of prison environment is a desirable policy, that policy cannot be furthered rationally be subjecting male prisoners who are using showers or toilet facilities to scrutiny of female officers; such practice aggravates rather than mitigates disparity between prison environment and society at large. Hudson v. Goodlander, D.C.Md.1980, 494 F.Supp. 890. Prisons 12

It was arbitrary and capricious for federal prison officials to keep bathroom in visiting area locked and to require inmates or their visitors to obtain the key from a guard simply because of an unexplained history of one improbable escape in which the bathroom was involved. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(6)

Practice of providing only towels, soap and toilet paper to inmate at state correctional unit and requiring other toiletry items to be purchased or obtained from outside sources did not rise to magnitude of a constitutional deprivation in absence of evidence that it was seriously harmful to inmate's health. Scellato v. Department of Corrections, W.D.Va.1977, 438 F.Supp. 1206. Prisons 17(1)

Prisoner's allegation concerning his cellmate who allegedly washed his feet in toilet and then proceeded to drink from the same toilet did not amount to deprivation of a constitutional magnitude. Feazell v. Augusta County Jail, W.D.Va.1975, 401 F.Supp. 405. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Even if commode in prisoner's jail cell became stopped up and if water was turned off to prevent same from happening again, it was not cruel and inhuman punishment or punishment subject to judicial review where conditions complained of lasted no longer than some 27 hours and prisoner was allowed to keep his clothing and had a raised slab upon which to sit and sleep, even if he was deprived of mattress and property taken from cell because it had been thrown on floor and had become soaked. Green v. Kent, W.D.Va.1974, 369 F.Supp. 1124. Sentencing And Punishment 1538; Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1539

2347. ---- Vermin and rodents, hygienic conditions, prisons and prisoners generally

State prison inmate's allegation that a prison officer deprived him of adequate ventilation and water by turning off those systems during a cell extraction in his unit of the facility was insufficient to allege a deprivation that rose to the level of an Eighth Amendment violation, even if the inmate were able to establish the officer's intent. Minifield v. Butikofer, N.D.Cal.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 900. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1538

County jail officials would be required to spray the cells of all inmates at least once a month for the purpose of eradicating vermin and rodents. Tate v. Kassulke, W.D.Ky.1975, 409 F.Supp. 651. Prisons 17(1)

Presence of vermin or other unsanitary and unhealthy conditions in prison may be grounds for judicial intervention, but no injunctive relief was mandated, in view of evidence disclosing that reasonable efforts were regularly made by the correctional officials to maintain adequate sanitation, and in view of fact that there was no indication that any inmate had become ill by reason of the conditions. Collins v. Haga, W.D.Va.1974, 373 F.Supp. 923. Prisons 17(1)

2347A. Cell assignment

Prison officials' failure to house prisoner with cellmates of his choosing, after one staff member recommended such arrangement to accommodate his bipolar disorder and severe social anxiety disorder if doing so did not "break any custody or classification rules or criteria," did not constitute deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs in violation of Eighth Amendment, where officials had ample reasons for their action including safety concerns, and officials had no reason to know that housing choices would have serious negative impact on prisoner's mental health. Moots v. Lombardi, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 453 F.3d 1020. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Blind state prisoner had no constitutional right to be housed in cell with his son, who was co-defendant in underlying criminal case, despite prisoner's contention that he was dependent upon his son as his "sighted person." Quick v. Mann, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 170 Fed.Appx. 588, 2006 WL 637169, Unreported. Prisons 17(1)

Prison inmate's confinement in "gang unit" at prison did not deprive him of a protected liberty interest arising under due process clause or under state-created liberty interest, despite his argument that confinement in "gang unit," without giving him the opportunity to employ counsel or to show that he was not a gang member, classified him as a gang member and placed him in harm's way. McDaniel v. State of New Jersey Dept. of Corrections, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 254, 2005 WL 3542567, Unreported. Prisons 13(5)

2348. Overcrowding, prisons and prisoners generally

If overcrowding of inmates did not violate inmates' federally secured rights, inmates did not have § 1983 action against corrections officials and mayor, notwithstanding contention that inmates could be awarded damages based on their subjective frustration; prisoners attributed all their woes to overcrowding. Brogsdale v. Barry, C.A.D.C.1991, 926 F.2d 1184, 288 U.S.App.D.C. 311. Civil Rights 1098

County failed to satisfy its constitutional responsibility in maintaining county jail by its delay in rectifying jail overcrowding, and it was liable for compensatory damages, despite voters' overwhelming rejection of proposal to levy tax to build new jail; ways in which commissioners actually obtain money to finance necessary jail improvements, when put under threat of litigation, provided compelling evidence of fact that commissioners could have taken steps to improve jail at much earlier date. Moore v. Morgan, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1553. Civil Rights 1098

Prisoner did not demonstrate any nexus between alleged overcrowding conditions and fight between him and another inmate which guards did not break up, and thus did not show that prison officials had violated the Eighth Amendment by failing to provide him with safe conditions of confinement. Williams v. Willits, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1988, 853 F.2d 586. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Sentencing And Punishment 1538

Requiring pretrial detainees to sleep on a mattress on the floor of their cells for a period of three to seven months did not violate the detainees' Fourteenth Amendment due process rights; providing sleeping accommodations on the floor was in response to overcrowding at the prison and was not intended to punish. Hubbard v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 533. Prisons 4(4)

Inmates of state correctional facility stated claim for Eight Amendment violation; inmates complained of five or six persons in cell designed for one, sleeping on floor for months, vermin in food supply, toilet paper in very short supply, and severely limited exercise opportunities, and these conditions had continued over long period of time, giving rise to inference that prison officials were aware of conditions and were indifferent to them. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoners have no constitutional right to single cell. Brooks v. Kleiman, E.D.Pa.1989, 743 F.Supp. 350. Prisons 17(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Present overcrowding at the House of Detention for Men on Rikers Island was unconstitutional under the Wolfish standard, since the stipulation by which city agreed that the population at HDM was constitutionally impermissible was entered into a month after the Wolfish decision, since the facility on question was significantly different from that in question in Wolfish, since the Wolfish court clearly indicated that overcrowding may constitute impermissible "punishment," and since the overcrowding at HDM was not "reasonably related to a legitimate nonpunitive governmental objective." Benjamin v. Malcolm, S.D.N.Y.1980, 495 F.Supp. 1357. Prisons 17(1)

Cost is not required to be treated as a major factor in determining whether prison overcrowding rises to level of a violation; rather, matter of cost is to be carefully considered in fashioning an affirmative remedy. Jordan v. Wolke, W.D.Wis.1978, 460 F.Supp. 1080, reversed on other grounds 615 F.2d 749. Prisons 4(5)

Prison which was designed to have 1,100 inmates and which, in March of 1978, confined 1,708 prisoners was unconstitutionally overcrowded. Johnson v. Levine, D.C.Md.1978, 450 F.Supp. 648, judgment affirmed in part and remanded on other grounds 588 F.2d 1378. Prisons 17(1)

Where report of special master demonstrated that full compliance with prior court order concerning prison conditions was complicated by large number of inmates presently residing at the prison, and since it was demonstrated that any increase in population of the institution would interfere with effectuation of the court order, present maximum capacity of the prison would be ordered to be observed and no inmates would be allowed to be admitted to the prison in excess of the current number. Taylor v. Perini, N.D.Ohio 1976, 413 F.Supp. 189. Prisons 4(1)

Motion of Mississippi State Penitentiary inmates to accelerate the timing of scheduled prison housing relief and to enjoin prison officials from accepting any additional prisoners until every inmate was provided with at least 50 square feet of barracks living space would be denied, as the prison overcrowding was only 10%, as the prison, while perhaps somewhat understaffed, had a well trained and disciplined correctional staff, as violence among inmates had been dramatically reduced, and as the chief problem with inmate housing was not overcrowding but the dilapidated conditions of many housing units. Gates v. Collier, N.D.Miss.1975, 407 F.Supp. 1117. Prisons 17(1)

Overcrowded condition at state prison, though undesirable, did not "shock the conscience," could not be considered barbarous and did not constitute infliction of cruel and unusual punishment. White v. Sullivan, S.D.Ala.1973, 368 F.Supp. 292. Sentencing And Punishment 1538; Prisons 17(1)

In class action brought under this section to redress alleged infringement of constitutional rights of federal prisoners detained in city jail pursuant to contract with city, evidence established that overcrowding and unsanitary living conditions did not in themselves violate a federally protected right. Johnson v. Lark, E.D.Mo.1973, 365 F.Supp. 289. Civil Rights 1420

Jail officials were required to terminate use of space for activity not appropriate to jail operations and to make usable currently unused space to relieve overcrowding. Jones v. Wittenberg, N.D.Ohio 1971, 330 F.Supp. 707, 29 Ohio Misc. 35, 58 O.O.2d 47, affirmed 456 F.2d 854, 62 O.O.2d 232. Prisons 17(1)

2349. Double celling, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's contention that doubling him in a single cell without giving him a bunk for his mattress, a privacy curtain for bathroom use, and a television stand violated the Eighth Amendment fell far short of the "extreme deprivation" required to satisfy the objective component of an Eighth Amendment conditions-of-confinement claim. Sanders v. Kingston, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2002, 53 Fed.Appx. 781, 2002 WL 31856352, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1538

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2350. Size of cells, prisons and prisoners generally

While cells of jail were indeed small, in view of frequent and substantial periods of time that inmates were allowed to be out of their cells, limited number of square feet of sleeping space per inmate did not present constitutional issue that required immediate action, but any modification in system of allocating prisoners among county penal facilities should take into appropriate account increasingly enlightened standards with respect to living space that should be accorded each inmate. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 17(1)

2351. Temperature in facilities, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's allegation that due to unrepaired windows in his cellblock he had been exposed to freezing and sub-zero temperatures during winter months was sufficient to state claim under § 1983 for cruel and unusual punishment in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights. Gaston v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 249 F.3d 156. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1538

Plaintiff who alleged that, as unconvicted person, he was knowingly, intentionally and maliciously denied adequate detention facilities by defendants, who intentionally subjected him to cold, rainy, roach-infested facility and furnished him with inoperative, scum-encrusted washing and toilet facilities, sufficiently alleged cause of action under this section and U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 8 and 14, and district court erroneously dismissed complaint without allowing plaintiff opportunity to prove that his claims were meritorious. Bienvenu v. Beauregard Parish Police Jury, C.A.5 (La.) 1983, 705 F.2d 1457. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Jail was adequately heated where temperature in cell blocks was monitored and records showed that temperatures were appropriate. Hopkins v. Campbell, D.Kan.1994, 870 F.Supp. 316. Prisons 17(1)

Evidence that cell in which prisoner was placed was cold and leaky and that it was shared by two prisoners did not demonstrate that prisoner was denied civil rights by being subjected to cruel and unusual punishment. Roach v. Kligman, E.D.Pa.1976, 412 F.Supp. 521. Civil Rights 1420

Inmate failed to prove that prison officials actually knew that the temperature in his cell was so cold as to subject him to substantial harm, and thus failed to prove an Eighth Amendment violation in his §§ 1983 suit arising from two instances in which officials removed his personal property from his cell and left him either nude or with underwear and without any blankets or sheets. Baptist v. Hinsley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 107 Fed.Appx. 7, 2004 WL 1799361, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1538

2352. Ventilation, prisons and prisoners generally

State prisoner's claims concerning lack of ventilation, use of air conditioning and size of area through which visitors had to speak, without any showing that prisoner, who was subjected to such conditions during eight-day stay in county jail awaiting postconviction case, had been damaged by such design or operational deficiencies did not rise to level of constitutional claims. Russell v. Enser, D.C.S.C.1979, 496 F.Supp. 320, affirmed 624 F.2d 1095 . Civil Rights 1098

State inmate's allegation that his asthmatic condition was aggravated as result of inadequate ventilation in his prison cell stated sufficiently serious physical injury to support his §§ 1983 claim for unconstitutional conditions of confinement. Robichaux v. Cain, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 99 Fed.Appx. 561, 2004 WL 1240519, Unreported. Prisons 17(1)

without proof of physical injury by stating "assuming" case law precluded claim for mere exposure to asbestos, his claim was distinguishable because he suffered present injury. Fontroy v. Owens, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1998, 150 F.3d 239. Civil Rights 1463

Prison Litigation Reform Act's (PLRA) exhaustion requirement applied to state prison inmate's pro se §§1983 claim against state corrections officials alleging that officials had permitted inmates to be exposed to toxic agent, namely "asbestos bacteria," inside prison. Escobar v. Crosby, S.D.Fla.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 1361. Civil Rights 1319

2354. Sleeping facilities, prisons and prisoners generally

Claim that officer inflicted cruel and unusual punishment on defendant by requiring him to spend two evenings in holding cell that lacked civilized bed linen, pillow, or comfortable place to rest did not implicate validity of his conviction and could be maintained even without the conviction being invalidated. Channer v. Mitchell, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 43 F.3d 786. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Correctional officer did not know of substantial risk of serious harm to state prisoner posed by his assignment to a top bunk in light of certain medical conditions, as would support prisoner's claim under the Eighth Amendment against officer, for deliberate indifference to his safety, where officer simply had prisoner's representations as to his medical condition, she had no duty to confirm prisoner's representations because she had no authority over bed assignments, and there was no prior medically-authorized bottom bunk assignment. Pennington v. Taylor, E.D.Va.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 508, affirmed 98 Fed.Appx. 957, 2004 WL 1238583. Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Inmate's claim that he was temporarily forced to sleep on jail floor due to overcrowding did not give rise to violation of his constitutional rights and was not cognizable under § 1983. Castillo v. Bowles, N.D.Tex.1988, 687 F.Supp. 277. Civil Rights 1098

Failure to provide adequate beds or other sleeping facilities, adequate clothing, facilities and equipment for personal hygiene, and reasonably adequate facilities for exercise was violative of rights of unconvicted detainees confined in the San Juan District jail, commonly known as "La Princesa." Martinez Rodriguez v. Jimenez, D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 409 F.Supp. 582, stay denied 537 F.2d 1, affirmed 551 F.2d 877. Constitutional Law 250.2(1); Constitutional Law 262

2355. Sleep time, prisons and prisoners generally

Ordering inmate to bed at 10 p.m. and subsequently forcing him to comply with that order did not amount to cruel and unusual punishment. Brown v. Bigger, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1980, 622 F.2d 1025. Sentencing And Punishment 1554

2356. Basements, prisons and prisoners generally

Use of basement as detention facility of state correctional institution on temporary, i.e., 48-hour maximum, basis was neither unconscionable nor violative of constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment, nor was violation of any other federal constitutional right shown. Mayberry v. Maroney, W.D.Pa.1976, 418 F.Supp. 669, reversed on other grounds 558 F.2d 1159. Sentencing And Punishment 1553; Prisons 12 operational stated constitutional claim pursuant to § 1983 for deprivation of the right to be free of cruel and unusual punishment. White v. Cooper, N.D.Ill.1999, 55 F.Supp.2d 848. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Although prison officials did not have official policy requiring them to create a fire trap, level of fire safety was consequence of decision by prison officials not to correct conditions of which they acknowledge were hazardous, and thus officials could be held liable for civil rights violation. Women Prisoners of District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1994, 877 F.Supp. 634, vacated in part, modified in part 899 F.Supp. 659, remanded 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S.App.D.C. 247, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1552, 520 U.S. 1196, 137 L.Ed.2d 701, on remand 968 F.Supp. 744. Civil Rights 1358

While jail inmates complained about the adequacy of fire protection at the jail, the conditions did not amount to a deprivation of constitutional dimension; the county jail administrator stated by affidavit that the jail was equipped with fire hoses and extinguishers, that the fire department was one block away, that there were officers, closed-circuit television and an intercom for use in monitoring the jail, that procedures in the jail manual are followed, and that the jail has been approved by the state as having adequate safety precautions. Inmates, Washington County Jail v. England, E.D.Tenn.1980, 516 F.Supp. 132, affirmed 659 F.2d 1081. Sentencing And Punishment 1536; Prisons 1

Federal courts may grant relief against "cruel and inhumane" local jail conditions, including severe environment and fire hazards. Ferguson v. Fleck, W.D.Mo.1979, 480 F.Supp. 219. Prisons 4(3)

The duty to protect inmate includes the duty to provide reasonable safety precautions concerning fire, such as by providing extinguishers and fire escapes. Hamilton v. Covington, W.D.Ark.1978, 445 F.Supp. 195. Prisons 17(1)

2358. Personal injury, prisons and prisoners generally

Pretrial detainee proceeding in forma pauperis failed to state a nonfrivolous claim upon which relief could be granted against parish sheriff under §§ 1983 by alleging that conditions of his confinement in flooded prison system medical unit following a hurricane violated his Fourteenth Amendment rights, since he did not allege that he suffered any physical injury as a result of any of the conditions or lack of medical attention. Tate v. Gusman, E.D.La.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 519. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmate's complaint that he sustained injuries when he tripped on open floor drain, hit jail wall and broke his nose failed to state § 1983 claim; complaint alleged nothing more than mere negligence on part of prison officials and did not allege either deliberate or conscious indifference. Rocheleau v. Cumberland County Sheriff's Dept., D.Me.1990, 733 F.Supp. 140. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Alleged injury to back sustained by plaintiff when he slipped on greasy stairs in prison did not result from a condition of imprisonment and, hence, was not cognizable as cruel and unusual punishment and did not state a constitutional claim against defendant state prison officials under this section. Tunstall v. Rowe, N.D.Ill.1979, 478 F.Supp. 87. Civil Rights 1395(7); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Conduct of officer in charge of cells at state institution on night petitioner allegedly sustained injuries when cell door closed on his chest was not negligence in absence of evidence that it was anything beyond the ordinary, but even if it was negligence, it was only a tort cognizable under state law and did not amount to a denial of a federally protected right which was cognizable under this section governing deprivation of civil rights. Gibson v. Charlottesville-Albemarle Joint Sec. Complex, W.D.Va.1975, 401 F.Supp. 544. Civil Rights 1098

There was no basis for reconsideration of a prior order dismissing inmate's negligence claim, arising out of an incident in which hot coffee spilled on him; judge issuing the prior order found that a negligent act of an official causing injury to life, liberty or property did not violate the United States Constitution, and that the inmate's complaint was not cognizable under §§ 1983 as it lacked any allegations which would give rise to the inference that intentional or reckless conduct of a state official caused the inmate's injuries. Pressley v. Green, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 97701, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 928

2359. Assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

To survive summary judgment on Eighth Amendment claim asserted under § 1983 which alleges that prison officials failed to adequately protect inmate from harm, inmate is required to produce sufficient evidence of substantial risk of serious harm, defendants' deliberate indifference to that risk, and causation. Hamilton v. Leavy, C.A.3 (Del.) 1997, 117 F.3d 742. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Findings that correctional officers did not witness attack on inmate by other inmates, which gave rise to § 1983 civil rights suit alleging cruel and unusual punishment, was supported by testimony that prison riot broke out shortly before attack on inmate, officers had to stop fight involving approximately 50 inmates, and officers' testimony that they did not observe attack on inmate. Thornton v. Brown, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 47 F.3d 194. Civil Rights 1420

Alleged urging of other inmates to attack prisoner was not a basis for stating a cause of action against prison guards under civil rights statute in absence of a showing that guards failed to protect prisoner or that prisoner told guards he was under a pervasive risk of harm. Mosby v. Mabry, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1982, 697 F.2d 213. See, also, Young v. Calhoun, S.D.N.Y.1987, 656 F.Supp. 970.

Prison authorities have responsibility for taking all reasonable steps to protect inmate from assaults. Sweet v. South Carolina Dept. of Corrections, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 854. Prisons 9

Absent allegation that he had sustained any injury at the hands of other inmates or prison guards, prisoner failed to state §§ 1983 claim that prison officials failed to afford him adequate protection from attack by other inmates in violation of Eighth Amendment; vague allegations of risk of harm were insufficient. Torres Garcia v. Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 373. Civil Rights 1395(7)

For Illinois prisoner to state a § 1983 claim against administrative officials at two institutions where he allegedly had been incarcerated without adequate protection from attacks by fellow inmates the prisoner was required to name as defendants those personally involved in the alleged failure to provide adequate security and was required to link those defendants to alleged attack and explain how those defendants failed to take adequate steps to protect prisoner from attack by other inmates. Sittig v. Illinois Dept. of Corrections, N.D.Ill.1985, 617 F.Supp. 1043. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2360. ---- Deliberate indifference, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison employees were not deliberately indifferent to prisoner's welfare, in violation of Eighth Amendment, when they failed to protect him from his cellmate by honoring his request to be transferred to another cell, as they did not effectively condone attack; officials acted reasonably in responding immediately to prisoner's complaints about cellmate by taking cellmate to psychiatrist when he began acting strangely and by interviewing both men, even though they offered prisoner only a choice of moving to segregation and prisoner was attacked by his cellmate one week after cellmate's psychiatric evaluation. Borello v. Allison, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 446 F.3d 742. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

White detainee at state facility for sexually violent persons stated knowledge-of-risk component of deliberate indifference prong of §§1983 due process failure-to-protect claim against facility officials, arising from series of attacks upon detainee by African-American resident in facility's dayroom, by alleging that officials knew of resident's propensity toward attacking Caucasians but permitted resident unsupervised access to dayroom, where detainee and other white residents were lounging; detainee did not have to show that he had informed officials of threat, or that officials were aware of specific threat to detainee rather than general threat to white residents. Brown v. Budz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 904. Constitutional Law 255(5); Health 700

Inmate failed to establish claim for deliberate indifference based on prison officials' failure to protect inmate from attack by cellmate; although prison officials knew that cellmate was a "problem inmate" with a well-documented history of prison disobedience and had been prone to violence and specific notice from inmate that cellmate acted crazy, roaming his cell like a "caged animal," officials' generalized awareness of risk did not satisfy the subjective awareness requirement. Carter v. Galloway, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 352 F.3d 1346. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Prisoner's claim for damages based on prison officials' alleged violation of Eighth Amendment by being deliberately indifferent to rape of prisoner was not cognizable under § 1983, where in prior prison disciplinary hearing regarding same incident, prisoner was found to have violated prison rules by engaging in consensual sex. Lewis v. Richards, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 107 F.3d 549. Civil Rights 1093

Failure of two unarmed prison officials to intervene immediately during attack by armed inmate upon another inmate was not deliberate indifference needed for inmate to overcome qualified immunity defense to § 1983 civil rights suit alleging Eighth Amendment violation; officials were not previously aware of weapon and heroic measures were not constitutionally required. Winfield v. Bass, C.A.4 (Va.) 1997, 106 F.3d 525. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Deputy's testimony that if he spread rumor in jail that inmate was a snitch, inmate would probably be beaten by other inmates established "obdurate and wanton disregard" for inmate's safety, as required to find deputy liable under Eighth Amendment for injuries sustained by inmate in assault by other inmates. Northington v. Marin, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 102 F.3d 1564. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Warden was not deliberately indifferent to substantial risk of harm to inmate based on fact that second inmate with history of prison violence was incarcerated in same unit of detention facility as first inmate, and was thus not liable for Eighth Amendment claim arising from assault of first inmate, given that facility was not overcrowded and that staffing levels were maintained consistent with correctional requirements. Street v. Corrections Corporation of America, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 102 F.3d 810. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Finding that defendant prison guard showed at least "deliberate indifference" to safety of plaintiff former inmate, as required for finding violation of plaintiff's civil rights, by unlocking sleeping plaintiff's cell door and allowing other inmates into cell to attack plaintiff, was supported by sufficient evidence; evidence that defendant was seen talking to group of prison gang members immediately prior to attack and was observed unlocking plaintiff's cell and promptly leaving scene would have supported finding that defendant actively aided assault on plaintiff. Pavlick v. Mifflin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 90 F.3d 205. Civil Rights 1420

In civil rights action, evidence sustained jury determination that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to safety and welfare of prisoner who was severely burned when cellmate, who had been acting strangely, set their cell on fire after prisoner's pleas to be moved were ignored and after cellmate was placed on "deadlock status" which made it more difficult to remove prisoner from cell in emergency. Haley v. Gross, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 86 F.3d 630. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

Complaints alleging that prisoners were exposed to adverse prison settings and constantly in fear of their lives by physical assaults from other inmates who could discover their sex offense crimes did not state cause of action for failure to protect under Eighth Amendment, given lack of supporting factual averments showing deprivation was objectively sufficiently serious and absence of allegation of prison officials' deliberate indifference to inmates' safety. Riddle v. Mondragon, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 83 F.3d 1197. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

There was no "deliberate indifference" on part of prison officials who failed to physically intervene in fight between plaintiff inmate and another inmate who had weapon and, thus, plaintiff could not recover under § 1983; guards were successful in attempting to break up fight verbally, guards observed that plaintiff and other inmate were evenly matched and that other inmate's weapon was ineffective, and guards called for additional staff and medical personnel and thus were preparing to intervene once sufficient staff was available in accordance with prison policy. MacKay v. Farnsworth, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 48 F.3d 491. Civil Rights 1093

Eighth Amendment violation by correctional officers in failing to protect inmate from harm by other inmates is actionable under civil rights statute, § 1983, if inmate shows that officers were deliberately indifferent to his constitutional rights, either because they actually intended to deprive him of some right, or because they acted with reckless disregard of his right to be free of violent attacks by fellow inmates and, under both circumstances, prison official acts with deliberate indifference to inmate's safety when official is present at time of assault and fails to intervene or otherwise act to end the assault. Williams v. Mueller, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 13 F.3d 1214. Civil Rights 1093

To prevail in § 1983 suit, inmate seeking damages from prison officials for subjecting him to cruel and unusual punishment by failing to protect him from assault by another inmate must show something more than mere inadvertence or negligence; he must show defendants were deliberately indifferent to his constitutional rights, either because they actually intended to deprive him of some right, or because they acted with reckless disregard of his right to be free from violent attacks by fellow inmates; to establish reckless disregard by prison officials, inmate must show that he was faced with pervasive risk of harm and that prison officials failed to respond reasonably to that risk. Falls v. Nesbitt, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 966 F.2d 375. Civil Rights 1093

Corrections officer's failure to be at area of prison in which inmate was fatally assaulted with weapon, and officer's alleged failure to conduct required searches of cells and inmates, did not rise to level of "deliberate indifference," and thus, did not violate Eighth Amendment. Gibson v. Foltz, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 963 F.2d 851, rehearing denied. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Inmate's claim that prison officials failed, as result of their deliberate indifference, to protect him from violent actions of other inmates may state viable § 1983 cause of action. Hendricks v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 942 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1093

Prison guards violated inmate's Eighth Amendment rights and could be held liable in civil rights action when they failed to prevent inmate's stabbing by another inmate, where guards had opportunity to prevent stabbing, but failed to do so, and instead looked on while inmate was attacked. Walker v. Norris, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1990, 917 F.2d 1449, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1093; Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Correctional officers and sheriff could not be held liable under § 1983 for failing to protect inmate who went to speak to officer about "racial problem" in his cell, but then returned to cell voluntarily; inmate did not say that he had been threatened, that fight was imminent, or that he feared attack, and there was no evidence that racial tensions in jail frequently resulted in violence. Brown v. Hughes, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 894 F.2d 1533, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2624, 496 U.S. 928, 110 L.Ed.2d 645. Civil Rights 1093

Record supported finding that, as matter of practice, District of Columbia was "deliberately indifferent" to inmates' security and that this practice caused inmate to suffer injury from assault at hands of fellow inmate; there was substantial evidence of violent tendencies of inmate who assaulted plaintiff/inmate, including evidence that inmate had been planning to kill another inmate unrelated to instant litigation, that failure to contain inmate in forensic unit was result of overcrowding and that assistant director of jail believed that jail was "at or near the danger point" shortly prior to assault, as a result of overcrowding. Morgan v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1987, 824 F.2d

1049, 263 U.S.App.D.C. 69. Civil Rights 1420

Prison inmate's allegations that guards deliberately stood aside while inmate was assaulted by other prisoners, and that one guard struck inmate once were sufficient to allege intentional conduct by guards in violation of substantive due process or to state valid civil rights claim based on the Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Benny v. Pipes, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1986, 799 F.2d 489, amended on other grounds 807 F.2d 1514, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 198, 484 U.S. 870, 98 L.Ed.2d 149. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Conduct prison classification committee chairman, prison warden, and prison unit administrator, who allowed prisoner to be jailed in same unit as inmate with known animosity to prisoner did not rise to level of callous indifference to prisoner's rights, so as to render them liable to prisoner under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 governing deprivation of civil rights for injuries sustained by prisoner in stabbing by inmate. Johnston v. Lucas, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1986, 786 F.2d 1254. Civil Rights 1093

Prisoner, who alleged that following a fight with another inmate that correction officers left open door of cell of his antagonist who then left his cell and assaulted prisoner causing injuries requiring medical attention, would be entitled to relief if he could show purposeful acts on part of correction officers or deliberate indifference to his safety amounting to a violation of due process. Holmes v. Goldin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 615 F.2d 83, on remand 566 F.Supp. 863. Civil Rights 1404

State prison officials failed to protect inmates from violence at hands of other inmates, and in so doing, officials demonstrated deliberate indifference to serious and excessive risks to health and safety of inmates at prison, in violation of the Eighth Amendment, by failing to adequately supervise and train subordinates in how to investigate and abate dangerous conditions, failing to develop and follow effective internal review process for reporting policy violations, and failing to discipline malfeasant employees. Skinner v. Uphoff, D.Wyo.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 1208. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

To prevail on an Eighth Amendment failure to protect claim, a prisoner is required to show that (1) he is incarcerated under conditions posing a substantial risk of serious harm (the objective element); and (2) prison officials acted with deliberate indifference, i.e., that prison officials knew of and disregarded an excessive risk to inmate health or safety. Dickens v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 2006 WL 3190344. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

State prison officials were not deliberately indifferent to substantial risk that inmate would be seriously harmed if transferred to another general population yard at facility, and thus inmate's transfer did not violate Eighth Amendment, even though inmate was assaulted by another inmate after his transfer, where officials were not aware that inmate had any enemies at yard to which he was transferred, inmate did not ask to be placed in protective custody out of fear of retaliatory assault, and inmate did not decline special access opportunities out of fear of assault. Hurd v. Garcia, S.D.Cal.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 1032. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

County jail and jail personnel did not act with deliberate indifference to threat to pre-trial detainee's safety after he was injured in fight with another inmate in holding cell, as required for liability under §§ 1983 for failure to protect detainee from other inmates in violation of detainee's right to due process; after fight, jail personnel drove detainee to hospital, where he received three stitches in his head, splint for his wrist, and x-rays, which were negative for fractures, upon return from hospital, detainee was placed in jail's medical dormitory, where he remained until his transfer out of jail, and while in medical dormitory, detainee received medical attention and was never beaten by anyone. Cirilla v. Kankakee County Jail, C.D.Ill.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 937. Prisons 17(4)

Evidence indicating a deficiency in juvenile correction center's record management capabilities did not suggest a willful disregard for the safety of the wards and did not rise to the level of longstanding, pervasive, well-documented evidence that center's former superintendent and former assistant superintendent must have known about threat to ward who was beaten by two fellow wards, as was required to hold them liable under §§ 1983 for violating ward's Eighth Amendment rights. Blankenship v. Commonwealth, E.D.Va.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 607. Sentencing And Punishment 1605

Warden and nurse practitioner, at correctional facility, did not violate Eighth Amendment rights of inmate by denying him access to indoor recreational facilities, needed for rehabilitation of leg, pursuant to regulation barring from indoor recreation all inmates on "low bunk restriction," due to medical conditions. Reimann v. Frank, W.D.Wis.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1059. Sentencing And Punishment 1541

Relatives of inmate, who died while incarcerated in a Puerto Rico state prison, stated §§ 1983 claim based on deliberate indifference to inmate's security and medical needs; inmate was forcibly intoxicated with morphine by fellow prisoners which eventually caused his death by overdose, prison officials' failure to classify prisoners to avoid harm and inadequate supervision allowed inmate practices which resulted in danger to lives and body integrity of prisoners, officials had sufficient information from which an inference of substantial risk of serious harm to prisoners could be drawn, and there was shortage of medical staff and equipment. Rivera-Quinones v. Rivera-Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 334. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Inmate who sued county sheriff's department, stemming from attack by other inmates while incarcerated, failed to establish that department officials knew of and disregarded risk of attack when they moved inmate to other jail unit, as required to maintain deliberate indifference claim under Eighth Amendment; at time of move, inmate did not inform anyone of safety concerns or segregation issues due to purported gang affiliation. Collins v. County of Kern, E.D.Cal.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 964. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Prison official's accidental opening of two cells, allowing inmates to be released and allegedly attack another inmate, could not be characterized as wanton infliction of unnecessary pain in violation of the Eighth Amendment, as required to support injured inmate's § 1983 action against prison official. Glenn v. Berndt, N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1120. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

To be liable under § 1983 for failing to protect an inmate from violence at the hands of other inmates, a prison official must know of and disregard an excessive risk to inmate safety. Mooring v. San Francisco Sheriff's Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1093

Fact that inmate chose to approach cell of fellow inmate who was member of gang that "had a hit out for" inmate precluded inmate's recovery in § 1983 "deliberate indifference" action against prison superintendent and corrections officials arising out of assault by gang member; inmate had been in common area waiting for escort and could have remained there, and thus proximate cause of assault was inmate's own actions, regardless of fact that corrections officials were aware of "hit." Benner v. McAdory, N.D.Ill.2001, 165 F.Supp.2d 773, affirmed 34 Fed.Appx. 483, 2002 WL 552358. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Arrestee who alleged that he was physically assaulted because jailer encouraged inmates to beat him up established § 1983 Fourteenth Amendment claim; substantial risk of harm existed at jail, jailer took no steps to abate risk of harm, and there was evidence of causation between jailer's deliberate indifference and arrestee's injury. Martinez v. Mathis, S.D.Ga.1997, 970 F.Supp. 1047, reversed in part, vacated in part 159 F.3d 1360. Constitutional Law 262

To prevail on failure-to-protect inmates civil rights claim, inmates must first satisfy objective requirement by showing that they are incarcerated under conditions posing substantial risk of serious harm, and must then satisfy subjective element by showing that officials know of and disregard excessive risk to inmates' health or safety. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Civil Rights 1093

Employment relationship between officer and city police department was not, by itself, enough to establish municipal policy or custom as cause of inmate's injuries in alleged assault by fellow inmate. Torres v. Knapich, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Prison official who began his service as corrections administrator seven days before inmate's murder could not be shown to have been deliberate indifference to harm posed to inmate by prison conditions. Velazquez-Martinez v. Colon, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 961 F.Supp. 362. Civil Rights 1093

Test for prison official's liability in connection with prisoner's attack on another inmate is whether official was deliberately indifferent to substantial risk of serious harm to inmate. Rider v. Louw, E.D.Mich.1997, 957 F.Supp. 983. Prisons 17(4)

Prison guard did not act with deliberate indifference toward serious risk of harm faced by inmate involved in fight with another inmate such as would give rise to liability under § 1983, even assuming that guard watched fight briefly and did not intervene; inmate claimed that his attacker was armed with shampoo brush with which he was beating him unconscious, and inmate did not establish that fight was readily preventable, that it would have been reasonable for guard to have tried to stop the fight, or that guard acting alone could have ended the fight any sooner than it in fact ended. Lacy v. Berge, E.D.Wis.1996, 921 F.Supp. 600, affirmed 132 F.3d 36. Civil Rights 1093

State inmate's unsupported, conclusory statement in his complaint that unnamed prison officials knew that fellow inmate had threatened inmate and yet permitted fellow inmate to move about freely failed to establish that prison officials and employees acted with deliberate indifference toward inmate with respect to their handling of scuffle between the two inmates. Abdul-Matiyn v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, N.D.N.Y.1994, 871 F.Supp. 1542, affirmed 66 F.3d 309. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner stated cognizable claim against police officers under federal civil rights statute for acting with deliberate indifference to threat of serious harm or injury to prisoner, where prisoner alleged that officers watched, laughed and refused to assist or prevent alleged sexual assault of prisoner in booking cell. Huffman v. Fiola, N.D.Cal.1994, 850 F.Supp. 833, vacated 110 F.3d 68. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Assistant prison librarian did not violate Eighth Amendment rights of inmate stabbed by another inmate when he went on erroneously sent "call-out" to law library, absent evidence from which it could be inferred that librarian was deliberately indifferent to risk of harm; librarian was unaware of death threats against inmate and there was no evidence from which deliberate indifference on librarian's part might be inferred. Ribble v. Lucky, E.D.Mich.1993, 817 F.Supp. 653. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

Corrections officer who controlled access to prisoner's cell did not act with reckless disregard of known risk of serious harm to prisoner from attack by unknown assailant, as would establish officer's deliberate indifference in failing to protect prisoner from the attack, for purpose of prisoner's Eighth Amendment claim; although prisoner was targeted by gang members in retaliation for prisoner exposing plot by gang to kill corrections officer in another prisoner, there was no showing that officer knew that prisoner was enemy of the gang. Fender v. Bull, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2006, 166 Fed.Appx. 869, 2006 WL 947949, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Even if a correctional officer knew that prisoners were pushing another inmate around and harassing him, evidence did not show that the officer knew of, but disregarded, an objectively intolerable risk of harm, as required for the officer to have the requisite knowledge for deliberate indifference supporting inmate's Eighth Amendment claim against the officer under §§ 1983. Counterman v. Warren County Correctional Facility, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 2006 WL 929366, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Inmate stated a claim of deliberate indifference violating his Eighth Amendment rights in connection with an attack by a fellow prisoner by alleging that a corrections officer failed to intervene while watching the attack; the officer's alleged failure to intervene, standing by in the face of an inmate disturbance that he observed, particularly one which the inmate alleged resulted in his loss of oxygen and necessitated cardio pulmonary resuscitation (CPR) treatment, could have constituted deliberate indifference to a substantial risk of serious harm. Murphy v. Turpin, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 159 Fed.Appx. 945, 2005 WL 3455813, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Prison officials were not deliberately indifferent to prisoner's safety in transferring him, at conclusion of his time in lockdown, to same cell block as inmate whom prisoner had assaulted years earlier, and thus they had no liability when inmate assaulted prisoner, where prisoner had not conveyed to prison officials any fears about his safety around inmate for approximately two years. Alford v. Ward, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 79 Fed.Appx. 689, 2003 WL 22478181, Unreported. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Alleged failure by prison officers to act after receiving inmate's letters about having "enemies" in various locations could not be characterized as gross negligence or deliberate indifference, and thus, would not support imposition of liability under § 1983. Velez v. Kulhmann, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22004899, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate's allegations of "neglect" by prison warden and security director in failing to prevent attack by another inmate did not rule out the possibility that warden and security director acted with deliberate indifference and, thus, complaint stated a claim upon which relief could be granted, under § 1983, such that inmate did not need to allege the facts listed in his motion to vacate judgment of dismissal. Whitaker v. Morgan, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 556, 2003 WL 1796027, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during riot at state prison failed to show that former prison officials acted with deliberate indifference in that they knew of and disregarded obvious danger that there would be violent retaliation among inmates when groups who had been placed on lockdown were released into exercise yard together, and thus, officials were not liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107950, Unreported. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Risk that one of four inmates who was led to showers by prison guard would stab other inmates with concealed knife after their handcuffs were taken off was not known by or obvious to guard, so that guard was not deliberately indifferent to risk presented to inmate who was stabbed, in violation of his constitutional rights; stabbed inmate had consistently reported only a general fear for his safety, did not identify perpetrator as an enemy, and was surprised by attack. Grady v. Terry, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 242 F.3d 374, Unreported. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether prison guard was deliberately indifferent for failing to seek help from other parts of prison during assault of white inmate by African-American inmates precluded summary judgment in favor of guard on qualified immunity grounds in white inmate's § 1983 suit against guard. Cohrs v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 210 F.3d 378, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2361. ---- Knowledge, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Grievance form in which prisoner complained of being forced to be in cells with inmates from general population, of being "jumped on" by inmate, and of mental stress was insufficient to establish that assistant director of corrections department had subjective knowledge that prisoner faced excessive risk of rape by other inmates, and therefore assistant director could not be held liable under § 1983 and Eighth Amendment. Spruce v. Sargent, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1998, 149 F.3d 783. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

County jail and jail personnel were not aware of and deliberately indifferent to a specific, impending, and substantial threat to pre-trial detainee's safety, as required for liability under §§ 1983 for failure to protect detainee from other inmates in violation of detainee's right to due process; even if detainee was involved in several altercations with other inmates, he never filed grievances or complaints about those incidents, detainee claimed only some bruising and a bloody nose as result of altercations, and although detainee requested medical attention for a sore finger after the altercations, he did not complain at that time about injuries from fights. Cirilla v. Kankakee County Jail, C.D.Ill.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 937. Prisons 4(4)

Fact that juvenile correction center had been decertified by the Virginia Board of Juvenile Justice, standing alone, did not necessarily confer on center's former superintendent and former assistant superintendent the knowledge as to the ongoing and substantial risk of harm to residents, as was required to hold them liable in §§ 1983 action for failing to protect ward who was beaten by two fellow wards, in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights; over time center's audit reports specifically indicated an overall improvement in the area of staffing and safety of the wards. Blankenship v. Commonwealth, E.D.Va.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 607. Sentencing And Punishment 1605

Deputy sheriff did not violate pretrial detainee's due process right to protection from violence at the hands of other inmates when he placed the inmate, a gang member, in a cell with a member of a rival gang, absent any evidence that the deputy knew the inmate's particular gang affiliation or that the deputy could have learned the inmate's gang affiliation from information on the inmate's housing record. Mooring v. San Francisco Sheriff's Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1110. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(4)

A prison official need not believe to a moral certainty that one inmate intends to attack another at a given place at a time certain before he is obligated, under the Eighth Amendment, to take steps to prevent such an assault, but he must have more than a mere suspicion that an attack will occur. Mooring v. San Francisco Sheriff's Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1110. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Cursory statement by prisoner that he had informed prison guard of a security hazard caused by other inmate did not show prison officials had foreknowledge of attack on prisoner, despite prisoner's contention that officials should have known that once prisoner was labelled as an informant he would be subject to attack by other inmates. Gangloff v. Poccia, M.D.Fla.1995, 888 F.Supp. 1549. Prisons 17(4)

To state § 1983 cause of action, prisoner who claims cruel and unusual punishment based on failure to protect from violence must allege deliberate indifference on part of prison officials to need for reasonable protection from violence and must allege that prison officials had foreknowledge of attack or of prior threats on prisoner or that officials tacitly or expressly approved of or participated in beatings or attacks on prisoner. Gangloff v. Poccia, M.D.Fla.1995, 888 F.Supp. 1549. Civil Rights 1395(7)

A new inmate who was sexually assaulted by another inmate during intake procedure at facility did not have civil rights claim against corrections officers who entrusted him to other inmate absent any evidence that either corrections officer was aware that other inmate presented specific risk of violent homosexual attack to new prisoners as required for their conduct to amount to gross negligence or reckless indifference for purposes of a § 1983 action. Heine v. Receiving Area Personnel, D.Del.1989, 711 F.Supp. 178. Civil Rights 1093

Bragging by prisoners to a correctional officer about beatings and harassment perpetrated against an inmate conveyed harassment and unpleasantness, but not an objectively intolerable risk of harm, as required for the officer to have the requisite knowledge for deliberate indifference supporting inmate's Eighth Amendment claim against the officer under §§ 1983. Counterman v. Warren County Correctional Facility, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 2006 WL 929366, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Prison officials did not have subjective knowledge of a risk of serious harm to an inmate from placing him in a cell with another prisoner, thus defeating the inmate's §§ 1983 claim that the officials were deliberately indifferent in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights, even though the inmate allegedly stated, upon seeing the other prisoner, that he and the prisoner had had problems, and that he was in fear for his life; the inmate did not identify a specific prior incident from which officials could infer that a substantial risk existed. McBride v. Rivers, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 170 Fed.Appx. 648, 2006 WL 622591, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Inmate's failure-to-protect charge did not state a claim for an Eighth Amendment violation in a §§ 1983 suit arising in connection with an attack by a fellow prisoner; while the inmate alleged he requested protection from certain prisoners and that the defendant officials knew about his request for protection from his original cellmate, he did not allege that they had notice that he was in danger from the prisoner who attacked him. Murphy v. Turpin, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 159 Fed.Appx. 945, 2005 WL 3455813, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Plaintiff inmate's isolated comments to prison guards that he and cellmate were not getting along and his asking to be moved were insufficient to show that guards knew that he faced a substantial risk such that they could be considered deliberately indifferent to that risk in violation of Eighth Amendment, given lack of evidence establishing that inmate articulated specific threats of serious harm or that he made multiple complaints about cellmate to any one guard and complete lack of documentation to substantiate his allegation. Jones v. Beard, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 743, 2005 WL 1995438, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Absent allegation that corrections officer was actually aware of conflict between prisoner and his attacker or that officer deliberately opened doors to separate, locked protective custody cells so that prisoner could be attacked, inmate failed to state action for failure to protect under § 1983 against officer or against sheriff, under theory that sheriff was vicariously liable for officer's conduct. Lesley v. Whetsel, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 110 Fed.Appx. 851, 2004 WL 2189609, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner who was injured by fellow inmate failed to offer any evidence that prison guard and his supervisor knew or should have known that prisoner faced any threat or risk of potential harm, as would support prisoner's civil rights action under § 1983 against guard and supervisor, alleging violations of his constitutional rights and state law negligence claims. Brown v. Picarelli, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21297287, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358; Prisons 17(4)

Allegations by estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during riot at state prison that warden's managerial shortcomings led to improper enforcement of prison's lethal force policy was insufficient to establish that former prison officials deliberately violated inmate's constitutional rights, as would support estate's Eighth Amendment claim under § 1983 against officials, where estate failed to show that officials knew that warden's performance would create excessive risk of constitutional violations. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107950, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2362. ---- Response, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

There was insufficient evidence that prison warden was deliberately indifferent to known risk of harm to inmate to support imposition of liability on Eighth Amendment claim in § 1983 suit arising from murder of inmate; warden was on sick leave during entire time inmate was at prison, he continually attempted to improve prison conditions from time he took over, and there was no indication that he did not respond reasonably to risks at prison. Woods v. Lecureux, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1997, 110 F.3d 1215. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

Even if prisoner established compensable injuries under Eighth Amendment, prison officials responded reasonably to risk of harm, and thus, could not be held liable in § 1983 action, where after prisoner snitched on prison gang, prison officials placed prisoner in protective custody for his own safety, and after prisoner set fire to his cell to alert guards to ongoing escape attempt, officials again placed and kept prisoner in protective custody and expedited his transfer to another facility. Doe v. Welborn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 110 F.3d 520, as amended, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Sentencing And Punishment 1553; Prisons 17(1) to complex at other end of prison, and was not "deliberately indifferent" to prisoner's rights, within meaning of Eighth Amendment, merely because he failed to anticipate that guard would leave his post and permit inmate to gain access to prisoner's cell; no civil rights liability could be imposed on warden under § 1983. Bailey v. Wood, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1990, 909 F.2d 1197. Civil Rights 1093; Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Prison officials who actually know of a substantial risk to inmate health or safety may be found free from liability under §§ 1983 if they responded reasonably to the risk, even if harm ultimately was not averted. Blankenship v. Commonwealth, E.D.Va.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 607. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate who sued county sheriff's department, stemming from attack by other inmates while incarcerated, failed to establish that department officials disregarded risk to inmate's health and safety by failing to stop attack, as required to maintain deliberate indifference claim under Eighth Amendment; officials took prompt action to stop fight, secure area, and ensure prompt medical treatment for inmate, while sheriff was not present at facility at time of attack. Collins v. County of Kern, E.D.Cal.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 964. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

2363. ---- Negligence, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

State prison inmate could not base federal civil rights action on prison officials' negligent failure to protect him from another inmate. Davidson v. Cannon, U.S.N.J.1986, 106 S.Ct. 668, 474 U.S. 344, 88 L.Ed.2d 677, concurring opinion 106 S.Ct. 677, 474 U.S. 327, 88 L.Ed.2d 662. Civil Rights 1093

Merely negligent failure to protect a prison inmate from attack does not justify liability under section 1983. Carter v. Galloway, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 352 F.3d 1346. Civil Rights 1093

Even gross negligence is not enough for inmate to recover under § 1983 from prison official for failure to prevent injury inflicted by other prisoners; to sustain constitutional claim, inmate must demonstrate something approaching total unconcern for his welfare in face of serious risks or a conscious, culpable refusal to prevent harm. King v. Fairman, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 997 F.2d 259. Civil Rights 1093

Alleged negligence of prison officials in failing to protect inmate from violence by prison guards could not form basis of § 1983 suit. Oliver v. Collins, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 914 F.2d 56. Civil Rights 1093

Correction officers' negligent failure to take steps to protect an inmate, who had written a note indicating that another inmate had threatened him, did not give rise to a claim under the Civil Rights Act when the threat was carried out, even though inmate had a liberty interest in being secure from attacks by fellow inmates, where one officer followed established procedure in directing prisoner to the proper officer but simply failed to follow up, and other officer, who was operating under a double shift burden, merely forgot to investigate the note, which was ambiguous as to nature of the threat and conveyed no sense of urgency. Davidson v. O'Lone, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1984, 752 F.2d 817, certiorari granted 105 S.Ct. 2673, 471 U.S. 1134, 86 L.Ed.2d 692, affirmed 106 S.Ct. 668, 474 U.S. 344, 88 L.Ed.2d 677, concurring opinion 106 S.Ct. 677, 474 U.S. 327, 88 L.Ed.2d 662. Civil Rights 1093

Superintendent of Mississippi state penitentiary was not guilty of misconduct greater than ordinary negligence and could not be held liable for injuries sustained by inmate when he was stabbed be fellow inmate where any failure on part of superintendent to adequately search inmates for weapons and to supervise inmates was not due to malicious intent, but to state law and to lack of funds provided by state. Bogard v. Cook, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1978, 586 F.2d 399, rehearing denied 591 F.2d 102, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 173, 444 U.S. 883, 62 L.Ed.2d 113. Civil Rights 1093

Alleged negligence of state prison warden in permitting "insane" prisoner to roam within prison and allowing prisoner to have access to dangerous instrument, resulting in injury to plaintiff prisoner, was not denial of equal protection cognizable under this section. Puckett v. Cox, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1972, 456 F.2d 233. Civil Rights

Failure of prison officials, who were responding to another official's personal alarm in connection with inmate fight, to key open the locked door of cell block where fight was occurring, during the few minutes they waited until the door opened, could not be construed as more than negligence or gross negligence, and thus was not actionable under § 1983 as violation of Eighth Amendment. Glenn v. Berndt, N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1120. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Allegations by former inmate at county jail, who claimed to have been assaulted by jail employees, that supervisor of employees was responsible for welfare and security of all inmates rose only to level of negligence, and failed to state federal civil rights claim. Marshall v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1997, 951 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1093

Correction officers' alleged negligence in following prison procedures in the opening and closing of cell doors did not rise to the level of deliberate indifference required to merit constitutional relief and thus, prisoner failed to state claim under § 1983 that officers violated his Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights in failing to protect him from attack by fellow inmates. Caldwell v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1995, 901 F.Supp. 7, appeal dismissed 1996 WL 587652, rehearing denied. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

Fact that protective procedures established at county jail failed when plaintiff was stabbed by fellow inmate was inadequate to support liability of county or its department of corrections. Stark v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 67. Civil Rights 1093

State prison warden was not liable under this section to inmate who was assaulted in isolated incident while working in prison kitchen; that warden may have been lax in not providing more and better-trained guards and that food preparation area may have had design defects enabling assaultive inmates to hide out undiscovered did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation of rights under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 8. Webster v. Foltz, W.D.Mich.1983, 582 F.Supp. 28. Civil Rights 1358

Employees of private prison did not act with deliberate indifference to state prisoner's safety, in violation of Eighth Amendment, for allegedly failing to protect him from assault by fellow inmate, even though prisoner alerted employees to threat, where employees was offered opportunity to transfer to segregation, but he declined. Faulkner v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 812, 2005 WL 1122663, Unreported. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Failure of prison guard to discover knife which was concealed by one of four inmates he had led from their cells to shower was at most negligent, and did not reflect deliberate indifference to safety of other inmates on part of prison guard, as would support § 1983 claim brought after inmate stabbed one of fellow inmates after his handcuffs were taken off, where officer had followed accepted procedure and had checked the inmates' underwear and towels, and inmates were dressed only in their undershorts. Grady v. Terry, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 242 F.3d 374, Unreported. Civil Rights 1093

2364. ---- Number of assaults, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

A pervasive risk of harm to inmates from other inmates may not ordinarily be shown by pointing to single incident or isolated incident, but it may be established by much less than proof of a reign of violence and terror in the particular institution; conditions need not deteriorate to the point of anarchy before constitutional right to protection arises. Withers v. Levine, C.A.4 (Md.) 1980, 615 F.2d 158, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 136, 449 U.S. 849, 66 L.Ed.2d 59. Convicts 2

Evidence that guard was assaulted by several wards did not suggest that ward was incarcerated under conditions posing a substantial risk of serious harm, such that juvenile correction center's former superintendent and former assistant superintendent could be held liable in §§ 1983 action for failing to protect ward who was beaten by two fellow wards, in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights. Blankenship v. Commonwealth, E.D.Va.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 607. Sentencing And Punishment 1605

Inmate who was attacked in jail failed to show that sheriff had subjective knowledge of generalized, substantial risk of serious harm from inmate violence at jail, and thus failed to show Eighth Amendment violation; although inmate claimed he was forced to sleep on floor, he did not allege that overcrowding resulted in violent attacks or that other attacks had taken place at jail while he was there or at other times. Abrams v. Hunter, M.D.Fla.1995, 910 F.Supp. 620, affirmed 100 F.3d 971. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

An inmate does, of course, have a right to reasonable protection from constant threat of violence; however, an isolated attack by another inmate does not establish the absence of this protection. O'Neal v. Evans, S.D.Ga.1980, 496 F.Supp. 867. Convicts 2

Where Federal prisoners' claim that they were inadequately protected from violence and sexual assault during confinement in a city jail was based on general conditions rather than on isolated attacks, claim was actionable under civil rights law. Fore v. Godwin, E.D.Va.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1145. Civil Rights 1093

An isolated act or omission by a prison official which allows an attack on another prisoner to occur is not constitutionally actionable. Van Horn v. Lukhard, E.D.Va.1975, 392 F.Supp. 384. Prisons 10

2365. ---- Emergency beeper use, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison staff member acted with deliberate indifference in not using emergency beeper during assaults of inmate by four other prisoners, notwithstanding staff member's testimony that he did not see assaults; staff member's testimony was implausible given physical dimensions of area in which assault occurred, fact that assaults occurred in open in three locations over 20-minute period and drew attention of other inmates in area, staff member's interest in outcome of trial, and his demeanor during testimony. Holloway v. Wittry, S.D.Iowa 1994, 842 F.Supp. 1193. Civil Rights 1420

2366. ---- Women guards, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

State prisoners were not entitled to relief from prison policy of using female personnel in positions of vulnerability, despite contention that such policy increased risk of violence in prison and posed a source of potential injury to the inmates, since, although presence of women might cause violence or they might be too physically weak to suppress it, inmates themselves would initiate it. Madyun v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 657 F.2d 868. Prisons 7

2367. ---- Work area, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Factual finding in inmate's § 1983 civil rights suit alleging cruel and unusual punishment, that correctional officer named as defendant did not unlock door to area inmate was cleaning before being attacked by other inmates, was not clear error in light of evidence that officer was not in cell house at time of attack, officer followed routine of leaving key with door officer, and in light of testimony that door may have been opened by other prison officers throughout day. Thornton v. Brown, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 47 F.3d 194. Civil Rights 1420

Inmate failed to show pervasive risk of harm, so that he failed to establish reckless disregard of his right to be free from assaultive behavior by other inmates, in his § 1983 action against prison officials arising from attack in prison industries section of state penitentiary; security director testified that fewer assaults occurred in prison industries than in other areas of penitentiary. Holloway v. Wittry, S.D.Iowa 1994, 842 F.Supp. 1193. Civil Rights 1420

2368. ---- Requests for help, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate's failure to give advance notice of attack was not dispositive on federal civil rights claim for assault in jail, and sheriff could not escape liability by showing that he did not know inmate was likely to be assaulted or that assault would be committed by specific prisoners who eventually committed the assault; however, inmate had to show that sheriff was causally connected to injury, as sheriff could not be held liable under theory of respondeat superior. Abrams v. Hunter, M.D.Fla.1995, 910 F.Supp. 620, affirmed 100 F.3d 971. Civil Rights 1093; Civil Rights 1358

When inmate's repeated request for help places appropriate prison officials on notice of life-endangering situation, constitutional duty of care arises, binding such officials to take reasonable measures to insure inmate's safety. West v. Rowe, N.D.Ill.1978, 448 F.Supp. 58. Prisons 17(4)

Evidence would not support an inference that a correctional officer heard an inmate's cries and the general commotion that accompanied an assault on the inmate by other prisoners, so as to render him aware of an excessive risk to the inmate's safety, thus defeating the inmate's Eighth Amendment claim against the officer under §§ 1983. Counterman v. Warren County Correctional Facility, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 2006 WL 929366, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

2369. ---- Fear of assault, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner, who alleged that he experienced terror, psychological harm and deterioration while in protective custody for two months waiting for transfer to another facility resulting from living in constant fear of fellow prisoners, failed to establish compensable injuries under Eighth Amendment, for purposes of § 1983 action against prison officials, where prisoner showed no physical harm and claim of psychological injury did not reflect deprivation of minimal civilized measures of life's necessities. Doe v. Welborn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 110 F.3d 520, as amended, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Sentencing And Punishment 1553; Prisons 17(1)

2370. ---- Exposing of information by prison officials, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Correctional officers' references to prisoner as an "informant" and a "rat" in conversations with other inmates were not adverse actions that could constitute an unconstitutional retaliation in response to the prisoner's exercise of his First Amendment rights in filing a grievance against another prison guard, absent some showing that comments actually opened up prisoner to assault from his fellow inmates. Dawes v. Walker, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 239 F.3d 489 . Constitutional Law 82(13); Prisons 4(5)

Pro se prisoner's claims under this section alleging that prison officials had labeled him a snitch and were exposing him to inmate retaliation, perhaps because of his conduct in bringing prior lawsuits against prison, were sufficient, on their face, to carry cause of action through service-of-process stage. Harmon v. Berry, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1984, 728 F.2d 1407. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2371. ---- Sexual assaults, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison guard in charge of monitoring shower area to protect inmates from each other was not liable under Eighth Amendment to inmate who was raped in the shower when the guard left his post without authorization; evidence indicated that the guard left to take an inmate to the hospital. McGill v. Duckworth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 944 F.2d 344, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1265, 503 U.S. 907, 117 L.Ed.2d 493. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Where prison inmate, even though he was known by prison staff to be a homosexual and had a reputation among some of prison staff as a bully, had had no disciplinary violations in over two years and was engaged in a long-term consensual relationship with another inmate, prison warden's failure to intervene and direct former inmate's immediate placement in maximum security following his involvement in incidents of assault and alleged harassment for homosexual favors did not evidence deliberate indifference to personal safety of other inmates in medium security which would entitle inmate raped by former inmate to recover from warden under civil rights statute. Wheeler v. Sullivan, D.C.Del.1984, 599 F.Supp. 630. Civil Rights 1420

Where newly transferred prisoner was placed with cellmate without prior review of prison records and known characteristics to assess prisoners' suitability as cellmates, and where absence of proper procedure for making initial cell assignment allowed harm to come to prisoner, in form of sexual assault by cellmate, such violated prisoner's right, secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 8 and 14, to be reasonably protected from harm at the hands of his fellow inmate. Withers v. Levine, D.C.Md.1978, 449 F.Supp. 473, affirmed 615 F.2d 158, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 136, 449 U.S. 849, 66 L.Ed.2d 59. Constitutional Law 272(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1537

2372. ---- Trusties, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Act of trusty in hitting fellow inmate, who began throwing water on trusty as trusty was mopping up water in the latter's cell, did not raise any constitutional issue in suit filed against superintendent of city jail. Herring v. Superintendent, Danville City Jail, W.D.Va.1974, 387 F.Supp. 410. Civil Rights 1093

2373. ---- Miscellaneous assaults, assault by other prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

Detainee at state facility for sexually violent persons who brought §§ 1983 equal protection action against facility employees, arising from detainee's beating at hands of fellow resident, could state claims for failure to supervise against employees who purportedly had no duty to supervise, for failure to investigate against employees who purportedly had no duty to investigate, and for failure to punish against employees who purportedly had no responsibility for punishment. Brown v. Budz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 904. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Prison supervisor on duty when inmate was assaulted by another inmate was not deliberately indifferent to inmate's risk of harm, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity as matter of law in inmate's § 1983 action alleging failure to protect in violation of Eighth Amendment; although supervisor did not prevent assault, supervisor approved cell isolation of assaulting inmate in an attempt to prevent assault, and supervisor could not reasonably have foreseen that other officials would permit assaulting inmate to leave his cell after isolation had been imposed. Doe v. Bowles, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 254 F.3d 617. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' decision to remove inmate from protective custody and to assign him to space that was less protected, though still not in the general population, was not sufficient to establish that prison officials knowingly disregarded serious risk of harm to inmate, who had argued against being moved from protective custody because he feared for his safety after he had turned in gang members; thus, inmate failed to bring forward evidence to survive summary judgment on his civil rights claim against prison officials. Jelinek v. Greer, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 90 F.3d 242. Civil Rights 1093; Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

Juvenile correction center's former superintendent and former assistant superintendent could not be held liable in §§ 1983 action for failing to protect ward who was beaten by two fellow wards, in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights, based on constructive knowledge of threat against ward. Blankenship v. Commonwealth, E.D.Va.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 607. Sentencing And Punishment 1605

Inmate who did not assert that he was ever subjected to physical violence could not state cause of action for lack of supervision of inmates. Hopkins v. Campbell, D.Kan.1994, 870 F.Supp. 316. Prisons 17(4)

Inmate's claim that prison officials negligently failed to provide adequate security failed to state claim for relief under § 1983. Policano v. Koehler, S.D.N.Y.1989, 715 F.Supp. 598. Civil Rights 1395(7) order inmates to leave gym without first ascertaining that no inmate had weapon and that no further assaults would occur once inmates were in more open, less supervised area was not patently unreasonable, as required for black inmate who was assaulted by Hispanic inmates to state section 1983 claim. McGriff v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1986, 640 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1093

Correctional officer could not be held liable to inmate allegedly injured when assaulted by another inmate in dayroom of correctional center on ground that offending inmate, who was psychiatric patient, was taken into presence of offenders who were not psychiatric patients, notwithstanding that medical decision that offending inmate could be sent to segregation was apparently overruled by nonmedical staff member, where evidence did not show that correctional officer could refuse to take person to segregation if psychiatric unit team had approved such course of action and prison conduct adjustment board had imposed such sentence upon determination of guilt. Massey v. Smith, N.D.Ind.1983, 555 F.Supp. 743. Civil Rights 1093

County jail officials were not liable under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to substantial risk of serious harm to inmate who was attacked twice by other inmates, where inmate failed to allege that he was injured in second attack, and, with respect to first attack, it was inmate, not officials, who made informed decision to risk his own safety by choosing to go to the recreation yard when inmates "on the behavior modification tier" were present. Dickey v. Merrick, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 190 Fed.Appx. 692, 2006 WL 2212195, Unreported. Civil Rights 1093

2374. Assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally-- Generally

To determine whether prison official used excessive force in violation of Eighth Amendment, court must consider whether force was applied in good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline or maliciously and sadistically to cause harm. Hill v. Shelander, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 992 F.2d 714. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

State corrections officer had duty to intervene on behalf of inmate being assaulted by county corrections officer regardless of whether state department had lawful custody of inmate. Buckner v. Hollins, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 983 F.2d 119, rehearing denied. Prisons 10; Prisons 17(4)

On remand of inmates's civil rights suit alleging use of excessive force by corrections officer, district court was to look to extent of injury suffered, need for application of force, relationship between that need and amount of force used, threat reasonably perceived by responsible officials, and any efforts made to temper severity of forceful response. Shabazz v. Lynaugh, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 974 F.2d 597. Federal Courts 951.1

In order for inmate to prevail in civil rights complaint of excessive use of force under this section, he must prove significant injury, which resulted directly and only from use of force that was clearly excessive to need, excessiveness of which was clearly and objectively unreasonable, and action constituted unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain. Luciano v. Galindo, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 944 F.2d 261. Civil Rights 1093

Beating of inmate violated inmate's constitutional rights and was actionable under federal civil rights law where conduct of prison officials involved acts which were not permissible no matter what procedural protections accompanied them. Franklin v. Aycock, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1986, 795 F.2d 1253. Civil Rights 1093

Claim of assault on prisoner by his custodian is cognizable under this section. Collins v. Hladky, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1979, 603 F.2d 824.

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether injuries suffered by jail inmate while he was being transported to mental health unit following apparent suicide attempt were result of purposeful acts by defendant corrections officers, or were accidental in nature, precluded summary judgment for officers on their defense of qualified immunity in inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Atkins v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 372 F.Supp.2d 377. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

If prison supervisors with knowledge of risk of harm failed to take reasonable steps to prevent such harm, they may be liable under this section. Perry v. Walker, E.D.Va.1984, 586 F.Supp. 1264. Civil Rights 1090

Unjustified infliction of bodily harm on prisoner by correctional officer gives rise to liability under this section. Peterson v. Davis, D.C.Md.1982, 551 F.Supp. 137, affirmed 729 F.2d 1453. Civil Rights 1093

While prison officials may sometimes have to resort to occasional use of degree of intentional force in the operation of correctional facility, in determining whether constitutional line has been crossed, court must look to such factors as need for application of force, relationship between need and amount of force that was used, extent of injury inflicted, and whether force was applied in goodfaith effort to maintain or restore discipline or maliciously and sadistically for very purpose of causing harm. McCargo v. Mister, D.C.Md.1978, 462 F.Supp. 813 . See, also, Johnson v. Glick, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1973, 481 F.2d 1028, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 462, 414 U.S. 1033, 38 L.Ed.2d 324; Jones v. Huff, N.D.N.Y.1992, 789 F.Supp. 526; Wilson v. White, S.D.N.Y.1987, 656 F.Supp. 877. Prisons 13(2)

State prisoner's § 1983 action against prison officials, alleging violation of equal protection, was frivolous, so that dismissal was warranted under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); prisoner merely made conclusory allegations that he suffered physical harm at hands of prison officials, that he was singled out for no other reason than "being an inmate of the black race," and that guards on numerous occasions "denied [prisoner] the same rights enjoyed by white inmates"; prisoner failed to point to any similarly situated white inmates who were given preferential treatment. Gadlin v. Watkins, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 93 Fed.Appx. 204, 2004 WL 474010, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Threats, verbal abuse and racial slurs allegedly directed at inmate could not form basis for § 1983 claim against guards absent accompanying physical threats. Amaker v. Foley, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21383010, Unreported, affirmed 117 Fed.Appx. 806, 2005 WL 78798. Civil Rights 1098

2375. ---- Shocking conduct, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate who was allegedly beaten by corrections officers, in order to establish claim under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] based on Eighth Amendment, was required to show more than that he suffered some kind of intentional tort at hands of defendants who were acting under color of state law; he was required to prove acts which, in effect, amounted to shocking or brutal conduct. Hurd v. Nolan, E.D.Mo.1985, 610 F.Supp. 591. Civil Rights 1093

In order to succeed on his civil rights claim arising from alleged "abusive" or "reckless" force applied to plaintiff on removing him from his cell and taking him to segregation unit, plaintiff had to demonstrate that defendant correction officer's acts were so abusive as to "shock the conscience"; there had to be circumstances indicating an evil intent, or recklessness, or at least deliberate indifference to the consequences of his conduct for those under his control or dependent upon him; however, plaintiff's allegation of unspecified bruises on his arms and legs did not "shock the conscience" in the context of this case. Santiago v. Yarde, S.D.N.Y.1980, 487 F.Supp. 52. Civil Rights 1395(7); Civil Rights 1404

If prison guards dragged prisoner from his cell, beat him severely and held him against hot radiator, inflicting burns on various parts of his body, their ues of force was of such shocking nature as to constitute civil rights violation. Joseph v. Brierton, N.D.Ill.1976, 431 F.Supp. 50. Civil Rights 1093

Since not every intentional use of force by a correctional officer violates a prisoner's constitutional rights, allegations in state penitentiary inmate's complaint, to be actionable under this section, had to indicate that inmate had been administered physical and mental abuse or corporal punishment of such base, inhumane, and barbaric proportions that it shocked and offended court's sensibilities and offended U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8 as well.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Grillo v. Sielaff, N.D.Ill.1976, 414 F.Supp. 272. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2376. ---- Wanton infliction of pain, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate's civil rights action against prison staff officers for excessive use of force failed to support reasonable inference of wantonness in infliction of pain required to establish a constitutional violation; there was undisputed evidence that inmate created disturbance, necessitating use of force, and although other inmates' affidavits attested to guards grabbing inmate by throat and pushing him against bars, there was no other evidence supporting inmate's claim that officer struck him with night stick, and inmate's medical records contained no report of head injuries or treatment for pain following incident. Bennett v. Parker, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 898 F.2d 1530, rehearing denied 916 F.2d 719, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1003, 498 U.S. 1103, 112 L.Ed.2d 1085. Civil Rights 1404

Inmate's allegation that corrections officer exposed his testicles to inmate did not meet the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" standard necessary to support §§ 1983 claim based on Eighth Amendment violation. Collins v. Graham, D.Me.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 241. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether correctional officer struck inmate not to restore or maintain discipline, but maliciously and sadistically to cause harm to him, and whether officer used more force than was necessary, precluded summary judgment on inmate's §§ 1983 claim that officer violated his Eighth Amendment right against cruel and unusual punishment by hitting him in the face and breaking his jaw. Orwat v. Maloney, D.Mass.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 146. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County corrections officers were liable under § 1983 and Eighth Amendment for unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain upon inmate when, after two officers brutally beat inmate and left him moaning in cell, and third witnessed beating, officers decided not to file report and advised supervisor that no report was needed, thereby preventing inmate from receiving immediate medical attention with deliberate indifference to his medical needs, even though officers, having beaten inmate or observed him being beaten in manner sufficient to kill him, should have been aware of seriousness of inmate's medical needs. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Issues of material fact as to whether defendant officers perpetrated series of unprovoked beatings and other violent assaults on plaintiff when she was taken into custody on summary conviction for criminal contempt, and as to extent of her injuries, precluded summary judgment in § 1983 civil rights action; plaintiff sufficiently rebutted officers' assertion of qualified immunity with affidavit attesting to series of beatings and other abuses constituting unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain. Sharp v. Kelsey, W.D.Mich.1996, 918 F.Supp. 1115. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

To prevail on civil rights claim grounded in the Eighth Amendment, prison inmate had to show that correctional officers used such excessive force to subdue him that force could fairly be characterized as unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain. Boyd v. Selmer, N.D.N.Y.1994, 842 F.Supp. 52. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

To sustain constitutional claim of violation of civil rights based on prison guard's pushing inmate into wall, allegations must set forth violation of cruel and unusual punishment prohibition by use of excessive force to impose unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain; shoving inmate into wall and worsening head injury does not show wantonness with respect to unjustified infliction of pain. Reyes v. Koehler, S.D.N.Y.1993, 815 F.Supp. 109. Civil Rights 1093

Correctional officers can be found answerable at law in civil rights suits only for "obduracy and wantonness," not merely because lesser measures might have sufficed in controlling prisoners or where ordinary errors of judgment occurred. Morrison v. Martin, E.D.N.C.1990, 755 F.Supp. 683, affirmed 917 F.2d 1302. Civil Rights 1090

Prison officials did not use excessive force in violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights, even though, after securing and handcuffing him following a fight with another prisoner, they allegedly repeatedly punched him in the back of his head, on his back, and on his left side, and kneed him four to six times on the left side of his face; although the officials arguably could have used less force after restraining the inmate, there was no evidence showing that their measures were taken maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm. McBride v. Rivers, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 170 Fed.Appx. 648, 2006 WL 622591, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2377. ---- Deliberate indifference, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Evidence that prison superintendent authorized investigation into correctional officer's failure to report use of force and that he received written complaints about correctional officer's use of excessive force and was advised that correctional officer should be discharged because of persistent complaints, but took no responsive action, supported conclusion that supervisor was deliberately indifferent to substantial risk of serious harm to inmate, in violation of Eighth Amendment. Estate of Davis by Ostenfeld v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1388. Sentencing And Punishment 1548; Prisons 17(4)

Pretrial detainee met burden of establishing that due process violation was committed with deliberate indifference to her constitutional rights, where she complained of repeated sexual assaults by jailer during jailer's eight-hour shift. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 51. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(4)

Genuine issues of material fact existed, precluding summary judgment, on whether corrections officer's alleged choking of inmate to virtual unconsciousness after inmate disrupted hearing was excessive use of force with malicious and sadistic desire to inflict harm in violation of inmate's civil rights, and whether prison official was deliberately indifferent by failing to intervene after other officers allegedly held inmate down and began choking him. Burgess v. Moore, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 39 F.3d 216, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Jail supervisor was deliberately indifferent to safety of county jail inmate who was fatally assaulted by other inmates if he knew that not having an officer on the ground in jail yard posed a risk of violence among the inmates and nonetheless allowed an officer to cover both the yard and another post, which required officer to leave yard unattended for a significant period of time. Wilson v. Maricopa County, D.Ariz.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 987. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

County corrections officer was liable under § 1983 for deliberate indifference to substantial risk of serious harm to inmate, in violation of Eighth Amendment, where officer admitted knowing that two other officers planned to use excessive force in subduing inmate, accompanied those officers to inmate's cell, watched officers viciously beat inmate for approximately one minute without interceding, and admitted that his presence was intended to ensure that inmate did not fight back and to keep other inmates from interfering. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

County did not act with deliberate indifference with regard to consequences of its policy of allowing cross-gender guarding in correctional facility and, thus, county could not be held liable under § 1983 based on county employee's alleged sexual assault of prisoner; there was no history of assaults on prisoners by employee or other detention officers and county moved quickly to investigate employee's actions upon hearing allegations. Cain v. Rock, D.Md.1999, 67 F.Supp.2d 544. Civil Rights 1093; Civil Rights 1351(4)

Female plaintiff did not establish deliberate indifference by prison officials and thus could not recover on Eighth Amendment claim as result of alleged rape by prison guard where prison officials had policy forbidding sexual contact between correctional officers and inmates, alleged rapist had received total of 64 hours of training, and inmate offered no expert opinion to rebut expert report that training was adequate. Carrigan v. State of Del.,

D.Del.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1376. Civil Rights 1358

Sheriff could be held liable for violation of plaintiff's Eighth Amendment rights by officers based on deliberate indifference, in civil rights action by plaintiff who allegedly suffered severe beatings by officers while being taken into custody after summary conviction for criminal contempt; plaintiff sufficiently alleged that officers violated her constitutional rights and that sheriff was aware of complaints regarding officer's excessive tendencies. Sharp v. Kelsey, W.D.Mich.1996, 918 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1358

Correctional officer's action of striking inmate in the groin area did not involve the "deliberate indifference" required to establish cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment; the officer had no intent to inflict harm, and his conduct did not show wantonness. Neal v. Miller, W.D.Mich.1991, 778 F.Supp. 378. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Allegations that three correctional officers hit prisoner in his rib and groin area before transporting him to high security for further detention, if proven true, could demonstrate "reckless or callous" indifference to prisoner's constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment; thus, allegation stated civil rights action under § 1983. Fenner v. Moran, D.R.I.1991, 772 F.Supp. 59. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Single-fist blow to inmate's head to quell disturbance created by inmate, who had shoved and scratched correctional officer, was warranted and not excessive; thus, inmate could not recover under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 on claim that his Eighth Amendment [U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 8] right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment was violated. Peebles v. Frey, E.D.Mo.1985, 617 F.Supp. 1072, affirmed 802 F.2d 462. Civil Rights 1093

Neither prison superintendent nor deputy superintendent were deliberately indifferent to danger of assault by corrections officer against prisoner, and thus could not be liable in prisoner's § 1983 supervisory liability action, arising out of alleged actions of officer, in forcibly removing prisoner from cell, handcuffing him to tightly, punching and threatening him; superintendent and deputy lacked direct personal knowledge about the incident or about alleged prior incidents of violence involving officer. Reyes v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 23101781, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during riot at state prison failed to show that former prison officials acted with deliberate indifference and exposed inmate to a substantial risk of serious damage to his future health, and thus, officials were not liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights resulting from alleged deprivation of adequate emergency medical care, where officials did not promulgate or authorize policies and practices related to medical care. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107950, Unreported. Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether prison officials, who had knowledge of multiple sexual incidents between male guards and female inmates and complaints of inappropriate pat-downs, but made no changes in policies or practice in response, had acted with deliberate indifference to inmate safety, precluded grant of summary judgment on basis of qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action against officials. Trammell v. Davis, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 208 F.3d 218, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2377A. ---- Intent, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Jury in §§ 1983 action could find that prison guard had requisite state of mind required for claim of excessive force, when he was found by jury to have hit inmate in face, knelt on him, and otherwise inflicted pain in course of securing inmate in four point restraint. Ziemba v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 248. Civil Rights 1429

Heightened requirement of sadistic and malicious intent applied to inmate's claim that prison officials used excessive force in violation of his constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment by exposing him to tear and pepper gas while he was in his cell. Lee v. Griner, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 188 Fed.Appx. 877, 2006 WL 1843523, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2378. ---- Knowledge, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner failed to establish that prison guards were jointly and severally liable under §§ 1983 for their failure to intervene in other guards' alleged use of excessive force during transfer of prisoner from strip-search area to segregation cell, absent evidence regarding identity of guards who were involved in transfer; without identify of officers, there was no way to examine whether specific guards acted with a knowing willingness that a constitutional violation would occur. Harper v. Albert, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 400 F.3d 1052. Civil Rights 1358

City's failure to adopt policy of additional jail staffing did not constitute deliberate indifference, for purposes of § 1983 due process claim of pretrial detainee based on sexual assault by jailer; there was no showing that city had actual knowledge that its staffing policy created substantial risk of harm to female detainees, as condition of employment jailer underwent background investigation, medical examination, and polygraph test, none of which revealed any issues of concern, jailer had been commissioned police officer, without incident, for four years prior to his employment with the jail, and had been trained by experienced jailers in official policies of jail management. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Inmate alleging failure to protect, in violation of Eighth Amendment, need not show that prison official acted or failed to act believing that harm actually would befall inmate; it is enough that official acted or failed to act despite his knowledge of substantial risk of serious harm. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Supervisory official was not liable in his supervisory capacity for the acts of the other prison employees, who allegedly failed to take reasonable measures to guarantee an inmate's safety and used excessive force in restraining the inmate; evidence did not show a history of widespread violence, and the inmate's general statement that he feared being placed in a cell with another prisoner was insufficient to show that the official had a subjective knowledge of a risk of serious harm. McBride v. Rivers, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 170 Fed.Appx. 648, 2006 WL 622591, Unreported. Prisons 10

Allegations by estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by correctional officer during altercation between inmates at state prison that review board conducted an inadequate investigation did not, absent specific evidence, raise inference that prison official responsible for articulating, copying, and distributing use of force policy promoted a custom or pattern of inadequate investigations, or encouraged review boards to exonerate staff members who violated use of force policy as a matter of course, as would support estate's claim under § 1983 against official. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107989, Unreported. Civil Rights 1404

2379. ---- Discriminatory action, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate did not state a claim under the Fifth Amendment cognizable under § 1983 by alleging that correctional officer, who caused a relatively minor injury to inmate's leg, poked him in the back and spoke in a belligerent tone, had previously made discriminatory statements against Native Americans, as connection between the physical injury and the claimed racial prejudice was not sufficiently close. Black Spotted Horse v. Else, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1985, 767 F.2d 516. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2380. ---- Seriousness of injury, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Extent of prisoner's injuries provided no basis for dismissal of Eighth Amendment claim against prison employees;

blows directed at prisoner caused bruises, swelling, loosened teeth and cracked dental plate and were not de minimis for Eighth Amendment purposes. Hudson v. McMillian, U.S.La.1992, 112 S.Ct. 995, 503 U.S. 1, 117 L.Ed.2d 156, on remand 962 F.2d 522. Civil Rights 1093; Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Inmate's alleged injury at hands of prison guards, a sore, bruised ear lasting for three days, was de minimus, and thus he did not raise valid Eighth Amendment claim for excessive use of force nor did he have requisite "physical injury" under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) to support claim for emotional or mental suffering. Siglar v. Hightower, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 112 F.3d 191. Civil Rights 1463; Sentencing And Punishment 1548; Prisons 13(4)

While not every use of excessive force rises to constitutional violation cognizable under this section, "significant injury" element of excessive force claims does not authorize prison guards and correctional officers to impose excessive force upon prisoner so long as resulting injuries are kept below "permanent" threshold. Luciano v. Galindo, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 944 F.2d 261. Civil Rights 1093

Inmate need not show court scars of torture in order to make out complaint under federal statute creating cause of action for deprivation of civil rights under color of state law, but rather, prisoner retains right at least to be free from terror of instant and unexpected death at whim of his allegedly bigoted custodians. Burton v. Livingston, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 791 F.2d 97. Civil Rights 1093

Severe physical abuse of prisoners by their keepers without cause or provocation is actionable under this section. Tolbert v. Bragan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1971, 451 F.2d 1020. Civil Rights 1093

Evidence that inmate suffered more than de minimis injury, as required for corrections officers to be held liable for excessive force under §§ 1983, was insufficient for submission to jury, inasmuch as facts introduced at trial as to some other correctional officers could not be applied to defendant officers, and there was no evidence at trial indicating any physical injury resulting from officers' alleged actions of shoving inmate against wall and throwing him in chair. Willis v. Youngblood, D.Md.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 883. Civil Rights 1093

Severe pain in inmate's shoulder which lasted three to five days, though apparently not serious, was not de minimis injury as matter of law, for purpose of inmate's §§ 1983 claim against corrections officers alleging excessive force in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Atkins v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 372 F.Supp.2d 377. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Even assuming truth of a plaintiff's accusation under this section that he was handcuffed, single blow described was not "excessive use of force" prohibited by Eighth Amendment. Olson v. Coleman, D.Kan.1992, 804 F.Supp. 148. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Inmate's claim he was beaten by guards and suffered torn ligaments as result would support a § 1983 action. Peterson v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1989, 707 F.Supp. 759. Civil Rights 1093

Inmate stated civil rights claim against corrections officers, one of whom had allegedly cut inmate's housecoat and hand; inmate had due process right to be free from unprovoked attack, and corrections officers were acting under color of state law. Wilson v. White, S.D.N.Y.1987, 656 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1395(7)

This section provides a remedy for serious physical abuse of prisoners in violation of U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 8 or due process clause of U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14, § 1, but this section does not seek to redress every injury actionable under common-law tort of battery. Ricketts v. Derello, E.D.Pa.1983, 574 F.Supp. 645. Civil Rights 1090

Evidence in civil rights action was insufficient to support inmate's excessive force claim against corrections officer; officer struck inmate once in a reflex action with a heavy trap-door key after inmate had refused several orders to withdraw his arm from the trap door in his cell, had grabbed officer by his shirt through the trap door, and was attempting to pull officer down and would not let him go, no further force was used by officer, and inmate did not suffer serious resulting injuries. Proctor v. Engstrom, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 95 Fed.Appx. 192, 2004 WL 814897, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

2381. ---- Duty to intercede, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison guards who participated in prisoner's cell transfer and transport procedure were not jointly and severally liable under §§ 1983 for their failure to intervene in other guards' alleged use of excessive force, absent any evidence prisoner had been subjected to excessive force by any of the guards. Harper v. Albert, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 400 F.3d 1052. Civil Rights 1358

Evidence supported determination that other members of "movement team," sent to restrain inmate and remove him from cell, saw correctional officer assault inmate, as basis for holding other team members liable for failure to protect inmate from use of excessive force, considering proximity of team members to correctional officer, nature of officer's actions, substantial risk of serious harm to inmate, inmate's actual injuries, and fact that none of the movement team members reported any injury in their use of force reports. Estate of Davis by Ostenfeld v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1388. Civil Rights 1420

Correctional officer could not be liable to state prison inmate, under § 1983, for the alleged assault of inmate by other correctional officers, where the officer did not observe the alleged assault and he therefore could not have interceded on inmate's behalf. Durran v. Selsky, W.D.N.Y.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1093

Corrections officer and supervisory official could be held liable under § 1983 based on failure to intervene if they were both present when excessive force allegedly was used against inmate, and knew of or should have known of unconstitutional conduct in time to intervene. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1093; Civil Rights 1358

Corrections officer bears affirmative duty to intercede on behalf of inmate when officer witnesses other officers maliciously beating inmate in violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights; duty arises if officer has reasonable opportunity to intercede. Jones v. Huff, N.D.N.Y.1992, 789 F.Supp. 526. Sentencing And Punishment 1548; Prisons 9

Estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during altercation between inmates at state prison failed to set forth facts sufficient to establish that prison officials could have intervened before guard's alleged use of excessive force, but failed and refused to do so, as would support estate's Eighth Amendment claim under § 1983 against officials, where estate failed to show that officials knew guard, who was in observation tower, was about to use lethal force, or that officials could have prevented use of force. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107989, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2382. ---- Common-law torts, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Constitutional protection afforded prisoners against assaults by correction officers is not coextensive with that afforded by the common law tort action for battery. Santiago v. Yarde, S.D.N.Y.1980, 487 F.Supp. 52. Assault And Battery 7

Claim that state penitentiary inmate has been victim of common law battery, although suitable for cause of action in state courts, does not state claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8 or this section. Donahue v. Maynard, D.C.Kan.1977, 437 F.Supp. 47. Civil Rights 1090; Sentencing And Punishment 1537

2383. ---- Self-defense, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison inmate was struck by guard in self-defense and with only such force as necessary to stop inmate's attack and inmate was properly transported to hospital where she received adequate medical treatment during her overnight stay there and from prison nurse prior to the trip and on her return to prison; thus, no violation of inmate's civil rights resulted from altercation in inmate's cell. Smith v. Thomas, E.D.Ark.1979, 475 F.Supp. 1135. Civil Rights 1091; Civil Rights 1093

2384. ---- Simple assault, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Alleged simple assault committed upon prisoner by guard in state correctional institution was not actionable under this section governing deprivation of civil rights, notwithstanding claim of mental anguish, humiliation, embarrassment and fear, where alleged assault did not result in a physical touching and did not produce a physical injury, and, in tense and hostile atmosphere of prison, confrontations of such sort occurred on numerous occasions. Bolden v. Mandel, D.C.Md.1974, 385 F.Supp. 761. Civil Rights 1098

2385. ---- Mace, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Even if Wisconsin prison regulations governing use of mace create a liberty interest in not being maced, evidence that inmate was maced in violation of regulations was not sufficient, by itself, to establish violation of procedural due process. Colon v. Schneider, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1990, 899 F.2d 660. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Correctional supervisor was not liable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 to inmate the supervisor maced when inmate refused to enter jail cell, as supervisor used mace in good faith, exercising discretion given him under jail policy, notwithstanding that use of mace may have been unnecessary to effect the needed restraint, since greater injury to inmate and guards involved might have occurred if physical force had been used instead. Norris v. District of Columbia, D.C.D.C.1985, 614 F.Supp. 294, affirmed 787 F.2d 675, 252 U.S.App.D.C. 119. Civil Rights 1093

Correctional official's use of mace on prisoner when officer thought he was confronted with a weapon in prisoner's hand when prisoner refused to leave his cell during a shakedown did not give rise to a clear constitutional claim absent any indication of injury to prisoner or a risk that prisoner might be subjected to an unconstitutional application of physical force. Taylor v. Strickland, D.C.S.C.1976, 411 F.Supp. 1390. Prisons 13(4)

State prison security officer, sought to be held liable for $1,000,000 for allegedly placing prison inmate in locked cell and proceeding to "mace" him, did not abuse his discretion when he "maced" inmate, after inmate, who started hollering around midnight that he wanted to see a doctor, refused to obey order to quiet down. Crafton v. Rose, E.D.Tenn.1972, 369 F.Supp. 131. Prisons 13(5)

2386. ---- Stun guns, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Police officers' use of stun gun on disruptive prison inmate was not a per se violation of Eighth Amendment, even though officers were not trained to use stun gun and there was no policy regarding use of stun guns. Caldwell v. Moore, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1992, 968 F.2d 595. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2387. ---- Training and supervision, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

By alleging that corrections officers planned his beating in prison dining hall and encouraged him to act out so they could beat him, that deputy warden witnessed that attack and took no action to stop it or to punish officers involved, and that sergeant stood by as correction officers harmed him while he was handcuffed, inmate stated claim against prison officials under §§ 1983 for supervisory liability for use of excessive force in violation of Eighth Amendment. Davis v. Carroll, D.Del.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 415. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Municipal civil rights liability for failure to train results when (1) there is a constitutional violation by a municipal employee and (2) the evidence demonstrates a close causal link between the failure to train and the injury. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1352(1)

A municipality will be held liable for failure to train its employees only if its failure to properly train evidences a deliberate indifference to the rights of its inhabitants. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198 . Civil Rights 1352(1)

District of Columbia has duty, not only to train its officers in matters relating to sexual contact between prison guards and inmates, but also to actively devise and implement system of supervision of its first level corrections officers in accordance with law. Newby v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1999, 59 F.Supp.2d 35. Prisons 17(1)

Prison supervisor was not grossly negligent in managing prison officials who conducted pat down search of prisoner, for purpose of liability on excessive force claim under § 1983; following prisoner's complaints, supervisor twice replaced officials conducting pat down search, and he filed use of force report and took prisoner to hospital for immediate evaluation after prisoner claimed he had been assaulted. Kalwasinski v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22973420, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by correctional officer during altercation between inmates at state prison failed to show that alleged failure of prison official responsible for articulating, copying, and distributing use of force policy to oversee proper training, supervision, and discipline of guards resulted in inappropriate use of deadly force against inmate, as would support estate's claim under § 1983 against official. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107989, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during riot at state prison failed to show that alleged failure of former prison officials to oversee proper training, supervision, and discipline of guards resulted in inappropriate use of deadly force against inmate, as would support estate's Eighth Amendment claim under § 1983 against officials. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107950, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2388. ---- Miscellaneous assaults, assault by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Alleged practice of excessive force by correctional officers was not part of policy of District of Columbia for purposes of liability for constitutional tort arising from beating of prisoner by correctional officers, and thus District could not be held liable for prisoner's broken neck during incident with guards, even if low-level supervisors covered up other alleged incidents of excessive force through falsified disciplinary reports; such practice reduced likelihood that policymakers would learn of practice and suggested belief by subordinates that their behavior violated established policy. Triplett v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1997, 108 F.3d 1450, 323 U.S.App.D.C. 421. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Inmate failed to state facts, in § 1983 action, that met either objective or subjective component of test used to determine whether corrections officers' excessive physical force constituted cruel and unusual punishment, as allegations that inmate was bumped, grabbed, elbowed, and pushed were not sufficiently serious or harmful to reach constitutional dimensions, where inmate did not maintain that he experienced any pain or injury as result of physical contact or allege facts showing that officers used force maliciously and sadistically to cause harm rather than in good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline. Boddie v. Schnieder, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 105 F.3d 857. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate in civil rights action against prison guard made out prima facie case of use of excessive force in violation of right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment, in light of evidence that guard hit inmate in mouth with clenched fist while inmate was held immobilized by at least nine other people, that punch in the face was not necessary to carry out court order for drawing of blood sample, that guard then said, "Shut up," that four teeth were removed the next day, and that, after incident, inmate "hurt all over." Thomas v. Stalter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 20 F.3d 298. Civil Rights 1420

Prison guards' use of force to remove inmate from regular cell to isolation cell was justified, and thus did not constitute Eighth Amendment violation; inmate had been asked three times to uncover his head while sleeping and had finally unequivocally refused, and his size, slippery skin, and "passive resistance" made him awkward to move. Stenzel v. Ellis, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1990, 916 F.2d 423. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Prisoner's complaint alleging that he was severely beaten, kicked, choked, and thrown against wall by several guards when he shuffled his feet during prison "shakedown," and was beaten again while handcuffed after he was taken to holding unit, stated section 1983 claim. Gaut v. Sunn, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1987, 810 F.2d 923. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate stated a §§ 1983 claim for an Eighth Amendment violation against a corrections officer who allegedly grabbed the inmate's buttocks and fondled his penis during a search; inmate adequately that the officer searched him in a harassing manner intended to humiliate and inflict psychological pain. Turner v. Huibregtse, W.D.Wis.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 1149. Sentencing And Punishment 1545

Pretrial detainee stated a claim for excessive force against a county deputy sheriff; his assertions that the deputy, without provocation, shoved him, causing severe injury to his knee, and that he was deliberately denied medical attention for his injury satisfied the fair notice pleading standard. Harris v. Adams, S.D.Ohio 2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 707. Civil Rights 1395(6)

By alleging that correction officers harmed him on two different occasions while he was handcuffed, and deliberately hit him in order to provoke a response, inmate stated a claim against prison personnel under §§ 1983 for use of excessive force in violation of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. Davis v. Carroll, D.Del.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 415. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

An attempted touching, with no accompanying allegation of pain or injury, cannot support an inmate's claim of constitutional injury. Collins v. Graham, D.Me.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 241. Civil Rights 1093

Corrections officers' alleged conduct of beating inmate as they were transporting him to mental health unit, following apparent suicide attempt by inmate, violated contemporary standards of decency, thus satisfying objective component of inmate's resulting §§ 1983 claim alleging excessive force in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Atkins v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 372 F.Supp.2d 377. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Allegation that prison guards assaulted prisoner by "poking" him in the back when he did not hear them did not state claim of excessive force, as it did not involve more than de minimus injury. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for prison officials in § 1983 action by inmate who alleged violation of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from excessive use of force, existed as to whether correctional officers used minimal amount of force to place handcuffs on inmate to transfer him to court, rather than (as inmate alleged) wrestling him to floor, handcuffing him, hitting him with their sticks, and dragging him onto waiting bus. Newland v. Achute, S.D.N.Y.1996, 932 F.Supp. 529. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence showed that force used by employees of New York State Department of Corrections (DOCS) towards inmate was applied to protect safety of other inmates as well as staff of correctional facility, and was not performed maliciously and sadistically to cause harm, and, thus, inmate's Eighth Amendment claim against employees in civil rights action had to fail; inmate stated that motive for employees to beat him arose only from his intention to file cross-action lawsuit against prison officials in relation to living conditions imposed on "keeplock" inmates, but inmate contended that he never informed any employees of his plan to file lawsuit, employees had not had any prior substantive contact with inmate, and injuries suffered by employees and others indicated infliction of brutality by inmate on scale far greater than suffered by inmate. Duamutef v. Fial, W.D.N.Y.1996, 922 F.Supp. 807. Civil Rights 1420

Evidence in inmate's civil rights action against correction officers for use of excessive force supported finding that, in one incident, two officers had maliciously and sadistically harmed inmate, in light of evidence that inmate suffered jagged laceration on top of his head as well as abrasion above eye, requiring stitches, that inmate was much smaller than either of the officers, that officers had undergone training in proper use of force and defensive tactics, and testimony of physician that it was "highly unlikely" that laceration on top of head was self-inflicted. Hynes v. LaBoy, S.D.N.Y.1995, 887 F.Supp. 618. Civil Rights 1420

Police officer who transported arrestee to county jail after arrest could not be held liable for excessive force under § 1983 based on arrestee's testimony that the officer "kind of manhandled me around" and "roughly transported" him in "the manner in which [officer] took me out of the car and stuff like that," as testimony amounted to conclusory allegations. Dimmitt v. Ockenfels, D.Me.2004, 220 F.R.D. 116, affirmed 407 F.3d 21. Civil Rights 1420

State prisoner's pro se §§ 1983 action against prison guards, alleging that guards beat him for making insolent remarks, in violation of the Eighth Amendment, was barred by rule of Heck v. Humphrey, precluding civil claims which, if established, would necessarily imply the invalidity of an underlying conviction; prisoner was found guilty of assault and resisting the guards for same incident at a prison disciplinary hearing, and the §§ 1983 claim alleged that guards were not justified in using physical force against him, and did not admit that prisoner physically resisted guards, so that if prisoner prevailed in §§ 1983 claim, his disciplinary conviction would necessarily be called into doubt. Wooten v. Law, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 66, 2004 WL 2676624, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

Prison guards did not act maliciously, as required for Eighth Amendment claim of excessive force, when they allegedly threw state prisoner, who refused direct order to move up in line and attacked guard, into another room head first; prisoner's injuries, including bump to head and scratches, bruises and abrasions, were very minor, there existed need for application of force, given that when guard attempted to move him out of line, prisoner attacked him in room with about forty other prisoners, amount of force actually used was commensurate with need for force, threat was reasonably perceived by guard whose arm had been trapped and who had been pinned to floor by prisoner, and force was only used to extent necessary to remove threat to prison guards and prison discipline. Kalwasinski v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22973420, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

No reasonable jury could find that prisoner was subjected to unnecessary or excessive force in violation of civil rights law when prisoner reached through trap in door of his cell with his right arm in violation of prison rules and prison officials then beat his hand with plastic medication box, resulting in lacerations, bruises, cuts, and swelling; injuries were minor and the force used was in proportion to the threat posed by prisoner. White v. Matti, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2002, 58 Fed.Appx. 636, 2002 WL 31887792, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

2389. Harassment by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally-- Generally

Inmate sufficiently alleged continuous acts of harassment and beatings since time he filed administrative complaint with Department of Justice to state cause of action for retaliatory treatment against prison officials. Black v. Lane, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 22 F.3d 1395, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(7)

That, after prisoner filed petition for writ of habeas corpus, his ward officer filed three incident reports on him did not establish unconstitutional harassment where ward officer had independent factual basis for each charge. Willis v. Ciccone, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1974, 506 F.2d 1011. Prisons 13(2)

For purposes of screening provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prisoner did not state §§ 1983 claim against wardens based on their alleged failure to protect him from harassment by corrections officer, absent showing wardens were aware of prisoner's complaints against that officer or suggestion they were personally involved in the harassment or that it was unreasonable for them to delegate his complaints to officers on pod; significantly, prisoner testified that one of those wardens eventually had subject officer removed from prisoner's floor. David v. Hill, S.D.Tex.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 749. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner's complaint alleging that prison guards pulled him out of school and harassed him about grievances he had filed did not state § 1983 claim absent further supporting facts. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593 . Civil Rights 1395(7)

Officials at Virginia prison did not violate inmate's civil rights through alleged harassment of inmate by officer who was attempting to clear visitation room; officer was merely trying to organize inmates exiting that room and to make sure they did so in timely and orderly fashion, and inmate did not assert that he was harmed in any way physically or emotionally by alleged harassment. Harris v. Murray, E.D.Va.1990, 761 F.Supp. 409. Civil Rights 1098

Allegations of verbal abuse or harassment received by plaintiff at state prison were insufficient grounds for relief under this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Freeman v. Trudell, E.D.Mich.1980, 497 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner's generalized assertion of harassment by county jail officials did not give rise to a claim upon which relief could be granted under this section. Feazell v. Augusta County Jail, W.D.Va.1975, 401 F.Supp. 405. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Alleged harassment of state prison inmates by unit guards and lack of communication between inmates and unit officials would not reach constitutional magnitude unless inmates could show that prison officials acted cruelly or arbitrarily towards inmates. Lunsford v. Reynolds, W.D.Va.1974, 376 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1098

2390. ---- Verbal abuse, harassment by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

Verbal abuse by prison guard does not give rise to claim under § 1983. Siglar v. Hightower, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 112 F.3d 191. Civil Rights 1090

Inmate could not maintain claim that correctional program supervisor at state corrections release center violated prisoner's rights by using vulgar language in § 1983 action; verbal harassment or abuse is not sufficient to state constitutional deprivation under § 1983. Oltarzewski v. Ruggiero, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1987, 830 F.2d 136. Civil Rights 1098

Complaint that prison guard, without provocation and for apparent purposes of retaliating against prisoner's exercise of his rights in petitioning federal court for redress, terrorized him with threats of death while using racially offensive language stated claim under statute governing deprivation of civil rights for violation of prisoner's rights under First Amendment and due process and equal protection clauses of Fourteenth Amendment. Burton v. Livingston, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 791 F.2d 97. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Except in circumstances giving rise to unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain, verbal and sexual harassment does not give rise to §§ 1983 liability in the prison context. Collins v. Graham, D.Me.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 241.

Civil Rights 1098

State prison inmate's allegations that prison officer unzipped his clothing and told the inmate to grab the officer's penis and walked away laughing when the inmate refused, and did the same thing two days later but brushed against the inmate's arm before walking away, and that another officer held a candy bar toward his genital area, flipping it up and down, and then responded "I don't kiss and tell" when the inmate asked if the conduct was directed at him, amounted only to allegations of verbal sexual harassment, and thus, were insufficient to state a § 1983 claim for violation of the inmate's Eighth Amendment rights. Minifield v. Butikofer, N.D.Cal.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 900. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1554

Corrections officer's alleged verbal harassment of state inmate was not actionable under § 1983. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1098

Prisoner's claim of racial slurs or epithets reflecting racial prejudice did not form basis of claim under § 1983. Brown v. Croce, S.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 101. Civil Rights 1098

State prison inmate's allegations that he was provoked and harassed by correction officers who used profanity towards him did not state § 1983 claim that prisoner was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment; allegation of verbal harassment or profanity, without any injury or damage, did not state claim under § 1983. Harris v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1997, 962 F.Supp. 397. Civil Rights 1098

Verbal harassment alone cannot support claim under § 1983. Bullock v. Barham, N.D.Ill.1997, 957 F.Supp. 154. Civil Rights 1036

Prisoner who had not actually experienced any retaliation as a result of filing a lawsuit against corrections officer could not recover on civil rights claim, even if his claim that he was threatened about retaliation should he do so was true; prisoner's allegations constituted nothing more than claim of verbal harassment which is not cognizable under federal civil rights statute. Shiflet v. Cornell, M.D.Fla.1996, 933 F.Supp. 1549. Civil Rights 1098

Verbal harassment by state correction officials and preparation of an allegedly false misbehavior report charging inmate with marijuana use, both alleged to have occurred after inmate's election as representative on inmate grievance resolution committee, did not amount by themselves to a constitutional violation for purposes of a § 1983 civil rights action against those officials, viewed apart from a claim that officials' conduct was retaliatory. Alnutt v. Cleary, W.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 160. Civil Rights 1092

Correctional officer's alleged verbal assault of inmate did not violate Eighth Amendment. Davis v. Michigan Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Mich.1990, 746 F.Supp. 662. Sentencing And Punishment 1554

Even if inmate's allegations that deputy sheriff physically and verbally abused him were true, inmate's claim was not cognizable under § 1983 because assault as alleged did not constitute invasion of inmate's constitutional rights; inmate did not allege he suffered any injury as a result of alleged assault. Castillo v. Bowles, N.D.Tex.1988, 687 F.Supp. 277. Civil Rights 1093

Corrections officers' alleged verbal harassment of state prisoner and destruction of photographs of prisoner's girl friend were de minimis violations and could not form basis of civil rights suit against officers. Hikel v. King, E.D.N.Y.1987, 659 F.Supp. 337. Civil Rights 1098

Allegations of verbal harassment and profanity without more simply do not show invasion of any federally protected right. Coyle v. Hughs, W.D.Okla.1977, 436 F.Supp. 591. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Mere words, however violent, on part of prison personnel do not amount to such an assault as would be actionable by prisoners under this section. Jones v. Superintendent, D.C.Va.1974, 370 F.Supp. 488. See, also, Morrison v. Martin, E.D.N.C.1990, 755 F.Supp. 683, affirmed 917 F.2d 1302; Stacey v. Ford, D.C.Ga.1982, 554 F.Supp. 8; Batton v. State Government of North Carolina, Executive Branch, D.C.N.C.1980, 501 F.Supp. 1173; Boston v. Stanton, D.C.Mo.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1049; Coyle v. Hughs, W.D.Okla.1977, 436 F.Supp. 591.

Allegations that prison guards verbally abused state inmate by cursing at him did not support §§ 1983 claim. Perry v. Kramer, C.A.9 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 191, 2005 WL 81176, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

2391. Threats by prison officials, prisons and prisoners generally

In § 1983 action in which prisoner alleged that prison officials conspired to murder him for their own personal purposes, to cover-up illicit activities by one of them, prisoner was required to show that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to prisoner's safety. Arnold v. Groose, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 109 F.3d 1292. Conspiracy 7

Pro se inmate's allegations that arresting officer and other threatened to kill him and continued to do so failed by themselves to state constitutional claim cognizable under § 1983. Swoboda v. Dubach, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 992 F.2d 286, on remand 1995 WL 530601. Civil Rights 1098

Claims by inmates that prison officials issued death threats against them and harassed them stated actionable claim under § 1983 based on alleged violation of First and Fourteenth Amendments. Knecht v. Collins, S.D.Ohio 1995, 903 F.Supp. 1193, affirmed in part, vacated in part and reversed in part 187 F.3d 636. Civil Rights 1098

Inmate failed to establish § 1983 due process claim against prison officials based on alleged threats and harassment by officials; mere verbal threats alone are insufficient to support claim under § 1983, and inmate made no showing of uninvited physical contact. Jermosen v. Coughlin, N.D.N.Y.1995, 878 F.Supp. 444. Civil Rights 1098

Alleged threats by prison officials to place prison inmate in "cell 17," without more, did not set forth a cause of action pursuant to civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Featherman v. DiGiacinto, E.D.Pa.1985, 617 F.Supp. 431. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Alleged threatening language and gestures of a state penal official do not, even if true, constitute constitutional violation within the cognizance of this section. Fisher v. Woodson, E.D.Va.1973, 373 F.Supp. 970. Civil Rights 1090

2392. Harassment of guards by prisoners, prisons and prisoners generally

A prisoner has no right to verbally abuse guards, nor to engage in other forms of protest which impose a clear and present danger of disorder and violence; prompt suppression of such a violent outburst within limits imposed on the amount of force employed does not constitute an actionable tort of constitutional dimensions. Hawkins v. Elliott, D.C.S.C.1974, 385 F.Supp. 354. Civil Rights 1092; Prisons 13(4)

Prisoners have right even while confined to express their beliefs concerning conditions of their confinement, but no right to curse and verbally abuse guards, or throw food, trash and human waste at them, nor engage in other forms of protest which pose clear and present danger of violence and disorder. Collins v. Schoonfield, D.C.Md.1973, 363 F.Supp. 1152. Prisons 4(5)

Verbalization of inmate complaints within an institution should not be cause for punishment, at least of pretrial detainees, unless such verbalization poses threat which endangers the security of the jail. Collins v. Schoonfield, D.C.Md.1972, 344 F.Supp. 257, supplemented 363 F.Supp. 1152. Prisons 4(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2393. Riots or disturbances, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

To state Eighth Amendment excessive force claim under § 1983, prisoner or pretrial detainee must show that force was not applied in good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline but, rather, was administered maliciously and sadistically to cause harm; further, prisoner or pretrial detainee must show some injury, but it need not be "significant." Rankin v. Klevenhagen, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 5 F.3d 103. Sentencing And Punishment 1548; Prisons 13(4)

The fact that an inmate's loss of privileges was qualitatively equivalent to that experienced by prisoners segregated for disciplinary reasons did not entitle him to full range of procedural safeguards if restrictions were imposed upon prison unit as a whole as a measured response to an emergency. Abdul-Wadood v. Duckworth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1988, 860 F.2d 280, rehearing denied. Prisons 13(7.1)

In investigation into criminal conduct before, during and after uprising in state prison, each inmate was entitled to protection of his constitutional rights, subject to such restrictions as were reasonably and necessarily required in light of his incarceration pursuant to his prior conviction on other charges. Inmates of Attica Correctional Facility v. Rockefeller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 453 F.2d 12. Convicts 5

Events alleged with respect to prison riot were not cognizable in civil rights action under this section. McKinney v. People of State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 427 F.2d 160. Civil Rights 1395(7)

County jail inmates who alleged that state officials were guilty of intentional or grossly negligent acts resulting in violations of their rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 4, 14, in connection with events that occurred at jail when state's correctional emergency response team regained control of the jail following takeover by inmates, and who challenged state policies and procedures with regard to selection, training and supervision of the correctional emergency response team officers, were not required to prove an absence of adequate postdeprivation state remedies in order to establish a claim under this section and U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14. Allman v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1984, 577 F.Supp. 1440. Civil Rights 1404

Allegation that prison official failed to establish procedures for regulating use of mace and tear gas was insufficient alone to constitute a claim cognizable under this section. LeBlanc v. Foti, E.D.La.1980, 487 F.Supp. 272. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate, who was injured when he fell from fence while attempting to escape danger resulting from prison riot, failed to show that injuries he sustained were inflicted by prison personnel as cruel and unusual punishment in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 8 or that there was deliberate indifference to risk of injuries being inflicted upon prisoner by fellow inmates or action to prevent injuries from occurring as soon as risk became apparent; thus prisoner was not entitled to recover from prison authorities on theory that he had been deprived by them of federal constitutional rights. Scittarelli v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1978, 447 F.Supp. 279. Convicts 2; Sentencing And Punishment 1537

2394. ---- Mace, riots or disturbances, prisons and prisoners generally

If prison officer used Mace on prisoner who was creating disturbance in his cell only in a single burst for a second or two, as testified to by him, then he was not liable for damages in civil rights action on theory of infliction of cruel and unusual punishment; but if, as testified to by the prisoner, he was gassed continuously by three or four guards for several minutes, jury should have found for the prisoner. Bailey v. Turner, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1984, 736 F.2d 963. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Prisoner failed to establish that he suffered deprivation of any constitutional right arising out of use of mace by prison employees to quell a disturbance created by inmates. LeBlanc v. Foti, E.D.La.1980, 487 F.Supp. 272. Prisons 13(4)

Prison authorities' use of two shells of "mace" when large number of inmates refused to leave recreation room of penitentiary after being ordered to do so was proper for control of inmates, for protection of state property, for protection of prison officials and also for protection of inmates involved, and such use violated no constitutional right of inmate who was subjected to the "mace." Washington v. Anderson, E.D.Okla.1974, 387 F.Supp. 412. Prisons 13(4)

Where state prisoners confined in a maximum security seclusion cell as agitators during period of prison disturbance continued noisy and boisterous conduct, and where "talk and counsel" had failed, use first of fire hose with limited water pressure and then of controlled bursts of chemical mace to quell the disturbance did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment entitling prisoner to damages under this section. Beishir v. Swenson, W.D.Mo.1971, 331 F.Supp. 1227. Civil Rights 1092; Sentencing And Punishment 1553

2395. ---- Tear gas, riots or disturbances, prisons and prisoners generally

Use of tear gas to quell late-night disturbance at dormitory within state prison did not constitute excessive use of force so as to give rise to liability under this section, in view of fact that there had been the potential for a serious disturbance relating to incident wherein an inmate, supported by 20 to 25 other inmates, had flagrantly defied warden's orders, that the tear gas was used as last resort only after show of force by officers proved unsuccessful and after nonparticipants were given ample opportunity to leave dormitory and that the extent of injuries inflicted by the gas was minimal. Peterson v. Davis, D.C.Md.1982, 551 F.Supp. 137, affirmed 729 F.2d 1453. Civil Rights 1093

Use of tear gas on prisoner who had become intoxicated and refused to obey lawful order to return to his cell was proper where possible physical injury might have been suffered by prisoner and prison personnel if prison personnel had attempted to bring prisoner under control by laying hands on him rather than by use of tear gas. Christian v. Anderson, E.D.Okla.1974, 381 F.Supp. 168. Prisons 13(4)

Jail guards' conduct in spraying inmates with tear gas to quell disturbance in jail did not violate any constitutional rights of former inmate, who sought relief under this section. Davis v. U. S., E.D.Mo.1970, 316 F.Supp. 80, affirmed 439 F.2d 1118. Civil Rights 1093

2396. Escapes, prisons and prisoners generally

Factors relevant to inquiry whether prison official inflicted unnecessary and wanton pain and suffering on escaping prisoner include need for application of force, relationship between need and amount of force that was used, extent of injury inflicted, extent of threat to safety of staff and inmates, as reasonably perceived by responsible officials on basis of facts known to them, and any efforts made to temper severity of forcible response. Kinney v. Indiana Youth Center, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 950 F.2d 462, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 2313, 504 U.S. 959, 119 L.Ed.2d 232. Prisons 13(4)

Local jail detention officers injured by jail inmates attempting to escape did not have a federal civil rights claim against government officials in charge of the jail for injuries which would not have occurred but for those officials' alleged callous indifference to or grossly negligent failure to prevent, adequately guard against, or protect those injured from attempted escape and accompanying inmate violence; claim fell squarely within traditional state tort law and did not give rise to a constitutional claim. de Jesus Benavides v. Santos, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 883 F.2d 385. Civil Rights 1098

Corrections officer's ultimately fatal shooting of escaping prisoner did not constitute unconstitutional use of excessive force, where prisoner had ignored multiple warnings to stop, officer had no reason to know that escape could be prevented by means other than use of deadly force, and officer was not in position to shoot only to disable prisoner. Newby v. Serviss, W.D.Mich.1984, 590 F.Supp. 591. Prisons 13(4)

In determining whether state authorities breached their duty to prevent conduct of other inmates from causing injury to prisoner, so as to support claim of prisoner against prison authorities for damages based on deprivation of federal constitutional rights, test was whether there was "deliberate indifference" to risk that serious injuries might be inflicted upon prisoner. Scittarelli v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1978, 447 F.Supp. 279. Convicts 2

2397. Chaining of inmates, prisons and prisoners generally

Chaining of pretrial detainee to bed in hospital ward of jail for four days, except when he was released to shower and when he left facility for court appearance, was reasonably related to jail security and, as administered, was not excessively restrictive, and thus where pretrial detainee was not chained because of his race, chaining did not constitute punishment or violate due process or equal protection. Guerrero v. Cain, D.C.Or.1983, 574 F.Supp. 1012. Constitutional Law 250.2(1); Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 4(4)

2398. Interrogation of inmates, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Prison guard's questioning of prisoner regarding allegation that prisoner had stolen another inmate's radio, did not constitute conduct in violation of defendant's constitutional rights sufficient to sustain § 1983 action, even though prisoner had complained that inmate had obtained confidential information from prisoner's file and used it to contact prisoner's mother and attempt to force her to pay debt prisoner allegedly owed to inmate. Harding v. Jones, E.D.Mo.1991, 768 F.Supp. 275. Civil Rights 1098

2399. ---- Sexual matters, interrogation of inmates, prisons and prisoners generally

Former prisoner was not entitled to recover under this section from prison authorities on basis of humiliation suffered in prison interview regarding plaintiff's personal sexual matters, where questions appeared to be oriented toward determining what, if any, danger or difficulty plaintiff would likely experience upon release on parole because of his sexual proclivities. Gahagan v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, E.D.Pa.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1326. Civil Rights 1098

2400. Searches, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Inmate's allegation that prison officials' request that he submit to urinalysis was unreasonable search under Fourth Amendment was sufficient to state § 1983 civil rights claim, absent indication in record whether request was based on random selection or was otherwise permissible under Fourth Amendment as applied to prisoners. Lucero v. Gunter, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1994, 17 F.3d 1347. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison policy requiring prisoners in administrative segregation unit to submit to visual strip and body cavity searches when leaving their cells was constitutional, and given unit's security demands, prisoner's cell was reasonable place for conducting such searches. Rickman v. Avaniti, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1988, 854 F.2d 327. Prisons 4(7)

Former county jail inmate's allegations in his § 1983 complaint that he was placed in administrative segregation in cell which did not have a privacy partition next to the toilet and in which the toilet was allegedly situated such that three female inmates another cell could, at separate intervals, have a direct view of the inmate while he was performing bodily functions did not amount to a claim for an impermissible search and seizure, as the inmate was complaining of the searching eyes of co-inmates rather than guards. Simpson v. Penobscot County Sheriff's Dept., D.Me.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 75. Civil Rights 1092

Prisoner failed to establish that search conducted by government, that prisoner alleged was unconstitutional, caused him any actual compensable injury over and above that of being convicted and imprisoned, and so prisoner could not raise claim in civil rights action. Woodward v. Sedgwick County Jail, D.Kan.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1473, affirmed 106 F.3d 414. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Prisoner bringing § 1983 claim against state prison official did not allege violation of constitutionally protectible liberty interest under prison regulations violated by alleged improper cell search and false behavior report as required for procedural rule noncompliance to sustain § 1983 claim; alleged violations did not meet standard that denial create atypical and significant hardship in relation to ordinary incidents of prison life. Ramirez v. Holmes, S.D.N.Y.1996, 921 F.Supp. 204. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(7); Prisons 13(2)

Prison inmate's assertion that correctional officials stepped on his belongings and left his cell in disarray in violation of agency directive requiring correctional officers to conduct cell search in orderly manner and to use care to avoid damage or destruction to property failed to state claim for relief under civil rights law; failure to follow state directive strictly was not protected by federal law. Smith v. O'Connor, S.D.N.Y.1995, 901 F.Supp. 644 . Civil Rights 1098

Cause was not required for correction officer to enter and search prisoner's cell. Payne v. Axelrod, N.D.N.Y.1995, 871 F.Supp. 1551. Prisons 4(7)

Cell search, in violation of prison directive, did not violate prisoner's civil rights, where directive did not contain substantive rights, but merely established procedural framework for prison personnel. Gilmore v. Jeffes, M.D.Pa.1987, 675 F.Supp. 219. Civil Rights 1098

Entering of plaintiff's jail cell by prison guards with intention to forcibly remove from defendant's possession an object which he had secreted in towel was not unreasonable per se, for purpose of civil rights liability for injury sustained in the incident, as guards and jail administrator believed that plaintiff had a metal object, plaintiff, who had been placed in segregation following shakedown, was shouting threats at guards and making loud banging noises with the object and was riling up other prisoners, notwithstanding that plaintiff had not swung towel at two guards when they stood outside cell talking to him or that there was no prisoner in any cell immediately adjacent to plaintiff's. Bush v. Ware, E.D.Wis.1984, 589 F.Supp. 1454. Civil Rights 1093

Where search of inmate's cell was prompted by information received from another corrections officer to effect that prisoner might have been engaged in a "flim flam" operation concerning a "corporation" set up by inmates, search of cell for "corporation" documents, which were found and confiscated and, subsequently, after several weeks, returned to facility and given back to state prisoner did not give rise to civil rights cause of action. Crawford v. O'Hara, N.D.N.Y.1982, 529 F.Supp. 484, affirmed 742 F.2d 1431. Civil Rights 1098

Search of cell occupied by inmate who was a known accomplice of two other inmates in whose cells contraband had been found was reasonable and was an appropriate security measure, especially as cell was left in proper order after the search. Brown v. Hilton, D.C.N.J.1980, 492 F.Supp. 771. Prisons 13(4)

Inmate's claims of Fourth Amendment search and seizure violations did not necessarily imply the invalidity of his conviction, and thus, he stated a claim under §§ 1983 for nominal damages. Wallace v. Smith, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 300, 2005 WL 1842350, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

Performance of blood test upon arrestee did not implicate arrestee's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure, for purposes of arrestee's action under § 1983, where physician performing test was private party acting with legitimate independent motivation, namely, his professional medical judgment that possibility of hypoglycemia as reason for arrestee's angry and combative behavior needed to be eliminated. Kartorie v. Dunham, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 108 Fed.Appx. 694, 2004 WL 1661671, Unreported. Civil Rights

1326(8); Searches And Seizures 78

2401. ---- Body cavity searches, prisons and prisoners generally

Male prisoner did not state civil rights claim under Eighth Amendment against female guards based on allegations that they pointed and joked "among themselves" while observing him showering or while conducting body cavity search of him, where he did not allege that guards intended to humiliate him or that searches occurred without any penological justification; although court does not approve, exchange of verbal insults between inmates and guards is a constant, daily ritual observed in the nation's prisons. Somers v. Thurman, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 109 F.3d 614, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 143, 522 U.S. 852, 139 L.Ed.2d 90. Sentencing And Punishment 1554; Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1545

Visual body cavity search of prisoner conducted in general presence of other inmates, guards and nonsearching officers as part of institution-wide shakedown of prison was constitutionally reasonable in context of prisoner's rights under Fourth Amendment for purposes of prisoner's § 1983 action, despite fact that privacy of prisoner was compromised; emergency situation created by increasing number of murders justified immediate search of inmates, because crisis required immediate action and because of the large number of inmates, Secretary of Louisiana Department of Corrections was justified in conducting strip search in the most time-efficient place and manner available and this meant search conducted on collective as opposed to individual basis, and although Secretary's pilot and news media personnel could have observed search from walkway that opened into room where searches were conducted, record did not reflect that they demonstrated any interest in viewing searches. Elliott v. Lynn, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 38 F.3d 188, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1976, 514 U.S. 1117, 131 L.Ed.2d 865. Civil Rights 1098

Language of prison regulation under which strip search "may only" be conducted in clean and private place did not establish prisoner's liberty interest in having visual body cavity searches conducted in complete privacy which could form basis of § 1983 claim for violation of Fourteenth Amendment; even if searches violated provisions of prison regulation, as they were not conducted in private place, violation would not give rise to constitutionally protected liberty interest. Zunker v. Bertrand, E.D.Wis.1992, 798 F.Supp. 1365. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(7)

State prisoner bringing civil rights action against prison met initial requirement of establishing deprivation of a right of constitutional magnitude by showing that prison officials subjected each prisoner transferred to intensive management unit, without first establishing probable cause that he was concealing contraband, to a digital rectal probe conducted while prisoner was chained and in presence of escort squad of fellow prisoners who taunted him. Wetmore v. Gardner, E.D.Wash.1990, 735 F.Supp. 974, reversed 987 F.2d 589. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate suing pursuant to this section alleging that he had been subject to unreasonable body cavity search was not entitled to relief against correctional officers who conducted routine strip search preceding body cavity search. Coleman v. Hutto, E.D.Va.1980, 500 F.Supp. 586. Civil Rights 1448

2402. ---- Strip searches, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's failure to rebut presumption of reasonableness of prison security regulation requiring strip searches of "close management" prisoners before they leave their cells precluded his federal civil rights action against correctional officer alleging that officer violated First and Eighth Amendments by using strip searches to sexually harass him and block his access to courts. Harris v. Ostrout, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 65 F.3d 912. Civil Rights 1094; Civil Rights 1098

Convicted prisoner raised valid privacy claim under Fourth Amendment in challenging conditions of outdoor strip search before several female correctional officers. Cornwell v. Dahlberg, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 963 F.2d 912.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prisons 4(6)

In light of female prison inmate's willingness to remove her underclothing for search if male guards would withdraw, forceful removal of her underclothing in presence of male guards after prison physician had determined that prisoner was possibly suicidal and instructed prison guards to remove undergarments since noose might be fashioned from them was improper invasion of prisoner's privacy. Lee v. Downs, C.A.4 (Va.) 1981, 641 F.2d 1117 . Prisons 4(6)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether strip search of detainee by corrections officers was justified, precluding summary judgment, in civil rights lawsuit brought by detainee who alleged that strip searches violated her right, guaranteed by Fourth Amendment, to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Gilanian v. City of Boston, D.Mass.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 172. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County jail inspection report provided information about circumstances surrounding search practices at jail, as well as the knowledge of the county policymakers before the commencement of the class period, and, thus, was relevant in class action suit brought against county, its sheriff, and unidentified jail correctional personnel under §§ 1983, claiming that Fourth Amendment rights of detainees alleged to have committed non-violent, non-weapons, and non-drug felonies, and detainees alleged to have committed misdemeanors, were violated when they were subjected to strip searches without reasonable suspicion that they were harboring contraband on or within their bodies. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 159. Civil Rights 1412

Alleged conduct of state correctional officer in performing strip-frisk of inmate for drugs under sergeant's supervision, during which officer allegedly shined flashlight into inmate's anus and ran his middle finger between inmate's buttocks in a wiping fashion, causing inmate to urinate on himself, and also allegedly rubbed his genital area against inmate's buttocks, was not objectively sufficiently serious to rise to level of Eighth Amendment violation, given that incident was isolated one and did not cause inmate physical injury. Morrison v. Cortright, W.D.N.Y.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 424. Sentencing And Punishment 1545

Material issues of fact, as to whether or when named class action plaintiffs alleged to have committed misdemeanors were strip searched, precluded claims that their Fourth Amendment rights were violated when searches were conducted without showing of reasonable suspicion that plaintiffs were harboring contraband on or within their bodies. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 115. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Department of Corrections directive requiring all inmates being admitted to solitary housing unit (SHU) to undergo a strip frisk to assure that they had no contraband was reasonable, and thus corrections officers who acted pursuant to that directive in requiring inmate to submit to strip frisk, including running his fingers through his mouth, before he was admitted to SHU did not violate his Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable searches. Gonzalez v. Narcato, E.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 486. Prisons 4(7)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether strip search of prison inmates, which occurred after altercation involving employees and other inmates, constituted unreasonable search in violation of Fourth Amendment precluded summary judgment in federal civil rights action. Show v. Patterson, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 182. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Alleged strip or visual body cavity searches of state prisoner were not per se constitutionally objectionable if conducted in reasonable manner. Burton v. Kuchel, N.D.Ill.1994, 865 F.Supp. 456. Prisons 4(7)

Strip search of male inmate in presence of female officer did not violate inmate's right to privacy or support § 1983 civil rights claim given that strip search was conducted as part of emergency intervention to prevent suspected disturbance; strip search in female officer's presence is permitted under Kansas Department of Corrections procedures and by emergency circumstances. Jones v. Harrison, D.Kan.1994, 864 F.Supp. 166. Civil Rights

1098; Constitutional Law 82(13); Prisons 4(7)

Civil rights action could be brought against prison guards for alleged intentional constitutional violations with respect to both an alleged deprivation of medical care and manner in which a strip search was conducted, regardless of availability of postdeprivation remedy in state courts. Forrest v. Case, E.D.Pa.1985, 604 F.Supp. 349. Civil Rights 1319

Woman's civil rights action against individual county defendants based on allegedly unconstitutional strip search of woman conducted in county jail was not subject to dismissal on grounds that strip searches do not violate any constitutional right cognizable under this section which creates federal cause of action against person whose misconduct under color of state law violates constitutional rights of another; rather, whether woman's constitutional rights were violated by strip search depended upon whether strip search was unreasonable. Roscom v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1982, 550 F.Supp. 153. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

Inmate failed to prove that prison officer conducted a physical strip search of the inmate's body without penological justification, thus defeating the inmate's §§ 1983 claim that the search was cruel and excessive; by admittedly refusing to take down his braids, the inmate failed to comply with a visual search and increased suspicions that he had hidden contraband in his braids, and moreover, he had the opportunity during several hours in the strip cell to transfer contraband from his braids to other body parts and acted out against officers with sexually inappropriate language and gestures. Cherry v. Frank, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 125 Fed.Appx. 63, 2005 WL 589975, Unreported. Prisons 4(7)

2403. ---- Retaliatory searches, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner's failure to establish that retaliatory animus motivated correctional officer's compliance with prison security regulation requiring strip searches of "close management" prisoners before they leave their cells precluded his federal civil rights action against officer alleging that officer violated First and Eighth Amendments by using strip searches to sexually harass him and block his access to courts. Harris v. Ostrout, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 65 F.3d 912. Civil Rights 1094

Complaint alleging that search of inmate's cell in retaliation for failure to pay extortion demand violated his rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 4 and 14 to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures failed to state claim for which relief could be granted in that Supreme Court has precluded challenges under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4 to prison cell searches taken for any reason, whether or not reasonable. Hanrahan v. Lane, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 747 F.2d 1137. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner, who filed grievance against corrections officer, did not have any constitutional right to be asserted under § § 1983 to be free from cell searches of any kind, including retaliatory cell searches; although First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibited prison officials from retaliating against inmates who filed grievances, prisoners did not have any reasonable expectation of privacy in their prison cells. Rodriguez v. McClenning, S.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 228. Prisons 4(7)

Reasonable inference that certain prison guards participated in harassing shakedowns of state prisoner, under pattern totally at odds with normal incidence of shakedowns of cells of other inmates, after prisoner's institution of grievance against another guard, raised inference of retaliation sufficient to preclude summary judgment in those guards' favor. Burton v. Kuchel, N.D.Ill.1994, 865 F.Supp. 456. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

2404. Shower monitoring, prisons and prisoners generally

Neither inadvertent encounter nor regularly scheduled visit by female employee at announced time would rise to level of constitutional deprivation of right to privacy of inmate, who alleged that female correctional officers viewed him using the toilet, undressing and showering. Hudson v. Goodlander, D.C.Md.1980, 494 F.Supp. 890. Constitutional Law 82(13)

Fact that a male guard and a female inmate could look directly at each other while inmate was showering or changing was an invasion of privacy and was easily correctable by such means as appropriate positioning of mottled or smoky glass which would permit a guard to observe that there was, in fact, a person in shower and assure himself of her appropriate and timely departure after use of shower without being able to recognize specific inmate or showering inmate being able to recognize other than general forms. Forts v. Ward, S.D.N.Y.1978, 471 F.Supp. 1095, vacated in part 621 F.2d 1210. Prisons 4(6)

2405. Confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Complaints of state prisoners stated claims upon which relief could be granted on theories of deprivations of personal property caused by delays in prison administrative system and similar deprivations caused by negligent recordkeeping. Madyun v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 657 F.2d 868. Prisons 10

Civil rights action will lie for claimed deprivation of personal property without due process. Ferranti v. Moran, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1980, 618 F.2d 888. Civil Rights 1071

Claims of intentional deprivation of a prisoner's property under color of state law are actionable under this section. Jensen v. Klecker, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1979, 599 F.2d 243. Civil Rights 1090

Prisoner's allegation that prison officials have confiscated his property without due process is generally a cognizable claim under civil rights statute. Lewis v. State of N. Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 547 F.2d 4. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoners have right to sue prison officials for confiscation of their personal property. Diamond v. Thompson, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1975, 523 F.2d 1201. Convicts 6

Civil rights action lies for wrongful confiscation or loss, by prison officials, of an inmate's property. Carter v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1136. Civil Rights 1090

Allegation by state prisoner that the director of the California Department of Corrections (DOC) took deductions from checks and money orders to be deposited into prisoner's trust account in order to satisfy court-ordered restitution did not state a § 1983 claim for violation of his procedural due process rights, absent allegations that prisoner was not provided with opportunity to challenge the restitution order or the deduction of the funds, or that deduction was not authorized by state law. Abney v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 1221. Constitutional Law 272(2); Convicts 3

Decision by prison officials to confiscate prisoner's scrapbook and clippings, in accordance with prison regulation prohibiting such items, was reasonable penological decision that justified impingement on prisoner's rights in light of security concerns that metal parts of scrapbooks could be used as weapons and that razors and other contraband could be hidden in clippings or scrapbooks and in light of time-consuming or extreme nature of other alternatives to uncovering these items, such as x-raying cells. Ballance v. Young, W.D.Va.2000, 130 F.Supp.2d 762, affirmed 11 Fed.Appx. 174, 2001 WL 427938. Prisons 4(7)

State corrections official's description of photographs confiscated from inmate's cell as including "children of many races and ages" did not raise inference of racially discriminatory intent behind confiscation, as required to support inmate's § 1983 equal protection action against official challenging confiscation. Ballance v. Virginia,

W.D.Va.2000, 130 F.Supp.2d 754, affirmed 11 Fed.Appx. 174, 2001 WL 427938. Civil Rights 1404

Claims that inmate has been deprived of property are not actionable in civil rights suit under § 1983. Ishaaq v. Compton, W.D.Tenn.1995, 900 F.Supp. 935. Civil Rights 1090

Fact that state prisoner temporarily confined in county jail was not allowed access to certain personal possessions which he brought with him when he checked in at jail did not give rise to claim within provision of this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Falzerano v. Collier, D.C.N.J.1982, 535 F.Supp. 800. Civil Rights 1095

Confiscation of prisoner's property due to violation of prison policies on space limitations and security was reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and did not violate his constitutional rights. Eaton v. Dooley, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1362, Unreported. Prisons 4(7)

2406. ---- Availability of state remedy, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Deprivation of property that death row inmate was entitled to as grade B inmate did not state claim under § 1983, where California law provided adequate postdeprivation remedy for any property deprivations. Barnett v. Centoni, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 31 F.3d 813, on remand 1996 WL 263643. Civil Rights 1319

Negligent or intentional deprivation of prisoner's property fails to state claim under § 1983 if state has adequate postdeprivation remedy. Barnett v. Centoni, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 31 F.3d 813, on remand 1996 WL 263643. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner's due process rights were not violated by confiscation of his property without regard to prison policy requiring notice and opportunity to be heard, where tort of conversion provided adequate postdeprivation remedies under Texas law. Murphy v. Collins, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 26 F.3d 541, rehearing denied 32 F.3d 568. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(7)

State of Illinois provided inmate with adequate postdeprivation remedy after inmate's property was taken during shake down search of his cell, so that inmate's due process rights were not violated when prison officers confiscated and destroyed property without issuing "shakedown slip" listing property taken, where state statute permitted inmate to file tort claim in Illinois Court of Claims, despite problems of proof faced by inmate. Stewart v. McGinnis, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 5 F.3d 1031, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1075, 510 U.S. 1121, 127 L.Ed.2d 393. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(7)

Former inmate at county jail who alleged that county employees had improperly confiscated his property had adequate remedy through Illinois Court of Claims, and thus could not state federal civil rights claim based on alleged taking of his property without due process of law. Marshall v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1997, 951 F.Supp. 128. Constitutional Law 272(1); Convicts 3

Florida law provided adequate state remedy for prison officials' alleged random and unauthorized placing of hold on inmates prison account in order to collect costs judgments, so that inmate could not state claim under § 1983 against officials for taking of his property without due process of law. Spradley v. Martin, M.D.Fla.1995, 897 F.Supp. 560, affirmed 104 F.3d 370. Civil Rights 1319; Constitutional Law 272(2)

Inmate's claim that his money was confiscated upon his remand to custody was not cognizable in action under federal civil rights statute; the taking of an individual's property does not implicate the Fourteenth Amendment if there is an adequate postdeprivation remedy, and inmate had remedy through civil lawsuit against state. Turman v. Romer, D.Colo.1990, 729 F.Supp. 1276. Civil Rights 1319; Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

Death row inmate was not entitled to relief under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for confiscation of certain items of his personal property, in that state law permitted recovery for any such property loss under common-law tort theories, and inmate did not possess right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures in relation to his prison cell. Jeffries v. Reed, E.D.Wash.1986, 631 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1098

Since inmate's claim of deprivation of personal property was cognizable under Montana Tort Claims Act, MCA 2-9-101 et seq., inmate's allegation that prison officials wrongfully confiscated his television set did not rise to constitutional dimension and was not within scope of civil rights action. Robbins v. South, D.C.Mont.1984, 595 F.Supp. 785. Civil Rights 1098

Illinois sheriff's office detective's allegedly unauthorized seizure of inmate's computer from inmate's residence in Indiana did not violate due process, where inmate had adequate post-deprivation remedy. Holly v. Anton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 97 Fed.Appx. 39, 2004 WL 179220, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 116, 543 U.S. 880, 160 L.Ed.2d 134. Constitutional Law 272(2); Searches And Seizures 35

2407. ---- Lawful possession of property, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

When statutory authority permits forfeiture of property improperly possessed by inmate, no constitutional violation occurs as a result of such forfeiture. Hanvey v. Blankenship, C.A.4 (Va.) 1980, 631 F.2d 296. Prisons 4(7)

Materials solicited from record companies by state reformatory inmate on representation that they were for benefit and use of reformatory's radio station and vocational electronics shop were donated for institutional use and were not inmate's property; thus he could not recover from reformatory employees and another inmate under this section on theory of wrongful deprivation of that property by defendants under color of state law or on theory that he had been denied due process by appropriation of property by reformatory officials. Holder v. Claar, D.C.Colo.1978, 459 F.Supp. 850. Civil Rights 1326(8); Constitutional Law 272(2)

Notarization of document, prepared by inmates and recording an inmate-to-inmate exchange in which prisoner received television set, did not constitute "written approval" within meaning of prison regulation that forbid giving anything of value to another inmate without prior written approval, and thus, correctional supervisor's confiscation of the television did not violate prisoner's right to due process. Wade v. Epps, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 74, 2006 WL 752084, Unreported. Prisons 4(5)

2408. ---- Negligence, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Although negligent conduct of custodial officers resulting in loss of prisoner's property does not state a claim under this section, gross culpable negligence or intentional act may state a cause of action. Parker v. Rockefeller, N.D.W.Va.1981, 521 F.Supp. 1013. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2409. ---- Notice of availability of property for return, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Failure of state prison officers to follow prison rules by notifying prisoner of availability of his personal property for removal from storage room in sufficient time for prisoner to arrange for its removal did not provide basis for section 1983 action, since state law provided prisoner with a postdeprivation remedy for intentional acts of state officials. Smith v. Rose, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1985, 760 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1098

2410. ---- Catalogues, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

State inmate's property interest involved in office supply catalogue as pleaded was so de minimis that confiscation by training center in the one instance pleaded did not constitute such a taking of property that due process rights were implicated. Nickens v. White, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 536 F.2d 802. Civil Rights 1395(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

2411. ---- Clothing, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Alleged taking of New Jersey prisoner's personalty, consisting mainly of clothing and the like, without accounting therefor by county officials was not deprivation of right protected by this section. Urbano v. Calissi, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1967, 384 F.2d 909, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 1824, 391 U.S. 925, 20 L.Ed.2d 664. Civil Rights 1071

Jail regulation that no county prison inmate was to have his personal clothing in his jail cell except when preparing to make court appearance was matter for management by prison officials not to be tampered with by a federal court. Rosson v. Weatherholtz, W.D.Va.1975, 405 F.Supp. 48. Prisons 12

Interference with property rights of a prisoner alleging that his raincoat was not returned to him when he left detention center and that he received only two of six dollars which he was promised for participating in medical program was not of the type intended to come within purview of this section. U. S. ex rel. Pope v. Hendricks, E.D.Pa.1971, 326 F.Supp. 699. Civil Rights 1098

2412. ---- Medicine, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Sister of arrestee who committed suicide failed to support claim that police officers took arrestee's asthma medicine from him in an attempt to cause him distress or harm and at most established that confiscation of medicine was negligence; therefore, confiscation was not actionable under civil rights statute. Williams v. City of Lancaster, Pa., E.D.Pa.1986, 639 F.Supp. 377. Civil Rights 1420

2413. ---- Money, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Even if prison inmate was not informed about the rules concerning possession of currency, confiscation of his currency as contraband did not violate his civil rights since he had over three months to reacquaint himself with the rules and regulations at prison after he was transferred from another prison. Harris v. Forsyth, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1984, 735 F.2d 1235. Civil Rights 1092

West's F.S.A. § 402.18(3), which provides for confiscation of any contraband found in possession of inmate, and prison rule, which provides that money found in possession of inmate in excess of $15 is contraband and is to be confiscated, are reasonable and nonarbitrary, since large sums in possession of inmate may invite attack by other inmates, since inmates with such funds are in better position to escape, procure drugs, or bribe guards, and since large caches of currency in prisons pose significant potential for mischief, and thus confiscation of $2,197.40 found in inmate's possession did not violate due process. Sullivan v. Ford, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 609 F.2d 197, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2950, 446 U.S. 969, 64 L.Ed.2d 829. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(7); Prisons 13(4)

Claim of state prisoner that prison official should have but did not return his money and only personal property to him asserted protected right which could be determined under this section. Fox v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1976, 539 F.2d 1065. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Action for damages for taking of money in plaintiff's possession when he was apprehended 40 minutes after he escaped from state prison or to recover the money would not lie under this section. Cisneros v. Cavell, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 437 F.2d 1202. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegation by state prisoner that the director of the California Department of Corrections took deductions from checks and money orders to be deposited into prisoner's trust account in order to satisfy court-ordered restitution did not state a claim against director for violation of the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment, where the restitution was duly authorized by California law. Abney v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 1221. Eminent Domain 2.39

Wisconsin prison regulations providing for summary disposition of money possessed by inmates as contraband were reasonable and lawful and inmate had no protected property interest in money found in his possession; therefore, inmate's § 1983 claim that prison officials intentionally deprived him of property without due process under Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments was frivolous precluding him from proceeding in forma pauperis. Anderson v. Fiedler, E.D.Wis.1992, 798 F.Supp. 544. Federal Civil Procedure 2734; Prisons 4(7)

2414. ---- Pens, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Confiscation of three ball-point pens sent to prisoner in mail was proper as promoting objective of preserving prison security in that contraband could be easily packaged in pens and pens could be ordered through the canteen. Lingo v. Boone, N.D.Cal.1975, 402 F.Supp. 768. Prisons 13(2)

2415. ---- Religious matter, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Clearly established law was not violated by actions of prison chaplains in seizing prisoner's Shiite Muslim religious materials when he submitted them for copying, for purposes of chaplains' qualified immunity defense to prisoner's § 1983 action alleging violation of his religious freedom, since prison administrative directive specified in its statement of policy that "no one shall disparage the religious beliefs of any inmate, or other person," and the chaplains acted to prevent dissemination of the materials based on its highly inflammatory and divisive character. Al-Ra'id v. Ingle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 69 F.3d 28. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prisoner's allegations that prison officials wrongfully confiscated memorandum from religious organization and did not follow minimum procedural safeguards in doing so and that prison officials handled and delayed delivery of mail from religious organization in a manner that discriminated on basis of race and religion were legally sufficient to state claim under § 1983. Valiant-Bey v. Morris, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 829 F.2d 1441. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate lacked standing to assert claim against correctional officers for alleged discrimination based on religious belief when inmate's kufi was not taken during incident in which unidentified correctional officers confiscated kufis from Muslim prisoners, and inmate did not allege any other injury due to incident. Booth v. King, E.D.Pa.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 751. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Seizure of religious materials from prisoner's cell as part of random search of prison did not violate prisoner's rights under Free Exercise Clause as long as search was reasonably related to prison's legitimate penological interests in security, no matter how harmful seizure may have been to prisoner's religious practices. Robinson v. Ridge, E.D.Pa.1997, 996 F.Supp. 447, affirmed 175 F.3d 1011. Constitutional Law 84.5(14); Prisons 4(14)

2415A. ---- Miscellaneous, confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Prisoner failed to show that prison officials treated him differently than other similarly-situated inmates by taking away his calculator and allowing other similarly-situated inmates to have calculators with more memory capabilities, as required to support § 1983 claim against prison officials based on violation of his right to equal protection; officials repeatedly denied that other inmates possessed calculators with memory capabilities, and prisoner's assertion that one inmate was allowed to have color calculator in cell provided insufficient evidentiary support for claim of differential treatment. Damron v. North Dakota Com'r. of Corrections, D.N.D.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 970, affirmed 127 Fed.Appx. 909, 2005 WL 1076645. Civil Rights 1420

2416. Loss or destruction of property, prisons and prisoners generally-- Generally

Negligent loss of prison inmates' property was with due process of law and thus did not constitute deprivation of property within purview of federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights, where prison employees involved in such losses had no discretion but to use ordinary care and, thus, actions could have been brought in state courts for value of property lost and where inmates had administrative remedy by way of grievance. Ausley v. Mitchell, C.A.4 (Va.) 1984, 748 F.2d 224, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 879, 474 U.S. 1100, 88 L.Ed.2d 916. Civil Rights 1098

Claims of prison inmates for lost property, where claims sounded in negligence but did not meet willful, reckless and intentional standards, showed no constitutional or civil rights violations. Lock v. Jenkins, D.C.Ind.1978, 464 F.Supp. 541, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 641 F.2d 488. Convicts 3

2417. ---- Availability of state remedy, loss or destruction of property, prisons and prisoners generally

Virginia's tort remedies satisfied procedural due process with respect to inmate charging that his belongings held in safekeeping by prison authorities while he was in segregation were missing when he returned to general prison population, notwithstanding possibility that prison authorities' invocation of sovereign immunity would preclude inmate from securing relief; therefore, because adequate state remedies existed to adjudicate inmate's claim, he failed to state violation of the due process clause of U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14 cognizable under this section. Groves v. Cox, E.D.Va.1983, 559 F.Supp. 772. Civil Rights 1319; Constitutional Law 305(1)

Disappearance from prison authorities' custody of personal property belonging to inmate constituted deprivation of "property" under color of state law, but there was no violation of civil rights where McKinney's Court of Claims Act § 1 et seq. provided remedy which could fully compensate inmate for loss of his property. Tigner v. State of N.Y., Com'r of Dept. of Corrections, W.D.N.Y.1983, 559 F.Supp. 25, affirmed 742 F.2d 1432. Civil Rights 1319

Pennsylvania Department of Corrections (DOC) did not violate state prisoner's procedural due process rights with respect to post-deprivation remedy through prison grievance alleging prisoner's legal and non-legal property was lost or destroyed when he was transferred from one prison to another, where DOC independently investigated the grievance and responded to prisoner, though DOC's Central Office did not render a final decision in prisoner's appeal of denial of his grievance. Jordan v. Horn, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 165 Fed.Appx. 979, 2006 WL 304525, Unreported. Prisons 13(6)

2418. Disbursement of personal property, prisons and prisoners generally

Where defendant, upon imposition of life sentence following conviction for murder, made oral agreement offering his personal property to his cellmate, and where cellmate's girl friend was to act as cellmate's agent, storing property until cellmate was released from prison, and was given written permission from defendant to pick up property, deputy sheriff in custody of property acted within reasonable bounds of discretion by disbursing property to man who came to county jail to retrieve it where man had letter defendant sent to cellmate's girl friend and it was reasonable to suppose that man was acting as girl friend's agent. Kircheis v. Long, S.D.Ala.1976, 425 F.Supp. 505, affirmed 564 F.2d 414. Convicts 3

2419. Good-time allowance, prisons and prisoners generally

State prisoner's claim challenging only the procedures employed in disciplinary hearing depriving him of good-time credits is not always cognizable under § 1983, because nature of challenge to procedures could necessarily imply the invalidity of judgment; claim seeking damages for using wrong procedure, not for reaching wrong result, could still fail to be cognizable under § 1983 if it implies invalidity of conviction or sentence, unless prisoner shows that conviction or sentence has previously been invalidated. Edwards v. Balisok, U.S.Wash.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1584, 520 U.S. 641, 137 L.Ed.2d 906. Civil Rights 1092

Though the Constitution does not guarantee good-time credit for satisfactory behavior while in prison and though the due process clause does not require a hearing in every conceivable case of government impairment of private interest, where state created right to good-time and recognized that its deprivation was a sanction authorized for major misconduct, prisoner's interest therein was sufficiently embraced within Fourteenth Amendment "liberty" to entitle him to those minimum procedures appropriate under the circumstances and required by the due process clause to insure that the state-created right was not arbitrarily abrogated. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Disciplinary committee's erroneous interpretation of disciplinary rule resulting in Iowa inmate's loss of good time credits was not due process violation; since there was state procedure available to remedy committee's mistake, that error alone did not amount to denial of due process and any injury suffered by inmate was remedied when his good-time credits were restored by state court. Ragan v. Lynch, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 113 F.3d 875. Prisons 15(5)

Prisoners have no cause of action under § 1983 for challenges to alleged unconstitutional change in good time credits, and, thus, federal courts will lack jurisdiction over such claims. Best v. Kelly, C.A.D.C.1994, 39 F.3d 328, 309 U.S.App.D.C. 51. Civil Rights 1092

Right to good-time credit which rests on legislative grace is conditional and does not vest until prisoner is dismissed from prison. Glouser v. Parratt, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1979, 605 F.2d 419. Prisons 15(1)

Punishment, which included 15 days in punitive isolation, the loss of three months' statutory good time which prisoner had earned and a status demotion affecting prisoner's ability to earn future good time, imposed upon prisoner who violated prison regulation by writing unauthorized letter constituted a "grievous loss" necessitating adequate procedural protection. Knell v. Bensinger, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 489 F.2d 1014, on remand 380 F.Supp. 494. Prisons 13(6)

Poor institutional record during earlier period of incarceration supported denial, to state prisoner, of opportunity to earn remission time by service in less restrictive work detail. Marnin v. Pinto, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1972, 463 F.2d 583. Prisons 15(3)

Where prison inmate's offense was to refuse to sign "safety sheet" which he sincerely believed was waiver of his right to sue for any injury from negligence, and inmate did not refuse to work, and warden testified that inmate's segregation had been inappropriate punishment, court properly ordered restoration of his good behavior time. Wright v. McMann, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 460 F.2d 126, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 115, 409 U.S. 885, 34 L.Ed.2d 141. Prisons 15(5)

State prison official could not be held liable under § 1983 for failure to train or supervise adequately classification officer responsible for case of inmate whose gain time, and thus release date, was improperly calculated, given absence of evidence that official supervised classification officer, was responsible for training her, or could be considered policymaker as to calculation of inmates' gain time, in that official had no background in sentence calculation and classification officer worked in different department. McCurry v. Moore, N.D.Fla.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 1167. Civil Rights 1358

State inmate established entitlement to preliminary injunction which barred prison officials from requiring, as part of sexual offender counseling program, that participants divulge history of sexual conduct, including illegal acts for which no criminal charges had been filed, in §§ 1983 action in which inmate alleged that he was threatened with loss of, and in fact did lose, good time credits as a direct and automatic result of his refusal to give up his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and participate in program, but inmate was not entitled to preliminary injunction restoring his lost good time credits. Donhauser v. Goord, N.D.N.Y.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 139, amended 317 F.Supp.2d 160. Civil Rights 1457(5)

State inmate was required to prove that loss of good time was reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus before could bring § 1983 claim based on alleged failure to receive sentence credit. Luedtke v. Gudmanson, E.D.Wis.1997, 971 F.Supp. 1263. Civil Rights 1092

Fact that inmate's punishment for disciplinary violation initially included loss of one year of good-time credit was not sufficient to establish liberty interest, for purposes of inmate's civil rights claim premised upon alleged procedural due process violations in disciplinary hearing, where guilty finding was eventually administratively reversed, with inmate's record expunged and good-time credit restored, and there was no indication that temporary loss of good-time credit actually resulted in longer incarceration. Husbands v. McClellan, W.D.N.Y.1997, 957 F.Supp. 403, motion to amend denied 990 F.Supp. 214. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 15(5)

Inmate's suit under federal civil rights statute challenging drug testing procedure at correctional facility, which defendant failed, causing loss of 30 days good-time credits and denial of parole, amounted to challenge to validity of his institutional infraction which had to be pursued in habeas, and therefore suit was required to be dismissed unless inmate could show that his conviction for institutional infraction for illegal drug use had been invalidated, where if inmate was successful in his suit, state would be required to vacate his institutional infraction and restore his good-time credits, thus affecting inmate's ultimate release date. Amin v. Pruett, E.D.Va.1996, 930 F.Supp. 1121 . Civil Rights 1094; Civil Rights 1097

Inmate had no due process liberty interest in his good conduct allowance (GCA) status which had been downgraded during annual review of assignment; although inmate's numerical score placed him in one of four GCA levels, prison officials had wide discretion under Virginia regulations to reject numerical score and override assignment. Holmes v. Cooper, W.D.Va.1995, 872 F.Supp. 298. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 15(1)

Prison inmate, who claimed that prison officials kept dual records of his gain time during and after pendency of habeas corpus proceeding, failed to establish conspiracy to deprive him of gain time in violation of his civil rights; evidence indicated that dual records were maintained because Florida Department of Corrections' database was incapable of recording inmate's awards. Raske v. Dugger, M.D.Fla.1993, 819 F.Supp. 1046. Conspiracy 19

Even if inmate has liberty interest in previously earned good-conduct allowance credits, Constitution does not prohibit state from depriving inmate of that interest as long as procedural due process is present prior to deprivation; there must be advance written notice of charges, written findings, and right to call witnesses. Ewell v. Murray, W.D.Va.1993, 813 F.Supp. 1180. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Jail administrator's alleged breach of promise to effect that inmate would be granted day-for-day good time for all time he spent during employment as member of jail paint crew was not actionable under federal civil rights statute. Holton v. Fields, S.D.W.Va.1986, 638 F.Supp. 1319. Civil Rights 1092

Recalculation of prisoner's good-time credits could not be sought through this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights by state action. Partee v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1981, 528 F.Supp. 1254. Prisons 15(7)

Due process claim by which state inmate sought restoration of good-time credits on the grounds of past procedure was not cognizable under §§ 1983. Hornsby v. Jones, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 188 Fed.Appx. 684, 2006 WL 1728022, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

Pro se state prisoner's claim that his hearing before the prison classification committee, which determined his classification and custody status, and resulted in loss of ability to earn minimum time credits, violated his due process rights was cognizable under §§ 1983. Kemp v. McFarland, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 149 Fed.Appx. 91, 2005 WL 2271044, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

State inmate's status reclassification, which merely diminished his opportunity to earn good-time credits, did not implicate a liberty interest protected by due process, so as to warrant relief under §§ 1983. Hudson v. Ward, C.A.10 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 599, 2005 WL 348399, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 446, 163 L.Ed.2d 339 . Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 15(3)

Inmate failed to establish that his loss of "good-time credits" and other privileges stemming from prison disciplinary hearing had been invalidated, and therefore his § 1983 claims alleging that procedural due process violations occurred during disciplinary proceeding, which, if successful, would necessarily imply invalidity of judgment imposed, were barred. McNair v. Jones, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22097730, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate who filed § 1983 action against state, stemming from loss of sentencing credits due to role in prison fight, failed to establish that his sentence had been invalidated, and thus action would be properly dismissed; inmate's allegation that he was innocent party who was "set up" by prison authorities was contrary to conclusion at disciplinary hearing that he was guilty of rule violation. Hernandez v. Davis, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21148373, Unreported, affirmed 83 Fed.Appx. 892, 2003 WL 22928606. Civil Rights 1092

State prisoner who had received disciplinary sanction of a class status reduction, confinement to punitive isolation, and loss of good-time credits, and who alleged that his disciplinary hearing officer was biased and failed to list evidence to support her decision, could only obtain restoration of his good-time credits in a habeas corpus proceeding, and not in an action under § 1983. Stone v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1364, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 515

2420. Parole, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Parole board's regulations are relevant to determination of whether parole scheme gives rise to constitutionally protected liberty interest. Board of Pardons v. Allen, U.S.Mont.1987, 107 S.Ct. 2415, 482 U.S. 369, 96 L.Ed.2d 303. Constitutional Law 272.5

The full range of procedures mandated for parole and probation revocation hearings need not in all respects be followed in disciplinary cases in state prisons. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Prisons 13(6)

Even assuming that inmate had constitutional claim to correct information in his parole file, State did not act arbitrarily or rely on false information when it denied parole based on factual determinations about inmate's past drug and alcohol abuse, in view of exhibits attached to inmate's complaint indicating that inmate provided "a self-reported history of alcohol abuse," and that he told prison staff that his sexual abuse charges often stemmed from alcohol use. Adams v. Agniel, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 405 F.3d 643. Pardon And Parole 58

Texas state prisoner's lack of liberty interest in obtaining parole under Texas law precluded his federal civil rights suit challenging constitutionality of parole review procedures. Orellana v. Kyle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 65 F.3d 29, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 736, 516 U.S. 1059, 133 L.Ed.2d 686. Civil Rights 1097

Inmate failed to state § 1983 cause of action against State Board of Pardons and Parole challenging Board's policy of extending his sentence after revoking his mandatory supervision, where he remained in custody and was not alleging that sentence imposed as result of revocation proceedings was invalidated by state or federal court. McGrew v. Texas Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 47 F.3d 158. Civil Rights 1097

Section 1983 is appropriate legal vehicle to attack unconstitutional parole procedures or conditions of confinement. Cook v. Texas Dept. of Criminal Justice Transitional Planning Dept., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 37 F.3d 166. Civil Rights 1090; Civil Rights 1097

Utah parole statute did not create "liberty interest" entitling inmate to due process protection under United States Constitution and, thus, could not be used as basis for § 1983 relief; Utah statute granted parole board complete discretion in making parole decisions once offender was eligible. Malek v. Haun, C.A.10 (Utah) 1994, 26 F.3d 1013. Civil Rights 1097; Constitutional Law 272.5

Due process claims were proper subject of action under this section seeking injunctive relief as to constitutionally required parole procedure. Walker v. Prisoner Review Bd., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1982, 694 F.2d 499, on remand 594 F.Supp. 556. Civil Rights 1454

Parolee's claim that his constitutional rights were violated when he was incarcerated after pleading guilty to parole violation was not cognizable under §§ 1983, where success in action would have necessarily implied invalidity of underlying parole violation. Ithna'Asheri v. New York State Div. of Parole, W.D.N.Y.2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 323. Civil Rights 1097

Suit under §§ 1983 was appropriate vehicle for claim that prison inmate was denied due process when he was expelled from sex offender treatment program required to be completed in order to be eligible for parole under indeterminate sentence; the alternative, a habeas corpus proceeding, was inapplicable as there was no challenge to conviction or sentence. Beebe v. Heil, D.Colo.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1011. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311

Where prisoner is challenging not his conviction, sentence, or duration of confinement, but rather procedures and means used to make a parole eligibility determination, the action may be cognizable under § 1983. Buhrman v. Wilkinson, S.D.Ohio 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1110, supplemented 2004 WL 2044055, report and recommendation adopted 2004 WL 2044056. Civil Rights 1097

Fact that prisoner sought injunctive relief as remedy for § 1983 claim that Ohio Parole Authority violated his due process rights was not ground for district court to refuse to exercise jurisdiction over claim, on ground that proper remedy was to file action "at law" in state court; relief sought was order compelling Parole Authority to conduct new hearing in compliance with due process, and action would have been no less one for injunctive relief in state court. Buhrman v. Wilkinson, S.D.Ohio 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1110, supplemented 2004 WL 2044055, report and recommendation adopted 2004 WL 2044056. Federal Courts 54

Inmates' claim in § 1983 action, that amendment to Delaware parole statute violated due process by allegedly extending time between parole reconsideration hearings, was frivolous within meaning of in forma pauperis statute, requiring dismissal; neither Due Process Clause nor parole statute gave inmates a protected liberty interest. Ross v. Snyder, D.Del.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 397. Constitutional Law 272.5; Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmate whose parole was denied failed to state § 1983 claim against former member of Illinois Prisoner Review Board (IPRB) in his individual capacity, absent allegations that member himself deprived or participated in depriving inmate of his constitutional right to due process by arbitrarily denying him parole. Horton v. Marovich, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner did not have liberty interest in receiving parole, sufficient to support § 1983 action against parole board for alleged wrongful denial of parole; unlike statutes in some states, which mandate grant of parole if specified criteria are satisfied and have accordingly been found to create liberty interest, New York is nebulous in shaping discretion of parole board, creating no reasonable parole expectation. Quartararo v. Catterson, E.D.N.Y.1996, 917 F.Supp. 919. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 46

Denial of discretionary parole eligibility date to prisoner after state had previously mistakenly assigned eligibility date did not violate prisoner's constitutional rights where state Supreme Court had determined that prisoner was not eligible for discretionary eligibility date and prisoner was not harmed by mistaken assignment of date. Vaughan v.

Murray, E.D.Va.1994, 872 F.Supp. 268, vacated 70 F.3d 114. Pardon And Parole 60

Although this section was not proper remedy for plaintiff seeking immediate or speedier release from state imprisonment, he did state claim for which relief might be granted pursuant to this section to extent that he was challenging parole procedures or lack thereof. Godbolt v. Commissioner of Dept. of Correctional Services, S.D.N.Y.1981, 524 F.Supp. 21. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Where Georgia parole statute, Ga.Code § 77-514, created no expectation of release, state prisoner failed to state cause of action under this section based upon violations of his substantive or procedural due process rights. Houser v. Morris, N.D.Ga.1981, 518 F.Supp. 873.

To the extent that prisoners were to seek damages, a declaratory judgment, and an injunction enjoining the prospective denial of paroles for impermissible reasons, they could properly bring an action under this section prohibiting deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Texas Supporters of Workers World Party Presidential Candidates v. Strake, S.D.Tex.1981, 511 F.Supp. 149. Civil Rights 1097

Because state prisoner had not successfully challenged the parole detainer through appropriate remedies, his § 1983 suit, alleging that he was illegally imprisoned for 18 days on an alleged parole violation, was barred by Heck v. Humphrey, which held that the principle that civil tort actions are not appropriate vehicles to challenge validity of criminal judgments applies to § 1983 actions that necessarily require plaintiff to prove unlawfulness of his conviction or confinement; prisoner's primary argument, which was that he was arbitrarily detained because there was no probable cause to detain him after charge was dismissed for insufficient evidence, was clearly an attempt to challenge the substantive result in the parole hearing, and a judgment in prisoner's favor would necessarily imply invalidity of the parole detainer. Munofo v. Alexander, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2002, 47 Fed.Appx. 329, 2002 WL 31108821, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

Prisoner could challenge various state parole procedures in §§ 1983 action; prisoner was not required to instead seek relief exclusively under federal habeas corpus statutes. Maimon v. Rea, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 295, 2005 WL 752237, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner's § 1983 action against parole officers, alleging unconstitutional revocation of his parole, and seeking money damages, was barred, where action necessarily implied invalidity of parole revocation, but there was no showing that revocation had been invalidated. Washington v. Killian, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 97 Fed.Appx. 878, 2004 WL 1098945, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

Denial of access to sex offender treatment program, which allegedly resulted in prisoner being denied parole, did not violate prisoner's due process or equal protection rights, since prisoner had no constitutional right to parole. Saunders v. Williams, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2003, 89 Fed.Appx. 923, 2003 WL 23095572, Unreported. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 46; Prisons 17(2)

Utah's parole statute created no liberty interest entitling prisoners to federal constitutional protection, and thus, the inmate failed to state a § 1983 claim regarding his assertions that procedures of the Utah Board of Pardons and Parole violated his Due Process rights. Suarez v. Utah Bd. of Pardons & Parole, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 230, 2003 WL 22046122, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 46

A state prisoner cannot bring a § 1983 action challenging a parole revocation unless that revocation decision is reversed or the underlying conviction is set aside. Lee v. Donnaruma, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 39, 2003 WL 21105326, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

Parolee failed to have parole revocation decision set aside, and thus he could not bring civil rights action seeking damages under § 1983 against California's parole board, alleging his parole was unlawfully revoked. Prater v.

2421. ---- Discriminatory treatment, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Section 1983 complaint of pro se prisoner who was convicted of forcible rape and sentenced to 20 years imprisonment, alleging discrimination by Missouri prison officials in preventing him from being considered for parole by preventing him from completing second phase of Missouri sexual offenders program, was neither frivolous nor malicious and stated a cause of action. Green v. Black, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1985, 755 F.2d 687. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Former parolee, who brought civil rights action against field parole officer, failed to state claim for any due process violation in connection with parole revocation procedures, where parolee did not impugn the procedures used, but charged only that parole officer formed biased opinions about him which caused officer to make false allegations concerning parolee in report to parole board. Brown v. Nester, S.D.Miss.1990, 753 F.Supp. 630. Civil Rights 1395(7)

In civil rights action by state prison inmates against members of state parole board, district court would not consider contention that various factors in the administration of the prison system made it more difficult for members of minority races to fulfill the conditions necessary to receive a discretionary parole, where, under state law, defendants, as board of parole, had absolutely no control over those conditions. Inmates of Nebraska Penal and Correctional Complex v. Greenholtz, D.C.Neb.1976, 436 F.Supp. 432, affirmed 567 F.2d 1368, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 132, 439 U.S. 841, 58 L.Ed.2d 140, affirmed 567 F.2d 1381. Civil Rights 1397

2422. ---- Retaliatory denial, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison inmate failed to present any evidence that members of Oklahoma Pardon and Parole Board acted in retaliatory manner against him in failing to recommend parole, after he had previously brought lawsuits against prison officials; evidence of retaliation was inmate's claim that Board members failed to address him by his "Nubian, Islamic Hebrew" name and that Board granted parole to other similarly situated inmates appearing at same hearing. Shabazz v. Askins, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 14 F.3d 533. Civil Rights 1420

Allegations of state prisoner's complaint seeking damages from members of Louisiana State Board of Pardons on ground that Board denied prisoner parole at least in substantial part because prisoner had previously filed lawsuits against prison officials, thus violating prisoner's constitutional right to be free from retaliation for seeking access to courts and his right to equal protection because others, who had been convicted of more heinous offenses, had been granted parole, was sufficient to state claim. Serio v. Members of Louisiana State Bd. of Pardons, C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 821 F.2d 1112. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State parole agent and police officers were not liable under §§ 1983 on parolee's retaliation claim, which was based on search of parolee's residence after parolee had filed suit against police officers; search was undertaken with a reasonable suspicion that parolee was engaged in criminal conduct, parole agent was not aware that parolee had filed a claim against the officers, and there was no showing that those conducting the search did not intend to advance legitimate penological goals. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1097

A decision to deny parole made in retaliation against or so as to hinder exercise of federally protected rights is actionable. Partee v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1981, 528 F.Supp. 1254. Civil Rights 1097

2422A. ---- Retaliatory revocation, parole, prisons and prisoners generally retaliation for a lawsuit he filed, resulting in the revocation of his parole, was required to be dismissed, absent showing that decision revoking parole was reversed, expunged, set aside, or called into question. Jernigan v. Davis, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21556952, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

2423. ---- Conditions, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Prison officials were not responsible for terms of prisoner's parole, and thus could not be liable for alleged violation of prisoner's Fifth Amendment due process rights by parole condition requiring him to complete sex offenders' program. Munson v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 435 F.3d 877, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1358

State retained minimal duty to parolee after his release, to extent that it continued to impose limitations on parolee; thus, state was potentially liable in parolee's §§1983 action against parole officers alleging that he had been effectively compelled to live in unsafe housing by being paroled to such housing and then denied opportunity to relocate and denied assistance in obtaining employment. Jacobs v. Ramirez, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 400 F.3d 105, on remand 2006 WL 1424191. Civil Rights 1097

State prison inmate could bring § 1983 action against parole board seeking injunctive relief to compel board to abide by constitutionally acceptable procedures prospectively; inmate alleged that board's application of certain conditions to his parole eligibility constituted due process and ex post facto violation. Reed v. McKune, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2002, 298 F.3d 946. Civil Rights 1097

Parolee did not establish that parole officer violated § 1983 by reporting to Board of Probation and Parole that parolee had consumed alcoholic beverages in bar contrary to condition of his parole, on grounds that her action constituted malicious prosecution; parolee had not prevailed in subsequent parole revocation hearing, officer had probable cause to initiate parole revocation, and she had not acted maliciously although she took action in part upon testimony of bar employees who disliked parolee. Purdie v. Tierney, E.D.Pa.1991, 769 F.Supp. 864. Civil Rights 1097

Parolee, whose parole was revoked after he refused to remove a skullcap worn by Islamic men when ordered to do so by employee of hospital where he was undergoing drug treatment program as a condition for release on parole and who had been informed that he would be under jurisdiction and authority of hospital employees and that any disobedience would result in revocation of his parole, adequately alleged state action in his claim under this section against hospital defendants; however, complaint, which did not allege that president of hospital had any participation in or knowledge of the events upon which he based his claims but merely stated that president was directly responsible for day-to-day operation of hospital, did not state a claim against president upon which relief could be granted. Jones v. Eagleville Hosp. and Rehabilitation Center, E.D.Pa.1984, 588 F.Supp. 53. Civil Rights 1395(7); Civil Rights 1396

Parolee did not have protected liberty interest in being free from special conditions of parole that were left to discretion of parole board under New York law, and thus fact that allegedly erroneous inclusion of rap sheets in parolee's file may have led to special conditions of curfew and drug testing did not state civil rights claim for deprivation of due process. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 64.1

2424. ---- Time of release, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for detaining parole inmate beyond maximum expiration date of his sentence without commencement and conclusion of his final parole revocation hearing, where city produced inmate for his final hearing on two occasions, city had no role in scheduling or conduct of parole revocation hearings, and inmate was detained pursuant to facially valid warrant issued by state division of parole. Dupree v. City of New York,

S.D.N.Y.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 555. Civil Rights 1348

Where delay between parole board decision to release prisoner and mailing of the release order was at most two days where delay between arrival of the order in city in which prisoner was held and its hand delivery by parole agent to the prison was exactly two days, where the board promptly set the release machinery in motion after determining to release prisoner, and where weekend intervened to delay receipt of mailed notice by the agent, six-day delay, during which prisoner was allegedly injured in prison riot, between date that parole board determined to release prisoner and date that he was actually released did not deny prisoner any constitutional rights. Burgess v. Roth, E.D.Pa.1975, 387 F.Supp. 1155. Civil Rights 1097

Parolee had no constitutionally protected liberty interest in receiving early discharge from parole; New York statute authorizing early release left decision to discretion of state parole board. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Pardon And Parole 93

2425. ---- False information, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Petition for writ of habeas corpus, rather than §§ 1983 action, was appropriate procedure for claiming that denial of inmate's parole was improperly based on letter recommending denial, inserted in file without his knowledge, and report containing false information; habeas covered challenges to duration of confinement, while §§ 1983 covered conditions of confinement. Bodie v. Morgenthau, S.D.N.Y.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 193. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 516.1

Where admittedly false material is intentionally used to inhibit parole or awards of good conduct credit, federal jurisdiction might be asserted to prevent arbitrary and capricious action. James v. Robinson, E.D.Va.1994, 863 F.Supp. 275, affirmed 45 F.3d 426. Civil Rights 1092; Civil Rights 1097

Parolee did not state civil rights claim for violation of due process against parole officer based on his alleged knowing inclusion of false information in her parole file, absent any showing that inclusion violated protected liberty interest. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 56

2426. ---- Employment of parolee, prisons and prisoners generally

Alleged violation of Virginia's picketing and right to work statute did not provide sufficient grounds for § 1983 claim brought by parolee who alleged that state parole officials impeded his potential employment as paralegal; statute's purpose was to protect the right to work from infringement by the use of force, statute was quasi-criminal in nature and did not provide basis for civil damages, other than injunctive relief, and violation of statute did not rise to constitutional level. Kaufhold v. Bright, W.D.Va.1993, 835 F.Supp. 294. Civil Rights 1097

2427. ---- Plea agreements, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Proof that, prior to entering into an agreement pursuant to which prisoners entered guilty pleas and gave up their right to a jury trial, direct promises were made them by parole board that, in exchange for prisoners' pleas and for return of stolen property, they would be released on parole after serving 18 months of their sentences, and proof that following this alleged agreement the parole board refused to grant prisoners' release on parole at promised time would establish a violation of prisoners' due process rights, and would authorize relief under this section against parole board. Palermo v. Rockefeller, S.D.N.Y.1971, 323 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1420; Constitutional Law 272.5

Absent showing that Kansas state prisoner's continued confinement in Kansas had been overturned by state tribunal or executive order or called into question by issuance of writ of habeas corpus, prisoner could not state colorable claim for damages under civil rights law based on alleged violation of his constitutional rights, which allegedly occurred when Kansas allowed Oklahoma authorities to submit detainer for his arrest and return to Oklahoma, which was allegedly in violation of his plea agreement in which Kansas agreed not to oppose concurrent service of his Kansas and Oklahoma sentences. Brownfield v. Stovall, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 85 Fed.Appx. 123, 2003 WL 23033727, Unreported. Civil Rights 1095

2428. ---- Multiple offender status, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Action under this section was proper avenue to seek redress of claim of state prisoner, who was tried, convicted and sentenced as first offender, that he was being denied due process of law or was being subjected to ex post facto punishment by being classified as fourth offender for parole eligibility purposes. Schwindlig v. Smith, E.D.Ark.1984, 596 F.Supp. 224. Civil Rights 1097

2429. ---- Access to file, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Claimed refusal to allow a Texas state prisoner access to his papers on file with parole board did not assume proportions of a deprivation of constitutional rights on claim of denial of due process. Craft v. Texas Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 550 F.2d 1054, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 408, 434 U.S. 926, 54 L.Ed.2d 285. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Denial of access by prisoner to papers on file with State Board of Pardons and Paroles did not assume proportions of a deprivation of rights under the Constitution or laws of the United States for purposes of this section. Cook v. Whiteside, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 505 F.2d 32. Civil Rights 1097

Prisoner claiming deprivation of his civil rights through wrongful removal from work release program and denial of parole did not state civil rights claim under § 1983 against assistant district attorney; allegation that attorney had denied him access to his parole file, and told him that no system existed to notify prospective parolees when information was added to or removed from their files, in violation of New York law, did not implicate any federal rights. Quartararo v. Catterson, E.D.N.Y.1996, 917 F.Supp. 919. Civil Rights 1096; Civil Rights 1097

Disclosure of state parolee's medical records to United States Probation Department was presumptively invalid, such that parolee had claim for violation of her Fourteenth Amendment privacy rights, where federal agency was not among entities to which disclosure was authorized by New York law. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 55.1

2430. ---- Hearing, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Parolee's civil rights claim, based on contention that his parole revocation violated due process because he was not offered and furnished with attorney for his parole hearing, was not cognizable in federal court, where there had been no state judgment invalidating parole revocation. White v. Gittens, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 121 F.3d 803. Civil Rights 1097

Inmate was not entitled to § 1983 relief, as inmate's due process rights were not violated, even though state statute provided that hearing panel "shall" consist of one member of parole board and two hearing officers; but one member of the hearing panel walked out of the parole hearing; where inmate did not identify any non-statutory particularized standards or criteria that guided the state's decisionmakers, and state statute required that the board comply with certain procedures but explicitly declined to impose substantive predicates on the board's discretionary parole decisions, and thus created no liberty interest in those decisions. Marshall v. Mitchell, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 57 F.3d 671, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 42.1

Prisoner's challenge to parole board consideration of voided prior convictions is cognizable under § 1983 when prisoner does not challenge result of hearing or request new hearing at specified time. Cook v. Texas Dept. of Criminal Justice Transitional Planning Dept., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 37 F.3d 166. Civil Rights 1097

Although State Parole Board miscalculated prisoner's target release date and, thus, parole guidelines were not followed to extent that first prerelease hearing was held after correct target release date, Parole Board could not be found to have acted in a flagrant, unwarranted or unauthorized manner, especially where prisoner made no complaint about the miscalculation of the target release date or asserted that the Board lacked authority to require him to submit to a psychiatric examination before further parole hearings were held or showed that the Board failed to comply with its own guideline. Kelsey v. State of Minn., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1977, 565 F.2d 503. Pardon And Parole 59

Where Connecticut parole release hearing procedure permitted prisoner's counsel to have prehearing conference with chairman of panel which would decide prisoner's case and to place in file any statement or other documentary information and where purpose of holding hearing was to enable members of board personally to speak with and observe prisoner to determine his attitude towards his crime and his readiness for parole, state's interest in excluding persons other than prisoner from hearings outweighed need for and usefulness to inmate of having counsel present at hearing, and due process did not require Connecticut to allow counsel at hearing, despite inmate's concededly great interest in decision being made. Holup v. Gates, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1976, 544 F.2d 82, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1571, 430 U.S. 941, 51 L.Ed.2d 787. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 59

In view of Code of Ala., Tit. 12, § 12, providing for parole revocation hearing on return to state custody, state's filing of detainer against federal prisoner based on his alleged violation of state parole did not give rise to suit for violation of civil rights even though no parole revocation hearing had been granted prior to filing detainer. Brackett v. Lambert, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1973, 483 F.2d 57. Civil Rights 1097

This section may not be invoked to extend the right to call witnesses to parole eligibility proceedings, at least in absence of allegation that invidious discrimination, such as on basis of race or religion, is being practiced. Peinado v. Adult Authority of Dept. of Corrections, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 405 F.2d 1185, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 2116, 395 U.S. 968, 23 L.Ed.2d 755. Civil Rights 1097

State prisoner's claim for monetary damages arising from alleged violation of his right to procedural due process by failing to afford him parole revocation hearing could be brought in civil rights action under § 1983. Henry v. Sanchez, C.D.Cal.1996, 923 F.Supp. 1266. Civil Rights 1097

There was no constitutional liberty interest breached solely by administrative decision not to hold parole hearings which were no longer statutorily required, and not necessary to or inevitably followed by decision to release, as was necessary for inmates to state claim under § 1983. Middleton v. McGinnis, E.D.Mich.1994, 860 F.Supp. 391. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 59

Application of new statute enacted after defendant was convicted of attempted sexual assault which added that offense to those requiring persons seeking parole to appear before "psyche panel" did not violate ex post facto clause; there was no basis for believing that any actions taken by the "psyche panel" that defendant claimed produced mental and emotional damage constituted punishment given to him for his conviction of attempted sexual abuse. Land v. Lawrence, D.Nev.1993, 815 F.Supp. 1351. Constitutional Law 203; Pardon And Parole 42.1

New York's parole provisions did not create entitlement to parole and, therefore, any alleged unfairness in parole hearing did not and could not afford predicate for relief in civil rights action. Washington v. White, S.D.N.Y.1992, 805 F.Supp. 191. Civil Rights 1097; Pardon And Parole 48.1

For purposes of former parolee's civil rights claim, Pennsylvania Board of Probation and Parole did not lose jurisdiction over parolee when original maximum expiration date of his sentence passed without extension or readjustment, and delay in holding final parole violation hearing did not violate parolee's due process rights; parolee was notified two weeks before maximum expiration date at preliminary detention hearing that he was being charged as parole violator, and delay in holding final hearing resulted from his request for continuance pending disposition of criminal charges. Harris v. Vaughn, E.D.Pa.1991, 767 F.Supp. 667, affirmed 950 F.2d 722. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 78; Pardon And Parole 84

Absent any allegation that state prisoner was being held past his mandatory release date, prisoner failed to allege any liberty interest stemming from the state department of correction officials' alleged denial of timely parole hearings, which allegedly was part of officials' attempt to over-crowd state prisons and necessitate transfers to private facilities in order to increase value of their retirement portfolios, which allegedly included stock in private prison corporations. Madyun v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2002, 57 Fed.Appx. 259, 2002 WL 31898230, Unreported, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2225, 538 U.S. 1062, 155 L.Ed.2d 1114. Constitutional Law 272.5; Pardon And Parole 59

2431. ---- Assistance of counsel, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Federal court was without authority to interfere with state custody of prison inmate by permitting the inmate to represent a parolee in the parolee's civil rights action against prison physician. Rizzo v. Zubrik, S.D.N.Y.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1058. Prisons 13(3)

Chairman of state board of parole was under no duty under either state or federal law to permit state prisoner to be represented by counsel at parole revocation hearing. Paige v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Parole, E.D.Pa.1970, 311 F.Supp. 940. Pardon And Parole 89

2432. ---- Evidence considered, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

Action seeking to enjoin state officials from using prison disciplinary records in determining classification and eligibility for parole where such records were obtained in proceedings that were constitutionally infirm could be maintained as civil rights action. Leonard v. Mississippi State Probation and Parole Bd., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 509 F.2d 820, rehearing denied 515 F.2d 510, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 428, 423 U.S. 998, 46 L.Ed.2d 373. Civil Rights 1454

2433. ---- Statement of reasons, parole, prisons and prisoners generally

There was no constitutional basis for inmate's contention that, in preparing his parole application, he had a right to a psychiatric report under New Mexico parole system, nor was his dissatisfaction with parole board's reasons for denying his application actionable. Candelaria v. Griffin, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1981, 641 F.2d 868. Civil Rights 1097

Where, under New Jersey law, State Parole Board was not required to state its reasons for denial of parole, state prisoner was not deprived of any constitutional rights. Mosley v. Ashby, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1972, 459 F.2d 477. Pardon And Parole 61

Virginia Probation and Parole Board's reasons for denial of parole that petitioner's long record of law violations made it desirable that he prove himself for a longer period of time and that he had failed to profit from probation were sufficient to overcome his contention that Board acted arbitrarily and capriciously in denying parole. Williams v. Virginia Probation and Parole Bd., W.D.Va.1975, 401 F.Supp. 1371, affirmed 569 F.2d 784, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1659, 435 U.S. 1003, 56 L.Ed.2d 92. Pardon And Parole 49

2434. Work release, prisons and prisoners generally--Generally

Work-release participant stated § 1983 claim for violation of procedural due process by alleging that state officials found him guilty of misconduct, and revoked his participation in work release program, without any evidence to support charges. Friedl v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 210 F.3d 79. Constitutional Law 272(2); Convicts 7(2)

Even if Louisiana statute providing work release program for prisoners created presumption that prisoner serving in last six months of sentence would be allowed to participate in work release, "presumption" is not by definition mandatory, and does not give rise to liberty interest. Welch v. Thompson, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 20 F.3d 636. Constitutional Law 272(2)

Delaware prisoner, whose first and second applications for work release were rejected at least in substantial part by prison officials because of fear of legislative reprisals against prison system as a whole, had cause of action against two prison officials who denied applications for alleged deprivation of procedural due process. Winsett v. McGinnes, C.A.3 (Del.) 1980, 617 F.2d 996, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 891, 449 U.S. 1093, 66 L.Ed.2d 822. Civil Rights 1096

Prison inmate did not have liberty interest in being placed in work release program, needed to support claim that prison officials violated his due process rights by denying his request to participate in program. Romer v. Morgenthau, S.D.N.Y.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 346. Constitutional Law 272(2); Convicts 7(2)

Neither statutes nor regulations established an expectancy of entitlement to participate in work release program without accompanying payment of "maintenance," and thus former prisoner could not maintain action under this section to recover maintenance costs which had been deducted from his earnings while he was in enrolled in work release program. Ervin v. Blackwell, W.D.Mo.1983, 585 F.Supp. 680, affirmed 733 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1096

State prisoner's complaint that he was denied equal protection when his request to participate in work-release program was denied where requests of prisoners with equal or greater sentences were granted stated claim for relief. Jones v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1983, 568 F.Supp. 1113. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Refusal to permit state prisoner, convicted of second-degree rape, to participate in "work release" and "furlough" programs, based on finding that prisoner was a poor risk in view of the vicious nature of his offense, his extensive prior criminal record, his use of drugs in the past, and his pattern of poor community adjustment, was not arbitrary and did not deny equal protection on theory that other inmates convicted of violent crimes were permitted to participate in the programs. Sanno v. Preiser, S.D.N.Y.1975, 397 F.Supp. 560. Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Convicts 7(2); Prisons 13(4)

2435. ---- Detainers, work release, prisons and prisoners generally

There is no denial of equal protection in per se exclusion of prisoners with detainers from participation in Wisconsin's Mutual Agreement Program, under which a prisoner "contracts" to meet a specified level of behavior and accomplishment in exchange for securing an early release into the community in which he has been working or studying while participating in the program, with rationale for exclusion being assumption that prisoners with detainers will be caused to leave the state to answer charges in another jurisdiction and thus will not be able to be released directly into the community. Reddin v. Israel, E.D.Wis.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1215. Constitutional Law 250.3(2)

2436. ---- Escapees, work release, prisons and prisoners generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Decision of state prison's institutional classification committee denying inmate eligibility for work release program and furlough program because of guidelines which prohibit granting of work release to any inmate who has been convicted of escape during the past three years and which state that an inmate who escapes shall not be eligible to apply for a furlough for a period of two years from the date of the escape were clearly within the discretion of internal prison management, were without signs of any invidious discrimination and did not amount to a deprivation of constitutional rights cognizable in a civil rights suit. Hale v. Davis, W.D.Va.1974, 387 F.Supp. 408. Civil Rights 1096

2437. ---- Wages, work release, prisons and prisoners generally

Under V.A.M.S. § 217.435, inmate could not assert a legitimate claim of entitlement to the full amount of his salary while on work release program, and thus withholding a portion of his salary for maintenance costs was not actionable under this section, where regulations specifically conditioned participation in the program on payment of maintenance costs, and since carrying out such condition was not arbitrary action of government demanding due process protection. Ervin v. Blackwell, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1984, 733 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1096

2438. Funerals, prisons and prisoners generally

Allegation by state prisoner that he was not permitted to attend his mother's funeral because prison secretary inadvertently left authorization sitting on her desk was a charge of negligence in handling prisoner's request and was not actionable in suit under civil rights statute complaining about infliction of cruel and unusual punishment, even though complaint characterized prison officials' motivation as "deliberate indifference." Thomas v. Farley, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 31 F.3d 557. Civil Rights 1098

Municipal directive stating that inmate shall be permitted to attend funeral of certain relatives, but may attend funeral of other people only at discretion of commissioner of city department of corrections, did not confer enforceable liberty interest recognizable under federal civil rights statute on prisoner to attend his uncle's funeral, where "uncles" were not included on list of relatives in directive, and directive placed no substantive limitations on commissioner's discretion to allow attendance at funerals of other people. Cruz v. Sielaff, S.D.N.Y.1991, 767 F.Supp. 547. Civil Rights 1098

Denying inmate permission to attend grandmother's funeral did not involve denial of liberty interest protected by Constitution and did not entitle inmate to relief under § 1983. Colon v. Sullivan, S.D.N.Y.1988, 681 F.Supp. 222. Civil Rights 1098

House of detention inmate failed to state a cause of action under this subchapter against deputy warden who allegedly refused to allow him to attend his children's wake. Samuels v. Department of Correction, N. Y. C., E.D.N.Y.1982, 548 F.Supp. 253. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prison's alleged refusal to house inmate near his ill brother, or to allow him temporary community leave to attend brother's funeral, did not violate any due process protected liberty interest; inmate had no constitutional right to incarceration in particular institution. Verwolf v. Hamlet, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22159055, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Convicts 6; Prisons 13(5)

2439. Furloughs, prisons and prisoners generally

State corrections officials did not violate inmate's due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment when they revoked inmate's extended furlough without following procedures outlined in department of corrections manual, given that the procedures that were followed satisfied the procedural protection mandated by the federal Constitution, namely, inmate was given written notice of the claims, admitted to the violation, received a revocation hearing before a neutral hearing officer, and received written statements explaining the evidence relied on and the reasons for the revocation. Holcomb v. Lykens, C.A.2 (Vt.) 2003, 337 F.3d 217. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(8)

Former prisoner stated claim for relief against county prison board and its members and employees on theory of arbitrary refusal to allow prisoner to participate in either work release or home furlough programs. Gahagan v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, E.D.Pa.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1326. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prisoner's allegations that decisions to deny him participation in "work release" and "furlough" programs were erroneous or ill-founded did not establish the infringement of a constitutionally protected right. Sanno v. Preiser, S.D.N.Y.1975, 397 F.Supp. 560. Civil Rights 1395(7)

In order to establish a constitutional deprivation in denial of furlough, cognizable pursuant to this section, prisoner must show that furlough committee determination was arbitrary or capricious so as to be devoid of due process or that the determination was designed as a form of punishment. Brooks v. Dunn, W.D.Va.1974, 376 F.Supp. 976. Civil Rights 1404

2440. Release, prisons and prisoners generally

State prison officials had no constitutional authority to hold inmate in prison for five extra days beyond his original maximum expiration date based upon alleged parole violation, where state failed to grant inmate final hearing or to offer any evidence that it would be impracticable to hold final hearing between date of parolee's detention and his original maximum expiration date. Calhoun v. New York State Div. of Parole Officers, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 999 F.2d 647. Pardon And Parole 80; Pardon And Parole 86

Prisoner, convicted of burglary and released on two-year term of mandatory supervised release was not unlawfully detained by prison authorities after expiration of his burglary sentence when returned to prison for violation of mandatory supervised release, where prisoner conceded that Illinois prison officials had accurately computed his sentence insofar as it was proper under Illinois law not to credit him with time he spent in confinement in California, after he had absconded from mandatory supervised release program, and where running of his mandatory supervised release was tolled when he absconded to California. Wallace v. Greer, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 821 F.2d 1274. Pardon And Parole 72.1

Former state inmate could establish that he was entitled to monetary damages for false imprisonment under § 1983 if he proved that he was incarcerated beyond his correct release date due to constitutional violations by prison officials. McCurry v. Moore, N.D.Fla.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 1167. Civil Rights 1096; Civil Rights 1460

County did not deliberately disregard known and substantial risk that inmate would be harmed if detention records technicians acted pursuant to county's alleged policy prohibiting technicians from counting days that inmate served for same charge under two different court case numbers, as required to support inmate's claim under § 1983 that county violated his Eighth Amendment rights when technician erroneously certified number of days county had detained inmate pretrial on burglary charge, which resulted in inmate's "over-detention" and late release from prison; only one other incident of same type had occurred in ten-year period preceding inmate's conviction, and no county employee actually was aware that inmate had been detained for same burglary under two different court case numbers until long after county delivered him to state department of corrections. Biberdorf v. Oregon, D.Or.2002, 243 F.Supp.2d 1145. Sentencing And Punishment 1531

Detention of a prisoner beyond the termination of his sentence can state an Eighth Amendment violation if that detention occurs without penological justification; in order to establish § 1983 liability in such a case, a plaintiff must demonstrate that a prison official had knowledge of the prisoner's problem and thus of the risk that unwarranted punishment was being, or would be, inflicted, that the official either failed to act or took only ineffectual action under the circumstances, indicating that his response to the problem was a product of deliberate indifference to the prisoner's plight, and that a causal connection exists between the official's response to the problem and the unjustified detention. Douglas v. Murphy, E.D.Pa.1998, 6 F.Supp.2d 430, affirmed 248 F.3d 1129 . Civil Rights 1092; Sentencing And Punishment 1531

Inmate did not have liberty interest in participating in pre-release program prior to being released on parole, making his civil rights claim based on alleged due process violation frivolous under Prison Litigation Reform Act provision governing in forma pauperis complaints. McFadden v. Lehman, M.D.Pa.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1001. Constitutional Law 272.5; Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmates do not have constitutional right to be released before their prison term expires. Vaughan v. Murray, E.D.Va.1994, 872 F.Supp. 268, vacated 70 F.3d 114. Pardon And Parole 46

Prisoner's claim which sought speedier release could not be asserted as civil rights claim, and claim for damages could not be asserted in federal court until underlying habeas claims were presented to state court. Russell v. Gilless, W.D.Tenn.1994, 870 F.Supp. 204. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 207

Allegations of former state prisoner, who served part of his sentence in Illinois Department of Corrections (IDOC) facility and part in non-IDOC facility, that as a result of IDOC director's policy, requiring inmates to serve at least 60 days in IDOC facility, prisoner's release date was later than it would have been if prisoner had served his entire sentence in IDOC facility sufficiently alleged that director intentionally violated prisoner's equal protection rights so as to state claim under § 1983 for equal protection violation. Rooding v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1994, 864 F.Supp. 732. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pennsylvania statute and regulations permitting release of state prisoners prior to expiration of their minimum sentences impose broad discretion upon prison officials and only in event of arbitrary abuse of such discretion of such severity as to amount to lack of due process or equal protection could there arise valid claim of civil rights deprivation for failure to grant release on temporary home furlough prior to expiration of minimum sentence. U. S. ex rel. Williams v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1977, 447 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1096

An inaccurate computation of petitioner's conditional or mandatory release date from prison would have amounted to violation of statutory right and not constitutional right and petitioner's objection to the computation was not cognizable under this section prohibiting the depriving of any person's constitutional rights under color of law. Rice v. Schmidt, E.D.Wis.1967, 277 F.Supp. 811. Civil Rights 1096

Former inmate failed to establish his alleged incarceration past his properly calculated release date was the result of deliberate indifference by Department of Correction (DOC) officials, as was required to maintain §§ 1983 claim arising out of his confinement; once inmate alerted officials to his sentence merger concerns, they acted properly to investigate claim, but reasonably concluded in light of existing Montana precedent that he was not entitled to sentence merger. Barnacascel v. Montana, Dept. of Corrections, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 195, 2004 WL 1447710, Unreported. Civil Rights 1096

2441. Expungement of prison file, prisons and prisoners generally

Due process requirements in prison disciplinary proceedings are not to be applied retroactively so as to require that prison records containing determinations of misconduct, not in accord with required procedures, be expunged. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Courts 100(1)

State prison inmate was not deprived of his limited constitutional right to have erroneous information expunged from his prison file and district court was, therefore, without jurisdiction to consider claim where record failed to establish that prisoner had first made a request of prison officials that erroneous information be expunged from his file and that request had been denied. Paine v. Baker, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1979, 595 F.2d 197, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 263, 444 U.S. 925, 62 L.Ed.2d 181. Civil Rights 1098

Inmate failed to state claim under § 1983 for expungement of allegedly false report from prison files, absent allegation that he made his objections known to prison officials, and absent allegation that prison officials refused to modify supposedly erroneous report despite inmate's objections; inmate failed to assert that prison officials had acted to deprive him of his constitutional right to have file free of false information. McCrery v. Mark, E.D.Pa.1993, 823 F.Supp. 288. Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner's request in § 1983 proceeding that court order removal from his central file of all prejudicial and improper information was mere claim for unintended loss or injury resulting from negligent acts of state officials in failing to hold timely parole revocation hearing and was not cognizable under § 1983; moreover, expungement of state records was not right of federal constitutional dimension. Camardo v. Walker, D.R.I.1992, 794 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1454; Criminal Law 1226(2)

Prisoner had no constitutional right to challenge veracity of his prison file unless he alleged that information was in his file, that the information was false and that it had been relied on by a parole board to a constitutionally significant degree. Williams v. Stacy, E.D.Va.1979, 468 F.Supp. 1206. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2442. Miscellaneous deprivations, prisons and prisoners generally

Inmate who had been convicted of attempted murder in the first degree was not entitled to equitable or injunctive relief in his §§ 1983 action challenging the collection of a sample of his DNA as a violent offender under Missouri's DNA profiling system, even though inmate's conviction did not qualify as a violent offense under statute, where new statute authorized the taking of a DNA sample from all felons, and inmate was a felon. Clevenger v. Gartner, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 392 F.3d 977. Civil Rights 1454

Generally, courts are not concerned with prisoner's initial classification level based on his criminal history before his incarceration, and inmate has no protectable liberty interest in his custodial classification. Wilkerson v. Stalder, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 329 F.3d 431, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 432, 540 U.S. 966, 157 L.Ed.2d 310. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(5)

State prison's policy prohibiting inmates from covering lights in their cells did not violate inmates' equal protection rights, even though policy did not apply in other facilities in state, absent allegation that prison officials implemented policy with intent to discriminate against inmates, that other inmates at facility were treated differently, or that inmates at other facilities were similarly situated. Walker v. Woodford, S.D.Cal.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 1007. Prisons 17(1)

Restrictions placed on civilly confined sex offender after he was transferred from his preferred treatment program, such as not being allowed to use as many electronic devices, being charged higher canteen prices, and being made to wear prison clothing, did not violate his due process right, as civil detainee, to be free of punishment. Laxton v. Watters, W.D.Wis.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1024. Constitutional Law 255(5); Mental Health 465(1)

Prison's practice of passing out general purpose mail to prisoners very late in evening, due to time constraints and problems posed by passing out mail during movement of inmates during day, did not involve deprivation of constitutional right that would support § 1983 action, even if posing slight inconvenience to prisoner's sleep schedule. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593. Prisons 4(9)

Physicians and hospitals involved in treatment of state prison inmate's alleged kidney stones and other ailments were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action for alleged violation of his Eighth Amendment rights; physicians and hospitals had objectively reasonable belief that their actions in treating inmate were appropriate and lawful, and none knowingly engaged in conduct that violated inmate's rights. Brown v. Selwin, S.D.N.Y.1999, 250 F.Supp.2d 299, affirmed 29 Fed.Appx. 762, 2002 WL 355901. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison inmate who brought suit for emotional distress which allegedly resulted after his name was wrongfully printed in newspaper as having died in prison fire failed to allege conduct or knowledge on part of warden which would allow recovery on basis of supervisory liability in § 1983 action based on alleged deprivations of inmate's federally protected rights. Orum v. Haines, N.D.W.Va.1999, 68 F.Supp.2d 726. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Overwhelming weight of evidence supported jury's verdict, in inmate's § 1983 action, that inmate's due process rights were not violated when prison doctor injected him with sedative after he became disruptive without prior hearing and without inmate's consent; inmate flew into a rage when doctor denied him extra blanket for his cell, inmate then ran about his cell striking his head and other parts of his body against walls and other objects in cell, and after inmate did not respond to doctor's request to calm down, doctor, aware of inmate's prior history of medical instability, decided to sedate him. Wilson v. Chang, D.R.I.1997, 955 F.Supp. 18. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 17(2); Prisons 17(2)

Fact issue as to whether court which sentenced defendant who had been unable to pay fine to 15 days' incarceration had adequately considered alternative remedies before imposing sentence, precluding summary judgment in federal civil rights action in which defendant claimed that sentence violated her constitutional rights due to her inability to pay fine, was presented by evidence that defendant had sought and received six extensions of time in which to pay fine, and by lack of express finding by sentencing court that it had considered alternatives to incarceration. Fahle v. Braslow, E.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 145, affirmed 111 F.3d 123. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Inmate's limited First Amendment right to freedom of speech did not include right to proposition female prison employee, and so disciplinary action based on such speech did not support inmate's § 1983 civil rights action on basis of violation of his right to free speech. Kirsch v. Franklin, E.D.Wis.1995, 897 F.Supp. 1173. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3); Prisons 4(6); Prisons 13(6)

Incarceration of defendant in county jail for period necessary to lay out fine which he was unable to pay based on dollar credit for days served violated due process, where jail officials immediately converted fine into jail sentence when fine was not paid without taking defendant before judge, having factual determination made concerning reasons for failure to pay fine, or considering alternatives to incarceration. Doe v. Angelina County, Texas, E.D.Tex.1990, 733 F.Supp. 245. Constitutional Law 272(1)

Right to refuse to perform an unconstitutional act is a right "secured by the Constitution" within the meaning of this section; accordingly, in the instant case, prison guard had the right to refrain from performing an act, ordered by the warden, which would have deprived prisoner of his constitutional rights. Harley v. Schuylkill County, E.D.Pa.1979, 476 F.Supp. 191. Prisons 9

State prisoner's claim concerning loss of commissary privileges did not implicate concerns that were protected by the due process clause. Bridges v. Lee, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 225, 2005 WL 14991, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(4)

State prisoner did not have protected liberty interest in participating in a drug treatment program, barring prisoner's due process claim based upon denial of his request to enter such program, where state statute authorizing drug treatment for prisoners did not require in explicit mandatory language that a particular outcome was required if certain requirements were met. In re Lopez, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22384779, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 17(2)

2471. Pretrial detainees generally

In cases challenging general conditions of confinement for pretrial detainees, there is automatic assumption that practice in question was intentional, such that proper standard in § 1983 action is whether practice in question was reasonably related to legitimate governmental purpose; when this test is properly applied, it is functional equivalent of subjective deliberate indifference standard applied to episodic acts of prison officials. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1088(4)

County could not be held liable in pretrial detainee's § 1983 action for alleged constitutional shortcomings in operation of its governmental institutions, county jail, and county defender's office attributable to omissions and commissions of county employees, absent any showing of existence of policy or custom of county by virtue of which such employees violated federally guaranteed rights. Grabowski v. Jackson County Public Defenders Office, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1996, 79 F.3d 478. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Court of Appeals would apply same deliberate indifference standard to unconstitutional conditions of confinement claims of inmate, who had been convicted and was awaiting sentencing, and pretrial detainee. Whitnack v. Douglas County, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1994, 16 F.3d 954. Civil Rights 1090

Unless there is express intent to punish, imposition or restriction on pretrial detainees is not violation of federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights if alternative purpose to which imposition may rationally be connected is assignable for it, unless it appears excessive in relation to alternative purpose assigned. Simons v. Clemons, C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 752 F.2d 1053. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In action under this section brought by pretrial detainees who claimed that they had been subjected to cruel and unusual treatment by county sheriff and his deputies, pretrial detainees were not required to prove that defendants' conduct amounted to cruel and unusual punishment, since they were not prisoners convicted of crimes. Putman v. Gerloff, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1981, 639 F.2d 415. Civil Rights 1404

Convict is not wholly stripped of his constitutional rights when he is imprisoned, but rather is subject to punishment by state, part of such punishment being deprivation of his liberty, but detainee before conviction may not be "punished" at all and is entitled to such liberty as does not undermine the legitimate state interests related to his detention. Norris v. Frame, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 585 F.2d 1183. Convicts 1; Prisons 4(4)

Pretrial detainees generally retain more rights than convicted prisoners, so that federal court's duty to protect constitutional rights conceivably may justify more intrusive relief by federal courts in the local prison system with respect to pretrial detainees than sentenced inmates. Campbell v. McGruder, C.A.D.C.1978, 580 F.2d 521, 188 U.S.App.D.C. 258, on remand 554 F.Supp. 562. Prisons 4(2.1)

Presumptively innocent status of pretrial detainees requires even closer scrutiny of limitations on their fundamental rights and liberties that is warranted when same restrictions are placed on convicted inmates and pretrial detainees must be held under least restrictive means necessary to assure their presence at trial. Taylor v. Sterrett, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 532 F.2d 462. Prisons 4(4)

The law recognizes a difference in treatment of those confined prior to trial and those confined pursuant to a conviction; in providing for detention of pretrial detainees, correctional institutions must be more than mere depositories for human baggage; any deprivation or restriction of the detainees' rights beyond those which are necessary for confinement alone must be justified by a compelling necessity. Detainees of Brooklyn House of Detention for Men v. Malcolm, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 520 F.2d 392, on remand 421 F.Supp. 832.

Inmate would be treated as a pre-trial detainee, for purposes of his § 1983 action alleging excessive force; inmate was in courthouse for an appearance on a pending criminal matter unrelated to his incarceration. Perkins v. Brown, E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 279. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1093

Pretrial detention period of two and one-half days did not violate detainee's civil rights. Hodge v. Ruperto, S.D.N.Y.1990, 739 F.Supp. 873. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff could not maintain claim in § 1983 action that his incarceration in county jail following his arrest violated Eighth Amendment; constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment protects only those individuals actually convicted of crimes, and plaintiff's confinement occurred before any formal adjudication of his guilt. Garcia v. Jefferson County, Colo., D.Colo.1988, 687 F.Supp. 1498. Civil Rights 1088(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1433; Sentencing And Punishment 1528

Both convicted prisoners and pretrial detainees must be accorded those constitutional rights not fundamentally inconsistent with imprisonment itself or incompatible with objectives of incarceration; these rights include reasonable right of access to courts, freedom from invidious racial discrimination, reasonable opportunity to exercise right of religious freedom, and due process. Wagner v. Thomas, N.D.Tex.1985, 608 F.Supp. 1095. Prisons 4(1); Prisons 4(4)

If sheriff established and maintained policy of nonsegregation of felons from pretrial detainees and if such policy violated constitutional right of plaintiff detainee and if as proximate result thereof plaintiff was injured, it was at least arguable that claim was stated under this section against sheriff. Reynolds v. Sheriff, City of Richmond, E.D.Va.1983, 574 F.Supp. 90. Civil Rights 1395(7)

County's classification of Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services (BCIS) detainees as medium security was reasonably related to the legitimate government purposes of maintaining security and managing an institution, for purposes of detainee's §§1983 claim. Kyei v. Beebe, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 689, 2005 WL 66024, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2472. Privileges generally, pretrial detainees

Before pretrial detainees may be subjected to loss of privileges for more than one day, isolation, reduced diet, or loss of all privileges, there must be: (1) hearing before impartial officer not involved in the transaction or in investigation of the charges, (2) reasonable advance oral or written notice of hearing, (3) general written description of the charges reasonable in advance of the hearing, (4) right to present witnesses at hearing, (5) right to confront and question accusers, and (6) short, written statement of conclusions composed by hearing officer and given to inmate. Inmates of Milwaukee County Jail v. Petersen, E.D.Wis.1973, 353 F.Supp. 1157. Prisons 13(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Detainee stated an equal protection claim against county jail and officer where he alleged that jail maintained a policy and practice that discriminated against him because of his mental illness, and that officer discriminated against him in terms of the type of confinement on the basis of his mental illness. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2473. Access to courts, pretrial detainees--Generally

Usual route for raising inmate's claims of denial of access to courts is through civil rights action under § 1983; however, court has jurisdiction to determine claims during pretrial detainee's criminal trial, to extent they relate to right to adequately represent himself, consult with his standby counsel, and conditions of preconviction detention, although rulings are limited to things which must be done or provided. U.S. v. Janis, S.D.Cal.1992, 820 F.Supp. 512, affirmed 46 F.3d 1147, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 168, 516 U.S. 860, 133 L.Ed.2d 110. Civil Rights 1088(4); Criminal Law 641.7(1)

Access to courts is basic right of every person, including pretrial detainees, and is right which prison regulations must not unreasonably invade without some persuasive governmental justification. Lock v. Jenkins, D.C.Ind.1978, 464 F.Supp. 541, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 641 F.2d 488. Prisons 4(10.1)

2474. ---- Assistance of counsel, access to courts, pretrial detainees

Magistrate did not abuse discretion by refusing to appoint counsel to assist pretrial detainee in pursuance of § 1983 claim against parish prison officials arising out of alleged denial of reasonable medical care; there is no automatic right to appointment of counsel in § 1983 case, and magistrate had found that case was not complex, that pretrial detainee had done credible job of presenting motions and filing papers, that pretrial detainee had been adequately able to investigate case, and that evidence primarily would consist of medical records and other documentary evidence. Cupit v. Jones, C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 835 F.2d 82. Civil Rights 1445

Detainee sufficiently stated denial of access to courts claims against county jail and correctional officers; detainee alleged that the jail maintained a policy and practice of arbitrarily denying inmates confidential consultations with their attorneys and that officers directly participated in the arbitrary and capricious denial of his access to counsel. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Pretrial detainee's allegations that his trial was required to be postponed and that, soon after his release from detention, detainee was cleared of the charges, and that detainee was able to make bail soon after he contacted his associate, satisfied pleading standards for his § 1983 claim that policy of jail administrators and sheriff, restricting access of pretrial detainees who are being disciplined to mail and telephone, violated detainee's right to access courts. Simpson v. Gallant, D.Me.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 341. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Unconvicted detainees in administrative segregation unit of detention facility were entitled to confer with their attorney or attorneys in such numbers as might be shown necessary to assure right to prepare their defenses to charges for which they were detained. Giampetruzzi v. Malcolm, S.D.N.Y.1975, 406 F.Supp. 836. Prisons 4(12)

Requiring City of New York to provide pretrial detainees right of access to counsel outside Rikers Island facilities as well as free daily access to telephone and overnight housing in New York County for detainees who were to consult their attorneys or appear in court the following day was beyond the power of federal district court in suit under this section, for no other reason than the subject matter had never formed part of the litigation. Rhem v. Malcolm, S.D.N.Y.1975, 389 F.Supp. 964, amended on other grounds 396 F.Supp. 1195, affirmed 527 F.2d 1041. Civil Rights 1448 to the courts, where his attorney gave undisputed testimony that he was never denied access to detainee. Baxter v. Everett, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 49, 2004 WL 1354584, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2475. ---- Assistance by other inmates, access to courts, pretrial detainees

With respect to matter of discipline of pretrial detainee absent any showing that he was illiterate or that issues of case were complex, aid from fellow inmate or help from staff or from sufficiently competent inmate designated by staff was not required for compliance with constitutional requirements. Lock v. Jenkins, D.C.Ind.1978, 464 F.Supp. 541, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 641 F.2d 488. Prisons 13(6)

Pretrial detainees were entitled to reasonable freedom to confer with codefendants. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(6)

2476. ---- Library or legal publications, access to courts, pretrial detainees

County jail's policy of limiting inmates' access to law books did not violate pretrial detainee's right of access to courts, where detainee was able to file legally sufficient civil rights complaint, despite detainee's contention that he could have obtained temporary restraining order if he had been provided with adequate legal assistance. Mann v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 796 F.2d 79. Prisons 4(13)

Pretrial detainee at county jail was not deprived of access to the courts and competent counsel, even if detainee was not permitted direct, physical access to law library, detainee was not separately assigned a paralegal to assist him, and detainee was unable to call counsel on a few instances, where detainee was given frequent and heavy access to law library materials, county had limited resources for providing physical access to law library, detainee was an able and experienced prison litigator, detainee decided not to file civil actions while at jail, detainee spoke with counsel on many occasions, and detainee was satisfied with counsel's representation. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Prisons 4(13)

Pretrial detainee's allegation that he pled guilty to charges against him to escape conditions he experienced while in protective pretrial custody did not allege requisite prejudice to enable him to maintain claim against prison officials under § 1983 for denial of access to prison law library and legal materials, absent any indication of how access to law library and legal materials would have changed detainee's plea. Heisler v. Kralik, S.D.N.Y.1997, 981 F.Supp. 830, affirmed 164 F.3d 618. Prisons 4(13)

Where pretrial detainees representing themselves had regular use of adequate law library jail, another law library was available to sentenced prisoners, an allegedly inferior third law library could be used by pretrial prisoners with appointed or retained counsel, and pretrial prisoners who were represented by counsel were accorded use of larger library if they could show legitimate reason why more exhaustive research by them was necessary, sufficient "access to the courts" was provided inmates at jail, including legal assistance provided by supervised law students. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Prisons 4(13)

Rule which provided that pretrial detainees did not have to request law books by name but merely provide librarian with nature of subject, and which prohibited large law books in dormitory but made such books available for study in dayroom and multipurpose room would be extended to pretrial detainees in county's interim jail; however, county would not be required to purchase extensive law library for county jails for benefit of pretrial detainees. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(13)

Pretrial prisoners should be entitled to make occasional visits to jail library and check out one or more books from shelves or request that particular volumes not then available be placed on order. Dillard v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1975,

399 F.Supp. 1225. Prisons 4(8)

Pretrial detainee was not entitled to order requiring jail officials to make law library at county jail available to him to take depositions in proceeding on his claim that state actor deprived him of protected right under United States Constitution or other laws, where jail officials made other jail space available to detainee for taking depositions. Cunningham v. Washington County, D.Or.1994, 158 F.R.D. 155. Federal Civil Procedure 1383

2477. Access to mails, pretrial detainees

County jail's review of pretrial detainee's mail, which review involved the return of one package sent to detainee by friend and two interceptions of outgoing mail, did not interfere with detainee's First Amendment rights, where package was incorrectly addressed, the two mail interceptions arose from not unreasonable concerns about public safety and resulted in mail being forwarded to detainee's attorney and then proceeding on its way, and detainee conducted an extensive correspondence while at jail. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Prisons 4(9)

Pretrial detainee's § 1983 claim against jail administrators and sheriff, alleging violations of right to access telephone and mails, was properly characterized as claim that jail disciplinary sanctions imposed upon him violated his constitutional right to pursue bail and prepare defense while a pretrial detainee, rather than as due process claim that detainee had not violated rules so as to justify imposition of disciplinary sanction; therefore, claim did not seek to undermine validity of underlying disciplinary determination, so that principles of Heck were inapposite. Simpson v. Gallant, D.Me.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 341. Civil Rights 1088(4)

County jail, which had adopted no policy or procedure concerning marking of legal mail, violated pretrial detainee's civil rights by opening letters from American Civil Liberties Union, legal services program, and United States Senate committee outside of detainee's presence; letters were from attorneys or senator, and bore designations sufficient, absent specific requirements articulated by jail, to alert jail personnel to their privileged nature. Faulkner v. McLocklin, N.D.Ind.1989, 727 F.Supp. 486. Civil Rights 1088(4); Prisons 4(4); Prisons 4(12)

Pretrial prisoner should be entitled to receive, from visitors or through mail, any newspapers, books or magazines that may lawfully be delivered by postal service. Dillard v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1975, 399 F.Supp. 1225. Prisons 4(8)

2478. Conditions of confinement, pretrial detainees

Issue of whether conditions of arrestee's pretrial confinement during five-day period between his arrest and his probable cause hearing were objectively unreasonable was for the jury, in arrestee's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment claim challenging the conditions of his confinement; arrestee presented evidence that he was shackled to the wall of the interrogation room for four days, that he was deprived of food, drink, and sleep, and that he was forced to yell for long period of time before being let out to use the bathroom, and defendant officers denied such treatment. Lopez v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 464 F.3d 711. Civil Rights 1429

Prison's cell assignment policy of allowing inmates to choose their own cell assignments did not demonstrate deliberate indifference on the part of prison officials to a substantial risk of serious harm to pre-trial detainee, who suffered serious injuries when he was attacked by a another inmate, for purposes of detainee's § 1983 claim under the Due Process Clause; detainee shared his cell with inmate for two weeks without incident prior to the attack, and did not inform the guards he had fought with inmate, or that he feared harm. Washington v. LaPorte County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.7 (Ind.) 2002, 306 F.3d 515. Prisons 17(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1537 violation exists only if court finds that condition of confinement is not reasonably related to legitimate, nonpunitive governmental objective. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 51. Constitutional Law 262

Detainee's complaint sufficiently pled both that he was denied minimal civilized measure of life's necessity, and that county jail correctional officer had a culpable state of mind, as required for Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual punishment claim; complaint alleged that detainee was purposefully subjected to dehumanizing conditions when he was denied access to facilities both to go to the restroom and to clean himself up during five hour period in which he sat in his feces, and that officer displayed hostility towards him during his denial, using insulting and offensive language and expressions. Mitchell v. Newryder, D.Me.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 200. Sentencing And Punishment 1539; Sentencing And Punishment 1554

Claim for malicious prosecution based on a few months of pretrial restraints between arraignment and acquittal was not actionable under § 1983 since prohibiting defendant from traveling outside Pennsylvania and New Jersey and requiring him to check in on weekly basis was not seizure within meaning of Fourth Amendment. Gallo v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1997, 975 F.Supp. 723, reversed 161 F.3d 217, as amended. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Conditions of pretrial detainee's confinement did not violate his federal civil rights, placing detainee in restricted housing unit rather than general prison population was warranted by concerns detainee presented regarding potential for witness intimidation and tampering, it was reasonable nonpunitive response to legitimate security concerns, and there was no evidence that officials exaggerated their response to their treatment of detainee. Young v. Larkin, M.D.Pa.1994, 871 F.Supp. 772, affirmed 47 F.3d 1163. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Pretrial detainee failed to prove that county sheriff was deliberately indifferent to alleged unsanitary and inhumane conditions at a county detention center, so as to establish an Eighth Amendment violation; the detainee did not allege that the sheriff was aware that detention officers refused to supply him with disinfectants or other sufficient supplies to clean feces from his cell floor and toilet. Galloway v. Whetsel, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 617, 2005 WL 459598, Unreported. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1539

Federal district court properly rejected detainee's civil rights claim alleging poor conditions of confinement, where there was testimony that detainee was detained in 8-foot by 10-foot cell, but had 24-hour access to larger day room; detainee was allowed outside for doctor visits, haircuts, and court appearances; jail did not allow visitors inside the cell blocks because there were not enough officers; detainee's attorney had not seen roaches or mice or perceived unsanitary smells at jail; jail administrators sprayed regularly for bugs, and had broken toilets repaired within two to three days; and detainee was never denied access to cleaning supplies. Baxter v. Everett, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 49, 2004 WL 1354584, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Pre-trial detainee failed to allege that the assistant district attorney participated directly in establishing or maintaining the conditions in which he was incarcerated as required to state a claim under § 1983 against the attorney. Reid v. Schuman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 376, 2003 WL 22965003, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

2479. Restraints, pretrial detainees

Allegations that city's handcuff policy required that all detainees wear handcuffs, regardless of the circumstances, supported § 1983 claim of arrestee who allegedly suffered pain and injury from being restrained with handcuffs that were too small for his wrists, pursuant to city policy, despite being arrested for non-violent misdemeanor offense. Kostrzewa v. City of Troy, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2001, 247 F.3d 633. Civil Rights 1395(6)

With respect to his first detainment, plaintiff, a detainee awaiting a probation revocation hearing, sufficiently stated a claim under the Eighth Amendment against county defendants and correctional officer; plaintiff alleged that county jail maintained policies and customs tolerating cruel and unusual punishment of convicted prisoners and pretrial detainees, that the correctional officer and jail, by and through its elected officers and appointed employees, strapped him to a wheelchair for several hours, forcing him to urinate on himself and sit in his urine for several hours, while he was in a manic state, that the jail and correctional officer knew of his mental condition because it was documented at its facility, and that the officer's and jail's acts were intentional with malice and reckless disregard for his federally protected rights. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609.

2480. Medical care, pretrial detainees--Generally

Police officers had time to consider fully the potential consequences of their conduct during six minutes that detainee was denied medical care after being taken into police custody, given that officers had time to do such things as greet each other, prepare for their superiors' arrival, pick up dropped items and straighten their uniforms, and comment on apparent severity of detainee's injuries, and therefore traditional deliberate indifference standard of culpability applied to due process claim for denial of adequate medical care, rather than heightened standard requiring malice and intent to harm to establish §§ 1983 liability. Estate of Owensby v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 414 F.3d 596, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2023. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Officer could not be held liable under § 1983 for being indifferent to pretrial detainee's medical needs as result of taking detainee's photograph and fingerprints while detainee was unconscious, in hospital, following accident that occurred while detainee was evading arrest, given detainee's failure to present evidence contradicting officer's statements that he did not interfere with detainee's medical treatment while obtaining fingerprints and photograph. Johnson v. Meltzer, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1998, 134 F.3d 1393, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 102, 525 U.S. 840, 142 L.Ed.2d 82. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

"Deliberate indifference" to patient's medical needs, as must be shown to prevail on § 1983 civil rights claim alleging inadequate medical treatment, may be inferred based upon a medical professional's erroneous treatment decision only when decision is such a substantial departure from accepted professional judgment, practice, or standards as to demonstrate that the person responsible did not base the decision on such judgment. Estate of Cole by Pardue v. Fromm, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 94 F.3d 254, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 945, 519 U.S. 1109, 136 L.Ed.2d 834. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Episodic act or omission of state jail official does not violate pretrial detainee's constitutional right to be secure in his basic human needs, such as medical care and safety, unless detainee demonstrates that official acted or failed to act with subjective deliberate indifference to detainee's needs. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1996, 74 F.3d 633, on remand 949 F.Supp. 456. Prisons 17(2); Prisons 17(4)

Pretrial detainee's pro se allegations that guard failed to supervise subordinate guards and allowed them to provide inadequate medical care failed to state § 1983 claim for violation of her due process rights, absent any allegation of deliberate indifference. Zarnes v. Rhodes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 64 F.3d 285. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Deliberate indifference standard would be applied to pretrial detainee's claim under due process clause of inadequate medical care. Davis v. Hall, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 992 F.2d 151, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 262

Alleged inadequate medical care of pretrial detainee who was suffering from alcoholism, cirrhosis, and possible delirium tremens was actionable under federal civil rights statute. Colle v. Brazos County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 237. Civil Rights 1088(4) over-the-counter medication in the single instance in which he suffered from minor flu symptoms. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Prisons 17(2)

Jury finding that sheriff was deliberately indifferent in his individual capacity to pre-trial detainee's constitutional rights was supported by evidence that detainee was placed in pod with post-trial detainees, that he had medical condition which required that he be placed on medical floor, that he was denied adequate exercise and recreation, that sheriff knew that placing pre- and post-trial detainees together was unconstitutional and dangerous, that sheriff knew that medical services at jail were inadequate, and that sheriff failed to train officers in regard to separation of pre- and post-trial detainees. Pulliam v. Shelby County, Tenn., W.D.Tenn.1995, 902 F.Supp. 797. Civil Rights 1420

To prove § 1983 civil rights violation of state's duty to protect detainee's liberty interest, standard of deliberate indifference to serious medical needs applies to pretrial detainees, as well as prison inmates. Merideth v. Grogan, N.D.Ga.1992, 812 F.Supp. 1223, affirmed 985 F.2d 579. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In § 1983 claim by pretrial detainee that jailer failed to promptly and reasonably procure competent medical aid for detainee, relevant standard under Eighth Amendment is "deliberate indifference" to medical needs. Davis v. Village of Calumet Park, N.D.Ill.1990, 737 F.Supp. 1039, reversed on other grounds 936 F.2d 971, rehearing denied 946 F.2d 538. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Medical policy of Pennsylvania State correctional institution, under which unsentenced inmates would receive emergency medical care only, was a reasonable policy attributable to the uncertainty as to how long pretrial detainees would remain incarcerated; therefore, it was appropriate that district court refrain from interfering with the policy. Holly v. Rapone, E.D.Pa.1979, 476 F.Supp. 226. Prisons 17(2)

Federal district court ruling on detainee's civil rights claim did not clearly err in finding that detainee failed to establish that unsanitary jail conditions caused his lung infection, where physician testified that he treated detainee for a similar lung condition before he was detained, and that he could not attribute cause of the infection while in jail to insalubrious conditions at the jail. Baxter v. Everett, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 49, 2004 WL 1354584, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2481. ---- Serious medical need, medical care, pretrial detainees

Pre-trial detainee did not have objectively serious medical need on intake, that required immediate medical attention, from perspective of jailer, as layperson, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis of deliberate indifference civil rights claim of detainee's estate under Fourteenth Amendment, even if jailer had been aware that detainee had taken methamphetamine before arrest, since detainee followed directions, answered questions posed, and remained quiet and seated on bench inside jail. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Constitutional Law 262

Jailer was not liable in § 1983 action brought by pretrial detainee who claimed that jailer was deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs of pretrial detainee where pretrial detainee was not seriously injured. Gray v. Spillman, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 925 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Pretrial detainee's multiple bruises to forehead, orbits of eyes, nasal area, ribs, flank, and shoulder, abrasion on upper back, corneal abrasion, deviated septum, and transient nerve damage allegedly as result of beating by police officer were not "serious medical needs," and, thus, ten-hour delay in providing treatment did not violate due process clause; detainee was treated by arm sling, eye patch, and disinfectant, and physician saw no need for immediate treatment of nerve damage and deviated septum almost two months after incident. Gaudreault v. Municipality of Salem, Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1990, 923 F.2d 203, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2266, 500 U.S. 956, 114 L.Ed.2d 718. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(2)

A "serious medical need," for purposes of deliberate indifference claim brought by prisoner or pretrial detainee under Eighth or Fourteenth Amendment, is one that has been diagnosed by a physician as requiring treatment or one that is so obvious even a lay person would easily recognize the necessity for a doctor's attention. Patrick v. Lewis, D.Minn.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1134. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Pretrial detainee did not have to comply with Maine Health Security Act by filing notice of claim and submitting his claim to a prelitigation medical screening panel prior to filing §§ 1983 complaint against jail's medical services provider alleging cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment because of deprivation of care and treatment for his serious medical condition, where detainee did not seek damages for any state cause of action. Faulkingham v. Penobscot County Jail, D.Me.2004, 350 F.Supp.2d 285. Health 806

Pretrial detainee's allegations of serious medical need were sufficient to support his § 1983 claim against county corrections officers when detainee alleged that prior gunshot injury to his leg was so severe that he required reconstructive surgery and was unable to walk without assistance of cane or crutches and that officers denied him use of cane or crutches and forced him to walk without assistance, resulting in unnecessary pain and suffering. Castellano v. Chicago P.D., N.D.Ill.2001, 129 F.Supp.2d 1184. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Detention officers were not deliberately indifferent to pretrial detainee's serious medical needs by failing to take measures to prevent detainee's suicide, despite deposition testimony that detention officers failed to respond to yelling and banging on cell doors; even assuming that officers heard commotion, there was no evidence that detainee or second incarcerated individual ever indicated that detainee was in serious distress or was contemplating suicide, and expert's general observations about teen suicide did not establish actual or constructive knowledge by detention officers of detainee's specific risk of suicide. Clinton v. County of York, D.S.C.1995, 893 F.Supp. 581. Civil Rights 1420

Expert testimony that physicians deviated significantly from appropriate standard of care for serious asthma patients constituted at most medical malpractice claim which could not form basis of actionable § 1983 claim absent facts supporting charge of deliberate indifference to pretrial detainee's serious medical needs; evidence showed that physicians attended to detainee promptly after he complained of medical problems, and that during the course of their examinations they exercised medical judgment and prescribed treatment they deemed necessary. Bowman v. Campbell, N.D.N.Y.1994, 850 F.Supp. 144. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2482. ---- Refusal of treatment, medical care, pretrial detainees

Fact issues precluded summary judgment in favor of official on pretrial detainee's claim that denial of medical treatment was deliberate indifference and violated due process where evidence viewed in light most favorable to detainee was that following arrest, detainee was pale, dizzy, perspiring profusely, trembling uncontrollably, hardly able to talk, and repeatedly lost consciousness, that officials were informed that detainee was diabetic and was in insulin shock and needed to go to hospital immediately, and that official instead took detainee to police barracks and denied medical treatment throughout period of detention. Weyant v. Okst, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 101 F.3d 845. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Paramedics could not be held liable for violating civil rights of pretrial detainee who died several hours after his arrest for DWI following traffic accident, where there was no evidence that they exhibited deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs; prior to refusing further treatment, detainee allowed paramedics to conduct preliminary examination which revealed that his vital signs were normal and that his skin color and skin moisture were normal and that his pupils were responsive and equal; paramedics were not required to take detainee to hospital to check for internal injuries simply because he was intoxicated. Salazar v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 940 F.2d 233. Civil Rights 1088(4)

rights, arising from failure to provide him with dentures; detainee was federal prisoner, United States Marshals Service (USMS) refused to provide dentures, USMS had authority to approve and pay for his treatment, all detainee's requests for treatment were addressed to USMS, and detainee was transferred out of county jail prior to date established by dentist as appropriate for fitting dentures. Petrazzoulo v. U.S. Marshals Service, W.D.N.Y.1998, 999 F.Supp. 401. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Sheriff, deputies, and police officers did not violate pretrial detainee's constitutional rights by intentionally denying or interfering with his access to medication or medical treatment for congestive heart failure during and following his arrest, as would support recovery in § 1983 action. Blakely v. Bates, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1362, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2483. ---- Detoxification, medical care, pretrial detainees

Failure to hold all intoxicated pretrial detainees in detoxification center or to subject them to around-the-clock personal surveillance does not constitute deliberate indifference to serious need of such detainees. Colburn v. Upper Darby Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 946 F.2d 1017. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2484. ---- Drugs or medicine, medical care, pretrial detainees

For supervisor to be liable under civil rights statute for jail guards' alleged deliberate indifference to pretrial detainee's serious medical needs, detainee had to demonstrate that guards' alleged constitutionally deficient medical care occurred at supervisor's direction or with his knowledge and consent. Zentmyer v. Kendall County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 220 F.3d 805. Civil Rights 1358

Given pretrial detainee's allegations that he was "tricked" into taking amitriptyline by nurse, who informed him that it was a pain medication, and that he would not have taken the drug had he known that it had "antipsychotic" effects, trial court was required to determine whether amitriptyline was an antipsychotic drug, if so, whether procedural safeguards were necessary and were taken before its administration to pretrial detainee, for purposes of detainee's § 1983 claim alleging that he was given amitriptyline in violation of his constitutionally protected liberty interest. Frost v. Agnos, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1998, 152 F.3d 1124. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(2)

Any negligence by county officials in misplacing pretrial detainee's antidepressant medicine and delaying a month in getting prescription refilled would not support § 1983 claim; while detainee suggested that sudden withdrawal of medication caused his agitated behavior and resulted in another felony conviction for inciting riot, physician testified that he would not expect patient with detainee's history and symptoms to experience any undue agitation when medication was suddenly stopped. Ervin v. Busby, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1993, 992 F.2d 147, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 220, 510 U.S. 879, 126 L.Ed.2d 176. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Jury could reasonably conclude that deliberate indifference to medical needs of pre-trial detainee was direct result of policies and customs at jail implemented by sheriff, where plaintiff was never given medication even though he informed officials that he had seizure disorder, plaintiff lay on floor for considerable time after being beaten before receiving medical treatment, and, following return to jail, plaintiff was denied medication prescribed to him at hospital. Pulliam v. Shelby County, Tenn., W.D.Tenn.1995, 902 F.Supp. 797. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2485. ---- Drug treatment, medical care, pretrial detainees

Where detainee had already been receiving methadone as qualifying participant in approved program, and Pennsylvania had established procedures for termination of methadone recipient but they were not followed by county prison, which terminated course of treatment without demonstrating legitimate interest in so doing, and where also decision to conclude the treatment had been made by penal authorities and not by authorized methadone facility, detainee could properly assert deprivation of liberty interest, and actions of prison authorities were to be judged in light of legitimate state interests which would justify such deprivation but were not established by the evidence. Norris v. Frame, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 585 F.2d 1183. Prisons 4(4)

Under all circumstances, including fact that Pennsylvania pretrial detainee received some medical treatment for his heroin withdrawal symptoms and for injuries suffered in a fall on ice-covered steps, the fact that the prisoner was treated on two occasions by a paramedic and that his requests for methadone and for x-rays were denied did not establish a deprivation of constitutionally guaranteed liberties without due process of law. Holly v. Rapone, E.D.Pa.1979, 476 F.Supp. 226. Constitutional Law 262

Policy of county jail whereby pretrial detainees who had been receiving methadone as treatment for drug addiction prior to their incarceration were denied methadone during pretrial confinement denied due process. Cudnik v. Kreiger, N.D.Ohio 1974, 392 F.Supp. 305. Constitutional Law 262

2486. ---- Experimental medication, medical care, pretrial detainees

Patient-arrestee's pro se § 1983 claim against doctors who treated him with experimental drug while he was unconscious, following accident in which patient was injured while trying to evade arrest, was properly construed to state claim for violation of patient's constitutionally protected liberty interest in bodily integrity; patient claimed that doctors acted for research purposes unrelated to treating him, that his due process rights had been violated, and that doctors used him as "human rat" to test experimental drug. Johnson v. Meltzer, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1998, 134 F.3d 1393, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 102, 525 U.S. 840, 142 L.Ed.2d 82. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2487. ---- Periodic examinations, medical care, pretrial detainees

That pretrial detainees were not routinely given complete physical examination does not establish constitutional violation. Lock v. Jenkins, D.C.Ind.1978, 464 F.Supp. 541, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 641 F.2d 488. Prisons 17(2)

2488. ---- Screening forms, medical care, pretrial detainees

Failure on part of county jailer to fill out medical screening form when mentally ill detainee was admitted to jail pending involuntary commitment proceeding was not sufficient basis for concluding that jailer was "deliberately indifferent" to detainee's medical needs, or for allowing recovery under civil rights provision, where jailer placed detainee in separate cell for her protection, conducted visual inspections every half hour, and attempted to medicate detainee according to prescription. Boston v. Lafayette County, Miss., N.D.Miss.1990, 744 F.Supp. 746, affirmed 933 F.2d 1003. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2489. ---- Suicide, medical care, pretrial detainees

Nighttime jailer was not deliberately indifferent to risk of suicide by pretrial detainee that had expressly threatened suicide if confined in county jail, and did not violate detainee's substantive due process rights simply by waiting, for one hour and 46 minutes after conducting his last cell check, to again inspect detainee's cell and discover him hanging from top bunk, where jailer was aware that detainee's belt, shoelaces and contents of his pockets had been confiscated and that cell had been stripped of implements that might assist suicide, where jailer regularly observed detainee through closed circuit monitor that reached majority of cell, and where detainee was able to commit suicide only by tearing elastic band from his underwear and tying it around his neck; jailer's actions did not violate detainee's due process rights and did not subject him to liability under § 1983. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(2)

Senior deputy sheriff who knew of arrestee's suicide risk and that she was in possession of loose bedding, even though prior detainee had hanged himself in same cell under similar circumstances, could have been found to have acted with deliberate indifference to arrestee's known suicidal tendencies, and thus was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability, after arrestee killed herself, for violation of arrestee's due process rights. Jacobs v. West Feliciana Sheriff's Dept., C.A.5 (La.) 2000, 228 F.3d 388. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Pretrial detainee who committed suicide while being treated at psychiatric ward had substantive right under due process clause to be free from bodily restraint, but that right was not absolute; it ended at the point at which his freedom from restraint posed substantial risk that he would seriously injure or kill himself, and at that point detainee had a right to appropriate treatment, including bodily restraint. Estate of Cole by Pardue v. Fromm, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 94 F.3d 254, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 945, 519 U.S. 1109, 136 L.Ed.2d 834. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(2)

Evidence would not support finding that county had policy of inadequately training jail staff regarding care of pretrial detainees known to be suicidal, so as to support imposition of § 1983 liability; there was no evidence as to level of training staff possessed, additional training they lacked, why constitutional violation would obviously result from absence of additional training, or that any incompetence of staff was result of inadequate training. Rhyne v. Henderson County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 973 F.2d 386, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

Sheriff and deputy exhibited deliberate indifference to pretrial detainee's serious medical needs in violation of Eighth Amendment in failing to cut detainee down when they found him hanging in his cell and instead waiting for medical personnel to arrive and photographs to be taken, even though body was warm and detainee's feet were touching floor. Heflin v. Stewart County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1992, 958 F.2d 709, rehearing denied, on reconsideration 968 F.2d 1, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 598, 506 U.S. 998, 121 L.Ed.2d 535. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

When liability for pretrial detainee's serious harm or death, including suicide, is at issue in § 1983 case, plaintiff must demonstrate "deliberate indifference" by showing: unusually serious risk of harm (self-inflicted harm, in suicide case), defendant's actual knowledge of (or, at least, willful blindness to) that elevated risk, and defendant's failure to take obvious steps to address that known, serious risk; risk, knowledge, and failure to do obvious, taken together, must show that defendant is "deliberately indifferent" to harm that follows. Manarite By and Through Manarite v. City of Springfield, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 957 F.2d 953, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 113, 506 U.S. 837, 121 L.Ed.2d 70. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Proper inquiry concerning liability of city and its employees in their official and individual capacities under § 1983 for pretrial detainee's suicide is whether detainee showed likelihood that he would attempt to take his own life in such a manner that failure to take accurate precautions amounted to deliberate indifference to detainee's serious medical needs. Barber v. City of Salem, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 953 F.2d 232. Civil Rights 1088(4)

The "reckless or deliberate indifference" standard for judging the defendant's conduct in a pretrial detainee suicide case implies that there must be strong likelihood, rather than mere possibility, that self-inflicted harm will occur, and even where strong likelihood of suicide exists, it must be shown that custodian officials knew or should have known of that strong likelihood; there can be no reckless or deliberate indifference to that risk unless there is something more culpable on part of officials than negligent failure to recognize high degree of risk. Colburn v. Upper Darby Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 946 F.2d 1017. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Civil rights of detainee who committed suicide were not violated by city's failure to train police officers in psychological screening procedures and to utilize sample medical psychological screening questionnaire found in detainee treatment manual; detainee did not have absolute right to psychological screening. Burns v. City of Galveston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 905 F.2d 100. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers' failure to afford medical screening or attention to detainee, who committed suicide while detained at city jail on charges of public intoxication and hazardous driving, could not be construed as "deliberate indifference" to detainee's medical needs or intent to punish in violation of due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, and thus officers had qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by detainee's daughter, where at no time during his one hour and 20-minute incarceration did detainee express any concern about his well being or behave in way that would have indicated to officers that he posed risk of suicide or that they should take any additional action. Belcher v. Oliver, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1990, 898 F.2d 32. Civil Rights 1376(6); Constitutional Law 262

Allegation that township officials should have known pretrial detainee was suicide risk, in that police were familiar with detainee and her suicidal tendencies, was sufficient to state § 1983 claim for denial of due process against custodial officer whose search failed to disclose gun which detainee subsequently used to kill herself. Colburn v. Upper Darby Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1988, 838 F.2d 663, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1338, 489 U.S. 1065, 103 L.Ed.2d 808, on remand. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegations by pre-trial detainee's estate that, prior to detainee's hanging himself in his cell, detainee's family members and friends called and went to detention center in person to inform non-profit corporation, which was under contract to provide mental health services to prisoners at detention center, that detainee was suicidal and that corporation, after receiving knowledge of detainee's suicidal tendency, failed to provide adequate mental health care to detainee were sufficient to satisfy the deliberate indifference test in estate's §§ 1983 prisoner suicide case; knowledge that detainee was actually threatening to commit suicide was certainly enough to show knowledge of substantial risk of suicide, rather than just mere possibility. Smith v. Brevard County, M.D.Fla.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 1243.

County was not liable for due process violation under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs in connection with death of pretrial detainee who hanged himself, absent evidence whether officer's delay in turning detainee's light on after detainee had turned it off, during which time inmate hanged himself, was standard practice or aberration. Taylor v. Wausau Underwriters Ins. Co., E.D.Wis.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 882. Prisons 17(2)

There was no constitutional deprivation with respect to circumstances that led up to pretrial detainee's suicide, and so question of sheriff's qualified immunity did not need to be reached; county jail had procedures in place to screen detainees for risks of self-harm, those procedures were used, detainee exhibited no signs of suicidal intentions during three weeks of his detention, and no specific staff training deficiencies were shown to have caused the suicide. Keehner v. Dunn, D.Kan.2005, 409 F.Supp.2d 1266. Prisons 17(1)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of intoxicated pre-trial detainee who committed suicide in holding cell, based on its policies for monitoring pre-trial detainees for possible suicide attempts, given that city had such policies in place, notwithstanding that individual officers may not have followed such policies or that city did not strictly enforce them. Cruise v. Marino, M.D.Pa.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 656. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Material issues of fact, as to whether jail detainee was exhibiting strong signs of suicidal tendencies, whether officials in contact with detainee were or should have been aware of tendencies, and whether officials took steps to address risk, precluded summary judgment that officials were not liable in their individual capacities for violating due process rights of detainee by showing deliberate indifference to his situation. Gaston v. Ploeger, D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1211. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County jail officials were not deliberately indifferent in failing to recognize and respond to the risk that a pretrial detainee was suicidal, so as to violate the detainee's due process rights, even assuming there was a 72-minute gap between the last time the detainee was checked and when he was found; officials did not know, based on a physician's discharge reports describing the detainee's depression only as "mild" or "situational," that the detainee presented a substantial risk of suicide, and there was nothing in the reports to suggest that anti-anxiety medication would have helped prevent the detainee's depression and attempted suicide. Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 756, affirmed 439 F.3d 441, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 445 F.3d 1038, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Sentencing And Punishment 1528

Jailers were not deliberately indifferent to substantial risk of harm to pretrial detainee, and thus were not subject to liability under § 1983 for detainee's death, even if detainee had told another detainee that she wanted to see doctor, and detainee's death was not suicide, where there was no evidence that jailers knew that she was suffering from any psychological difficulty that would cause her to take her own life or that she would be harmed by someone else, detainee did not request medical aid from jail nurse who saw her initially, detainee subsequently drank coffee, conversed with others, requested cigarette, and ate part of her lunch, and there was no evidence that jailers murdered her themselves. Stiltner v. Crouse, W.D.Va.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 667. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Psychiatrist and nurses on psychiatric unit where pretrial detainee asphyxiated himself with plastic bag from garbage can were not deliberately indifferent to risk that detainee would commit suicide with bag, and could thus not be found liable under § 1983; though nursing defendants knew of existence of plastic bags and psychiatrist arguably knew of existence, jury could not reasonably conclude that any defendants actually recognized risk, given that no patient previously tried to commit suicide with plastic bag, that no staff member ever recognized risk posed by bags, that no visitor, inspector, or any one else recognized risk before detainee committed suicide, and that no defendant was advised of risk by anyone else. Estate of Cole by Pardue v. Fromm, S.D.Ind.1995, 941 F.Supp. 776, affirmed 94 F.3d 254, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 945, 519 U.S. 1109, 136 L.Ed.2d 834. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Personal representatives of estate of pretrial detainee who committed suicide in jail failed to demonstrate that officer acted with deliberate indifference to detainee's suicidal tendencies, as would preclude officer from enjoying qualified immunity from suit; although officer was told that detainee has exhibited severe mood swings on his way to jail, detainee did not make any threats, cause any disturbances, stagger, slur his speech, or do anything bizarre which would have lead officer to believe he was suicidal. Estate of Frank v. City of Beaver Dam, E.D.Wis.1996, 921 F.Supp. 590. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Municipality was not liable for suicide of arrestee based on its alleged failure to train police officers regarding suicide awareness, absent evidence that municipality had large suicide problem which it was ignoring or that statutes or regulations required officers either to perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) upon arrestee after he was discovered hanging in cell or to take suicide awareness classes. Pyka v. Village of Orland Park, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1196. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Actions of pretrial detainee, who was intoxicated and was asking why he could not go home, did not indicate possibility that he was going to harm himself for purposes of showing strong likelihood, rather than mere possibility, that self-inflicted harm would occur, and, thus, detainee's "particular vulnerability" to suicide was not shown. Litz v. City of Allentown, E.D.Pa.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1401. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Estate of pretrial detainee failed to state claim against city, under § 1983, for detainee's suicide after city officials failed to take his belt from him while he was in the holding cell; complaint was silent as to whether responsible policymakers had contemporaneous knowledge of events leading up to detainee's suicide, as to whether detainee gave any prior indication at all that he needed special care, and as to whether policymakers had knowledge or reason to know of prior suicides in city's jails or of alternatives for preventing them. Plasko v. City of Pottsville, E.D.Pa.1994, 852 F.Supp. 1258. Civil Rights 1395(6)

County's alleged failure to train jail personnel to recognize and respond to suicidal tendencies of pretrial detainees did not support § 1983 civil rights claim by detainee's estate where jail did not have history of numerous suicides and suicide attempts, county employed suicide prevention program for screening detainees, and jail correction officials did receive training regarding detention of suicidal detainees and appropriate responses. Herman v. Clearfield County, Pa., W.D.Pa.1993, 836 F.Supp. 1178, affirmed 30 F.3d 1486. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Assuming that detainee had known suicidal tendencies, county was not liable under § 1983 for detainee's suicide on theory of inadequate training, where sheriff's office did have a policy with regard to custodial confinement of detainees who had exhibited possible inclination to self-injury. Hood v. Itawamba County, Miss., N.D.Miss.1993, 819 F.Supp. 556. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Evidence failed to establish that jail detainee gave indication of strong likelihood that he would take his own life, and, thus, city could not be held liable under § 1983 for the detainee's suicide, notwithstanding fact that detainee was intoxicated and uncooperative; mere fact that detainee was intoxicated and uncooperative did not require that special precautions be taken in connection with the detention. Perkowski v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1992, 794 F.Supp. 223. Civil Rights 1420

It was clearly established at time of detainee's March 30, 1988 arrest that the "deliberate indifference" standard applied to the handling of suicidal pretrial detainees, and that failure to take special precautions toward such detainees could violate that standard for purpose of civil rights action against prison officials after detainee committed suicide. Bragado v. City of Zion/Police Dept., N.D.Ill.1992, 788 F.Supp. 366. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Allegation that classification specialist, who interviewed pretrial detainee and perceived no signs that pretrial detainee would injure himself, contravened county policy when he failed to contact doctor or nurse after learning of detainee's dependency on alcohol would only have supported negligence claim and did not amount to deliberate indifference that would have required remedy under § 1983. Trask v. County of Strafford, D.N.H.1991, 772 F.Supp. 42. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Jailers did not deprive prisoner of clearly established right by failing to prevent his suicide while detained in allegedly inadequate detoxification room, and, thus, jailers' supervisors could not be held liable by prisoner's widow for improper training. Zwalesky v. Manistee County, W.D.Mich.1990, 749 F.Supp. 815. Civil Rights 1358

Alleged conduct of county sheriff and officers on duty at county jail on night of pretrial detainee's suicide attempt in allowing detainee to keep laces of boots, which detainee used in attempt to hang himself, was at most negligent and did not rise to level of constitutional violation, even though jail policy required removal of laces and detainee was arrested for driving while intoxicated; guard at jail asked detainee to remove boot laces, laces were difficult to remove and guard said they would have to be cut, detainee objected on grounds of cost, and another guard said that they should admit detainee with boot laces because he had been there before and would not "try anything." Hamlin v. Kennebec County Sheriff's Dept., D.Me.1990, 728 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Finding that city was deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs of intoxicated detainee, and thus liable under § 1983 when detainee committed suicide, was sufficiently supported by evidence that detainee was at high risk to commit suicide, that his suicide was foreseeable and preventable, that attending officer had no training in suicide prevention, and that police department had been informed of alternative arrangements it could have made which would have reduced risk of detainee's suicide. Simmons v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1990, 728 F.Supp. 352, affirmed 947 F.2d 1042, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1671, 503 U.S. 985, 118 L.Ed.2d 391. Civil Rights 1420

Jail officials' providing pretrial detainee with safety razor did not provide basis for a civil rights claim on the theory of deliberate indifference to possibility of suicide, where superficial injuries to detainee's wrists inflicted with the safety razor were not the cause of his death, which resulted instead from asphyxia by hanging. Boyd v. Harper, E.D.Va.1988, 702 F.Supp. 578. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegation that police officers failed to provide proper medical attention to pretrial detainee while he was booked and after he hanged himself in cell failed to state a § 1983 claim for violation of detainee's due process rights, since officers' alleged failure to provide medical aid did not rise to level of "deliberate indifference" or "gross negligence," but, at worst, constituted mere negligence. Danese v. Asman, E.D.Mich.1987, 670 F.Supp. 709. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Availability of adequate postdeprivation state remedy did not preclude finding that claim for relief was stated by count in civil rights complaint seeking to hold police officers liable under § 1983 for death of pretrial detainee who, after being beaten by the officers and placed in cell without being treated for his injuries and without being adequately supervised despite officers' knowledge of his suicidal tendencies, hanged himself since facts alleged in the count related to substantive due process right and arguably could shock conscience of the court. Madden v. City of Meriden, D.C.Conn.1985, 602 F.Supp. 1160. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Plaintiff, a pretrial detainee who was involuntarily committed to mental health facility after he cut his wrist in an unsuccessful suicide attempt, had no justifiable expectation of remaining in an involuntary commitment status at the mental health facility, and he was therefore not deprived of due process of law by reason of the fact that, on two occasions, he was transferred back to the county farm prison without first being provided a hearing. Santori v. Fong, E.D.Pa.1980, 484 F.Supp. 1029. Constitutional Law 262

Allegations that employees of county prison knew, or reasonably should have known, that they were to keep pretrial detainee under observation as a potential suicide risk, but failed to do so, and that employees failed to remove from detainee items which he could use in committing suicide were sufficient to state §§ 1983 claims against employees; complaint contained numerous facts which, when viewed in their totality and supplemented by information obtained in discovery, might support an inference of liability on the part of some or all of the prison employees. Kulp v. Veruette, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 911, 2006 WL 314461, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2490. ---- Deliberate indifference, medical care, pretrial detainees

Evidence permitted finding that police officers knew of and disregarded substantial risk of harm to detainee's health and safety and thus denied detainee adequate medical care in violation of his due process rights under deliberate indifference standard, given that each officer viewed detainee in significant physical distress, but made no attempt to summon or provide medical care until several minutes later, when sergeant checked on detainee and discovered that he was not breathing. Estate of Owensby v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 414 F.3d 596, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2023. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Jail staff did not display a deliberate indifference to a substantial risk of suicide by putting intoxicated arrestee in a regular cell and allowing him to keep his civilian clothes, rather than placing arrestee on suicide watch or sending him to hospital until he sobered up, in §§ 1983 action related to arrestee's suicide; arrestee had been arrested numerous times and never attempted to injure himself and arrestee did not have mental-health history implying any disposition toward suicide. Bradich ex rel. Estate of Bradich v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 413 F.3d 688. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Decision of a driver for a transportation service to transport a pretrial detainee to a police station, as directed by police officers, rather than taking him to a hospital as allegedly requested by the detainee, did not amount to deliberate indifference to the detainee's objectively serious medical needs, so as to violate due process; primary authority over the detainee rested with police officers, the detainee's condition had not deteriorated since the officers had last determined that he should be taken to the police station, and the driver lacked medical training or any realistic control over the detainee. Jackson v. Illinois Medi-Car, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 300 F.3d 760. Carriers 281; Constitutional Law 262

Estate of pre-trial detainee, who hung himself in his cell at detention center, stated cause of action under §§ 1983 against county sheriff, in his official capacity, for violating detainee's Fourteenth Amendment rights; detainee's Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated because, while he was pre-trial detainee at detention center, employees working there ignored his substantial risk of suicide, despite their subjective knowledge of the risk, and violation of detainee's constitutional rights was result of sheriff's failure to provide adequate staffing and safe housing for suicidal inmates, and in light of sheriff's knowledge that inmate suicide was a problem, his failure to address any policies that were causing those suicides constituted deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of inmates. Smith v. Brevard County, M.D.Fla.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 1243. Prisons 17(2)

County jail and jail personnel did not act with deliberate indifference to pre-trial detainee's serious medical needs, and thus, jail and jail personnel were not liable under §§ 1983 to detainee for violation of his right to due process; even if detainee was involved in several altercations with other inmates, he never filed grievances or complaints about those incidents, detainee claimed only some bruising and a bloody nose as result of altercations, jail nurse gave detainee pain medication and cleaned his nose after he sustained bloody nose, and although detainee requested medical attention for a sore finger after the altercations, he did not complain at that time about injuries from fights. Cirilla v. Kankakee County Jail, C.D.Ill.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 937. Prisons 17(2)

Police officers were not deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs of pretrial detainee in violation of Fourteenth Amendment in failing to seek further medical attention for him at scene of motorcycle accident or during booking for driving while intoxicated (DWI), notwithstanding that detainee later died sometime that night in his cell of complications of blunt force chest injuries, where arrestee refused further medical treatment after being evaluated by paramedics at scene, who found no major injuries requiring attention at hospital. Patrick v. Lewis, D.Minn.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1134. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Pretrial detainee, who simply alleged that jail officials did not act in accordance with municipal procedures, failed to show that the defendant municipalities' training practices were so deliberately indifferent to the rights of detainees as to warrant §§ 1983 liability under Monell for failure to provide adequate medical care to detainee. Hollenbaugh v. Maurer, N.D.Ohio 2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 894. Civil Rights 1352(4)

2491. Educational or vocational training, pretrial detainees

Unconvicted detainees housed in administrative segregation unit at detention center were entitled to participate in facility's educational programs at appropriate times and places, although security considerations justified refusal to allow participation in such programs at same time and place as other inmates. Giampetruzzi v. Malcolm, S.D.N.Y.1975, 406 F.Supp. 836. Prisons 4(5)

Denial of pretrial detainees, while confined in state prison, of access to work and training programs provided to other prisoners could not, on record before court be found to be unconstitutional. Tyrrell v. Taylor, E.D.Pa.1975, 394 F.Supp. 9, modified on other grounds 535 F.2d 823. Prisons 12

Prisoners' claim of right to academic programs which had been available to them while in pretrial detention does not rise to level of fundamental constitutional right deserving of federal judicial interference with internal administration of state prisons. Jordon v. Keve, D.C.Del.1974, 387 F.Supp. 765. Prisons 4(5)

2492. Hygienic conditions, pretrial detainees

Allegation by pretrial detainee that he was subjected to overflowed toilet in his isolation cell and had to endure stench of his own feces and urine for four days amounted to de minimis imposition on detainee's rights and was insufficient to state civil rights claim based on conditions of confinement; detainee did not allege that he was exposed to disease or suffered any other consequences of exposure, and detainee did not dispute assertion by jail officials that he was offered opportunity to clean up mess himself but declined to do so. Smith v. Copeland, C.A.8

(Mo.) 1996, 87 F.3d 265. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Filthy conditions of cell did not constitute unconstitutionally cruel and unusual punishment respecting inmate who had been convicted and was awaiting sentencing, and did not violate due process respecting pretrial detainee, given brevity of their confinement under such conditions; the intolerable conditions lasted not more than 24 hours before adequate cleaning supplies were made available which could make conditions tolerable. Whitnack v. Douglas County, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1994, 16 F.3d 954. Constitutional Law 262; Sentencing And Punishment 1539

With respect to his second detainment, pretrial detainee sufficiently stated a claim against county defendants and correctional officer under Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment; detainee alleged that county jail maintained policies and customs tolerating cruel and unusual punishment of convicted prisoners and pretrial detainees, that the correctional officer and jail, by and through its elected officers and appointed employees, strapped him to a wheelchair for several hours, forcing him to urinate on himself and sit in his urine for several hours, while he was in a manic state, that the correctional officer and jail knew of his mental condition because it was documented at its facility, and that the officer's and jail's acts were intentional with malice and reckless disregard for his federally protected rights. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609.

Pretrial detainee's allegations that detention facility failed to provide clean sheets, clothing, and towel, had limited number of toilets, showers, and sinks, and lacked sufficient toilet paper, soap, and cleaning materials stated claim for violation of due process, as such conditions were probably not reasonably related to legitimate government objective. Wilson v. Cook County Bd. of Commissioners, N.D.Ill.1995, 878 F.Supp. 1163. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2493. Overcrowding, pretrial detainees

Pretrial detainee could not maintain civil rights claim against county sheriff, executive director of county department of corrections, and superintendent of county jail regarding overcrowding that caused alleged inadequacy of supplies or sleeping arrangements at county jail, where detainee did not maintain that those defendants ordered overcrowding conditions as measure of punishment, but, rather, that they were aware of overcrowding at facility and failed to correct it; those defendants did not design jail, did not have ability to build larger facility, and could not control the number of people assigned to their custody. Landfair v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1995, 911 F.Supp. 323. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2494. Privacy, pretrial detainees

Arrestees detained in a city jail without any clothing or covering for between six and 18 hours, with at least limited exposure to viewing by members of the opposite sex, stated claims for violation of their right of privacy under the Fourth Amendment; even if they were deprived of clothing as a suicide prevention measure, the removal of their underclothing was not adequately justified. Wilson v. City of Kalamazoo, W.D.Mich.2000, 127 F.Supp.2d 855. Civil Rights 1395(6)

2495. Recreation, pretrial detainees

Inmate's allegations that he was deprived of out-of-cell exercise for six months during prison lockdown, and that he suffered from depression, and physical symptoms as a result, demonstrated injuries from an objectively serious deprivation for purposes of inmate's § 1983 action alleging violation of Eighth Amendment protection against cruel and unusual punishment, where inmate was shackled when he was allowed out of his cell for weekly showers and infrequent family and medical visits, and denial of exercise privileges was not brought on by inmate's misconduct or propensity to escape. Delaney v. DeTella, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 256 F.3d 679. Prisons 17(5); Sentencing And

Punishment 1541

Pretrial detainee failed to establish § 1983 due process claim based on contention that he was denied opportunity to participate in outdoor recreation, given evidence that detainee was denied recreation on only one occasion because prison official misunderstood a note in his file to be a security override; one-time, accidental denial of recreation could not support constitutional claim. Frost v. Agnos, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1998, 152 F.3d 1124. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(5)

Level of exercise which must be provided to a pretrial detainee or an inmate consistent with due process or the protection against cruel and unusual punishment varies based upon the circumstances of each case. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Sentencing And Punishment 1541

In view of lack of facilities for exercise and recreation for pretrial detainees confined in county jails, county officials would be ordered to submit plans for establishment of recreational facilities and programs for pretrial detainees housed in such county jails. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 17(5)

Unconvicted detainees housed in administrative segregation unit of New York City House of Detention for Men were entitled to use of day room during period in which they were entitled to be outside their cells, subject to reasonable limitation of number of people who could use room at one time. Giampetruzzi v. Malcolm, S.D.N.Y.1975, 406 F.Supp. 836. Prisons 4(5)

County detention center officials were not deliberately indifferent to alleged denial of detainee's opportunity to exercise, for purpose of detainee's § 1983 conditions of confinement claim against county and detention center officials, where there was no showing that detainee notified officials that he was being denied the opportunity to exercise. Ullrich v. Canyon County Detention Center, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 752, 2003 WL 23095985, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2496. Rehabilitation programs, pretrial detainees

Pretrial detainee is presumed innocent until proven guilty and is not to be punished or subjected to rehabilitation before he is tried or convicted of crime and thus, only constitutional purpose of incarceration for pretrial detainee is detention itself. Padgett v. Stein, M.D.Pa.1975, 406 F.Supp. 287. Criminal Law 308; Prisons 13(2)

2497. Riots or disturbances, pretrial detainees

In § 1983 action arising out of prison riots and fire allegedly caused by overcrowding of prison, pretrial detainees were required to rely upon Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of due process, whereas inmates were required to rely upon Eighth Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment. Brogsdale v. Barry, C.A.D.C.1991, 926 F.2d 1184, 288 U.S.App.D.C. 311. Constitutional Law 262; Sentencing And Punishment 1532; Sentencing And Punishment 1538

Force used in quelling jailbreak by pretrial detainees was not excessive; detainees had already rendered one jailor unconscious and when deterred in their attempt to escape, began hand-to-hand combat with officers. Smith v. Holzapfel, E.D.Tex.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1089. Prisons 13(4)

2498. Segregation, pretrial detainees

Segregation of pre-trial detainee for protection of detainee and other inmates after verbal confrontation was not punishment for purposes of § 1983 claim for violation of due process, absent any evidence that guard acted to punish detainee for crimes for which she was awaiting trial or for her role in confrontation, and absent evidence that segregation was arbitrary response to situation. Zarnes v. Rhodes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 64 F.3d 285. Civil Rights

1088(4)

Pretrial detainees who are lawfully held lack due process liberty interest in being housed separately from sentenced inmates and, thus, fact that detainee was confined with sentenced inmate could not be basis of § 1983 civil rights claim. Chapman v. Guessford, D.Del.1996, 924 F.Supp. 30. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 4(4)

2499. Telephones, pretrial detainees

County jail rule which allowed pretrial detainees to make three outgoing telephone calls in any five-day period and which allowed such calls only from 9:00 to 11:00 A.M., 2:00 to 4:00 P.M., and 6:00 to 9:00 P.M. and which limited such calls to five minutes each, except those to or from detainee's attorney of record did not unduly restrict communication between detainees and the outside world, and would not be altered by district court. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(6)

Complete denial to pretrial detainees at city jail of use of the telephone may not take place unless required for security reasons. Collins v. Schoonfield, D.C.Md.1972, 344 F.Supp. 257, supplemented 363 F.Supp. 1152. Prisons 4(6)

With respect to prisoners awaiting trial, jail officials were required to make provisions for prisoners to make local telephone calls during stated hours and were not to monitor such calls, but officials were not required to make such provisions for prisoners under sentence. Jones v. Wittenberg, N.D.Ohio 1971, 330 F.Supp. 707, 29 Ohio Misc. 35, 58 O.O.2d 47, affirmed 456 F.2d 854, 62 O.O.2d 232. Prisons 4(6)

2500. Temperature in facilities, pretrial detainees

Pretrial detainee failed to establish § 1983 due process claim based on his complaints about temperature in his cell, conditions in medical center, and conditions in temporary holding cell, absent showing that such circumstances ultimately deprived him of the minimal civilized measures of life's necessities. Frost v. Agnos, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1998, 152 F.3d 1124. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(1)

Pretrial detainee's alleged exposure to low temperature in detention cell, while naked and with no alternative means of protecting himself from cold, even after he had complained to guards for hours, and guards' only responded with jeers and laughter, supported claim against guards for inadequate shelter, in violation of Fourteenth Amendment; it was not until detainee threatened guards with criminal prosecution that they called nurses, and by the time nurses arrived, his body temperature was three degrees below normal. Anton v. Sheriff of DuPage County, Ill., N.D.Ill.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 993. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 17(1)

2501. Training, pretrial detainees

In order to find county liable under § 1983 for failing to adequately train its detention facility officers in the use of force, detainee alleging excessive use of force would have to establish that (1) the officers exceeded constitutional limitations on the use of force, (2) the use of force arose under circumstances that constitute a usual and recurring situation with which officers must deal, (3) the inadequate training demonstrates a deliberate indifference on the part of the county toward persons with whom the officers come into contact, and (4) there is a direct causal link between the constitutional deprivation and the inadequate training. Lewis v. Board of County Com'rs of Sedgwick County, KS, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 56 Fed.Appx. 873, 2003 WL 116129, Unreported, on remand 2003 WL 1785793 . Civil Rights 1352(4) heat wave was not an irrational, arbitrary or purposeless response to jail's ventilation problems which resulted in death of pretrial detainee, particularly in light of fact that new jail was nearing completion, the heat wave was an extraordinary event that might well have made meaningless even more sweeping improvements, and officials coped by providing additional ice, water and salt and by permitting inmates to remove outer clothing. Willis v. Barksdale, W.D.Tenn.1985, 625 F.Supp. 411. Prisons 17(.5)

Where ventilation and circulation of air in interim county jail was poor, plumbing was antiquated, jail had no fire escapes or sprinkling system, there was no program for dealing with drug or alcohol abuse except hospitalization for detainees experiencing drug withdrawal, women detainees were provided approximately 20-square feet of living space when cells were full, detainees ate meals in public hallway which was also the primary area for attorney-client consultation, and walls and ceilings in kitchen and actual detention area were covered with 40 to 50 years of grease and dirt which was essentially unremovable, such jail was unfit for use as correctional facility in which to detain women who were unconvicted of any crime, and county officials would be ordered to submit plan for providing female pretrial detainees with constitutional living environment. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Chemical Dependents 12; Prisons 17(1)

2503. Visitation, pretrial detainees

County jail's policy prohibiting friends from visiting pretrial detainee did not violate due process, where detainee had free access to visits by family clergy and counsel to the extent that they wished to visit him, detainee had free use of a telephone in his cell to speak with his friends, and detainee sent and received over 200 letters while at jail. Murray v. Edwards County Sheriff's Dept., D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1280. Prisons 4(6)

Constitutionally protected liberty interest, enforceable under § 1983, was created by Illinois regulations governing visitation in county jails; under many of the regulations, once statutory condition precedent was met, right to visitation flowed automatically. Flournoy v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1995, 897 F.Supp. 350. Constitutional Law 262

County jail rule which limited frequency of visits for pretrial detainees, denied physical contact visiting, and restricted persons who were allowed to visit pretrial detainees was not unconstitutionally restrictive. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(6)

2504. Assault by other prisoners, pretrial detainees

Fact that corrections officer observed stabbing of pretrial detainee by another inmate did not render officer deliberately indifferent as to second attack on detainee perpetrated minutes later by several inmates, precluding recovery in detainee's §§1983 due process action alleging officer's failure to protect; officer, after entering room where stabbing had occurred and attempting to restore order, found and confiscated knife near spot where he had observed stabbing, permitting inference that first assailant was now unarmed, detainee was unable to identify inmates who mounted second attack as participants in first, and there was no evidence of more than one weapon in initial attack. Fisher v. Lovejoy, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 414 F.3d 659. Prisons 17(4)

Pretrial detainee in county jail who was assaulted by fellow detainee could not maintain failure to supervise claim against county sheriff under § 1983, based upon purported deliberate indifference to detainee's health and safety by jail officials who worked under sheriff's supervision, where detainee could not establish officials' deliberate indifference. Burrell v. Hampshire County, C.A.1 (Mass.) 2002, 307 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1358

Jailers did not act with deliberate indifference to pretrial detainee's safety when they housed detainee with inmate who raped him, and therefore jailers were not liable under § 1983; although jailers were on notice that inmate was easily provoked, detainee and inmate had previously been housed together without incident, and jailers neither knew, nor had reason to know, that inmate was violent sexual aggressor. Perkins v. Grimes, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1998, 161 F.3d 1127, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1093

Pretrial detainee's pro se allegations that guard was deliberately indifferent and showed deliberate or reckless disregard for her rights, by placing her in cell with mentally ill inmate who presented imminent potential for assault and posed substantial risk of danger, were sufficient to state § 1983 claim. Zarnes v. Rhodes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 64 F.3d 285. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Pretrial detainee, who alleged that racial and sexual violence was commonplace at county jail and that sheriff failed to exercise proper supervisory authority or direction to remedy the problem of violence that he either knew or should have known, stated a cause of action under this section for violation of his due process rights. Matzker v. Herr, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 748 F.2d 1142. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Federal prisoner assaulted by other prisoners during pretrial detention in county jail was not entitled to recover from sheriff and head jailer under this section in absence of showing that sheriff and jailer had failed to exercise reasonable care in their personal capacities in providing for plaintiff's safekeeping. Brown v. U. S., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1973, 486 F.2d 284, on remand 374 F.Supp. 723.

Inmate may bring § 1983 action for damages in absence of any physical attack if inmate has suffered extreme and officially sanctioned psychological harm from living in fear of attack by other inmates. Heisler v. Kralik, S.D.N.Y.1997, 981 F.Supp. 830, affirmed 164 F.3d 618. Prisons 17(4)

Arrestee's allegations that director of county jail, in allowing him to be attacked and raped in county jail, failed in his duty to make certain that arrestee remained healthy, safe and free from criminal assaults while incarcerated after his judicial release were insufficient to state § 1983 claim against director in his individual capacity for violation of arrestee's federal civil rights in connection with the attack; arrestee did not allege that director was privy to any information that would allow reasonable finder of fact to conclude that he ignored excessive risk of harm to arrestee. McMurry v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1082. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pretrial detainee injured in fight with other inmates failed to establish § 1983 claim of deliberate indifference by correctional officers in connection with allegedly inadequate search for weapons, in light of wide-ranging discretion afforded prison officials in adoption and execution of policies relating to security, fact that two of "weapons" found consisted essentially of noncontraband items, i.e., a pencil and a pen, and absent prior threats against detainee by inmates involved in fight. Breland v. Abate, S.D.N.Y.1996, 917 F.Supp. 220. Civil Rights 1088(4); Prisons 17(4)

While pretrial detainee's claim that his life was placed in danger by virtue of correction officer's statements to other inmates that detainee was to blame for revocation of various privileges and shaking-down residents of county jail wing in which inmate was detained, allegedly in retaliation for filing grievance, might rise to the level of due process violation, detainee could not bring civil rights claim based on that allegation absent allegation that he actually suffered injury or that attack was imminent. Landfair v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1995, 878 F.Supp. 1106. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Actions of county authorities in connection with assault of pretrial detainee by inmate in county jail could form basis of valid § 1983 claim, notwithstanding their contention that their conduct, at worst, amounted to mere negligence; jury could find that failure of authorities to act, in light of their knowledge of conditions at county jail and their knowledge of assailant's dangerousness, was sufficiently deliberate to implicate the due process clause and support a § 1983 claim. Ryan v. Burlington County, N.J., D.N.J.1989, 708 F.Supp. 623, affirmed 889 F.2d 1286. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Pretrial detainee's allegations that jail assistant superintendent failed to provide adequate security from attack by other detainees by moving detainee who instigated attack on plaintiff onto plaintiff's tier, which was for nonaggressive inmates, and that four detainees who beat him had history of violence, including attack on another detainee on tier shortly before assault on plaintiff stated claim against assistant superintendent for failure to adequately supervise prisoners and for deliberately exposing pretrial detainee to known risk of violence. Gibson v. Babcox, N.D.Ill.1984, 601 F.Supp. 1156. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2505. Assault by prison officials, pretrial detainees

Pretrial detainee who alleged that she was sexually assaulted by jailer sufficiently alleged constitutional violation, for purpose of § 1983 action against city and police chief which asserted claim of inadequate staffing; city had deprived detainee of her liberty and thus had constitutional obligation, under due process clause, to provide detainee with minimal levels of safety and security. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Sheriff's deputies' shooting and killing of unarmed pretrial detainee who was escaping from custody during transport from one holding cell to another did not violate due process, where sheriff's department policy, allowing deadly force only when immediately necessary to prevent escape, was designed in good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline and not maliciously and sadistically for purpose of causing harm, deputies fired at detainee only as last resort to prevent escape, and detainee would have escaped had deputies not fired upon him. Brothers v. Klevenhagen, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 28 F.3d 452, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 639, 513 U.S. 1045, 130 L.Ed.2d 545. Constitutional Law 262; Prisons 13(4)

A pretrial detainee who alleged that he suffered a cut wrist and bruises, but no loss of consciousness or permanent injury, could not state a federal civil rights claim for excessive or brutal use of force by jail officials; detainee created need for officers to apply reasonable force to subdue him when detainee resisted being put into cell of another inmate, even if detainee's actions were necessary to avoid being injured by other inmate. White v. Roper, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 901 F.2d 1501. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In an excessive force action by an inmate, a prisoner must prove that the security measure taken inflicted unnecessary and wanton pain and suffering, which requires that an inmate prove that prison officials acted with a culpable state of mind, that is, force was not applied in a good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, but rather, was applied maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm; additionally, inmate must prove that prison officials' actions, taken contextually, do not comport with contemporary standards of decency. Concepcion v. Morton, D.N.J.2000, 125 F.Supp.2d 111, reversed 306 F.3d 1347. Prisons 13(4)

Pretrial detainee could not base claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for police assault on constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment since that prohibition applied only to persons convicted of criminal offenses. Spell v. McDaniel, E.D.N.C.1984, 591 F.Supp. 1090. Civil Rights 1093

2506. Confiscation of property, pretrial detainees

Civil rights complaint seeking damages for loss of pair of shoes by pretrial detainee was subject to dismissal as frivolous; conduct alleged was not sufficiently egregious to amount to independent constitutional tort, and to extent that it was construed as alleging violation of procedural due process, state had provided adequate postdeprivation remedy. Vincent v. Lynch, N.D.Ga.1985, 626 F.Supp. 801. Federal Civil Procedure 1741

2507. Harassment by prison officials, pretrial detainees

County jail corrections officer's comments to pretrial detainee, "How are you doing little boy," and "How's the little guy doing," although inappropriate, did not violate detainee's constitutional rights, despite contention that comments constituted sexual harassment, where comment made no suggestion of any threat of violence and contention respecting comments having sexual connotations was not persuasive. Ellis v. Meade, D.Me.1995, 887 F.Supp. 324. Civil Rights 1088(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Alleged use of vile and abusive language against pretrial detainee did not form basis for civil rights action. Zeno v. Cropper, S.D.N.Y.1986, 650 F.Supp. 138. Civil Rights 1098

2508. Release, pretrial detainees

Detainee who was released immediately following his appearance before judge did not have § 1983 claim as detainee did not suffer a postarraignment deprivation of liberty. Johnson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1088(4)

2509. Miscellaneous rights, pretrial detainees

Neither purchase of patrol wagons which lacked safety restraints, nor manner of transporting arrestees in those wagons, was policy that obviously presented a substantial risk of serious harm, as would rise to level of deliberate indifference to rights of pretrial detainee on part of municipal board of police commissioners, in violation of due process clause, and allow recovery in § 1983 action brought by detainee for injuries allegedly sustained after he was placed in wagon with his hands behind his back in handcuffs, and was thrown forward into bulkhead of wagon's passenger compartment. Spencer v. Knapheide Truck Equipment Co., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1999, 183 F.3d 902, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1165, 528 U.S. 1157, 145 L.Ed.2d 1076. Constitutional Law 262; Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Evidence that jailer failed to check on group cell during hour between last check and beating of pretrial detainee by other inmates was not sufficient to show deliberate indifference and causation necessary to hold jailer individually liable under § 1983 for pretrial detainee's injuries. Hale v. Tallapoosa County, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1995, 50 F.3d 1579. Civil Rights 1420

Material issues of fact, as to whether jail detainee was charged under Maine witness tampering statute that involved threatening witnesses or tampering statute involving non-threatening behavior, precluded summary judgment that county violated Fourth Amendment rights by conducting strip search of detainee accused of non-violent, non-weapons, non-drug felony without showing of reasonable suspicion that detainee was harboring contraband on or within her body. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 115. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Pretrial detainee did not have a protected liberty interest in avoiding transfer to another detention facility, or in having unrestricted telephone privileges, for purpose of §§ 1983 due process claim against county prosecutor, where prosecutor had legitimate need to limit those privileges based upon a witness's complaints. Phillips v. Kiser, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 128, 2006 WL 721818, Unreported. Prisons 13.3

Former pretrial detainee, suing under § 1983 to recover for personal injuries, was entitled to discover log book entries for particular date; evidence was relevant to establish claims that detainee was in fact working in kitchen at time of accident and that equipment that allegedly injured him had been issued to him. Reyes v. N.Y.C. Correctional Dept., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 282201, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1593

2531. Prisoners' access to courts generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prisoners have constitutional right of access to the courts. Bounds v. Smith, U.S.N.C.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1491, 430 U.S. 817, 52 L.Ed.2d 72.

Prisoners have fundamental right of access to courts and right to petition for redress of grievances. Ward v. Dyke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 58 F.3d 271, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 524, 516 U.S. 991, 133 L.Ed.2d 431. Prisons 4(10.1)

Prisoner had constitutional right to petition the courts. McDonald v. Hall, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1979, 610 F.2d 16.

State prison officials owed prisoner a constitutional duty not to abridge his right of access to the state courts. Bonner v. Coughlin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 517 F.2d 1311, on rehearing 545 F.2d 565, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1507, 435 U.S. 932, 55 L.Ed.2d 529. Convicts 6

While generally federal court does not interfere with internal management of prisons or with classifications of prisoners, a notable exception to rule arises when prison regulations or actions impinge upon prisoner's right to communicate with the courts. Hooks v. Kelley, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1972, 463 F.2d 1210. Prisons 4(12)

Responsibility for ensuring that prison inmate had required access to courts was shared by Pennsylvania, jurisdiction in which inmate was originally placed, and Massachusetts, jurisdiction to which inmate was transferred. Hannon v. Allen, D.Mass.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 71. Prisons 4(10.1)

Congress's purpose in enacting the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) was primarily to curtail claims brought by prisoners under § 1983 and the Federal Torts Claims Act (FTCA), many of which are routinely dismissed as legally frivolous. Bieregu v. Ashcroft, D.N.J.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 342. Convicts 6

Federal civil rights statute provides remedy for violation of right of access to courts if officials' actions are causally connected to plaintiff's failure to succeed in lawsuit as, in such a circumstance, plaintiff has been deprived of property without due process by being deprived of right to be awarded damages in meritorious lawsuit as a result of unconstitutional conduct. Gonsalves v. City of New Bedford, D.Mass.1996, 939 F.Supp. 921. Civil Rights 1056

Prisoner's allegation of intentional violation of right of access to courts states cause of action under § 1983. Oropallo v. Ackerman, D.N.H.1994, 856 F.Supp. 35. Civil Rights 1056; Civil Rights 1094

To show actual injury and have standing to raise claimed violation of right to court access, inmate must show that his efforts to pursue nonfrivolous legal claim were hindered by prison officials. Saunders v. Horn, E.D.Pa.1996, 959 F.Supp. 689, report and recommendation adopted 960 F.Supp. 893. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

2532. Fundamental nature of right, prisoners' access to courts

It is fundamental that access of prisoners to courts for purpose of presenting their complaint may not be denied or obstructed. Leeds v. Watson, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1980, 630 F.2d 674. Prisons 4(10.1)

A state prison inmate's right of unfettered access to the courts is as fundamental a right as any other he may hold and this constitutional imperative prevails over a number of legitimate state concerns involving a state's administration and management of its correctional institutions. Rizzo v. Zubrik, S.D.N.Y.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1058. Prisons 4(10.1)

State prisoner's grievance, which was silent about funeral furlough but simply asserted that prison officials were rude to his family and waited one day before conveying news of his father's death, did not exhaust administrative remedies with regard to his civil rights claim, for purpose of requirement under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) of exhaustion of administrative remedies, that he had been denied equal protection by denial of furlough to attend funeral of father just because he was black when such privileges had routinely been provided to whites. Flournoy v. Schomig, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 535, 2005 WL 2739078, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

State prisoner did not state civil rights claim that prison officials denied him access to courts, where prisoner did not identify any interference with any grievance that prevented him from bringing nonfrivolous claim; although prisoner had constitutional right of access to courts that, by necessity, included right to pursue administrative remedies that had to be exhausted before prisoner could seek relief in court, prisoner had to plead that unjustified acts prevented him from pursuing nonfrivolous claim. Flournoy v. Schomig, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 535, 2005 WL 2739078, Unreported. Prisons 4(10.1)

2533. Actions in which access guaranteed, prisoners' access to courts-- Generally

Constitution guarantees state inmates the right of access to the courts in both habeas corpus and civil rights actions. Rudolph v. Locke, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1979, 594 F.2d 1076. Civil Rights 1094; Habeas Corpus 513

Prisoners' constitutional right to access to courts extends to federal civil rights cases as well as habeas corpus proceedings. Carter v. Mandel, C.A.4 (Md.) 1978, 573 F.2d 172. Civil Rights 1445; Habeas Corpus 690

Prisoners do not have an absolute right to file any civil action they desire. Clark v. Hendrix, N.D.Ga.1975, 397 F.Supp. 966. Convicts 6

2534. ---- Habeas corpus, actions in which access guaranteed, prisoners' access to courts

Death row inmate's § 1983 claim, based on allegation that he had "been told" that he could not file habeas complaint unless he complied with Missouri Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) and submitted copies of his prison account statement and paid full cost, was speculative and could not support stay of execution; inmate did not state he had attempted to file action with Missouri Supreme Court, and it was unknown whether Missouri courts would require from death row inmate facing execution to file writ of habeas corpus. McDonald v. Carnahan, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 125 F.3d 652. Sentencing And Punishment 1798

Maine corrections authorities, who transferred prisoners to federal prison at Leavenworth, Kansas after determining that prisoners were security risks, remained responsible for research and legal assistance accoutrements to which prisoners were entitled for purposes of seeking postconviction relief in courts of state of Maine. Rich v. Zitnay, C.A.1 (Me.) 1981, 644 F.2d 41. Prisons 4(13)

Any denial of right to a habeas corpus hearing brought to extradition gives rise to cause of action under this section which protects all rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution and laws of the United States. Crumley v. Snead, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 620 F.2d 481. Civil Rights 1088(1)

State prisoner's allegations, that his beating by prison officials violated writ of Habeas Corpus Ad Testificandum to produce prisoner in state court for trial, failed to state claim that officials denied his right to access courts, since case had settled and accordingly, prisoner suffered no prejudice to his legal claim by officials' alleged actions. Kalwasinski v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22973420, Unreported. Prisons 4(10.1)

2535. Reasonable access, prisoners' access to courts

Reasonable regulations are necessary to balance the legitimate interests of inmate litigants with budgetary considerations and to prevent abuse. Harrell v. Keohane, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1980, 621 F.2d 1059. Prisons 4(1)

Constitution requires only that prisoners have reasonable access to the courts. Knell v. Bensinger, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 489 F.2d 1014, on remand 380 F.Supp. 494. Constitutional Law 321

Right of reasonable access to the courts extends to inmates using this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights to remedy denials of constitutional rights occurring during incarceration. Nolan v. Scafati, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1970, 430 F.2d 548. Constitutional Law 321

2536. Meaningful access, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner litigants must be given meaningful access to courts. Boston v. Stanton, W.D.Mo.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1049.

2537. Detriment or prejudice, prisoners' access to courts

State prison inmate stated §§ 1983 claim for denial of access to the courts by alleging in his complaint that prison officials' denial of adequate materials had caused him, as pro se litigant, to lose court cases, and by submitting information about those cases in response to officials' motion to dismiss; no further particularity, e.g. showing of how withholding of materials had affected outcome of specific suits, was required at pleading stage. Pratt v. Tarr, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 464 F.3d 730. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Former state prison inmate's §§ 1983 complaint failed to state claim for damages for denial of access to a law library, and was subject to dismissal under the statute governing in forma pauperis actions, where the complaint did not specifically explain how he was injured by any limitations on his access to the law library. Michau v. Charleston County, S.C., C.A.4 (S.C.) 2006, 434 F.3d 725, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1079075. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmate was required to show that he was actually injured by prison officials' alleged interference with his access to courts to pursue civil rights claim against them for such interference, regardless of whether "ancillary" or "central" aspect of right to court access was involved. Oliver v. Fauver, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1997, 118 F.3d 175. Prisons 4(10.1)

Prisoner who offered no facts indicating that alleged shortcomings of attorney provided by prison or lack of law library prejudiced her in a legal case did not establish cognizable injury and accordingly lacked standing to bring federal civil rights action alleging that her constitutional right to access to courts had been violated. Sabers v. Delano, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1996, 100 F.3d 82. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Prisoner's claim, in § 1983 action against prison officials for failure to provide meaningful access to courts, that while he was in segregation his access to library services was inadequate failed where prisoner neither alleged nor showed prejudice to any specific litigation. Gentry v. Duckworth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 65 F.3d 555, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1094

Inmate was not entitled to recover on § 1983 claim against prison official alleging denial of meaningful access to courts; inmate failed to present sufficient evidence that he was prejudiced. Cooper v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 997 F.2d 376, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

State inmate did not suffer actual injury due to prison officials' alleged delay in handling his prison grievance appeal, and thus officials did not thereby violate inmate's right to access courts, where delay did not cause inmate to miss any deadlines or to suffer any prejudice in federal court, and inmate's underlying claim was found to be without merit as matter of law. Brooks v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1179. Prisons 4(10.1)

State prisoner's allegation that correctional officer opened and read the draft of his lawsuit against her and then refused to return it to him did not sufficiently allege actual injury, as element for stating a claim under §§ 1983 for violation of First Amendment constitutional right of access to the courts; prisoner alleged only that as result of not receiving his original draft back he had forgotten exact dates he saw the officer smoking in the prison and thereby allegedly exposing him to unreasonably high levels of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS), but prisoner did not allege that his inability to remember specific dates had unduly prejudiced his case against officer. Bacon v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 475. Constitutional Law 91

Inmate who sued state prison officials, stemming from alleged incident at sallyport and related civil rights violations, failed to establish that warden violated his First Amendment rights to petition for redress by improperly removing inmate's letters of complaint from his master file, as required to maintain claim under §§ 1983; since such file was kept for administrative convenience of prison officials, inmate had no constitutionally protected interest in its contents. Ziemba v. Thomas, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 136. Prisons 13(7.1)

Prisoner failed to state §§ 1983 claim for denial of access to courts against prison guards for allegedly attempting to withhold grievance appeal or engaging in harassment in attempt to discourage prisoner from filing civil rights action, absent any evidence of actual injury flowing from guards' actions. Ornelas v. Giurbino, S.D.Cal.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 955. Civil Rights 1094

State inmate did not suffer actual injury as result of prison official's alleged failure to properly process inmate's legal mail containing his initial petition for writ of certiorari to United States Supreme Court appealing denial of his habeas corpus petition, and thus official did not violate inmate's constitutional right of access to courts, even though inmate's original mailing contained necessary appendix of lower court record, and lower courts failed to respond to inmate's subsequent requests for copies of record, where Supreme Court granted inmate extension of time for filing new petition, but rejected filing for failure to include lower court record. Johnson v. Hornung, S.D.Cal.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 910. Prisons 4(12)

Prisoner did not suffer "actual injury" from changes in his prison schedule, which allegedly held him in his cell past his allotted law library time, and thus did not have claim for denial of meaningful access to courts in absence of any evidence that changes prevented him from pursuing his pending litigation. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593. Prisons 4(13)

Prisoner failed to allege that corrections counselor's refusal to provide him with copy of document from his inmate grievance file actually interfered with or prejudiced prisoner's Article 78 action in state court, and thus allegation failed to state § 1983 claim for denial of right of reasonable access to courts; Article 78 proceeding challenged denial of prisoner's grievance pertaining to counselor's refusal of prisoner's program assignment request, but prisoner had no federally protected or state law right to particular prison job assignment. Amaker v. Hakes, W.D.N.Y.1996, 919 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1094

Inmate did not establish detriment element of his claim that county jail authorities deprived him of his constitutional right of access to court when they did not permit him to take his legal papers upon his transfer to state prison, with respect to his murder trial in Illinois; although he made claim that legal documents he lost were essential to his being able to argue certain issues, Illinois Supreme Court had denied him leave to file his own brief; thus, he was himself precluded from raising such issues, and in any event, was otherwise provided with adequate access to courts by having appointed counsel on appeal. Banks v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1995, 914 F.Supp. 231. Prisons 4(13)

Prison inmate, who alleged that he failed to meet required deadlines on four instances as result of prison officials' denial of access to library, refusal to notarize legal document, refusal to permit him to serve subpoenas for other inmates, and failing to mail documents by express mail, failed to prove any injury as a result of alleged denials, and thus failed to show retaliation or harassment for filing petition for writ of habeas corpus, in violation of § 1983; inmate failed to allege that he suffered dismissal or denial of relief due to his failure to meet court deadlines. Raske v. Dugger, M.D.Fla.1993, 819 F.Supp. 1046. Civil Rights 1094

Inmate failed to establish that his correspondence with family court which purportedly was lost by prison officials would have had any impact on outcome of visitation rights proceeding so as to entitle inmate to recover under § 1983 for denial of access to courts; inmate was never denied visitation, his daughter periodically visited him at prison, and inmate had opportunity to communicate with daughter's counsel and to obtain copies of those documents once he realized they were lost. Herrera v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1993, 815 F.Supp. 713. Civil Rights 1094

State prisoner did not suffer "actual injury" in pursuing a nonfrivolous claim, so as to be deprived of access to courts by his confinement in administrative segregation, where dismissal of his earlier claim was due to his failure to cooperate in finalizing pretrial order, not due to any inability to access law library or scribe materials. Moredock v. O'Bannon, C.A.7 (Ind.) 2001, 17 Fed.Appx. 447, 2001 WL 939083, Unreported. Prisons 4(10.1)

Allegations in state prison inmate's §§ 1983 complaint against prison librarians were minimally sufficient to allege "actual injury" as required to state a claim for denial of meaningful access to the courts, and thus, the District Court should have, at the least, allowed inmate an opportunity to amend prior to dismissing his complaint pursuant to the in forma pauperis statute, where he alleged that the defendants' actions resulted in the denial of his appeal in state post-conviction relief proceedings, docket attached to his complaint clearly indicated that his brief was untimely filed, and he specified several dates on which he requested, but was arbitrarily denied, access to the prison law library. Jones v. Domalakes, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 161 Fed.Appx. 216, 2006 WL 41339, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Plaintiff, who alleged that law firm partner, section chief of career organization, and others conspired to deny his right of access to courts regarding an underlying defamation claim, did not have viable §§ 1983 claim, where the underlying defamation claim was based purely on speculation, such that plaintiff could not suffer an injury by being shut out of court on that claim. Foster v. Pennsylvania Human Relations Com'n., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 157 Fed.Appx. 488, 2005 WL 2891368, Unreported. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Prison inmate failed to show that he suffered actual harm as a result of alleged violation of his right of access to courts by officials at facility in which he was being held, as required to prevail in subsequent § 1983 action based on violation. Brooks v. Terry, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 208 F.3d 217, Unreported. Civil Rights 1094

2538. State court proceedings, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner's right of access to court did not create right to bring independent lawsuit to complain of noncompliance with state court orders in litigation concerning prisoner's right to use and possess certain word processor; prisoner's remedy was to seek finding of contempt in state court. Spruytte v. Govorchin, W.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1094. Prisons 4(10.1)

2539. Juveniles, prisoners' access to courts

Juveniles committed to state institution for delinquent boys, no less than adult offenders, were entitled to reasonable access to the courts. Morgan v. Sproat, S.D.Miss.1977, 432 F.Supp. 1130. Constitutional Law 328

2540. Transferring prisoners, prisoners' access to courts

In determining whether inmates of county jail have adequate access to courts, district court need not consider those inmates whose confinement is of a very temporary nature or for purposes of transfer to other institutions where the brevity of confinement does not permit sufficient time for prisoners to petition the courts. Cruz v. Hauck, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 515 F.2d 322, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1118, 424 U.S. 917, 47 L.Ed.2d 322. Prisons 4(10.1)

2541. Obscene or abusive petitions, prisoners' access to courts

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prison authorities' practice of screening petitions to court for purpose of preventing inmates from sending petitions containing obscene, abusive or otherwise objectionable allegations or statements was improper, since courts could protect themselves from any improper matter. Talley v. Stephens, E.D.Ark.1965, 247 F.Supp. 683. Prisons 4(12)

2542. Multiple actions or motions filed, prisoners' access to courts

District court's findings on examination of its records, that, at time state prisoner alleged he was deprived of reasonable access to courts, state court received one brief and two written motions from him, that United States Supreme Court received petition for writ of habeas corpus and petition for writ of certiorari and that within three years he had filed three suits in court of appeals coupled with numerous papers and motions pertaining thereto, demonstrated that he had not been denied access to courts that would entitle him to damages under this section. Conway v. Oliver, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 429 F.2d 1307. Civil Rights 1424

Fact of prisoner's filing of complaint against prison officials does not automatically disprove prisoner's claim of denial of access to courts in violation of his civil rights. Acevedo v. Forcinito, D.N.J.1993, 820 F.Supp. 886. Civil Rights 1094

Inmate who failed to show any interference with his access to courts save for unsubstantiated allegation that he did not receive court briefing schedule did not establish the prison superintendent's actions and mail policies denied him access to courts; examples of inmate's ample access to courts included his filing of petition, appeal, motion for reconsideration and petition for allowance of appeal. Boyd v. Petsock, W.D.Pa.1992, 795 F.Supp. 743. Prisons 4(12)

2543. Personal appearance in court, prisoners' access to courts

Generally speaking, prisoners who bring civil actions, including prisoners who bring actions under this section, have no right to be personally present at any stage of the judicial proceedings. Holt v. Pitts, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1980, 619 F.2d 558. Federal Civil Procedure 1951

When plaintiff in civil rights suit is confined in state prison at time of hearing, he has no right to appear personally, but he is entitled to have process issued and served, to notice of any motion thereafter made by defendant or court to dismiss complaint and grounds therefor, to opportunity to submit written memorandum in opposition to such motion, to statement of grounds for dismissal, and to opportunity to amend complaint to overcome deficiency unless it clearly appears from complaint that deficiency cannot be overcome by amendment. Potter v. McCall, C.A.9 (Or.) 1970, 433 F.2d 1087. Convicts 6

Despite allegation by plaintiff that county jail prisoners being held on both felony and misdemeanor traffic charges were subject to systematic failure to arrange for appearance in traffic court, with effect that warrants would be issued for prisoner's rearrest and reconfinement on the traffic charges after release on the felony charges, jail officials were not derelict in their duty as to plaintiff and did not otherwise violate his civil rights, where his first hearing on the traffic charges in question was scheduled for date more than three weeks after his release from jail. Harris v. Elrod, N.D.Ill.1985, 601 F.Supp. 617. Civil Rights 1088(4)

While prisoners do retain their right to access to the courts, this does not necessarily mean that a prisoner has some inherent constitutional right to appear personally at a hearing or at a trial with respect to a civil suit which he has filed. Clark v. Hendrix, N.D.Ga.1975, 397 F.Supp. 966. Convicts 6

State prisoner failed to state a cognizable claim under § 1983 against corrections officers for denial of his right of access to the courts, although prisoner alleged that officers caused him to miss court-imposed deadline, where he did not allege that lawsuit he was attempting to pursue involved fact or conditions of his confinement or included nonfrivolous claims, or any hindrance to his lawsuit beyond "mere delay." Callegari v. Chesterman, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31478178, Unreported. Civil Rights 1094

2544. Civilian clothing, prisoners' access to courts

Constitutional rights to counsel and access to the courts do not contemplate right to have "particular" clothing available to wear at trial. Mingo v. Patterson, D.C.Colo.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1358. Criminal Law 641.1; Prisons 4(10.1)

2545. Food and water provision, prisoners' access to courts

State prisoners' complaints regarding failure to provide lunch for inmates who are taken to court in morning and not tried until afternoon and lack of drinking water did not involve paramount rights and failed to establish that right of access to state courts had been impaired. Lovern v. Cox, W.D.Va.1974, 374 F.Supp. 32. Prisons 4(10.1)

2546. Assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts--Generally

An inmate's opportunity to confer with counsel is a particularly important constitutional right which courts will not permit to be unnecessarily abridged. Dreher v. Sielaff, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 636 F.2d 1141. Prisons 4(12)

Prison authorities have authority to impose regulations on time, place and manner in which punitive isolation inmates communicate with attorneys and courts, but such regulations must be based on compelling needs of prison administration and discipline and purpose of regulation must not be interference with inmate's communication with courts and attorneys. McCray v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1975, 509 F.2d 1332, on remand 399 F.Supp. 271, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 114, 423 U.S. 859, 46 L.Ed.2d 86. Prisons 13(5)

If refusal of prison officials, on second day of trial, to admit accused's counsel to prison for needed consultation with accused, although judge had ordered prison officials to permit counsel to visit defendant at any time for any length of time, was either wrongfully motivated or without adequate justification, it would constitute infringement of accused's constitutional right to counsel and would be actionable under this section. Via v. Cliff, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 470 F.2d 271. Civil Rights 1094; Criminal Law 641.12(2)

One who is put behind prison walls does not automatically surrender all rights, and a right of access to the courts is one of the rights which a prisoner clearly retains; and that right carries with it the right to seek and obtain the assistance of competent counsel so that the assertion of legal claims may be fully effective. McDonough v. Director of Patuxent, C.A.4 (Md.) 1970, 429 F.2d 1189. Convicts 6

Allegations that prison staff members violated state inmate's due process rights by confining him to administrative segregation without giving him, within reasonable amount of time, either written notification of reasons for his confinement or opportunity to be heard in regard to confinement appeared on the face of complaint to have some chance of success, and therefore inmate, who was proceeding in forma pauperis, satisfied threshold showing of merit in seeking appointment of pro bono counsel. Harris v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21108370, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

2547. ---- Conflict of interest, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

In class action suit challenging prison's treatment of inmates who had tested positive for Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), appointed counsel's own admission to HIV-positive class members, that he refrained from taking aggressive action on their desegregation claims in part because he feared the general prison population would object to it, supported finding that appointed counsel had conflict of interest in his dual representation of HIV-positive prisoners and of the general prison population in another prison conditions suit. Gates v. Cook, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2000, 234 F.3d 221, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 253 F.3d 707. Civil Rights 1445

2548. ---- Alternate means of access, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner is not denied constitutional right by denial of motion requesting appointment of counsel for civil rights action if effective access to courts is assured through some available means. Mingo v. Patterson, D.C.Colo.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1358. Civil Rights 1445

2549. ---- Informal legal advisor, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Appointment of an attorney to act as informal legal advisor for prisoner satisfied test of providing adequate assistance to prisoner from persons trained in law. Boston v. Stanton, W.D.Mo.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1049. Prisons 4(11)

2550. ---- Civil Liberties Union, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

In absence of some countervailing interest, a state cannot prevent an inmate from seeking legal assistance from bona fide attorneys working in an organization such as Civil Liberties Union. Nolan v. Scafati, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1970, 430 F.2d 548. Prisons 4(11)

2551. ---- Paralegals, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Paralegal who was denied contact visits with inmates failed to show adverse impact from visitation restriction, and thus failed to state retaliation claim under § 1983; withdrawal of special accommodation of paralegal, even if done in response to filing of lawsuit by organization employing paralegal, was not sufficiently adverse so as to constitute retaliation since paralegal was free to visit with inmates in noncontact meeting rooms which were all that prison provided to any nonprofessional visitor. American Civil Liberties Union of Maryland, Inc. v. Wicomico County, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 999 F.2d 780. Civil Rights 1094

Paralegal was not entitled to access to state prison inmates where under prison rules only paralegals employed by an attorney could visit prisoners during other than normal visiting hours, plaintiff paralegal had previously represented that he was an attorney and had passively misrepresented his status in gaining entrance to prison shortly prior to inmate disturbance, notwithstanding that it was inconvenient for counsel, who sought to have paralegal interview certain inmates in connection with habeas corpus proceedings to make the 200-mile trip to the prison. Reed v. Evans, S.D.Ga.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1139, affirmed 592 F.2d 1189. Prisons 4(11)

2552. ---- Privileged communications, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Where recorded comments of defendant were a boisterous complaint which he was making while in jail and did not involve any confidential legal advice and could not have been made with the expectation of privacy, the recording of those complaints did not violate the plaintiff's civil rights, despite his contention that the recording invaded his privacy and interfered with his right to consult with counsel. Holman v. Central Arkansas Broadcasting Co., Inc., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1979, 610 F.2d 542. Civil Rights 1094; Torts 341

Given that prisoner's right to counsel under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 6 was directly impinged on, in that important and privileged information in a lawyer's file was vulnerable to disclosure under prison's entry and exit inspection policy, or at least that fear of meaningful disclosure was reasonable, it was not open to reviewing court to deny relief on ground that harm had not yet occurred; enough had been shown to require prison authority to demonstrate that legitimate purposes could not be equally well served by means less threatening to individual constitutional rights. Henry v. Perrin, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1979, 609 F.2d 1010, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1652, 445 U.S. 963, 64

L.Ed.2d 239. Federal Courts 858

Contact by prisoner with an attorney, and the opportunity to communicate privately, is a vital ingredient to the effective assistance of counsel and access to the courts. Bach v. People of State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 504 F.2d 1100, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 3202, 418 U.S. 910, 41 L.Ed.2d 1156. Prisons 4(12)

County's failure to set aside physical facility to allow pretrial detainees to consult privately with attorneys and witnesses impeded detainees' ability to prepare for trial, jeopardized confidentiality of their attorney-client communications, and invaded their right to privacy, and county would be ordered to submit plan by which private facilities for attorney-client visits in jail could be obtained. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(12)

2553. ---- Processing of inmates, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Due process could hardly be accorded county jail inmate who was so worn out by procedures involved in transporting him to court for trial that he lacks alertness to help his attorney in presence of trier of fact, and thus officials would be required to modify substantially present county jail procedures for processing inmate to courts in order to avoid subjecting inmates on trial to such daily trauma. Rutherford v. Pitchess, C.D.Cal.1978, 457 F.Supp. 104. Constitutional Law 272(2)

2554. ---- Book restrictions in visiting room, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner's constitutional right to visit with his legal counsel was not violated by prison policy of not allowing prisoners to bring books into the visiting room, as the security problem posed by books as a vehicle for smuggling contraband into the institution is obvious. Howard v. Cronk, S.D.N.Y.1981, 526 F.Supp. 1227. Constitutional Law 272(2)

2555. ---- Grooming requirements, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Prison official did not violate inmate's constitutional rights by refusing to permit inmate to leave death row without being clean shaven, as required by valid regulation, to see attorney. Solomon v. Zant, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 888 F.2d 1579. Prisons 4(11); Prisons 13(4)

2556. ---- Mail restrictions, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Denial of state prisoner's pro se §§ 1983 First Amendment access to courts claim, challenging prison policy restricting receipt of his legal mail, was warranted, absent showing that prisoner's failure to receive his legal mail actually frustrated, impeded, or hindered his efforts to pursue a legal claim. Wardell v. Duncan, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 470 F.3d 954. Prisons 4(12)

Prisoner failed to establish §§ 1983 claim for unconstitutional denial of access to the courts; although prisoner demonstrated up to a week long delay in the posting of certain legal mail, there was no evidence that prison defendants acted so as to interfere with the posting of his mail, and prisoner did not show actual injury or specific harm which he had suffered as a result of the allegedly alleged delay or mishandling of his mail. Pearson v. Simms, D.Md.2003, 345 F.Supp.2d 515, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 639, 2004 WL 362386. Civil Rights 1094

Interference with prisoner's legal material and access to attorney and courts rise to level of constructional violation which may warrant injunctive relief. Oldham v. Chandler-Halford, N.D.Iowa 1995, 877 F.Supp. 1340. Civil Rights 1454

Charge in civil rights action that prison authorities prevented transmittal of memorandum of law from prisoner to his counsel stated claim upon which relief could be granted. Wells v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.1972, 344 F.Supp. 594. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Where prisoner had right under S.H.A.Ill. ch. 38, § 122-1, to secure postconviction relief, the filing of transcript was not necessary to set appeal procedure in motion within requisite time limit and his attorney could have taken proper action to inform state Supreme Court of difficulty in locating transcript, prisoner was not injured by failure of prison officials to mail transcript of his case to his attorney and therefore could not recover from prison authorities under this section. Jenkins v. Meyers, N.D.Ill.1972, 338 F.Supp. 383, affirmed 481 F.2d 1406. Civil Rights 1094

2557. ---- Self representation, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Because neither Supreme Court of Puerto Rico, nor United States District Court Judge, was constitutionally compelled to accept inmate's invocation or request to self-representation, denial of that invocation or request did not infringe inmate's alleged right to self-representation; thus, he could not recover on his § 1983 claim based on that denial. Concepcion v. Cintron, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 905 F.Supp. 57. Civil Rights 1088(5); Criminal Law 641.4(1)

2558. ---- Telephone restrictions, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Pretrial detainee's § 1983 complaint alleging that he was denied adequate access to telephone for purposes of defending charges against him and that he was denied means to make bail contained sufficient factual allegations to support, under simple notice pleading standard, his claims that jail administrators and sheriff interfered with his right to counsel and bail. Simpson v. Gallant, D.Me.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 341. Civil Rights 1395(6)

State police officers could not be held liable, under § 1983, for alleged violation of arrestee's Sixth Amendment right to counsel arising from arrestee's inability to call his attorney from jail at which he was being held; right to counsel had not attached at the time arrestee was unable to call attorney and officers had no control over jail telephone policies. Fridley v. Horrigs, S.D.Ohio 2000, 162 F.Supp.2d 772, affirmed 291 F.3d 867, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 1262, 537 U.S. 1191, 154 L.Ed.2d 1024. Civil Rights 1358

Denying inmate's request to make telephone call to his attorney, on ground that inmate lacked sufficient money in inmate trust fund account, did not deny inmate access to the courts in violation of First Amendment and could not be basis for § 1983 civil rights claim by inmate against various state prison officials; convenience of access is not constitutionally protected and inmate failed to demonstrate actual interference. Ishaaq v. Compton, W.D.Tenn.1995, 900 F.Supp. 935. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(12)

Allegation that inmate was denied "legal telephone calls" could state claim for relief under due process clause as denial of meaningful access to courts if inmate could demonstrate that telephone was his only avenue for meaningful access to his lawyer because he was unable to contact his lawyer by mail or was denied visits from his lawyer. Williams v. ICC Committee, N.D.Cal.1992, 812 F.Supp. 1029. Constitutional Law 305(2); Prisons 4(12)

Restrictions placed on prisoner's contact with his attorney by telephone did not violate prisoner's civil rights; prisoner did not allege that he was denied absolute access to his counsel by restrictions, but rather that he was delayed in communicating with counsel, and prisoner stated that he was always able to get in contact with his attorney although occasionally he had to wait one day. Bellamy v. McMickens, S.D.N.Y.1988, 692 F.Supp. 205. Civil Rights 1094

While allowing county jail inmates to use a telephone, on which to call their attorneys, was a system which might suffice for most inmates who are awaiting trial and who are constitutionally entitled to appointed counsel at trial, it would not insure that convicted inmates or pretrial detainees seeking to file federal and state petitions for habeas corpus or postconviction relief, in civil rights suits, have meaningful access to the courts. Parnell v. Waldrep, W.D.N.C.1981, 511 F.Supp. 764. Prisons 4(10.1)

Presence of custodial officers when pretrial detainees placed or received telephone calls in county jail posed threats to detainees' rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 and Amend. 6 and to their attorney-client privileges, and district court would order that whenever a detainee in county jail places a call to her attorney of record from telephone located in matron's office, matron and other jail personnel would be required to leave room so that conversation could be conducted in privacy. Moore v. Janing, D.C.Neb.1976, 427 F.Supp. 567. Prisons 4(12)

2559. ---- Time restrictions, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Right of juvenile detained in juvenile center to counsel was not unduly curtailed by 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. weekday visiting hour restriction with its permissible exceptions by special arrangement for weekend and after-hour meetings. Negron v. Wallace, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 436 F.2d 1139, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 2184, 402 U.S. 998, 29 L.Ed.2d 164.

Attorney visiting policy at federal prison which limited access by attorneys from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., seven days a week, with attorneys being issued special identification and which included five attorney conference rooms as well as a larger common space furnished with conference tables was adequate. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, S.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(12)

2560. ---- Transfer of prisoners, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Where state penitentiary inmate complained of transfers between county jails but failed to allege that either of the jails involved closed their doors to his attorney, transfers, although causing some inconvenience, did not amount to denial of inmate's right to counsel under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 6. Mingo v. Patterson, D.C.Colo.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1358. Prisons 4(11)

2561. ---- Civil rights actions, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Inmate did not demonstrate exceptional circumstances to justify appointment of a law student to act as his counsel in his action against corrections officials and health care providers, alleging various constitutional and statutory violations; inmate seemed fully capable of conducting fact investigation, appropriately filing court documents, and understanding and asserting legal claims. Niemic v. Maloney, D.Mass.2006, 448 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1445

In prison inmate's § 1983 action alleging assault by corrections officials, any ineffective assistance of counsel was not a constitutional violation; Sixth Amendment did not apply in a civil case. Piedra v. True, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2002, 52 Fed.Appx. 439, 2002 WL 31656680, Unreported. Trial 21

2562. ---- Class actions, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Substitution of counsel was warranted in class action suit challenging prison conditions for inmates who had tested positive for Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), where class sentiments indicated clear preference for a known substitute, at least 80% of the class supported substitution, appointed counsel was not adequately performing his duties, his relationship with class members had deteriorated, and, as solo practitioner with limited resources, appointed counsel suffered constraints upon his ability adequately to prosecute the case. Gates v. Cook, C.A.5 (

Miss.) 2000, 234 F.3d 221, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 253 F.3d 707. Civil Rights 1445

If lack of counsel is sole impediment to prisoner being permitted to maintain civil rights action against prison officials as class action, consideration should be given to appointment of counsel. Cruz v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 497 F.2d 496. Civil Rights 1445

2563. ---- Habeas corpus actions, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

In determining need for legal assistance prison authorities must take into account the need for assistance in civil rights actions as well as habeas corpus suits. McDonnell v. Wolff, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1973, 483 F.2d 1059, certiorari granted 94 S.Ct. 913, 414 U.S. 1156, 39 L.Ed.2d 108, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Prisons 4(11)

2564. ---- Proof of attorney's authority, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Since state has legitimate interest in protecting juveniles under detention from visits by attorneys (or persons purporting to be attorneys) whom juveniles have expressed no desire to see and who have not established authority to speak for them, a requirement as to proof of the attorney's authority is reasonable in all but the most exceptional cases. Negron v. Wallace, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 436 F.2d 1139, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 2184, 402 U.S. 998, 29 L.Ed.2d 164. Attorney And Client 69

2565. ---- Appointment of counsel, assistance of counsel, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner was not entitled to appointed counsel in his civil rights case challenging prison's confiscation of $50 money order sent to prisoner by his mother in violation of prison regulations; prisoner's complaint and pleadings in the district court adequately presented the factual and legal basis of his claim and demonstrated that he understood the basics of his due-process property interest claim, and, prisoner was granted the liberal treatment accorded pro se litigants. Steffey v. Orman, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 461 F.3d 1218. Civil Rights 1445

Inmate who brought §§ 1983 action against jail employees and jail's doctor was not entitled to appointed counsel; discovery had just begun at time inmate requested counsel so there was no conflicting testimony, there was no indication that inmate was unable to investigate or present case, inmate correctly identified applicable legal standard governing his claims and successfully amended his complaint to include essential information, claims involved information readily available to inmate, inmate was able to avoid procedural default, complaint was sufficient to survive first motion for summary judgment, and inmate was able to file more than thirty documents with court. Phillips v. Jasper County Jail, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 437 F.3d 791. Civil Rights 1445

Appointment of counsel for indigent state prisoner on appeal was warranted, in prisoner's civil rights lawsuit under Eighth Amendment alleging that employees of Wisconsin Department of Corrections were deliberately indifferent to his serious medical needs, since oral argument would have materially advanced issues presented. Greeno v. Daley, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 414 F.3d 645. Civil Rights 1445

Indigent inmate asserting federal civil rights claim against Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) officers was entitled to appointed counsel; at least some aspects of his claim were likely to be of substance, given some officers' admission of involvement in one allegedly retaliatory prison transfer and possibility that appointed counsel could cure flaws in complaint and shortfalls in evidentiary proof with regard to other officers, inmate lacked ability to manage case effectively on his own, and complexity of legal issues was considerable. Hendricks v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 114 F.3d 390. Civil Rights 1445

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate had no constitutional right to appointed counsel in civil rights case. Abdur-Rahman v. Michigan Dept. of Corrections, C.A.6 1995, 65 F.3d 489. Civil Rights 1445

Decision whether to appoint counsel for indigent inmate in civil rights action is based on whether merits of indigent's claim are colorable, ability of indigent to investigate crucial facts, whether nature of evidence indicates that representation by counsel will more likely expose the truth, capability of indigent to present the case, and complexity of legal issues presented by complaint. Tucker v. Randall, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 948 F.2d 388, on remand 840 F.Supp. 1237. Civil Rights 1445

Appointment of counsel is not to be endorsed in every civil rights case filed by state prisoner, but same was appropriate where there was question of credibility of witnesses and where case presented serious allegations of fact which were not facially frivolous. Manning v. Lockhart, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1980, 623 F.2d 536. Civil Rights 1445

It is not necessary to provide legal assistance for every conceivable civil claim prisoners wish to process; both courts and legal assistance agencies themselves have right to determine which claims merit legal assistance. Kelsey v. State of Minn., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1980, 622 F.2d 956. Prisons 4(11)

United States district court did not abuse discretion by failing to appoint counsel for prisoner in civil action against police officers alleging deprivation of civil rights under color of law. McBride v. Soos, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1979, 594 F.2d 610, on remand 512 F.Supp. 1207. Civil Rights 1445

Where counsel was appointed for defendant less than two weeks after date on which defendant claimed he was denied constitutionally guaranteed access to courts with respect to attempt to secure preindictment examining trial, there was no damage with respect to the alleged denial of access cognizable on record. Grundstrom v. Darnell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 531 F.2d 272. Civil Rights 1462

Prisoner bringing § 1983 civil rights suit seeking return of jewelry used as exhibits during state criminal trial was not entitled to appointment of counsel given that issues unpresented were not de novo or complex and in absence of exceptional circumstances. Couch v. Cobb County Superior Court, N.D.Ga.1995, 874 F.Supp. 1378. Civil Rights 1445

Appointment of counsel was warranted for indigent prisoner who brought § 1983 action against prison officials alleging that he suffered injury at hands of fellow inmate, that prior to attack officials knew of threats against him, that he made known to officials that he was in fear of and in danger from inmate, and that officials witnessed attack and deliberately failed to intervene; there was some merit in fact and law to essential elements of prisoner's claim, whether it was premised upon due process clause or Eighth Amendment, and although prisoner was able to read and write reasonably well, his lack of legal education, the conflict of his work hours with prison library hours, and his need for in depth factual discovery seriously hampered his ability to represent himself effectively. Tabron v. Grace, M.D.Pa.1994, 871 F.Supp. 227. Civil Rights 1445

In determining whether to appoint counsel in § 1983 cases, court must initially consider whether claim is colorable; if so, court will look at nature and complexity of factual issues, complexity of legal issues, and capability of plaintiff to represent his claim without assistance of counsel. U.S. v. $27,000.00, More or Less in U.S. Currency, S.D.W.Va.1994, 865 F.Supp. 339. Civil Rights 1442

Prisoner was entitled to appointment of counsel to represent him in civil rights action against prison; each of his claims, failure to provide proper medical care, malicious punishment in retaliation for bringing lawsuits against prison officials, wrongful refusal of transfer and confinement in "keeplock" in violation of his rights to due process, would constitute constitutional deprivations if proved, and even though prisoner had conducted an appreciable amount of discovery on his own, issues were sufficiently complex to warrant legal assistance. Jermosen v.

Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1990, 745 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1445

Counsel should have been appointed for civil rights plaintiff who was in prison, where case had survived summary judgment and was set for trial before jury, plaintiff had limited education and lack of litigation experience, and prisoner's incarceration limited his ability to investigate the facts and depose potential witnesses, and case was likely to turn on credibility determinations. Woodham v. Sayre Borough Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 191 Fed.Appx. 111, 2006 WL 1371575, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

District court's dismissal of state prisoner's §§ 1983 complaint for failure to state a claim, and dismissal of appeal from that order as frivolous, both counted as strikes under the three strikes provision of statute governing proceedings in forma pauperis. Howard v. Wilson, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 176 Fed.Appx. 468, 2006 WL 997319, Unreported. Federal Courts 663

Although denial of pro se prisoner's motion for appointment of counsel should not have been denied as "untimely" in his civil rights case alleging excessive force, because prisoner with allegedly limited English skills made the motion as soon as he had seen and addressed prison guards' motion for summary judgment, prisoner was not prejudiced by denial of appointment of counsel, where no attorney could have overcome negative impact of surveillance videotape on prisoner's claim that he was the victim of excessive force when guards forcibly removed him from his cell; videotape fully supported guards' contention that they used only the force necessary to control the situation. Mediaceja v. Horner, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 82 Fed.Appx. 488, 2003 WL 22853045, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2076, 541 U.S. 1013, 158 L.Ed.2d 626. Federal Courts 893

Just determination of state inmate's § 1983 action against prison staff members did not require appointment of pro bono counsel, even though inmate allegedly had been unable to retain private counsel and cross-examination likely would play significant role in trial of action, given that inmate had demonstrated ability to investigate and present relevant facts and had compiled incident reports, administrative records, and other documents related to his due process claim, that care with which inmate had detailed facts and circumstances surrounding underlying incident demonstrated his ability to frame questions to elicit responses pertinent to prosecution of action, and that factual circumstances surrounding claim did not appear to be complicated and inmate appeared generally capable of understanding and presenting legal issues raised by his claims. Harris v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21108370, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

District court did not abuse its discretion in denying pro se pretrial detainee's request for appointment of counsel in § 1983 action against county jail officials alleging deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs in violation of Eighth Amendment. Sandifer v. Green, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 57 Fed.Appx. 857, 2003 WL 297562, Unreported, on remand 2004 WL 784934. Civil Rights 1445

Circumstances did not warrant appointment of counsel in prison inmate's in forma pauperis § 1983 action against prison personnel; inmate's complaint was detailed in nature, details contained in the complaint suggested that investigating the claims made in the instant action would not be a complicated exercise for the inmate, and while cross-examination might play a significant role at trial, inmate's care in explaining the facts and circumstances indicated to the Court that he would be able to frame questions to elicit responses pertinent to the prosecution of the action, and the legal issues, including alleged violations of the Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments, were not complex. Edwards v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 223456, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

Allegations by pro se prisoner that he had sustained back, neck, and wrist injuries and extreme mental suffering due to physical and mental abuse by prison officials satisfied threshold showing of merit, on prisoner's application for appointment of counsel in §1983 excessive force action. Kee v. Hasty, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 115235, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Appointment of pro bono counsel to assist pro se prisoner who asserted § z1983 excessive force claims against prison officials would not be warranted; prisoner demonstrated ability to investigate and present relevant facts, factual circumstances surrounding the claim did not appear complex, prisoner appeared capable of understanding and presenting relevant legal issues, and prisoner had not demonstrated effort, apart from writing to three attorneys, to seek representation. Kee v. Hasty, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 115235, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

2566. Assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts--Generally

Prison inmate did not possess a First Amendment right to provide legal assistance to fellow inmates. Shaw v. Murphy, U.S.2001, 121 S.Ct. 1475, 532 U.S. 223, 149 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 253 F.3d 1151. Constitutional Law 82(13); Constitutional Law 91; Prisons 4(11)

At the present stage of development of prison disciplinary procedures, inmates do not have a constitutional right to either retained or appointed counsel, but where an illiterate inmate is involved or where the complexity of the issue makes it unlikely that the inmate will be able to collect and present evidence necessary for an adequate comprehension of the case, he should be free to seek the aid of a fellow inmate or, if that is forbidden, to have adequate substitute aid in the form of help from the staff or from sufficiently competent inmate designated by the staff. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Prisons 13(9)

Issuance of preliminary injunction enjoining prison officials from enforcing prison policy banning prisoners' communications with other prisoners who served as jailhouse lawyers was warranted, in § 1983 action brought by prisoners' who had pending post-conviction claims, challenging policy as unconstitutionally restricting prisoners' right of access to courts; policy banned all prisoner-to-prisoner legal communications, prisoners presented evidence of irreparable injury, in establishing that they had no satisfactory alternative way of obtaining legal assistance for their pending claims, and officials presented no evidence that ban served legitimate penological purpose, demonstrating likelihood of prisoners' success on the merits. Bear v. Kautzky, C.A.8 (Iowa) 2002, 305 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1457(5)

A mere formal right of access to the courts is not enough; a prisoner's access to the courts must be effective, adequate and meaningful and, in some circumstances, such right may entail the right to seek the assistance of other prisoners in preparing legal papers. Rudolph v. Locke, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1979, 594 F.2d 1076. Prisons 4(10.1)

Prisoners have right not only directly to petition court without unreasonable interference but also means necessary effectively to present any claims, including right to assistance of a jailhouse lawyer or access to necessary legal materials. Knell v. Bensinger, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 522 F.2d 720. Prisons 4(10.1)

Absent reasonable alternatives, and subject only to reasonable restrictions, inmates must be allowed to assist other prisoners in the preparation of legal petitions. Bryan v. Werner, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 233. Prisons 4(11)

2567. ---- Alternate means of assistance, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

In assessing adequacy of legal assistance available to prisoners under regulation appointing one inmate as a legal advisor, applying standard that inmates cannot be barred from furnishing assistance to each other if the state does not provide some reasonable alternative, capacity of the inmate advisor is to be assessed in light of demand for assistance in civil rights actions as well as in the preparation of habeas writs. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Prisons 4(11)

In absence of any allegation that sources of legal information available within federal prison were inadequate, action of prison officials in refusing to permit prisoner to visit with a certain person who allegedly had provided the prisoner with books and legal fees in the past did not violate the prisoner's minimal right of access to a threshold level of legal information or aid. Lynott v. Henderson, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 610 F.2d 340. Prisons 4(11)

Where prison provides inmates with adequate assistance from persons trained in the law, the right to inmate legal assistance, which is premised upon absence of reasonable alternatives for legal aid, is not applicable and in such a situation, prison can restrict inmates from giving legal assistance to other prisoners, and prison is not required to provide an adequate law library. Wetmore v. Fields, W.D.Wis.1978, 458 F.Supp. 1131. Prisons 4(11); Prisons 4(13)

Inmates who are unable to perform their own legal research have constitutional right to legal assistance from other inmates, in absence of adequate assistance from lawyers, even where prison makes available an adequate law library. Wade v. Kane, E.D.Pa.1978, 448 F.Supp. 678, affirmed 591 F.2d 1338. Prisons 4(11)

2568. ---- Permission of prison official, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

Prison regulation providing that inmate may not share or assist in the preparation of legal papers for others without permission of the Superintendent is reasonable. Wells v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.1972, 344 F.Supp. 594. Prisons 4(11)

2569. ---- Illiterates or other non-English speaking inmates, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

In the case of illiterate or otherwise disadvantaged prison inmates, for whom the complexity of issues may foreclose the needed capacity to collect and present the evidence necessary for an adequate comprehension of the case involving transfer to maximum security, prison officials should allow the assistance of a fellow inmate, or some designated staff member, to be part of the proceedings. Kirby v. Blackledge, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1976, 530 F.2d 583. Prisons 13(9)

Prison regulation prohibiting prisoners from assisting other inmates in preparation of legal papers was invalid, even though assistance to illiterates was permissible under regulation. Wainwright v. Coonts, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 409 F.2d 1337. Prisons 4(11)

2570. ---- Number of inmate legal advisors, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

Formal program of inmate legal assistance which included only two inmate legal advisors for total prison population of 1,321 was inadequate to serve needs of all the inmates. Taylor v. Perini, N.D.Ohio 1976, 413 F.Supp. 189. Prisons 4(11)

2571. ---- Quality of assistance, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

In view of fact that prisoner, who was charged with participating in prison riot, and for whom an inmate advisor was appointed, was not given an opportunity for at least some form of quality control and that neither he nor his assigned advisor were allowed to vary selection made for prisoner by prison officials, and in light of fact that there was no assurance that prison procedures were calculated to produce for prisoner, assumed incapable of presenting his own defense, an advisor any more capable of advancing his cause than himself, there was a substantial risk that elements of due process had been denied. Mills v. Oliver, E.D.Va.1973, 367 F.Supp. 77. Constitutional Law 272(2)

2572. ---- Retaliation against jailhouse lawyer, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

On inmate's § 1983 claim of retaliation for providing legal assistance to fellow inmates, to survive summary judgment against him inmate had to allege violation of constitutional right and demonstrate a retaliatory motive. Tighe v. Wall, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 100 F.3d 41. Civil Rights 1092

Alleged harassment by prison guards when prisoner exercised his right to be a jail house lawyer was sufficient to form a basis for a cause of action under civil rights statute in absence of a showing that prisoner did not have a right to practice jail house law because inmate legal assistance was prohibited and reasonable alternatives existed. Young v. Calhoun, S.D.N.Y.1987, 656 F.Supp. 970. Civil Rights 1094

2573. ---- Habeas corpus petitions, assistance by other inmates, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner has no right to file habeas corpus petition on behalf of another inmate, absent extraordinary circumstances. McKinney v. DeBord, E.D.Cal.1970, 324 F.Supp. 928, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 507 F.2d 501. Convicts 6

Enforcement of prison rule prohibiting one inmate from assisting another in writing of habeas corpus petitions did not deny access to courts or other constitutional rights of inmate who was shown to be capable of expressing himself with sufficient clarity to present complaints effectively to court. Owens v. Russell, M.D.Pa.1967, 277 F.Supp. 390, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 491, 393 U.S. 1003, 21 L.Ed.2d 467. Prisons 4(11)

2574. Costs and fees, prisoners' access to courts

To prevent "effectively foreclosed access," indigent prisoners must be allowed to file appeals and habeas corpus petitions without payment of docket fees, and counsel must be appointed to give indigent inmates "a meaningful appeal" from their convictions. Bounds v. Smith, U.S.N.C.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1491, 430 U.S. 817, 52 L.Ed.2d 72. Criminal Law 1077.1(1); Criminal Law 1077.3; Habeas Corpus 883.1

Although inmates who failed to assert that mixed idle-pay allowance for postage and personal necessities had prejudiced them in any pending or contemplated legal proceeding failed to state constitutional claim, allegations of inmate who specifically listed prices of basic hygiene supplies, on which he had to spend idle pay, and stated that, for lack of funds, he was forced to miss court deadlines and dismiss cases raised material factual issues, precluding summary judgment in § 1983 action claiming that prison's idle-pay policy violated right of access to courts. Myers v. Hundley, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1996, 101 F.3d 542. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Inmates in state hospital, placed under jurisdiction of Psychiatric Security Review Board after having been found guilty except for insanity of certain crimes, sufficiently alleged that state's policy limiting indigent patients to three stamps per week interfered with their access to courts, such as was necessary to state action against hospital superintendent for deprivation of constitutional right of meaningful access to courts; inmates alleged that they often found it necessary to communicate with courts more than three times per week and that pleadings often needed more than 20 cents postage. King v. Atiyeh, C.A.9 (Or.) 1987, 814 F.2d 565. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Refusal to pay for attendance of witnesses of indigent civil rights complainant did not deny or infringe complainant's fundamental right, if any, to bring civil rights action under this subchapter where complainant was able to bring action in federal court and present issues to court, and therefore fact that state was unwilling or unable to assist him by subsidizing payment of his witness fees did not totally bar his efforts to bring case. Johnson v. Hubbard, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1983, 698 F.2d 286, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 282, 464 U.S. 917, 78 L.Ed.2d 260. Civil Rights 1056

Prison policy whereby a prisoner must have less than $5 in his prison account to qualify for free postage did not deny prisoner his constitutional right to access to courts. Twyman v. Crisp, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1978, 584 F.2d 352. Prisons 4(10.1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Alleged negligence on part of jailor in preventing inmate's access to courts by failing to transmit plaintiff's petition and filing fee to court to which they were addressed gave rise to a claim under this section governing deprivation of civil rights. Welch v. Evans, E.D.Va.1975, 402 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1094

2575. Notary publics, prisoners' access to courts

Given the statutory alternative of unsworn declarations, the unavailability of notary services in parish prison did not preclude inmate from filing Freedom of Information Act and Privacy Act requests; therefore, the unavailability of notary services could not form basis for § 1983 civil rights action. Duncan v. Foti, C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 828 F.2d 297. Civil Rights 1094; Records 31; Records 62

Prison officials do not have right to refuse to notarize or mail legal papers of inmates when they believe form used is improper, and distinction may not be made between clinic and nonclinic legal papers for these purposes. Bryan v. Werner, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 233. Prisons 4(12)

Jail authorities would be required to supply indigent inmates filing in forma pauperis petitions in either state or federal courts the services of a notary public without requiring the payment of any fee. Tate v. Kassulke, W.D.Ky.1975, 409 F.Supp. 651. Prisons 4(10.1)

Procedures whereby notary public service at prison was provided at least twice per week with emergency service available were not unreasonable, did not violate prisoner's right to due process and did not give rise to claim under this section or statute giving district courts original jurisdiction of actions arising under Constitution of the United States. Washington v. Vincent, S.D.N.Y.1973, 361 F.Supp. 942. Civil Rights 1094; Constitutional Law 272(2); Federal Courts 174; Prisons 4(13)

2576. Subpoenas, prisoners' access to courts

Assistant Attorney General's advice to prison official not to honor subpoena which was not tendered with witness fees did not violate civil rights of party who tendered subpoena. Tedder v. Odel, C.A.9 (Or.) 1989, 890 F.2d 210. Civil Rights 1098

2577. Library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts--Generally

The right of access to the court does not afford prisoners unlimited access to prison law libraries, and limitations may be placed on library access so long as the regulations are reasonably related to legitimate penological interests. Jones v. Greninger, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1999, 188 F.3d 322, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 203 F.3d 826, on remand 2000 WL 869506. Prisons 4(13)

Although providing access to a law library is an acceptable means of effectuating right of access to the courts for inmates, there is no independent right of access to a law library or legal assistance; therefore, inmate claiming denial of right of access must satisfy standing requirement of "actual injury" by showing that denial of legal resources hindered his efforts to pursue a nonfrivolous claim. Penrod v. Zavaras, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1399. Prisons 4(13)

Inmate seeking materials necessary for access to courts must describe materials sought sufficiently so that prison can obtain them for inmate without being required to perform legal research for inmate; inmate must do more than make mere conclusory allegation of need for unspecified or unlimited materials, although it may not always be possible to identify needed material precisely in advance. Petrick v. Maynard, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1993, 11 F.3d 991. Prisons 4(13)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

A prisoner must be granted access to a law library as part of his right to petition the courts. Ganey v. Edwards, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1985, 759 F.2d 337. Prisons 4(13)

Action challenging denial to prisoner of access to courts because of inadequate law library may be brought pursuant to this section. Bradenburg v. Beaman, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1980, 632 F.2d 120, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1522, 450 U.S. 984, 67 L.Ed.2d 820. Civil Rights 1094

Restricted access to prison law library is not per se denial of access to courts; prison library is but one factor in totality of all factors bearing on inmate's access to court. Twyman v. Crisp, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1978, 584 F.2d 352. Prisons 4(13)

The functions served by county jails in a state penal system should be taken into account in determining whether all inmates have access to legal materials. Cruz v. Hauck, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 515 F.2d 322, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1118, 424 U.S. 917, 47 L.Ed.2d 322. Prisons 4(13)

State prison officials reasonably interpreted rule proscribing possession of legal materials belonging to another inmate as including both copies and originals of such materials. Giba v. Cook, D.Or.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 1171. Prisons 13(4)

Prison rules with regard to lateness which resulted in denial of inmate's access to prison law library due to his tardy arrival did not entitle inmate to § 1983 relief for violation of his right of access to courts, where prison rules were impartial administrative regulations and were not geared in any way toward limiting inmate's right of access to court, and inmate failed to show that his access to court was actually frustrated as result of enforcement of these rules. Muhammad v. Hilbert, E.D.Pa.1995, 906 F.Supp. 267. Civil Rights 1094; Prisons 4(13)

Denial of access to inmate's legal materials may state civil rights claim. Rhodes v. Knight, D.Kan.1994, 861 F.Supp. 980, affirmed 45 F.3d 440. Civil Rights 1094

Inmate failed to state § 1983 claim against State Department of Corrections officials by contending that Department violated its own regulations requiring that all inmates be given access to law library and adequate legal supplies, as violations of state law or regulations were not cognizable under § 1983. Canell v. Bradshaw, D.Or.1993, 840 F.Supp. 1382, affirmed 97 F.3d 1458. Civil Rights 1094

Inmate did not state claim for violation of his right to court access, absent allegations that his problems with obtaining access to law books or his legal mail caused him to suffer actual injury to his right to court access. Saunders v. Horn, E.D.Pa.1996, 959 F.Supp. 689, report and recommendation adopted 960 F.Supp. 893. Constitutional Law 328; Prisons 4(12); Prisons 4(13)

Inmates do not have a right per se to law books but, rather, a right to a reasonably adequate opportunity to present claimed violations of fundamental constitutional rights to the courts. Inmates, Washington County Jail v. England, E.D.Tenn.1980, 516 F.Supp. 132, affirmed 659 F.2d 1081. Prisons 4(13)

To receive constitutionally mandated access to the courts, convicted county jail inmates, who serve up to 180 days in the jail, yet have no access to a law library or legal services, must be given either adequate legal assistance or adequate access to a law library. Parnell v. Waldrep, W.D.N.C.1981, 511 F.Supp. 764. Prisons 4(11); Prisons 4(13)

Prisoner did not have standing to bring § 1983 action against prison officials claiming that he was deprived of his right of access to the courts because prison's law library was deficient, as his alleged injury was merely speculative. Thomas v. Campbell, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2001, 12 Fed.Appx. 295, 2001 WL 700839, Unreported. Civil Rights 1333(4)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prisoner's claim that his constitutional right to access to the courts was impaired by denial of access to a law library was not supported by actual injury, where prisoner failed to allege any facts in complaint of how supposed lack of legal research materials might have affected him. Florez v. Johnson, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 432, 2003 WL 1605857, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner's allegations that prison authorities censored his mail failed to state § 1983 claim for violation of his First Amendment free speech right, where claim did not state when censorship began, who engaged in the censorship, the extent of the censorship, or the purpose of the censorship. Florez v. Johnson, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 432, 2003 WL 1605857, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pursuant to consent decree settling § 1983 suit, county jail would be required to maintain adequate law library, accessible to inmates, containing particular, named general/reference materials, federal materials and state materials. Griffith v. Fontenot, E.D.Tex.1994, 1994 WL 738984, Unreported. Prisons 4(13)

Allegedly improper failure of deputy general counsel of state department of corrections to respond to criminal defendant's request pursuant to New York Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) for information pertinent to preparation of his defense did not amount to denial of liberty or property without due process, and thus defendant's claim was not cognizable under § 1983, in light of defendant's adequate post-deprivation remedy of Article 78 proceeding under New York state law. Davis v. Guarino, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 52 Fed.Appx. 568, 2002 WL 31819622, Unreported. Constitutional Law 320.5; Records 62

2578. ---- Detriment or prejudice, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Civil rights claim, based on prison locker policy that allegedly imposed disciplinary violations if inmates had legal files in their possession that would not fit into tubs they were given to keep their personal possessions, was frivolous and could not support death row inmate's request for stay of execution, absent allegation that inmate suffered actual injury to pending or contemplated legal claims because of policy. McDonald v. Carnahan, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 125 F.3d 652. Sentencing And Punishment 1798

Inmate who was denied parole could not show that he had suffered any cognizable harm from his alleged lack of access to law library or legal assistance, and thus inmate failed to state claim under § 1983; parole board based its decision on facts specific to inmate, not on legal precedent, and thus inmate's inability to research and present legal precedent did not interfere with his access to courts. Reffitt v. Nixon, E.D.Va.1996, 917 F.Supp. 409, affirmed 121 F.3d 699. Civil Rights 1094; Prisons 4(13); Civil Rights 1097

To show deprivation of access to courts, inmate must prove that prison officials failed to assist in preparation and filing of meaningful legal papers by providing prisons with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in law and must show some quantum of detriment caused by challenged conduct of state officials resulting in interruption or delay of pending or contemplated litigation. Gray v. Faulkner, N.D.Ind.1992, 811 F.Supp. 1343. Prisons 4(10.1)

At very least, in order to support civil rights claim for deprivation of access to legal materials, complaining prisoner must allege some quantum of detriment caused by challenged conduct of authorities resulting in interruption or delay of litigation. Morrison v. Martin, E.D.N.C.1990, 755 F.Supp. 683, affirmed 917 F.2d 1302. Civil Rights 1094

State prisoner failed to show that he was denied meaningful access to legal materials through prison law library, based upon library's delay in providing him with a case that he requested that allegedly could have resulted in habeas relief from his conviction, for purpose of §§ 1983 claim, where library provided him with requested case months before the deadline to file his habeas petition expired, but prisoner failed to file petition until after deadline. Easterwood v. Kirby, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 86 Fed.Appx. 396, 2004 WL 103560, Unreported. Civil Rights

Inmate's right of access to courts was not infringed to support his allegations under § 1983 against prison officials for administering an inadequate law library at county jail; undisputed facts demonstrated that inmate had ample and meaningful access to courts, inmate was provided with court-appointed attorney to challenge drug charges, attorney assisted in inmate's guilty plea, inmate was able to file pro se civil action against arresting officers, which he later withdrew, and inmate did not allege that statute of limitations prevented him from refiling civil action. Abodeen v. Bufardi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 75 Fed.Appx. 822, 2003 WL 22148774, Unreported. Civil Rights 1094

2579. ---- Alternate means of access generally, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Although state prison law library's inventory, updating, and irregular hours of access were concededly inadequate, inmates were not deprived of their constitutional right of access to the courts where alternative means of such access were available. Kelsey v. State of Minn., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1980, 622 F.2d 956. Prisons 4(13)

No particular mode of access to courts by prisoner is required, but regulations or practices which can be construed as impeding such access are invalid, and lack of a law library or of access to such a library might, absent alternatives, unreasonably restrict inmate access to courts. Bryan v. Werner, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 233. Prisons 4(10.1)

Providing inmates in control status cellblocks with paralegals and opportunity to use kite system to obtain books, even if not as good as direct access to law library, was sufficient to provide constitutional court access to prisoners deemed security risks at maximum security prison. Knecht v. Collins, S.D.Ohio 1995, 903 F.Supp. 1193, affirmed in part, vacated in part and reversed in part 187 F.3d 636. Constitutional Law 328; Prisons 4(11); Prisons 4(13)

Limited resources and hours of inmate law library did not violate inmate's right of access to the courts; inmates were afforded access to holdings of county law library, assistance from legal services provider was made available, limited hours were caused by extensive renovation project, and inmate failed to show how he was prejudiced. Bookless v. Bruce, D.Kan.1993, 814 F.Supp. 52. Prisons 4(13)

In providing meaningful access to courts, it is not required that correctional officials established a law library; alternative means to achieve that goal may be used. Fluhr v. Roberts, W.D.Ky.1978, 460 F.Supp. 536. Prisons 4(13)

Since pretrial detainee in county jail was represented by counsel, he had adequate access to courts; thus, he was not deprived of access by refusal of chief jailer and sheriff to give him access to legal materials. Wilson v. Wittke, E.D.Wis.1978, 459 F.Supp. 1345. Prisons 4(10.1)

Law libraries are a constitutionally acceptable method of assuring inmate access to the courts; however, where reliance on law libraries does not ameliorate lack of meaningful access to the courts, the judiciary has an obligation to take additional steps. Battle v. Anderson, E.D.Okla.1978, 457 F.Supp. 719, remanded on other grounds 594 F.2d 786. Prisons 4(13)

2580. ---- Attorney assistance programs, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

State was under no constitutional duty to offer inmates of its penal institutions both adequate legal research facilities and independent attorneys' office, however helpful the dual service might be. Smith v. Bounds, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1975, 538 F.2d 541, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 1505, 425 U.S. 910, 47 L.Ed.2d 760, affirmed 97 S.Ct. 1491, 430 U.S. 817, 52 L.Ed.2d 72. Prisons 4(11); Prisons 4(13)

State attorney assistance program which assisted state prisoners who were denied access to adequate legal research facility was an acceptable alternative to legal research facility, despite fact that program could have benefitted from participation of additional lawyers and despite delay which occurred between time prisoner requested assistance of attorney and time attorney could consult such prisoner. Peterson v. Davis, E.D.Va.1976, 421 F.Supp. 1220, affirmed 562 F.2d 48. Prisons 4(13)

Prison inmate who challenged actions of state prison authorities in instituting and implementing a new inmate legal-assistance program, under which prison law library was closed in favor of providing contract attorneys to assist inmates with their legal needs, failed to show that his own lawsuits had been dismissed because of legal services provided, as required to recover in § 1983 action in which he alleged that he had been denied access to the courts. Eaton v. Dooley, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1362, Unreported. Civil Rights 1094

2581. ---- "Bookmobile" system, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

"Bookmobile" system allowing prisoner to check out specifically requested books on a periodic basis is impermissible method of providing prisoners with court access. Marange v. Fontenot, E.D.Tex.1995, 879 F.Supp. 679. Prisons 4(13)

2582. ---- Clinics, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Prison officials may proscribe use of prison law clinic title in suits not allowed under clinic rules. Bryan v. Werner, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 233.

Adequate prison law library was insufficient to preserve fundamental right of access to the courts as to those prisoners in administrative or disciplinary custody, who could not go to the library, despite program of providing a small number of cases or books on request, and as to those prisoners who were functionally illiterate, and thus closing of legal assistance clinic which had office on each cell block as well as main office and library would deprive those prisoners of the fundamental right of access to the courts. U.S. ex rel. Para-Professional Law Clinic v. Kane, E.D.Pa.1987, 656 F.Supp. 1099, affirmed 835 F.2d 285, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1302, 485 U.S. 993, 99 L.Ed.2d 511. Prisons 4(13)

Closing of in-prison law clinic operated by inmates deprived inmates of their constitutional right to access to courts by denying inmates access to adequate law library, since prison's alternative program for representation of inmates by law students contemplated an institution-wide law library which lacked recent Federal Reporters, state criminal code and other materials. Wade v. Kane, E.D.Pa.1978, 448 F.Supp. 678, affirmed 591 F.2d 1338. Prisons 4(13)

2583. ---- Outside libraries, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Constitutional right of access to courts of inmate incarcerated in county jail for seven months was not violated by county's refusal to grant inmate access to county law library in regard to his challenges to conditions of confinement; inmate had access to counsel to pursue his civil rights claims at all times during his incarceration, and had access to telephone and free postage for communications with courts or attorneys. Love v. Summit County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1985, 776 F.2d 908, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 66, 479 U.S. 814, 93 L.Ed.2d 25. Prisons 4(13)

2584. ---- Illiterates or non-English speaking inmates, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Prison law library books, even if "adequate" in number, cannot provide access to the courts for those persons who do not speak English or who are illiterate. Cruz v. Hauck, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 627 F.2d 710. Prisons 4(13)

For prisoners who cannot read or understand English, constitutional right of access to courts cannot be determined

solely by number of volumes in, or size of, law library; merely making law library available to non-English speaking prisoner does not satisfy duty of prison officials to provide meaningful access. Acevedo v. Forcinito, D.N.J.1993, 820 F.Supp. 886. Prisons 4(13)

2585. ---- Indigents, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

In absence of some alternative provision to insure that prisoners have assistance necessary to file petitions and complaints, such as access to legal advice, prison officials must provide indigent inmates with access to reasonably adequate law law library for preparation of legal actions. Padgett v. Stein, M.D.Pa.1975, 406 F.Supp. 287. Prisons 4(13)

2586. ---- Consulting with inmate in library, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

County jail inmate could not maintain claim against two clerks at jail's law library alleging that library policies unduly restricted his access to law library and that clerks prevented him from consulting with fellow inmates while in library; appropriate recourse for inmate was to seek relief under terms of 1982 consent decree in which administrators at jail were required to provide inmates with sufficient access to law library. Martin v. Davies, N.D.Ill.1988, 694 F.Supp. 528, affirmed 917 F.2d 336, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2805, 501 U.S. 1208, 115 L.Ed.2d 978. Civil Rights 1094

2587. ---- Discarding of outdated materials, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

In applying decision that a prisoner's right to access to courts includes right to adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in the law, focus should not be on volumes that are discarded but on adequacy of volumes that remain in the library or, in absence of an adequate law library, on sufficiency of alternative legal assistance, and thus discarding of out-of-date advance sheets and supplementary pamphlets from prison law library did not interfere with prisoner's access to the courts. Rhodes v. Robinson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 612 F.2d 766. Prisons 4(13)

2588. ---- Number of publications prisoner allowed, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner was not denied his constitutional right of access to courts by prison's failure to provide him with every legal book he requested during lockdown, since prisoner was not prejudiced in any litigation as result of the alleged denial of access to law library; prisoner was only delayed in filing § 1983 lawsuit, which he filed after lockdown ended without missing any deadlines. Eason v. Thaler, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 73 F.3d 1322. Constitutional Law 328; Prisons 4(13)

County jail rule prohibiting storage of hard cover law books in inmates' cells and restricting storage of nonhard cover materials so as not to limit the "floor or wall space dimensional of the jail cell block" was reasonable in light of duty of jail authorities to maintain security and to protect against dangers of fire. Cruz v. Hauck, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 515 F.2d 322, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1118, 424 U.S. 917, 47 L.Ed.2d 322. Prisons 12

State prison inmates were not denied effective access to courts by virtue of practices under which persons detained in prison's special housing unit were not allowed access to prison law library, were provided only two law books per day, and were not permitted legal assistance from inmates or inmate law clerks while in segregation. Frazier v. Ward, N.D.N.Y.1977, 426 F.Supp. 1354. Prisons 4(13)

State prison library consisting of only a few volumes of state code did not constitute a sufficient legal library and prison authorities would be directed to maintain legal library facilities consisting of certain specified items. White v. Sullivan, S.D.Ala.1973, 368 F.Supp. 292. Prisons 4(13)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

2589. ---- Number of visits allowed, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Single denial of inmate's entry to prison law library because of inmate's tardiness did not constitute infringement of inmate's right of access to courts, where inmate used library 11 other times during month in question and 12 times the following month. Muhammad v. Hilbert, E.D.Pa.1995, 906 F.Supp. 267. Constitutional Law 328; Prisons 4(13)

Inmate failed to state § 1983 claim arising from denial of access to courts where he was permitted to visit jail law library on numerous occasions, and was able to contact attorney by telephone. Johnson v. KSIR Principal Adm'r and Staff, D.Kan.1992, 804 F.Supp. 173. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2590. ---- Number of volumes in library, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Small law libraries in cellhouses three and seven of the Canon Correctional Facility were totally inadequate for effective researching and framing of issues, and the general population library, while more extensive than the collections in cellhouses three and seven, was still inadequate in that it contained only half the volumes recommended by the American Association of Law Libraries Committee on law library services to prisoners. Ramos v. Lamm, D.C.Colo.1979, 485 F.Supp. 122, affirmed in part, set aside in part on other grounds 639 F.2d 559, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1759, 450 U.S. 1041, 68 L.Ed.2d 239, on remand 520 F.Supp. 1059. Prisons 4(13)

State prisoner's §§ 1983 action, which alleged inadequate access to legal materials because prison provided only a starter law library to inmates in segregation, was properly dismissed a frivolous even though it stated a recognized claim, since prisoners in segregation legitimately lose access to amenities provided to prisoners in the general population and prisoner failed to explain how he lost any suit because of the starter library's deficiencies. Lilly v. Jess, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 542, 2006 WL 2041381, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

2591. ---- Publications required, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

A library for the use of prison inmates which lacks the Federal Reporter, 2d Series, is an inadequate law library. Wade v. Kane, E.D.Pa.1978, 448 F.Supp. 678, affirmed 591 F.2d 1338. Prisons 4(13)

2592. ---- Recording of requested information, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Absent allegation of chilling effect, no violation of prisoner's rights occurred in prison policy requiring recording of all information requested from library by prisoner, who was plaintiff in action challenging conditions at state correctional center, and requiring signature of prison official. Batton v. State Government of North Carolina, Executive Branch, E.D.N.C.1980, 501 F.Supp. 1173. Prisons 4(13)

2593. ---- Request slips, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Inmates had adequate access to legal materials where materials, including statute books, were present in the jail and available on request and inmates' requests for special materials were met. Hopkins v. Campbell, D.Kan.1994, 870 F.Supp. 316. Prisons 4(13)

Prisoners whose only access to federal correctional facility's law library was through use of request slips which were picked up daily, with the books being returned to the inmates in a day or two, with inmates being limited to three books at a time, and with inmates being provided with an incomplete list of the materials available, did not have inadequate access to legal materials. U.S. ex rel. Wolfish v. Levi, D.C.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 573 F.2d 118, certiorari granted 99 S.Ct. 76, 439 U.S. 816, 58 L.Ed.2d 107, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1861, 441 U.S. 520, 60 L.Ed.2d 447. Prisons 4(13)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

State prisoner's claim that he was denied adequate access to prison law library did not warrant granting of relief to prisoner who brought civil rights action, where prisoner submitted no evidentiary material suggesting that he had followed prison procedures in submitting library book request. Lingo v. Boone, N.D.Cal.1975, 402 F.Supp. 768. Civil Rights 1404

2594. ---- Research staff, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Untrained legal research staff is insufficient to safeguard inmate's right of access to courts. Valentine v. Beyer, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1988, 850 F.2d 951. Prisons 4(11)

Constitutional right of access to courts of prisoners of county jail, which had no law library and whose personnel made no effort to inform inmates of availability of legal research material or how to go about obtaining a court order permitting its use, was violated. Leeds v. Watson, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1980, 630 F.2d 674. Prisons 4(10.1)

2595. ---- Size of facility, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Fact that size of prison law library permitted only five inmates to use the facilities at the same time did not establish inadequacy of law library. Harrell v. Keohane, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1980, 621 F.2d 1059. Prisons 4(13)

2596. ---- State or federal materials, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

State prisoner's complaint under this section alleging that state prison officials deprived him of his constitutional right of access to the courts by transferring him to federal penitentiary which had no state legal materials in its law library and by failing to fulfill his written request for certain state lawbooks, thereby preventing him from researching state law and examining legal materials which were relevant to various cases which he was presently litigating in state courts, was legally cognizable. Blake v. Berman, D.C.Mass.1984, 598 F.Supp. 1081. Civil Rights 1395(7); Conspiracy 18

2597. ---- Time open, library or legal publications, prisoners' access to courts

Prisoner of District of Columbia pleaded predicate constitutional violation of denial of access to courts, for purpose of his allegations against municipality under §§ 1983 on theory of agency, for acts committed by Virginia prison officials in Virginia while under prisoner custody arrangement, on allegations that lack of library time resulted in his inability to prepare legal brief and subsequent dismissal of his case on appeal. Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2004, 357 F.Supp.2d 187. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Restrictions placed on prisoner's use of law library for period of time because prison officials did not have manpower to personally escort prisoner as required did not violate prisoner's civil rights; during period of restrictions he received help of competent jailhouse lawyers who assisted him in filing two legally sufficient claims, and prisoner was eventually permitted to use library for ten hours a week. Bellamy v. McMickens, S.D.N.Y.1988, 692 F.Supp. 205. Civil Rights 1094

Where prison law library was open 28 hours per week and at least 20 of those hours coincided with other major programs at the institution, and where there were only two inmates who had established themselves as jailhouse lawyers familiar with basic legal principles and possessed of research and writing skills, it would be unconstitutional for prison to enforce a policy flatly denying the two jailhouse lawyers additional access to the law library for purpose of providing assistance to ignorant, unskilled, untutored or illiterate inmates. Wetmore v. Fields, W.D.Wis.1978, 458 F.Supp. 1131. Prisons 4(13)
