The inadequacy of police training may serve as the basis for § 1983 liability only where the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights of the persons with whom the police come into contact. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Survivors of students who were shot and killed in their school library and student who was shot and killed outside of school during a school shooting spree failed to state a claim against law enforcement officers for supervisory liability under § 1983, absent an initial showing of an underlying constitutional violation on the part of officers' subordinates and colleagues. Rohrbough v. Stone, D.Colo.2001, 189 F.Supp.2d 1088. Civil Rights 1358

Rigorous standards of culpability and causation must be applied to ensure that municipality will not be held liable under § 1983 solely for actions of its employee, and in particular, that particular officer may be unsatisfactorily trained will not alone suffice to fasten liability on city, for officer's shortcomings may have resulted from factors other that faulty training program. Palacios v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1997, 970 F.Supp. 732, affirmed 152 F.3d 928. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipalities were not deliberately indifferent in training individual police officers who detained motorist during traffic stop by disseminating their procedures on how to prevent violations of constitutional rights during search and seizure in writing, following up with on-the-job training, and giving officers opportunity to ask questions at monthly meetings. Gardner v. Village of Grand River, Ohio, N.D.Ohio 1997, 955 F.Supp. 817. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police superintendent was not liable to § 1983 plaintiff who was beaten in a bar by police officer, on theory of supervisory liability, despite claim that superintendent failed to implement proper disciplinary system for identifying officers likely to violate individual rights; though officer in question had eight prior complaints against him, all complaints were made at least two years before superintendent took position, only one complaint could even seriously raise question regarding officer's propensity for violence, no evidence was presented as to whether superintendent, who oversaw approximately 15,000 officers, actually saw complaints, and no evidence was presented as to supervision techniques or the average officer's disciplinary record. Munoz v. Toledo Davila, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 954 F.Supp. 455. Civil Rights 1358

There was no evidence that defendant sheriff had unconstitutional policy or custom to fail to supervise or train his deputies, and thus, he was not liable in § 1983 action by arrestee who was allegedly "set up" by deputy and informant on drug charges of which he was ultimately acquitted; sheriff submitted his department's guidelines for use in handling of informants, substantive training materials used for training his deputies, detailed rules and procedures implemented by his department to discipline deputies who violate federal, state or local rules or otherwise engage in misconduct, and list of numerous training programs that deputy in question attended during his employment with sheriff's department. Lewis v. Meloni, W.D.N.Y.1996, 949 F.Supp. 158. Civil Rights 1358

In § 1983 civil rights action arising from plaintiff's arrest, prosecution, and eventual acquittal on sexual assault charge, city was not liable for alleged inadequate training of police officers in proper witness interview, preparation, and investigation technique in absence of specific facts showing that city was deliberately indifferent toward training officers and that inadequate training caused violations of plaintiff's constitutional rights. Pierzynowski v. Police Dept. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 941 F.Supp. 633. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Motorist and occupant of vehicle failed to present sufficient evidence to establish municipal liability under § 1983 based on alleged general failure to adequately train police officers involved in arresting them; motorist and occupant did not identify any specific policies to which police officers' alleged violations could be attributed. Griffin v. City of Clanton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1996, 932 F.Supp. 1359. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Section 1983 plaintiff, who was shot by police officer while in process of demonstrating expressed intent to kill officer by throwing metal bar at officer, failed to establish that shooting officer or other officers present received inadequate training or supervision, so as to support municipal liability claim against city; shooting officer had received extensive training in appropriate use of deadly force, he knew that he was to shoot only if he or another person was in danger of serious injury and, even then, only as last resort, and officers had been instructed by superiors to withdraw from scene and were attempting to do so when plaintiff indicated his intention to kill shooting officer. McRae v. Tena, D.Ariz.1996, 914 F.Supp. 363, affirmed on other grounds 113 F.3d 1241. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Suspect's parents and administratrix of suspect's estate sufficiently pleaded existence of municipal policy to state civil rights claim under § 1983 against village for police officer's use of deadly force against suspect, where they alleged that village improperly and inadequately trained and instructed members of village police force, including specific officer, in proper exercise of self-restraint in use of violence against persons being apprehended. Javid v. Scott, S.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 223. Civil Rights 1395(6)

"Official policy or custom," for purposes of § 1983 claim for municipal liability, can encompass inadequate police training if failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact. Velez v. City of New London, D.Conn.1995, 903 F.Supp. 286. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Alleged cooperation agreement by which District of Columbia undertook to have United States Park Police patrol areas normally patrolled by Metropolitan Police Department was insufficient to impose liability, under borrowed servant doctrine, against District of Columbia on theory that District violated arrestee's Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights by failing to properly train and supervise officers who shot arrestee in chase, leading to his death; agreement did not alter jurisdiction or responsibilities of Park Police officers patrolling those areas, officers continued to perform duties entrusted them by their general employer, and there was no division of control or authority that would have permitted District to order officers to act to arrest someone or to veto their actions. Estate of Carter v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1995, 903 F.Supp. 165. Civil Rights 1352(4); District Of Columbia 26

Evidence, in arrestee's action seeking to impose liability against police chief under federal civil rights statute for injuries sustained when police officers used excessive force and denied him medical attention after he resisted alcohol confiscation at public fireworks display, supported findings that chief created policy of fostering constitutional violations or allowed such policy to exist; evidence concerned investigation of arrestee's complaint, training of police staff, indexing and filing of complaints, open and obvious tolerance of violative conduct, and countenancing and advancing of nonaccountability by officers. Hogan v. Franco, N.D.N.Y.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1313 . Civil Rights 1420

Failure of police chiefs to discharge officer at the time of prior allegations of sexual misconduct did not impose pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury to woman who was subsequently raped by the officer so as to allow imposition of supervisory liability under federal civil rights statute. Jones v. Ziegler, D.Md.1995, 894 F.Supp. 880, affirmed 104 F.3d 620. Civil Rights 1359

Arrestee who was arrested as part of undercover operation to reduce crimes against persons before, during, and after parades failed to prove that failure to train police officers was the result of deliberate indifference on part of the city such that city was liable for officers' actions under § 1983; it was not plainly obvious that plan would result in arrests of citizens without probable cause. Beech v. City of Mobile, S.D.Ala.1994, 874 F.Supp. 1305. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police officers' failure to incarcerate intoxicated and angry bar patron who later shot his house guest after he returned home did not establish § 1983 liability of city and its police chief for failure to train, absent showing that city was deliberately indifferent in adopting its training policy or that inadequate policy caused the shooting. Newsom v. Stanciel, N.D.Miss.1994, 850 F.Supp. 507. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality is liable under civil rights statute where municipality's failure to train its police amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come in contact. Lucas v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.1994, 842 F.Supp. 101. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Townships were not liable under federal civil rights statute for alleged inadequate training and supervision of township police officers, absent any proof they had custom or policy in that regard. McGill v. Mountainside Police Dept., D.N.J.1989, 720 F.Supp. 418. Civil Rights 1352(4)

820. ---- Prisons and prisoners, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Evidence was insufficient to establish that state corrections commissioner was deliberately indifferent to mentally ill inmate's constitutional rights or was grossly negligent in training subordinates who allegedly violated those rights, as required to impose supervisory liability in §§ 1983 action arising when inmate was allegedly placed in four-point restraints for 22 hours, beaten, and denied medical care; commissioner was not informed of inmate's restraint and was unaware of any beatings until long after the fact, and training he promulgated and supervised did not materially deviate from accepted training practices. Ziemba v. Armstrong, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 430 F.3d 623. Civil Rights 1358

County jail's staffing problems, allegedly resulting from county board's custom of inadequate budgeting for sheriff's office and jail, did not satisfy "custom or policy" prong of inmate's §§1983 Eighth Amendment action against county alleging failure to transport him to hospital during medical emergency and consequent paralysis; jail had policy to call ambulance to transport inmates with emergency medical needs if jail personnel were unable to do so, inmate presented no evidence of any other occasion when understaffing contributed to medical condition, inmate neither identified any pattern of injuries linked to board's budget decisions nor alleged defective accounting practices, and there was no evidence that board was aware of any health consequences of its budget decisions. McDowell v. Brown, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2004, 392 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County delegated to jail's director its power to establish final employment policy with respect to discipline of officers, as required for county to be liable in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that she was raped by corrections officer in violation of her Eighth Amendment rights; jail had approximately 262 employees, director had authority to promulgate jail policy which set forth rules of conduct for jail personnel, and no proven mechanism existed through which his decisions not to discipline officers could be reviewed. Ware v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1998, 150 F.3d 873, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City was not liable in § 1983 action arising from injuries suffered by arrestee who died on theory of policy of inadequate training of officers, inadequate medical treatment of prisoners, or deliberate indifference to use of excessive force; no evidence to establish existence of policy or custom of inadequate medical treatment of prisoners was introduced other than arrest and subsequent death of arrestee, no evidence regarding inadequacy of training of city's police officers was introduced, and no probative evidence that city acquiesced in officers' use of excessive force was produced, although it was argued city's officers had used excessive force on prior occasions. Davis v. City of Ellensburg, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1989, 869 F.2d 1230. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Sheriff was liable under § 1983 to lawfully arrested prisoner who was twice beaten severely while in custody and complete control of sheriff's officers, as sheriff had not required appropriate training and discipline of his officers, and there had been no serious investigation of the incident by either sheriff or his deputies. Marchese v. Lucas, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 758 F.2d 181, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1369, 480 U.S. 916, 94 L.Ed.2d 685. Civil Rights 1358

Material issues of fact, as to whether county sheriff in charge of jail adequately trained officials in jail detainee suicide prevention, precluded summary judgment on individual capacity nonliability for violating due process rights of detainee who committed suicide. Gaston v. Ploeger, D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1211. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Man arrested and detained after failing to appear for hearing on citation failed to show that municipal policy or custom contributed to alleged civil rights violations by detention officers, as required to maintain §§ 1983 claim against city; policy manual stated that staff were required to receive training in legitimate use of force and restraints, and that no correctional officer was permitted to work with inmates until and unless such training was successfully completed. Niemyjski v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 1221. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Village could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged failure to train village police officers who allegedly violated motorist's Fourth Amendment rights when they stopped motorist on suspicion of driving while impaired or under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs, and who searched his car incident to the stop, solely on the basis of its employment of the officers, and in the absence of evidence of any kind regarding the official policies or the customs and practices of the village police department. Warner v. Village of Goshen Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 171. Civil Rights 1352(4)

District of Columbia's failure to actively supervise improper sexual activities involving entire prison population violated female inmate's civil rights under § 1983 and District of Columbia law. Newby v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1999, 59 F.Supp.2d 35. Civil Rights 1098; Prisons 17(1)

Allegations against city in connection with death of jailed arrestee from drug overdose did not establish existence of "official policy" such that city was subject to liability under § 1983; arrestee had already taken overdose at time of her arrest, and city was not constitutionally required to train jailers to recognize ambiguous signs of drug overdose. Morris v. City of Alvin, Tex., S.D.Tex.1997, 950 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Prison officials were liable for civil rights violation of female prisoners who were subject to sexual harassment, notwithstanding official policies regarding sexual misconduct, as the harassment was the result of governmental custom and officials failed to properly train employees in the area of sexual harassment. Women Prisoners of District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1994, 877 F.Supp. 634, vacated in part, modified in part 899 F.Supp. 659, remanded 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S.App.D.C. 247, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1552, 520 U.S. 1196, 137 L.Ed.2d 701, on remand 968 F.Supp. 744. Civil Rights 1358

821. ---- Searches and seizures, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

SWAT team's unconstitutional entry into citizen's apartment was not shown to be pursuant to official policy of city and thus evidence was insufficient to support jury's verdict in favor of citizen in § 1983 action; evidence established that police officers received basic training at law enforcement academies and additional training regarding search warrant and that city required officers to adhere to state law in executing warrantless searches and thus it could not be said that need for enhanced training was so obvious and that inadequacy of training was so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights that jury could reasonably attribute to policymakers deliberate indifference to those training needs. Tapia v. City of Greenwood, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 965 F.2d 336, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

822. ---- Sexual abuse, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Director of youth services for Georgia Department of Human Resources, who had responsibilities for statewide youth services, was entitled to qualified immunity in action brought by youth detention center juvenile detainee for alleged delay in providing medical attention for juvenile who had been sexually abused by detention center employees; director did not regularly visit center in question, did not supervise center's employees directly, and, while director was responsible for screening of employees to determine if they were eligible for state employment, employees in question did not have criminal records. Hill v. Dekalb Regional Youth Detention Center, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 40 F.3d 1176. Civil Rights 1376(3) constituted too remote a consequence of school district's hiring and investigation policy three years earlier to impose liability upon school district under federal civil rights law, notwithstanding that teacher coached boys' basketball during school year and that students in question were members of teacher's class; only connection between district and basketball camp was that district approved use of high school facility for camp, permitted distribution of promotional materials concerning camp, and consented to use of outside elementary school basketball court to raise funds for children who could not otherwise afford to attend camp, foreclosing conclusion that there was "state action" involved, that teacher was "acting under color of state law," or that school district's hiring and investigation policy was moving force behind deprivation of students' constitutionally protected rights even though school superintendent received report shortly after teacher's hiring that he had molested nonstudent and even though teacher had in fact been convicted of sodomy some ten years before his hiring. D.T. by M.T. v. Independent School Dist. No. 16 of Pawnee County, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 894 F.2d 1176, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 213, 498 U.S. 879, 112 L.Ed.2d 172. Civil Rights 1326(6); Civil Rights 1351(2)

School board's alleged practice and custom of avoiding and ignoring complaints of sexual abuse of students, and alleged failure to train personnel in prevention or investigation of sexual abuse, supported former middle school student's §§ 1983 claim against school board alleging violation of his right to not be sexually abused during the school day while in the care of the school board. Doe v. Faerber, M.D.Fla.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1311. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Minor ordered to perform community service at county courthouse who sued county and employees, stemming from her sexual assault by janitor, failed to establish evidence of any official policy or widespread practice that resulted in constitutional tort, as required to maintain §§ 1983 claim; despite testimony at janitor's criminal trial by county employee that she was concerned about minor's allegedly provocative dress and conduct, there was nothing to suggest that it was plainly obvious to county that janitor would rape minor. Doe v. Patton, E.D.Ky.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 615, affirmed 2006 WL 959812. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Former employee who brought action against county, alleging sexual harassment by supervisor, failed to allege nexus between supervisor's background and his alleged misconduct, as required to state §§ 1983 claim based on improper hiring; notwithstanding supervisor's purported bankruptcy and outstanding judgments, nothing alleged in complaint would have made it plainly obvious from screening of background that he would engage in sexual misconduct. Nassau County Employee "L" v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 293. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Institutional defendants could not be held liable under customs prong of § 1983 with respect to instructor's sexual harassment of student at school of nurse anesthesia absent evidence showing that any of actions taken by instructor or other employees were pursuant to customs of institutional defendants. Saville v. Houston County Healthcare Authority, M.D.Ala.1994, 852 F.Supp. 1512. Civil Rights 1351(2)

If village fails to train its police officers in proper procedure for handling referrals and arrests in sexual abuse cases, such that its failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to plaintiffs' rights, village may be held liable under § 1983. Fittanto v. Klein, N.D.Ill.1992, 788 F.Supp. 1451. Civil Rights 1352(4)

823. ---- Social workers, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

County's human services board was not liable under this section to plaintiffs, on basis of supervisor's failure to train or supervise social workers, for conduct of social workers in initiating commitment proceedings against plaintiffs based on unverified information, later disproven, from plaintiffs' minor child that they were alcoholics, as it was an unforeseeable first-time incident. Dick v. Watonwan County, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1984, 738 F.2d 939. Civil Rights 1352(6)

denial liability when children were placed in allegedly unsatisfactory foster care, when only claim was that one caseworker had not been trained as social worker. Richards v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Closure of courtroom during preliminary injunction hearing was not warranted, in action for infringement of pharmaceutical drug patent, absent showing of overriding reason; issues presented in hearing could be argued adequately without disclosure of trade secrets or of specific confidential business information which patentee was seeking to protect. Barr Laboratories, Inc. v. KOS Pharmaceuticals, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 421. Patents 303

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county had policy of removing children from home of non-offending parent in absence of exigent circumstances precluded summary judgment in favor of county on claim brought under §§ 1983 by children and adults responsible for their welfare, where evidence demonstrated that county considered non-offending parent's failure to admit veracity of unproven allegations of abuse or neglect to be emergency warranting removal of child, based upon non-offending parent's presumed failure to be protective. Parkes v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 1071. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

824. ---- Suicide prevention, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

City's failure to train officers regarding detection of jail detainees having suicidal tendencies did not rise to level of custom or policy so as to hold city liable for death of arrestee who hung himself in city's lockup, notwithstanding city's additional failure to remodel detention facilities and its practice of leaving facility unsupervised after another prisoner's suicide three years earlier; although evidence indicated city was negligent, there was no evidence that even if police officers who came into contact with arrestee had been trained in screening for suicidal detainees, they could have prevented detainee's suicide. Bowen v. City of Manchester, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1992, 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Alleged deficiencies in training of police officers on suicide prevention did not cause suicide of young male detainee in his cell, and, thus, municipality could not be held liable under § 1983, even though detainee halted in response to police officer's command during chase, and even though detainee closed his eyes at police station during lulls in processing; nothing indicated that detainee appeared intoxicated or under the influence of drugs at time of arrest or during detention. Dorman v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1989, 888 F.2d 159, 281 U.S.App.D.C. 146. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In § 1983 action against city brought by surviving spouse of DWI arrestee who hung himself in city jail cell using his belt, spouse had not established deliberate policy promulgated by city to inadequately train its jail personnel; even though city did not send its personnel to Tennessee Corrections Institute jailer's school, city did provide its own training program for jailers, and nothing about arrestee's behavior or attitude following his arrest indicated likelihood of suicide. Beddingfield v. City of Pulaski, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1988, 861 F.2d 968, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of intoxicated pre-trial detainee who committed suicide in holding cell, based on alleged failure to train officers to properly monitor detainees, absent identification of any specific training that city was aware of, but did not give, that would have prevented suicide. Cruise v. Marino, M.D.Pa.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 656. Civil Rights 1352(4)

No policy of town, needed to give rise to § 1983 civil rights liability, existed when Chief of Police and other municipal decision-makers made decisions in response to hostage situation in effort to prevent plaintiff from committing suicide or hurting others, and taking plaintiff for medical evaluation. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

825. ---- Use of force, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Police department was not liable under § 1983 for injuries arrestee suffered when he was bitten by police dog due to inadequate training of its officers; arrestee's own actions in attempting to move when he was told not to caused his injury, record contained no evidence that dog was inadequately trained, record contained evidence of extensive training for canine officer and there was no evidence that this training was inadequate to tasks which officer was required to perform or that inadequate training caused arrestee's injuries. Matthews v. Jones, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 35 F.3d 1046. Civil Rights 1352(4)

It was not necessary for city to have policy condoning unprovoked shooting of citizens in order for it to be liable under § 1983 for police officer's unconstitutional use of deadly force against suspect; rather, if concededly valid policy was applied unconstitutionally by officer, city could be held liable if officer had not been adequately trained and constitutional wrong was caused by that failure to train. Zuchel v. City and County of Denver, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 997 F.2d 730, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Chief of police and city could be held liable in civil rights action brought on behalf of person who was shot nine times by police officer, even if the officer was exonerated; chief and city could be held liable for improper training or improper procedure, in that they put officer on street who was so badly trained and instructed he let his baton be taken away from him and then had to kill an armed civilian to save his own life. Hopkins v. Andaya, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 958 F.2d 881, as amended. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

Even if police officers received only three to four hours of training in use of Tazer guns and lacked information as to Tazer's voltage and its precise effect on human body, such facts were insufficient to establish deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police came into contact, as was necessary to hold city liable under § 1983 in action brought by citizen against whom Tazer gun was used by police. Mateyko v. Felix, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 924 F.2d 824, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 65, 502 U.S. 814, 116 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Even assuming arguendo that arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights were violated, there was no basis to impute liability for officers' actions to police chief; arrestee presented no evidence that chief initiated a policy or custom requiring or permitting use of excessive force in performance of police duties, no evidence of other incidents similar to the instant case to suggest that alleged use of undue force was a standard practice of the department, no evidence to show that chief encouraged or tacitly condoned use of excessive force by those under his supervision, and no evidence that chief was grossly negligent in managing the defendant officers, but, instead, merely described the alleged conduct of defendant officers and speculated that the conduct resulted from improper supervision by chief. Birdsall v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 163. Civil Rights 1358

To prevail on §§ 1983 claim against municipality for failure to train and supervise officers regarding uses of force, plaintiffs must show that need for more or different training is so obvious, and inadequacy so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights, that municipal policymakers can reasonably be said to have been deliberately indifferent to need. Massasoit v. Carter, M.D.N.C.2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 463. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's reliance on appropriate training of its police officers in the use of non-deadly weapons, including pepper spray, did not amount to an unconstitutional policy that could subject city to liability under §§ 1983 for police officer's alleged use of excessive force in spraying motorist with pepper spray while attempting to arrest him during traffic stop. Davis v. City of Albia, S.D.Iowa 2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 692. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City and city officials were not liable under §§ 1983 for failing to properly train and supervise police officer who fatally shot driver after driver fled on foot from scene of investigative stop of his vehicle, since city police officers, including officer who shot driver, attended training sessions at which they were instructed on firearms and use of force, and there was no evidence that officer was acting in accordance with official policy or custom of city when he shot driver. Remillard v. City of Egg Harbor City, D.N.J.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 766. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee allegedly subjected to excessive force stated a §§ 1983 claim against a county on the theory that he was injured as a result of an official custom or policy; complaint alleged that a deputy sheriff used excessive force and caused the arrestee's injury, and liability against the county defendants was premised upon allegations that by failing to train and supervise deputies they encouraged the practice which led to the arrestee's injury. Harris v. Adams, S.D.Ohio 2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 707. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police chief was not liable to arrestee under § 1983, as supervisor of arresting officers who allegedly used excessive force; chief's public comments made after date of arrest, his endorsement of investigation of arrestee's complaint, and parking incident at airport the following year were insufficient evidence that chief's deliberate indifference caused officers in question to behave the way they did, and there was insufficient evidence that chief failed to deal properly with prior excessive force complaints against officers. Forbis v. City of Portland, D.Me.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 57. Civil Rights 1358

Driver of car involved in incident in which reserve city police officer struck car and occupant with his flashlight failed to state viable claim against city under § 1983 for failure to supervise officer; there was no showing of other similar incidents involving officer or any other reserve officer, and evidence, which at best demonstrated that city failed to supervise officer on night in question, was insufficient to allow reasonable finders of fact to conclude that city failed to supervise because of deliberate indifference to rights of citizens. Burgess v. West, D.Kan.1993, 817 F.Supp. 1520. Civil Rights 1352(4)

826. Hospitals, custom or usage

Hospital officers could be sued under this section on account of hospital policy excluding fathers from delivery room and action could be maintained against public hospital directly under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Fitzgerald v. Porter Memorial Hospital, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1975, 523 F.2d 716, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1518, 425 U.S. 916, 47 L.Ed.2d 768. Civil Rights 1360; Civil Rights 1391

826A. Medical care

City was not liable under §§ 1983 to estate of patient who was transported to hospital against his will by city personnel, absent showing that city had widespread custom and practice of failing to properly evaluate a nonverbal individual's refusal to accept medical treatment, or that city failed to fulfill its obligation to train personnel in evaluating nonverbal refusals of medical treatment. Green v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 65. Civil Rights 1352(6)

827. Impoundment or towing of motor vehicles, custom or usage

City could be held liable for violation of plaintiff's due process rights by adopting municipal judge's impoundment order as city policy, and for subsequent impoundment of plaintiff's automobile without giving plaintiff notice of opportunity for prompt postseizure hearing. Coleman v. Watt, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 40 F.3d 255. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Police department officials were not liable in their individual capacity to automobile owner whose vehicle was towed, impounded, and sold without notice to him; officials did not act with deliberate or reckless disregard for owner's constitutional rights by their approval and implementation of policy of notification by first-class mail of owners of impounded vehicles that were more than seven years old. Kohn v. Mucia, N.D.Ill.1991, 776 F.Supp. 348 . Civil Rights 1088(3)

County was not liable, under § 1983, for juvenile court judge's alleged acts of interpreting and applying constitutionally flawed paternity and child support statutes, or interpreting and applying constitutionally adequate statutes in constitutionally flawed manner, as memorandum issued by judge regarding initiation of attachment pro corpus was not policy, but merely restatement of state law, and judge's actions were not policies but were judicial decisions reviewable on appeal. Johnson v. Turner, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1997, 125 F.3d 324, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City judge's alleged furtherance of city's unwritten policy of refusing to provide counsel to indigents by failing to advise indigent defendants of their rights did not make judge a municipal decision maker, as required to impose civil rights liability on city; under Montana law, trial judge's obligation to address rights of defendant arose from membership in state judiciary. Eggar v. City of Livingston, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1994, 40 F.3d 312, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2566, 515 U.S. 1136, 132 L.Ed.2d 818. Civil Rights 1348

Sentencing misdemeanor defendant to jail without benefit of counsel by municipal judge did not subject city to liability under § 1983 for alleged civil rights violation given that alleged violation of constitutional rights resulted from judge's judicial duties and not city's official policy. Johnson v. Moore, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1992, 958 F.2d 92. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City had no policy regarding municipal judge's judicial duties and was not liable under section 1983 for municipal judge's acts in refusing to accept defendant's two motor club cards in lieu of cash bail. Carbalan v. Vaughn, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 760 F.2d 662, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 529, 474 U.S. 1007, 88 L.Ed.2d 461. Civil Rights 1351(4)

829. Jury selection, custom or usage

Decision to exclude all blind persons from jury service and to reject plaintiff, who was blind, from jury service were result of official policy of District of Columbia Superior Court and, thus, District was subject to § 1983 liability. Galloway v. Superior Court of District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 816 F.Supp. 12. Civil Rights 1351(6)

830. Law enforcement, custom or usage--Generally

Board of Police Commissioners was not liable for allegedly improper traffic stop based on drug courier profile, as matter of law, since plaintiffs failed to present evidence that custom or practice of unconstitutionally stopping motorists based on drug courier profiles existed within department or that Board either authorized or remained indifferent to such practice. Ryan v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 96 F.3d 1076, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Pretrial detainee established that sheriff, who was final county policymaker with respect to all law enforcement decisions, had policy of failing to keep records to facilitate payment of wages to pretrial detainees who engaged in work during period of detention, in accordance with sheriff's statutory duty; thus, county was liable for sheriff's actions in depriving detainee of property right in such wages in violation of due process. Brooks v. George County, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1996, 84 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 359, 519 U.S. 948, 136 L.Ed.2d 251. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Town was not liable to store clerk under § 1983 for prank in which police officers staged an armed robbery of clerk; town had standard operating procedures that prohibited type of activity surrounding challenged conduct, and clerk failed to establish that staged robbery in any way implemented or executed a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated or that official policy was the moving force behind alleged constitutional violation. Haines v. Fisher, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1996, 82 F.3d 1503. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To prevail on her § 1983 civil rights claim against city under Fourth Amendment, custodial detainee had to show that city adhered to policy, practice, or custom that caused her to be deprived of her constitutional rights, in detainee's action arising from her detention for four hours for identification following citation for boarding train without proof of payment of fare. Pierce v. Multnomah County, Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 76 F.3d 1032, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 506, 519 U.S. 1006, 136 L.Ed.2d 397. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Customary practices, if widespread among police employees, are sufficient basis for municipal liability under § 1983. Sloman v. Tadlock, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 21 F.3d 1462. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Failure of city and police department to maintain cross-indexed filing system, under which all complaints were placed in police officer's personnel file, did not evidence municipal policy condoning police misconduct and did not make city and police chief liable under § 1983. Sarus v. Rotundo, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1987, 831 F.2d 397. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Municipality's failure to correct constitutionally offensive actions of its police department may rise to level of custom or policy, for which municipality can be held liable under section 1983, if municipality tacitly authorizes actions or displays deliberate indifference towards police misconduct. Brooks v. Scheib, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1987, 813 F.2d 1191. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City and its prisons could not be held liable under § 1983 for violating due process rights of convict who allegedly was cleared of wrongdoing by police investigation conducted after his conviction when convict did not identify municipal policy or custom that resulted in alleged denial of due process, and did not identify either municipal agent with authority to create such a policy or evidence that such agent knew of policy's unconstitutional consequences. Berthesi v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation, E.D.Pa.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 434. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee failed to state §§ 1983 claims against city and city police department when complaint contained only conclusory allegations regarding existence of formal or de facto policy on city's part respecting alleged violations of arrestee's constitutional rights, without alleging any facts tending to support inference that formal practice or custom endorsed by city actually existed. Williams v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2006, 2006 WL 800963. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee did not show that there was unconstitutional action that implemented or executed policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers, by demonstrating that one police officer was overruled by superior officer, and thus police department was not liable on arrestee's Monell civil rights claim under free speech clause of First Amendment. Fogel v. Grass Valley Police Dept., E.D.Cal.2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 1084. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Claims against police officer in his official capacity are treated as claims against the municipality, and to prevail on civil rights claim, a plaintiff must establish a direct causal link between the city's policy or custom and the alleged constitutional deprivation. Wallace v. City of Shelby, N.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1204. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1358

Municipal corporation was not liable under § 1983 in connection with search of house where controlled buy occurred, where there was no evidence indicating either a policy of inadequate training or supervision of police officers or showing an official custom of condoning unconstitutional acts. Torian v. City of Beckley, S.D.W.Va.1997, 963 F.Supp. 565. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

In § 1983 action against municipality, plaintiff need not demonstrate that municipality had formal rule or regulation that caused constitutional deprivation; rather, plaintiff may establish policy or custom by demonstrating that municipality was alerted to possibility that its employees were engaged in constitutional violations but responded with deliberate indifference, which may be inferred from failure to supervise or from proof of repeated complaints of constitutional violations that are followed by no meaningful attempt on municipality's part to investigate or to forestall further incidents. Velasquez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 776. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Arrestee who made no allegations that officers' allegedly unconstitutional actions constituted policy or practice of their respective municipalities did not state claim for damages against officers in their official capacities. Ippolito v. Meisel, S.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 155. Civil Rights 1395(6)

No showing was made that particular policy of parish sheriff had actually caused constitutional injury suffered by individual who was fatally shot by off-duty deputy sheriff with revolver issued by sheriff's department, as would allow recovery in federal civil rights action brought by survivor of individual against sheriff in his official capacity; no allegation was made that sheriff had established or failed to establish particular policy which caused constitutional violation, and in any event insufficient evidence existed to demonstrate causal link to deputy's later shooting of individual. Read v. Attaway, W.D.La.1996, 944 F.Supp. 480. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Illinois police officers acted under color of law, as needed for arrestee to state § 1983 civil rights claim based on alleged use of excessive force by arresting officers, even if officers lacked actual authority to make arrest in Indiana. Rambo v. Daley, N.D.Ill.1994, 851 F.Supp. 1222. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether city could be held liable, under Massachusetts Civil Rights Act, for city and police department officials' alleged attempts to threaten, intimidate, and coerce police officer who, as president of police officers' union, had publicly criticized policies and officials of both department and city; Massachusetts statute was explicitly patterned after section 1983, and under section 1983 municipality may be sued directly for civil rights violations accomplished pursuant to unconstitutional policy or governmental custom. Broderick v. Roache, D.Mass.1992, 803 F.Supp. 480. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

831. ---- Causation, law enforcement, custom or usage

Fact that a municipal "policy" might lead to police misconduct is hardly sufficient to satisfy the Monell requirement for municipal liability under Civil Rights Act of 1861 (42 U.S.C.A. § 1983) that the particular policy be the "moving force" behind a constitutional violation; there must at least be an affirmative link between the training and adequacies alleged in the particular constitutional violation at issue. (Per Justice Rehnquist with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment.) City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, U.S.Okla.1985, 105 S.Ct. 2427, 471 U.S. 808, 85 L.Ed.2d 791, rehearing denied 106 S.Ct. 16, 473 U.S. 925, 87 L.Ed.2d 695. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether homeless citizens' personal property was discarded as part of city's official policy, precluding summary judgment for city and county in §§ 1983 claim brought by homeless citizens alleging violations of their Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment rights to due process, stemming from the destruction of their personal property during community service clean-up activities of homeless sites. Cash v. Hamilton County Dept. of Adult Probation, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 388 F.3d 539, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 396, 163 L.Ed.2d 274, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 545, 163 L.Ed.2d 499, on remand 2006 WL 314491. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence that chief of police and city police department knew that arrestee had been incarcerated and that neither department nor chief of police had promulgated any written procedures to guide criminal investigation did not establish liability on part of chief of police and department for arrestee's incarceration for period of 14 months without charges being filed against him; plaintiff was required to show that chief of police's lack of action caused his deprivation of liberty and that some departmental custom was moving force behind his incarceration. Tilson v. Forrest City Police Dept., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 28 F.3d 802, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1315, 514 U.S. 1004, 131

L.Ed.2d 196. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1358

Former prisoner's Monell claims sufficiently alleged that physicians' wrongful conduct, with regard to autopsy as coroner or "de facto" coroners, conformed to governmental policy and deprived prisoner of his constitutional right against unlawful seizure, on allegations that county established or followed policies, procedures, customs, or practices which were moving force and cause of deprivation of prisoner's constitutional rights, since allegations pointed to conspiratorial acts and intentional wrongdoing. Marsh v. San Diego County, S.D.Cal.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether city maintained series of policies and practices with regard to implementation of parade ordinance that may have caused deprivation of protest organization's free speech and/or procedural due process rights, precluding summary judgment as to whether city was liable under §§ 1983 for police officers' decision to require protesters to march on sidewalk after granting them permit to march in street. Seattle Affiliate of October 22nd Coalition to Stop Police Brutality, Repression and Criminalization of a Generation v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 1185. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City and county law enforcement officers were not liable in their official capacities, in former tenant's §§ 1983 action, for alleged violation of tenant's federal due process rights by allegedly violating Minnesota statute giving a residential tenant 24 hours to leave and take personal property from leased premises when writ of recovery is executed, where county and city did not employ a custom, pattern, or practice that resulted in deprivation of constitutional right. Pahnke v. Anderson Moving and Storage, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 892. Civil Rights 1357

Arrestee's conclusory allegation that he was arrested pursuant to city's custom of racial discrimination and profiling was insufficient to establish that unconstitutional policy existed, or that there was direct causal link between custom and alleged constitutional deprivation, and thus was insufficient to support arrestee's §§ 1983 claim against city. Llerando-Phipps v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 372. Civil Rights 1395(6)

African-American citizen's civil rights claim against city, alleging that city had informal policy of encouraging police officers to ignore constitutional rights of African-Americans and that city permitted existence of customary department-wide code of silence intended to shield illegal acts of police officers, stated federal civil rights claim against municipality, even though claims allegedly did not demonstrate causal link between allegations and violation of particular citizen's constitutional rights; such detailed factual allegations were not required for complaint to withstand motion to dismiss. Britton v. Maloney, D.Mass.1995, 901 F.Supp. 444. Civil Rights 1395(5)

If arrestee failed to show that county police officer violated constitutional rights, his civil rights claim against county would fail but, even if he proved claim against officer, he would have to show that actions of officer were proximately caused by custom, practice, or policy of county. Dawson v. Prince George's County, D.Md.1995, 896 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Municipalities and their supervisory personnel are not liable for civil rights violations caused by individual law enforcement officers unless plaintiff demonstrates affirmative causal link between misconduct of officer and adoption of plan or policy showing authorization or approval of such misconduct; it is plaintiff's obligation to prove direct nexus between alleged constitutional torts and official authorization or approval thereof by adoption of plan or policy. Fillmore v. Ordonez, D.Kan.1993, 829 F.Supp. 1544, affirmed 17 F.3d 1436. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1358

Motorist who was falsely arrested failed to show affirmative link between his arrest and any city policy or custom that deprived persons of their civil rights so as to establish § 1983 claim against city; although motorist provided some evidence that police training could have been improved, record was devoid of any facts to support allegation of deliberate city policy to deprive any person of their constitutional rights, city mandated annual training for all police officers, each officer received copy of law enforcement handbook and was instructed to become familiar with its contents, efforts were made to disseminate changes in the law to officers on a regular basis, and fact that particular officer may have been unsatisfactorily trained did not alone suffice to fasten liability on city, for shortcomings may have resulted from factors other than faulty training program. Mahon v. City of Largo, Fla., M.D.Fla.1993, 829 F.Supp. 377. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Deprivation suffered by owners of automobiles held by police as part of sting operation to combat motor vehicle theft resulted from established, governmental procedure and not random action on part of lower level district employee; police chief sanctioned operation, authorized its implementation, and was aware that owners would not be notified of recovery of vehicles or allowed to repossess vehicles until operation ended. O'Callaghan v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1990, 741 F.Supp. 273. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Complaint alleging that police officers burst into plaintiff's apartment fully armed and pushed him from a second-story balcony, causing him severe injuries, sufficiently alleged that the incident was a proximate result of municipal policy or custom, as required for municipal liability under § 1983. Bell v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.1990, 733 F.Supp. 1475. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Absent showing that arrestee's injuries were the result of a policy or custom of the city, city could not be held liable under civil rights law for violating arrestee's constitutional rights to be free from illegal search and seizure, wrongful arrest, and excessive force. Feinthel v. Payne, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 121 Fed.Appx. 60, 2004 WL 3021780, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To state a municipal liability claim under Monell, a plaintiff must allege the existence of a municipal policy or custom and a causal link between the execution of that policy or custom and the injury suffered. Aultman v. Padgett, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 22358445, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(1)

832. ---- Arrests, law enforcement, custom or usage

County could not be liable under §§ 1983 for county sheriff's alleged conduct in unlawfully arresting motorist for violation of the Arkansas careless driving statute, where there was no showing that county had policy, official or otherwise, of unlawfully arresting motorists for careless driving. Robinson v. White County, AR, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 452 F.3d 706. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable for an accidental shooting by police officer under §§ 1983 on either an unconstitutional policy or custom theory or on a failure to train or supervise theory; officer's conduct in drawing his weapon in an attempt to effectuate a felony arrest, which was followed by the accidental discharge of the weapon, did not constitute an unreasonable seizure or otherwise violate the Fourth Amendment or other constitutional rights, and there was no showing that city had policy or custom of displaying lethal force to effectuate felony arrest, or that city failed to train or supervise officer properly. McCoy v. City of Monticello, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 411 F.3d 920. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestee failed to show that police officers who arrested him for breaking into a house, in which he was renting a room, were acting pursuant to any official policy or custom of the city, as required to establish city's liability, in arrestee's §§ 1983 wrongful arrest claim. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4; Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 291. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee who sued town under § 1983, claiming that police officer's alleged sexual molestation of arrestee resulted from failure to train and supervise, failed to show "deliberate indifference" on part of town; officer's proper response to situation would have been obvious to all without training or supervision. Sewell v. Town of Lake

Civil rights plaintiff failed to show that his arrest stemmed from any kind of official policy in sheriff's department as would support § 1983 action for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights against sheriff, city, police chief and police officer after he was arrested pursuant to arrest warrant which court had failed to quash or recall even though matter had been resolved; sheriff testified that similar incident had not occurred in past 18-year period in sheriff's office. Harris v. City of Marion, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 79 F.3d 56. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Section 1983 plaintiff's encounters with defendant police officers did not amount to "seizure" under Fourth Amendment; only two officers approached plaintiff at her place of employment, neither made show of force, they did not physically touch plaintiff or limit her freedom in any way, they did not ask plaintiff to accompany them to police station, but rather requested that she come to station later that day by herself, and plaintiff voluntarily went to police station and was not in custody at store or at police station. Neighbour v. Covert, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1508, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1267, 516 U.S. 1174, 134 L.Ed.2d 214. Arrest 68(4)

Doctor bringing civil rights action in connection with his arrest and search of his medical office failed to present evidence sufficient to raise inference that policy of illegal arrests and searches existed in county, precluding imposition of liability on county or county sheriff's department. Forster v. County of Santa Barbara, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 896 F.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1404

Evidence that police officer arresting bank robbery suspect was following policies or customs of city was sufficient to impute conduct of police officers to city, so as to render city liable under civil rights statute for arrest without probable cause. Clipper v. Takoma Park, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1989, 876 F.2d 17, rehearing denied, rehearing denied 898 F.2d 18. Civil Rights 1419

Municipality was liable under § 1983 for injuries sustained by persons, who were beaten by police officers, on basis of unconstitutional municipal custom; testimonial evidence showed that police department had longstanding widespread and facially unconstitutional practice of breaking down doors without warrant when arresting felons, there was evidence that police chief should have known of unconstitutional arrest practice, and there was evidence that plaintiffs' injuries occurred as a direct and immediate consequence of unconstitutional municipal custom. Bordanaro v. McLeod, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 871 F.2d 1151, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 75, 493 U.S. 820, 107 L.Ed.2d 42. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Clerk of court was not liable to arrestee under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for failure of deputy clerk to follow office policy and give required notice to police department that outstanding charges against arrestee had been dismissed, which failure resulted in wrongful arrest of arrestee. Thibodeaux v. Arceneaux, C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 768 F.2d 737. Civil Rights 1358

Fact that arrest for outstanding parking tickets was made by city police officers outside city's corporate boundaries did not render city liable, as a matter of law, to arrestee for violation of his constitutional rights because arrest was unlawful in absence of sufficient evidence of municipal policy or custom on extraterritorial arrests. Smith v. City of Oklahoma City, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1983, 696 F.2d 784. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Absence of any municipal policy or custom leading to arrest precluded municipal liability for alleged false arrest by city police officers. Bourguignon v. Guinta, D.Conn.2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 189, affirmed 78 Fed.Appx. 763, 2003 WL 22427932. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City could not be liable in § 1983 false arrest action based on allegation that one of city's employees had negligently transposed descriptive information about suspect onto arrest warrant affidavit; there was no showing that city was "moving force" behind violation. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Showing that police officer telephoned lieutenant, after resident of house rejected first request that he exit bathroom, where he had barricaded himself, did not establish that officer was acting pursuant to policy or custom, creating municipal liability under §§ 1983 for subsequent wrongful arrest occurring immediately after conversation. Policky v. City of Seward, Neb., D.Neb.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 1013. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Even if county employee violated male arrestee's right to equal protection in domestic violence matter, county was not liable under §§ 1983 for violating arrestee's right to equal protection, since county had no policy, practice or custom of subjecting males to disparate and discriminatory treatment with respect to domestic violence matters. Bloomquist v. Albee, D.Me.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Officer's allegedly intentional delay in processing paperwork needed for arrestee to obtain probable cause hearing did not give rise to municipal liability that delay was result of any municipal policy or custom; there was no evidence that municipal procedures for processing warrantless arrests resulted in pattern of unreasonable delays in probable cause hearings, or of any pattern of official tolerance by city concerning such delays. Smith v. Eggbrecht, W.D.Ark.2005, 414 F.Supp.2d 882. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Rape suspect who sued city after his charges were dismissed for lack of evidence failed to establish that city had policy resulting in violation of his constitutional rights, as required to maintain §§ 1983 claims against city; suspect's arrest and commencement of proceedings against him constituted single incident, and there was no evidence of inadequacies in city's training of its police and assistant district attorneys. Smith v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 179. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Failure of town meeting participant to show that town maintained policy or custom condoning use of excessive force in making arrests precluded liability of town for alleged excessive force used in forcibly removing him from meeting at which he was allegedly disorderly. Nolan v. Krajcik, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 447. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Alleged instance of misconduct in which police detective used arrestee as bait to capture fugitive, who was arrestee's son, did not rise to level of showing a clear and persistent pattern of illegal activity, as would establish a municipal policy or custom supporting arrestee's municipal liability claim under §§ 1983 against city, alleging that her Fourth Amendment right to be free from arrest without probable cause was violated. Butts v. City of Bowling Green, W.D.Ky.2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 532, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 2099805. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Business owners and relative did not state civil rights claim against town absent allegation that arrest of owners' relative and alleged attempts to close down their business were result of official policy or custom. Cardillo v. Cardillo, D.R.I.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 402. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1351(6)

City and its police department were not directly liable under §§ 1983 to arrestee for allegedly unconstitutional acts of police officers who made the arrest, absent proof that city had an official policy or custom directing employees to act illegally or unconstitutionally. Grays v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 323. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County sheriff, as county official with policy-making authority, did not make decision to arrest five high school students for conspiracy to commit murder based on plot to attack school, or participate in arrests, and thus county could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged false arrests. Smith v. Barber, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1351(4)

There was no evidence that city had policy or custom or tolerating inappropriate police behavior, precluding municipal liability in resident's § 1983 Fourth Amendment action against officers and city alleging unreasonable entry into his home and excessive force in course of arrest for supplying alcohol to minors. Radloff v. City of Oelwein, N.D.Iowa 2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1145, affirmed 380 F.3d 344, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 967, 543 U.S. 1090, 160 L.Ed.2d 900. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police officers' custom of subjecting arrestees to a "perp walk" supported arrestee's civil liability action under § 1983 against city, seeking monetary damages for alleged violation of his constitutional rights arising from "perp walk" following his arrest, in which officer instructed him to stand on precinct steps while he was videotaped for local news. Lyde v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2001, 145 F.Supp.2d 350. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City could not be held liable for alleged wrongful arrest and prosecution of arrestee suspected of distributing drugs, absent allegations or proof that alleged constitutional deprivation was done pursuant to governmental policy or custom. Tyler v. State of N.Y., W.D.N.Y.1997, 953 F.Supp. 63. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City's admission, pursuant to request for admissions, that police officer acted pursuant to city's official policies, customs, practices, and procedures when arresting § 1983 civil rights plaintiff for violating residential antipicketing ordinance was not ratification of officer's alleged unconstitutional arrest of plaintiff; admissions merely acknowledged that officers acted pursuant to existing policies and training. Copper v. City of Fargo, D.N.D.1995, 905 F.Supp. 703. Federal Civil Procedure 1684

Arrestee failed to prove that city had a policy or custom of arresting protestors without probable cause during an international conference of business leaders, thus precluding imposition of liability on city in the arrestee's § 1983 suit; the only policy or custom the record supported was that, during the conference, the officers should be "thick-skinned" and arrest as a last resort. Bennett v. Schroeder, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 99 Fed.Appx. 707, 2004 WL 1193963, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Claimant alleging violation of his Fourth Amendment rights, in connection with his arrest and prosecution for disorderly conduct and public urination, failed to establish basis for municipal liability; there was no official policy or custom condoning improper arrest conduct, nor was there evidence of failure to train regarding appropriate use of force in effecting arrests. Lazaratos v. Ruiz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22283832, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Action brought by arrestee against police chief in his official capacity had to be treated as action against municipality, and therefore arrestee was required to identify municipal policy or custom that caused his alleged constitutional deprivation in support of § 1983 claim against chief. Murray v. Town of Mansura, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 547, 2003 WL 22135637, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Mother of a minor criminal suspect, who died during a police chase when he fell from a roof, disclosed no policy or custom of unconstitutional practices in the city police department, thus precluding imposition of municipal liability under § 1983; outside of the conclusory allegations contained in the complaint, the mother presented no evidence of a policy or custom. Sepulveda v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22052870, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

There was no evidence that any injury arrestee suffered resulted from policy or custom, as required to support his § 1983 claims against city, arising from his arrest and prosecution for loitering and engaging in acts that annoy or molest children and from his subsequent arrest for loitering. Moorehead v. San Francisco Police Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21518108, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

833. ---- Arrest warrants, law enforcement, custom or usage

City's alleged custom of not ensuring the accuracy of officer arrest warrant affidavits could not form the basis of §§ 1983 claim against city by arrestee when there was no showing that detective submitted a materially false affidavit or otherwise caused arrest without probable cause. George v. City of Wichita, Kan., D.Kan.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1232. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestee failed to state civil rights claims against law enforcement officers, county attorneys, and county commissioners, in their official capacities, where arrestee had not alleged any policy or practice of government entity that lead to alleged violation of his civil rights. Dees v. Vendel, D.Kan.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1531, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City could not be held liable under § 1983 for wrongful arrest, where city police officer served a facially valid arrest warrant, and there was no allegation of official municipal policy or custom relating to execution of the warrant. Theis v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1988, 676 F.Supp. 874. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not subject to federal civil rights liability as result of arrests made pursuant to municipal arrest warrants, which were improperly signed by municipal court clerk pursuant to instructions of city attorney; improper arrests were not made according to official policy, in that there was no evidence that city lawmakers attempted to delegate to city attorney authority to establish procedure for issuing warrants and there was no evidence of consistent, widespread practice or custom which caused illegal arrests. Joiner v. City of Ridgeland, Miss., S.D.Miss.1987, 669 F.Supp. 1362. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County attorney was not liable to arrestee under § 1983 based on attorney's assistance to police officer in preparing complaint to be used in obtaining arrest warrant for plaintiff; there was no county policy under which attorney acted, and there was no showing that attorney, with the single act of preparing complaint for police officer to sign, even if acting as a policy maker for the county, acted with deliberate indifference. Kane v. Lewis and Clark County, Mont., C.A.9 (Mont.) 2004, 111 Fed.Appx. 870, 2004 WL 2286914, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

834. ---- Blood testing, law enforcement, custom or usage

Even if town was grossly negligent for not having blood test policy to check drunk driving arrestees for drug intoxication, arresting police officers could not be held liable for their failure to do so as violation of arrestee's substantive due process; arrestee died in cell due to ingestion of alcohol, glutethimide and large quantity of codeine of which officers were unaware. Carapellucci v. Town of Winchester, D.Mass.1989, 707 F.Supp. 611. Civil Rights 1088(4)

835. ---- Deputization, law enforcement, custom or usage

South Carolina sheriff's common law powers to summon bystanders infused his custom of using county employees in manhunts with force of law so that employees directed by sheriff to engage in manhunt were temporary state law enforcement officers acting under color of state law when they assaulted plaintiff. Scott v. Vandiver, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1973, 476 F.2d 238. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private citizens who complained to local authorities about neighbor's alleged activities which gave rise to neighbor's arrest and prosecution on hate crime charges were not "state actors," for purposes of § 1983 action, where there was no evidence that private citizens were deputized or otherwise jointly engaged with local authorities in prosecuting neighbor. Goehring v. Wright, N.D.Cal.1994, 858 F.Supp. 989. Civil Rights 1326(5)

836. ---- Discrimination, law enforcement, custom or usage

Any discrimination in violation of equal protection clause by city in providing protective services on basis of gender or individual's status as victim of domestic abuse was not imputable to city by virtue of policy or custom, and thus, city could not be held liable in § 1983 action brought after woman who had made reports of domestic abuse, her brother, and her friend were murdered by woman's boyfriend. Semple v. City of Moundsville, N.D.W.Va.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1416, affirmed 195 F.3d 708, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1243, 528 U.S. 1189, 146 L.Ed.2d 102. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County's policy regarding charging of hate crimes, as contained in internal memorandum from district attorney, was broadly enforceable against everyone, not merely alleged neo-Nazis or heterosexuals, and thus, policy did not establish selective enforcement by county of hate crime statutes against classes of person so as to state claim under § 1983. Goehring v. Wright, N.D.Cal.1994, 858 F.Supp. 989. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Where government's failure to protect citizen is alleged to be based on discriminatory policy or custom, citizen may state claim against municipality under civil rights statute. Merced v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1994, 856 F.Supp. 826. Civil Rights 1351(1)

837. ---- Domestic violence, law enforcement, custom or usage

County sheriff's decision to remove home-schooled child from her home to obtain interview with child outside of her parents' presence during investigation of suspected child abuse was "policy, procedure or custom" of county, as required to support parent's civil rights claim. J.B. v. Washington County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1997, 127 F.3d 919. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police officers' alleged use of excessive force in responding to incident of domestic violence was insufficient to establish that city or city police department had widespread practice of abusing men of color who dated white women, and thus city and police department could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for officers' alleged constitutional violation, where incident involved only actors below the policy-making level. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 385, subsequent determination 379 F.Supp.2d 475. Civil Rights 1351(4)

There was genuine issue of fact, precluding summary judgment, in civil rights action brought against county based on claim that county's actual policy for handling domestic violence complaints against its officers differed from policies stated in county sheriff's department policy and procedure manual, despite contention of county that its policy was reasonable. Rideau v. Jefferson County, E.D.Tex.1995, 899 F.Supp. 298. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

By repeatedly shielding police officer from arrest for child abuse and from full investigation of his abusive behavior, municipal policy or custom protecting police officers from complaints of domestic violence may have permitted or encouraged officer to continue in his child abuse, as required to impose liability on city under § 1983 for child's injuries. Sherrell By and Through Wooden v. City of Longview, E.D.Tex.1987, 683 F.Supp. 1108. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Ex-wife failed to allege facts establishing an unconstitutional policy on the part of the borough relating to the handling of domestic relations disputes, or that the borough failed to properly train its police to handle domestic relations disputes and to apply the law in an impartial manner, and thus, she failed to state a § 1983 claim against the borough; at best, her allegations described isolated incidents involving ongoing domestic relations and custody disputes between her and her ex-husband, and she did not allege that the borough's decisionmakers actually knew of, and yet disregarded, an excessive risk to her health or safety. Garrison v. Yeadon, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21282115, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(5)

838. ---- Filing of charges, law enforcement, custom or usage

Teachers at performing arts center, who were unaware of hostage-rescue training exercise at adjoining public high school conducted by city and county emergency response teams (ERTs), could not establish § 1983 claim against county for alleged illegal seizure and excessive force by county ERT members when they encountered teachers during exercise; teachers did not allege existence of any county policy or custom that caused their injuries. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee failed to state civil rights claims against city based on wrongful filing of charges where arrestee failed to allege a constitutional violation arose from execution of established policy of the city; furthermore, arrestee failed to state claim against city based on its refusal to accept the filing of charges against the individual who filed a complaint against arrestee where arrestee did not allege existence of a custom of policy of city regarding refusal to accept countercharges. Langford v. City of Omaha, D.Neb.1989, 755 F.Supp. 1460, appeal dismissed 978 F.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1398

839. ---- High speed chase, law enforcement, custom or usage

Injuries suffered during automobile accident do not amount to Fourteenth Amendment violations merely because accident occurred in context of high-speed automobile chase by police. Webber v. Mefford, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 43 F.3d 1340. Constitutional Law 253(1)

Municipality was not liable for injuries sustained by bicyclist when struck by suspected felon during high speed automobile chase, absent evidence that municipality maintained policy or course of conduct authorizing or condoning reckless, high speed chases that were deliberately indifferent to rights of innocent bystanders. Medina v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1992, 960 F.2d 1493, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Municipality policy makers' awareness of incident in which motorcyclist was killed during prior high-speed pursuit was not evidence that policy makers were deliberately indifferent to possible constitutional violations which may occur during high-speed pursuits by failing to adopt more stringent guidelines limiting or forbidding such pursuits; single incident was not sufficient to impose liability under § 1983, so motorcyclist injured in subsequent high-speed pursuit could not maintain § 1983 claim. Carroll v. Borough of State College, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 47 F.3d 1160. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police department's established rules regarding high-speed chases and training of individual police officers involved in chase of moped negated any municipal liability for death of moped driver involved in high speed chase. Dawes v. Pellechia, E.D.N.Y.1988, 688 F.Supp. 842. Civil Rights 1351(4)

840. ---- Indictments, law enforcement, custom or usage

Given that, under New York law, elected district attorney's powers and duties in connection with prosecution of criminal proceeding are the same as those of an assistant attorney general appointed to handle such a prosecution, and that a county has no right to establish policy concerning how either official should prosecute violations of state penal laws, county could not be said to be responsible or therefore liable in § 1983 action for prosecutor's preparation of indictment in erroneous belief that vote of grand jury had been to indict. Baez v. Hennessy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 853 F.2d 73, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 805, 488 U.S. 1014, 102 L.Ed.2d 796.

841. ---- Illegal or unlawful entry, law enforcement, custom or usage

In the absence of any evidence that city's alleged policy violated federal law, plaintiffs did not have cause of action under federal civil rights statute against city based on alleged custom, practice or policy of allowing forced entry as method of dealing with armed person who was overdosing on drugs and who had ceased communications; record failed to support conclusory allegations that practice was reckless or ill advised. Medrano v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1499, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2415, 508 U.S. 940, 124 L.Ed.2d 638. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City could not be held liable to parking monitor under § 1983 for police officer's entry into her apartment in violation of monitor's Fourth Amendment rights for its failure to require that it be notified after the fact of employee's entry of another employee's residence to check employee's safety and health, where there was nothing demonstrating widespread custom or practice of entry into employee residences under similar circumstances of which city was aware or any strong likelihood of deprivation of rights would have caused reasonable person to take preventive measures. Sims v. Mulcahy, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1990, 902 F.2d 524, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 249, 498 U.S. 897, 112 L.Ed.2d 207. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County was liable under § 1983 for deprivation of hotel lessee's Fourth Amendment rights pursuant to sheriff's department's custom or practice of authorizing its officers, at any hour of the day or night, to be hired by private parties to carry out seizures, without any inquiry into the legality of such actions; it was sheriff's department's presence and active involvement in unlawful repossession of hotel which gave it both the appearance of legality and converted it into state action, and county's rental of its official authority regardless of the circumstances was indifferent to the Constitution. Open Inns, Ltd. v. Chester County Sheriff's Dept., E.D.Pa.1998, 24 F.Supp.2d 410. Civil Rights 1351(3); Civil Rights 1351(4)

Absent any indication that city or villages had policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated, city and villages could not be held liable for civil rights violations that allegedly occurred when police officers unlawfully entered residence and made arrests. Owusu v. Grzyb, N.D.Ill.1990, 749 F.Supp. 897. Civil Rights 1351(4)

842. ---- Inaction, law enforcement, custom or usage

City was not liable for police officers' failure to render medical care to or seek medical care for husband that suffered heart attack, in § 1983 action brought by deceased husband's wife, because city had no express policy or widespread practice to deprive citizens of their constitutional rights, and husband suffered no constitutional injury at hands of city police officers. Cowgill v. City of Marion, N.D.Ind.2000, 127 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1351(4)

843. ---- Investigatory stops, law enforcement, custom or usage

Police officer who made decision to use sensory-overload tactic to conduct Terry stop of detainee was not final city policymaker, so as to make city liable under § 1983 for unreasonable use of tactic in violation of Fourth Amendment; officer's use of tactic was pursuant to city policy, on which city trained its police officers, and identified circumstances under which it was to be used. Brown v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 962. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable under § 1983 for any Fourth Amendment violation that occurred when police officers allegedly searched and handcuffed motorist after observing him resting in his automobile, inasmuch as any violation was not caused by city ordinance authorizing officers to stop persons suspected of committing or being about to commit a crime; if officers violated ordinance the ordinance could not have been cause of any constitutional violation, and if officers complied with ordinance there could have been no constitutional violation in light of fact that ordinance restated federal search and seizure law. Acheampong v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2001, 128 F.Supp.2d 560. Civil Rights 1351(4)

844. ---- Interrogation, law enforcement, custom or usage

Material issue of genuine fact existed as to whether city had a policy of coercing confessions out of female suspects by threatening to have Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) take away their children, precluding summary judgment in favor of city on female suspect's §§ 1983 claim based on theories of both failure to train and refusing to correct complained-of behavior. Sornberger v. City of Knoxville, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 434 F.3d 1006.

Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Mother of minor who was interrogated in his bedroom by police officer who allegedly entered without mother's knowledge or consent stated § 1983 claim against town on basis of custom and policy, as result of alleged final decisions made by municipal policymakers (police chief and police commissioner) in condoning police misconduct towards minors and selectively ignoring civilian complaints. Johns v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.1996, 942 F.Supp. 99. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Assistant state's attorney was not liable in his official capacity under § 1983 for violating arrestee's constitutional rights during interrogation, absent allegations that assistant state's attorney acted in accordance with official policy or custom. Johnson v. Carroll, N.D.Ill.1988, 694 F.Supp. 500. Civil Rights 1358

845. ---- Investigations, law enforcement, custom or usage

Witnesses to police shooting who were detained following the shooting failed to establish county's policy or custom to train its officers concerning the constitutional limitations on detention of witnesses in connection with police shooting investigations, as required to establish municipal liability under §§ 1983. Walker v. City of Orem, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 451 F.3d 1139. Civil Rights 1352(4)

There was no evidence of course of conduct by District of Columbia of deficient investigations into use of force incidents, as required to support §§ 1983 claim that District's failure to adequately investigate use of force incidents led to officer's shooting of plaintiff during "buy/bust" operation. McKnight v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City was not liable for any "custom" of police officers deliberately fabricating evidence of sexual abuse by means of excessive coercion of children during interviews, absent evidence that police chief had actual or constructive knowledge of and acquiesced in an unconstitutional custom or practice. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1179. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City police chief's failure to take corrective action or to initiate investigation after receiving letter from protesters' attorney did not amount to policy, practice, or custom of city, and thus was insufficient to create municipal liability in protesters' §§ 1983 action arising from confiscation of signs by police officers during parade, even if officers' actions violated protesters' First Amendment rights, absent showing of additional harm. Grove v. City of York, Penn., M.D.Pa.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Facts that sheriff's department investigator did not normally confer with anyone before beginning an investigation and that she never looked up the laws on prostitution before her investigation of attorney did not comprise a "policy" or a "custom" by which county could be liable under §§ 1983 to attorney, whose conviction of two counts of attempt to patronize prostitution was overturned on appeal. Cawood v. Haggard, E.D.Tenn.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 863, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 700, 2005 WL 773946. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County officials' investigation of consumer complaints against electronics store and subsequent filing of consumer fraud lawsuit by county agency satisfied "official policy or custom" component of store owner's § 1983 equal protection action against county. Hassoun v. Cimmino, D.N.J.2000, 126 F.Supp.2d 353. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City was not liable, in §§ 1983 action brought by murder victim's family, for any violation of First Amendment privacy rights through police officer's disclosure, to people not involved in murder investigation, of nude photographs of victim; no city policy drove the officer's actions. Donohue v. Hoey, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 109 Fed.Appx. 340, 2004 WL 2095661, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1641, 544 U.S. 921, 161 L.Ed.2d 478. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police department had written policy governing investigations of complaints against officers, such that alleged conspiracy not to investigate and discipline officers for their treatment of plaintiff during his arrest was not result of policy or custom, as required for officers to be liable in their official capacities in § 1983 action. Shelton v. City of Taylor, E.D.Mich.2001, 2001 WL 1525367, Unreported, affirmed 92 Fed.Appx. 178, 2004 WL 231777. Conspiracy 13

846. ---- Malicious prosecutions, law enforcement, custom or usage

Arrestee's pro se civil rights complaint based on his allegations that he was victim of false arrest was not claim against city police department that required him to identify municipal policy or custom that caused his injury, where complaint accused two unnamed city police officers of false arrest, and arrestee later named one of the officers in letter responding the police department's motion to dismiss. Johnson v. Johnson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 466 F.3d 1213. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority passenger's allegations, that the WMATA, by its malicious prosecution and abuse of process after passenger was arrested for allegedly failing to pay fare, violated his constitutional rights, were insufficient to state cause of action under § 1983; there was no allegation that passenger was subjected to such alleged wrongs pursuant to any established policy or practice. Dant v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1987, 829 F.2d 69, 264 U.S.App.D.C. 284. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Intravenous drug user, as participant in needle exchange program, adequately pleaded personal involvement by police commissioner, in § 1983 action under Fourth Amendment, where user otherwise adequately pleaded that city and police chief had policy or custom of violating constitutional rights of needle exchange participants by falsely arresting and prosecuting them, and personal involvement included creating policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed such a policy or custom continue. L.B. v. Town of Chester, S.D.N.Y.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 227. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee did not show that municipality had policy of maliciously prosecuting persons mistreated by police officers, on evidence that police officers filed false police reports and their supervisors did not discipline them for doing so, for purpose of claim under §§ 1983, where police officers did not file false police reports pursuant to municipal policy, and their conduct was not directed or authorized by individual with final policy-making authority for municipality. Barton v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County could not be liable in §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action brought against it and employees of its environmental health department by former defendants prosecuted for violations of environmental laws based in part on information employees had supplied to district attorney; there was no evidence of express departmental policy or widespread practice to cause alleged constitutional deprivation, no causal relationship was shown between any such policy and alleged injuries, no constitutional violation was shown given criminal court's preliminary finding of probable cause, and employees were not policymakers. Ayala v. KC Environmental Health, E.D.Cal.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Plaintiff alleging false arrest and malicious prosecution failed to make out a claim for municipal liability under civil rights statute, § 1983, where he alleged only that he was harmed by individual employees of police department and Department of Corrections and did not allege that violation of constitutional rights was caused by official custom, practice, or policy promulgated by municipal policymaker. Bailey v. New York City Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.1996, 910 F.Supp. 116. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Individual who was indicted, charged, and twice tried for intimidation stated § 1983 malicious prosecution claim on which relief could be granted against municipality based on alleged unconstitutional action implementing custom, policy, or practice; complaint alleged police officer solicited bribe, filed several false charges, and gave false testimony before grand jury, and that police officer had reputation for that type of misconduct, and individual also claimed that city failed to properly instruct, supervise, control and discipline police officers regarding correct procedures for investigation and reporting of circumstances of alleged crime. Treece v. Village of Naperville, N.D.Ill.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1251. Civil Rights 1395(5)

847. ---- Reports, law enforcement, custom or usage

Alleged city policy, of not training police officers to report that motorists involved in accident were undergoing epileptic seizures, to state drivers licensing authorities, did not constitute violation of civil rights of accident victim injured by motorist undergoing seizure; city's alleged failure to train or supervise was not "moving force" behind the injuries, which were directly caused by epileptic seizure. Jones v. City of Carlisle, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 3 F.3d 945, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1218, 510 U.S. 1177, 127 L.Ed.2d 564. Civil Rights 1352(4)

848. ---- Restraints, law enforcement, custom or usage

Evidence that county police officers had a widespread custom of using hog-tie restraint on suspects was insufficient to establish that county was liable under § 1983 for death of arrestee, resulting from officers' use of hog-tie position to restrain arrestee; there was no evidence that county persistently employed hog-tie restraint in an unconstitutional manner. Garrett v. Unified Government of Athens-Clarke County, M.D.Ga.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 1262, reversed in part 378 F.3d 1274. Civil Rights 1351(4)

849. ---- Roadblocks, law enforcement, custom or usage

Since subordinate state troopers' seizure of speeding motorist by use of roadblock was reasonable in the circumstances, constitutional violation by subordinate, as required to impose supervisory liability under § 1983, could not be established in motorist's § 1983 action which alleged that troopers used excessive force in seizing him. Seekamp v. Michaud, C.A.1 (Me.) 1997, 109 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1358

City could not be held liable to owner of roller skating rink under civil rights statute for roadblock which was set up outside rink on "soul night" to allegedly harass owner's black clientele where city did not have any express policies, aside from those generally established by chief of police, relevant to installation of roadblock. Wilson v. City of North Little Rock, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 801 F.2d 316. Civil Rights 1351(4)

850. ---- Wiretapping, law enforcement, custom or usage

Police department personnel stated a § 1983 cause of action against city based on city's interception of telephone communications over police department's private line by alleging that interception violated Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments and that decision by police chief and city manager to depart from "official" policy and surreptitiously intercept police department's private line became city policy. Amati v. City of Woodstock, Ill., N.D.Ill.1993, 829 F.Supp. 998. Civil Rights 1395(5)

851. ---- Use of force, law enforcement, custom or usage

Although administrator of arrestee's estate argued that police officer's failure to follow city's use-of-force policy caused constitutional deprivation of arrestee's rights, she failed to show that city's use-of-force policy caused the alleged constitutional deprivation, as was required to hold officer liable under §§ 1983 in his official capacity; administrator did not dispute the evidence that city's policies on force and training practices were designed to ensure that its officers exercised any use of force in a lawful manner. Elder-Keep v. Aksamit, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2006, 460 F.3d 979. Civil Rights 1358

City, whose police department followed regulations governing the proper use of deadly force, was not liable under §§ 1983 for injuries to unarmed suspect, whose constitutional rights were violated by properly trained police officers who shot him while he was retreating from the scene of an apparent arson; city was not deliberately indifferent to the rights of its citizens, and city did not have custom of allowing police officers unfettered discretion to employ deadly force. Whitfield v. Melendez-Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 431 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1352(4)

There are three ways in which a municipality can be held liable under §§ 1983; there must be: (1) an express policy that would cause a constitutional deprivation if enforced; (2) a common practice that is so widespread and well settled as to constitute a custom or usage with the force of law even though it is not authorized by written law or express policy; or (3) an allegation that a person with final policy-making authority caused the constitutional injury. Lawrence v. Kenosha County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 391 F.3d 837. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Letter that motorist received from sheriff in response to citizen's complaint, which stated that "[w]e find [deputy sheriff] was identified appropriately with what we [sic] was wearing and acted within proper authority to ask for your identification and to stop your vehicle from moving and pursue the action he did to remove you from the vehicle when you were not willing to cooperate," did not show that county ratified and approved actions of deputy sheriff, for purpose of civil rights action against county and deputy sheriff under Fourth Amendment which alleged claims of excessive force based upon deputy's conduct in forcibly removing him from his vehicle. Lawrence v. Kenosha County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 391 F.3d 837. Civil Rights 1348

Municipality did not violate citizen's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable search by not having written policy on use of flash-bang devices by law enforcement officials, for purpose of citizen's Monell claim that municipality made deliberate or conscious choice to fail to train its employees adequately, since officers who made decision to use flash-bang and deploy the device were both trained on use of flash-bangs. Boyd v. Benton County, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 374 F.3d 773. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County's use of military police officer to accompany county investigator during drug investigation, or its lack of oversight of officer's choice of weapon, could not establish existence of policy or custom to use military to enforce law in violation of Posse Comitatus Act or any other policy and custom that caused military officer to accidentally shoot arrestee, as required to impose municipal liability in civil rights action. Riley v. Newton, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 94 F.3d 632, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 955, 519 U.S. 1114, 136 L.Ed.2d 842. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee who was bitten by police dog failed to state facts giving rise to excessive use of force claim against county under § 1983 absent evidence that officer used dog to apprehend arrestee pursuant to county policy governing use of police dogs and absent evidence that county had no regulations governing use of police dogs and that lack of regulations was functional equivalent of policy of permitting unregulated use of police dogs; county could not be held liable for excessive use of force of one of its police officers in the absence of some policy or custom resulting in the excessive use of force. Matthews v. Jones, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 35 F.3d 1046. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City police department's general order listing felonies for which it was permissible to use deadly force to apprehend fleeing felon was official "policy" of city for purposes of imposing municipal liability in § 1983 action by father of unarmed burglary suspect killed by police officer, notwithstanding city's contention that it had no choice but to follow state statute which authorized "use of all the necessary means" to effect arrest of fleeing felon; director of department signed order and mayor was involved in decision to include all types of burglary in order, and city was not bound to follow statute in that it could and did adopt more restrictive deadly force policy than that allowed by statute. Garner v. Memphis Police Dept., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1993, 8 F.3d 358, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1219, 510 U.S. 1177, 127 L.Ed.2d 565. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable under § 1983 to plaintiff allegedly assaulted by two on-duty plain-clothed police officers who erroneously believed that plaintiff was stealing his own car; plaintiff's bald allegations regarding nine instances of alleged use of excessive force by police officers between 1963 and 1988 were insufficient to show unconstitutional city policy or custom. Smith v. City of Joliet, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 965 F.2d 235. Civil Rights 1420

Evidence presented by arrestee was sufficient to establish that city police department had custom or policy of avoiding, ignoring, and covering-up complaints of physical and sexual abuse committed by police officers and, therefore, city could be held liable for police's alleged false arrest and rape of arrestee; there was evidence that police department took no action on previous "use of force" reports found by arresting officer, that department did not investigate complaints filed by another person about repeated requests for sexual favors, and that police chief would open investigation only when citizens filed written complaints, which would be deemed substantiated only when officer's guilt was proven beyond reasonable doubt. Parrish v. Luckie, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 963 F.2d 201. Civil Rights 1420

Fact that county police officers who restrained arrestee in hog-tie position, which resulted in arrestee's death from positional asphyxiation, were not reprimanded for their treatment of arrestee, and fact that excessive force complaints had previously been lodged against some of the arresting officers, did not establish that county had a custom or policy of failing to discipline officers who used excessive force, as required to establish that county was liable under § 1983 for death of arrestee. Garrett v. Unified Government of Athens-Clarke County, M.D.Ga.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 1262, reversed in part 378 F.3d 1274. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Evidence of more than dozen complaints of excessive force and improper police conduct in one year was insufficient to establish that city had policy of indifference to excessive use of force, as was necessary to subject city to liability under §§ 1983 for officer's alleged use of excessive force against arrestee, absent evidence of circumstances surrounding those incidents, or of corresponding figures from other police departments. Thorne v. Steubenville Police Officer, S.D.Ohio 2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 760. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Allegation that police officer used excessive force in arresting public elementary school student for disrupting school activities supported mother's municipal liability claim under §§ 1983 against city, alleging that municipal policy or custom caused student's loss of constitutionally protected right. James v. Frederick County Public Schools, D.Md.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 755. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County did not have pattern or practice of employing excessive force during arrests, and thus county was not liable under §§ 1983 for deputy sheriff's shooting of suspects during traffic stop, despite evidence of four incidents, two lawsuits, and lapses in paperwork procedures, where none of prior incidents involved use of excessive force, there was no evidence that failure to file reports would lead deputies to believe that use of excessive force was condoned, and alleged force used in prior incidents was different from force used in current suit. Massasoit v. Carter, M.D.N.C.2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 463. Civil Rights 1351(4)

One prior incident in which police officer had used pepper spray on another person stopped for a traffic offense was not sufficient to demonstrate a municipal custom that could subject city to liability under §§ 1983 for the officer's alleged use of excessive force in spraying motorist with pepper spray while attempting to arrest him during traffic stop. Davis v. City of Albia, S.D.Iowa 2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 692. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City police department was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 as result of state trooper's alleged use of excessive force during arrest, absent evidence that anyone other than trooper was involved in incident, or that department had employment or agency relationship with trooper. Yarnall v. Mendez, D.Del.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 432. Civil Rights 1348

Even assuming that the county's training program on arresting persons exhibiting signs of excited delirium syndrome was somehow deficient, county was not liable in §§ 1983 excessive force claim brought by personal representative of estate of arrestee, who died of heart attack during struggle with county officers, after exhibiting aggressive and psychotic behavior; fact that more or better training was needed was insufficient to demonstrate deliberate indifference to arrestee's rights, and cause of arrestee's death was not officers' lack of training. Gregory v. County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 965. Civil Rights 1352(4)

There was no evidence of other incidents of excessive force, or statistical evidence, as required to support §§ 1983 claim by victim of police shooting that District of Columbia effectively tolerated pattern of excessive force by its officers. McKnight v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1420

Police chief could not be held liable under §§ 1983 in his individual capacity for failure to train or supervise officer who allegedly used excessive force in arresting plaintiff; evidence that officer was investigated and exonerated on six prior excessive force claims did not demonstrate acquiescence and ratification by chief of officer's use of force, there was no expert testimony that chief created or maintained a policy whereby civilian complaints of excessive force were meaningless, and no showing that chief acted in any way to condone the use of excessive force against the plaintiff or others. Phillips v. City of Fairfield, E.D.Cal.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1101, reconsideration denied 2006 WL 335472. Civil Rights 1358

Municipality was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 for police officer's alleged use of excessive force, absent evidence that there was custom by municipal police officers to use excessive force against town citizens, or that officer was not properly trained in performance of her duties and that such failure to train was official policy promulgated by municipal authorities. Rodriguez-Rodriguez v. Ortiz-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 162, subsequent determination 405 F.Supp.2d 170. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Memorandum of agreement between Department of Justice (DOJ) and city concerning required policies and practices for city's police officers' use of force, resulting from city-requested DOJ investigation into police department's history of use of force which had found higher-than-average use of excessive force, did not establish city policy or custom of deliberate indifference toward excessive force that could form basis for city's liability in arrestee's widow's §§ 1983 failure-to-train/supervise action; memorandum, which preceded arrest giving rise to widow's action, demonstrated that city was not indifferent to problems within department, and widow offered no statistical evidence or evidence of other failures to investigate and discipline officers for excessive force. Robinson v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 39. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Alderman stated claim of liability, on part of town, in §§ 1983 action stating that police used excessive force in arresting him after his refusal to leave meeting, through allegations that there was custom of condoning force, and that town had no policies or procedures in place to curb excessive force in case of arrests. King v. Jefferies, M.D.N.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 624. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Patient, who alleged that she suffered injuries when officer allegedly used excessive force to get patient into ambulance to be transported to hospital for a mental health evaluation, did not establish §§ 1983 claim against city, given that patient presented no evidence of a city policy or custom that caused a constitutional violation. Thomas v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Family and estate of deceased shooting suspect that sued city, stemming from suspect's death at hands of SWAT team, failed to establish that city had policy or custom of deliberate indifference for public's rights or allowing for unlawful entry or use of deadly force, as required to establish municipal liability under §§ 1983; police department received extensive training, was nationally accredited, was required to undergo firearms requalification every year, and had unblemished record. Estate of Bing v. City of Whitehall, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 770. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County police officer who was injured while working undercover when he was struck a police vehicle driven by another county officer who believed he was pursuing a robbery suspect failed to establish that county had a policy of permitting excessive force by its police officers, and thus was liable under §§ 1983; county had an official policy which prohibited intentionally striking a suspect with a car except in limited, lawful circumstances, and thus even if plaintiff was intentionally struck, it was not pursuant to municipal policy. Perez v. Miami-Dade County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1343, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 168 Fed.Appx. 338, 2006 WL 372321. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City and police officers in their official capacities could not be held liable on claims of encouraging or condoning the use of excessive police force since victim's estate showed no policy or custom of encouraging or condoning the use of excessive police force and did not provide any specific facts showing that the alleged custom was the moving force behind the officers' use of excessive force against victim. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1358

Passengers in vehicle which was stopped by police failed to establish that city endorsed a policy or custom of using excessive force, as required to support their § 1983 claim against city; city police department policy was to use amount of force necessary to bring an incident under control, and officers were taught to use minimum force necessary to execute an arrest. Lewis v. City of Topeka, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1209. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County review board's determination that police officer's shooting of suspect did not violate police department's use of force regulations was reasonable, and thus county was not subject to liability under § 1983 in suspect's excessive force suit, despite evidence that suspect had his hands up at time he was shot, where evidence indicated that suspect and accomplice had taken hostages in their car, they were known to be armed, suspect opened car door quickly and lunged out, officer could not see suspect's right hand, and shot came from car. Kanae v. Hodson, D.Hawai'i 2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 1179. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Citizen injured by a police officer may establish the pertinent custom or policy for municipal civil rights liability by showing that the municipality, alerted to the possible use of excessive force by its police officers, exhibited deliberate indifference. Galindez v. Miller, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 190. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Town was not liable for failure to train and supervise police officers, under theory of supervisory liability, in § 1983 action by motorist allegedly beaten by police officers, where motorist presented evidence of only three prior incidents of police misconduct, which was insufficient to establish custom, policy or practice. Noel v. Town of Plymouth, Mass., D.Mass.1995, 895 F.Supp. 346. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Evidence was sufficient to establish that custom or policy of county sheriff caused violation of arrestee's civil rights when he was allegedly beaten by deputy sheriff at time of his arrest, as required to hold sheriff liable; evidence indicated that sheriff's department did not follow policies of its accreditation manual in investigating use of force and customarily charged suspects against whom force was used with obstruction of justice. Colvin v. Curtis, M.D.Fla.1993, 860 F.Supp. 1503, vacated 62 F.3d 1316. Civil Rights 1420

District court properly determined it did not need to reach issue of whether county could be liable on arrestee's claims under § 1983 alleging county created customs and policies which encouraged the use of excessive force during arrest, where court found no individual liability against officers of sheriff's department involved in arrest. Barboa v. Baird, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 81 Fed.Appx. 301, 2003 WL 22719562, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2916, 542 U.S. 941, 159 L.Ed.2d 820. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Allegations by plaintiff that he was kicked, punched, and choked by city police officers who stopped and searched him, and that he was injured as a result of the assault did not state § 1983 claim against city, absent allegation that city had policy or custom that caused deprivation of plaintiff's rights. Flemming v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 296921, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable under § 1983 for excessive force allegedly applied to arrestee when he was given "rough ride" to police station where there was no showing that city had policy of giving such rides, or that they were condoned.

Hughes v. Shestakov, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1742666, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 450, 2003 WL 22234866. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police department had written policy against use of excessive force in arrests, and no evidence suggested existence of an unwritten custom or policy allowing use of such force, and therefore even if officers used excessive force when arresting plaintiff, such force did not result from a custom or policy of the police department or the city, as required for officers to be liable in their official capacities in § 1983 action. Shelton v. City of Taylor, E.D.Mich.2001, 2001 WL 1525367, Unreported, affirmed 92 Fed.Appx. 178, 2004 WL 231777. Civil Rights 1358

851A. Deliberate indifference, law enforcement, custom or usage

Even if borough had explicit policy or procedure in place directing borough police officers to allow drivers who had passed a battery of field sobriety tests and yet appeared intoxicated to continue to operate a motor vehicle, such a policy fell far short of amounting to deliberate indifference to the rights of people with whom the police come into contact, and thus, borough was not liable under §§ 1983 for citizen's death in car accident after he was stopped by officers, given field sobriety tests, and released to continue driving. Hoffman v. Borough of Avalon, W.D.Pa.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 395. Civil Rights 1352(4)

852. Searches and seizures, custom or usage--Generally

City incurred no §§ 1983 liability from its failure to accord post-deprivation hearing to impounded vehicle owner, even if unidentified person at city hall told owner that he had no basis to complain about impoundment, where such comment was directly contrary to city's official policy of providing post-deprivation hearings upon request. Miranda v. City of Cornelius, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 429 F.3d 858. Civil Rights 1352(3)

Owners of home erroneously searched by police officer pursuant to warrant authorizing search of house next door could not recover in section 1983 action against officer in his official capacity, absent any showing that officer's conduct was result of any "policy or custom" of city. Collins v. City of Detroit, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1986, 780 F.2d 583. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee stated claim against sheriff in official capacity for violation of his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizures in detaining him for eight days without judicial probable cause determination; facts could conceivably be produced that sheriff's alleged policy or custom of not effectuating probable cause determinations for detainees who were arrested without a warrant was a substantial factor in bringing about alleged violation. Lingenfelter v. Board of County Com'rs of Reno County, Kan., D.Kan.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1163. Civil Rights 1395(6)

District of Columbia police department did not have policy or practice of condoning violations of police regulation requiring authorization of property owner before towing vehicles, precluding District liability for due process violation arising out of tow ordered by police without authorization. Qutb v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 33. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Even if police department maintained an unwritten policy of allowing its gang task force officers to conduct unconstitutional searches of private residences, city could not be held liable under § 1983 for shooting death of occupant of apartment during warrantless entry and search since there was no evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude either that municipal policymakers knew about that pattern of unconstitutional misconduct or that the warrantless entries and searches were so numerous or flagrant that constructive knowledge of them should be imputed to municipal policymakers. Pineda v. City of Houston, S.D.Tex.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 1057, dismissed 252 F.3d 1355, affirmed 291 F.3d 325, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 892, 537 U.S. 1110, 154 L.Ed.2d 782. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate failed to show that county sheriff, in his official capacity, was responsible for unconstitutional policy permitting illegal search of cells and disposal of property, as required to support § 1983 claim against sheriff. Stewart v. Block, C.D.Cal.1996, 938 F.Supp. 582. Civil Rights 1358

City was not liable, under § 1983, for violating citizens' Fourth Amendment right to be free of unreasonable searches and seizures when police officers allowed television station personnel to accompany them and film execution of search warrant, absent evidence of official policy, unwritten policy, or custom to allow media personnel access to private premises in which search warrants are executed. Parker v. Clarke, E.D.Mo.1995, 905 F.Supp. 638, clarified 910 F.Supp. 460, affirmed in part, reversed in part 93 F.3d 445, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1081, 519 U.S. 1148, 137 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Approval to conduct search of jail guard beyond simple pat-down, given by administrator of jail pursuant to jail regulations, did not constitute official sanctioning of searches by District of Columbia, so as to impose liability on district under § 1983. Profitt v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1991, 790 F.Supp. 304. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City's failure to set policy governing highly intrusive police action can render city's actions as culpable under § 1983 as if they had policy permitting unreasonable searches themselves; local governing body does not shield itself from liability by acting through omission and, thus, when city provides no guidance to officers regarding such intrusive actions as strip searches, it must face consequences of its inaction by being subject to suit. Timberlake by Timberlake v. Benton, M.D.Tenn.1992, 786 F.Supp. 676. Civil Rights 1352(4)

District of Columbia could be liable under civil rights statute if its official policies and practices provided for destruction of seized vehicles without postseizure notice or hearing. Propert v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1990, 741 F.Supp. 959. Civil Rights 1348

Middle school teacher could not be held liable in civil rights action for allegedly unconstitutional searches carried out at direction of principal, absent evidence of any indifference or tacit approval of the searches on the teacher's part; teacher promptly investigated searches in question, inquired into principal's policies concerning student searches, discussed searches with legal counsel, and recommended to principal that he narrow scope of future searches by conducting more extensive investigations beforehand. Burnham v. West, E.D.Va.1987, 681 F.Supp. 1160, supplemented 681 F.Supp. 1169. Civil Rights 1356

Homeowner failed to establish that city had an official policy regarding warrantless searches of homes, as was required to establish liability under §§ 1983 on part of city, based on alleged constitutional violation by city police officers; there was no evidence of a persistent, widespread practice of officers insisting on warrantless searches of homes or of any practice of even arguably unconstitutional searches of residences or businesses. Payne v. City of Olive Branch, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 656, 2005 WL 995950, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

853. ---- Search warrants, searches and seizures, custom or usage

Police officers' practice of not seeking warrants prior to conducting searches of suspects' homes during critical incidents was city's official policy for purpose of imposing municipal liability upon city in § 1983 action by suspect whose home was illegally searched in violation of Fourth Amendment; city deliberately allocated resources to development of response plan for critical incidents, and city failed to establish its claim that plan had to be approved by particular official. O'Brien v. City of Grand Rapids, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 23 F.3d 990, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Evidence failed to show that city had custom of issuing defective administrative search warrants for police officers' homes, and thus city could not be held responsible on grounds of custom for issuance of search warrant and for disciplining officer for refusing to obey it. Los Angeles Police Protective League v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 907

F.2d 879, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

Genuine questions of material fact, regarding whether city policy or procedure led to alleged constitutional violations stemming from execution of search warrant at Latino-owned business, precluded summary judgment on § § 1983 claims brought by business owners, employees, and customers against city and police officers. Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., D.Utah 2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 1013. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police department's policy of entering homes pursuant to verbal court orders bore causal relationship to constitutional harms allegedly suffered by parents and children, as required for city to be vicariously liable under § 1983, where police, following departmental policy, made warrantless, unconsented entry into home and assisted in seizure of children where no exigent circumstances existed. O'Donnell v. Brown, W.D.Mich.2004, 335 F.Supp.2d 787. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Drafting of criminal complaints and proposed warrants by municipality's district attorney's office and actions by municipalities' sheriff's departments and police departments in executing arrest and search warrants did not constitute "municipal custom" sufficient to impose § 1983 liability on municipalities, as actions constituted nondiscretionary duties imposed upon municipal officials by state statutes. Thompson v. Rock County, W.D.Wis.1986, 648 F.Supp. 861. Civil Rights 1351(4)

854. ---- Body cavity searches, searches and seizures, custom or usage

County, which jointly operated prison facility, which assisted in its design and construction, and which had considerable input in its procedures and duty to implement its policies, was a proper defendant in suit by prison inmate against prison officials alleging that his constitutional rights were violated when body cavity searches were conducted in full view of clerical workers, other inmates, or other bystanders, even though county officials claim that viewings were inadvertent. Canell v. Beyers, D.Or.1993, 840 F.Supp. 1378. Civil Rights 1389

855. ---- Strip searches, searches and seizures, custom or usage

City was not liable for allegedly illegal strip search of female arrestee, based on city's alleged failure to properly train police force as to uniform policy on strip searches; police officers were supplied with policy guidelines, and there was no evidence of any other incidents which would have put city on notice that its approach was inadequate. Swain v. Spinney, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Student subjected to strip search failed to state claim establishing deliberate indifference by school district, so as to support imposition of liability on "failure to train" theory, despite one alleged previous strip search and subsequent endorsement by school board president of strip searches of students conducted with parental consent. Cornfield by Lewis v. Consolidated High School Dist. No. 230, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 991 F.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Inmates of jail facility which was owned by county and operated by city did not show deliberate indifference on the part of county to city's policy of strip searching inmates, so that county was not liable. Deaton v. Montgomery County, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 989 F.2d 885. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Single isolated decision by school board to ratify warrantless strip search of student conducted in accordance with constitutionally valid strip search policy was insufficient to establish liability of school board under § 1983, where board believed employees were justified in conducting search of student and there was no history that policy had been repeatedly or even sporadically misapplied by school officials in past. Williams by Williams v. Ellington, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1991, 936 F.2d 881. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Misdemeanor arrestee's allegations that arresting officer was present in room and laughed while defendant was subjected to strip and body-cavity searches by other officers did not establish sufficient personal participation by arresting officer in any illegal searches as required for arrestee to recover under § 1983 against arresting officer; arresting officer was not supervisor of officers at cellblock, nor in a position to tell them what to do about search, and testified that he turned his head when booking officers asked arrestee to drop his pants. Dettelis v. City of Buffalo, W.D.N.Y.1998, 3 F.Supp.2d 341, affirmed 166 F.3d 1200. Civil Rights 1358

856. Service of process, custom or usage

Actions of city police in assisting county sheriff's deputies in attempting to serve capiases on physician's employees at physician's office were not acting as city officials or in pursuance of specific city policy so as to render city liable for county's violation of physician's civil rights in conducting warrantless and unreasonable search and seizure; city police were only acting as agents of county attorney. Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1987, 672 F.Supp. 286, vacated on other grounds 882 F.2d 1101, on remand 745 F.Supp. 446. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Plaintiff police officer and his family failed to demonstrate that city had a policy or custom which was responsible for conduct of defendant police officers in gaining entry into plaintiff officer's home without consent in an attempt to serve subpoena on plaintiff officer to appear before grand jury investigating police misconduct, and therefore city was not liable to plaintiffs under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for violation of plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights. Reed v. Schneider, E.D.N.Y.1985, 612 F.Supp. 216. Civil Rights 1351(4)

857. Licenses and permits, custom or usage--Generally

City could not be held liable under this section for delays of builder's liquor license and occupancy permit and termination of his electric service at instances of city attorney and building inspector where neither of such employees had any policy-making authority, city council declared no express policy about complained of acts, and there was no evidence in record of persistent practice in city by which some builders were favored over others. Bennett v. City of Slidell, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 728 F.2d 762, rehearing denied 735 F.2d 861, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3476, 472 U.S. 1016, 87 L.Ed.2d 612. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Bald assertion of business owner who brought §§ 1983 action against city after city revoked his business occupancy permit for alleged code violations, alleging that he was singled out and prosecuted without any substantiated evidence of local ordinance violations, that he had shown that the city's practice was so widespread with respect to his situation as to constitute the policy of the city and for §§ 1983 liability to attach, was insufficient to establish existence of a municipal policy or custom underlying the complained of municipal conduct, as required under §§ 1983. Bennett v. City of Biddeford, D.Me.2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 1. Civil Rights 1419

Anti-abortion association and members that brought § 1983 action against city and officials, stemming from denial of parade permits, failed to present significant evidence demonstrating that city had permanent and well-settled practice of denying permits, and thus could not maintain action against city; association merely alleged that city could have used "same excuse" to deny any parade application ever presented. Lippoldt v. City of Wichita, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 1228. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City could be held liable under federal civil rights statute on theory that it engaged in known pattern of constitutionally offensive conduct when it denied license to landfill operator; city permitted its planning and zoning commission to deny application for license to operate landfill even though its ordinances required it to do so, and submitted 69 summons to landfill operator's employees although it was aware that operator had application pending before it. Browning-Ferris Industries of St. Louis, Inc. v. City of Maryland Heights, Mo., E.D.Mo.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1340. Civil Rights 1351(3) weapon, they executed policies and customs established by "directive and/or practice" of governmental entities and which alleged that denial of the application violated constitutional rights stated a claim under this section against the governmental entities. Guillory v. Orange County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1984, 731 F.2d 1379. Civil Rights 1395(1)

859. ---- Liquor, licenses and permits, custom or usage

Bar owner failed to establish village's municipal liability, arising from the decisions by either the village mayor or the village police chief to suspend bar owner's liquor license, temporarily close the bar, and impose a fine on the owner, in bar owner's §§ 1983 action, alleging due process and equal protection violations, absent showing that either mayor or police chief instituted a policy under the Illinois Liquor Control Act, which mandated suspension, closing, and fines, under certain circumstances. Killinger v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 389 F.3d 765. Civil Rights 1351(6)

If interference with liquor licensees' business was policy orchestrated at highest level of government in village, village would be liable to licensees in civil rights action. Reed v. Village of Shorewood, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 704 F.2d 943. Civil Rights 1351(6)

860. ---- Parades, licenses and permits, custom or usage

Even though town had no applicable parade ordinance or formal permit system, its custom and practice of always consenting to parades on town's streets was the equivalent of "state action" for purposes of this section prohibiting deprivation of constitutional rights by custom or usage and by statute, ordinance or regulation. North Shore Right to Life Committee v. Manhasset Am. Legion Post No. 304, Town of North Hempstead, E.D.N.Y.1978, 452 F.Supp. 834. Civil Rights 1326(1)

860A. ---- Miscellaneous, licenses and permits, custom or usage

Claim that municipality had custom of requiring mitigation payments before issuing building permit, without allegation that custom amounted to bribery in land-use context, was insufficient to give rise to §§ 1983 liability on official capacity claim against alleged municipal policymaker. Mongeau v. City of Marlborough, D.Mass.2006, 462 F.Supp.2d 144. Civil Rights 1351(3)

In house owner's §§ 1983 action against city challenging nonissuance of certain permits needed for relocation, city was not potentially liable by virtue of actions of its planning director; there was no showing of formal policy or longstanding practice or custom that planning director had followed involving permits, and no showing that planning director was final policymaker, either in general or with regard to relocations. Emmert Industrial Corp. v. City of Milwaukie, D.Or.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 1164. Civil Rights 1351(3)

861. Liens, custom or usage

Pamphlet produced by city district attorney's office of consumer fraud, briefly outlining rights of both landlords and tenants, could not be characterized as promoting or encouraging use of landlord's lien, and thus, even assuming that county adopted contents of pamphlet as policy, policy was not one to lead to deprivation of constitutional rights so as to support § 1983 action against county. Jacobs v. Dujmovic, D.Colo.1990, 752 F.Supp. 1516, affirmed 940 F.2d 1392, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 123, 506 U.S. 840, 121 L.Ed.2d 78, rehearing denied 113 S.Ct. 641, 506 U.S. 1015, 121 L.Ed.2d 571. Civil Rights 1351(3)

862. Perjury, custom or usage

Township was not liable under § 1983 for any violation of arrestee's constitutional rights by arresting officer's alleged perjury, absent showing of official policy of township of encouraging its law enforcement officers to perjure themselves in pretrial proceedings, that failure to train officer rose to level of deliberate indifference or that perjury by township police officers was so wide-spread that a duty to supervise was triggered. Keehl v. DeBottis, E.D.Mich.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1216, affirmed 983 F.2d 1067. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

863. Prisons and prisoners, custom or usage--Generally

County could be held liable under § 1983 for custom or policy established by private corporation it hired to manage and operate its detention center; operation of center was significant public function, over which county retained oversight responsibilities. Herrera v. County of Santa Fe, D.N.M.2002, 213 F.Supp.2d 1288. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City could not be held liable to prisoner under federal civil rights statute, where prisoner merely alleged that city was liable for actions of its police officers, and not for any policies executed or implemented by them. Carman v. Burgess, W.D.Mo.1991, 763 F.Supp. 419. Civil Rights 1351(4)

864. ---- Intent or knowledge, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Prison official could be liable for failure to respond to inmate's medical needs on the basis of evidence that he personally ignored the inmate's complaint and referred inmate's complaints of not getting medication to the head nurse whom he knew was wrongly altering and destroying some of the inmate's prescriptions. Hill v. Marshall, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 962 F.2d 1209, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2992, 509 U.S. 903, 125 L.Ed.2d 687. Civil Rights 1420

County jail inmate failed to show any causal connection between alleged receipt of dirty drinking water or sleeping on floor and actions of director of county jail sufficient to hold director personally liable in § 1983 action; there was no evidence of widespread history of substandard drinking water or inmates' sleeping on floor without mattresses sufficient to put director on notice of objectionable conditions. Brown v. Crawford, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 906 F.2d 667, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2056, 500 U.S. 933, 114 L.Ed.2d 461. Civil Rights 1358

Warden of medium security prison could not be held liable to inmate who was stabbed by fellow prisoner in his cell block on theory that warden's actions constituted deliberate or wanton indifference to inmate's constitutional right to be free of cruel and unusual punishment as guaranteed by Eighth Amendment; even assuming there was possible departure from proper level of staffing in inmate's cell block at time of incident, warden had no notice or knowledge of any danger to inmate or of any particular problems in his cell block, and there was no evidence of pervasive risk of harm to prisoners at time of incident. McGhee v. Foltz, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1988, 852 F.2d 876. Civil Rights 1358

Genuine issues of material fact, regarding extent to which state prison supervisor knew of prison officials' allegedly retaliatory acts against inmate and attempted or failed to remedy situation, precluded summary judgment on inmate's §§ 1983 claim against supervisor, alleging deliberate indifference to inmate's constitutional rights. Ziemba v. Thomas, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 136. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Arrestee who brought action against sheriff, stemming from his lengthy detention prior to initial court appearance, failed to establish that sheriff possessed requisite level of personal knowledge and awareness of detention to hold him individually liable, as required to maintain § 1983 claim; sheriff did not know that arrestee was in jail, did not find out until much later that arrestee had been held for 38 days, and did not know that arrestee had submitted grievance forms to jail administrator complaining about length of his confinement. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1358

Single instance in which bus driver allegedly acted recklessly in driving corrections department bus, causing single bus accident, did not establish existence of municipal policy supporting city's §§ 1983 liability to prisoner allegedly injured in accident. Carrasquillo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Department of Corrections Commissioner and prison warden were not liable to inmate in civil rights action arising out of alleged assault of inmate; inmate set forth only one incident where alleged negligence resulted in injury to him, and one incident did not establish gross negligence in supervision of inferior officers. Bellamy v. McMickens, S.D.N.Y.1988, 692 F.Supp. 205. Civil Rights 1358

866. ---- Deliberate indifference, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

City could not be liable for jail staffs' failure to comply with rule requiring close monitoring of intoxicated prisoners in §§ 1983 action against city related to intoxicated arrestee's suicide in jail; city's policy requiring staff to check intoxicated prisoners every 15 minutes was adequate, there was no allegation that city systematically failed to enforce its policies, and record did not imply that suicide rates in city's jail was abnormally high. Bradich ex rel. Estate of Bradich v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 413 F.3d 688. Civil Rights 1352(4)

In prisoner suicide case, in order to prevail on claim that jail official infringed on pretrial detainee's substantive due process rights in violation of § 1983, plaintiff must show that jail official displayed a deliberate indifference to detainee's taking of his own life by failing to respond appropriately to a strong likelihood, rather than a mere possibility, of self-inflicted harm. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Constitutional Law 262

While county's violation of consent decree that arose out of voluntary settlement of prior jail-conditions lawsuit, in failing to provide second, nighttime jailer to staff jail during hours that pretrial detainee committed suicide, was relevant, in § 1983 action, to whether plaintiff had establish requisite deliberate indifference, this violation of consent decree, standing alone, did not establish deliberate indifference. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1088(4); Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

To establish a defendant's deliberate indifference in § 1983 action arising out of prisoner's suicide, plaintiff must show that defendant: (1) had subjective knowledge of risk of serious harm; and (2) disregarded that risk, (3) by conduct that was more than mere negligence; moreover, in case of a county defendant, plaintiff must point to some policy that demonstrates county's deliberate indifference. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1098

County's failure to fund second, nighttime jailer during hours that pretrial detainee committed suicide, while in violation of consent decree entered in prior jail-conditions lawsuit, did not rise to level of deliberate indifference to a strong likelihood that suicide would result, as required to subject county to liability for the suicide under § 1983, where prior lawsuit was not concerned with risk of prisoner suicides, and no evidence was presented that, prior to suicide which formed basis of present § 1983 action, any prisoner had ever committed suicide in county jail. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County sheriff's policy of having only one nighttime jailer during hours that pretrial detainee committed suicide, while in violation of consent decree entered in prior jail-conditions suit, did not rise to level of deliberate indifference to a strong likelihood that suicide would result, as required to subject sheriff to liability for the suicide under § 1983, where prior lawsuit was not concerned with risk of prisoner suicides, and no evidence was presented that, prior to suicide which formed basis of present § 1983 action, any prisoner had ever committed suicide in county jail. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Evidence did not establish that deputy sheriff was deliberately indifferent to inmate's safety by failing to respond to inmate's complaints about harassment, and therefore deputy was not liable under § 1983 for sexual assault on inmate in which cellmate inserted toothbrush into inmate's anus while inmates were pushed together to separate them from another inmate being removed from cell; even though inmate testified that he told deputy that cellmate was harassing and sexually assaulting him, inmate contradicted himself on whether he told deputy of harassment before or after assault. Doe v. Sullivan County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1992, 956 F.2d 545, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 187, 506 U.S. 864, 121 L.Ed.2d 131. Civil Rights 1420

Even if jail medical personnel were deliberately indifferent to pretrial detainee's serious medical needs, county could not be held liable under §§ 1983; there was no showing that any alleged deliberately indifferent policies of county contributed to or exacerbated any other inmates' medical condition, or that county had a "deliberate intent" to implement inadequate screening policies, allow or encourage an inadequate record-keeping process, implement a policy of inadequate staffing of medical personnel at the jail or have a policy of inadequately training or supervising medical personnel, and detainee had not demonstrated a sufficient causal link between the alleged implementation of the county policies under attack and his injuries. Dukes v. Georgia, N.D.Ga.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 1298. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Prison officials of District of Columbia did not have policy or custom which would have subjected them to liability under §§ 1983 on allegations brought by prisoner of District of Columbia that prison officials in Virginia violated his right to access to courts and committed religious discrimination against him while in Virginia under prisoner custody arrangement, since officials of District of Columbia were not deliberately indifferent, they did not know, and they should not have known of risk that constitutional violations would have occurred. Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2004, 357 F.Supp.2d 187. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Absent evidence of other incidents or prisoner complaints, prisoner, who testified that guards at pretrial detention facility did not follow county policies designed to ensure his safety, failed to demonstrated a custom of failure to follow county policies such that county could be held liable under §§ 1983 for Eighth Amendment violation. Thompson v. Spears, S.D.Fla.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 1224, affirmed 129 Fed.Appx. 497, 2005 WL 901871. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee who brought action against county, stemming from his lengthy detention prior to initial court appearance, established that county's detention policy was deliberately indifferent to his constitutional rights, as required to maintain § 1983 claim against county; county's policy, under which sheriff's office submitted names of those confined in jail to court and then waited for court to schedule hearing, resulted in 38-day delay for arrestee, in contravention of his Fourth Amendment right to judicial determination of probable cause as prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Hispanic prisoners in District of Columbia's correctional institutions did not establish § 1983 municipal liability claim; prisoners did not demonstrate that substantial majority of incidents upon which they relied to establish racially hostile environment were, in fact, racially motivated, they did not show that final policymakers were deliberately indifferent to racial violence against Hispanics by other inmates or correctional officers, and they did not establish deliberate indifference as to training. Franklin v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1997, 960 F.Supp. 394, supplemented 1997 WL 403418, vacated in part 163 F.3d 625, 333 U.S.App.D.C. 334, rehearing denied, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 168 F.3d 1360, 335 U.S.App.D.C. 60. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Female prisoner who was sexually assaulted in jail by sheriff's deputy could not show that prison officials were subjectively and "deliberately indifferent" to her rights, so as to support federal civil rights action against county, where there was no evidence that county knew of and disregarded excessive risk to prisoner's rights; prior to prisoner's complaint, no incident of any abusive conduct on part of particular deputy was ever reported to jail supervisors, and thus supervisors could not have known of risk. Thomas v. Galveston County, S.D.Tex.1997, 953 F.Supp. 163. Civil Rights 1093

Corrections officials were not deliberately indifferent to inmate's rights to due process and to be free from cruel and unusual punishment in failing to ensure that facility's policies and procedures governing inmate classification and recreation were followed, even though failure to follow them resulted in attempted strangulation of inmate by prisoner who was known to be extremely dangerous and who should not have been permitted to leave his cell unescorted; policies and procedures did not themselves cause harm suffered by inmate, and failure to communicate and follow policies and procedures did not rise above level of negligence. Schwartz v. County of Montgomery, E.D.Pa.1994, 843 F.Supp. 962, affirmed 37 F.3d 1488. Constitutional Law 272(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

867. ---- Refusal to remedy, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Although there was no policy statement permitting deplorable conditions at prison, where those conditions remained because prison officials customarily refused to provide prisoners with living environment that satisfied constitutional minimum, they could be held liable for civil rights violation. Women Prisoners of District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1994, 877 F.Supp. 634, vacated in part, modified in part 899 F.Supp. 659, remanded 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S.App.D.C. 247, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1552, 520 U.S. 1196, 137 L.Ed.2d 701, on remand 968 F.Supp. 744. Civil Rights 1358

868. ---- Personal involvement, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Prison superintendent was not liable under § 1983 for alleged violations of inmate's rights; superintendent denied his involvement in many of the alleged violations and inmate agreed that superintendent did not participate in alleged violations and stated that he had sued superintendent only because of his superintendent's position. McDowell v. Jones, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 990 F.2d 433. Civil Rights 1358

State prison official was not personally involved in assigning inmate to "top lock" upon his arrival at prison so as to be liable under § 1983 for denial of inmate's Fourteenth Amendment rights due to failure to provide prior hearing pursuant to Michigan Administrative Code. Hardin v. Straub, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1193. Civil Rights 1358

Shift supervisor and watch commander at county jail facility was not liable to pretrial detainee who was raped by homosexual inmate, where shift supervisor had no hand in devising policies which allegedly caused violation of personal security rights and there was no evidence that he had acted personally in any way or directed others to act to cause inmates injuries. Redman v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 942 F.2d 1435, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 972, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L.Ed.2d 137. Civil Rights 1358

Prison warden, who merely received letter from inmate challenging findings in support of inmate's placement in segregation on ground that he was denied counsel, was not sufficiently personally involved in hearing process to be liable under section 1983 for any procedural defects in the hearing where his sole involvement was to review merits of inmate's assignment to segregation. Wright v. Collins, C.A.4 (Md.) 1985, 766 F.2d 841. Civil Rights 1358

Prison officials could not be held liable in action under this section for alleged violations of inmate's constitutional rights by confiscating his property and allowing members of inmate gang to harass him, in absence of any allegation that such officials were personally responsible for confiscation or permitting harassment. Harris v. Greer, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 750 F.2d 617. Civil Rights 1358

Insofar as plaintiffs' damages claim against prison administrator under this section rested on allegations of conditions beyond his personal control, namely, the overcrowding in prison and insufficient number of guards, it failed to make out grounds for recovery. Pinto v. Nettleship, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1984, 737 F.2d 130. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison lieutenant was not liable for pretrial detainee's placement in lockdown without protections afforded by due process clause, despite detainee's allegations that he wrote lieutenant about his lockdown, that lieutenant did not respond, and that it was lieutenant's job to hear any appeals; detainee failed to prove that lieutenant played any part individually in punishment given detainee. Dean v. Thomas, S.D.Miss.1996, 933 F.Supp. 600. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate who was allegedly assaulted by one corrections officer and threatened by another failed to state claim under § 1983 against City Department of Corrections official and prison warden; complaint did not indicate that defendants even knew that incident took place, let alone were personally involved, there was no allegation that incident resulted from either policy or custom that defendants created or enforced, and there was no allegation that either incident was attributable to defendants' grossly negligent conduct. Tarafa v. Manigo, S.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 172. Civil Rights 1395(7)

869. ---- Confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Prison authorities could not be held liable for damages for confiscation of inmate's religious writings on basis of this section, where inmate neither joined official alleged to have confiscated writings nor alleged that official's act was pursuant to established county practice, policy or custom. Slay v. State of Ala., C.A.5 (Ala.) 1981, 636 F.2d 1045, rehearing denied 642 F.2d 1210. Civil Rights 1098

870. ---- Force against prisoners, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Correctional officers' alleged violation of county policies regarding use of force and use of pepper spray in subduing inmate could not give rise to civil rights liability on part of county, absent any allegation that policies themselves were unconstitutional. Johnson v. Blaukat, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 453 F.3d 1108. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Allegations that correction facility supervisor expressly authorized officers to maintain custom and practice authorizing use of physical force against detainees without just cause was sufficient to state claim of personal liability for violation of detainee's due process rights, under §§ 1983. Jean-Laurent v. Wilkerson, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 318. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Inmate who sued state prison officials, alleging use of excessive force in incident at sallyport, failed to establish that prison commissioner allowed policy and custom of use of excessive force on prisoners, as required to maintain claim for supervisory liability under §§ 1983; there was no reliable evidence that commissioner created or allowed continuance of environment in which violation of inmates' constitutional rights was encouraged and tolerated. Ziemba v. Thomas, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 136. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner failed to allege that any excessive force used against him in violation of his civil rights was product of official policy or custom of city police department, or that person responsible for challenged conduct was final policymaker, and so did not state § 1983 civil rights cause of action against department. Patterson v. Wauwatosa Police Dept., E.D.Wis.1996, 930 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Inmate's father failed to establish in § 1983 action that training of guards and use of firearm caused death of escaping inmate, that policy on use of deadly force deprived inmate of constitutional rights, or that administrator and supervisors were grossly negligent or deliberately indifferent. Ryan Robles v. Otero de Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 1989, 729 F.Supp. 920. Civil Rights 1093

871. ---- Lock downs, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

City could be held liable for death of inmate, who was killed by other inmates, on the basis of evidence that he had expressed fear for his safety because he had implicated the other inmates in a crime for which they were convicted, that his wife had informed an unidentified jail employee of the inmate's fears, that city's policy of not locking down prisoners at night was reckless and departure from accepted standards, that contraband control policy did not require wire brooms, such as that used to kill the inmate, to be inventoried or used on a check-out basis, and that the policy of not separating crime partners was extremely dangerous. Berry v. City of Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 900 F.2d 1489. Civil Rights 1093; Civil Rights 1351(4)

872. ---- Mail, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Supervisor of jail official who was allegedly negligent in opening inmate's mail from attorney outside inmate's presence could not be held liable in official capacity in § 1983 suit; no unconstitutional policy or practice was in effect at the jail. Bryant v. Winston, E.D.Va.1990, 750 F.Supp. 733. Civil Rights 1358

873. ---- Medical care, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Evidence that police officers placed in custody inmates who were experiencing symptoms of after-effects of methamphetamine use did not establish that county had official practice of booking inmates who were hallucinating without providing medical care, for purpose of Monell policy or custom official-capacity claim under §§ 1983. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county had widespread practice or custom of inordinate delay in providing methadone treatment to inmates precluded summary judgment in action alleging that county was liable under §§ 1983 for inmate's death in county jail due to sudden withdrawal from his prescribed methadone medication. Davis v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 452 F.3d 686. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County was not liable under §§ 1983 for injury caused detainee when he was not scheduled for surgery on his severed tendons while incarcerated absent any evidence that his injury was result of jail custom or policy. Johnson v. Karnes, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 398 F.3d 868. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Jail inmate, who was denied access to physician and to his medication for sebaceous cysts on his scalp and who went for eight months without treatment of his skin condition, despite obtaining court orders directing treatment, failed to establish that county had inadequate procedures, did not adequately train its personnel, or had other policy or custom causing inmate to be denied medical care, and thus could not maintain action against county sheriff and other county officials in their official capacity under § 1983; county presented evidence of procedures designed to prevent inmates with medical needs from falling through the cracks as inmate did, including evidence that inmates had access to nurses and paramedics on daily basis to whom they could report missed appointments. Holmes v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 930 F.2d 1196, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 423, 502 U.S. 960, 116 L.Ed.2d 443. Civil Rights 1420

County could not be held liable for jail officials' deliberate indifference to prisoner's serious medical needs based on failure to provide medication more frequently than prison-wide schedule of every six hours where county's existing policy requiring provision of medicine between six-hour scheduled dispensations when needed was not followed. Johnson v. Hardin County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1990, 908 F.2d 1280. Civil Rights 1351(4)

policy of not training its jailers and police officers in proper medical treatment of prisoners so as to warrant imposition of municipal liability under deprivation of civil rights statute, where department had adopted standard policy for rendering medical care to prisoners, jailers were required to discuss with prisoner his medical problem and obtain explanation, and jailers had all been trained in CPR and some were emergency medical technicians. Vukadinovich v. McCarthy, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1990, 901 F.2d 1439, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 761, 498 U.S. 1050, 112 L.Ed.2d 780. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County sheriff could not be held personally liable in his official capacity under §§ 1983 to detainee who was allegedly denied medications and medical treatment while he was incarcerated at county jail, absent evidence that there was an unconstitutional county custom or policy to deprive inmates of medical treatment, or that sheriff, as the final policymaker, instituted such a policy or acted with deliberate indifference to detainee's medical needs. Tatum v. Simpson, D.Colo.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1159. Civil Rights 1358

A single incident possibly amounting to a violation of a detainee's rights to medical care did not amount to proof of a municipal policy or custom of constitutional violation so as to warrant municipal §§ 1983 liability under Monell. Hollenbaugh v. Maurer, N.D.Ohio 2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 894. Civil Rights 1351(4)

A "policy" or "custom" may exist, for purposes of determining whether a prison medical provider is liable under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to a serious medical need, where the policymaker has failed to act affirmatively at all, though the need to take some action to control the agents of the government is so obvious, and the inadequacy of the existing practice so likely to result in the violation of constitutional rights, that the policymaker can reasonably be said to have been deliberately indifferent to the need. Jackson v. First Correctional Medical Services, D.Del.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 387. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 based on alleged inadequate medical care received by city prisoner who purportedly was seriously injured in bus accident while being transported to court, given absence of allegation that city had policy to deny prisoners adequate medical care. Carrasquillo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Every jail guard was almost certain to be in charge of inmates with serious medical conditions, and thus allegation that city sheriff failed to ensure that guards at city jail were adequately trained to recognize and adequately respond to serious medical conditions presented by inmates under their charge was sufficient to state cognizable failure to train claim in § 1983 suit alleging that jail guards failed to recognize and respond to inmate's bacterial meningitis, regardless of whether there was pattern of deliberate indifference exhibited by jail guards to meningitis or other serious illnesses. Brown v. Mitchell, E.D.Va.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 682. Civil Rights 1358

Even if insulin-dependent diabetic pretrial detainee could show that jail officials were deliberately indifferent to his serious medical condition by giving him only one shot of insulin during a period of approximately 48 hours, county sheriff's office could not be held liable for the constitutional violation since detainee did not establish the existence of a "policy or custom" based on treatment decisions by the sheriff's office or the nurses at the jail; county did not make its nurses into "policy-makers" who possessed final authority to establish municipal policy for the sheriff's office with respect to the care of pretrial detainees, but rather the nurses were not free to ignore the official policies of the sheriff's office, or free from review or supervision by the responsible doctor. Engelleiter v. Brevard County Sheriff's Dept., M.D.Fla.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 1300. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Reports of court appointed monitor regarding pervasive failure of private medical services company to provide medical care to inmates of county jail, together with company's internal memoranda, were sufficient to establish custom of violating inmates' constitutional right to medical treatment, and, thus, to establish company's potential liability in § 1983 action arising out of failure to provide treatment for inmate with history of cardiac illness. Nelson v. Prison Health Services, Inc., M.D.Fla.1997, 991 F.Supp. 1452. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for county sheriff in § 1983 action by estate and survivors of manic depressive arrestee who died from chronic malnutrition and dehydration on his eighth day in jail, existed as to whether sheriff was aware of inmate's condition and failed to investigate or procure medical or psychiatric assistance, whether sheriff had in place policy that inmates were given medical and/or psychiatric care only upon his approval, whether sheriff was unavailable to approve such medical care, and whether sheriff adequately trained his employees. Duffey v. Bryant, M.D.Ga.1997, 950 F.Supp. 1168. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

874. ---- Overcrowding, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Even though jail was overcrowded and county was under district court directions to upgrade facility to alleviate overcrowding, county and county executive were not liable under civil rights statute for assault on detainee when another detainee poured hot water from coffee urn over him during argument in day room; any possible connection between the conditions at the jail on the assault were too attenuated to permit recovery, as there was no demonstration of connection between overcrowding and the assault or even an allegation that, absent the overcrowding, plaintiff would not have been with the assailant in the day room. Best v. Essex County, New Jersey Hall of Records, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1993, 986 F.2d 54. Civil Rights 1093

City's housing of inmates in grossly overcrowded, poorly ventilated, and unsanitary jail facility was so likely to result in inmate sickness and suffering that there was obvious likelihood of constitutional deprivations to identifiable group of persons having special relationship to city, and thus city's failure to remedy jail conditions could constitute cognizable official policy or custom for purposes of imposing municipal liability under § 1983 for inmate's death, where city was aware that inmate had compromised immune system, and inmate died of bacterial infection. Brown v. Mitchell, E.D.Va.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 682. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Overcrowding in District of Columbia jail is result of policy, practice, or custom of the district so that District of Columbia Government and its various employees in their official capacity may be sued for civil rights violations arising out of the overcrowding. Marsh v. Barry, D.D.C.1988, 705 F.Supp. 12, on subsequent appeal 926 F.2d 1184, 288 U.S.App.D.C. 311. Civil Rights 1351(4)

875. ---- Pretrial detainees, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Policy not to inform detainees of their bail status until they asked, if found to have been followed by city jail, would satisfy the first element for municipal liability under § 1983, the existence of punitive municipal policy or custom. Gaylor v. Does, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1997, 105 F.3d 572. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To succeed in holding a municipality accountable for a jailer's violation of pretrial detainee's due process right to be secure in his basic human needs, such as medical care and safety, when an episodic act or omission of state jail official is at issue, detainee must show that municipal employee's act resulted from municipal policy or custom adopted or maintained with objective deliberate indifference to detainee's constitutional rights. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1996, 74 F.3d 633, on remand 949 F.Supp. 456. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County, through its sheriff, was deliberately indifferent to right of detainees not to be incarcerated without prompt pretrial procedures, as required to establish municipal liability under § 1983, where sheriff knew that some inmates could not communicate their plight or were out of touch with their families or lawyers and that from time to time some inmates remained incarcerated for period of time because they missed their arraignments. Oviatt By and Through Waugh v. Pearce, C.A.9 (Or.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1470. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Although detention of arrestee for more than five days without bringing him before judicial officer for probable cause determination might have violated arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights, civil rights claim asserted under § 1983 against county based on that detention was properly dismissed, where arrestee alleged no facts suggesting that the alleged constitutional deprivation occurred as result of county policy or custom. Thompson v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 885 F.2d 1439. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officers' conduct in leaving a highly intoxicated pretrial detainee in a cell with his hands handcuffed behind his back was not undertaken pursuant to any city policy or custom, as required for imposition of municipal liability in the detainee's §§ 1983 suit, brought in connection with injuries sustained in a fall; city had rather detailed written policies restricting the use of handcuffs, and an officer testified that if an arrestee was too intoxicated to be booked, it was the usual practice to put the arrestee in a cell until he/she sobered up and, during that period, the handcuffs would be removed unless the detainee was acting violently. Carroll v. City of Quincy, D.Mass.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 215. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Jail administrator's summary judgment affidavit, stating that he "became aware that the jail staff were not always following the policy and were, at least on some occasions, conducting strip searches in violation of policy" did not support inference in favor of county officials, as nonmovants, that jail personnel were following policy more often than not; such an inference would have been unreasonable, since affidavit did not address practices of other corrections officers. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 159. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of intoxicated pre-trial detainee who committed suicide in holding cell, based on its policies for identifying detainees at increased risk for suicide, where city did not have history of numerous suicides by detainees, city had policies for removing harmful items from detainees, and, following previous suicide in holding cell, city took corrective action by placing video monitor in cell. Cruise v. Marino, M.D.Pa.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 656. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County sheriff was responsible, in his individual capacity, for Fourth Amendment violations arising from strip searches of all detainees alleged to have committed misdemeanors, without showing of reasonable suspicion that they were harboring contraband on or within their bodies; sheriff was aware of custom of universal misdemeanor suspect strip searches, and did not take effective action to halt practice. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee failed to prove a continuing, widespread, persistent custom or practice of unconstitutional overdetention of arrestees pending release on bail, despite an alleged sign posted in a waiting area, alerting inmates that they could expect delays of up to eight hours in processing their releases. Sizer v. County of Hennepin, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 796, affirmed 162 Fed.Appx. 681, 2006 WL 133525. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In light of testimony indicating a policy both to tell and not to tell an arrestee his bail or fine amount, genuine issue of material fact existed concerning which policy was actually the policy of the city, precluding summary judgment in favor of both city and arrestee on arrestee's § 1983 claim to hold city liable for an unconstitutional policy of excessive detention of pre-trial detainees arrested on bench warrants and not accepting bail from pre-trial detainees arrested on misdemeanor charges. Bunyon v. Burke County, S.D.Ga.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1310. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In light of testimony indicating a policy both to tell and not to tell an arrestee his bail or fine amount, genuine issue of material fact existed concerning which policy was actually the policy of the city, precluding summary judgment in favor of both police chief and arrestee on arrestee's § 1983 claim to hold police chief liable for an unconstitutional policy of excessive detention of pre-trial detainees arrested on bench warrants and not accepting bail from pre-trial detainees arrested on misdemeanor charges. Bunyon v. Burke County, S.D.Ga.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1310. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

against county; county deferred to court to schedule arrestees' initial appearance hearings as matter of policy, which caused county to detain arrestee for 38 days before he was taken before court, in contravention of Fourth Amendment right to judicial determination of probable cause as prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Even if individual officials were liable under § 1983 for attempted suicide of pretrial detainee, city could not have been held liable for any failure to adopt additional measures to prevent suicide of pretrial detainees where city had taken measures to prevent suicides and did not communicate any message of tacit approval or acquiescence. Litz v. City of Allentown, E.D.Pa.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1401. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1351(4)

Finding that county was not liable under § 1983 to arrestee was not clear error at bench trial on arrestee's claim for damages allegedly resulting from constitutional violations when he was detained in county jail for nine days after he was arrested on domestic violence charge and did not post bail; arrestee never alleged existence of county policy or custom in complaint, and trial court found that county was not operating pursuant to official policy or custom. Wu v. Salt Lake County Com'n, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 53, 2004 WL 38326, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 294, 543 U.S. 850, 160 L.Ed.2d 81. Civil Rights 1420

876. ---- Privacy, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Sheriff was not liable under § 1983 for his subordinates' alleged violation of inmate's constitutional rights when inmate's genitals were allegedly exposed to members of opposite sex, where sheriff had instituted precautions to prevent such unreasonable exposure by placing curtains on showers and taking steps to ensure that female officers walked cell block only at regular intervals so that their appearance could, to some extent, be anticipated. Strickler v. Waters, C.A.4 (Va.) 1993, 989 F.2d 1375, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 393, 510 U.S. 949, 126 L.Ed.2d 341. Civil Rights 1098

877. ---- Release, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

In the absence of finding that director of Bureau of Corrections was aware that prevailing custom and practice was for records officers to ignore complaints about prisoners with respect to their release dates or that he approved failure to follow designated procedures in such cases, he could not be held liable for denial of due process to inmate who was held beyond the expiration of his term on theory that he established or maintained a process which did not comport with due process. Sample v. Diecks, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 885 F.2d 1099. Civil Rights 1358

878. ---- Sexual abuse, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Evidence that continuing, widespread, and persistent pattern of unconstitutional conduct existed at county jail, for purposes of determining whether county was liable in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that her Eighth Amendment rights were violated when corrections officer raped her, was sufficient for submission to jury; inmate presented evidence of corrections officer's conduct spanning five months and involving extortion, deception, and repeated sexual acts, culminating in rape of inmate, and evidence of other acts of sexual misconduct by jail employees. Ware v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1998, 150 F.3d 873, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1429

County could not be held liable under § 1983 to former female inmates who were sexually assaulted by jailer for adopting policy of permitting single jail officer to be on duty when second jailer was sick or on vacation or for failing to adopt policies to supervise jailers and protect women prisoners; no previous incidents of sexual harassment or assault of female inmates had occurred to provide notice to county that its one-jailer policy and failure to adopt related policies would result in injuries alleged, and sexual assault of female inmates was not plainly obvious consequence of absence of policies or having one male jailer on duty. Barney v. Pulsipher, C.A.10

(Utah) 1998, 143 F.3d 1299. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Jury question was presented as to whether jail officials were acting pursuant to county policies or customs when placing pretrial detainee in cell with alleged "aggressive homosexual," who subsequently raped him and whether that policy or custom exacerbated danger posed by aggressive homosexual to general prison population to such extent that it amounted to deliberate indifference to pretrial detainee's personal security in violation of § 1983. Redman v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 942 F.2d 1435, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 972, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L.Ed.2d 137. Civil Rights 1429

County was not liable in §§ 1983 action for violations of county jail inmate's rights under Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments, arising out of sexual assaults by female corrections officer; conduct of officer was not undertaken pursuant to any county policy or custom, and county did not have respondeat superior liability. White v. Ottinger, E.D.Pa.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 236. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Female prisoner did not show requisite official policy or custom necessary to establish federal civil rights violation on part of county arising out of sexual assault committed upon her by sheriff's deputy in jail where county had specific policies against very occurrences reported by prisoner, and policies appeared to work in practice as well as in theory. Thomas v. Galveston County, S.D.Tex.1997, 953 F.Supp. 163. Civil Rights 1351(4)

879. ---- Solitary confinement or segregation of prisoners, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Commissioner of New York State Department of Correctional Services could be held liable in § 1983 suit commenced by female inmates for alleged violation of their Eighth Amendment rights arising from confinement conditions in solitary unit to extent he failed to develop and implement programs and policies regarding treatment of mentally ill inmates or delegated that responsibility to others whom he then failed to supervise adequately. Langley v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1989, 709 F.Supp. 482, appeal dismissed 888 F.2d 252. Civil Rights 1358

880. ---- Suicide, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Mere opportunity for suicide, without more, is insufficient to impose liability under § 1983 on those charged with care of prisoners. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1098

Police chief's failure to have written policy for handling of suicidal jail inmates did not constitute deliberate indifference to medical needs of jailed arrestee, as required for arrestee's estate, in its civil rights suit arising out of arrestee's suicide while in jail, to overcome chief's qualified immunity from claims against him in his individual capacity; chief's unwritten policy for handling of "unstable" inmates was sufficient. Belcher v. City of Foley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1390. Civil Rights 1376(7)

City did not act with deliberate indifference towards plight of suicidal detainees in implementing policies for the safe incarceration of inmates and was thus not liable under federal civil rights statute on that basis for prisoner's suicide by hanging; at most, policies were not strictly followed on night of her death, or she would not have had access to garden hose normally used to wash down jail floors. Evans v. City of Marlin, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 986 F.2d 104, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police chief was not liable in civil rights suit arising out of jail detainee's suicide, despite his knowledge of earlier detainee's suicide in lockup, his responsibility for policy of sending jail houseman to pick up recent arrestees, leaving police station unsupervised, his failure to implement more effective monitoring system in lockup and his failure to order training in suicidal screening; chief's conduct, while perhaps negligent, was not deliberately indifferent to risk that another detainee would commit suicide. Bowen v. City of Manchester, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1992, 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1358

County could not be held liable for violating civil rights of detainee who committed suicide absent any indication that it had policy amounting to deliberate indifference to potential suicides among detainees, either implemented by inadequately training its officers or by maintaining unsafe jail. Elliott v. Cheshire County, N.H., C.A.1 (N.H.) 1991, 940 F.2d 7. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County could not be held liable under §§ 1983 official capacity claim for suicide of pretrial detainee in county jail, once it had been determined that there was no underlying constitutional violation by any of its officers. Keehner v. Dunn, D.Kan.2005, 409 F.Supp.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1348

Material issues of fact, as to whether county's policy regarding heroin detoxification in county jail posed substantial risk to detainee who committed suicide, that county was aware of that risk, and that policy was moving force behind the alleged constitutional right of inmate to have addiction adequately addressed, precluded summary judgment in §§ 1983 action alleging deprivation of detainee's substantive due process rights. Estate of Abdollahi v. County of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 1194. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

It was not shown that county had a custom of overcrowding and understaffing its jail, or that such a custom played a direct and substantial role in a pretrial detainee's hanging in a suicide attempt, thus precluding imposition of liability on the county in a §§ 1983 suit; county's failure to operate at times at 70% capacity or less did not equate to widespread, persistent, unconstitutional misconduct, nor was it shown that the county's operational capacity was the moving force behind the suicide attempt. Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 756, affirmed 439 F.3d 441, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 445 F.3d 1038, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Purported policies or customs, specifically county's policy not to maintain adequate staffing, jailers' policy not to review detainees' arrest files, and sheriff's policy not to review an investigator's work, would not support imposition of municipal liability in § 1983 suit arising from jailed detainee's suicide, particularly as review of investigator's report, which mentioned a suicide threat by the detainee, would not have charged the jailers or the sheriff with knowledge that the detainee was at particular risk for suicide during his detention; his statement was made to his wife four days before he turned himself in and immediately after his wife confronted him with her suspicions regarding his sexual activity and told him to leave. Wade v. Tompkins, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 73 Fed.Appx. 890, 2003 WL 22053145, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

881. ---- Training and supervision, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Failure to train can amount to deliberate indifference, for purposes of imposing § 1983 liability on supervisory official, when need for more or different training is obvious, such as when there exists history of abuse by subordinates that might put supervisor on notice of need for corrective measures, and when failure to train is likely to result in violation of constitutional right. Belcher v. City of Foley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1390. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Detainee of correctional facility stated §§ 1983 claim of liability for use of excessive force against supervisors who allegedly stood by observing beating of detainee, and took no action to stop it. Jean-Laurent v. Wilkerson, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 318. Civil Rights 1395(6)

County was not liable, in §§ 1983 action, for violating substantive due process rights of jail detainee through inadequate training of jail personnel, when county had policy of periodic observation of cell occupants, and guard, lacking knowledge that detainee was suicidal, made no observations, falsely entering on duty logs that he had done so. Estate of Abdollahi v. County of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 1194. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of intoxicated pre-trial detainee who committed suicide in holding cell, based on alleged failure to train officers to identify detainees at risk for suicide, absent evidence that officers, had they had such training, would have been able to prevent such suicide. Cruise v. Marino, M.D.Pa.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 656. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County could not be held liable for correctional officer's sexual assault on jail inmate on basis of failure to train, where officer had received training on written policies prohibiting improper personal conduct or commission of any felony, and officer had received specific training on what was appropriate supervision of, and conduct with, jail inmates. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1352(4)

882. ---- Miscellaneous prison policies, prisons and prisoners, custom or usage

Evidence was insufficient to hold prison guards' supervisors liable in civil rights action arising from inmate's stabbing death on theory that supervisors formulated flawed policies regarding installation of door to inmate's unit and consumption of alcohol by inmates; although unit door prevented inmate from escaping into prison yard and inmate who attacked him was intoxicated, there was no evidence that policy concerning door caused attack or that supervisors were responsible for informal policy permitting prisoners to produce and consume alcoholic beverages. Walker v. Norris, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1990, 917 F.2d 1449, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1420

County jail inmate, who was allegedly assaulted by guard and others, failed to show that county had policy or custom of inadequately supervising its personnel, failing to remedy known unconstitutional conduct, or of placing inmates in general population when it was known that placing was not safe, and thus, failed to establish claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 against county; only evidence inmate presented was evidence relating to his own treatment in jail. Williams v. Mensey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1986, 785 F.2d 631. Civil Rights 1420

Inmate who sued county, stemming from attack by other inmates while incarcerated at county facility, failed to establish that county had custom or policy that was moving force behind alleged Eighth Amendment violations, as required to maintain claim for municipal liability under §§ 1983; there was no evidence that county had policy of placing inmates in situations where they were likely to be attacked or doing nothing when inmates were attacked. Collins v. County of Kern, E.D.Cal.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 964. Civil Rights 1351(4)

State-established jail authority acted under "color of state law" with regard to excessive force claims of immigration detainee held at its facilities pursuant to federal contract, where his injuries resulted from authority's alleged failure properly to train its guards and condonation their policy of using excessive force, and federal government's contract did not specify how authority was to supervise its guards. Jarno v. Lewis, E.D.Va.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 499. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Inmates in county jail failed to demonstrate that actions by state officials, taken under color of state law, in any way caused existing or past constitutionally deficient conditions at county jails so as to support § 1983 claim; county and its officials had primary responsibility for maintenance and operation of jail under statutory scheme, even though state had discretion under statute to enforce minimum jail standards, it had no affirmative duty, and state officials could not be held liable on theory of supervisory or vicarious liability; thus it could not be said that actions of state officials were cause of alleged civil rights violations. Reid v. Johnston County, E.D.N.C.1988, 688 F.Supp. 200, affirmed 885 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1098; Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

883. Probation, custom or usage

County fiscal court could not be held liable for deprivation of liberty stemming from conduct of county probation officer absent proof that probation officer's conduct implemented or executed policy of county fiscal court or that officer acted pursuant to custom even though custom had not been formerly approved by court. Vinson v. Campbell County Fiscal Court, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1987, 820 F.2d 194. Civil Rights 1351(4)

884. Repossessions, custom or usage

City could not be vicariously liable for alleged actions of its police officers during course of repossession of plaintiffs' automobile by creditor's agents as there was no governmental custody, plan or scheme to provide official assistance or aid in repossession of automobile by private parties pursuant to their private contractual arrangements. Menchaca v. Chrysler Credit Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 613 F.2d 507, rehearing denied 622 F.2d 1043, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 358, 449 U.S. 953, 66 L.Ed.2d 217. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In ruling on motion for summary judgment filed by correctional facility officers, jail superintendent, and county sheriff in civil rights action filed by pro se inmate who alleged that officers violated his civil rights pursuant to § 1983, district court would accept properly supported facts contained in officers' statement as true for purposes of granting motion for summary judgment; inmate did not file statement of undisputed material facts in compliance with local rule. Govan v. Campbell, N.D.N.Y.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 289. Federal Civil Procedure 2547.1

Plaintiff did not establish § 1983 Fourth Amendment excessive force claim against county with respect to sheriff's execution of writ of possession for the premises and removal of plaintiff; plaintiff did not establish that county had unconstitutional policy or custom permitting use of excessive force or unreasonable seizure in executing writs of possession and lack of warrant did not constitute excessive force since, pursuant to statute, writ of possession could be effectuated without a warrant. Busch v. Torres, C.D.Cal.1995, 905 F.Supp. 766. Civil Rights 1088(2); Civil Rights 1351(4)

885. Rescue attempts, custom or usage

Municipality could not be held liable under § 1983 for its policy of prohibiting rescue attempts by unauthorized civilians; policy was not unconstitutional where it involved choice without single right answer and it was not product of reckless indifference to value of life or designed to cause harm. Ross v. U.S., N.D.Ill.1988, 697 F.Supp. 974, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 910 F.2d 1422, rehearing denied, on remand 764 F.Supp. 1308. Civil Rights 1351(6)

886. Safety standards, custom or usage

There was no Fourth Amendment violation when police officers conducting raid ordered persons who were approaching the house to "get down" and had them remain on the ground until the situation was under control; actions were justified by right of police to detain occupant of house they have a warrant to search and as an investigatory stop. Baker v. Monroe Tp., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 50 F.3d 1186, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied. Arrest 63.5(9); Searches And Seizures 147.1

School district could not be held liable in civil rights action for teacher's allegedly allowing student to use tablesaw without safety guard, absent any indication that school district had policy of allowing students to use tablesaws without safety guard; one expert's opinion that use of tablesaw without safety hatch was act of "conscious indifference" was insufficient to establish unconstitutional policy. Grubbs v. Aldine Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1989, 709 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1351(2)

887. Sexual abuse, custom or usage--Generally

School board could not be held liable in § 1983 suit brought by female high school student who was sexually assaulted by teacher, in absence of evidence of policy adopted by board or existence and maintenance of board custom of failure to receive, investigate or act on complaints of violations of female students' constitutional rights to be free of sexual abuse at hands of school district employees; prior to assault, record demonstrated that board knew only that another female student was infatuated with teacher and that teacher had encouraged her, but there was no complaint that teacher had sexually assaulted other student. Gates v. Unified School Dist. No. 449 of Leavenworth County, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1352(2)

School district's conscious decision to transfer teacher accused of molesting student to another school, rather than remove him from classroom or report incident to state Department of Human Resources, as school district's sexual abuse policy required and past practice portended, constituted official "policy" upon which school district's liability could be predicated in § 1983 action brought by student molested after transfer; municipality may be held liable for courses of action tailored to specific situation and not intended to control decisions in later situations, and existence of well-established, officially adopted policy will not insulate municipality from liability where policymaker departs from formal rules. Gonzalez v. Ysleta Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 996 F.2d 745, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 20 F.3d 471. Civil Rights 1351(2)

School superintendent did not establish or maintain policy which contributed to school bus driver's alleged sexual molestation of girls on school bus and, thus, superintendent was not liable under § 1983; superintendent had previously responded promptly to charges that assistant principal had sexually abused junior high school student, and, upon earlier complaint that same school bus driver had molested student, superintendent responded promptly to complaint, driver was confronted, and those who had been exposed to known facts were convinced that no sexual abuse had occurred. Black by Black v. Indiana Area School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 985 F.2d 707. Civil Rights 1356

Mayor's personal actions in sexually abusing two minors did not constitute an official policy of city, even if mayor used the powers of his office to carry out the abuse and even though mayor was final policymaker for city, and thus, city was not liable to minors under §§ 1983 for alleged deprivation of their constitutional rights. Doe v. City of Waterbury, D.Conn.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 537. Civil Rights 1351(6)

888. ---- Deliberate indifference, sexual abuse, custom or usage

Student who alleged that she had been sexually abused by teacher failed to establish deliberate indifference on part of county board of education in failing to act to prevent such abuse, and thus, could not recover in federal civil rights action against board; no evidence was presented which showed that board had custom reflecting deliberate, intentional indifference to sexual abuse of students. Doe v. Claiborne County, Tenn. By and Through Claiborne County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 495. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Director of youth detention center was entitled to qualified immunity in action brought by juvenile detainee following delay of four hours in acquiring medical attention for juvenile, who informed supervisor that he had blood in his underwear, but did not inform supervisor that he had been sexually abused by detention center employees; director was not present at center when incident occurred, procedures and policies director instituted were formulated to minimize risk of such an assault, and fact that policies and procedures were ineffective in this instance did not demonstrate necessary callous indifference in policymaking to hold director personally or individually liable. Hill v. Dekalb Regional Youth Detention Center, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 40 F.3d 1176. Civil Rights 1376(1)

High school principal could be found to have been deliberately indifferent to teacher's sexual misconduct with student based on evidence that he had received numerous reports of teacher's inappropriate conduct with female students over the years and with plaintiff specifically, that he regularly dismissed the reports and parents' complaints, that he did not record incidents, and that he declined to discuss incident involving plaintiff with plaintiff, her parents, the teacher, or the superintendent. Doe v. Taylor Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 15 F.3d 443, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 70, 513 U.S. 815, 130 L.Ed.2d 25. Civil Rights 1356

School district was not liable under § 1983 for physical and sexual abuse of handicapped student bus passengers by driver; reports that driver had in isolated cases struck, kissed or fondled children did not indicate custom of deliberate indifference or tacit authorization of unconstitutional conduct by driver. Jane Doe A By and Through Jane Doe B v. Special School Dist. of St. Louis County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 901 F.2d 642. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Arrestee who had been sexually assaulted by police office established that city failed to take any remedial action with regard to physical and sexual abuse by police officers, amounting to deliberate indifference to abuse, rather than negligence, and thus proved existence of municipal custom sufficient to support municipal liability under § 1983; arrestee presented evidence of a number of incidents of sexual misconduct by various officers, especially officer who had arrested arrestee, and that city officials in positions of authority had been repeatedly notified of offensive acts. Harris v. City of Pagedale, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 821 F.2d 499, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 504, 484 U.S. 986, 98 L.Ed.2d 502, rehearing denied 108 S.Ct. 1066, 484 U.S. 1083, 98 L.Ed.2d 1027. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether police chief's inaction in response to female county police officer's complaints of sexual harassment constituted deliberate indifference which resulted in her continued harassment, precluded summary judgment for police chief on §§ 1983 claims. Ensko v. Howard County, Md., D.Md.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 502. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Female city employee's allegations that director of her department investigated another employee's previous sexual harassment complaints himself instead of referring them to human resources director did not establish that city had a policy of tolerating sexual harassment, as required to bring § 1983 sexual harassment claim against city; department director did not have final authority to establish sexual harassment policy, and neither director's actions or actions of city rose to level of "deliberate indifference" required to prove existence of a city policy. Delaney v. City of Hampton, E.D.Va.1997, 999 F.Supp. 794, affirmed 135 F.3d 769. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Woman who was raped by police officer did not establish policy of deliberate indifference by county to sexual assaults by police officers, so as to allow county to be held liable under federal civil rights statute, where failure to prosecute officer for prior alleged misconduct was due to determination that there was insufficient evidence to obtain a conviction and when police chief imposed punishment for another prior incident involving the officer. Jones v. Ziegler, D.Md.1995, 894 F.Supp. 880, affirmed 104 F.3d 620. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Actions taken or not taken by school officials in response to reports of special education teacher's conduct amounted to custom, practice or policy of deliberate indifference to teacher's actions and to junior high special education student's constitutional rights for purposes of student's § 1983 action wherein he alleged that he suffered sexual, physical and verbal abuse by teacher; complaints made to school officials by teachers and other staff members disclosed sexual overtones of teacher's classroom comments and actions, physical violence in which teacher reportedly engaged in class, teacher's continued giving of late detention, his driving students home and his contact with students after school hours and school officials knew that teacher taught special education students who might not fully understand inappropriateness of teacher's actions and who might be more reluctant than mainstream students to report teacher misconduct. C.M. v. Southeast Delco School Dist., E.D.Pa.1993, 828 F.Supp. 1179. Civil Rights 1351(2)

889. Shoplifting, custom or usage

In order to establish requisite state action in police officer's arresting store customer and taking her to police station for booking after store's security officers detained her on suspicion of shoplifting, customer had to prove "customary" or "pre-existing" arrangement between store and police for detaining suspected shoplifters. Hernandez v. Schwegmann Bros. Giant Supermarkets, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1982, 673 F.2d 771. Civil Rights 1404

A detention by store employees is "under color of state law," for purposes of this section proscribing a deprivation of rights, if it is demonstrated that the store employees and the police were acting in concert and that the store and the police had a customary plan which resulted in the detention. Duriso v. K-Mart No. 4195, Division of S. S. Kresge Co., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 559 F.2d 1274. Civil Rights 1326(1)

890. Signs, banners or billboards, custom or usage

Rule banning cars bearing roof rack political signs from city employee's parking lot was not official policy, as would trigger municipal liability under § 1983; superintendent and manager who told employee not to park in lot was not final authority, and ban was not product of city's legislative body. Silva v. Worden, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 130 F.3d 26. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City involved in lease of professional baseball stadium could be liable under § 1983 for enforcement of baseball team's unconstitutionally vague banner policy, permitting fans to hang signs only if they were in "good taste"; city council approved public assembly license for baseball team, which included security plan under which all security personnel were under senior city police sergeant; city had policy of allowing on duty and off duty police officers to enforce baseball team's regulations in stadium, including banner policy, and city's policy to enforce banner policy was affirmatively linked to alleged denial of fan's constitutional rights through alleged confiscation of his religious sign. Aubrey v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1993, 815 F.Supp. 1100, remanded 65 F.3d 168. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Neither state officials' adoption of policy prohibiting all fixed signs on State House grounds nor application of that policy to an organization was unconstitutional, and thus, state officials could not be held liable in civil rights action for their actions in adopting or applying policy; policy was content-neutral, aesthetic interest advanced in support of policy was valid one justifying reasonable restriction on speech, and absolute prohibition of fixed signs was least restrictive means of preventing aesthetic harm posed by signs, and therefore, curtailed no more speech than was necessary to accomplish its purpose. Grass Roots Organizing Workshop (GROW) v. Campbell, D.S.C.1988, 704 F.Supp. 644. States 88; Constitutional Law 90.3

891. Tenancy by entirety, custom or usage

Tenancy by entirety is custom or usage enforced by persistent practices of state officials sufficient to satisfy state action prerequisites for civil rights actions. D'Ercole v. D'Ercole, D.C.Mass.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1377. Civil Rights 1326(1)

892. Witnesses, custom or usage

Homeless man who was arrested and detained by city police detective pending his testimony in murder prosecution failed to establish that city adhered to a policy regarding handling of material witnesses that violated his civil rights, as was required to hold city liable in action under § 1983. White by Swafford v. Gerbitz, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 892 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Decisions made by sheriff and county prosecutor in course of their duties with respect to incarceration of material witness constituted county policy, so that county was liable under § 1983 for actions taken pursuant to those decisions; sheriff and prosecutor made policy with regard to operation of their offices and discharge of their duties, and county commissioners had no authority to override their decisions except in budgetary matters. Stone v. Holzberger, S.D.Ohio 1992, 807 F.Supp. 1325, affirmed 23 F.3d 408. Civil Rights 1351(4)

893. Zoning, custom or usage

Corporate owner of rental properties and its shareholders properly pled governmental custom/policy to support federal civil rights suit under § 1983 where they alleged that board of county commissioners knew of failure of code enforcement officer and of failure of building and zoning department to employ proper procedures for code enforcement and established custom and policy which deprived corporation and its shareholders of their rights under Federal Constitution and laws. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

County could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged constitutional violations in connection with denial of zoning permit to operate adult entertainment establishment, where denial was not the result of county's policy, but was mandated by state statute prohibiting such establishment with 2,800 feet of church or school. Lui v. Commission on Adult Entertainment Establishments of State of Delaware, D.Del.2003, 213 F.R.D. 166, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 369 F.3d 319, on remand 2004 WL 1635526. Civil Rights 1351(3)

894. Miscellaneous customs or usages

School district could not be liable in high school student's § 1983 Establishment Clause claim arising from school board member's recitation, on his own initiative, of Christian prayer at graduation ceremony; district policy or custom was not shown either by inclusion of prayer in rehearsal for ceremony, which led to district's cancellation of planned prayer due to objections and in turn led to board member's recitation to protest cancellation, nor by district's failure to disclaim recitation. Doe ex rel. Doe v. School Dist. of City of Norfolk, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2003, 340 F.3d 605, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Discretionary act of one town official in approving construction plans for lot across from homeowners' lot after others officials assured homeowners that the lot was unbuildable did not give rise to municipal liability under §§ 1983 or Massachusetts Civil Rights Act (MCRA) where there was no evidence that the town had an official policy or custom that violated, or was deliberately indifferent to, homeowners' constitutional rights; even if town official was an official policymaker, his informal act of telling homeowners that lot was unbuildable did not rise to the level of an official municipal policy or custom. Sampson v. Town of Salisbury, D.Mass.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 271. Civil Rights 1737

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether decisions to deny utility and sewer services to owners of beachfront properties constituted city's "official policy" precluded summary judgment in owners' §§ 1983 action against city on ground that owners' alleged harm was not attributable to city. Mikeska v. City of Galveston, S.D.Tex.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 671, vacated and remanded 419 F.3d 431, withdrawn and superseded on denial of rehearing 2006 WL 1529729. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Demonstrators who brought civil rights action against city and courthouse square management company, challenging ordinance under which they were excluded from square, demonstrated that city's policy was to have ordinance enforced as written, as required to establish municipal liability under §§ 1983; company managed square on behalf of city, company contracted to provide security within square, and exclusion ordinance was enforced in square. Yeakle v. City of Portland, D.Or.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 1119, reconsideration denied 2004 WL 1396365. Civil Rights 1351(6)

County could not be liable in arrestee's §§1983 Eighth Amendment action alleging that bail of $1 million, enhanced from $50,000 listed in county's felony bail schedule, was excessive; there was no showing that county had custom or policy of violating state statutes concerning how bail enhancements could be obtained, given that statutes did not preclude county's challenged practice of using probable cause declaration in support of enhancement request, and given absence of statutory limit on county's seeking enhancement. Galen v. County of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 1045. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City police department patrol guide which unconstitutionally required police officers to arrest individuals at request of transit officers provided basis upon which to impose § 1983 liability on city in civil rights action brought by accused whom police officers arrested without probable cause pursuant to such policy. Wu v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 581. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Claimant could not maintain § 1983 action against county official in her official capacity for alleged violations of her civil and constitutional rights when she was allegedly ordered to sign tax return against her will in marriage dissolution proceedings, where claimant did not allege that her alleged constitutional injuries were caused by any policy or practice employed by county. Del Marcelle v. State of Wis., E.D.Wis.1995, 902 F.Supp. 859. Civil Rights 1351(6)

School board members' release, pursuant to South Dakota statutory requirement, of board meeting minutes, including personally identifiable information respecting publicly funded, out-of-state schooling of autistic student, to third parties without students' parents' consent was not done under official policy or custom of school board so as to render school board liable under § 1983 to student and parents for violation of Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), where decision to so publish minutes was solely attempt to accommodate conflicting statutory requirements. Maynard v. Greater Hoyt School Dist. No. 61-4, D.S.D.1995, 876 F.Supp. 1104. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Former female police officer's testimony that in the late 1970s female officers perceived that they were not welcome in special units and plaintiff female officer's testimony that in 1984 she and other members of female officers' association brought their concerns to attention of county manager and director of public safety was insufficient to establish that widespread practice or custom to exclude women from specialized units actually existed within police department in 1988 when plaintiff requested that she be transferred to canine unit, for purposes of determining whether county was liable under § 1983 on basis of municipal custom. Lawrence v. Metro Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.1994, 872 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1420

Board of county commissioners' public authorization of lawsuit against corporate owner of rental properties for asserted code violations constituted act of official governmental policy, for purposes of subsequent civil rights suit brought under § 1983 against board by corporation and its shareholders. WAM Properties, Inc. v. Desoto County, Florida, M.D.Fla.1991, 758 F.Supp. 1468. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Owners and operators of funeral homes stated claim under § 1983 and Fourteenth Amendment against county hospital and administrator and trustees for deprivation of property and liberty without due process based on allegations that county officials had failed to follow an official county policy whereby funeral home owners would receive half of all coroner cases from a county hospital. Bussell v. Stahl, D.Wyo.1987, 669 F.Supp. 381. Civil Rights 1395(1); Constitutional Law 275(1)

Existence of county regulation establishing fees for water meters did not demonstrate an unconstitutional policy or custom of false arrests, so as to give rise to §§ 1983 claim by purchaser of "as is" house who was charged for installation of a new water meter and arrested for theft of utility services. Sherman v. County of Maui, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 2006, 191 Fed.Appx. 535, 2006 WL 1876875, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Property owners failed to prove that village, in destroying buildings in which they claimed an interest, operated pursuant to an unconstitutional policy or custom requiring officials to violate the constitutional rights of its citizens, thus defeating the owners' claims of race and national origin discrimination. Myers v. Village of Alger, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 102 Fed.Appx. 931, 2004 WL 1379946, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Absence of allegation or evidence that city operated pursuant to unconstitutional policy or custom requiring its police officers to violate constitutional rights of its citizens precluded city's § 1983 liability to motorist based on police officer's alleged violation of motorist's rights. Vintilla v. City of Rocky River, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 274, 2004 WL 422723, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 61, 543 U.S. 821, 160 L.Ed.2d 31, rehearing denied, rehearing denied 125 S.Ct. 645, 543 U.S. 1015, 160 L.Ed.2d 486. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Absent identification of official policy or custom that caused deprivation of a constitutional right, state prisoner's argument that director of property room for a criminal court was liable under civil rights laws in his official capacity was without merit. Treece v. Louisiana, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 74 Fed.Appx. 315, 2003 WL 21697189, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

921. Particular persons under color of law generally

All-encompassing language of Civil Rights Act of 1871 referring to "(e)very person" who, under color of law, deprives another of federal constitutional or statutory rights is not to be taken literally. Briscoe v. LaHue, U.S.Ind.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 460 U.S. 325, 75 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1335

Sheriff was not entitled to quasi-judicial immunity for detaining arrestee for eight days without judicial probable cause determination, notwithstanding initial appearance at which bond was set, absent evidence as to substance and circumstances of judge's order. Lingenfelter v. Board of County Com'rs of Reno County, Kan., D.Kan.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1163. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(8)

Standard for causation in § 1983 action against persons acting under color of state law is legal, or proximate, causation; accordingly, inquiry into causation must focus on duties and responsibilities of each of the individual defendants whose acts or omissions are alleged to have resulted in constitutional deprivation. Andre v. Castor, M.D.Fla.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1158, affirmed in part, reversed in part 144 F.3d 55. Civil Rights 1031

922. Private persons, particular persons under color of law

Private citizen who received a letter from husband of patient inquiring as to whether she had been sexually assaulted while a patient at county hospital could not be held liable in husband's §§ 1983 claim for conspiracy to violate his constitutional rights, stemming from citizen's communication with hospital, where citizen exerted no influence over the hospital, her judgment was not substituted for that of the hospital, and she did not participate in the hospital's decision to file libel suit against husband. Beedle v. Wilson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 422 F.3d 1059. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Nongovernmental private defendants may not be held liable for plaintiff's arrest under § 1983, even if made without probable cause, unless their actions were "state action," and if deprivation occurred under color of state law. Daniel v. Ferguson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 839 F.2d 1124. Civil Rights 1326(4)

A cause of action under this section which imposes liability on any person who under color of state law deprives any citizen or other person within the jurisdiction of the United States of rights or privileges secured by the Constitution and laws requires that a state, not a private party, act to deprive one of constitutionally protected rights. Berrios v. Inter Am. University, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 535 F.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Within meaning of this section, a private person may act under color of law. Shirley v. State Nat. Bank of Connecticut, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1974, 493 F.2d 739, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 329, 419 U.S. 1009, 42 L.Ed.2d 284. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Village attorney's filing of defamation lawsuit in state court against village resident who repeatedly criticized his performance was not an exercise of his state-granted power, and thus, attorney was not acting under color of state law as required for § 1983 liability; village attorney's First Amendment right to access courts to settle civil claim was not a power that stemmed solely from his position. O'Bradovich v. Village of Tuckahoe, S.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 413. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Church and its officials were not "acting under color of state law," as required for elder to state meritorious §§ 1983 claim for alleged violation of his due process and equal protection rights in appeal to governing body of church regarding his employment; church officials were not state actors, and Bill of Rights protected persons against government action, not internal church proceedings. Baker v. AME Church Judicial Council, N.D.Ind.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 786. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Bail bonding is private function, and thus bail bondsmen are not state actors under "public function test" for potential private-party liability under § 1983; right of bondsmen to apprehend their principals arises out of contract rather than statute, and bail bonding has never been exclusive privilege of sovereign. Green v. Abony Bail Bond, M.D.Fla.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 1254. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Private conduct is state action for purposes of § 1983 where there exists a sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the private entity so that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself; the close nexus is ordinarily present when it is proven that the state has exercised coercive power over a private decision or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice in law must be deemed to be that of the state. Ruhlmann v. Ulster County Dept. of Social Services, N.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 140. Civil Rights 1326(4)

While § 1983 generally does not extend to conduct of private individuals, private individual may be subject to § 1983 liability if individual acted under color of state law by exercising power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law. Copeland v. Northwestern Memorial Hosp., N.D.Ill.1997, 964 F.Supp. 1225. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Activity of private individual can be deemed to be "under color of law" for purposes of § 1983 where private party has acted together with or has obtained significant aid from state officials, or his conduct is otherwise chargeable to the state; however, a private action is not converted into one under color of state law merely by some tenuous connection to the state action, and the issue is not whether the state was involved in some way in the relevant events but whether the action taken can be fairly attributed to the state itself. D'Aurizio v. Palisades Park, D.N.J.1997, 963 F.Supp. 387, affirmed 151 F.3d 1024, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 166, 525 U.S. 870, 142 L.Ed.2d 135. Civil Rights 1326(5)

In most contexts, § 1983 "acting under color of state law" inquiry is identical to "state action" requirement under Fourteenth Amendment; activity of actor who is not state or municipal official can nevertheless be deemed to be under color of law if private party acts together with or obtains significant aid from state officials, or if such party's conduct is otherwise chargeable to state. D'Aurizio v. Palisades Park, D.N.J.1997, 963 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 151 F.3d 1024, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 166, 525 U.S. 870, 142 L.Ed.2d 135. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1326(5)

Joint action between private party and state actor may render private person liable under § 1983. Chapman v. Village of Homewood, N.D.Ill.1997, 960 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private citizen may be subject to liability under § 1983 only if he willfully collaborated with an official state actor in deprivation of a federal right. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private individuals act "under color of" state law, and thus are subject to suit under § 1983, only where jointly engaged with public official in deprivation of federal rights. Nielsen v. Village of Lake in the Hills, N.D.Ill.1996, 948 F.Supp. 786. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Terminated employee could not maintain § 1983 claim against former employer, absent showing that employer was public, as opposed to private, actor. Cagle v. Unisys Corp., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21939705, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Motel manager could not be liable under § 1983 for allegedly falsely accusing prisoner of breaking into a trailer and illegally confiscating prisoner's personal property, where manager was private individual, engaging in purely private conduct. Bryant v. Motel 6 Manager, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21767461, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Motel manager could not be liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly falsely accusing prisoner of breaking into a trailer and illegally confiscating prisoner's personal property, where manager was private individual, engaging in purely private conduct. Bryant v. Motel 6 Manager, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21767461, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Union was not liable to terminated college professor under § 1983, inasmuch as union was private actor and did not engage in state action. Commodari v. Long Island University, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 62 Fed.Appx. 28, 2003 WL 1785893, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Salesperson, who claimed that she was victim of harassment and adverse employment actions because of her personality traits, and because she was perceived as too aggressive, failed to state cause of action for discrimination under Title VII because she failed to establish her membership in any protected group. Zainalizadeh v. Neiman Marcus Group, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31007465, Unreported.

Private corporation could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged discrimination against salesperson due to her religion since it was not a state actor and there was no evidence that it conspired with state actors to deprive salesperson of her constitutional rights. Zainalizadeh v. Neiman Marcus Group, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31007465, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

922A. Private companies, particular persons under color of law

Private information technology company was not acting under color of state law when it adopted requirement that employees provide their social security numbers, precluding §§ 1983 action by employee terminated for failure to provide number. McCauley v. Computer Aid Inc., E.D.Pa.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 469. Civil Rights 1326(11)

923. Accounting firms, particular persons under color of law

Private accounting firm whose work did not depend primarily on government contracts did not become a state actor for purposes of this section simply because it was performing an audit for state agency at time that firm and two state officials allegedly defamed plaintiff, interfered with contract, and violated due process and rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1. McGillicuddy v. Clements, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1984, 746 F.2d 76. Civil Rights 1326(4)

924. Administrators, particular persons under color of law

Conduct of independent administrator appointed to oversee remedial provisions of consent decree in litigation involving alleged influence of organized crime on union did not amount to "state action" that could have permitted union officers and members to maintain constitutional challenges to discipline. U.S. v. International Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL-CIO, S.D.N.Y.1991, 777 F.Supp. 1123. Constitutional Law 254(4)

925. Agricultural societies, particular persons under color of law

Trade association that included farmers and growers involved in the poultry business did not act under the color of state law when it purchased flocks of poultry allegedly infected with avian influenza and then destroyed the flocks, as required for poultry producers' §§ 1983 claim alleging violations of due process; the final decision about quarantine and depopulation rested solely with the Secretary of Agriculture who exercised that authority after considering the recommendation of the Commonwealth's veterinarian, and, poultry producer clearly knew that he could wait for the results of more definitive tests for his flocks, but nevertheless agreed to depopulate them in the absence of a formal order from the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture to do so and he was compensated for all of the birds that were destroyed as well as for costs of depopulation and clean up. Reichley v. Pennsylvania Dept. of Agriculture, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 427 F.3d 236. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Where state fair was a public function which presented a public forum frequently used by political, religious, and civil groups, where state statute authorized the creation of a state fair board as an executive state agency, where the promotion of fairs and exhibits was governed by state law, where the sponsoring agricultural society received money from the board for capital improvements and for prizes, and where board leased office space from agricultural society and the state police protected the general public attending the fair, actions taken by the agricultural society were state action for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14. Edwards v. Maryland State Fair and Agr. Soc., D.C.Md.1979, 476 F.Supp. 153, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 628 F.2d 282. Constitutional Law 254(4)

926. American Legion, particular persons under color of law

In organizing Memorial Day parade on town streets, American Legion stood in place of town, clothed with its authority, so that its denial of request by antiabortion group to march in parade constituted "state action" within meaning of this section. North Shore Right to Life Committee v. Manhasset Am. Legion Post No. 304, Town of North Hempstead, E.D.N.Y.1978, 452 F.Supp. 834. Civil Rights 1326(1)

927. Arbitrators, particular persons under color of law

Neither arbitrators nor dispute resolution company qualified as state actors, precluding §§ 1983 claim brought by investor alleging that by precluding evidence he sought to present at his arbitration hearing the arbitrator defendants refused to grant him Due Process and violated his civil rights. Weinraub v. Glen Rauch Securities, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 454, affirmed 2006 WL 1236149. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Actions of private arbitrator, appointed pursuant to collective bargaining agreement between city and police association for purposes of determining employment related dispute in which city was party, were not undertaken under color of state law and were not attributable to city, for purposes of former police officer's § 1983 action against city. McDaniels v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1999, 56 F.Supp.2d 578. Civil Rights 1326(9)

928. Associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law-- Generally

In light of uncontradicted affidavit showing that Alabama Education Association was not state agency but voluntary group of teachers, administrators and supervisors supported solely by dues paid by its members, and that many employees of state school system were not members, insufficient state involvement existed to bring transfer of employee from one supervisory position to another by the association, allegedly in violation of his civil rights, within the ambit of this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Harris v. Hubbert, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1979, 588 F.2d 167. Civil Rights 1326(11); Constitutional Law 213(4)

Reality of an association's purpose, organization and activities and not the appellation given it by the state determines whether association has acted under color of state law in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Robison v. Wichita Falls & North Texas Community Action Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 507 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Charitable organization that maintained residential facility for juveniles and that received child for temporary placement from county pending resolution of the child's parent's petition alleging that the child was a person in need of supervision (PINS) was a "state actor" for purposes of the parent's § 1983 suit alleging violation of the parent's First Amendment freedom of religion rights. Whalen v. Allers, S.D.N.Y.2003, 302 F.Supp.2d 194. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Ambulance association was not acting under color of state law in allegedly refusing to render assistance to shooting victim, for purposes of amenability to civil rights suit under § 1983, on theory that there was a symbiotic relationship between it and the state, even though association was extensively regulated and received financial support from the government through Medicaid and Medicare fees, where association was private, nonprofit organization, its board and staff members were not government officials nor appointed by government officials, and its membership consisted of volunteers. McKinney v. West End Voluntary Ambulance Ass'n, E.D.Pa.1992, 821 F.Supp. 1013. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Taxicab association formed for purposes of regulating taxicab service at airport was not acting under color of state law and could not be liable for violations of civil rights under this section where board of directors consisted of representatives from each of the taxicab companies, no members of airport board or employees of airport attended association board meetings or had any voice in its deliberations or actions, and its only connection with state was requirement in taxicab licenses that each taxicab doing business on airport property participate in sharing cost of starter system for fair distribution of taxicabs. Watkins v. Reed, E.D.Ky.1983, 557 F.Supp. 278, affirmed 734 F.2d 17. Civil Rights 1326(7)

929. ---- Advisory organization, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Neither official of local branch of national minority rights advisory organization nor volunteer member of neighborhood watch program who provided him with copy of tape recording of telephone conversation involving police administrator were employed by or agents of state, county, or city, as required to satisfy "under color of state law" requirement for cause of action against them under § 1983. Spetalieri v. Kavanaugh, N.D.N.Y.1998, 36 F.Supp.2d 92. Civil Rights 1326(4)

930. ---- Athletic or interscholastic associations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

State high school association which was a purely voluntary association with a membership made up 85% by public schools had sufficient public character to confer state action for purposes of § 1983. Griffin High School v. Illinois High School Ass'n, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 822 F.2d 671. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Adoption of rules by the National Collegiate Athletic Association which limited transfer student's ability to participate in intercollegiate athletics was not action "under color of state law" for purposes of student's § 1983 action; regulation of intercollegiate athletics is not a function traditionally exclusively reserved to the state; moreover, student presented no evidence that any state-supported university caused, directed or controlled the implementation of the rules. Graham v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1986, 804 F.2d 953. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Activities of college athletic association having as members some 800 public and private colleges were the equivalent of "state action" for purposes of this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and, therefore, bylaw promulgated by the association was to be tested under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 as if it were an enactment of a state legislature. Hennessey v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1977, 564 F.2d 1136. Civil Rights 1326(6); Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

National Collegiate Athletic Association activities constituted governmental action for purposes of constitution and civil rights action. Regents of University of Minnesota v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1977, 560 F.2d 352, certiorari dismissed 98 S.Ct. 600, 434 U.S. 978, 54 L.Ed.2d 472. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Tennessee Secondary Schools Athletic Association (TSSAA) was a state actor, subject to suit under § 1983 for violation of federal constitutional or statutory rights, even though it was an incorporated non-profit corporation; its membership was largely composed of public schools, its governing units were entirely comprised of public school personnel, and state recognized its rules and regulations as binding upon conduct of secondary school athletics. Brentwood Academy v. Tennessee Secondary Schools Athletic Ass'n, M.D.Tenn.1998, 13 F.Supp.2d 670, reversed 180 F.3d 758, rehearing en banc denied 190 F.3d 705, certiorari granted 120 S.Ct. 1156, 528 U.S. 1153, 145 L.Ed.2d 1069, reversed 121 S.Ct. 924, 531 U.S. 288, 148 L.Ed.2d 807, on remand 262 F.3d 543. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Actions of voluntary interscholastic athletic associations, of which public schools comprise part of membership, constitute "state action," for purposes of § 1983. Dennin v. Connecticut Interscholastic Athletic Conference, Inc., D.Conn.1996, 913 F.Supp. 663, vacated, appeal dismissed 94 F.3d 96. Civil Rights 1326(6)

931. ---- Bar associations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Private bar associations did not engage in state action by formulating disciplinary rules adopted by Illinois Supreme Court and federal district court so as to be subject to § 1983 claim alleging that rules were unconstitutional. Lawline v. American Bar Ass'n, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 956 F.2d 1378, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 551, 510 U.S. 992, 126 L.Ed.2d 452. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Section 1983 suit for monetary, injunctive, and declaratory relief could not be maintained against presidents of state bar association absent showing of sufficiently close nexus between state bar and state bar association to establish association and its presidents as state actors. Perry v. Barnard, S.D.Ind.1989, 745 F.Supp. 1394, affirmed 911 F.2d 736. Civil Rights 1326(10)

932. ---- Mental health associations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Neither the fact that mental health association, against whose president, medical director and executive committee a former staff psychiatrist brought suit under this section receives governmental funds and may be subject to state regulation, nor the fact that it is the sole entity in the North Shore receiving referrals from state mental health hospitals for out-patient care, converted its activities into those of the state for purposes of jurisdiction under this section. Baron v. Carson, N.D.Ill.1976, 410 F.Supp. 299. Federal Courts 222

933. ---- Civic associations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Private organizer of festival was not "state actor," and thus was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 for expelling motorcycle club member for violating festival's dress code, even though festival was held in city park, and festival security used city police officer to aid in expelling members. Villegas v. City of Gilroy, N.D.Cal.2005, 363

F.Supp.2d 1207. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that alleged acts of civic association and its members in conspiring and acting to harass and delay Hasidic Jews who sought to establish housing development on land they owned in New York were joined in by municipal official would not establish state action requirement for civil rights action under this section where plaintiff failed to join municipal official in action. Weiss v. Willow Tree Civic Ass'n, S.D.N.Y.1979, 467 F.Supp. 803. Civil Rights 1326(5)

934. ---- Homeowners, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Condominium association did not act under color of state law when its board of directors enacted rule barring all canvassing or distributing of materials to individual units other than those materials related to political campaigning, and thus, unit occupant did not have viable § 1983 action against association and board for First Amendment free speech violation, despite claim that association had powers traditionally associated with the state, as association had power to make rules, conduct hearings, issue decisions, and impose fines and liens. Goldberg v. 400 East Ohio Condominium Ass'n, N.D.Ill.1998, 12 F.Supp.2d 820. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Illinois statute providing that no condominium rule or regulation may impair any rights guaranteed by First Amendment is not an acknowledgment by Illinois that condominium associations are state actors subject to § 1983 suit; statute simply prohibits associations from unduly restricting ordinary political speech or activities. Goldberg v. 400 East Ohio Condominium Ass'n, N.D.Ill.1998, 12 F.Supp.2d 820. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Condominium penthouse owners' § 1983 complaint did not contain any allegations supporting their claim that council of co-owners of condominium (co-owners) acted under color of state law in prior lawsuit brought by co-owners against penthouse owners pursuant to state property law, and thus penthouse owners' failed to allege essential element of their § 1983 claim against co-owners. Rullan v. Council of Co-Owners of McKinley Court Condominium, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 899 F.Supp. 857. Civil Rights 1396

Homeowners association's alleged removal of "for sale" signs from landowner's property and enforcement of deed restriction did not involve state action necessary for violation of First and Fourteenth Amendments and action under §§ 1983. Barr v. Camelot Forest Conservation Ass'n., Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 153 Fed.Appx. 860, 2005 WL 2891771, Unreported, certiorari denied 2006 WL 927038. Constitutional Law 254(4)

935. ---- Parent-teacher associations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

That community school boards are authorized to establish parents' or parent-teacher associations under New York Education Law does not make the officers of the parents' or parent-teacher associations "public officials" for purpose of state action requirement. Buck v. Board of Elections of City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 536 F.2d 522. Civil Rights 1326(6)

936. ---- Professional associations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Suit brought under § 1983 against realtor's association, by former attorney for state professional licensing bureau, alleging that he was wrongfully terminated after disclosing to association existence of quota system governing initiation of disciplinary proceedings, would be dismissed, for failure to show that association was acting under color of state law. Grigsby v. Kane, M.D.Pa.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 453. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Physician's complaint alleging that investigation undertaken by peer review committee of county medical society into claims that he was overcharging for his services went beyond legitimate necessity by inquiring into the merits of his underlying procedures failed to state a cause of action under this section, since the actions of the peer review committee, as implemented by its chairman, were not undertaken under color of state law. Greenfield v. Kanwit,

University chapter of professors association and its chapter president could not be held liable for violating this subchapter by depriving suspended teacher of his civil rights under color of state law, where president and association acted in opposition to state by taking up teacher's grievance and the representation was not sham or result of collusion, and their acts could not be held to be those of state merely because association had entered into collective bargaining agreement with university and conformed to it. Victor v. Brickley, E.D.Mich.1979, 476 F.Supp. 888. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Homeowners' association was not "state actor," capable of being sued under § 1983 by real estate developer claiming that association's actions taken in opposition to subdivision application violated due process rights of members. Chapel Farm Estates, Inc. v. Moerdler, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21998964, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

937. ---- Religious organizations, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Young Men's Christian Association does not act under color of state law when evicting occupants of its rooms, for purpose of determining Association's liability under federal civil rights statute; Association is private, charitable, and not-for-profit corporation, Association does not enjoy any special powers granted by any governmental authority to facilitate eviction of tenant or otherwise ease its operations, and Association does not receive substantial funding from state sufficient to justify deeming its actions those of state. Studifin v. New York City Police Dept.--License Div.--Firearms Control Section, S.D.N.Y.1990, 728 F.Supp. 990. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that church's youth services organization received and relied heavily on state funding, had referrals made to it by state agencies, and was engaged in welfare programs which were traditionally a public function dealt with by government agencies was insufficient to bring its actions under color of state law for purposes of civil rights claim. Wright v. Methodist Youth Services, Inc., N.D.Ill.1981, 511 F.Supp. 307. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Church leader and arrestee's former attorney were not state actors and thus could not be sued under § 1983. Murray v. Town of Mansura, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 547, 2003 WL 22135637, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(10)

937A. ---- Miscellaneous, associations or organizations, particular persons under color of law

Animal protection organization, which seized animals of owner and arrested owner on animal cruelty charges, was not deemed government entity for purpose of § 1983 state action requirement; government did not create organization by special law, it did not create it to further governmental objectives, and government did not retain permanent authority to appoint majority of its directors, rather, organization was privately funded, not-for-profit organization without any state funding or oversight. Fabrikant v. French, N.D.N.Y.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 303. Civil Rights 1326(1); Civil Rights 1326(7)

938. Attorneys, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Private attorney who recommended that client seek help from county victim/witness program with regard to problems she was experiencing with her ex-husband and subsequently talked to county prosecutor about client and ex-husband was not state actor subject to liability in ex-husband's civil rights action; attorney merely recommended that client seek legal assistance from government agency and answered law enforcement official's questions regarding case. Miller v. Compton, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 122 F.3d 1094. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Conduct of retained counsel does not rise to level of "state action" within meaning of § 1983. Lemmons v. Law Firm of Morris and Morris, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 39 F.3d 264. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorneys who represented civil rights plaintiff in criminal proceedings, whether appointed or retained, did not act under color of state law and, thus, were not subject to suit under § 1983. Myers v. Vogal, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1992, 960 F.2d 750. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorney does not act "under color of law" within meaning of § 1983 when he or she acts as representative of client in court. Hoai v. Vo, C.A.D.C.1991, 935 F.2d 308, 290 U.S.App.D.C. 142, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1578, 503 U.S. 967, 118 L.Ed.2d 220, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 2007, 504 U.S. 936, 118 L.Ed.2d 602. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Conduct of counsel, either retained or appointed, in representing clients does not constitute action under color of state law for purposes of a violation of civil rights statute. Bilal v. Kaplan, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1990, 904 F.2d 14. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Conduct of former wife's attorneys in allegedly violating, either intentionally or negligently, notice provisions of New York's contempt law in seeking to obtain maintenance arrearages and execution of documents required by default divorce decree did not constitute "state action" for purpose of this section, since state did not sanction abuse of its otherwise valid law, and could prevent it no more than it could stop a private party from committing a crime or tort. Dahlberg v. Becker, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 748 F.2d 85, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1845, 470 U.S. 1084, 85 L.Ed.2d 144. Civil Rights 1326(10)

By employing subpoena duces tecum power of state of Oklahoma to obtain medical records of one of parties in child custody proceeding, attorney did not act under color of state law for purposes of civil rights litigation brought against attorney by said party. Barnard v. Young, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1983, 720 F.2d 1188. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Private attorney who had been appointed by federal district court to represent Arkansas inmates against Arkansas Department of Corrections was not acting "under color of state law" for purposes of this section, and same was true even though state funds paid his fees. Chambers v. Kaplan, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 648 F.2d 1193. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorney for party in civil litigation who obtained court order permitting him to enter the other party's home and seal certain files upon a showing that there was reason to believe that the other party had not complied with the terms of the discovery order was not acting under color of state law for purposes of this section. Lindley v. Amoco Production Co., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1981, 639 F.2d 671. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Participation by six attorneys as counsel, parties and potential witnesses in civil contempt proceeding did not constitute state action required as a precondition to action brought under this section. Slotnick v. Garfinkle, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 632 F.2d 163. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Actions of privately retained counsel are not considered "state action" and therefore cannot form the basis of a claim under this section. Dunn v. Hackworth, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 628 F.2d 1111. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Conduct of counsel in representing clients does not constitute action under color of state law for purposes of jurisdiction under this section. Lamb v. Farmers Ins. Co., Inc., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1978, 586 F.2d 96. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Conduct of counsel, either retained or appointed, in representing clients does not constitute action under color of state law for purposes of this section. Harkins v. Eldredge, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1974, 505 F.2d 802. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Law firm that sought to hold property owner in contempt for failing to comply with earlier judgment in housing code enforcement action was not a "state actor" by virtue of its successful resort to state court on behalf of its municipal client, so as to permit civil rights against firm, absent nexus between actions of law firm and state judiciary, any indication that state delegated its judicial functions to private law firm, or indication that relationship between law firm and state judiciary was symbiotic. Marcello v. Maine, D.Me.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 55. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Advocate whose job with private agency was to work with victims of family violence was not "state actor" for purposes of civil rights liability for allegedly providing false information to police that led to issuance of warrant to search alleged abuser's home for guns, where her conduct was not fairly attributable to state. Szekeres v. Schaeffer, D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private law firm was not "state actor," and thus was not liable under § 1983 for alleged conspiracy with city officials to deprive land developer of clearly established rights, due to its actions as attorney for city and in hiring developer's former attorney, absent evidence that city was in position of interdependence with firm. Florida Country Clubs, Inc. v. Carlton, Fields, Ward, Emmanuel, Smith & Cutler, P.A., M.D.Fla.2000, 98 F.Supp.2d 1356. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Actions of attorney who was alleged only to have acted in capacity of private, retained attorney admitted to practice before circuit court and who was alleged to have failed to inform clients of their right to represent themselves did not constitute "state action." Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorney's status under Connecticut law as Commissioner of the Superior Court did not make his alleged wrongful acts attributable to State for purposes of federal civil rights claim. Harvey v. Harvey, D.Conn.1996, 931 F.Supp. 127, affirmed 108 F.3d 329. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Private attorney acting on behalf of client is not "state actor" for purposes of § 1983. Williams v. Dark, E.D.Pa.1993, 844 F.Supp. 210, affirmed 19 F.3d 645. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Private attorney who represented tax sale purchasers in their forcible entry and detainer action did not, as officer of court, "act under color of state law" within meaning of federal civil rights statute. Hirsch v. Copenhaver, D.Wyo.1993, 839 F.Supp. 1524, affirmed 46 F.3d 1151. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Although attorney is officer of court, he does not act under "color of law" within meaning of this section when he participates in the trial of a person charged with crime. U. S. ex rel. Gittlemacker v. Com. of Pa., E.D.Pa.1968, 281 F.Supp. 175, affirmed 413 F.2d 84, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 696, 396 U.S. 1046, 24 L.Ed.2d 691. See, also, Peake v. Philadelphia County, Pa., D.C.Pa.1968, 280 F.Supp. 853. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Civil rights plaintiff, claiming that the alleged malpractice of his attorney in his age discrimination case against the state violated his due process rights and equal protection rights, failed to show that his attorney was a state actor, where attorney was not acting on behalf of the state when he was representing plaintiff; thus, plaintiff could not succeed on his civil rights claim against his attorney. Wasko v. Silverberg, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 332, 2004 WL 1345105, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 901, 543 U.S. 1067, 160 L.Ed.2d 800. Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

939. ---- Defense attorneys or public defenders, particular persons under color of law

Even though defective performance of defense counsel may cause the trial process to deprive an accused of his liberty in an unconstitutional manner, the lawyer who may be responsible for the unconstitutional state action does not himself act under "color of state law" within meaning of this section, a conclusion compelled by character of the office performed by defense counsel. Briscoe v. LaHue, U.S.Ind.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 460 U.S. 325, 75 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Defendant could not maintain action under this section alleging ineffective assistance of public defenders who represented him, as public defenders performing traditional functions of defense attorneys were not acting under color of governmental authority for purposes of this section. Polk County v. Dodson, U.S.Iowa 1981, 102 S.Ct. 445, 454 U.S. 312, 70 L.Ed.2d 509. See, also, Black v. Bayer, C.A.3(Pa.) 1982, 672 F.2d 309, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 230, 459 U.S. 916, 74 L.Ed.2d 182; Holsey v. Chandler, D.C.D.C.1984, 598 F.Supp. 368; Bruce v. Fletcher, W.D.Mo.1984, 584 F.Supp. 5; Harris v. Beynon, N.D.Ill.1983, 570 F.Supp. 690; Jordan-Bey v. Musich, E.D.Mo.1983, 561 F.Supp. 361, affirmed 718 F.2d 1106.

Court-appointed attorneys performing lawyer's traditional functions as counsel to defendant do not act "under color of state law" and therefore are not subject to suit under § 1983. Rodriguez v. Weprin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 116 F.3d 62. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Defendants in criminal actions bringing § 1983 suit against state indigent defendant system, alleging that delays in processing of appeals violated their Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, did not satisfy § 1983 requirement that constitutional deprivation be committed by person acting under color of state law; public defender did not so act when performing traditional lawyer functions as counsel to defendants in criminal proceedings. Harris v. Champion, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1995, 51 F.3d 901. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Retained defense counsel was not acting under color of state law with respect to his role in issuance of injunction, as part of plea bargain, prohibiting defendant from operating illicit massage parlors and from engaging in any activities promoting prostitution, and thus could not be liable to operator under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983]. Russell v. Millsap, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 781 F.2d 381, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 103, 479 U.S. 826, 93 L.Ed.2d 53. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Assistant state appellate defender who had been assigned to handle convicted defendant's direct criminal appeal did not act under color of state law in representing defendant on appeal, and thus, defendant's action under this section against appellate defender for allegedly refusing to pursue various issues was properly dismissed. Cornes v. Munoz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 724 F.2d 61. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Court-appointed attorneys who represented a client on state criminal charges were not acting under color of state law in representing the client, and thus, they were not subject to liability to client under §§ 1983 on claims arising out of that representation. Puckett v. Carter, M.D.N.C.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 448. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Public appellate defender had not been acting under color of state law when she allegedly inadequately represented state prisoner by not timely filing his habeas petition, since filing habeas petition was lawyer's traditional function as counsel to criminal defendant. Stroman v. South Carolina Office of Appellate Defense, D.S.C.2005, 447 F.Supp.2d 515. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorney was not acting under color of state law when she worked as client's personal lawyer in criminal prosecution against client, and, thus, attorney could not be liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly depriving client of his Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel. Villaran v. Soto, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 416. Civil Rights 1326(10)

State public defender did not act under color of state law for purposes of §§ 1983 when providing representation to indigent client in criminal matter, and thus client could not seek damages against public defender under §§ 1983 based on his allegedly fraudulent actions in connection with plea agreement. Carter v. Bennett, W.D.Wis.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 745. Civil Rights 1326(10)

When representing an indigent defendant in a state criminal proceeding, the public defender does not act under color of state law for the purposes of §§ 1983 because he is not acting on behalf of the State; however, if a public defender conspires with a state official to deprive a criminal defendant of his constitutional rights, public defender is deemed to have been acting under color of state law. Nicholson v. Lenczewski, D.Conn.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 157. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorney who had served as criminal defendant's private attorney did not act under color of state law, and thus could not be held liable under § 1983 by pastor who had provided spiritual guidance to defendant, after which he entered into agreement in which defendant turned over media rights to her life story to pastor, and who alleged that attorney had threatened to destroy his credibility if he did not rescind contract and turn over defendant's media rights to attorney. Deleo v. Rudin, D.Nev.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 1106. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Prisoner's claim that public defender provided ineffective assistance in state prosecution was not cognizable as federal civil rights claim, as public defender was not acting under color of state law in acting as counsel. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Legal Aid Society attorney who represented criminal harassment defendant was not acting under color of state law by obtaining psychological examination of defendant, precluding defendant's federal Constitutional claims against Society and attorney based on examination; attorney's action was in preparation for trial, and there was no evidence of conspiracy with district attorney or police. Daniel v. Safir, E.D.N.Y.2001, 135 F.Supp.2d 367. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Actions of capital collateral representative and his or her assistants, attorneys who represent indigent defendants sentenced to death, in representing defendants in criminal proceedings are generally not under color of state law, and thus cannot serve as basis for civil rights action against attorneys. Medina v. Minerva, M.D.Fla.1995, 907 F.Supp. 379. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Court-appointed counsel for defendant did not act under color of state law in representing defendant, and defendant thus could not maintain § 1983 action against counsel based on claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, notwithstanding claim that counsel took no action on behalf of defendant or claim that counsel conspired with state actors, which was not alleged in complaint. Copus v. City of Edgerton, W.D.Wis.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1047, affirmed in part, reversed in part 151 F.3d 646. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Court-appointed attorneys did not act under color of law and therefore were not amenable to suit under this section pertaining to deprivation of rights under color of state law. Jackson v. Salon, C.A.1(Mass.) 1980, 614 F.2d 15. See, also, Cerbone v. Westchester County, D.C.N.Y.1981, 508 F.Supp. 780; Polk v. Lewis, S.D.N.Y.1980, 499 F.Supp. 302.

Criminal defendant's conclusory allegations that public defenders in his case conspired with judges and district attorneys to pursue his malicious prosecution were insufficient, even at the pleadings stage, to establish that public defenders were acting under color of state law, for purposes of §§ 1983. Tapp v. Champagne, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 164 Fed.Appx. 106, 2006 WL 197485, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

Prisoner's defense attorneys could not be liable to prisoner for damages under §§ 1983, as they did not act under color of state law. Harmon v. Delaware Secretary of State, C.A.3 (Del.) 2005, 154 Fed.Appx. 283, 2005 WL 2982216, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Private attorney who represented defendant in criminal proceedings did not act under color of state law, and thus was not subject to defendant pursuant to §§ 1983. Winters v. Devecka, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 612, 2005 WL 1122649, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Disbarred attorney's counsel at disbarment proceedings was not a state actor as required for liability under § 1983 for alleged racial discrimination in the disbarment. Brooks v. Ross, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 356, 2003 WL 21961174, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Court-appointed public defender did not act under color of state law when performing lawyer's traditional functions as counsel to defendant in criminal proceeding, and thus, public defender was not subject to § 1983 liability. Taylor v. Windsor Locks Police Dept., C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 71 Fed.Appx. 877, 2003 WL 21697441, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Court-appointed attorney for criminal defendant was not acting under color of state law, as required to state § 1983 claim, when he allegedly engaged in unethical conduct. Crawford v. Sherrer, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21018238, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Attorney appointed by court to represent indigent criminal defendant was not a "state actor" amenable to suit under § 1983. Waller v. Morris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1365, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Public defender who had represented plaintiff in underlying criminal proceedings was not a "state actor" amenable to suit under § 1983. White v. Rogers, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 221 F.3d 1346, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

940. ---- Prosecuting or state's attorneys, particular persons under color of law

Alleged concealment by former prosecuting attorney, during trial and subsequent incarceration of defendant, of his knowledge that confession had been drug induced was not an act under color of state law and thus could not afford basis for action under this section proscribing a deprivation of rights, where at time of alleged concealment prosecuting attorney was no longer acting as the prosecuting attorney in defendant's case which had been transferred to another county. Triplett v. Azordegan, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 570 F.2d 819. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Assistant state's attorney who signed petition in initiating prior judicial inquiry into mental condition of person did not act under color of law within provision of this section making liable any person who, under color of law, subjects another to deprivation of rights secured by Constitution and laws; and that he added official title to signature was of no import, as he acted not in his official position but as private citizen in signing petition. Byrne v. Kysar, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1965, 347 F.2d 734, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 902, 383 U.S. 913, 15 L.Ed.2d 668, rehearing denied 86 S.Ct. 1348, 384 U.S. 914, 16 L.Ed.2d 367, rehearing denied 86 S.Ct. 1891, 384 U.S. 994, 16 L.Ed.2d 1011. Civil Rights 1326(2)

State's attorney and sheriff, who aided vendor in removing personal property from property acquired by purchasers, were "persons" acting under color of state law within meaning of § 1983. Kennedy v. Widdowson, D.Md.1992, 804 F.Supp. 737. Civil Rights 1357

Public defender did not act under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983, when he represented defendant during state court trial on drug charges. Garner v. Cole, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 205 F.3d 1345, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

941. ---- United States Attorneys, particular persons under color of law

Acting United States Attorney was not "acting under color of state law," for purposes of § 1983 action, when he allegedly transmitted to nonincumbent candidate for Pennsylvania Auditor General confidential list of state employees in Auditor General's Office whose employment or positions were believed to have been purchased through unlawful payments, inasmuch as candidate was not state actor at time of alleged concerted and conspiratorial conduct; where neither party who allegedly conspired was state official, there was no state actor to supply even colorable basis for investing federal actor with state mantle. Melo v. Hafer, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 912 F.2d 628, rehearing denied, certiorari granted 111 S.Ct. 1070, 498 U.S. 1118, 112 L.Ed.2d 1176, affirmed 112 S.Ct. 358, 502 U.S. 21, 116 L.Ed.2d 301. Civil Rights 1327

942. Auditors, particular persons under color of law

Pennsylvania's Auditor General was subject to personal-capacity suit for damages under § 1983 for allegedly improper discharge of commonwealth employees, though she made employment decisions in her official capacity; requirement of action under color of state law meant that Auditor General could be liable for discharging employees precisely because of her authority as Auditor General, and novel proposition that this same official authority insulated her from suit could not be accepted. Hafer v. Melo, U.S.Pa.1991, 112 S.Ct. 358, 502 U.S. 21, 116 L.Ed.2d 301. Civil Rights 1326(11); Civil Rights 1359

Private health care providers that participated in patient's involuntary mental health commitment were not state actors, and thus were not subject to liability under §§ 1983, even though patient was indigent covered by state's health insurance system, and providers received funds from state and sought court authorization for commitment pursuant to state statutory scheme, where statutory scheme did not compel or encourage involuntary commitment, state was not involved in decisions concerning commitment, and neither involuntary commitment nor provision of health care services to indigents were functions reserved exclusively to state. Estades-Negroni v. CPC Hosp. San Juan Capestrano, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 412 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1326(7); Civil Rights 1326(9)

Employees of reinsurer did not act as agents of investigator employed by state's attorney when they conducted audit of broker, so as to support Fourth Amendment claim brought by broker's owner in §§ 1983 action; although investigator specifically requested that certain files be reviewed by the auditors and knew that the auditors would report their findings back to him, reinsurer initiated its own investigation in part to look into the possibility of fraud and serve its own interests, and was not rewarded for its cooperation with the investigator. Mutual Medical Plans, Inc. v. County of Peoria, C.D.Ill.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 1067. Searches And Seizures 33

943. Banks, particular persons under color of law

Account holder's allegation that officers and employees of private bank improperly turned over money from account to Internal Revenue Service did not state claim under § 1983, as actions of officers and employees were taken under federal, not state, law. Smith v. Kitchen, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1997, 156 F.3d 1025. Civil Rights 1327

Agreement by banks and bank employees to open noninterest bearing account for inmate's prison income was not sufficient state action to support inmate's § 1983 claim against banks and employees, even assuming that inmate had constitutional right to earn interest on prison income. Mitchell v. Kirk, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 20 F.3d 936. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Even if taxpayer were able to prove that, as alleged, after he had been informed by internal revenue agents that if he did not pay penalty for late payment of federal employment taxes within ten days his assets would be levied upon without further notice and even if taxpayer were to prove that he informed the agents and the bank in which he had an account that, if the account was levied upon he would bring legal action against them, and the agents then levied on the account and the bank transferred the assets to the United States, none of the persons against whom taxpayer brought action had acted under color of state law, and defendants had not violated taxpayer's constitutional and civil rights. Kotmair v. Gray, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 505 F.2d 744. Civil Rights 1327

Allegation that bank and its employees acted with county law enforcement officials in connection with farm repossession in such way as to be liable under § 1983 for alleged constitutional violations in course of arrest of plaintiff, who attempted to stop repossession, were based solely on charges involving bank employees' "private misuse of statute by private actor," and thus, bank and employees were not liable, as pleadings and affidavits failed to establish existence of conspiracy or any plans of joint participation with public officials that would indicate that bank or its employees acted "under color" of state law. Bahr v. County of Martin, D.Minn.1991, 771 F.Supp. 970. Civil Rights 1396

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Bank and related individuals involved in seizure of judgment debtor's property, pursuant to execution of judgment, were not state actors, and thus could not be held liable under § 1983 or for alleged due process violations. Elsman v. Standard Federal Bank, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2002, 46 Fed.Appx. 792, 2002 WL 31007987, Unreported, on remand 238 F.Supp.2d 903. Civil Rights 1326(9); Constitutional Law 254(5)

944. Bank officials, particular persons under color of law

Bank officer's misrepresenting to debtor the contents of temporary restraining order did not constitute state action for purposes of this section since such misrepresentation was by a private individual and although order had number of attachments and might have been formidable reading the creditor was in possession of such order and was not entitled to take representation of the bank employee as the authoritative word of the state court. Torres v. First State Bank of Sierra County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1978, 588 F.2d 1322. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Depositor who challenged bank's conversion from a mutual association to a stock corporation on constitutional grounds sufficiently alleged that bank director was a "state actor" within meaning of § 1983; plaintiff alleged that defendants, including director, met and corresponded informally with Maine Superintendent of Banking to develop an unconstitutional conversion procedure and ease approval of bank's inequitable conversion plan; depositor also alleged that, with director's knowledge and consent, defendants lobbied the Maine legislature for passage of an unconstitutional statute; finally, depositor claimed that bank was so heavily regulated by the state that it could be considered as a quasi-public entity in its own right. Lovell v. One Bancorp, D.Me.1988, 690 F.Supp. 1090, appeal dismissed 878 F.2d 10. Civil Rights 1396

944A. Lenders and repossesors

Lender's merely following procedure established by state law for repossession of vehicle when not all payments were allegedly made did not transform private party's activity into state action under civil rights statute, and thus, district court lacked federal question jurisdiction over borrower's action against lender, alleging that repossession was an unlawful seizure under Fourth Amendment. Elliott v. Chrysler Financial, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 149 Fed.Appx. 766, 2005 WL 2114181, Unreported. Federal Courts 222

945. Boards of education, particular persons under color of law

Board of education, president of state junior college, and two deans of college were acting "under color of state law" within meaning of this section when they denied associate professor tenure and renewal of teaching contract at junior college. Smith v. Losee, C.A.10 (Utah) 1973, 485 F.2d 334, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2604, 417 U.S. 908, 41 L.Ed.2d 212. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Board of education and teachers' organization which entered into contract which required all teachers to either join the organization or pay a fee equivalent to its membership dues were acting under color of state law when they allegedly denied certain teachers their right of freedom of association. Holman v. Board of Ed. of City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1975, 388 F.Supp. 792. Civil Rights 1326(11)

946. Boards of public works, particular persons under color of law

For purposes of violations of this section, members of board of public works and city controller with respect to the building and financing of a new multilane road were acting under color of state law. Love v. Navarro, E.D.Cal.1967, 262 F.Supp. 520. Civil Rights 1326(2)

947. Boards of recreation, particular persons under color of law

Conduct of corporation and its officers and superintendent of city board of recreation, which suspended minors from hockey program, did not constitute state action within meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 where city's only involvement with corporation was that corporation used city skating rink and was given 20% reduction in hourly rate, city permitted all associations and groups, public and private, to skate at reduced rate at city skating rink, and city did not supervise, oversee or regulate the corporation. Giannattasio v. Stamford Youth Hockey Ass'n, Inc., D.C.Conn.1985, 621 F.Supp. 825. Civil Rights 1326(2); Civil Rights 1326(4)

Action of Board of Recreation of City of Baltimore with respect to segregation of races in athletic activities in public parks under authority delegated by state within its police power was not under "color" of authority and did not constitute a "conspiracy to injure" within meaning of § 1985 of this title, creating cause of action for deprivation of civil rights. Boyer v. Garrett, D.C.Md.1949, 88 F.Supp. 353, affirmed 183 F.2d 582, certiorari denied 71 S.Ct. 293, 340 U.S. 912, 95 L.Ed. 659. Civil Rights 1326(1); Conspiracy 7; Conspiracy 7.5(3)

948. Boards of trade, particular persons under color of law

Chicago Board of Trade proceedings involving disciplinary action against one of its members did not constitute state action resulting in denial of due process or the equal protection of the laws to member who was suspended but who did not obtain a final adjudication of his right by a state court, and proceeding raised no federal question. Rosee v. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1963, 311 F.2d 524, certiorari denied 83 S.Ct. 1693, 374 U.S. 806, 10 L.Ed.2d 1031. Federal Courts 177

949. Boards of trustees, particular persons under color of law

Suit under this section would not lie against private citizen, who was head of political faction which allegedly dominated school board politics and who allegedly directed school board to take adverse action against several teachers, absent showing of any state action on his part, either individually or in concert with board of trustees or other school officials. Guerra v. Roma Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1977, 444 F.Supp. 812. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Actions of president and members of village board of trustees in reducing number of voting precincts from 32 to 6 for purpose of election, in providing for precincts grossly unequal in number of registered voters, and in failing to provide sufficient election judges or adequate voting facilities were "under color of" statutes of state and ordinances of village within this section. Ury v. Santee, N.D.Ill.1969, 303 F.Supp. 119. Civil Rights 1326(2)

950. Bus drivers, particular persons under color of law

School bus driver, bus company, and its president were not "state actors," and thus were not liable in § 1983 action by school children and their parents who alleged that driver sexually molested girls on bus; while bus company and its employees were carrying out state program at state expense, they were not performing function that had been traditionally exclusive prerogative of state, and there was no state regulation that compelled or even influenced alleged unconstitutional conduct. Black by Black v. Indiana Area School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 985 F.2d 707. Civil Rights 1326(6)

That bus driver was allegedly not acting under state law to enforce segregation of passengers when he ordered passenger to change her seat did not preclude bus company's liability for violation of passenger's civil rights. Flemming v. South Carolina Elec. & Gas Co., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1956, 239 F.2d 277. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Bus driver for special school district, having allegedly deprived handicapped children of their constitutional rights by either beating or sexually abusing them, acted "under color of state law" for purposes of civil rights statute when special school district was obligated to provide free transportation to handicapped students enrolled in district and in connection therewith employed former bus driver. Doe A v. Special School Dist. of St. Louis County, E.D.Mo.1986, 637 F.Supp. 1138. Civil Rights 1326(6)

951. Cemetery owners, particular persons under color of law

Where cemetery owners controlled, managed and operated cemetery as private, religious cemetery, entirely free from any contract, arrangement, or supervision by any public body, there was no state action and cemetery owners could not be held liable under this section or § 1981 of this title. Save Our Cemeteries, Inc. v. Archdiocese of New Orleans, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1978, 568 F.2d 1074, rehearing denied 572 F.2d 320, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 120, 439 U.S. 836, 58 L.Ed.2d 133. Civil Rights 1326(1)

952. Child care institutions, particular persons under color of law

Adoption center and adoptive parents did not act under color of Utah law, as required in putative father's action alleging that adoption of child was due process violation, even though adoption decree was issued by a state court; adoptive process was not an exclusive state function, there was no nexus nor any close union between the state and either the adoptive parents or the adoption center, and there was no substantial cooperative action between state officials and the private parties, or state participation in alleged constitutional deprivation. Johnson v. Rodrigues, C.A.10 (Utah) 2002, 293 F.3d 1196, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 893, 537 U.S. 1111, 154 L.Ed.2d 783. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Private child care institutions which fell within the New York statutory definition of "authorized agencies" empowered to care for and have custody of children from state and city officials were acting under color of state law, for purpose of liability for civil rights violations. Duchesne v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 566 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Agencies' decisions as to acceptance and care of children placed with them by city pursuant to foster care program had sufficiently close nexus with state, for purpose of natural parents' section 1983 action, where city and state retained ultimate responsibility for children's welfare, and agencies' decisions were directly circumscribed by state and/or city regulations. Wilder v. Bernstein, S.D.N.Y.1986, 645 F.Supp. 1292, affirmed 848 F.2d 1338. Civil Rights 1326(1)

State by licensing and regulating child-care institution operated by sheriffs' association did not so identify itself with the discriminatory admissions policies of the institution as to give rise to claim against institution under this section. Player v. State of Ala. Dept. of Pensions and Sec., M.D.Ala.1975, 400 F.Supp. 249, affirmed 536 F.2d 1385. Civil Rights 1326(7)

953. Cities, particular persons under color of law

Conduct of city in delegating its authority to set housing standards for residential properties and its power of eminent domain to redevelopment corporation was under color of state law for purposes of federal civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Williams v. City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1986, 783 F.2d 114. Civil Rights 1326(1)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 to suspect who was interrogated during murder investigation for allegedly improper custodial interrogation, absent evidence of a city policy, custom or practice that condoned detective's alleged improper actions during course of interrogation. Arline v. City of Jacksonville, M.D.Fla.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1300. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To prevail in civil rights action, city employee would have to establish that city deprived him of constitutional right and that city's actions were taken under color of state law. Chernov v. City of Hollywood, S.D.Fla.1993, 819 F.Supp. 1070, affirmed 19 F.3d 1446. Civil Rights 1125; Civil Rights 1326(11)

City did not act under color of state law, as required for § 1983 action, by merely obtaining injunction prohibiting gift shop owner from distributing certain pamphlets, absent allegation of conspiracy between city officials and state judge who issued injunction. Mabe v. City of Galveston Park Bd. of City of Galveston, Tex., S.D.Tex.1986, 635 F.Supp. 105. Civil Rights 1326(1)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for injuries sustained by jail inmate who was raped by jail trustee and jailer, where there was no evidence that municipal policy caused assaults, city had policies to protect inmate safety, attackers were properly investigated and trained before assuming duties at jail, there was no failure to supervise, there was no evidence of earlier complaints of sexual misconduct, inmate's complaint was promptly investigated, and her attackers were punished. Lazarus v. City of Dumas, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 266, 2005 WL 405841, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

954. City officials, particular persons under color of law

City manager was acting "under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983 when he raped city employee in her apartment, where manager used his authority to sexually harass employee during and after work hours, held her job and job benefits over her head, and he ultimately used his authority as city manager and her boss to create the opportunity to be alone with her and to rape her. Griffin v. City of Opa-Locka, C.A.11 (Fla.) 2001, 261 F.3d 1295, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1789, 535 U.S. 1033, 152 L.Ed.2d 648, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1789, 535 U.S. 1034, on subsequent appeal 67 Fed.Appx. 582, 2003 WL 21067103, on subsequent appeal 67 Fed.Appx. 584, 2003 WL 21068364. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Harassing and abusive conduct by city alderman, who was veterinarian, towards veterinary assistant was not action taken under color of state law under § 1983; alderman was pursuing his purely personal, private interests, and because of close relationship with assistant and his status as employer, he would have been in same position to harass and abuse assistant even if he had not been an alderman. Waters v. City of Morristown, TN, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2001, 242 F.3d 353. Civil Rights 1326(2)

City officials were acting in the color of state law when repossessing restaurant premises which city leased to individual, even if the lease was a proprietary function rather than a governmental function. Gentry v. City of Lee's Summit, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 10 F.3d 1340. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Failure of city and governing officials to dismantle fence across public street was action taken "under color of state law" within meaning of this section. Jennings v. Patterson, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1974, 488 F.2d 436. Civil Rights 1326(1)

City mayor and police officer were acting under color of state law, as required in order for private citizen to commence §§ 1983 action against them for false arrest, when they telephoned assistant prosecutor seeking issuance of arrest warrant for stalking, after citizen photographed officer in police station, and warrant was issued during middle of night; while mayor and officer claimed they were asserting their rights as ordinary citizens, expedited processing of complaints, unavailable to general public, occurred because of their status as public officers. Pomykacz v. Borough of West Wildwood, D.N.J.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 504. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Town supervisor who fired town clerk during radio broadcast, and telephoned her to tell her that she would be fined for building a deck without a permit, was acting under color of law, as required to support § 1983 action brought by clerk against town and supervisor. Emanuele v. Town of Greenville, S.D.N.Y.2001, 143 F.Supp.2d 325 . Civil Rights 1326(2); Civil Rights 1326(11)

City council members acted under "color of state law" within meaning of § 1983, when they denied liquor license application. Arrington v. Dickerson, M.D.Ala.1995, 915 F.Supp. 1503. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Where all of defendants were city officials responsible for administration of public employment, they were acting under color of state law for purposes of civil rights action brought by employee who alleged that he had been suspended from employment in violation of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14 § 1. Crawford v. City of Houston, Texas, S.D.Tex.1974, 386 F.Supp. 187. Civil Rights 1326(11)

955. City council members, particular persons under color of law

Town councilwoman acted under color of state law when she allegedly engaged in sexual harassment of male employee after he terminated their romantic relationship, as required for employee to state § 1983 claim for violation of his equal protection rights; councilwoman's power over employee derived from her position on the town board. Perks v. Town of Huntington, E.D.N.Y.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1143. Civil Rights 1326(11)

City councilmen and mayor who, without affording procedural due process to policemen, terminated their positions were acting under color of law by virtue of their offices as city councilmen and mayor. Bell v. Gayle, N.D.Tex.1974, 384 F.Supp. 1022. Civil Rights 1326(11)

956. Clerks of court, particular persons under color of law

Court clerk could not be liable for alleged policy of failing to send court order dismissing charges against pretrial detainee to either detainee or his counsel, in § 1983 action by detainee who was held for eight months after charges against him were dropped; judge, not clerk, was final policymaker as to record keeping and administration of court, and clerk had no duty to send such orders. Brooks v. George County, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1996, 84 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 359, 519 U.S. 948, 136 L.Ed.2d 251. Civil Rights 1358

Court clerk's ministerial act of accepting and filing settlement documents did not significantly assist alleged conspiracy by homicide victim's parents, their attorneys, liability insurer, and its attorneys to settle wrongful death action against insureds without their consent, and, thus, state action was lacking for § 1983 action by insureds. Gaskell v. Weir, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 10 F.3d 626. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Clerk of New York City civil court is an employee of an agency of a subdivision of New York State, and acts "under color of state law" within meaning of this section; thus defendant process servers, by causing clerk to enter default judgments against persons to which false affidavits of service related, would be culpable to the same extent as the clerk would be if the clerk had the same knowledge as was possessed by defendants as to the falsity of the papers. U. S. v. Wiseman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 445 F.2d 792, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 346, 404 U.S. 967, 30 L.Ed.2d 287. Civil Rights 1808

957. Clubs, particular persons under color of law

Where private yacht club had been in existence longer than city from which it leased bay bottom land underlying the club's dock facilities, where the club had made use of the bay bottom at its present location for more than 30 years prior to time that city first asserted ownership of the bay bottom land, where the club was not created for purposes of evading this section, and where city's only connection with the operation of the private club was its lease of the bay bottom land to the club for $1 per year, the actions of the private club in excluding blacks and members of the Jewish religion did not constitute "state action" or action taken "under color of state law." Golden v. Biscayne Bay Yacht Club, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 530 F.2d 16, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 186, 429 U.S. 872, 50 L.Ed.2d 152. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Analysis of nature, value and proportion of state aid to private corporation, which was organized to promote playing of baseball among school age youngsters but which did not allow female participation, did not end inquiry for purpose of determining whether there was significant state involvement, since it was possible the state could be significantly involved in one aspect of the private organization while it was insignificantly involved in a different aspect; hence, court would narrow its state action inquiry to state involvement in corporation's policy of excluding females. Magill v. Avonworth Baseball Conference, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Any action of private club and its president, involved in the operation of summer baseball league on city property, in enforcing a discriminatory policy pursuant to city directive or policy was taken "under color of law" within meaning of this section and was clearly within the power of the court to enjoin. Goodloe v. Davis, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 514 F.2d 1274. Civil Rights 1326(4)

While the "mere use" of city parks and playgrounds is not enough to clothe private groups with a public character for purposes under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1 the rationing of otherwise freely accessible recreational facilities creates a "stronger case" for state action than if the facilities are simply available to all comers without condition or reservation. Fortin v. Darlington Little League, Inc., C.A.1 (R.I.) 1975, 514 F.2d 344. Civil Rights 1326(4)

White Roman Catholic allegedly expelled from private country club for advocating suspension of club's exclusionary policy which denied membership to Jews was not deprived of any right or interest under color of state law or by reason of a state action, within contemplation of this section. MacDonald v. Shawnee Country Club, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1971, 438 F.2d 632, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 2255, 403 U.S. 932, 29 L.Ed.2d 711, rehearing denied 92 S.Ct. 31, 404 U.S. 875, 30 L.Ed.2d 121. Civil Rights 1050

Racial discrimination complaint against private boat club adequately asserted action under color of state law, as required for § 1983 claim, by alleging that club paid nominal annual fee for use of town land, that town benefited from license agreement with club, that club's license expressly stated that it agreed to operate license for accommodation of public, and that town was apprised about club's allegedly discriminatory conduct. Gibbs-Alfano v. Ossining Boat & Canoe Club, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 506. Civil Rights 1396

958. Coaches, particular persons under color of law

Compliance with National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) regulations alone does not transform an assistant basketball coach at a university into a state actor. Thomas v. Pearl, C.D.Ill.1992, 793 F.Supp. 838, affirmed 998 F.2d 447, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 688, 510 U.S. 1043, 126 L.Ed.2d 655. Civil Rights 1326(6)

959. Commissions or commissioners, particular persons under color of law-- Generally

Where insurance commissioner's approval of the form of disability insurance policies, which were allegedly discriminatory against women, was pro forma rather than an approval after full investigation, where the commissioner placed no official imprimatur on the practice of which plaintiff complained, and where private insurance carriers decided whether and to whom such policies would issue, there was insufficient "state action" to state a claim under this section. Life Ins. Co. of North America v. Reichardt, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 591 F.2d 499, on remand 485 F.Supp. 56. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Since members of county hospital commission held office as result of governmental appointment and administered public facilities, their actions were susceptible of being regarded as having been taken under color of law, thus rendering applicable to them provisions of this section and § 1985 of this title. Meredith v. Allen County War Memorial Hospital Commission, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1968, 397 F.2d 33. Civil Rights 1326(2)

State Corporation Commission (SCC) was acting under color of state law, as required for § 1983 suit challenging under First Amendment constitutional provision under which SCC denied church right to incorporate, even though provision barred general assembly from allowing incorporation. Falwell v. Miller, W.D.Va.2002, 203 F.Supp.2d 624. Civil Rights 1326(7)

In that the Ohio Expositions Commission which prohibited religious societies from proselytizing their beliefs through roving solicitation on state fairgrounds was a creature of statute and received portion of its budget for operating state fair from Ohio General Assembly, there was sufficient state action to support a claim by religious societies under this section authorizing a civil action against one who, under color of state law, subjects another person to deprivation of rights. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. Evans, S.D.Ohio 1977, 440 F.Supp. 414. Civil Rights 1326(1)

960. ---- Baseball, commissions or commissioners, particular persons under color of law

Terms of city's lease of its stadium to baseball team caused baseball commissioner's policy excluding accredited female sports reporters from locker rooms of stadium's clubhouse to be state action within U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, where advertising and massive publicity about team and individual ballplayers were essential to profitability of stadium lease entered into pursuant to special legislative provisions, stadium was maintained and improved with use of public funds and annual rentals to be paid city for use of stadium depended directly on drawing power of team's games. Ludtke v. Kuhn, S.D.N.Y.1978, 461 F.Supp. 86. Constitutional Law 254(4)

961. ---- Nuclear Regulatory, commissions or commissioners, particular persons under color of law

Plaintiff, who brought action seeking injunction ordering United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission members to revoke licenses of all nuclear fuel cycle facilities within Commission's jurisdiction because defendants' licensing of such facilities allegedly deprived plaintiff of life without due process and failed to assure adequate protection of public health and safety in violation of applicable statutes could not maintain action as a civil rights action pursuant to this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights, since none of acts of which plaintiff complained were performed under color of state law for purposes of this section. Honicker v. Hendrie, M.D.Tenn.1979, 465 F.Supp. 414. Federal Courts 222

962. ---- Parks, commissions or commissioners, particular persons under color of law

Where former chief deputy commissioner of parks, conservation and recreation for county was dismissed by county commissioner of parks acting in his capacity as commissioner at direction of county executive, requisite state action to bring civil rights action was established. Ecker v. Cohalan, E.D.N.Y.1982, 542 F.Supp. 896. Civil Rights 1326(11)

963. ---- Public service, commissions or commissioners, particular persons under color of law

Facts that only offending railroad could be criminally punished for failure to obey State Public Service Commission order requiring race segregation in waiting rooms, that order could not apply to interstate passengers and terminal facilities, and that no city ordinance purported to forbid unsegregated waiting rooms, did not prevent action of State Public Service Commissioners and city commissioners in attempting to enforce segregation from being "under color of state law" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section as basis for relief to Negroes. Baldwin v. Morgan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1958, 251 F.2d 780. Civil Rights 1326(7); Constitutional Law 213(1)

Under Illinois law, village's emergency telephone system board had final policymaking authority with respect to whether police department telephone line would be connected to emergency telephone system so that calls could be recorded, and therefore village could not be held liable, under § 1983, for police chief's conduct in having line secretly connected to emergency telephone system's recording equipment and taping private calls of department employees for personal reasons. Abbott v. Village of Winthrop Harbor, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 205 F.3d 976, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Action of state Public Utility Commissioners in promulgating regulation under which utility filed rules permitting disconnecting customer was not "state action." Lucas v. Wisconsin Elec. Power Co., C.A.7 (Wis.) 1972, 466 F.2d 638, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 928, 409 U.S. 1114, 34 L.Ed.2d 696. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Fact that electric utility was public utility subject to considerable state regulation did not by itself support finding of "state action" as necessary for action under color of law required for violation of § 1983, for purposes of business partner's suit against utility, New York Public Service Commission (PSC), and their employees, alleging that utility's failure to extend electrical distribution lines to farm for free and Commission's failure to compel utility to do so amounted to denial of equal protection and due process. Jemzura v. Public Service Com'n, N.D.N.Y.1997, 971 F.Supp. 702. Civil Rights 1326(7)

When commissioners of a state public utility commission act in their official capacity they are acting under color of state law within meaning of this subchapter. Edwards v. Philadelphia Elec. Co., E.D.Pa.1974, 371 F.Supp. 1313, affirmed 510 F.2d 969. Civil Rights 1326(7)

965. Company towns, particular persons under color of law

For state action to be found from private party's control of property that amounts to creation of company town, private party must assume plenary control and complete governmental power over property; it is not enough that facilities be devoted to public function or that party opens its property to public in general. United Auto Workers, Local No. 5285 v. Gaston Festivals, Inc., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 43 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Complaint, under this section and § 245 of Title 18 protecting recipients of federal statutory benefits from interference by third parties, and other statutes alleged sufficient facts from which it could be concluded that residential community operated by company was a "company town" within principle that rights of owner who opens up his property for use by public in general become circumscribed by statutory and constitutional rights of those who use it, and accordingly that, when company acted, it did so under color of state law. Illinois Migrant Council v. Campbell Soup Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 519 F.2d 391, on remand 438 F.Supp. 222. Civil Rights 1326(11)

966. Conservatories, particular persons under color of law

Termination of employment of tenured professor at music teaching center at university level would be state action for purposes of maintaining action under this section, where the center was subsidized by annual appropriations by Commonwealth Legislature, and the other defendants involved in termination were a public corporation, whose only stockholder was a public corporation and government instrumentality, and individuals who were all employees of such business entities and all acting within their respective official capacities at all times material; thus termination of employment without a hearing violated due process of law. King v. Conservatorio de Musica de Puerto Rico, D.C.Puerto Rico 1974, 378 F.Supp. 746. Civil Rights 1326(11); Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

Telecommunications provider lacked standing to seek declaratory judgment that consultant to town violated Telecommunications Act and Constitution by submitting for town's approval illegal draft ordinance regulating communications towers; necessary requirement that provider be facing future harms was not satisfied, as town had rescinded ordinance in question, and provider was no longer serving town, obviating prospects of future problems. Omnipoint Communications Inc. v. Comi, N.D.N.Y.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 388. Declaratory Judgment 300

Architect serving as consultant to town planning board was not acting "under color of state law," precluding suit under § 1983 alleging that he violated federally protected rights of real property owner when he reviewed and rejected plans for proposed large drug store on premises for noncompliance with architectural design district ordinance. R-Goshen LLC v. Village of Goshen, S.D.N.Y.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 441, affirmed 115 Fed.Appx. 465, 2004 WL 2278555. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Employer's benefits consultant was not state actor, as required for it to be liable under § 1983. Rodriguez v. Puerto Rico Marine Management, Inc., D.Puerto Rico 1997, 975 F.Supp. 115. Civil Rights 1326(11)

968. Contractors, particular persons under color of law

Private physician under contract with a state to provide medical care to inmates acts "under color of state law," for purposes of § 1983, when undertaking his duties to treat an inmate. Farrow v. West, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 320 F.3d 1235. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Actions of defendant who was employed by private entity which had contract with state to oversee rehabilitation of prison inmates were fairly attributable to the state, and so defendant was state actor for purposes of § 1983 action; defendant was performing a traditional state function in his management of prison print shop, and was clothed with authority of the state. Flint ex rel. Flint v. Kentucky Dept. of Corrections, C.A.6 (Ky.) 2001, 270 F.3d 340, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1326(8)

City's independent contractor in city's employee assistance program for employees testing positive for drug use, and contractor's employee, were not acting under color of state law, and thus were not liable under § 1983, in referring city employee to treatment program he found offensive to his religious beliefs, on theory they conspired with city, as city employee failed to present sufficient evidence of agreement and concerted action to satisfy the joint action test, though contractor and its employee reported city employee's non-compliance to the city, aware that this would likely prompt city to begin termination proceedings, and though city might have considered advice of contractor's employee as a factor in its ultimate decision to discipline city employee, where city retained complete authority to enforce its drug policy. Sigmon v. CommunityCare HMO, Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2000, 234 F.3d 1121. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Under close nexus test, municipal contractor was state actor so as to permit laborers under contract to establish § 1983 claim for contractor's failure to pay prevailing wage as required by Housing and Community Development Act (HCDA); facts alleged and supported by contracts relied on permitted inference that contractor could not pay wages at level required by HCDA because of strictures imposed by municipal defendants. Chan v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 1 F.3d 96, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 472, 510 U.S. 978, 126 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Management company which contracted to provide management services for the Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority and which was first purchased and later sold by the Authority was not, at least after its sale, an arm of the Puerto Rico government for purposes of state action requirements of civil rights statutes. Rodriguez-Garcia v. Davila, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 904 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Prison guards at privately operated prison did not act under color of state law for purposes of potential § 1983 liability in maintaining custody of exclusively federal prisoners, and thus pretrial detainee could not maintain civil rights suit against guards for failure to protect him from other inmates; guards were not exercising power possessed by virtue of state law nor one that had been traditionally exclusively reserved to state. Sarro v. Cornell Corrections, Inc., D.R.I.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 52, 119 A.L.R.5th 593. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private foster care agency was acting under color of state law, for purposes of §§ 1983 claims brought by parents and child against agency under New York law, stemming from assault that allegedly occurred while child was in foster care after removal; actions at issue related to handling of children placed with agency by city and would have been performed by city had agency not undertaken them. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private organizations were acting under "color of state law," and consequently subject to suit under §§ 1983, when they entered into contract to provide religious services to inmates in state prison, and allegedly violated Establishment Clause in process. Americans United For Separation of Church and State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries, S.D.Iowa 2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 862. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Regional sales manager who contracted with California state prison to provide food used by prison employees to prepare meals for inmates was not "state actor," and so was not subject to §§ 1983 suit by inmate who was follower of Islam and did not eat pork, but who was allegedly misled into consuming pork in unlabeled foods in violation of his First Amendment right to free exercise of religion; that manager's company did business with state was not sufficient to implicate him as state actor. Lewis v. Mitchell, S.D.Cal.2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 935. Constitutional Law 84.5(14)

Internal independent contractor for counseling and consulting services in administrative and human resources matters for Puerto Rico Government Development Bank (GDB) could not be considered government official acting under color of state law whose conduct in issuing report indicating that employee's appointment was null and void violated employee's constitutional rights, and in any event, even if she were considered a government official acting under color of state law, she was entitled to qualified immunity in terminated employee's § 1983 action, absent showing that her actions were not objectively reasonable. Velez Rivera v. Agosto Alicea, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 72, affirmed 437 F.3d 145. Civil Rights 1326(11); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Private law firm and its attorneys, who contracted with county to provide public defender services, were not "state actors" for § 1983 purposes. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Head chaplain at county jail, who was employed by private company which contracted with county to provide ministry services, was acting under color of state law, and thereby satisfied state action requirement for purposes of § 1983, when interacting with female inmate; county delegated to a private corporation its duty under state law to provide religious services to inmates and granted that entity broad access to inmates when providing such services. Paz v. Weir, S.D.Tex.2001, 137 F.Supp.2d 782. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private company that was awarded state contract to administer motorcycle safety program was not acting under color of state law when it purportedly made decision to not offer position of state coordinator to individual named in bid, and thus alleged failure to hire individual for exercise of free speech rights did not present cognizable § 1983 claim; company maintained control over its own internal hiring process. Halstead v. Motorcycle Safety Foundation, Inc., E.D.Pa.1999, 71 F.Supp.2d 455. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Business relationship alone was insufficient to show that construction company working under state contract to renovate prison acted under color of state law under § 1983 as to allegations of deliberate indifference to plaintiff's constitutional rights on theory that state officials directed, controlled or encouraged its actions. White v. Cooper, N.D.Ill.1999, 55 F.Supp.2d 848. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Correctional medical service contractually obligated to provide county inmates with medical care mandated by the Eighth Amendment was providing functions traditionally exclusive prerogative of state, and, therefore, could be held liable for constitutional violations under § 1983. Higgins v. Correctional Medical Services of Illinois, Inc., N.D.Ill.1998, 8 F.Supp.2d 821, affirmed 178 F.3d 508, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private residential juvenile treatment center providing 24-hour care for trouble juveniles was "state actor" for purposes of civil rights statute prohibiting deprivation of federal constitutional rights by state actor under color of law; under contract state totally delegated its responsibility for protection of life, health and well-being of juveniles to treatment center. Lemoine v. New Horizons Ranch and Center, Inc., N.D.Tex.1998, 990 F.Supp. 498. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Employees of rape crisis center acted "under color of state law" for purposes of civil rights action under § 1983 where, pursuant to contract between the center and school system, employees came into the school to conduct program for education and benefit of the students, essentially standing in the shoes of teachers. Wojcik v. Town of North Smithfield, D.R.I.1995, 874 F.Supp. 508, affirmed 76 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Contractor's decision to fire school bus driver based on driver's decertification by board of education was not "state action" that could support driver's civil rights claim against contractor based on his discharge. Hill v. New York City Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.Y.1992, 808 F.Supp. 141. Civil Rights 1326(11)

As against motion to dismiss, allegations in civil rights action based on claim that labor unions, subcontractors, and others in the building industry engaged in discriminatory employment practices, justified conclusion that subcontractors acted under color of state law and engaged in conspiracy. Byrd v. Local Union No. 24, Intern. Broth. of Elec. Workers, D.C.Md.1974, 375 F.Supp. 545. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

969. Cooperatives, particular persons under color of law

Assignee of proprietary lease to floor of apartment building, who brought suit against cooperative apartment corporation and its directors alleging that their refusal to consent to the assignment to plaintiff was solely because she is a female, failed to establish a cause of action under this section, since this section requires misconduct under color of state law in violation of the constitutional rights of another, but the state's involvement in the case, to wit, state court enforcement of the lease provision requiring consent of the board of directors to any assignment, did not amount to approval of the allegedly discriminatory conduct and did not constitute "state action." Girard v. 94th St. & Fifth Ave. Corp., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 530 F.2d 66, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 2173, 425 U.S. 974, 48 L.Ed.2d 798. Civil Rights 1326(9)

970. Corporations, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Private tobacco company that sold its products to officers and inmates in state prison did not thereby become "state actor," that could be held liable under § 1983 when tobacco smoke adversely affected asthmatic prisoner. Steading v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 941 F.2d 498, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1206, 502 U.S. 1108, 117 L.Ed.2d 445. Civil Rights 1326(5)

While it may be true, for purposes of action under this section, that private corporation acts under color of state law when it exercises its power of eminent domain, same may not be true where private corporation acquires property under threatened exercise of its eminent domain power. Vikse v. Basin Elec. Power Co-op., C.A.8 (N.D.) 1983, 712 F.2d 374. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Action taken by private corporation is not necessarily or automatically "state action," for purposes of application of this section, merely because corporation is chartered by state, or because corporation has state conferred monopoly, or because activities of corporation are strictly regulated by state, or because functions performed by corporation serve public convenience and necessity; before action in question can properly be characterized as "state action," there must be sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of regulated entity so that action of latter may be fairly treated as that of state itself. Briscoe v. Bock, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 540 F.2d 392. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Privately owned and operated corporation was not "state actor," for purpose of former employee's §§ 1983 claims under First and Fourteenth Amendments that his supervisors treated him differently than others similarly situated for purpose of "chilling" any exercise of his free speech rights and that they "conspired with themselves and others to deny plaintiff due process." Pighee v. L'Oreal USA Products], Inc., E.D.Ark.2005, 351 F.Supp.2d 885. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.1); Constitutional Law 254(4)

971. ---- Non-profit corporations, particular persons under color of law

County legal aid society was not "state actor" amenable to suit by terminated attorney under § 1983, given lack of governmental control over or interference with society's affairs, notwithstanding receipt of substantial government funds by society. Schnabel v. Abramson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 232 F.3d 83. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Employer, a corporation serving as center for independent living for persons with disabilities, was not a state actor and, therefore, former employee could not maintain claims against employer under § 1983 and Minnesota Constitution based upon employee's termination, although employer depended upon government for nearly all its funding, performed uniquely public functions, and was subject to extensive governmental regulation and licensing, where government did not control or dictate employer's personnel decisions. Nichols v. Metropolitan Center for Independent Living, Inc., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1995, 50 F.3d 514. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private, nonprofit corporation which provided shelter and supportive services for domestic violence victims did not act "under color of law" as required to render it liable to corporation's former employee under § 1983 arising from her termination, despite county's provision of financial support for corporation and membership of county official on corporation's board of directors; board had nothing to do with decision to terminate employee and official had only one of 21 votes on board. Watts-Means v. Prince George's Family Crisis Center, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 7 F.3d 40 . Civil Rights 1326(11)

Nonprofit corporation incorporated under Texas Non-Profit Corporation Act, consisting of cities and counties in three-county area, which was organized to provide services, such as nutrition, housing and transportation for the elderly, was not acting "under color" of state law when it dismissed deputy director, considering that extended regulation by state was virtually nonexistent since state did not regulate corporation beyond regulation imposed on all Texas incorporated nonprofit corporations, that the state lacked the authority to dictate or even propose personnel changes and was not a participant in the decision to dismiss deputy director, and that services provided by corporation for the elderly were not traditional state functions; moreover, even though corporation did receive substantial portion of its monies from different levels of government, less than 10 percent came from state or local governments. Cassiano v. Amigos Del Valle, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 776 F.2d 1300. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private not-for-profit corporation which provided advocate to help victims of family violence through court processes was not instrumentality of state or "state actor" subject to §§ 1983 liability, even though it was paid for advocacy services with funds that another private corporation received through a contract with state; public funding was at best indirect and resulted from subcontract between two private entities, there was no substantial control by state over its management generally or in performance of its duties, and corporation was not created by state law to achieve state objectives. Szekeres v. Schaeffer, D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Nonprofit corporation that operated prison program did not act under color of state law when rejecting inmate's application, precluding § 1983 civil rights claim. Byrd v. Moseley, D.D.C.1996, 942 F.Supp. 642. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private, not-for-profit organization, which contracted with various state agencies in exchange for funding and provided direct services to professionals and clients in criminal and juvenile justice systems and related human services systems, was not a "state actor" against whom African-American employee could assert a claim under First Amendment or § 1983, where employees were not eligible for city or state benefits, employer's board of directors was comprised solely of private individuals, and employer's function in advocating for release of juvenile offenders was outside exclusive province of state and contrary to public function of incarcerating and detaining such offenders. Henderson v. Center for Community Alternatives, S.D.N.Y.1996, 911 F.Supp. 689. Civil Rights 1326(4); Constitutional Law 82(5)

972. ---- Public corporations, particular persons under color of law

Suspects believed to have menaced patrons of store with guns failed to establish liability on part of village when bringing § 1983 action alleging false arrest and illegal searches by police, despite officers' alleged admission that they were operating in accordance with village policy; there was no refutation of possibility that police overstepped valid policy in detaining suspects and conducting searches. Ray v. Village of Woodridge, N.D.Ill.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 906. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Actions of employees of private corporation which operated detention facility owned by public corporation created by city pursuant the Rhode Island Municipal Detention Facility Corporations Act could not be deemed state action under the symbiotic relationship test, considering that management of prisons is not an exclusive public function, that private corporation was not financed by the state, and that any judgment rendered against employees of private corporation would not be paid out of the state treasury. Lawson v. Liburdi, D.R.I.2000, 114 F.Supp.2d 31. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Public corporation providing gas distribution services to a number of municipalities was a public entity and thus a state actor for purposes of its former employee's federal civil rights claim; corporation was wholly controlled by various municipalities through their governing body, board members were appointed and regularly elected by member municipalities and were removable by them, was exempt from paying interest on customer deposits, was classified as a "state and local employer," for federal labor regulations, and was almost completely exempt from all state, county and municipal and other taxation as well as usury and interest statutes. Newton v. Southeast Alabama Gas Dist., M.D.Ala.1989, 708 F.Supp. 1254. Civil Rights 1326(11)

For purposes of establishing right of action under this section, for private corporations, proprietary municipal corporations, and employees and agents thereof, may be deemed to act under color of law. Penthouse Intern. LTD. v. Putka, N.D.Ohio 1977, 436 F.Supp. 1220.

973. ---- Internet companies, corporations, particular persons under color of law

Private corporation, operating as Internet domain name registrar pursuant to agreements with federal government agency, was federal actor not subject to civil rights suit under § 1983, which applied only to state actors. Island Online, Inc. v. Network Solutions, Inc., E.D.N.Y.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 289. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1364

974. Counties, particular persons under color of law

Alabama sheriff, when executing his law enforcement duties in course of criminal investigation, represented State of Alabama, not county in which he acted as law enforcement official; thus, county was not liable for allegedly unconstitutional actions that sheriff took during investigation. McMillian v. Monroe County, Ala., U.S.Ala.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1734, 520 U.S. 781, 138 L.Ed.2d 1. Civil Rights 1348

County's detention policy was deliberately indifferent to substantive due process rights of arrestee who was detained for 38 days prior to initial court appearance, so that county was liable under §§ 1983; policy involved sheriff's office submitting names of those confined in jail to court and then waiting for court to schedule hearing, which improperly delegated the responsibility of bringing arrestees promptly to court for first appearance, and ignored the lack of authority for long-term confinement. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 388 F.3d 669. Arrest 70(2); Civil Rights 1352(4); Constitutional Law 262

County could not be liable in unsuccessful female school board candidate's § 1983 equal protection suit, alleging gender bias on part of foreman of grand jury that was charged with providing recommendations for filling board vacancy, absent showing that foreman exercised coercive effect on remainder of jury, majority of whose members voted to recommend someone other than female candidate; jury, not foreman, was policymaking entity. Dixon v. Burke County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2002, 303 F.3d 1271. Civil Rights 1351(2)

County was not liable in § 1983 action for county social worker's acts of depriving mother of custody of her children without protecting her rights; mother did not claim that it was county's official policy to dispose of child custody issues without hearing each of the child's parents, and social worker and prosecutor involved in case were not final decisionmakers in county. Holloway v. Brush, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2000, 220 F.3d 767. Civil Rights 1351(6)

County was not liable under § 1983 for prosecutor's use of peremptory strikes in racially discriminating manner in claimant's trial, inasmuch as, under Texas law, prosecutor and county district attorney were acting as advocates for state and enforcing state law when prosecutor committed conduct violating claimant's constitutional rights, and such actions, which were integral part of prosecutorial function of enforcing state criminal law, could not fairly be attributed to county. Esteves v. Brock, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 106 F.3d 674, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 114 F.3d 1185, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 91, 522 U.S. 828, 139 L.Ed.2d 47. Civil Rights 1348

Under Alabama law, sheriff does not exercise county power when he engages in law enforcement activities and thus is not final policymaker for county in area of law enforcement; therefore, county could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged constitutional violations occurring in criminal prosecution. McMillian v. Johnson, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 88 F.3d 1573, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 554, 519 U.S. 1025, 136 L.Ed.2d 436, affirmed 117 S.Ct. 1734, 520 U.S. 781, 138 L.Ed.2d 1. Civil Rights 1351(4)

State, rather than county, was responsible for enforcing provision of California Rules of Court placing duty for proper training and supervision of municipal court judges on presiding judge and for actions of presiding judge in failing to adequately train municipal court commissioner; thus, county could not be held liable to traffic violator in § 1983 action alleging that county failed to train or supervise commissioner. Franceschi v. Schwartz, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 57 F.3d 828. Civil Rights 1350; Court Commissioners 1

Illinois sheriffs are independently elected officials not subject to control of county, and thus county was properly dismissed from § 1983 action arising from citizen's arrest in courthouse for wearing air-filtration mask. Ryan v. County of DuPage, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 45 F.3d 1090. Civil Rights 1348; Sheriffs And Constables 1

County in which juvenile detention center, under state control, was located was not liable for alleged violation of juvenile detainee's Eighth Amendment rights because policies and procedures implemented by county to protect juveniles from sexual assaults remained unchanged after center was transferred to the state; following transfer, county had no control over center. Hill v. Dekalb Regional Youth Detention Center, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 40 F.3d

County could not be held liable when county attorney and guardian ad litem obtained ex parte order staying referee's decision requiring child who had allegedly been sexually abused to be returned to her mother's home, absent evidence that order was result of decision to follow county policy regarding such orders. McCuen v. Polk County, Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1990, 893 F.2d 172. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Homeowners association which voluntarily dismissed its state court action contesting county's grant of zoning change to landowner when landowner filed $6 million counterclaim for frivolous litigation could not maintain action under § 1983 against county, individual county commissioners or county attorney based on allegation that threat of frivolous litigation claim violated association's right to petition, inasmuch as county defendants took no action that deprived association of any constitutionally protected interests, and county defendants were not chargeable with landowner's actions. Dunwoody Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. DeKalb County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 887 F.2d 1455. Civil Rights 1056

Official acts of county satisfy "under color of state law" component of this section. Kohl Indus. Park Co. v. Rockland County, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1983, 710 F.2d 895. Civil Rights 1326(1)

County was potentially liable in inmates' § 1983 action alleging sheriff's deliberate indifference to county jail's inmates' medical needs; sheriff, who was statutorily responsible for inmates' medical care, was policymaker empowered to establish policies binding on county. Ginest v. Board of County Com'rs. of Carbon County, D.Wyo.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1190. Civil Rights 1351(4)

North Carolina sheriff's alleged decisions to terminate deputy sheriffs in retaliation for their failure to work on sheriff's reelection campaign could not be attributed to county as policy, and county thus was not liable in deputies' § 1983 action, where sheriff had final policymaking authority on employment decisions, and county board of commissioners had minimal input into employment matters. Harter v. Vernon, M.D.N.C.1996, 953 F.Supp. 685, affirmed 101 F.3d 334, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2511, 521 U.S. 1120, 138 L.Ed.2d 1014, on reconsideration 980 F.Supp. 162. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County can be held liable in prisoner's § 1983 civil rights case only if alleged constitutional violation occurred as result of county's official customs, policies or practices as respondeat superior does not apply to § 1983 suits against municipalities. Harrell v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 937 F.Supp. 754. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged sexual harassment of court administrator, for alleged due process violations, or for alleged retaliation against administrator, through elimination of her position, in violation of First Amendment; there was no county policy authorizing lack of due process, retaliatory discharge, or sexual harassment, county had policy against discrimination, judges, who allegedly participated in violations, were state officers, county commissioners did not eliminate position, did not know of administrator's alleged protected conduct, and did not have any direct supervision of court office, and, even assuming that commissioners had authority to ratify judges' action, they did not ratify alleged improper basis for those actions. Keenan v. Allan, E.D.Wash.1995, 889 F.Supp. 1320, affirmed 91 F.3d 1275. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County was not liable under § 1983 for alleged unconstitutional search and seizure of automobile, where civil rights plaintiff failed to make any allegations indicating that county had custom, policy, or practice which allowed or encouraged illegal searches and seizures. Jalili-Khiabani v. Oakland County, E.D.Mich.1994, 864 F.Supp. 30, vacated 66 F.3d 326. Civil Rights 1395(6) to plaintiff were not substantial enough to bring plaintiff's claim against defendant arising out of the lien process within the ambit of federal civil rights statute. Cobb v. Saturn Land Co., Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 966 F.2d 1334. Civil Rights 1326(9)

County attorney was authorized decision maker for county in area of county attorney's office, and therefore county and its officials could be held liable under § 1983 for county attorney's allegedly discriminatory decision to discharge assistant county attorney. Lococo v. Barger, E.D.Ky.1997, 958 F.Supp. 290, affirmed in part, reversed in part 234 F.3d 1268. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Assertions that acts of sexual abuse of plaintiff took place on county property while defendant, director of emergency services for county, was acting in official capacity and on duty did not suffice to demonstrate that defendant was acting under color of state law for purposes of civil rights statute, absent any allegation of facts as to the circumstances that would demonstrate that the abuse was somehow related to the performance of the duties of defendant's office. Long v. Mercer County, Ill., C.D.Ill.1992, 795 F.Supp. 873. Civil Rights 1326(2)

976. Credit reporting agencies, particular persons under color of law

Subject of credit reporting agency report to employer, which falsely stated that subject had been convicted of felony, could not maintain § 1983 action against agency; employee could not establish that any action taken by agency had been under color of state law. Wiggins v. Equifax Services, Inc., D.D.C.1993, 848 F.Supp. 213. Civil Rights 1326(11)

976A. Crime victims, particular persons under color of law

Conduct of alleged burglary victims, in assisting city police officer in restraining alleged perpetrator, in retrieving officer's handcuffs, and in allowing officer to use their cell phone to call for backup, did not constitute state action, as element for §§ 1983 claim against alleged burglary victims for use of excessive force during arrest of alleged perpetrator. Mickle v. Ahmed, D.S.C.2006, 444 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1326(5)

977. Custodial institutions, particular persons under color of law

To be actionable under this section plaintiffs had to establish that defendant, a private for-profit custodial institution, was acting under color of state law when it allegedly refused to procure readily available medical treatment which would have saved resident's life. Doyle v. Unicare Health Services, Inc., Aurora Center, N.D.Ill.1975, 399 F.Supp. 69, affirmed 541 F.2d 283. Civil Rights 1404

978. Dentists, particular persons under color of law

Dentist was not acting under color of state law when she engaged in alleged indifference to state inmate's medical needs, and thus, inmate could not maintain civil rights action against dentist; although dentist was employed by state on full-time basis to render dental care to inmates, she was not under supervision or direction of any person in the performance of her services nor was her performance in any way based on standards set forth by state. Greenstein v. Huffman, W.D.Va.1986, 684 F.Supp. 434. Civil Rights 1326(8)

979. Department of Housing and Urban Development, particular persons under color of law

Indian tribe and others could not maintain action under this section against Department of Housing and Urban Development and other federal officials arising from foreclosure on housing project, in that alleged violation was not the product of conspiracy between state and federal officials because state officials did not play significant role in challenged actions. Little Earth of United Tribes, Inc. v. U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, D.C.Minn.1983, 584 F.Supp. 1292. Civil Rights 1327

980. Department of Veterans Affairs, particular persons under color of law

No action under this section lay against the Veterans Administration because of its denial of service connected disability benefits, since the agency did not act under color of state law. Osorio v. Veterans Administration, D.C.Puerto Rico 1981, 514 F.Supp. 94, affirmed 676 F.2d 681. Civil Rights 1327

981. Detectives, particular persons under color of law

Detective as agent of company was acting "under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any state" within meaning of this section when alleged constitutional deprivations occurred in form of petitioner's arrest by detective under Professional Thieves Act, 18 P.S.Pa. § 4821. DeCarlo v. Joseph Horne & Co., W.D.Pa.1966, 251 F.Supp. 935. Civil Rights 1326(9)

982. Dispatcher, particular persons under color of law

Involvement of city's emergency medical services (EMS) dispatcher prior to patient's civil commitment at private hospital licensed by State of New York to provide psychiatric services did not convert her commitment into state action under § 1983; sole role played by EMS dispatcher in events leading to patient's commitment was to contact hospital in response to patient's call, and there was no allegation that the dispatcher's decision to contact hospital as opposed to any other hospital, public or private, was in any way connected to a diagnosis of patient's mental health. Doe v. Harrison, S.D.N.Y.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 338. Civil Rights 1326(9)

983. Drug rehabilitation centers, particular persons under color of law

No state action was involved in dismissal of plaintiff by private, nonprofit corporation involved in treatment of drug addiction, where decision was made by corporation's officials, who were private individuals not acting under any compulsion of state regulation, notwithstanding facts that treating individuals with drug problems serves the public and that corporation received county, state and federal funding. Greene v. McMillan, N.D.Ohio 1983, 573 F.Supp. 632. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Attorney advocacy groups were not state actors for purposes of §§1983. Cicchini v. Blackwell, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 187, 2005 WL 673479, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

984. Alcoholic rehabilitation centers, particular persons under color of law

Alcohol rehabilitation center and individual employees could not be liable for alleged violations of patient's civil rights concerning treatment provided to patient, absent any evidence that center or employees acted under color of state law; although city used center and center received most of its funding from state, no evidence indicated that state controlled how and under what circumstances treatment would be administered by center. Scout v. City of Gordon, D.Neb.1994, 849 F.Supp. 687. Civil Rights 1326(7)

985. Election officials, particular persons under color of law

Voters who were precluded from voting in island school board election, after Board of Elections for Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands implemented voter challenge procedures that treated members of two political parties differently, stated § 1983 claims against board members in their individual capacities when voters alleged that board members, "not as individuals, but under the color and presence of the statute and regulations of the Commonwealth and under the authority of their office as individual members of the Board in the Commonwealth" violated their constitutional rights. Charfauros v. Board of Elections, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)2001, 249 F.3d 941, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

Recall committee defendants were not state actors within the meaning of §§ 1983, for purposes of former elected trustee's §§ 1983 claim that recall election, allegedly based on trustee's refusal to recite the Pledge of Allegiance at meetings of the town board of trustees, violated his rights under the First Amendment; although the committee defendants did invoke Colorado recall election law, no evidence suggested that the committee defendants worked with or received aid from town or were otherwise considered state actors. Habecker v. Town of Estes Park, Colorado, D.Colo.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 1113. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Since statutory scheme existing in New York for election and subsequent certification of presidential electors expressly provides for certification by the Secretary of State and governor's confirming signature, ministerial act of certifying presidential electors was performed pursuant to state authority and thus state action requirement was met in action alleging that state officials, acting under color of state law, committed fraudulent acts in conduct of voter registration and subsequent general presidential election and that ballots cast by legitimate voters were debased and diluted by illegal votes. Donohue v. Board of Elections of State of N. Y., E.D.N.Y.1976, 435 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Where certification of winner of New York election to office of United States senator was pursuant to federal, not state, law, state officials were not acting pursuant to state law within purview of this section. Phillips v. Rockefeller, S.D.N.Y.1970, 321 F.Supp. 516, affirmed 435 F.2d 976. Civil Rights 1327

986. Employers, particular persons under color of law

An administrator of an organization running a head start program was not acting under color of state law when he terminated an employee, so as to allow the employee to sue the organization under § 1983, even though the organization was heavily regulated by the state; the employee failed to show the existence of a nexus between the state and her discharge sufficient to allow the discharge to be deemed an act of the state. Dowe v. Total Action Against Poverty in Roanoke Valley, C.A.4 (Va.) 1998, 145 F.3d 653. Civil Rights 1326(11)

There was no principled basis for attributing state action to employer who had investigated threatening phone calls made to supervisor and turned over information to police who later arrested employee for purposes of § 1983 action against employer; officers who applied for arrest warrant independently exercised reasonable profession judgment in applying for warrant, magistrate judge acted autonomously and within the range of her judicial competence in issuing arrest warrant, and district attorney acted autonomously in prosecuting case. Roche v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1996, 81 F.3d 249. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Participation of defendant employer in arrest of plaintiff employee was not actionable under this section where defendant did nothing more than supply information to police officers, who then acted on their own initiative in arresting plaintiff, and did not, therefore, deprive plaintiff of any right under color of state law. Butler v. Goldblatt Bros., Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1978, 589 F.2d 323, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 82, 444 U.S. 841, 62 L.Ed.2d 53. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Private employer's discharge of supervisory employees because of their union membership involved no state action and thus, provided no grounds for recovery under this section. Rodriguez v. Conagra, Inc., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 527 F.2d 540. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Employment discrimination plaintiff had no §§ 1983 claim against private corporate employer that was not acting under color of any state law when it allegedly violated her "civil rights." McCreary v. Vaughan-Bassett Furniture Co., Inc., M.D.N.C.2005, 412 F.Supp.2d 535, report and recommendation adopted. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Former law firm employee failed to state § 1983 claim against senior partner of law firm who allegedly sexually harassed her, where she did not allege any state action or that senior partner was state actor. Yaba v. Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, S.D.N.Y.1996, 931 F.Supp. 271. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Supervisor's alleged illegal actions against employee, which were taken within line and scope of his employment, were not committed as state employer, as required for employee to maintain § 1983 civil rights action against supervisor; employer was not affiliated in any way with state. Lynn v. United Technologies Corp., Inc., M.D.Ala.1996, 916 F.Supp. 1217. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Employee's claim, that employer's managers circulated and discussed, and aided and assisted consumer reporting agencies in distributing, erroneous consumer report relating to employee, did not state cognizable claim for violation of § 1983, absent allegation of state action. Wiggins v. Hitchens, D.D.C.1994, 853 F.Supp. 505. Civil Rights 1396

Employers could not be held liable in civil rights action under § 1983 for termination of employee where business was private entity which did not act under color of state law. Olsen v. Lane, M.D.Fla.1993, 832 F.Supp. 1525. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private employer and its agents who had no association or special relationship with state could not be regarded as "state actors" against whom § 1983 claim could be asserted. Flagg v. Control Data, E.D.Pa.1992, 806 F.Supp. 1218, affirmed 998 F.2d 1002, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 710, 510 U.S. 1052, 126 L.Ed.2d 676. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Employer was not transformed into state actor, as required to support employee's claims of constitutional torts and civil rights violations, by requiring employee to submit to drug test; federal Government's encouragement of compliance with Drug Free Workplace Act did not transform activity into state action. Mares v. Conagra Poultry Co., Inc., D.Colo.1991, 773 F.Supp. 248, affirmed 971 F.2d 492. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(11)

Employee's failure to allege that her employer acted in any respect other than as wholly private actor was fatal to employee's § 1983 claim. Gray v. Toshiba America Consumer Products, Inc., M.D.Tenn.1997, 959 F.Supp. 805. Civil Rights 1396

987. Engineers, particular persons under color of law

Allegations that private structural engineering firm and one of its engineers, employed by county in connection with public construction project, were intimately involved in county commissioners' administration of project, that engineer participated in county commissioners' meeting at which government contractor announced problem with county's specifications for project and his intent to publicize them, and that engineer participated in meeting at which commissioners decided to terminate government contractor's contract sufficiently established that engineering firm and its engineer acted under color of state law for purposes of civil rights suit. Skepton v. Bucks County, Pa., E.D.Pa.1986, 628 F.Supp. 177. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Inasmuch as malapportioned divisions were created by state engineer acting under state law, and divisions had been maintained by board of directors also purporting to act under state law, action challenging malapportionment was within this section. Salyer Land Co. v. Tulare Lake Basin Water Storage Dist., E.D.Cal.1972, 342 F.Supp. 144, probable jurisdiction noted 92 S.Ct. 2496, 408 U.S. 920, 33 L.Ed.2d 331, affirmed 93 S.Ct. 1224, 410 U.S. 719, 35 L.Ed.2d 659. Civil Rights 1326(1)

988. Family members, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Family members who sought to have conservator appointed did not engage in state action under a joint action theory by petitioning for appointment of conservator where judge who made appointment did not allow family members to substitute their judgment for his own. Smith v. Wood, E.D.Pa.1986, 649 F.Supp. 901. Civil Rights 1326(9)

989. ---- Foster parents, family members, particular persons under color of law

Pennsylvania's comprehensive regulation of foster care, and funding of that care together with its counties, did not establish a sufficiently close nexus between foster parents and Pennsylvania to result in foster parents' decisions being deemed to be the Commonwealth's so as to make them state actors for purposes of foster child's §§1983 action against them alleging deprivation of Fourteenth Amendment right to be free from physical harm. Leshko v. Servis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 423 F.3d 337. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Foster parents were not state actors who could be held liable under civil rights statute for violation of substantive due process rights of two foster children arising from alleged child abuse; although State's regulation of foster parenting arguably placed it in symbiotic relationship with foster parents for purposes of nexus/joint action test for state actors, relationship forbade rather than encouraged child abuse, and State's extension of Torts Claim Act to foster parents did not make it joint venturer with foster parents in effecting conduct underlying complaint. Rayburn ex rel. Rayburn v. Hogue, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2001, 241 F.3d 1341. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Foster mother in whose care child had died was not rendered state actor by fact that state statutes and regulations created and governed foster care, by state's reimbursement of foster parents' expenses, or by fact that state agency had placed child in foster mother's home, and thus natural mother had no § 1983 cause of action against foster mother; showing of state's joint participation in abuse of child, or entwinement of abusive conduct with that of state actors, was required. Marr ex rel. Marr v. Schofield, D.Me.2004, 307 F.Supp.2d 130. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Foster parents were not "state actors" for purposes of § 1983 under the public function test, the state compulsion test, or the symbiotic relationship test; sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action was lacking even though foster parents were required to be licensed and received reimbursement from state. Lintz v. Skipski, W.D.Mich.1992, 807 F.Supp. 1299, reconsideration denied 815 F.Supp. 1066, affirmed 25 F.3d 304, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 485, 513 U.S. 988, 130 L.Ed.2d 397. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Foster parents do not act under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 claim. McCrum v. Elkhart County Dept. of Public Welfare, N.D.Ind.1992, 806 F.Supp. 203, reconsideration granted. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Foster parents who allegedly abused plaintiffs' children were not "state actors" for purpose of § 1983. Pfoltzer v. County of Fairfax, E.D.Va.1991, 775 F.Supp. 874, affirmed 966 F.2d 1443. Civil Rights 1326(1)

990. ---- Parents, family members, particular persons under color of law

Divorced father who was trying to see that his son received proper medical attention was not engaged in state action and was not liable to mother under this section for damages for emotional distress suffered by mother when she was temporarily denied custody of child. Harley v. Oliver, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1976, 539 F.2d 1143. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Father did not state § 1983 cause of action against mother, in connection with custody dispute, as he had failed to show mother acting "under color of state law"; claims that mother was carrying out custody orders of various state court judges was insufficient. Snyder v. Talbot, D.Me.1993, 836 F.Supp. 26. Civil Rights 1326(9)

991. ---- Spouses, family members, particular persons under color of law

Ex-husband's complaint contained sufficient allegations of concerted action with state officials to support claim against ex-wife under § 1983, despite ex-wife's status as private party, based on allegations depicting joint action by ex-wife and constable in effectuating recovery of vehicle in ex-husband's possession; complaint alleged, inter alia, that county constable acted "at the instance and request" of ex-wife in assisting her to seize vehicle, and that ex-wife was thus "acting under color of state law" for purposes of the lawsuit. Abbott v. Latshaw, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1998, 164 F.3d 141, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 2393, 527 U.S. 1035, 144 L.Ed.2d 794. Civil Rights 1396

Plaintiff's wife did not qualify as "state actor," and, thus, viable claim could not be established against wife under federal civil rights statute with regard to violation of plaintiff's due process rights upon service and execution of civil protection order (CPO), even though wife utilized Ohio statute in seeking CPO. Kelm v. Hyatt, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 44 F.3d 415. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Wife of sheriff of small Colorado county did not act under color of law for purpose of liability under this section when she struck plaintiff, who along with another had entered back seat of patrol car and began to fight, where wife had merely accompanied husband on his rounds and had no official capacity and incident occurred when the sheriff happened on a street brawl and attempted to quell it. Price v. Baker, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1982, 693 F.2d 952. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Husband and his attorney in state court child custody proceeding did not act under color of state law for purposes of civil rights action against them for allegedly jointly engaging in conspiracy with state officials to deprive mother and daughter of their civil rights; mother was not able to demonstrate that she was wrongfully deprived of physical custody of her daughter, since she still had opportunity to be heard in pending state trial court proceeding, and mother and daughter did not allege single plan, that alleged co-conspirators shared in general conspiratorial objective, or that overt act was committed in furtherance of conspiracy that caused injury to them, as required for conspiracy. Offutt v. Kaplan, N.D.Ill.1995, 884 F.Supp. 1179. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(10)

Former wife's participation in state divorce proceeding was wholly insufficient to meet state action requirement of § 1983. Larsen v. Larsen, D.Utah 1987, 671 F.Supp. 718, affirmed 871 F.2d 1095, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 135, 493 U.S. 844, 107 L.Ed.2d 94. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Former wife's participation in Washington State court litigation and her current custody of son pursuant to the Washington court's order did not constitute action taken "under color of state law" for purpose of former husband's cause of action under this section arising from inconsistent child custody decrees entered by Florida and Washington State courts. McDougald v. Jenson, N.D.Fla.1984, 596 F.Supp. 680, affirmed 786 F.2d 1465, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 207, 479 U.S. 860, 93 L.Ed.2d 137, rehearing denied 107 S.Ct. 614, 479 U.S. 1001, 93 L.Ed.2d 611. Civil Rights 1326(9)

992. Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, particular persons under color of law

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, whose sole power and authority is by virtue of federal legislation, cannot act under color of state law and therefore is not subject to suit under this section. Jones v. Citizens and Southern Nat. Bank of S. C., D.C.S.C.1967, 262 F.Supp. 506. Civil Rights 1327

993. Federal government, particular persons under color of law

This section does not apply to actions of federal government. Rodriguez v. Ritchey, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 556 F.2d 1185, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 894, 434 U.S. 1047, 54 L.Ed.2d 799. Civil Rights 1362

Actions involving only federal government are beyond scope of this section. Rodriguez v. Conagra, Inc., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 527 F.2d 540. Civil Rights 1327

Section 1983 does not apply to action of federal government or its officers. Murray v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, E.D.N.Y.1993, 821 F.Supp. 94, affirmed 14 F.3d 591. Civil Rights 1362

Actions of the federal government or its officers acting under color of federal law are exempt from proscriptions of this section prohibiting deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Powell v. Kopman, S.D.N.Y.1981, 511 F.Supp. 700. Civil Rights 1327

This section creating a federal cause of action against person whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another does not apply to the federal government. Etheridge v. Schlesinger, E.D.Va.1973, 362 F.Supp. 198. Civil Rights 1362

994. Federal Home Loan Banks, particular persons under color of law

No jurisdiction over federal home loan bank existed under this section, relative to civil rights complaint filed by discharged bank teller, since federal home loan banks have been defined as "federal instrumentalities" and, accordingly, there could be no "state action." Vazquez v. Bayamon Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n of Puerto Rico, D.C.Puerto Rico 1980, 506 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1327

995. Federal officials, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Section 1983 provides remedy only for deprivation of constitutional rights by person acting under color of law of any state or territory or District of Columbia, and not for deprivation of rights by federal officials acting under color of federal law. Daly-Murphy v. Winston, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 837 F.2d 348. Civil Rights 1327

This section covers only deprivations of rights under color of state law, and individual defendants who were federal officials, acting under color of federal law rather than state law, were not subject to suit under this section. Broadway v. Block, C.A.5 (La.) 1982, 694 F.2d 979. Civil Rights 1327

When federal officials are engaged in a conspiracy with state officials to deprive constitutional rights, state officials provide requisite state action to make entire conspiracy actionable under this section. Hampton v. Hanrahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1979, 600 F.2d 600, certiorari granted in pt.,judgment reversed in pt. on other grounds 100 S.Ct. 1987, 446 U.S. 754, 64 L.Ed.2d 670, rehearing denied 101 S.Ct. 33, 448 U.S. 913, 65 L.Ed.2d 1176, rehearing denied 101 S.Ct. 33, 448 U.S. 913, 65 L.Ed.2d 1177, on remand 499 F.Supp. 640, on remand 522 F.Supp. 140. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

This section does not apply to federal officers acting under color of federal law. Campbell v. Amax Coal Co., C.A.10(Wyo.) 1979, 610 F.2d 701. Soldevila v. Secretary of Agriculture of U. S., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1975, 512 F.2d 427.

Violations of federal civil rights by federal officers will not give rise to cause of action under this section providing cause of action for persons deprived of their federal civil rights under color of state law. Robison v. Wichita Falls & North Texas Community Action Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 507 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1327

Suit will not lie under this section against federal official acting under color of federal law. Roots v. Callahan, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1973, 475 F.2d 751. Civil Rights 1327

This section does not apply to federal officers. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 456 F.2d 1339. See, also, Black v. U.S., D.C.N.Y.1975, 388 F.Supp. 805, affirmed 534 F.2d 524; Casey v. Ciccone, D.C.Mo.1969, 306 F.Supp. 698; Swanson v. Willis, D.C.Alaska 1953, 114 F.Supp. 434.

This section rendering liable persons who deprive others of civil rights acting "under color of any statute" of "any state" reaches state action only and does not provide basis for suit against federal officials. Savage v. U. S., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1971, 450 F.2d 449, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1327, 405 U.S. 1043, 31 L.Ed.2d 585, rehearing denied 92 S.Ct. 2048, 406 U.S. 951, 32 L.Ed.2d 339. Civil Rights 1327

Section 1983 does not provide cause of action against federal officials acting under color of federal law. Lartey v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, W.D.La.1992, 790 F.Supp. 130. Civil Rights 1327

996. ---- Bureau of Prisons, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Though prisoner, who was sentenced as a young adult offender under Youth Corrections Act, § 5005 et seq. of Title 18, and who contended that government failed to provide him treatment and segregation required by Act, did not have private cause of action under this section because defendants, consisting of United States Bureau of Prisons Director and prison warden, were federal officials, prisoner did have cause of action and damages remedy which could be implied directly under Constitution because due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5 was violated by reason of liberty interest created in § 5011 of Title 18 governing segregation and treatment of committed youth offenders. Micklus v. Carlson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 632 F.2d 227. Prisons 10

Inmate's claims against federal prison officials, who allegedly violated his civil rights during his incarceration, involved claims against federal employees or entities from whom inmate was not entitled to relief under § 1983; inmate alleged that officials acted under color of federal law by violating his rights under the First, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments. Khan v. U.S., E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 409. Civil Rights 1327

997. ---- Drug Enforcement Administration, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

In an action for damages brought against the United States and its agents arising out of an incident that occurred when federal agents and state police members of a federal narcotics task force stopped the plaintiff in his automobile on a public street, allegedly in the mistaken belief that he was a known fugitive, plaintiffs' fourth and eighth causes of action, asserting claims under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section, had to be dismissed as against the individual federal defendants because applicable only to the state and to state action. Ricca v. U. S., E.D.N.Y.1980, 488 F.Supp. 1317. Federal Civil Procedure 1750

998. ---- Federal Bureau of Investigation, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Agents of Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) were not acting under color of state law, precluding suit by estate of murder victim against United States under §§ 1983, when they did not follow up on telephone call from alleged bank robber, expressing wish to turn himself in, and caller committed homicide on following day. McCloskey v. Mueller, D.Mass.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 74, affirmed 446 F.3d 262. Civil Rights 1327

There could be no redress in the form of civil damages against special agent of Federal Bureau of Investigation under this section, or even under common law of torts. U. S. ex rel. Brzozowski v. Randall, E.D.Pa.1968, 281 F.Supp. 306.

999. ---- Federal Communications Commission, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Even if California officials may have violated pastor's rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 in course of their investigation of church's television and radio stations, mere fact that they may have shared with employees of Federal Communications Commission information unlawfully procured did not mean that Commission employees acted "under color of state law" to deprive pastor of his rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1. Scott v. Rosenberg, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1983, 702 F.2d 1263, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 1439, 465 U.S. 1078, 79 L.Ed.2d 760.

1000. ---- Internal Revenue Service, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Taxpayer had no cause of action against Internal Revenue Service under this section which allows party to bring civil action for constitutional deprivations against persons acting under color of state law since Service is federal agency and its agents performed no acts under color of state law. Stonecipher v. Bray, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1981, 653 F.2d 398, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1006, 454 U.S. 1145, 71 L.Ed.2d 297. Civil Rights 1327

Officials of Internal Revenue Service could not be held liable under this section allowing a plaintiff to redress the deprivation of civil rights by authorities who act under color of state law since the claimed deprivation occurred while federal officials were acting under color of federal law. Seibert v. Baptist, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1979, 594 F.2d 423, on rehearing 599 F.2d 743, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1851, 446 U.S. 918, 64 L.Ed.2d 271, rehearing denied 100 S.Ct. 3030, 447 U.S. 930, 65 L.Ed.2d 1125. Civil Rights 1327; Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Internal revenue agents who, pursuant to § 6331 of Title 26 caused levy to be placed on taxpayer's bank account to collect penalty for late payment of federal employment taxes and private bank employees who obeyed the federal law assisting in the levy were not acting "under color of state law" and thus were not subject to suit for deprivation of civil rights while acting under color of state law. Kotmair v. Gray, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 505 F.2d 744. Civil Rights 1327

Internal Revenue Service employee was not acting under color of state law when he provided tax return information to state officials, so that no civil rights claim could be maintained against him. Smith v. U.S., C.D.Ill.1989, 723 F.Supp. 1300, affirmed 964 F.2d 630, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1015, 506 U.S. 1067, 122 L.Ed.2d 162. Civil Rights 1327

1001. ---- Justice Department, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Officials of United States Department of Justice who were acting under color of federal law could not be liable under this section. Norton v. McShane, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1964, 332 F.2d 855, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 1345, 380 U.S. 981, 14 L.Ed.2d 274.

This section is not a proper basis on which to assert a cause of action for an alleged civil rights violation perpetrated under color of federal law and, hence, this section provided no right of action against federal agents for violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 rights resulting from alleged warrantless seizure of books and records. J.D. Pflaumer, Inc. v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, E.D.Pa.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1125.

1002. ---- Police, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Officer employed by United States Government Printing Office did not act under color of District of Columbia law when he made arrest for violation of District statute proscribing disorderly conduct, and thus could not be held liable to arrestee under §§ 1983; officer's power to make arrest came solely from federal law, which gave him concurrent jurisdiction with local police. Williams v. U.S., C.A.D.C.2005, 396 F.3d 412, 364 U.S.App.D.C. 382. Civil Rights 1327

Allegations that United States Marshal for District of Columbia Superior Court acted jointly with District officials in policing the conduct of protestors and that Marshal and his deputies derived their authority over protesters from cooperative agreements with the District were sufficient to allege that Marshal was a state actor for purpose of §§ 1983 claims brought by protestors, who were arrested and allegedly unlawfully strip searched. Bame v. Clark, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3591924. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations that former U.S. Marshal and the District of Columbia acted in concert with the purpose of executing a jointly developed unconstitutional policy of strip searching all female but not male pre-presentment arrestees without individualized suspicion stated claim that marshal was "state actor" for purpose of arrestees' §§ 1983 claim against former marshal. Johnson v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 48. Civil Rights 1327

Neither the National Institutes of Health Police Department (NIHPD), a federal entity, nor an NIHPD detective were acting pursuant to state or local law when executing arrest warrant for crimes committed against the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and, thus, neither could be liable therefor under §§ 1983. Jones v. National Institutes of Health Police Dept., D.D.C.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 1. Civil Rights 1327

United States park police officer was not acting under color of District of Columbia law when he took arrestee into custody for trespassing on restricted park property, though officer might have relied on District of Columbia criminal provisions in effecting arrest pursuant to Assimilative Crimes Act; Act served to transform District of Columbia law into federal law, so that arrest was clearly made under color of federal law. Richardson v. U.S. Dept. of Interior, D.D.C.1990, 740 F.Supp. 15. Civil Rights 1327

Since this section applies to officers acting under color of state law, not federal law, this section did not give plaintiffs, who alleged that they were assaulted and falsely arrested and imprisoned, a cause of action against individual members of national airport police force. Davidson v. Kane, E.D.Va.1972, 337 F.Supp. 922. Civil Rights 1327

1003. ---- Postal Service, federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Alleged acts of federal postal inspectors in connection with investigation which resulted in arrest of plaintiff failed to make out federal cause of action for violation of this section. Sopp v. Gehrlein, W.D.Pa.1964, 236 F.Supp. 823. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1004. ---- Miscellaneous federal officials, particular persons under color of law

Secretary of Health and Human Services did not act under color of state law in implementing regulations governing states' collection of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) overpayments, although AFDC program was based on scheme of "cooperative federalism," and AFDC recipients who challenged regulations thus could not establish claim under § 1983 and were not entitled to award of attorney's fees under civil rights statute and Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA); Secretary did not exercise state authority and did not conspire with state officials to deprive recipients of their rights. Strickland on Behalf of Strickland v. Shalala, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 123 F.3d 863. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1479; United States 147(11.1)

Agent could not have acted under color of state law, within this section, at place which was outside his jurisdiction as municipal police officer, and his actions were necessarily taken pursuant to federal authority, in view of his assignment to federal agency. Askew v. Bloemker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 548 F.2d 673. Civil Rights 1327

Where, at time they allegedly conspired to violate plaintiff's civil and constitutional rights by using perjured testimony to obtain his conviction and by seizing certain property in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 defendants were federal officers acting under color of federal law, plaintiff did not have a cause of action for damages under this section. Bethea v. Reid, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1971, 445 F.2d 1163, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 747, 404 U.S. 1061, 30 L.Ed.2d 749. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Secretary of federal Department of Transportation (DOT), and Division Administrator for Alabama Division of Federal Highway Administration (FHA) whose role in selection of consultants was limited to projects receiving federal funding, were not acting under color of state or local law, and thus, were not subject to liability in federal civil rights action brought by operator of surveying company who alleged that he been discriminated against based on his race and had been deprived of equal opportunity in contracting with Alabama Department of Transportation (DOT). Wright v. Butts, M.D.Ala.1996, 953 F.Supp. 1343. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(2)

Employee of Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) was not a state actor, for purposes of § 1983 claim, when he allegedly acted to further conspiracy to have tenants bring false sexual harassment claims against landlord; any actions he took would have been in his official capacity as HUD investigator, which made him a federal rather than state actor. Shuttlesworth v. Housing Opportunities Made Equal, S.D.Ohio 1994, 873 F.Supp. 1069. Civil Rights 1327

Federal agents were "acting under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983 when they effected search and arrest of federal employee pursuant to capias issued under state law, to enforce decision of state court; it was not necessary that there be some conspiracy with state officials. Terrell v. Petrie, E.D.Va.1991, 763 F.Supp. 1342, affirmed 952 F.2d 397. Civil Rights 1327

Antinuclear demonstrators had no action under § 1983 for alleged conspiracy involving private parties and federal officers; involvement of state or local officials was required to state § 1983 claim. Thomas v. News World Communications, D.D.C.1988, 681 F.Supp. 55. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

1005. Finance companies, particular persons under color of law

Finance company which repossessed debtor's pickup truck upon debtor's default under security agreement did not act under color of state law for purposes of invoking this section nor was there "state action" within meaning of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 where the finance company was not a governmental agency and did not invoke state powers and processors. Kinch v. Chrysler Credit Corp., E.D.Tenn.1973, 367 F.Supp. 436. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1006. Fire departments, particular persons under color of law

Volunteer fire department was not a "state actor" for purposes of § 1983 action against it for dismissal of members in violation of their civil rights; volunteer department was not carrying on strictly public function, nor was there symbiotic relationship between city and association sufficient to make association actions those of city. Yeager v. City of McGregor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 980 F.2d 337, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 79, 510 U.S. 821, 126 L.Ed.2d 47. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Although town took no active part in disciplinary proceedings of volunteer fire department, actions of department in dismissing fireman constituted "state action" and could not offend U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 because of exclusively governmental nature of function performed by volunteer fire department. Janusaitis v. Middlebury Volunteer Fire Dept., C.A.2 (Conn.) 1979, 607 F.2d 17. Civil Rights 1326(11); Constitutional Law 82(5)

For purposes of § 1983 claim, volunteer fire company's governmental function of fire protection was "state action," even if company was private, not-for-profit corporation. Gibson v. Hurleyville Fire Co. No. 1, S.D.N.Y.1998, 1 F.Supp.2d 329. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Volunteer fire department was "state actor" that could be subject to § 1983 liability for allegedly disciplining, suspending and discharging employee in violation of his First Amendment rights; department was subject to extensive regulation by state, received substantial public funding, performed public function that was historically prerogative of state and often within province of state, and was state actor under two Maryland statutes which confer inherently sovereign powers upon volunteer firefighters. Goldstein v. Chestnut Ridge Volunteer Fire Co., D.Md.1997, 984 F.Supp. 367, affirmed 218 F.3d 337, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 882, 531 U.S. 1126, 148 L.Ed.2d 790, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1096, 531 U.S. 1152, 148 L.Ed.2d 969. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Volunteer fire company was "state actor" for purposes of § 1983 claim brought by member who claimed that company's ban or expulsion of him violated his constitutional rights; under New Jersey law, provision of firefighting was governmental function, volunteer fire companies were treated as public entities, borough had significant control over company's membership and activities, and borough provided financial resources and owned fire trucks. Eggert v. Tuckerton Volunteer Fire Co. No. 1, D.N.J.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1230. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1007. Foundations, particular persons under color of law

Where condition of parole required parolee to attend alcohol and drug rehabilitation foundation, where condition was between parolee and state, not state and foundation, where foundation was not required to accept parolee into its program and, if it did so, it did so on its own terms, not that of the state, where foundation did not have power unilaterally to revoke parole, and where only possible connection between state and foundation was the parole condition, there was no action by foundation under color of state law, for purposes of this section and thus complaint alleging that foundation converted parolee's personal property and money under color of state law and in violation of his constitutional rights failed to state cause of action. Tilbe v. Entitas Foundation, Inc., D.C.Nev.1980, 499 F.Supp. 817. Civil Rights 1396

1008. Garbage collectors, particular persons under color of law

City's refusal to collect garbage from black homeowner who continued to leave garbage on street that had been abandoned by city and become private property, instead of leaving it at either of two other locations that also provided access to her property, was not racially motivated discrimination in supply of city services as would support her § 1983 action against city; derogatory racial remarks made to homeowner when she requested that her garbage be collected at site on abandoned street did not establish racial motivation for refusal to collect garbage in light of city's lack of authority to enter private property to collect homeowner's garbage, and homeowner's failure to show that initial decision to abandon street was motivated by discriminatory intent, and homeowner did not show existence of policy or custom on part of city of discrimination against black people in supply of city services. Crenshaw v. City of Defuniak Springs, N.D.Fla.1995, 891 F.Supp. 1548. Civil Rights 1052

1009. Guardians, particular persons under color of law

A guardian ad litem is not acting under color of state law for purposes of § 1983. Meeker v. Kercher, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1986, 782 F.2d 153. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Guardian appointed by state of North Carolina as fiduciary for young, incompetent adult, who, from birth, had been ward of state or of guardian appointed by state was "state actor" under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 where his authority was right or privilege created by state, guardian had custody of ward and guardian acted together with or obtained significant aid from state officials. Thomas S. v. Morrow, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1986, 781 F.2d 367, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1992, 476 U.S. 1124, 90 L.Ed.2d 673, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 235, 479 U.S. 869, 93 L.Ed.2d 161. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Parents failed to meet state actor requirement, in their action seeking reestablishment of patient's artificial life support, for §§ 1983 claim under Free Exercise Clause and claim under Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), inasmuch as defendants, namely hospice and daughter's guardian, were not state actors, and fact that claims were adjudicated by state court judge did not provide requisite state action. Schiavo ex rel. Schindler v. Schiavo, M.D.Fla.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 1378, affirmed 403 F.3d 1223, rehearing en banc denied 403 F.3d 1261, stay denied 125 S.Ct. 1692, 544 U.S. 945, 161 L.Ed.2d 518. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Guardian ad litem, appointed by state juvenile court for child who reported that she had been sexually abused by stepfather, was not acting under color of state law, on § 1983 substantive due process failure to protect claim by administrator of child's estate; guardian performed traditional lawyer functions before the juvenile court. Sophapmysay v. City of Sergeant Bluff, Iowa, N.D.Iowa 2002, 218 F.Supp.2d 1027. Civil Rights 1326(1); Civil Rights 1326(10)

State public defender who allegedly failed to perform duties as guardian ad litem for child who testified against her stepfather in sexual abuse trial was acting under "color of state law," subjecting her to liability in § 1983 action brought after stepfather murdered child, which alleged failure to protect child in violation of due process clause. Sophapmysay v. City of Sergeant Bluff, N.D.Iowa 2000, 126 F.Supp.2d 1180. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Inmate's limited guardian did not act under color of state law in consenting to forcible administration of medication to inmate, and guardian thus could not be held liable under § 1983; guardian was appointed solely for purpose of consent to medication, consent to medication was not power traditionally exclusively reserved to state, state exercised no coercive power over guardian's independent judgment, and state was not intimately involved in guardian's conduct. Holley v. Deal, M.D.Tenn.1996, 948 F.Supp. 711. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Father bringing § 1983 civil rights action against mother and others, alleging deprivation of civil rights in connection with custody dispute, could not claim that "state action" requirement was satisfied by alleged conspiracy between defendants and guardian ad litem for child; although appointed by court, guardian ad litem's responsibilities were to advance best interest of child, and not to enforce any state mandate regarding child. Snyder v. Talbot, D.Me.1993, 836 F.Supp. 19. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1010. Hospitals, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Allegations by parents of infant born with severe brain damage that the hospital where infant was born operated pursuant to licensing and authority of state and federal governments, and that hospital and hospital social worker were acting under color of state law at the time of the alleged constitutional violations, were insufficient to establish that hospital and social worker were state actors at the time of the alleged constitutional violations, as required to state §§ 1983 claim. Kottmyer v. Maas, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 436 F.3d 684, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1396

Hospital which was owned and administered by private corporation was not a "state actor" under § 1983 when hospital and its employees tested newborn child's urine for methadone, held and treated child for possible methadone withdrawal when urine tested positive and medically cleared child after negative confirmatory test, but thereafter, hospital was state actor when it informed Child Welfare Administration (CWA) of new test result and held child pending CWA's response. Kia P. v. McIntyre, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 235 F.3d 749, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 51, 534 U.S. 820, 151 L.Ed.2d 21. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Mentally retarded woman and her husband stated claim under § 1983 against woman's parents, hospital, and physicians when she alleged that they participated in her nonconsensual sterilization, given allegations, in support of state action element of claim, that hospital was organized and existed under state law, was licensed by appropriate state agencies, receiving federal funding and favorable tax treatment, was built on land conveyed by local government and shared profits with local government, routinely accepted social security income payments for sterilization of mentally retarded individuals during relevant period, was, in relevant period, governed by board selected by local government, and, at relevant time, operated under board's policy by which board condoned and advanced woman's sterilization. Lake v. Arnold, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 112 F.3d 682, as amended. Civil Rights 1396

Under state compulsion test, nexus test, and public function test, private hospital and private physicians who admit mentally ill person pursuant to Tennessee involuntary commitment statute are not state actors and thus are not subject to suit under federal civil rights statute. Ellison v. Garbarino, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1995, 48 F.3d 192. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Hospital was not a "state actor" for purposes of § 1983 claim, and could not be considered as such solely because it received medicare and medicaid funds and was subject to state regulation. Wheat v. Mass, C.A.5 (La.) 1993, 994 F.2d 273, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Registered nurse's firing by private nonprofit health services corporation which operated hospital pursuant to lease agreement with public hospital authority was not "state action" for purposes of nurse's § 1983 action under "nexus/joint action test," even though lease required corporation to serve general public, including indigent patients, and to provide county auditor with financial report; lease relieved authority of all liabilities, gave corporation sole discretion to hire and fire employees, provided that corporation was governing body of hospital and its medical staff, mandated that corporation maintain and repair leased property at its own expense, required corporation to maintain insurance, conferred upon corporation authority to make and enforce rules, and demanded that corporation hold authority harmless, and corporation and authority were separate and distinct entities under state law. Willis v. University Health Services, Inc., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1993, 993 F.2d 837, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 468, 510 U.S. 976, 126 L.Ed.2d 420. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private mental hospital was not state actor, for purposes of patient's allegation that she was victim of conspiracy to commit her to the institution, on basis that commitment process was traditional public function; involuntary commitment in Georgia is not function so reserved to state that action under commitment statute transforms private actor into "state actor." Harvey v. Harvey, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 949 F.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Termination of radiology technician at public county hospital by supervisor of health care corporation that contracted to provide hospital management services constituted state action, for purposes of federal civil rights action. Carnes v. Parker, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1506. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private hospitals, which were distinct and separate entities from state university, were not state actors for §§ 1983 purposes under the symbiotic relationship or close nexus test. Untracht v. Fikri, W.D.Pa.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 289. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private hospital which provided emergency medical services to prisoner was not a "state actor" for purposes of §§ 1983, where hospital did not voluntarily assume function of the state by accepting correctional facility's delegation of its duty to provide emergency medical care to prisoner, and hospital did not impliedly contract with correctional facility to provide emergency medical services when it treated prisoner, given that it was federally mandated to do so by the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act (EMTALA). Sykes v. McPhillips, N.D.N.Y.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 197. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private hospital was not a state actor for §§ 1983 purposes with respect to its alleged policy of charging disparate rates for uninsured patients; hospital's billing practices for uninsured patients were not compelled by the government, but only were based upon "perceived requirements" of federal and state laws, hospital was not performing a function that was traditionally the exclusive province of the government, and the regulations and subsidies related to health care were insufficient to create the necessary "symbiotic relationship" to make hospital a state actor. Sabeta v. Baptist Hosp. of Miami, Inc., S.D.Fla.2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 1224. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Hospital, which treated plaintiff's wife, and wife's insurer were purely private entities, such that plaintiff failed to establish that he was deprived, under color of state law, of any right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States, as required in his § 1983 action. Estate of Williams- Moore v. Alliance One Receivables Management, Inc., M.D.N.C.2004, 335 F.Supp.2d 636. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Hospital did not act under color of state law, as required for § 1983 liability, in providing an allegedly untimely response to an information request from the Kentucky State Medical Board (KSMB) about a psychiatrist, or in submitting allegedly defamatory information to the Alaska State Medical Board (ASMB); it was not shown how the State-mandated peer review process implicated the hospital's actions, State law immunities for conduct undertaken in connection with the peer review process did not establish state action, and hospital did not exercise powers traditionally the exclusive prerogative of the State. Croy v. A.O. Fox Memorial Hosp., N.D.N.Y.1999, 68 F.Supp.2d 136. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private hospital and its employees were not "state actors" under "traditional exclusive governmental function" test, for purposes of § 1983 action alleging that they violated patient's due process rights when they allegedly ignored patient's advance medical directive (AMD) and undertook extreme medical measures to resuscitate him; provision of hospital services was not traditional public function exclusively reserved to state. Klavan v. Crozer-Chester Medical Center, E.D.Pa.1999, 60 F.Supp.2d 436. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Hospital at which individual had presented himself after he had "blacked out" and then gone on cocaine binge was not acting under color of state law, and thus, could not be held liable under § 1983 in action brought by individual who was taken into police custody after he made statements to hospital personnel regarding his involvement in crimes; only link between hospital and city was that city police officers went to hospital to arrest individual and nurse told officers that hospital was holding individual. Copeland v. Northwestern Memorial Hosp., N.D.Ill.1997, 964 F.Supp. 1225. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Private, nonprofit hospital which conducted peer reviews consistent with internal guidelines and state and federal law was not "state actor," and thus, physician who alleged that he had been denied staff privileges on basis of his race could not prevail in federal civil rights action, even though hospital did receive federal funds; hospital was not controlled or even influenced by state or federal officials, regulation did not create "nexus" between government and hospital, health care services are not exclusive or traditional public function, and no symbiotic relationship existed between hospital and government. Benjamin v. Aroostook Medical Center, D.Me.1996, 937 F.Supp. 957, affirmed 113 F.3d 1, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 602, 522 U.S. 1016, 139 L.Ed.2d 490. Civil Rights 1326(7)

State's designation of private hospital as emergency receiving and treatment facility for mentally ill did not make hospital state actor in dealing with psychiatric patient, for purposes of § 1983; state's designation neither converted hospital into state-operated medical facility nor deputized affiliated private physicians as state's agents. Trimble v. Androscoggin Valley Hosp., Inc., D.N.H.1994, 847 F.Supp. 226. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Absent any evidence showing state action or deprivation of constitutional right as result of hospital's termination of physician's contract and revocation of his medical staff privileges without hearing, physician could not recover under § 1983, where hospital was private corporation and individual defendants were agents and officers of hospital. Cogan v. Harford Memorial Hosp., D.Md.1994, 843 F.Supp. 1013. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1011. ---- Board of directors, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Where board of directors of private hospital, which operated on premises leased from county, had exclusive control of medical policy, neither county nor state had sought to regulate or influence medical policy and in particular had remained neutral with respect to performance or nonperformance of elective abortions, there was no "state action" involved in policy and federal court was without jurisdiction under this section. Greco v. Orange Memorial Hospital Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 513 F.2d 873, rehearing denied 515 F.2d 1183, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 433, 423 U.S. 1000, 46 L.Ed.2d 376. Federal Courts 222

1012. ---- Board of governors, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Facts that five of nine members of hospital's board of governors were responsible to the public under hospital's charter by virtue of one member being a county judge and four others being appointed by county commissioners and that hospital received 14 percent of its budget from county tax levy and federal funds were sufficient to give hospital character of a "public agency" subject to suit under this section. Chiaffitelli v. Dettmer Hospital, Inc.,

C.A.6 (Ohio) 1971, 437 F.2d 429. Civil Rights 1350

1013. ---- Board of trustees, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Private hospital board's action in restricting physician's staff privileges was not state action for purposes of imposing liability on the hospital under this section where, even though hospital received public funding, was subject to extensive state regulation, had two public officials serving on its board of trustees, and had been purchased by county and then leased back to the board of trustees through financial arrangement authorized by state statute, neither state nor county had become involved in daily operation of the hospital or retained coercive control over the hospital. Crowder v. Conlan, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1984, 740 F.2d 447. Civil Rights 1326(7)

1014. ---- Committees, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Actions of medical executive committee of hospital which involved meeting in closed session to investigate charges against doctor, finding that doctor had been guilty of professional misconduct, and determining that warning should be issued deprived doctor of an interest in liberty which was protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 against state action without due process of law. Hoberman v. Lock Haven Hospital, M.D.Pa.1974, 377 F.Supp. 1178. Constitutional Law 275(1.5)

State was not involved with hospital's peer review committee's decision to deny reappointment of ophthalmologist to hospital's medical staff, barring hospital's liability in § 1983 claim by ophthalmologist arising from denial; although state statutes regulated hospital's risk management, and reporting requirements, it did not mandate a system for health care providers to implement with respect to their peer review functions, and in fact required hospitals to make their own staffing decisions according to their own bylaws, and hospital's power to deny reappointment to medical staff existed before the state's regulatory scheme was promulgated. Conner v. Salina Regional Health Center, Inc., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 56 Fed.Appx. 898, 2003 WL 295545, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(7)

1015. ---- Directors, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Medical director of public hospital's radiation oncology department could fairly be said to be state actor, for purposes of § 1983, when supervising medical center employees, even though he was not hospital employee but worked under contract; medical director was obligated by contract with state to provide patient care, supervision over hospital staff in provision of patient care, and training of hospital staff, and medical director was only person to whom employees could look for orders and training. Nieto v. Kapoor, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2001, 268 F.3d 1208. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Executive director of public hospital, which was established by operation of Georgia law, and clinical director of anesthesia were county officials acting under color of state law, for purposes of action brought by anesthesiologist under §§ 1983 and 1985 to recover for alleged deprivation of property or liberty interests in connection with selection of anesthesiologist's competitor for clinical director position and with restrictions on scheduling of requests for anesthesiologist's services; executive director and clinical director were integrally involved in management and administration of the hospital. Faucher v. Rodziewicz, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 891 F.2d 864. Civil Rights 1326(11); Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Civil rights action did not lie under this section in favor of adoptee against director of adoption department of hospital, on allegations that director had wrongfully refused to provide adoptee with access to his adoption records, since director acted as private individual, not state official, and not under color of state law. Rhodes v. Laurino, E.D.N.Y.1978, 444 F.Supp. 170, affirmed 601 F.2d 1239. Civil Rights 1326(4)

State actor requirement was satisfied in § 1983 action against human resources director of hospital under contract to city, brought by hospital employee terminated from position as nurse at city prison; termination, which was relayed to employee by director with explanation that "[i]n light of the ... decision by [city corrections department to revoke employee's access to prison] we have no alternative," was fairly attributable to city corrections official's revocation of employee's access. Pierce v. Marano, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 1858772, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1016. ---- Employees, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Defendants as agents and employees of state hospital were acting under color of state law with respect to their responsibilities for care, custody and control of inmate. Spence v. Staras, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 507 F.2d 554. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Hospital did not act under color of state law when it detained for evaluation a passenger who had been removed from an airplane by police after making cell phone calls reporting that she was being held hostage, and thus was not liable in passenger's §§ 1983 action; fact that hospital employees received information from the officers did not establish persuasion or inducement sufficient to constitute state compulsion and did not establish concerted or joint action, and hospital's act of detaining the passenger was not an exclusively governmental power. Turturro v. Continental Airlines, S.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 383. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(5)

Hospital paramedics acted in concert with city police and fire fighters in connection with detention of allegedly mentally ill person pursuant to Wyoming's Emergency Detention statute, thus providing "state action" required for imposition of § 1983 liability; Wyoming statute stated that mentally ill person could be detained when "police officer" or medical examiner had reasonable cause to believe person was dangerous, and there was evidence that hospital acted in concert with police and fire departments in effecting detention. Moore v. Wyoming Medical Center, D.Wyo.1993, 825 F.Supp. 1531. Civil Rights 1326(5)

State did not have sufficiently close relationship to hospital's mobile crisis team (MCT), which had attempted involuntary commitment of citizen on emergency basis, so as to be a joint participant and/or interdependent with the MCT, and thus, MCT was not a "state actor" for purposes of civil rights law, where police department had referred to MCT a complaint that was presumed to be a medical rather than a criminal issue, and although MCT members were state-certified, that did not transform them as private medical providers into state actors for purposes of civil rights law. Ellison v. University Hospital Mobile Crisis Team, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 108 Fed.Appx. 224, 2004 WL 1543951, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(9)

1017. ---- Officials, hospitals, particular persons under color of law

Hospital and its staff who committed patient to psychiatric institution against her will were not state actors for § 1983 action purposes, since the New York Mental Hygiene Law (MHL) neither compelled nor encouraged involuntary commitment; even though MHL provided legal framework under which physicians could involuntarily commit patient by creating procedures and standards for commitment, it left decision to commit completely to physician's discretion. Okunieff v. Rosenberg, S.D.N.Y.1998, 996 F.Supp. 343, affirmed 166 F.3d 507, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1002, 528 U.S. 1144, 145 L.Ed.2d 945. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Even if hospital had been fully owned and operated by state, such would not have made all the actions performed by its officers "under color of law" within purview of this section. Hoover v. Holston Valley Community Hosp., E.D.Tenn.1981, 545 F.Supp. 8. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Actions of officials of county general hospital, which was public institution supported by public funds and administered by county employees, in formulating and implementing hospital rules prohibiting elective abortions in hospital amounted to action under color of state law for purposes of giving federal district court jurisdiction under this subchapter over action to enjoin enforcement of rule. Doe v. Mundy, E.D.Wis.1974, 378 F.Supp. 731, stay denied 95 S.Ct. 28, 419 U.S. 813, 42 L.Ed.2d 40, affirmed 514 F.2d 1179. Federal Courts 224

1018. Health clinics, particular persons under color of law

Abortion clinic was not "state actor," precluding damages from being assessed against it in anti-abortion activist's § 1983 action, alleging that injunction obtained by clinic prohibiting picketing violated activists constitutional rights; although clinic initiated state court proceedings to obtain injunction, and clinic workers called county sheriff to report picketing, injunction specified that sheriff had obligation to actively enforce injunction, and clinic did not obtain injunction in bad faith or with knowledge that it would be unconstitutional. Gottfried v. Medical Planning Services, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 2002, 280 F.3d 684, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Former employee of private health clinic failed to show that clinic was acting under color of state law in terminating his employment contract, and, thus, failed to state § 1983 due process or equal protection claim arising out of termination, where clinic was not acting in area that was exclusive prerogative of state and fact that clinic received about half of its funding from federal government was not sufficient to satisfy state actor requirement. Griswold v. New Madrid County Group Practice, Inc., E.D.Mo.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1218, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1018A. Hospices

Parents failed to meet state actor requirement, in their action seeking reestablishment of patient's artificial life support, for §§ 1983 claim under Free Exercise Clause and claim under Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), inasmuch as defendants, namely hospice and daughter's guardian, were not state actors, and fact that claims were adjudicated by state court judge did not provide requisite state action. Schiavo ex rel. Schindler v. Schiavo, M.D.Fla.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 1378, affirmed 403 F.3d 1223, rehearing en banc denied 403 F.3d 1261, stay denied 125 S.Ct. 1692, 544 U.S. 945, 161 L.Ed.2d 518. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1019. Hotels, particular persons under color of law

Hotel employees did not act "under color of state law" when they contacted state child welfare authorities to report suspected child abuse by hotel guest, and thus hotel and employees were not subject to liability under §§ 1983 for guest's subsequent arrest and prosecution. Mione v. McGrath, S.D.N.Y.2006, 435 F.Supp.2d 266. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Hotel owner, as a private corporation, could not be held liable under this section for actions of its security guards, there being no state action. Chesler v. Doe, N.D.Ohio 1982, 532 F.Supp. 1033. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Where no state action was involved in hotel bar's refusal to serve unescorted woman solely because of her sex, woman did not have cause of action for declaration that such refusal was illegal, discriminatory and unconstitutional and enjoining the hotel bar from continuing their policy of refusing to serve unescorted women under the equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or under this section or § 1985 of this title granting causes of action for deprivation of rights. DeCrow v. Hotel Syracuse Corp., N.D.N.Y.1968, 288 F.Supp. 530. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1020. Housing officials, particular persons under color of law

In order for federal court to have jurisdiction over tenants' claims under this section against housing authority and its officers, the officers must have acted under power of state law. Bogan v. New London Housing Authority, D.C.Conn.1973, 366 F.Supp. 861. Federal Courts 222

1021. Indians, particular persons under color of law

Suit under §§ 1983 was not available to redress alleged deprivations of farm lessee's constitutional rights by tribal officials while officials were acting under color of tribal law, as opposed to state law. Burrell v. Armijo, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 456 F.3d 1159. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Fact that Indian tribe had chosen to adopt framework of state law to cover gaps in tribal code did not make tribe a state actor for purposes of this section. R.J. Williams Co. v. Fort Belknap Housing Authority, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1983, 719 F.2d 979, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3476, 472 U.S. 1016, 87 L.Ed.2d 612. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Acts of Indian tribal officials, although performed with assistance of deputy sheriffs of counties, were not imbued with requisite state action to support action under this section, where there were no allegations that county authorities had requested their assistance, that such assistance had ever occurred before or that tribe and state had long-standing agreement to offer assistance through customary procedures or that such tribal officials were delegated police power by state or were attempting to enforce state rather than tribal law. Bruette v. Knope, E.D.Wis.1983, 554 F.Supp. 301. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Suit by individual members of St. Regis Mohawk Tribe against certain tribal leaders, who refused to step down after a recall vote, was not authorized under this section for reason that members failed to show that leaders acted "under color of law." Barnes v. White, N.D.N.Y.1980, 494 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1022. Informants for police, particular persons under color of law

Police informant, who stole check from person with whom he shared apartment and then killed her, was not acting under color of state law to be liable as state actor under § 1983, where his informant activities were limited to obtaining evidence against drug dealers. Hiser v. City of Bowling Green, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 42 F.3d 382, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1984, 514 U.S. 1120, 131 L.Ed.2d 871. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1023. Insurers, particular persons under color of law

Mere fact that insurer considered insured's criminal arrest when deciding to deny insured's claim under fire policy did not establish nexus necessary for finding state action to support § 1983 cause of action. Galvan v. Cameron Mut. Ins. Co., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 831 F.2d 804. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Character of insurer as plaintiff in state court action is not sufficient to consider insurer's activity as being "under color of state law" for purposes of this section. Wartman v. Branch 7, Civil Division, County Court, Milwaukee County, State of Wis., C.A.7 (Wis.) 1975, 510 F.2d 130. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Insurance company's action of electing to convert from mutual company to stock company was not transmuted into "state action," for purposes of § 1983 claim by insurance superintendent's approval of demutualization plan under New York statutory scheme; superintendent's approval did not constitute "overt, significant assistance" by state official sufficient to justify finding state action on part of company, as superintendent did not coerce proposed activity, significantly encourage it, turn decision to demutualize into "joint activity" between state and insurance company, make company a state agent, delegate to company a public function, or render the state "entwined" in company's management or control. Tancredi v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., S.D.N.Y.2001, 149 F.Supp.2d 80, affirmed 316 F.3d 308, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2610, 539 U.S. 942, 156 L.Ed.2d 628. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Alleged discriminatory conduct by property insurer and others in favoring approved contractors to perform repairs did not involve state action, and thus was not redressable under § 1983. Bologna v. Allstate Ins. Co., E.D.N.Y.2001, 138 F.Supp.2d 310. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private workers' compensation insurers were not "state actors" who could be sued by workers' compensation claimants under § 1983 for alleged deprivation of medical benefits, although procedural scheme created by Pennsylvania workers' compensation law was the product of state government and statute had its source in state authority, given that decision to cease paying medical benefits due to a dispute was entirely up to insurer acting independently of any state involvement. Sullivan v. Barnett, E.D.Pa.1996, 913 F.Supp. 895. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Insurer and an insurance claims auditing service had not acted under color of state law, so as to be amenable to suit by insured under § 1983, even though insurance coverage in question was mandated by state law and applications for benefits were submitted to insurers on forms mandated by Pennsylvania Insurance Department; decisions to refer claims to auditing service for assessment and to refuse payments were made and executed without state involvement. Brownell v. State Farm Mut. Ins. Co., E.D.Pa.1991, 757 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1326(7)

1024. Judges, particular persons under color of law

Juvenile court judge did not act under color of state law when he used his judicial stationery to write personal letter of support for high school coach accused of improprieties, so as to support § 1983 liability for alleged retaliation against parent who made complaints against coach; that letter was written on judicial stationery was insufficient, alone, to show that sending of letter was done under color of state law, content of letter made it apparent that letter was written in judge's capacity as father, rather than as judge, and there was no indication that judge intended or expected letter to come to parent's attention. Tierney v. Vahle, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 304 F.3d 734. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Judges adjudicating cases pursuant to state statutes may not be sued under § 1983 in a suit challenging the state law. Grant v. Johnson, C.A.9 (Or.) 1994, 15 F.3d 146. Civil Rights 1376(8)

Conclusory allegation that superior court judge improperly abandoned his judicial role by permitting residents in housing development to draft final judgment against live-in, elder-care facility within the development was insufficient to establish state action required to pursue § 1983 claim. Casa Marie, Inc. v. Superior Court of Puerto Rico for Dist. of Arecibo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1993, 988 F.2d 252. Civil Rights 1396

Juror about whom state trial judge had commented to a news reporter in a published interview after singling juror out in open court as only juror to vote against death penalty in murder trial could not recover under civil rights statute for judge's out-of-court conduct, as it did not involve deprivation of a constitutionally protected interest. Emory v. Peeler, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 756 F.2d 1547. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Use by judge, who was able to take his prosecutorial acts against plaintiff because he was cloaked with office of judge, of that office to prosecute plaintiff constituted action under color of state law within meaning of this section even though such acts were not judicial acts and were taken in absence of all jurisdiction. Lopez v. Vanderwater, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 620 F.2d 1229, certiorari dismissed 101 S.Ct. 601, 449 U.S. 1028, 66 L.Ed.2d 491. Civil Rights 1326(2)

State judicial officer is acting under color of state law when he evicts from his courtroom one who is there on court business. Gregory v. Thompson, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1974, 500 F.2d 59. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Judge was not state actor, for §§ 1983 purposes, when he acted in his capacity as private attorney, and was subject to suit under §§ 1983 only if he conspired with state actor to deprive plaintiffs of their constitutional rights. Plaisance v. Reese, E.D.La.2004, 353 F.Supp.2d 735. Civil Rights 1326(10); Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Arrestee's allegations that justice of peace made improper use of his official position to direct arrest, imprisonment, and prosecution of arrestee sufficed to establish action "under color of law" for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 action. Bordages v. McElroy, S.D.Tex.1996, 952 F.Supp. 499. Civil Rights 1326(2)

State judge was not acting under color of state law for purposes of civil rights claim when judge's dog allegedly put its nose under skirt of courthouse visitor, although judge was able to have his dog with him in the courthouse only because of his official position. Monsky v. Moraghan, D.Conn.1997, 950 F.Supp. 476. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Section 1983 plaintiff failed to show that defendant state court judge acted "under color of state law" when he allegedly unleashed his dog in courthouse to commit offensive acts upon plaintiff and other women; judge did not abuse power he possessed by virtue of state law, as his choice to bring his dog to work appeared to stem from personal pursuits. Monsky v. Moraghan, D.Conn.1996, 947 F.Supp. 53, motion to amend denied 950 F.Supp. 476, affirmed 127 F.3d 243, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 66, 525 U.S. 823, 142 L.Ed.2d 52. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Failure of state judge, acting by and through his state authority, to advise indigents of their right to appointed counsel and to appoint such counsel when those indigents were threatened with possible incarceration for their failure to make court-ordered child support payments involved state action invoking the jurisdiction of the federal district court pursuant to U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6 and Amend. 14 and the Civil Rights Act of 1871, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Johnson v. Zurz, N.D.Ohio 1984, 596 F.Supp. 39. Civil Rights 1326(2); Constitutional Law 254(2)

1025. Judgment creditors, particular persons under color of law

Judgment creditor, who uses Pennsylvania's procedure for executing on confessed judgment, acts under color of law and becomes a state actor, for purposes of § 1983 claim. Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 20 F.3d 1250, on remand 1995 WL 141465. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Judgment creditor and its collection representative acted under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983 claim, when they obtained and executed writ of assistance in order to conduct inventory of contents in judgment debtors' home; creditor and collection representative had exercised their rights under state rules and procedures when obtaining and executing writ, and they had invoked authority and aid of county sheriffs in executing writ. Owens v. Swan, D.Utah 1997, 962 F.Supp. 1436. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1026. Judicial review boards, particular persons under color of law

When enforcing either Pennsylvania Rules of Professional Conduct or Code of Judicial Conduct, Disciplinary Board of Supreme Court, its chief counsel, and Judicial Inquiry and Review Board act under color of state law. Stretton v. Disciplinary Bd. of Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, E.D.Pa.1991, 763 F.Supp. 128, affirmed in part, vacated in part 944 F.2d 137, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1027. Juvenile homes, particular persons under color of law

State's placement of children, removed from custody of their natural parents, in privately owned group facility does not convert owner of facility into state actor, such that owner could be held liable under § 1983. Letisha A. by Murphy v. Morgan, N.D.Ill.1994, 855 F.Supp. 943. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private children's home that contracted to provide care for juvenile placed by state, and home's director, were state actors for purposes of federal civil rights suit. McAdams v. Salem Children's Home, N.D.Ill.1988, 701 F.Supp. 630 . Civil Rights 1326(5)

1028. Juvenile officers, particular persons under color of law

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Defendant's mere status as a state juvenile officer, without more, did not transform his representation of plaintiff, in a criminal matter, into "state action" for purposes of this section. Dunn v. Hackworth, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 628 F.2d 1111. Civil Rights 1326(10)

1029. Laboratories, particular persons under color of law

Private forensic research laboratory could not be liable under § 1983, since scientific testing of physical evidence was not traditional state function. Nygren v. Predovich, D.Colo.1986, 637 F.Supp. 1083. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1030. Labor boards, particular persons under color of law

Puerto Rico Labor Relations Board's refusal to protest private employer's discharge of supervisory employees because of their union membership was not state action providing basis for recovery under this section, particularly because that Board was without power to prohibit discharge of supervisors because of their union membership. Rodriguez v. Conagra, Inc., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 527 F.2d 540. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1031. Land developers, particular persons under color of law

Defendant, a private developer and sponsor of urban renewal plan, which had allegedly participated for its own benefit with city in scheme allegedly amounting to a de facto taking of plaintiffs' properties in renewal area willfully violating for its own gain rights secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5 and Amend. 14, could act "under color" of state law and thus be held liable under this section. Archer Gardens, Ltd. v. Brooklyn Center Development Corp., S.D.N.Y.1979, 468 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that educational facilities and state and county offices were available to families of purchasers of various state property, that state was involved in zoning and land use regulations affecting developers' property rights, that developers had been granted privilege of operating in corporate form, that developers were licensed to engage in business and made use of services of numerous other businesses which were licensed and regulated by state, that plans of developers to accomplish building of homes must be approved by Building Commissioner, that developers were protected in their operations by various state laws and zoning laws, banking and lending laws and numerous laws affecting transfer and development of real property, and that developers intended to and would construct and maintain streets for use by public in general and intended to impose restrictive covenants in deeds of conveyance authorizing assessments for street maintenance, garbage collections and other services similar to those provided by municipalities, did not preclude developers from refusing to sell house to Negroes on theory that developers were engaged in "state action" and would be invested with governmental powers. Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., E.D.Mo.1966, 255 F.Supp. 115, affirmed 379 F.2d 33, certiorari granted 88 S.Ct. 479, 389 U.S. 968, 19 L.Ed.2d 459, reversed on other grounds 88 S.Ct. 2186, 392 U.S. 409, 20 L.Ed.2d 1189, 47 O.O.2d 43.

Action taken by landlord was "under color of state law" for purposes of tenants' action under this section where, in evicting tenants, landlords were accompanied by police officer who later privately approached tenants and recommended that they leave, thereby creating appearance that police sanctioned eviction. Howerton v. Gabica, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1983, 708 F.2d 380. Civil Rights 1326(9)

District court abused its discretion in dismissing, without leave to amend, tenant's action challenging adults-only rental policy of apartment under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 on grounds that it violated his right to raise a family and discriminated against families with children, since tenant's allegations, if proved, would place county in position of interdependence such that it was joint participant with owner of apartment, thus satisfying state action requirement. Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1982, 672 F.2d 1305. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Actions of private landlord of a retirement home were not performed under color of state law, for purposes of resident's claim under §§ 1983, seeking to preliminarily enjoin landlord from enforcing "House Rule" which prohibited rude or abusive behavior toward home's residents and staff, on ground that it was an unconstitutional restriction on speech, where House Rules or their enforcement were not compelled or influenced by regulations, and no government entity had any role in promulgation or enforcement of House Rules. Kabbani v. Council House, Inc., W.D.Wash.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1189. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private landlord of a retirement home was not a state actor, and, thus, tenant seeking to preliminarily enjoin landlord from enforcing "House Rule" which prohibited rude or abusive behavior toward home's residents and staff, on ground that it was an unconstitutional restriction on speech, failed to show requisite likelihood of success on the merits, although landlord received substantial money from federal housing assistance program and was subject to federal regulations, where House Rules or their enforcement were not compelled or influenced by regulations, and no government entity had any role in promulgation or enforcement of House Rules. Kabbani v. Council House, Inc., W.D.Wash.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1189. Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

Civil rights action by lessee arising from eviction proceedings against him must be dismissed for failure to state claim, where lessee failed to establish causal connection between institution of eviction proceedings and his injuries, and proceedings were commenced by private litigants, who did not act under color of state law. Eidson v. Arenas, M.D.Fla.1994, 155 F.R.D. 215. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

1033. Landowners, particular persons under color of law

Owners of land that allegedly reverted to State when it was no longer used as sailors home did not act under color of state law and could not be held liable under § 1983; there were no allegations that landowners conspired with or engaged in joint activity with state officials, that landowners were closely related to State, or that landowners were performing public functions or were highly regulated. Price v. State of Hawaii, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1991, 939 F.2d 702, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1479, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1480, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1034. Leagues, particular persons under color of law

Actions of private sporting organization in revoking plaintiff's right to play in basketball league due to noncompliance with citizenship eligibility rule was not state action, where there was no evidence that government encouraged or affirmatively induced defendants' conduct, regulation of amateur sports was not traditionally an exclusive function of the commonwealth and there was no symbiotic relationship between defendants and commonwealth. Ponce v. Basketball Federation of Com. of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1985, 760 F.2d 375. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that eight of nine professional hockey league member teams played their home games in stadia owned by various municipalities alone was insufficient to establish requisite level of state involvement necessary to state a claim under this section proscribing the deprivation of rights. Neeld v. American Hockey League, W.D.N.Y.1977, 439 F.Supp. 459. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1035. Legal aid, particular persons under color of law

Allegation of former parole revokee that his former counsel was employed by a private, nonprofit state-funded corporation which provided legal assistance to indigent inmates in state prison system was insufficient to establish that the former counsel acted under color of state law, as required for the former counsel to be held liable in former parole revokee's § 1983 action for alleged violation of the former parole revokee's Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Young v. McKune, D.Kan.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 1250, affirmed 85 Fed.Appx. 723, 2004 WL 95875. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Legal Aid is not "state actor," for purposes of § 1983. Respass v. New York City Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.1994, 852 F.Supp. 173. Civil Rights 1326(10)

1036. Legislators, particular persons under color of law

In view of fact that position of Speaker of the New Jersey General Assembly was provided for in the New Jersey Constitution and that the Speaker's powers of committee appointment and removal were set out in General Assembly rules passed by the Assembly, action of the Speaker in removing Assembly member from his position on a certain assembly committee was "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this chapter. Gewertz v. Jackman, D.C.N.J.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1047. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1037. Lessees, particular persons under color of law

Trade show promoters, as lessees of convention center, were engaged in "state action," within meaning of § 1983, in prohibiting publisher's attempts to distribute its "show dailies" in walkways leading to convention center; promoters leased convention center from city and promoters were effectuating government policy as set forth in their leases. Hampton Intern. Communications, Inc. v. Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority, D.Nev.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1402. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Although state leased land, buildings and ski lifts to private lodge for rent based in part on percentage of gross receipts from operation of ski lift, action of private promotion corporation, promoting skiing in area, in arranging reduced rates for member lodges with respect to use of ski lifts and ski instruction but excluding non-member lodges from plan was a "state action" within U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and this section. D. D. B. Realty Corp. v. Merrill, D.C.Vt.1964, 232 F.Supp. 629. Civil Rights 1326(4); Constitutional Law 213(4)

Refusal of corporation, which operated restaurant in airport terminal building of city under lease from city, to serve Negroes except on a segregated basis was "state action" and violative of rights of Negro, who was refused service on same basis as white passengers, as a citizen under the equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and Negro was entitled to injunctive relief in class action. Coke v. City of Atlanta, Ga., N.D.Ga.1960, 184 F.Supp. 579. Constitutional Law 216; Federal Civil Procedure 186.15

1038. Libraries, particular persons under color of law

Discharge of public library employee involved state action within reach of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 so that civil rights action for deprivation of rights could be maintained, where library derived over 90 percent of its revenues from tax sources, local governments which furnished revenue were represented on library's governing board by ex officio members holding public office, library enjoyed tax exempt status, and structure, organization and management of board of managers of library system was mandated by state legislation. Chalfant v. Wilmington Institute, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1978, 574 F.2d 739. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1039. License and permit authorities, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Where private association which licensed both drivers and tracks involved in harness racing received no state funds and chose its own officers and directors, and no state officials or agents were involved with government or operation of the association and it was not "regulated" by state laws, there was no "state action" even if state required harness driver to have driver's license from association before he would be permitted to drive in harness race in the state. Bailey v. McCann, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 550 F.2d 1016. Civil Rights 1326(7)

A private national organization which certified physician assistants, receiving no financial support from any government and operating in all respects on a completely independent basis, was not a state actor and did not act under color of state law within the meaning of federal civil rights statutes. Gilliam v. National Com'n for

1040. ---- Boards of examiners, license and permit authorities, particular persons under color of law

Members of Board of Examiners of Veterinary Medicine of Puerto Rico were acting under color of state law, for purposes of federal civil rights statute, when they initially denied licensure to veterinarian. Martinez-Velez v. Simonet, D.Puerto Rico 1989, 726 F.Supp. 891, affirmed 919 F.2d 808. Civil Rights 1326(7)

1041. Litigants, particular persons under color of law

As a general proposition, private citizens are not state actors for purposes of "color of law" requirement of this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights, and this includes litigants and their attorneys in state civil proceedings. Antelman v. Lewis, D.C.Mass.1979, 480 F.Supp. 180. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

Where probate judge in issuing guardianship order and any officers carrying out that order were immune from suit, private defendants who secured the order were not acting under color of state law for purposes of this section. Rankin v. Howard, D.C.Ariz.1978, 457 F.Supp. 70, reversed on other grounds 633 F.2d 844, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 2020, 451 U.S. 939, 68 L.Ed.2d 326. Civil Rights 1326(9)

The use of state courts by private litigants and their attorneys did not, by itself, amount to state action, for purpose of a claim under § 1983. Sterling v. Trotter, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31409437, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

Complainant was not "state actor," for purposes of § 1983, due to fact that she invoked New York Family Court Act (FCA) to obtain temporary orders of protection (TOP), where statute was not facially unconstitutional; statute provided that TOP could issue only upon showing of good cause, following judicial review of application. Rosen v. County of Suffolk, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 53 Fed.Appx. 578, 2002 WL 31819617, Unreported, on remand 305 F.Supp.2d 229. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1042. Mayors, particular persons under color of law

Borough manager's actions of relaying his and other workers' complaints concerning the mayor to the borough council was not protected speech, as required for manager's First Amendment retaliation claim against mayor, given that the manager reported the conduct to the borough council pursuant to his official duties and thus he was not acting as a citizen when he made the reports. Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 225. Municipal Corporations 156

Landlord was not a "state actor" in connection with her conduct in opening tenant's apartment door, and thus, she was not liable, in tenant's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment action, arising from boyfriend's entry into apartment in order to obtain belongings; if landlord opened the door on her own for boyfriend, she did not act jointly with police officer who was present, if landlord opened door with officer's permission, the conduct was not coerced by any state official, and if she acted on officer's order to open the door, she was not a willful participant in the state action, so she did not act jointly with officer. Harvey v. Plains Tp. Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 421 F.3d 185, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2325. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Under Puerto Rico law, mayor is government official ultimately responsible for employment decisions of municipality; hence, mayor's employment decisions constitute official policy of municipality for purposes of determining municipal liability under § 1983. Acevedo-Garcia v. Monroig, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 351 F.3d 547. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Any action taken by village mayor to cause house to burn to the ground was not effectuated "under color of state law," so as to support homeowner's § 1983 claim, when homeowner did not explain how such an act was related to any official duty or activity of mayor as such, or in his capacity as village fire chief, nor did homeowner contend that mayor used cloak of his authority as mayor or fire chief, or any indicia of his office, to set fire. Honaker v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 256 F.3d 477. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Physician's allegations against mayor, to effect that she employed power of her office to damage physician's ability to practice medicine, did not state adequate state involvement to support § 1983 action; none of mayor's claimed actions such as making false statements about physician and coordinating false newspaper articles was related to power of mayor's office. Manax v. McNamara, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 842 F.2d 808. Civil Rights 1396

Mayor's acts in causing arrest of university president for interfering with construction of city sewer line across university property were committed "under color of state law" where mayor had been put in full control of the sewer line project by city council and the mayor, sitting as magistrate, prepared and presented arrest warrant to himself based on report from city councilman who was mayor pro tem and caused warrant to be served by city's chief law enforcement officer. Thomas v. Sams, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1984, 741 F.2d 783, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3476, 472 U.S. 1017, 87 L.Ed.2d 612. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Acts of mayor in removing police chief's paychecks from town warrant book and keeping them at his telephone company office in order to collect police chief's debt to the telephone company were under color of state law justifying police chief's recovery of actual damages against mayor and his telephone company, in an action under this section authorizing civil actions for deprivation of constitutional rights under color of state law, inasmuch as mayor had access to police chief's paychecks solely because he held the office of mayor. Brown v. Miller, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 631 F.2d 408. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Mayor was not acting under color of state law when he assaulted worker for opposing political party, and thus was not subject to liability under §§ 1983, even though mayor told police officer not to intervene because he would "take charge of this," officer hit worker with her baton after assault began, and mayor was surrounded by municipal employees who participated in assault, where mayor walked to site of assault, did not make use of any trappings of his position, and did not order officer or employees to help him. Rodriguez-Rodriguez v. Ortiz-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 162, subsequent determination 405 F.Supp.2d 170. Civil Rights 1326(2)

City mayor who allegedly made threats to coerce author into abandoning writing project could not be held liable under §§ 1983 absent claim that mayor acted under color of law; none of mayor's alleged actions were taken in his capacity as mayor. Wright v. City of Las Vegas, Nevada, S.D.Iowa 2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 789. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1043. Medical certification boards, particular persons under color of law

Foreign-trained physician failed to state civil rights conspiracy action against private corporation, which prepared and administered test for board certification for medical subspecialties, and its two senior officers, based on his failure to pass qualifying examination for endocrinology and metabolism subspecialties; complaint failed to allege requisite element that corporation and officers acted under color of state law and failed to allege that officers were acting in individual, not official, capacity. Goussis v. Kimball, E.D.Pa.1993, 813 F.Supp. 352. Conspiracy 18

1044. Medical examiners, particular persons under color of law

Medical examiner for county jail who allegedly advised plaintiff at bargaining sessions resulting in plea bargain whereby plaintiff was allowed to plead guilty to a lesser offense than child molestation in return for his consent to castration was acting under "color of state law" within meaning of this section; while serving as medical examiner and advising at the bargaining stage, the physician was clearly clothed with the authority of state law satisfying the

"state action" requirement. Briley v. State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1977, 564 F.2d 849. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Where physician who examined prisoner at county jail was acting in his official capacity as a county health officer in treating the prisoner, the treatment was "state action" within meaning of this section and the physician was not immune from suit under the Act. Robinson v. Jordan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 494 F.2d 793. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Coroner who allegedly signed certificate for commitment stating that he had observed and examined person when he had not done so and who acted pursuant to statute providing for commitment of persons to mental hospital by coroner was not acting as a physician but as state official and under "color of law" and was liable for damages under this section. Delatte v. Genovese, E.D.La.1967, 273 F.Supp. 654. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1045. Mental health facilities, particular persons under color of law

Mental healthcare facility, its owner, and mental health professionals were not state actors by virtue of their involvement in application for involuntary examination pursuant to Pennsylvania mental health law, as required to support involuntary committee's §§ 1983 claims for violation of due process rights; Pennsylvania law did not coerce defendants to file application, but, rather, permitted filing of application for emergency examination, defendants did not operate as willful participants in joint activity with Commonwealth or its agents, but, rather, were alleged to have failed to comply with law of Commonwealth, defendants were not controlled by agency of Commonwealth, conduct of applying for emergency commitment was not public function, and defendants were not entwined with Commonwealth, nor did they have symbiotic relationship with it. Benn v. Universal Health System, Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 371 F.3d 165. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Private hospital and hospital personnel were not "state actors," for purposes of § 1983 claims based on their involuntary detention of claimant pursuant to state involuntary commitment statutes, inasmuch as involuntary commitment statutory scheme was permissive, not mandatory, and granted private physicians complete medical discretion in determining whether individual should be involuntarily committed. S.P. v. City of Takoma Park, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1998, 134 F.3d 260. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that mental health facility derived significant portion of its funding from county government did not make facility "state actor" within meaning of § 1983. Wolotsky v. Huhn, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 960 F.2d 1331. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Although private defendants were not performing a public function when they acted to involuntarily confine plaintiff in mental hospital, genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether public defendants compelled the private defendants to take action and as to whether the private defendants conspired with public defendants in violation of plaintiff's due process rights so as to render the private defendants state actors for purposes of plaintiff's § 1983 claim, precluding summary judgment in favor of private defendants. Ruhlmann v. Ulster County Dept. of Social Services, N.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 140. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Out-of-state residential placement of severely retarded and mentally ill adults constituted state action for § 1983 purposes under the "close nexus test," even though plaintiffs were not in state custody in state-operated institutions, where state was intimately involved in plaintiffs' institutionalization from the time it gave its approval when plaintiffs were children and state provided subsidies for their original placements in out-of-state residential care ever since. Brooks v. Pataki, E.D.N.Y.1995, 908 F.Supp. 1142, stay denied 908 F.Supp. 1157, vacated 84 F.3d 1454, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 480, 519 U.S. 992, 136 L.Ed.2d 375. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Regardless of "private" status of community mental health centers, they were sufficiently involved with state to be considered state actors for purpose of civil rights claim. Birl v. Wallis, M.D.Ala.1985, 619 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1046. Mining companies, particular persons under color of law

Widows and dependents of deceased coal miners could not maintain action under this section for death of miners in coal mine explosion as there did not appear to be any state action involved. Kaznoski v. Consolidated Coal Co., W.D.Pa.1974, 368 F.Supp. 1022, affirmed 506 F.2d 1051.

1047. Mortgagees, particular persons under color of law

Mortgagee that used Illinois statutory procedure to obtain writ of assistance to enforce judgment after obtaining judgment of foreclosure against mortgagor and directed sheriff's office to execute writ of assistance by forcibly evicting tenants from property they had rented from mortgagor was sufficiently alleged by tenants to be state actor to support civil rights action under § 1983 against mortgagee. Scott v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1991, 760 F.Supp. 1288, affirmed 975 F.2d 366, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2421, 508 U.S. 942, 124 L.Ed.2d 643. Civil Rights 1396

1048. Mortuaries, particular persons under color of law

Fact that county had contracted with mortuary to provide services which it would otherwise have had to provide in a county morgue and that mortuary benefited thereby did not make mortuary's refusal to provide funeral services to Indian relatives of deceased Indians a denial of civil rights taken under color of state law. Scott v. Eversole Mortuary, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1975, 522 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1049. Moving companies, particular persons under color of law

Moving companies acted "under color of state law" within meaning of this section when, as agents of sheriffs, they removed tenants' personal property from leased premises during enforcement of writs of restitution. Wegwart v. Eagle Movers, Inc., E.D.Wis.1977, 441 F.Supp. 872, motion denied 467 F.Supp. 573. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1050. Municipal officials, particular persons under color of law

A municipal employee sufficiently alleged that his superiors were acting under the color of state law when they allegedly supplied false information to police officer who then arrested the employee for disorderly conduct to defeat municipality's motion to dismiss employee's civil rights' action, even if the superiors acted in excess of their authority; superiors allegedly abused their authority by securing arrest of the employee without justification at a municipality-owned facility. Yeksigian v. Nappi, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 900 F.2d 101. Civil Rights 1396

Wisconsin municipal ambulance service and its board of directors acted "under color of state law" in terminating executive director, for purposes of his §§ 1983 claim; service was creation of entities that were themselves creatures of state law, four-fifths of board members were elected officials, municipal representatives would not be eligible to serve on board were they not members of municipal governments and acted as representatives of their respective municipalities, insuring availability of ambulance services was required function of municipality, and member municipalities were otherwise entwined in service's establishment, operation, management and finances. Framsted v. Municipal Ambulance Service, Inc., W.D.Wis.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 638. Civil Rights 1326(11)

To establish that municipal officers are personally liable under § 1983, plaintiff does not have to show that defendant acted pursuant to custom or policy, but rather that defendant deprived plaintiff of constitutional right while acting under color of state law. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Civil Rights 1354

decision to transfer them in alleged violation of their First Amendment rights had policymaking power, so as to subject city, DOC and DOC officials in their official capacities to § 1983 liability; there was no evidence of delegation of policymaking power, and city charter vested policymaking authority with respect to personnel decisions only in mayor, city council and personnel director, not agency heads. Soto v. Schembri, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 751. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Whether actions of municipality leading to pretrial detainee's suicide were ultra vires was irrelevant in determining whether municipal employees who treated detainee were acting under color of state law for purposes of maintaining civil rights action following detainee's death. Danese v. Asman, E.D.Mich.1987, 670 F.Supp. 729, reversed on other grounds 875 F.2d 1239, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1473, 494 U.S. 1027, 108 L.Ed.2d 610. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1051. National Guard, particular persons under color of law

Actions of Adjutant General of Wisconsin Air National Guard in discharging commander were "actions under color of state law" for purposes of determining Guard's liability to commander under § 1983; state officers were exercising their state authority to effectuate termination of state militia personnel. Knutson v. Wisconsin Air Nat. Guard, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1993, 995 F.2d 765, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 347, 510 U.S. 933, 126 L.Ed.2d 311. Civil Rights 1327

Air National Guard technician supervisory personnel and New Jersey Adjutant General acted under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 when participating in personnel decisions resulting in dismissal of ANG technicians, notwithstanding National Guard's unusual "hybrid" status as an agency with both federal and state characteristics and that Adjutant General acted as federal agent and exercised authority pursuant to federal regulations in dismissing the technicians, as National Guard Technicians Act of 1968 left the Guard's administrative authority largely at state level. Johnson v. Orr, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1986, 780 F.2d 386, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 107, 479 U.S. 828, 93 L.Ed.2d 56. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(11)

Where decision to discharge National Guard member was within authority of state pursuant to KRS 38.140 as granted by section 1101.18(b) of appendix to Title 32, and National Guard officers were officers of state militia until called into active federal duty, National Guard officers' discharge of member for misconduct and unfitness constituted action under color of state law for purposes of member's action under this section, notwithstanding that discharge was based upon procedural and substantive rules which were actually promulgated by Air Force. Schultz v. Wellman, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1983, 717 F.2d 301. Civil Rights 1327

Officials of state national guard acted under color of state law, as required to allow recovery in § 1983 action based on their actions, when they disciplined commander of national guard base, who held dual status as federal technician and member of state national guard, and allegedly forced his retirement based on his violation of federal anti-nepotism regulation. Bradley v. Stump, W.D.Mich.1997, 971 F.Supp. 1149, affirmed 149 F.3d 1182. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(11)

1052. Newspapers and reporters, particular persons under color of law

Newspaper could not be compelled to accept and print advertising in the exact form submitted even though such advertising was not legally obscene or otherwise unlawful, and despite contention by movie producer whose advertising copy had been altered that newspaper had attained substantial monopoly in its area and thus occupied quasi-public position, and that screening, censoring or otherwise changing producer's proffered copy violated constitutional guarantees of free speech, press, and due process, as newspaper's action was not in fact state action and was not subject to fairness doctrine applicable to broadcasting. Associates & Aldrich Co. v. Times Mirror Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1971, 440 F.2d 133. Newspapers 6.1

Newspaper publisher and its editor, alleged to have conspired against plaintiff to deprive him of his constitutional rights during investigatory and trial proceedings which culminated in his conviction, a conviction which was subsequently vacated, were chargeable only as private citizens and could not be said to have acted "under color of any state law" and, therefore, this section, affording protection against deprivation of civil rights by state action, was not applicable to them, absent a conspiracy with one so acting. Sheppard v. E. W. Scripps Co., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1970, 421 F.2d 555, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 238, 400 U.S. 941, 27 L.Ed.2d 245. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Newspaper editor and publisher were not state actors by virtue of their accepting allegedly false political advertisements and their delivery of newspapers containing those advertisements to subscribers, absent any indication that they were coerced into doing so by state actors, and thus their conduct could not form basis for holding them civilly liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of federal criminal conspiracy statute. Vander Linden v. Wilbanks, D.S.C.2000, 128 F.Supp.2d 900. Civil Rights 1326(4); Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Actions by journalists in publishing newspaper article do not constitute requisite "state action" to support state action claims under § 1983. Idema v. Wager, S.D.N.Y.2000, 120 F.Supp.2d 361, affirmed 29 Fed.Appx. 676, 2002 WL 243119. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Since news reporters were private parties, prison inmate had no grounds for civil rights suit against them for violation of his right of privacy under the Fourth Amendment in broadcast concerning his lawsuits and rapes by fellow inmates. Jones v. Warden of Stateville Correctional Center, N.D.Ill.1995, 918 F.Supp. 1142. Civil Rights 1326(4)

State court judge sufficiently pleaded conspiracy between county officials, township board member, newspaper and its reporters to support § 1983 cause of action against the newspaper and its reporters, where judge alleged that the defendants had conspired to deprive the judge of his property and liberty interest without due process of law, by circulating and publishing oral and written statements erroneously representing that the judge had committed a misdemeanor by erecting barriers on public roadway. Lewis v. News-Press & Gazette Co., W.D.Mo.1992, 782 F.Supp. 1338. Civil Rights 1396

Newspapers and their employees, as private parties, did not act under color of state law, and, thus, were not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged constitutional violations. Lewis v. City of Trenton Police Dept., C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 175 Fed.Appx. 552, 2006 WL 988545, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1053. Notary publics, particular persons under color of law

Officers who allegedly slammed head of alderman against brick wall and concrete floor, in process of arresting him for refusal to leave board meeting when ordered to do so, were aware that their conduct constituted excessive force, precluding claim they were entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment action brought by alderman. King v. Jefferies, M.D.N.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 624. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Justice of the peace and notary public was acting under color of law when he pretended to possess the power of deputy sheriff and caused plaintiff to submit to his pretended official custody, inasmuch as it was because he was possessed of the power of notary that he was able to "get-at" plaintiff. Krueger v. Miller, E.D.Tenn.1977, 489 F.Supp. 321, affirmed 617 F.2d 603. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1054. Nurses, particular persons under color of law

Nurses on psychiatric ward where pretrial detainee committed suicide by asphyxiating himself with plastic bag from garbage can could not be found liable in § 1983 civil rights action alleging deliberate indifference to detainee's medical needs; there was no evidence that nurses had any input into psychiatrist's classification of detainee as a potential suicide risk, as opposed to a high risk requiring greater precautions, and there was no evidence that nurses observed any behavior that required them to ask one of hospital's doctor's to reevaluate detainee or change his classification. Estate of Cole by Pardue v. Fromm, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 94 F.3d 254, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 945, 519 U.S. 1109, 136 L.Ed.2d 834. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact that hospital was municipally owned did not make all actions performed by head nurse of hospital in discharge of her duties "under color of law" so as to entitle plaintiff nurse to bring action against the head nurse for alleged denial of civil rights by way of impaired free speech and reduced employment opportunities. Place v. Shepherd, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1971, 446 F.2d 1239. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Nurses employed by private company that provided medical services for county jail were state actors subject to liability in § 1983 action arising from failure to provide medical treatment to inmate with history of cardiac illness who displayed symptoms of heart attack while incarcerated. Nelson v. Prison Health Services, Inc., M.D.Fla.1997, 991 F.Supp. 1452. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Inmate failed to show that registered nurse hired as full time employee of Department of Corrections to provide nursing care to inmates was acting under color of state law when she responded to inmate's medical complaints and thus inmate's complaint did not state claim against nurse for violation of inmates Eighth Amendment rights under § 1983. Smith v. Huffman, W.D.Va.1987, 670 F.Supp. 176. Civil Rights 1396

1055. Nursing home operators, particular persons under color of law

Decision of private nursing home, a medicaid provider, to discharge patient was not under "color of state law", and thus patient, who brought action on behalf of class members against various Mississippi state officials challenging administration of medicaid program, failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Taylor v. St. Clair, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1982, 685 F.2d 982, rehearing denied 692 F.2d 757.

State action such as to permit nursing home to be held accountable under this section for employment discrimination was not shown by fact that nursing home received medicare and Veterans Administration benefits or by virtue of action of state inspector who, noting that registered nurse's eyesight had deteriorated, asked what nursing home intended to do about it. Trageser v. Libbie Rehabilitation Center, Inc., C.A.4 (Va.) 1978, 590 F.2d 87, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 2895, 442 U.S. 947, 61 L.Ed.2d 318. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Care of the elderly and infirm has traditionally been function associated with family, not with sovereignty, and thus operation of nursing home did not constitute a public function so as to provide requisite state action for former personnel director's civil rights suit. Musso v. Suriano, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1978, 586 F.2d 59, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1534, 440 U.S. 971, 59 L.Ed.2d 788. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Under state compulsion test, private nursing home was not state actor subject to terminated employee's §§ 1983 action arising from patient-abuse investigation by office of New York's Attorney General (OAG) and subsequent criminal prosecution, inasmuch as OAG did not exercise coercive conduct over nursing home or any of its employees. Mitchell v. Home, S.D.N.Y.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Participation of nursing home trade associations in task force with state to encourage nursing care facilities to optimize medicare coverage was not "state action," as needed for medicare patients of skilled nursing facilities to state § 1983 civil rights claim, where associations had no authority or responsibility to promulgate new regulations or implement state policy. Conrad v. Perales, W.D.N.Y.1993, 818 F.Supp. 559. Civil Rights 1326(5) misuse of power derived from an actual vesting of authority by the state and did not constitute actions "under color of state law" in the sense used in this section. Henig v. Odorioso, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1967, 385 F.2d 491, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 1269, 390 U.S. 1016, 20 L.Ed.2d 166, rehearing denied 88 S.Ct. 1814, 391 U.S. 929, 20 L.Ed.2d 671. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1057. Paramedics, particular persons under color of law

City fire department paramedics acted under color of state law, as required for § 1983 liability, by failing to provide medical attention to arrestee who had been handcuffed behind his back while intoxicated with alcohol and cocaine, thrown to the ground face-down, and beaten; although paramedics' role paralleled role of paramedics in the private sector, paramedics had possessed state authority and purported to act under that authority. Ramirez v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1999, 82 F.Supp.2d 836. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1058. Parcel services, particular persons under color of law

Fact that state had not adopted policy specifically prohibiting parcel delivery service from adopting grooming standards for its employees did not mean that any deprivation of civil rights which may have been inflicted upon the employees by the adoption of the standards was inflicted under color of state law. Howe v. United Parcel Service, Inc., S.D.Iowa 1974, 379 F.Supp. 667. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1059. Parole boards or officials, particular persons under color of law

Members of the United States Parole Commission are amenable to suit under §§ 1983 for actions taken pursuant to the District of Columbia Revitalization Act, as actions taken under color of federal statute applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia. Fletcher v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2004, 370 F.3d 1223, 361 U.S.App.D.C. 499, vacated on rehearing 391 F.3d 250, 364 U.S.App.D.C. 1, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1327

Parole board members could not be held liable in their official capacities under § 1983 for allegedly basing parole decisions on unconstitutional or retaliatory considerations, absent finding that improper actions were sufficiently widespread and approved to represent implementation of official formal or informal custom or policy of board. Johnson v. Rodriguez, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 110 F.3d 299, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 117 F.3d 1419, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 559, 522 U.S. 995, 139 L.Ed.2d 400. Civil Rights 1351(4)

For purposes of civil rights suit, state parole officer was acting under color of state law, whether he was off duty or on duty, in arresting defendant for reckless driving; officer was carrying handcuffs and gun issued by state and was acting within geographical area in which he had authority to make arrest for offense committed in his presence. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Kansas Adult Authority's authorization of parolee's final discharge was not requisite state action to support civil rights claim arising after parolee killed two victims; although Authority was aware of parolee's violent history and continuous psychiatric problems, and allegedly failed to consider those factors in granting parolee's unconditional release, there was no evidence that parolee posed danger to victims. Beck v. Kansas University Psychiatry Foundation, D.Kan.1987, 671 F.Supp. 1563. Civil Rights 1326(8) state; parolee was not state officer and could not be said to be acting under color of state law. Janan v. Trammell, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1986, 785 F.2d 557. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1326(8)

Estate of woman who was allegedly murdered by inmate less than 24 hours after inmate was granted early release, as result of Arkansas State Board of Corrections invocation of Prison Overcrowding Emergency Powers Act, failed to state cause of action under § 1983 for deprivation of her life and liberty interest in personal security; inmate had been released from state custody prior to alleged crime and was acting only as private individual, and although prison officials may have been negligent or even reckless in releasing inmate, prison officials were under no constitutionally mandated duty to protect private citizens from inmate's actions once he was freed. Wells v. Walker, E.D.Ark.1987, 671 F.Supp. 624, affirmed 852 F.2d 368, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1121, 489 U.S. 1012, 103 L.Ed.2d 184. Civil Rights 1395(7)

1061. Perjurers, particular persons under color of law

Although defendant police officer's alleged role in scheme with special prosecutor and district attorney in making the false statements which provided basis for criminal process possibly could have been performed by private citizen, defendant could be liable under this section for deprivation of rights under color of state law, even if he was acting in private capacity in concert with special prosecutor and district attorney. Jennings v. Shuman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 567 F.2d 1213. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Purported robbery victim did not act under color of state law when he allegedly lied in recounting shooting incident to police and when he testified in court, and his alleged acts could not fairly be considered as acts of conspiracy tending to deprive plaintiff of equal protection, for purposes of civil rights action. Barnes v. Dorsey, E.D.Mo.1973, 354 F.Supp. 179, affirmed 480 F.2d 1057. Civil Rights 1326(10); Conspiracy 7.5(3)

1062. Physicians, particular persons under color of law

A physician who was under contract with state to provide medical services to inmates at state prison hospital on part-time basis acted under color of state law, within meaning of § 1983, when he treated inmate; such conduct was fairly attributable to state. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Contract services provided by licensed private physician to county in the detention and examination of person brought into treatment facility by police officers as possible mental patient constituted "state action" within the meaning of § 1983, under close nexus/joint action test, though service contract and county hospital's policies anticipated that the psychiatrist on call would exercise clinical judgment and physician had statutory obligation to order the detention of persons whom he believed to be a danger to themselves or others, as physician and the county through its employees had undertaken a complex and deeply intertwined process of evaluating and detaining individuals who were believed to be mentally ill and a danger to themselves or others. Jensen v. Lane County, C.A.9 (Or.) 2000, 222 F.3d 570. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Doctors who examined state employee to determine fitness for duty were not "state actors" who could be sued under § 1983; at the time of diagnosis they were private doctors, who contracted with state on particular occasion to examine employee, and there was no evidence of any agreement between doctors and state acknowledging shared goal. Collyer v. Darling, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 98 F.3d 211, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2439, 520 U.S. 1267, 138 L.Ed.2d 199. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Nurses and psychiatrist on psychiatric ward could be liable in § 1983 civil rights action for suicide of a pretrial detainee being treated there if they were deliberately indifferent to a substantial suicide risk. Estate of Cole by Pardue v. Fromm, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 94 F.3d 254, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 945, 519 U.S. 1109, 136 L.Ed.2d 834. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Emergency room physician's actions in admitting patient to private hospital when she was brought in by police officers and in certifying patient under state commitment statute for involuntary mental health examinations did not constitute state action simply because state police officers responded by transporting patient to another facility, and thus physician was not liable in patient's § 1983 action based on her involuntary commitment. Pino v. Higgs, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 75 F.3d 1461. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Outside physician who treated prisoner under referral from prison physician, but who was not under contract with prison, had no obligation to accept prisoner as patient, and provided treatment at private facility using his own equipment, nevertheless acted "under color of state law," for purposes of § 1983, because he assumed his state's constitutional obligation to provide medical care to prisoner. Conner v. Donnelly, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 42 F.3d 220. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private physician who is under contract to provide obligatory medical services to county jail is considered to be acting under color of state law for § 1983 purposes. Leeks v. Cunningham, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 997 F.2d 1330, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 609, 510 U.S. 1014, 126 L.Ed.2d 573. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private physician unaffiliated with private mental hospital and patient's husband were not transformed into state actors, for purposes of patient's civil rights action arising out of her involuntary commitment, on basis that they conspired with alleged state actors, the hospital and another physician, to have patient committed; none of the alleged state actors were in fact state actors, and thus all parties retained their private status. Harvey v. Harvey, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 949 F.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Physician who provided emergency medical services to prisoner was not a "state actor" for purposes of §§ 1983, where physician provided the medical services in private hospital, not correctional facility in which prisoner had been detained, and physician was not under contract to render medical services to prisoner, but, rather, he was legally obligated to do so by the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act (EMTALA). Sykes v. McPhillips, N.D.N.Y.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 197. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Physician was not liable to acquitted murder suspect under §§ 1983 for reporting to Sheriff's officers that alleged murder victim was possible victim of child abuse, absent evidence that physician and officers reached any understanding to deprive suspect of his constitutional rights. Arline v. City of Jacksonville, M.D.Fla.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1300. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Genuine issues of material fact existed underlying issues as to as to whether private physician defendants complied with substantive admission/confinement requirements of New York Mental Hygiene Law in involuntarily admitting plaintiff to mental hospital, as to whether plaintiff was actually "admitted," and whether he was given written notice upon such admission, and whether plaintiff had capacity to consent to admission, precluding summary judgment in favor of either side on false arrest/imprisonment claims under federal and New York law. Ruhlmann v. Ulster County Dept. of Social Services, N.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 140. Federal Civil Procedure 2515

Two private physicians acted under color of state law in confining patient to hospital involuntarily, and continuing confinement, as required to support patient's claim under § 1983 that confinement violated due process clause; private physicians relied on conclusion of county physician that patient required hospitalization in admitting patient to hospital, and private physicians could not have involuntarily hospitalized patient under New York law without county physician's certification. Tewksbury v. Dowling, E.D.N.Y.2001, 169 F.Supp.2d 103. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private physician is not exercising governmental authority, as required to convert physician's action into state action for § 1983 purposes, when he or she uses medical judgment in assessing dangerousness of individual for commitment purposes despite fact that physician is licensed by the state. Okunieff v. Rosenberg, S.D.N.Y.1998, 996 F.Supp. 343, affirmed 166 F.3d 507, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1002, 528 U.S. 1144, 145 L.Ed.2d 945. Civil

Rights 1326(7)

Under state compulsion test, hospital and physician were not state actors and were therefore not acting under color of state law in catheterizing arrestee, whom police officer brought to hospital for blood test, so that they were not liable for § 1983 claims arising out of catheterization; physician ordered urine sample for medical reasons based on his own judgment, idea of using catheter was given to him by nurse, rather than officer, and officer merely assisted in catheterization after it had been ordered. Rudy v. Village of Sparta, W.D.Mich.1996, 990 F.Supp. 924, affirmed 129 F.3d 1265. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private physician, providing services to private residential juvenile treatment center, which in turn had contract with state to assume all of state's custodial responsibilities for troubled juveniles sent to it by state, was "state actor" subject to suit under § 1983 for deprivation of constitutional rights of juvenile. Lemoine v. New Horizons Ranch and Center, Inc., N.D.Tex.1998, 990 F.Supp. 498. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Physician and his spouse did not become "state actors" for purposes of § 1983 by prosecuting action against abortion activists and organizations for intentional infliction of emotional distress, tortious interference with business relationships, invasion of privacy, and related torts and by obtaining temporary injunctions against activists and organizations; hardships and restrictions imposed on activists and organizations were natural consequences of litigations process, injunction was issued by independent judicial officer after five-day evidentiary hearing, injunction was subsequently affirmed on appeal, there was no evidence of corruption of judicial power or conspiracy with judge, that physician and spouse acted unilaterally to compel state official to enforce illegal court order, or that injunction was based on prohibitory state statute or rule. Tompkins v. Cyr, N.D.Tex.1995, 878 F.Supp. 911. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1063. Political caucuses, particular persons under color of law

Caucus which is a body composed of all state senate members of same political party, which conducts sessions in state house on state property and attended by elected and appointed officials, which is serviced by state paid employees and which decides the course of legislation before it reaches the floor of state senate exercises legislative power; thus, action by caucus is "state action" within meaning of this section. Ammond v. McGahn, D.C.N.J.1975, 390 F.Supp. 655, reversed on other grounds 532 F.2d 325. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1064. Political parties or committees, particular persons under color of law

Political party was not acting under color of state law when it refused to refund gubernatorial candidate's $200 filing fee or when it acted to expel him from his positions within party, as required to support candidate's § 1983 claim. Lindstedt v. Missouri Libertarian Party, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1998, 160 F.3d 1197, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 128, 528 U.S. 850, 145 L.Ed.2d 109. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Actions of members of county central committee of political party in securing ouster of homosexual members were not state action under public function test where their actions did not interfere with election for public office, but instead removed persons elected to private position within party. Johnson v. Knowles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1114, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 559, 522 U.S. 996, 139 L.Ed.2d 401. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that state officials made hiring decisions in compliance with rules and recommendations of Republican party members did not turn party members' conduct into state action for purposes of civil rights claims brought by unsuccessful job applicants, where party members had no actual hiring authority. Vickery v. Jones, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1334, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1553, 520 U.S. 1197, 137 L.Ed.2d 701. Civil Rights 1326(11)

election of their respective ward chairman was not state action, and thus the executives could not recover attorney fees after party agreed to hold new elections rather than dispute merits of officials' civil rights suit, even though county central committee had been delegated power to appoint county officials, and even though selection of ward chairman together constituted county executive committee, which took care of matters that arose between central committee meetings; actions of county central committee in electing ward chairman is not under color of state law merely because central committee has some governmental duties, and executive committee had no control over central committee. Banchy v. Republican Party of Hamilton County, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1990, 898 F.2d 1192. Civil Rights 1326(1); Civil Rights 1479

Absent contention that defendant's position as Democratic party precinct captain made her de facto governmental official, plaintiff had no claim against her under this section. McKinney v. George, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 726 F.2d 1183. Civil Rights 1326(1)

State convention of political party constituted "state action" within meaning of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section in view of 15 Del.C. §§ 101, 3116, 3301(c), pertaining to nomination of candidates by parties. Redfearn v. Delaware Republican State Committee, C.A.3 (Del.) 1974, 502 F.2d 1123, on remand 393 F.Supp. 372.

Party nominee for clerk of court was not acting under color of state law at time of alleged election irregularities which violated unsuccessful candidate's constitutional rights, as would support unsuccessful candidate's claims under § 1983 against nominee, although nominee was a chief deputy at city attorney's office at time of alleged irregularities, where his alleged actions underlying unsuccessful candidate's claims did not involve his position within local government. White-Battle v. Democratic Party of Virginia, E.D.Va.2004, 323 F.Supp.2d 696, affirmed 134 Fed.Appx. 641, 2005 WL 1444221, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1152, 163 L.Ed.2d 1002. Civil Rights 1326(10)

County committee of political party was a state actor, for purpose of § 1983 liability, when it adopted rule providing that party members could witness candidate petitions for listing on party's primary ballot only in districts where they were enrolled to vote and resided, even if no state enabling act permitted committee to enact such a rule, and even though plaintiffs in action challenging the rule as a violation of their First and Fourteenth Amendment rights dismissed from the suit, without prejudice, the city elections board that could sanction a candidate for violating the rule; committee acted under color of state law in purporting to restrict ability of candidates for state elections to obtain petition signatures required by state law for access to primary ballot. Yassky v. Kings County Democratic County Committee, E.D.N.Y.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 210. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Borough's Republican Municipal Chairman was not official acting "under color of state law" for purposes of former school custodian's claim under § 1983 concerning his termination; chairman was not public official, did not act together with or obtain significant aid from state officials with respect to custodian's termination, and was not present at Board of Education meeting at which budget eliminating custodian's position was adopted. D'Aurizio v. Palisades Park, D.N.J.1997, 963 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 151 F.3d 1024, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 166, 525 U.S. 870, 142 L.Ed.2d 135. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Former state employee failed to state civil rights claim against members of political party alleging that they maintained and operated patronage system in which political and financial supporters of party were favored with respect to employment as highway maintainers; party merely provided information to state officials concerning individuals' voting records and financial contributions and advocated hiring of particular individuals, party members did not make actual hiring decisions, and there was no allegation that state officials delegated responsibility to party members. Vickery v. Jones, S.D.Ill.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1313, affirmed 100 F.3d 1334, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1553, 520 U.S. 1197, 137 L.Ed.2d 701. Civil Rights 1116(2)

Decision by state Democratic party to prohibit candidates for statewide offices from distributing literature written and produced by third party independent of candidate's campaign at endorsement meeting was not "state action" needed to state § 1983 civil rights claim by gubernatorial candidate who desired to distribute material prepared by notorious national political figure; meeting at which restriction applied did not determine which candidates appeared on primary ballot, and, thus, involved purely internal affairs of political party. Valenti v. Pennsylvania Democratic State Committee, M.D.Pa.1994, 844 F.Supp. 1015. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Private citizens and political action committees which solicited signatures on initiative petition on department store owner's property without owner's permission were not state actors for purposes of § 1983 civil rights action by owner, even though owner was prevented from prosecuting solicitors for criminal trespass and participating in legislative process served public function. Fred Meyer, Inc. v. Casey, D.Or.1992, 781 F.Supp. 1511, affirmed 67 F.3d 1412, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1545, 517 U.S. 1156, 134 L.Ed.2d 648. Civil Rights 1326(4)

County republican party officers' allegation that they were removed from party because they were evangelical christians did not state actionable claim under § 1983, absent any allegations that removal was performed "under color of law." Blank v. Heineman, D.Neb.1991, 771 F.Supp. 1013. Civil Rights 1396

Filling of post of ward leader of political party did not constitute "state action" within meaning of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1 or "action under color of state law" within meaning of this subchapter so as to allow maintenance of an action under such statute or constitutional provision based on improper procedures in filling of such post. McMenamin v. Philadelphia County Democratic Executive Committee of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1975, 405 F.Supp. 998. Civil Rights 1326(1); Constitutional Law 213(1); Constitutional Law 254(2)

In view of analogy between state convention process for nominating party candidates and state primary election system for nominating party candidates for public office, state action requirement for application of this section to the state convention process was met. Maxey v. Washington State Democratic Committee, W.D.Wash.1970, 319 F.Supp. 673. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1065. Police, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Police officer did not act under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 when, after allegedly gaining access to apartment on pretense of discussing police business and then leaving apartment upon occupant's request, he allegedly forcibly burst front door open and raped occupant; although his alleged initial entry was probably conducted under color of state law, he was no different from any other ruffian when he allegedly forcibly reentered after occupant had fully closed door. Almand v. DeKalb County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1997, 103 F.3d 1510, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 114 F.3d 1204, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 411, 522 U.S. 966, 139 L.Ed.2d 314. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officers, who had allegedly sexually harassed dispatcher employed by different governmental entity, could not be held liable under § 1983 for violation of dispatcher's equal protection rights; absent existence of authority over dispatcher, officers' conduct was private act, not perpetrated "under color of state law." Woodward v. City of Worland, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1992, 977 F.2d 1392, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 3038, 509 U.S. 923, 125 L.Ed.2d 724. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Police officer who was on medical roll as mentally unfit for duty at time he shot victim was not acting under color of state law and thus, victim's estate could not maintain § 1983 action against officer on behalf of victim; upon receipt of specific order issued to officer not to exercise any police power, officer had absolutely no authority to act. Gibson v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1510. Civil Rights 1326(8)

For purposes of civil rights action by arrestee, corrections officer who made arrest was acting under "color of law" at time of arrest; in making arrest, officer used handcuffs issued by City Department of Corrections, officer placed arrestee in police car and accompanied him throughout evening to local precinct, hospital, and central booking. Rivera v. La Porte, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 896 F.2d 691. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Failure of county to train police officers that custom-made vehicles often had noncorresponding vehicle identification numbers on same vehicle, which resulted in arrest of owner of custom-made vehicle, did not constitute inadequate training which would have rendered county liable in civil rights action. Merritt v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 875 F.2d 765. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police detective was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's § 1983 claim based on detective's actions in failing to transmit to prosecutor exculpatory statement by suspect regarding arrestee's lack of involvement in robbery, absent showing that detective's actions were consistent with what a reasonable officer would have done under the circumstances. Murvin v. Jennings, D.Conn.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 180. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deciding whether police officer acted under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983 action, should turn largely on nature of specific acts police officer performed, rather than on merely whether he was actively assigned at that moment to performance of police duties. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Failure of village or police department to take disciplinary action against police officer for allegedly unconstitutional stop of vehicle provided insufficient basis for imposing municipal liability under § 1983 for acts of officer. Dill v. Village of Gowanda, W.D.N.Y.1997, 952 F.Supp. 989. Civil Rights 1352(4)

In determining whether police officer is acting under color of state law, as required for plaintiff to maintain § 1983 action against officer, more is required than simple determination that officer was on duty, wearing uniform, or driving patrol car when challenged incident occurred; liability may be found if police officer invokes real or apparent power of police department or performs duties prescribed generally for police officers. Martin v. Lociccero, W.D.N.Y.1995, 917 F.Supp. 178. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Plaintiff in civil rights action under § 1983 failed to establish any basis for municipal liability based on claims of assault, attempted murder, and conspiracy to commit murder by police officer, where plaintiff did not allege any causal connection between any policy of the city or police department and alleged violations of his civil rights, but instead alleged that the officer was a rogue police officer who did not "follow and respect the rules of his office." Orraca v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 148. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Police officers who purported to arrest motorist outside their jurisdiction acted under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 notwithstanding their lack of actual authority to make such arrest and their subjective knowledge that they lacked such authority; the traffic stop, use of firearms in effecting the arrest, and ensuing physical restraint, including handcuffing, were made possible only by the fact that officers were clothed with state power. Keller v. District of Columbia, E.D.Va.1993, 809 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Arrestee sufficiently alleged that police officers were acting under color of state law by means of authority given to them by state as employees of municipal police department, when they allegedly fabricated charges on which arrest was based so that arrestee would be confined and they would be able to steal $100,000 in property and legal documents from his apartment, to satisfy under color of state law element of § 1983 claim. Brown v. State's Attorney, N.D.Ill.1992, 783 F.Supp. 1149. Civil Rights 1396

Police officer was not acting under color of state law, as required for § 1983 claim, when he allegedly was involved in physical altercation with another officer while on duty; conduct did not occur in course of officer's official duties, actual or otherwise. Rosenfeld v. Egy, D.Mass.2003, 2003 WL 222119, Unreported, affirmed 346 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1326(8); Civil Rights 1326(11)

1066. ---- Cadets, police, particular persons under color of law

Police cadets, who were paid employees of police department, who participated in plaintiff's arrest, who accompanied him and officer to police station for booking, who discussed charging decision with desk officer, who subsequently gave their superior officer a written report of the incident, and who did everything except perform actual arrest, could have been acting under color of state law for purposes of this section. Street v. Surdyka, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 492 F.2d 368. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1067. ---- Campus police, particular persons under color of law

Acts of campus police of University of Pittsburgh, who arrested plaintiff, were performed under color of state authority within purview of this section; not only has Pennsylvania legislature declared that the university derives its authority from the state but it has delegated to campus police the very powers which the municipal police force of Pittsburgh possesses. Henderson v. Fisher, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 631 F.2d 1115, on remand 506 F.Supp. 579. Civil Rights 1326(8)

The State, in form of police security officers and other private college officials who also held part-time jobs with town, would not be held, for purposes of this section, to have participated directly in action whereby college students were requested to appear at a hearing during a drug investigation, at which hearing they were questioned, where record showed that students who were summoned by security officers knew that such officers were fellow students who were acting in their part-time capacity as security officers, and where such officers and college officials testified that the officers were acting pursuant to instructions of the college officials and not as policemen of the town. Robinson v. Davis, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1971, 447 F.2d 753, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1204, 405 U.S. 979, 31 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief did not act knowingly, or with reckless disregard for conduct of police officer, and so was not liable in § 1983 civil rights action for actions of officer who, during traffic stop, administered one violent poke and push to motorist, even if officer deprived motorist of his constitutional right to not be subjected to unreasonable seizure by use of excessive force; contact between officer and motorist was not so prolonged that chief could know or be indifferent to officer. Lanigan v. Village of East Hazel Crest, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 110 F.3d 467. Civil Rights 1358

Police chief was not liable as supervisor in § 1983 action for wrongful arrest brought by arrestee who was arrested for writing on sidewalk, even if police chief had been advised of similar, past incidents between police and arrestee concerning arrestee's writing on sidewalks, where police chief was not involved in arrest and there was no evidence of a policy instituted by police chief that repudiated arrestee's constitutional rights. Mackinney v. Nielsen, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 69 F.3d 1002. Civil Rights 1358

Owner of towing and wrecker service stated First Amendment claim against city chief of police, arising from revocation of permission for owner to use police radio frequency in business after owner complained to chief of police respecting bidding procedure for abandoned vehicles towing contract with city; complaint sufficiently alleged that chief of police violated owner's First Amendment rights and that any reasonable official in chief's position should have so realized. Blackburn v. City of Marshall, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 42 F.3d 925. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Police chief's failure instantly to release detainees, who had been placed in custody of police chief pursuant to a valid arrest warrant, after telephone call from assistant district attorney did not create liability for violation of detainees' civil rights since police chief's action in continuing to detain prisoners after call was not without color of legal authority and there was no authority for district attorney to order detainees' release. Brewer v. Blackwell,

Chief of police was not acting under color of law and thus was not liable under this section when he allegedly assaulted his sister-in-law on the premises of the municipal police station while on duty following argument over family and political matters, during which sister-in-law was neither arrested nor threatened with arrest. Delcambre v. Delcambre, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 635 F.2d 407. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Genuine issues of material fact, regarding whether police chief acted under color of state law by supervising his officers to participate in attempted repossession at restaurant, precluded summary judgment on restaurant owner's § § 1983 claim against chief. Pruitt v. Pernell, E.D.N.C.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 738, affirmed 2006 WL 870638. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police chief was operating under color of state law within meaning of § 1983 when he allegedly tried to dissuade couple from filing criminal complaint against him for instigating verbal dispute by offering couple his business card which they could use to avoid any future problems with police officers, as he acted in conformity with his official capacity as police chief. Banisaied v. Clisham, D.Conn.1998, 992 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Refusal to provide motion picture exhibitors with review board to pass on obscenity of films displayed or with guidelines or opinions as to propriety of exhibition of those films and submission of films to members of city attorney's staff or district attorney's office for determination as to obscenity prior to arresting exhibitors fell within scope and course of authority, duties, and responsibilities of city police chief and sheriff. Schackman v. Arnebergh, C.D.Cal.1966, 258 F.Supp. 983, appeal dismissed 87 S.Ct. 1622, 387 U.S. 427, 18 L.Ed.2d 865, rehearing denied 88 S.Ct. 16, 389 U.S. 893, 19 L.Ed.2d 204. Municipal Corporations 182; Sheriffs And Constables 86

Former police chief could not be held individually liable under § 1983 for incident after he left office in which arresting officers allegedly used excessive force in arresting motorist, where chief did not personally promulgate any policy or practice responsible for harming motorist, and chief did not have power to deploy, train, supervise, or discipline any officer once he left office. Fitzpatrick v. Gates, C.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22385397, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

1069. ---- Commissioners, police, particular persons under color of law

Current Commissioner of Department of Public Safety (CDPS) and his predecessor in that position, were amenable to suit under § 1983 in their personal capacities, as at time of their alleged sexual harassment of police officer they were conducting themselves as supervisors for public employer, and thus were acting under color of state law. Annis v. County of Westchester, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 36 F.3d 251, on remand 939 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1326(11)

In denying provisional police officer's request for an extension of time in which to complete basic course at police academy, deputy commissioner of the New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS) acted as final policymaker, as required to hold DCJS liable under § 1983; deputy commissioner was responsible for determining what constituted exigent circumstances for the purposes of granting an extension. Lathrop v. Onondaga County, N.D.N.Y.2002, 220 F.Supp.2d 129. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Actions of commissioner and officers of state police in issuing any transfer order to state police officer in the course of their duties would constitute conduct "under color of state law" within meaning of this section. Ruhlman v. Barger, W.D.Pa.1976, 435 F.Supp. 447. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1070. ---- Deputies, police, particular persons under color of law

Off-duty deputy acted neither within scope of authority nor under pretense of state law when he assaulted and attempted to rob victims in their home so as to impose § 1983 liability on county even though one victim allegedly recognized officer when victim opened door; deputy did not show badge, deputy put on nylon mask and pointed gun at victim, deputy used gun and physical force to enter house, and victim shouted "it's a robbery." Van Ort v. Estate of Stanewich, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 92 F.3d 831, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 950, 519 U.S. 1111, 136 L.Ed.2d 837. Civil Rights 1326(8); Civil Rights 1348

Deputy's mere physical presence on automobile dealer's premises to serve temporary restraining order obtained by private creditor did not constitute state action for purposes of this section, however, had he colluded with creditor's officer to misrepresent contents of the order it would have been a different matter. Torres v. First State Bank of Sierra County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1978, 588 F.2d 1322. Civil Rights 1326(8); Civil Rights 1326(9)

Off-duty deputy sheriff was not acting under color of law at time he shot his girlfriend's former boyfriend as required for liability of sheriff's department and county under § 1983, despite facts that deputy had his off-duty gun drawn when boyfriend broke into girlfriend's house, deputy asked boyfriend if boyfriend knew what deputy did for a living, boyfriend told deputy to arrest him, and deputy told boyfriend to get down on floor, absent evidence that, in defending his girlfriend, deputy was acting pursuant to duty imposed by department regulations. Hudson v. Maxey, E.D.Mich.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1223. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Deputy sheriffs did not have duty to force farmer who had retained truck and trailer during dispute over watermelon shipment to return truck and trailer to its owner, so as to subject county to civil rights liability; deputies had been dispatched to keep peace in potentially violent confrontation and did not have burden of deciding legal issue of who was entitled to disputed property. Padgett v. Palmer, S.D.Miss.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1185, affirmed 58 F.3d 636. Civil Rights 1088(1)

This section does not apply to automobile collision case wherein one of the parties was a state official or acting under color of state law and there was no right of action thereunder on behalf of individual who was struck and killed by police automobile being driven by deputy sheriff engaged in high speed pursuit of another automobile, notwithstanding claims of reckless, wanton or intentional misconduct. Ellsworth v. Mockler, N.D.Ind.1983, 565 F.Supp. 110. Civil Rights 1358

Actions of sheriff's deputies in arresting and detaining wife overnight in jail for her alleged interference with officers in their attempt to arrest her husband were under "color of state law" within purview of this section. Lamb v. Cartwright, E.D.Tex.1975, 393 F.Supp. 1081, affirmed 524 F.2d 238. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1071. ---- Crime reporting, police, particular persons under color of law

Allegations that defendants, acting as private individuals, conspired with and directed officers to cause felony theft warrant to be issued and served against plaintiff, that defendants and officers knew information was false, and that officers' arrest of plaintiff for theft was made possible because of their authority as law enforcement officers to investigate crimes and make arrests met "under color of law" requirement of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, and thus stated claim upon which relief could be granted. Mark v. Furay, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 769 F.2d 1266, on remand. Civil Rights 1396

Private individual did not act "under color of state law" in reporting alleged criminal conduct by arrestee, and signing a complaint against arrestee, and thus, private individual could not be liable to arrestee under §§ 1983, for alleged unlawful arrest, unlawful search and seizure of arrestee's property, and malicious prosecution; county attorney exercised independent judgment in its decision to prosecute, and although police secured a search warrant based on private individual's statements, the private individual did not control the execution of the warrant or any discovery of contraband, there was no showing that the searches were an abuse of state power, decision to arrest was made by police, and there was no evidence that private individual and police or prosecutor shared a common, unconstitutional goal. Lane v. Johnson, D.Kan.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Mere reporting of suspected criminal activity to law enforcement officials does not constitute the type of joint action with state officials capable of transforming private party into state actor for purposes of § 1983. Fleeger v. Bell, D.Nev.2000, 95 F.Supp.2d 1126, 173 A.L.R. Fed. 717, affirmed 23 Fed.Appx. 741, 2001 WL 1491252. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Fact that a private party executed a sworn complaint which forms the basis for an arrest is not, in itself, sufficient to render the party a state actor for purposes of § 1983 liability; rather, for private party to be deemed a state actor, plaintiff must show that the police in effecting the arrest acted in accordance with a preconceived plan to arrest plaintiff merely because he was designated for arrest by the private party, without independent investigation. Lewis v. Continental Airlines, Inc., S.D.Tex.1999, 80 F.Supp.2d 686. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1072. ---- Highway patrol-officers, police, particular persons under color of law

When a highway patrolman crosses state line to obtain custody of suspect and returns suspect without extradition to state which officer serves, he is acting under color of law; this rule follows even when challenged acts constitute an abuse of the authority conveyed upon officer. Wirth v. Surles, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1977, 562 F.2d 319, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1509, 435 U.S. 933, 55 L.Ed.2d 531. Civil Rights 1326(8)

State highway patrolman who arrested motorist for driving under the influence of liquor and for resisting arrest was acting "under color of" state law within this section even though his actions may have been in excess of his authority. Stringer v. Dilger, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1963, 313 F.2d 536. Civil Rights 1326(8)

South Carolina Highway Patrol is not a "person" for purposes of this section. Cribb v. Pelham, D.C.S.C.1982, 552 F.Supp. 1217. Civil Rights 1348

1073. ---- Off-duty police officers, particular persons under color of law

For purposes of arrestee's §§ 1983 action against arresting officer, officer was acting under color of law throughout his encounter with arrestee; although officer was off-duty and working as security guard at ballpark when he told arrestee to stop his loud heckling of baseball players, and then removed arrestee from bleachers, officer was wearing his police uniform and carrying his official weapons, he told arrestee after arrestee persisted in his behavior that they could "either do this the easy way or the hard way," he grabbed arrestee by the shirt and the arm and put him in the "escort position" before forcibly removing him from bleachers, and then he arrested arrestee for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. Swiecicki v. Delgado, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 463 F.3d 489.

Off-duty police officer who displayed his shield, identified himself as a police officer to arrestee, and drew his firearm acted under color of law in taking arrestee into custody, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 action against officer. Jocks v. Tavernier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 128. Civil Rights 1326(8)

City police officer who struck and killed pedestrian while driving under the influence of alcohol, allegedly following party in police district parking lot, was acting as private citizen rather than police officer, and therefore accident did not violate pedestrian's federally protected rights; although finding that police officer acted under color of state law was not foreclosed by his off-duty status, complaint did not allege that officer acted under color of law, officer was driving own vehicle while drunk and outside city, and complaint did not allege that officer was engaged in police activity, displayed police power, or possessed any indicia of his office at time of accident. Latuszkin v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 250 F.3d 502. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officer who was off-duty and spending the night at boyfriend's home when she called 911 to report that his ex-girlfriend was banging on door and window of home was not acting under color of state law when she called police and reported the incident, as required for ex-girlfriend's § 1983 claim against officer; officer did not physically arrest, restrain, or attempt to restrain ex-girlfriend, and her actions were functionally equivalent to any private citizen calling for police assistance. Redding v. St. Eward, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2001, 241 F.3d 530. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Even though police officer was working off duty as a shopping mall security guard, she was acting "under color of state law," for § 1983 purposes, when she shot a shoplifting suspect; she was wearing a police uniform, ordered the suspect repeatedly to stop, and sought to arrest him. Abraham v. Raso, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1999, 183 F.3d 279. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officer was not "acting under color of state law" when he took minor to his farm to ride all-terrain vehicles and sexually assaulted her, and thus conduct did not support liability under § 1983; officer was neither acting nor purporting to act in official capacity or to exercise his responsibilities pursuant to state law, and was off-duty, not wearing uniform or badge, not carrying gun, and was driving personal vehicle. Roe v. Humke, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 128 F.3d 1213. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Municipal police officer may, in appropriate circumstance, be said to have acted under color of state law even while working off duty as private security officer. Robles v. City of Fort Wayne, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 113 F.3d 732. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officer who was on medical leave when he shot and killed bar patron during fight outside bar was not then acting "under color of state law," thus precluding patron's relatives' recovery in § 1983 action against members of police department; even though officer displayed his police identification and commented to patrons that he was there to keep peace, officer's statement that because he was officer he could "look dirty" at patron fell so far outside his official capacity that it did not constitute reasonable pretense that he was acting as police officer, and any possibility that patron was intimidated by officer's claims of official status was belied by fact that, just before shooting, patron invited officer to engage in private brawl outside bar. Parrilla-Burgos v. Hernandez-Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 108 F.3d 445. Civil Rights 1326(8)

That police officer was not on duty at his primary job of police officer at time of altercation with patron of fast food restaurant, but was instead working as private security guard for restaurant, did not preclude finding that officer acted "under color of state law" at time of altercation, such that a patron would be unable to state § 1983 claim, where patron alleged that officer was wearing his police uniform and displayed his badge, that he was wearing a gun, that his marked squad car was parked just outside, and that he charged patron with, among other things, resisting peace officer. Pickrel v. City of Springfield, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 45 F.3d 1115. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officers were not acting under color of state law when they engaged in an altercation with one officer's brother-in-law and, thus, brother-in-law could not maintain action against police officers under § 1983 for alleged assault; officers were off-duty when altercation occurred and out of their official jurisdiction, altercation began when one officer accused brother-in-law of hitting officer's sister, officer's partner then intervened to support him, and two officers attempted to leave at end of altercation. Barna v. City of Perth Amboy, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1994, 42 F.3d 809. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Off-duty police officer who, while drunk in his own home, used his own personal weapon to shoot a guest, did not act under color of state law, as required to support federal civil rights claim; when officer pointed his gun at guest, he was not acting in accordance with police regulation, and was not invoking authority of police department. Pitchell v. Callan, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 13 F.3d 545. Civil Rights 1326(8)

New York City police officer who shot and seriously wounded his wife and then committed suicide by shooting himself was not acting under color of state law since his actions were not committed in performance of any actual or pretended duty and, thus, wife could not recover under this section, providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Bonsignore v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1982, 683 F.2d 635. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Off-duty city police officer who assisted in alleged illegal repossession action at restaurant was not acting under color of state law, for purpose of restaurant owner's §§ 1983 action; officer was not wearing his uniform or badge, was not carrying firearm, did not assert his authority as officer, and allegedly was unaware of any property dispute involving restaurant. Pruitt v. Pernell, E.D.N.C.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 738, affirmed 2006 WL 870638. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Off-duty police officer was acting in private capacity, and not under color of state law as required to support patron's claim against officer under § 1983, at time officer's friends allegedly assaulted patron of restaurant, even though officer stated he intended to act pursuant to his duty to prevent a breach of the peace when he pulled friend out of restaurant; officer neither told anyone nor gave any non-verbal indication that he was a police officer, was out of uniform and did not display police-issued gun, badge, or engage in affirmative conduct to prevent incident, and after assault officer did not arrest or charge his friends or report incident to on-duty officers but instead helped them flee the scene. Neuens v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 894. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Defendant police officer was not acting under color of state law, as required for liability in § 1983 action, when he allegedly punched another police officer, even though he was carrying his service revolver and a police department regulation provided that officers were on duty 24 hours a day; defendant was off-shift, out of uniform, and not carrying a badge or other official identification, defendant was restrained and handcuffed by other officers, defendant was acting on personal pursuit by trying to rush to hospital to which injured family members had been taken, and defendant's identification of himself as a police officer was not done in furtherance of any official police duties. Gueits-Colon v. De Jesus, D.Puerto Rico 2001, 177 F.Supp.2d 128, reconsideration denied 181 F.Supp.2d 48. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officer's actions in dispute with building contractor were not state action nor committed under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983 action; officer was not in his territorial jurisdiction, was involved in purely personal dispute and not motivated by his police duties, never attempted to make an arrest and did not threaten to have contractor arrested, and made no use in dispute of his police equipment or authority to harass contractor. Garner v. Wallace, E.D.Tex.2001, 139 F.Supp.2d 801. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private company that hired county police officer to direct traffic at its construction site was not acting under color of state law when officer made an arrest at the site, as required to hold company liable under § 1983 for officer's excessive force during arrest; company did not tell officer how to perform his job directing traffic or how to arrest people who interfered with such job, and officer was not hired to police the site or make arrests. Otani v. City and County of Haw., D.Hawai'i 1998, 126 F.Supp.2d 1299, affirmed 246 F.3d 675. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Off-duty police officer's actions following automobile collision between officer and citizen, consisting of directing citizen to move his car to nearby parking lot, did not constitute "state action," as required to support citizen's § 1983 action against city and officer based on officer's subsequent alleged assault of citizen. Pickard v. City of Girard, N.D.Ohio 1999, 70 F.Supp.2d 802. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Store acted under color of state law by hiring off-duty police officer, who was armed and in uniform to act as security guard, for purposes of customer's action claiming that her civil rights were violated when she was wrongfully detained by officer as suspected shoplifter; employment relationship gave store and officer an overlapping identity and interest, and sufficiently involved the state in store's actions so as to bring those actions under color of state law. Groom v. Safeway, Inc., W.D.Wash.1997, 973 F.Supp. 987. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Off-duty police officers who had traveled to city in another state and became intoxicated while they were carrying their police handguns were not acting under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983, at time of their involvement in fatal shooting; city requirement that off-duty officers must at all times preserve the peace did not compel officers to act like police outside jurisdiction, officers were not authorized to act as police in state they were visiting, and while officers had identified themselves as police officers, they did not so wield their influence that they could be deemed to have acted under color of state law. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Town police officer was not acting under color of law, and therefore he could not be liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment relating to warrantless entry into and search of home based on report that minor might be consuming alcohol; officer was off duty and was acting as concerned stepparent of minor, and his only acts were knocking on door and calling police. Galindo v. Town of Silver City, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 459, 2005 WL 762120, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1074. ---- Suppliers, police, particular persons under color of law

Company which manufactured pepper spray used by state police in pilot study to test police needs in situation where use of some force was justified was not a state actor such that it deprived person, who was sprayed with pepper spray by police of federal statutory or constitutional rights while acting under color of state law; there was no evidence that manufacturer or marketer and distributor of pepper spray did anything more than provide state police with product and possibly receive feedback on its use. Murphy v. Cuomo, N.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 671. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1075. ---- Miscellaneous, police, particular persons under color of law

Police officers were not so involved in aiding title holder's repossession of boat from purported owner under contract for deed that the deprivation of the boat was state action, for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment's due process guarantee, where officers were not asked to accompany title holder to purported owner's house to ensure repossession went smoothly, and they did not arrive with him; rather, officers were summoned to purported owner's house to resolve breach of the peace that was in progress, and, before officers arrived, title holder had gained access to boat and was already in process of repossessing it. Moore v. Carpenter, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 404 F.3d 1043. Constitutional Law 254(5); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Under Alabama law, coverage in city's liability insurance policy for violations of constitutional or civil rights did not conflict with and render ambiguous definition of "insured" to include employees only while acting within scope of their duties; thus, policy's coverage was not illusory, and consequently police officer and second city employee who allegedly sexually assaulted arrestees were not "insureds" for purposes of arrestees' §§1983 action against officer and employee, based on finding that their alleged conduct was outside scope of their duties. Employers Mut. Cas. Co. v. Mallard, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2005, 402 F.3d 1085. Insurance 2272

City could not be held liable to shooting victims for due process violation under state-created danger theory, though assault rifle used by shooter had been obtained by and was being stored in his house by his father, a police officer, absent showing of any specific knowledge by police of potential for harm to known victim, or that police used their authority to create opportunity that would not have otherwise existed. Morin v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2002, 309 F.3d 316, rehearing denied 57 Fed.Appx. 213, 2003 WL 151180. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Police officer was not acting under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983, when he threatened to bring defamation lawsuit against motorist who filed complaint about officer's conduct during traffic stop, even though officer's lawsuit relied on state statute allowing peace officers to bring defamation actions against those who filed false complaints against them, inasmuch as threatened defamation action was personal to officer and would redress his alleged reputational injury, and mere fact that enabling statute existed was insufficient to make action which officer privately elected to take thereunder "state action." Gritchen v. Collier, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 254 F.3d 807.

Civil Rights 1326(8)

Police officer who was hired by corporation to provide security acted under color of state law, for purposes of civil rights law, in preventing former corporate officer from entering corporate offices to retrieve his personal property; police officer identified himself as city police officer, and threatened to use authority conveyed to him by virtue of his status to arrest corporate officer if he did not vacate corporate premises. Laughlin v. Olszewski, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 102 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Girlfriend, a police officer who threated her estranged lover with physical harm by members of city police department and used her friendship with another officer to influence investigation of lover's complaint against her, acted under "color of law" for purposes of §§ 1983 liability. Stack v. Perez, D.Conn.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 106. Civil Rights 1326(8)

City police officer acted "under color of law" in assisting festival security in expelling motorcycle club members from city park, and thus was subject to liability under §§ 1983, despite city's contention that officer merely agreed to stand by in case of trouble, where officer was armed and uniformed, officer approached members at direction of festival security officer, and members obeyed officer because she was in uniform. Villegas v. City of Gilroy, N.D.Cal.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 1207. Civil Rights 1326(8)

City police officers who assisted in alleged illegal repossession action at restaurant were acting under color of state law, for purpose of restaurant owner's §§ 1983 action; officers were in their uniforms, were carrying firearms and driving police cruisers, and allegedly threatened to arrest owner several times as events unfolded at restaurant. Pruitt v. Pernell, E.D.N.C.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 738, affirmed 2006 WL 870638. Civil Rights 1326(8)

New York statute granting authority to peace officers of duly incorporated society for prevention of cruelty to animals to take certain actions to prevent animal cruelty did not convert individual peace officers, who seized owner's animals and arrested owner on animal cruelty charges, or society itself, into state actors, as required for owner to assert §§ 1983 claims against them; society did not act on behalf of state, it was not clothed with authority of state law, New York had not ceded governmental functions to society, nor had it assumed control of society's policies and operations. Fabrikant v. French, N.D.N.Y.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 303. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Depending on extent of his involvement, police officer's conduct in escorting private individual into locked building, over building owner's protests and without warrant, to retrieve items allegedly belonging to individual from storekeeper's premises without notice to storekeeper could constitute state action for purposes of federal civil rights action alleging deprivation of storekeeper's rights under Due Process Clause. Yeomans v. Wallace, D.Conn.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 70. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Hispanic owner of seized identification card that was photographed for newspaper article regarding fake identification and shoplifting was barred from asserting §§ 1983 or 1981 claims against town police department, absent showing that officer who provided card to newspaper reporter violated owner's constitutional rights, or that town had any related policy or custom concerning officer's conduct. Olivera v. Town of Woodbury, New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 674, affirmed 99 Fed.Appx. 298, 2004 WL 1147072. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Fact that a supervising police officer gave another officer authority to go to motorist's home to issue traffic citations, which resulted in officer's alleged use of excessive force against motorist and issuance of improper citation for resisting arrest, did not render city liable under § 1983 for officer's actions; there was no evidence that supervising officer was a policy-making official. Hummel v. City of Carlisle, S.D.Ohio 2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 839. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Allegation that individual falsely represented to neighbor that he was retired police officer was insufficient to make individual "state actor" for purposes of neighbor's § 1983 action, even if complainant's purpose in having neighbor arrested was to prevent him from disclosing that individual was not retired police officer, absent evidence that individual was involved in state's decision to arrest and prosecute neighbor. Torgerson v. Writsel, E.D.N.Y.2000, 109 F.Supp.2d 107, affirmed 121 Fed.Appx. 893, 2005 WL 195103. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private repossession company did not receive substantial assistance from uniformed police officers who observed repossession of owner's vehicles, and thus, repossession company was not "state actor" for purposes of § 1983 action alleging that repossession violated owners' due process rights; officers were present to preserve peace and not to assist in repossession, officers largely remained at distance which prevented them from even hearing what was being said, and even though one officer's statement to owner that repossession company had "repo order" was legally inaccurate, it did not provide mantle of authority that enhanced repossession company's power. Sherry v. Associates Commercial Corp., W.D.Pa.1998, 60 F.Supp.2d 470, affirmed 191 F.3d 445. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Retired police officer alleging retaliation for protected speech, i.e., reporting an alleged assault by another officer, a corporal, failed to prove that the corporal abused the power of his office so as to satisfy color of law requirement under §§ 1983; title of corporal was one of seniority, not of supervisory rank, and while that seniority allowed the corporal to assign the officer to a particular patrol area on at least one occasion, the officer himself had performed this assignment duty when he was the senior officer on a shift. Chernavsky v. Township of Holmdel Police Dept., C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 136 Fed.Appx. 507, 2005 WL 1394865, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1076. Poll-watchers, particular persons under color of law

Conduct of poll-watchers was made possible only because they were clothed with authority of state law; thus civil rights action under this section was appropriate redress for any misuse of that power and plaintiff, who while attempting to aid and advise some poll-watchers, was allegedly assaulted by defendant poll-watchers was entitled to maintain action thereunder. Tiryak v. Jordan, E.D.Pa.1979, 472 F.Supp. 822. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1077. Polygraph examiners, particular persons under color of law

Polygraph examiner, who administered test to applicant for police officer position, could be held liable for questioning of applicant regarding her sex life which violated her privacy and associational interests, even though examiner contended that he was an independent contractor rather than state employee under civil rights law. Thorne v. City of El Segundo, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1983, 726 F.2d 459, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 380, 469 U.S. 979, 83 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1340

1078. Prisons, particular persons under color of law

Jail was not a "person," and therefore not amenable to suit under § 1983. Preval v. Reno, E.D.Va.1999, 57 F.Supp.2d 307, affirmed in part, modified in part, vacated in part 203 F.3d 821. Civil Rights 1348

1079. Prison chaplains, particular persons under color of law

Prison chaplain was not state actor, for purposes of § 1983, when he prohibited inmate, who practiced Messianic Judaism, from attending Protestant activities at prison; although paid by the state, chaplain's decision to excommunicate inmate, to emphasize gravity of inmate's teaching that salvation was possible other than through Jesus Christ and to induce true repentance, was inherently ecclesiastical function, and there was no evidence that religious doctrine was subterfuge or that excommunication was used to impose prison administrators' will. Montano v. Hedgepeth, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 120 F.3d 844. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Volunteer chaplain at state prison was "state actor" for purposes of inmate's § 1983 action alleging that volunteer chaplain and others denied inmate equal participation in chapel services; volunteer chaplain's right to conduct services in prison chapel was privilege created by state, and he signed agreement to abide by prison's regulations and policies, including prison's regulation that guaranteed all inmates freedom to practice religion, subject to security restrictions. Phelps v. Dunn, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1992, 965 F.2d 93. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1080. Prison guards or officials, particular persons under color of law

Prison custodian is not guarantor of prisoner's safety, and mere fact that prisoner is harmed will not subject custodian to liability under § 1983. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1358; Prisons 10

Prison maintenance worker was not acting under color of state law when he punched inmate in nose, and so inmate could not maintain civil rights action against worker; incident, which occurred during horseplay between worker and inmate that included worker and inmate teasing each other regarding their personal attributes, involved purely private aim and no misuse of state authority. Harris v. Rhodes, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 94 F.3d 196. Civil Rights 1326(8)

County jailer, in allegedly flourishing and threatening to use his gun against executive director of multi-county jail, acted under color of state law within meaning of civil rights statute, where jailer had authority or power to carry the gun in the jail only because he was the elected jailer of the county; that jailer acted against a fellow public employee was of no matter. Cassady v. Tackett, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1991, 938 F.2d 693. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Prison psychiatrist's refusal to testify in murder prosecution against inmate was not sufficient by itself to expose psychiatrist to civil rights liability; psychiatrist essentially acted as private individual in refusing to testify, not under color of his authority as prison employee, and inmate's proper remedy was motion to subpoena, not civil rights action. Taylor v. List, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1989, 880 F.2d 1040. Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1326(8)

For purpose of maintaining federal civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, Director of Department of Corrections, warden, and record officer supervisor had clearly acted under color of state law when they calculated prisoner's release date, and prisoner clearly had constitutionally protected liberty interest in being released from prison before end of his term for good behavior. Toney-El v. Franzen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 777 F.2d 1224, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 2909, 476 U.S. 1178, 90 L.Ed.2d 994. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Section 1983 action against prison records officers who analyzed prisoner's sentence was appropriate avenue to remedy prisoner's alleged wrongful detention due to misinterpretation of sentencing statutes; prison records officers were acting under color of state law in analyzing sentence, and alleged wrongful custody in prison involved deprivation of constitutional right. Haygood v. Younger, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1985, 769 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 3333, 478 U.S. 1020, 92 L.Ed.2d 739. Civil Rights 1098; Civil Rights 1326(8)

Jail supervisor did not violate female corrections officer's civil rights, as he was not acting under color of state law when he reported her alleged assault of him at bar; he was off-duty and out of uniform when she allegedly grabbed his genitals, and he did not arrest, restrain, or attempt to restrain her or to direct ensuing investigation. Hendricks v. Office of Clermont County Sheriff, S.D.Ohio 2005, 415 F.Supp.2d 782. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Inmate's claims under §§ 1983, 1985, and 1986 against various correctional facility officials in their individual and official capacities, seeking monetary, declaratory, and injunctive relief for officials' alleged violation of inmate's constitutional rights during his incarceration, failed to state a claim under Bivens insofar as inmate sued officials in their official capacity for monetary relief. Khan v. U.S., E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 409. United States 50.10(3)

Client rights facilitator employed by state correctional facility had insufficient personal involvement in allegedly unconstitutional practice of secluding civilly committed sexual offenders to incur § 1983 liability; at most, facilitator merely communicated seclusion policy to inmates. West v. Macht, E.D.Wis.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 966, affirmed 333 F.3d 745. Civil Rights 1358

State drivers license examiner acted under color of state law while supervising prisoner while she was on work release at drivers license examination center, and thus could be held liable under § 1983 for violating prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights by forcing her to have sex with him in exchange for increased privileges; work release contract gave examiner control of prisoner, and prisoner was not free to leave while on work release and could be subject to punishment if she disobeyed examiner's commands. Smith v. Cochran, N.D.Okla.2001, 216 F.Supp.2d 1286, affirmed 339 F.3d 1205. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Corrections officer who raped prisoner was acting under color of state law, as required to give rise to § 1983 claims, even though private firm ran correctional facility; officer exercised coercive authority over prisoner through his employment, used his employment status to gain access to her prison cell, and state was directly involved in aspects of prison life. Giron v. Corrections Corp. of America, D.N.M.1998, 14 F.Supp.2d 1245. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Prison officials acting in their official capacity are acting under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 action. Richmond v. Cagle, E.D.Wis.1996, 920 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private operator of county jail could be held liable for constitutional violations under "public function" theory in civil rights action brought by arrestee. Blumel v. Mylander, M.D.Fla.1996, 919 F.Supp. 423. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Prison officials that were not directly involved in moving inmate into "bubble cell" could not be held liable to inmate in civil rights action based on deliberate indifference claim. Killen v. McBride, N.D.Ind.1994, 907 F.Supp. 302, affirmed 70 F.3d 1274. Civil Rights 1358

District of Columbia corrections officials are persons acting under color of state law for purposes of federal civil rights action. Women Prisoners of District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1994, 877 F.Supp. 634, vacated in part, modified in part 899 F.Supp. 659, remanded 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S.App.D.C. 247, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1552, 520 U.S. 1196, 137 L.Ed.2d 701, on remand 968 F.Supp. 744. Civil Rights 1354

Prisoner could not recover against prison guards on excessive force claim under cruel and unusual clause of Eighth Amendment for another guard's alleged acts of shoving him against wall and punching him in stomach where they did not participate in single violent act against prisoner. Burton v. Kuchel, N.D.Ill.1994, 865 F.Supp. 456. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

Alleged conduct of correction officer in coming to inmate's cell while off duty, and making sexual demands, and in throwing feces and urine at inmate after inmate rejected demands could not have been taken "under color of state law," and could not be basis of § 1983 action. Rembert v. Holland, W.D.Mich.1990, 735 F.Supp. 733. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Correctional facility wardens and administrators were not "persons" under § 1983 and could not be held liable in their official capacities in suit brought by inmate under § 1983, seeking damages for officials' alleged demonstration of deliberate indifference to his medical needs in violation of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. Baker v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 231, 2003 WL 21008830, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358 to institute practice that contravened state-wide policy, and provided untethered knife without adequate supervision to prisoner who had recent history of committing violent crimes with knives, were sufficient to state § 1983 claim under "state-created danger" theory of liability to hold warden liable for substantive due process violation; warden's alleged conduct was sufficient to shock judicial conscience. Waller v. Trippett, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2002, 49 Fed.Appx. 45, 2002 WL 31296347, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Prisons 10

1081. Prisoners, particular persons under color of law

Prison guard who was taken captive and raped by inmate could not show breach of due process clause, for purposes of a civil rights claim; it was not prison officials who took guard captive and assaulted her, it was inmate, and inmate was not acting under color of any state statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage. Nobles v. Brown, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 985 F.2d 235. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Prisons 10

State prison inmate's claim in in forma pauperis § 1983 action, that a fellow inmate violated her right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment by pouring hot water on her, was frivolous, requiring dismissal; fellow inmate did not act under color of state law, and alleged assault was private conduct not actionable under § 1983. Figalora v. Smith, D.Del.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 658. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

County officials' actions of allowing prisoner to work in an unsupervised work detail, and then to remain at large after his escape, did not deprive plaintiffs' sons of life and liberty, as required in § 1983 action alleging deprivation of due process; escaped prisoner was not a state agent, but a third party, when he shot at plaintiffs' sons, killing one of them, and county was not aware that the victims, as opposed to the public at large, faced any special danger. Gaston v. Houston County, Texas, E.D.Tex.2002, 196 F.Supp.2d 445. Constitutional Law 255(2); Counties 146

Allegations that state prison inmate's cellmate caused the inmate's typing paper to be confiscated by prison officials by telling prison officials that another cellmate had concealed weapon in the cell did not demonstrate that cellmate was acting under color of state law, as required to state cognizable claim under § 1983. Goodell v. Anthony, E.D.Mich.2001, 157 F.Supp.2d 796. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1082. Probation officers, particular persons under color of law

False imprisonment, rising to constitutional deprivation of liberty, was not occasioned by Virginia probation officer's alleged failure to assist probationer in investigating refusal of officials at veterans hospital to issue him periodic passes, which refusal violated probation conditions, since the probation officer did not falsely imprison probationer or deprive him of his liberty, even if hospital officials were substituted as defendants in suit under this section, federal relief would not lie since any deprivations by those officials would not have been under color of state law. Lee v. Baroski, W.D.Va.1975, 404 F.Supp. 1394. Civil Rights 1037; False Imprisonment 5

1083. Process servers, particular persons under color of law

Although two defendants, in their capacity as process servers, may have acted with requisite state action for actions to be maintained against them for deprivation of rights under color of state law, the actions could not be maintained under this section, where no default judgment was entered against plaintiff in first suit and, pursuant to stipulation, she filed answer and counterclaim, and, in the second suit, issue was joined in consolidated hearing before special master, so that plaintiff had notice and opportunity to be heard on all claims and was not deprived of any rights secured by Constitution or laws of the United States. Wilkins v. Rogers, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 581 F.2d 399. Civil Rights 1037 against persons without notice and who were charged with violating this section did not engage in state action directly, but did engage in "state action" on theory that they performed a "public function," and fact that defendants sought to take advantage of authority to perform act of public power by signing blank affidavits of service without actually effecting service did not remove their activities from the "public" classification. U. S. v. Wiseman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 445 F.2d 792, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 346, 404 U.S. 967, 30 L.Ed.2d 287. Civil Rights 1808

Claimed denial of due process as result of asserted false affidavit executed by process server could constitute action under color of state law for purposes of federal civil rights suit. Carrasco v. Klein, E.D.N.Y.1974, 381 F.Supp. 782. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1084. Protestors, particular persons under color of law

Chippewa Indians could not bring action under federal civil rights statute against protestors for interference with their treaty-guaranteed right to spear walleye, since protestors' acts did not constitute state action, and there was no evidence of conspiracy between protestors and sheriffs to violate Indians' rights. Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians v. Stop Treaty Abuse-Wisconsin, Inc., W.D.Wis.1991, 759 F.Supp. 1339. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1085. Psychotherapists, particular persons under color of law

Private therapist hired by mother to treat her children, who made report of her suspicions of child abuse to Division of Family and Child Services and who was present when police detective interviewed children regarding alleged abuse, was not "state actor" whose actions could be fairly attributed to state in order to state claim under § 1983, where therapist had no formal arrangement with county prosecutor's office or with any other governmental agency and played only insignificant role in detective's interviews. Lowe v. Aldridge, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1565. Civil Rights 1326(4)

University security officer's psychologist was not state actor for purposes of § 1983 claim; psychologist was engaged in private practice and was not formally associated with university, and university security officer conceded that university did not refer him to psychologist. Layser v. Morrison, E.D.Pa.1995, 935 F.Supp. 562. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1085A. Psychiatrists, particular persons under color of state law

Psychiatrist in private practice did not become "state actor," for purposes of claim under §§ 1983, by occasionally performing hypnosis sessions at request of law enforcement, sometimes without compensation; although psychiatrist conducted 200 hypnosis sessions for police over 17 years in private practice, he was not under contract and his services were rendered only about once per month on average. Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 447 F.3d 569. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1086. Public authorities, particular persons under color of law--Generally

"State action" requirement of § 1983 was satisfied, for purposes of action by physician who was not reappointed, by involvement of hospital authority, which was public corporation created by statute to serve public purpose, even though public corporate hospital authority had no direct input on day-to-day operation of hospital, where hospital authority's repayments of bonds it issued and mortgages it entered into were dependent on successful operation of hospital, authority continued to finance hospital, authority was informed of decisions, including decision to terminate plaintiff physician's privileges, and authority was lessor of facility and continued to hold purse strings. Jatoi v. Hurst-Euless-Bedford Hosp. Authority, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 807 F.2d 1214, modified on denial of rehearing 819 F.2d 545, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 709, 484 U.S. 1010, 98 L.Ed.2d 660. 1087. ---- Housing authorities, public authorities, particular persons under color of law

Tenants in public housing development could assert section 1983 claims against local housing authorities based upon failure to establish utility allowance in compliance with Housing Act and accompanying HUD regulations. Hill v. Ogburn, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1987, 812 F.2d 679.

Actions of City of Newport, Kentucky Housing Authority in terminating the executive director, who allegedly was denied substantive and procedural due process, satisfied the requisite "state action" element for a claim under Civil Rights Act of 1871. Salisbury v. Housing Authority of City of Newport, E.D.Ky.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1433. Civil Rights 1396

1088. ---- Hospital authorities, public authorities, particular persons under color of law

Denial, by private healthcare management company, of physician's request for staff membership and surgical privileges at public hospital did not constitute state action under nexus/joint action test for purposes of physician's § 1983 action, even though county hospital authority received direct financial benefits from management company, agreed to indemnify management company for any liability arising from its management of hospital, and authorized management company to extend staff membership and clinical privileges in name of hospital authority; hospital authority did not participate in decision to deny physician's application, there was no evidence that hospital authority benefitted financially from application denial, and creation of agency relationship between hospital authority and management company was insufficient to transform management company into state actor. Patrick v. Floyd Medical Center, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2000, 201 F.3d 1313. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1089. ---- Regional planning authorities, public authorities, particular persons under color of law

Tahoe Regional Planning Authority's operation constituted conduct "under color of state law" within meaning of this section. Lake Country Estates, Inc. v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, U.S.Nev.1979, 99 S.Ct. 1171, 440 U.S. 391, 59 L.Ed.2d 401, on remand 474 F.Supp. 901.

1090. ---- Sports and exhibition authorities, public authorities, particular persons under color of law

Licensee could not, on basis of conduct of members of New York Racing Association's (NYRA) board in their individual capacities, allege existence of symbiotic relationship between NYRA and State of New York so as to make NYRA a state actor for purposes of § 1983. Murphy v. New York Racing Ass'n, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1999, 76 F.Supp.2d 489. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Policy of New Jersey Sports and Exhibition Authority forbidding the solicitation of money and the distribution of literature and other goods at sports complex in exchange for a solicited donation was "under color of state law" so as to support a claim under this section for deprivation of rights, notwithstanding that Authority may have been engaged in business activities of a private sector nature, where the Authority's "certificate of incorporation" established it as a "public body corporate and politic * * * as an instrumentality of the State," action taken by members of Authority was subject to veto by governor, and Authority could not have withstood state challenge of its enabling act without determination that it was public entity and state instrumentality. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, D.C.N.J.1981, 532 F.Supp. 1088, affirmed 691 F.2d 155. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1091. ---- Transit authorities, public authorities, particular persons under color of law

Adoption of general policy of testing for drugs or alcohol immediately after an on-the-job accident or unusual operating incident was exercise of "governmental function" by metropolitan transit authority, as rule was certainly grounded in social, political, and regulatory activities of authority; thus, authority was immune from suit for constitutional and civil rights claims of employees discharged after substance testing following operating incident. Sanders v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, C.A.D.C.1987, 819 F.2d 1151, 260 U.S.App.D.C. 359 . Civil Rights 1376(10); Municipal Corporations 724

Even if commuter railroad was municipal entity constituting person within meaning of § 1983, railroad was not liable for actions of its employee under doctrine of respondeat superior, absent any showing that final policymaker was involved in employee's alleged wrongful acts or that wrongful act occurred as result of official policy or custom. Kelly v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., S.D.N.Y.1999, 37 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Alabama Department of Transportation violated contractor's rights under Federal Highway Act under color of state law when it rejected contractor's initial low bid and resolicited federally funded highway project, thus giving contractor claim under § 1983, though Federal Highway Administration forced rejection of bid by improperly refusing to concur in award, causing state to face forfeiture of over $8 million in federal highway funds. Clark Const. Co., Inc. v. Pena, M.D.Ala.1996, 930 F.Supp. 1470. Civil Rights 1041

Employer which counted money for bridge and tunnel authority was not "state actor" and thus former employee could not recover on § 1983 claim based on violation of constitutional rights for being fired after testing positive for cocaine use during random urinalysis; authority did not require that private employer perform drug testing, and participation by authority was limited to commercial functions. Atkinson v. B.C.C. Associates, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1993, 829 F.Supp. 637. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private corporation's operation of regional transport services for Chicago transit authority did not make corporation "state actor" for purposes of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, as mass transportation is not area traditionally exclusive prerogative of state; thus, under public function test, corporation could not be liable as state actor to minors whom corporation's driver attempted to rape. Thomas v. Cannon, N.D.Ill.1990, 751 F.Supp. 765. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1092. Public employees, particular persons under color of law

Generally, public employee acts under color of state law within meaning of § 1983 while acting in his official capacity or while exercising his responsibilities pursuant to state law. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether supervisor of municipal employee acted under color of state law, precluding summary judgment on employee's equal protection claim in lawsuit under §§ 1983 that was based upon alleged sexual harassment by co-worker. Valentine v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 452 F.3d 670. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Current wife acted under state law for § 1983 purposes when, as an employee of county district attorney's office, current wife illegally used DA office's medical eligibility data system (MEDS) computer system to find her husband's ex-wife at a battered women's shelter in order to serve ex-wife papers relating to child custody issues, since current wife's actions, though improper, related to the performance of her official duties; current wife abused her responsibilities and acted under pretense of her county employment by asserting her state-authorized passcode to enter into MEDS database. McDade v. West, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2000, 223 F.3d 1135. Civil Rights 1326(2)

In certain instances co-employees may exercise de facto authority over sexual harassment victims such that they act under color of law for purposes of § 1983. David v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1344, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 157, 522 U.S. 858, 139 L.Ed.2d 102. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Public works employee named as defendant in §§ 1983 action was not acting "under color of state law" at time of alleged rape of public library employee in library, regardless of fact alleged rape occurred on town property and even if alleged victim was engaged in work-related activities; both town employees were off-duty and had agreed to meet outside of work for drinks, and public works employee was not performing any duties related to his employment and was not exercising any authority granted by state. Priller v. Town of Smyrna, D.Del.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 371. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Janitor at county courthouse was acting "under color of state law" at time he allegedly raped minor performing community service at courthouse, for purposes of minor's §§ 1983 suit against janitor, even if janitor had not been specifically ordered to oversee minor during her community service, where factual evidence demonstrated that janitor's actions occurred during his employment, at his place of employment, and by virtue of his official position. Doe v. Patton, E.D.Ky.2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 595, reconsideration denied, affirmed 2006 WL 959812. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Public employee will be subject to liability for damages under § 1983 if he knew or reasonably should have known that action he took within sphere of his official responsibility would violate constitutional rights of plaintiff, or if he took action with malicious intention to cause depravation of constitutional rights or other injury to plaintiff. Pandolfi de Rinaldis v. Llavona, D.Puerto Rico 1999, 62 F.Supp.2d 426. Civil Rights 1031

Employee of New York State Canal Corporation was not acting under color of state law and thus employee's supervisors, Corporation and New York State Thruway were not liable in minor's § 1983 action alleging her rights were violated by allowing her to work with employee on a lock and by allowing employee to sexually assault her at lock; employee did not exercise power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the he was clothed with the authority of state law. Rose v. Zillioux, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 107, 2003 WL 22849850, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(2); Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1360

Purchaser of real property at tax sale did not act "under color of state law," either by purchasing that property or by filing quiet title action in state court to gain possession thereof; there was no preexisting debt between delinquent taxpayer and purchaser, and suit did not attempt any seizure of property with cooperation of state officials. Tunstall v. Office of Judicial Support of Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1987, 820 F.2d 631. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Police officer's endorsement of report regarding interview of mayor about crime involving mayor's grandson did not address "matter of public concern," and, therefore, was not subject to First Amendment free speech protection; report was nothing other than type of report that was regularly filed, and identity of suspect did not turn suspect's statement into speech on matter of public concern. Kelly v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 395. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Purchaser of property that was sold by IRS to satisfy a federal tax lien allegedly owed by its owner was not a state actor subject to liability under § 1983. Brown v. I.R.S., C.A.6 (Ky.) 2001, 3 Fed.Appx. 272, 2001 WL 92120, Unreported. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(1)

1094. Railroad officials, particular persons under color of law

Railroad police officer, when acting as member of the railroad police force, was acting pursuant to statutorily conferred right by the state for railroad to appoint and maintain a police force, and thus was a state actor for civil rights statute purposes. Roby v. Skupien, N.D.Ill.1991, 758 F.Supp. 471. Civil Rights 1326(8)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Defendant who allegedly disrupted judgment debtor's financial transactions without notice while acting in his capacity as court-appointed receiver was acting under color of state law for purposes of judgment debtor's civil rights action. Lebbos v. Judges of Superior Court, Santa Clara County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 883 F.2d 810. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Receiver of corporation appointed by state court acts under color of state law within contemplation of this section. Hohensee v. Grier, M.D.Pa.1974, 373 F.Supp. 1358, affirmed 524 F.2d 1403, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 2659, 426 U.S. 940, 49 L.Ed.2d 392, rehearing denied 97 S.Ct. 196, 429 U.S. 874, 50 L.Ed.2d 158. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1096. Referees, particular persons under color of law

This section applied to alleged conduct of referee and administrative official of juvenile court in assaulting plaintiff during traffic violation proceedings over which referee presided, and civil rights action was not subject to dismissal on ground that alleged assault was not "under color of state law" because such an attack was conduct without scope of referee's power and not an abuse of the power he possessed by virtue of state law. Lucarell v. McNair, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 453 F.2d 836. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1097. Restaurant employees or owners, particular persons under color of law

The existence of state statutes, Code 1950, §§ 24-120, 37-182, 38.1-597, 53-42, 58-790, 58-880, requiring racial segregation in other contexts or the history of custom of treating Negroes in state as inferiors did not, in absence of showing of significant state involvement, establish actionable claim of Negro for damages based upon refusal of private restaurant owner to serve him. Williams v. Howard Johnson's Inc. of Washington, C.A.4 (Va.) 1963, 323 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Under this section creating a civil action against any person who under color of any statute, etc., deprives any United States citizen of any rights and privileges secured by the Constitution and laws, in order to constitute conduct under "color of law", defendant's refusal to serve plaintiff must be state action, and there must be a deprivation of a right, privilege or immunity "secured by the Constitution and laws" of the United States. Williams v. Hot Shoppes, Inc., C.A.D.C.1961, 293 F.2d 835, 110 U.S.App.D.C. 358, certiorari denied 82 S.Ct. 1562, 370 U.S. 925, 8 L.Ed.2d 505, rehearing denied 83 S.Ct. 16, 371 U.S. 854, 9 L.Ed.2d 91. Civil Rights 1304

In § 1983 action, plaintiffs sufficiently alleged that restaurant owner was a state actor by alleging that owner called police after plaintiffs refused to leave restaurant, that police arrived 30 minutes later and engaged owner in a 20-minute conversation, and that officer arrested one plaintiff after conversation ended abruptly; it would have been reasonable to infer that during conversation, owner urged officers to arrest plaintiffs, without probable cause, in furtherance of what became the shared goal of depriving plaintiffs of rights guaranteed by Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA). Bang v. Utopia Restaurant, S.D.N.Y.1996, 923 F.Supp. 46. Civil Rights 1396

Persons who were allegedly excluded from restaurant because of race did not have claim against the restaurant based on the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendments or federal civil rights statutes, as there was no showing of color of law. Bermudez Zenon v. Restaurant Compostela, Inc., D.Puerto Rico 1992, 790 F.Supp. 41. Civil Rights 1326(4); Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

That public agency was landlord of restaurant which allegedly had dress code that violated waitresses' rights to equal protection did not constitute state action so as to permit suit under this section relating to civil action for deprivation of rights. Marentette v. Michigan Host, Inc., E.D.Mich.1980, 506 F.Supp. 909. Civil Rights 1326(11)

School district board of education was not an arm of State of New York entitled to Eleventh Amendment immunity in former substitute teacher's §§ 1983 action alleging discriminatory and retaliatory discharge; New York law construed boards of education in New York as municipal corporations, board members were elected locally, school district was funded by state and local property taxes, state treasury was not obliged to pay directly any judgment against a local board, and there would not be clear injury to sovereign dignity of State of New York by allowing local boards of education to be sued in federal court. Woods v. Rondout Valley Central School Dist. Bd of Educ., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 466 F.3d 232. Federal Courts 270

No special relationship existed between school district and its students during a school-sponsored football practice held outside of the time during which students were required to attend school for non-voluntary activities; therefore no state action existed under Section 1983 so as to enable school district officials to be held liable for due process violation arising from coaches' failure to protect football player from racially motivated attack committed during practice by teammate. Priester v. Lowndes County, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 354 F.3d 414, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 153, 543 U.S. 829, 160 L.Ed.2d 44. Constitutional Law 254(4); Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 164

Denial of tenure to teacher at postgraduate school which received approximately $90,000 of its total income of $7,700,000 from the state, with the largest amount of state assistance being given to museum operated by the school, which had five of its 43 directors as state or local officials, designated ex officio, and which had the obligation to file annual reports and to allow inspections by the state was not "state action." Lamb v. Rantoul, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1977, 561 F.2d 409. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Regional educational service center and two officials engaged in state action when they discharged an employee, and were thus subject to the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment and § 1983. Jenkins v. Area Cooperative Educ. Services, D.Conn.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 117, modified on reconsideration 2004 WL 413267. Civil Rights 1326(11); Constitutional Law 213(2); Constitutional Law 254(2)

School policy banning "props" from senior portraits in yearbook, which effectively precluded publication of photograph of high school senior wearing trap shooting attire and holding shotgun, constituted state action upon which §§ 1983 claim could be based. Douglass v. Londonderry School Bd., D.N.H.2005, 413 F.Supp.2d 1. Civil Rights 1326(6)

School personnel who exhibit deliberate indifference by failing to take appropriate action when they have knowledge that abuse of student is occurring can be held liable under § 1983 for failure to protect. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1065

Defendant's position as Secretary of Education, in and of itself, was insufficient to establish supervisory liability under § 1983 for sexual abuse of female student by police officer assigned to school. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1356

A school board is a "person" who may be held liable under section 1983. Myers v. Loudoun County School Bd., E.D.Va.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1262, affirmed 418 F.3d 395. Civil Rights 1346

High school activity association engaged in "state action" for purposes of § 1983 where it was primarily created and funded by public secondary schools and where schools delegated responsibility of supervising and regulating interscholastic activities. Pottgen v. Missouri State High School Activities Ass'n, E.D.Mo.1994, 857 F.Supp. 654, reversed 40 F.3d 926, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Discharge of a vocational counselor from school which operated as an alternative high school for students who had trouble functioning in a traditional high school setting did not constitute state action of purposes of federal jurisdiction, though school was funded in large part by local, state and federal sources and subject to extensive regulation, and though plaintiff counselor's position was funded by the Massachusetts Committee on Criminal Justice, which was established pursuant to state statute and comprised of various state officials of appointees, where there were no regulations or conditions which related to suspension or termination of individuals employed by the school and the Committee was involved only with decision as to whether plaintiff should be replaced and not whether she should be terminated. Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, D.C.Mass.1980, 488 F.Supp. 764, affirmed 641 F.2d 14, certiorari granted 102 S.Ct. 385, 454 U.S. 891, 70 L.Ed.2d 205, affirmed 102 S.Ct. 2764, 457 U.S. 830, 73 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Connection between the Maryland School for the Blind and the state of Maryland was sufficiently substantial so as to constitute its decision to terminate enrollment of 18-year-old, legally blind, multiple handicapped child "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1 and this subchapter. Taylor v. Maryland School for Blind, D.C.Md.1976, 409 F.Supp. 148, affirmed 542 F.2d 1169. Civil Rights 1326(6); Constitutional Law 254(4)

1099. ---- Colleges or universities, schools, particular persons under color of law

State-university professor was state actor, as required to support female student's claim under § 1983 that professor violated her equal protection rights by engaging in sexual harassment. Hayut v. State University of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 733, 197 A.L.R. Fed. 659. Constitutional Law 213(2)

Actions of male cadets at The Citadel, a state-supported military college, in allegedly engaging in gender-based harassment and discrimination designed to force a female cadet to withdraw from the college, were not fairly attributable to the State of South Carolina, so as to be considered to have been taken under color of state law for purposes of liability under § 1983, on ground the State provides financial assistance to The Citadel and extensively regulates its military program; while the actions of the cadets may have been made possible by the system established by the state, the cadets did not receive significant encouragement and did not exercise the state's coercive powers in so acting. Mentavlos v. Anderson, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2001, 249 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 349, 534 U.S. 952, 151 L.Ed.2d 264. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Yale College was not state actor, for purposes of § 1983, though institution was created by special state law, it furthered governmental objectives, and governor and lieutenant governor were ex officio board members, absent showing that state controlled board; governor and lieutenant governor were only two of nineteen board members. Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale College, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2000, 237 F.3d 81, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 201, 534 U.S. 888, 151 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Law student failed to state cause of action against school or law professor under civil rights provision creating remedy when federal rights were violated under color of state law where neither school nor professor were acting under color of state law. Radcliff v. Landau, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 883 F.2d 1481, mandate clarified 892 F.2d 51. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Employment decision by private university which had a "symbiotic relationship" with state would make employment decisions state action for purposes of federal civil rights law. Molthan v. Temple University of Com. System of Higher Educ., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1985, 778 F.2d 955. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Claim of sex discrimination in awarding of grades at law school of defendant college was not cognizable under this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law where college was not a public institution and was not sufficiently intertwined with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to meet the "state action" requirement of the section. Rice v. President and Fellows of Harvard College, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1981, 663 F.2d 336, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1976, 456 U.S. 928, 72 L.Ed.2d 444. Civil Rights 1326(6)

There was sufficient state involvement in Pennsylvania State University's selection of trustees to constitute "state action" within meaning of this section. Benner v. Oswald, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 592 F.2d 174, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 62, 444 U.S. 832, 62 L.Ed.2d 41.

College of veterinary medicine and its professors could not be characterized as state actors for purposes of former student's § 1983 claim, which arose when student was expelled after twice failing her first year exam; notwithstanding the college's strong state ties, including statutory creation, and receiving some state funding, the state did not have direct operational authority over the administration of the college, employees of the college were not classified as members of the state civil service, and the vast majority of the day-to-day operations at the college were expressly committed to its private discretion, such as creating the academic curriculum, hiring faculty, maintaining discipline and formulating educational policies. Curto v. Smith, N.D.N.Y.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 132, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 87 Fed.Appx. 788, 2004 WL 287290, affirmed 93 Fed.Appx. 332, 2004 WL 539234, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1689, 544 U.S. 935, 161 L.Ed.2d 504, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 1653, 544 U.S. 919, 161 L.Ed.2d 475, rehearing denied 125 S.Ct. 2293, 544 U.S. 1057, 161 L.Ed.2d 1105. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Student association of state university was "state actor," which could be sued under §§ 1983 for violating First and Fourteenth Amendments rights of student organization members by manner in which association allocated monies collected through imposition of mandatory student activities fund contributions; association members worked closely with university employees in collection and allocation process. Amidon v. Student Ass'n of State University of New York, N.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 136. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Former state university students could maintain §§ 1983 claim against university officials, in their official capacities, seeking injunction requiring removal from their records of entries relating to their allegedly unlawful disciplining, despite claim that entries were made in past and official capacity injunctions could be obtained only with respect to prospective activities; if allowed to remain, disciplinary records could have adverse future consequences to students. Gomes v. University of Maine System, D.Me.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1356; Civil Rights 1452

Board of trustees for state university was not "person" within meaning of § 1983 and could not be sued thereunder for alleged employment discrimination by former employee. Navarro v. UIC Medical Center, N.D.Ill.2001, 165 F.Supp.2d 785, on reconsideration in part. Civil Rights 1349

Athletic apparel manufacturer's contractual relationship with private college did not constitute "state action" sufficient to support § 1983 action against manufacturer, where there was no state action as to college, and no link between alleged state action and manufacturer's activities that allegedly deprived plaintiff of his rights. Keady v. Nike, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2000, 116 F.Supp.2d 428, affirmed in part, vacated in part 23 Fed.Appx. 29, 2001 WL 1168334. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private university's decision to terminate student from graduate dentistry program did not qualify as "state action," subject to the requirements of equal protection and due process, where termination was for failure to meet university's academic research requirements under standards set by the university, though student contended that the university faculty failed to set standards that complied with federal law regarding human research, where the termination decision was not made by the federally required institutional review board (IRB) itself, was not affirmatively mandated or governed by federal law, and the IRB did not work in tandem with the university to decide to dismiss the student. Missert v. Trustees of Boston University, D.Mass.1999, 73 F.Supp.2d 68, affirmed 248 F.3d 1127. Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

Yale College could not be considered a state actor for purposes of § 1983, though complaint alleged that State of Connecticut designated the Governor and Lieutenant Governor as ex officio Fellows of Yale College, where complaint did not allege that the State of Connecticut has retained permanent authority to appoint a majority of the members of the Yale Corporation or any governing body at Yale University; the Governor and Lieutenant

Governor constitute only two of the nineteen members. Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale College, D.Conn.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 183, affirmed 237 F.3d 81, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 201, 534 U.S. 888, 151 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1326(6)

State-supported university's level of sponsorship of debate broadcast by radio and TV stations, by allowing use of its facilities and promoting debate, was insufficient to render university president a state actor in his individual capacity, and thus could not support civil rights claim against him by candidate who was excluded from debate by private organizers. DeBauche v. Virginia Commonwealth University, E.D.Va.1998, 7 F.Supp.2d 718, affirmed 191 F.3d 499, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1451, 529 U.S. 1033, 146 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private university which had affiliation agreement with city university to extend many of city university classes to private university students was not state actor, and its actions with regard to private university professor were not under color of state law for purposes of professor's § 1983 claim against university, despite fact that city university provided space, personnel and facilities to university and New York Board of Regents or city officials regulated actions of university. Tavolini v. Mount Sinai Medical Center, S.D.N.Y.1997, 984 F.Supp. 196, affirmed 198 F.3d 235. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Community college was accountable for race discrimination accomplished through department chairperson, who possessed authority to recommend nonrenewal of African-American instructor's contract. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1133

Private college that operated campus police training program pursuant to Pennsylvania law did not act under color of state law and, therefore, § 1983 action by former student in program against college and its officials failed; college did not receive state funds to run program. Gardiner v. Mercyhurst College, W.D.Pa.1996, 942 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1326(6)

1100. ---- Committees, schools, particular persons under color of law

Action taken by members of a school committee with respect to hiring and renewing contracts of teachers and supervisory personnel as well as with respect to fixing their salaries is action taken under "color of state law". Needleman v. Bohlen, D.C.Mass.1974, 386 F.Supp. 741. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Suspension of tenured teacher, voted by members of school committee of town, was action taken under color of state law within meaning of this section. Wood v. Goodman, D.C.Mass.1974, 381 F.Supp. 413, affirmed 516 F.2d 894. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1101. ---- Employees, schools, particular persons under color of law

Head Start parents council's decision to terminate employee was not fairly attributable to federal government, as required to support employee's Bivens claim that termination violated her constitutional rights; although federal regulations authorized council, specified its composition, and gave it authority to approve termination decisions, regulations did not compel or influence termination decision, pre-school education function carried out by Head Start was not normally carried out by federal government, and federal government did not profit from termination decision. Morse v. North Coast Opportunities, Inc., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 118 F.3d 1338. United States 50.10(4)

Parents of eighth grade student failed to show nexus between school officials' failure to check criminal background of middle school janitor and janitor's assault and rape of student as would support failure to protect theory of liability under § 1983 due to failure to check criminal background, where parents did not show that janitor had either prior record of violent crime or had been previously reported to school officials for misbehavior towards students. Doe v. Hillsboro Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1412.

Actions of school employee's coworkers in teasing him about his participation in grand jury investigation of school board and in conducting a mock hanging of the employee was not state action for federal civil rights purposes. Hughes v. Halifax County School Bd., C.A.4 (Va.) 1988, 855 F.2d 183, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 867, 488 U.S. 1042, 102 L.Ed.2d 991. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Under symbiotic relationship/nexus test, employee of private medical center was not acting under "color of state law," for purposes of § 1983, when she served as preceptor for state university student during nursing practicum, even if state university or its faculty member relied upon employee's evaluation of student's performance in deciding to dismiss student from university's nursing college, inasmuch as university was not compelled to accept evaluation or to discharge student from college based on that evaluation, but rather was free to use information with which employee provided it as it desired. Siskaninetz v. Wright State University, S.D.Ohio 2001, 175 F.Supp.2d 1018. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Sexually discriminatory comments and actions directed against female medical resident were made by senior residents clothed with supervisory powers by nature of policy of resident program and, thus, residents were acting directly under color of state law for purposes of female resident's § 1983 claim against medical school staff. Lipsett v. University of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 759 F.Supp. 40. Civil Rights 1326(6); Civil Rights 1326(11)

1102. ---- Teachers, schools, particular persons under color of law

Teacher at public school arguably was acting under color of law, for purpose of student's §§ 1983 claim alleging violation of his substantive due process and equal protection rights by teacher's sexual abuse, when juvenile court at delinquency hearing released student to teacher's custody with express agreement that teacher would take student to register for school, but teacher took student to his home for further sexual abuse; teacher's opportunity to molest student that day was made possible because teacher used his authority to persuade juvenile court judge to release student to his custody. Doe v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 470 F.3d 331. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Teacher was not acting under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983 liability, when she allegedly allowed someone to use her private telephone to make telephone call which, although purportedly retaliatory, did not mention teacher or make use of her public position to overawe, intimidate, or otherwise magnify effect of private action. Tierney v. Vahle, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 304 F.3d 734. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Teacher was acting under color of state law when he committed sexual misconduct against high school student, as required to support student's claims for invasion of his bodily integrity in violation of Fourteenth Amendment under § 1983, even though all events at issue in student's action took place at teacher's home after school hours; teacher not only had opportunity to meet student as result of his position as teacher, but he also used his position to give stamp of legitimacy to fictitious scholarship program that he created solely as scheme to lure students to his home, and probably no one other than student's teacher could have persuaded student that there was scholarship and that student had to work on experiments with teacher to qualify. Hackett v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1326(6)

1103. ---- Faculty councils, schools, particular persons under color of law

Where no one could become member of high school honor society unless he was student of public school system, only faculty members and the principal could serve on the governing council, all members of the council were under contract to the board of trustees of the public school district and facilities and property of the school were available for use by the honor society, a member of the faculty council of the society was acting under "color of law" within meaning of this section in a proceeding to dismiss a student member. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1104. ---- Private schools, particular persons under color of law

Regulation giving state agency power to approve persons hired as vocational counselors by nonprofit, privately operated school for maladjusted high school students was not sufficient to make decision to discharge, made by private management, "state action" subject to suit under this section. Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, U.S.Mass.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2764, 457 U.S. 830, 73 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private school specializing in treatment and education of juvenile sex offenders was not "state actor," for purposes of § 1983 suit by juvenile alleging that he was subjected to physical and psychological abuse, based on detailed requirements contained in contract under which school accepted student in return for payment by city human services department; requirements did not compel or even influence complained of conduct, which involved alleged horseplay on part of school's staff. Robert S. v. Stetson School, Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2001, 256 F.3d 159. Civil Rights 1326(7)

The facts that the United States Congress has recognized The Citadel as a "senior military college" entitled to certain federal benefits and that the South Carolina legislature has bestowed special consideration to its upon employees and governing members do not establish that the State of South Carolina delegated a traditional, exclusive governmental function to The Citadel or to its non-enlisted, non-military student cadets, such that the actions of the cadets should be considered governmental action by the State itself, for purposes of § 1983 liability. We disagree. Mentavlos v. Anderson, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2001, 249 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 349, 534 U.S. 952, 151 L.Ed.2d 264. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private high school was not a state actor for purposes of § 1983 after teacher was fired for wearing a beard in violation of school rules; lack of state's exclusive duty to educate high school aged children and lack of state direction and control of school demonstrated that school was a private actor. Johnson v. Pinkerton Academy, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1988, 861 F.2d 335, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Owners and operators of private school for youths with behavioral problems were acting "under color of state law," as required for former students to be able to bring action under this section against school for alleged violations of their civil rights occurring as result of the school's use of "behavioral-modification" program, where many students were placed at school involuntarily by juvenile courts and other state agencies, detailed contracts were drawn up by school administrator and agreed to by local school districts placing youths at the school, there was significant state funding of tuition, and there was extensive state regulation of educational program at the school. Milonas v. Williams, C.A.10 (Utah) 1982, 691 F.2d 931, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 1524, 460 U.S. 1069, 75 L.Ed.2d 947. Civil Rights 1326(7)

While teachers at a small, nonprofit school, offering a high school program to students who have had difficulty completing an ordinary high school, claimed that their rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 were violated when they were discharged, their action under this section failed for lack of "state action"; although most funding for the school came from government sources, although the school was extensively regulated, and although it was authorized to issue a diploma certified by town school committee, the school did not conduct its activities on public property or within public facilities, there was no suggestion of a subterfuge to avoid constitutional obligations through creation of a sham private entity, the school was not treated by the state as being a public school, and no director of the school was a state officer. Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1981, 641 F.2d 14, certiorari granted 102 S.Ct. 385, 454 U.S. 891, 70 L.Ed.2d 205, affirmed 102 S.Ct. 2764, 457 U.S. 830, 73 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private school was not acting "under color of state law," when it terminated student placed there by public school district without following procedures mandated by Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), precluding § 1983 action against co-executive director for violating IDEA. P.N. v. Greco, D.N.J.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 221. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private high school in Maine, which had contracted to educate publicly funded students, was not state actor when disciplining student, for purpose of imposing § 1983 liability; school was not performing exclusive public function, and public officials were not significantly involved in management of school in general or in disciplining of student in particular. Logiodice v. Trustees of Maine Central Institute, D.Me.2001, 170 F.Supp.2d 16, affirmed 296 F.3d 22, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 882, 537 U.S. 1107, 154 L.Ed.2d 778. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private English educational institution did not act under color of state law in expelling student, and therefore student did not have claim under section 1983. Park v. Oxford University, N.D.Cal.1997, 35 F.Supp.2d 1165, affirmed 165 F.3d 917. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private school, its board of trustees, and its principal were not "state actors," as required for students to recover under § 1983 in actions alleging failure to provide adequate education; even assuming that, under Alabama Constitution, there was fundamental right to adequate education, students did not challenge state's education requirements, but defendants' alleged failure to meet minimal requirement of providing adequate education and, thus, it was private action, not state action, that was being challenged. Nobles v. Alabama Christian Academy, M.D.Ala.1996, 917 F.Supp. 786. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Law school, which was a division of a private Catholic university, was not a state actor for purposes of § 1983 on basis of fact that the courses offered were created with the specific intention of following a set of standards prescribed by and ruled over by the state Court of Appeals and the American Bar Association. Spychalsky v. Sullivan, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22071602, Unreported, affirmed 96 Fed.Appx. 790, 2004 WL 1157714. Civil Rights 1326(6)

1105. ---- Newspapers, schools, particular persons under color of law

Publication of high school newspaper and yearbook were not traditional governmental functions that would warrant attributing editorial decisions of students who ran newspaper and yearbook to school officials, for purpose of § 1983 claim brought by advertiser whose advertisement was refused by students and who claimed violation of his First Amendment rights. Yeo v. Town of Lexington, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 131 F.3d 241, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2060, 524 U.S. 904, 141 L.Ed.2d 138. Civil Rights 1326(6)

College student newspaper's refusal to print roommate advertisements stating homosexual orientation of advertisers was not "state action" so as to allow advertisers to state claim against newspaper for infringement of constitutional rights, even though publications committee which was responsible for newspaper's policy was created by university's board of regents and appointed by chancellor, and newspaper depended heavily on state for financing and operating space. Sinn v. The Daily Nebraskan, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1987, 829 F.2d 662. Colleges And Universities 9.45(4); Constitutional Law 82(5)

Football player's mother's complaint failed to allege that teammate conspired with or acted in concert with state actors, and therefore failed to state § 1983 claim against teammate who allegedly committed racially motivated attack on player; complaint alleged that football coaches either ignored or encouraged and/or allowed teammate's behavior but did not allege an agreement between teammate and the coaches to commit an illegal act, nor did it allege specific facts to show an agreement. Male cadets at The Citadel, a state-supported military college, did not act "under color of state law," within the meaning of § 1983 when they allegedly engaged in gender-based harassment and discrimination designed to force a female cadet to withdraw from the college, on theory the state had delegated to college and its corps of cadets powers traditionally exclusively reserved to the state, as The Citadel is not analogous to the service academies of the United States military, and is not in the business of training soldiers for military service; rather, its mission is to educate civilian students and produce community leaders, which is not the exclusive prerogative of a State, nor does its use of a military-style environment fairly compel the conclusion that the college has been delegated the sovereign function of training young men and women for the military. Mentavlos v. Anderson, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2001, 249 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 349, 534 U.S. 952, 151 L.Ed.2d 264. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Male cadets at The Citadel, a state-supported military college, who allegedly engaged in gender-based harassment and discrimination designed to force a female cadet to withdraw from the college were not "state actors" for purposes of § 1983 on ground that The Citadel, as a state-supported college, is governed by state officials whose powers are defined by statute and receives financial assistance and other support from the state; The Citadel's receipt of state financial assistance renders it no different in any material respect from the other state-supported institutions of higher learning in the state, and no special state assistance, financial or otherwise, was provided to the students. Mentavlos v. Anderson, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2001, 249 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 349, 534 U.S. 952, 151 L.Ed.2d 264. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Refusal to publish photograph of high school senior wearing trap shooting attire and holding shotgun in senior portrait section of the yearbook did not constitute state action upon which §§ 1983 claim could be based, in that students who made such decision were yearbook's editors rather than randomly-selected students, and editors were not coerced or influenced by school officials, but were told that decision was theirs and that principal would support any decision they made. Douglass v. Londonderry School Bd., D.N.H.2005, 413 F.Supp.2d 1. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Upperclass cadets at military-style public college were not state actors, for purpose of determining whether their alleged mistreatment of female freshman was constitutional violation within meaning of § 1983; although cadets' actions may have been made possible by system established by state-supported college, they did not receive significant encouragement and did not exercise state's coercive powers. Mentavlos v. Anderson, D.S.C.2000, 85 F.Supp.2d 609, affirmed 249 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 349, 534 U.S. 952, 151 L.Ed.2d 264. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Student editors of law school's newspaper were not "state actors" for purposes of § 1983, absent showing of control over the paper by law school administration, faculty, and staff. Leeds v. Meltz, E.D.N.Y.1995, 898 F.Supp. 146, affirmed 85 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Public school district could not be liable in § 1983 civil rights action for alleged harassment and assaults against high school student by classmates under theory that school policy, practice, or custom condoned or encouraged such abuse since students who committed underlying violative acts were private actors who were not in any way connected with state. Elliott v. New Miami Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ohio 1992, 799 F.Supp. 818. Civil Rights 1351(2)

1107. School boards, particular persons under color of law

Under Virginia law, city school board was final authority over disciplinary matters, and thus board could not be held liable under § 1983 based on decision of superintendent and high school principal to retain coach, as their decision did not constitute official municipal policy. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Student who had been sexually abused by teacher failed to establish specific duty to act under Tennessee law on part of members of county school board, and thus, could not establish that alleged failure to act on part of board members occurred under color of state law and could not recover in federal civil rights action against board members in their individual capacities based on their failure to act; board members had no individual supervisory responsibilities, and were unable to act in a legal sense except as constituent members of board. Doe v. Claiborne County, Tenn. By and Through Claiborne County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 495. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Individual school board employees were not liable under § 1983 for damages arising out of physical and sexual abuse by bus driver of handicapped student passengers; evidence of isolated incidents of driver striking, kissing and fondling students did not support finding that employees had notice of a pattern of acts by bus driver violating constitutional rights of students or that they were deliberately indifferent to or tacitly authorized physical and sexual abuse of students. Jane Doe A By and Through Jane Doe B v. Special School Dist. of St. Louis County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 901 F.2d 642. Civil Rights 1418

Where school board member gained entry to guidance counselor's office by securing the aid of a janitor with a passkey and janitor would not have unlocked the door had he not recognized such person as a member of the school board, board member's search of counselor's desk was an action under color of state law for purpose of this section. Gillard v. Schmidt, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1978, 579 F.2d 825. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Under Texas law as of 1993, board of trustees of school district, not superintendent, was final policymaker for purposes of liability of the district in civil rights action under § 1983; though superintendent may have been delegated as final decisionmaker in cases in which individual employees protested reassignment, this did not mean he was delegated status of final policymaker. Hill v. Silsbee Independent School Dist., E.D.Tex.1996, 933 F.Supp. 616. Civil Rights 1351(5)

1108. School districts, particular persons under color of law

School district personnel decisions by the body entrusted with such decisions are "officially adopted and promulgated" and, therefore, civil rights suits challenging such decisions are not precluded by the rule forbidding suits based on decisions that are not "officially adopted and promulgated" by a governing body. Kingsville Independent School Dist. v. Cooper, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1109. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Where school district which had certain land transferred to it from a second school district did nothing to accomplish the transfer of the land and did not seek or promote the transfer and was not empowered by state law to prevent it, the transfer, which resulted from election initiated by petition of private citizens, did not constitute state action for purposes of this section. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 53 of Oklahoma County, Oklahoma v. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 52 of Oklahoma County, Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1976, 532 F.2d 730, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 253, 429 U.S. 894, 50 L.Ed.2d 176. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Special relationship between teacher and school officials, school board, and school district was not required for finding of latter's liability under § 1983 for school principal's sexual assault upon teacher, if principal was acting under color of state law. 1109. School officials, particular persons under color of law

Even one decision by a school superintendent, if s/he were a final policymaker, would render his or her decision district policy for purposes of establishing school district's liability under §§ 1983. McGreevy v. Stroup, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 413 F.3d 359. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Failure of defendant school officials to renew employment contract of public school teacher who had not attained tenure status constituted "action taken under color of state law" within this section governing deprivation of a constitutional right as a result of action taken under color of state law, where stipulation was made that defendants' acts were done pursuant to state law. Orr v. Trinter, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1971, 444 F.2d 128, 29 Ohio Misc. 149, 58 O.O.2d 467, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 2847, 408 U.S. 943, 33 L.Ed.2d 767, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 95, 409 U.S. 898, 34 L.Ed.2d 157. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Acts of high school principal and vice principal in refusing to permit student to run for office of copresident of the student council were not "under color of" any state law regulation, custom or usage, though the school was public, where the refusal was based on letter, which in vulgar and obscene language, characterized the principal as a "Nazi" and the student council as a "farce", where the refusal was under approved high school constitution and bylaws which had been adopted by the student body, and where there was no suggestion of discrimination or of enforcement of any state policy or custom denying high school students freedom of expression. Palacios v. Foltz, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1971, 441 F.2d 1196. Civil Rights 1326(6)

High school superintendent's alleged actions, upon his receipt of investigative report regarding incident in which teacher allegedly used excessive force against student in violation of student's Fourteenth Amendment rights, of telling principal to cooperate in investigation and to inform him if any new developments arose, and informing attorney for school of incident were not sufficient to support imposition of liability on superintendent, in his official capacity, under § 1983, for teacher's actions. Knicrumah v. Albany City School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1356

School district's director of pupil services was acting under color of state law, as required for § 1983 claim, when he allegedly struck mother of a disabled student while she was looking through her son's educational records; alleged assault occurred in director's office while director and the mother and were discussing her son's bus transportation to and from school. Arum v. Miller, E.D.N.Y.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 229. Civil Rights 1326(6)

School board, its superintendent, and principal were not liable in their official capacities, under § 1983, for principal's alleged unconstitutional acts associated with high school student's forcible removal from school to police station after she failed to identify herself; principal's actions were not taken pursuant to official board policy or custom. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Civil Rights 1351(2)

State university officials acting in their official capacities were not "persons" under § 1983, to extent plaintiffs were seeking money damages, but were "persons" to extent plaintiffs were seeking injunctive relief. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 1356

Public school supervisor's reliance upon parochial school principal for evaluations of performance of public school employee, who worked as auxiliary services clerk at parochial school, did not make principal's actions fairly attributable to the state, for purposes of nexus test for determining whether private party's actions was state action which was actionable under § 1983; clerk was an employee of public school district, under a contract that could only be renewed or not be renewed by district's school board. from coaching duties, allegedly in retaliation for exercise of free speech rights, was tantamount to suit against the school district itself, and thus superintendent could not be held liable under § 1983 in official capacity absent official policy or custom of retaliating against employees for exercise of First Amendment rights. Hill v. Silsbee Independent School Dist., E.D.Tex.1996, 933 F.Supp. 616. Civil Rights 1351(5)

University professor could maintain civil rights action against university's interim president, vice-president, dean, and department head in their individual capacities, seeking declaratory relief and monetary damages for alleged interference with professor's right to exercise his Hindu religion and for alleged promotion of Christian religion; professor adequately alleged that officials were "persons" who acted under color of state law. Chaudhuri v. State of Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1991, 767 F.Supp. 860. Civil Rights 1396; Declaratory Judgment 314

Teacher failed to show that chancellor and board of education, the true final policymakers, played role in terminating her due to antiunion animus, such that City of New York could be held liable, based on municipal policy, under § 1983 for violation of teacher's First Amendment free association rights; there was no basis to infer that chancellor or board members were knowing participants in conspiracy to terminate teacher for her union activities. McDonald v. Board of Educ. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21782685, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

District superintendent did not have final authority to approve discontinuance of teacher's probationary service, such that City of New York could be held liable under § 1983 based on municipal policy for depriving teacher of her First Amendment free association rights; procedure for removal of teachers in period of probationary service was statutory, and superintendent's own actions confirmed he was not final policymaker with respect to employment decisions concerning teachers in his district. McDonald v. Board of Educ. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21782685, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

1110. Security guards or officers, particular persons under color of law

Paper mill's personnel who conducted dog-sniff search of employees' vehicles which were parked in mill's parking lot were not acting under color of state law, as required for employees to maintain §§ 1983 action against mill alleging violation of Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Bastible v. Weyerhaeuser Co., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 437 F.3d 999. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Hospital security guard was not "state actor," for purpose of former employee's civil rights claim against hospital under Fourth Amendment alleging use of excessive force, although security guard had status as special policeman under Chicago municipal code; security guard did not, and was not authorized to, carry firearm, guard was not expected or authorized to carry out functions of police officer, and guard did not use force until he had been physically assaulted by employee and legitimately feared for his safety and safety of other persons present. Johnson v. LaRabida Children's Hosp., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 372 F.3d 894. Civil Rights 1326(8)

For purposes of determining whether medical center security personnel could be state actors under § 1983, based on their alleged status as "special Chicago police officers" pursuant to Chicago ordinance, no legal difference existed between privately employed special officer with full police powers and a regular Chicago police officer. Payton v. Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1999, 184 F.3d 623, on remand 82 F.Supp.2d 901. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Private security guard at city housing authority (CHA) building was not performing exclusive state function when he shot plaintiff, and thus guard was not state actor and plaintiff could not maintain § 1983 action against guard and private security company; guard's function as lobby security guard with limited powers was not traditionally exclusive function of state, and contracted security guards were not part of statutorily authorized police force. Wade v. Byles, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 83 F.3d 902, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 311, 519 U.S. 935, 136 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1326(4)

University center's operations manual provision that officers from university provide security at center events, center's executive director's responsibility for final decisions regarding support personnel at center events, and observation of searches by uniformed officers from university's department of public safety did not establish sufficiently close nexus between university and pat-down searches conducted by private security firm hired by promoters of concert at university's center for those searches to be considered state action under § 1983. Gallagher v. Neil Young Freedom Concert, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1442. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Conduct of provider of sniffer-dog services, dog handlers, and school officials in reporting dog's alert to car in school's parking lot to police was not attributable to state for purposes of car owner's civil rights action; school officials turned matter over to police once dog alerted the car, and neither officials nor dog handlers had reason to believe that investigating officer would act unlawfully. Jennings v. Joshua Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 877 F.2d 313, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 3212, 496 U.S. 935, 110 L.Ed.2d 660. Civil Rights 1326(6); Civil Rights 1326(4)

For purposes of this section, state action is present when private security guards act in concert with police officers or pursuant to customary procedures agreed to by police departments, particularly when state statute authorizes merchants to detain suspected shoplifters. El Fundi v. Deroche, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1980, 625 F.2d 195. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Allegations of customer's complaint, that security guard who detained him had been sworn in as "special patrolman" by City and/or State of New York, and was thus "quasi-peace officer act[ing] under color of law," sufficiently alleged state action, as required to state cause of action under §§ 1983. 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983; NYC Admin. Bishop v. Toys "R" Us-NY LLC, S.D.N.Y.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 385. Civil Rights 1396

Security guards at Puerto Rico public hospital were state actors at time they were involved in altercation with motorist who illegally parked at hospital while picking up his wife, as required to support motorist's §§ 1983 claim against them, where guards were employed by public corporation created as an instrumentality of the Government of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico that administered medical and other professional services provided in parts of the hospital. Monge v. Cortes, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 42. Civil Rights 1326(1)

New York statute which allows as a defense to torts such as false imprisonment a retailer's reasonable detention of a person attempting to commit larceny on its premises did not convert department store security guard into "state actor," for purposes of §§ 1983 liability for alleged violation of 14-year-old girls' Fourth Amendment rights when guard forced the girls to strip to their underclothes after the guard caught them shoplifting, even though the guard called police who then arrested the girls on the strength of the guard's statements. Guiducci v. Kohl's Dept. Stores, E.D.N.Y.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 35. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Private store security guards were not acting under color of state law, as required for imposition of § 1983 liability on the store, when they detained a store patron suspected of improperly using an employee discount, even though a police officer, who was apparently on private duty, was present in the apprehension; the guards did not have any special authority under state law to arrest the patron, and there was no evidence of a plan or concert of action between a police officer and the security guards. Josey v. Filene's, Inc., D.Conn.2002, 187 F.Supp.2d 9. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(5)

Mere fact that shopping mall's lead security officer had police powers pursuant to state statute, consisting of authority to write parking tickets at mall and to arrest people suspected of committing crimes within mall common areas and parking lot, did not mean that private security guards subordinate to lead officer acted under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 action. Allen v. Columbia Mall Inc., D.Md.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 605. Civil Rights 1326(8)

allegedly at request of Highway Patrol officers because they had not seen the motorist driving on highway, was acting under "color of state law" for purposes of civil rights statute if the Highway Patrol officers so far insinuated themselves into position of interdependence with the security officer that they must be recognized as joint participants in the arrest. Baugus v. Brunson, E.D.Cal.1995, 890 F.Supp. 908. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Travelers who were involved in dispute at airport regarding inspection for possible tax violations of large, unmarked boxes they were attempting to bring into Puerto Rico failed to show that either airline's or private security firm's personnel were state actors, as was necessary to assert claim under § 1983. Salas Garcia v. Cesar Perez, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 777 F.Supp. 137. Civil Rights 1326(4)

No "state action" necessary to support federal claim under § 1983 would exist based on private security guard's arrest of retail customer for misconduct at store, absent police personnel or department involvement; however, customer claimed that security guard also processed customer's arrest at police department minutes later, thereby potentially establishing "state action." McFadden v. Grand Union, S.D.N.Y.1994, 154 F.R.D. 61. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1111. Sheriffs, particular persons under color of law--Generally

A Georgia sheriff is an agent of the county, rather than an agent of the state, and thus is not entitled to immunity under Eleventh Amendment with respect to § 1983 action brought in federal court against sheriff in his official capacity. Manders v. Lee, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2002, 285 F.3d 983, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 300 F.3d 1298, opinion after grant of rehearing 338 F.3d 1304, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1061, 540 U.S. 1107, 157 L.Ed.2d 892. Federal Courts 270

California sheriff, in overseeing and managing local jail, represented county in which he acted as law enforcement official, not State of California, and therefore, county would be subject to liability under § 1983 for sheriff's alleged overdetention of detainees. Streit v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 236 F.3d 552, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 59, 534 U.S. 823, 151 L.Ed.2d 27. Civil Rights 1348; Sheriffs And Constables 99

Sheriff and other members of county sheriff's department could not be held liable in their official capacity under § 1983, as they were employees of Alabama; suit was prohibited by Eleventh Amendment, as Alabama was real party in interest. Dean v. Barber, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1992, 951 F.2d 1210. Federal Courts 269

Sheriff's and deputy sheriff's practice of providing inmate, who was convicted felon, with marked and fully equipped patrol car for unsupervised use was action taken under color of state law, for purposes of satisfying color of state law requirement for section 1983 claim. Nishiyama v. Dickson County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1987, 814 F.2d 277. Civil Rights 1326(8)

If sheriff and his deputies conspired with company's competitors in scheme to put company out of business, their part of scheme being to serve summons and complaint and garnishment issued out of Indian tribal court and known by them to be invalid, sheriff and deputies would have been acting under color of state law within purview of this section. A & A Concrete, Inc. v. White Mountain Apache Tribe, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1982, 676 F.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1326(8)

County sheriff, as person primarily responsible under state law for general management and administration of county jail, had federal duty to provide proper supervision over and to adequately train staff regarding inmate health and safety; thus, sheriff was potentially liable, under Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause via § 1983, for any failure to train that amounted to deliberate indifference to those concerns. Ginest v. Board of County Com'rs. of Carbon County, D.Wyo.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1190. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Determination of whether a county sheriff acted as a state official when performing challenged actions, so that a suit against sheriff in his official capacity is barred by Eleventh Amendment, or as county official, so that suit is not barred by Eleventh Amendment, depends on state law. Leon v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2000, 115 F.Supp.2d 1197. Federal Courts 418

Mere provision of moral support by law enforcement officer to private wrongdoers does not rise to level of state action, as will make officer's actions ones taken "under color of state law" which will support § 1983 action, absent affirmative acts of assistance or intervention on behalf of wrongdoers. Hall v. Doering, D.Kan.1998, 997 F.Supp. 1464. Civil Rights 1326(7); Civil Rights 1326(8)

County sheriff's control over county department of corrections is action taken under color of state law for purposes of section 1983 civil rights action. Harrell v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 937 F.Supp. 754. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1112. ---- Out of jurisdiction, sheriffs, particular persons under color of law

That deputy county sheriff shot suspect in a Wisconsin county other than the county in which he was employed did not compel finding that deputy was acting as private citizen, as opposed to police officer, and that he thus was not acting under color of law so as to be potentially liable under § 1983. Deering v. Reich, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1999, 183 F.3d 645, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 532, 528 U.S. 1021, 145 L.Ed.2d 412. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1113. Shopping centers, particular persons under color of law

Shopping mall was not state actor, for purposes of suspected shoplifters' § 1983 action against mall alleging racial discrimination and unlawful search and seizure, based on mall's past request that county police review its security plan, its instruction to security guards to call police when requested by merchants, and its arrangement for police officers to act as mall security guards in event of unexpected absences among regular guards. Allen v. Columbia Mall Inc., D.Md.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 605. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Shopping centers and other similarly situated privately owned facilities are not the functional equivalent of public municipal facilities for purposes of state action requirements of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1 and this section. Curtis v. Rosso & Mastracco, Inc., E.D.Va.1976, 413 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1326(1); Constitutional Law 254(4)

1114. Social workers, particular persons under color of law

Caseworker for state Division of Youth and Family Services (DYFS) was not deliberately indifferent to substantive due process right of minor in DYFS custody to protection in home of family with whom minor was staying with DYFS approval, and caseworker thus was not liable, in § 1983 action, for abuse of minor by member of that family, absent evidence that caseworker violated any state requirement or DYFS policy or procedure in conducting investigation of family, or evidence of specific information placing caseworker on notice that family warranted more detailed investigation. Nicini v. Morra, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2000, 212 F.3d 798. Civil Rights 1057

Social therapist employed with nonpublic organization did not act under color of state law, either as state actor or in exercising state-created right or privilege, by informing police that individual may have been mentally ill, by recommending to police officers that individual be taken to hospital for psychiatric evaluation, and by agreeing with emergency room doctor that individual needed further evaluation, and thus therapist could not be held liable in § 1983 action brought by individual. Pino v. Higgs, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 75 F.3d 1461. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Social workers performing functions that were inherently governmental in nature in investigating child abuse reports acted under "color of law" and therefore were amenable to suit under civil rights statute. Frazier v. Bailey, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 957 F.2d 920. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Private social service agency with whom workfare recipient was placed by State Department of Social Services to fulfill his work obligations was not acting under color of state law, so it could not be held liable under federal civil rights statutes for his sexual misconduct with children while working for the agency. Simescu v. Emmet County Dept. of Social Services, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1991, 942 F.2d 372. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Absent showing that child welfare worker, who filed dependency and neglect petition against natural father, was responsible for natural father's alleged deprivation of due process in termination hearing, the child welfare worker could not be liable under this section. Martin v. Aubuchon, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 623 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Aunt's § 1983 claim that county social workers arbitrarily deprived her of her physical and emotional well-being through their handling of nephew's custody issues failed to allege constitutional violation. Santos v. County of Los Angeles Department of Children and Family Services, C.D.Cal.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1057

Negligent violation of West Virginia's child support enforcement statute did not render Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) employees liable for damages under § 1983. Roush v. Justice, S.D.W.Va.1996, 949 F.Supp. 449, affirmed 149 F.3d 1170. Civil Rights 1057

Section 1983 does not provide remedy for plaintiff who alleges that social service workers did not act competently. Mason v. Waukesha County, E.D.Wis.1994, 855 F.Supp. 282, affirmed 48 F.3d 1222. Civil Rights 1052

1115. State officials, particular persons under color of law

Even when officer of the state is named as defendant in § 1983 lawsuit, court must refrain from automatically assuming existence of state action, but must stay focused upon whether conduct at issue is fairly attributable to state. Montano v. Hedgepeth, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 120 F.3d 844. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Evidence in § 1983 action supported finding that employee of Washington State Employment Security office acted "under color of state law" when he raped Hmong refugees who contacted him about obtaining employment; jury could have found that each refugee was raped during meeting with employee about obtaining work and that Hmong refugees have been entirely reliant on government aid and are in awe of government officials. Dang Vang v. Vang Xiong X. Toyed, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 944 F.2d 476. Civil Rights 1422

Fact that state official's position as Auditor General cloaked her with authority to fire state employees did not compel finding that state employees sued her in her official capacity, such that § 1983 claim could not be brought, but rather merely supported undisputed proposition that official acted under color of state law in discharging employees; employees were not limited to suing state official in her personal capacity only if allegedly unconstitutional actions were not taken in her official capacity. Melo v. Hafer, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 912 F.2d 628, rehearing denied, certiorari granted 111 S.Ct. 1070, 498 U.S. 1118, 112 L.Ed.2d 1176, affirmed 112 S.Ct. 358, 502 U.S. 21, 116 L.Ed.2d 301. Civil Rights 1359

Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources conservation warden did not act under color of state law by providing deputy sheriffs with description of his encounter with plaintiffs, which led to their arrest, nor did he engage in joint action with officers, as required for warden to incur § 1983 liability. Hughes v. Meyer, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1989, 880 F.2d 967, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2172, 495 U.S. 931, 109 L.Ed.2d 501. Civil Rights 1326(8)

State officers acting under color of state authority are "persons" who may be defendants in a civil rights suit. Drollinger v. Milligan, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1977, 552 F.2d 1220. Civil Rights 1354

Mere assertion that one is state officer does not necessarily mean that he is acting under color of state law, for purposes of this section. Askew v. Bloemker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 548 F.2d 673. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether state racing secretary was a state actor, precluding summary judgment for racing secretary in action brought by racehorse owner under § 1983 alleging that racing secretary deprived owner of due process when he was excluded from racetrack. Gill v. Delaware Park, LLC, D.Del.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 638. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Director of state department could not be individually liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of First Amendment rights of applicant for position with department, which occurred when applicant was allegedly denied position due to her political affiliation; director was not personally involved in denial of employment to applicant, and direct involvement of director could not be inferred by virtue of director's position or his delegation of hiring decisions to subordinates. Lupo v. Voinovich, S.D.Ohio 2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 782. Civil Rights 1359

Former state employee's allegations that former governor used his position to facilitate his sexual harassment of her while at hotel on state business, that governor made inquiries about her job and indicated that he had influence over her ultimate superior and instructed her to keep quiet after she rejected his alleged advances and that she was transferred to another position after she refused governor's advances, were sufficient to show that governor acted under color of state law for purposes of stating § 1983 sexual harassment claim under Equal Protection Clause. Jones v. Clinton, E.D.Ark.1997, 974 F.Supp. 712, appeal dismissed 161 F.3d 528. Civil Rights 1326(11)

State agency official did not have sufficient personal involvement in termination of employee to be liable under § 1981 or § 1983 based upon fact that "Step 3" hearing on discharge was conducted by agency employee based upon delegated authority. Yohannan v. Patla, N.D.Ill.1997, 971 F.Supp. 323. Civil Rights 1359

Acts of state officials in ambit of their personal pursuits are not state action under § 1983; thus, public employee's private conduct, outside scope of his employment and unaided by any indicia of actual or ostensible state authority, is not conduct occurring under color of state law. Teta v. Packard, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 469. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Test of whether action has been taken under "color of law" within this section can rarely be satisfied in the case of anyone other than an officer of the state. Rodriguez v. Conagra, Inc., D.C.Puerto Rico 1974, 387 F.Supp. 951, affirmed 527 F.2d 540. Civil Rights 1324

The indispensable element in determinating whether or not an action was under color of state law is a test which can rarely be satisfied when action is taken by one not a state official. Oller v. Bank of America, N.D.Cal.1972, 342 F.Supp. 21. See, also, Warren v. Cummings, D.C.Colo.1969, 303 F.Supp. 803; Weyandt v. Mason's Stores, Inc., D.C.Pa.1968, 279 F.Supp. 283; Pritt v. Johnson, D.C.Pa.1967, 264 F.Supp. 167. Civil Rights 1324

Wife of Ohio governor did not act under color of state law, as required for liability under §§ 1983, when wife allegedly made public speeches and issued press releases expressing concern about company's alcohol-infused gelatin product, given that, under Ohio law, spouse of governor was not elected or appointed state official, and that company did not allege that wife's actions were taken pursuant to specific law or were attributable to governor's office. BPNC, Inc. v. Taft, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 525, 2005 WL 1993426, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1116. State and local agencies or instrumentalities, particular persons under color of law--Generally

Actions of state agencies administering federally-funded programs is action "under color of state law" for purpose of this section. Tongol v. Usery, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 601 F.2d 1091. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Civil rights action under this section does not lie against administrative agency. Alexander v. California Court

Director of Correction, Adult Authority, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 433 F.2d 360.

Local governmental bodies which are considered arms of the state, for purposes of Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit, are not "persons," subject to suit under § 1983. Pierce v. Delta County Dept. of Social Services, D.Colo.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 1139. Civil Rights 1344

Pennsylvania Property and Casualty Insurance Guaranty Association was a instrumentality of the state and its operatives were state actors, and thus, PPCIGA and its operatives were subject to claimant's § 1983 suit alleging that PPCIGA acted under color of state law to deprive her of her constitutionally-protected property right in her insurance policies, where PPCIGA was created by special statute, for purpose of pursuing state objectives, including avoiding financial loss to claimants and policyholders resulting from insurer insolvencies and assisting in detection and prevention of insurer insolvencies, and PPCIGA was controlled by state, in that Commissioner of Department of Insurance of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania had virtually limitless authority to supervise and regulate PPCIGA. Sotack v. Pennsylvania Property and Cas. Ins. Guar. Ass'n, E.D.Pa.2000, 104 F.Supp.2d 471. Civil Rights 1326(7)

County Head Start program was not governmental entity for purposes of constitutional litigation and was not acting under color of law in discharging plaintiff; despite receiving extensive federal funding and despite pervasive federal regulation, federal and state officials lacked control of Head Start programs' personnel decisions adequate to render personnel actions in such programs "under color of law," and Head Start programs neither performed functions that were traditionally the exclusive prerogative of government nor had the symbiotic relationship with government necessary to be considered state actors. Moglia v. Sullivan County Head Start, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1997, 988 F.Supp. 366, affirmed 159 F.3d 1347. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(11)

State defendants sued by claimants for social security benefits, who alleged that they were injured as result of improper procedures followed by state Department of Social Services, acted under color of state law for purposes of liability under § 1983 as human services agencies in Oregon were created by Oregon law and were empowered to act by Oregon law and not federal law. Sorenson v. Concannon, D.Or.1994, 893 F.Supp. 1469. Civil Rights 1327

Administrative bodies may not arbitrarily deny rights guaranteed by federal Constitution and Acts of Congress, when denial is made under color of state law even though the body is clothed with discretion in the matter. Johnson v. Branch, E.D.N.C.1965, 242 F.Supp. 721, reversed and remanded on other grounds 364 F.2d 177, certiorari denied 87 S.Ct. 706, 385 U.S. 1003, 17 L.Ed.2d 542.

1117. ---- Courts, state and local agencies or instrumentalities, particular persons under color of law

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania First Judicial District and Municipal Court within that district were not "persons" within § 1983; though these entities were largely funded locally, they were not independent of the Commonwealth and could not be regarded as having significant autonomy from the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Callahan v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2000, 207 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1350

1118. ---- Community action agencies, state and local agencies or instrumentalities, particular persons under color of law

Community action agency's discharge of its employee was not action taken under "color of State law," for purposes of this section, even though public officials or their representatives sat on board of such agency and even though they received substantial public funds where such public officials' actions in personnel matters were not subject to state regulation and state was not involved in particular discharge at issue. Joseph v. Community Action Commission to Help Economy, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1980, 503 F.Supp. 73. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1119. ---- Community development agencies, state and local agencies or instrumentalities, particular persons under color of law

Nonprofit community agency did not act under color of state law, for purpose of incurring section 1983 liability, when it discharged teacher's aide in Headstart Program, though agency received significant federal and state funding, because none of its specific personnel decisions were controlled by state or federal regulations. Nail v. Community Action Agency of Calhoun County, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1986, 805 F.2d 1500. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Director of city's community development agency established that actions of decision-making authorities of the city were under color of state law within meaning of statute granting right to maintain civil action for deprivation of rights, where city and community development agency were local instrumentalities of state and decisions regarding discharge of director were made by officials having final authority. Allen v. City of Yonkers, S.D.N.Y.1992, 803 F.Supp. 679. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Action wherein former teacher employed by Project Headstart established pursuant to Economic Opportunity Act, § 2701 et seq. of this title, sought injunctive and monetary relief against community development agency and others for alleged violation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5 and 14 was not cognizable under this section governing deprivation of civil rights in absence of required state action, albeit claims that extensive oversight and regulation of local head start programs by state made actions of heard start administrators state action and that Project Headstart performed a governmental function synonymous with that performed by state. Kelley v. Action for Boston Community Development, Inc., D.C.Mass.1976, 419 F.Supp. 511. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1120. ---- Sports regulation, state and local agencies or instrumentalities, particular persons under color of law

State agency's regulation of harness racing, even though substantial, and fact that state had stake in video lotteries on racetrack premises did not mean that state had symbiotic relationship with private track owner, as required to support trainer's § 1983 action against track owner based on owner's exclusion of trainer from track. Crissman v. Dover Downs, Inc., D.Del.2000, 83 F.Supp.2d 450, reversed 239 F.3d 357, rehearing denied 2001 WL 617503, vacated 254 F.3d 467, on rehearing 289 F.3d 231, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 131, 537 U.S. 886, 154 L.Ed.2d 147. 1121. ---- Zoning boards, state and local agencies or instrumentalities, particular persons under color of law

Township zoning board acted under color of state law, as required for liability under § 1983, when it conducted hearing at which board found mobile homes to be violative of township zoning ordinance and when it issued order requiring landlord to issue notices to quit to the tenants. Ruiz v. New Garden Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 418, reversed 376 F.3d 203. Civil Rights 1326(2)

1122. States, particular persons under color of law

This section is directed at individuals acting under color of state law, not individual states. Aubuchon v. State of Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 631 F.2d 581, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1358, 450 U.S. 915, 67 L.Ed.2d 341.

1123. Stenographers, particular persons under color of law

Privately employed stenographer who was also a notary public did not act under color of state law, as required for liability under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983], when she recorded and transcribed depositions of witnesses as part of discovery process in a civil action. Kaufman v. McCrory Stores Div. of McCrory Corp., M.D.Pa.1985, 613 F.Supp. 1179, affirmed 792 F.2d 138, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 84, 479 U.S. 820, 93 L.Ed.2d 37. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1124. Store employees or owners, particular persons under color of law

Department store that had suspected shoplifter arrested was not state actor, for purpose of imposing §§ 1983 liability, even though officers did not conduct independent investigation prior to making arrest and acknowledged that they had never refused to arrest anyone whom store accused of shoplifting, absent showing of police policy of arresting anyone accused by store. Wilson v. McRae's, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 413 F.3d 692. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private merchant was not "state actor" for purposes of civil rights liability for arrest of customer by off-duty police officer acting as security guard subsequent to report of suspected shoplifting made by another employee, where officer conducted independent investigation, including independent observation of customer and completion of his own incident report, and did not form intent to arrest customer until she left store, returned, and confronted officer. Morris v. Dillard Dept. Stores, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 2001, 277 F.3d 743. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Evidence in § 1983 action established action of store under color of state law when detaining customer and initiating shoplifting prosecution; store manager testified to store's practice to work with police department in prosecuting shoplifters; store security guard was employee of police department and telephoned police after unfruitful search of customer's purse; police and prosecuting attorney relied on guard's incomplete version of facts to justify detaining, searching, and prosecuting customer; and state statute permitted detention of suspected shoplifter. Murray v. Wal-Mart, Inc., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1989, 874 F.2d 555. Civil Rights 1420

Store employees' search of plaintiffs' purses, which was no more than an extension of detention for suspected shoplifting, and detention of plaintiffs after gun was found in one purse did not constitute performance of functions exclusively reserved to the state that rendered employees subject to treatment as state actors for purposes of this section. White v. Scrivner Corp., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 140. Civil Rights 1326(1)

In order for store owner to be liable for damages under this section for fostering a detention of customers without probable cause, customers had to establish that the store owner was acting under color of state law by showing that the police and store managers were acting in concert and that the store managers and police had a customary plan whose result was detention in present case. Smith v. Brookshire Bros., Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 519 F.2d 93, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1115, 424 U.S. 915, 47 L.Ed.2d 320. Civil Rights 1406

Pharmacy patron claiming that he was deprived of certain constitutional rights because the pharmacy owner, through an employee, engaged in racial profiling, discriminated against him, unlawfully detained him, and required him to place his belongings on the store counter, in violation of his Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, failed to state a claim under §§ 1983, as the pharmacy was not acting under color of state law. Caldwell v. CVS Corp., D.N.J.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 654. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Actions of store employees in requesting presence of shopping mall security guards, who were dispatched by lead security officer who was state actor, and conducting search of suspected shoplifters in presence of guards, did not constitute state action for purposes of suspected shoplifters' § 1983 action against employees alleging racial discrimination and unlawful search and seizure. Allen v. Columbia Mall Inc., D.Md.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 605. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Delaware statute authorizing commercial establishments to detain suspected shoplifters for reasonable period for purpose of calling police did not transform store employees into state actors, for purposes of § 1983 claim brought by black customer who claimed she was wrongfully stopped and interrogated on suspicion of shoplifting. Lewis v. J.C. Penney Co., Inc., D.Del.1996, 948 F.Supp. 367. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Assuming that private party who invokes state statute which is later adjudged to be unconstitutional is state actor and that Georgia statute providing for arrest of person whose conduct threatens peace or property was unconstitutional, storage facility and its resident manager who obtained warrant for arrest of person who was parking car so as to block functioning of security gate around facility were not liable under civil rights statute, on ground that they were acting in good faith, where the statute had never been held unconstitutional, defendants relied on advice of counsel in swearing out arrest warrant, and there was no evidence that they were aware that statute was constitutionally infirm. Britt v. Whitehall Income Fund '86, M.D.Ga.1993, 891 F.Supp. 1578. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Automobile dealership was not a state actor, and thus was not liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly violating prospective purchaser's constitutional rights in connection with its repeated denials of his application for credit to purchase a vehicle. Elliott v. Chrysler Financial, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 610, 2005 WL 428918, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1125. Sureties, particular persons under color of law

Bail bondsman was a "state actor" who could be sued under § 1983 for personal injury and property damage he allegedly caused in seeking to apprehend fugitive from justice, where bondsman was exercising powers conferred on him by state law, obtained significant aid from police officer, who was unquestionably exercising state authority, and was licensed by the state. Jackson v. Pantazes, C.A.4 (Md.) 1987, 810 F.2d 426. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Where state law provided that any foreign bondsman, before removing its principal from California, must appear before magistrate and submit an affidavit of facts supporting the request for an arrest warrant and where state law made criminal any arrest of a fugitive not pursuant to such an order, actions of foreign bondsman and its agents in arresting principal in California and removing him to Nevada to face charges for which bond was given could not be viewed as merely exceeding the authority granted under state law but rather were taken completely outside of state law, so that no action for deprivation of civil rights could be premised on bondsman and its agents having operated under color of state law. Ouzts v. Maryland Nat. Ins. Co., C.A.9 (Nev.) 1974, 505 F.2d 547, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1681, 421 U.S. 949, 44 L.Ed.2d 103. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether surety bail bond agent and bail enforcement agent were acting under color of state law when they searched home precluded summary judgment on homeowners' §§ 1983 claim against bond agent and enforcement agent, alleging unreasonable search. Tirreno v. Mott, D.Conn.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 562. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Bail bondsmen's search for surety without any aid from police was not chargeable to state and, thus, bondsmen were not state actors for purpose of determining whether they acted under color of state law despite state statute which recognizes bondsmen's authority to arrest sureties as statute merely permitted and did not compel bondsmen to arrest fugitives. Hunt v. Steve Dement Bail Bonds, Inc., W.D.La.1996, 914 F.Supp. 1390, affirmed 96 F.3d 1443. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Bail bondsman was acting under color of state law when he participated in arrest pursuant to warrant for arrest of fugitive with same name as arrestee; bail bondsman acted pursuant to statutory and common-law privilege granted under state law, and it could be found that police officers were acting pursuant to bail bondsman's direction and not that bail bondsman was acting as private citizen who assisted police. Bailey v. Kenney, D.Kan.1992, 791 F.Supp. 1511. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Surety on bail bond, whose agents arrested principal pursuant to state statute according bail bondsmen right to order a portion of their business affairs by use of physical coercion, was acting "under color of law" for purposes of this section. Hill v. Toll, E.D.Pa.1970, 320 F.Supp. 185. Civil Rights 1326(9)

law enforcement officers, and thus bounty hunter was not subject to federal; civil rights liability for his alleged use of excessive force. McCoy v. Johnson, N.D.Ga.1997, 176 F.R.D. 676. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1126. Tax collectors, particular persons under color of law

Claims against tax collector, who was sued individually and not in his official capacity, could not be maintained where it was not averred that he committed any wrongful acts or misused his position or power as collector. Long v. Kistler, E.D.Pa.1981, 524 F.Supp. 225. Taxation 2824

1127. Television and radio stations, particular persons under color of law

Television network employees did not improperly influence or control exercise of judgment by police and medical officials in connection with psychiatric patient's involuntary commitment, which followed allegations that she stalked talk show host, and network employees thus were not state actors and could not be liable under §§ 1983, inasmuch as commitment was conducted pursuant to legal process carried out over extended period of time, and police officers, doctors and other state officials acted independently of network employees. Fisk v. Letterman, S.D.N.Y.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 362. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Cable television service provider's proposed change to its time-slot allocation system for public access programs did not constitute state action, for purpose of imposing §§ 1983 liability. Morrone v. CSC Holdings Corp., E.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 552. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Broadcast television network did not act under color of state law when it aired FBI "wanted" poster and interview with FBI agent, as would support action under § 1983 brought against network by suspect who was later acquitted of kidnapping, where suspect failed to allege that network cooperated closely with any state authorities; FBI was an arm of federal government, not state government. Meuse v. Pane, D.Mass.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 36. Civil Rights 1327

Cable television system operator was not state actor when it objected to condominium association's plan to allow satellite television system operator to co-locate equipment, and thus could not be held liable under § 1983 for any resulting violation of association's constitutional rights; although cable operator was licensed and regulated by government, its ownership of equipment in question arose via private contract. CSC Holdings, Inc. v. Westchester Terrace at Crisfield Condominium, S.D.N.Y.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 243. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Public, educational, and governmental cable channel (PEG) was "state actor," for purposes of claims under § 1983 by program providers that specific portions of PEG's policies and procedures manual violated providers' rights under First and Fourteenth Amendments; PEG was created as part of license agreement between town and local cable provider, it was created to further political objectives, and town retained right to appoint members of access group that managed PEG. Demarest v. Athol/Orange Community Television, Inc., D.Mass.2002, 188 F.Supp.2d 82 . Constitutional Law 82(5); Constitutional Law 254(2)

City was not liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of cable show producer's First Amendment rights as result of his exclusion from public access production facilities by association that operated facilities, where city itself took no action in matter, had no policy or custom that permitted association to violate producer's rights, and required association to comply with all applicable laws. Jersawitz v. People TV, N.D.Ga.1999, 71 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Private TV and radio stations did not act "under color of law" when radio personality excluded minor party candidate from political debate, even though state university jointly "sponsored" event, where university's involvement was limited to providing facilities and some promotion and didn't include participation in decision to exclude candidate. DeBauche v. Virginia Commonwealth University, E.D.Va.1998, 7 F.Supp.2d 718, affirmed

Fact that state Supreme Court rule generally authorized private television stations to broadcast court proceedings did not imply that particular station was acting under color of law when it broadcast certain proceedings despite religious objections of parties to those proceedings, and thus station could not be held liable to those parties under Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA) or § 1983, as rule only provided guidelines to regulate private conduct in public forum and did not direct or even encourage television stations to broadcast court proceedings. Brownson v. Bogenschutz, E.D.Wis.1997, 966 F.Supp. 795. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private radio station which was regulated by Federal Communications Commission (FCC) and which cancelled show it had planned to put on during festival was not acting under color of state law, as would allow shopkeeper in nearby area who alleged that he lost profits after show and festival were cancelled to recover in federal civil rights action against station; no nexus or interdependence existed between State and station's cancellation of show, activities of radio station are not public function, and no state law, regulation, or custom compelled cancellation. Cevallos v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1996, 914 F.Supp. 379. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Television station personnel who were allowed to ride along with police officers and film execution of search warrant were not state actors for purposes of § 1983 liability; personnel were present to gather news and prepare report for broadcast and did not participate in execution of search, while police were engaged in law enforcement activity and did not participate in filming of objects and events in house. Parker v. Clarke, E.D.Mo.1995, 905 F.Supp. 638, clarified 910 F.Supp. 460, affirmed in part, reversed in part 93 F.3d 445, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1081, 519 U.S. 1148, 137 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Television network and program's producers were not acting under color of state law when they filmed and aired program showing motorist's arrest and search, and thus could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for invasion of motorist's privacy. Mitchell v. Langley, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 900, 2006 WL 833112, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4)

1128. Testing services, particular persons under color of law

Private corporation that employed phlebotomist under independent contractor agreement was not liable under policy, custom, or practice theory for phlebotomist's alleged violation of rape suspect's Fourth Amendment rights while performing "sex kit" examination upon him pursuant to corporation's contract with city; suspect did not identify any specific policy, custom or practice of corporation's that injured him or was unconstitutional, nor did suspect even identify or show longstanding policy, custom, or practice that constituted corporation's standard "sex kit" examination procedure. Robinson v. City of San Bernardino Police Dept., C.D.Cal.1998, 992 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1339

Testing service that performed teacher certification test for state was not state actor, as required to support civil rights claim brought by applicant whose test score was not reported to state because service questioned its validity; service acted only as medium for conveying examination results, and had no authority to determine certification or make any judgment as to qualifications of applicants. Tolleson v. Educational Testing Service, D.S.C.1992, 832 F.Supp. 158. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private firm's preparation and grading of principalship examination pursuant to contract with board of education could not be viewed as "state action" for purpose of this section, where private firm's role was but part of the hiring process and such intermediate decisions as were made by the private firm did not involve individuals, while the final hiring decisions remained in the hands of state agents. Stewart v. Hannon, N.D.Ill.1979, 469 F.Supp. 1142. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1129. Title examiners, particular persons under color of law

Title search was not action under color of law or otherwise within scope of this section. Billingsley v. Seibels, N.D.Ala.1976, 433 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 556 F.2d 276, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1499, 435 U.S. 929, 55 L.Ed.2d 524, rehearing denied 98 S.Ct. 2257, 436 U.S. 914, 56 L.Ed.2d 416. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1130. Tow operators, particular persons under color of law

Owner of towing service and city were not liable under this section for actions of owner of towing service in pursuing owner of impounded vehicle after owner of towing service heard a stolen car report, although owner of towing service was acting for state when he initially towed car, since evidence was undisputed that owner of towing service was not performing city towing service when he tried to stop impounded vehicle, and police had not requested or authorized his assistance. Weinrauch v. Park City, C.A.10 (Utah) 1984, 751 F.2d 357. Civil Rights 1338

Towing service and operator acted as agents of sheriff and thus acted under color of state law so as to be subject to liability under civil rights statute, though they exercised no discretion and simply followed orders of deputy sheriff in towing car which had been seized. Bins v. Artison, E.D.Wis.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1034, on subsequent appeal 924 F.2d 1061, on remand 764 F.Supp. 129. Civil Rights 1326(5)

By asserting mechanic's lien on and taking title to arrestee's car, which had been towed following arrest for traffic offenses, towing company played integral part in depriving arrestee of property without due process of law and was thus liable under § 1983; towing company had acted under color of state law in towing vehicle and city had failed to provide arrestee with postdeprivation remedies. Katona v. City of Cheyenne, D.Wyo.1988, 686 F.Supp. 287. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Towing and seizure of abandoned, unregistered, and dangerously parked motor vehicle by either police or private garage constituted "state action" under this section in that vehicle could be towed pursuant to C.G.S.A. § 14-150 only at request of state agent. Tedeschi v. Blackwood, D.C.Conn.1976, 410 F.Supp. 34. Civil Rights 1326(1); Civil Rights 1326(5)

1131. Towns, particular persons under color of law

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether town had policy or procedure for transmitting exculpatory information to prosecuting attorneys, whether the policy or lack thereof constituted a conscious disregard or deliberate indifference to the constitutional and statutory rights of criminal suspects, and whether the general training of police officers was sufficient to insure that officers followed the statutory and constitutional requirement for disclosure of exculpatory material, precluded summary judgment in arrestee's § 1983 claim against town, arising out of his prosecution and continued incarceration. Murvin v. Jennings, D.Conn.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 180. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Town was not responsible for judge's conduct performed in his judicial capacity such that town was not liable in arrestee's § 1983 and § 1985 action; judge was not policymaker for town. Estes-El v. Town of Indian Lake, N.D.N.Y.1997, 954 F.Supp. 527. Civil Rights 1351(4)

1132. Trusts or trustees, particular persons under color of law

That no sale, mortgage or other alienation of common lands within community land grant could be made by trustees of grant without authorization of a state district judge was not in itself sufficient to establish that trustees were acting "under color of state law" when they allegedly committed acts of discrimination in leasing common lands within grant where it was clear that there was no intermixture of private and public matters or functions in respect to leasing. Mondragon v. Tenorio, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1977, 554 F.2d 423, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 305, 434 U.S. 905, 54 L.Ed.2d 193. Civil Rights 1326(1)

In applying for and obtaining enactment of shellfishing ordinance, the town of East Hampton trustees and the town board were acting jointly and together acted "under color of state law" for purposes of this section. Hassan v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.1980, 500 F.Supp. 1034. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Holder of deed of trust, acting pursuant to contract provisions contained in deed, did not become representative of state or political subdivision by posting notices and holding foreclosure proceedings permitted by state law, and action therefore did not lie under this section in favor of owner of land subject to foreclosure for deprivation of property without due process of law. Leisure Estates of America, Inc. v. Carmel Development Co., S.D.Tex.1974, 371 F.Supp. 556. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1133. Unions, particular persons under color of law

Fact that union constitution encourages and reinforces collective bargaining agreement between union and public employer is insufficient to bring union's enactment of constitution under rubric of state action, such that union's internal governing rules would be subject to First Amendment prohibitions, and such that union would be subject to § 1983 action. Messman v. Helmke, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1998, 133 F.3d 1042. Civil Rights 1326(11); Constitutional Law 82(5)

Employee for union president failed to show that her supervisor was acting under color of state law when he allegedly deprived employee of her right to equal protection by sexually harassing her under § 1983; although president was city employee, at time of alleged harassment he was acting only in his capacity as union president, he did not hold his position as president by virtue of any action by city, and in this capacity, he performed functions solely for benefit of union. Kern v. City of Rochester, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 93 F.3d 38, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1335, 520 U.S. 1155, 137 L.Ed.2d 494. Civil Rights 1326(11)

While union was private entity and board of education, in withholding "agency fee" from its employees' wages, was acting as union's agent, when public employer assists union in coercing public employees to finance political activities, that is state action; and when private entity such as union acts in concert with public agency to deprive people of their fundamental constitutional rights, it is liable under this section along with agency. Hudson v. Chicago Teachers Union Local No. 1, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 743 F.2d 1187, certiorari granted 105 S.Ct. 2700, 472 U.S. 1007, 86 L.Ed.2d 716, affirmed 106 S.Ct. 1066, 475 U.S. 292, 89 L.Ed.2d 232, on remand 117 F.R.D. 413. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Resort by coal companies and railroad to state judicial process to obtain temporary injunctions against picketing activity of various labor organizations did not, in circumstances, transform an otherwise private entity into an arm of state so as to establish a cause of action for declaratory, injunctive, and monetary relief under this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. District 28, United Mine Workers of America, Inc. v. Wellmore Coal Corp., C.A.4 (Va.) 1979, 609 F.2d 1083. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Union which represented terminated municipal bus driver was neither a state actor nor acting under color of state law for §§ 1983 purposes; there was no evidence that union's conduct was jointly undertaken with bus company since union contested the right of company to refer the matter for an independent medical evaluation and went to arbitration to protect the driver's rights, and union represented driver in opposition to company at administrative hearings. Perry v. Metropolitan Suburban Bus Authority, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1326(11)

collective bargaining agreement (CBA), and thus was not subject to liability under § 1983 as result of removal of class of employees from bargaining unit in CBA. McGovern v. Local 456, Intern. Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs & Warehousemen & Helpers of America, AFL--CIO, S.D.N.Y.2000, 107 F.Supp.2d 311. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Allegations by union employees that union participated in secret negotiations to abrogate collective bargaining agreement and bar union employees from working on public project and took actions to have union employees removed from seniority list and reduce their work activities failed to show conspiracy between private union, union local and union officials and public benefit corporation operating public project sufficient to state § 1983 claim for deprivation of employee's liberty interests without due process. Sacco v. Pataki, S.D.N.Y.1997, 982 F.Supp. 231, affirmed 278 F.3d 93. Conspiracy 18

Grievance chairman who represented union and its members with respect to disputes with state of Rhode Island and who was paid by state was state actor for purposes of § 1983 action alleging that he negligently allowed employee's appeal of grievance to lapse before appeal board. Forbes v. Rhode Island Broth. of Correctional Officers, D.R.I.1996, 923 F.Supp. 315. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Union did not act under color of state law in allegedly conspiring with state actors to retaliate against teacher for exercising First Amendment rights, and thus was not liable under § 1983; teacher failed to proffer any evidence supporting his allegations that school superintendent compelled or encouraged union president to deny teacher's requests to take complaints against school committee to arbitration. Storlazzi v. Bakey, D.Mass.1995, 894 F.Supp. 494, affirmed 68 F.3d 455. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Public employees' union was not subject to suit under federal civil rights statute unless state action was imputed to it through its alleged concerted action with public employer. Loftus v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1994, 843 F.Supp. 981. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Local union's representation of public employees did not make it "state actor" for purposes of § 1983. Marrero v. City of NY, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1621921, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1134. Utilities, particular persons under color of law

In suit brought against private utility corporation by customer who sought damages under this section for the termination of her electric service allegedly before she was afforded notice, a hearing, and an opportunity to pay any amounts found due, "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 was not present on theory that the utility provided an essential public service required to be supplied on a reasonably continuous basis and thus performed a "public function," since the furnishing of utility services are neither state functions nor municipal duties. Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., U.S.Pa.1974, 95 S.Ct. 449, 419 U.S. 345, 42 L.Ed.2d 477. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Terminated employee of construction contractor at electric utility's nuclear power plant failed to show that utility was standing in for state or local authorities when it decided to bar defendant from plant as required for utility to be liable to employee under § 1983, despite contention that utility conducted its undercover investigation in close cooperation with county narcotics task force, in employee's action against utility, arising from utility's decision to bar employee from plant after investigation linked employee to conversations at plant as to off-site drug transaction; employee needed to prove not merely that utility had close relationship with task force, but also that relationship encompassed utility's plant-access decisions. Mathis v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 75 F.3d 498. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Fact that public utility was subject to extensive state regulation, without more, was insufficient to infuse its conduct with state action; therefore, employees of contractors, which performed work for utility at nuclear power plant, raised no colorable claim against public utility under § 1983 arising out of public utility's denying employees access to plant because they either failed psychological tests or were suspected of illegal drug use or sales. Mathis v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 891 F.2d 1429. Civil Rights 1326(7)

For purposes of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, telephone company acted under color of state law in seeking to implement state regulatory procedure that would require it to withhold telephone service to sexually explicit message service; telephone company's conduct of repeatedly requesting law enforcement agents to undertake action that would trigger procedure that would violate customer's First Amendment rights satisfied joint participation requirement for state action. Sable Communications of California Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 890 F.2d 184. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private telephone company did not engage in state action, and thus could not be liable in criminal defendant's action alleging federal Constitutional violations, by releasing defendant's phone records to district attorney; company acted under subpoena, making release a privileged act, and there was no evidence of conspiracy between company and state. Daniel v. Safir, E.D.N.Y.2001, 135 F.Supp.2d 367. Constitutional Law 82(5)

Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Company (MMWEC) was political subdivision and public corporation established for purposes of essential public function of joint action and planning, and thus there was sufficient nexus between state and MMWEC to satisfy § 1983 state action requirement, and thus to allow nonunion MMWEC employee to maintain § 1983 claim challenging union's alleged unconstitutional imposition of agency service fee without adequate procedural protections. Sheridan v. International Broth. Elec. Workers, Local 455, D.Mass.1996, 940 F.Supp. 368. Civil Rights 1326(11)

1135. Warehousemen, particular persons under color of law

Actions by warehouseman in enforcing lien on stored property through sale which was not required to be preceded by any hearing were private actions not taken "under color of state law" and property owners thus did not state claim for relief under this section especially where storage contract entered into between property owners and warehouseman specified that warehouseman would have a general lien upon all stored property and would have the right to sell the property upon default. Smith v. Bekins Moving & Storage Co., E.D.Pa.1974, 384 F.Supp. 1261. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1136. Witnesses, particular persons under color of law

Although when a private party gives testimony in open court in a criminal trial he is not acting "under color of law" for purpose of this section, it is conceivable that nongovernmental witnesses can act "under color of law" by conspiring with the prosecutor or other state officials. Briscoe v. LaHue, U.S.Ind.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 460 U.S. 325, 75 L.Ed.2d 96. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Because witnesses always testify in a personal capacity and are not acting under color of law when they testify, their perjury cannot, except in most extraordinary circumstances, be considered to be pursuant to official policy and basis of municipal liability in action under this section. Cloutier v. Town of Epping, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1983, 714 F.2d 1184. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Police officer's reliance upon information provided by citizens who witnessed events does not convert informing party into state actor for purposes of state action requirement of civil rights action under this section. Hernandez v. Schwegmann Bros. Giant Supermarkets, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1982, 673 F.2d 771. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Testimony given in criminal proceeding by assistant United States attorney was not "state action" or "official conduct" for purposes of this section. Blevins v. Ford, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1978, 572 F.2d 1336. Civil Rights

Witnesses who testify at criminal trial are not acting under color of state law within this section. Bennett v. Passic, C.A.10 (Utah) 1976, 545 F.2d 1260. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Witness who testifies in state court proceeding has not acted "under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983, even if witness is state employee who has perjured himself. McArthur v. Bell, E.D.N.Y.1992, 788 F.Supp. 706. Civil Rights 1326(10)

1137. Miscellaneous particular persons under color of law

State compulsion test did not support finding that private organizer of festival in city park operated as state actor in ejecting street preacher from area outside festival entrance, so as to subject organizer to liability for violating preacher's constitutional rights, based on preacher's contention that city attorney's office had corresponded with organizer's attorney regarding preacher, where letter from city attorney's office was simply an offer to assist in determination of constitutional legal boundaries for protected speech, and a request that organizer consider the issue when planning the next year's event. Lansing v. City of Memphis, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 202 F.3d 821. Constitutional Law 82(5)

Member of town board did not act under color of state law, as required to support civil rights claim, when, before he was elected, he met with town chief of police and urged chief to retire. Carlos v. Santos, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 123 F.3d 61. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Policies and actions of private arts festival committee which held weekend festival in public park were not actions of city and, thus, city could not be held liable under Civil Rights Act of 1871 for actions of committee even though city permitted committee to adopt and enforce rules for festival which limited who could distribute literature at festival. Reinhart v. City of Brookings, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1071. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Allegations by physicians that persons engaged in campaign to force state board of medical examiners to withdraw physician's medical license were insufficient to support § 1983 claim; alleged actions by private parties providing information to state and pressing for state action against physician, without more, did not suffice to make private entities liable under § 1983 as state actors. Manax v. McNamara, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 842 F.2d 808. Civil Rights 1396

Individual who made "citizen's arrest" of plaintiff because he believed plaintiff was a looter, and who subsequently transported plaintiff to police station and reported such suspected criminal activity to police officer, was neither state actor himself nor was he jointly engaged in alleged constitutional deprivation such that he could be held liable under § 1983; individual was acting as private citizen when he made "citizen's arrest," and although individual was insistent when he brought plaintiff to police station, police officer himself made decision as to whether plaintiff should be charged with offense and, if so, what offense should be charged. Lee v. Town of Estes Park, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1987, 820 F.2d 1112. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Humane society was not state actor, as required for suit under §§ 1983, by arrestee claiming that police violated his constitutional rights by killing his pit bull in course of arrest, and that humane society violated his rights in manner of disposal of dog's body; society was private voluntary organization. Chambers v. Doe, D.Del.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 858. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Unsupported accusations that town mechanic acted with police department to have his brother arrested and to deprive uncle of fruits of his business was insufficient to show that nephew acted under color of state law as required to impose civil rights liability on nephew individually, absent showing of cooperation between mechanic and public defendants. Cardillo v. Cardillo, D.R.I.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 402. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Reporter's allegations of efforts by newspaper publisher, which was her former employer, to keep her from speaking out about publisher's alleged deal with district attorney, which resulted in removal of reporter from investigation concerning district attorney's office, and allegations that publisher retaliated against her for continuing to press issue with her superiors by transferring her to dead-end job, failed to show that there was nexus between publisher's actions and any state actor, as required to state claim under §§ 1983 against publisher; there were no allegations that district attorney was even aware of these events, much less that he was directly involved in them. Rivoli v. Gannett Co., Inc., W.D.N.Y.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Village clerk was not acting under color of state law when she submitted sworn affidavit in support of village attorney's complaint in defamation suit against village resident who repeatedly criticized his performance, as required for § 1983 liability. O'Bradovich v. Village of Tuckahoe, S.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 413. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Cruise ship operator did not act under color of state law when it removed Iranian passengers from ship and barred them from future cruises, and thus operator was not subject to liability under § 1983, even though Customs official determined that gas canister removed with passengers did not belong to them and ship used port operated by county; operation of passenger cruise ships was not traditionally exclusive prerogative of state, operator did not act pursuant to specific state law or policy, government did not coerce operator to remove passengers, and operator's actions toward passengers had no nexus with its contract with county. Afkhami v. Carnival Corp., S.D.Fla.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1308. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Actions of lender, trustee and purchaser, in foreclosing upon borrowers' property under deed of trust and evicting borrowers from property, was not "under color of" state law, as required for § 1983 action. Heinemann v. Jim Walter Homes, Inc., N.D.W.Va.1998, 47 F.Supp.2d 716, affirmed 173 F.3d 850. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Radio personality was not acting under color of state law in excluding minor party candidate from political debate based on limited involvement of state university in offering its facilities for debate that he had organized. DeBauche v. Virginia Commonwealth University, E.D.Va.1998, 7 F.Supp.2d 718, affirmed 191 F.3d 499, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1451, 529 U.S. 1033, 146 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Locksmith, who let a partner into shop after another partner had changed locks, was not state actor for federal civil rights purposes where locksmith was a private company whose employee was hired and paid by ousted partner, and where, although the police were present at the scene, they did not hire locksmith and did not direct the locksmith to take any action regarding the lock; locksmith had refused to let ousted partner into shop until police verified partner's identification and papers, and after officer made identification officer left scene. Merriman v. Town of Colonie, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 501, affirmed 112 F.3d 504. Civil Rights 1326(4)

City was liable as a matter of law for under § 1983 for actions of urban rehabilitation standards board (URSB) with regard to demolition hearing for alleged nuisance property; both URSB administrator and URSB were acting under color of state law at time of actions, property owner was not given notice of demolition hearing and URSB and administrator were aware of that fact at hearing, URSB failed to accord owner due process despite knowledge that she had protected property interest in building, as it was clear that owner's name was all over file relating to property, she had appeared at previous hearing before board and it was her failure to comply with previous board order that caused demolition hearing to be set, owner's tenant testified at hearing as to how owner was maintaining building and renting out apartments, and every indication at hearing was that owner owned, maintained and rented out units at targeted property, despite results of title search ordered by URSB administrator. Swann v. City of Dallas, N.D.Tex.1996, 922 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 131 F.3d 140. Civil Rights 1071

Steel company did not act under color of state law in allegedly discriminating against employee, and thus was not subject to suit under § 1983. Pacourek v. Inland Steel Co., N.D.Ill.1994, 858 F.Supp. 1393. Civil Rights 1326(11)

For purposes of § 1983, animal protection agency, a private entity, was "state actor" during attempted rescue of cat trapped between two adjacent walls of two buildings, one of which was occupied by plaintiff's company; animal protection workers got city fire fighters to break through wall without seeking warrant or attempting to reach building owner. Suss v. American Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, S.D.N.Y.1993, 823 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Women's center that allegedly conspired with town to bring Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) action against newspaper publisher and editor who had written editorial critical of police actions in suppressing antiabortion demonstrations at the women's center was a private entity with no authority to act under color of law and was not subject to liability under § 1983. Spear v. Town of West Hartford, D.Conn.1991, 771 F.Supp. 521, affirmed 954 F.2d 63, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 66, 506 U.S. 819, 121 L.Ed.2d 33. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Plaintiff's allegations against private parcel delivery service failed to demonstrate how any deprivation of a constitutional right was attributable to the state, under the public function test, the state compulsion test, and the nexus/joint action test, as was required to maintain civil rights action under §§ 1983; although plaintiff compared service to the United States Postal Service, private service was not performing a function which was traditionally the exclusive prerogative of the state, no conduct was encouraged or coerced by the state, and plaintiff did not allege an interdependent relationship between service and the state. Shortz v. United Parcel Service, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 2006 WL 1208053, Unreported. Civil Rights 1396

Civil rights suit arising out of damage to plaintiff's automobile could not be maintained against defendant who was not state actor. Wasko v. Moore, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 122 Fed.Appx. 403, 2005 WL 226241, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Individual's pro se § 1983 action against president of federally owned but privately managed and operated laboratory, alleging that president acting under color of state law violated his constitutional rights by designing nuclear weapons at the laboratory, was frivolous, warranting dismissal under statute governing in forma pauperis proceedings; individual identified no state law involved in president's activities and failed to allege facts establishing that president personally caused a constitutional violation. Doran v. Robinson, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 778, 2003 WL 21716431, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Owners and managers of housing developments did not operate under color of state law, and thus were not subject to § 1983 liability for their allegedly discriminatory provision of building maintenance services, even though properties' mortgages were federally-financed and subject to regulatory oversight by federal government, absent showing that federal government exercised any power or influence over owners and managers in any way to force or encourage them to act in manner that violated tenants' rights. Neal v. Martinez, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 260524, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(7)

To state a claim for relief in an action brought under § 1983, plaintiffs must establish that they were deprived of a right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States, and that the alleged deprivation was committed under color of state law. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, U.S.Pa.1999, 119 S.Ct. 977, 526 U.S. 40, 143 L.Ed.2d 130. Civil Rights 1304

Section 1983 is not itself source of substantive rights, but merely provides method for vindicating federal rights elsewhere conferred. (Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with three Justices joining, two Justices concurring and two Justices concurring in judgment.) Albright v. Oliver, U.S.Ill.1994, 114 S.Ct. 807, 510 U.S. 266, 127 L.Ed.2d 114, rehearing denied 114 S.Ct. 1340, 510 U.S. 1215, 127 L.Ed.2d 688. Civil Rights 1305

This section creates no substantive rights but merely provides remedies for deprivations of rights established elsewhere. (Per Justice Rehnquist with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment.)--City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, U.S.Okla.1985, 105 S.Ct. 2427, 471 U.S. 808, 85 L.Ed.2d 791, rehearing denied 106 S.Ct. 16, 473 U.S. 925, 87 L.Ed.2d 695. Civil Rights 1305

Civil Rights Act of 1871 only provides a remedy and does not itself create any substantive rights. Wilson v. Garcia, U.S.N.M.1985, 105 S.Ct. 1938, 471 U.S. 261, 85 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1305

Two, and only two, allegations are required in order to state a section 1983 cause of action: (1) plaintiff must allege that some person has deprived him of federal right, and (2) plaintiff must allege that the person who has deprived him of that right acted under color of state or territorial law. Gomez v. Toledo, U.S.Puerto Rico 1980, 100 S.Ct. 1920, 446 U.S. 635, 64 L.Ed.2d 572. Civil Rights 1394; Civil Rights 1396

Civil rights statute providing liability for deprivation of rights under color of law is not itself a source of substantive rights, but a method for vindicating federal rights elsewhere conferred by those parts of the United States Constitution and federal statutes that it describes. Baker v. McCollan, U.S.Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 443 U.S. 137, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, on remand 601 F.2d 903. Civil Rights 1305

If plaintiffs show that a federal statute creates a right, the right is presumptively enforceable under § 1983; plaintiffs do not have the burden of showing an intent to create a private remedy because § 1983 generally supplies a remedy for the vindication of rights secured by federal statutes. Sandusky County Democratic Party v. Blackwell, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 387 F.3d 565. Civil Rights 1027

Physician assistant's claim arising from Idaho State Board of Medicine's billing statement sent to her counsel for costs and fees incurred with respect to her public records request was not cognizable under § 1983; physician assistant did not allege that she paid the bill, nor did she allege how sending the bill amounted to a constitutional or legal violation under § 1983. Olsen v. Idaho State Bd. of Medicine, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2004, 363 F.3d 916. Civil Rights 1032

A plaintiff is not required to satisfy the requirements of an analogous common law tort in order to state a claim actionable under § 1983. Pierce v. Gilchrist, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 359 F.3d 1279. Civil Rights 1034

As general proposition, plaintiffs may bring cause of action pursuant to § 1983 to remedy violations of both Federal Constitution and federal statutes. Holbrook v. City of Alpharetta, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1997, 112 F.3d 1522. Civil Rights 1027

Critical inquiry in § 1983 action is whether plaintiff has been deprived of right secured by Federal Constitution and laws. Allen v. City of Portland, C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 73 F.3d 232, as amended. Civil Rights 1027

Section 1983 itself does not create any substantive rights, but merely provides relief against those who, acting under color of law, violate federal rights created elsewhere. Reynolds v. School Dist. No. 1, Denver, Colo.,

C.A.10 (Colo.) 1995, 69 F.3d 1523. Civil Rights 1305

Section 1983 furnishes cause of action for violation of federal rights created by Constitution. Annis v. County of Westchester, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 36 F.3d 251, on remand 939 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1304

Not all unlawful deprivations of liberty were intended to be protected by this section prohibiting deprivations of civil rights under color of state law. Lessman v. McCormick, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1979, 591 F.2d 605. Civil Rights 1031

Section 1983 draws no distinction between abusive and nonabusive federal violations, and does not require proof of abuse of governmental power separate and apart from proof of constitutional violations; although the statute provides citizens with a remedy for abuses of state power that do violate federal law, it does not provide a remedy for abuses that do not. O'Bradovich v. Village of Tuckahoe, S.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 413. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1031

There is a strong presumption that Congress intended to allow § 1983 suits and the burden of establishing the contrary rests on the defendants. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1401

The required showing that a § 1983 defendant's conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States has two aspects: (1) there must have been an actual deprivation of the plaintiff's federally protected rights, and (2) there must have been a causal connection between the defendant's conduct and the deprivation of the plaintiff's federal rights. Torres Ocasio v. Melendez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 1031

One cannot go into court and claim a violation of § 1983, for § 1983 does not protect anyone against anything; the pleader must also allege an independent substantive basis for his claim, whether grounded in a federal constitutional or statutory right. Nabozny v. NCS Pearson, Inc., D.Nev.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1394

"Plus" portion of § 1983 deprivation-plus claim, which transforms tort into federal constitutional claim, may be met by either the denial of a right specifically secured by the Bill of Rights, such as the right to free speech or counsel, or the denial of a state-created property or liberty interest, such that the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause is violated. Crowe v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 740. Civil Rights 1029; Civil Rights 1028

One cannot go into court and claim "violation of § 1983," for § 1983 by itself does not protect anyone against anything rather, § 1983 provides remedy for violations of all rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution and laws of United States. Rural Water System No. 1 v. City of Sioux Center, Iowa, N.D.Iowa 1997, 967 F.Supp. 1483, affirmed 202 F.3d 1035, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 61, 531 U.S. 820, 148 L.Ed.2d 28. Civil Rights 1305

In determining whether plaintiffs may maintain § 1983 claim based on federal statute, court must first decide if case really involves a federal right, as opposed to simply a claimed violation of federal law; if court is satisfied that plaintiffs have asserted an enforceable right, court must then consider whether Congress has foreclosed enforcement of that right under § 1983. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 288. Civil Rights 1027

Section 1983 creates no substantive rights; rather, it provides remedy for deprivation of rights established elsewhere in the Constitution or federal laws. Scott v. State Pilotage Com'n, S.D.Ala.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1140. Civil Rights 1305

First inquiry in every § 1983 case is whether there has been deprivation of right secured by Constitution or laws of United States. Richmond v. Cagle, E.D.Wis.1996, 920 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1027

First inquiry in § 1983 action is to isolate precise constitutional violation with which defendants are charged; once constitutional violations are identified, court's threshold inquiry is whether defendants are entitled to qualified immunity for their alleged conduct. Pyka v. Village of Orland Park, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1196. Civil Rights 1376(1)

Area for which this section provides redress is not restricted to those rights or interests that warrant due process protection, but includes all civil rights created or insured by United States Constitution and all federal laws, but rights arising from state or local governments are not protected by the statute. DeWalt v. Barger, M.D.Pa.1980, 490 F.Supp. 1262. Civil Rights 1027

1162. Discrimination as prerequisite to maintenance of action, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

This section is not limited to dealing with racial or religious discrimination. Scher v. Board of Ed. of Town of West Orange, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1970, 424 F.2d 741. See, also, Martynn v. Darcy, D.C.La.1971, 333 F.Supp. 1236.

This section proscribing the deprivation of rights affords protection against violation of any rights secured by constitution, not merely those stemming from racial or other types of class-based discrimination. Evans v. Town of Watertown, D.C.Mass.1976, 417 F.Supp. 908. See, also, Hahn v. Sargent, D.C.Mass.1975, 388 F.Supp. 445, affirmed 523 F.2d 461, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1495, 425 U.S. 904, 47 L.Ed.2d 754. Civil Rights 1027

1163. Substantive rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiff's claim under both § 1981 of this title which grants equal rights and this section which provides for civil actions based on deprivation of those rights must be grounded on violation of right of substance, and not merely on theoretical speculation that some right has been infringed. Holmes v. Finney, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1980, 631 F.2d 150. Civil Rights 1027

Allegations of personal representative of involuntarily committed resident that operator of adult foster care home and one of its staff leaders, in her official capacity, violated resident's constitutionally-protected substantive due process rights by failing to keep her "reasonably safe" during her morning shower, resulting in severe burns over more than half of her body from which she later died, stated a claim under §§ 1983. Smith v. AuSable Valley Community Mental Health Services, E.D.Mich.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 743. Health 699

In §§ 1983 action where it was not clear which substantive right plaintiffs were attempting to couple with defamation claim, appropriate course was for district court to dismiss §§ 1983 claim based on alleged substantive due process violation, without prejudice to plaintiffs' ability to amend complaint to specify substantive rights allegedly violated. Heller v. Fulare, W.D.Pa.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 743. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6; Federal Civil Procedure 1838

1164. Personal rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Bystander who witnesses police action, but who is not himself an object of that action, is unable to assert the kind of deliberate deprivation of his or her rights necessary to state due process claim under federal civil rights statute. Archuleta v. McShan, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1990, 897 F.2d 495. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Rights protected under this section are not limited to what are commonly termed "personal" rights; relief under this section is limited only by the confines of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Hobby v. Bradley, N.D.Ill.1975, 388

F.Supp. 1338. Civil Rights 1027

1165. Public rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Claims against justices of state Supreme Court and state bar officials relating to regulation of practice of law and officials' failure to protect the public from attorney's fraudulent activities only related to duties owed to public at large, and thus could not form basis of claim under § 1983. Burcher v. McCauley, E.D.Va.1994, 871 F.Supp. 864. Civil Rights 1039; Civil Rights 1072

1166. Property rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

The right to enjoy property without unlawful deprivation, no less than right to speak or right to travel, is, in truth, a personal right, whether property in question be welfare check, home or savings account. Lynch v. Household Finance Corp., U.S.Conn.1972, 92 S.Ct. 1113, 405 U.S. 538, 31 L.Ed.2d 424, rehearing denied 92 S.Ct. 1611, 406 U.S. 911, 31 L.Ed.2d 822, on remand 360 F.Supp. 720. Constitutional Law 87

State deprivations of property rights are cognizable under this section. Uptown People's Community Health Services Bd. of Directors v. Board of Com'rs of Cook County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 647 F.2d 727, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 328, 454 U.S. 866, 70 L.Ed.2d 167. Civil Rights 1071

This section has application to cases involving deprivation of property rights, but state action is still required. Turner v. Impala Motors, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1974, 503 F.2d 607. Civil Rights 1325

A deprivation of civil rights is primarily the violation of personal rights rather than property rights. Marlowe v. Fisher Body, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1973, 489 F.2d 1057, on remand. Civil Rights 1029

This section protects personal civil rights and not natural rights stemming from ownership of personal property. Martin v. King, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1969, 417 F.2d 458.

Suit for enforcement of civil rights is not necessarily beyond scope of this section because enforcement may possibly affect property interests, where those interests are incidental or ancillary to basic personal right. Bradford Audio Corp. v. Pious, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1968, 392 F.2d 67. Civil Rights 1029; Civil Rights 1071

Law enforcement officer was not liable on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim that officer violated his due process rights by disseminating false information about him, absent evidence that arrestee was deprived of a liberty or property interest. Bloomquist v. Albee, D.Me.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 162. Municipal Corporations 189(1)

Deprivation of a property right does not constitute a civil right violation unless the deprivation violates a federal right and is fairly attributable to the state. Chicarelli v. Plymouth Garden Apartments, E.D.Pa.1982, 551 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1325

Civil action for deprivation of rights provides a cause of action, in law or in equity, for deprivation of property rights. Cowart v. City of Ocala, Fla., M.D.Fla.1979, 478 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1071

Property rights are protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and violation thereof can be redressed by suits under this section relating to deprivation of constitutional rights under color of state law. Hofferber v. First Nat. Bank of Guymon, Oklahoma, W.D.Okla.1977, 437 F.Supp. 788. Civil Rights 1071; Constitutional Law 277(1)

Property rights are basic civil rights and are protected not only by the Constitution but also by this section. Comtronics, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., D.C.Puerto Rico 1975, 409 F.Supp. 800, affirmed 553 F.2d 701. Civil Rights 1071

This section may be invoked where property rights are concerned as well as when personal rights are at issue. Donohoe Const. Co., Inc. v. Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, D.C.Md.1975, 398 F.Supp. 21. Civil Rights 1071

1167. Severity of violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

This section making every person who, under color of state statute, deprives any citizen of constitutional right liable to party injured is aimed at reprehensible action. Striker v. Pancher, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1963, 317 F.2d 780. Civil Rights 1031

Before equal protection clause can be basis for relief under this section, facts must show significant violation of constitutional right. Fant v. Fisher, W.D.Okla.1976, 414 F.Supp. 807. Civil Rights 1028

Neither U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 nor this section permits "slight infringement" of constitutional rights. Smyth v. Lubbers, W.D.Mich.1975, 398 F.Supp. 777.

To support civil liability for violation of this section prohibiting deprivation of civil rights by one acting under color of state law, acts challenged must do more than offend some fastidious squeamishness or private sentimentalism, but must shock the conscience or constitute force that is brutal. Sheffey v. Greer, E.D.Ill.1975, 391 F.Supp. 1044. Civil Rights 1031; Civil Rights 1035

1168. State law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Plaintiff must allege a deprivation of a federally protected right in order to set forth a prima facie case under this section; violation of state law alone does not give rise to a cause of action under this section. Williams v. Treen, C.A.5 (La.) 1982, 671 F.2d 892, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 762, 459 U.S. 1126, 74 L.Ed.2d 977. See, also, New York Airlines, Inc. v. Dukes County, D.C.Mass.1985, 623 F.Supp. 1435; Hundert v. Bieszczat, N.D.Ill.1981, 526 F.Supp. 1051. Civil Rights 1394

Although state standards may sometimes serve as a useful guide in a federal court's determination and redress of constitutional deprivations, a violation of state law, without more, will not justify federal judicial intervention. Smith v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1039. Federal Courts 43

To invoke jurisdiction of the federal courts under this section and to be entitled to relief therefrom, a plaintiff must allege more than the mere failure of state officials to follow state law; to state a federal cause of action on which relief can be granted, plaintiff must allege violation of some federally protected or constitutionally guaranteed right. Moore v. Kusper, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 465 F.2d 256. Federal Courts 244

This section pertaining to civil action for deprivation of rights is not concerned with mere violations of state law. Sigler v. Lowrie, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1968, 404 F.2d 659, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 2010, 395 U.S. 940, 23 L.Ed.2d 456. See, also, Long Grove Country Club Estates, Inc. v. Village of Long Grove, N.D.Ill.1988, 693 F.Supp. 640; Ervin v. Blackwell, W.D.Mo.1983, 585 F.Supp. 680, affirmed 733 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1027

Under this section, cause of action arises only where right created by federal Constitution or laws has been violated, and violation of state law is not sufficient. Ortega v. Ragen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1954, 216 F.2d 561, certiorari denied 75 S.Ct. 786, 349 U.S. 940, 99 L.Ed. 1268. See, also, Canell v. Oregon Dept. of Justice, D.Or.1993, 811 F.Supp. 546. Civil Rights 1027

Federal civil rights statute imposes liability for violations of rights protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, not for violations arising solely out of state or common-law principles; some official conduct may clearly violate state law but may not rise to the level of constitutional injury, and the proper remedy in those cases is suit in state court under traditional contract, tort, agency, or other common-law theory. Fluent v. Salamanca Indian Lease Authority, W.D.N.Y.1994, 847 F.Supp. 1046. Civil Rights 1034; Civil Rights 1315

It is not the role of federal court under federal civil rights statute to remedy violations of state law. Burke v. Sheboygan County Human Services, E.D.Wis.1992, 790 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1027

Alleged violation of state law, unaccompanied by some more precise claim of federal right than general claim of lack of due process, is not sort of deprivation cognizable under § 1983. Housley v. North Panola Consol. School Dist., N.D.Miss.1987, 656 F.Supp. 1087. See, also, Ervin v. Blackwell,W.D.Mo. 1983, 585 F.Supp. 680, affirmed 733 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1027

Question for decision in an action under this section is whether defendant's conduct, independent of its lawfulness or unlawfulness at state law, was sufficiently egregious as to be constitutionally tortious. Ayler v. Hopper, M.D.Ala.1981, 532 F.Supp. 198. Civil Rights 1034

Under this section creating federal cause of action against those who, acting under color of state law, cause a deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States, it is the violation of federal constitutional rights which may be redressed, not violation of state law. Morrison v. Fox, W.D.Pa.1979, 483 F.Supp. 390. Civil Rights 1027

Violations of state law do not give rise to a claim for federal relief under this section. Croy v. Skinner, N.D.Ga.1976, 410 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1027

1169. ---- Federal right based on state law, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Violation of state law is not cognizable under § 1983 unless state statute supplies basis for the claim of a constitutional right. Schepp v. Fremont County, Wyo., D.Wyo.1988, 685 F.Supp. 1200, affirmed 900 F.2d 1448. Civil Rights 1027

1170. ---- Federal law violation as result, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegation that New York authorities violated state regulations in reducing medicaid reimbursement rate could not provide basis for claim under this section by medicaid provider, notwithstanding contention that state medicaid plan had to conform with section 1396a of this title and that, therefore, any violation of state regulations constituted a violation of federal law. Oberlander v. Perales, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 740 F.2d 116. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Violation of state law by state official, without more, is not violation of federal right to procedural due process; but when state officials' violation of state law causing imposition of cruel and unusual punishment, federal cause of action arises under this section. Miller v. Carson, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 563 F.2d 757. Civil Rights 1029; Constitutional Law 318(1)

Proof that state procedural law was violated does not by itself constitute a deprivation of due process, for purposes of § 1983 suit, since federal constitutional standards rather than state law define the requirements of procedural due process. McAllister v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1999, 49 F.Supp.2d 688. Constitutional Law 251.5

Fact that federal regulation governing Aid to Families with Needy Children (AFNC) program merely indicated that state must process AFNC applications within reasonable time not to exceed 45 days, but that state selected 30 day time limit, did not compel finding that 30-day time limit did not create federal right secured by § 1983; state did not have wide latitude of discretion to comply with regulation, and regulation incorporated state's time limit by stating that applicant must receive check or be notified within time prescribed by state regulations. Robidoux v. Kitchel, D.Vt.1995, 876 F.Supp. 575. Civil Rights 1052

Rights which derive solely from state law cannot be the subject of a claim for relief under this section; it is only when a violation of state law results in an infringement of a federally protected right that a cause of action may be said to exist. State of Mo. ex rel. Gore v. Wochner, E.D.Mo.1979, 475 F.Supp. 274, affirmed 620 F.2d 183, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 218, 449 U.S. 875, 66 L.Ed.2d 96. See, also, Boyer v. State of Wis., D.C.Wis.1972, 345 F.Supp. 564. Civil Rights 1027

Mere violation of state law did not state constitutional claim under §§ 1983, and therefore state inmate's §§ 1983 claim alleging that state's DNA collection statute was incorrectly applied to him, in violation of his due process rights, was frivolous, supporting dismissal under in forma pauperis (IFP) statute. Brown v. Williams, C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 907, 2005 WL 673493, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

1171. ---- Constitution of state, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Claim that regulations of California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control that regulate type of entertainment that might be presented in bars and nightclubs that it licensed exceed the constitutional authority of the Department as matter of state law was not cognizable in action under Civil Rights Act challenging the constitutionality of the regulations. California v. LaRue, U.S.Cal.1972, 93 S.Ct. 390, 409 U.S. 109, 34 L.Ed.2d 342, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 1351, 410 U.S. 948, 35 L.Ed.2d 615. Civil Rights 1047

Business owners' claim for damages against state trooper who allegedly violated their civil rights and discriminated against them in violation of Massachusetts Constitution by deliberately making it difficult for them to operate business because of their hiring of employees of Russian heritage was not cognizable under § 1983; section 1983 did not provide remedy for violation of a right based on a state constitution. Lecrenski Bros. Inc. v. Johnson, D.Mass.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1088(1)

There was no private right of action for alleged violations of search and seizure provision of New York State Constitution where plaintiffs had viable § 1983 false arrest claim that could vindicate any violation of plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Coakley v. Jaffe, S.D.N.Y.1999, 49 F.Supp.2d 615, affirmed 234 F.3d 1261. Searches And Seizures 85

Claim that Governor lacked authority to order joint deployment of National Guard members and police officers and that specific acts of defendant police officers violated scope of Governor's decree were claims for violations of local laws or regulations, and thus were insufficient to support § 1983 claim. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Transgression of protection of State Constitution may not form basis of § 1983 claim. Magnuson v. Cassarella, N.D.Ill.1992, 812 F.Supp. 824. Civil Rights 1027

1172. ---- Statutes of state, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Assertion that defendant lawyers, judges and clerks of court misused Illinois statutes in Illinois court as a shield for commission of allegedly criminal and tortious conduct did not assert a denial of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or a claim upon which relief could be granted under this section. Brown v. Dunne, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1969, 409 F.2d 341. Civil Rights 1395(1); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Claim that state and privately and publicly employed social workers violated Michigan Child Protection Act was not cognizable in federal civil rights action. Bartell v. Lohiser, E.D.Mich.1998, 12 F.Supp.2d 640, affirmed 215 F.3d 550. Civil Rights 1057

Assuming that state statute governing administration of county law libraries granted right of access to libraries to members of the public, deprivation of such right was not cognizable under § 1983, since it was not right secured by constitution or laws of United States. Roberts v. Childs, D.Kan.1997, 956 F.Supp. 923, reconsideration denied 1997 WL 83398, affirmed 125 F.3d 862. Civil Rights 1056

Even if defendant police chief "screamed" at plaintiff mother and threatened to arrest her for trespassing after she parked in her minor child's paternal grandparents' driveway with intention of taking child to child's father's funeral, mother failed to show that police chief violated § 1983 by aiding and abetting violation of Wisconsin criminal laws that prohibit unlawful detention of children; evidence showed that, at time of incident in question, mother consented to arrangement whereby her child would attend father's funeral with her brothers and grandparents and, while that arrangement may not have been entirely satisfactory to mother, she did not convey any dissatisfaction to her mother, to police chief, or to child's grandparents. Van Loo v. Braun, E.D.Wis.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1390. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Violation of state statute is not sufficient, standing alone, to establish violation of constitutional right needed to prevail in § 1983 civil rights claim. Ms. B. v. Montgomery County Emergency Service, Inc., E.D.Pa.1992, 799 F.Supp. 534, affirmed 989 F.2d 488, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 174, 510 U.S. 860, 126 L.Ed.2d 133. Civil Rights 1027

Violation of a state statute does not in and of itself establish a constitutional violation. Molgaard v. Town of Caledonia, E.D.Wis.1981, 527 F.Supp. 1073, affirmed 696 F.2d 58. Constitutional Law 254(2)

A violation of the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practice and Consumer Protection Law, 73 P.S.Pa. § 201-2 et seq., does not give rise to an action under this section, as it is a state law claim involving no federally secured right. Ruman v. Com. of Pa., Dept. of Revenue, M.D.Pa.1979, 462 F.Supp. 1355, affirmed 612 F.2d 574, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2939, 446 U.S. 964, 64 L.Ed.2d 823. Civil Rights 1041

Failure to follow dictates of state statute does not, by itself, constitute a civil rights violation. Robinson v. Leahy, N.D.Ill.1975, 401 F.Supp. 1027. Civil Rights 1027

Prisoner's allegations of violations under the Kansas constitution were not cognizable under §§ 1983. Hood v. Kansas Prisoner Health Services, Inc., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 2006 WL 1230688, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

Claims of violation of New York criminal law were not cognizable in § 1983 action. Hansel v. Brazell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 85 Fed.Appx. 237, 2004 WL 25257, Unreported. Civil Rights 1029

1173. ---- Uniform state laws, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even if police officers violated Uniform Extradition Act, extradited arrestee had no claim against officers under § 1983 for such violation; Act was not law of United States and was not enacted pursuant to agreement or compacts between any states, but rather, was promulgated by conference of commissioners in uniform state laws and adopted by approximately ten states thereafter. Giano v. Martino, E.D.N.Y.1987, 673 F.Supp. 92, affirmed 835 F.2d 1429. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1174. ---- State compacts, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A state compact is transformed into federal law, and thus may be the basis for a § 1983 action, when (1) it falls within the scope of the Constitution's Compact Clause, (2) it has received congressional consent, and (3) its subject matter is appropriate for congressional legislation. Ghana v. Pearce, C.A.9 (Or.) 1998, 159 F.3d 1206. Civil Rights 1029; States 6

1175. ---- Tort law of state, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Civil rights statute providing liability for deprivation of rights under color of law imposes liability for violations of rights protected by the Constitution, not for violations of duties of care arising out of tort law; remedy for the latter type of injury must be sought in state court under traditional tort law principles. Baker v. McCollan, U.S.Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 443 U.S. 137, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, on remand 601 F.2d 903. Civil Rights 1034; Civil Rights 1315

Many harms which are caused by state actor do not fall within scope of § 1983, which is not intended to turn Fourteenth Amendment into a font of tort law that supersedes tort systems already available under individual state laws. Gregory v. City of Rogers, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 974 F.2d 1006, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1265, 507 U.S. 913, 122 L.Ed.2d 661. Civil Rights 1034

Action under § 1983 may not be based alone on violation of state law or on state tort. Clark v. Link, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1988, 855 F.2d 156. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1034

Not all state law torts are constitutional violations for which this section provides remedy; this section creates species of tort liability only for deprivations, under color of state law, of federal statutory or constitutional rights. Sampley v. Ruettgers, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1983, 704 F.2d 491. Civil Rights 1034

Existence of state tort claim does not negate entitlement of a litigant to federal civil rights action as well. Howell v. Tanner, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 650 F.2d 610, rehearing denied 659 F.2d 1079, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1775, 456 U.S. 918, 72 L.Ed.2d 178, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1777, 456 U.S. 919, 72 L.Ed.2d 180. Civil Rights 1034

A valid cause of action under this section is not alleged simply by assertion that common law tort was committed by state official; rather, to have meritorious claim, plaintiff must allege that he was deprived of some constitutional right. Cramer v. Crutchfield, C.A.4 (Va.) 1981, 648 F.2d 943. Civil Rights 1394

This section giving right of action for deprivation of rights occasioned while the actor is acting under color of state law is not a general tort statute but imposes liability only for the violation of rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States and, hence, does not grant a cause of action for every injury wrongfully inflicted by a state officer. Shillingford v. Holmes, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 634 F.2d 263, on remand 512 F.Supp. 656. See, also, Jordan v. Five Unamed Police Officers and Agents, E.D.La.1981, 528 F.Supp. 507. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1326(2)

Although this section may be analyzed as a "species of tort," violation of local law does not necessarily mean that federal rights have been invaded. Williams v. Kelley, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 624 F.2d 695, rehearing denied 632 F.2d 895, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3009, 451 U.S. 1019, 69 L.Ed.2d 391. Civil Rights 1027

Conduct which merely engenders common law tort liability, without infringing on constitutionally protected interests, is not a sufficient basis to support a cause of action under this section. Beker Phosphate Corp. v. Muirhead, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 581 F.2d 1187. See, also, Lovelace v. Leechburg Area School Dist., D.C.Pa.1970, 310 F.Supp. 579. Civil Rights 1034

This section does not provide a remedy for mere common-law torts. Street v. Surdyka, C.A.4 (Md.) 1974, 492 F.2d 368. See, also, Owens v. Swift Agr. and Chemical Corp., D.C.Va.1979, 477 F.Supp. 91, affirmed 612 F.2d 1309; Bolden v. Mandel D.C.Md.1974, 385 F.Supp. 761. Civil Rights 1034

A tort committed by state official acting under color of law is not, in and of itself, sufficient to show an invasion of a person's right under this section. Kent v. Prasse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1967, 385 F.2d 406. See, also, Patricia B .v. Jones, D.C.Pa.1978, 454 F.Supp. 18; McCarther v. Grady County, Okl., D.C.Okl.1977, 437 F.Supp. 831. Civil Rights 1034

Negligence is a state law tort, not a constitutional violation, and must therefore be brought pursuant to state law. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Civil Rights 1034

Not every state law tort becomes federally cognizable constitutional tort under civil rights statute simply because it is committed by state actor. Wallace by Wallace v. Batavia School Dist. 101, N.D.Ill.1994, 870 F.Supp. 222, affirmed 68 F.3d 1010. Civil Rights 1034

Allegations of tortious conduct are insufficient to sustain a violation of this subchapter; rather, the wrong must be of a federally protected right. Samuels v. Department of Correction, N. Y. C., E.D.N.Y.1982, 548 F.Supp. 253. Civil Rights 1394

Commission of a state tort simply because it is done by a state official does not amount to cause of action under this section. O'Brien's Estate v. Wilkins, N.D.Fla.1981, 511 F.Supp. 707.

There is close relationship between tort law and this section, but some violations of tort law will not be cognizable under this section while this section will reach certain conduct that may not be tortious at common law. Marrapese v. State of R. I., D.C.R.I.1980, 500 F.Supp. 1207. Civil Rights 1034

Tortious conduct by a state prison official is not sufficient to establish an invasion of rights guaranteed by the Constitution. Hayes v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1979, 475 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1090

Not every tort recognized under state law is sufficient to pass the constitutional threshold so as to allow the maintenance of an action under this section. Brainerd v. Potratz, N.D.Ill.1976, 421 F.Supp. 836. Civil Rights 1034

This section is not designed to be a font of federal tort law; fact that a tort may have been committed by state officials does not mean that a federal right has been invaded. Roach v. Kligman, E.D.Pa.1976, 412 F.Supp. 521. Civil Rights 1034

This section does not provide remedy for mere common-law torts, even when committed under color of state law. Taylor v. Nichols, D.C.Kan.1976, 409 F.Supp. 927, affirmed 558 F.2d 561. Civil Rights 1034

1176. ---- Orders of state courts, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Fact that New York State law provided remedy for partially overlapping tort of malicious prosecution did not preclude arrestee from pursuing § 1983 action against arresting officers, arising from "seizure" that resulted from post-arraignment order that arrestee not leave State of New York and requirement that he attend court appointments. Murphy v. Lynn, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 118 F.3d 938, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1051, 522 U.S. 1115, 140 L.Ed.2d 114. Civil Rights 1319

County's alleged failure to completely comply with municipal court's expungement order presented only a question of state law, and thus did not form basis for claim for relief under this section. Bird v. Summit County, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1984, 730 F.2d 442. Civil Rights 1029

1177. ---- Determination of state law, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Mere mutual mistakes of state law do not rise to the level of constitutional violations, and deprivation of a right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States is a prerequisite to an action under this section. Crocker v. Hakes, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 616 F.2d 237. Civil Rights 1027

Mere erroneous determination by state agency charged with enforcement of state law does not present substantial federal question. Stenson v. State of N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1976, 422 F.Supp. 38. Federal Courts 12.1

1178. ---- Application of state law, state law violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In general, misapplication of state law by state official does not give rise to action for infringement of constitutional rights; it merely entitles plaintiff to bring action for violation of state law. Esteves-Jimenez v. Sosa Llorens, D.Puerto Rico 1992, 789 F.Supp. 508. Civil Rights 1315

Commission of error by state court in applying state law which deprives federal plaintiff of property does not raise federal constitutional question for purpose of action under this section. Coltharp v. Cutler, D.C.Utah 1976, 419 F.Supp. 924. Civil Rights 1071

1179. Federal law violation generally, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Civil Rights Act of 1871 does not create a remedy for all conduct that may result in violation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws. Briscoe v. LaHue, U.S.Ind.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 460 U.S. 325, 75 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1031

To establish claim under this section proscribing a deprivation of rights, plaintiff must have suffered the deprivation of federally protected rights, privileges or immunities as result of action taken and such deprivation must have been caused by a person acting under color of state law. Parratt v. Taylor, U.S.Neb.1981, 101 S.Ct. 1908, 451 U.S. 527, 68 L.Ed.2d 420. See, also, Brown v. Miller, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 631 F.2d 408; Triplett v. Azordegan, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 570 F.2d 819; Jacobson v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1977, 566 F.2d 1353, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 1171, 440 U.S. 391, 59 L.Ed.2d 401, on remand 474 F.Supp. 901; Baldwin v. Appalachian Power Co., C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1977, 556 F.2d 241; Basista v. Weir, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1965, 340 F.2d 74; Marland v. Heyse, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1963, 315 F.2d 312; Jones v. Taibbi, D.C.Mass.1981, 508 F.Supp. 1069; Becker v. Evans, D.C.Pa.1979, 478 F.Supp. 729; Bradford v. Edelstein, D.C.Tex.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1361; Taylor v. Grindstaff, D.C.Tenn.1978, 467 F.Supp. 4.

First inquiry in suit under 1871 civil rights statute is whether plaintiff has been deprived of rights secured by Constitution and laws of the United States. Martinez v. State of Cal., U.S.Cal.1980, 100 S.Ct. 553, 444 U.S. 277, 62 L.Ed.2d 481, rehearing denied 100 S.Ct. 1285, 445 U.S. 920, 63 L.Ed.2d 606. Civil Rights 1027

To establish § 1983 civil rights cause of action for federal statute violation, statute must create enforceable right and Congress must not have foreclosed use of § 1983. Audette v. Sullivan, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 19 F.3d 254. Civil Rights 1027

To bring action under § 1983, plaintiff must show both existence of federal constitutional or statutory right and some deprivation of these federal rights as a result of official action. Willhauck v. Halpin, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 953 F.2d 689, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1304

Civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] protects only against violation of federally protected rights. Casines v. Murchek, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1985, 766 F.2d 1494, rehearing denied 773 F.2d 1239. Civil Rights 1027

This section neither provides a general remedy for the alleged torts of state officials nor opens the federal courthouse doors to relieve the complaints of all who suffer injury at the hands of the state or its officers; it affords a remedy only to those who suffer, as a result of state action, deprivation of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. White v. Thomas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 660 F.2d 680, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1731, 455 U.S. 1027, 72 L.Ed.2d 148. See, also, Juncker v. Tinney, D.C.Md.1982, 549 F.Supp. 574; Sell v. Price, S.D.Ohio 1981, 527 F.Supp. 114. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1034

In order to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under this section, complaint must show the deprivation of a right that is secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Bradt v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 634 F.2d 796, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 125, 454 U.S. 830, 70 L.Ed.2d 106. See, also, Reilly v. Leonard, D.C.Conn.1978, 459 F.Supp. 291; Giannaris v. Frank, D.C.Ill.1974, 387 F.Supp. 570. Civil Rights 1394

In determining whether plaintiff stated claim cognizable under this section, it was necessary to inquire first whether plaintiff had been deprived of rights secured by Constitution and laws and, in order to determine whether rights were "secured by" U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, to find allegation that state was "involved in" their deprivation. Dahl v. Akin, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 630 F.2d 277, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1977, 451 U.S. 908, 68 L.Ed.2d 296. Civil Rights 1394

In order to state claim upon which relief can be granted for deprivation of civil rights, one must allege that he, himself, sustained deprivation of right, privilege or immunity secured to him by Constitution and laws of United States. Inmates v. Owens, C.A.4 (Va.) 1977, 561 F.2d 560. Civil Rights 1394

This section does not create a remedy for every wrong committed under color of state law; only deprivations of rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States are actionable. Ohio Inns, Inc. v. Nye, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1976, 542 F.2d 673, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1583, 430 U.S. 946, 51 L.Ed.2d 794. See, also, Santiago-De-Castro v. Morales-Medina, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 737 F.Supp. 729, affirmed 943 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1027

In addition to allegation of requisite degree of culpability, plaintiffs, who seek to recover under this section must show violation of federally secured rights. Williams v. Field, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 416 F.2d 483, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1252, 397 U.S. 1016, 25 L.Ed.2d 431.

Amended complaint which sought to recover claimed monetary loss based upon fraud and deceit did not invoke jurisdiction of federal court in nondiversity action; in order to do so the amended complaint must allege facts which show that plaintiffs were subjected to the deprivation of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Sanders v. Erreca, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1967, 377 F.2d 960, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 776, 389 U.S. 1039, 19 L.Ed.2d 828. Federal Courts 243

Cause of action pursuant to § 1983 to address violation of federal statute is not available where governing statute provides exclusive remedy for violations of its terms. Rural Water System No. 1 v. City of Sioux Center, Iowa, N.D.Iowa 1997, 967 F.Supp. 1483, affirmed 202 F.3d 1035, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 61, 531 U.S. 820, 148 L.Ed.2d 28. Civil Rights 1027

In order to state cognizable claim under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must present facts which held that defendants, while acting under color of state law, deprived him of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States; statute is not in itself a source of substantive rights and provides only a remedy, with the substantive rights to be found in the Constitution or the federal law. Nicholson v. Moran, D.R.I.1993, 835 F.Supp. 692. Civil Rights 1304; Civil Rights 1305

Civil rights claims are valid only against officials who, acting under color of state law, violate either United States Constitution or federal statute. Carey on Behalf of Carey v. Maine School Administrative Dist. No. 17, D.Me.1990,

754 F.Supp. 906. Civil Rights 1304

Section 1983 provides redress only for infringement of rights secured by Constitution and laws of United States, and thus, threshold requirement in virtually every § 1983 action is identification of which constitutional right plaintiff seeks to vindicate. Ryan v. Burlington County, D.N.J.1987, 674 F.Supp. 464, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 860 F.2d 1199, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1745, 490 U.S. 1020, 104 L.Ed.2d 182. Civil Rights 1027

To show a violation of this section, plaintiffs must show that they were deprived by conduct fairly attributable to state of a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Chicarelli v. Plymouth Garden Apartments, E.D.Pa.1982, 551 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1401

Complaint states a claim under this section if it states a claim under any constitutional or statutory provision other than due process clause, if it alleges that the deprivation has resulted from application of an established state procedure, if the deprivation has resulted from a random and unauthorized act of the defendants and plaintiff does not have state remedies which satisfy the requirements of due process or if the complaint states a claim of violation of substantive due process rights. Juncker v. Tinney, D.C.Md.1982, 549 F.Supp. 574. Civil Rights 1395(1)

In order to state a valid claim under this section, pleader must allege an independent substantive basis, grounded either in a federal constitutional or statutory right. Schwartzberg v. Califano, S.D.N.Y.1979, 480 F.Supp. 569. Civil Rights 1396

Assertion of a deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States is a prerequisite to recovery under this section. Ruffin v. Beal, E.D.Pa.1978, 468 F.Supp. 482.

Rights protected by this section rendering a person who deprives another of a right or privilege liable to injured party are public ones, created or adopted by the federal constitution or by Congress; the federal rights entail a person's civil rights and personal liberties, including nondiscrimination, voting, free speech and freedom of assembly, equal protection and due process in safeguarding proprietary rights, as well as personal liberties. Dorak v. Shapp, M.D.Pa.1975, 403 F.Supp. 863. Civil Rights 1029; Civil Rights 1028

1180. Constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

When multiple violations of Constitution are alleged in civil rights suit, each constitutional provision is examined by court in turn, and court does not generally as preliminary matter identify the claim's dominant character. Soldal v. Cook County, Ill., U.S.Ill.1992, 113 S.Ct. 538, 506 U.S. 56, 121 L.Ed.2d 450, on remand 986 F.2d 1425. Civil Rights 1303

First Amendment, equal protection and due process clauses of Fourteenth Amendment, and other provisions of Federal Constitution afford protection to employees who serve government as well as to those who are served by them, and § 1983 provides cause of action for all citizens injured by abridgement of those protections. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1027; Constitutional Law 82(11); Constitutional Law 238.5; Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

If plaintiff suffered injury barred by Federal Constitution, he had remedy for damages under 1871 civil rights statute. City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, U.S.Cal.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1660, 461 U.S. 95, 75 L.Ed.2d 675. Civil Rights 1304

Presence or absence of congressional authorization for suits against federal officials is relevant to the question of whether to infer a right of action for damages for a particular violation of the Constitution. Butz v. Economou, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 438 U.S. 478, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, on remand 466 F.Supp. 1351. United States

It is constitutional deprivation under color of state law, and not force used in effecting the deprivation or extent of injury suffered, that provides basis for action under this section. Pritchard v. Perry, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 508 F.2d 423. Civil Rights 1324

Absence of any violated constitutional rights precluded liability of city in §§ 1983 action, for being moving force behind allegedly wrongful killing of arrestee's dog, and cover up of details. Chambers v. Doe, D.Del.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 858. Civil Rights 1348

First inquiry in any §§ 1983 suit is whether the plaintiff has been deprived of a right secured by the Constitution and laws; if there has been no such deprivation, the state of mind of the defendant is wholly immaterial. World Wide Street Preachers' Fellowship v. Town of Columbia, W.D.La.2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 671. Civil Rights 1027

Person "subjects" another to deprivation of constitutional right, for purpose of § 1983 claim, if he does affirmative act, or omits to perform act which he is legally required to do, that caused deprivation of which complaint is made. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1031; Civil Rights 1335

A city's failure to follow its own internal policies does not amount to a constitutional violation under § 1983. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1031

County's alleged failure to follow its own probation policies for new officers was not a per se constitutional violation, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 claim. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Personal involvement of defendants in alleged constitutional deprivations is a prerequisite to an award of damages under § 1983. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1335

When § 1983 provides a remedy, an implied cause of action grounded on the Constitution is not available. Dix v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31175251, Unreported. Civil Rights 1322

1181. ---- Necessary element of action, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A public official is liable under this section providing liability for deprivation of rights under color of law only if he causes plaintiff to be subjected to deprivation of his constitutional rights. Baker v. McCollan, U.S.Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 443 U.S. 137, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, on remand 601 F.2d 903. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Causes of action under civil rights statute are not limited to claims based on constitutional or equal rights violations. West Virginia University Hospitals, Inc. v. Casey, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 885 F.2d 11, rehearing denied, certiorari granted 110 S.Ct. 1294, 494 U.S. 1003, 108 L.Ed.2d 472, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 3213, 496 U.S. 936, 110 L.Ed.2d 661, affirmed 111 S.Ct. 1138, 499 U.S. 83, 113 L.Ed.2d 68. Civil Rights 1027

Violation under this section must be predicated on a deprivation of constitutional rights. Bird v. Summit County, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1984, 730 F.2d 442. Civil Rights 1027

Where no constitutional violation was shown, there was no claim under this section. Gearheart v. Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1975, 516 F.2d 353, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 274, 423 U.S. 927, 46 L.Ed.2d 254

. Civil Rights 1027

Deprivation of constitutional rights by defendant acting under color of state law must be proved in order to recover under this section. Greco v. Orange Memorial Hospital Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 513 F.2d 873, rehearing denied 515 F.2d 1183, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 433, 423 U.S. 1000, 46 L.Ed.2d 376. Civil Rights 1401

State officials can only be held accountable under this section in federal courts for conduct and actions taken pursuant to their official duties where a clear showing is made of a violation of some federal constitutional right. Cole v. Smith, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1965, 344 F.2d 721. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Even if Pennsylvania city housing authority employee asserted constitutional claim for age discrimination independent from ADEA claim, he had not shown he was deprived of a constitutional right. Alba v. Housing Authority of City of Pittston, M.D.Pa.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 685. Civil Rights 1207

In order to be awarded relief in a civil rights action, plaintiff must establish that a particular defendant has caused a deprivation of a right guaranteed by the Federal Constitution and that that person acted under color of state law. Jackson v. Dillon, E.D.N.Y.1981, 518 F.Supp. 618. Civil Rights 1304

A civil rights complaint must show a deprivation of a right or immunity protected by the federal Constitution. Coyle v. Hughs, W.D.Okla.1977, 436 F.Supp. 591. Civil Rights 1394

This section is federal remedy which protects only federal constitutional rights. Somers v. Strader, M.D.N.C.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1184.

An essential element of an actionable civil rights complaint is the establishment of a constitutional deprivation. Mitchell v. Hendricks, E.D.Pa.1977, 431 F.Supp. 1295. See, also, Shaffer v. Jennings, D.C.Pa.1970, 314 F.Supp. 588. Civil Rights 1027

1182. ---- Recognized right, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Both the statutory § 1983 claim and the judicially created Bivens claim provide remedies rather than substantive rights; plaintiff must allege a violation of a recognized constitutionally created right. Jacob v. Curt, D.R.I.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1536, affirmed 898 F.2d 838. Civil Rights 1305; Civil Rights 1394; United States 50.1

1183. ---- Commerce clause, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Suits for violations of the commerce clause may be brought under § 1983. Dennis v. Higgins, U.S.Neb.1991, 111 S.Ct. 865, 498 U.S. 439, 112 L.Ed.2d 969. Civil Rights 1041

Commerce clause, U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, does not secure rights cognizable under this section. Consolidated Freightways Corp. of Delaware v. Kassel, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1984, 730 F.2d 1139, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 126, 469 U.S. 834, 83 L.Ed.2d 68.

Employee of Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission did not violate alleged right of seaplane operator under Commerce Clause of United States Constitution to engage in lawful business by alleged wrongful issuance of citation and threats of arrest under Florida Manatee Sanctuary Act (FMSA) for operation of seaplane in "Manatee Slow Speed Zone," for purpose of employee's assertion of qualified immunity in civil rights lawsuit, since neither Florida legislature, agency, nor any other governmental body took legislative action that would have impinged upon operator's right to engage in lawful business activity. Tague v. Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Com'n, M.D.Fla.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1195, affirmed 154 Fed.Appx. 129, 2005 WL 2981921. Environmental Law 530

Solid waste generator's and solid waste hauler's action against county alleging that waste-disposal ordinances improperly increased price of disposal contracts for generators and decreased fees for haulers in violation of Commerce Clause and Due Process Clause had to be brought via § 1983, rather than being pled as direct claim under Constitution. Seacoast Sanitation Ltd., Inc. v. Broward County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 1370. Civil Rights 1322

Commerce Clause was not implicated in taxicab companies' and operators' § 1983 action alleging that city's relocation of ordinance-created taxi stands without notice violated due process; each plaintiff operated within city, and none was out-of-state entity allegedly being discriminated against by state. Fortuna's Cab Service, Inc. v. City of Camden, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 562. Commerce 82.20

Parties to proposed merger, who sought preliminary injunctive relief, were likely succeed on merits of their claims that Puerto Rico Secretary of Justice's imposition of certain conditions on them before approving their transaction constituted selective and vindictive enforcement in violation of Equal Protection Clause and violation of Commerce Clause; requirement that acquiring corporation maintain a high level of purchases from local suppliers, distributors and manufacturers fell within the type of protectionist state policies subject to the "virtually invalid per se rule," Secretary's intent in denying approval of the merger on the basis of parties' failure to submit to her requests was to punish them for their defiance to her demands, and Secretary also violated parties' right to equal protection when she attempted to extract from them a consent decree that in effect amended the labor laws applicable to them as employers. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 395, remanded 322 F.3d 747, vacated. Injunction 138.42

Section 1983 action brought by builders and dealers of manufactured homes, claiming that county officials acting under color of state law had deprived them of their right under commerce clause to engage in interstate commerce free of state regulatory interference by applying local construction and safety codes to federally-certified manufactured home, stated valid cause of action which was not precluded by comprehensive enforcement scheme. Bollack v. City of Mitchell, S.D., D.S.D.1996, 935 F.Supp. 1042. Civil Rights 1081

This section was not intended to and does not provide a remedy for a dormant claim under U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3 and, hence, attorney fees were not recoverable under section 1988 of this title on behalf of trucking firm which prevailed on its commerce clause challenge to state ban on 65-foot twin trailer trucks on interstate highways. Consolidated Freightways Corp. of Delaware v. Kassel, S.D.Iowa 1983, 556 F.Supp. 740, affirmed 730 F.2d 1139, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 126, 469 U.S. 834, 83 L.Ed.2d 68. Civil Rights 1479

Allegations that state Insurance Department violated insurance agent's alleged rights under the First Amendment to do business and to associate, under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to pursue his chosen profession, and under the Commerce Clause to further his business ends, by revoking agent's license, which was subsequently restored after judicial review, did not state specific constitutional violation sufficient to state §§ 1983 claim based on malicious use of civil process. Wyatt v. Keating, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 511, 2005 WL 834462, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Sexual orientation discrimination will not support conspiracy claim under § 1985. Dix v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31175251, Unreported. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

1184. ---- Contracts clause, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Entertainers showed that municipality intended to enter into agreement with them for use of municipal theater, on motion by municipality in lawsuit under § 1983 to set aside preliminary and permanent injunction, where municipality received 50% deposit from entertainers, First Amendment prohibited municipality from unilaterally rejecting any application by entertainers, and municipality did not otherwise indicate that it did not have valid contract with entertainers at time of purported "cancellation." Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 440. Civil Rights 1451; Civil Rights 1457(2); Constitutional Law 90.1(4); Municipal Corporations 721(3)

To show violation of contracts clause of United States Constitution, plaintiff must establish that state impaired its contract, and that impairment was substantial. MSA Realty Corp. v. State of Ill., N.D.Ill.1992, 794 F.Supp. 267, affirmed 990 F.2d 288. Constitutional Law 154(1)

Hearing aid dealer had no claim against state employees under contract clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Art. 1, § 10, cl. 1, based on their alleged conspiracy to interfere with his contract relations by instructing buyers not to pay purchase obligations and informing bank, as assignee of installment contracts, that the contracts had been fraudulently obtained and that dealer might lose his license, even if the employees were acting under color of state law, especially absent even any intimation that the employees participated in, or contributed to, enactment of state legislation impairing contractual rights and obligations. Poirier v. Hodges, M.D.Fla.1978, 445 F.Supp. 838. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

This section was intended to cover only rights, privileges and immunities secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and did not include right against impairment of obligation of contract guaranteed by U.S.C.A.Const. Art. 1, § 10, cl. 1. Pudlik v. Public Service Co. of Colo., D.C.Colo.1958, 166 F.Supp. 921. Civil Rights 1041

1185. ---- Full faith and credit clause, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

This section is an appropriate basis on which to raise a claim that courts of a state are denying rights asserted under Full Faith and Credit Clause, U.S.C.A.Const. Art. 4, § 1, and implementing statute, § 1738 of Title 28. Lamb Enterprises, Inc. v. Kiroff, N.D.Ohio 1975, 399 F.Supp. 409, reversed on other grounds 549 F.2d 1052, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 2926, 431 U.S. 968, 53 L.Ed.2d 1064. Civil Rights 1029

1186. ---- Privileges and immunities clause, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Nonresident's rights under privileges and immunities clause were violated when county board of appeals relied on residency to determine taxi license applicants' familiarity with geographic area to be served; nonresident offered undisputed evidence that residency did not in fact provide type of familiarity that would advance competent taxi service and, even if residency was valid indicator of familiarity, board failed to establish that it could not determine familiarity through other means, such as written examination, that did not infringe constitutional protections. O'Reilly v. Board of Appeals of Montgomery County, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1991, 942 F.2d 281. Automobiles 78; Constitutional Law 207(2)

1187. ---- Extradition clause, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

This section establishes remedy for improper extradition in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Art. 4, § 2, cl. 2 and § 3182 of Title 18. Brown v. Nutsch, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1980, 619 F.2d 758.

Citizen could prove no set of facts which would entitle him to relief under § 1983 related to his alleged unlawful extradition to Florida; federal law and Mississippi law did not mandate release of fugitive after 30 days or entitle citizen to a hearing prior to extradition to Florida, citizen had no constitutional right to be finger printed, photographed, or interviewed by a criminal investigator, and verbal abuse did not rise to the level of a constitutional violation. Ellis v. Hargrove, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2003, 75 Fed.Appx. 229, 2003 WL 22080743, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1188. ---- Supremacy clause, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Supremacy clause does not of its own force create federal rights enforceable under this section; the clause is not itself a source of federal rights, but secures federal rights by according them priority when they come in conflict with state law. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1029

While the Supremacy Clause, of its own force, does not create any rights enforceable under § 1983, the federal documentation provisions governing the use of vessels in the coastwise trade, confer a right in the form of a license to operate freely in each state's waters subject only to the legitimate exercise of a state's police powers, giving vessel owner standing to assert its Supremacy Clause claim under § 1983 in challenging Virginia statutes limiting such operation. Waste Management Holdings, Inc. v. Gilmore, C.A.4 (Va.) 2001, 252 F.3d 316, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1203, 535 U.S. 904, 152 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1071; Civil Rights 1331(6)

Even if there was intentional violation of supremacy clause, Art. 6, cl. 2 by municipality in enactment of ordinance, plaintiff did not thereby have claim under this section. Pirolo v. City of Clearwater, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1983, 711 F.2d 1006, rehearing denied 720 F.2d 688. Civil Rights 1032

Federal Supremacy Clause, of its own force, does not create rights enforceable under § 1983, but only secures federal rights by according them priority whenever they come in conflict with state law. Beechwood Restorative Care Center v. Leeds, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 248, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 436 F.3d 147. Civil Rights 1029; States 18.23

Violation of Supremacy Clause does not give rise to § 1983 claim, since Supremacy Clause is not the source of any substantive federal rights, rather it secures federal rights by giving them priority when they conflict with state law; such remedy would depend on whether federal statute that preempts state law creates a federal right. Northern Nat. Gas Co. v. Munns, S.D.Iowa 2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 1103. Civil Rights 1029

Violation of supremacy clause does not give right of action recognized under federal civil rights deprivation statute. Faux-Burhans v. County Com'rs of Frederick County, D.Md.1987, 674 F.Supp. 1172, affirmed 859 F.2d 149, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 869, 488 U.S. 1042, 102 L.Ed.2d 992. Civil Rights 1029

Even if it prevailed on its claims that village ordinance was preempted by federal statute, pursuant to supremacy clause, and violated commerce clause, association was not entitled to declaration that village was liable for damages under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for costs and expenses incurred by association members in complying with ordinance, in that alleged violations of supremacy and commerce clauses were not cognizable under § 1983. Pesticide Public Policy Foundation v. Village of Wauconda, Ill., N.D.Ill.1985, 622 F.Supp. 423, affirmed 826 F.2d 1068. Civil Rights 1029; Civil Rights 1041

1189. ---- First amendment generally, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegations by attorney and accounting corporation hired under contract to assist Puerto Rico municipality in recovery of municipal taxes, that the failure of municipal officials to pay them for services already rendered was due solely to partisan political change of administration, and the fact that attorney and accounting corporation had different political affiliation from officials, stated §§ 1983 claim against municipal officials for First Amendment retaliation, absent any allegation that officials had some legitimate policy-making interest in not paying attorney and accounting corporation. Ramirez v. Arlequin, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 447 F.3d 19. Territories 23

sold, infringed upon his First Amendment right to freedom of expression, for purpose of vendor's §§ 1983 claim, absent evidence that vendor ever paid the five-cent fee or that mere threat of fee stifled his expression. Jacobsen v. Illinois Dept. of Transp., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 419 F.3d 642. States 88

Allegations by operators of medical facilities that the Secretary of Health of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico sold a hospital to a medical school, instead of to the operators, as part of Puerto Rico's health care facility privatization program, when the operators were interested in buying it, in retaliation for operators' prior conduct of availing themselves of judicial remedies following the Secretary's denial of their applications for certain permits, failed to state First Amendment retaliation claim against Secretary, absent allegations that Secretary rejected an actual bid submitted by operators to buy hospital, or otherwise took a retaliatory action or made a retaliatory decision against them, and absent allegations that Secretary's decision was substantially attributable to operators' protected conduct. Centro Medico del Turabo, Inc. v. Feliciano de Melecio, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 406 F.3d 1 . Civil Rights 1395(1)

Elected New York City community school board member stated colorable First Amendment claim against chancellor who allegedly removed her in retaliation for her stated political views; member represented neither policymaking staffer fired for her allegiance to previous administration nor policymaking staffer let go for her boss's political affiliations and allegiances. Velez v. Levy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 401 F.3d 75. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Constitutional Law 91; Schools 53(5)

Objections by employee of state mental health facility to a potential transfer within the facility to an allegedly more dangerous department was not protected speech, for purposes of employee's §§ 1983 claim alleging First Amendment retaliation. Carreon v. Illinois Dept. of Human Services, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 395 F.3d 786. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Health 266

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether city employee was fired in retaliation for writing a letter accusing administration of unlawful and corruptive practices precluded summary judgment on the basis of qualified immunity for city labor relations officer in employee's § 1983 suit alleging First Amendment violations. Johnson v. Ganim, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 342 F.3d 105. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

High school student and parent had standing to challenge school board member's unwelcome and unexpected recitation of Christian prayer during graduation ceremony, as well as school district's and superintendent's potential involvement. Doe ex rel. Doe v. School Dist. of City of Norfolk, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2003, 340 F.3d 605, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Schools 178

Enactment of zoning ordinances did not amount to express policy which caused constitutional violation when enforced against business, as required to support business owners' § 1983 claim that citations and warnings were issued against them in retaliation for exercise of their First Amendment rights in speaking out against village's golf and waterworks bond proposals. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Since former teacher's § 1983 action alleging that his termination for belonging to group that advocated sexual relations between men and boys violated First Amendment involved constitutional issues, Court of Appeals' review was de novo. Melzer v. Board of Education of City School Dist. of City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 336 F.3d 185, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1424, 540 U.S. 1183, 158 L.Ed.2d 87. Federal Courts 776

Agent of Puerto Rico Justice Department's Special Investigations Bureau (SIB) waived issues of whether district court erred in denying her motion for extension of time to respond to her superiors' motion for summary judgment in action under §§ 1983 and 1985, alleging retaliation for speech on matter of public concern and termination without due process, and denying agent's motion to reconsider grant of summary judgment, by failing to offer any sustained argument on appeal. Torres-Rosado v. Rotger-Sabat, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 335 F.3d 1. Federal

The threshold question in evaluating public employee First Amendment § 1983 claims is whether the speech is about a matter of public concern. Catletti ex rel. estate of Catletti v. Rampe, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 334 F.3d 225. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

A government employee's First Amendment right to speak on issues of public concern without retaliation, if the speech did not disrupt the administration of the government, was clearly established at the time county employee was fired, barring county officials' use of qualified immunity as a defense, in county employee's § 1983 claim, alleging that he was fired in retaliation for testifying truthfully at another trial about problems with county prison's mental health services. Catletti ex rel. estate of Catletti v. Rampe, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 334 F.3d 225. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Community college officials who banned faculty member from campus were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in faculty member's § 1983 free speech and association claim; as member of community, faculty member had same First Amendment right of access to campus as other community members, there was no showing that the ban was a narrowly-drawn restriction to serve compelling interest, and rights were clearly establish at time officials banned him. Putnam v. Keller, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2003, 332 F.3d 541, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Dissenting city council member, as elected policymaker exempt from civil service protection, was not engaged in conduct protected by First Amendment when he continued to affiliate with minority coalition of council, and thus no First Amendment violation occurred when council majority fired dissenting member's aide following dissenting member's vote against proposed budget, since firing was in retaliation both for vote and for affiliation; in turn, fired aide had no § 1983 third party claim of First Amendment retaliation against city, mayor, and majority members. Camacho v. Brandon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 317 F.3d 153. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 156

Whistleblower mechanisms provided by Clean Water Act (CWA) and Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA) do not preclude public employee from suing under § 1983 for violation of his or her First Amendment rights. Charvat v. Eastern Ohio Regional Wastewater Authority, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 246 F.3d 607, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1312

Freedom of worship, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press are privileges and immunities secured by the "due process of law" clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and are within ambit of this section relating to cause of action for deprivation of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws. Oney v. Oklahoma City, C.C.A.10 (Okla.) 1941, 120 F.2d 861. See, also, Douglas v. City of Jeannette, Pa., C.C.A.Pa.1942, 130 F.2d 652, affirmed 63 S.Ct. 877, 319 U.S. 157, 87 L.Ed. 1324, rehearing denied 63 S.Ct. 1170, 319 U.S. 782, 87 L.Ed. 1726; City of Manchester v. Leiby, C.C.A.N.H.1941, 117 F.2d 661, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 838, 313 U.S. 562, 85 L.Ed. 522.

Plaintiff's allegations that she was qualified for position as town assessor, that the person hired by town to serve as assessor was not qualified for the position, and that plaintiff was not selected for the position because town board members preferred the other person's political affiliations, stated a claim against town board members, in §§ 1983 action, for violation of First Amendment right of political affiliation. Bailey v. Town of Evans, New York, W.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 427. Taxation 2436

Former city police chief did not have direct cause of action against mayor, claiming that mayor's threat to fire him because he lived beyond city limits was violation of his equal protection and substantive due process rights, and as threat was allegedly in response to chief's backing of another mayoral candidate, in violation of chief's First Amendment rights; chief was required to proceed by way of action under §§ 1983. Parent of learning-disabled student stated claim under §§ 1983 for violation of her First Amendment rights. C.O. v. Portland Public Schools, D.Or.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1157. Civil Rights 1395(2)

In context of First Amendment political discrimination claim, showing of political animus requires more than merely juxtaposing protected characteristic, such as someone else's politics, with fact that public employee was treated unfairly. Santiago-Rodriguez v. Rey, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 400. Constitutional Law 82(11)

Request that Puerto Rico public employee remove photograph of president of opposition party, to which employee belonged, was not a constitutional deprivation for which employee could recover under §§ 1983; in making that request, officials were merely executing in good faith the demands of Puerto Rico statute closely approximating counterpart federal prohibition of on-the-job political activity in Hatch Act and accompanying regulation. Sanchez v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 393. Territories 23

Alleged misconduct of town employee during work hours involved topic of public concern, for purpose of First Amendment free speech civil rights claim of citizen who was denied right to make statement at town board meeting, since employee was paid by town, had set work schedule, and provided important services to town. Piscottano v. Town of Somers, D.Conn.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 187. Towns 26

With regard to police department members' report of police chief's alleged acquisition of testing and answer materials prior to certification examination, allegations that township supervisor had taken steps to initiate investigation of members by Pennsylvania State Police and Office of Attorney General (OAG) constituted basis for claim of retaliation under First Amendment and §§ 1983. Heller v. Fulare, W.D.Pa.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 743. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Public school district's non-public forum, consisting of policy under which certain groups were permitted to submit flyers for teachers' distribution to elementary school students to take home to their parents, was reasonable and thus comported with First Amendment's free speech guarantee; district chose to limit number of submitting organizations to five categories involved in activities of traditional educational relevance, including parent-teacher associations, day care operators and organized youth sports leagues, and other organizations had substantial alternative channels of communication with students including bulletin boards and open-house displays. Child Evangelism Fellowship of Md., Inc. v. Montgomery County Public Schools, D.Md.2005, 368 F.Supp.2d 416. Schools 72

California Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting filing or maintaining frivolous and unsupported claims did not violate First Amendment; State's interest in preventing the filing of frivolous lawsuits and those meant merely to harass another outweighed an attorney's right to engage in that kind of speech. Canatella v. Stovitz, N.D.Cal.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1064. Attorney And Client 32(11); Constitutional Law 90.1(1.5)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether state prison officials imposed new prerequisites for parole upon inmate because of her pursuit of administrative and legal relief from officials' efforts to compel her to participate in sex offender treatment program precluded summary judgment on inmate's First Amendment retaliation claim. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Reporter's allegations that newspaper publisher, which was her former employer, and district attorney entered agreement, which led publisher to remove reporter from investigation concerning district attorney's office, failed to state claim under §§ 1983 against publisher; reporter's First Amendment rights were not violated by publisher's decision not to publish her stories, and there was no state interference or coercion involved, rather, there was suggestion in complaint that publisher may have decided to "cool" investigation because editors viewed district attorney and his office as good sources for news and they did not want to alienate him, for fear of losing those sources. Rivoli v. Gannett Co., Inc., W.D.N.Y.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1326(11); Constitutional Law 90.1(8)

Recreational dancer who was banned from city's concert venue, due to allegedly lewd conduct, failed to establish that her dancing was form of expression protected by First Amendment, as required to maintain § 1983 action against city; although dancer asserted that she was "performer" at pertinent events, she did not allege that she attended events in different capacity than other attendees. Willis v. Town of Marshall, W.D.N.C.2003, 293 F.Supp.2d 608. Constitutional Law 90.4(3); Municipal Corporations 721(2)

Asserted chaos and disruption in the functioning of state government that might result if an elected official were removed and replaced without the certainty that a majority of those voters who chose to participate in the recall process actually voted to recall the officer was not a compelling state interest, as required to justify, against First Amendment free speech and Fourteenth Amendment due process and equal protection challenge, statutory requirement that no vote cast in recall election be counted for any candidate unless the voter also voted on the recall question itself, absent demonstration that chaos would result without the requirement or how the requirement would stem the flow of any chaos and disruption. Partnoy v. Shelley, S.D.Cal.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 1064, as modified on reconsideration. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.2); Constitutional Law 225.2(6); Constitutional Law 274.2(3); States 52

State statute exempting private schools whose religious convictions would be violated from requirement that all schools start the day with either the Pledge of Allegiance or national anthem, did not violate Establishment Clause; statute simply accommodated needs of certain religious sects by alleviating a special burden, demonstrating a benevolent neutrality permitting religious exercise to exist without state sponsorship. Circle School v. Phillips, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 616, affirmed in part 381 F.3d 172. Constitutional Law 84.5(4.1); Schools 8

Fact question as to whether state officials conspired with village officials to retaliate against village employee for his statements at building inspectors' conference precluded summary judgment on his section 1983 claim for violation of his First Amendment rights arising out of disciplinary charges brought against employee, followed by suspension. Stein v. Janos, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 256. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

To establish a § 1983 claim of unlawful First Amendment retaliation, a public employee must prove that (1) he spoke out on a matter of public concern, (2) the employee's interest in expressing himself on this matter was not outweighed by any injury the speech could cause to the government's interest, and (3) his protected speech was a substantial factor motivating the adverse employment action. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Former employee who brought § 1983 action against Puerto Rico Department of Justice and former co-employees, alleging wrongful discharge, was "prevailing party" in action, since jury expressly found that employee's First Amendment rights had been violated by two of four defendants, and thus was entitled to award of attorney's fees, subject to reduction of attorney's $200 hourly rate commensurate with $150 rate prevailing in local community. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 321, reconsideration denied 267 F.Supp.2d 156. Civil Rights 1482; Civil Rights 1488

Inmate's rights were not effectively chilled by officials' alleged conduct of retaliating for inmate's filing of grievances, as required in § 1983 claim for First Amendment violation; inmate continued to file grievances despite alleged retaliatory actions. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Constitutional Law 91; Prisons 13(6)

as required to support protester's § 1983 claim alleging discrimination on the basis of his political affiliation, where protester was the only person that was arrested during the whole demonstration. Ramos Bonilla v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 135. Arrest 63.1; Constitutional Law 91

To prevail on a First Amendment retaliation claim under § 1983, a plaintiff must show that: (1) his actions were protected by the Constitution or federal law; and (2) the defendant's conduct complained of was in response to that protected activity. Rivera v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 735. Constitutional Law 82(3)

Even exercise of right to petition government may result in abuse actionable under § 1983. Fox News Network, L.L.C. v. Time Warner Inc., E.D.N.Y.1997, 962 F.Supp. 339. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1374

President of local police officer's union failed to show a conversation between assistant city solicitor and police captains "chilled" president's exercise of his rights to speak freely and to petition the government for redress of grievances so as to constitute a deprivation of his First Amendment rights for purposes of his § 1983 claim; president was not terminated and president's free speech activities critical of mayor continued after supposed conversation allegedly occurred. Therrien v. Hamilton, D.Mass.1994, 849 F.Supp. 110. Civil Rights 1126

U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 protects against deprivation of rights of free speech and free assembly and of equal protection of the laws generally and those deprived of such rights are entitled to redress under this section. Anderson v. Moses, S.D.N.Y.1960, 185 F.Supp. 727. Civil Rights 1028; Constitutional Law 225.1; Civil Rights 1029

Intermediate-scrutiny standard of review applied in §§1983 First Amendment action brought by operators of theater against city challenging ordinance requiring that theater's security team include off-duty officer; ordinance was intended to prevent criminal activity associated with theater, and thus amounted to regulation directed against secondary effects of speech. Terminello v. City of Passaic, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 577, 2004 WL 2850114, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(6)

Prison inmate sufficiently stated civil rights claim against corrections officer by alleging that officer confiscated inmate's letter to his attorney and thereby violated his First Amendment right to send mail; inmate needed only to allege nature of claim in order to satisfy liberal requirements of notice pleading. Walker v. Page, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 52, 2003 WL 21018002, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Speech of case work specialist, who stated in closed and confidential meeting that she would testify in favor of family reunification at impending court hearing, was not of "public concern," and, consequently, she was not entitled to relief in her § 1983 lawsuit under First Amendment against employer, Wyoming Department of Family Services (DFS), who terminated her employment because district attorney's office disagreed with her position about reuniting that family, since social worker was not subpoenaed and she was not prevented from testifying. Burley v. Wyoming Dept. of Family Services, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 763, 2003 WL 1880640, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Infants 17

Federal district court should not have dismissed, on ground of failure to state a claim, college professor's civil rights claim, which alleged that college officials abridged his right to freedom of speech by requiring him to cease all philosophical counseling activities on the campus, where the court did not have sufficient information on the basis of the complaint alone to make a determination of whether protected speech was involved, and since the term "philosophical counseling activities" was not self-defining. Marinoff v. City College of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 530, 2003 WL 1228032, Unreported, on remand 357 F.Supp.2d 672. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Although Ten Commandments were undoubtedly religious and monument inscribed with them and displayed on grounds of Texas State Capitol therefore had religious significance for purposes of resident's §§ 1983 action alleging that monument violated First Amendment's Establishment Clause, the Ten Commandments also had undeniable historical meaning. (Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with three Justices joining and one Justice concurring in judgment). Van Orden v. Perry, U.S.2005, 125 S.Ct. 2854, 162 L.Ed.2d 607. Constitutional Law 84.5(11); States 88

Reasonable observer would not have understood, as stated or as applied, that principal or primary effect of municipality's holiday display policy for its public schools, which permitted menorah, star and crescent, and other holiday symbols to be used in combination, but completely prohibited nativity scene, was to endorse Judaism or Islam or to communicate to children who practiced either of those faiths that they were favored members of their school and civic communities, while communicating to Christian children or others that they were somehow inferior, for purpose of parent's civil rights claim under establishment clause of First Amendment. Skoros v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 437 F.3d 1. Schools 72

Prisoner's §§ 1983 claim that prayer requirement of sex offender's class, which he was required to complete as condition of parole, violated the First Amendment, was a claim under the Establishment Clause, not the Free Exercise Clause, and thus remand was required, where district court found that prisoner did not have serious belief, and therefore wrongly analyzed the claim under the Free Exercise Clause. Munson v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 435 F.3d 877, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Prisons 4(14)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether involvement of staff members at state-funded private alcoholic treatment facility in Alcoholics Anonymous (A.A.) programs offered at facility rose to level of inculcation of religious beliefs in clients participating in programs, and thus resulted in impermissible governmental religious indoctrination in violation of First Amendment's establishment clause, precluded summary judgment in § 1983 action. DeStefano v. Emergency Housing Group, Inc., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 247 F.3d 397. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Religious content of Alcoholics Anonymous (A.A.) meetings was reasonably foreseeable to county probation department when it recommended A.A. attendance as probation condition, and thus, actions of those who conducted meetings was not, under New York law, superseding cause that would relieve county probation department of liability in probationer's § 1983 action alleging that compelled A.A. attendance violated his First Amendment establishment clause rights due to A.A.'s religious content; parties stipulated prior to trial that probation department, when it formulated its policy of recommending A.A., was aware of program's Twelve Steps and of their religious character. Warner v. Orange County Dept. of Probation, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 115 F.3d 1068, on remand 968 F.Supp. 917. Civil Rights 1098

Town defendants' actions in granting recall petition and conducting recall election were not unconstitutional under the First Amendment, for purposes of former elected trustee's claim under §§ 1983, alleging that the recall petition was based on his refusal to recite the Pledge of Allegiance at meetings of the town board of trustees; although the former trustee had constitutional rights to free expression and free exercise of religion, he had no right to serve as a representative to individuals who were of a different mind set. Habecker v. Town of Estes Park, Colorado, D.Colo.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 1113. Municipal Corporations 156

Municipality's denial of citizen's request to place nativity scene or creche alongside existing holiday decorations on grassy area owned by municipality was not reasonable under establishment clause of First Amendment, since municipality had allowed Orthodox Jewish synagogue to display menorah on that area, citizen's request was denied precisely because of viewpoint expressed in her proposed display, and no compelling reason was given for denial of citizen's request. Snowden v. Town of Bay Harbor Islands, Florida, S.D.Fla.2004, 358 F.Supp.2d 1178. Constitutional Law 84.5(11); Municipal Corporations 721(1)

Former detainee in county jail had standing to seek relief under §§ 1983 against former county sheriff in connection with his promulgation of detainee rules for county jail, where former detainee demonstrated actual and concrete invasion of legally protected interest, sufficient nexus existed between requirement that detainee read, sign, and agree to follow detainee rules modeled after Ten Commandments and offense offered to detainee by having religious tenets forced upon her in guise of secular rules of behavior and her uncertainty as to whether she might inadvertently violate rules, and redress was available for injury alleged, in form of nominal damages for constitutional tort. Byar v. Lee, W.D.Ark.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 896. Civil Rights 1333(4)

County probation department violated establishment clause by requiring motorist, who had been convicted of alcohol-related driving offense, to attend program for recovery from alcoholism, Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), meetings as condition of probation; motorist's attendance was coerced since failure to attend could have resulted in confinement, AA meetings were functional equivalent of religious exercise, given central theme of higher power in AA literature and Christian prayer during meetings, and compelling attendance tended to establish state religious faith. Warner v. Orange County Dept. of Probation, S.D.N.Y.1994, 870 F.Supp. 69, remanded 115 F.3d 1068, on remand 968 F.Supp. 917. Constitutional Law 84.5(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1977(2)

Motorist stated claim against county Department of Probation in § 1983 suit alleging that requirement that he attend Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) program, as condition of probation for alcohol-related driving offense, violated First Amendment's Establishment Clause; it was adequately alleged that AA chapter whose meetings motorist would be required to attend had objectionable religious component, and that motorist, who faced threat of incarceration if he failed to comply with condition, was susceptible to coercive pressure that allegedly occurred at these meetings. Warner v. Orange County Dept. of Probation, S.D.N.Y.1993, 827 F.Supp. 261. Civil Rights 1395(5)

1191. ---- Free exercise of religion, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Although Ten Commandments were undoubtedly religious and monument inscribed with them and displayed on grounds of Texas State Capitol therefore had religious significance for purposes of resident's §§ 1983 action alleging that monument violated First Amendment's Establishment Clause, the Ten Commandments also had undeniable historical meaning. (Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with three Justices joining and one Justice concurring in judgment). Van Orden v. Perry, U.S.2005, 125 S.Ct. 2854, 162 L.Ed.2d 607. Constitutional Law 84.5(11); States 88

Display of monument inscribed with Ten Commandments on government property, to wit, grounds of Texas State Capitol, which was challenged as violative of First Amendment's Establishment Clause, was typical of unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government dating back to 1789 of role of religion in American life.(Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with three Justices joining and one Justice concurring in judgment). Van Orden v. Perry, U.S.2005, 125 S.Ct. 2854, 162 L.Ed.2d 607. Constitutional Law 84.5(11); States 88

Preliminary injunction preventing counties from displaying a revised display of the Ten Commandments that included other historical documents in courthouse was adequately supported by evidence that the counties' purpose was to emphasize and celebrate the Commandments' religious message, in violation of the First Amendment. McCreary County, Ky v. American Civil Liberties Union of Ky, U.S.Ky.2005, 125 S.Ct. 2722, 162 L.Ed.2d 729. Civil Rights 1457(2)

Public school's use of menorah in assigned holiday display project to teach child about diverse cultures and traditions through common theme of celebration, under municipality's holiday display policy, which permitted menorah, star and crescent, and other holiday symbols to be used in combination, but completely prohibited nativity scene, did not violate First Amendment Free Exercise civil rights of Christian parent or her child. Fact issue existed as to whether state prison inmate's participation in Muslim holiday feast of Eid-ul-Fitr was central or important to inmate's practice of Islam, precluding summary judgment, on "substantial burden" grounds, in inmate's § 1983 Free Exercise Clause action arising from corrections officials' refusal to serve feast to inmate in high-security area. Ford v. McGinnis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 582. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Member of Texas State Board of Dental Examiners' alleged statement "who did she think she is" with regard to applicant's request for special accommodation because of her religion, standing alone, did not support applicant's § 1983 claim for religious discrimination; although alleged remark might reflect hostility towards those who request special accommodations or may even reflect hostility towards applicant as individual, statement was not probative of whether applicant was victim of religious discrimination and applicant failed to tie this statement to any adverse action taken by examiners, let alone any action that was motivated by discriminatory animus. Burns-Toole v. Byrne, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 11 F.3d 1270, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 2680, 512 U.S. 1207, 129 L.Ed.2d 814, rehearing denied 115 S.Ct. 12, 512 U.S. 1270, 129 L.Ed.2d 912. Civil Rights 1072

Allegations of motorist who was denied Colorado driver's license because he refused to be photographed were sufficient to state civil rights claim; motorist alleged that he had joined a religious group which prohibited its members from allowing photographs to be taken of them, and that Colorado did not require a photograph on a driver's license in all instances. Dennis v. Charnes, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1984, 805 F.2d 339, on remand 646 F.Supp. 158. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Foster parents lacked clearly established right to exercise their religious beliefs about punishment of foster care child and thus could not maintain civil rights action against state officials who opposed their final adoption of foster child because of dispute over foster parents' use of corporal punishment. Backlund v. Barnhart, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1985, 778 F.2d 1386. Civil Rights 1057; Civil Rights 1376(3)

Municipality's denial of citizen's request to place nativity scene or creche on light poles along street was reasonable under free speech clause of First Amendment, since municipality had controlled content of lighted banners placed on its light poles at all times and it had never taken any steps to expand reach of forum to access by private citizens. Snowden v. Town of Bay Harbor Islands, Florida, S.D.Fla.2004, 358 F.Supp.2d 1178. Constitutional Law 90.1(4); Municipal Corporations 703(1)

Prisoner of District of Columbia pleaded predicate constitutional violation of religious discrimination under First Amendment, Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), and Virginia Bill of Rights, for purpose of his allegations against municipality under §§ 1983 on theory of agency, for acts committed by Virginia prison officials while in Virginia under prisoner custody arrangement, on allegations that he was threatened with disciplinary action as result of his desire to engage in what he believed was conduct proscribed by his faith. Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2004, 357 F.Supp.2d 187. Civil Rights 1741

Neither commissioner of county department of social services (DSS) nor DSS employee could be held personally liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of Jewish parent's First Amendment right to raise her child in the religion of her choice when the child, while in temporary custody of county DSS pending resolution of the parent's petition alleging that the child was a person in need of supervision (PINS), was baptized in Christian church while on an outing, where, although they placed the child with a juvenile residential facility, they had no knowledge that the child was Jewish, did not personally participate in the events complained of, and did not learn of the alleged violation until long afterward. Whalen v. Allers, S.D.N.Y.2003, 302 F.Supp.2d 194. Civil Rights 1360

Prison chaplain could not rely on prison report containing facts outside the pleadings to support his motion to dismiss state prisoner's § 1983 claim, alleging that chaplain violated his First Amendment right to freely exercise his religion by intentionally interfering with prisoner's ability to observe a religious holiday. 1192. ---- Speech and expression, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Deputy district attorney did not speak as a citizen when, pursuant to his official duties as a calendar deputy, he wrote a disposition memorandum in which he recommended dismissal of a pending criminal case on the basis of purported governmental misconduct, and so his speech was not protected by the First Amendment; when he went to work and performed the tasks he was paid to perform, district attorney acted as a government employee, not as a citizen, and fact that his duties sometimes required him to speak or write did not prohibit his supervisors from evaluating his performance. Garcetti v. Ceballos, U.S.2006, 126 S.Ct. 1951, 164 L.Ed.2d 689. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 3(1)

Speech by attorney for the Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS), objecting to her supervisor and co-workers about the OIDS procedure for approval of expert witnesses, did not disrupt the workplace, and thus, did not outweigh employer's interest in promoting the efficiency of its public services, for purpose of attorney's §§ 1983 free speech claim against public employer, where attorney did not refuse to follow the approval procedure, and there was no showing that attorney could have expressed her concerns through less disruptive internal channels. McFall v. Bednar, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 2005 WL 896453, amended and superseded 407 F.3d 1081. States 53

Deputy police chief's conduct in signing letter on behalf of chief denying parade permits was a substantial factor in denial of the permits in violation of First Amendment and established causation under §§ 1983. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Municipal officials were motivated by reasonable concern for potentially disruptive effects on relationship between police and fire departments and minority communities, for purpose of civil rights claim of police and fire department employees under First Amendment free speech clause, when municipal officials terminated employment of those employees for deliberately donning "blackface" while off-duty and parading through streets in mocking stereotypes of African-Americans, since effective police and fire service presupposed respect for members of those communities. Locurto v. Giuliani, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 447 F.3d 159. Municipal Corporations 198(2)

Outdoor common areas, including sidewalks and sitting areas, clearly within the boundaries of the campus of state university were "unlimited designated public fora," for purpose of street preacher's §§ 1983 claim, challenging the university's policy restricting use of those areas as violative of his free speech rights; purpose of university was not to provide forum for all persons to talk about all topics at all times, but rather to support education, the university opened up the common areas to both university entities and non-university entities as places of expression, and there was no showing that the university intended to limit the use of the common areas to a particular type of speech or speaker. Bowman v. White, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 444 F.3d 967. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4)

Supervisor's allegedly retaliatory comments to special investigator for Pennsylvania Office of Inspector General (OIG), including telling him to go with the flow and not permitting him to speak to anyone about investigation into pharmacist without supervisor's permission, did not rise to level of harassment, under First Amendment, in retaliation for his speaking out about pharmaceutical industry; comments were aimed at getting investigator to focus on investigation to which he was assigned instead of focusing on his own wide-ranging concerns about pharmaceutical industry as a whole, and investigator suffered no alteration in his employment benefits, pay, or job classification as a result of speaking out about potential corruption in pharmaceutical industry. McKee v. Hart, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 436 F.3d 165. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

School's alleged refusal to allow mother to participate meaningfully in her role as chairperson in school committee, by depriving her of necessary information for competent evaluation of school's budget proposals and removing her from school for passing out flyers inviting parents to committee meeting, in retaliation for mother's assertion of her First Amendment rights by advocating for her son's education rights under the IDEA supported mother's §§ 1983 retaliation claim against school district. Mosely v. Board of Educ. of City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 434 F.3d 527. Schools 63(3)

Municipality's implementation of English-only policy did not violate First Amendment free speech rights of Spanish-speaking Hispanic employees, since mere act of speaking in Spanish did not constitute speech on matter of public concern, use of Spanish was not intended to communicate ethnic pride or opposition to discrimination, speech precluded by English-only rule did not include communications on matters of public concern, and English-only rule was not intended to limit communications on matters of public concern. Maldonado v. City of Altus, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 433 F.3d 1294. Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Director of clinical program at state university law school's alleged denial of representation of prospective client based on prospective client's prior criticism of clinic's use of public funds, related to clinic's position in lawsuit challenging public display of Ten Commandments, supported prospective client's §§ 1983 claim alleging violation of his First Amendment free speech rights. Wishnatsky v. Rovner, C.A.8 (N.D.) 2006, 433 F.3d 608, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4)

Sheriffs' deputies' alleged campaign of harassment against voter referendum sponsors, including issuance of false traffic citations, attempts to obtain arrest warrants on trumped-up charges, and mailing of flyers depicting sponsors as criminals terrorizing county, violated sponsors' right against retaliation for exercise of their free speech rights; such conduct would likely have deterred persons of ordinary firmness from exercise of their First Amendment rights. Bennett v. Hendrix, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 423 F.3d 1247, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 295203. Sheriffs And Constables 99

Husband of patient stated a §§ 1983 claim against county hospital and its policy makers for violation of his First Amendment rights, by alleging that hospital filed state libel action against husband in retaliation for husband's action of mailing of letters to numerous local residents inquiring whether anyone else had been sexually assaulted, as alleged by patient, and that the hospital initiated the state law libel action with knowledge that husband's statements against the hospital were not made with malice and with the purposes and effect of chilling his speech and violating his First Amendment rights. Beedle v. Wilson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 422 F.3d 1059. Torts 437

Noncustodial divorced parent's previous criticisms of school and school district at public meetings constituted protected speech, and thus could serve as basis for parent's §§ 1983 First Amendment action against district and against school principal alleging that principal had failed to adequately protect his children and had denied parent's access to educational records in retaliation for criticisms. Crowley v. McKinney, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 400 F.3d 965, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 750, 163 L.Ed.2d 573. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4); Records 31; Schools 89.2

Factors in determining whether public employee's interest in speech outweighs government's interest in promoting efficiency, in employee's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation action, are whether statement in question: (1) impairs discipline by superiors or harmony among co-workers; (2) has detrimental impact on close working relationships for which personal loyalty and confidence are necessary; or (3) impedes performance of speaker's duties or interferes with regular operation of enterprise. Johnson v. Louisiana, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 369 F.3d 826. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Petition circulators' allegations that they were threatened with arrest for soliciting signatures for referendum petition on public sidewalk that was near polling place, but outside 100-foot "campaign-free zone" created by state statute, stated § 1983 claim for violation of free speech rights. United Food & Commercial Workers Local 1099 v. City of Sidney, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 364 F.3d 738. Constitutional Law 90.1(4); Elections 211 law were sufficient to state §§ 1983 claim based on violation of circulators' First Amendment free speech rights. United Food & Commercial Workers Local 1099 v. City of Sidney, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 359 F.3d 432, withdrawn from bound volume, rehearing denied, amended and superseded 364 F.3d 738. Elections 211

Under Pickering balancing test, even though appointed city manager's speech during city council election campaign, in favor of one faction of his party and against members of competing faction of same party, concerned matter of public interest, speech was not protected by First Amendment, precluding terminated manager's §§ 1983 action against competing faction's incoming council members who voted to fire him; manager's campaigning impaired reconstituted council's interest in efficient operations, given sensitive, high-level policymaking nature of manager's position. Curinga v. City of Clairton, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 357 F.3d 305. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 156

State university's outright ban on non-students handing out leaflets in paved area between university building and public sidewalk, which court, in non-students' § 1983 action against university, determined to be unconstitutional because area was public forum, did not violate court order in prior case holding that outright ban on non-students distributing leaflets was unconstitutional with respect to university seminar that was open to public, who were invited to verbally participate, and, thus, non-students were not entitled to injunctive relief in their § 1983 action; issue in prior case was whether university had created "designated public forum" at particular time and place, whereas issue in subsequent case was whether paved area was traditional public forum. Brister v. Faulkner, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 214 F.3d 675, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 442, 531 U.S. 985, 148 L.Ed.2d 447. Civil Rights 1452

State university professors' right to engage in expression relating to their academic interests, through display in history department display case, did not have to be balanced against university's right to suppress speech in name of workplace efficiency and harmony under balancing test applicable to determinations of whether public employer has properly discharged or disciplined employee for engaging in speech, in professors' § 1983 action against university chancellor, absent showing by chancellor that suppressed conduct substantially interfered with efficiency of workplace or university's educational mission. Burnham v. Ianni, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1997, 119 F.3d 668. Colleges And Universities 8(1); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

To establish § 1983 claim of retaliation for exercise of free speech, plaintiffs must prove that defendants were acting under color of state law, plaintiffs' speech activities were protected under First Amendment, and plaintiffs' exercise of their protected right was substantial or motivating factor in defendants' actions. Harrington v. Harris, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 118 F.3d 359, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 122 F.3d 1068, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 603, 522 U.S. 1016, 139 L.Ed.2d 491. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1326(1)

Statement made by angry high school student to school guidance counselor "if you don't give me this schedule change, I'm going to shoot you," could be considered by reasonable person in guidance counselor's position to be serious expression of intent to harm or assault, and, thus, was not entitled to First Amendment protection for purposes of student's § 1983 action arising out of student's three-day suspension for threatening counselor. Lovell By and Through Lovell v. Poway Unified School Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 90 F.3d 367. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4); Schools 177

To establish retaliation claim under § 1983, plaintiff initially must show that his or her conduct was protected by First Amendment and that defendants' conduct was motivated by or substantially caused by his or her exercise of free speech. Bernheim v. Litt, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 79 F.3d 318. Civil Rights 1243

Noncustodial fathers challenging procedures followed by Supreme Court Advisory Committee on Child Support Guidelines stated civil rights cause of action arising out of Committee chairman's refusal to allow them to tape-record meeting; in order for limitation to be valid "time, place and manner" restriction on fathers' rights to obtain information, it would have to be content-neutral, and restriction might not satisfy requirement, as it was directed only at persons known to be unhappy with Committee, and if valid "time, place and manner" restriction was not involved, prohibition would be subject to "strict scrutiny" test, and Committee might lose. Blackston v. State of Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 117. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Underlying proceedings initiated against crop duster by Louisiana Department of Agriculture (LDOA) for violation of state pesticide laws did not terminate in crop duster's favor, as required for a common-law tort of malicious prosecution, and thus, crop duster could not maintain civil rights claim against Louisiana officials for alleged violation of his First Amendment rights by officials' purported attempts to stifle his exercise of free speech; crop duster alleged that officials targeted him for prosecution because he would not acquiesce to mistreatment inflicted upon him by LDOA, and crop duster appealed five of his administrative penalties, and, although four appeals ended in decreased punishment, none ended with finding of not guilty. Johnson v. Louisiana Dept. of Agriculture, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 18 F.3d 318, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1037

Plaintiff's allegations that town board members intentionally treated her differently than similarly situated individuals for the purpose of impacting her First Amendment rights of political affiliation and free speech stated a claim, in §§ 1983 action, for equal protection violation relating to town's failure to hire plaintiff for position as town assessor. Bailey v. Town of Evans, New York, W.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 427. Taxation 2436

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether statement on automobile, that driver was "a fucking suicide bomber communist terrorist!" with "W.O.M.D. on Board," was "true threat" not protected speech under First Amendment, precluding summary judgment on civil rights claim. Fogel v. Grass Valley Police Dept., E.D.Cal.2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 1084. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers did not prohibit anti-abortion demonstration, but merely tried on content-neutral grounds to move the protesters away from a highway intersection for the safety of drivers as well as the protesters, leaving protesters ample alternative means of communication; thus there was no First Amendment violation which could support §§ 1983 action. World Wide Street Preachers' Fellowship v. Town of Columbia, W.D.La.2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 671. Municipal Corporations 703(2)

Proposed amendment of school district employee's §§ 1983 complaint to add retaliatory discharge claim would not be futile, insofar as employee alleged he was speaking on matter of public concern when he complained to district superintendent about racial bullying and harassment of his children. Dockery v. Unified School Dist. No. 231, D.Kan.2006, 406 F.Supp.2d 1219. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Allegedly defamatory comments of town mayor and town attorney at public hearing regarding resident against whose property a tax foreclosure sale was conducted did not chill resident's First Amendment rights so as to support §§ 1983 claim, since resident did in fact address the hearing; resident had constitutional right only to speak, not to be believed or to exclude others from expressing contrary views. Balaber-Strauss v. Town/Village of Harrison, S.D.N.Y.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 427. Municipal Corporations 980(3)

Independent contractor's letter to special education committee, expressing support for continuing services for special education student at an integrated day care center, did not address an issue of public concern and was therefore not constitutionally protected speech, as required for contractor's civil rights claim alleging she was fired by county in retaliation for writing the letter; letter concerned whether one student should receive his preschool services and whether he was progressing at his present level of services, and was not an issue of general concern for the public. McGuire v. Warren, S.D.N.Y.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 530. Counties 127

County did not demonstrate that Texas anti-solicitation statute directed toward bail bondsmen, which prohibited telephone calls during 24 hours after arrest, directly and materially advanced state's interest in preventing harassment, in civil rights lawsuit alleging violation commercial speech under First Amendment, on evidence that multiple independent bondsmen contact family of arrestee by telephone at any hour to notify family of potential bail bond services; statute did not prevent multiple calls from occurring after expiration of 24 hour period and there was no evidence that families would have preferred to forgo knowledge of family member's arrest within 24 hours. Pruett v. Harris County Bail Bond Bd., S.D.Tex.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 967, entered 2005 WL 3047787, motion denied 2005 WL 3047786, subsequent determination 2005 WL 3047789. Constitutional Law 90.1(9)

Alleged misconduct of town employee during work hours involved topic of public concern, for purpose of First Amendment free speech civil rights claim of citizen who was denied right to make statement at town board meeting, since employee was paid by town, had set work schedule, and provided important services to town. Piscottano v. Town of Somers, D.Conn.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 187. Towns 26

Producer and distributor of wild rice failed to establish that state wild rice council used any monies collected from check-off fees from sales of wild rice to advertise wild rice, as required to support their §§ 1983 action against council and its commissioner alleging that collection of fees violated their First Amendment right to free speech. J.W. DeWit Farms, Inc. v. Minnesota Cultivated Wild Rice, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 847. Civil Rights 1422

Fact that plaintiff filed §§ 1983 suit against state police officers was insufficient to demonstrate that her First Amendment rights had not been chilled by officers' actions, so as to preclude her First Amendment retaliation claims against officers, where plaintiff claimed that officers repeatedly resisted her attempts to have them enforce orders of protection she had obtained against her neighbors, arrested her eleven times, none of which led to conviction, and involuntarily transported her to psychological evaluations, where it was determined that she was not suffering from any psychological disorder. Jackson v. New York State, N.D.N.Y.2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 80. States 112.2(2)

High school student's loud reference to assistant principal as a "dick" after he took away student's unopened food and refused to give it back immediately was not protected by First Amendment; statement was insubordinate speech directed toward school official and did not concern political issue or matter of public concern, but instead was directed at private grievance. Posthumus v. Board of Educ. of Mona Shores Public Schools, W.D.Mich.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 891. Schools 169

If an employee asserting a First Amendment §§ 1983 retaliation claim can prove that she was engaged in a constitutionally protected activity, she was subjected to adverse action or deprived of some benefit, and the protected speech was a substantial or motivating factor in the adverse action, the burden shifts to the employer to prove, by a preponderance, that it would have taken the same action even in the absence of the protected conduct. Phillips v. Ingham County, W.D.Mich.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 918. Civil Rights 1405; Civil Rights 1421

With regard to police department members' §§ 1983 claim based on First Amendment retaliation for their report of police chief's alleged acquisition of testing and answer materials prior to certification examination, "public charges" against members were not actionable under §§ 1983, although they could be basis for state law defamation suit. Heller v. Fulare, W.D.Pa.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 743. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Requested placement of Nativity scene banners or lighted displays on light poles along street, and display of unattended nativity on grassy area owned by municipality, constituted private religious speech protected by free speech clause of First Amendment. Snowden v. Town of Bay Harbor Islands, Florida, S.D.Fla.2004, 358 F.Supp.2d 1178. Constitutional Law 90.1(4); Municipal Corporations 703(1); Municipal Corporations 721(1)

User of public library had First Amendment right to receive information which was impeded by library's action of permanently barring him from using library's computers which could access internet, as required for user to bring § § 1983 action against library alleging violation of procedural due process of law. Miller v. Northwest Region Library Bd., M.D.N.C.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 563. Constitutional Law 90.1(9); Municipal Corporations

Property owners failed to show that city officials' adverse actions were motivated by any speech of owners, as would support owners' claim under §§ 1983 alleging retaliation for speech protected by the First Amendment, where at least some of the adverse actions were taken before owners engaged in protected speech. Moran v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 507. Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

College vice president's action in canceling scheduled student event with four days' notice, allegedly based on his aversion toward proposed speaker, did not violate students' constitutional rights under the First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments, as would support students' action under §§ 1983 against college and its personnel, where event went on as planned after a student demonstration. Ford v. Reynolds, E.D.N.Y.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 392, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 354636. Colleges And Universities 9.45(1); Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4); Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1)

City employee was engaging in conduct protected by both First Amendment and Title VII, when she filed ethics complaint with city, challenging promotion of supervisor who had allegedly sexually harassed fellow employee, even though action of city, rather than action of supervisor, was being challenged. Thomas v. Ragland, W.D.Wis.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 950. Civil Rights 1244; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Letter of reprimand issued to police officer, and placement of reprimand in his personnel file, was caused by protected speech of police officer, which occurred in form of letter to editor that presented safety issues related to inadequate security at night clubs and asked that town board of selectmen act on issue, since letter to editor was substantial factor in decision of police chief to discipline officer by issuing reprimand. Bates v. Mackay, D.Mass.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 173. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Parent of high school student did not engage in constitutionally protected activity under Petition Clause by filing lawsuits against school district and school officials alleging negligence and other state-law torts violative of parent's private rights, and not alleging bigger pattern of official misconduct; thus, lawsuits could not form basis for parent's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation action against officials alleging that student was suspended because of them. Van Deelen v. Shawnee Mission Unified School Dist. # 512, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 1052. Constitutional Law 91; Schools 177

Municipality intended to dedicate theater to broad range of expressive activities compatible with "public forum," for purpose of §§ 1983 claim of entertainers under free speech clause of First Amendment, although political rallies were prohibited from theater, since government-owned theaters were generally public in nature, and ordinance stated that facility was designed for number of "public uses" and for promotion of "culture, education and recreation, offering moments of leisure and relaxation to the general public," and that it was intended for development of "cultural activities of a musical or literary as well as of a theatrical type." Producciones Gran Escenario, Inc. v. Ruiz, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 440. Constitutional Law 90.1(4)

Temporary employee failed to state First Amendment retaliation claim against temporary staffing firm where speech alleged was private grievance relating to her personal desire not to be reassigned to different position; grievance did not involve matter of public concern or government action. Ganthier v. North Shore-Long Island Jewish Health System, E.D.N.Y.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 342. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Officers And Public Employees 66

Police detective failed to allege that he spoke on matter of public concern, or that he suffered actionable adverse employment action, as required to support First Amendment claim against police department pursuant to § 1983 in which he alleged he was removed from emergency response team (ERT) after he received written reprimand for engaging in conduct unbecoming an officer; detective's claim that his removal from ERT was in direct response to false allegations against him that he argued with supervising sergeant in public did not describe constitutionally protected speech, detective's alleged speech of grieving his ERT removal was not matter of public concern but rather reflected his personal dissatisfaction with status quo, and sergeant's subsequent tracking of his time off did not constitute adverse employment action. Barton v. City of Bristol, D.Conn.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 184. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Fact issue existed as to whether city official removed banners promoting gay pride parade because he thought city's permission for sponsoring organization to display banners had elapsed, rather than because official had received criticism about banners' content, precluding summary judgment in organization's § 1983 First Amendment action against city and official. Cimarron Alliance Foundation v. City of Oklahoma City, Okla., W.D.Okla.2002, 290 F.Supp.2d 1252. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Port Authority employee failed to establish prima facie case of retaliatory discharge in violation of First Amendment; although filing of Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) complaints that at least in part resulted in Consent Decree was constitutionally protected conduct, her speech activity was not substantial or motivating factor in her failure to be promoted or have her position upgraded. Zezulewicz v. Port Authority of Allegheny County, W.D.Pa.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 583. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Navigable Waters 14(2)

Motorist's husband's free speech was not chilled by state trooper's allegedly retaliatory issuance of traffic citation to motorist after husband accused trooper of mishandling collision investigation, precluding motorist's § 1983 First Amendment action against trooper; husband continued to argue with trooper after issuance of citation and also recounted events and his opinions of them to trooper's superior when making subsequent complaint. Persaud v. McSorley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 490. Automobiles 349(14.1); Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

Speech by police and fire department employees who participated in parade float that was aimed to comment on racial integration in the community involved matter of greater public concern than private speech, and required consideration of employees' attendant interests in expressing themselves on such a matter in determining whether they were discharged by city in violation of § 1983, allegedly out of fear of negative public reaction to controversial expressive activity, for exercising the right of free speech under the First Amendment. Locurto v. Giuliani, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 368, reversed and remanded 447 F.3d 159. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1); Municipal Corporations 198(2)

Genuine issues of material fact, as to whether job applicant's protected speech disrupted, or had the potential to disrupt, the functioning of Connecticut city housing authority, whether such disruption even occurred, and whether applicant was not hired because of disruption or because of content of his speech, precluded summary judgment for authority and its executive director on applicant's First Amendment retaliation claim based on finding, under Pickering-Connick balancing test, that authority's interests outweighed those of applicant. Ruscoe v. Housing Authority of City of New Britain, D.Conn.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 160. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Prisoner's conduct while participating in release program, in speaking to press, protesting and handing out pamphlets outside of courthouse, running a website, and producing and appearing in television commercials, all in favor of legalization of marijuana, was conduct protected by First Amendment, for purposes of determining whether his participation in release program was unconstitutionally terminated in retaliation for his activities while on release. individual supervisors. Kulikowski v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Boulder, D.Colo.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1053. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 224(3); Counties 67

Female manager's alleged encouragement of male manager to terminate white male county employee and her alleged involvement in written reprimands that preceded employee's termination did not constitute First Amendment retaliation for employee's complaints about the management of county's domestic violence shelter. Kulikowski v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Boulder, D.Colo.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1053. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Counties 67

Statements by former village employee regarding village's alleged practice of unlawfully requiring employees to work outside of their civil service classifications without additional compensation focused solely on his personal employment situation, and thus were not protected under First Amendment so as to support claim for conspiracy or retaliation under § 1983. Herbil Holding Co. v. Brook, E.D.N.Y.2000, 84 F.Supp.2d 369. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Attendee of public meeting of county master plain steering committee stated claim against co-chair under § 1983 for violating her first amendment free speech rights, regardless of whether the forum was a designated public forum or a nonpublic forum, where she alleged that co-chair acquiesced in decision to terminate public meeting in the midst of attendee's group address on the topic of county hog farming solely on ground of the viewpoint attendee expressed. Thompson v. Huntington, S.D.Ind.1999, 69 F.Supp.2d 1071. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Cable television company, which contended that cities violated its First Amendment rights by wrongfully rejecting its cable television franchise requests, stated First Amendment violation claim under § 1983 against cities, despite contention that company lacked constitutional right to use public domain to disseminate its messages by cable television; facing incomplete factual record and area of law that was at best unsettled, district court was unable to find beyond doubt that company could prove no set of facts supporting its claim which would entitle it to relief. Classic Communications, Inc. v. Rural Telephone Service Co., Inc., D.Kan.1996, 956 F.Supp. 896. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Operator of restaurant-lounge which alleged that mayor and liquor commissioner of village harassed establishment on "disc jockey nights," attempting to suppress music played on those nights, in order to reduce number of black patrons, failed to state First Amendment free expression claim; complaint failed to establish nexus between harassment and alleged monetary loss and the First Amendment, and pleaded nothing more than attempt at deprivation of First Amendment rights; although operator alleged that it suffered monetary losses, it did not state that it stopped disc jockey nights or that harassment interrupted its business. R & V Pine Tree, Inc. v. Village of Forest Park, N.D.Ill.1996, 947 F.Supp. 342. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Allegation that public official and law enforcement officers attempted to intimidate official's son-in-law from testifying against official stated claim for violation of civil rights under § 1983, as allegations described paradigm example of abuse of official power intended to silence citizen protest. Gerakaris v. Champagne, D.Mass.1996, 913 F.Supp. 646. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Actions of police officers in issuing citation to plaintiff who was collecting signatures to petition did not amount to violation of First Amendment rights; plaintiffs showed no deterrence of speech, nor that such deterrence was substantial or motivating factor in officer's conduct. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Allegations that town in authorizing filing of suit against newspaper publisher and editor who had written editorial critical of police actions in attempting to disband antiabortion demonstration produced chilling effect on First Amendment rights were insufficient to establish cognizable constitutional deprivation; there was no allegation that editor stopped writing editorials or that publisher stopped publication during time they were parties to lawsuit. Spear v. Town of West Hartford, D.Conn.1991, 771 F.Supp. 521, affirmed 954 F.2d 63, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 66, 506 U.S. 819, 121 L.Ed.2d 33. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Allegations of employees of county office that office director's tape-recording of their conversations violated their rights under First and Fourteenth Amendments, that they had suffered embarrassment as result of disclosure of tape-recordings and that their ability to work had been impeded by adverse publicity resulting from incident were sufficient to state § 1983 damages claim against county. Dorris v. Absher, M.D.Tenn.1997, 959 F.Supp. 813, affirmed in part, reversed in part 179 F.3d 420. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Even if breach of the peace ordinance under which plaintiff was arrested were held to be unconstitutionally overbroad, thus offending the freedom of speech clause of U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1, or unconstitutionally vague, plaintiff would not be entitled to recover damages where the speech which led to invocation of the ordinance consisted of face-to-face threats of harm addressed to children, and thus was plainly without constitutional protection. Hearn v. Hudson, W.D.Va.1982, 549 F.Supp. 949. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Even if private developer's actions in seeking to evict adult bookstores from building it was renovating and in opposing bookstore's application for licenses for peep shows amounted to state action under this section, developer's actions did not violate bookstore's constitutional rights where developer's actions merely prohibited bookstores from conducting their businesses in renovated building and did not prevent bookstores from pursuing businesses elsewhere. Fantasy Book Shop, Inc. v. City of Boston, D.C.Mass.1982, 531 F.Supp. 821. Civil Rights 1326(4)

School district's initial permission for plaintiff to speak at a public school assembly was not a "valuable governmental benefit," and thus its subsequent revocation of that permission could not violate plaintiff's First Amendment rights to free speech, free exercise of religion, and related associational rights, where district was not going to pay plaintiff anything for speaking. Carpenter v. Dillon Elementary School Dist. 10, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2005, 149 Fed.Appx. 645, 2005 WL 2271720, Unreported. Schools 72

Assistant county attorney's interest in exercising his right to free speech by publicly criticizing county prosecutor's decision to seek purchase of new building was outweighed by prosecutor's interest in having trusted advisors, for purposes of assistant county's attorney's §§ 1983 claim alleging he was fired in retaliation for exercising his right to free speech. Muti v. Schmidt, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 646, 2004 WL 2998746, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Counties 67

Mayor's reviewing time sheets of city council employee, requesting keys to her office to inspect records kept there, or installing a security camera in the hall outside her office did not adversely affect her employment and, thus, did not deter her from exercising her rights under the First Amendment; city council employee could have reasonably expected people to seek access to public files kept in her office and could have reasonably expected to encounter video cameras in hallways. Poppy v. City of Willoughby Hills, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 292, 2004 WL 771281, Unreported. Constitutional Law 82(11); Municipal Corporations 218(3)

District court erred, in § 1983 action, in finding, when ruling on a motion to dismiss, that village employees did not interfere with political activist's right to free speech when they interfered with his leafleting activities; court engaged in impermissible factfinding in determining that employees were merely enforcing reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on activist's speech, and court also erred in finding that activist had sufficient alternative channels of communication open to him. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Issue of whether state prison officials retaliated against correctional officer because of his statements to investigators regarding use of excessive force by fellow officers against inmates was for jury in officer's § 1983 action alleging First Amendment retaliation, in light of evidence that fellow officer referred to him as "snitch," supervisor made officer change his report regarding use of excessive force and precluded officer from presenting it to investigators, prison's human resources director removed officer from his position after he reported fellow officer's harassment and made him undergo psychological testing, and commission of correction had negative attitude towards officer for reporting incident. Bounds v. Taylor, C.A.3 (Del.) 2003, 77 Fed.Appx. 99, 2003 WL 22325312, Unreported. Civil Rights 1430

Government interests of aesthetics and safety were insufficient justification for ordinance that regulated display of political signs, in context of candidate's application for temporary restraining order in § 1983 lawsuit brought by candidate for elective office alleging violation of his right to free speech. Lawless v. Lower Providence Township, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 31356304, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(7)

In seeking preliminary injunction against town's enforcement of ordinance banning billboards, billboard owner did not show either likelihood of success on the merits, or existence of sufficiently serious questions going to the merits, on claim that ordinance was unconstitutional because it facially discriminated against non-commercial speech, inasmuch as ordinance appeared to be at least neutral in its treatment of commercial and non-commercial speech, and had provisions which permitted signs containing certain types of non-commercial speech on at least a temporary basis. Richards "Of Course", Inc. v. Town of DeWitt, N.D.N.Y.1985, 1985 WL 669278, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(4)

1193. ---- Public concern, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Deputy district attorney did not speak as a citizen when, pursuant to his official duties as a calendar deputy, he wrote a disposition memorandum in which he recommended dismissal of a pending criminal case on the basis of purported governmental misconduct, and so his speech was not protected by the First Amendment; when he went to work and performed the tasks he was paid to perform, district attorney acted as a government employee, not as a citizen, and fact that his duties sometimes required him to speak or write did not prohibit his supervisors from evaluating his performance. Garcetti v. Ceballos, U.S.2006, 126 S.Ct. 1951, 164 L.Ed.2d 689. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 3(1)

Allegation in African-American police chief's complaint, that city was motivated by race when it issued gag order prohibiting him from speaking to media about investigation into his alleged corruption and misuse of power, was sufficient to set forth claim in § 1983 free speech action that he was restricted from speaking about matters of public concern. Jackson v. City of Columbus, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1999, 194 F.3d 737, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(8)

County employee's reports of sexual harassment by county official's assistant were matters of public concern, for purposes of § 1983 claim for discharge in violation of her free speech rights, as such harassment constituted discrimination by person exercising authority in name of those exercising public authority and would have been relevant to electorate's evaluation of performance of public official, and nothing in form or context deprived them of value to process of self-governance. Azzaro v. County of Allegheny, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 110 F.3d 968. Civil Rights 1244

Employee's bald unadorned public endorsement of particular company to manage public hospital was not of sufficient public concern to warrant First Amendment protection as premise of retaliatory termination claim under § 1983, since it offered no reasons or explanation at all for opinion, and was neither expose of government ineptitude, waste or corruption nor recitation of reasons, arguments or facts supporting retention of management. Withiam v. Baptist Health Care of Oklahoma, Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 98 F.3d 581. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Public employee's statements about political patronage practices and her statements and reports about employees using their position for partisan political activities constituted speech on matters of "public concern" for purposes of determining whether her conduct was entitled to First Amendment protection, despite claim that employee lacked any factual basis for her statements; some of employee's statements were critical of political patronage employment practices in general, and defendants pointed to nothing in record that contradicted employee's statements and reports. Williams v. Com. of Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 24 F.3d 1526, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 358, 513 U.S. 947, 130 L.Ed.2d 312. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Officers And Public Employees 66

To make successful claim for wrongful retaliation under First Amendment and § 1983, plaintiff must prove that: statement that brought on retaliation is one of public concern; constitutionally protected expression is substantial or motivational factor in employer's adverse decision or conduct; and interest of plaintiff/employee in commenting on matter of public concern outweighs state's interest in maintaining efficient public services. Sanchez v. City of Santa Ana, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 936 F.2d 1027, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 417, 502 U.S. 957, 116 L.Ed.2d 437, on remand 928 F.Supp. 1494. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Phrase "legitimate public concern," defining scope of public employee's statements on issues protected by U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1, did not encompass probationary state employee's complaints about his own situation, and thus did not give rise to cognizable U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 claim under this section. Jones v. State of Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1984, 725 F.2d 622, rehearing denied 729 F.2d 1468, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 380, 469 U.S. 979, 83 L.Ed.2d 316, rehearing denied 105 S.Ct. 941, 469 U.S. 1181, 83 L.Ed.2d 954. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Letter by independent contractor, which provided housing for people with HIV and AIDS, to Commissioner of the Human Resource Administration (HRA), informing her that its clients were in danger of becoming homeless if it were forced to close its program due to city's failure to negotiate contract and reimburse it for its expenses, addressed matter of public concern, falling under protection of First Amendment, which was not removed by mere fact that contractor had personal interest in negotiating contract with city. Housing Works, Inc. v. Turner, S.D.N.Y.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 434. Constitutional Law 91; Municipal Corporations 156

Police officer's refusal to re-classify crimes as per police commissioner's request did not address "matter of public concern," and, therefore, was not subject to First Amendment free speech protection; although refusal may have been inspired by issue of legitimate public concern, classification of crimes was part of officer's duties and he did not voice his opposition in any cognizable way that could have come within ambit of protected speech. Kelly v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 395. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Police officer's endorsement of report regarding interview of mayor about crime involving mayor's grandson did not address "matter of public concern," and, therefore, was not subject to First Amendment free speech protection; report was nothing other than type of report that was regularly filed, and identity of suspect did not turn suspect's statement into speech on matter of public concern. Kelly v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 395. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Internal report written by police officer regarding gambling at night club, detailing what actions had been taken and stating that those issues were brought to attention of police commissioner, did not address "matter of public concern," and, therefore, was not subject to First Amendment free speech protection; no effort was being made to bring pervasive or systematic cover-up in police department to attention of relevant authorities or to public, since report was not addressed to supervisor of commissioner. Kelly v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 395. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

reporting of fellow officer's misconduct, was a "matter of public concern" for purposes of officer's First Amendment retaliation claim under § 1983. Baron v. Hickey, D.Mass.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 66. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Prisons 7

Landlord's refusal to allow borough authorities access to rental property in order to conduct a warrantless inspection was not a "protected activity" under the First Amendment, for purposes of landlord's retaliation claim under § 1983, absent evidence that refusal was a matter of public concern rather than a purely private dispute. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Constitutional Law 82(6.1); Health 392

Issue of whether former state administrative law judge's (ALJ) rulings were matters of "public concern" that were protected by the First Amendment, or instead speech regarding "parochial concerns" of an employee, could not be resolved at employer's motion to dismiss ALJ's § 1983 claim alleging that her termination violated her free speech rights. Harrison v. Coffman, E.D.Ark.1999, 35 F.Supp.2d 722. Constitutional Law 46(3)

To establish claim of retaliation in violation of First Amendment to support § 1983 action, public employee must show that her speech addressed matters of public concern and that her interest, as a citizen, in commenting on matters of public concern outweighed interest of state, as an employer, in promoting efficiency of public services it performs. Hall v. Missouri Highway and Transp. Com'n, E.D.Mo.1998, 995 F.Supp. 1001, affirmed 235 F.3d 1065 . Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

To establish § 1983 liability for infringement upon First Amendment right to speech, it is not enough for public employee to merely show that adverse employment action followed protected speech. Mace v. City of Akron, N.D.Ohio 1998, 989 F.Supp. 949. Civil Rights 1032

Police officer failed to allege that his protest to police department official that his transfer was in retaliation for his knowledge of supervisor's misconduct and association with known prostitute involved matter of public concern, and, thus, it was not entitled to First Amendment protection, where his alleged complaint to official was in form of one-to-one private conversation, and voiced solely in personal terms and for personal reasons. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Subject matter of city transit authority (TA) employee's threatened lawsuit, alleging ongoing policy of system-wide retaliation against membership in and activities on behalf of union designed to chill employees' free speech and free associational activities, was matter of public concern, and thus, employee's filing of action, alleging TA director of labor relations' offer to place employee in exchange for waiver of claim violated First Amendment, implicated public concern and properly formed basis for § 1983 action. Scott v. Goodman, E.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 424, affirmed 191 F.3d 82. Civil Rights 1249(1)

Letter to Pennsylvania governor from attorney examiner with the Department of Public Welfare's (DPW) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OH&A) stating that he was unlawfully suspended by OH&A Director, that Director lacked competence, and that situation at DPW was "critical and may be laid directly at the feet" of Director who was appointed by the previous gubernatorial administration addressed matter of public concern and, therefore, was protected speech for purposes of attorney's § 1983 First Amendment retaliatory discharge claim; letter did not seek review of decision to suspend attorney or to prevent his termination and much of the content of the letter was taken from memorandum drafted by member of governor's transition team. Sullivan v. Houstoun, M.D.Pa.1996, 928 F.Supp. 521. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); States 53

Public employee alleging retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights must show that expressions which allegedly provoked retaliatory action relate to matters of public concern. Baker v. Mecklenburg County, W.D.N.C.1994, 853 F.Supp. 889, affirmed 48 F.3d 1215. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Statements made by city director of emergency medical services (EMS), that his team was understaffed and ill-equipped, were matter of public concern under First Amendment, for purpose of § 1983 lawsuit alleging retaliatory termination; since public relied on EMS every day, EMS personnel routinely dealt with life or death situations, and over 500 emergency calls were missed in one year, statements were type of protected speech that was designed to raise awareness of potential threats to public health and safety of community. Lloyd v. City of Bethlehem, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 31341093, Unreported. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 156

1194. ---- Press, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

University dean's actions of calling publishing company and directing that school newspaper not be published until approved by a university official violated students' First Amendment rights for purposes of § 1983 action brought by student editors against dean; even though the student editors made the decision not to send further issues of the newspaper to the publisher, the dean's call made it unlikely that the publisher would print a copy without approval due to risk of not being paid by the university and a late printing of the paper would have been futile because students were already out of town on winter break when approval was given. Hosty v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 325 F.3d 945, rehearing granted, opinion vacated. Colleges And Universities 9.45(4); Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4)

Town's initiation of suit against newspaper publisher and editor who had written editorial critical of police actions in suppressing antiabortion demonstrations, and meeting between town's attorneys and attorneys for women's center at which demonstrations took place, did not constitute conduct so egregious as to shock the conscience so as to give rise to substantive due process violation cognizable under § 1983. Spear v. Town of West Hartford, D.Conn.1991, 771 F.Supp. 521, affirmed 954 F.2d 63, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 66, 506 U.S. 819, 121 L.Ed.2d 33. Constitutional Law 253(1); Towns 44

A state court imposing a ban on taking of photographs by representatives of the press and newspapermen within the court room is reasonable and proper and geared to achieve dignity and decorum in the court room, and is not an unreasonable impingement upon free speech under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14, or violation of this section. Tribune Review Pub. Co. v. Thomas, W.D.Pa.1957, 153 F.Supp. 486, affirmed 254 F.2d 883. Civil Rights 1056; Constitutional Law 268(6)

Ordinance and resolutions enacted by city council of city of Pawtucket denying right of any person to examine city records having to do with tax cancellations or abatements without express permission of city council are invalid as an abridgement of the freedom of speech and of the press, notwithstanding that enactments contain no penal provisions. Providence Journal Co. v. McCoy, D.C.R.I.1950, 94 F.Supp. 186, affirmed 190 F.2d 760, certiorari denied 72 S.Ct. 200, 342 U.S. 894, 96 L.Ed. 669. Constitutional Law 274.1(2.1) prospective congressional candidate alleging that the statute violated the First Amendment. Morrison v. Colley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 467 F.3d 503. Constitutional Law 91

Evidence was sufficient for jury to conclude in civil rights lawsuit that mayor designed and implemented privatization of Puerto Rico municipal sanitation department in discriminatory manner in violation of First Amendment political affiliation rights of career employees, where administration implemented privatization in manner that violated multiple separate requirements of local law, witnesses testified of explicit statements by mayor of his intent to discriminate, municipal workers hired in place of career employees since privatization were affiliated with mayor's party, and jury easily could have concluded that mayor's testimony was not credible. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1430

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether State tax officials' imposition of tax liens on property of Indian tribal members was in retaliation for those members' business association with a non-tribal gasoline distributor, precluding summary judgment for officials in tribal members' §§ 1983 action alleging violation of their First Amendment right to freedom of association; officials' quick decision to impose the liens could chill a reasonable person from associating with an outside distributor, and extreme delay in releasing the liens could evidence a retaliatory motive. Perez v. Ellington, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 421 F.3d 1128. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State's compelling interest in promoting welfare of school children would have precluded recovery by sno-cone vendor for deprivation of civil rights due to his being prohibited from selling sno-cones to students at area schools, even if prohibition infringed upon vendor's free association rights under First Amendment. Rivers v. Campbell, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1986, 791 F.2d 837. Civil Rights 1070

Alternative means of engaging in harmless associations with inmates existed for state prison inmate that would not result in gang validation through associations and resultant housing in secure unit, under California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) regulations, by associating with inmates who had not been validated as gang members or associates, in determining whether regulations violated state prison inmate's First and Fourteenth Amendment associational rights as alleged in inmate's §§ 1983 action. Stewart v. Alameida, N.D.Cal.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 1154. Prisons 13(5)

City and its officials' passage of zoning ordinance prohibiting maintenance of farm animals, allegedly in retaliation for speech by property owners, injured owners' daughter and son-in-law, as would support daughter and son-in-law's claim under §§ 1983 alleging violation of their First Amendment right of intimate association, although daughter and son-in-law purchased property from owners a year after ordinance was passed, where ordinance caused property owners to incur additional costs of relocating their horses and supporting their upkeep at a different location. Moran v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 507. Constitutional Law 91; Zoning And Planning 82

Political activist's fiancee's association with activist, which was strictly personal and not political, was not protected by Free Association Clause, precluding fiancee's §§ 1983 First Amendment action against city officials alleging that her Section 8 housing subsidy was cancelled in retaliation for activist's political activities. Leon v. Sanchez-Bermudez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 407. Constitutional Law 91; United States 82(3.4)

Political candidates who brought action against county election board, seeking to enjoin third-party delivery of absentee ballots, failed to allege that board's procedures restricted their ability to be placed on ballot for upcoming election or placed unconstitutional conditions on their right to become candidates, as required to state claims for restrictions of rights of free association and equal protection. Riding motorcycles, going to parties, and bonding with friends did not involve matters of public concern, and thus state correctional officers failed to establish serious questions as to merits of their claim that disciplinary actions based on their association with motorcycle gang violated their First Amendment right to freedom of association, so as to entitle them to preliminary injunction barring state from effecting those employment actions, even if gang had message of acceptance of non-mainstream individuals, of nonconformance to society's rules, and of values of biking and brotherhood, where purpose of officers' association with gang was entirely social in nature, gang had national reputation for violence and crime, and state had serious problems with gang violence in prisons. Piscottano v. Murphy, D.Conn.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 97. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Civil service employee did not show that his dismissal was related to his political affiliation, as required to establish § 1983 political discrimination claim, under the First Amendment; although employee was a known member of a different political party than party to which his supervisors belonged, government employer claimed that employee was fired because he cashed a check made out to his political party while performing his official duties, in violation of employee rules regarding conflict of interest, and employee failed to show that employer's articulated reason was a fabrication to hide the discriminatory nature of the discharge. Alicea v. Puerto Rico Tourism Co., D.Puerto Rico 2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 243, affirmed 396 F.3d 46. Constitutional Law 91; Officers And Public Employees 69.7

Driver had no federal civil rights claim for violation of his associational rights arising out of officer's alleged expression of racial animus and violent behavior in arresting him for reckless driving in front of two passengers, allegedly because driver was associating with members of class of person against whom officer had unlawful animus; there was no allegation that passengers and driver were engaged in any activity other than social capacity which did not come within confines of associational rights protected by First Amendment. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In § 1983 action against municipal officials in their individual capacities based on their failure to assign certain boat-mooring space to permit holder, permit holder failed to state cause of action in complaint for deprivation of freedom of association; permit holder failed to allege that he wished to associate with other mooring lessees for any expressive purpose. Glatt v. Chicago Park Dist., N.D.Ill.1994, 847 F.Supp. 101. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Allegation that police officer commented to black plaintiff's "white female friends" that plaintiff was a pimp and/or involved with prostitution activities did not state civil rights claim for violation of right to free association; action was in fact nothing more than a defamation claim in disguise. Holley v. Schreibeck, E.D.Pa.1991, 758 F.Supp. 283, affirmed 944 F.2d 897, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 880, 502 U.S. 1035, 116 L.Ed.2d 784. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Threat of harm, under color of state law, for continued association and involuntary organization, might constitute an impermissible infringement on constitutional rights, e.g., by chilling a right of association. 1198. ---- Second amendment, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Firearm owner failed to state a Second Amendment claim under § 1983 against village and its police officials and assistant state's county attorneys, based upon the officials' and attorneys' alleged violation of owner's right to keep and bear arms; Second Amendment did not regulate state conduct, but rather federal conduct. Manos v. Caira, N.D.Ill.2001, 162 F.Supp.2d 979. Weapons 1

Claim that state statute restricting firearms use by alleged domestic abusers violated their Second Amendment right to bear arms could not be brought under § 1983; Second Amendment barred action by federal government only, as it had never been made applicable to states through Fourteenth Amendment. Nollet v. Justices of Trial Court of Com. of Mass., D.Mass.2000, 83 F.Supp.2d 204, affirmed 248 F.3d 1127. Civil Rights 1029; Constitutional Law 274(2); Weapons 3

No violation of Second Amendment right to bear arms occurred when state police surrounded alleged hostage taker's apartment and asked that hostage taker exit with gun disabled and, thus police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in subsequent § 1983 civil rights suit; right to bear arms is unenforceable against state action. White v. Town of Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.1995, 899 F.Supp. 1428, affirmed 70 F.3d 1264. Civil Rights 1376(6); Weapons 1

Arrests for underage possession of alcoholic beverages, under District of Columbia statute that unambiguously made underage possession a civil rather than criminal offense, could not have been based on probable cause, and therefore arrestees' Fourth Amendment claim against arresting officers and related parties was cognizable via §§ 1983. John Doe v. Metropolitan Police Dept. of Dist. of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2006, 445 F.3d 460. Civil Rights 1088(4) touching of another student, was told to remain in conference room under assistant principal's direction for several hours was "seized" within meaning of the Fourth Amendment, for purposes of his §§ 1983 claim against school district, school board and administrators. Shuman ex rel. Shertzer v. Penn Manor School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 422 F.3d 141. Schools 169.5

Allegations by manager of office that was subject to search warrant that he was frisked by a police officer when he attempted to enter the office while police were executing the warrant, and that officer lacked reasonable suspicion to believe he was carrying a weapon or was engaged in criminal activity, stated claim against officer for violation of manager's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Denver Justice And Peace Committee, Inc. v. City Of Golden, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2005, 405 F.3d 923, certiorari dismissed 126 S.Ct. 1164, 163 L.Ed.2d 1016. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Fourth Amendment, rather than Fourteenth Amendment due process clause, applied to § 1983 action brought on behalf of second-grade student whose head was taped to a tree by school vice-principal for disciplinary purposes. Doe ex rel. Doe v. Hawaii Dept. of Educ., C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 2003, 334 F.3d 906, on remand 351 F.Supp.2d 998. Constitutional Law 278.5(6); Schools 169.5

Second-grade student's allegations in § 1983 action, that school vice-principal taped his head to a tree for five minutes for disciplinary purposes, were sufficient to find a violation of student's Fourth Amendment search and seizure rights, for purposes of analyzing vice-principal's qualified immunity claim. Doe ex rel. Doe v. Hawaii Dept. of Educ., C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 2003, 334 F.3d 906, on remand 351 F.Supp.2d 998. Civil Rights 1376(5); Schools 169.5

Individual's allegations that he was forcibly removed from his parents' home by county employees, without a court order, when he was a minor due to relatives' unspecified allegations of child neglect stated § 1983 claim for unreasonable seizure under the Fourth Amendment. Brokaw v. Mercer County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1000. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Travel agent stated actionable § 1983 claim against arresting officers for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights after he was arrested for theft for refusing to return customer's passport to her until she paid for services allegedly performed by agent; agent may have had a good faith belief in claiming security interest in customer's passport. Guzell v. Hiller, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 223 F.3d 518. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Act of jail supervisor and corrections officer in giving key to probationer's apartment to probation officer, after probationer's arrest for violating parole for offense separate from offense underlying probation, did not violate probationer's right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures, because terms of probation order reasonably provided that probationer was subject to warrantless search of his home at any time by any law enforcement officer; thus, supervisor and corrections officer were entitled to qualified immunity in probationer's resulting § 1983 action. Rowe v. Lamb, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1997, 130 F.3d 812, rehearing denied. Sentencing And Punishment 1993

Allegation of judgment debtor's girlfriend that judgment creditors' attorney and law firm effected warrantless entry into girlfriend's home and seized personal property in ostensible satisfaction of judgment debtor's debt was sufficient to state substantive due process claim under Fourth Amendment, and thus Parratt -Hudson doctrine, which would preclude procedural due process claim if state provided adequate postdeprivation remedy for state actor's random and unauthorized deprivation of plaintiff's property, did not negate girlfriend's claims for violation of due process. Davis v. Bayless, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 70 F.3d 367. Civil Rights 1321; Constitutional Law 278(1)

Deputy sheriffs' warrantless, nonconsensual entry into plaintiff's home to effect arrest, constituting violation of substantive rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4, could form predicate for action under this section, regardless of availability of state tort remedies to redress the illegal arrest. Augustine v. Doe, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 740 F.2d 322. Civil Rights 1319

After arrestee's appearance before the Magistrate Judge following her warrantless arrest, arrestee was released on bond, and although she contested her charges, and purported to suffer from stress and anxiety, these events did not constitute a "seizure" for Fourth Amendment purposes in connection with arrestee's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment malicious prosecution claim. Love v. Oliver, N.D.Ga.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 1336. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police sergeant's alleged fabrication of evidence of officer's misconduct did not implicate officer's Fourth Amendment rights, and thus officer did not state claim against sergeant under §§ 1983 for fabrication of evidence, where officer was not arrested, detained, indicted, or otherwise subjected to criminal prosecution. Rolon v. Henneman, S.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 532. Civil Rights 1056

Fourth Amendment analysis applied to parolee's excessive force claims against parole officers. Turner v. White, E.D.N.Y.2005, 443 F.Supp.2d 288. Pardon And Parole 68

County was liable under §§ 1983 for violating Fourth Amendment rights of jail detainees, alleged to have committed misdemeanors, through awareness that there was custom of universal strip searching, without showing of suspicion that detainee was harboring contraband on or in his or her body, and failure to take effective corrective action. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police did not have probable cause to arrest 17-year-old for refusing to allow them entry into home to investigate alleged child neglect, and arrest thus violated his right to be free of unreasonable seizure, where police had no warrant to enter house and no exception to warrant requirement applied. O'Donnell v. Brown, W.D.Mich.2004, 335 F.Supp.2d 787. Arrest 63.4(15)

Motorist could not bring damages action under §§ 1983 against state or police officers in their official capacities, claiming that stop and subsequent arrest on drunk driving and drug charges violated his Fourth Amendment rights. Wiggins v. Rhode Island, D.R.I.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 297. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether city's operational policy or lack of such policy regarding issuance of no-knock search warrants resulted in deprivation of occupants' Fourth Amendment rights precluded summary judgment for defendant city in occupants' action arising from city officers' entry into occupants' residence, which was incorrectly identified in search warrant and subjected to no-knock search. Solis v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 797. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Father's allegations that Connecticut Department of Children and Families (DCF) and its employees created a neglect petition that contained false information regarding him were insufficient to state a Fourth Amendment cause of action under section 1983 since father did not allege that he was seized. Skalaban v. Department of Children and Families, D.Conn.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 101. Civil Rights 1057

Allegations in 51-year-old female African-American former town employee's complaint that there were numerous instances in which she was treated markedly differently than other younger, white, and non-disabled employees, and that she had complied with all procedural requisites, having exhausted her administrative remedies and having received a right to sue notice from the proper administrative agencies, stated a § 1983 claim against town for violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Massey v. Town of Windsor, D.Conn.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 160. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Officer's seizure of gun from passenger area of automobile following roadside stop of automobile was appropriate and lawfully within the confines of the Fourth Amendment as both seizure of contraband within plain view and as a search incident to a roadside stop conducted for the sole purpose of ensuring the officer's safety, and thus could not serve as basis for § 1983 action against officer; as officer approached the passenger area, she observed the driver slip a gun between the bench and back of the front seat of the car. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Arrest 63.5(9); Civil Rights 1088(4); Searches And Seizures 69

Fourth Amendment could not be applied to hold police officer liable in § 1983 action for allegedly violating arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights by failing to rescue him from retention pond after he escaped from custody, as the Fourth Amendment did not guarantee a right to be seized. Purvis v. City of Orlando, M.D.Fla.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 1321. Arrest 70(1)

Civil rights activists who brought § 1983 action against police officers, stemming from their arrests while attempting to film traffic stops, had no reasonable expectation of privacy in camcorder, video tape, micro-cassette recorder, and micro-cassette tape searched by officers, since activists were publicly protesting police activity in public forum, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity as to activists' Fourth Amendment claim. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 1292, amended 289 F.Supp.2d 1264, affirmed 130 Fed.Appx. 987, 2005 WL 1221632. Civil Rights 1376(6); Searches And Seizures 26

Material issues of fact, as to whether driver exiting automobile following high speed chase posed threat of harm and whether officers could reasonably believe firing of 49 shots at him was necessary to subdue driver, precluded summary judgment that officers had qualified immunity from claim they used excessive force in arresting him, in violation of Fourth Amendment. Parker v. Town of Swansea, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 92. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police did not violate Fourth Amendment rights of house occupant when they stepped on lawn to question him regarding claims of bizarre and potentially dangerous conduct, made by neighbors, while occupant was chopping wood. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Arrest 63.1

Citizen's claims that did not clearly articulate alleged constitutional violations at issue in support of § 1983 claim, but rather alleged that police officers deprived him of his civil rights by using excessive force, arresting him without probable cause, initiating baseless charges against him, and failing to divulge exculpatory evidence in court, would be construed as Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment claims of excessive force, unlawful arrest and detention, and malicious prosecution. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1395(5); Civil Rights 1395(6)

Citizen's contention that he was detained by police officers pursuant to improper criminal proceedings was sufficient to state a violation of malicious prosecution under the Fourth Amendment, in violation of § 1983; citizen alleged that he was detained after the initiation of criminal proceedings because he was unable to post the required bond, that his detention was predicated on officers' failure to divulge exculpatory evidence, and that his post-arraignment detention placed definitive restrictions on his liberty. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claims, arising from their alleged conduct of arresting and searching his body cavities after he was informed that drug dog had falsely alerted on him and he requested to speak to warden; officials' alleged conduct, if proven, would have violated arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights to be free from unlawful arrest, unreasonable searches, and excessive force, and arrestee's rights were clearly established at time. Lynn v. O'Leary, D.Md.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 306. Civil Rights 1376(1)

Police detective was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 claim brought by arrestee on grounds that detective had no personal involvement in the alleged constitutional deprivation, involving failure to transmit exculpatory statement that arrestee was not involved in offense to prosecutor, where evidence showed that detective had access to other detective's incident report containing exculpatory information, but he nonetheless notified other officers of outstanding arrest warrant so that it could proceed with arrest. Murvin v. Jennings, D.Conn.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 180. Civil Rights 1376(6)

African-American motorists, who brought action challenging New Jersey State Police practice of racial profiling on the New Jersey Turnpike, stated claims against Attorney General and Superintendent of the State Police under § 1983; motorists alleged that they were victims of selective enforcement of motor vehicle laws which violated their rights to due process and equal protection and their Fourth Amendment rights, and that defendants were intimately aware of racial profiling and acted with deliberate indifference towards resolving it. White v. Williams, D.N.J.2002, 179 F.Supp.2d 405.

Violation of local law, e.g., state tort law, is not enough to state claim for relief under this section, and there must be deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights, but deprivation of plaintiff's rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 amount to constitutional tort, and either warrantless arrest or warrantless search without probable cause will support action for damages under this section. Wright v. City of Reno, D.C.Nev.1981, 533 F.Supp. 58. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1088(4)

Inmates' § 1983 Fourth Amendment action challenging Department of Corrections' policy of conducting suspicionless strip searches of inmates returning from judicial proceedings declaring them releasable was "hybrid" class action maintainable based both on appropriateness of equitable relief and on predominance of common questions; complaint challenged blanket policy and practice so that Department's actions were "generally applicable to class," inmates sought declaratory and injunctive relief, common questions of whether Department had conducted suspicionless searches and whether they violated constitution predominated, and class action was superior since trying claims individually could waste judicial resources. Bynum v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 217 F.R.D. 43. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Company failed to state §§ 1983 claim for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures based on search of company's office, and resulting seizure of its business records, conducted pursuant to warrant issued upon allegedly false affidavit, given company's failure to identify any statements in affidavit believed to be false, to identify which state officials, if any, stated a deliberate falsehood or showed reckless disregard for the truth in warrant application, and to show how any allegedly false statements were material to finding of probable cause. BPNC, Inc. v. Taft, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 525, 2005 WL 1993426, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(6)

For purposes of §§ 1983 action brought by property owners who alleged that their Fourth Amendment rights were violated when state conservation officers entered their property without a warrant and took photographs of owners' partially-constructed new home, officers' act of taking photographs with an ordinary camera was not akin to thermal-imaging, and therefore no unlawful search occurred. Dean v. Duckworth, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 99 Fed.Appx. 760, 2004 WL 878448, Unreported. Searches And Seizures 13.1

Suspect's civil rights claim that he was illegally arrested, without probable cause and without a warrant, in violation of his constitutional rights should not have been dismissed for failure to state claim on which relief could be granted, where defendants had not yet answered complaint, and record was devoid of evidence that there was probable cause to arrest him for homicide after he was pulled over for driving without license plates on his vehicle. Brown v. Sudduth, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 93 Fed.Appx. 674, 2004 WL 725207, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Police sergeant's failure to read Miranda warnings to suspect before questioning him at hospital while he was being treated for bullet wounds he received from another officer did not violate suspect's constitutional rights, and thus could not be grounds for § 1983 action against sergeant. Chavez v. Martinez, U.S.2003, 123 S.Ct. 1994, 538 U.S. 760, 155 L.Ed.2d 984, on remand 337 F.3d 1091. Civil Rights 1088(4); Criminal Law 412.2(3)

Double Jeopardy clause was not violated, for purpose of prisoner's civil rights claim, by "punishing" prisoner twice for his escape, once by serving sentence for escape at county jail and then again when he was placed in administrative segregation by department of corrections (DOC), since Double Jeopardy clause applied only to proceedings that were "essentially criminal" in nature and prison disciplinary sanctions, such as administrative segregation, did not implicate double jeopardy protections. Fogle v. Pierson, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 435 F.3d 1252. Double Jeopardy 24

A suspect suffers a violation of her right to be free from self-incrimination when her un-warned confession is used to initiate a criminal prosecution against her, but charges are dropped before that confession can ever be introduced at trial, and violation is actionable under §§ 1983. Sornberger v. City of Knoxville, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 434 F.3d 1006. Criminal Law 518(1)

Agency's cancellation of Puerto Rico dairy farmer's milk production quota did not constitute taking of personal property under Fifth Amendment for which he would have been entitled to compensation from government, since quota cancellation was sanction for farmer's milk adulteration; cancellation was no different from any other fine or forfeiture imposed consequent to engaging in some harmful activity. Gonzalez-Alvarez v. Rivero-Cubano, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 426 F.3d 422. Eminent Domain 2.6

Police officers' alleged failure to give plaintiff her Miranda warnings prior to questioning her did not, standing alone, form basis for liability under § 1983; Miranda warnings are procedural safeguard rather than right explicitly stated in Fifth Amendment, and remedy for Miranda violation is exclusion from evidence of any ensuing self-incriminating statements, not § 1983 action. Neighbour v. Covert, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1508, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1267, 516 U.S. 1174, 134 L.Ed.2d 214. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Remedy for alleged Miranda violation is exclusion from evidence of any compelled self-incrimination, not civil rights action. Brock v. Logan County Sheriff's Dept. of Arkansas, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1993, 3 F.3d 1215. Civil Rights 1088(4)

State inmate established entitlement to preliminary injunction in §§ 1983 action, which barred prison officials from requiring, as part of sexual offender counseling program, that participants divulge history of sexual conduct, including illegal acts for which no criminal charges had been filed, on allegations that he was threatened with loss of, and in fact did lose, good time credits as direct and automatic result of his refusal to give up his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and participate in program. Donhauser v. Goord, N.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 160. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Indian tribe's alleged loss of aboriginal title was not compensable taking under Fifth Amendment. Greene v. Rhode Island, D.R.I.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 5, affirmed 398 F.3d 45. Eminent Domain 2.43

Officer's failure to read Miranda warnings to arrestee prior to questioning him about whether he had a license for the gun that was discovered in his automobile did not violate defendant's Fifth Amendment rights, and thus could not be grounds for § 1983 action against officer, where arrestee's statements were suppressed at his trial, and he was thus not compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal proceeding. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1088(4); Criminal Law 412.2(3)

Criminal investigation of police officer who was charged with second degree murder of police sergeant had not ripened into indictment against city as proponent of stay of § 1983 claim, and thus city did not establish stay was necessary to protect it from undermining its Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination or from exposing the basis of a criminal defense, pending criminal prosecution of officer for sergeant's murder, so as to be entitled to stay of § 1983 action brought by sergeant's estate alleging city was liable for conduct of officer who shot sergeant. Hicks v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 238. Action 69(5)

Former inmate stated cause of action in complaint under § 1983 for deprivation of protections of double jeopardy clause, where he alleged that bill he was paying to county for costs of his incarceration was disproportionate to damage he had caused. Grove v. Kadlic, D.Nev.1997, 968 F.Supp. 510. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Tax Injunction Act, prohibiting federal courts from enjoining levy of any tax under state law where speedy and efficient remedy may be had in state courts, precluded federal court from exercising jurisdiction over plaintiff's § 1983 claim alleging that Nevada violated double jeopardy clause by assessing tax deficiencies and penalties on him for sale of controlled substances after his conviction and sentencing for same; state remedy was speedy and efficient within meaning of Act. Laform v. State of Nev. Dept. of Taxation, D.Nev.1996, 962 F.Supp. 1307. Federal Courts 27

Nature of constitutional right at issue in just compensation claim for taking under Fifth Amendment requires that property owner utilize procedures for obtaining compensation before bringing § 1983 action. McCormack Sand Co. v. Town of North Hempstead Solid Waste Management Authority, E.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 589. Civil Rights 1318

While detainee subject to custodial interrogation has right to counsel under Fifth Amendment, remedy for violation of detainee's rights is exclusion from evidence of any compelled self-incrimination, not civil rights action under § 1983. Craig v. St. Martin Parish Sheriff, W.D.La.1994, 861 F.Supp. 1290. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Inmate failed to prove that he suffered a violation of his Fifth Amendment right to avoid self-incrimination where he refused to admit guilt on sex offenses, as required for admission into a sex offender treatment program (SOTP), which "program refusal" eventually resulted in his reclassification to a lower credit-earning class; this type of choice was not compulsion of self-incriminating testimony. The Sea Clammers rule did not bar terminated teacher's § 1983 race and retaliation claims; rather than being governed exclusively by Title VII, race claim rested on violation of Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection, and it was possible to infer that retaliation was based on exercise of teacher's First Amendment rights. Joyner v. School Dist. of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2004, 313 F.Supp.2d 495. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502; Schools 147.12

District court did not have federal question jurisdiction over prisoner's lawsuit against attorney alleging violation of his Sixth Amendment rights, although attorney represented prisoner in federal criminal case, since attorney was not state actor. Illinois constitutional provision denying incarcerated felons the right to vote was facially neutral state action which did not violate Fifteenth Amendment prohibition against states denying or abridging right to vote based on race, color, or previous condition of servitude; mere fact that many incarcerated felons happened to be black or latino was insufficient grounds to implicate Fifteenth Amendment. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1202. ---- Eighth amendment, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Prisoner's allegation that he was subject to unprovoked attack by prison security guards stated cognizable claim under § 1983 for violation of Eighth Amendment. Pelfrey v. Chambers, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 43 F.3d 1034, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2269, 515 U.S. 1116, 132 L.Ed.2d 273. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Section 1983 was proper vehicle for death-sentenced prisoner's Eighth Amendment challenge to Virginia's lethal injection procedure; prisoner was not challenging lethal injection in general. Walker v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2006, 448 F.Supp.2d 719. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestees' excessive force civil rights claims were not actionable under Eighth Amendment, regardless of arrestees' criminal history or probation status, since Eighth Amendment's protections did not attach until after conviction and sentence and none of arrestees were incarcerated prisoners at time of incident. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Sentencing And Punishment 1442

Neither United States Constitution nor any federal statute gave city prisoner right to non-negligent driving by city employees, and therefore prisoner's claims that driver of corrections department bus violated prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights by causing him injury through alleged negligent or reckless operation of bus were not cognizable under §§ 1983, even when considered in light of allegation that bus driver, in driving recklessly, was deliberately indifferent to prisoner's health and safety; rather, such claims fell under purview of state tort law. Carrasquillo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1098; Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1536

Section 1983 cause of action against Connecticut Department of Children and Families (DCF) and its employees premised on the Eighth Amendment could not be maintained by father, who alleged that defendants created a neglect petition that contained false information regarding him, where there had been no adjudication of guilt. Skalaban v. Department of Children and Families, D.Conn.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 101. Sentencing And Punishment 1587

Prison official's receipt of inmate complaints, without more, is insufficient to establish an official's supervisory liability under § 1983, for purposes of Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim. Brooks v. Berg, N.D.N.Y.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 302, vacated in part 289 F.Supp.2d 286. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging cruel and unusual punishment failed to state Eighth Amendment violations; allegations of verbal abuse and hostile conduct did not rise to level of a constitutional violation, and allegations of unconstitutional confinement conditions consisting of the denial of one noon meal, denial of exercise while on keeplock confinement, and being confined to his cell for periods of four, 21, and 21 days, were insufficient, without more, to establish a claim of cruel and unusual punishment. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Prisons 17(1); Sentencing And Punishment 1538; Sentencing And Punishment 1541; Sentencing And Punishment 1553

County jail inmate's failure to allege blanket custom or policy of not medically treating inmates with hepatitis C did not preclude his § 1983 Eighth Amendment claim against private entities that contracted with county to provide inmates with medical services, in which he alleged that he had been denied adequate dental care by dentist's refusal to treat him due to his hepatitis C; even absent blanket policy, if inmate could demonstrate that contractor's employee was final policymaker with respect to treatment and decided not to treat pursuant to unconstitutional custom or policy, contractors could be liable. Wall v. Dion, D.Me.2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 316. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Eighth Amendment could only be invoked by persons convicted of crimes and not by driver and passengers as basis for § 1983 claim arising from alleged wrongful police stop. Alexander v. Haymon, S.D.Ohio 2003, 254

F.Supp.2d 820. Sentencing And Punishment 1433

Motorist did not have viable § 1983 claim based on Eighth Amendment in connection with traffic stop and arrest; Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishment provision applies only to those convicted of crimes, and motorist's own testimony indicated that her only complaint regarding physical force was that officer shoved her or pushed her into patrol car. Wynn v. Morgan, E.D.Tenn.1994, 861 F.Supp. 622. Civil Rights 1088(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1442

There was adequate basis for holding prison officials liable for damages in civil rights action for deprivation under color of state law of inmate's constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment in connection with inmate's confinement in hospital isolation cell under conditions violative of his constitutional rights. Strachan v. Ashe, D.C.Mass.1982, 548 F.Supp. 1193. Civil Rights 1095

In § 1983 lawsuit under Eighth Amendment against medical services provider, district court's decision to not appoint counsel for indigent prisoner was not abuse of discretion, since prisoner clearly understood fundamental issues in his case and presented them intelligently and coherently both in his pleadings and at trial, issues were not particularly complex, he did not present any special circumstances, and he had little chance of success on the merits. Herman v. Correctional Medical Services, Inc., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 183, 2003 WL 21235499, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

Court's instruction was a correct explanation of objective component of inmate's Eighth Amendment excessive force claim under § 1983; jury was informed that objective prong was satisfied if the plaintiff shows that he suffered some harm as a result of the use of force by the defendant, and that plaintiff need not show that he has suffered significant injury, but at the same time not every push or shove violated a prisoner's constitutional rights. Amaker v. Coombe, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21222534, Unreported. Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

1203. ---- Ninth amendment, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Ninth Amendment does not provide independent basis for relief under § 1983 because it is rule of construction rather than source of individual rights. Clynch v. Chapman, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 213. Civil Rights 1029; Constitutional Law 82(2)

Ninth Amendment does not guarantee any constitutional right sufficient to support claim under § 1983. DeLeon v. Little, D.Conn.1997, 981 F.Supp. 728. Civil Rights 1029

Ninth Amendment did not confer substantive rights that could be enforced in §§ 1983 action against State, state officials, and physicians. P.J. ex rel. Jensen v. Utah, D.Utah 2006, 2006 WL 1702585, Unreported. Constitutional Law 82(2)

1204. ---- Thirteenth amendment, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Pharmacy patron detained on suspicion of shoplifting failed to state a claim of involuntary servitude under the Thirteenth Amendment; the actions of the pharmacy constituted neither compulsory labor nor physical coercion, and police told him that he was "free to go." Caldwell v. CVS Corp., D.N.J.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 654. False Imprisonment 5

Even if disbarred attorney's Thirteenth Amendment claim was treated as an equal protection challenge under § 1983, attorney failed to demonstrate that he was treated less favorably than similarly situated individuals during disciplinary proceedings. Thomas v. Knight, D.D.C.2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 86, affirmed 2003 WL 22239653.

Attorney And Client 47.1; Constitutional Law 230.3(9)

Government attorney investigating sexual harassment claim of government employee did not violate employee's Thirteenth Amendment rights in connection with investigation; when applicable in context of employment discrimination Thirteenth Amendment has been found to apply only to race discrimination, and no such allegations were made in present case. Marrero Rivera v. Department of Justice of Com. of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 821 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1506; Constitutional Law 83(2)

1205. ---- Fourteenth amendment generally, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

The constitutional privileges and immunities protected by this section include those secured by due process and equal protection clauses of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 as well as by privileges and immunities clause of that amendment. Hague v. Committee for Indus. Organization, U.S.N.J.1939, 59 S.Ct. 954, 307 U.S. 496, 83 L.Ed. 1423. See, also, Powell v. Workmen's Compensation Bd. of State of N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1964, 327 F.2d 131; Ghadiali v. Delaware State Medical Soc., D.C.Del.1939, 28 F.Supp. 841.

Arrestee's §§ 1983 false confession claim could not be recharacterized as a violation of his Fourteenth Amendment due process right to a fair trial; the false confession claim was based on alleged unfair interrogation tactics, which did not implicate fair trial rights. Wallace v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 440 F.3d 421, certiorari granted in part 2006 WL 776675. Criminal Law 519(9)

City building inspector did not exceed the scope of store owner's consent to conduct an electrical inspection of the premises, for purpose of owner's §§ 1983 claim against inspector; the request for the inspection was the result of a citizen complaint of unsafe electrical conditions, and although inspector stated that the power had to be shut off, this statement was made only after inspector observed multiple electrical violations. Aida Food and Liquor, Inc. v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 439 F.3d 397. Searches And Seizures 186

Discipline of black corrections officers for involvement in scheme to provide jail inmates with drugs, while charges against white officers were dropped, was not a deprivation of black officers' Fourth Amendment rights, as would support their malicious prosecution claim under §§ 1983 against county and county jail officials, where black officers were charged in a civil administrative proceeding, and were never taken into custody, imprisoned, physically detained, or seized. Washington v. County of Rockland, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 373 F.3d 310. Arrest 68(3)

Harassment of an employee because of her faith, whatever guise it assumes, may constitute religious discrimination under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment sufficient to support § 1983 claim. Rivera v. Puerto Rico Aqueduct and Sewers Authority, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 331 F.3d 183, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 238(2)

Section 1983 protects all rights guaranteed by Fourteenth Amendment. Matthias v. Bingley, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 906 F.2d 1047, modified on denial of rehearing on other grounds 915 F.2d 946. Civil Rights 1028

In order to maintain an action under this section plaintiffs must allege facts showing that defendants acted to deprive them of rights, privileges, and immunities secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Spears v. Robinson, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1970, 431 F.2d 1089. Civil Rights 1394

This section providing civil action for deprivation of rights embraces deprivation of both due process of law and equal protection of laws, it contemplates such deprivation through unconstitutional application of law by conspiracy or otherwise and it permits damages, including punitive damages. Mansell v. Saunders, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1967, 372 F.2d 573. Civil Rights 1460; Civil Rights 1465(1)

Lebanese citizen, as legal resident of United States, did not have viable cause of action against police officers for denying citizen access to judicial process, based on officers' alleged cover-up of beating of citizen by off-duty police officers and impeding citizen's efforts to obtain legal redress, where citizen could not identify underlying cause of action and remedy unique to that cause of action and relief was available under other claims that remained pending; citizen could not pursue deprivation of access claim that sought same damages remedy as was available through his other claims based simply on use of different legal theory. Mazloum v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1. Civil Rights 1311

Husband who had been accused of domestic abuse stated §§ 1983 claim against judicial branch and Department of Children and Families (DCF) personnel for conspiracy to fabricate evidence against him and suppress evidence favorable to him; DCF investigator allegedly pressured wife to sign a service agreement to stay away from husband and obtain a temporary restraining order (TRO) and allegedly threatened to remove children, another investigator allegedly filled investigative report with false charges of abuse, victim's advocate allegedly pressured wife to sign an application for a TRO based on false charges and allegedly threatened to take away children, and another advocate allegedly refused to acknowledge his wife's recantation and sought to obtain from her more false evidence by using a potential perjury prosecution as a threat. Greene v. Wright, D.Conn.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 416. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

None of the expressly enumerated privileges and immunities of federal citizenship, protected by the privileges and immunities clause of Fourteenth Amendment, were violated when retired state court judge was denied appointment as judicial hearing officer; any violated right would be unprotected property right. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Constitutional Law 207(1); Reference 39

In the absence of specific factual allegations that police officer intended to cause harm in allowing arrestee to escape custody or that officer herded or forced arrestee to retention pond, officer could not be held liable in § 1983 action for an alleged Fourteenth Amendment due process violation after subsequent chase led to arrestee's drowning in retention pond. Purvis v. City of Orlando, M.D.Fla.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 1321. Civil Rights 1395(6)

To make the determination of what due process is required in a school residency case, a court must balance, first, the private interest that will be affected by the official action, second, the risk of an erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute procedural safeguards, and finally, the government's interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural requirement would entail. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. Constitutional Law 278.5(7)

Warden of county prison was not subject to supervisory liability under § 1983, pursuant to due process clause or equal protection clause, in connection with denial of detainee's request for fingerprint analysis of shank found in his cell, where detainee offered no support beyond his deposition testimony for claim that shank was planted, detainee was responsible for contraband found in his cell under doctrine of constructive possession, and hearing officer was within his discretion in finding guard more credible than detainee. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1358

Commonwealth provided adequate post deprivation remedy to dietary supplement supplier, claiming that Department of Consumer Affairs improperly banned product advertising as false, precluding claim under § 1983 that Department violated supplier's procedural due process rights. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Graduate student who also served as teaching assistant in the department of counseling and educational development at state university alleged sufficient facts to support a violation of her right to be free from sexual harassment under the Fourteenth Amendment, as required to determine whether qualified immunity protected university's dean of graduate school and education department head from liability for § 1983 claims for taking actions in response to her complaints of harassment that allegedly violated her constitutionally protected rights; she alleged that department head's only response to her complaint of professor's sexual harassment was statement that "William will be William," and that when she later spoke to dean about professor, dean suggested that by making complaint against highly regarded faculty member she had chosen not to receive her graduate degree. Mandsager v. University of North Carolina at Greensboro, M.D.N.C.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 662. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Corporation engaged in spring water business and its owner alleged facts sufficient to find town liable for constitutional violations under § 1983, where they alleged that it was the policy or plan of the town zoning board of appeals to destroy their spring water business, that the plan manifested itself through the board's decisions regarding their use of the subject property, and that decisions resulted ultimately in issuance and continuation of cease and desist order, rendering their business operations illegal. Gavlak v. Town of Somers, D.Conn.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 214. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Citizen's § 1983 claim based on police officer's malicious prosecution of him could not be based on denial of substantive due process under Constitution, as there is no substantive due process right to be free from malicious prosecution. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1088(5); Constitutional Law 253(1)

To state a § 1983 claim for deprivation of property without due process in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, plaintiff must show (1) that she has a constitutionally protected property interest, and (2) that she has been deprived of that interest by state action; once elements are established, question turns to what process is due and whether it has been provided. Echtenkamp v. Loudon County Public Schools, E.D.Va.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 1043. Constitutional Law 278(1)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 claim brought by arrestee, on grounds that officers had no personal involvement in the alleged constitutional deprivation, involving failure to transmit suspect's exculpatory statement that arrestee was not involved in offense to prosecutor; officers' involvement was limited to either notarizing suspect's written statement, notarizing arrest warrant application for arrestee, witnessing the suspect's interview with detective, or picking up the detective's report on arrestee and delivering it to the court. Murvin v. Jennings, D.Conn.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 180. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Damage to reputation alone does not rise to the level of a constitutional violation redressable under § 1983; if the damage to reputation were so great that it significantly limits either the person's associational or employment opportunities, there would be a deprivation of liberty. Russoli v. Salisbury Tp., E.D.Pa.2000, 126 F.Supp.2d 821. Civil Rights 1038

In context of § 1983 claim based on random, unauthorized acts by state employees, due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment is not violated when state employee intentionally deprives individual of property or liberty, so long as state provides meaningful postdeprivation remedy. Adams v. Galletta, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1315

To state cause of action under this section requires allegation of facts which constitute deprivation under color of state authority a right guaranteed by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Schorle v. City of Greenhills, S.D.Ohio 1981, 524 F.Supp. 821. Civil Rights 1396

Among the rights "secured" by the Constitution, and thus within the ambit of this section, are those embraced within the terms of U.S.C.A.Const. 14. Samuel v. Busnuck, D.C.Md.1976, 423 F.Supp. 99. Civil Rights 1028

Section 1983 protects rights of individuals to be free from violations of their procedural due process under Fourteenth Amendment. Ward v. Temple University, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21281768, Unreported. Civil Rights 1028

Section 1983 provided remedy for violation of plaintiff's rights under Fourteenth Amendment, and thus plaintiff did not have implied cause of action grounded directly on Fourteenth Amendment. Lehman v. Doe, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 253, 2003 WL 21191033, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1508, 540 U.S. 1219, 158 L.Ed.2d 154. Civil Rights 1322

The 96 days that it took state court clerk, following grant of detainee's motion to suppress, to prepare record and transmit it to appellate court was not excessive and did not violate due process, even though state rule allotted 63 days. Potts v. Brown, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 635, 2003 WL 21054647, Unreported. Constitutional Law 271; Criminal Law 1106(2)

Allegations by construction contractor that the Puerto Rico Public Housing Authority (PRPHA) wrongfully deprived contractor of its bid award for a housing development project based on a false determination that contractor was a nonresponsible bidder, that contractor had been effectively debarred from future government-funded construction projects, that the PRPHA projects were funded by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), and that HUD was fully aware of the PRPHA's disregard of award procedures, but did nothing to correct it, did not state a Bivens civil rights action for violation of contractor's due process rights against federal HUD officials, absent any allegation of a connection between the alleged wrongful deprivation and HUD officials. Redondo-Borges v. U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 421 F.3d 1. United States 50.10(1)

Perfect parity in origin of both "stigma" and "plus" is not required to state infringement of "stigma-plus" liberty interest under Due Process Clause. Velez v. Levy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 401 F.3d 75. Constitutional Law 255(1)

Even if test results and handwritten notes underlying state crime laboratory reports in rape case and were exculpatory and materially favorable under Brady, laboratory technicians were not liable in accused's § 1983 damages action, where technicians' failure to disclose the test results and notes was consistent with laboratory policy of only sending the actual reports to the prosecutor, and there was no showing that nondisclosure was in bad faith. Villasana v. Wilhoit, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 368 F.3d 976, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1345, 543 U.S. 1153, 161 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Detectives' allegedly false account of arrestee's interrogation, indicating that arrestee had confessed to murdering his parents, was not violation of Brady, as would have supported claim for denial of due process under § 1983; problem was not that evidence useful to arrestee was concealed, but rather that detectives allegedly gave false evidence. Gauger v. Hendle, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 349 F.3d 354, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 268(5); Criminal Law 700(3)

Sex offender group therapy program for persons civilly confined under the Illinois Sexually Dangerous Persons Act, did not violate privilege against compelled self-incrimination, or due process clause, for purpose of § 1983 claim against state officials; even though persons who refused to participate in program would not qualify for release and dismissal of underlying criminal charges, participation was voluntary, any incriminating statements made during therapy could be suppressed at criminal trial, and state's use of program was not outside professional therapeutic norms. Allison v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1076, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 486, 540 U.S. 985, 157 L.Ed.2d 377. Constitutional Law 255(5); Criminal Law 393(1); Mental Health 465(3)

Release of bank robbery arrestee's name to news media by city chief of police did not violate arrestee's due process rights. Olinger v. Larson, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1998, 134 F.3d 1362, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Arrest 70(1); Constitutional Law 262

Former county employee sufficiently alleged § 1983 violations by four individual defendants for refusing to make available information that would give him opportunity to mount defense against false allegations of graft and attempting to intimidate him into admitting to wrongdoing; his complaint sufficiently set forth claim that his discharge violated § 1983 by depriving him of his due process and First Amendment rights. Ortez v. Washington County, State of Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 88 F.3d 804. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Lack of ascertainable standards is violation of due process actionable under this section. Barnes v. Merritt, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1967, 376 F.2d 8. Civil Rights 1028; Constitutional Law 251.4

Reasonable officer in state trooper's position could have believed, at the time trooper acted, that making community notifications respecting out-of-state sexual offender who had transferred his parole to Pennsylvania, pursuant to state's Megan's law and state parole board's discretionary authority, did not violate offender's due process rights, and therefore trooper was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability on grounds that notifications violated due process. Lines v. Wargo, W.D.Pa.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 649. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Due process principles underlying Brady support a DNA testing right in both the pre-trial and post-conviction settings. Wade v. Brady, D.Mass.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 226. Constitutional Law 270.5

Parents and child who brought civil rights action against city lacked due process claim based on negligent supervision, stemming from assault that allegedly occurred while child was at pre-placement facility after removal, where there was no evidence that any city employees assaulted child, or that supervisor knew of and disregarded risk to child's health and safety. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Infants 17

African-American operated charter school, which claimed that school board unconstitutionally terminated its charter contract, failed to sufficiently plead a cause of action for procedural due process; school did not allege a constitutionally protected liberty or property interest, nor did it allege a constitutionally inadequate process. Wilbesan Charter School, Inc. v. School Bd of Hillsborough County, FL, M.D.Fla.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 1292. Civil Rights 1395(2)

In alleging a violation of due process pursuant to §§ 1983, the "procedural due process" component focuses on the adequacy of procedures provided by the state or municipality in effecting the deprivation of liberty or property, while "substantive due process" zeroes in on the limits of what a state actor may do to an individual irrespective of any procedural protections provided. Dodd v. Sheppard, D.R.I.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 326. Constitutional Law 278(1)

Making of derogatory remarks, the infliction of verbal abuse, and other potentially tortious conduct did not automatically implicate the Due Process Clause simply because the actor was employed by a local health services district or was a member of its medical staff; furthermore, interference with, or even the breach of a district contract with a health services provider, caused by a district official or staff acting under his direction, did not necessarily result in a constitutional deprivation of "liberty" or "property" that was actionable under §§ 1983. MacArthur v. San Juan County, D.Utah 2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 1098. Torts 245

Partners in partnership had not been deprived of due process, for purpose of their lawsuit under §§ 1983, by conduct of opponent's counsel in obtaining order in state court lawsuit which allowed opponent to inspect and make mold assessment in partnership real property which was subject of state lawsuit and which prevented partners from modifying that property or entering premises during that one day inspection, since partners were given opportunity to file written objection before order issued. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend 14; Guimbellot v. Rowell, E.D.La.2004, 356 F.Supp.2d 644. Constitutional Law 305(3); Pretrial Procedure 403

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether town planning board received and began processing site plan application submitted by developer of proposed subdivision, precluding partial summary judgment, as to issue of liability, for developer on its claim that board's refusal to receive and process its application deprived it of a protected property right, namely, delivery of fundamental governmental services, in violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Ridgeview Partners, LLC v. Entwistle, S.D.N.Y.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 395. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Custodial parents, who could not identify binding obligation under Title IV-D of Social Security Act or state laws that required state to distribute child support in specific manner they desired, did not show deprivation of liberty or property interest protected by the Due Process Clause that would be enforceable in §§ 1983 action. Walters v. Weiss, E.D.Ark.2003, 349 F.Supp.2d 1160, affirmed 392 F.3d 306. Child Support 465; Constitutional Law 299.3

Requiring patient civilly committed for treatment under sex offender program to undergo polygraph examination as condition of remaining in particular treatment program did not violate patient's substantive due process rights under Fourteenth Amendment. Laxton v. Watters, W.D.Wis.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1024. Constitutional Law 255(5); Mental Health 465(3)

Parents and children were not provided with procedural due process in connection with child protective services agency removing them from their home, where order of family court intake referee authorizing removal was verbal, rather than written as required by Michigan law, and hearing and court review following removal was not adequate post-deprivation remedy, given fact that it would have been possible to get valid written removal order prior to removal. O'Donnell v. Brown, W.D.Mich.2004, 335 F.Supp.2d 787. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 192

Former convict's allegations that police defendants coerced and fabricated his confession and withheld that fact from prosecutors, judges, and defense counsel sufficiently alleged deprivation of constitutionally guaranteed due process rights, and such claim was not barred by Newsome decision prohibiting § 1983 malicious prosecution claims. Patterson v. Burge, N.D.Ill.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 878. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Father's complaint alleging that Connecticut Department of Children and Families (DCF) and its employees made false allegations in a neglect petition did not state a due process violation since there was no factual allegation indicating actual interference with the custody of his child. Skalaban v. Department of Children and Families, D.Conn.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 101. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Recreational dancer who was banned from city's concert venue, due to allegedly lewd conduct, failed to establish that ban deprived her of substantive due process rights to freedom of movement and travel, as required to maintain § 1983 action against city, since ban simply prohibited dancer from entering one particular building, rather than impeding her ability to move freely from nation to nation or neighborhood to neighborhood. Willis v. Town of Marshall, W.D.N.C.2003, 293 F.Supp.2d 608. Constitutional Law 291.6; Municipal Corporations 721(2)

State Highway and Transportation District's awareness of history of suicides on bridge and opening of bridge to pedestrians without a suicide barrier was insufficient to constitute affirmative conduct on the part of the state in placing suicide victim in danger, such as to impose duty on state under Fourteenth Amendment due process clause to protect victim who died after jumping off bridge, required to support § 1983 action for deprivation of victim's right to life or right of victim's mother to familial companionship. Estate of Imrie v. Golden Gate Bridge Highway and Transp. Dist., N.D.Cal.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 1145. Constitutional Law 291; States 112.2(2)

No claim lies under § 1983 for due process violations made under color of federal law; Bivens provides the appropriate basis for such a claim. North Carolina ex rel. Haywood v. Barrington, M.D.N.C.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 452. Civil Rights 1327; United States 50.1

In order to state a successful claim for violation of due process pursuant to § 1983, plaintiff must demonstrate (1) an interest included within the Fourteenth Amendment's protections for property or liberty and (2) that the state deprived him of that protected interest without requisite notice or some type of hearing. Swinehart v. McAndrews, E.D.Pa.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 552, affirmed 69 Fed.Appx. 60, 2003 WL 21357242. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Sheriffs And Constables 87

City's release to newspaper of police officer's self-report of a diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder, which he had made several years prior to involvement in fatal shooting, did not violate officer's right to privacy as protected by Due Process Clause; information in question was not the kind that made it more likely that officer's security or that of his family would be invaded by members of the public receiving it, even those with a particular motive to dislike him. Smith v. City of Dayton, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1999, 68 F.Supp.2d 911. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Records 30

Pro se § 1983 claimant could not maintain actionable due process claim for failure to videotape criminal proceeding as written transcripts were uniformly approved as acceptable means of recording legal proceedings, and in cases where those transcripts were missing or inaccurate there were sufficient state procedures to ensure fair appellate review. Molina v. Kaye, E.D.N.Y.1996, 956 F.Supp. 261. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1319

Action by Pennsylvania capital inmates seeking injunctive and declaratory relief concerning which statute of limitations would govern their federal habeas corpus claims asserted sufficient violation of federal right to support § 1983 claim; uncertainty about whether Pennsylvania was "opt-in" state so that inmates would have to bring federal habeas petitions within 180 days under Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act rather than within general one-year period deprived inmates of their due process rights, violated Eighth Amendment's requirement for heightened procedural safeguards in capital cases, and violated equal protection on ground that non-capital prisoners knew that one-year limitations period applied to their federal habeas petitions. Death Row Prisoners of Pennsylvania v. Ridge, E.D.Pa.1996, 948 F.Supp. 1258. Constitutional Law 249(3); Constitutional Law 306(6); Sentencing And Punishment 1790; Habeas Corpus 332.1

Civil rights claim predicated on violation of due process must involve invasion of recognized life, liberty, or property interest. Polite v. Casella, N.D.N.Y.1995, 901 F.Supp. 90. Constitutional Law 255(1); Constitutional Law 278(1)

In combination with due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, § 1983 allows plaintiffs to assert three kinds of federal claims, claims for deprivation by state officials of specific protections defined in bill of rights, claims under substantive component of due process clause relating to arbitrary wrongful government action, and claims under procedural component of due process clause relating to deprivations of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Hodge v. Carroll County Dept. of Social Services, D.Md.1992, 812 F.Supp. 593, reversed in part, vacated in part 31 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

To state claim for relief under this section, plaintiff need only allege that defendant deprived her, under color of state law, of right secured by Constitution and laws of the United States, and claim that plaintiff was deprived of her liberty interest under due process clause of U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14 was sufficient as source for court's jurisdiction under this section. Flowers v. Webb, E.D.N.Y.1983, 575 F.Supp. 1450. Civil Rights 1394

There are two distinct requirements for recovery for the violation of due process rights in an action brought either under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or this section, defendant must have acted under color of state law, and defendant's actions must have deprived plaintiff of a federally secured liberty or property interest. Ohland v. City of Montpelier, D.C.Vt.1979, 467 F.Supp. 324. Civil Rights 1304

Consideration of claim under this section need not be automatic just because claims of due process are involved; it is denial of a right secured under Constitution or laws of the United States that is cognizable under this section. Downing v. Arnold, D.C.N.H.1978, 461 F.Supp. 54.

While "property" or "liberty" interests protected by due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section ordinarily must flow from a guarantee under state law or the Constitution, protection may also be accorded to rights of less specific origin under this section. Heese v. DeMatteis Development Corp., S.D.N.Y.1976, 417 F.Supp. 864. Civil Rights 1027

Death-sentenced prisoner's allegations that Louisiana's clemency procedure violated the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments because the governor rarely granted clemency to violent offenders failed to state a claim under §§ 1983. Sepulvado v. Louisiana Bd. of Pardons and Parole, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 171 Fed.Appx. 470, 2006 WL 707024, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1575

State prisoner had no due process liberty interest in sex offender treatment. Maimon v. Rea, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 295, 2005 WL 752237, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 17(2)

Louisiana prisoner's allegations that prison warden illicitly confiscated his typewriter did not state claim for violation of due process, in light of availability of post-deprivation tort cause of action under Louisiana law which was sufficient to satisfy requirements of due process. Phillips v. Stalder, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 100 Fed.Appx. 315, 2004 WL 1255333, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Convicts 3

Juvenile offender's younger brother had no constitutionally protected liberty or property interest in offender's records, and thus could not claim that city's release of records to scientists conducting psychiatric study of offenders' brothers violated his due process rights. Johnson ex rel. Johnson v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22743675, Unreported. Constitutional Law 255(4); Constitutional Law 277(1); Infants 133

1207. ---- Procedural due process, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State prisoner had no due process right of post-conviction access to the biological evidence presented at his capital murder trial under Brady v. Maryland and its progeny for the purpose of performing DNA testing thereon; the evidence in question had not been suppressed but, instead, was available and used at prisoner's trial some 20 years earlier, prisoner received a fair trial in which overwhelming evidence was presented against him, including his confession to the victim's burglary, rape, and murder, prisoner did not contend that he was actually innocent of the crime of conviction, capital murder during a burglary, but only that he did not know whether he was guilty or innocent, and the DNA testing that prisoner sought to perform could not have shown that he was actually innocent of the capital murder. Grayson v. King, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 460 F.3d 1328. Criminal Law 1590 and family services agency stated §§ 1983 procedural due process claim against caseworker and others, seeking damages for mental and emotional distress, even assuming that removal would still have occurred with prior notice and hearing; parents alleged emotional distress from caseworker's actions themselves, e.g. "[it was like] being attacked by a terrorist," and "I wonder when they're going to strike again." Gomes v. Wood, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 451 F.3d 1122. Infants 17

Though discharged public employee need not use the term "name-clearing hearing" to satisfy hearing-request requirement for seeking remedy, under §§ 1983, for deprivation of liberty in violation of due process clause, the employee must still petition the employer in a manner that can be construed as asking for an opportunity to clear his name. Bledsoe v. City of Horn Lake, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 449 F.3d 650. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Allegations by attorney and accounting firm hired under contract by Puerto Rico municipality to assist in recovery of municipal taxes, that the municipal officials refused to pay them for services rendered, in breach of their contract, did not state procedural due process claim against officials, absent allegation that there was no complete and adequate remedy available under state law for the breach of contract. Ramirez v. Arlequin, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 447 F.3d 19. Territories 23

Alabama recipients of state-collected Title IV-D child support payments were not deprived of procedural due process absent showing that they had been deprived of any payments to which they were entitled or that notices from state, regarding either its handling of payments or recipients' entitlement to hearing and procedures for obtaining one, were inadequate. Arrington v. Helms, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 438 F.3d 1336, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 2006 WL 1112954. Constitutional Law 299.3

City incurred no §§ 1983 liability from its failure to accord post-deprivation hearing to impounded vehicle owner, where failure was inadvertent and not result of any deliberate inaction under city policy. Miranda v. City of Cornelius, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 429 F.3d 858. Civil Rights 1352(3)

State department of agriculture did not violate poultry producers' procedural due process rights by failing to issue notice and an opportunity for a hearing before the quarantine and depopulation of producers' flocks, due to suspected avian influenza infection; it was undisputed that avian influenza endangered the health of poultry sold for human consumption, or that it threatened public health and prompt action that included quarantining suspected flocks to prevent further contamination was required. Reichley v. Pennsylvania Dept. of Agriculture, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 427 F.3d 236. Constitutional Law 293

Public school teacher failed to state "stigma-plus" procedural due process claim where he did not allege that school board made any false statements that stigmatized him, either publicly or in materials in his personnel file; negative inferences drawn by townsfolk from teacher's "suspension" were insufficient. O'Connor v. Pierson, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 426 F.3d 187. Schools 147.31

To establish a procedural due process claim under §§ 1983, plaintiff must allege first that it has a property interest as defined by state law and, second, that defendants, acting under color of state law, deprived it of that property interest without constitutionally adequate process. SFW Arecibo, Ltd. v. Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 415 F.3d 135, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 829, 163 L.Ed.2d 706. Constitutional Law 278(1)

Animal owner did not possess a viable §§ 1983 procedural due process claim, arising out of the euthanization by county officials of more than two hundred dogs and cats seized from her residential property, in contravention of state law which required a hearing prior to euthanization; the euthanization was unforeseeable, since state law expressly prohibited it without state court adjudication, predeprivation process by county officials was impossible, since state law already provided for a hearing, the euthanization as carried out by officials was unauthorized, and there was meaningful postdeprivation remedy for the loss available under state law. Bogart v. Chapell, C.A.4

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether department of adult probation was part of the state court system and whether the state or the county would pay damages for a constitutional violation perpetrated by the department precluded summary judgment on Eleventh Amendment immunity grounds for county in suit brought by homeless citizens pursuant to §§ 1983 alleging due process violations stemming from the destruction of their personal property by adult probationers during community service clean-up activities of homeless sites. Cash v. Hamilton County Dept. of Adult Probation, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 388 F.3d 539, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 396, 163 L.Ed.2d 274, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 545, 163 L.Ed.2d 499, on remand 2006 WL 314491. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A plaintiff cannot raise a § 1983 procedural due process claim where the loss of property resulted from the random and unauthorized actions of a state actor which made the provision of pre-deprivation process impossible or impracticable, and an adequate state post-deprivation remedy exists; conversely, when the deprivation is caused by established state procedures, the existence of an adequate remedy at state law does not extinguish a procedural due process claim. Gonzales v. City of Castle Rock, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 366 F.3d 1093, certiorari granted 125 S.Ct. 417, 543 U.S. 955, 160 L.Ed.2d 316, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 945, 543 U.S. 1047, 160 L.Ed.2d 767, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 1413, 543 U.S. 1185, 161 L.Ed.2d 187, reversed 125 S.Ct. 2796, 162 L.Ed.2d 658, on remand 144 Fed.Appx. 746, 2005 WL 2438875. Constitutional Law 278(1)

District court's sua sponte dismissal for frivolousness, pursuant to the screening provision of the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), of prisoner's § 1983 action against police officers, arising out of officers' refusal to return prisoner's seized motor vehicle, was not warranted; prisoner alleged that he was unable to reclaim his vehicle despite following procedures suggested by various state employees, which stated claim for due process violation, and complaint did not present dispositive defense on its face. Larkin v. Savage, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 318 F.3d 138. Civil Rights 1395(7)

County officials' decision to interview child about suspected child abuse in shelter care center following overnight stay, rather than interviewing child privately at her home or immediately interviewing her at the shelter care center, did not violate procedural due process, although child's father was able to speak privately with child before interview; procedures employed were reasonably calculated to balance competing interests and to achieve interview with child untainted by either parent's influence. J.B. v. Washington County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1997, 127 F.3d 919. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 192

Even assuming liberty or property interest of private vocational school were impacted by state student aid commission's revocation of school's eligibility to participate in student loan program established by the Higher Education Act, Act's procedures provided school with sufficient process, and thus school did not suffer due process violation upon which to base § 1983 action. Dumas v. Kipp, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 90 F.3d 386. Colleges And Universities 9.25(2); Constitutional Law 278.5(1)

Procedural due process claim is not actionable unless no adequate postdeprivation remedy is available under state law. Perez-Ruiz v. Crespo-Guillen, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 25 F.3d 40. Constitutional Law 251.5

A deprivation of procedural due process is an independent constitutional tort, actionable under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights with or without proof of actual injury. Burt v. Abel, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 585 F.2d 613, on remand 466 F.Supp. 1234. Civil Rights 1028

Allegation that local official used his powers to ensure that land-locked property would not be developed did not rise to deprivation of procedural due process redressable in civil rights action, even if official's actions rose to level of bad faith refusal to follow state law in local administrative matters, where Massachusetts state courts provided remedies for correcting alleged errors in blocking development. 462 F.Supp.2d 144. Zoning And Planning 353.1

Property owner was not denied procedural due process when state court authorized substituted service in case seeking imposition of remedial contempt sanction for owner's noncompliance with order in housing code enforcement action, as personal service had been attempted and substituted service was authorized under Maine rules under facts suggesting that property owner deliberately avoided attempts at personal service. Marcello v. Maine, D.Me.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 55. Contempt 55

Owner of undeveloped property stated procedural due process civil rights claim against township, on basis that it was deprived of property as result of established state procedure that itself violated due process rights, on allegations that township unilaterally changed rules applicable to development to which property belonged without providing public with both notice and opportunity to debate such change. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 194.1

New Jersey civil commitment statute, which allows temporary involuntary civil commitment for up to 20 days before adversary hearing is held, does not violate procedural due process; statute provides procedural safeguards to protect liberty interests, including certification by two doctors that patient is danger to himself or to others, prohibition of holding patient for more than 72 hours unless neutral judge finds probable cause to believe patient is danger to himself or to others, assistance of counsel, and entitlement to file petition for writ of habeas corpus. Alston v. Parker, D.N.J.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 597. Mental Health 32

New York school custodian terminated for disciplinary reasons during pendency of his application for disability retirement benefits stated §§ 1983 claim against school district and board of education for violation of procedural due process based on deprivation of his protected property interest in those benefits without notice and opportunity to be heard; after state determined he was entitled to those benefits and retroactively established his disability retirement date as last day of his employment with district, he applied for those benefits but district failed to respond to his application and his later inquiries, and court could not determine before discovery whether defendants' alleged nonfeasance in that regard occurred within context of established procedures or was "random and unauthorized" act. Jackson v. Roslyn Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 49. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Health services district's exercise of supervisory power to grant, limit or deny practice privileges at government-sponsored medical facilities, by requiring physician to apply for and obtain full provisional privileges under the medical staff bylaws, did not deny a substantive constitutional liberty or property right to practice medicine or to make contracts with patients for physician's professional services. MacArthur v. San Juan County, D.Utah 2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 1098. Health 271

Parents of disabled student, who sued child protective services (CPS) employees, stemming from removal based on teacher's report of suspected sexual abuse, failed to establish that their procedural due process rights were violated by lack of hearing prior to removal, where such action was properly based on CPS investigation, information obtained from teachers, and medical examination of student. Martin v. Texas Dept. of Protective and Regulatory Services, S.D.Tex.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 775. Infants 17

Arrestee who alleged that he was denied right to appear before judge after his arrest pursuant to warrant stated due process claim. Garcia Rodriguez v. Andreu Garcia, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 174. Constitutional Law 262

Township officials did not deprive daycare center developer of procedural due process by enforcing conditional use permit conditions imposed by board of supervisors; developer neither requested that board waive or reconsider conditions, nor sought available judicial review of conditions. Employers satisfied state university hospital employee physician's procedural due process rights by providing him with sufficient opportunity to be heard at meaningful time and in meaningful manner regarding charges against him that led to revocation of his clinical privileges; although employers denied employee's request to postpone three-day hearing due to his shoulder surgery a month earlier, and although employee chose not to attend first two days of hearings, employers provided him with transcript of proceedings and gave him opportunity to submit written response to testimony, make statements, and call witnesses, and employee failed to show that participants in peer review process were biased. Benjamin v. Schuller, S.D.Ohio 2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 1055. Health 273

Middle school students and parents who sued school district, school board, and officials, stemming from students' expulsions due to BB gun shooting incident near bus stop, failed to allege that they were substantially prejudiced by defendants' actions, as required to state procedural due process claims under §§ 1983; students admitted to engaging in misconduct that formed basis of their expulsions when they pleaded guilty to felony second-degree assault. S.K. v. Anoka-Hennepin Independent School Dist. No. 11, D.Minn.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 963. Schools 177

Where plaintiff's §§ 1983 claim is based on deprivation of notice, in violation of Due Process Clause of Fourteenth Amendment, plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant acted deliberately or recklessly in failing to provide notice; deprivation that is merely negligent is not sufficient. Buntin v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 104. Constitutional Law 251.6

Inmate who sued against county and sheriff's department, stemming from attack by other inmates while incarcerated, failed to allege that defendants took any significant property interest from him without hearing, as required to maintain procedural due process claim. Collins v. County of Kern, E.D.Cal.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 964. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegations in high school student's complaint against school district, that school administrators failed to adhere to state statutes and administrative rules governing student due process in connection with his 31-day suspension, were sufficient to state §§ 1983 claim, notwithstanding asserted availability of postdeprivation tort remedies to redress the school district's wrongs. Waln By and Through Waln v. Todd County School Dist., D.S.D.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 994. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Plaintiffs were required to allege deprivation of liberty or property interest to state §§ 1983 cause of action for violation of procedural due process; damage to reputation alone was not actionable under §§ 1983. Heller v. Fulare, W.D.Pa.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 743. Civil Rights 1038; Constitutional Law 255(1); Constitutional Law 278(1)

Minor children alleged deprivation and gross negligence required to state cause of action under §§ 1983, in complaint against present and former directors of New Jersey's Division of Youth and Family Services (DYFS), for deprivation of their procedural due process rights, arising from their alleged malnourishment in adoptive home. K.J. ex rel. Lowry v. Division of Youth and Family Services, D.N.J.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 728. Constitutional Law 255(4); Infants 17

Civil committee confined as a sexually violent predator (SVP) at state hospital was barred from bringing civil conspiracy claims under §§ 1983 against hospital employees who allegedly prepared "false or misleading forensic documents" used in his civil commitment proceeding, since such claims implied invalidity of his civil commitment, which had not been set aside. Hubbs v. Alamao, C.D.Cal.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 1073. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

To succeed on procedural due process claim under §§ 1983, plaintiff must prove that: (1) he had property interest under state law, and (2) defendants, acting under color of state law, deprived him of that property interest without following procedures required by federal constitutional law. Procedural due process rights of Puerto Rico "career" employee were not violated by lack of procedural safeguards accompanying transfer where employee stayed at her same rank and salary. Velez-Herrero v. Guzman, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 62. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Territories 23

Evidence of Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI) officials' actual bias against holders of farm and forest labor license was insufficient, for purposes of claimed violation of procedural due process right to unbiased tribunal; while order suspending license based on contractors' alleged use of untrained firefighters was issued during harvesting season it was also peak wildfire season, official's statements that licenseholder had reputation for violence and dishonesty did not show unconstitutional bias and merely reflected her judgments regarding his credibility, failure of suspension order to expressly state it was issued to protect public safety did not create reasonable inference of bias and, more fundamentally, nonparty BOLI officials made ultimate recommendation and decision and issued order. Lumbreras v. Roberts, D.Or.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 156 Fed.Appx. 952, 2005 WL 3304174. Constitutional Law 287.2(1); Licenses 38

Allegation that there was a delay in postdeprivation remedies provided to state employee who worked as chief legal counsel for the state department of revenue after he was demoted, without more, did not establish that delay was an unreasonable one, for purposes of employee's due process claim. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2004, 307 F.Supp.2d 1036. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); States 53

Police detective did not have protected property interest in membership in police department's emergency response team (ERT) or its attendant benefits of overtime pay and prestige, as was required to state § 1983 claim against city police department for denial of procedural due process following his removal from ERT after he received written reprimand for violating departmental code of conduct; right to overtime was not a constitutionally protected property interest, detective's wish that he work overtime as ERT member was at best an expectation rather than an entitlement because he identified no contractual, regulatory, or statutory provision entitling him to work overtime, and detective retained his rank and base pay after being removed from ERT. Barton v. City of Bristol, D.Conn.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 184. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Section 1983 complaint of county corrections officers, asserting that the manner in which an internal investigation into incident in which they allegedly used improper force against an inmate and subsequent disciplinary hearings were conducted was biased and corrupt, alleged sufficient facts to state a procedural due process claim, even though their employment was governed by a collective bargaining agreement providing for a multi-step grievance procedure and arbitration. Keim v. County of Bucks, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 628. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1395(8)

To recover under § 1983 for procedural due process claim for deprivation of liberty, governmental employee must show that (1) false statement, (2) of stigmatizing nature, (3) attending governmental employee's discharge, (4) was made public, (5) by governmental employer, (6) without meaningful opportunity for employee name clearing hearing. Cromer v. Crowder, S.D.Fla.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 1329. Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

To state a claim for a violation of procedural due process, plaintiffs must show that a defendant deprived them of a liberty or property interest without due process of law. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. F.Supp.2d 452. Civil Rights 1327

Random and unauthorized deprivation of property is not a cognizable claim under § 1983 when a state's post-deprivation remedies are adequate to protect a plaintiff's procedural due process rights. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 1172, affirmed 99 Fed.Appx. 169, 2004 WL 882146. Civil Rights 1318

Procedural due process violation is not complete unless and until state fails to provide due process; state may cure procedural deprivation by providing later procedural remedy, and only when state refuses to do so does constitutional violation actionable under § 1983 arise. Jackson v. City of Stone Mountain, N.D.Ga.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 1337. Constitutional Law 251.5

Although it was unclear whether African-American child care provider satisfied eligibility requirements for entering into contract with the Ohio Department of Human Services (DHS) to provide government subsidized child care, and while it was thus unclear whether she had any entitlement to such a contract of kind sufficient to support procedural due process claim, she did have established right in being notified of her ability to file civil rights complaint upon denial of subsidy contract, as required under federal regulation governing this subsidy program, and could maintain procedural due process claim under civil rights statute to extent that DHS failed to provide required notification. Belcher v. Ohio Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1999, 48 F.Supp.2d 729. Constitutional Law 276(2); Social Security And Public Welfare 194

Article 78 proceeding under New York law provided adequate postdeprivation remedy for county employee who alleged that he was deprived of employment-based property and liberty interests when county coerced him into foregoing arbitration hearing and accepting demotion, precluding his due process claims under § 1983. Monroe v. Schenectady County, N.D.N.Y.1997, 1 F.Supp.2d 168, affirmed 152 F.3d 919. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Counties 67

Terminated college professor did not state claim for denial of procedural due process in claiming she was discharged without notice and opportunity for hearing; her allegations that colleagues in her department approached university provost with claim she tried to intimidate them did not rise to level of allegations of dishonesty or immorality required to trigger notice and hearing requirement. Stein v. Kent State University Bd. of Trustees, N.D.Ohio 1998, 994 F.Supp. 898, affirmed 181 F.3d 103. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5); Constitutional Law 278.5(4)

Plaintiff, whose name appeared on list of "habitual drunkards" distributed by county deputy prosecuting attorney to alcoholic beverage permittees with warning that state habitual drunkard statute would be enforced, was not deprived of any constitutionally protected interest, so as to require procedural due process, where permittees were told, three days after receiving it, to disregard letter, and plaintiff was not refused right to purchase alcohol at any time after distribution of letter. Collins v. Hall, N.D.Ind.1997, 991 F.Supp. 1065. Constitutional Law 255(2); Intoxicating Liquors 161

Before court may consider § 1983 claim alleging lack of procedural due process, plaintiff must plead and prove inadequacy of state procedures, including state tort remedies. Swales v. Township of Ravenna, N.D.Ohio 1997, 989 F.Supp. 925. Civil Rights 1315

Customer did not have civil rights claim against police and other city defendants for alleged violation of due process by refusing timely to provide her with a copy of statement made to complain about her treatment by automobile dealership and by refusing to take the necessary steps to bring criminal charges, absent any showing that she was deprived of life, liberty or property. Wesley v. Don Stein Buick, Inc., D.Kan.1997, 985 F.Supp. 1288, vacated in part 996 F.Supp. 1299. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Failure to give parents notice of intended interviews with child about possible abuse, to secure parents' permission for interviews, or to allow parents to be present during interviews protected State's very strong interests in protecting child and learning in timely fashion what the child had to relate about the matter, without being possibly limited by presence of his parents, and that interest was paramount to personal interests of parents in preventing false accusations. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Infants 17

Disciplined high school student never suffered a deprivation of procedural due process sufficient to sustain a § 1983 claim, where she did not resort to otherwise available means of redress, but complained only that she was denied any notice of any further rights of review beyond meeting with superintendent. Kicklighter v. Evans County School Dist., S.D.Ga.1997, 968 F.Supp. 712, affirmed 140 F.3d 1043. Civil Rights 1317

Tape showing failure of male officer with county sheriff's department to respond to wired female detainee's attempts to contact him during night following officer's alleged sexual assault of her was exculpatory evidence, so that county employees's failure to disclose that evidence to officer violated his due process rights. Ahlers v. Schebil, E.D.Mich.1997, 966 F.Supp. 518. Constitutional Law 268(5); Criminal Law 700(3)

Since neither inmate nor prison officials had explained what conditions of confinement inmates in general prison population face, court could not adequately compare conditions in general population to conditions inmate faced and, thus, would not recommend dismissing inmate's § 1983 procedural due process claim against prison officials based on inmate not having liberty interest created by state law. Saunders v. Horn, E.D.Pa.1996, 959 F.Supp. 689, report and recommendation adopted 960 F.Supp. 893. Civil Rights 1098

Housing authority would be liable under this section governing civil actions for deprivation of rights if employee demonstrated that the procedures followed in her termination, which procedures complied with official policies, failed to meet applicable due process standards. Young v. Peoria Housing Authority, C.D.Ill.1979, 479 F.Supp. 1093. Civil Rights 1349

Steamship pilot, who agreed to sanctions being imposed by pilots' association without utilizing a hearing or other state processes, failed to show a clearly-established procedural-due-process violation by pilots' association. Nance v. New Orleans and Baton Rouge Steamship Pilots' Ass'n, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 2006 WL 925532, Unreported. Pilots 2.5

Requiring transit police sergeant to pay for police radio that was stolen from his personal vehicle while it was parked outside his residence did not violate due process, so as to give rise to a claim under §§ 1983, since he was provided with notice of the transportation authority's investigation into the matter and offered numerous opportunities to present his side of the case. Hall v. Septa, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 902, 2006 WL 236463, Unreported. Municipal Corporations 185(3)

Allegations that parents whose children were removed from home by county social worker were not allowed to recover children after safety plan providing for children's placement with friends had been initiated, despite parents' best efforts to do so, that continued deprivation of children was involuntary, and that parents were effectively denied prompt hearing on children's placement supported claim against social worker for violating parents' procedural due process rights. Smith v. Williams-Ash, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 2005 WL 3304101, Unreported. Infants 17

Delays of 65 days and 89 days, respectively, between filing of informations and defendant's arraignment on charges of receipt of stolen property and assault had no impact on defendant's liberty so as to support his in forma pauperis § 1983 claim for violation of his due process rights, and thus, the claim was properly dismissed as frivolous, where he was appropriately restrained in jail by his parole violation detention during the periods of delay. Robertson v. Price City Police Dept., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 286, 2003 WL 22925271, Unreported. Constitutional Law 265.5; Criminal Law 577.11(3); Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prisoner failed to state § 1983 claim for due process violation based on filing of false sentence computation data form, since prisoner did not have constitutionally protected right not to have false documents filed against him; filing of false documents and assertion of false accusations did not, by themselves, implicate protected liberty interest with respect to terms or conditions of confinement. Peterson v. Tomaselli, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22213125, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 12

State prisoner has no constitutionally guaranteed immunity from being falsely or wrongly accused of conduct which may result in deprivation of protected liberty interest; as long as prisoner is afforded procedural due process in disciplinary hearing, allegations of fabricated charge fail to state claim under § 1983. Verwolf v. Hamlet, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22159055, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2)

State prisoner failed to state civil rights claim that his rights under the Due Process Clause were violated by prison officials who allegedly falsely convicted him in disciplinary proceeding and placed him extended lockdown, absent evidence that prisoner's placement in extended lockdown presented an atypical or significant hardship beyond the ordinary incidents of prison life, giving rise to a constitutionally protected liberty interest that would trigger due-process guarantees. Fisher v. Wilson, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 74 Fed.Appx. 301, 2003 WL 21654031, Unreported. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(5)

In § 1983 lawsuit, arrestee stated claim that state trooper violated his due process rights on allegations that he was not driving under influence of alcohol, and that trooper destroyed result slips from alcohol breath testing machine to later sustain false claim that arrestee did not cooperate in providing breath samples. Ankele v. Hambrick, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21223821, Unreported, affirmed 136 Fed.Appx. 551, 2005 WL 1532436. Automobiles 349(14.1); Constitutional Law 262

1208. ---- Substantive due process, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parent of junior high school student who died after falling ill on school band trip failed to state §§ 1983 substantive due process claim against school band director upon which relief could be granted, since complaint did not identify one of the limited circumstances in which state official might have constitutional duty to attend to citizen's medical needs; complaint did not allege band trip was compulsory, or assert student was prohibited from leaving trip at any time if parent made arrangements, complaint did not allege director or any chaperone denied student opportunity to contact parent by telephone, or prevented family from communicating with student during trip, and there was no claim student's voluntary participation evolved into involuntary commitment during trip. Lee v. Pine Bluff School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2007, 472 F.3d 1026. Schools 147

Police chief's directive to wear riot helmets, rather than a more protective face mask, during police training exercises was not conscience-shocking conduct, as required for officer's substantive due process claim under §§ 1983 alleging that his right to bodily integrity was violated when a training exercise bullet went under his helmet and injured his eye. Moore v. Guthrie, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 438 F.3d 1036. Municipal Corporations 182

Fact that counselor at prison criticized prisoner's interracial marriage did not amount to due process violation, as required to support prisoner's §§ 1983 action against prison officials, even though prisoner was removed from sex offenders' class which he needed to complete as condition of parole, where all the therapists and counselors involved in program voted to remove prisoner from program and prisoner was removed for failing to make progress. Munson v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 435 F.3d 877, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Prisons 4(5)

Bystander hit by emergency response vehicle in process of responding to emergency call cannot sustain §§ 1983 claim under substantive due process clause without alleging intent to harm. Perez v. Unified Government of

When state officials implicitly or explicitly communicate to a private person that he or she will not be arrested, punished, or otherwise interfered with while engaging in misconduct that is likely to endanger the life, liberty or property of others, those officials can be held liable under §§ 1983 for injury caused by the misconduct, for violation of substantive due process rights. Pena v. DePrisco, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 432 F.3d 98. Constitutional Law 278(1)

County did not create danger for foster child by not investigating allegation of sexual abuse against foster parent after issuing "courtesy" foster care license to foster parent, for purpose of foster child's civil rights claim under special relationship exception to rule that government ordinarily did not have substantive due process duty to protect private citizens from doing harm to each other, since county did not know who would be placed in home by neighboring county when it issued that license, neighboring county retained legal custody of child, and county was not required to monitor foster parent's license after particular child was placed in home. Waubanascum v. Shawano County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 416 F.3d 658, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1045, 163 L.Ed.2d 858. Infants 17

Elementary school teacher stated a claim under §§ 1983 for alleged violations by superintendent of his constitutional right to rear his child by alleging that superintendent not only conditioned his full-time employment on where teacher's son attended school, but also terminated him once his son was removed from public school; teacher provided detailed description of the alleged violations and clarified any possible confusion in his response to motion for summary judgment. Barrett v. Steubenville City Schools, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 388 F.3d 967, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 334, 163 L.Ed.2d 47. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Actions of District of Columbia officials in laying off several hundred correctional officers while relocating inmates to District's jail in response to congressional appropriations and mandates did not amount to executive abuse of power which shocked the conscience, as required to support substantive due process claim of correctional officers' union under § 1983 although union claimed that the officials acted with deliberate indifference to the safety of its members, it failed to demonstrate that an assault by an inmate was an unforeseeable risk of its members' employment. Fraternal Order of Police Dept. of Corrections Labor Committee v. Williams, C.A.D.C.2004, 375 F.3d 1141, 363 U.S.App.D.C. 1. Constitutional Law 275(5); Prisons 7

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether supervisors at county juvenile detention center, as policymakers therefor, developed inadequate policies and customs for dealing with detainee's mental health needs and safety precluded summary judgment for supervisors on detainee's claim for violation of substantive due process brought under §§ 1983. A.M. ex rel. J.M.K. v. Luzerne County Juvenile Detention Center, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 372 F.3d 572 . Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A successful §§ 1983 claim based on a violation of the Eighth Amendment requires the plaintiff to prove two things: (1) that the harm to the prisoner was objectively, sufficiently serious and a substantial risk to his health or safety, and (2) that the individual defendants were deliberately indifferent to the prisoner's health and safety. Matos ex rel. Matos v. O'Sullivan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 335 F.3d 553. Sentencing And Punishment 1532; Sentencing And Punishment 1533

Public school custodial employees could not show that school officials deprived them of constitutionally protected rights in violation of the due process clause, in ordering employees to remove asbestos-containing materials under carpeting, for purposes of § 1983 claim, arising from employees' alleged injuries due to asbestos exposure, absent evidence that officials made deliberate decision to inflict pain or bodily injury on employees or that officials engaged in arbitrary conduct intentionally designed to punish employees. Upsher v. Grosse Pointe Public School System, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2002, 285 F.3d 448, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 88, 537 U.S. 880, 154 L.Ed.2d 135.

Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1); Schools 89.7

Prison's restriction in refusing to allow prisoner to artificially inseminate his wife was not reasonably related to asserted legitimate penological interest of treating men and women inmates equally to the extent possible, for purposes of determining whether regulation violated male prisoner's due process rights; women could not avail themselves of opportunity male prisoner narrowly sought, to provide semen specimen to his mate, and men could not do what wife of male prisoner was likely capable of doing, that is conceive and give birth after receiving sperm from marital partner. Gerber v. Hickman, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 264 F.3d 882, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 273 F.3d 843, on rehearing 291 F.3d 617, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 558, 537 U.S. 1039, 154 L.Ed.2d 462. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 4(5)

Allegation that gym teacher assaulted student stated claim for violation of student's substantive due process right to be free of excessive force; force allegedly used far surpassed anything that could reasonably be characterized as serving legitimate government ends, such as student discipline, classroom control or self-defense, and alleged assault was extremely violent. Johnson v. Newburgh Enlarged School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 239 F.3d 246. Civil Rights 1395(2)

If the behavior of a governmental officer is so egregious, so outrageous, that it may fairly be said to shock the contemporary conscience, a court considering a § 1983 claim against that official on that basis must next determine whether there exist historical examples of recognition of the claimed liberty protection at some appropriate level of specificity, and a plaintiff whose claim is not susceptible to proper analysis with reference to a specific constitutional right may still state a claim under § 1983 for a violation of his or her Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process right, and have the claim judged by the constitutional standard which governs that right. Morris v. Dearborne, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1999, 181 F.3d 657, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 196 F.3d 1259, on remand 69 F.Supp.2d 868. Civil Rights 1032

Protections of substantive due process have been conferred primarily upon matters relating to marriage, family, procreation, and right to bodily integrity. Spiegel v. Rabinovitz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 121 F.3d 251, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 565, 522 U.S. 998, 139 L.Ed.2d 405. Constitutional Law 274(2); Constitutional Law 274(5)

Substantive due process right to bodily integrity can be violated without proof of arrest, apprehension, or "special relationship." Haberthur v. City of Raymore, Missouri, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 119 F.3d 720. Constitutional Law 274(2)

Substantive due process violation resulting from official conduct, which will allow recovery in federal civil rights action, requires that defendant act with reckless intent, and that defendant's conduct shock the conscience. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Constitutional Law 253(1)

A plaintiff states a claim for substantive due process violation by alleging that state has violated an independent substantive right, and it is clear that right is violated no matter what process precedes, accompanies, or follows the unconstitutional action. Casines v. Murchek, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1985, 766 F.2d 1494, rehearing denied 773 F.2d 1239. Civil Rights 1028

Allegations that local official raised unlawful barriers to the development of property, without more, did not rise to level of substantive due process violation. Mongeau v. City of Marlborough, D.Mass.2006, 462 F.Supp.2d 144. Zoning And Planning 353.1

Allegation of school secretary that superintendent, board of education, and school district shared her medical records with unauthorized persons was sufficient to state outrageous and arbitrary government conduct, required for substantive due process claim, in §§ 1983 action, as release of medical records would clearly infringed upon secretary's privacy and confidentiality rights. Burns v. Cook, N.D.N.Y.2006, 458 F.Supp.2d 29. Schools 89.7

Inspector's denial of property owner's zoning permit application was not arbitrary and capricious, and thus denial was not in violation of owner's substantive due process civil rights, where inspector denied owner's permit application because owner did not comply with number of elements of township zoning resolution. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 378.1

African-American operated charter school, which claimed that school board unconstitutionally terminated its charter contract, sufficiently set forth the elements of its claim for selective enforcement; school alleged that it was similarly situated to white-operated charter schools having fire code and safety violations, that school board treated it differently by subjecting it to more stringent enforcement standards, and that the disparate enforcement was based on race and invidious or in bad faith. Wilbesan Charter School, Inc. v. School Bd of Hillsborough County, FL, M.D.Fla.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 1292. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Mother, who alleged that social worker deliberately took custody of her newborn child without prior judicial authorization, stated a claim for a violation of her right to due process under the Fourteenth Amendment. Brown v. Montana, D.Mont.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 982. Infants 17

High school principal did not violate student's substantive due process rights by calling him out of class in order to permit police officers to question him. Burreson v. Barneveld School Dist, W.D.Wis.2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 588. Schools 169

Pretrial detainee stated a §§ 1983 claim for violation of his Fourteenth Amendment due process rights against county defendants; detainee's claims that excessive force used by a deputy, in conjunction with defendants' knowledge of the practice of tolerating excessive force, constituted a due process violation, and that the policy of toleration and failure by defendants to investigate the alleged abuse resulted in the detainee's injury, met the fair notice pleading standard. Harris v. Adams, S.D.Ohio 2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 707. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Township's failure to render decision until 65 days beyond 20-day statutory deadline, on owner's application for reconstruction permits for renovation of apartment buildings, did not constitute procedural due process violation, on theory that such action served to block owner's access to appeal process; state statutes clearly provided that inaction on construction application could be treated as denial, permitting administrative appeal, and owner did appeal. Cherry Hill Towers, L.L.C. v. Township of Cherry Hill, D.N.J.2006, 407 F.Supp.2d 648. Health 392

Parents of disabled student, who sued child protective services (CPS) employees failed to establish that removal based on teacher's report of suspected sexual abuse constituted substantive due process violation based on deliberate indifference to student's medical needs; after removal, employees turned over student's available medicine to foster caregivers, and when caregivers reported that student did not have enough medication, employees promptly acted. Martin v. Texas Dept. of Protective and Regulatory Services, S.D.Tex.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 775. Infants 17

No Fourteenth Amendment due process violation was stated merely by allegations of defamatory statements made by town officials or investigatory conduct of town detectives in connection with circumstances underlying tax foreclosure sale of plaintiff's property; no property interest was taken without due process as a result of the statements or conduct, which occurred after the sale, and any claimed violation of bankruptcy stay was for resolution in the Bankruptcy Court, not by way of a §§ 1983 claim. Balaber-Strauss v. Town/Village of Harrison, S.D.N.Y.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 427. Constitutional Law 285

State police department was not deliberately indifferent in automatically disqualifying African-American cadet applicant because of his past criminal activity, and thus department's procedures did not shock the conscience, precluding applicant's substantive due process claim; cadet hiring criteria, including automatic disqualification factors, had been specifically accepted by federal district court as part of consent decree in earlier race discrimination action, and factors had been applied to applicants of all races including those arrested but not convicted. Foxworth v. Pennsylvania State Police, E.D.Pa.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 523, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 3470601. States 53

Township officials' alleged obstruction of daycare center developer's efforts to obtain necessary permits was not so conscience shocking as to amount to substantive due process violation; there was no evidence that alleged misconduct was unrelated to officials' exercise of their statutory authority to determine requirements necessary for approval of land use within township. Aardvark Childcare and Learning Center, Inc. v. Township of Concord, E.D.Pa.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 427. Zoning And Planning 388

Middle school students and parents who sued school district, school board and officials, stemming from students' expulsions due to BB gun shooting incident, failed to allege that defendants' actions were arbitrary and capricious, as required to state substantive due process claims under §§ 1983; expulsions of students for one year after shooting another student near bus stop were not egregious, irrational, or motivated by ill-will, in light of seriousness of incident. S.K. v. Anoka-Hennepin Independent School Dist. No. 11, D.Minn.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 963. Schools 177

Teacher's alleged conduct of inappropriately putting his arm around student, improperly touching her by leaning over her desk, and rubbing up against her one time when he pressed his torso into her back while she was making copies in administrative office did not rise to level of shocking the conscience so as to violate student's substantive due process right to bodily integrity. Gilliam v. USD # 244 School Dist., D.Kan.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1282. Schools 147

Alleged conduct by county sheriff, registrar of county board of elections, and member of the board, in inquiring into whether elector who assisted with absentee ballots for county was a convicted felon, did not violate elector's substantive due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment; although elector alleged that he suffered damage to his reputation, and an associated decrease in business at his store as result of the rumor that he was a convicted felon, there was no evidence showing a decrease in business, the officials did not start the rumor or repeat it, and they merely discussed the situation with others due to their concern that the absentee ballots could be invalid if the rumor were true, so that their conduct did not shock the conscience. Moore v. Nelson, M.D.Ga.2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 1365. Sheriffs And Constables 99

Where a particular Amendment provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection against a particular sort of government behavior, that Amendment, not the more generalized notion of substantive due process, must be the guide for analyzing those claims. Aguilera v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 1203. Constitutional Law 252.5

Police officers had purpose to cause harm against all patrons of restaurant and nightclub unrelated to any legitimate use of force by officers, thereby satisfying "shocks the conscience" standard necessary for substantive due process violation in lawsuit under §§ 1983, where patrons suffered from exposure to pepper spray but officers refused to provide assistance to injured patrons, refused to allow patrons to assist one another, and tried to keep patrons from exiting building after pepper spray was used. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Plaintiff's general allegation of harm flowing solely from coercive police interrogation, i.e., "plaintiff was harmed" as "direct result" of police detective's violation of plaintiff's due process rights, was sufficient to meet harm requirement for stating a claim under §§ 1983 against detective for violation of substantive due process. McConkie v. Nichols, D.Me.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1, affirmed 446 F.3d 258. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City restaurant inspector did not violate substantive due process when he temporarily closed restaurant based on exterminator's use of spray fogger to emit pesticide in restaurant; even if inspector made a poor decision, evidence indicated that his actions were in accord with his responsibility for protecting public health, rather than arbitrary, capricious, or without a rational basis. Camuglia v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 1299, affirmed 448 F.3d 1214. Food 3

Allegations supported high school student's §§ 1983 claim against city and city school district for violation of his substantive due process right to bodily integrity arising from incident in which student was attacked and beaten by large group of students, given city and district's alleged policies or customs of concealing information about violence in schools, failing to address school safety concerns, failing to train employees to avoid violations of constitutional rights, and cultivating atmosphere in which municipal employees would fail to report incidents of school violence. Gremo v. Karlin, E.D.Pa.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 771. Civil Rights 1351(2); Civil Rights 1352(2)

Minor children stated cause of action under §§ 1983, in complaint against present and former directors of New Jersey's Division of Youth and Family Services (DYFS), for deprivation of their substantive due process rights, arising from their alleged malnourishment in adoptive home. K.J. ex rel. Lowry v. Division of Youth and Family Services, D.N.J.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 728. Constitutional Law 255(4); Infants 17

City committed no substantive due process violation against minor child who fell through open manhole and drowned, precluding city's liability under §§ 1983 to child's survivors; child was never in custody of city, and any reckless indifference or gross negligence by city did not rise to level of shocking the conscience. Ramos Pinero v. Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, D. Puerto Rico 2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 56. Constitutional Law 255(4); Municipal Corporations 767

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether fire chief was deliberately indifferent to the adequacy of the training given to the drivers of fire trucks, and whether that indifference was causally connected to the actions of the driver of a fire truck which struck an automobile in an intersection, resulting in the death of the driver of the automobile, precluding summary judgment for municipality in §§ 1983 action alleging a violation of the substantive due process rights of the fatally injured motorist. Becerra ex rel. Perez v. Unified Government of Wyandotte County/Kansas City, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 974, reversed 432 F.3d 1163, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1130534. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State officials' conduct in revoking nursing home's operating certificate and refusing transfer of establishment approval was rationally related to state's legitimate interest in regulation of nursing homes and did not violate nursing home owners' substantive due process rights so as to support section 1983 claim. Beechwood Restorative Care Center v. Leeds, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 248, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 436 F.3d 147. Constitutional Law 287.2(1); Health 276

Developer's claim that township officials denied his plans with intent to harm and restrict his ability to carry out his business on parcel of land he leased stated claim under § 1983 that met the "shocks the conscience" standard for substantive due process violation. Nicolette v. Caruso, W.D.Pa.2003, 315 F.Supp.2d 710. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 378.1

Developer's claim that township officials denied his plans with intent to harm and restrict his ability to carry out his business on parcel of land he leased stated claim under §§ 1983 that met the "shocks the conscience" standard for substantive due process violation. behaved so outrageously that it shocked the conscience, as was required to support substantive due process claim under § 1983; departmental order clearly contemplated that officers could be removed from ERT. Barton v. City of Bristol, D.Conn.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 184. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

A wrongful arrest is not a sufficient substantive due process violation to support a § 1983 claim. Forest v. Pawtucket Police Dept., D.R.I.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 215, affirmed 377 F.3d 52, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1315, 543 U.S. 1149, 161 L.Ed.2d 111. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Applicants have a constitutionally protected due process interest in government benefits for which they have applied. Lewis v. New Mexico Dept. of Health, D.N.M.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 1319. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Allegations by heir of motorist, who was killed as result of injuries he sustained in collision with fire truck operated by municipal employee, that employee chose a route in responding to a fire call that was not necessary to accomplish response goal, that he knew the call did not require him to drive fire truck through red light at a high rate of speed, and that he knew his conduct created high risk of serious injury and death to motorists, if ultimately proved, rose to level of conduct that would shock the conscience, and thus stated a claim against employee for a violation of substantive due process under § 1983. Becerra v. Unified Government of Wyandotte County/Kansas City, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 1223. Automobiles 175(1); Automobiles 175(4); Constitutional Law 253(1)

By sexually molesting child, police officer, who was acting under color of state law, violated child's substantive due process right to bodily integrity, and therefore could be held liable under Section 1983. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Constitutional Law 274(5); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Allegations by survivors of children who died in house fire that city neglected to repair defective fire equipment, causing delay in efforts to rescue children and resulting in their death, were sufficient to state §1983 claim for violation of substantive due process. Hill v. City of Houston, S.D.Tex.1998, 991 F.Supp. 847. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Social workers had no constitutionally protected duty to protect a 14-year-old foster child from consensual sex with the teenage son of her foster parents, and thus could not be held liable for violation of substantive due process when she became pregnant, even assuming they had knowledge of the relationship; alleged "major disruption and added expense" caused by pregnancy did not rise to level of threat to her physical or psychological safety. Andrea L. by Judith B. v. Children and Youth Services of Lawrence County, W.D.Pa.1997, 987 F.Supp. 418. Constitutional Law 255(4); Infants 17

Plaintiffs properly set forth substantive due process basis for relief under § 1983, by alleging that city defendants emboldened participants in neighborhood unrest, which arose from death of African-American child, and increased danger to Hasidic Jewish community by failing to arrest individuals for unlawful assembly and by ignoring pleas for assistance by individuals and community at large. Estate of Rosenbaum by Plotkin v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1997, 975 F.Supp. 206. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

To establish § 1983 substantive due process claim, plaintiff had to demonstrate that it had property or property interest, that state deprived it of this property or property interest, and that state's action fell so beyond outer limits of legitimate governmental action that no process could cure deficiency. City-Wide Asphalt Paving, Inc. v. Alamance County, M.D.N.C.1997, 966 F.Supp. 395. Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 278(1)

Property owner did not state § 1983 claim for deprivation of substantive due process based on violations of state created land use rights; state created rights were not subject to substantive due process. Coletta v. City of North Bay Village, S.D.Fla.1997, 962 F.Supp. 1486. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 1

While substantive due process claim under section 1983 of the civil rights statutes does not require that a specific constitutional guarantee be violated, in order to hold municipality liable, official's action must be such that it shocks the conscience or offends the community's sense of fair play and decency; not all unlawful force used by state officials arises to the level of a constitutional violation merely because the defendant is a state official and the force used by the official is unconstitutionally excessive only if it is arbitrary and a raw abuse of power. Porter v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1986, 639 F.Supp. 589. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1035

Conduct sufficiently shocking to the conscience to require invalidation of a conviction on due process grounds will support a cause of action under this section. Robinson v. Vaclavik, E.D.Mo.1979, 477 F.Supp. 75. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Consistently stated official policy of company running short-term juvenile correction center, to require both articulation of legitimate reason for room change and evidence of detrimental behavior on part of roommate before room can be changed, was not constitutionally infirm under due process clause, despite juvenile's allegations on § 1983 claim that company had policy to ignore student's concerns and to maintain student in assigned room until morning. Burton v. Youth Services Intern., Inc., D.Md.1997, 176 F.R.D. 517. Constitutional Law 255(4); Infants 275

Where state actor willfully violates any one of the enumerated rights guaranteed within Bill of Rights, separate finding that action "shocks the conscience" or is "egregious abuse of governmental power" is unnecessary to establish civil rights claim, as willful violation of enumerated constitutional right is a constitutional tort, and additional requirement of some additional factor, such as "shocks the conscience" applies only when dealing with one of the unenumerated rights guaranteed by substantive due process. Riley v. Coutu, E.D.Mich.1997, 172 F.R.D. 228. Civil Rights 1032

Transportation authority's order requiring transit police sergeant to pay for police radio that was stolen from his personal vehicle while it was parked outside his residence did not shock the conscience, so as to violate substantive due process and give rise to a claim under §§ 1983. Hall v. Septa, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 902, 2006 WL 236463, Unreported. Municipal Corporations 185(1)

County social worker's alleged conduct in thwarting parents' attempts to have children returned to parents' home, after children were removed due to unsanitary conditions, and in effectively denying parents prompt hearing on children's placement did not rise to the level of conscience-shocking behavior, and thus did not support substantive due process claim. Smith v. Williams-Ash, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 2005 WL 3304101, Unreported. Infants 17

Absence of showing that state failed to provide adequate post-deprivation remedy for cases of malicious prosecution precluded §§ 1983 claim for violation of purported substantive due process right to be free from malicious prosecution. BPNC, Inc. v. Taft, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 525, 2005 WL 1993426, Unreported. Constitutional Law 253(1)

While police officer who ran over a victim lying in the road was undoubtedly negligent in falling asleep at the wheel and failing to determine what he had run over, this behavior was not so outrageous as to shock the contemporary conscience, as required for the victim's survivors to prevail on their §§ 1983 substantive due process claim. Hayes v. Garcia, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 858, 2005 WL 165445, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 71, 163 L.Ed.2d 95. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

due process violation; rather than being irrational, the decision not to issue desk appearance tickets was based in part, according to police chief, on a decision that the arrestees, participants in a demonstration, were violating police directives, were a threat to police and public safety, would potentially continue their illegal activity, and were part of an uncontrollable group. Bryant v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22861926, Unreported, affirmed 404 F.3d 128. Arrest 70(1); Constitutional Law 265

Material issues of fact existed as to whether officers' conduct during encounter that resulted in fatal shooting of emotionally disturbed individual "shocked the conscience," precluding summary judgment for officers, city, and city officials on substantive due process claim asserted by individual's family members and administrator of his estate pursuant to § 1983. Busch v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22171896, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

1209. ---- Availability of state remedy, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

If the claim is that there has been a violation of the substantive component of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, plaintiff may maintain federal civil rights action irrespective of whether there is a state remedy available. Dugan v. Brooks, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1987, 818 F.2d 513. Civil Rights 1315

Existence of state postdeprivation remedies has no bearing on whether plaintiff has a constitutional claim under § 1983 based on deprivation of substantive due process. Gilmere v. City of Atlanta, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1495, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1970, 476 U.S. 1115, 90 L.Ed.2d 654, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1993, 476 U.S. 1124, 90 L.Ed.2d 673. Civil Rights 1315

Any due process violation occurring when supervisors forced state trooper to use his annual leave while suspended without pay pending disciplinary investigation was alleviated by adequate post-deprivation remedies, and could not form basis for due process claim; trooper had opportunity to use employee grievance procedure or to pursue claim for lost leave in state court. Myers v. Shaver, W.D.Va.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 805. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); States 60.2

Federal district court lacked jurisdiction over §1983 action claiming that municipal landlord violated constitutional rights of tenants by offering building to neighborhood entrepreneur rather than making arrangement for management by tenants; constitutional claims could and should have been raised in Article 78 proceeding. Reyes v. Erickson, S.D.N.Y.2003, 238 F.Supp.2d 632. Civil Rights 1318

Although litigant is not required to exhaust state remedies before initiating § 1983 actions for alleged violations of procedural due process, litigant's access to meaningful state post-deprivation procedures may preclude claims of procedural due process violation. Hadad v. Croucher, N.D.Ohio 1997, 970 F.Supp. 1227. Civil Rights 1315

Assuming that motorist's arrest based on police officers' mistaken belief that he was named in felony warrant implicated deprivation of liberty interests under color of law, adequate state law tort remedies were available to motorist, barring procedural due process claim under federal civil rights statute. Gardner v. Village of Grand River, Ohio, N.D.Ohio 1997, 955 F.Supp. 817. Civil Rights 1319

Constitutional issues may be decided in proceeding under New York law governing review of administrative decisions, and such proceeding is adequate for due process purposes even if petitioner cannot recover same relief that he could in suit under § 1983. Federico v. Board of Educ. of Public Schools of Tarrytowns, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1316; Constitutional Law 46(3)

Assuming, arguendo, that State Insurance Fund Corporation's actions deprived employer of cognizable property interest, employer's unsupported allegations failed to substantiate that available remedies under Puerto Rico law were inadequate to redress any deprivation resulting from Fund's denial of its workers' compensation coverage, for purposes of Fund's motion for summary judgment in employer's § 1983 action, alleging that Fund's conduct deprived employer of procedural due process. Sears, Roebuck de Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Soto-Rios, D.Puerto Rico 1996, 920 F.Supp. 266. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Rule that plaintiff need not exhaust his or her state administrative remedies before commencing an action under § 1983 is inapplicable and exception exists, where plaintiffs allege claims based on violations of procedural due process; for such claims, existence of state remedies is relevant because constitutional violation actionable under § 1983, deprivation of a protected interest without due process of law, does not occur until and unless the state fails to provide due process. Simmons v. Chemung County Dept. of Social Services, W.D.N.Y.1991, 770 F.Supp. 795, affirmed 948 F.2d 1276. Civil Rights 1316

A civil rights plaintiff may maintain a substantive due process claim even though there are state tort remedies available. Sheets v. Indiana Dept. of Corrections, S.D.Ind.1986, 656 F.Supp. 733. Civil Rights 1315

A party may maintain a procedural due process § 1983 case in federal court if he alleges and proves that there was a constitutional violation under color of law and: state did not have any remedy; or state had a remedy but it was deemed inadequate; or state had an adequate remedy in form, both procedurally and in damages, but state did not apply it or it misapplied its remedy. Haag v. Cuyahoga County, N.D.Ohio 1985, 619 F.Supp. 262, affirmed 798 F.2d 1414. Civil Rights 1394

Motorist could not bring § 1983 action against sheriff's deputies under Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause, challenging seizure of his automobile, without first seeking compensation in state court for his alleged losses. Wos v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 57 Fed.Appx. 694, 2002 WL 31863858, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319; Eminent Domain 277

1210. ---- Equal protection generally, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Conclusory assertions that nursing home was a "better than average nursing home subjected to worse-than-average treatment," and that nursing home was subjected to "harsher-than-usual penalties" and "shorter-than-usual timetables" were insufficient to show dissimilar treatment among those similarly situated so as to give rise to equal protection claim against state regulator which revoked nursing home's operating certificate; furthermore, nursing home failed to establish a difference in treatment at the hands of regulators before the nursing home operators' skirmishes with regulators began and afterward. Beechwood Restorative Care Center v. Leeds, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 436 F.3d 147. Civil Rights 1395(1)

For purpose of consideration of civil rights complaint under statute that governed proceedings in forma pauperis, state prisoner's equal protection claim, that there were no relevant differences between him and other similarly situated inmates who were or were not placed in administrative segregation that reasonably might have accounted for their different treatment, was not plausible or arguable, since prison had same discretion in determining length of segregation as it did in determining initial placement in segregation. Fogle v. Pierson, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 435 F.3d 1252. Prisons 13(5)

Section 1983 claim predicated on the violation of a right guaranteed by the Constitution, such as the right to equal protection of the laws, is viable if brought absent a companion Title VII employment discrimination claim. Thigpen v. Bibb County, Ga., Sheriff's Dept., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2000, 223 F.3d 1231. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

When state actor turns blind eye to equal protection clause's command, aggrieved parties can seek relief pursuant to § 1983; to establish liability under § 1983, plaintiff must show that defendants acted with nefarious discriminatory purpose and discriminated against plaintiff based on plaintiff's membership in definable class. Nabozny v. Podlesny, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 92 F.3d 446. Constitutional Law 211(1); Civil Rights 1028

Redress for denial of equal protection is available under this section. French v. Heyne, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1976, 547 F.2d 994. Civil Rights 1028

It is proper for person adversely affected to bring action under this section on grounds that he has been denied his rights under equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Shock v. Tester, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1969, 405 F.2d 852, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 1641, 394 U.S. 1020, 23 L.Ed.2d 45, rehearing denied 89 S.Ct. 2004, 395 U.S. 941, 23 L.Ed.2d 460. Civil Rights 1028

This section encompasses the equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Moss v. Hornig, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1963, 314 F.2d 89.

School custodian who was terminated for disciplinary reasons during pendency of application for disability retirement benefits but was later found by state to be retroactively entitled to those benefits failed to state claim against school district and board of education for violation of equal protection clause under "class of one" theory in connection with defendants' failure to respond to his benefits application, where he did not allege that he was treated differently than similarly situated individuals. Jackson v. Roslyn Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 49. Civil Rights 1395(8)

White male former county police officer stated equal protection claim against county; although he was not and did not argue to be a member of any suspect or identifiable class, he sufficiently alleged his equal protection rights were violated by selective, malicious, and arbitrary treatment. Longo v. Suffolk County Police Dept. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.2006, 429 F.Supp.2d 553. Counties 67

Equal protection rights of horse-drawn carriage operator were not violated when competitor secured all but four permits and prevailed upon city not to eliminate cap on total number of permits, blocking claimant from expanding his business; ordinance imposing license requirement and cap did not create discriminatory classification, and maintenance of cap, on health and safety grounds, did not show discriminatory application. Avalon Carriage Service Inc. v. City of St. Augustine, FL, M.D.Fla.2006, 417 F.Supp.2d 1279. Constitutional Law 241

White female, who was over sixty years old and married to a Mexican-American, who left emergency room without being seen by physician did not have an equal protection claim against emergency room nurse since there was no evidence that she was "turned away" from examination and treatment and that such action was taken with an intent or purpose to discriminate against the her based upon her membership in a protected class. MacArthur v. San Juan County, D.Utah 2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 1098. Health 657

Eleventh Amendment immunity was inapplicable to civil rights claim of Puerto Rico property owner under equal protection clause of Fourteenth Amendment against Department of Transportation and Public Works (DTPW) and its officials, which alleged selective enforcement of lawful local regulations, where owner did not sue either Commonwealth of Puerto Rico or any of its instrumentalities, Eleventh Amendment immunity did not bar issuance of injunctive relief against official capacity defendants, and any damage award would not have been paid from Commonwealth's coffers, but rather from defendants' own assets, because defendants also were sued in their individual capacities. Sistemas Urbanos, Inc. v. Lugo Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 96. Federal Courts 269

Plaintiffs stated an equal protection claim under the Fourteenth Amendment against clerk of county circuit court based on allegations that clerk singled them out for poor service in the clerk's office in making them wait longer, refusing to file their documents and directing them to a window displaying the phrase "ashes of our difficult clients" because of their nationality. Cichowski v. Sauk County, W.D.Wis.2006, 409 F.Supp.2d 1098.

Constitutional Law 215.2

Police officer's complaint did not adequately allege §§ 1983 claim for municipal liability against District of Columbia for violation of equal protection component of Fifth Amendment due process; one supervisor's decision to require officer to perform police duties without accommodating his medical condition, a susceptibility to seizures, and another supervisor's subsequent issuance of notice of proposed suspension of his motor vehicle permit had a reasonably conceivable rational basis, and thus did not give rise to a Fifth Amendment equal protection violation. Mitchell v. Yates, D.D.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 222. District Of Columbia 7

Township officials' imposition of conditions for granting occupancy permit for daycare center did not violate developer's equal protection rights, absent showing that other, similarly situated developers were treated more favorably. Aardvark Childcare and Learning Center, Inc. v. Township of Concord, E.D.Pa.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 427. Zoning And Planning 388

State university hospital employee physician's allegations that employers revoked his medical privileges by employing policies and standards that differed from standard hospital procedures were sufficiently specific to state a cognizable "class of one" equal protection claim. Benjamin v. Schuller, S.D.Ohio 2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 1055. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Civil committee confined as a sexually violent predator (SVP) at state hospital was barred from bringing claim under §§ 1983 against hospital employee, alleging that he was denied equal protection of law when employee subjected him to "fraudulent screening process" leading to his civil commitment, since claim implied invalidity of his civil commitment, which had not been set aside. Hubbs v. Alamao, C.D.Cal.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 1073. Civil Rights 1037

Failure to identify any person who was more favorably treated precluded selective enforcement equal protection denial claim by retired judge who was not appointed judicial hearing officer, under state law. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Constitutional Law 238.5; Reference 39

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether town planning board received and began processing site plan application submitted by developer of proposed subdivision, precluding partial summary judgment, as to issue of liability, for developer on its claim that board deprived it of due process, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, by imposing an impermissible unconstitutional condition on the exercise of its power. Ridgeview Partners, LLC v. Entwistle, S.D.N.Y.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 395. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In light of mother's injuries, and what she told officers investigating a report of domestic violence, employees of district attorney's office were not motivated by gender bias when they prosecuted child's father, even though they did not prosecute mother despite having evidence that she lied to police and might have initiated the altercation, and therefore father was not deprived of equal protection; father never filed a complaint against mother and never told police she had assaulted him. Burrell v. Anderson, D.Me.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 55. Constitutional Law 224(5); Criminal Law 37.10(2)

Owner of registered firearms was not subjected to "class of one" equal protection violation when he was arrested for threatening, and houses of family members were searched for weapons; evidence was lacking that police singled owner out due to his legal possession of firearms. Walczyk v. Rio, D.Conn.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 385. Arrest 63.4(15); Constitutional Law 250.1(1)

Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) employee's complaint alleging that other DEC employees had removed exculpatory statement from official report of his snowmobile accident adequately stated claim for denial of equal protection, even though complaint did not use actual words "similarly situated"; complaint could be fairly read as alleging that other DEC officers had been subject of accident or other investigations in which defendants participated, and that defendants did not deliberately remove exculpatory information from their reports in those investigations. Bullock v. Gerould, W.D.N.Y.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 446. Civil Rights 1395(8)

No violation of equal protection based on selective enforcement of informal policies regarding witness protection was shown with respect to claim arising from police department's failure to protect minority witness and her son, who were murdered by brother of person against whom she was to testify; there was no indication that similarly situated non-minorities were treated differently pursuant to the informal policies regarding witness protection. Clarke v. Sweeney, D.Conn.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 277. Constitutional Law 215.2; Municipal Corporations 740(1)

School district officials were not deliberately indifferent to complaints of pupils' racial harassment, name-calling, and physical abuse of Asian-American elementary student, so as to be liable for violating his Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection under § 1983; even if student experienced large amount of racial abuse, it was undisputed that student and his parents brought incidents to attention of school superintendent and principal who took action by having informal talks with allegedly abusive pupils, suspending pupils' lunch, bus, and recess privileges, and measures taken were not so inadequate so as to permit inference of officials' discriminatory intent. Yap v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 284. Constitutional Law 220(3); Schools 63(3)

Under rational basis test, no equal protection violation occurred as result of placement of inmate, who was of alleged female gender but was anatomically situated as a male due to the presence of a penis, in segregated confinement for a period of 438 days, with concomitant severely limited privileges, solely because of the condition and status of ambiguous gender; prison officials' actions were rationally related to the legitimate purposes of ensuring the safety of inmate and other inmates and security of the facility. DiMarco v. Wyoming Dept. of Corrections Div. of Prisons, Wyo. Women's Center, D.Wyo.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 1183. Constitutional Law 224(5); Constitutional Law 250.3(2); Prisons 13(5)

County employee was not precluded from pursuing sexual and racial harassment claims under § 1983, where she alleged conduct that not only violated statutory protections of Title VII but could also amount to deprivation of equal protection rights afforded under Fourteenth Amendment. Hargrave v. County of Atlantic, D.N.J.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 393. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

City commissioners' alleged labeling of developer as "litigious," and their denial of his redevelopment proposal allegedly to punish him for seeking state court injunction against another developer's proposal did not amount to purposeful discrimination as required to establish an equal protection claim under § 1983, absent any factual proof in support of the allegations. Klauber v. City of Sarasota, M.D.Fla.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 1263, affirmed 350 F.3d 1301. Civil Rights 1419

Allegations that female supervisors verbally insulted male county employee and that they sought his termination and mischaracterized his performance in evaluations in order to effect it did not give rise to constitutional claims for First Amendment retaliation or violations of equal protection, for purposes of employee's § 1983 claims against individual supervisors. Kulikowski v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Boulder, D.Colo.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1053. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Constitutional Law 224(3); Counties 67

Allegations by survivors of children who died in house fire that city fire department failed to maintain and repair vehicles at station located in predominantly black neighborhood, for benefit of more affluent neighborhoods served by other stations, were sufficient to state claim under § 1983 for equal protection violation. Hill v. City of Houston, S.D.Tex.1998, 991 F.Supp. 847. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Police officer failed to state equal protection claim against city and various police officials, where his complaint did not aver that defendants took any action against him because of his membership in protected class, but rather that he was retaliated against for protesting his transfer into uniformed patrol unit. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Sexual harassment and sex discrimination charges may be asserted by public employees against their employers as equal protection claims under § 1983. Murray v. Kutzke, N.D.Ill.1997, 967 F.Supp. 337. Civil Rights 1169; Civil Rights 1182

Plaintiff may recover on equal protection claim based on theory of selective enforcement when it is established that plaintiff, compared with others similarly situated, was selectively treated and that selective treatment was motivated by intention to discriminate on basis of impermissible considerations, such as race or religion, to punish or inhibit exercise of constitutional rights, or by malicious or bad faith intent to injure plaintiff. Homan v. City of Reading, E.D.Pa.1997, 963 F.Supp. 485. Constitutional Law 211(3)

Cancer patients whom government allegedly subjected to radiation experiments under guise that they were receiving cancer treatment stated equal protection claim under § 1983; patients alleged that experiments were directed predominantly at blacks, and development of record was necessary to determine universe of people from which defendant physicians could have chosen their subjects and whether racial composition of that group was similar to racial composition of subjects of experiments. In re Cincinnati Radiation Litigation, S.D.Ohio 1995, 874 F.Supp. 796. Civil Rights 1395(1); Constitutional Law 215.2

It is proper for a person adversely affected by state action to bring a cause of action under this section on grounds of denial of equal protection. Keker v. Procunier, E.D.Cal.1975, 398 F.Supp. 756. Civil Rights 1028

Steamship pilot, who was suspended by pilots' association, failed to demonstrate an equal-protection violation; although pilot asserted that he received different punishment than other pilots for similar infractions because of his political affiliation, he failed to show other pilots were both similarly situated and treated differently. Nance v. New Orleans and Baton Rouge Steamship Pilots' Ass'n, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 2006 WL 925532, Unreported. Pilots 2.5

Owners of store which possessed a city issued liquor permit failed to establish that city which issued permit and city council members had a discriminatory intent in opposing proposed buyers of store and permit, as required to support owner's § 1983 action against city and members alleging they violated the Equal Protection Clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments by opposing two different prospective buyers of store and permit, though not interfering with other similarly situated businesses; owners had agreed to an order with city that disqualified both prospective buyers. Saleh v. City of Warren, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 86 Fed.Appx. 866, 2004 WL 162557, Unreported. Constitutional Law 230.3(5); Intoxicating Liquors 103(2)

African-American and Native American descendants of people buried in cemetery failed to state equal protection claim against city, whose failure to preserve cemetery was alleged to be discriminatory, absent identification of any similarly situated, non-minority parties who were treated differently. Tshaka v. Benepe, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21243017, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1211. ---- Suspect classifications, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State prisoner need not allege the presence of a suspect classification or the infringement of a fundamental right in order to state claim under equal protection clause; the lack of fundamental constitutional right or the absence of suspect class merely affects court's standard of review, it does not destroy the cause of action. Durso v. Rowe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1978, 579 F.2d 1365, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1033, 439 U.S. 1121, 59 L.Ed.2d 82. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Absent any allegation of improper classification or discrimination among citizens, there is no judicially cognizable equal protection cause of action. Shortino v. Wheeler, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 531 F.2d 938. Constitutional Law 211(1)

By failing to identify any similarly situated inmates who were treated differently from him, inmate failed to state a "class of one" equal protection claim with respect to prison disciplinary proceeding in which he was found guilty of using drugs. Alicea v. Howell, W.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 227. Civil Rights 1395(7)

When equal protection violation is alleged against an individual, plaintiff must allege and prove that the individual herself intentionally discriminated due to impermissible classification such as race. Baugh v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1993, 823 F.Supp. 1452, motion to amend denied 829 F.Supp. 274, affirmed 41 F.3d 1510. Civil Rights 1397

1212. ---- Discriminatory intent, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Unlike Title VII claimant, plaintiff asserting equal protection claim under § 1983 must show intent to discriminate based on plaintiff's membership in particular class. Trautvetter v. Quick, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1990, 916 F.2d 1140.

Procedures employed by legislature did not violate Equal Protection Clause or Civil Rights Act, for purposes of § 1983 challenge to state's congressional, State Senate, and State House redistricting plans, absent any evidence that legislature was motivated by discrimination against blacks or Hispanics in deciding what redistricting software or allocation methodology to use, where and when to hold public hearings, what type of notice to provide, or whether to consider input from citizens and minority-party legislators in drawing plans. Martinez v. Bush, S.D.Fla.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 1275. Constitutional Law 215.3; States 27(4.1); United States 10

Material issues of fact, as to whether city parks official intentionally discriminated against black representatives of nonprofit organization by denying presence of vendors when granting meeting permit and refusing to clean up park, precluded summary judgment that parks department had not violated representatives' equal protection rights. Epileptic Foundation v. City and County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 2003, 300 F.Supp.2d 1003. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Government officers who have been sued for constitutional violations cannot be held liable for mere mistakes in judgment, but only for conduct that they knew or reasonably should have known would violate constitutional rights of plaintiffs, or actions taken with malicious intention to cause deprivation of constitutional rights. Groom v. Fickes, S.D.Tex.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1466, affirmed 129 F.3d 606. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Arrestee who alleged that his rights were violated when police used his photograph in identification array after they had been ordered, pursuant to New York law, to release photograph to him upon termination of prior criminal proceeding in his favor did not state § 1983 equal protection claim; there was no evidence that police purposefully discriminated against arrestee based on his being member of some identifiable or suspect class, and arrestee did not claim to be member of any class. Grandal v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 197. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Without presence of willful or intentional conduct of governmental officials which undermines voting process, irregularity in state election will not rise to level of constitutional claim cognizable under § 1983. Dickie v. Rabbit, D.Mass.1997, 956 F.Supp. 67. Civil Rights 1032

African American citizen who brought § 1983 action alleging that Georgia statute describing state flag and continued display of the Georgia state flag, which contains symbol used in Confederate flag, denied him equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment had to come forward with evidence demonstrating both that racial animus motivated passage of the statute and that the statute had resulted in some kind of disparate effect on African Americans in order to withstand State of Georgia's motion for summary judgment. Coleman v. Miller, N.D.Ga.1996, 912 F.Supp. 522, affirmed 117 F.3d 527, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 127 F.3d 42, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1199, 523 U.S. 1011, 140 L.Ed.2d 328. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In order to establish a violation of the equal protection clause enforceable under this section, there must be proof that a discriminatory intent or purpose was a motivating factor in the official action; for purpose of proving such discriminatory intent, the discriminatory impact of a facially neutral policy is probative but not determinative. Acha v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1977, 438 F.Supp. 70, affirmed 570 F.2d 57. Civil Rights 1401

Purposeful discrimination is essential to claim based on denial of equal protection of laws but not to claim based on this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Selico v. Jackson, S.D.Cal.1962, 201 F.Supp. 475. Civil Rights 1033(1); Constitutional Law 225.1

Plaintiffs would have to demonstrate that defendant employer acted with discriminatory intent or purpose in order to make out a violation of equal protection clause, whereas claim under this section could rest on proof of disparate impact alone. Molthan v. Temple University?of Com. System of Higher Ed., E.D.Pa.1979, 83 F.R.D. 368. Civil Rights 1544

1212A. ---- Ex post facto laws, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Decision to schedule prisoner's parole hearing outside the three-year period in place at the time of his conviction did not constitute a continuing violation of prisoner's constitutional rights against Ex Post Facto laws so as to render timely his § 1983 action challenging retroactive application of a new Georgia parole policy, which was filed more than two years after the parole board changed its policy. Brown v. Georgia Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1259. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether, prior to enactment of parole statute that placed special emphasis on public safety, state parole board repeatedly denied inmates parole based on their failure to complete sex offender treatment program precluded summary judgment on inmate's claim that application of statute to her violated Ex Post Facto Clause. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

1213. ---- Unequal application of law, constitutional violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Simple showing of unequal application of law does not make out violation of this section. Birnbaum v. Trussell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 371 F.2d 672.

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether citizen was intentionally treated differently from other persons similarly situated, precluding summary judgment on civil rights claim of citizen who was prohibited from speaking at board meeting about alleged misconduct of town employee during work hours. Piscottano v. Town of Somers, D.Conn.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 187. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Members of historical preservation group, who entered site of historic building which was being demolished by city, and attempted to stop demolition crew hired by city from commencing demolition, were not similarly situated to demolition workers, so that actions of city in arresting group members and charging them with trespass and disorderly conduct, but not charging workers, could not support equal protection claim under § 1983 based on selective enforcement of the laws; group members were trespassing at site, while demolition workers were invitees authorized to carry out work. Yajure v. DiMarzo, S.D.N.Y.2001, 130 F.Supp.2d 568. Constitutional Law 250.1(3); Criminal Law 37.10(2)

White motorist stopped by police for straightforward traffic offenses and Hispanic arrestee stopped for possible felony involving stolen license plates were not similarly situated and, thus, different degrees of force used to effect stops did not support arrestee's § 1983 claim based on denial of equal protection. Cuautle v. Tone, C.D.Ill.1994, 851 F.Supp. 1236. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Mere inconsistency in prison management that adversely affects prisoner as individual does not in itself establish violation of equal protection clause. De La Paz v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 909. Constitutional Law 250.3(2)

1214. Treaty violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Section of Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (VCCR), giving foreign nationals a right of consular notification in event of arrest or detention, provides private right of action enforceable by individuals through § 1983. Standt v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2001, 153 F.Supp.2d 417, 175 A.L.R. Fed. 685. Civil Rights 1330(4); Treaties 13

Convention on International Civil Aviation and bilateral air service agreements, entered into for purpose of promoting commercial airline services between the contracting states, could not be basis for § 1983 claim brought by domestic and international air carriers operating out of Los Angeles airport alleging that city, by imposing unreasonable landing fees, deprived them of rights guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States; these treaties conferred no individual rights on carriers. Air Transport Ass'n of America v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1994, 844 F.Supp. 550. Civil Rights 1029

1215. ---- Indian treaties, treaty violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Indian tribe's challenge to application of California timber yield tax to purchasers of tribal timber fell outside scope of federal civil rights statute, and tribe was not entitled to attorney's fees as prevailing party; while right to tribal self-government qualified as substantial claim, it was protected by treaty and federal judicial decisions, not specifically grounded in constitutional or federal statute. Hoopa Valley Tribe v. Nevins, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 881 F.2d 657, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1523, 494 U.S. 1055, 108 L.Ed.2d 763. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1482

Provision of treaty between Indian tribe and United States government providing for setting aside of land for exclusive use of tribe but not providing for state jurisdiction over criminal offenses committed within or civil causes of action arising within did not secure to Indians a "right, privilege, or immunity" which could be vindicated in a civil rights action. Quinault Tribe of Indians of Quinault Reservation in State of Wash. v. Gallagher, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1966, 368 F.2d 648, certiorari denied 87 S.Ct. 1684, 387 U.S. 907, 18 L.Ed.2d 626. Civil Rights 1029

1216. Statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Section 1983 is generally and presumptively available remedy for claimed violations of federal law, apart from exceptional cases such as those in which particular statutory provision is so manifestly precatory that it cannot fairly be read to impose binding obligation on governmental unit, or its terms are so vague and amorphous that determining whether deprivation might have occurred would strain judicial competence, and cases in which Congress has made clear that violation of statute will not give rise to § 1983 liability, either by express words or by provision of comprehensive alternative enforcement scheme. Livadas v. Bradshaw, U.S.Cal.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2068, 512 U.S. 107, 129 L.Ed.2d 93, on remand 30 F.3d 1252. Civil Rights 1027

Action under § 1983 is not available to enforce violation of federal statute if Congress has foreclosed such enforcement of statute in enactment itself and if statute does not create enforceable rights, privileges, or immunities within meaning of § 1983. Suter v. Artist M., U.S.Ill.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1360, 503 U.S. 347, 118 L.Ed.2d 1, on remand 968 F.2d 1218. See, also, Wehunt v. Ledbetter, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 875 F.2d 1558, rehearing denied 888 F.2d 1398, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1472, 494 U.S. 1027, 108 L.Ed.2d 609; Korenyi v. Department of Sanitation of City of New York E.D.N.Y., 1988, 699 F.Supp. 388; Vantage Healthcare Corp. v. Virginia Bd. of Medical Assistance Services, E.D.Va.1988, 684 F.Supp. 1329. Civil Rights 1027

Section 1983 which provides cause of action for "the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws" of United States does not apply where federal statute allegedly violated does not create enforceable rights, privileges or immunities or where Congress has foreclosed such enforcement of statute in enactment itself. Wilder v. Virginia Hosp. Ass'n, U.S.Va.1990, 110 S.Ct. 2510, 496 U.S. 498, 110 L.Ed.2d 455. Civil Rights 1027

Availability of section 1983 remedy turns on whether relevant federal statute, by its terms or as interpreted, creates obligations sufficiently specific and definite to be within competence of judiciary to enforce, is intended to benefit putative plaintiff, and is not foreclosed by express provision or other specific evidence from statute itself. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1027

If there is a state deprivation of a "right" secured by a federal statute, this section provides a remedial cause of action unless the state actor demonstrates by express provision or other specific evidence from the statute itself that Congress intended to foreclose private enforcement. Wright v. City of Roanoke Redevelopment and Housing Authority, U.S.Va.1987, 107 S.Ct. 766, 479 U.S. 418, 93 L.Ed.2d 781. Civil Rights 1330(1)

Even if a plaintiff demonstrates that a federal statute creates an individual right, there is only a rebuttable presumption that the right is enforceable under § 1983; to establish that the presumption cannot be rebutted, courts must look to whether Congress intended to foreclose a remedy under § 1983 either expressly, by forbidding recourse to § 1983 in the statute itself, or impliedly, by creating a comprehensive enforcement scheme that is incompatible with individual enforcement under § 1983. Schwier v. Cox, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 340 F.3d 1284, on remand 412 F.Supp.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1027

Section 1983 is not available to enforce a violation of a federal statute where Congress has foreclosed enforcement in the enactment itself and where the statute did not create enforceable rights, privileges, or immunities within the meaning of § 1983. Endsley v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 230 F.3d 276, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1604, 532 U.S. 972, 149 L.Ed.2d 470. Civil Rights 1027

In inquiring as to whether particular statute creates rights enforceable under § 1983, court examines whether particular statutory provisions create specific enforceable rights, rather than considering statute and purported rights on more general level. Legal Services of Northern California, Inc. v. Arnett, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 114 F.3d 135. Civil Rights 1027

In determining whether a federal administrative regulation defines right enforceable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, factors to consider include: (1) whether provision was intended to benefit plaintiff; (2) whether provision creates binding obligation on governmental unit, rather than merely expressing congressional preference; and (3) whether interest asserted is sufficiently specific as to be within competence of judiciary to enforce. Loschiavo v. City of Dearborn, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 33 F.3d 548, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1099, 513 U.S. 1150, 130 L.Ed.2d 1067. Civil Rights 1027

Plaintiff alleging violation of federal statute will not be permitted to sue under § 1983 if statute does not create enforceable rights, privileges, or immunities. Miller by Miller v. Whitburn, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1993, 10 F.3d 1315. See, also, Hill v. Ibarra, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1516. Civil Rights 1027

action under § 1983. Williams v. School Dist. of Bethlehem, Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 998 F.2d 168, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 689, 510 U.S. 1043, 126 L.Ed.2d 656. Civil Rights 1027

Section 1983 does not afford remedy where governing statute provides exclusive remedy for violations of its own terms. Foster v. Wyrick, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 823 F.2d 218. See, also, Uniformed Firefighters Ass'n, Local 94, IAFF, AFL-CIO v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1981, 512 F.Supp. 289, affirmed 676 F.2d 20, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 84, 459 U.S. 838, 74 L.Ed.2d 79. Civil Rights 1307

Congress can foreclose a remedy under § 1983 either by forbidding it expressly in the statute itself, or impliedly, by creating a comprehensive enforcement scheme that is incompatible with individual enforcement under § 1983. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1027

The application of § 1983 is not limited to constitutional violations but may be used to enforce statutory rights. B.H. v. Southington Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 194, modified on reconsideration 2004 WL 51001 . Civil Rights 1027

While § 1983 actions generally may be based on purely statutory violations of federal law as well as on constitutional claims, this is not the case when statute at issue explicitly forecloses such enforcement or provides such comprehensive remedial scheme that it is implied that statute itself is exclusive remedy. Krocka v. Bransfield, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1073, affirmed 203 F.3d 507. Civil Rights 1027

Plaintiff alleging violation of federal statute will be permitted to sue under § 1983 unless statute does not create enforceable rights, privileges, or immunities within meaning of § 1983, or unless Congress has foreclosed such enforcement of statute in enactment itself. Confederated Tribes and Bands of Yakama Indian Nation v. Lowry, E.D.Wash.1996, 968 F.Supp. 531, vacated 176 F.3d 467. Civil Rights 1027

Plaintiff cannot pursue remedies under § 1983 based on violation of federal statutory rights or privileges unless statute creates enforceable right and Congress has not specifically foreclosed remedy under § 1983. Moody Emergency Medical Services, Inc. v. City of Millbrook, M.D.Ala.1997, 967 F.Supp. 488. Civil Rights 1027

In determining whether statutory provision creates privately enforceable right under § 1983, court considers whether plaintiff is intended beneficiary of statute, whether plaintiff's asserted interests are not so vague and amorphous as to be beyond competence of the judiciary to enforce, and whether statute imposes binding obligation on the state. Hodgson v. Mississippi Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Wis.1997, 963 F.Supp. 776. Civil Rights 1027

Factors pertinent to determination of whether § 1983 case based on federal statute involves a federal right, and may thus be maintained under § 1983, include whether statutory provision in question creates obligations binding on governmental unit as opposed to stating congressional preference for certain conduct, whether interest plaintiffs assert is sufficiently specific and definite to be within competence of judiciary to enforce, and whether provision in question is intended to benefit plaintiffs. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 288 . Civil Rights 1027

In determining whether federal statute creates right, privilege or immunity enforceable under § 1983, court applies three-part test: (1) court ascertains whether provision in question was intended to benefit plaintiff; (2) court ascertains whether provision reflects merely congressional preference for certain kind of conduct rather than binding obligation on governmental unit; and (3) court ascertains whether provision is too vague and amorphous, such that it is beyond competence of judiciary to enforce. Greenstein by Horowitz v. Bane, S.D.N.Y.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1054. Civil Rights 1027

Two-prong test under which court first determines whether case really involves a federal court "right" as opposed to simply a claimed violation of federal law, and then determines whether Congress has foreclosed its enforcement under civil rights statute, § 1983, is a useful tool in considering whether private plaintiff can sue under § 1983 to enforce statutory rights, but in applying this test, courts must look carefully at precise language of any statute relied on by plaintiffs as source of right they seek to enforce, and right at issue must be unambiguously conferred by the statute. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1993, 819 F.Supp. 183. Civil Rights 1027

This section pertaining to deprivation of rights under color of state law provides cause of action to redress deprivation by state officials of rights created by federal statutes. Thompson v. Binghamton Housing Authority, N.D.N.Y.1982, 546 F.Supp. 1158. Civil Rights 1326(1)

This section does not provide cause of action for deprivations of all federal statutory rights, but instead provides cause of action only for deprivations of federal statutory rights which provide for "equal rights" or "protection of civil rights." First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Marquette Nat. Bank of Minneapolis, D.C.Minn.1979, 482 F.Supp. 514, affirmed 636 F.2d 195, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1761, 450 U.S. 1042, 68 L.Ed.2d 240. Civil Rights 1027

Under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights, a plaintiff can generally sue to enforce federal statutory rights as well as constitutional rights. Boxall v. Sequoia Union High School Dist., N.D.Cal.1979, 464 F.Supp. 1104. Federal Courts 220

In determining whether statute confers individual right enforceable under § 1983, court considers whether statute: (1) contains rights-creating language that is individually focused, (2) addresses needs of individual instead of having system-wide or aggregate focus, and (3) lacks enforcement mechanism through which aggrieved individual can obtain review. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1027

1217. ---- Construction of statutes, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Statutory provisions must be analyzed in detail, in light of entire legislative enactment, to determine whether language created rights, privileges, and immunities enforceable within meaning of this section. Suter v. Artist M., U.S.Ill.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1360, 503 U.S. 347, 118 L.Ed.2d 1, on remand 968 F.2d 1218. Civil Rights 1027

Violation of federal right that has been found to be implicit in statute's language and structure is as much direct violation of right as is violation of right that is clearly set forth in text of statute, for section 1983 purposes. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1027

1218. ---- Preemptive effect, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Fact that federal statute has preempted certain state action does not preclude possibility that the same federal statute may create federal right for which this section provides remedy. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1027

Cable programmer and trade association representing cable operating companies had cause of action under § 1983 to enjoin prosecution of cable operators under Puerto Rico's obscenity statute via claim that obscenity statute was partially preempted by Cable Communications Policy Act; protection from liability provided cable operators by Act for content of leased access channel programming is "immunity" created by federal law and enforceable by courts, Act does not expressly preclude actions brought under § 1983, and remedial provisions of Act did not create "comprehensive remedial scheme" leaving no room for additional private remedies under § 1983, as none of those provisions afforded remedy against state actors. Playboy Enterprises, Inc. v. Public Service Com'n of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 906 F.2d 25, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 388, 498 U.S. 959, 112 L.Ed.2d 399. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Preemptive effect of federal legislation ordinarily does not create rights for purposes of section 1983. New York Airlines, Inc. v. Dukes County, D.C.Mass.1985, 623 F.Supp. 1435. Civil Rights 1029

1219. ---- Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

"Reasonable efforts" clause of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, which created federal reimbursement program for expenses incurred by States in administering foster care and adoption services, did not create right, privilege, or immunity enforceable under this section; requirement that State have plan providing for reasonable efforts to prevent removal of children from their homes and facilitate reunification of families affected State's eligibility for federal reimbursement and Act did not contain any guidance for how to measure "reasonable efforts." Suter v. Artist M., U.S.Ill.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1360, 503 U.S. 347, 118 L.Ed.2d 1, on remand 968 F.2d 1218. Civil Rights 1057

Provision of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980 assuring each foster child under state supervision a dispositional hearing to be held no later than eighteen months after the original placement [to] determine the future status of the child (including whether the child should be returned to the parent, should be continued in foster care for a specified period, should be placed for adoption, or should be continued in foster care on a permanent or long-term basis) did not create a right enforceable by foster parents under federal civil rights statute; even if provision in question was intended to benefit foster parents, it reflected merely a congressional preference instead of a binding obligation. Procopio v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 994 F.2d 325. Civil Rights 1057

Foster parents have private right of action under § 1983 to enforce rights afforded under Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act. Timmy S. v. Stumbo, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1990, 916 F.2d 312. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act did not create federal statutory right to "meaningful visitation" enforceable under § 1983. Scrivner v. Andrews, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1987, 816 F.2d 261. Civil Rights 1057

Provisions of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act (AACWA) requiring state to provide case plan for each child receiving foster care to ensure quality services by agencies did not provide private right of action for damages under § 1983. Whitley v. New Mexico Children, Youth & Families Dept., D.N.M.2001, 184 F.Supp.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1057; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Provisions of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act requiring a written case plan with mandated elements, a periodic review system, and a State plan providing for establishment of a State authority responsible for maintaining standards for foster family homes and child care institutions created rights which were enforceable under Section 1983. Brian A. ex rel. Brooks v. Sundquist, M.D.Tenn.2000, 149 F.Supp.2d 941. Civil Rights 1057

"Reasonable efforts" clause of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, creating federal reimbursement program for expenses incurred by states in administering foster care and adoption services, does not create enforceable right under federal civil rights statute or implied cause of action on beneficiaries' behalf. Baby Neal v. Casey, E.D.Pa.1993, 821 F.Supp. 320, vacated in part, remanded 43 F.3d 48, reconsideration denied 1995 WL 728589. Action 3; Civil Rights 1057

Rights under section of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act providing that for state to be eligible for payments under Act, state must have plan pursuant to which "reasonable efforts" will be made prior to placement of child in foster care, to prevent or eliminate need for removal of child from home, and to make it possible for child to be returned to his home, may be enforced under statute prohibiting deprivation of civil rights under color of state law; term "reasonable efforts" is not too ambiguous to be enforceable. Norman v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1182. Civil Rights 1057

Rights granted by the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, such as the right to be placed in the least restrictive, most family like setting, right to have state agencies make reasonable efforts to reunify families, and the right to meaningful sibling visitation, are too amorphous to be enforced in federal civil rights action. Aristotle P. v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1002. Civil Rights 1057

Children who have been removed from their families and placed in the custody of state social services agency are entitled to enforce their right to case review system and case plan under Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act through § 1983 action. B.H. v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1989, 715 F.Supp. 1387. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Adoption Act created individual rights in foster children, enforceable under § 1983, to placement in foster homes conforming to national professional standards; foster children were clearly intended beneficiaries of Act, since language of Act focused on needs of individual foster children, Act lacked enforcement mechanism, and Act was not too vague and amorphous to be enforced by judiciary. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1057

1220. ---- Age Discrimination in Employment Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City police officer could not maintain action for age discrimination under § 1983, notwithstanding that officer couched claim in terms of violation of equal protection clause of Fourteenth Amendment without reference to Age Discrimination in Employment Act; officer's claims fell within scope of specific and comprehensive administrative remedies provided for by Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Zombro v. Baltimore City Police Dept., C.A.4 (Md.) 1989, 868 F.2d 1364, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 147, 493 U.S. 850, 107 L.Ed.2d 106.

A § 1983 claim asserting age discrimination is preempted by the ADEA as a matter of law. Nabozny v. NCS Pearson, Inc., D.Nev.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Plaintiff, a government employee, was precluded from bringing cause of action under this section and sections 1981 and 1985 of this title for age discrimination, since Congress intended to preempt alternative means of redressing age discrimination in federal employment when it enacted the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, section 621 et seq. of Title 29. Giles v. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, E.D.Mo.1981, 520 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1207

1221. ---- Aid to Families with Dependent Children provisions, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Statute requiring states to reevaluate standard of need (SON) and payment schedule under Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program at least once every three years did not create right enforceable in recipients under federal civil rights statutes. Stanberry v. Sherman, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1996, 75 F.3d 581. Social Security And Public Welfare 194.1

Maintenance of effort obligation imposed on states by Medicare Catastrophic Act of 1988 did not create federal right enforceable by recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and, thus, AFDC recipients could not bring § 1983 civil rights claim challenging decision by State of Michigan to reduce payment levels and eliminating optional Medicaid program; maintenance of effort provision does not prohibit lowering AFDC levels nor require state to maintain AFDC benefit levels at certain amount. Audette v. Sullivan, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 19 F.3d 254. Civil Rights 1052

Title IV-D of the Social Security Act, dealing with child support enforcement, conferred private cause of action under § 1983 upon recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) to challenge state's refusal to assist them in obtaining child support enforcement from absent parents living on Indian reservations. Howe v.

Ellenbecker, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1993, 8 F.3d 1258, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1373, 511 U.S. 1005, 128 L.Ed.2d 49. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Custodial parents and their children failed to state a cause of action under civil rights statute, § 1983, in suit to enforce provisions of Social Security Act requiring states to adopt plans for child support enforcement in order to maintain eligibility for receipt of federal Aid to Families with Dependent Children funds, where plaintiffs sought no monetary relief but only a "hurry-up" order from federal court and alleged no acts of noncompliance beyond those already unearthed in audit by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS). Carelli v. Howser, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 923 F.2d 1208, rehearing denied.

Private cause of action under this section exists as against state for noncompliance with case plan and review obligations under section 671 of Title 42, relating to assistance for children in state foster family home care system; remedial provision in the chapter, authorizing withholding or reduction of federal funding in event of noncompliance, does not limit availability of relief under other provisions. Lynch v. Dukakis, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1983, 719 F.2d 504. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Under this section, there is a remedy to redress violations of provision of § 602 of this title, relating to confidentiality of information concerning the AFDC recipients. Louise B. v. Coluatti, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 606 F.2d 392.

Right to prompt decision on application for food stamp and Aid to Families with Needy Children (AFNC) benefits was civil right protected by § 1983; regulations specifying deadlines reflected intent to benefit entire plaintiff class in that they affected both eligible and noneligible applicants, regulations created binding obligation of compliance on states and did not merely express congressional preference, and regulations were not beyond competency of jury to enforce. Robidoux v. Kitchel, D.Vt.1995, 876 F.Supp. 575. Civil Rights 1052

Title IV-D of the Social Security Act, dealing with child support enforcement, created enforceable right in Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) recipients, and recipients had standing to bring § 1983 action to enforce claims for Title IV-D child support enforcement services. Howe v. Ellenbecker, D.S.D.1991, 774 F.Supp. 1224, affirmed 8 F.3d 1258, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1373, 511 U.S. 1005, 128 L.Ed.2d 49. Civil Rights 1331(6); Social Security And Public Welfare 194

Extensive federal auditing powers did not foreclose private right of enforcement under § 1983 for state's alleged violations Social Security Act section requiring state to adopt plan for child support enforcement as condition for receiving federal Aid to Families with Dependent Children funds; there was no express indication of Congress' intent to foreclose private enforcement action. Carelli v. Howser, S.D.Ohio 1990, 733 F.Supp. 271, reversed on other grounds923 F.2d 1208, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1330(6)

This section rendering liable to the party injured every person who under color of state law subjects any person to deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws did not afford remedy to Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients who claimed they had been deprived of rights or privileges under § 301 et seq. of this title because of inconsistent state statute and regulation and who alleged no deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution. Wynn v. Indiana State Dept. of Public Welfare, N.D.Ind.1970, 316 F.Supp. 324. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1222. ---- Airport and Airway Improvement Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Car rental company's Airport and Airway Improvement Act (AAIA) cause of action against municipal airport commission could not be enforced under § 1983, where AAIA was not intended to benefit concessionaires such as car rental companies and contained no explicit or implicit private right of action. Four T's, Inc. v. Little Rock Mun.

Airport Com'n, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 108 F.3d 909. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Airport and Airway Improvement Act (AAIA) section and Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) regulation, requiring airport operator to allow aircraft owners to fuel their own aircraft, were enforceable under § 1983. Cedarhurst Air Charter, Inc. v. Waukesha County, E.D.Wis.2000, 110 F.Supp.2d 891. Civil Rights 1029

Action could not be brought under § 1983 based upon alleged violation of Airway and Airport Improvement Act. Northeast Jet Center, Ltd. v. Lehigh-Northampton Airport Authority, E.D.Pa.1991, 767 F.Supp. 672. Civil Rights 1029

Hearing provisions of Airport Improvement Act did not create any rights actionable under federal civil rights statute. Beachy v. Board of Aviation Com'rs of City of Kokomo, Ind., S.D.Ind.1988, 699 F.Supp. 742. Civil Rights 1029

Exception to availability of section 1983 remedy where Congress specifically intended to foreclose enforcement under section 1983 by creating comprehensive remedial scheme in statute itself, does not bar action under section 1983 for alleged violation of 49 U.S.C.A. § 2210(a) [Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, § 511(a), 49 U.S.C.A. § 2210(a)] requiring that airport be made available without unjust discrimination, since Act itself contains no independent enforcement mechanism. New York Airlines, Inc. v. Dukes County, D.C.Mass.1985, 623 F.Supp. 1435. Civil Rights 1313

1223. ---- Americans with Disabilities Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Developmentally disabled individuals stated § 1983 claim against state under integration mandate of Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) by alleging that they unnecessarily received services in institutional rather than integrated setting and that state had failed to provide community services even when such services were most appropriate to plaintiffs' needs; plaintiffs had not requested services that would have required fundamental alteration to system. Rolland v. Cellucci, D.Mass.1999, 52 F.Supp.2d 231. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Provision of independent safety monitoring required by mentally impaired Medicaid home care services recipients would not meaningfully alter New York's task-based assessment (TBA) Medicaid program for personal care services, as would render provision of monitoring an unreasonable accommodation not required by the ADA or Rehabilitation Act; New York's pre-TBA definition of program included provision of such monitoring. Rodriguez v. DeBuono, S.D.N.Y.1999, 44 F.Supp.2d 601, reversed 197 F.3d 611, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 156, 531 U.S. 864, 148 L.Ed.2d 104. Civil Rights 1053

Police officer could not maintain § 1983 claim against police department doctor based on claim that doctor violated his statutory rights under ADA by ordering officer to submit results of blood test to determine level of psychotropic medication in officer's system; officer could not avoid ADA's remedial scheme and its comprehensive enforcement procedure by simply casting claim under § 1983. Krocka v. Bransfield, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1073, affirmed 203 F.3d 507. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Children who brought § 1983 action against city children's welfare officials for allegedly mishandling children's cases sufficiently alleged that defendants failed to take modest affirmative steps to ensure that children had meaningful access to child welfare system, and that defendants thereby violated Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Rehabilitation Act; defendants allegedly failed to promptly assess one child's acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)-related illness, transferred him from one inappropriate placement to another including group home that lacked medical staff needed to monitor his condition, and maintained goal of independent living in his case plan until his death, and another child allegedly remained in group home unequipped to address his neurological problems. Claim under Federal civil rights statute may be predicated on violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act, even though that Act provides its own remedies. Independent Housing Services of San Francisco v. Fillmore Center Associates, N.D.Cal.1993, 840 F.Supp. 1328. Civil Rights 1029

Police officer could not assert cause of action under § 1983 for alleged violations of Title VII and Americans with Disabilities Act as result of city police department's requirement that she disclose mental health records created during her ongoing treatment for depression as condition for full reinstatement following suicide attempt, absent any assertion of violation on grounds different from those available under employment discrimination statutes. Thompson v. City of Arlington, Tex., N.D.Tex.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1137. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Semiquadriplegic inmate could premise claim under federal civil rights statute upon claims under Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), since enforcement of ADA was not limited to available administrative remedies and procedures, and ADA creates enforceable rights for individuals with disabilities. Noland v. Wheatley, N.D.Ind.1993, 835 F.Supp. 476. Civil Rights 1029; Civil Rights 1090

Private right of action was available under federal civil rights statute for Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) violations alleged by disabled persons' advocacy group that sued metropolitan transit authority; although ADA contained express private means of redress, it did not invalidate or limit remedies, rights, and procedures of any federal law providing greater protection for rights of individuals with disabilities. Disability Rights Council of Greater Washington v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3704656. Civil Rights 1313

1224. ---- Appropriations laws, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Rider to appropriations bill, which prohibited use of federal funds to demolish certain enumerated low-income housing projects, did not create any private rights in favor of residents of enumerated project, such as might support § 1983 claim against housing authority for allegedly violating statute. Resident Council of Allen Parkway Village v. U.S. Dept. of Housing & Urban Development, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 980 F.2d 1043, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 75, 510 U.S. 820, 126 L.Ed.2d 43. Civil Rights 1082

1225. ---- Atomic Energy Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Chemical company could rely on civil rights statute to enforce provisions of Atomic Energy Act, including those mandating exclusive federal regulatory scheme for radiation hazards. Kerr-McGee Chemical Corp. v. City of West Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 914 F.2d 820. Civil Rights 1029

1226. ---- Aviation Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Section of Federal Aviation Act (FAA) defining "public" aircraft did not create right, enforceable in § 1983 action by private medical air transport company complaining of state's use of state-owned helicopters to provide free service. Evac, LLC v. Pataki, N.D.N.Y.2000, 89 F.Supp.2d 250. Civil Rights 1048

Federal Aviation Act section governing airspace control and facilities that provides Secretary of Transportation authority to develop plans for and formulate policy with respect to use of navigable airspace, to acquire and maintain air navigation facilities, and to prescribe air traffic rules and regulations was not intended to benefit air carriers, so did not provide federal right enforceable through federal civil rights statute § 1983 by carriers; benefits which Act section provided air carriers accrued to members of general public. 1227. ---- Bankruptcy Code, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Probable cause existed to issue arrest warrant for sexual assault, and thus arresting officer enjoyed qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 unreasonable seizure action, even though officer when applying for warrant had omitted from application telephone call logs and other records furnished by arrestee's friend, purportedly indicating alleged victim's history of erratic behavior and demands for hush money from friend and arrestee; even viewed in light most favorable to arrestee, omitted information was not sufficiently exculpatory to outweigh alleged victim's positive identification, accuracy of which was not in question since alleged victim knew arrestee. Russo v. Voorhees Tp., D.N.J.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 352. Criminal Law 213

This section may be used to redress deprivation of a right guaranteed by any federal statute, including the Bankruptcy Code, Title 11, and § 2809(a)(5) of this title. In re Maya, Bkrtcy.E.D.Pa.1981, 8 B.R. 202.

1228. ---- Cable Communications Policy Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal regulation protecting right of antenna users to receive satellite signals for home viewing did not confer a federal right upon cable services company that installed satellite dishes without obtaining building permits and variances required under city ordinance; thus, regulation did not give company standing to bring civil rights action against city for damages incurred as result of those violations. Camco Cable Services, Inc. v. City of Lauderhill, S.D.Fla.1998, 13 F.Supp.2d 1329. Civil Rights 1331(6); Telecommunications 1285

Provision of the Cable Communications Policy Act that cable operators shall not exercise any editorial control over cable channels dedicated to public access creates a substantive right cognizable under § 1983. Missouri Knights of the Ku Klux Klan v. Kansas City, Mo., W.D.Mo.1989, 723 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1029

1229. ---- Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) provisions that create eligibility requirements and implementing regulations for grants to assist States in developing, strengthening, and carrying out child abuse and neglect prevention and treatment programs do not create rights enforceable in § 1983 action; neither CAPTA nor regulations mandate particular means of investigation or state what type of actions must be taken to protect abused or neglected children. Tony L. By and Through Simpson v. Childers, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1995, 71 F.3d 1182, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1834, 517 U.S. 1212, 134 L.Ed.2d 938. Civil Rights 1057

Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act does not give rise to enforceable private right of action under federal civil rights statute. Baby Neal v. Casey, E.D.Pa.1993, 821 F.Supp. 320, vacated in part, remanded 43 F.3d 48, reconsideration denied 1995 WL 728589. Civil Rights 1330(6)

1230. ---- Child Nutrition Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal regulation requiring notice to recipients in cases of suspension or termination of benefits under supplemental food program for women, infants and children creates right that is enforceable under this section. Alexander v. Polk, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1984, 750 F.2d 250. Civil Rights 1055

1231. ---- Child Welfare Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

than precatory terms, as would weigh in favor of finding that non-profit organization that represented interests of foster care service providers had private right of action against Interim Director of the California Department of Social Services (DSS), in his official capacity, and Deputy Director of the Children and Family Services Division of DSS (CFS), in her official capacity, to enforce the provisions under §§ 1983, where CWA required states to have an approved plan providing for foster care maintenance payments. California Alliance of Child and Family Services v. Allenby, N.D.Cal.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 919. Civil Rights 1057

Provisions in Child Welfare Act requiring states to have case review system, including various procedural safeguards, created privately enforceable right which former foster care beneficiary could assert in § 1983 suit; foster care beneficiary was intentional beneficiary of Act, statute's terms were not so vague and amorphous that their enforcement would strain judicial competence and Act unambiguously imposed specific requirement on states if they accepted federal funds. Occean v. Kearney, S.D.Fla.2000, 123 F.Supp.2d 618. Civil Rights 1057

1232. ---- Civil rights laws generally, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Congress did not intend violations of public accommodations title of 1964 Civil Rights Act be enforced through damages provisions of Civil Rights Act of 1871. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1046

When § 1983 is used as parallel remedy for violation of Title VII, elements of two causes of action are the same. Cromer v. Crowder, S.D.Fla.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 1329. Civil Rights 1118

Minority teachers did not have claim under Title VI for alleged disparate impact that licensing tests had on their certification, since there was no private right of action under Title VI and Title VI did not create right enforceable via § 1983. Gulino v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 314, certification denied 234 F.Supp.2d 324, reversed in part 2002 WL 31887733.

1233. ---- Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Provision of Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act providing rural water districts receiving government loans with exclusive right to provide service within their boundaries gives rise to private right of action enforceable against state actor under § 1983, as statute does not foreclose such remedy and no enforcement mechanism is provided by statute. Rural Water Dist. No. 1, Ellsworth County, Kansas v. City of Wilson, Kansas, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2001, 243 F.3d 1263, on remand 211 F.Supp.2d 1324. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6)

1234. ---- Conspiracy provisions, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Sections 241 and 242 of Title 18 proscribing conspiracy against rights of citizens and deprivation of rights under color of law provided no basis for civil suit under this section. Aldabe v. Aldabe, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1980, 616 F.2d 1089 . Conspiracy 7.5(1)

A conspiracy by state actors, other than police, involved with the justice system to fabricate and suppress evidence in order to effectuate a criminal conviction works a corruption of the truth-seeking function of the trial process and is actionable under §§ 1983. Greene v. Wright, D.Conn.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 416. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Section 1983 does not punish conspiracy; rather, as a practical matter, proof of civil conspiracy simply broadens scope of liability under § 1983 to include individuals who were part of conspiracy but did not act directly to deprive plaintiff of his or her constitutional rights. Libbra v. City of Litchfield, Ill., C.D.Ill.1995, 893 F.Supp. 1370 . Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Section 1983 did not punish conspiracy, absent an actual denial of a civil right, and, thus, motorist could not recover on claim of conspiracy to deprive him of civil rights, as he had failed to allege constitutional violation of his rights to travel and to due process in connection with enforcement of traffic laws against him. U.S. ex rel. Verdone v. Circuit Court for Taylor County, W.D.Wis.1993, 851 F.Supp. 345. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

1235. ---- Communications Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Section 1983 was not available to enforce independent political candidate's claims under equal time provision of Federal Communications Act as that provision contained remedy for its violation, i.e., a petition to Federal Communications Commission (FCC). Forbes v. Arkansas Educational Television Communication Network Foundation, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 22 F.3d 1423, rehearing denied, rehearing withdrawn, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 500, 513 U.S. 995, 130 L.Ed.2d 409, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1962, 514 U.S. 1110, 131 L.Ed.2d 853. Civil Rights 1029

Federal Communications Act granted no right enforceable under § 1983 to amateur licensee to erect antennas or antennas of particular height. Howard v. City of Burlingame, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 937 F.2d 1376. Civil Rights 1072

For African-American cable television programmer to succeed on his § 1983 civil rights equal protection claim against city, city council, and city cable television access authority, alleging that defendants acted with intent to discriminate when they eliminated city cable television system's public access channel, mere showing that decision had disproportionate effect on African-Americans was not sufficient to demonstrate requisite proof of racially discriminatory intent or purpose. Britton v. City of Erie, Pa., W.D.Pa.1995, 933 F.Supp. 1261, affirmed 100 F.3d 946. Civil Rights 1422

"Ham" radio operator had no remedy under § 1983 for city's alleged deprivation of his rights resulting from denial of special permit authorizing erection of radio antenna exceeding 25 feet in height; Federal Communications Act forecloses private enforcement, and Act does not create enforceable rights under § 1983. Howard v. City of Burlingame, N.D.Cal.1989, 726 F.Supp. 770, affirmed 937 F.2d 1376. Civil Rights 1073; Telecommunications 1135

1236. ---- Consumer Credit Protection Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Debtor could not maintain a 1983 action based on violation of statute setting maximum limit on wages which can be garnished; administrative remedy provided by statute was exclusive. Burris v. Mahaney, M.D.Tenn.1989, 716 F.Supp. 1051. Civil Rights 1313

1237. ---- Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In view of facts that Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966, section 3301 et seq. of this title clearly lacks a sufficiently comprehensive remedial scheme that would evidence a congressional intent to preclude a suit under this section as a remedy for its violation and Act provides no express or implied private right of action, an action under this section was a proper vehicle for plaintiffs to enforce rights under Act. Members of Bridgeport Housing Authority Police v. City of Bridgeport, D.C.Conn.1982, 564 F.Supp. 2.

1238. ---- Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act did not create an individual federal right that could be enforced in §§ 1983 action. Smith v. AuSable Valley Community Mental Health Services, E.D.Mich.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 743. Civil Rights 1052

Involuntarily committed mentally retarded persons residing at state operated institution had rights under sections of Disabled Assistance Act imposing requirements of protection and advocacy system and individual habilitation plans and those rights were enforceable under § 1983. Nicoletti v. Brown, N.D.Ohio 1987, 740 F.Supp. 1268.

Plaintiffs, institutionalized mentally retarded children and young adults, could state claim based upon this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights for state officials defendants' alleged noncompliance with provisions of four federal statutes in issue, which consisted of Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act, §§ 6001 to 6081 of this title, Education for All Handicapped Children Act, §§ 1401 to 1461 of Title 20, Rehabilitative Act, § 794 of Title 29, proscribing discrimination against handicapped persons in programs which receive federal financial assistance, and Community Mental Health Centers Act. Medley v. Ginsberg, S.D.W.Va.1980, 492 F.Supp. 1294. Federal Courts 244

1239. ---- Equal Employment Opportunity Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegation of Title VII violation cannot provide sole basis for § 1983 claim, and plaintiff cannot bootstrap untimely Title VII claim by bringing § 1983 action based only on statutory violation of Title VII. Arrington v. Cobb County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1998, 139 F.3d 865, as amended, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1502

Although § 1983 may not be used to assert violations of Title VII, it remains available for assertion of constitutional and statutory rights which existed prior to and independent of Title VII. McCauley v. Greensboro City Bd. of Educ., M.D.N.C.1987, 714 F.Supp. 146. Civil Rights 1312

1240. ---- Extradition statutes, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegations that state or federal extradition statutes have been violated may state a claim under federal civil rights statute. Crenshaw v. Checchia, E.D.Pa.1987, 668 F.Supp. 443. Civil Rights 1395(6)

1241. ---- Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally Provisions of Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) prohibiting federal funding of educational institutions that had policy or practice of releasing education records to unauthorized persons created no personal rights to enforce under § 1983; abrogating Falvo v. Owasso Independent School Dist. No. I-011, 233 F.3d 1203, Brown v. Oneonta, 106 F.3d 1125. Gonzaga University v. Doe, U.S.2002, 122 S.Ct. 2268, 536 U.S. 273, 153 L.Ed.2d 309.

Though it is an open question whether the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) provides private parties with a cause of action enforceable under § 1983, the Supreme Court had subject-matter jurisdiction in an action by a private party asserting a claim under FERPA, because the party's federal claim was not so completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy. Owasso Independent School Dist. No. I-011 v. Falvo, U.S.2002, 122 S.Ct. 934, 534 U.S. 426, 151 L.Ed.2d 896. Federal Courts 445

Section 1983 could not be used to assert alleged violation of provisions of Family Education and Privacy Rights Act (FERPA) prohibiting disclosure of student records. Shockley v. Svoboda, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 342 F.3d 736. Civil Rights 1070

Records-access provisions of Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) created no personal rights enforceable under § 1983. Taylor v. Vermont Dept. of Educ., C.A.2 (Vt.) 2002, 313 F.3d 768. Civil Rights 1070

School district's alleged violation of Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) provision precluding educational institutions from receiving federal funds if they permit improper disclosure of educational records was actionable under § 1983, as FERPA was intended to protect privacy of students and their parents, and imposed binding, enforceable obligation on schools, and remedy provided by FERPA, namely, termination of funding, was not sufficiently comprehensive to raise inference of congressional intent to foreclose a § 1983 remedy. Falvo v. Owasso Independent School Dist. No. I-011, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2000, 233 F.3d 1203, certiorari granted 121 S.Ct. 2547, 533 U.S. 927, 150 L.Ed.2d 715, reversed 122 S.Ct. 934, 534 U.S. 426, 151 L.Ed.2d 896, opinion vacated in part, reinstated in part 288 F.3d 1236. Civil Rights 1070

Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) did not provide for private right of action, enforceable through § 1983, allowing special needs student and his parents to sue school district for sending confidential education records information to private school which had been educating student. P.N. v. Greco, D.N.J.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 221. Civil Rights 1069; Civil Rights 1070

Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) is not enforceable through private lawsuits, either directly under the statute or via § 1983. Curto v. Smith, N.D.N.Y.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 132, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 87 Fed.Appx. 788, 2004 WL 287290, affirmed 93 Fed.Appx. 332, 2004 WL 539234, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1689, 544 U.S. 935, 161 L.Ed.2d 504, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 1653, 544 U.S. 919, 161 L.Ed.2d 475, rehearing denied 125 S.Ct. 2293, 544 U.S. 1057, 161 L.Ed.2d 1105. Action 3; Civil Rights 127.1

Plaintiffs may assert § 1983 claims premised on Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) violations. Krebs v. Rutgers, D.N.J.1992, 797 F.Supp. 1246.

1242. ---- Family and Medical Leave Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) provides comprehensive enforcement scheme which forecloses § 1983 claim to enforce the Act. Jolliffe v. Mitchell, W.D.Va.1997, 971 F.Supp. 1039.

1243. ---- Federal Aid in Fish Restoration Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Provision of regulation under Federal Aid in Sport Fish Restoration Act authorizing Secretary of Interior to terminate projects funded under Act for noncompliance with Act's requirements was not sufficiently comprehensive remedial scheme to indicate that Congress impliedly foreclosed § 1983 action for violation of Act; remedial scheme was not so comprehensive as to leave no room for additional private remedies. Buckley v. City of Redding, Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 66 F.3d 188, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1029

Federal Aid in Sportfish Recreation Act does not create a federal right enforceable under § 1983 to equal access for boats of common horsepower ratings at boat launch facilities constructed or maintained under Act; regulations promulgated under Act, which require states to allocate at least 10% of funds apportioned by Act for recreational boating facilities, and accommodate power boats with common horsepower ratings, did not "flesh out" right created by Act, but imposed obligations in order to further broad objectives of Act. Kissimmee River Valley Sportsmans Ass'n v. City of Lakeland, M.D.Fla.1999, 60 F.Supp.2d 1289, affirmed 250 F.3d 1324, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 613, 534 U.S. 1040, 151 L.Ed.2d 537. Civil Rights 1029

1244. ---- Flag code, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Civil rights violation cannot be premised on claimed violation of flag code. Sadlier v. Payne, D.Utah 1997, 974 F.Supp. 1411. Civil Rights 1029

1245. ---- Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Section 1983 claim could not be based on violation of PURPA, which contained its own specific remedies. North American Natural Resources, Inc. v. Michigan Public Service Com'n, W.D.Mich.1999, 73 F.Supp.2d 804, vacated 252 F.3d 808, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1029

1246. ---- Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Former county employee's § 1983 claims against county and certain of its employees in their official capacities alleging violations of Freedom of Information Act, Privacy Act and Whistleblower Act were properly dismissed; those statutes applied only to federal government. Ortez v. Washington County, State of Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 88 F.3d 804. Counties 67; Records 31; Records 51

Use of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 to enforce Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act [7 U.S.C.A. § 136 et seq.] would undermine balance, completeness and structural integrity of Act's express enforcement scheme and, therefore, plaintiffs could not maintain private action through § 1983 to enforce Act. Almond Hill School v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1985, 768 F.2d 1030.

1247. ---- Freedom of Information Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Former county employee's § 1983 claims against county and certain of its employees in their official capacities alleging violations of Freedom of Information Act, Privacy Act and Whistleblower Act were properly dismissed; those statutes applied only to federal government. Ortez v. Washington County, State of Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 88 F.3d 804. Counties 67; Records 31; Records 51

1247A. ---- Drivers Privacy Protection Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

People who seek the disclosure of information under the Driver's Privacy Protection Act (DPPA) have no private right of action; statute expressly authorizes private suits only by persons whose information has been disclosed improperly, and statute does not create person-specific rights or an individual entitlement, as required for §§ 1983 to provide a remedy against state actors in the absence of express statutory authorization. McCready v. White, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 417 F.3d 700. Records 31

1248. ---- Grant provisions, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Congress must confer enforceable rights, privileges, or immunities unambiguously when it intends to impose conditions on grant of federal moneys before rights, privileges, and immunities may be enforceable under this section. Suter v. Artist M., U.S.Ill.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1360, 503 U.S. 347, 118 L.Ed.2d 1, on remand 968 F.2d 1218. Civil Rights 1029

1249. ---- Hawaii Admission Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Hawaii Admission Act [set out as a note preceding section 491 of Title 48] created rights enforceable in § 1983 action by Hawaii natives; natives were beneficiaries of public trust created by Congress. Price v. Akaka, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1993, 3 F.3d 1220, as amended, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1645, 511 U.S. 1070, 128 L.Ed.2d 365. Civil Rights 1029

Hawaiian Admission Act, Mar. 18, 1959, §§ 1 et seq., 4, 73 Stat. 4, does not contain sufficiently comprehensive enforcement scheme to foreclose a remedy under this section to native Hawaiians who sought to replace acreage lost when county constructed flood control project which used approximately 25 acres of land held in trust for benefit of native Hawaiians, without exchanging an equivalent acreage. Keaukaha-Panaewa Community Ass'n v. Hawaiian Homes Com'n, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1984, 739 F.2d 1467. Civil Rights 1330(3)

Neither the text nor the legislative history of the Admission Act, relating to the statehood of Hawaii, indicated any Congressional intent to create a private right of action, and thus, the Admission Act conferred no individual rights enforceable under §§ 1983, for alleged breaches of the public trust established in the Admission Act. Day v. Apoliona, D.Hawai'i 2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 1133. Civil Rights 1029

Provision of Hawaii Admission Act [set out as a note preceding section 491 of Title 48] requiring State of Hawaii to hold home lands as public trust for betterment of conditions of native Hawaiians created federal right enforceable under § 1983. Han v. Department of Justice, D.Hawai'i 1993, 824 F.Supp. 1480, affirmed 45 F.3d 333 . Civil Rights 1029

1250. ---- Health Maintenance Organization Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even assuming that health maintenance organizations (HMOs) were intended beneficiaries of section of Health Maintenance Organization Act (HMOA) requiring states and their political subdivisions to provide their employees with option of joining a federally qualified HMO, qualified HMO that was not offered by parish school board to its employees as health care benefit plan option had no right of action under § 1983 for school board's alleged improper denial of its federal statutory rights; neither the statute itself nor the regulations promulgated thereunder specified ascertainable standards for distinguishing among several qualified HMOs when more than one requested inclusion in health care benefit plan options offered to public entity's employees. Travelers Health Network of Louisiana v. Orleans Parish School Bd., E.D.La.1994, 842 F.Supp. 236. Civil Rights 1042; Civil Rights 1136

1250A. ---- Help America Vote Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Provision of the Help America Vote Act requiring participating states to ensure that local voting jurisdictions have voting systems in place that comply with certain mandated features for all federal elections did not create a federal right enforceable against state officials under §§ 1983. Taylor v. Onorato, W.D.Pa.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 384. Civil Rights 1029

1251. ---- Highways laws, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Class of users of newly reconstructed bridge could assert private right of action under § 1983 against state official to enforce federal law prohibiting collection of tolls on federally funded bridges. Clallam County v. Department of Transp., of State of Wash., C.A.9 (Wash.) 1988, 849 F.2d 424, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 790, 488 U.S. 1008, 102 L.Ed.2d 782. Civil Rights 1330(6)

1252. ---- Hospital Survey and Construction Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Hill-Burton Act is sufficiently comprehensive to demonstrate Congressional intent to preclude remedy under federal civil rights statute for medical facility's failure to comply with "assurances" to provide uncompensated services to patients unable to pay. White v. Moses Taylor Hosp., M.D.Pa.1991, 763 F.Supp. 776. Civil Rights 1313

1252A. ---- Health Care Quality Improvement Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Absence of showing that Congress intended to provide private right of action to enforce Health Care Quality Improvement Act (HCQIA) precluded §§ 1983 action by physicians' association, seeking to preclude disclosure of malpractice payment information. Medical Soc. of New Jersey v. Mottola, D.N.J.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 254. Civil Rights 1040

1253. ---- Housing laws generally, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purposes of determining whether participants in federal Housing Act voucher program could bring private action under §§ 1983 to challenge calculation of their utility allowance by public housing authorities, applicable section of United States Housing Act and implementing regulations pertaining to utility allowance were not so vague and amorphous as to be beyond competence of judiciary to enforce. Johnson v. Housing Authority Of Jefferson Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 442 F.3d 356, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1635396. Civil Rights 1082

On appeal from district court's decision granting city residents injunctive relief in their putative class action alleging violations of their rights from city officials' administration of low income Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP), Court of Appeals would decline to decide whether Low Income Home Energy Assistance Act (LIHEAA) created private right of action enforceable through §§ 1983, given difficulty of question and fact that district court's ruling on that issue was not necessary to its grant of injunctive relief. Kapps v. Wing, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 404 F.3d 105. Federal Courts 753

Section of Housing and Community Development Act (HCDA), stating objective of providing decent housing and suitable living environment for persons of low and moderate income, and stating specific objective of eliminating detrimental conditions through code enforcement, did not unambiguously impose a binding obligation on states, and thus did not create federal right enforceable through § 1983 suit on the part of home purchaser for town's alleged negligent administration of HCDA funds; section merely set forth general goals for programs funded by HCDA. King v. Town of Hempstead, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 161 F.3d 112. Civil Rights 1082

Fair Housing Act and its implementing regulations did not confer on visitors to housing project any enforceable rights that could form basis of § 1983 claim against housing authority for personal injuries suffered when decayed tree collapsed on visitors, as obligations of housing authority to maintain housing project in safe condition did not run to nonresidents. Gracia v. Brownsville Housing, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 105 F.3d 1053, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 114 F.3d 1185, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 171, 522 U.S. 865, 139 L.Ed.2d 114. Civil Rights 1082

Existence of administrative remedy does not preclude enforcement in federal civil rights action of statute conferring right directly on tenants of public housing. Mungiovi v. Chicago Housing Authority, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 98 F.3d 982, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1082; Civil Rights 1310

The Housing Authority of the city of Charleston did not violate this section by refusing to remedy deficiencies at public housing project in violation of declarations of policy in various housing acts, in that there is no constitutional right to housing and sections 1437, 1441 and 1601 of Title 42 do not create any legally cognizable rights in tenants of programs funded under such sections. Perry v. Housing Authority of City of Charleston, C.A.4

Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act (QHWRA) provision requiring disbursements of federal housing grants to "affirmatively further fair housing" created private cause of action, enforceable through § 1983, by which African-American residents of public housing project could challenge county's plan to revitalize public housing communities pursuant to Urban Revitalization Demonstration Program (HOPE VI). Reese v. Miami-Dade County, S.D.Fla.2002, 210 F.Supp.2d 1324.

Landlord did not have property right, under Low Income Housing Act, to participate in low-income tenant rental program, sufficient to sustain suit under § 1983 claiming wrongful denial of that right. Roth v. City of Syracuse, N.D.N.Y.2000, 96 F.Supp.2d 171, affirmed 4 Fed.Appx. 86, 2001 WL 178033. Civil Rights 1082

Plaintiffs who could not bring a private suit under federal housing law provisions could not maintain action by simply restyling their grievances as a civil rights statute action for violation of the same statutes. Hernandez v. Pierce, S.D.N.Y.1981, 512 F.Supp. 1154. Civil Rights 1330(3)

1254. ---- Housing and Community Development Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Action for violation of provision of Housing and Community Development Act, 42 U.S.C.A. 5301 et seq., requiring public contractors to pay prevailing wage to all laborers and mechanics was available to plaintiff laborers under this section; laborers and mechanics are intended beneficiaries of obligation cast in mandatory terms which is readily quantifiable by reference to stated benchmark as set by federal official, and section 5310 of Title 42 does not recognize regulatory scheme of such comprehensiveness as to manifest affirmative congressional intent to preclude invocation of this section as a remedy. Chan v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 1 F.3d 96, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 472, 510 U.S. 978, 126 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1136

1255. ---- Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Section 1983 cannot be used to escape strictures on damages under IDEA, which preclude both punitive damages and general compensatory damages, where §§ 1983 claim is premised on right created by the IDEA. Diaz-Fonseca v. Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 451 F.3d 13. Schools 155.5(5)

IDEA provides comprehensive enforcement scheme for protecting children's right to free appropriate public education and thus precludes § 1983 suit as remedy for IDEA violations; abrogating, L.C. v. Utah State Board of Education, 57 F.Supp.2d 1214. Padilla ex rel. Padilla v. School Dist. No. 1 in City and County of Denver, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 2000, 233 F.3d 1268. Civil Rights 1069; Civil Rights 1309

Learning disabled student failed to state claim for damages under § 1983 for any violation of his rights secured by Education of Handicapped Act (EHA); student could not recover general damages under EHA for school athletic association's denying him hardship exemption from rule which prohibited transfer students from participating in sports for one year. Crocker v. Tennessee Secondary School Athletic Ass'n, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1992, 980 F.2d 382. Civil Rights 1069

Private right of action under § 1983 is available to remedy violation of the Education of the Handicapped Act. Mrs. W. v. Tirozzi, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1987, 832 F.2d 748, on remand 706 F.Supp. 164. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Rights created by Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) could not be enforced in action under §§ 1983; IDEA's enforcement scheme was so comprehensive as to preclude its enforcement through §§ 1983. Alex G. ex el. Stephen G. v. Board of Trustees of Davis Joint Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1315. Civil Rights 1069; Civil Rights 1309; Schools 155.5(2.1)

State department of education (DOE) was not subject to monetary damages in § 1983 action alleging violation of disabled student's rights under Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Zahran ex rel. Zahran v. New York Dept. of Educ., N.D.N.Y.2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 204. Civil Rights 1346

Violation of procedural safeguards of the IDEA by school board and school officials entitled disabled student to IDEA remedies, but did not rise to level of constitutional violation, so as to support student's § 1983 claims. Smith ex rel. Duck v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 370, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 402 F.3d 468. Civil Rights 1069; Schools 155.5(5)

A plaintiff may enforce the rights granted by the IDEA by way of an action seeking money damages pursuant to § 1983. B.H. v. Southington Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 194, modified on reconsideration 2004 WL 51001. Schools 155.5(2.1)

A plaintiff may enforce the rights granted by the IDEA by way of an action seeking money damages pursuant to § 1983. B.H. v. Southington Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 194, modified on reconsideration 2004 WL 51001. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Statutory violations of Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) may be enforced in an action brought under Section 1983. Goleta Union Elementary School Dist. v. Ordway, C.D.Cal.2001, 166 F.Supp.2d 1287, reconsideration denied 248 F.Supp.2d 936.

Parents claiming that individualized education provided for their autistic child was deficient, due to lack of training of teachers, could not bring claim under § 1983 seeking compensatory and punitive damages for violation of Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA); under facts of case, parents were limited to remedies available under IDEA. Andrew S. ex rel. Margaret S. v. School Committee of Town of Greenfield, Mass., D.Mass.1999, 59 F.Supp.2d 237. Civil Rights 1309

Handicapped student's claims alleging violation of § 1983 was duplicative of claim under Individuals with Disabilities Education Act and, absent claim that Constitution or Treaties of United States have been violated, claim would be dismissed. Chuhran v. Walled Lake Consol. Schools, E.D.Mich.1993, 839 F.Supp. 465, affirmed 51 F.3d 271. Civil Rights 1309; Schools 155.5(1)

Complaint alleging that school board violated the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) by disclosing confidential information stated cause of action under civil rights statute, even though IDEA does not expressly provide for private cause of action. Sean R. by Dwight R. v. Board of Educ. of Town of Woodbridge, D.Conn.1992, 794 F.Supp. 467. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Parents of handicapped children stated § 1983 claim against Connecticut Board of Education for alleged violations of Education of the Handicapped Act stemming from Board's failure to make bona fide attempts to resolve their complaints and for failing to fully implement and conduct informal complaint resolution procedures as required by federal regulations. Mrs. W. v. Tirozzi, D.Conn.1989, 706 F.Supp. 164. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Handicapped child was not entitled to relief under § 1983 for violation of child's rights under Education of the Handicapped Act, where violation outside of scope of Act was neither alleged nor established. Taylor by Holbrook v. Board of Educ. of Copake-Taconic Hills Cent. School Dist., N.D.N.Y.1986, 649 F.Supp. 1253. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Parents claiming that school district and State Department of Education violated the Education for All Handicapped Children Act in failing to reimburse costs of education for handicapped children could maintain action under civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, only to extent that complaint alleged procedural due process violations and only to the extent of alleged damages based on that deprivation. John H. v. Brunelle, D.N.H.1986, 631 F.Supp. 208. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Allegations that parents of handicapped student were denied information about student's education and opportunity to observe his education and progress and that school district administrator and superintendent and others failed to notify parents of their legal rights and remedies under federal and state law did not state claim for relief under this section; Education of the Handicapped Act, section 1400 et seq. of Title 20, was intended to be exclusive remedy for such claims. Daniel B. v. Wisconsin Dept. of Public Instruction, E.D.Wis.1984, 581 F.Supp. 585, affirmed 776 F.2d 1051, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1462, 475 U.S. 1083, 89 L.Ed.2d 719. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Absent a violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, a violation of § 1401 et seq. of Title 20, the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, or a violation of § 701 et seq. of Title 29, the Rehabilitation Act, no claim for a handicapped child exists under this section. Pinkerton v. Moye, W.D.Va.1981, 509 F.Supp. 107.

1256. ---- Justice System Improvement Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Provision of Justice System Improvement Act requiring office of justice programs to safeguard accuracy and security of criminal history information did not create any right enforceable by arrestee through § 1983 claim against sheriff and county for improper disclosure of arrest records from federal database to private citizen; provision imposed compliance obligations only on federal agency, and created privately enforceable right in individual such as arrestee only to receive copy of criminal history information maintained pursuant to statute for his review and possible correction in event of erroneous information. Cline v. Rogers, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 87 F.3d 176, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 510, 519 U.S. 1008, 136 L.Ed.2d 400. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1257. ---- Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged violation of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act in temporarily lodging juvenile in adult jail constituted deprivation of a right, privilege or immunity, actionable under § 1983; plan requirement that juveniles not be detained in adult facilities unless no acceptable alternative was available was intended to benefit juveniles, requirement was defined with sufficient detail to be judicially enforceable and requirement created binding obligation. Horn by Parks v. Madison County Fiscal Court, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 22 F.3d 653, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 199, 513 U.S. 873, 130 L.Ed.2d 130. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Juvenile who was incarcerated for four days in county jail for alleged unauthorized use of motor vehicle had right of action under § 1983 for infringements of his rights under Juvenile Justice Act and Maine law; juvenile alleged no services were provided to him, no effort to place him in least restrictive alternative was made, and that he was subjected to visual and verbal contact with adult prisoners. Grenier By and Through Grenier on Behalf of Grenier v. Kennebec County, Me., D.Me.1990, 748 F.Supp. 908.

Provisions of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act setting out requirements for state plans dealing with juvenile offenders created enforceable rights, for purposes of juveniles' § 1983 action seeking to enforce compliance with those provisions; provisions in question expressed a clear legislative intent to confer a special benefit upon the distinct class of detained juveniles and imposed duty upon state to assure that the requirements of those provisions were met or would be met by the proper deadline. Hendrickson v. Griggs, N.D.Iowa 1987, 672 F.Supp. 1126, appeal dismissed 856 F.2d 1041. Civil Rights 1057; Infants 272

1258. ---- Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Land and Water Conservation Fund Act (LWCF Act) does not create rights, privileges, or immunities enforceable by individuals within meaning of § 1983, whether against state or federal defendants. Sportsmen's Wildlife Defense Fund v. U.S. Dept. of Interior, D.Colo.1999, 40 F.Supp.2d 1192. Civil Rights 1029

1259. ---- Lead-Based Paint Poisoning Prevention Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Lead-Based Paint Poisoning Prevention Act (LPPPA) and United States Housing Act (USHA) were intended to benefit residents of public housing project, for purposes of determining if enforceable right existed under § 1983. Aristil v. Housing Authority of City of Tampa, Fla., M.D.Fla.1999, 54 F.Supp.2d 1289. Civil Rights 1082

1260. ---- Low Income Home Energy Assistance Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In passing Low Income Home Energy Assistance Act, Congress did not intend to confer private rights enforceable under § 1983; participation in block grant program was voluntary on parts of state, and there was a pervasive emphasis on maintaining limited federal role. Cabinet for Human Resources, Com. of Ky. v. Northern Kentucky Welfare Rights Ass'n, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1179, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1082

1261. ---- Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Action under § 1983 provides mechanism to address state interference with federally protected fishing rights under Magnuson Act. Bateman v. Gardner, S.D.Fla.1990, 730 F.Supp. 1570, affirmed 922 F.2d 848, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2053, 500 U.S. 932, 114 L.Ed.2d 459. Civil Rights 1071

1262. ---- Medicaid provisions, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Congress did not foreclose enforcement of Medicaid Act under § 1983; Medicaid Act did not expressly preclude resort to § 1983, nor did it create remedial scheme that was sufficiently comprehensive to demonstrate congressional intent to preclude remedy of suits under § 1983. Wilder v. Virginia Hosp. Ass'n, U.S.Va.1990, 110 S.Ct. 2510, 496 U.S. 498, 110 L.Ed.2d 455.

Private right of action under §§ 1983 did not exist to enforce Medicaid provision that required state plan for medical assistance to include reasonable standards, comparable for all groups, for determining eligibility for, and extent of, medical assistance under that plan, since provision, among other things, was not framed in terms of individuals benefited, focus was on standards themselves and on their aggregate impact, rather than on benefits to individuals, and provision provided guidance only regarding financial means of potential beneficiary. Lankford v. Sherman, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 451 F.3d 496. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid provision that required states to make medical assistance available presumptively conferred individual federal rights that could be privately enforced through §§ 1983 action, since states were required under provision to provide particularly specified benefits to particularly specified types of individuals; language of provision was unmistakably focused on specific individuals benefited, provision supplied concrete and objective standards for enforcement, provision was expressly worded in mandatory, not precatory terms, and Medicaid Act did not expressly foreclose §§ 1983 right. Watson v. Weeks, C.A.9 (Or.) 2006, 436 F.3d 1152. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid statute requiring states to provide medical assistance covering medical services from an intermediate care facility for persons with mental retardation with reasonable promptness unambiguously conferred individual federal rights that could be privately enforced through §§ 1983 action. Sabree ex rel. Sabree v. Richman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 367 F.3d 180. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid recipients, who had earned income and who were terminated from Medicaid when state enacted a statute reducing Medicaid eligibility limits, could bring §§ 1983 action for breach of federal statute providing for transitional medical assistance. Rabin v. Wilson-Coker, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 362 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1052

Statute requiring that state Medicaid plans provide that medical assistance "shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals" conferred federal right enforceable under § 1983 with regard to State model Medicaid waiver plans. Bryson v. Shumway, C.A.1 (N.H.) 2002, 308 F.3d 79, on remand 2004 WL 613027.

Pharmacists, as Medicaid providers, could not assert under § 1983 a claim that state's Medicaid reimbursement plan violated section of the Medicaid Act providing that "methods and procedures" must assure that payments to providers produce "efficiency," "economy," "quality of care," and adequate access to providers, as Congress, in that section, did not intend to benefit providers. Pennsylvania Pharmacists Ass'n v. Houstoun, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2002, 283 F.3d 531, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 100, 537 U.S. 821, 154 L.Ed.2d 30. Civil Rights 1052

Patients whose records were seized from their psychiatrist's office pursuant to warrant duly issued in connection with Medicaid fraud investigation had no grounds to claim constitutional violation of the right to "privacy" arising from seizure of records, given state's compelling interest in ending fraud in Medicaid program and lack of evidence that scope of search could have been narrowed. F.E.R. v. Valdez, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 58 F.3d 1530. Constitutional Law 82(7)

Medicaid statute and corresponding regulation providing that state must make various assurances that are satisfactory to Secretary of Health and Human Services to obtain home care waiver imposed binding obligations upon participating states for purposes of determining whether applicant for home care waiver could bring § 1983 action for alleged violations of Medicaid Act, where assurances served to protect health and welfare of home care Medicaid recipients and where there was nothing vague or amorphous about what statute or corresponding regulations required of participating states. Wood v. Tompkins, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 33 F.3d 600, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1052

Language of equal access provision of federal Medicaid statute was sufficiently specific to be enforceable in civil rights action brought by recipients and providers against state that was reducing its reimbursement rates; requiring access equal to that of "general population" meant that Medicaid recipients were entitled to access equal to that of insured population, and requiring payments consistent with efficiency, economy, and quality of care provided objective benchmark for measuring accessibility. Arkansas Medical Soc., Inc. v. Reynolds, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1993, 6 F.3d 519. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid provider had no property interest subject to due process protections in payments for claims pending investigation of their legality under either Medicaid Act or New York Department of Social Service regulations so as to state § 1983 individual capacity claim against Commissioner of Department of Social Services. Yorktown Medical Laboratory, Inc. v. Perales, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 948 F.2d 84. Constitutional Law 277(1)

reimbursement rights under civil rights statute, despite provision of administrative remedy and subjection of all state Medicaid plans to review by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, which may result in suspension or reduction of federal payments. West Virginia University Hospitals, Inc. v. Casey, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 885 F.2d 11, rehearing denied, certiorari granted 110 S.Ct. 1294, 494 U.S. 1003, 108 L.Ed.2d 472, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 3213, 496 U.S. 936, 110 L.Ed.2d 661, affirmed 111 S.Ct. 1138, 499 U.S. 83, 113 L.Ed.2d 68. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Nonprofit organization composed of public and private health care providers had right actionable under § 1983 to challenge Virginia's procedures for reimbursing hospitals for cost of treating Medicaid patients; language and history of relevant reimbursement provision implied congressional intent to allow providers right of action against state's failure to comply with federal Medicaid requirements. Virginia Hosp. Ass'n v. Baliles, C.A.4 (Va.) 1989, 868 F.2d 653, rehearing denied, certiorari granted in part 110 S.Ct. 49, 493 U.S. 808, 107 L.Ed.2d 18, affirmed 110 S.Ct. 2510, 496 U.S. 498, 110 L.Ed.2d 455. Civil Rights 1052

Class suit for declaratory and injunctive relief on ground that state's plan for medical assistance, by failing to provide transportation to and from the providers of medical services deprived recipients of medical assistance secured by the Social Security Act, § 301 et seq. of this title, qualified under this section, even if regarded as being wholly statutorily based. Blue v. Craig, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1974, 505 F.2d 830. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid provision that required a Medicaid-funded state plan to make medical assistance available to certain individuals, including recipients under age 21, created private right of action enforceable under §§ 1983 for foster children with unmet mental health needs in custody of county department of children and family services (DCFS), who alleged that state was required by Medicaid Act to provide wraparound services and therapeutic foster care to them. Katie A. v. Bonta, C.D.Cal.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 1065. Civil Rights 1057

Provisions of Medicaid Act, requiring states to provide medical services in an intermediate care facility for persons with mental retardation with reasonable promptness, unambiguously confer individual federal rights enforceable under §§ 1983. Michelle P. ex rel. Deisenroth v. Holsinger, E.D.Ky.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 763. Civil Rights 1052

Provision of Medicaid Act requiring state medical assistance plans to provide for a means of ensuring that eligible individuals under the age of 21 are informed of and provided early and periodic screening, diagnosis, and treatment (EPSDT) services, including certain dental services afforded individual medical assistance recipients rights that were enforceable under § 1983. Clark v. Richman, M.D.Pa.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid Act provisions requiring participating states to reimburse health care providers did not create any rights on part of providers to receive payments, enforceable under § 1983. Planned Parenthood of Cent. Tex. v. Sanchez, W.D.Tex.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 590, remanded 403 F.3d 324. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid Act provisions requiring participating states to reimburse health care providers did not create any rights on part of providers to receive payments, enforceable under §§ 1983. Planned Parenthood of Cent. Tex. v. Sanchez, W.D.Tex.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 590, remanded 403 F.3d 324. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid applicant was not intended beneficiary of Boren Amendment, requiring states to adopt reasonable and adequate Medicaid rates, and thus she had no rights of action under § 1983 based on Boren Amendment for denial or failure to timely approve her Medicaid application. Hall v. Prince George's County, D.Md.2002, 189 F.Supp.2d 320. Civil Rights 1052

Section of Medicaid Act requiring state plan for medical assistance to provide procedures relating to utilization of, and payment for, care and services available under plan as necessary to safeguard against unnecessary utilization of such care and services did not create enforceable right which health care providers could assert under § 1983;

section was intended to benefit general public and not medical service providers, provided only vague standards, and did not unambiguously impose binding obligation. Prestera Center For Mental Health Services, Inc. v. Lawton, S.D.W.Va.2000, 111 F.Supp.2d 768. Civil Rights 1052

Poor children entitled to benefits under the Early Screening, Diagnosis and Treatment program (EPSDT) of Medicaid could bring § 1983 suit against State of Texas, asserting that required benefits were not being provided; statute was intended to benefit children, statute made compliance with its provisions mandatory for any state choosing to participate in program, and statute was clear enough to allow for judicial interpretation and enforcement. Frew v. Gilbert, E.D.Tex.2000, 109 F.Supp.2d 579, stay denied 2000 WL 33795091, vacated 300 F.3d 530, certiorari granted in part 123 S.Ct. 1481, 538 U.S. 905, 155 L.Ed.2d 223, reversed 124 S.Ct. 899, 540 U.S. 431, 157 L.Ed.2d 855, on remand 376 F.3d 444. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid provision calling for furnishing with reasonable promptness of Medicaid benefits to eligible individuals created federal right enforceable under § 1983; eligible individuals were class intended to be protected by provision, statute as supplemented by regulations was not impermissibly vague as to what constituted reasonable promptness, and provision was mandatory in nature, rather than precatory. Boulet v. Cellucci, D.Mass.2000, 107 F.Supp.2d 61. Civil Rights 1052

Statutory requirement under Medicaid Act that state provide waiver services with reasonable promptness created federal right enforceable by Medicaid-eligible individuals under § 1983; statute was intended to benefit such individuals, right was not too vague for enforcement, and statute imposed binding obligation on states. Lewis v. New Mexico Dept. of Health, D.N.M.2000, 94 F.Supp.2d 1217, affirmed 261 F.3d 970. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid patient could sue state agency under § 1983 for breaching its obligation under the balance billing provision of the Medicaid statute; patient was an intended third-party beneficiary of the provision, patient's asserted interests were within the competence of the judiciary to enforce, and agency was a governmental unit which could be sued under section 1983. Mallo v. Public Health Trust of Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2000, 88 F.Supp.2d 1376. Civil Rights 1052

Developmentally disabled individuals stated § 1983 claim against state for violation of reasonable promptness provision of Medicaid statute by alleging that state had not sought necessary waiver of reasonable promptness requirement and had not provided services to plaintiffs in timely manner. Rolland v. Cellucci, D.Mass.1999, 52 F.Supp.2d 231. Civil Rights 1395(1)

New York State Medicaid home care applicants and recipients challenging state's task-based assessment (TBA) program on grounds that it did not include safety monitoring as an independent task could bring § 1983 action to enforce Medicaid regulations mandating that each service be sufficient to achieve its purpose and precluding denial of services based on diagnosis. Rodriguez v. DeBuono, S.D.N.Y.1999, 44 F.Supp.2d 601, reversed 197 F.3d 611, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 156, 531 U.S. 864, 148 L.Ed.2d 104. Civil Rights 1052

Pharmacists and representative nonprofit corporation did not have enforceable right under equal access provision of medicaid statute to challenge state agency's setting of variable dispensing fee; statutory requirement that payments be consistent with 'efficiency, economy, and quality of care' created no enforceable right. Florida Pharmacy Ass'n v. Cook, N.D.Fla.1998, 17 F.Supp.2d 1293. Health 487(2)

No enforceable § 1983 rights are created by the statute requiring state Medicaid plans to establish or designate a single agency to administer or supervise the plan, nor by the statute's implementing regulation. Graus v. Kaladjian, S.D.N.Y.1998, 2 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1052

No enforceable § 1983 rights are created by the regulation requiring Medicaid administering agencies to continue furnishing benefits "regularly" to all eligible individuals, nor by the statutes requiring state Medicaid plans to ensure that eligibility is determined and benefits are provided with "simplicity" and in "the best interests of recipients" according to "reasonable standards," as these provisions are merely amorphous, vague, and general statements of the Medicaid program's overall goals. Graus v. Kaladjian, S.D.N.Y.1998, 2 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1052

Owner of pharmacies which participated in Pennsylvania state Medicaid reimbursement plan could bring § 1983 action seeking enforcement of Medicaid regulations governing state advisory committee and adoption of plan regulations; federal regulations and statutes in question contain mandatory language and create enforceable rights, and fact that state law provided remedy did not prevent resort to § 1983. Rite Aid of Pennsylvania, Inc. v. Houstoun, E.D.Pa.1997, 998 F.Supp. 522. Civil Rights 1052

Equal access provision of Medicaid Act imposed binding obligation on state to develop reimbursement plan that ensured participation of enough health care providers so that Medicaid recipients have access to services and care at least to extent available to insured population in same geographic area, supporting private right of action under § 1983. Moody Emergency Medical Services, Inc. v. City of Millbrook, M.D.Ala.1997, 967 F.Supp. 488. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Section 1983 supplies partial remedy for Boren Amendment violations, which may be augmented by private right of action. Oregon Ass'n of Homes for Aging, Inc. v. State of Or. By and Through Dept. of Human Resources, Senior and Disabled Services Div., D.Or.1994, 884 F.Supp. 382. Civil Rights 1052

Mentally retarded and developmentally disabled persons who received Medicaid had private action under § 1983 against Ohio officials and state agencies for alleged violations of federal statutes and regulations governing preadmission and annual resident review; provisions were intended to benefit recipients, provisions imposed binding obligations on state, and provisions were not vague or amorphous in character. Martin v. Voinovich, S.D.Ohio 1993, 840 F.Supp. 1175. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Mentally and physically disabled persons residing in facilities certified as Intermediate Care Facilities for the Mentally Retarded (ICF/MR's) could seek enforcement of medicaid provisions of Title XIX of Social Security Act pursuant to 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983; federal right is provided by Social Security Act and language found in implementing regulations is sufficiently mandatory to constitute binding obligation on part of state. Conner v. Branstad, S.D.Iowa 1993, 839 F.Supp. 1346. Health 507

Jurisdiction existed in § 1983 civil rights suit to prevent state from implementing reduction in reimbursement rates to Medicaid providers of obstetric and pediatric care as well as types of therapy for children, even if suit was based on equal access provision of Social Security Act. Arkansas Medical Soc., Inc. v. Reynolds, E.D.Ark.1992, 834 F.Supp. 1097. Federal Courts 228

Freedom of choice provision of Social Security Act, requiring that state medical assistance plan permit recipients to choose providers, did not create rights in suppliers of health care products and, thus, could not be basis for "federal right" needed to support § 1983 civil rights claim challenging validity of Georgia statute requiring suppliers to locate within state or within 50 miles of state border. Nutritional Support Services, L.P. v. Miller, N.D.Ga.1993, 826 F.Supp. 467. Civil Rights 1052; Health 507

Section of Social Security Act requiring that state Medicaid plans provide necessary safeguards to assure that health care is provided in manner consistent with best interests of recipients would not support statutory rights claim under civil rights statute, § 1983, by recipients against municipal hospital; statutory terms were too general and vague to permit judicial enforcement and regulations thereunder were not promulgated to particularize patient rights privately enforceable under § 1983, but were relevant to consideration by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) of whether accredited hospital qualified for participation in Medicaid or Medicare program. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1993, 819 F.Supp. 183. Civil Rights 1052

Provision of the Medicaid Act requiring states to insure that payments are consistent with efficiency, economy, and quality of care does not create a right enforceable under federal civil rights statute. Fulkerson v. Commissioner, Maine Dept. of Human Services, D.Me.1992, 802 F.Supp. 529. Civil Rights 1052

West Virginia hospital which provided care for medicaid recipients had cause of action under civil rights statute for violations of Social Security Act by Pennsylvania officials with respect to officials' medicaid reimbursement program, whether or not a constitutional challenge existed. West Virginia University Hospitals, Inc. v. Casey, M.D.Pa.1988, 701 F.Supp. 496, affirmed in part, vacated in part and reversed in part on other grounds 885 F.2d 11, rehearing denied, certiorari granted 110 S.Ct. 1294, 494 U.S. 1003, 108 L.Ed.2d 472, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 3213, 496 U.S. 936, 110 L.Ed.2d 661, affirmed 111 S.Ct. 1138, 499 U.S. 83, 113 L.Ed.2d 68. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid provider could not maintain § 1983 civil rights action against state to challenge amendment to state's medicaid plan which eliminated payment of return on equity capital to proprietary providers of health care services; Medicaid Act did not give medicaid provider tangible right, privilege, or immunity concerning return on equity or its elimination, nothing in legislative history of Medicaid Act invested medicaid provider with § 1983 enforceable rights, and nothing in administrative regulations gave medicaid provider right to pursue § 1983 claim. Vantage Healthcare Corp. v. Virginia Bd. of Medical Assistance Services, E.D.Va.1988, 684 F.Supp. 1329. Civil Rights 1052

Long-term care facility was not an intended beneficiary of the Medicaid program and, thus, could not institute section 1983 action in federal district court against Connecticut Department of Income Maintenance and its Commissioner, challenging Connecticut reimbursement system for skilled nursing facilities as violative of Federal Medicaid Act. Arden House, Inc. v. Heintz, D.C.Conn.1985, 612 F.Supp. 81.

This section furnished a remedy for private psychiatrist's claim that refusal of New York State officials to approve medicaid reimbursement for services of ancillary personnel working under psychiatrist's direction violated Social Security Act, § 301 et seq. of this title, and implementing regulations, and Act did not itself provide an exclusive remedy for violation of its terms. Yapalater v. Bates, S.D.N.Y.1980, 494 F.Supp. 1349, affirmed 644 F.2d 131, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1255, 455 U.S. 908, 71 L.Ed.2d 447. Civil Rights 1055

Alleged violation by state and county departments of public aid of § 1396 et seq. of this title compelling statewide program and equal services to all persons within any group eligible for programs of grants to states for medical assistance, by the payment of reduced benefits to medically indigent persons in Chicago and Cicero, Illinois, was actionable under this section. Raner v. Edelman, N.D.Ill.1973, 365 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1055

Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis, and Treatment Program (EPSDT) of Medicaid Act created individual rights in foster children, enforceable under § 1983, to screening services at intervals that met standards of medical and dental practice and when medically necessary; eligible children under age 21, including foster children, were clearly intended beneficiaries of EPSDT, since language of EPSDT focused on needs of individual children, EPSDT lacked enforcement mechanism, and EPSDT was not too vague and amorphous to be enforced by judiciary. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1057

Medicaid applicants who alleged that they suffered a deprivation of their rights under the Medicare Act with respect to notice and processing time of their applications, that state agency "acting under color of law" caused the deprivation, and that the deprivation resulted from a custom, policy or practice, stated a claim under § 1983. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Federal statute providing that State plan for medical assistance must provide such methods of administration as are found by Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to be necessary for proper and efficient operation of plan was intended only to guide State in structuring its efforts to provide care and services to Medicaid recipients, and therefore did not give Medicaid recipients enforceable right to "methods of administration; thus, recipients could not rely on that statute in § 1983 action seeking to enforce Federal regulation requiring State Medicaid plans to ensure necessary transportation for recipients to and from providers. Harris v. James, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 127 F.3d 993. Civil Rights 1052; Health 479

Conclusion that accredited provider of "home health services" under section 1395 et seq. of this title had no implied private right of action against state medical university under section 1395a of this title entitling insured individuals to obtain health services from any qualified institution compelled conclusion that provider likewise had no cause of action under this section, even assuming that university acted under color of state law, as there was no violation either of Constitution or any federal statute. Home Health Services, Inc. v. Currie, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1983, 706 F.2d 497. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Bivens' claim, for federal officials' acting under color of federal law, arising out of Health Care Financing Administration's (HCFA's) allegedly improperly motivated termination of nursing home's Medicare-Medicaid provider agreement was precluded, as the Medicare Act provided meaningful remedy for such claims. Beechwood Restorative Care Center v. Leeds, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 248, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 436 F.3d 147. United States 50.10(1)

States are not required to use reasonable efforts to ensure that state hospitals participating in Medicaid program operate in compliance with established state standards, and thus patients who sought and obtained medical care at participating hospital did not have cause of action under § 1983 against state officials for failing to take steps reasonably necessary to ensure that hospital complied with established state health standards. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 288. Civil Rights 1045

Cost-sharing provision of Social Security Act with respect to Medicare "Part B" services for "Qualified Medicare Beneficiaries" (QMBs) created right that was sufficiently specific and definite to qualify as right enforceable under civil rights statute by association of rehabilitation agencies providing such services and was not beyond competence of judiciary to enforce. Rehabilitation Ass'n of Virginia, Inc. v. Kozlowski, E.D.Va.1993, 838 F.Supp. 243, affirmed 42 F.3d 1444, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 60, 516 U.S. 811, 133 L.Ed.2d 23. Civil Rights 1052

1263A. ---- Mental Health Rights and Advocacy, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal statute communicating congressional preference for right to a humane treatment environment affording reasonable protection from harm and appropriate privacy to mental health patients with regard to personal needs did not create an individual federal right that could be enforced in §§ 1983 action. Smith v. AuSable Valley Community Mental Health Services, E.D.Mich.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 743. Civil Rights 1045

1264. ---- National Labor Relations Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Existence of a comprehensive enforcement scheme including exclusive jurisdiction by the National Labor Relations Board to prevent and remedy unfair labor practices by employers and unions did not preclude a § 1983 action based on governmental interference with labor and management rights; the NLRB had no authority to address conduct protected by the National Labor Relations Act against governmental interference. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1312

1265. ---- National School Lunch Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal education funding statutes did not provide individual districts with cause of action under § 1983 against state officials for their alleged failure to disburse immediately to districts funds distributed to state; districts were not intended beneficiaries of funding statutes--Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), Vocational Education Act, National School Lunch Act, and Child Nutrition Act, and any provisions of funding statutes directed toward districts were too vague and amorphous to be judicially enforceable and did not create binding obligations on state defendants to either immediately disburse funds or pay interest on reimbursements. Board of Educ. of Tp. High School Dist. No. 205 v. Leininger, N.D.Ill.1993, 822 F.Supp. 516. Civil Rights 1069; Schools 19(1)

Where students at numerous elementary schools claimed that their right to equal protection of laws had been denied by state officials, acting in their capacities as officials, acted arbitrarily and irrationally in selecting which schools would offer lunches and failed to treat equally those pupils who had greatest need for lunches in violation of National School Lunch Act, § 1751 et seq. of this title, and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, federal court had jurisdiction to hear constitutional claim and grant relief. Ayala v. District 60 School Bd. of Pueblo, Colo., D.C.Colo.1971, 327 F.Supp. 980. Federal Courts 177

1266. ---- National Voter Registration Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Private persons cannot support § 1983 claim based upon alleged violation of National Voter Registration Act (NVRA); NVRA provides detailed and exclusive method of enforcement. National Coalition for Students with Disabilities Educ. and Legal Defense Fund v. Allen, E.D.Va.1997, 961 F.Supp. 129, reversed 152 F.3d 283. Civil Rights 1029

1267. ---- Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Private companies, law firms, and private employees who were involved in construction of golf course on alleged burial grounds of the Lipan Apache tribe were not liable to lineal descendant under § 1983 for failing to return human remains, absent any allegation that private entities and employees had acted in concert with any governmental entity to deprive him of his rights. Castro Romero v. Becken, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 256 F.3d 349. Civil Rights 1326(5)

1268. ---- Older Americans Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purpose of determining availability of private right of action under § 1983, potential service provider rejected from inclusion in program for provision of legal services under Older Americans Act (OAA) was not "intended beneficiary" of OAA; Congress intended statutory provisions at issue to be for benefit of elders in need of services rather than for benefit of each group competing for grant thereunder, OAA's conveyance of benefits on selected grantees did not indicate Congressional intent to benefit rejected grantees, and rejected provided would not necessarily benefit from injunction requiring agencies to comply with OAA selection criteria. 1269. ---- Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Although plaintiff had right, under section 3789g of this title prohibiting release of certain statistical and criminal history information for purposes unrelated to law enforcement, his use of this section as a remedy was foreclosed by enactment of Privacy Act, section 552a of Title 5, which applies only to agencies of the United States government, and thus action under this section could not be maintained to remedy violations of the first mentioned section 3789g of this title by state and local officials. Polchowski v. Gorris, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 714 F.2d 749. Civil Rights 1040

1270. ---- Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Civil rights complaint alleging that plaintiff's former husband, officers and employees of Tennessee County sheriff's department, and others conspired to deprive plaintiff of custody of her children, which had been awarded to her under terms of Texas divorce decree, failed to state a cause of action under the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act of 1980 [28 U.S.C.A. § 1738A] since that statute pertains to interstate jurisdictional disputes involving conflicting custody decrees, and acts of Tennessee defendants neither failed to enforce nor modified Texas decree. Hooks v. Hooks, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1985, 771 F.2d 935. Conspiracy 18

1271. ---- Privacy act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Rights conferred by section of Privacy Act barring agencies from denying any right because of individual's refusal to disclose his social security account number could be enforced by a private right of action under § 1983. Schwier v. Cox, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 340 F.3d 1284, on remand 412 F.Supp.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1040

A private plaintiff may not maintain a § 1983 action against a state official, in either her official or individual capacity, to remedy alleged violations of the Privacy Act's prohibition against denying a right provided by law because of an individual's refusal to disclose a social security number. Dittman v. California, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 191 F.3d 1020, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2717, 530 U.S. 1261, 147 L.Ed.2d 982. Civil Rights 1040

1272. ---- Procurement provisions, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Express provision for enforcement of federal procurement standards relating to supply of foodstuffs to school district by Secretary forecloses implied private right of action under civil rights statutes [42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983, 1985] by disappointed bidder to challenge award of contract to supply foodstuffs. Sowell's Meats and Services, Inc. v. McSwain, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1986, 788 F.2d 226. Civil Rights 1330(6)

1273. ---- Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Restatement of Bill of Rights for Mental Health Patients which provides that it is the sense of Congress that each state should review and revise, if necessary, its laws to ensure that mental health patients receive required protection and services is merely precatory, and creates no enforceable federal rights. Monahan v. Dorchester Counseling Center, Inc, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 961 F.2d 987, as amended. Action 3; Mental Health 51.5

Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act did not create an individual federal right that could be enforced in §§ 1983 action. Smith v. AuSable Valley Community Mental Health Services, E.D.Mich.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 743. Civil Rights 1029 remedial scheme foreclosing a § 1983 enforcement action. Protection & Advocacy For Persons With Disabilities v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 303, 191 A.L.R. Fed. 661. Civil Rights 1029

Restatement of Bill of Rights for Mental Health Patients did not create federal rights which were enforceable in § 1983 civil rights action. Monahan v. Dorchester Counseling Center, Inc., D.Mass.1991, 770 F.Supp. 43, affirmed 961 F.2d 987, as amended. Civil Rights 1029

1274. ---- Rehabilitation Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Regulations promulgated by Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) with respect to accessibility of housing, pursuant to §§ 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, did not construe or articulate personal rights created by statute, as required for finding that private right of action or cause of action under §§ 1983 existed against city housing authority for enforcement thereof; regulations were generally directed at housing authority's conduct and obligations as grantee, rather than being phrased in terms of any beneficiary's entitlement, related to institutional policy and practice rather than to individual instances of discrimination, and had systemwide focus. Three Rivers Center for Independent Living v. Housing Authority of City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 382 F.3d 412. Civil Rights 1021; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Client failed to state cognizable § 1983 claim with respect to failure of New York Vocational Educational Services for Individuals with Disabilities (VESID) to maintain client's rehabilitation services during his state administrative appeals, since there was no federal requirement to provide "status quo" benefits at time of client's appeal, and client alleged only that state did not comply with its own regulations regarding "status quo" benefits. Doe v. Pfrommer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 148 F.3d 73. Civil Rights 1053

Disabled individual could challenge, under § 1983, state rehabilitation agency's policy of disfavoring graduate school assistance and favoring vocational objectives which required no graduate level training on grounds that policy violated Title I of Rehabilitation Act, which provides for vocational assistance and was enacted under spending clause; Rehabilitation Act created enforceable right to individualized written rehabilitation program (IWRP) consistent with individual's unique strengths and abilities, and Congress did not foreclose enforcement of Title I. Mallett v. Wisconsin Div. of Vocational Rehabilitation, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1997, 130 F.3d 1245. Civil Rights 1069

Disabled client who was receiving rehabilitation from state, in accordance with applicable sections of Rehabilitation Act of 1973, could bring § 1983 action challenging state's policy prohibiting reimbursement for "factory-installed" automotive equipment; statute provided measuring rod for compliance by specifically listing goods and services that states must furnish to eligible clients, any discretion states had in providing services was limited, and Congress did not intend to foreclose enforcement of sections under § 1983. Marshall v. Switzer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 10 F.3d 925, on remand 900 F.Supp. 604. Civil Rights 1021; Civil Rights 1053

Where plaintiff did not prevail in her private action under Rehabilitation Act of 1973, section 794 of Title 29, prohibiting discrimination against otherwise qualified handicapped individuals, this section was not available to her to remedy the violation. Norcross v. Sneed, W.D.Ark.1983, 573 F.Supp. 533, affirmed 755 F.2d 113. Civil Rights 1029

Where the factors do not conclusively show that the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, section 701 et seq. of Title 29, was intended to provide the exclusive means of asserting and protecting the rights secured by the Act, it is proper to apply the general rule and allow an action under this section. Sanders by Sanders v. Marquette Public Schools, W.D.Mich.1983, 561 F.Supp. 1361. See, also, Philipp v. Carey, N.D.N.Y.1981, 517 F.Supp. 513. Civil Rights 1307

Rehabilitation Act of 1973, section 701 et seq. of Title 29, since court had foreclosed private enforcement of the Act, under either section 793 or 794 of Title 29, in case in which it was not shown that the program alleged to be discriminatory was funded by the federal government for the purpose of providing employment. Moxley v. Vernot, S.D.Ohio 1982, 555 F.Supp. 554. Civil Rights 1117

Blind individual alleging that New Jersey Commission for Blind and Visually Impaired and the Commission's executive director unlawfully denied him rehabilitative services and benefits to which he was entitled under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, section 720 et seq. of Title 29, was entitled to enforce provisions of Act against defendants under this section creating a federal cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another, because statutory provisions upon which individual placed primary reliance created rights enforceable under this section, and because Congress did not intend to foreclose a remedy under this section for enforcement of the Act. Ryans v. New Jersey Com'n For The Blind and Visually Impaired, D.C.N.J.1982, 542 F.Supp. 841. Civil Rights 1053

Private right of action was unavailable under federal civil rights statute for Rehabilitation Act violations alleged by disabled persons' advocacy group that sued metropolitan transit authority, since act incorporated express private means of redress that was not overcome by any provision providing for greater protection via other federal statutes. Disability Rights Council of Greater Washington v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3704656. Civil Rights 1313

1275. ---- Resources Conservation and Recovery Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

The comprehensive remedial devices in the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 foreclosed a claim under § 1983. Garcia v. Cecos Intern., Inc., C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1985, 761 F.2d 76.

Resource Conservation and Recovery Act's (RCRA) statutory scheme was sufficiently comprehensive to preclude cause of action under § 1983. Leland v. Moran, N.D.N.Y.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 153, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 133, 2003 WL 22533185.

1276. ---- Safe Schools Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

School authorities did not violate Safe Schools Act by showing deliberate indifference to elementary school student attacked by bullies, so as to be subject to suit under § 1983; authorities were not under notice of potential liability under Act, as its primary purpose was to provide funding to ensure school safety and there was no decision involving its use to impose liability for injuries to students. Stevenson ex rel. Stevenson v. Martin County Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.C.1999, 93 F.Supp.2d 644, affirmed 3 Fed.Appx. 25, 2001 WL 98358, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 54, 534 U.S. 821, 151 L.Ed.2d 23. Civil Rights 1065; Schools 89.11(1)

1277. ---- Social Security Act generally, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Provision of Title IV-D of Social Security Act governing distribution of state-collected child support did not, when read as a whole, create federal right individually enforceable under §§ 1983 to state's strict compliance with statute's terms on part of custodial parents, given that statute, which focused on relationships between different federal programs and provided guidelines for state agencies, was not couched in mandatory terms. Walters v. Weiss, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 392 F.3d 306. Civil Rights 1057

Provisions of Title IV-D of Social Security Act which set forth enforcement obligations which must be met by a state plan for child and spousal support, and federal regulations setting forth guidelines states must use in locating noncustodial parents and standards for monitoring compliance with support obligations, do not give rise to a federal right that is enforceable through private cause of action under § 1983. Clark v. Portage County, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 281 F.3d 602. Civil Rights 1057; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Social Security Act (SSA) does not preclude private action pursuant to § 1983 to compel state agency to apply proper standards to initial disability determinations. Laird v. Stilwill, N.D.Iowa 1997, 982 F.Supp. 1345. Civil Rights 1313; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Alleged deprivation of Social Security disability claimants' right to have disability determinations made by doctors was not itself injury sufficient to support cause of action under § 1983. Goodnight v. Chater, D.Utah 1997, 960 F.Supp. 1538. Civil Rights 1052

This section could be used by two needy homeless families to enforce their purported right to emergency shelter under section 601 et seq. of this title. Koster v. Webb, E.D.N.Y.1983, 598 F.Supp. 1134.

Various federal and state judges were entitled to judicial immunity in civil rights action brought by recipient of social security disability benefits, alleging that judges violated his constitutional rights by ignoring evidence of his disability. Spearman v. U.S., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 80 Fed.Appx. 513, 2003 WL 22535208, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(8)

1278. ---- Sportfish Recreation Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal Aid in Sportfish Recreation Act does not create federal right, enforceable under § 1983, to equal access for boats of common horsepower ratings at boat launch facilities constructed or maintained under Act; portion of regulation promulgated under Act, allegedly requiring funded facilities to accommodate power boats with common horsepower ratings, was too far removed from Congressional intent to create enforceable right itself. Kissimmee River Valley Sportsman Ass'n v. City of Lakeland, C.A.11 (Fla.) 2001, 250 F.3d 1324, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 613, 534 U.S. 1040, 151 L.Ed.2d 537. Civil Rights 1029

1279. ---- Telecommunications Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Individual may not enforce, through §§ 1983 action, limitations placed by Telecommunications Act (TCA) on regulation by local zoning authorities of facilities for wireless communications; Congress did not mean the judicial remedy expressly authorized by TCA to coexist with alternative remedy available in §§ 1983 action, and enforcement of TCA through §§ 1983 would distort the scheme of expedited judicial review and limited remedies created by TCA. City of Rancho Palos Verdes, Cal. v. Abrams, U.S.2005, 125 S.Ct. 1453, 544 U.S. 113, 161 L.Ed.2d 316, on remand 406 F.3d 1094. Civil Rights 1073; Civil Rights 1310

Section 1983 remedies, including right to attorney fees for prevailing party under § 1988, are unavailable in suit to enforce rights granted by Telecommunications Act; Act's conferral of right to sue is presumed to entitle successful plaintiff to usual remedies, which do not include attorney fees. PrimeCo Personal Communications, Ltd. Partnership v. City of Mequon, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 352 F.3d 1147. Civil Rights 1073; Civil Rights 1310; Civil Rights 1479

Telecommunications Act of 1996 creates a comprehensive remedial scheme that furnishes private judicial remedies, so that a claim for a violation of Act may not be asserted under § 1983. Nextel Partners Inc. v. Kingston Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2002, 286 F.3d 687.

Issue of whether city's ordinance, resolution, and franchise agreement with telecommunications carrier imposed burden on interstate commerce incommensurate with local benefits secured involved fact question that could not be resolved on motion to dismiss carrier's §§ 1983 claim against city for violation of dormant Commerce Clause.

Qwest Communications Corp. v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 191. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

County failed to rebut presumption that subsection of Telecommunications Act (TCA), that precluded state or local governments from having effect of prohibiting ability of any entity to provide any interstate or intrastate telecommunications service, created federal right enforceable under §§ 1983 by federally licensed provider of commercial mobile radio service, rather than just statutory right; subsection of TCA and §§ 1983 were not incompatible, remedy under TCA statute governing removal of barriers to entry was not comprehensive in nature, and savings clause in TCA was broad, sweeping, and gave clear indication that Congress intended to leave federal laws untouched and unaltered. Sprint Telephony PCS, L.P. v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 898, opinion clarified 2004 WL 859333. Civil Rights 1041

Remedy was available under § 1983 for town zoning board's violation of the Telecommunications Act, resulting from its decision to deny wireless communications services provider's zoning variance application to build wireless communications tower, which constituted "effective prohibition" of provision of wireless communications services in town; Act did not provide comprehensive enforcement scheme intended to supplant § 1983 remedy, Act created substantive rights, and enforcement of provider's rights under Act through § 1983 action did not strain judicial competence. Omnipoint Holdings, Inc. v. Town of Westford, D.Mass.2002, 206 F.Supp.2d 166. Civil Rights 1073

Action under § 1983, seeking vindication for violation of federal constitutional or statutory rights, may not be based solely upon violation of Telecommunications Act. Nextel Communications of Mid-Atlantic, Inc. v. Town of Randolph, D.Mass.2002, 193 F.Supp.2d 311.

Telecommunications Act's (TCA) proscription of prohibition or effective prohibition of personal wireless services is not enforceable via § 1983, since Act itself provides complete private enforcement scheme. Sprint Spectrum, L.P. v. Town of Ogunquit, D.Me.2001, 175 F.Supp.2d 77.

Violation of Telecommunications Act (TCA) can support suit under § 1983 for violation of federal rights. SBA Communications Inc. v. Zoning Com'n of Town of Franklin, D.Conn.2001, 164 F.Supp.2d 280.

Local public service commission's imposition of requirements on incumbent local exchange carrier (ILEC) which violated Federal Telecommunications Act of 1996 was not actionable under § 1983; Act's provisions were designed to foster competition, not benefit ILECs. Verizon North, Inc. v. Strand, W.D.Mich.2000, 140 F.Supp.2d 803, affirmed in part and vacated in part 309 F.3d 935, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 1649, 538 U.S. 946, 155 L.Ed.2d 488. Civil Rights 1041

Telecommunications service provider did not have property right in obtaining zoning permit to erect wireless telecommunications tower, and thus local authority's denial of permit was not violation of procedural or substantive due process, regardless of how egregious its conduct; both federal and local law gave authority discretion to make zoning decisions. Vertical Broadcasting, Inc. v. Town of Southampton, E.D.N.Y.2000, 84 F.Supp.2d 379. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Allegation that state education officials impeded effort by public utility licensed by Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to provide telecommunications services by denying its application to install cell site on roof of high school stated § 1983 claim for violation of utility's rights under Telecommunications Act of 1996. Sprint Spectrum L.P. v. Mills, S.D.N.Y.1999, 65 F.Supp.2d 161. Civil Rights 1395(1)

For purposes of determining whether it created federal right that could support § 1983 claim, section of Telecommunications Act, which stated that provisions governing removal of barriers to entry did not affect local government's right to manage public rights-of-way and to require reasonable compensation, on competitively neutral and nondiscriminatory basis, for use of rights-of-way, did not impose any mandatory obligation on local government. Cablevision of Boston, Inc. v. Public Imp. Com'n of City of Boston, D.Mass.1999, 38 F.Supp.2d 46, affirmed 184 F.3d 88. Civil Rights 1041

1280. ---- United States Housing Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Nothing in the Housing Act or the Brooke Amendment evidenced that Congress intended to preclude a § 1983 claim by tenants living in low-income housing projects alleging that city redevelopment and housing authority overbilled them for utilities and thereby violated rent ceiling imposed by the Amendment and implementing regulations of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Wright v. City of Roanoke Redevelopment and Housing Authority, U.S.Va.1987, 107 S.Ct. 766, 479 U.S. 418, 93 L.Ed.2d 781.

Tenants of federally subsidized housing could not redress via § 1983 alleged violations of United States Housing Act and its implementing regulations establishing Section 8 moderate rehabilitation program housing quality standards; Act placed conditions upon property owners' receipt of federal assistance rather than conferring rights on class of tenants, and used imprecise language, i.e. "decent, safe, and sanitary." Banks v. Dallas Housing Authority, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 271 F.3d 605. Civil Rights 1082

Tenants in federal public housing have neither a § 1983 cause of action nor an implied private right of action to enforce rent provisions of the Brooke Amendment. Nelson v. Greater Gadsden Housing Authority, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1986, 802 F.2d 405. Civil Rights 1330(3); United States 82(3.5)

Individual public housing tenant could not bring action under the civil rights act of 1871 [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] for public landlord's random and unauthorized failure to maintain properly her dwelling unit on theory that such action violates provision of the United States Housing Act which calls for decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings. (Friedman, J., did not join holding.) Samuels v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1985, 770 F.2d 184, 248 U.S.App.D.C. 128, on remand 650 F.Supp. 482. Civil Rights 1331(3)

Housing Act provision concerning housing quality standards and implementing regulations did not create enforceable federal right, as required to support action under § 1983 alleging that city housing authority violated statute and regulations brought by tenants of public housing development on behalf of estate of their two-year-old grandson who was killed in fire in development; statute set standards for distribution of federal funds, but did not create individual entitlement to public housing unit in particular condition, and right asserted was too vague and amorphous, since it would have varied depending on content of local and state building codes. Hill v. San Francisco Housing Authority, N.D.Cal.2002, 207 F.Supp.2d 1021. Civil Rights 1082

Private cause of action was available under § 1983 to residents of public housing project for alleged violation of regulation, promulgated under United States Housing Act, requiring that a public housing lease reasonably accommodate tenants' guests; tenants were clearly within class of persons whom regulation was intended to benefit, regulation was not too vague for effective interpretation and enforcement, and use of "shall" in regulation indicated it was mandatory rather than merely precatory. Diggs v. Housing Authority of City of Frederick, D.Md.1999, 67 F.Supp.2d 522. Civil Rights 1330(3)

Section of United States Housing Act which sets out terms public housing authority lease must contain does not create private right of action or enforceable rights under federal civil rights statute. Thomas v. Chicago Housing Authority, N.D.Ill.1997, 981 F.Supp. 558. Action 3; Civil Rights 1082

Policy declarations in United States Housing Act, seeking to promote decent, safe, and sanitary housing, did not create rights in public housing tenants that could be enforced through § 1983 civil rights claim; disputed statute set forth policy language and did not contain unambiguous language establishing disputed rights. Imes v. Philadelphia

Housing Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 928 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1082

United States Housing Act and accompanying regulations, requiring public housing authorities to include obligation to maintain dwelling unit and project in decent, safe, and sanitary condition, established residents' right to have lease include required protections, but did not create rights to maintenance or repair that could be enforced in § 1983 civil rights suit. Imes v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 928 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1082

Section 8 Existing Housing Program statutory admission preferences for Certificate Program and Voucher Program were mandatory, self-executing and accorded "right" enforceable under § 1983 in favor of families perceived by Congress to be in greatest need of housing assistance. Drake v. Pierce, W.D.Wash.1988, 691 F.Supp. 264.

Housing assistance participant had implied private right of action to redress alleged violation of federal regulations under Housing Act in action brought pursuant to § 1983. Holly v. Housing Authority of New Orleans, E.D.La.1988, 684 F.Supp. 1363. Civil Rights 1330(3)

Requirement that public housing agency use leases which obligate public housing agency to maintain housing project in decent, safe, and sanitary condition did not give residents of housing project right to bring action in federal court based on alleged breach of underlying lease and, therefore, was not actionable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, relating to deprivation of civil rights. Edwards v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1985, 628 F.Supp. 333, affirmed 821 F.2d 651, 261 U.S.App.D.C. 163. Civil Rights 1082; Civil Rights 1330(3)

1281. ---- Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Provision of Relocation Assistance Act for uniform policy on real property acquisition practices does not create rights actionable under federal civil rights statute. Beachy v. Board of Aviation Com'rs of City of Kokomo, Ind., S.D.Ind.1988, 699 F.Supp. 742. Civil Rights 1071

By embarking pursuant to highway project, upon program of displacement of plaintiffs and class they represented without providing adequate relocation facilities and other assistance required by the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970, § 4601 et seq. of this title, state defendants had, acting under color of state law, deprived plaintiffs and the class of rights, privileges or immunities secured by law, thus they violated this section and plaintiffs were entitled to award of attorney fee under § 1988 of this title. La Raza Unida of Southern Alameda County v. Volpe, N.D.Cal.1977, 440 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1479

1282. ---- Vietnam Era Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged violation of Veterans' Reemployment Rights Act could not support civil rights suit under § 1983. Grady v. El Paso Community College, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 979 F.2d 1111. Civil Rights 1120

Allegations that city police officials maintained policy prohibiting membership in active reserves or National Guard by police officers and requiring police recruits to resign from active reserve participation stated § 1983 claim for violation of Vietnam Era Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act and stated claim for violation of New Hampshire statute prohibiting discrimination against members of or those expressing interest in National Guard. Boyle v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Portsmouth, D.N.H.1989, 717 F.Supp. 23. Armed Services 122(3); Civil Rights 1395(8)

1283. ---- Water Pollution Control Act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights

generally

Existence of express remedies contained in Federal Water Pollution Control Act, § 1251 et seq. of Title 33, and Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972, § 1401 et seq. of Title 33, demonstrated Congressional intent to supplant any remedy that otherwise would be available under this section. Middlesex County Sewerage Authority v. National Sea Clammers Ass'n, U.S.N.J.1981, 101 S.Ct. 2615, 453 U.S. 1, 69 L.Ed.2d 435.

Suit may not be brought under general federal question jurisdiction or the federal civil rights statute to enforce the Clean Water Act. City of Las Vegas, Nevada v. Clark County, Nevada, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1984, 755 F.2d 697.

This section may, absent other constraints, provide protection for rights secured by Federal Water Pollution Control Act, § 1251 et seq. of Title 33. Chesapeake Bay Foundation, Inc. v. Virginia State Water Control Bd., E.D.Va.1980, 501 F.Supp. 821.

1284. ---- Wiretapping act, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiffs were barred, in their § 1983 action alleging unconstitutional use of wiretapping, from recovery under Federal Wiretapping Statute; defendants were local officials who obtained wiretap order from state judge, and California Wiretapping Statute was not preempted by federal law. Whitaker v. Garcetti, C.D.Cal.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1132. States 18.81; Telecommunications 1433

County employees' claims against county and county official under federal wiretapping statute did not preclude their § 1983 claims as to those same defendants, notwithstanding fact that claims arose out of same tape-recording incident, as employees' § 1983 claims were based on alleged violation of constitutional, rather than statutory, rights. Dorris v. Absher, M.D.Tenn.1997, 959 F.Supp. 813, affirmed in part, reversed in part 179 F.3d 420. Civil Rights 1311

1285. ---- Miscellaneous statutes, statutory violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged violations of Interstate Corrections Compact (ICC) procedures were not violations of federal law, and therefore not actionable under §§ 1983. Smith v. Cummings, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 445 F.3d 1254. Civil Rights 1095

Allegations in civil rights complaint filed by Virgin Islands taxpayer, that Virgin Islands' method of valuing real property subject to taxation based upon its replacement cost and declaration value did not result in property tax which was based on "actual value" of property involved, in violation of federal statute governing property taxation in the Virgin Islands, adequately alleged federal claim, over which federal court could exercise jurisdiction. Bluebeard's Castle, Inc. v. Government of Virgin Islands, C.A.3 (Virgin Islands) 2003, 321 F.3d 394, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 153, 540 U.S. 823, 157 L.Ed.2d 44. Federal Courts 1023

Real estate appraiser could maintain cause of action under § 1983 for alleged violation by state officials of federal statute that required state to allow out-of-state appraisers to engage temporarily in the business of appraising, if certain requirements were met; appraiser, who alleged that he qualified as temporary real estate appraiser under statute, was intended beneficiary of statute, statute imposed binding obligations on state, and appraiser's purported right to temporary license was enforceable by the judiciary. Groten v. California, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 251 F.3d 844. Civil Rights 1071; Civil Rights 1073

Federal regulation requiring local Head Start agencies to establish and implement written personnel policies for staff that had to include procedures for termination of employment did not create right under §§ 1983 that was enforceable by terminated teacher; she was not member of class of Head Start Act's intended beneficiaries, and no statutory provision conferred personal right to continued employment in Head Start program. Holocheck v.

Luzerne County Head Start, Inc., M.D.Pa.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 491. Civil Rights 1133

Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act (RLPHRA) and Community Development Act (CDA) do not encompass privately enforceable rights under § 1983. Mair v. City of Albany, New York, N.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 237. Civil Rights 1082

Workforce Investment Act (WIA) provisions prohibiting discrimination based on political affiliation or belief and requiring adoption of implementing regulations did not expressly bar § 1983 action for political discrimination brought by former employee of municipal consortium operating under the WIA. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1126

Private right of action, enforceable through § 1983, exists in relation to Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP) statute, despite voluntary nature of state's participation in HEAP program. Kapps v. Wing, E.D.N.Y.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 866, affirmed in part, vacated in part 404 F.3d 105. Civil Rights 1082

Natural Gas Act (NGA) did not confer on natural gas pipeline company a right not be regulated by states, enforceable under § 1983, since NGA had no individualized, rights-creating language in favor of natural gas pipeline company. Northern Nat. Gas Co. v. Munns, S.D.Iowa 2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 1103. Civil Rights 1029

Violations of Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA) and Nursing Home Reform Act (NHRA) may form basis for § 1983 claim. Tinder v. Lewis County Nursing Home Dist., E.D.Mo.2001, 207 F.Supp.2d 951.

1286. Regulation violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Private parties cannot enforce regulations under §§ 1983 when the regulations do more than define or flesh out the content of a specific right conferred upon the plaintiffs by the enabling statute and instead give the statute a scope beyond that Congress contemplated; under §§ 1983, therefore, regulations give rise to a right of action only insofar as they construe a personal right that a statute creates. Three Rivers Center for Independent Living v. Housing Authority of City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 382 F.3d 412. Civil Rights 1027

Disparate-impact regulations promulgated by Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) under Title VI of Civil Rights Act of 1964 did not create right enforceable via § 1983, since alleged federal right, freedom from disparate-impact discrimination in administration of programs or activities receiving EPA assistance regardless of discriminatory intent, did not appear explicitly in authorizing statute, which concerned agencies' effectuation of Act's intentional discrimination provision. South Camden Citizens in Action v. New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2001, 274 F.3d 771, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 2621, 536 U.S. 939, 153 L.Ed.2d 804, on remand 254 F.Supp.2d 486. Civil Rights 1055

If statute itself confers specific right upon plaintiff, and valid regulation merely further defines or fleshes out content of that right, then statute--in conjunction with regulation--may create federal right as further defined by regulation, so that regulation may be enforceable under § 1983; however, if regulation defines content of statutory provision that creates no federal right under three-prong "federal right" test, or if regulation goes beyond explicating specific content of statutory provision and imposes distinct obligations in order to further broad objectives underlying statutory provision, regulation is too far removed from Congressional intent to constitute "federal right" enforceable under § 1983. Harris v. James, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 127 F.3d 993. Civil Rights 1027

A regulatory violation, like a violation of state law, is not inherently sufficient to support a § 1983 claim. Boveri v. Town of Saugus, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 113 F.3d 4. Civil Rights 1031

Allegation by tenants of federally-funded public housing that public housing officials had violated applicable

Department of Housing and Urban Development regulations stated cognizable claim under the civil rights act of 1871 [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983], where allegation was that officials had systematically failed to provide public housing tenants with administrative grievance procedures mandated by the United States Housing Act. Samuels v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1985, 770 F.2d 184, 248 U.S.App.D.C. 128, on remand 650 F.Supp. 482. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Declaratory ruling by Federal Communications Commission (FCC) did not unambiguously, with explicit rights-creating terms, indicate congressional intent to confer individual rights to construct radio towers on amateur radio operators, even though such persons belonged to class that would benefit from limited federal preemption of local zoning laws established under ruling, and therefore ruling did not create rights enforceable by amateur radio operators under § 1983. Bosscher v. Township of Algoma, W.D.Mich.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 791. Civil Rights 1073

Regulation allowing health care providers to apply for Medicaid grant did not create any federal right enforceable under § 1983. Planned Parenthood of Cent. Tex. v. Sanchez, W.D.Tex.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 590, remanded 403 F.3d 324. Civil Rights 1052

Even if agency regulations could establish federal right enforceable under § 1983, regulations governing manufacture and control of investigational biological drugs used in clinical trials and establishing protections for human research subjects would not give rise to private right of action; regulations were not phrased in terms of persons benefitted, regulations were designed to control aggregate behavior of research facilities, investigators, and drug manufacturers by subjecting them to overarching standards of conduct, and enforcement sections of the regulations provided for regulatory action. Wright v. Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center, W.D.Wash.2002, 269 F.Supp.2d 1286, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1029; Civil Rights 1045

Airport and Airway Improvement Act (AAIA) section and Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) regulation, requiring airport operator to allow aircraft owners to fuel their own aircraft, were enforceable under § 1983. Cedarhurst Air Charter, Inc. v. Waukesha County, E.D.Wis.2000, 110 F.Supp.2d 891. Civil Rights 1029

State's alleged failure to obtain advance federal approval of proposed change in pharmacy dispensing fee did not give rise to § 1983 claim by pharmacists; source of alleged requirement was regulation and not statute, and any requirement of advance notice was not intended to benefit health care providers. Florida Pharmacy Ass'n v. Cook, N.D.Fla.1998, 17 F.Supp.2d 1293. Civil Rights 1052

Federal regulation alone does not create federal right for purposes of § 1983 cause of action. Brantley By and Through Brantley v. Independent School Dist. No. 625, St. Paul Public Schools, D.Minn.1996, 936 F.Supp. 649. Civil Rights 1027

Class consisting of Medicaid recipients who, as result of agency error or delay, incurred out-of-pocket expenses for authorized Medicaid services and were not provided full reimbursement for those expenses had right under federal corrective action regulation which was enforceable under § 1983; Medicaid recipients were intended beneficiaries of corrective action regulation and whether or not payments were made directly to recipients was irrelevant, participating states were bound by regulation to make corrective payments promptly and recipients sought their out-of-pocket expenditures, a definite and precise mathematical amount, such that their asserted interest was not too vague and amorphous as to be beyond competence of judiciary to enforce. Greenstein by Horowitz v. Bane, S.D.N.Y.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1054. Civil Rights 1052

Allegation that Oklahoma officials violated Boren Amendment and its implementing regulations because Oklahoma's 1992 Medicaid nursing facility rate did not properly take into account economic trends and conditions, and was based solely on budgetary considerations was sufficient to state claim against officials, based on violation of nursing facilities' procedural right to findings and assurances that rates are reasonable and adequate to cover costs of care. Oklahoma Nursing Home Ass'n v. Demps, W.D.Okla.1992, 792 F.Supp. 721. Health 487(3)

1287. Court order violation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Consent decrees are not automatically enforceable through civil actions under § 1983. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253 . Civil Rights 1056; Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

Federal civil rights action is not appropriate means by which to seek enforcement of consent decree; remedial decrees do not create or enlarge constitutional rights, or create rights secured by laws sufficient to serve as basis for civil rights liability, and allowing enforcement of consent decrees in civil rights actions would discourage prison officials from agreeing to such benefits. Klein v. Zavaras, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 80 F.3d 432, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1056; Civil Rights 1090; Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

Consent decree may not be enforced through damage claim under § 1983. DeGidio v. Pung, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1990, 920 F.2d 525. Civil Rights 1056; Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

Federal court order requiring at least three men to be assigned to each prison disciplinary unit could not alone serve as basis for liability under the civil rights statute, § 1983, to correctional officer injured in altercation with inmate, even though correctional officer was only guard working on particular cell block at time of his injury. Galloway v. State of La., C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 817 F.2d 1154. Civil Rights 1126

1288. Property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

For purposes of showing protection of due process clause necessary to bring § 1983 claim, typical claim of entitlement is based on specific statutory or contractual provision and even rules or mutually explicit understandings may support due process claim of entitlement; property interest may be created by state statute, administrative rule, or explicit understanding. Adamson v. City of Provo, Utah, D.Utah 1993, 819 F.Supp. 934. Constitutional Law 277(1)

State law must provide plaintiff with a legitimate claim of entitlement and not simply a unilateral expectation of receiving alleged property in order for plaintiff to recover under this section for deprivation of a constitutionally protected right. Genesco Entertainment, a Div. of Lymutt Industries, Inc. v. Koch, S.D.N.Y.1984, 593 F.Supp. 743 . Civil Rights 1071

1289. ---- Application approval, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Wrecking yard owners who had not obtained city approval of their application for state wrecking license renewal lacked protectable property interest in renewal, precluding §§ 1983 due process action against city alleging improper delays in approval; governing state statute gave city discretion to deny renewal application for noncompliance with local regulations, and thus city approval was condition precedent to reissuance. Thornton v. City of St. Helens, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 425 F.3d 1158. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Applicant for renewal of bail bond license had no valid license, and thus no property interest in license which was protected by due process, when county bail bond board refused to consider renewal application; applicant had sought renewal based on judicial decision to reinstate her expired license, but, before board refused consideration, decision had been reversed on appeal and writ of error denied by state supreme court. Burns v. Harris County Bail Bond Bd., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1998, 139 F.3d 513, rehearing denied. Bail 60; Constitutional Law 277(1)

Landfill applicant, which had received favorable recommendation from county's technical review and solid waste management committees, still had no "constitutionally protected property interest" in having its application approved such as might provide basis for § 1983 claim, where committees' recommendation was not binding on county board that reviewed landfill application. Michigan Environmental Resources Associates, Inc. v. Macomb County, E.D.Mich.1987, 669 F.Supp. 158, affirmed 875 F.2d 865. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Property owners, who had obtained a conditional approval from town to effect that plans submitted for mobile home park were acceptable as far as they went but that other matters had to be addressed prior to approval, had only a unilateral expectation that the plans might be approved and had no constitutionally protected property interest under Wisconsin law in completion of project in accordance with such plan; such a constitutionally protected property interest did not subsequently arise when town board reaffirmed its conditional approval before owners had complied with several of the conditions. Molgaard v. Town of Caledonia, E.D.Wis.1981, 527 F.Supp. 1073, affirmed 696 F.2d 58. Constitutional Law 278.2(1)

1290. ---- Bar admission, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Individuals who never applied for bar admission did not have due process liberty or property interest in practice of law and, thus, individuals could not maintain § 1983 action against judges and attorneys respecting actions taken against unauthorized practice of law. Ippolito v. State of Fla., M.D.Fla.1993, 824 F.Supp. 1562. Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 287.2(5)

1291. ---- Bond acceptance, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Bail bonding agent did not have protected liberty or property interest under due process clause in having her bail bonds accepted at county jail, and thus was not entitled to notice or a hearing before being removed from county's list of approved bail bondsmen by county sheriff. Baldwin v. Daniels, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2001, 250 F.3d 943, rehearing denied. Bail 60; Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 296(1)

1292. ---- Contracts, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Construction contractor did not have protected property interest in his status as responsible bidder for government agency construction contracts, and thus, alleged wrongful determination by Puerto Rico Public Housing Authority (PRPHA) that contractor was not a responsible bidder, which allegedly resulted in loss of future contracting work with government, did not violate contractor's procedural due process rights. Redondo-Borges v. U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 421 F.3d 1. Territories 25

Unsuccessful bidder on contract to provide pay telephone service in city prison did not have property interest in its bid that was protected by due process clause, as would potentially support § 1983 claim; bidder was not awarded bid by city council, statements of city official could not constitute acceptance of bid due to his lack of authority to do so, and bidder could not show an abuse of the unfettered discretion that was held by city officials in awarding bid. Michigan Paytel Joint Venture v. City of Detroit, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2002, 287 F.3d 527. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Foster care facility's contract with department of health and human services was not a protected property interest under the due process clause, for purposes of § 1983 action brought by operator of facility against child abuse detective after contract was cancelled, where the contract was terminable at will and therefore did not have the permanence of tenure, and the parties did not have a dependency relationship similar to that created by welfare benefits. Omni Behavioral Health v. Miller, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2002, 285 F.3d 646, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Electric membership corporations failed to state § 1983 claims against Georgia Department of Corrections officials for substantive due process violations, arising from award of contracts to electric utility for provision of electric service to new prison, alleging that officials violated state law competitive bidding requirements and deprived corporations of property right, as § 1983 substantive due process claims arising from nonlegislative deprivations of state-created property interests were not cognizable. Flint Elec. Membership Corp. v. Whitworth, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1309, modified 77 F.3d 1321. Constitutional Law 276(2); States 98

Nonprofit administrator of Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC) had no "property interest" in funding beyond date existing contract expired, for purposes of § 1983 civil rights claim alleging violation of due process rights by state's decision to not renew contract. Southeast Kansas Community Action Program Inc. v. Secretary of Agriculture of U.S., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1992, 967 F.2d 1452. Constitutional Law 277(2)

Alleged simple breach of contract between laundry service and state university hospital did not establish necessary deprivation by university of constitutionally protected property interest, within scope of § 1983 civil rights action. Medical Laundry Services, a Div. of OPLCO, Inc. v. Board of Trustees of University of Alabama, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1990, 906 F.2d 571. Civil Rights 1041

Absent property interest in nontermination of contract to maintain city's parking meters, contractor had no federal claim against city for deprivation of property based upon city's premature termination of contract, even if city had initially decided to proceed under default provision of contract or even if contractor was constructively terminated prior to notification of city's subsequent decision to terminate under unconditional termination provision; contractor's remedy, if any, was state claim for breach of contract. S & D Maintenance Co., Inc. v. Goldin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 844 F.2d 962. Civil Rights 1041; Municipal Corporations 254

Independent contractor did not have a property interest in her contract with the government to provide special education services, as required for contractor's §§ 1983 claim under the Fourteenth Amendment alleging she was denied due process, where the contract provided that the agreement could be terminated without cause. McGuire v. Warren, S.D.N.Y.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 530. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Existence of a state contract, by itself, does not confer upon the contracting parties a due process-protected property interest, and breach of contract is not per se actionable under §§ 1983. Behavioral Healthcare Partners, Inc. v. Gonzalez-Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 191. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Attorney hired by Puerto Rico municipality to represent it in legal action for recovery of deficiencies in the payment of municipal taxes for commercial activities, and accounting corporation hired by municipality to provide investigative, managerial, and technical accounting services in aid of that legal action, did not have property interests in their professional services contracts with municipality, as required to establish §§ 1983 claim that municipality and mayor deprived them of due process rights by failing to pay them for services rendered under their contracts. Ramirez v. Arlequin, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 416, affirmed in part, reversed in part 447 F.3d 19. Constitutional Law 276(2); Constitutional Law 277(1); Territories 23

Municipality did not infringe upon entrepreneur's due process rights by terminating his five-year lease agreement with municipality without hearing, since contract expressly allowed for early termination of contract for a party's failure to comply with its terms and conditions, among which was timely payment of rent, and entrepreneur failed to comply with terms and conditions of lease agreement. Colon Rodriguez v. Lopez Bonilla, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 333. Constitutional Law 291.6; Municipal Corporations 722

Low bidder on county construction contract did not have property right to awarding of contract which would have given rise to § 1983 cause of action where Texas County Purchasing Act gave county right to reject all bids and rebid project. DRT Mechanical Corp. v. Collin County, Tex., E.D.Tex.1994, 845 F.Supp. 1159. Constitutional Law 277(1) with township, and so he failed to state cognizable § 1983 civil rights cause of action based on claim that township police chief deprived him of his constitutional right to procedural due process in revoking his towing privileges without hearing; at most salvager had garden variety contract with township, rather than a constitutionally protected entitlement. Garner v. Township of Wrightstown, E.D.Pa.1993, 819 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 16 F.3d 403. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Breaches or nonrenewals of contracts do not amount to deprivation of property without due process actionable under § 1983. Cook v. Board of Sup'rs of Lowndes County, Miss., N.D.Miss.1992, 806 F.Supp. 610. Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

Contract awarded by city housing authority for rehabilitation of low income housing units did not create property interest protectible under Fourteenth Amendment, and, thus, contractor could not prevail on its claim that termination without notice and hearing deprived it of property without due process and violated equal protection. Linan-Faye Const. Co. Inc. v. Housing Authority of City of Camden, D.N.J.1992, 797 F.Supp. 376, affirmed 49 F.3d 915, rehearing and rehearing in banc denied. Constitutional Law 225.4; Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 278(1.3); Municipal Corporations 354

Constitutionally protected property interests can be created by explicit or implied contractual terms. Pack v. O'Quinn, E.D.Ky.1990, 747 F.Supp. 358. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Operator of automobile races had a cognizable constitutional property interest in license agreement with owner of amusement park where races were held; license agreement was renewed annually as a matter of course, and agreement specifically limited circumstances under which it could be terminated to certain events; operator's interest, although arguably a revocable license within meaning of Pennsylvania law, was much more than meager, transitory or uncertain. LARA, Inc. v. South Whitehall Tp., E.D.Pa.1989, 729 F.Supp. 415. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Even assuming that unsuccessful bidder on state contract had been deprived of a property interest, such interest could not be vindicated under this section. Estey Corp. v. Matzke, N.D.Ill.1976, 431 F.Supp. 468. Civil Rights 1041

Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis, and Treatment Program (EPSDT) of Medicaid Act created individual rights in foster children, enforceable under § 1983, to screening services at intervals that met standards of medical and dental practice and when medically necessary; eligible children under age 21, including foster children, were clearly intended beneficiaries of EPSDT, since language of EPSDT focused on needs of individual children, EPSDT lacked enforcement mechanism, and EPSDT was not too vague and amorphous to be enforced by judiciary. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1057

1293. ---- Development rights, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even if Puerto Rico planning board deprived real estate developers of protected property interest when board revoked developers' land use permit for shopping center development, adequate post-deprivation procedures existed, in form of administrative and judicial review of board's decision, and therefore developers' procedural due process rights were not violated. SFW Arecibo, Ltd. v. Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 415 F.3d 135, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 829, 163 L.Ed.2d 706. Zoning And Planning 471.5

Private developer which had sought to build housing and retail properties on city land pursuant to redevelopment project under Florida Community Redevelopment Act (CRA) did not have property interest protected by due process clause arising out of redevelopment project even though city commission had formally approved its redevelopment proposal, and could not recover in federal civil rights action against city after approval for plan was terminated; under CRA, city commission's final decisions about selection of proposals and execution of contracts were fully discretionary. Circa Ltd. v. City of Miami, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 79 F.3d 1057. Constitutional Law 277(1); Municipal Corporations 325

For purposes of developer's § 1983 action against city, developer acquired no "property interest" to redevelop naval base that United States offered to sell city; Florida Community Redevelopment Act, which provided for creation of agency to supervise redevelopment of annex, did not alone create protected property interest and, although developer and city executed several agreements, only agreement which city and agency signed stated that developer would acquire no vested property right. Key West Harbour Development Corp. v. City of Key West, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 987 F.2d 723. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Developer did not have any protected property interest in letter of credit given to village or in funds underlying it, and thus could not be denied due process when village drew on letter of credit due to developer's failure to provide replacement letter, in light of qualifications imposed on developer's expectations by development contract and village subdivision ordinance. Union Pacific R. Co. v. Village of South Barrington, N.D.Ill.1997, 958 F.Supp. 1285 . Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 278.2(1)

1294. ---- Estoppel rights, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Equitable doctrine premised on statutory ambiguity, which state court of equity applied to estop municipality from relying on its right to deny landowner's application for special exception, did not give rise to cognizable property right under § 1983, since it did not rise to level of either certainty or very strong likelihood that application would have been granted, which is necessary to state legitimate claim of entitlement. Biser v. Town of Bel Air, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 991 F.2d 100, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 182, 510 U.S. 864, 126 L.Ed.2d 141. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Landowner did not have "protectable property interest" in building permits, and thus, Florida law did not provide landowner with right to recover money damages for county's rescission of permits; if landowner acquired any right at all as result of his reliance on permits, it was right to pursue equitable estoppel under proper circumstances. Marine One, Inc. v. Manatee County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1989, 877 F.2d 892, rehearing denied 898 F.2d 1490. Civil Rights 1073; Constitutional Law 277(1)

Provision of Pennsylvania Constitution prohibiting governmental agencies' use of expunged criminal convictions in consideration of application for "license, certificate, registration or permit" was not applicable to state police department, since it was not licensing agency; thus, provision could not create protected property interest, for due process purposes, on part of applicant for cadet position who had past expunged theft conviction and who was automatically disqualified for past criminal activity. Foxworth v. Pennsylvania State Police, E.D.Pa.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 523, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 3470601. States 53

1295. ---- Franchises, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Unsuccessful bidder for municipal solid waste disposal franchise did not have protected property right in franchise, and thus could not sustain § 1983 claim that city violated its due process rights by alleged arbitrary award of contract; inasmuch as unsuccessful bidder's bid contemplated initial use of city landfill, contrary to bidding specification that another landfill be used, bidder could not have had legitimate expectation of being awarded contract. L & H Sanitation, Inc. v. Lake City Sanitation, Inc., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1985, 769 F.2d 517. Civil Rights 1041

Once city adopted cable communications franchise agreement ordinance and issued requests for proposals to interested parties soliciting sealed bids, it was under a statutory obligation to exercise its discretion in a nonarbitrary way in granting franchise to "best responsible bidder" in full compliance with specifications unless city decided not to make any award; therefore, corporation promoting cable system sufficiently alleged a property interest in award of its contract for purposes of bringing a civil rights action. Teleprompter of Erie, Inc. v. City of Erie, W.D.Pa.1981, 537 F.Supp. 6. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1296. ---- Housing, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Farm workers who lived in employer-owned housing without rent, lease, or other formal arrangement governing their occupancy had no protected property interest in housing upon which to premise action under this section against employer who evicted them and county deputies who assisted in eviction. Martinez v. Sonoma-Cutrer Vineyards, N.D.Cal.1983, 577 F.Supp. 451, affirmed 791 F.2d 167. Civil Rights 1087; Civil Rights 1088(1)

1297. ---- Inspections, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Homeowners did not have protected property interest in competently conducted building inspections which could form basis of § 1983 claim, absent any showing that government building inspectors served as owners' guarantor of contract specification compliance; government building inspector served general public welfare. Gillies v. Utah County, D.Utah 1991, 765 F.Supp. 692. Civil Rights 1081

1298. ---- Leases, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Lessee of city parking lots had no property interest in any extensions of leases to warrant protection under Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause, even though lessee expected renewal of leases, where two-year leases expired on specified date, and city had discretion to award leases to any private party, including competitor of lessee. Downtown Auto Parks, Inc. v. City of Milwaukee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1991, 938 F.2d 705, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 640, 502 U.S. 1005, 116 L.Ed.2d 657. Constitutional Law 277(1); Municipal Corporations 722

Plaintiff concert promoter's alleged entitlement to delivery of a duly executed contract for lease of stadium did not give rise to level of a constitutionally protected property right, and thus it could not recover compensatory and punitive damages under this section against municipal defendants for deprivation of that right. Genesco Entertainment, a Div. of Lymutt Industries, Inc. v. Koch, S.D.N.Y.1984, 593 F.Supp. 743. Civil Rights 1041

1299. ---- Medicaid, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Physician lacked a sufficient property interest in his classification as an approved medical provider for state Medicaid program, sufficient to support a § 1983 action for reinstatement and damages. Senape v. Constantino, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 936 F.2d 687. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Provisions of Medicaid Act requiring state medical assistance programs to make medical assistance available to all eligible individuals, including certain dental services, and requiring medical assistance to be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals afforded individual medical assistance recipients rights that were enforceable through § 1983. Clark v. Richman, M.D.Pa.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1052

Statute conferring obligation on states participating in the Medicaid program to deem newborn infants to have applied for medical assistance as of date of their birth and to hold such infants eligible as of date of birth created private right enforceable under § 1983; actual effect of statute's mandatory language was to create binding obligation on states themselves to treat infants of eligible mothers in a certain fashion. Wellington v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1994, 851 F.Supp. 1. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6)

1300. ---- Motor vehicles, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Evidence of plaintiff's property interest in a vehicle, sufficient to support a due process claim under § 1983 arising from county officials' allegedly improper retention and use of vehicle after its initial seizure as evidence, could take a number of forms, including proof that plaintiff had made, or contributed to, installment payments on the vehicle, or proof that the vehicle was marital property as defined by New York law, though title certificate showed that vehicle belonged to plaintiff's wife. Pangburn v. Culbertson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1999, 200 F.3d 65. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Although vehicle owners have substantial property interest in use of their automobiles under § 1983, city ordinances allowing seizures of vehicles which arresting officers have probable cause to believe contain controlled substance or unregistered firearms or violate sound device restrictions provided owners with notice of and right to preliminary post-deprivation hearing, final hearing and ability to petition Illinois circuit courts for writ of certiorari to review findings of municipality's administrative body, and, thus, adequately protected owners' procedural due process rights. Towers v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 979 F.Supp. 708, affirmed 173 F.3d 619, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 178, 528 U.S. 874, 145 L.Ed.2d 150. Civil Rights 1319

1301. ---- National guard, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Court of Appeals would certify to Rhode Island Supreme Court issues of first impression concerning whether terminated Rhode Island Army National Guard (RIANG) commissioned officer who sued state and state actor under § 1983, seeking reinstatement, fit within definition of "staff corps and departments" as used in Rhode Island statute which provides that, absent resignation, disability, or dismissal for cause, commissioned officers in such departments shall hold their positions until they reach age of 60, whether officer thus had enforceable property interest in his position, and whether he was deprived of such entitlement without due process. Wigginton v. Centracchio, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2000, 205 F.3d 504. Federal Courts 392

National guard regulations designed to assure procedural fairness in internal investigations did not confer or create protected property interest, such as would support Section 1983 claim by national guard employee who was transferred to other base in alleged violation of rules. Sebra v. Neville, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1986, 801 F.2d 1135. Civil Rights 1135

1302. ---- Project participation, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City's refusal to allow general contractor to participate in redevelopment projects sponsored or approved by city did not violate contractor's civil rights in that contractor did not have property interest in continuing to participate in publicly financed projects. Eastway Const. Corp. v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1985, 762 F.2d 243, on remand 637 F.Supp. 558. Civil Rights 1041

1303. ---- Public employment, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Former state employee, who asserted that his discharge for cause from his position as deputy director of the Utah Department of Corrections deprived him of his property interest in eligibility for reappointment to a career service position, which he would be entitled to under Utah law if terminated without cause, failed to establish that he suffered an injury in fact, and therefore lacked standing to file § 1983 lawsuit for deprivation of due process, absent showing of any intention, desire, or plan to continue his employment in a career service position with the state of Utah. Morgan v. McCotter, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 365 F.3d 882. Civil Rights 1333(5)

Allegations by former assistant high school principal, who was terminated after his required state certification lapsed, that school board and school district destroyed his freedom to take advantage of other employment opportunities failed to state due process claim under § 1983 for harm to reputation; loss of future employment opportunities was insufficient to establish protected liberty interest. Moiles v. Marple Newtown School Dist., E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1964393, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Schools 147.28

1304. ---- Retirement benefits and pensions, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Retired county sheriff's deputies had protected property interest in group health insurance coverage at same premium rate as for active deputies, as required for deputies' §§1983 action against county alleging that their insurance premiums had been raised above those for active deputies without due process; state statute expressly provided that continued group coverage be provided to retirees at same premium rate. Germano v. Winnebago County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 403 F.3d 926, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 277(2)

The entitlement to disability retirement is a constitutionally protected property interest for purposes of § 1983. Russell v. Dunston, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 896 F.2d 664, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 50, 498 U.S. 813, 112 L.Ed.2d 26 . Constitutional Law 277(2)

Former police officer did not possess a property interest in retirement payments, as required for § 1983 claim alleging due process violations stemming from city's alleged failure to assist him in meeting statutory prerequisites for receipt of pension benefits and denial of his request to vest benefits, where the statute and ordinance defining his rights to retirement payments expressly conditioned receipt on satisfaction of certain criteria, including notice of an intention to vest at least 30 days prior to the retiree's termination date, with which officer failed to comply. Pappas v. City of Lebanon, M.D.Pa.2004, 331 F.Supp.2d 311. Constitutional Law 277(2)

State agency and its officials did not deprive employee of protected property right to participate in state early retirement incentive program, in violation of employee's due process rights, when program was available to employees at facility at which employee worked only if there were appropriate transfer matches with employees in designated at-risk positions at facilities targeted for staffing reductions, and employee did not establish availability of such transfer matches for her position. Cooper v. N.Y.S. Department of Mental Health, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 641, 2003 WL 21246561, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(4); States 64.1(3)

1305. ---- Riparian rights, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Negligent actions by Indiana Department of Natural Resources (IDNR), in draining reservoir at fish hatchery to perform repair work on dam, did not support inference that IDNR officials engaged in the draw-down recklessly or for a nefarious purpose, and thus property owners who claimed that their property rights were damaged by the negligent draw-down were not entitled to recover on their due process claim under § 1983; the government's alleged failure to use due care was not redressable under due process theory. Greenfield Mills, Inc. v. O'Bannon, N.D.Ind.2002, 189 F.Supp.2d 893, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 361 F.3d 934, on remand 2005 WL 1563433. Constitutional Law 302; Waters And Water Courses 176

Riparian landowners' interests in real property were not kinds of interests protected by this section. Guthrie v. Alabama By-Products Co., N.D.Ala.1971, 328 F.Supp. 1140, affirmed 456 F.2d 1294, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 1352, 410 U.S. 946, 35 L.Ed.2d 613, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 1524, 411 U.S. 910, 36 L.Ed.2d 201. Civil Rights 1071

1306. ---- Title to property, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Regardless of ultimate success of landowners' claim of title to strip of property taken by town for construction of street, conflict between their arguable unencumbered title and town's arguable easement was sufficient to create significant property interest entitling landowners to due process hearing prior to taking and denial of such hearing was actionable wrong independent of uncompensated taking. McCulloch v. Glasgow, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 620 F.2d 47. Constitutional Law 281

1307. ---- Utilities, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Issue remaining, on determining that gas utility and its managing agents acted "under color of state law" in terminating gas service to plaintiffs without adequate notice and an opportunity for prior evidentiary hearing, was whether interest of plaintiffs in continued utility service was "property" entitled to constitutional protection and, if so, whether postpayment/posttermination procedures for adjustment of billing disputes satisfied requirements of due process. Dawes v. Philadelphia Gas Commission, E.D.Pa.1976, 421 F.Supp. 806. Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

Electric service customer had a "property" interest in electric service which was terminated for nonpayment of a disputed bill. Condosta v. Vermont Elec. Co-op., Inc., D.C.Vt.1975, 400 F.Supp. 358. Electricity 11.1(1)

1308. ---- Zoning and land use, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Owner of undeveloped property did not have protected property right in applied for zoning certificate, or planned unit development plan and corresponding standards for development of particular area, that could have supported substantive due process civil rights claim, where township zoning resolution granted commission broad discretion to determine whether to grant or deny applications for zoning permits. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Landowners did not have a protected property interest in plat approval for the development of a commercial plaza, as required for their due process claim against city planning commission, given that the subdivision regulations vested broad discretion with the planning commission at both the preliminary plat approval stage and the final plat approval stage. Pennington v. Teufel, N.D.W.Va.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 715, affirmed 169 Fed.Appx. 161, 2006 WL 460921. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Local environmental quality board did not violate landowners' procedural due process rights when it approved final environmental impact statement (EIS) for highway project; although landowners claimed that EIS did not adequately address stormwater runoff onto their property, they actively participated in the various stages of board's decision-making process, and there was no indication that judicial review of an improper EIS was unavailable. Castro Rivera v. Fagundo, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 428, affirmed 129 Fed.Appx. 632, 2005 WL 1058894, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 425, 163 L.Ed.2d 324. Constitutional Law 278.1; Environmental Law 605

Property owners did not have constitutionally protected property interest in obtaining zoning change for their property or in receipt of certificates of occupancy, so that denial or withholding of these privileges was not a taking under Fifth Amendment which would support § 1983 action. Frooks v. Town of Cortlandt, S.D.N.Y.1998, 997 F.Supp. 438, affirmed 182 F.3d 899. Eminent Domain 2.10(6); Zoning And Planning 375.1

Person does not have constitutionally cognizable property interest in another person's land use merely because that use may adversely affect market value of his own property. Woodward & Lothrop, Inc. v. Neall, D.Md.1993, 813 F.Supp. 1158. Constitutional Law 277(1)

1309. ---- Miscellaneous interests, property interest, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Sale of hospital by Secretary of Health of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico to a medical school, as part of Puerto Rico's health care facility privatization program, did not deprive medical facility operators of a protected property interest, as required to demonstrate Secretary's violation of operators' procedural and substantive due process rights; although operators wrote to Secretary expressing an interest in purchasing the hospital, they had no legal right to acquire it, since Puerto Rico statutes explicitly allowed Secretary to sell hospital to medical schools without following the usual bidding protocol. Centro Medico del Turabo, Inc. v. Feliciano de Melecio, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 406 F.3d 1. Constitutional Law 291.6; Territories 25

Restaurant seller who was excluded from restaurant by off-duty city police officers who assisted restaurant purchaser in transferring the premises to purchaser, changing the locks, and closing down the restaurant, without court order or eviction notice, failed to establish that the policies and actions of the city and police chief evidenced deliberate indifference to the rights of property sellers, barring § 1983 action against city and police chief, on grounds of deliberate indifference. Dixon v. Lowery, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2002, 302 F.3d 857. Civil Rights 1351(3); Civil Rights 1357

Common law rights, combined with statutory right under California law to control disposition of their children's bodies, created in parents a property interest in the corneas of their deceased children protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Newman v. Sathyavaglswaran, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2002, 287 F.3d 786, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 558, 537 U.S. 1029, 154 L.Ed.2d 444. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Claimants failed to allege sufficient ownership interest in vehicles registered to third parties to state claim for deprivation of due process against North Carolina revenue officer who seized vehicles to satisfy drug tax. Lynn v. West, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1998, 134 F.3d 582, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 47, 525 U.S. 813, 142 L.Ed.2d 36. Civil Rights 1395(1)

City's refusal of request by lessors of vendor kiosk located in public market on city-owned property to enlarge their kiosk did not deprive lessors of any property interest, precluding lessors' §§ 1983 procedural due process claim. Rodriguez Cruz v. Trujillo, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 240. Municipal Corporations 720

Once solid waste collection contract with county expired of its own terms, contractor's mere anticipation that it would again be awarded the contract for the succeeding term was not an interest protected by procedural due process, and even if it had been, there was no procedural inadequacy in bid process that awarded contract to another bidder. Sartaine v. Pennington, E.D.Ky.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 584. Counties 126

Since victim of fatal police shooting could not suffer specific harms to his employment, education, professional licensing or insurance opportunities, and no longer had a protectable liberty interest in his reputation under New York law that survived his death, victim had no cause of action under §§ 1983 for harm to his reputation based on dissemination of information about his criminal record to the press following the shooting. Sylvester v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 431. Libel And Slander 72

A parent has a fundamental liberty interest in the companionship and society of his or her child and the state's interference with that liberty interest without due process of law is remediable under § 1983. Estate of Imrie v. Golden Gate Bridge Highway and Transp. Dist., N.D.Cal.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 1145. Civil Rights 1057; Constitutional Law 274(5)

Even though there is no constitutional right to an education at public expense, a student's legitimate entitlement to a public education as a property interest which is protected by the due process clause may not be taken away without adherence to the minimum procedures required by that clause. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. Failure of school district to provide students with predeprivation due process hearing, after they were suspended for not being residents of school district, violated procedural due process rights of students and parents, since school district's denial of due process hearing to students implicated property and liberty interests of students and parents, suspension was for indefinite period of time, i.e., for "as long as plaintiffs were not residents" of district, risk that district erred in determining plaintiffs' residency was high, and hearing would not have been burdensome to school. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. Decedent's surviving siblings sufficiently alleged they had constitutionally protected property interest in deceased relative's body, for purposes of § 1983 claim against county coroner and photographer alleging that photographer's taking of pictures of decedent's body while he was in county morgue denied them due process, even if photographer did not mutilate corpse and merely took photographs; siblings' property interest in decedent's corpse included right not to have corpse photographed for commercial purposes without their permission. Melton v. Board of County Com'rs of Hamilton County, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 859. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Decedent's surviving siblings sufficiently alleged the deprivation of a constitutionally protected property interest by photographer's taking of pictures of decedent's body for commercial purposes and without siblings' permission while he was in county morgue, for purposes of § 1983 claim against county coroner and photographer; siblings alleged that photographer posed, touched, manipulated, photographed, and violated the corpse of decedent. Melton v. Board of County Com'rs of Hamilton County, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 859. Constitutional Law 278(1.3); Dead Bodies 9

Municipal judge in Texas who was suspended from the bench with pay was not deprived of protected property interest, as required to state § 1983 claim for violation of his due process rights; judge continued to receive his salary and failed to cite any Texas law that recognized a protected property interest in the duties and responsibilities of a municipal judge. Richards v. City of Weatherford, N.D.Tex.2001, 145 F.Supp.2d 786, affirmed 275 F.3d 46. Constitutional Law 277(2); Judges 11(1)

Shopkeeper who alleged that actions of city in cancelling festival due to size of crowd prevented him from selling sporting goods and caused him to lose profits did not have property interest in selling goods for profit which was protected by due process clause, and could not recover on that basis in federal civil rights action; shopkeeper had alleged no protected interest under state law, regulation, statute, or contract, and had only unilateral expectation that he would be able to sell goods. Cevallos v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1996, 914 F.Supp. 379. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Cancer patients whom government allegedly subjected to radiation experiments, but who were told that they were receiving cancer treatment, stated procedural due process claim against government and university physicians by alleging that defendants' conduct in concealing true purpose and dangers associated with experiments deprived them of property right, i.e., their ability to pursue wrongful death claim under Ohio law. Plaintiff's complaint alleging deprivation of property and defining her property as "the right to be free" did not state property interest for purposes of due process; while the right to be free, as defined by plaintiff, may have constituted liberty interest, it was not property. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Action alleging that county sheriff had referred all official wrecker and towing business to one individual, thereby excluding other wreckers from any business of type in question, failed to state claim under section 1983, since allegations pertained only to deprivation of unilateral expectation of benefit rather than deprivation of property interest. Walker County Wrecker and Storage Ass'n, Inc. v. Walker County, S.D.Tex.1984, 604 F.Supp. 28. Civil Rights 1395(1)

State prison inmate's reputation, allegedly damaged by state corrections officials' filing of false misconduct report and related disciplinary sanctions, was not protected liberty or property interest, precluding inmate's §§1983 due process action against officials. Seville v. Martinez, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 549, 2005 WL 1099359, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 252, 163 L.Ed.2d 230. Constitutional Law 272(2); Constitutional Law 277(1); Prisons 13(6)

Physician did not possess a protected property interest in continued public hospital staff membership, and thus was not entitled to due process prior to the suspension of membership. Moore v. 1310. Racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Rights protected by § 1983 are coextensive with equal protection clause's guarantee against racial discrimination. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. Coalition for Economic Equity, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 950 F.2d 1401, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1670, 503 U.S. 985, 118 L.Ed.2d 390. Civil Rights 1028

Right of persons not to be subjected to racial discrimination in government programs is a right courts will protect. Norwalk CORE v. Norwalk Redevelopment Agency, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1968, 395 F.2d 920. Constitutional Law 215

Allegation that plaintiff was discriminated against because he was Norwegian did not state a claim for discrimination based on racial animus. Bauge v. Jernigan, D.Colo.1987, 671 F.Supp. 709. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1311. ---- Armed forces, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Damage suits are not an appropriate method of enforcing constitutional rights that may be violated by alleged racially motivated local transfers of reserve military personnel where there is no suggestion of significant actual harm. Jones v. Reagan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 696 F.2d 551. Civil Rights 1033(2)

1312. ---- Assignment of appointed counsel, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where state procedure for assignment of counsel applied to all indigent defendants regardless of race or color, Negro defendants in state criminal prosecution were not denied equal rights under the law because they were not permitted to select their court-appointed counsel from panel of attorneys available for service to indigents. Baker v. People of State of N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1969, 299 F.Supp. 1265. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1313. ---- Assignment of rights, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Person who leased home to Negro and as part of transaction assigned membership share in nonstock corporation organized to operate community park and playground for residents of area in which home was located was entitled to seek redress under this section for refusal of corporation to approve assignment of membership share. Sullivan v. Little Hunting Park, Inc., U.S.Va.1969, 90 S.Ct. 400, 396 U.S. 229, 24 L.Ed.2d 386. Civil Rights 1331(6)

1314. ---- Condemnation, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

I.C.A. § 306.1 et seq., which is available for use in condemnations for secondary road purposes, does not deny white citizens of any "rights, privileges or immunities" secured by the Constitution within meaning of this section. Cahill v. Cedar County, Iowa, N.D.Iowa 1973, 367 F.Supp. 39, affirmed 95 S.Ct. 21, 419 U.S. 806, 42 L.Ed.2d 35. Civil Rights 1071

1315. ---- Contracts, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City's nonselection of firm owned by African-American, on second bid for towing contract, was not discriminatory, in violation of § 1983, despite bidder's claim that city manipulated specifications of second bid to exclude it from consideration; bidder was not qualified under original specifications, which were drawn up before city was aware of owner's race, and whatever spurred change of specifications for second bid, it could not have been racial animus, since city could have satisfied any urge to exclude bidder under original specifications. Cardinal Towing & Auto Repair, Inc. v. City of Bedford, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1999, 180 F.3d 686. Civil Rights 1041

Government contractor satisfactorily pleaded a stigma-plus due process claim under §§ 1983 against state official in her personal capacity; contractor alleged that official made stigmatizing statements about it including statements that it "gave a false picture" of and "provided extremely inaccurate information" about state agency's finances, and that, incidental thereto and without a hearing, official personally caused contractor to be removed from agency's list of approved accountants and auditors, thereby eliminating it from future government contracting. Coleman & Williams, Ltd. v. Wisconsin Dept. of Workforce Development, E.D.Wis.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 938. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Claim of racial discrimination in contracting may be brought, under § 1983, against state officials in their individual capacities. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Civil Rights 1360

City's compliance with state court injunction requiring it to stop payment on check to African-American contractor was not pretext for racial discrimination, and thus did not violate contractor's rights under §§ 1981 and 1983, where competitor's success in underlying state court action would have voided contract, city attorney had good faith belief that issues in litigation would be resolved expeditiously, and contractor failed to intervene in action. Cook v. City of Cuthbert, Georgia, M.D.Ga.2002, 195 F.Supp.2d 1371. Civil Rights 1041

Plaintiff, a black refuse collector, could not recover against city official on claim of racial discrimination, in civil rights action, in connection with failure to award plaintiff contract for spring and fall cleanup, absent evidence that decision to give contract to another had been based, in whole or in part, upon plaintiff's race, notwithstanding that bids may have been let incorrectly in that no specifications had been given. Scott v. Clark, E.D.Mo.1977, 436 F.Supp. 569. Civil Rights 1041

1316. ---- Development rights, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and monetary damages against officials of the Seneca Nation of Indians and against corporation presently negotiating with the Nation to locate a factory in an industrial park to be developed by the Nation on its reservation stated no claim under this section relating to equal rights under the law and property rights of citizens, since this subchapter prohibits only racially motivated deprivation of the rights enumerated therein, whereas the complaint contained no allegation of racial discrimination. Seneca Constitutional Rights Organization v. George, W.D.N.Y.1972, 348 F.Supp. 51. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1317. ---- Dining facilities, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Action for damages on basis that plaintiff, a Negro, had been assaulted by a defendant with automobile in furtherance of conspiracy of all defendants and in keeping with local custom and practice to deprive plaintiff of his civil rights in use of cafe which was place of public accommodation and at which place police officers were present was maintainable under this section relating to civil action for deprivation of rights. Sherrod v. Pink Hat Cafe, N.D.Miss.1965, 250 F.Supp. 516. Conspiracy 1.1; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Action of restaurant operator, through one in apparent authority at door of restaurant, in refusing service on basis of race or color was violation of constitutional rights of Negroes to equal protection. Brooks v. City of Tallahassee, Fla., N.D.Fla.1961, 202 F.Supp. 56. Constitutional Law 216

1318. ---- Dismissal of actions, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Dismissal of Negro's state action for personal injuries was shown to have resulted from dilatory tactics of plaintiff's attorney and his failure and refusal to proceed with trial on day set for hearing more than two years after her action was filed and charge that dismissal was motivated by racial discrimination was without support in record. Andrews v. Murphy, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1965, 349 F.2d 114, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 589, 382 U.S. 999, 15 L.Ed.2d 486. Civil Rights 1422

State, rather than county, was responsible for conversion of data from local court systems to system through which state published court records on the Internet, and therefore county could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for alleged defamation of convict that resulted from misreporting of convict's criminal history due to conversion problems. LeMoine v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 132 Fed.Appx. 53, 2005 WL 1220477, Unreported. Civil Rights 1348

Detectives with a city police department failed to state a claim against the city regarding alleged discrimination against black and Hispanic undercover officers in the failure to provide sufficient safety measures to undercover officers, which allegedly affected minority members disproportionately; it was not reasonable to infer that sergeants in charge intentionally placed fellow police officers in peril because the officers were Black or Hispanic. Tamayo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21448366, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(8); Civil Rights 1532

1319. ---- Employment, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Connecticut public school teacher seeking reinstatement had protected privacy right in medical records sought by school board. O'Connor v. Pierson, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 426 F.3d 187. Schools 147.47

Evidence failed to establish that Negro welder and others similarly situated were subject to racial discrimination by dyeing machine manufacturer in matters of employment, classification, wages, promotion or other incidence of employment, in violation of this section. Brown v. Gaston County Dyeing Mach. Co., W.D.N.C.1970, 325 F.Supp. 541, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 457 F.2d 1377, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 319, 409 U.S. 982, 34 L.Ed.2d 246. Civil Rights 1421

1320. ---- Fire protection, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiffs' allegations that city, through its codes services unit and pursuant to policy and custom of racial discrimination, improperly singled plaintiffs out based on race by enforcing city ordinances before fire in plaintiffs' warehouse, declaring warehouse a public nuisance after fire, and by not treating white owners of nearby building in similar manner were sufficient to state equal protection selective enforcement claim, despite claim that there was no evidence in "undisputed factual record" to establish requisite intentional discrimination. Homan v. City of Reading, E.D.Pa.1997, 963 F.Supp. 485. Civil Rights 1395(3)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Estates and relatives of black victims of fatal house fire failed to prove violation of equal protection rights from alleged city policy of racial discrimination through inferior housing inspections; there was no evidence that inspectors were overloaded in black areas, that quality of services in those areas suffered, or that policy of poor inspections existed but, rather, statistical data established that quantity of inspections in black neighborhoods was far greater than in white neighborhoods. Baugh v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1993, 823 F.Supp. 1452, motion to amend denied 829 F.Supp. 274, affirmed 41 F.3d 1510. Civil Rights 1419

1321. ---- Housing, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City's attempt to persuade Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and potential purchaser, a United States citizen of Indian-Muslim descent, to cancel purchase agreement for apartment building by stating that city was contemplating the use of its eminent-domain power did not constitute invidious racial or religious discrimination actionable under § 1983, where the city treated both the potential purchaser and a second set of buyers, who were Caucasian, non-Muslim, out-of-state citizens, the same. Shaikh v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 341 F.3d 627. Civil Rights 1041

Plaintiffs, challenging plan adopted by Boston Housing Authority to select tenants for a public housing failed to make out a claim for relief under this section, § 2000-d of this title, or equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 absent showing of an invidious purpose to discriminate against whites, especially as plan arose out of ongoing state court litigation, there was no allegation that officials involved in formulating the plan were motivated in any way by a desire to discriminate against whites and there was no allegation that there were any departures from normal procedures for obtaining court approval. Schmidt v. Boston Housing Authority, D.C.Mass.1981, 505 F.Supp. 988. Civil Rights 1082; Constitutional Law 215.2

Cause of action under this section, if any, is derived from racial discrimination in rental of property and arises at time of discrimination. Bush v. Kaim, N.D.Ohio 1969, 297 F.Supp. 151, 17 Ohio Misc. 259, 46 O.O.2d 329, 46 O.O.2d 363. Civil Rights 1304

History of tension, threats of violence and violence could not excuse city housing authority's established policy of racial segregation. Gautreaux v. Chicago Housing Authority, N.D.Ill.1969, 296 F.Supp. 907. Civil Rights 1082

A "controlled occupancy pattern", a plan by which subdivision developer and its parent corporation intended to sell homes in subdivision to whites and Negroes on a quota basis according to the population ratio for whites and non-Caucasians in the area, requiring, as conditions precedent to sales, that purchasers execute separate resale agreements which were not to be recorded but which would give developer exclusive right, upon resale, to select purchasers so that initial integration ratio would be continued, constituted racial discrimination in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5 and 14, unenforceable in any court of law or equity, and was not protected by this section. Progress Development Corp. v. Mitchell, N.D.Ill.1960, 182 F.Supp. 681, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 286 F.2d 222. Civil Rights 1076; Constitutional Law 220.5(2); Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

1322. ---- In forma pauperis denials, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Denial of leave to proceed in forma pauperis on grounds that similar actions were pending and intervening transfer of plaintiff had rendered certain questions moot did not result in discrimination against petitioner on account of his race. Richey v. Wilkins, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1964, 335 F.2d 1.

1323. ---- Sales, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Private school failed to prove that school district's rejection of its offers to buy property on which private school held right of first refusal was based on racial animus so as to violate equal protection under § 1983; private school had no direct, "smoking gun" evidence of discriminatory intent on part of school district, because student body was predominantly black and Latino, any actions which would have affected school necessarily impacted more heavily on one race than another but history of interaction between school district and private school did not support finding of discriminatory motive, and deal appeared to fall apart over relatively minor provision because school district would not allow private school to inspect property as other potential buyers were allowed to do. Board of Managers of Glen Mills Schools v. West Chester Areas School Dist., E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1035, affirmed in part, reversed in part 52 F.3d 313. Civil Rights 1418

Sale of real property that was foreclosed by public improvement sale following notice by publication did not violate this section and § 1982 of this title, absent allegations of racial discrimination. Billingsley v. Seibels, N.D.Ala.1976, 433 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 556 F.2d 276, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1499, 435 U.S. 929, 55 L.Ed.2d 524, rehearing denied 98 S.Ct. 2257, 436 U.S. 914, 56 L.Ed.2d 416. Civil Rights 1071

1324. ---- Street maintenance, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City's unwritten policy of making dead-end streets lowest priority for street paving discriminated against black citizens of city, in that there was a far higher percentage of such streets in black community, and implementation of policy was inequitable and discriminatory, serving to exacerbate a system which already burdened black community unduly. Johnson v. City of Arcadia, Fla., M.D.Fla.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1363. Civil Rights 1054

1325. ---- Swimming pools, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiffs who allegedly were refused admission to swimming pool of privately owned amusement park open to public upon payment of fees, and who were allegedly ejected from park by park management aided and abetted by borough chief of police, because their party included Negroes, were thereby denied equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, were denied right to make or enforce contracts, and were denied privileges and immunities of citizenship. Valle v. Stengel, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1949, 176 F.2d 697. Civil Rights 1047

1326. ---- Transportation, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In action by passenger against bus company for alleged violation of her civil rights, evidence on behalf of plaintiff that she took seat in second row of bus when it was vacated by white woman and was immediately ordered by driver to rise and go to rear was sufficient to take case to jury. Flemming v. South Carolina Elec. & Gas Co., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1956, 239 F.2d 277. Civil Rights 1431

1327. ---- Union elections, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

While plaintiff, a white, ran for office in defendant union on a slate with predominantly black candidates and was replaced as a union steward by a black union member, none of those facts, if proven, would even approximate racial discrimination within this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Mills v. National Distillers Products Co., S.D.Ohio 1977, 435 F.Supp. 72. Civil Rights 1255

1328. ---- Utilities, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Claim that black customers of electric company were required to pay greater security deposits than white customers solely on account of their race was not cognizable under this section but was cognizable under § 1981 of this Title providing that all persons shall have same rights to make and enforce contracts. Cody v. Union Elec., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1975, 518 F.2d 978, on remand 410 F.Supp. 307. Civil Rights 1033(2); Civil Rights 1326(7); Civil

Complaint alleging that telephone company refused to provide black citizens of county with telephone service on basis of their race stated claim under civil rights provisions. White v. Walnut Hill Tel. Co., W.D.Ark.1979, 84 F.R.D. 138. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1329. ---- Welfare benefits, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

An adverse decision against applicants for Aid to Families with Dependent Children by "fair hearing" referee or by commissioner is not of itself evidence of racial discrimination. Gray v. Department of Social Services of State of N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1969, 305 F.Supp. 435. Civil Rights 1055

1330. ---- Zoning and land use, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

That a greater percentage of blacks than whites were affected by refusal of village to rezone a piece of property in order to permit construction of a housing development for low and moderate income persons did not necessarily mean that the refusal had the type of racially discriminatory effect that required invocation of compelling interest tests. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp. v. Village of Arlington Heights, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 517 F.2d 409, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 560, 423 U.S. 1030, 46 L.Ed.2d 404, reversed on other grounds 97 S.Ct. 555, 429 U.S. 252, 50 L.Ed.2d 450, on remand 558 F.2d 1283. Civil Rights 1082

Town zoning ordinances, banning apartments and setting minimum one-acre requirement for residential development, were maintained with racially discriminatory intent, and thus violated federal civil rights laws; ordinances disproportionately harmed African Americans, town had history of discouraging African Americans from moving within its borders, and ordinances did not serve town's claimed interests. Dews v. Town of Sunnyvale, Tex., N.D.Tex.2000, 109 F.Supp.2d 526. Civil Rights 1081

Race discrimination was not cause of city's refusal to annex noncontiguous housing project that was predominantly black, making it unnecessary for federal court to override state law and order annexation, where state law prohibited annexation of noncontiguous parcels at time city refused to annex project. Burton v. City of Belle Glade, S.D.Fla.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1178, affirmed in part, reversed in part 178 F.3d 1175, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 193 F.3d 525. Civil Rights 1082

1331. ---- Miscellaneous claims, racial discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where complaint alleged that defendants' wrongful acts had injured "residents of the Negro neighborhoods," "negro and minorities, low income and unemployed," "the Black community in North St. Louis," "minority contractors" and the like, but did not allege that any named plaintiffs were injured or were in these groups, or that any injured persons were members of plaintiff associations, plaintiffs failed to allege a case or controversy and, therefore, federal district court was without jurisdiction to consider plaintiffs' contention that public bus system was administered in racially discriminatory manner. Urban Contractors Alliance of St. Louis v. Bi-State Development Agency, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 531 F.2d 877. Federal Courts 244

Section 1983 permitted action based upon alleged violations of the disparate impact implementing regulations promulgated by Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) under Title VI; EPA's implementing regulations, which prohibited recipients of federal funding from using "criteria or methods of administering [their] programs" which had the effect of subjecting individuals to discrimination, were intended to benefit the putative plaintiffs, the right asserted by plaintiffs, to be free of discrimination resulting from the adverse disparate impact of a facially neutral policy implemented by a recipient of federal funding, was neither vague, nor amorphous, and was well within the competence of the judiciary to enforce, the provision allegedly creating the right was couched in mandatory terms, and the generalized enforcement power of the EPA to enforce Title VI and the implementing regulations

Spoliation of evidence doctrine did not support patient's § 1983 claim that alcohol rehabilitation center and individual employees discriminated against him on basis of fact that patient was Native American, absent any evidence that center's records were intentionally destroyed, fraudulently misplaced, or otherwise secreted by center or employees; records were stored after center closed for lack of funding, and were destroyed some time later to make file cabinets available for another party. In ordering removal of rock by plaintiff, a black resident, from corner of his driveway, city officials could not be held to have violated any of plaintiff's constitutional rights. Scott v. Clark, E.D.Mo.1977, 436 F.Supp. 569. Nuisance 78

1332. Sex discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

To state claim of sex discrimination under § 1983, plaintiff must show following elements: membership in protected class, that plaintiff was qualified for position at issue, that defendant made adverse employment decision despite plaintiff's qualifications, and that plaintiff was replaced with person not member of protected class. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1169

Sex discrimination is covered by § 1983. Annis v. County of Westchester, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 36 F.3d 251, on remand 939 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1011

Claim that professor and administrators of university had deprived female university student of benefits of program supported by federal financing, in violation of Title IX, could be maintained under § 1983, despite claim that Title IX itself was exclusive remedy for wrongs in question; Congress did not intend to make Title IX exclusive remedy when provision was drafted to penalize only institutions actually receiving funding. Hayut v. State University of New York, N.D.N.Y.2000, 127 F.Supp.2d 333. Civil Rights 1309

To bring successful § 1983 sex discrimination claim for denial of equal protection, plaintiff must prove existence of purposeful discrimination on basis of gender. Verney v. Dodaro, M.D.Pa.1995, 872 F.Supp. 188, affirmed 79 F.3d 1140. Civil Rights 1166

Allegations of classifications based upon sex are cognizable under this section. Keker v. Procunier, E.D.Cal.1975, 398 F.Supp. 756.

This section does not ban discrimination on basis of sex. Knott v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., E.D.Mo.1975, 389 F.Supp. 856, affirmed 527 F.2d 1249.

1333. ---- Contracts, sex discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

There was insufficient justification for board of education's gender-based set aside policy for construction contractors; there was no evidence that women actually suffered disadvantage related to classification. Main Line Paving Co., Inc. v. Board of Educ., School Dist. of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1989, 725 F.Supp. 1349. Schools 80(2)

Principle that gender-based stereotyped remarks can be evidence that gender played part in adverse employment decision, for purposes of discrimination claim, applies as much to the supposition that a woman will conform to a gender stereotype, and thus be unsuitable for her job, as to the supposition that a woman is unqualified for a position because she does not conform to a gender stereotype. Back v. Hastings On Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 365 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1166; Civil Rights 1542

Female physician who served at Clinic Chief at District of Columbia health clinic failed to establish prima facie case of discrimination under §§ 1983 based on longstanding understaffing at clinic where she worked, as she failed to establish inference of discrimination based on sex; inadequate staffing affected other clinic employees, male and female, as well, and events surrounding clinic's merger with another, including inability to retain added employees, further undermined any reasonable inference of sex discrimination. Turner v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 157. Civil Rights 1405

No claim was stated on behalf of public school student against school district and principal based on allegations that student was sexually assaulted on school property by other students on two occasions, under Title IX or § 1983, absent allegations that school district responded to sexual harassment claims differently based on sex. Piwonka v. Tidehaven Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 169. Civil Rights 1066; Civil Rights 1067(3)

Complaint which sought declaratory judgment that ordinance which prohibited female employees of taverns, but not male employees, from sitting with patrons of the opposite sex stated a cause of action under this section. White v. Flemming, E.D.Wis.1974, 374 F.Supp. 267, affirmed 522 F.2d 730. Declaratory Judgment 315

1335. Socioeconomic discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purposes of claim that discrimination in medical treatment of infants born with form of spina bifida based on socioeconomic factors violated their rights to due process and equal protection, there was no evidence of discriminatory harm; evidence indicated only that team of health professionals at hospital considered socioeconomic factors in making treatment recommendation and not that factors affected outcome of recommendations in individual cases, i.e., that infants' socioeconomic status was factor that caused recommendation that they receive only supportive care. Johnson by Johnson v. Thompson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 971 F.2d 1487, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1255, 507 U.S. 910, 122 L.Ed.2d 654. Civil Rights 1422

1336. Aliens and nationality discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Vietnamese stateless person who had entered the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) on tourist entry permit and had been denied political asylum and refugee status from both CNMI and the United States and had been ordered deported but refused to cooperate did not have a federal constitutional right to employment within the CNMI. Tran v. Com. of Northern Mariana Islands, D.N.Mar.I.1991, 780 F.Supp. 709, affirmed 993 F.2d 884. Aliens 4

1337. Disability discrimination, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Special needs high school senior who received highest weighted grade point average in her class was not required, before challenging policy amendment allowing the designation of multiple valedictorians as violating § 1983, ADA, and Rehabilitation Act, to exhaust remedies under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA); student did not challenge her accommodations under the IDEA, but rather, discrimination because of those accommodations. Hornstine v. Township of Moorestown, D.N.J.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 887. Civil Rights 1309; Schools 155.5(3)

Action brought by handicapped person charging arbitrary, unreasonable and discriminatory classification of handicapped persons is cognizable under both this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Nodleman v. Aero Mexico, C.D.Cal.1981, 528 F.Supp. 475. Civil Rights 1017

1338. Threat to violate rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Mere verbal threats made by state-actor do not generally constitute § 1983 claim, as constitution does not protect against all intrusions on one's peace of mind, and fear or emotional injury which results solely from verbal harassment or idle threats is generally not sufficient to constitute invasion of identified liberty interest. King v. Olmsted County, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1065. Civil Rights 1036

Prosecutor's statement to mother of minor who was alleged victim of criminal sexual assault, that if mother did not cooperate with interview and prosecution, prosecutor would contact social services agency to investigate her household, did not constitute an improper threat to a witness so as to support accused's subsequent § 1983 civil rights action; statement came after mother, who had originally testified to daughter's informing her of sexual incident, changed her story and took daughter back to accused's home, leading prosecutor to believe mother was being pressured by family members. Pierzynowski v. Police Dept. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 941 F.Supp. 633 . Civil Rights 1088(5)

Mere alleged threats by police officers to violate bank customers' due process rights were insufficient to support § 1983 action, absent any actual violation of due process. Arnold v. Truemper, N.D.Ill.1993, 833 F.Supp. 678. Civil Rights 1088(1)

State actor's threat to violate citizen's constitutional rights is not actionable under § 1983. Flanigan v. Kent County Sheriff's Dept., W.D.Mich.1993, 817 F.Supp. 660. Civil Rights 1036

1339. Retaliation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A §§ 1983 case brought by a public employee alleging retaliation based on assertion of First Amendment rights does not require an adverse employment action within the meaning of the antidiscrimination statutes, such as Title VII; any deprivation under color of law that is likely to deter the exercise of free speech is actionable. Mosely v. Board of Educ. of City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 434 F.3d 527. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Issue of whether former agent for special investigations bureau of the Puerto Rico Department of Justice was discharged because of his protected speech disclosing mismanagement and possible corruption in the department, rather than for stated reason of a prior, expunged, domestic abuse conviction, was for jury in §§ 1983 claim brought by agent alleging that he was discharged in retaliation of his protected speech. Tejada-Batista v. Morales, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 424 F.3d 97. Civil Rights 1430

To state a prima facie claim of First Amendment retaliation under §§ 1983, a public employee must offer some tangible proof that (1) her speech was constitutionally protected; (2) she suffered an adverse employment action; and (3) a causal relationship between the two existed in that the speech was a substantial or motivating factor for the adverse employment action. Burkybile v. Bd. of Educ. of Hastings-On-Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 411 F.3d 306, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 801, 163 L.Ed.2d 628. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Any lawsuit brought by an employee against a public employer qualifies as a protected "petition" under the First Amendment so long as it is not sham litigation. Hill v. City of Scranton, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 411 F.3d 118. Constitutional Law 91

Teacher's prior lawsuit alleging that school district retaliated against her for assisting another employee in bringing gender discrimination action, and for being identified as a witness in that action, was speech on a matter of public concern for purposes of her First Amendment retaliation claim; prior lawsuit was predicated on speech about gender discrimination against a fellow employee that directly implicated the access of the courts to truthful testimony. Konits v. Valley Stream Cent. High School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 394 F.3d 121, on remand 2006 WL 224188. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3); Schools 147.12

To establish a First Amendment retaliation claim under §§ 1983, the plaintiff must show (1) he engaged in a protected activity or speech, (2) the government official took adverse action against him that would chill a person of ordinary firmness from continuing in the activity, and (3) the adverse action was motivated at least in part by the exercise of the protected activity or speech. Revels v. Vincenz, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 382 F.3d 870, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 371, 163 L.Ed.2d 140, rehearing denied 126 S.Ct. 721, 163 L.Ed.2d 618. Constitutional Law 82(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

State agency head acted reasonably in terminating employee who had reported sexual harassment of employee's coworkers by employee's supervisor, and thus could not be liable in employee's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation action; internal investigator's report stated that alleged victims all denied harassment and that employee was angry because supervisor had demoted him, there was no evidence of bias on part of agency head or investigator, and employee failed to present any evidence in support of his allegations when asked to do so by agency head, and thus agency head's interest in promoting efficiency clearly outweighed employee's interest in commenting on matter of public concern. Johnson v. Louisiana, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 369 F.3d 826. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); States 53

Accurate but irrelevant information about personal matters publicly aired by government officials intent on penalizing a citizen for exercising her First Amendment rights is cognizable under § 1983. Mattox v. City of Forest Park, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1999, 183 F.3d 515, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1040

To assert cause of action under § 1983 for retaliation for exercise of federally protected right, plaintiff must show that he or she engaged in protected activity, that adverse employment action followed and that there was causal connection between the activity and adverse action. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1243

Owner of towing and wrecker service stated First Amendment claim against city, arising from revocation of permission for owner to use police radio frequency in business after owner complained to city chief of police respecting bidding procedure for abandoned vehicles towing contract with city; complaint sufficiently alleged violation of owner's First Amendment rights, or at least ratification, by city's policymakers. Blackburn v. City of Marshall, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 42 F.3d 925. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1395(5)

Professor failed to establish sufficiently serious questions going to the merits of her §§ 1983 claim against university administrators, alleging that she was suspended for refusing to undergo a psychiatric examination in retaliation for her testimony at hearing on colleague's race discrimination claim against university, and for her filing of action against administrators, in violation of First Amendment, to make them a fair ground for litigation, as required for professor to be entitled to preliminary injunction to prevent administrators from requiring her to undergo psychiatric examination in order to keep her position, since she failed to present any evidence of a causal connection between her testimony or the filing of the action and her suspension. Appel v. Spiridon, D.Conn.2006, 2006 WL 3479414.

Only retaliatory conduct that would deter a similarly situated individual from exercising his or her constitutional rights constitutes an adverse action for a claim of First Amendment retaliation; otherwise, the retaliatory act is simply de minimus and outside the ambit of constitutional protection. Lyons v. Wall, D.R.I.2006, 464 F.Supp.2d 79. Constitutional Law 82(3)

Nurse's allegedly retaliatory act in refusing to administer to state prisoner a single dose of an over-the-counter pain reliever was de minimis, for purposes of prisoner's First Amendment retaliation claim, in civil rights action under §§

1983 alleging that he was denied needed pain medication in retaliation for two lawsuits he had previously brought against Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) personnel, where depriving prisoner of one dose of non-narcotic pain reliever, leading to at most several hours of discomfort, did not rise to level of a constitutional violation, and a person of ordinary firmness would not be deterred from exercising his constitutional right to file grievances and lawsuits simply because he had to wait a few hours for access to his non-narcotic pain medication. Davidson v. Bartholome, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 436. Prisons 17(2)

Prisoner stated First Amendment retaliation claims against prison library defendants for destroying his typewriter in retaliation for his filing of grievances and lawsuits; although prisoner's causal connection allegations were largely conclusory and his pleadings contained few, if any, specific facts relating to defendants' involvement in the typewriter's destruction, the multiple and diverse forms of damage to the typewriter suggested malicious conduct by someone at prison and supported a reasonable inference that the individual or individuals responsible were retaliating against prisoner for his filing of grievances and lawsuits. Collins v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 399. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Teacher who was terminated from position as Special Projects (SP) Coordinator stated First Amendment retaliation claim under §§ 1983 by alleging that, after she complained about school district's financial improprieties, she was removed from that position so that she could no longer report on any such improprieties. Peres v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 15. Schools 147.12

Governor's alleged threat to cause state regulators to exercise greater scrutiny over coal company and its chairman, in retaliation for chairman's public opposition to Governor's bond proposal, if proven, adversely affected chairman's constitutionally protected speech, as required for chairman to prove §§ 1983 retaliation claim, in that such alleged factual scenario forced chairman to choose between exercising his speech rights or scaling back such exercise to protect his business affairs. Blankenship v. Manchin, S.D.W.Va.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 483. Mines And Minerals 92.10

In First Amendment retaliation case, an "adverse employment action" is an act that is reasonably likely to deter employees from engaging in constitutionally protected speech; it is not necessary that plaintiff demonstrate the loss of a valuable governmental benefit or privilege. Neveu v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1159. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Attorney employed by police department was not speaking out on matters of public concern, as required in order to have First Amendment protection from retaliation in §§ 1983 action, when he expressed criticism of department's equal employment opportunity unit in cases he was handling, and then spoke out in opposition to criticism he received after first remarks. Hoffman v. Baltimore Police Dept., D.Md.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 778. Municipal Corporations 185(1)

To establish retaliation by a state actor for the exercise of a constitutional right, a §§ 1983 plaintiff must, as a threshold matter, prove that the conduct that allegedly prompted the defendants to retaliate was itself constitutionally protected, and that the defendants took some "adverse action" against him; thereafter, plaintiff bears burden of proving that his constitutionally protected conduct was at least a "substantial or motivating factor" in the defendants' decision to take their adverse action, and then burden shifts to defendants to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that they properly would have performed the challenged action even if the plaintiff had not engaged in constitutionally protected conduct. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1401; Civil Rights 1417

Allegations by provider of special education and therapy services that provider's director complained to county director of department of public health and coordinator of special education services regarding county's use of unlicensed competitors to provide such services, that the department director and the coordinator subsequently encouraged three of provider's employees to establish a competitor, that shortly thereafter the county began to transfer Special Education Itinerant Teacher (SEIT) session hours away from provider to that competitor, and that the department director and coordinator controlled the process by which such hours were assigned, were sufficient to state a §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim against county. Dorsett-Felicelli, Inc. v. County of Clinton, N.D.N.Y.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 183. Civil Rights 1351(2); Counties 120

City's refusal to renew business license for restaurant, citation of landowner for signage violation, and demand for debris removal, alleged to be in retaliation against landowner in response to his opposition to taking of land for nonpayment of taxes, did not rise to level of violation of landowner's due process rights, when there was no evidence of fundamental irregularity, racial animus or the like, and there was ample opportunity to litigate claims in state court. Matney v. City of North Adams, D.Mass.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 20. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Constitutional Law 287.2(1); Food 3; Municipal Corporations 602

Correctional officer stated First Amendment retaliation claim against correctional officials by alleging that they engaged in coordinated effort to make him scapegoat for alleged use of excessive force against prisoner and that, in response to his filing of lawsuit claiming that he was unfairly denied representation in prisoner's civil suit, he was shortly thereafter transferred to another institution, subjecting him to diminished career and promotional opportunities and financial losses. Mangiafico v. Blumenthal, D.Conn.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 6. Constitutional Law 91; Prisons 7

Routine official reports of police officer, discussing internal issues through internal reporting system as part of his assigned duties, did not address "matter of public concern," with regard to officer's claim of retaliation in violation of his First Amendment free speech rights, since officer was not speaking as citizen. Kelly v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 395. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Police department statement to press about pending case did not address "matter of public concern," with respect to police officer who released it and who claimed retaliation in violation of his First Amendment free speech rights, since statement was approved by commissioner, and it was made pursuant to department policy and as part of daily practice of sharing such information with media. Kelly v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 395. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

High school student-athletes' complaints about basketball team's coach, which concerned coach's purported harsh language and intimidating manner and took form of petition for coach's removal and other communications with school and district officials, did not constitute protected speech, and thus could not serve as basis for §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation action after students were suspended from team in wake of their refusal to participate in road trip with coach; speech was not political in nature and did not touch on matter of public concern, but rather constituted merely private grievance. Pinard v. Clatskanie School Dist. GJ, D.Or.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1214, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 446 F.3d 964. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4); Schools 164

Employer's motion for summary judgment on employee's claim of racial discrimination and retaliation under Title VII and § 1983 was premature, where employer had not been permitted sufficient development of the record by employer's assertion that employment records of other employees were confidential and not allowing employee to examine them to determine whether or not he was treated differently from employees who were not African-American. Jones v. City of Wilmington, D.Del.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 380. Federal Civil Procedure 2553

Inmate's § 1983 complaint adequately pleaded claim for retaliation; inmate was specific when pleading the First Amendment activity engaged in, his filing of grievances, as well as the resulting consequences he faced, keeplock confinement with reduction in privileges for periods of four days, 21 days and 21 days, and in at least one instance defendants' documents revealed that a misbehavior report was issued in response to inmate's filing of a grievance. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Citations and condemnation orders issued by fire chief and fire marshal against corporate owner of rental properties and its president were not issued in retaliation for president's participation in lawsuits against the city, or president's public criticism of building code enforcement policies, for purposes of § 1983 claim alleging First Amendment violations; fire chief had no knowledge of president's comments regarding building code enforcement policies, and president did not even begin criticizing the policies until more than one month after the last citation complained of was written and more than 10 months after action was filed, fire chief did not know that corporate owner and its president were plaintiffs in lawsuits against city, and neither fire chief nor fire marshal were appreciably inconvenienced by the process of defending those lawsuits. Grimm v. Sweeney, E.D.Pa.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 571. Constitutional Law 90.1(1); Municipal Corporations 739(1)

Allegations by owners of rental property that borough's assistant building inspector improperly issued citation for owners' refusal to inspect one of its properties in retaliation for owners' membership in associations that filed suits against borough stated prima facie case of retaliation in violation of the First Amendment under § 1983. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Constitutional Law 91; Health 392

State action taken in retaliation for exercise of constitutionally protected right can form basis for § 1983 claim, even if action would have been proper in other circumstances. Blue v. Koren, S.D.N.Y.1994, 865 F.Supp. 169, reversed 72 F.3d 1075. Civil Rights 1031

Mere fact that state inmate's group petition was confiscated after he filed grievances and litigation against warden was insufficient to establish retaliatory motive in §§ 1983 action against corrections officials, given inmate's long history of filings without any adverse action. West v. Hautamaki, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 672, 2006 WL 535570, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

Speakers scheduled for a "Black Student Day" event at a college failed to state a First Amendment retaliation claim in connection with the college's refusal to pay promised honoraria, absent an allegation of any causal connection between the refusal and their own expressive conduct; payment was withheld based on the fact that the student-organizers had contravened an acting president's decision to decline authorization for outside speakers. Ford v. Reynolds, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 354636, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Prior supervisor's alleged grabbing and restraining of state employee did not involve an important condition of employment, as required to establish First Amendment claim of retaliation under §§ 1983. Clark v. Alabama, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2005, 141 Fed.Appx. 777, 2005 WL 1317037, Unreported. States 53

By admitting that they had refused to allow their daughter to participate on either high school swimming team or swimming team of private swim club because they did not want person serving as coach for both teams to be around daughter, parents conceded that daughter did not participate in swimming due to their decision, and not because of any retaliatory action by club or school district arising from parents' complaints about coach or related lawsuits, precluding liability of club and district under §§ 1983 for alleged retaliation. Tierney v. Quincy School Dist. No. 172, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 125 Fed.Appx. 711, 2005 WL 513481, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Evidence 264

Police officer from another police force, serving on interview committee participating in selection of new officer for township police force, did not retaliate against two other committee members who were officers of township force, due to their support of black candidate; there was no evidence that outside officer participated in any adverse actions. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Any claimed right which stemmed from petitioner's status as mayor under state law could not be asserted in federal action for damages for deprivation of rights secured by Constitution. Egan v. City of Aurora, Ill., U.S.Ill.1961, 81 S.Ct. 684, 365 U.S. 514, 5 L.Ed.2d 741, on remand 291 F.2d 706. Civil Rights 1029

1341. Municipal ordinances generally, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Although, under § 1983, it is possible for a municipality to be held independently liable for a constitutional violation even in situations where none of its employees are liable, there can be no municipal liability unless there is a violation of the plaintiff's constitutional rights. Dintino v. Echols, E.D.Pa.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 255, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 783, 2004 WL 474134. Civil Rights 1345

Landlord plaintiffs' proposed amended complaint, which challenged enactment and enforcement of a city ordinance which required that rental properties be licensed in certain residential areas, sufficiently set forth an as-applied procedural due process claim under the Fourteenth Amendment; proposed amended complaint identified five landlord plaintiffs who received notices of violations, one landlord plaintiff whose request for a hearing was "ignored," and one landlord plaintiff whom city required to make extensive repairs without an opportunity to challenge the requirement. Jones v. Wildgen, D.Kan.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 1358. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Criminal proceedings brought in city court against religious proselytizer for violation of city noise ordinance were not brought in bad faith or in retaliation for proselytizer's previous successful lawsuit against city attacking old noise ordinance, as required to preclude application of Younger abstention doctrine to proselytizer's § 1983 action to enjoin city from enforcing certain sections of newly-revised noise ordinance; series of correspondence between proselytizer and city showed that city made good faith efforts to accommodate proselytizer after previous noise ordinance was struck down as unconstitutional and despite city's service of multiple summonses upon proselytizer, and criminal proceedings in city court were, for all practical proceedings, just one proceeding, not repetitive and harassing. Toback v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.1996, 948 F.Supp. 167. Federal Courts 54

Municipal ordinances and their enforcement may be challenged in actions under this section. Cobb v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1975, 402 F.Supp. 19.

1342. State court proceedings generally, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

To make out a cause of action under this section, state court proceedings must have been a complete nullity with a purpose to deprive a person of his property without due process of law. Sarelas v. Sheehan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1963, 326 F.2d 490, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 1334, 377 U.S. 932, 12 L.Ed.2d 296. See, also, Johnson v. Stone, C.A.Ill.1959, 268 F.2d 803; Bottone v. Procedural error under state law does not rise to a constitutional level for purposes of this section. Tyrrell v. Taylor, E.D.Pa.1975, 394 F.Supp. 9, modified on other grounds 535 F.2d 823. Civil Rights 1027

No violation of this section is made out so long as a procedurally fair trial on a civil issue is provided in the state court and neither does a mere irregularity in the state court proceeding confer jurisdiction under this section. Surowitz v. New York City Emp. Retirement System, S.D.N.Y.1974, 376 F.Supp. 369. Civil Rights 1315

1343. Necessity of bringing action, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Possibility that plaintiff, aggrieved by city building inspector's issuance of a building permit to plaintiff's next door neighbor to convert a tool shed into a small apartment, would have to bring his own state court action to enforce a board of zoning appeals decision in his favor did not violate his constitutional rights. Crocker v. Hakes, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 616 F.2d 237. Civil Rights 1073

1344. Clerks, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged negligence of clerk of circuit court in county in failing to notify Department of Safety that motorist had not been convicted of driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of an intoxicant, an offense for which motorist had admittedly been arrested and which resulted in suspension of motorist's driver's license, constituted no denial of equal protection cognizable under this section. Barnes v. Armour, E.D.Tenn.1974, 392 F.Supp. 1240. Civil Rights 1072

1345. Appearance required, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where a person summoned to appear in a Virginia county court to answer a misdemeanor charge, sent his lawyer to represent him vicariously and judge directed accused to respond to process in person and issued a capias for his attachment and accused was arrested and incarcerated, accused was not deprived of due process of the law in transgression of this section. Souther v. Reid, E.D.Va.1951, 101 F.Supp. 806. Constitutional Law 262

Denial of state inmate's request to personally appear at his trial in §§ 1983 action was not abuse of discretion, given that court arranged for inmate's appearance by video and inmate had no absolute right to attend the trial in person. Times v. Jones, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2005, 137 Fed.Appx. 56, 2005 WL 1491485, Unreported. Convicts 6

1346. Access to courts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Texas district court clerk's policy of not accepting cost bonds if surety thereon was not listed in Federal Register, unless appellant could provide $1,000 in cash in lieu of bond or audited financial statement showing assets noted in petition, did not implicate constitutionally guaranteed right of access to courts actionable under § 1983. Able v. Bacarisse, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1998, 131 F.3d 1141. Appeal And Error 380; Constitutional Law 328

To establish violation of constitutional right of access to courts, plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant caused "actual injury," i.e., took or was responsible for actions that hindered plaintiff's efforts to pursue legal claim. Monsky v. Moraghan, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1997, 127 F.3d 243, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 66, 525 U.S. 823, 142 L.Ed.2d 52. Constitutional Law 328

Interference with or deprivation of right of access to the courts is actionable under § 1983. Graham v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1986, 804 F.2d 953. Civil Rights 1056

Denial of access to the courts violates a recognized constitutional right, and conceivably could be the basis of a suit pursuant to this section, and thus action which prevents an individual from communicating with the court could constitute denial of access to the court. Henriksen v. Bentley, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1981, 644 F.2d 852. Civil Rights 1056

Japanese national's rights to use the court and to petition government for redress of grievances were guaranteed by and enforceable under this section. Inada v. Sullivan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 523 F.2d 485. Civil Rights 1056

Deprivation of materials necessary to afford reasonable access to the courts violates the due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and a federal court has jurisdiction of claim for damages based on such deprivation. Sigafus v. Brown, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1969, 416 F.2d 105. Constitutional Law 305(2); Federal Courts 178.5

Borough tax collector was not denied access to courts, in violation of his constitutional rights, when authorities allegedly suppressed evidence that would have allowed him to establish that illegal search resulted in evidence supporting his arrest for making unconsented to conversation recordings; necessary invalidation of conviction had not occurred, and in any event collector had no evidence in support of his evidence tampering claims. Konopka v. Borough of Wyoming, M.D.Pa.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 666. Taxation 2831

Allegations that police officers conspired to select sobriety test that fellow officer who struck and killed pedestrians was likely to "beat," delayed administration of that test, intimidated witnesses, and destroyed material evidence at scene of crime, limiting plaintiffs' ability to disprove comparative negligence defense and their ability to prove extent of victims' conscious pain and suffering and their entitlement to punitive damages, stated claim under § 1983 for denial of access to courts; plaintiffs specifically identified both the cause of action supposed to have been lost and the remedy being sought. Small v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 271, opinion clarified on denial of reconsideration 304 F.Supp.2d 401. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Litigant did not conspire with bailiff to deny opponent access to court in state alienation of affection action, and thus litigant and bailiff were not subject to liability under § 1983, despite opponent's allegation that judge's order to search all persons in courtroom was result of agreement between litigant and bailiff, where existence of agreement was based on hearsay and speculation, and hearing continued after search. Byrd v. Hopson, W.D.N.C.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 594, affirmed 108 Fed.Appx. 749, 2004 WL 1770261. Conspiracy 7.5(2); Conspiracy 19

Plaintiff, who was charged with criminal offense under state law, was not denied constitutional right of access to courts based on alleged denial of access to county law library, where plaintiff was not in state's custody. Roberts v. Childs, D.Kan.1997, 956 F.Supp. 923, reconsideration denied 1997 WL 83398, affirmed 125 F.3d 862. Constitutional Law 328; Counties 107

To deny access to courts, defendants need not literally bar courthouse door or attack plaintiffs' witnesses; right of access is lost where officials shield from public and victim's family key facts which would form basis of family's claim for redress. Love v. Bolinger, S.D.Ind.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1131. Constitutional Law 328

Bus passenger who had brought action against transit authority in connection with which authority had placed passenger under surveillance to determine if passenger's injuries were as severe as she claimed could not recover in federal civil rights action based on allegation that surveillance amounted to violation of her right of access to courts where surveillance occurred only in public places and without passenger's knowledge and passenger presented no evidence that surveillance caused either deprivation of or interference with her right of access or prejudiced her in any way. Frazier v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1995, 907 F.Supp. 116, affirmed 91 F.3d 123. Civil Rights 1056

Cancer patients stated claim against government and government officials for violation of right of access to courts, by alleging that government subjected patients to radiation experiments, but told them they were receiving cancer treatment; in 20 to 30 years since experiments, crucial evidence may have been lost, many witnesses may have died or otherwise have become unavailable, and many witnesses' memories had faded. In re Cincinnati Radiation Litigation, S.D.Ohio 1995, 874 F.Supp. 796. Constitutional Law 305(2); United States 50.10(1); United States 78(9)

Government officials' interference with plaintiff's constitutional right of access to courts can give rise to cause of action under federal civil rights statute. Doe v. Board of Educ. of Hononegah Community High School Dist. No. 207, N.D.Ill.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1366. Civil Rights 1056

The right of access to the courts is protected by the due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and is also part of the right to petition protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Crews v. Petrosky, W.D.Pa.1981, 509 F.Supp. 1199. Constitutional Law 91; Constitutional Law 305(2)

1347. Jurisdiction, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiff was not denied due process so as to give rise to cause of action against state court judges and justices under this section merely because state courts, not claimed to have been invidiously motivated, or to have indulged in sham proceedings rendered judgment against plaintiff in wrongful death action on jurisdictional grounds, though apparently plaintiff was not granted evidentiary hearing on questions of convenience of alternative forums and her good faith in joining Illinois residents as defendants. Adkins v. Underwood, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 520 F.2d 890, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 452, 423 U.S. 1017, 46 L.Ed.2d 389. Civil Rights 1056

City court judge and marshal, who challenged state statute which reduced territorial jurisdiction of the court, restricted personnel of the court, and reduced pay of judge and marshal, had no claim cognizable under this section. Dupont v. Kember, M.D.La.1980, 501 F.Supp. 1081. Civil Rights 1032

1348. Service of process, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Kansas statute under which a defendant had sought to serve plaintiff by publication in replevin action was constitutional, and, thus, no civil rights violation was shown, particularly where defendant's actions, even if arguably in violation of due process rights, were not taken under color of state law and did not involve state action. Siefkes v. Nichols, D.Kan.1992, 788 F.Supp. 477. Civil Rights 1326(9); Replevin 42

Defects in confession of judgment proceeding, including failure to properly sign complaint and affidavit and irregularities in mailing of notice, which indicated noncompliance with rules of civil procedure, did not in and of themselves constitute a violation of this section. Chicarelli v. Plymouth Garden Apartments, E.D.Pa.1982, 551 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1056

1349. Calendars and dockets, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Jail officials could not be held responsible under this section for unjustifiable delays caused by crowded criminal docket. Collins v. Schoonfield, D.C.Md.1973, 363 F.Supp. 1152. Civil Rights 1358

1350. Continuances, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Decedent's nephew, who was unsuccessful in challenging aunt's will in state court, failed to state a claim under this section against either his aunt's estate, executor of the estate, state trial judge who dismissed the action or clerk of the state court for denying him his "day in court" by refusing a fourth continuance in state probate suit. Hagerty v. Succession of Clement, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 749 F.2d 217, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 333, 474 U.S. 968, 88 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1351. Dismissal of actions, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Sole right of complainant who sought to discipline judge and members of bar was to make and submit complaint, and allegedly improper dismissal of such complaint could not give rise to action for deprivation of civil rights, even apart from questions of immunity. Ginsburg v. Stern, W.D.Pa.1954, 125 F.Supp. 596, affirmed 225 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1072

Dismissal of arrestee's §§ 1983 action for failure to prosecute was not warranted when arrestee's counsel acted quickly and effectively in their efforts to gain appointment of administrator to represent arrestee's estate following arrestee's death in unrelated accident, public administrator promptly filed cross-motion for substitution upon appointment to represent arrestee's estate, delay that occurred in case prior to arrestee's death was attributable to both arrestee and defendants and prejudice from delay in appointment of administrator was felt equally by all, and dismissal would punish parties without blame for delay. Kernisant v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2005, 225 F.R.D. 422. Federal Civil Procedure 1763

1352. Subpoenas, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A city's issuance of subpoena for wage and salary records of resident of government subsidized housing project, and city police detective's service of subpoena on resident's private employer, were not causally connected to resident's subsequent discharge by employer so as to give rise to § 1983 claim against city and officer; city issued subpoena in conjunction with investigation of improper rent subsidies at project and while subpoena may have been triggering event leading to discharge, it had no effect on employer's discharge decision in that resident was terminated when she admitted she forged her supervisors' signatures on letters which helped her get rent subsidy. Dawson v. City of Kent, N.D.Ohio 1988, 682 F.Supp. 920, affirmed 865 F.2d 257. Civil Rights 1032

1353. Depositions, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged misuse of state power on compulsory process to inflict personal injury upon plaintiff, when he appeared for taking of his deposition in connection with his private state court litigation in which state did no more than furnish forum, having no interest whatsoever in outcome, constituted no denial of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and could give rise to no claim upon which relief could be granted under this section. Skolnick v. Martin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1963, 317 F.2d 855, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 199, 375 U.S. 908, 11 L.Ed.2d 146, rehearing denied 84 S.Ct. 440, 375 U.S. 960, 11 L.Ed.2d 319. Civil Rights 1037; Constitutional Law 309(3)

1354. Interrogatories, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In civil rights action brought by attorney challenging disbarment of attorney, denial of attorney's discovery against justices of Iowa Supreme Court and Grievance Commission members was not denial of due process in that interrogatories were attempt to obtain mental impressions of Commission and court in decisionmaking process. Matter of Randall, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1981, 640 F.2d 898, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 361, 454 U.S. 880, 70 L.Ed.2d 189. Constitutional Law 305(3)

1355. Hearing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where state prisoner was indicted by properly convened grand jury, he was not deprived of civil rights by lack of state preliminary hearing on question of probable cause to support pretrial detention. Carter v. Kilbane, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1975, 519 F.2d 1370. Civil Rights 1088(5); Criminal Law 223

1356. Bias and prejudice of judge, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Motorists who were arrested for exceeding posted speed limit stated § 1983 cause of action for denial of due process against mayor and city by alleging that motorists had right to have contested traffic cases heard in court of proper jurisdiction and right to have disinterested and impartial judge, rather than mayor, hear and decide contested traffic cases. Rose v. Village of Peninsula, N.D.Ohio 1993, 839 F.Supp. 517. Civil Rights 1395(6)

1357. Comments of counsel, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Slanderous remarks made by attorney during state court appearances to defend another attorney's claim against his clients for attorney fees did not rise to level of unfair trial in federal constitutional sense so as to give rise to right in the other attorney to pursue action under this section. Arch v. Papadakos, W.D.Pa.1984, 575 F.Supp. 1271, affirmed 751 F.2d 375. Civil Rights 1038

1358. Witnesses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

The Civil Rights Act of 1871 does not allow recovery of damages against a private party for testimony in a judicial proceeding. Briscoe v. LaHue, U.S.Ind.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 460 U.S. 325, 75 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1056

Arrestee failed to state § 1983 claim against prosecutors arising from their payments and promises of lenience to witnesses for allegedly false statements inculpating arrestee; arrestee did not allege concealment at trial of payments and promises, and payments and promises themselves did not violate due process clause. Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 20 F.3d 789, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 740, 513 U.S. 1085, 130 L.Ed.2d 642, on remand 1996 WL 10899. Civil Rights 1395(6); Constitutional Law 268(10); Criminal Law 700(1)

1359. Privileges, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

As a creature of state law, the attorney-client privilege cannot be asserted as a basis for recovery under this section. Bradt v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 634 F.2d 796, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 125, 454 U.S. 830, 70 L.Ed.2d 106. Civil Rights 1056

1360. Instructions, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Defendant acquitted on criminal charges stated due process claim for denial of fair trial on ground that police officer and deputy district attorney had intimidated judge into changing his jury instructions; fact of acquittal spoke only to amount of damages suffered and was irrelevant to whether defendant had cause of action for alleged violation, which was complete when judge changed jury instructions. Haupt v. Dillard, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1994, 17 F.3d 285, as amended. Civil Rights 1395(5); Constitutional Law 268(8)

1361. Settlement and compromise, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Because arrestee who asserted that he was induced by fraud to enter into settlement agreement with transit authority and police officer was entitled to seek to have the settlement set aside on the basis of fraudulent misrepresentation, he was not denied any property by the settlement without due process. Bates v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1577. Compromise And Settlement 19(1); Constitutional Law 278(1); Constitutional Law 278(2)

1362. Failure to rule, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State court's failure to act within three years on inmate's motion for postconviction relief may have amounted to a deprivation of constitutional rights and may have given rise to a cognizable claim for injunctive relief under this section. McMillan v. Chief Judge, Circuit Court of Greene County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1983, 711 F.2d 108, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 724, 464 U.S. 1048, 79 L.Ed.2d 185. Civil Rights 1088(5)

A failure to act on a postconviction motion for relief in state court for a substantial period of time may give rise to a cognizable claim under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Pool v. Wyrick, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1983, 703 F.2d 1064. Civil Rights 1098

1363. Decisions, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal courts do not guarantee citizen against loss of private civil action due to alleged irregularities in trial thereof in state court. Skolnick v. Spolar, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1963, 317 F.2d 857, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 195, 375 U.S. 904, 11 L.Ed.2d 145, rehearing denied 84 S.Ct. 439, 375 U.S. 960, 11 L.Ed.2d 318. Constitutional Law 304.1

Child of ward failed to state civil rights claim against guardian and guardian's attorney for deprivation of due process, even assuming Puerto Rico trial court judge erred in its rulings and that guardian and attorney took advantage of that situation to breach fiduciary duties and steal or mismanage funds or real property owned by ward, where ward's child failed to allege that state court procedures were not in place to correct such errors, or that procedures in place were not adequate. Perkins-Leverock v. Ramirez-Ramirez, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 762 F.Supp.

19. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Federal district court did not have jurisdiction to review a final decision of a state appellate court; thus, it could not entertain a civil rights action based on an allegation that the decision of that court deprived one of the parties of equal protection. National Carloading Corp. v. Shulman, N.D.Ga.1983, 570 F.Supp. 3. Courts 509

1364. Judicial remedies, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Section 1983 plaintiffs, one of whom was struck by stray bullet allegedly fired by off-duty police officer during target practice with other off-duty officers, failed to establish that alleged conspiracy of silence by off-duty officers and investigating officers as to source of bullet deprived plaintiffs of their constitutional right to seek judicial relief for their injury; actual circumstances surrounding shooting were revealed publicly within six months of incident, plaintiffs were granted access to records of task force's investigation for use in their own legal action, and there were no allegations that plaintiffs had been prevented from pursuing tort action in state court or that value of such action had been reduced by cover-up. Vasquez v. Hernandez, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 60 F.3d 325, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1545, 517 U.S. 1156, 134 L.Ed.2d 648. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1365. Judgments, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Fact that arbitrary judgment of state court may abridge Constitution does not necessarily mean that such judgment gives rise to claim for violation of constitutional and civil rights in federal district court; if to review such judgment for constitutional violations of that character is essentially exercise of appellate jurisdiction, federal district court, whose jurisdiction is strictly original, has no power to entertain such suit. Reynolds v. State of Ga., C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 640 F.2d 702, rehearing denied 645 F.2d 72, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 326, 454 U.S. 865, 70 L.Ed.2d 165. Federal Courts 178.5; Federal Courts 221; Federal Courts 1131.1

1366. Injunctions, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint alleging that without notice a temporary restraining order had been procured by bank from New Mexico court under New Mexico Rules of Civil Procedure, § 21-1-1(65, 66)(b), N.M.S.A. (1953 Comp.), that in reliance on that order the bank with cooperation of deputy sheriff wrongfully deprived plaintiff of property and wrongfully put him out of business while acting under color of state law in violation of procedural due process, and asserting that bank acted in a wrongful, wanton and reckless manner in obtaining and using order was sufficient to state violation of this section. Torres v. First State Bank of Sierra County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1977, 550 F.2d 1255. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1367. Attachment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Owner of property whose rents were seized pursuant to Pennsylvania foreign attachment procedures was not entitled to recover damages under civil rights law on theory that, at time of seizure, constitutionality of such foreign attachment procedure was doubtful in light of Supreme Court decision holding Pennsylvania replevin law, Pa.R.C.P. Nos. 1251-1279, unconstitutional as violative of due process, even though foreign attachment provisions were subsequently held unconstitutional. G. H. McShane Co., Inc. v. McFadden, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 554 F.2d 111, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 178, 434 U.S. 857, 54 L.Ed.2d 129. Civil Rights 1071

Mere allegedly unlawful seizure of money under court order did not give rise to cause of action under this section. Bradford Audio Corp. v. Pious, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1968, 392 F.2d 67. Civil Rights 1088(3) belonging to the judgment debtor was sufficiently foreseeable that it was incumbent upon sheriff to provide owner with postdeprivation hearing, and this was not accomplished by requiring the owner to pay towing or storage charges or, alternatively, to commence a state lawsuit. Bins v. Artison, E.D.Wis.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1034, on subsequent appeal 924 F.2d 1061, on remand 764 F.Supp. 129. Sheriffs And Constables 113(1)

Plaintiff who alleged that prejudgment attachment of his vehicle was not performed in accordance with requirements of K.S.A. § 60-703 but expressly disavowed any attack under the due process clause of U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14 on K.S.A. § 60-703 failed to present valid cause of action under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Long v. Citizen's Bank & Trust Co. of Manhattan, Kan., D.C.Kan.1983, 563 F.Supp. 1203. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Even if there had been some irregularity or violation of Alabama law by retention of automobile by the sheriff's department following filing of a personal property exemption by plaintiff's husband, infractions involved did not rise to level necessary to state a cause of action under section governing civil action for deprivation of rights, in that actions of sheriff or defendant did not amount to deprivation of plaintiff's due process rights. Satterfield v. Clark, M.D.Ala.1981, 514 F.Supp. 1323, affirmed 685 F.2d 1387. Civil Rights 1071

1368. Garnishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Depositor failed to state § 1983 claim against bank which debited funds from his bank account and remitted these funds to another pursuant to writ of garnishment served on bank based upon sanctions award entered by state court; depositor's attack against bank was improper attempt to attack a valid state court judgment, federal district court was not the proper forum for such attack, and § 1983 action against bank appeared to have been filed for purpose of retaliating against the proper enforcement of a writ of garnishment. Ortman v. Thomas, E.D.Mich.1995, 894 F.Supp. 1104, affirmed 99 F.3d 807. Civil Rights 1071

Father's assertions that actions of West Virginia Department of Human Services (DHS) and DHS paralegal were illegal because they suggested "illegally high and usurious amount from plaintiff's weekly net income" did not allege federal constitutional deprivation, as required to state § 1983 claim. Roush v. Roush, S.D.W.Va.1991, 767 F.Supp. 1344, affirmed 952 F.2d 396, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1948, 504 U.S. 913, 118 L.Ed.2d 552. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1395(3)

Fact that statute setting maximum limit upon wages which can be garnished included no private remedy did not preclude § 1983 action for violating dictates of Fourteenth Amendment by failing to give adequate notice of garnishment. Burris v. Mahaney, M.D.Tenn.1989, 716 F.Supp. 1051. Civil Rights 1313

Judgment debtor stated claim upon which relief could be granted in his civil rights action raising due process challenge to Indiana's postjudgment garnishment statute; judgment debtor's bank account contained social security funds that were exempt under federal law and freeze had been placed on account without giving judgment debtor notice of freeze or of his right to claim exemptions under federal law and without hearing. Jones v. Marion County Small Claims Court, Lawrence Tp. Div., S.D.Ind.1988, 701 F.Supp. 1414. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Louisiana community property procedure, under which wife's wages could be garnished for debts of husband although she was not named as party defendant or served with prejudgment or postjudgment process, or notified of garnishment, was actionable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 as unconstitutional deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of Fourteenth Amendment. Jackson v. Galan, E.D.La.1986, 631 F.Supp. 409. Civil Rights 1071

Where civil rights complaint alleged the garnishment procedures used in Utah violated Utah laws relating to prejudgment garnishment and violated U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1 complaint did not attack Utah prejudgment attachment and garnishment procedures as applied or on their face merely alleged that those procedures were not followed and was insufficient to state a claim under this subchapter. Coltharp v. Cutler, D.C.Utah 1976, 419 F.Supp. 924. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1369. Repossession, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In determining whether police involvement in repossession of motor vehicle constitutes "state action," ultimate inquiry is whether police officers were actively involved in the repossession; such active police intervention occurs when officer assists in effectuating repossession over objection of debtor or so intimidates debtor as to cause debtor to refrain from exercising his or her legal right to resist repossession. Barrett v. Harwood, N.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 744, affirmed 189 F.3d 297, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2719, 530 U.S. 1262, 147 L.Ed.2d 984. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Since protections of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 applied to search by defendants who, acting pursuant to Michigan court rule, broke into home of plaintiffs and seized a television set, plaintiffs may have been deprived of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution, so that court had jurisdiction to decide the case brought under this section. Miloszewski v. Sears Roebuck & Co., W.D.Mich.1972, 346 F.Supp. 119. Federal Courts 221

Creditor-landlord's execution and seizure of commercial space leased by Chapter 11 debtor-tenant, based on confessed judgment for possession that had neither been set aside or reversed and, thus, was enforceable under Pennsylvania law, did not result in deprivation of property without due process of law, and so did not give rise to § 1983 claim. In re Okan's Foods, Inc., Bkrtcy.E.D.Pa.1998, 217 B.R. 739. Constitutional Law 315; Execution 8

1370. Liens, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Individuals whose motor vehicles were retained by private repairmen when they refused to pay the amounts which the repairmen claimed were owed for the repairs, one of whom eventually paid the amount demanded and regained possession of his automobile, another of whom regained possession of his vehicle through agreement of counsel after action was initiated, and two of whom never regained possession of their vehicles but had abandoned them as worthless, had live claims against the repairmen under this section. (Per Garth, Circuit Judge, with three Judges concurring and three Judges concurring specially.) Parks v. "Mr. Ford", C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 556 F.2d 132. Civil Rights 1071

The "common law liens" which the plaintiff caused to be filed on real property owned by the defendants, consisting of borough and its officers, in action which failed to state a claim for relief under this section were null and void and would be canceled. Eagle v. Kenai Peninsula Borough, D.C.Alaska 1980, 489 F.Supp. 138. Liens 16

Because buyer of used car voluntarily delivered car to car dealer upon experiencing mechanical difficulty with car, no seizure ever occurring, and buyer authorized disassembly of car to ascertain problem, which service car dealer in fact performed, there was no deprivation of buyers' rights under this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights, as result of car dealer's refusal to release car until buyers paid for services performed. Turner v. Roy Bridges Motors, Inc., N.D.Ala.1977, 436 F.Supp. 613. Civil Rights 1071; Constitutional Law 319.5(1)

1371. Foreclosures, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

There was no as applied violation of due process rights of homeowner, when mortgagee commenced foreclosure action after mortgagor fell behind in payments, and filed lis pendens notice in property records, even though mortgagee was not afforded pre-filing notice and opportunity to present defenses to foreclosure; underlying issues were relatively easy to resolve, bonding requirement provided recourse to mortgagor in post-filing challenges to notice, and there was public interest in discouraging transfer of real property with undisclosed encumbrances. Diaz v. Pataki, S.D.N.Y.2005, 368 F.Supp.2d 265. Constitutional Law 312(4); Lis Pendens 18

Use of state law to foreclose is not sufficient to allege a claim under civil rights statute. Kolb v. Naylor, N.D.Iowa 1987, 658 F.Supp. 520. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1372. ---- Personal property, foreclosures, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Any removal and/or destruction of mortgagor's personal property from the premises after they were sold pursuant to the power of sale contained in the mortgage did not amount to a constitutional violation so as to permit the mortgagor to maintain an action against the mortgagee for violation of his civil rights. Dieffenbach v. Buckley, D.C.N.H.1979, 464 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1071

1373. Records and transcripts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Criminal defendant was not entitled to damages in civil rights action based on his complaint that trial transcript was inaccurate, absent allegation that inaccuracies deprived him of fair and adequate appellate review of conviction. Tedford v. Hepting, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 990 F.2d 745, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 317, 510 U.S. 920, 126 L.Ed.2d 264. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Pennsylvania Rules of Appellate Procedure set forth proper procedures that must be followed in order to correct alleged discrepancies in record; these procedures, rather than federal civil rights action against court reporter, provided party claiming that trial testimony was incorrectly transcribed with remedy. Cook v. Smith, E.D.Pa.1993, 812 F.Supp. 561. Civil Rights 1311

Party seeking an order under this section requiring state to furnish free copy of court records and trial transcript must state a claim of constitutional dimension that is neither frivolous nor moot and must specify with sufficient clarity those portions of proceedings questioned in order that initial determination of relevance can be made. Lucas v. Com. of Virginia, Circuit Court of Page County Twenty-Sixth Judicial Circuit, W.D.Va.1974, 387 F.Supp. 370. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prisoner who brought civil rights action to compel state to provide him with parts of trial transcript and who alleged that prosecution witness made in-court identification of prisoner from photographs at the same time that prisoner was seated in the courtroom stated valid constitutional claim entitling prisoner to that portion of transcript which recorded the in-court identification. Pollard v. Kidd, E.D.Va.1974, 383 F.Supp. 1056, affirmed 530 F.2d 969. Civil Rights 1395(5)

1374. Appeals, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegations in state court defendant's pro se complaint, that state trial judge had acted out of spite or annoyance in refusing to sign journal entry to permit defendant to appeal, was sufficient to state claim under § 1983 for violation of defendant's due process rights. Olson v. Hart, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1992, 965 F.2d 940. Conspiracy 18

Where appeals are provided for there must be no arbitrary discrimination, and if a plaintiff in action under this section can show that he was not allowed to appeal his conviction while others in his position were, he would show deprivation of his right to equal protection of laws. Ortega v. Ragen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1954, 216 F.2d 561, certiorari denied 75 S.Ct. 786, 349 U.S. 940, 99 L.Ed. 1268. Constitutional Law 250.2(5)

State law in fact authorized stay pending appeal of fine imposed upon criminal conviction, and thus complaint failed to state § 1983 cause of action, despite convicted defendant's belief that he could not appeal without first paying the fine. Crist v. Town Court, S.D.N.Y.1994, 156 F.R.D. 85, affirmed 57 F.3d 1064. Civil Rights

1375. Contempt of court, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Persons who alleged that they had been held in contempt after cursory hearing for failing to make child support payments did not state civil rights action against county for its alleged "tolerance" of practices of support division administrator in referring to the incarceration as "punishment for contempt" and allegedly discouraging them from seeking court-appointed counsel. Pompey v. Broward County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 95 F.3d 1543. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Civil rights of party confined for contempt of court were not violated by reason of fact that during his periods of incarceration while his appeal was pending he had been assigned prison number, given prison orientation course, and required to perform hard labor. Rhodes v. Meyer, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1964, 334 F.2d 709, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 263, 379 U.S. 915, 13 L.Ed.2d 186. Civil Rights 1098

1376. Criminal prosecutions generally, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

While principles of judicial economy, as well as proper state-federal relations, preclude federal courts from exercising equitable jurisdiction to enjoin ongoing state prosecutions, when genuine threat of prosecution exists, litigant is entitled to resort to federal forum to seek redress for alleged deprivation of federal rights. Wooley v. Maynard, U.S.N.H.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1428, 430 U.S. 705, 51 L.Ed.2d 752. Courts 508(7)

Any coercive involvement of members of State Supreme Court in inducing municipal court judge to testify before grand jury did not constitute "extraordinary circumstances" warranting federal intervention in state criminal proceeding growing out of such grand jury testimony, on ground that because of formidable supervisory powers of Supreme Court the petitioner could not obtain a fair trial, since not only did petitioner have right to disqualify trial and appellate judges and seek temporary assignment of Supreme Court judges but four of the six court members who participated in alleged coercion were no longer on the court and of the two remaining members only one was active in conduct complained of. Kugler v. Helfant, U.S.N.J.1975, 95 S.Ct. 1524, 421 U.S. 117, 44 L.Ed.2d 15, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 2425, 421 U.S. 1017, 44 L.Ed.2d 686, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 2426, 421 U.S. 1017, 44 L.Ed.2d 686. Courts 508(7)

Civil rights claim under § 1983 brought by individual convicted of murder against defendants who participated in criminal proceedings had sufficiently accrued, where individual's conviction was reversed on direct appeal due to use of tainted evidence; pending retrial of murder charge would not likely be affected by civil rights suit, as state had indicated intent to refrain from using tainted evidence on retrial. Davis v. Zain, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 79 F.3d 18 . Civil Rights 1088(5)

To establish case under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, individual who was charged with and acquitted of perjury in Florida was required to show not merely mistake in prosecution or even common law tort, but violation of constitutional right by Maryland county investigator who participated in investigation. McLaughlin v. Alban, C.A.D.C.1985, 775 F.2d 389, 249 U.S.App.D.C. 339. Civil Rights 1404

Plaintiff who claimed that he was convicted of robbery as result of unconstitutional photograph identification used by the police did not have claim against city under §§1983 for malicious prosecution, where criminal proceeding had not ended in plaintiff's favor, and he instead was convicted, the conviction was affirmed on appeal, and a petition for allocatur was denied. Bush v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2005, 367 F.Supp.2d 722. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Plaintiff's alleged prosecution and sentencing as an adult at time he was actually a juvenile did not violate plaintiff's constitutional rights, as required to support claim under §§ 1983 against individuals involved in his prosecution, where plaintiff was unaware of his actual birthdate until after his release from prison and believed he was an adult at the time, and there was no indication that anyone involved in his criminal prosecution knew otherwise. Jordan v. New York, W.D.N.Y.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 199. Infants 68.5

Members of Nebraska Liquor Control Commission had no direct responsibility for any deprivation of Native Americans' rights, as required to impose liability under § 1983 for alleged due process violation from minimal enforcement of criminal laws and Nebraska Liquor Control Act when victims were Native Americans; Commission had no jurisdiction over law enforcement activities related to violent crimes, and Act did not charge Commission members with organizing and executing "standard law enforcement" activities. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate could not challenge constitutionality of state conviction and sentence in § 1983 action. Martinez v. Ensor, D.Colo.1997, 958 F.Supp. 515. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Inmate could not maintain action against police officers for allegedly prosecuting him with false testimony to retaliate against him for his exercise of First Amendment rights, where his conviction had not been reversed or otherwise invalidated. Duamutef v. Morris, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1112. Civil Rights 1088(5)

To recover damages for allegedly unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment, or for other harm caused by actions whose unlawfulness would render a conviction or sentence invalid, § 1983 plaintiff must prove that conviction has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determinations, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Duamutef v. Morris, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1112. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Former prisoner convicted of child rape, and later released because of a DNA test which excluded him as the perpetrator, failed to establish, for purpose of §§ 1983 claim, that his Brady rights were violated by prosecutor's alleged failure to turn over victim's underwear to him for testing, where prisoner conceded that it was unclear whether testing available at the time of his trial would have excluded him, and prisoner had access to rape kit containing underwear, which was entered into evidence at trial. Bullock v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 75, 2004 WL 2676597, Unreported, rehearing denied. Criminal Law 700(3)

1377. Unconstitutionality of statute or ordinance, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A criminal misdemeanor prosecution under an ordinance later determined to be constitutionally invalid did not give rise to a civil rights statute injury, on theory that the plaintiffs were deprived of a constitutionally protected interest in avoiding criminal prosecution; plaintiffs sustained no deprivation other than that suffered as a result of criminal prosecution. Richardson v. City of South Euclid, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1990, 904 F.2d 1050, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 691, 498 U.S. 1032, 112 L.Ed.2d 681. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Abortion protestors arrested under municipal noise ordinance later found to be unconstitutional in unrelated lawsuit would not be entitled to recover damages from municipality under § 1983, to the extent that they created a noise level so loud as to be constitutionally subject to prohibition under reasonable time, place and manner regulation; under such circumstances, noise ordinance would not be unconstitutional as applied to them. Noelker v. City of Kansas City, Mo., W.D.Mo.1992, 802 F.Supp. 268. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest and prosecution pursuant to unconstitutional ordinance is violation of federal civil rights statute. Waters v. McGuriman, E.D.Pa.1987, 656 F.Supp. 923. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

not sufficient to impose upon them § 1983 liability for death of victim following her abduction by private actor. Gazette v. City of Pontiac, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 41 F.3d 1061. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Proceedings before Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) did not deprive defendant of a liberty interest, as required to state § 1983 claim against MCAD's chairman; plaintiff was afforded an investigation of his allegations and opportunity to present his case before MCAD, and MCAD proceedings were conducted in full accordance with state law. Johnson v. Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 943 F.2d 104, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 948, 502 U.S. 1063, 117 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1706; Constitutional Law 318(2)

In light of V.A.T.S. Nat.Res.Code §§ 88.091-88.093 permitting Railroad Commission to inspect oil lease property and related records and plaintiff oil producers' lack of property rights in oil pipeline, oil flowing through it, or land on which "drop meter" installed by agent of Commission was located, oil producer's allegations that Commission agent and oil companies violated their rights under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 4 by installing "drop meter" and coming on oil leasehold to search for evidence of alleged criminal conduct on part of producers failed to state cause of action under this section. Wheeler v. Cosden Oil and Chemical Co., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1984, 734 F.2d 254, rehearing denied 744 F.2d 1131. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Claim that defendant prosecuting attorney subjected plaintiffs to interrogation by state police, county grand jury and Federal Bureau of Investigation was not actionable under this section. Kaylor v. Fields, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 661 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Where state investigatory commission might conduct inquiry vis-á-vis individual or association in bad faith with purpose of harassment and of ultimately making and publicizing findings with respect to guilt of such individual in transgression of commission's statutory mandate, court would have power to protect person whose civil rights are being violated. Freeman and Bass, P. A. v. State of N. J. Commission of Investigation, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1973, 486 F.2d 176. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Alleged failure of county prosecutor to investigate arrestee's proposed cross-complaint against arrestee's former wife in the same manner or on the same basis as former wife's complaint against arrestee did not violate equal protection; prosecutor reviewed cross-complaint pursuant to county policy, and his decision not to prosecute it did not demonstrate existence of an official policy prohibiting cross-complaints or even an unwritten policy or custom to that effect. Staley v. Grady, S.D.N.Y.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 411. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 8

Allegation by correctional officer that prosecuting attorney present at police interview with prisoner occurring prior to existence of probable cause to prosecute correctional officer for assisting prisoner to escape advised police about how to conduct their escape investigation was speculative assertion based upon inference which was not reasonably supportable, and hence could not serve as basis for § 1983 claim against prosecuting attorney; it was not reasonable to infer from prosecuting attorney's performance of traditional prosecutorial role that he gave police advice on matter reserved to discretion of investigating officer, and regardless of prosecutor's motive, it could not be presumed that his attitude was such that it affected entire investigation as though he were active participant. Rhodes v. Smithers, S.D.W.Va.1995, 939 F.Supp. 1256, affirmed 91 F.3d 132. Civil Rights 1404

Fourteenth Amendment due process rights of government employee were not violated by investigation of her sexual harassment claims undertaken by government attorney; claims had to affect employee's liberty interest in career appointment, and none of attorney's actions had that effect, since they all came after employee had been transferred to less desirable position. Marrero Rivera v. Department of Justice of Com. of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 821 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1506; Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

president of the United States with the specific intent to deprive the defendant of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 5 and 14. Shaw v. Garrison, E.D.La.1971, 328 F.Supp. 390, affirmed 467 F.2d 113, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 467, 409 U.S. 1024, 34 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1420; Injunction 128(10)

1379. Wiretapping, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Under this section authorizing suit to redress deprivation under color of state law of any rights secured by Constitution, subject of wiretaps had cause of action against state and local officials for violation of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 resulting from dissemination of information gained from allegedly illegal wiretaps. Wright v. State of Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1974, 495 F.2d 1086. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Plaintiffs were barred, in their § 1983 action alleging unconstitutional use of wiretapping, from pursuing money damages on a judicial deception theory, inasmuch as any finding that the wiretap orders were procured by way of false and misleading statements would have the effect of undermining the legality of the wiretap and tainting fatally plaintiffs' convictions in state court. Whitaker v. Garcetti, C.D.Cal.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1132. Civil Rights 1088(3)

1380. Informants, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Confidential informant was not entitled to monetary damages from former Attorneys General and other state officials for alleged deprivation of right to interstate travel based on defendants' alleged inducement causing informant to become an informant, even if informant's role as an informant forced him to refrain from travelling in public; informant took a position in a casino of his own free will and voluntarily entered into agreement to provide information to state, and thus it was the informant's decision, and not anything that defendants did, that presented the risk that someone from defendant's past would recognize him. G-69 v. Degnan, D.N.J.1990, 745 F.Supp. 254, clarified on denial of reconsideration 748 F.Supp. 274. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1381. Abuse of process, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Proof of abuse of process alone cannot support finding of liability under federal civil rights statute. Santiago v. Fenton, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 891 F.2d 373. Civil Rights 1056

Where civil rights plaintiff's complaint against constable, who had arrested him under Mississippi fee system for constables which compensated constables ten dollars for each charge they made which resulted in conviction, Miss.Code Ann. § 25-7-27, concerned only constable's motive and not lack of probable cause, and motive related solely to what was generally authorized and contemplated by Mississippi law and was not related to personal or class characteristics of arrestee or to his conduct apart from that giving rise to probable cause for arrest, there was no abuse of process so as to give rise to damage action against constable under this section. Brown v. Edwards, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1984, 721 F.2d 1442. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Assertedly malicious issuance of summons without probable cause, on basis of complaint sworn out by building inspector, relative to alleged ordinance violation, did not rise to level of unconstitutional deprivation of liberty without due process or unreasonable seizure, so as to justify maintenance of action under this section, at least in circumstances where defendant named in the summons was also charged with building code violation, which was a valid charge and of which he was found guilty; there being a legitimate compulsion to appear before the court on the valid charge, no deprivation of constitutional rights occurred by fact of additional compulsion, albeit based on assertedly invalid charge, to make the same appearance. Nesmith v. Taylor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 715 F.2d 194. Civil Rights 1088(3)

cause of action under this section. Beker Phosphate Corp. v. Muirhead, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 581 F.2d 1187. Civil Rights 1037

Alleged tortious conduct of private individuals in filing complaint against plaintiff without probable cause, assaulting him, and threatening and harassing him was not sufficient to show violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights for purposes of action under this section. Grow v. Fisher, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1975, 523 F.2d 875. Civil Rights 1034

Alleged interference by police officers with plaintiffs' lawsuit, by means of stops and detentions of plaintiffs, prior to trial, allegedly intended to intimidate potential witnesses, could not serve as a basis for damages attributable to city's unconstitutional custom of investigatory detentions; alleged harassment did not cause any witness to refrain from testifying. Glass v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Arrestee failed to state claims for abuse of process against county, city, and detective under § 1983 and New York law when arrestee did not allege that defendants issued either civil or criminal process to compel arrestee to perform an act or to forbear from any action, and did not allege that defendants used the process to obtain a collateral objective. Anderson v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1395(6); Process 168

Plaintiff pursuing § 1983 action that is also the common-law tort of abuse of process must allege more than would be necessary to state claim for abuse of process; facts pleaded must be sufficient to assert arguably a constitutional injury. Kleiss v. Short, S.D.Iowa 1992, 805 F.Supp. 726, affirmed 995 F.2d 229. Civil Rights 1056

Liability under § 1983 may not be predicated on claim for malicious abuse of process. Spear v. Town of West Hartford, D.Conn.1991, 771 F.Supp. 521, affirmed 954 F.2d 63, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 66, 506 U.S. 819, 121 L.Ed.2d 33. Civil Rights 1056

Substantive misuse of procedure authorized by state law for obtaining possession of real property by confession pursuant to instrument authorizing confession by judgment by landlord and others alleged by tenants, i.e., the initiation of procedures maliciously and without probable cause, did not form basis of civil rights liability, in that private misuse of state procedure did not constitute state action and private action was not so clothed with authority of state law as to be considered state action. Chicarelli v. Plymouth Garden Apartments, E.D.Pa.1982, 551 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1326(9)

This section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law affords plaintiff no cause of action for alleged abuse or misuse of process since it relates to state action and not that of individual persons or corporations. Weisser v. Medical Care Systems, Inc., E.D.Pa.1977, 432 F.Supp. 1292. Civil Rights 1325

State, rather than county, was responsible for conversion of data from local court systems to system through which state published court records on the Internet, and therefore county could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for alleged defamation of convict that resulted from misreporting of convict's criminal history due to conversion problems. LeMoine v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 132 Fed.Appx. 53, 2005 WL 1220477, Unreported. Civil Rights 1348

Prisoner's claims regarding alteration of police report and failure to investigate the altered evidence did not involve the use of "legal process," as was required to state claim for abuse of process in §§ 1983 action against several police officers, prosecutors, public defenders, and witnesses involved in state murder prosecution. Holly v. Boudreau, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 36, 2004 WL 1435210, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5) unusual detriment to claimant, was not made. Lazaratos v. Ruiz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22283832, Unreported. Process 171

1382. Entrapment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

While entrapment may be proper defense in criminal action, police officer's participation in such activity does not constitute constitutional violation which can form basis for § 1983 claim. Lehman v. Kornblau, E.D.N.Y.2001, 134 F.Supp.2d 281. Civil Rights 1088(1)

As there was no federal constitutional right to be free from entrapment, plaintiffs' claims that prosecuting attorney and certain private parties engaged in scheme to illegally entrap them for crime of attending dogfight failed to state cause of action under this section. Schieb v. Humane Soc. of Huron Valley, E.D.Mich.1984, 582 F.Supp. 717. Civil Rights 1395(5)

1383. Malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

To prove malicious prosecution under § 1983, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the defendants initiated a criminal proceeding; (2) the criminal proceeding ended in plaintiff's favor; (3) the proceeding was initiated without probable cause; (4) the defendants acted maliciously or for a purpose other than bringing the plaintiff to justice; and (5) the plaintiff suffered deprivation of liberty consistent with the concept of seizure as a consequence of a legal proceeding. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 497, on remand 2004 WL 633276. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Plaintiff in § 1983 action who alleged only that (1) he was arrested by police detectives and charged with first degree murder and armed robbery, (2) that defendants illegally seized him and lacked probable cause to arrest him, (3) that he suffered bodily and emotional harm, and (4) that defendants maliciously prosecuted him in violation of Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, pled only false arrest, and did not state § 1983 claim based on malicious prosecution; no allegation was made that detectives had committed any improper acts after arresting him without probable cause. Sneed v. Rybicki, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1998, 146 F.3d 478. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee's malicious prosecution claim against assistant state attorney did not constitute constitutional tort cognizable under § 1983, inasmuch as alleged subsequent eviction, adverse employment status, and loss of income were not deprivations of constitutionally protected property interests. Spiegel v. Rabinovitz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 121 F.3d 251, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 565, 522 U.S. 998, 139 L.Ed.2d 405. Civil Rights 1037

While there is an embarrassing diversity of judicial opinion on question of whether malicious prosecution claim is actionable under § 1983, most lower courts recognize some form of malicious prosecution action under § 1983. Taylor v. Meacham, C.A.10 (Utah) 1996, 82 F.3d 1556, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 186, 519 U.S. 871, 136 L.Ed.2d 125. Civil Rights 1037

In order to state a claim under civil rights statute, § 1983, against private party for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must plead and offer sufficient evidence to support conspiracy between private and public actors. Davis v. Union Nat. Bank, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 46 F.3d 24, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1696, 514 U.S. 1065, 131 L.Ed.2d 560. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1396

To state claim for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must show that defendant commenced criminal proceeding against him, that proceeding ended in plaintiff's favor, that defendant did not have probable cause to believe that plaintiff was guilty of crime charged, and that defendant acted with actual malice. Cook v. Sheldon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 41 F.3d 73. Malicious Prosecution 0.5; Civil Rights 1088(5)

Malicious prosecution does not constitute a deprivation of liberty or property within the meaning of the due

This section does not provide remedy against unfounded or even malicious claims or suits in state court. Buckley Towers Condominium, Inc. v. Buchwald, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1979, 595 F.2d 253. Civil Rights 1037

Tort of malicious prosecution does not constitute a civil rights violation. Paskaly v. Seale, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 506 F.2d 1209. See, also, Williams v. DiVittoria, E.D.La.1991, 777 F.Supp. 1332; Curtis v. Rosso & Mastracco, Inc., D.C.Va.1976, 413 F.Supp. 804; Hahn v. Sargent, D.C.Mass.1975, 388 F.Supp. 445, affirmed 523 F.2d 461, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1495, 425 U.S. 904, 47 L.Ed.2d 754. Civil Rights 1037

Prosecution of person for offending against other townspeople by maintaining cattle in town without a permit in violation of nuisance ordinance does not constitute a civil rights violation even if it is malicious. Martin v. King, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1969, 417 F.2d 458. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Commencement and prosecution of unfounded criminal prosecution may constitute not only malicious prosecution under state law but violation of this section as well. Nesmith v. Alford, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1963, 318 F.2d 110, rehearing denied 319 F.2d 859, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 489, 375 U.S. 975, 11 L.Ed.2d 420. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Section 1983 malicious prosecution claim requires two inquiries: (1) whether a defendant's conduct was tortious under state law, and (2) whether a plaintiff's injuries resulted from a deprivation of liberty guaranteed by the Fourth Amendment. Weinstock v. Wilk, D.Conn.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 241, adhered to on reconsideration 2004 WL 367618. Civil Rights 1037

Arrestee asserted § 1983 claims against county, its district attorney, sheriff, and sheriff officers with sufficient specificity to satisfy notice-pleading requirements; although it was somewhat difficult to discern which of arrestee's constitutional rights were violated, who violated them, or when they were violated from the pleadings, it was possible to discern the gist of some of his claims, e.g., that officers jointly used excessive force, and that he was falsely arrested and maliciously prosecuted by district attorney. Houghton v. Cardone, W.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 268. Civil Rights 1395(5); Civil Rights 1395(6)

A § 1983 claim for violation of procedural due process rights requires that a plaintiff allege that he or she was deprived of a property interest under color of state law without due process. Keim v. County of Bucks, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 628. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

Malicious prosecution claim, under § 1983, by former inmate against state and county defendants, was viable only to extent former inmate was wrongfully arrested and detained for period prior to initial appearance before neutral magistrate; Fourth Amendment malicious prosecution claim only provided remedy for wrong committed before appearance before neutral magistrate, although common law malicious prosecution claim provided remedy for wrongs committed both before and after appearance before magistrate. Gray v. Maryland, D.Md.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 628. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Claim of malicious prosecution under § 1983 involves a two-step inquiry: first, court must determine whether plaintiff's injuries were caused by a deprivation of liberty in violation of Fourth Amendment; second, if court finds that plaintiff suffered a constitutional injury, it must determine whether defendant's conduct was tortious under state law. Fincher v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.1997, 979 F.Supp. 989. Civil Rights 1037

Inmate could not maintain § 1983 action for malicious prosecution and perjured testimony, which directly called into question validity of his conviction and sentence, where his conviction had not been reversed or otherwise invalidated. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

To assert § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must show that defendant initiated criminal proceeding, proceeding terminated in plaintiff's favor, proceeding was initiated without probable cause, and defendant acted maliciously or for purpose other than in interest of justice. Irvin v. Borough of Darby, E.D.Pa.1996, 937 F.Supp. 446. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Malicious prosecution is constitutional tort, actionable under § 1983. Cornett v. Longois, E.D.Tex.1994, 871 F.Supp. 918. Civil Rights 1037

There is no cause of action for malicious prosecution grounded in right of substantive due process under Fourteenth Amendment. Smith v. Holtz, M.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 227, on reconsideration 879 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 87 F.3d 108, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1041, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Civil Rights 1037

To bring successful § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution, plaintiff is required to establish defendant initiated criminal prosecution which ended in plaintiff's favor and which was initiated without probable cause, and defendant acted maliciously or for a purpose other than bringing defendant to justice; failure to satisfy any of these criteria requires dismissal of claim. Hamidian v. Occulto, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 350. Civil Rights 1037

Malicious prosecution claim may fall within § 1983 only if plaintiff alleges injuries amounting to deprivation of liberty or property without due process. Theodorou v. Tanner, N.D.Ill.1994, 842 F.Supp. 326. Civil Rights 1037

Tort of malicious prosecution is sufficient to make out constitutional deprivation under § 1983. Cox v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1993, 827 F.Supp. 935. See, also, Doe v. Smith, S.D.N.Y.1988, 704 F.Supp. 1177. Civil Rights 1037

Malicious prosecution by itself is not punishable under § 1983 because it does not allege a constitutional injury. Kleiss v. Short, S.D.Iowa 1992, 805 F.Supp. 726, affirmed 995 F.2d 229. See, also, Davis v. Frapolly, N.D.Ill.1989, 747 F.Supp. 451; Davis v. Frapolly, N.D.Ill.1989, 717 F.Supp. 614; Rosales v. Lewis, D.C.Iowa 1978, 454 F.Supp. 956. Civil Rights 1037

Claim that plaintiffs were maliciously prosecuted for criminal trespass after they refused to vacate property as ordered by writ of possession failed to state violation of any federally protected right so as to give rise to cause of action under § 1983. Naliielua v. State of Hawaii, D.Hawai'i 1991, 795 F.Supp. 1015, affirmed 963 F.2d 379. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Federal civil rights action will lie for malicious prosecution. Wyland v. James, N.D.Tex.1977, 426 F.Supp. 304. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Not all conduct which might amount to state-defined tort of malicious prosecution will necessarily amount to a denial of due process under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1 which is actionable under this section. Atkins v. Lanning, N.D.Okla.1976, 415 F.Supp. 186, affirmed 556 F.2d 485. Civil Rights 1037

Malicious prosecution claim brought under §§ 1983 cannot be based on substantive due process. Gavlock v. Deniker, M.D.Pa.2005, 2005 WL 1273582, Unreported. Civil Rights 1037

1384. ---- Criminal or civil prosecution, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Investigator employed by state's attorney did not "commence" criminal proceeding, as element of malicious prosecution under Illinois law, when he was sole witness before grand jury that returned indictment; although investigator arguably withheld potentially exculpatory evidence from the grand jury, it was the state's attorney, with undisputed full disclosure of the information developed by investigator, who decided to present the case to the grand jury, request the indictment, and present the prosecution's case at trial. Mutual Medical Plans, Inc. v. County of Peoria, C.D.Ill.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 1067. Malicious Prosecution 3

Citizen's claim that civil proceeding against him to recover assistance benefits that township had paid to him was malicious prosecution was not cognizable under civil rights statute where only damages that citizen alleged were emotional. Zisis v. St. Joseph Tp. of Allen County, N.D.Ind.1997, 979 F.Supp. 806. Civil Rights 1037

Where § 1983 plaintiff is not arrested, detained or taken into custody and neither his person nor property is searched, in order to properly plead § 1983 claim based on malicious prosecution, allegedly malicious prosecution must be criminal rather than civil in nature. Lacara v. Town of Islip, E.D.N.Y.1992, 791 F.Supp. 69. Civil Rights 1037

1385. ---- Constitutional magnitude of deprivation generally, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

With respect to constitutional tort of malicious prosecution, when the fabrication of evidence results in a constitutional deprivation, the official's responsibility for that deprivation does not hinge on the exact stage of investigatory or prosecutorial process at which the fabrication occurred. Pierce v. Gilchrist, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 359 F.3d 1279. Civil Rights 1088(5)

An action for malicious prosecution may be brought under this section if, acting under color of state law, defendant has subjected plaintiff to deprivation of constitutional magnitude. Hampton v. Hanrahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1979, 600 F.2d 600, certiorari granted in part,judgment reversed in part on other grounds 100 S.Ct. 1987, 446 U.S. 754, 64 L.Ed.2d 670, rehearing denied 101 S.Ct. 33, 448 U.S. 913, 65 L.Ed.2d 1176, rehearing denied 101 S.Ct. 33, 448 U.S. 913, 65 L.Ed.2d 1177, on remand 499 F.Supp. 640, on remand 522 F.Supp. 140. Civil Rights 1037

Former prisoner stated malicious prosecution claim against physicians under California law, in lawsuit under §§ 1983, on allegations that physicians, acting as coroner or "de facto" coroners, wrongfully caused charges of child abuse and homicide to be filed against him fraudulently and in bad faith, county and physicians conspired to engage in malicious conduct with purpose of depriving him of his constitutional right to be free from unlawful seizure, and prisoner was released in interest of justice due to factual innocence from wrongful incarceration after 21 years. Marsh v. San Diego County, S.D.Cal.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1088(5)

In order to transform malicious prosecution claim into claim that is cognizable pursuant to §§ 1983 in state that has remedy for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must demonstrate deprivation of separate and independent constitutional right; plaintiff has to establish that criminal charges at issue must have imposed some deprivation of liberty consistent with concept of seizure. Sanchez Ramos v. Puerto Rico Police Dept., D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 167. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Commercial businesses did not have claim for constitutional tort founded on malicious prosecution by virtue of issuance of parking summonses that were ultimately dismissed under regulations permitting limited parking of commercial vehicles in restricted zones; obvious rational connection existed between enforcement policies and parking regulations, where vast majority of tickets were not contested, such that there was no issue that probable cause for issuance of summonses existed, and there was likewise no issue of malice, absent evidence that ticketing volume increased or policies harshened because of their complaints. All Aire Conditioning, Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 979 F.Supp. 1010, affirmed 166 F.3d 1199. Civil Rights 1037

When malicious prosecution constitutes seizure of plaintiff, it is actionable as constitutional tort under § 1983. Velasquez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 776. Civil Rights 1037

While common law elements of malicious prosecution are "starting point" for analysis of malicious prosecution claim under § 1983, plaintiff must ultimately prove that his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizures has been violated by defendant's conduct. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1037

Where malicious prosecution is pleaded as federal claim under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must allege and prove, as an additional element of claim, "some post-arraignment deprivation of liberty that rises to level of constitutional violation." Murphy v. Lynn, S.D.N.Y.1995, 903 F.Supp. 629. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Malicious prosecution alone does not give rise to a § 1983 action; plaintiff must show that the malicious prosecution subjected him to a deprivation of constitutional magnitude. Yaworski v. Pate, N.D.Ill.1989, 717 F.Supp. 624. Civil Rights 1037

Conduct that may give rise to an action for malicious prosecution may also constitute a violation of this section if, acting under color of state law, the defendant has thereby subjected the plaintiff to a deprivation of constitutional magnitude. Pyles v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1976, 418 F.Supp. 269. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1386. ---- Federal rights violated, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Malicious prosecution by itself is not punishable under § 1983 because it does not allege constitutional injury; malicious prosecution can form basis for § 1983 action only if defendant's conduct also infringes some provision of Constitution or federal law. Gunderson v. Schlueter, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1990, 904 F.2d 407. Civil Rights 1037

Although malicious prosecution generally does not constitute a deprivation of life, liberty or property without due process of law and, therefore, is not cognizable under this section, an exception exists for malicious prosecutions conducted with intent of denying a person equal protection or which otherwise subject a person to a denial of constitutional rights. Cline v. Brusett, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1981, 661 F.2d 108. See, also, Bell v. Brennan, E.D.Pa.1983, 570 F.Supp. 1116. Civil Rights 1037

1387. ---- Egregiousness of conduct, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

To state cause of action for malicious prosecution under federal civil rights statute, complaint must assert that malicious conduct was so egregious that it violated substantive or procedural due process. Torres v. Superintendent of Police of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 893 F.2d 404. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Even if § 1983 plaintiff had been able to establish all the elements for claim of malicious prosecution, his proper avenue of relief was state tort action, rather than claim under § 1983; only when misuse of legal proceeding is so outrageous as to subject aggrieved individual to deprivation of constitutional dimension does § 1983 provide remedy for claim of malicious prosecution, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Coogan v. City of Wixom, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1987, 820 F.2d 170. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Neither U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 nor this section was designed to redress injuries incurred by reason of unfounded or malicious claims/suits brought in state court, where adequate state remedies are available to the aggrieved parties; nevertheless, if the misuse of legal procedure is so egregious as to subject the aggrieved individual to a deprivation of constitutional dimension, and the tort-feasor is acting under color of state law, this section may be employed. Norton v. Liddel, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1980, 620 F.2d 1375. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1315

1388. ---- Retaliation for and discouragement of protected activities, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purposes of establishing First Amendment violation in § 1983 civil rights action, citizens group was required to show that government entities acted with retaliatory intent, and for the purpose of deterring exercise of First Amendment freedoms, when they filed counterclaim in response to committee's state court lawsuit seeking declaratory judgment against defendants for failure to follow proper procedures with respect to proposed solid waste incinerator; moreover, if committee proved retaliatory intent, defendants could still avoid liability by persuading jury that they would have filed counterclaim even in the absence of the impermissible reason. Greenwich Citizens Committee, Inc. v. Counties of Warren and Washington Indus. Development Agency, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 77 F.3d 26. Constitutional Law 82(3)

Fact that civil rights plaintiffs were prosecuted for illegal gambling only after filing § 1983 suits against law enforcement officials did not, by itself, establish reasonable inference of retaliatory intent and, thus, directed verdict against plaintiff was appropriate in light of extensive and uncontroverted direct evidence proffered by defendants that they intended to seek indictments against plaintiffs prior to date civil rights suit was filed. Enlow v. Tishomingo County, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1995, 45 F.3d 885. Civil Rights 1404

State may have many legitimate reasons for bringing criminal prosecution, and it is only when state's purpose in bringing criminal proceedings is to retaliate for protected conduct that plaintiff's rights are violated, and plaintiff must prove that retaliation was major motivating factor and played prominent role in the decision to prosecute. Smith v. Hightower, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 693 F.2d 359. Courts 508(7)

Bystander witnessing fight could not bring §§ 1983 claim that police retaliated against him for engaging in protected activity, when his alleged resistance to orders of police that he get off sidewalk resulted in his arrest and subsequent plea of nolo contendere in criminal proceedings; plea prevented claim that activities were protected. Reynolds v. Smythe, E.D.Pa.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 724. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Defendant who was charged with drug offenses after she sold cocaine to undercover detective could not prevail on retaliation claim under § 1983, based on actions of police in allegedly withholding exculpatory evidence from district attorney, since defendant's underlying conduct was criminal in nature, and thus not constitutionally protected. Labensky v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.1998, 6 F.Supp.2d 161, affirmed 173 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Prosecution under state criminal laws to discourage civil rights activities and not in bona fide effort to vindicate criminal laws may entitle persons prosecuted to relief. Carmichael v. Allen, N.D.Ga.1966, 267 F.Supp. 985. Courts 508(7)

1389. ---- Liberty loss generally, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiff alleging a conspiracy involving police officer to maliciously prosecute him by issuing parking tickets failed to state a cause of action under § 1983, where under Michigan law, at no time was plaintiff in danger of imprisonment; rather, plaintiff's potential loss was limited to monetary loss and inconvenience of contesting the tickets. Vasquez v. City of Hamtramck, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 757 F.2d 771. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

For malicious prosecution claim under §§ 1983, plaintiff must demonstrate sufficient post-arraignment liberty restraint to implicate plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights. Davis v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 322. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Officers' alleged conspiracy to prosecute plaintiff maliciously did not deprive plaintiff of any right protected by the Fourth Amendment, and therefore, did not support plaintiff's conspiracy claim under § 1983; although plaintiff was forced to make appearances in court regarding wayward petitions filed against him, he was not imprisoned as a result of the alleged conduct, nor was he even detained for a minimal period of time. Ousley v. Town of Lincoln through its Finance Director, D.R.I.2004, 313 F.Supp.2d 78. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Plaintiff in § 1983 action alleging malicious prosecution on assault charge failed to allege a compensable emotional injury, where plaintiff was already incarcerated and serving long sentence when charged and convicted of assault, sentence on assault charge was set aside, and plaintiff did not claim that he suffered any loss of liberty because of assault conviction. Cain v. Com. of Va., E.D.Va.1997, 982 F.Supp. 1132. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Former inmate could not maintain § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution in violation of Fourth Amendment based on pre-incarceration time period, where he did not have to post any money bail to be released, he was not prohibited from traveling outside state under conditions of his bond, and the only "restraints" on his liberty were having to appear in state court for his preliminary hearings, arraignment, and trial. Torres v. McLaughlin, E.D.Pa.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1353, reversed 163 F.3d 169, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 797, 528 U.S. 1079, 145 L.Ed.2d 672. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Inmate's incarceration from his conviction until his release was cognizable deprivation of liberty under Fourth Amendment that could serve as basis for § 1983 claim alleging malicious prosecution. Torres v. McLaughlin, E.D.Pa.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1353, reversed 163 F.3d 169, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 797, 528 U.S. 1079, 145 L.Ed.2d 672. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Conduct which would result in liability for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution at common law will result in liability under this section when engaged in by someone acting under color of state law, since such conduct occasions a deprivation of liberty without due process of law. Pagano v. Hadley, D.C.Del.1982, 553 F.Supp. 171. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Although plaintiff set out requisite elements for common law tort action for malicious prosecution, this section did not give property owner who suffered no actual loss of liberty in connection with proceedings instituted against him and who at worst, suffered irritating and vexatious experience at hands of city building inspectors, a cause of action. Henry v. City of Minneapolis, D.C.Minn.1981, 512 F.Supp. 293. Civil Rights 1037

Arrestee did not sufficiently allege a deprivation of liberty, arising from his attending a two-day trial on charges of making terroristic threats, as was required to succeed on malicious prosecution claim under §§ 1983; attendance at trial was not a seizure under the Fourth Amendment, and arrestee was in court for his trial on additional charges of stalking and harassment, of which he was found guilty. Shelley v. Wilson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 126, 2005 WL 2596872, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1390. ---- Arrest, detention or incarceration, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Claim for wrongful arrest under Fourth Amendment is cognizable in § 1983 action. McCullah v. Gadert, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 344 F.3d 655. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff in § 1983 action did not have a constitutional claim, under the Fourth Amendment or otherwise, for malicious prosecution separate from his Fourth Amendment claims for unreasonable seizure, arrest without probable cause, and false imprisonment; any damages resulting from a Fourth Amendment violation, including loss or expense by reason of a resulting prosecution, could be recovered on the latter claims. Frantz v. Village of Bradford, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 245 F.3d 869. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Where goal of alleged conspiracy was extortion to be accomplished by bringing prosecution against plaintiff without probable cause and for an improper purpose and injuries allegedly caused by defendants' actions include a deprivation of liberty concomitant to arrest and to pendency of criminal process, such deprivations without due process constituted an injury actionable under this section providing action for deprivation of rights under color of state law. Jennings v. Shuman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 567 F.2d 1213. Conspiracy 18

Civil rights plaintiff, who could not show that he was ever seized by police within meaning of Fourth Amendment, could not pursue malicious prosecution claim under § 1983, which was simply a claim founded on a Fourth Amendment seizure which incorporated elements of state tort claim. Myers v. Shaver, W.D.Va.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 805. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Casino patron failed to state a §§ 1983 claim against state trooper based on malicious prosecution where he did not allege any seizure or limitation on his liberty in connection with his malicious prosecution claim; patron simply appeared in court on criminal charges as directed. Lassoff v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 483. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether approximately two-and-a-half-hour post-acquittal detention by sheriff's office of detainee following his acquittal of murder charges was reasonable precluded summary judgment on detainee's §§ 1983 claim against city alleging that city's policies and procedures related to transporting and releasing detainees following acquittal at trial violated his Fourth Amendment rights. Arline v. City of Jacksonville, M.D.Fla.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1300. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

When a §§ 1983 claim for an alleged Fourth Amendment violation is based on an arrest that is made as part of a prosecution, it does not accrue until that prosecution terminates in the plaintiff's favor. Joseph v. Kimple, S.D.Ga.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 1196, affirmed 391 F.3d 1276. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Neurologist's §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim against officials of Utah's Medicaid Fraud Control Unit (MFCU), based on investigation and prosecution of neurologist for "upcoding," i.e., the practice of improperly billing Medicaid for a more expensive service than was actually provided to the patient, would be reviewed under due process standard of the Fourteenth Amendment, rather than reasonableness standard of the Fourth Amendment, where neurologist was never incarcerated. Becker v. Kroll, D.Utah 2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 1230. Constitutional Law 253(1); Health 981; Searches And Seizures 23

Officers had probable cause to arrest arrestee for menacing and harassment based on allegations of complainant and complainant's girlfriend that arrestee threatened them while brandishing gun and had assaulted girlfriend, notwithstanding that officers did not check complainant's criminal history and that girlfriend declined offer of emergency personnel to take her to hospital for medical treatment. Golub v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 399. Arrest 63.4(8)

In civil rights cases involving claim of false arrest or prosecution without probable cause, a court must put aside allegedly false information, supply any omitted information, and determine whether the contents of the corrected affidavit would have supported a finding of probable cause; if at the conclusion of the analysis probable cause remains, no constitutional violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights has occurred. Weinstock v. Wilk, D.Conn.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 241, adhered to on reconsideration 2004 WL 367618. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Motorist did not suffer a Fourth Amendment "seizure as a consequence of a legal proceeding," and therefore could not prove a § 1983 malicious prosecution claim against trooper who arrested him for driving under the influence of alcohol (DUI); motorist was in custody for approximately thirty to forty-five minutes at the state police barracks, was never incarcerated, restricted to a geographic area, compelled to contact pre-trial services, or deprived of his driver's license. Ankele v. Hambrick, E.D.Pa.2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 485, affirmed 136 Fed.Appx. 551, 2005 WL 1532436. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Allegedly excessive force used by police officers while making arrest could not serve as basis for arrestee's § 1983 malicious prosecution claim against officers alleging violation of substantive due process; any excessive force was not in connection with judicial process, but instead followed upon it. Wilson v. Lyons, D.Me.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 73. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee's claim for malicious prosecution was not cognizable under § 1983, even if charge was terminated in his favor with entry of a nolle prosequi; claim did not allege a constitutional violation, inasmuch as officer had probable cause for arrest based on what he was advised when he arrived at scene. Shultz v. Smith, D.Md.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1088(5)

To prevail on claim of malicious prosecution under § 1983, plaintiff must show some deprivation of liberty consistent with concept of "seizure." Fincher v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.1997, 979 F.Supp. 989. Civil Rights 1037

Prisoner who had been imprisoned for murder he did not commit did not state § 1983 malicious prosecution claim against police officer who had initially arrested him for unrelated robbery, thereby placing him at police station where another officer then claimed prisoner might have been involved in the murder; prisoner did not allege that arresting officer's real motive in arresting him was to have him charged with murder or that the two officers had conspired to finger him for murder. Newsome v. James, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1318. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's claim that officers' alleged issuance of ticket for driving under influence of alcohol (DUI) after receiving test results indicating that arrestee had no trace of alcohol in his blood was malicious prosecution in violation of § 1983; DUI citation did not violate arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights since arrestee was not kept in custody solely on DUI charge and was never prosecuted on that citation. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For malicious prosecution to be actionable under § 1983 as constitutional tort, it must be coupled with incarceration or other palpable consequences. Jones v. Village of Villa Park, N.D.Ill.1993, 815 F.Supp. 249. Civil Rights 1037

Malicious prosecution, which was intertwined with elements of arrest without probable cause, use of excessive force, and fairly extensive detention, implicated deprivation of constitutional rights and was actionable under § 1983. Pryor v. Cajda, N.D.Ill.1987, 662 F.Supp. 1114. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Fact that guilty plea to conspiracy, in full satisfaction of all charges against him, was result of compromise, to which inmate had agreed, did not constitute termination of criminal proceeding in favor of inmate, as required for claim of malicious prosecution against city police officers. Almonte v. Florio, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 60306, Unreported. Malicious Prosecution 35(2)

Police had probable cause under New York law to arrest videographer for disorderly conduct as he attempted to reenter courthouse, in order to film court proceedings, after being escorted out of building by guards, precluding claim of malicious prosecution under either §§ 1983 or state law; videographer repeatedly attempted to reenter, coming into physical contact with guards and blocking courthouse entrance. Posr v. Killackey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22962191, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5); Malicious Prosecution 18(2)

Apartment dweller was never placed in custody when police entered his apartment following up on complaint of assault lodged by fellow resident, precluding § 1983 claim of false arrest in violation of his constitutional rights; while officer allegedly pointed finger at resident and said "arrest him," officers' attention was devoted to other occupant of apartment. Fernandez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21756140, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Although arrestee could not use § 1983 to collaterally attack his criminal conviction, which was not reversed, expunged, invalidated, or impugned by grant of a writ of habeas corpus, arrestee was not precluded from maintaining false arrest claim under § 1983, since sole basis for conviction was not evidence seized as result of illegal arrest; Fourth Amendment wrongful arrest claim would not inevitably undermine arrestee's conviction because he could wage successful wrongful arrest claim and still have perfectly valid conviction. Lucas v. Novogratz, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31844913, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1391. ---- Business, contract, employment or status loss, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

If private investigator could show that police chief had established procedure of prosecuting groundless criminal actions against private security officers in order to harass them and force them out of business, that procedure in itself would violate due process and investigator could state claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Bacon v. Patera, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 772 F.2d 259. Civil Rights 1088(5); Constitutional Law 275(1)

Pharmacist's claim of malicious prosecution against state narcotics agents, was cognizable under this section where prosecution of pharmacist caused him to lose his license to practice pharmacy thereby depriving him of right to engage in his occupation. Shepard v. Byrd, N.D.Ga.1984, 581 F.Supp. 1374. Civil Rights 1037

1392. ---- Family relations disrupted, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint alleging that county through its employees conducted child protective proceedings, upon lawful referral of erroneous determination that infant had been subjected to sexual abuse, in a way which plaintiffs contended amounted to malicious prosecution stated a claim under this section, since preliminary protective orders obtained by county employees disrupted familial relationships of plaintiff, thereby clearly implicating federally protected rights. Whelehan v. Monroe County, W.D.N.Y.1983, 558 F.Supp. 1093. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1393. ---- Legitimacy of proceedings, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Facts alleged with respect to alleged falsification of evidence by an employee of county which led to plaintiff's indictment and arrest, though perhaps serving as a basis for a civil action for malicious prosecution or for a criminal charge of perjury, did not establish a violation of constitutional magnitude and hence, did not provide a basis for holding county, sheriff, and deputy sheriff liable under this section on theory of reckless supervision where requirements of procedural due process were met by grand jury before plaintiff was deprived of his liberty. Witt v. Harbour, W.D.Va.1980, 508 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 644 F.2d 883, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 359, 454 U.S. 879, 70 L.Ed.2d 188. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Conduct for which plaintiff instituted claims for malicious prosecution and abuse of process resulted in deprivation of liberty or property only as result of or attendant to legitimate proceedings, and there was thus no deprivation of due process of law under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and no claim was stated which would be actionable under this section. Cramer v. Crutchfield, E.D.Va.1980, 496 F.Supp. 949, affirmed 648 F.2d 943. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1394. ---- Guilty plea, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State guilty plea conviction that was subsequently vacated had no preclusive effect in § 1983 action for malicious prosecution. Spurlock v. Whitley, M.D.Tenn.1997, 971 F.Supp. 1166, affirmed 167 F.3d 995. Judgment 828.8

Defendant who had entered guilty plea during state court trial on drug charges could not seek to overturn plea in subsequent § 1983 action against state court judge, prosecutor, and other officials. Garner v. Cole, C.A.8 (Ark.)

2000, 205 F.3d 1345, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1395. ---- Guilt or innocence of plaintiff, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Under Heck's favorable termination rule, person who has been convicted of crime cannot recover damages for alleged violation of his constitutional rights that arose from same facts attendant to charge of which he was convicted, unless he proves that his conviction or sentence has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determinations, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Ballard v. Burton, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 444 F.3d 391. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Entry by member of campus ministry group into Pennsylvania's Accelerated Rehabilitative Disposition (ARD) program, which permitted expungement of criminal record upon successful completion of probationary term, was not favorable termination of his disorderly conduct charge, and his subsequent §§ 1983 claim against state university officials, alleging constitutional violations in connection with his arrest, thus was barred by Heck v. Humphrey, inasmuch as ARD program imposed several burdens not consistent with innocence, including probation and restitution; abrogating Williams v. Borough of Norristown, 1995 WL 422684. Gilles v. Davis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 427 F.3d 197. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Fact that plaintiff's conviction and sentence were ultimately "vacated, set aside and held for naught" because DNA analysis demonstrated that he could not have been the source of the semen found on the rape victim constitutes a termination of the original action in favor of the plaintiff for purposes of subsequent § 1983 claim based on constitutional tort of malicious prosecution. Pierce v. Gilchrist, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 359 F.3d 1279. Civil Rights 1088(5)

For purpose of determining whether § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution could be brought by physician who, after obtaining writ of habeas corpus, was acquitted of sale of cocaine on retrial, criminal proceeding did not terminate when initial conviction for sale was overturned by writ but when physician was again convicted of possession on retrial and, thus, prosecution did not end in failure, indicating physician's innocence, where connected acts of possession of cocaine and its sale to undercover officers were charged in single indictment and physician conceded both acts. DiBlasio v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 102 F.3d 654. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Criminal prosecution against individual terminated favorably to that individual, for purpose of her subsequent malicious prosecution action under § 1983, where prosecutor nolle prossed charges against individual under agreement with individual's common-law husband by which husband would enter rehabilitative program; although individual benefitted from husband's compromise, individual did not herself enter any compromise or give up any consideration for grant of nolle prosequi, and no evidence indicated that individual knew that her acceptance of grant of nolle prosequi would deprive her of ability to file malicious prosecution claim. Hilfirty v. Shipman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 91 F.3d 573. Malicious Prosecution 35(2)

Favorable termination of criminal proceedings is essential element of claim for malicious prosecution; thus, claim does not accrue until proceedings are terminated. Morrison v. Jones, C.A.4 (Va.) 1977, 551 F.2d 939. Limitation Of Actions 55(1); Malicious Prosecution 34

Voluntary dismissal of criminal charges failed to satisfy favorable termination element of malicious prosecution claim under California law; court had denied defendants' motion to dismiss one count before prosecutor voluntarily dismissed it in the interests of justice, and prosecutor averred that he dismissed other count as incidental to prosecution rather than for lack of evidence, and thus indicia of innocence were absent. Ayala v. KC Environmental Health, E.D.Cal.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1070. Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

Prison inmate could proceed with §§ 1983 action against prison, seeking damages for loss of good time credits following disciplinary proceeding allegedly violating his due process rights, even though suit was challenge to sentence, ordinarily requiring completion of habeas corpus proceeding reversing revocation before §§ 1983 action could proceed, under Supreme Court's Heck v. Humphrey decision; release of inmate precluded habeas proceeding, improperly leaving him with due process rights but without remedy. Dible v. Scholl, N.D.Iowa 2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 807. Civil Rights 1311

Heck, which prohibited civil rights claim where judgment in favor of plaintiff would necessarily imply invalidity of his conviction or sentence, barred §§ 1983 claim for false arrest where plaintiff's Connecticut convictions for possession of narcotics and assault on a police officer remained valid; recovery by plaintiff for false arrest would undermine the convictions, which were based on evidence obtained due to allegedly false arrest. Powell v. Scanlon, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 172. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact issue existed as to whether state prosecutor's entry of nolle prosequi had been made in exchange for defendant's providing something of benefit to state or victim, and in turn as to whether entry constituted termination of prosecution in defendant's favor, precluding summary judgment in defendant's subsequent §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action against arresting officers. Holman v. Cascio, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 120. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Entry of a nolle prosequi in the underlying criminal case against § 1983 plaintiff did not preclude her claim for false arrest. Colon v. Ludemann, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 747. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Dismissal on remand of plaintiff's resisting arrest charge on speedy trial grounds, following reversal of conviction on such charge due to incorrect jury instructions, constituted termination of proceeding in plaintiff's favor, for purposes of establishing plaintiff's malicious prosecution claim in § 1983 action. Hansel v. Sheridan, N.D.N.Y.1998, 991 F.Supp. 69. Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

Dismissal of count of criminal information against homeowner, alleging criminal violation of zoning ordinance, on ground that homeowner had received variance from town, was sufficiently favorable determination and indicative of homeowner's innocence to overcome motion to dismiss homeowner's § 1983 claim of malicious prosecution. Willner v. Town of North Hempstead, E.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 182. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Common law rule, equally applicable to § 1983 actions asserting false arrest, false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution, was and is that plaintiff can under no circumstances recover if she was convicted of offense for which she was arrested. White v. Tamlyn, E.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1047. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1088(4)

To maintain § 1983 claim for unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment where success on such claim would necessarily imply invalidity of outstanding or potential conviction, there must first be "final" termination of criminal proceeding in favor of plaintiff. Michaels v. State of N.J., D.N.J.1996, 955 F.Supp. 315. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Dismissal of underlying charges, for resisting peace officer and battery, with leave to reinstate was "termination" in favor of plaintiff in subsequent civil rights suit seeking damages for malicious prosecution; statute of limitations had expired on criminal charges, barring further prosecution. Jenkins v. Meginnis, N.D.Ill.1996, 931 F.Supp. 567. Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

Plaintiff's allegations against county and law enforcement personnel involved in his arrest and prosecution did not establish conduct so egregious and unconscionable as to amount to substantive due process violation so that plaintiff could claim in his subsequent civil rights action that case came within exception to general rule requiring favorable termination of underlying criminal proceedings in order to state false arrest or malicious prosecution claim. Nowosad v. English, E.D.N.Y.1995, 903 F.Supp. 377. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Adjournment in contemplation of dismissal does not constitute a "termination in a complainant's favor" for purposes of claim for deprivation of civil rights through false arrest or malicious prosecution; like a consent decree, it involves the consent of both prosecution and accused and leaves open the question of the accused's guilt. Miloslavsky v. AES Engineering Soc., Inc., S.D.N.Y.1992, 808 F.Supp. 351, affirmed 993 F.2d 1534, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 68, 510 U.S. 817, 126 L.Ed.2d 37. Civil Rights 1037; Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

Arrestee's acquittals on charges of criminal possession of weapon and menacing could not serve as basis for civil rights claim based on malicious prosecution where arrestee was also convicted of resisting arrest, disorderly conduct, and harassment in connection with same incident involving confrontation with police. Goree v. Gunning, E.D.N.Y.1990, 738 F.Supp. 79. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Malicious prosecution claim under § 1983 could not be asserted based on allegations of false arrest for battery where civil rights claim for false arrest for the battery was proceeding and the two allegations did not constitute separate claims. Quinn v. Cain, N.D.Ill.1989, 714 F.Supp. 938. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In order to maintain a § 1983 cause of action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must show that proceedings against him terminated in such way as to suggest his innocence. Rhodes v. Mabus, S.D.Miss.1987, 676 F.Supp. 755. Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

Prisoner could not maintain malicious prosecution claim against city and police officers, under § 1983, as proceeding resulting from defendants' alleged malicious prosecution did not terminate in prisoner's favor but instead resulted in prisoner's federal conviction. Copus v. City of Edgerton, W.D.Wis.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1047, affirmed in part, reversed in part 151 F.3d 646. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Disposition of a criminal case through successful completion of pretrial intervention under N.J.S.A. 2C:43-12, 2C:43-13, which results in dismissal of complaint, indictment or accusation against participant with prejudice, is not a termination favorable to the accused for purposes of a Section 1983 civil rights action for malicious prosecution or a state tort claim based on that same cause of action. Lindes v. Sutter, D.C.N.J.1985, 621 F.Supp. 1197. Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

In order to recover in civil rights action on his claim for malicious prosecution, plaintiff was required to establish that prior statement of prosecution terminated in its favor and, hence, was required to show that prior action disposed of charges in a matter inconsistent with guilt; an indecisive disposition, such as a hung jury, would not suffice because a prosecution based on probable cause cannot deprive an individual of his civil rights. Haefner v. Lancaster County, E.D.Pa.1981, 520 F.Supp. 131, affirmed 681 F.2d 806, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 165, 459 U.S. 874, 74 L.Ed.2d 136, affirmed 709 F.2d 1492. Civil Rights 1406

Although prison inmate's conviction at adjustment committee hearing was reversed by regional administrator, reversal on procedural grounds was not sufficient to satisfy essential elements of malicious prosecution cause of action that proceedings terminate in a manner not unfavorable to the plaintiff. Kelly v. Cooper, E.D.Va.1980, 502 F.Supp. 1371. Malicious Prosecution 37

Decision in arrestee's favor on his §§ 1983 claims for false arrest and malicious prosecution would necessarily imply that arrestee's state court conviction and sentence for resisting arrest were unlawful, and thus arrestee's claims were barred under Heck v. Humphrey, where conviction and sentence had not been reversed, invalidated, or called into question by issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Marable v. West Pottsgrove Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 176 Fed.Appx. 275, 2006 WL 1024578, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

leave premises, was not reversal in tenant's favor, for purposes of tenant's §§ 1983 claims against former landlord and city police for unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment, since tenant's conviction for disorderly conduct remained valid. Lynn v. Desiderio, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 159 Fed.Appx. 382, 2005 WL 3439915, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee's claims against California narcotics officer who testified against arrestee in state court in Pennsylvania, in arrestee's civil rights action under §§ 1983, alleging several constitutional violations arising out of his arrest and prosecution, were barred by Supreme Court's ruling in Heck v. Humphrey, under which civil rights plaintiff must show that conviction has been invalidated or called into question before challenging conduct whose unlawfulness would render conviction invalid, where success on arrestee's claims against narcotics officer would imply the invalidity of his conviction, since his arrest and conviction were based on evidence gathered from search and seizure that state courts ratified. James v. York County Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 126, 2005 WL 3313029, Unreported.

Prisoner's due process claims for damages regarding the denial of parole were barred by the rule in Heck v. Humphrey since such claims necessarily implicated the validity of the parole decision, which had not been shown to have been invalidated. Poole v. D.O.C., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 153 Fed.Appx. 816, 2005 WL 2662387, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

Arrestee did not have a cognizable §§ 1983 claim against Pennsylvania State Police troopers for damages for malicious prosecution for stalking and harassment, where neither his conviction nor sentence for those crimes had been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by a state tribunal, or called into question by a federal court's issuance of a writ of habeas corpus. Shelley v. Wilson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 126, 2005 WL 2596872, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Malicious prosecution claimant, acquitted of assault charges for which he was arrested and bringing § 1983 claim that his constitutional rights were violated, failed to satisfy requirement that he show exoneration, as required by New York law, even though he was acquitted of assault charges for which he was arrested; he was convicted of second harassment, arising out of same incident. Fernandez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21756140, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee's prosecution did not terminate in his favor, as required for his malicious prosecution claim, where arrestee, who was arrested on outstanding warrant and for possession of marijuana, was given adjournment in contemplation of dismissal (ACD) that required him to perform community service and to attend alcohol treatment program. Nance v. New York City Police Dept. ex rel. McKay Chung, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1955164, Unreported. Malicious Prosecution 35(1)

1396. ---- Probable cause for charges, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Fact that probable cause existed for the arrest did not preclude police department forensic chemist's liability for constitutional tort of malicious prosecution if her alleged withholding of exculpatory evidence and fabrication of inculpatory evidence became one of the inseparable bases for the charges against plaintiff and the district attorney's decision to proceed to trial. Pierce v. Gilchrist, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 359 F.3d 1279. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police had probable cause to make arrest for knowing possession of stolen property based on observation of stolen vehicle, witness's statement that "Tony" owned vehicle and lived in building where defendant resided, defendant's admission that his name was "Tony" and he owned vehicle, and defendant's presentation of insurance card from stolen vehicle with owner's name on it; thus, arrest did not support arrestee's subsequent § 1983 claims of false arrest and false imprisonment. Boyd v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 336 F.3d 72. Arrest 63.4(15)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

District court erred when, in response to question from jury during deliberation in section 1983 action brought by demonstrator against police officers, it instructed that if jury found probable cause supporting any of three charges of disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and assault alleged against demonstrator, no liability for malicious prosecution could be found as to any of charges filed; if rule were one followed by district court, officer with probable cause as to lesser offense could tack on more serious, unfounded charges knowing that probable cause on lesser offense would insulate him from liability for malicious prosecution on other offenses. Posr v. Doherty, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 944 F.2d 91. Federal Civil Procedure 1975

Prosecution based on probable cause which resulted in hung jury did not deprive defendant of his civil rights within meaning of this section. Singleton v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 632 F.2d 185, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1368, 450 U.S. 920, 67 L.Ed.2d 347. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Arrestee's allegations that, during traffic stop, his obvious physical condition was indicative of a stroke, that two witnesses allegedly requested that arrestee receive medical attention, and that one of the arresting officers commented that arrestee looked like he was having a stroke, was sufficient to establish question as to whether officers had probable cause to arrest, and thus stated a claim under §§ 1983 for false arrest. Aguilera v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee who had been misidentified by informant as a drug dealer failed to allege facts to establish a lack of probable cause or malice, as required under Virginia law to state claim for malicious prosecution, in civil rights action under §§ 1983 against county deputy sheriff, where deputy sheriff's belief of information regarding drug sale was entirely reasonable, and deputy sheriff did not intend to have the wrong person prosecuted for crimes described by informant. Caldwell v. Green, W.D.Va.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether it was objectively reasonable for police officers to believe that probable cause existed to prosecute arrestee for resisting arrest, precluding summary judgment for officers, on basis of qualified immunity, on arrestee's malicious prosecution claim in civil rights action under §§ 1983. Ostroski v. Town of Southold, E.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 325. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Probable cause existed for suspect's prosecution for rape, robbery, and murder, and thus city was not liable under § § 1983 or New York law for malicious prosecution, even though murder charge was dropped, and suspect was ultimately acquitted of other charges, where grand jury indicted suspect for crimes, judge reviewed grand jury minutes and found that there was sufficient legal evidence to sustain grand jury's indictment, and there was no evidence that police detective provided any false testimony to grand jury. Golden v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 226. Malicious Prosecution 24(7)

City attorneys had probable cause to prosecute plaintiff on traffic violation, precluding plaintiff's claim under §§ 1983 for malicious prosecution, where the plaintiff was initially found guilty in the municipal court, although she later successfully appealed her case in the district court. King v. Knoll, D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1169. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police detective who arrested rape suspect at hospital, based upon alleged victim's in-person identification of suspect and her description of alleged rape, could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for malicious prosecution after charges were dismissed for lack of evidence; detective had probable cause for suspect's arrest, and there was no evidence that detective was involved with criminal proceeding against suspect after he signed affidavit for criminal complaint. Smith v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 179. Civil Rights 1358

Existence of probable cause for an arrest extinguishes any potential claim under § 1983 for false arrest or false imprisonment. Patterson v. Burge, N.D.Ill.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 878. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Probable cause existed for the prosecution of a motorist for driving with a suspended license, thus defeating his malicious prosecution claim; district attorney's office obtained an abstract of the motorist's city department of motor vehicles (DMV) record that showed that the he paid a fine two days after he was arrested for driving with a suspended license, and that confirmed that his license was suspended on the date of his arrest; the fact that the district attorney's office thereafter chose not to pursue the prosecution did not negate the probable cause that had existed. Evans v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 316, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 433, 2005 WL 348377. Malicious Prosecution 18(7); Malicious Prosecution 24(1)

Even assuming motorist was seized for purposes of the Fourth Amendment, trooper who arrested him for driving under the influence of alcohol (DUI) was not liable on motorist's § 1983 malicious prosecution claim because trooper had probable cause to arrest motorist for DUI. Ankele v. Hambrick, E.D.Pa.2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 485, affirmed 136 Fed.Appx. 551, 2005 WL 1532436. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether police officers acted with reasonable suspicion in stopping motorist, such that officers acted with probable cause in charging and filing criminal complaints against motorist for driving under influence (DUI), precluded summary judgment in motorist's § 1983 malicious prosecution action against officers. Clynch v. Chapman, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 213. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Claim for malicious prosecution under § 1983 requires that plaintiff show lack of probable cause for commencing proceeding. Taylor v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 68, clarified 2003 WL 21781941. Civil Rights 1037

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether there was probable cause for commencing narcotics prosecution precluded summary judgment on § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution. Taylor v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 68, clarified 2003 WL 21781941. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Arrestee could not show lack of probable cause for commencing criminal proceeding, as required to establish § 1983 malicious prosecution claim, where police officer had probable cause to arrest, and there was no additional evidence presented between the arrest and the dismissal of the charges that dissipated the probable cause. Hernandez v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 599. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Claimant's failure to present any evidence to establish want of probable cause to prosecute him on robbery charge or malice on part of police officer involved with prosecution, as required to establish malicious prosecution claim under Missouri law, precluded him from establishing his § 1983 claim based on malicious prosecution of robbery charge. Lemons v. Lewis, D.Kan.1997, 969 F.Supp. 657. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Grand jury testimony of internal revenue agent leading to defendant's indictment for bank and tax fraud was objectively reasonable and thus did not serve as basis for § 1983 action alleging malicious prosecution; in view of evidence that defendant took worthless stock deduction on income tax form for stock, yet later represented that he still owned that stock and that it was worth $15,000, agent believed positions taken by defendant were inconsistent and in violation of the law. Groom v. Fickes, S.D.Tex.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1466, affirmed 129 F.3d 606. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Section 1983 claim for malicious prosecution required that plaintiff demonstrate lack of probable cause to make initial arrest and show that proceedings terminated in her favor. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Officer had probable cause to arrest suspect for reckless endangerment in the second degree under New York law, and thus city and city officials were not liable under § 1983 for false arrest and malicious prosecution; as officer arrived upon scene, he noticed that victim was limping, and victim told officer that suspect had driven over victim's foot during an argument over a parking spot. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Prosecutors had probable cause to believe a sexual assault on minor occurred and that defendant had committed the assault, thus precluding arrestee's subsequent recovery for malicious prosecution in § 1983 civil rights action; preliminary examination was held where complaining witness and her mother testified to the incident, and arrestee did not substantiate allegation he was prosecuted solely because he was Native American. Pierzynowski v. Police Dept. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 941 F.Supp. 633. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Mutual and experienced determination by judicial officer of § 1983 plaintiff's guilt of failing to give information and render aid conclusively established existence of probable cause, thereby defeating her § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution. Hamidian v. Occulto, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 350. Civil Rights 1037

No evidence indicated that police chief acted with malice in charging middle school students with disorderly conduct and/or inciting a riot in connection with incident in which two students were fighting near school and, therefore, police chief could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged malicious prosecution; even if existence of probable cause was doubtful, that did not establish malice. C-1 by P-1 v. City of Horn Lake, Miss., N.D.Miss.1990, 775 F.Supp. 940. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Action will not lie under federal civil rights statute for malicious prosecution where there has been determination that charges filed were based on probable cause. Winslow v. Romer, D.Colo.1991, 759 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1037

In order to succeed either on malicious prosecution claim or claim of due process violation based on alleged want of probable cause on part of state trooper in endorsing two traffic citations against plaintiffs the plaintiff, who brought civil rights suit, was required to prove that trooper lacked probable cause. Curran v. Dural, E.D.Pa.1981, 512 F.Supp. 699. Civil Rights 1407; Malicious Prosecution 15

Evidence that arrestee's state conviction was affirmed on appeal, that arrestee's habeas petition challenging the conviction was denied, and that court of appeals denied motion for a certificate of appealability was sufficient evidence of probable cause to arrest, defeating arrestee's § 1983 claim for false arrest against police department. Gwathney v. New York City Police Dept., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 57, 2004 WL 1013317, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

Arrestee failed to proffer sufficient evidence to rebut presumption of probable cause that arose from his indictment, as would support his malicious prosecution claim under § 1983 against city police department and two police officers, alleging that officers fabricated line-up identifications and issued false criminal complaint against him, where he presented no evidence establishing that indictment was procured through use of allegedly tainted evidence; even if officers used racial epithets during arrest and told arrestee that they would falsify evidence and manipulate line-ups in order to implicate him, as arrestee alleged, probable cause did not depend on officers' subjective biases. Simmons v. New York City Police Dept., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 97 Fed.Appx. 341, 2004 WL 909705, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police had probable cause to arrest apartment resident for assaulting fellow resident, precluding § 1983 claim of malicious prosecution in violation of his constitutional rights; son of fellow resident claimed resident had struck father in face, and there was blood in fellow resident's apartment. Fernandez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21756140, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Court officer did not engage in malicious prosecution under New York law, and consequently deprive video camera operator of a protected liberty interest, supporting § 1983 action, when he arrested operator for being disorderly, triggering criminal proceeding later dropped on speedy trial grounds; operator's conduct in vigorously opposing ejection from courthouse, after being informed he could not videotape proceedings, provided probable cause for arrest. Posr v. Killackey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21716321, Unreported. Malicious Prosecution 18(2)

Probable cause existed for prosecution of indicted sexual assault defendant, despite his protestations of innocence, and thus arresting officer could not be held personally liable under § 1983 for malicious prosecution, absent showing that indictment had been obtained in bad faith. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1809471, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arresting officer's determination that he had probable cause to pursue prosecution of indicted sexual assault suspect was objectively reasonable, and thus he was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability arising out of allegedly malicious prosecution; officer was entitled to rely on victim's complaint, absent showing that it was inherently incredible. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1809471, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

1397. ---- Repeated prosecutions, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Motorist failed to prove that current and former commissioners of a city's department of motor vehicles (DMV) and a police officer acted with actual malice in connection with his prosecution for driving with a suspended license, thus defeating his malicious prosecution claim against them; DMV's alleged failure to alert the district attorney of the fact that the motorist had paid his fine was insufficient evidence to infer malicious intent. Evans v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 316, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 433, 2005 WL 348377. Malicious Prosecution 31

Single criminal prosecution, brought in good faith, is not violation of any federally guaranteed civil rights. Martinez v. Com. of Puerto Rico, D.C.Puerto Rico 1972, 343 F.Supp. 897. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1398. ---- Particular claims, malicious prosecution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

County undersheriff did not provide misleading presentation of material facts to prosecutor who decided to prosecute shareholder in land-owning corporation for Oklahoma offense of felony pointing of firearm, as required for undersheriff to be liable to shareholder under §§ 1983 for false arrest or malicious prosecution; undersheriff did not conceal or withhold shareholder's statement, but passed it along to prosecutor along with statements of complaining witnesses, and additional facts relating to whether complaining witnesses had been trespassing were not relevant to probable cause to arrest shareholder for threatening them with a firearm. Grubbs v. Bailes, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 445 F.3d 1275. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Wrongfully convicted plaintiff, who alleged that police department forensic chemist maliciously withheld exculpatory evidence and fabricated inculpatory evidence, stated claim under § 1983 for constitutional tort of malicious prosecution; fact that forensic chemist neither initiated nor filed the charges against plaintiff did not preclude the claim. Pierce v. Gilchrist, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 359 F.3d 1279. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1358

Probable cause existed for arrest warrant issued against former county sheriff's department employee on charges of forgery and embezzlement and for grand jury's indictment on such charges, and therefore former employee's § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution was to be dismissed, where affidavit filed in support of arrest warrant alleged that former employee signed sheriff's name to county check without sheriff's authorization and with intent to defraud county, that former employee presented such check to bank for payment and that former employee converted cash from confidential informant fund for her own use with intent to deprive sheriff's office of the cash, former employee admitted to signing the check without sheriff's approval, and it was undisputed that money was missing from confidential informant fund which former employee was entrusted to administer. Wolford v. Lasater, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 78 F.3d 484. Civil Rights 1088(5) charges until his acquittal, and who failed to timely bring wrongful arrest action against police detectives, that arrest and murder charge, and incarceration, were without probable cause, that he was indicted solely on basis of detectives' statements, and that certain detectives testified at hearing to quash arrest were insufficient to state claim for malicious prosecution against detectives under federal civil rights statute; wrongful arrest claim was time-barred, and only remaining claim, that detectives testified before grand jury and at hearing on motion to quash, failed to allege malicious prosecution under Illinois law. Reed v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 77 F.3d 1049, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(5); Malicious Prosecution 47

Allegation that several police officers beat arrestee without physical provocation, that one officer was present during the beating and might have participated, and that the officer then fabricated several charges against the arrestee in order to justify the injuries that the arrestee received did not meet the standards for malicious prosecution claim under federal civil rights statute. Ayala-Martinez v. Anglero, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 982 F.2d 26. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Allegations that municipal tax clerk's supervisor maliciously brought baseless accusations against her that resulted her trial and acquittal on theft charges stated civil rights claim for malicious prosecution impacting her right to be free of unreasonable seizures, as it could be inferred from allegations that warrant was issued for her arrest and seizure. Luthy v. Proulx, D.Mass.2006, 464 F.Supp.2d 69. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Police sergeant's filing of false disciplinary charges against police officer did not implicate officer's Fourth Amendment rights, and thus officer did not state claim against sergeant under §§ 1983 for malicious prosecution, where officer did not face criminal charges, and was not arrested or otherwise detained. Rolon v. Henneman, S.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 532. Civil Rights 1037

County health department employee's mention of possibility of restitution to victim of alleged fraud if victim testified against alleged perpetrators did not constitute bad-faith conduct instrumental in conspiracy-to-defraud prosecution, so as to make employee potentially liable in alleged perpetrators' subsequent §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action; alleged perpetrators characterized employee's comment was wrongful inducement, but prosecutor, not employee, initiated prosecution, and there was no showing of fraud, corruption, perjury or fabricated evidence. Ayala v. KC Environmental Health, E.D.Cal.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1358

Police officer who sued city and police officials, stemming from his arrest and prosecution for reckless endangerment while off-duty, failed to establish that proceeding lacked probable cause, as required to maintain claim for malicious prosecution under §§ 1983 and New York law; officer admitted to operating motorcycle in reckless manner while fleeing police by improperly changing lanes while traveling in excess of speed limit, and by driving in excess of speed limit while traveling southbound in northbound lane. Winn v. McQuillan, S.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 385. Malicious Prosecution 18(2)

Heck, which prohibited civil rights claim where judgment in favor of plaintiff would necessarily imply invalidity of his conviction or sentence, did not bar §§ 1983 claim against police officers for excessive force since plaintiff's Connecticut conviction for assault on a police officer would not necessarily be impugned by a finding of excessive force. Powell v. Scanlon, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 172. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Basis for dismissal of indictment charging arrestee with second-degree attempted murder was inconsistent with innocence when, after jury was selected, assistant district attorney advised court that victim-complainant could not be located and that prosecution could not proceed, and therefore resulting dismissal of indictment was not favorable termination of criminal proceeding required to establish malicious prosecution claim under § 1983. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Motorist failed to prove that current and former commissioners of a city's department of motor vehicles (DMV) and a police officer were personally involved in his prosecution for driving with a suspended license, thus defeating his malicious prosecution claim against them, despite his claim that it was the custom and policy of the DMV not to inform the district attorney when individuals, like the motorist, paid fines and reinstated previously suspended licenses; the fact that the motorist paid the fine was reflected on the abstract of the his DMV record, and there was no evidence that the defendants encouraged or instigated the continued prosecution of the motorist despite the fact that he had paid his fine. Evans v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 316, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 433, 2005 WL 348377. Malicious Prosecution 3

Because parent consented to have criminal charges against him nolled, prosecutor's nolle of criminal charges filed against parent for violating restraining order prohibiting him from entering public schools was not a final disposition in parent's favor, as required as element of malicious prosecution claim under civil rights statute. Assegai v. Bloomfield Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 65, affirmed 165 Fed.Appx. 932, 2006 WL 304793. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Alleged city and county customs or practices of coercing criminal defendants into waiving probable cause hearings and appointing attorneys who compromised rights of indigent defendants did not establish pattern or practice of engaging in malicious prosecution, or affect arrestee who did not waive his probable cause hearing or allege that attorney was appointed for him, and thus did not support municipal liability against city and county on arrestee's claims for malicious prosecution under § 1983. Anderson v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 540 . Civil Rights 1351(4)

Citizen's § 1983 claim based on police officer's malicious prosecution of him could not be based on denial of procedural due process available under Constitution, where Puerto Rico tort law offered procedural relief for his claim. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1319

Officer who initially encountered carjacking suspect was not liable to § 1983 plaintiff for malicious prosecution, where officer's only involvement with prosecution came when officer was asked to look at photographic lineup and pick out picture of suspect, and there was no evidence that officer gave false information inculpating plaintiff or that officer actively encouraged arrest or prosecution of plaintiff. Morales v. Busbee, D.N.J.1997, 972 F.Supp. 254, appeal dismissed 156 F.3d 1225. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Prisoner who had been imprisoned for murder he did not commit stated viable § 1983 malicious prosecution claim against police officer who, following prisoner's arrest for unrelated robbery, claimed he noticed resemblance between prisoner and sketch of murderer. Newsome v. James, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1318. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Deputy sheriff who had responded to call of domestic disturbance and had taken into custody individual who was involuntarily committed following drunken episode did no more than testify at probable cause hearing and did not initiate care and treatment of individual, and thus, county and sheriff could not be held liable in § 1983 action based on malicious prosecution under Kansas law. Gaschler v. Scott County, Kan., D.Kan.1997, 963 F.Supp. 971, affirmed 141 F.3d 1184. Civil Rights 1037

Plaintiff nursery school teacher whose child molestation convictions were reversed on appeal and ultimately dismissed failed to state § 1983 and malicious prosecution claims against city; claims asserted and facts alleged were limited to investigation and prosecution of plaintiff by county prosecutor's office, and complaint was bereft of allegations linking city to such activities. Michaels v. State of N.J., D.N.J.1996, 955 F.Supp. 315. Civil Rights 1395(5); Malicious Prosecution 47

Allegations that plaintiff was issued two summonses to appear in state court as result of alleged violation of town code and that summonses were later dismissed were insufficient to establish § 1983 claim for malicious

Lessee's second amended complaint did not state cause of action for malicious prosecution in violation of § 1983 based on state court eviction proceeding where lessee failed to allege legal causation by lessor and related parties who had brought the eviction proceeding, lessee failed to allege that defendants in second amended complaint were in original proceeding, and lessee failed to allege the bona fide termination of the proceeding in his favor. Eidson v. Arenas, M.D.Fla.1995, 910 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Arrestee who claimed that police officer's conduct in wrongfully arresting him deprived him of liberty by requiring him to spend time and money preparing legal defense and to stand trial for two days did not suffer deprivation of liberty sufficient to prevail claim for malicious prosecution under civil rights statute. Williams v. Weber, D.Kan.1995, 905 F.Supp. 1502, reconsideration overruled. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee stated § 1983 cause of action for wrongful prosecution against police detective, by alleging that police detective, acting in his capacity as police officer under color of law, procured prosecution of arrestee by concealing from grand jury evidence showing lack of probable cause for prosecution, that detective acted for sole purpose of having arrestee prosecuted, that concealment resulted in arrestee's indictment, arrest, and prosecution in absence of probable cause, and that prosecution was terminated by nolle prosequi order; it was not necessary for arrestee to allege that detective actually, physically arrested him. Lewis v. McDorman, W.D.Va.1992, 820 F.Supp. 1001, affirmed 28 F.3d 1210. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Automobile salvager failed to state cognizable § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution and malicious abuse of process based on police and grand jury investigations of his business operations, where no criminal charges were ever brought against salvager and he was never arrested, "process" against salvager consisted of one interview, with his attorney present, and production of his business records pursuant to subpoena, and salvager failed to establish that he was deprived of constitutionally protected interest by investigation. Garner v. Township of Wrightstown, E.D.Pa.1993, 819 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 16 F.3d 403. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1088(5)

Person whose name was used by police to identify criminal suspect stated § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution as result of use of name in commencement of criminal prosecution. Sergio v. Doe, E.D.Pa.1991, 769 F.Supp. 164. Civil Rights 1395(5)

State prisoner's claim for malicious prosecution, based on assertion that altered police report coerced his guilty plea to murder charge, was not constitutional claim, as was required to maintain §§ 1983 action against police officers, prosecutors, public defenders, and witnesses in criminal prosecution. Holly v. Boudreau, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 36, 2004 WL 1435210, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Failure to show that police sought collateral advantage or corresponding detriment to arrestee, as required under New York law, precluded § 1983 claim that police abused process by charging arrestee with assault, violating arrestee's constitutional rights. Fernandez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21756140, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Prosecutor's decision to dismiss driving while intoxicated (DWI) and endangering a welfare of a child (EWC) charges against school bus driver and to charge driver with reckless driving was appropriate, following prosecutor's receipt of negative blood test results, on driver's § 1983 malicious prosecution claim against town; prior to receiving test results, probable cause supported DWI and EWC charges, and undisputed evidence showed that driver had been driving erratically. Otero v. Town of Southampton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 409, 2003 WL 1025795, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Jail inmate's civil rights claims that police officers and prosecutors committed misconduct that led to his prosecution for murder, and that his defense attorneys provided him with ineffective assistance of counsel, if true, would call into question validity of his criminal charges, and thus, prisoner was barred from asserting claims in action under § 1983. Givens v. City and County of San Francisco, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31478180, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Police officer's § 1983 claim for false arrest and malicious prosecution against village, police department, police officers and investigators could not be sustained, since defendants neither effectuated officer's arrest for perjury, arising out of his testimony at administrative hearing, nor prosecuted officer for perjury. Tartaglione v. Pugliese, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31387255, Unreported, affirmed 89 Fed.Appx. 304, 2004 WL 474011. Civil Rights 1349; Civil Rights 1359

Defendants' failure to preserve exculpatory blood samples did not deprive nursing home owners and employee of effective assistance of counsel, as required to state claim under § 1983, particularly where criminal charges were dismissed and plaintiffs were not denied due process. Nygren v. Predovich, D.Colo.1986, 637 F.Supp. 1083. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1400. ---- Choice of counsel, assistance of counsel, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Civil rights in forma pauperis complaint which alleged that bar examiners conspired with each other to prevent former law professor from representing his student in action against the bar examiners who had not allowed the student to sit for the bar exam was not frivolous, as it alleged interference with relationship to chosen counsel which operated as a substantial impediment to meaningful access to the courts. Alexander v. Macoubrie, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 982 F.2d 307. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Police officers named as defendants in civil rights action did not have any property interest in reimbursed representation of their choice that was secured by more than an abstract need or desire which would have supported an action under this section. Suffolk County Patrolmen's Benevolent Ass'n, Inc. v. Suffolk County, E.D.N.Y.1984, 595 F.Supp. 1471, affirmed 751 F.2d 550. Civil Rights 1136

1401. ---- Effective assistance, assistance of counsel, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Public defender, acting as public administrator, did not violate criminal defendant's clearly established rights when his administrative decisions allocating limited resources allegedly resulted in violation of defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel, entitling public defender to qualified immunity in defendant's civil rights action; assistant public defender, rather than public defender acted as defendant's lawyer, and there was no established right to administrative decisions affecting investigation or expert witnesses. Rowe v. Schreiber, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1998, 139 F.3d 1381. Civil Rights 1375; Civil Rights 1376(2)

Inmate's failure to show that his conviction had been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determination, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus was fatal to inmate's claim for money damages, under § 1983, based on allegations of ineffective assistance and state trial court deficiencies. Johnson v. McElveen, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 101 F.3d 423. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Complaint of one penitentiary inmate, who was black, that his court-appointed trial attorney had failed to object to all white jury selection, had forced inmate to testify against himself and had declined to appeal case and complaint of second inmate that his court-appointed attorney had not adequately prepared case and had refused to review inmate's witnesses or to appeal, at most, sounded in tort and the alleged conduct was not so outrageous as to violate U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 6 right to counsel; thus inmates were not entitled to maintain actions on theory of denial of rights under color of state law. Brown v. Schiff, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1980, 614 F.2d 237, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2164, 446 U.S. 941, 64 L.Ed.2d 795. Civil Rights 1088(5); Criminal Law 641.13(2.1)

Claim that person convicted under state law suffered injury as result of failure of public defender who represented him to meet minimum constitutional standards could not be asserted in civil rights action but could be asserted in habeas corpus proceeding. Gardner v. Luckey, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1974, 500 F.2d 712, rehearing denied 505 F.2d 734, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 73, 423 U.S. 841, 46 L.Ed.2d 61. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Claim for damages against court-appointed counsel in state prosecution alleging improper representation which prevented the party from seeking rehearing of appeal and from seeking certiorari and mitigation of convictions was no more than a tort claim for malpractice and did not state a claim cognizable under this section. O'Brien v. Colbath, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1972, 465 F.2d 358. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Even if county public defender's office was acting under color of state law, within the meaning of this section, when it undertook to represent plaintiff on appeal from denial of postconviction relief, plaintiff had no federal claim against public defender for allegedly willfully misrepresenting him on appeal where plaintiff did not desire services of the defender and was permitted to file his own brief in the state appellate court. Wardrop v. Dean, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 459 F.2d 1030. Civil Rights 1088(5)

In § 1983 action brought by plaintiff charged with criminal offense under state law, plaintiff's claims for damages arising from alleged deprivation of right to effective assistance of counsel or right to represent himself were not cognizable; claims were not actionable unless they resulted in plaintiff's being convicted on pending criminal charges, and even then plaintiff would have no claim for damages unless and until criminal conviction against him was invalidated. Roberts v. Childs, D.Kan.1997, 956 F.Supp. 923, reconsideration denied 1997 WL 83398, affirmed 125 F.3d 862. Civil Rights 1088(5)

State prisoner could not maintain action against his former attorneys for allegedly violating his constitutional rights by ineffectively assisting him in criminal proceedings which resulted in his incarceration directly under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, since this section was prisoner's exclusive remedy for any violations of his constitutional right. Bartee v. Yanoff, E.D.Pa.1981, 514 F.Supp. 96, affirmed 672 F.2d 309, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 230, 459 U.S. 916, 74 L.Ed.2d 182. Civil Rights 1094

Public defendant's actions in defending criminal defendant were not done under color of state law, and thus counsel could not be held liable § 1983 for ineffective assistance. Kearley v. Parrish, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 84 Fed.Appx. 445, 2004 WL 34809, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2174, 541 U.S. 1049, 158 L.Ed.2d 742. Civil Rights 1326(10)

1402. Grand jury, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Where police office had not been indicted and, if he was indicted in the future, his constitutional rights would be protected by the trial process, officer, whose lack of opportunity to defend against allegations contained in report of judge acting as one-man grand jury concerning certain police action did not deprive him of his constitutional rights, failed to state a claim under this section based on alleged lack of procedural safeguards afforded at trial. Cafano v. Cimmino, D.C.Conn.1980, 501 F.Supp. 397, affirmed 636 F.2d 1200. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1403. ---- Selections of jurors, grand jury, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Absent evidence of intentional discrimination, prima facie case of discrimination exists when plaintiff has shown that substantial disparities in representation on grand jury exist between appropriate identifiable groups and entire population of grand jury eligibles in county, and that there is either clear and easy opportunity for defendants to discriminate or demonstration that, at least in part, disparity originates at point in selection process where defendants invoke subjective judgments rather than objective criteria. Johnson v. Durante, E.D.N.Y.1975, 387 F.Supp. 149. Civil Rights 1422

1404. Indictment or information, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Absence of evidence that indictment for attempted murder was obtained against arrestee through fraud, perjury, suppression of evidence, or other governmental misconduct precluded arrestee from overcoming presumption of probable cause arising from indictment, and thus barred county defendants' liability on arrestee's malicious prosecution claim under § 1983. Rivas v. Suffolk County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 355. Civil Rights 1404

State inmate did not have viable § 1983 claim based on allegation that creation and enforcement of state law authorizing initiation of criminal proceedings by information in lieu of grand jury indictment violated Fifth Amendment's proscription against criminal prosecutions begun other than by grand jury; Fifth Amendment's grand jury indictment requirement does not apply through Fourteenth Amendment to states. Martinez v. Shapp, E.D.Pa.1994, 859 F.Supp. 170. Civil Rights 1088(5)

State prisoner could not recover under this section on theory that he was convicted of first-degree murder on an illegally altered or amended information, absent factual showing contrary to assertion by defendant clerk of circuit court and defendant prosecutors that original information had contained words "deliberately, on purpose and of his malice aforethought" and that absence of such words in copy of information sent to prisoner after his conviction was due to a scrivener's error. McCormick v. Ross, E.D.Mo.1974, 377 F.Supp. 1176, affirmed 506 F.2d 1205. Civil Rights 1404

1405. False arrest and imprisonment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Village mayor, police chief, and investigating officer intended to charge and convict former village police officer of crime of theft in office when they subjected him to legal proceeding, and did not pervert such proceeding to achieve ulterior purpose, and thus were not liable for abuse of process under either Ohio or federal law, assuming that claim for abuse of process was cognizable constitutional claim redressable under §§ 1983. Voyticky v. Village of Timberlake, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 412 F.3d 669. Process 171

Plaintiff was not required to identify the charges upon which he was arrested in order to carry his burden of proving his §§ 1983 unconstitutional false arrest claim. Davis v. Rodriguez, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 364 F.3d 424. Civil Rights 1088(4)

False arrest is unreasonable seizure, prohibited by Fourth Amendment, and actionable under § 1983. Gauger v. Hendle, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 349 F.3d 354, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Action under § 1983 in which prisoner alleged that police officers had used excessive force in arresting him did not require overturning his conviction on drug charges, which was based in part on evidence seized in a search that accompanied arrest, and thus was not barred by Heck v. Humphrey; police might have used excessive force in effecting a perfectly lawful arrest. Robinson v. Doe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 272 F.3d 921, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 1976, 535 U.S. 1084, 152 L.Ed.2d 1033. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Mayor violated constitutional rights of commissioners on city's land clearance authority and housing authority by having commissioners arrested when they refused to refrain from meeting until it was determined that their appointments were legal and therefore city, as well as mayor, could be held liable to the commissioners under § 1983. Hollins v. Powell, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1985, 773 F.2d 191, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1635, 475 U.S. 1119, 90 L.Ed.2d 181. Civil Rights 1347

For purpose of claim under this section based on alleged false imprisonment by defendant county judge, the judge's acts were "illegal" in that although under state law the judge, who claimed to be acting as a "conservator of the peace," had power to arrest and to commit pending trial, the judge did more, in that he acted as complaining witness, and "arresting officer," although plaintiff was not formally arrested, as well as finder of fact and judge, all without benefit of counsel, and all of which actions were taken without regard of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or state constitutional requirements, such as bail as of right. Harper v. Merckle, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1981, 638 F.2d 848, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 93, 454 U.S. 816, 70 L.Ed.2d 85. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Department store could be held liable on false arrest or false imprisonment claim. Draeger v. Grand Central, Inc., C.A.10 (Utah) 1974, 504 F.2d 142.

Where bus driver did not physically or verbally attempt to detain or threaten plaintiff passenger, whom he suspected of previously assaulting him, until the arrival of police, there was no false imprisonment of plaintiff by driver. Armstead v. Escobedo, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 488 F.2d 509. False Imprisonment 5

False imprisonment can be the type of "constitutional tort" cognizable under this section. Anderson v. Nosser, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1971, 438 F.2d 183, modified on denial of reargument 456 F.2d 835, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 53, 409 U.S. 848, 34 L.Ed.2d 89. Civil Rights 1037

This section does not create a cause of action for false imprisonment unless such imprisonment is in pursuance of a systematic policy of discrimination against a class or group of persons. Truitt v. State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1960, 278 F.2d 819, certiorari denied 81 S.Ct. 109, 364 U.S. 866, 5 L.Ed.2d 88. See, also, Bradford v. Lefkowitz, D.C.N.Y.1965, 240 F.Supp. 969. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Arrest for disorderly conduct, while clearly a seizure within meaning of the Fourth Amendment, was not made pursuant to warrant and occurred prior to filing of criminal complaint, and thus arrest could not serve as basis for arrestee's § 1983 malicious prosecution claim. Mantz v. Chain, D.N.J.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 486. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Bald allegations by arrestee, that police officers arrested her pursuant to an arrest warrant, and that she was arrested for a crime she did not commit, did not state §§ 1983 claim for false arrest or malicious prosecution, under the Fourth Amendment, absent further allegations that the affidavit supporting the warrant contained false statements or omitted exculpatory information, or that the officers unreasonably relied on the warrant. Hines v. Proper, M.D.Pa.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 216. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Parents of disabled student who sued child protective services (CPS) employees failed to establish that removal based on teacher's report of suspected sexual abuse constituted false imprisonment under §§ 1983, where such action was properly based on employees' reasonable belief that there was real and imminent threat to student, and that state's interest in preventing abuse was furthered by removing child from home during investigation. Martin v. Texas Dept. of Protective and Regulatory Services, S.D.Tex.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 775. Civil Rights 1069

Pro se arrestee asserted claims for false arrest and unlawful imprisonment against city and detective, pursuant to § 1983 and New York law, when he alleged that city and detective arrested him, that he was aware of and did not "agree" to arrest, that arrest was made without just cause, and that city had policy, custom, practice, and usage of condoning systemic practice of racial and class profiling of individuals with prior criminal records that resulted in malicious intent to falsely arrest and unlawfully imprison arrestee without just cause. Anderson v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1395(6); False Imprisonment 20(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Arrestee, by alleging that he was falsely arrested by sheriff deputies and that deputies used excessive force, including spraying him with mace in the eyes, when they arrested him, sufficiently stated § 1983 claims against deputies; complaint contained factual allegations surrounding incident in question. Houghton v. Cardone, W.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 268. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Judgment in state inmate's favor on his request for restoration of good time credit which he could have earned but for his allegedly unconstitutional confinement in close custody program while pretrial detainee would implicate length of inmate's sentence, and therefore under Heck v. Humphrey request was not cognizable under § 1983 until determination revoking good time credit was invalidated in state courts. Torres v. Stewart, D.Conn.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 463. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate could not proceed with claim against police officer for false arrest without first demonstrating that his conviction had been reversed or invalidated. Duamutef v. Morris, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1112. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Alleged false arrest victim stated cause of action against supervisor of jail for deprivation of Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights; there was evidence that victim had repeatedly informed police that he was not subject of arrest warrant, and supervisor made no effort to verify his claim over period of almost two months. Brown v. Stewart, W.D.Pa.1996, 910 F.Supp. 1064. Civil Rights 1395(6)

There is no cause of action under § 1983 for false imprisonment until state sentence under which prisoner is confined is set aside. Hinds v. State of Tenn., W.D.Tenn.1995, 888 F.Supp. 854. Civil Rights 1090

Deprivation of liberty suffered by plaintiff in connection with his arrest for failing to register as a sex offender and subsequent trial was not effected without due process and therefore did not give rise to violation of this section, in that he did not complain that he was not given a fair trial on his charges of failing to register or that he had no opportunity to file complaint in state court alleging false imprisonment or malicious prosecution, and any deprivation of liberty he might have suffered was minimal because he was afforded procedural due process and subsequently cleared of charges of failing to register. Kirk v. People of State of Cal., N.D.Cal.1984, 592 F.Supp. 46. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

County official and subordinate social workers acted with probable cause in causing the arrest of plaintiff, a released insanity acquitee, and recommitment to mental institution, and therefore plaintiff could not maintain a § 1983 claim for false arrest based on underlying New York law; there was sufficient evidence that plaintiff's mental state had deteriorated to the point where he posed a danger to himself or others at the time official issued the removal order based, in part, upon his conversations with social workers, plaintiff's past history of mental illness and violence, his noncompliance with his order of conditions, and the clinical evidence pointing to his decompensation. Vallen v. Connelly, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 555698, Unreported. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1088(4)

That inmate was indicted for conspiracy in fourth degree for attempted robbery, and subsequently pleaded guilty to this charge, precluded any claim for false arrest against city police officers based on other charges in indictment. Almonte v. Florio, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 60306, Unreported. False Imprisonment 7(5)

Arrestee's claim against state game and fish officer for malicious prosecution, on ground that the officer knowingly made false statements in his incident report and at arrestee's criminal trial in an attempt to obtain a conviction for evading, eluding and/or obstructing an officer and for driving off of an established road, was not cognizable under § 1983 even though arrestee was acquitted on all but the driving off of an established road offense, where the driving off-road offense and the evading and eluding offense arose out of the same events, and the charges were based on the same finding of probable cause and the same testimony at trial. Wheeler v. Scarafiotti, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 85 Fed.Appx. 696, 2004 WL 37976, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

There was probable cause to arrest videographer for harassment of court official, under New York law, as videographer attempted to pass through door of courthouse on way to film court proceeding, precluding §§ 1983 claim of false arrest in violation of Fourth Amendment, and under New York law; videographer knowingly made physical contact with official, while trying to gain entrance. Posr v. Killackey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22962191, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4); False Imprisonment 13

1405A. ---- Law governing, false arrest and imprisonment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Liability for false arrest under New York law gives rise to liability under § 1983. Savino v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 331 F.3d 63. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1406. Extradition, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

If extradition itself was justified, even though the procedures used to accomplish it were deficient, extraditee cannot maintain civil rights action to recover for any injury caused by extradition; he can, however, recover for any injury, such as emotional distress, that was caused by deprivation of due process itself and may recover nominal damages even if unable to demonstrate actual injury. Harden v. Pataki, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 320 F.3d 1289. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1461; Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463; Civil Rights 1465(1)

Violation of extradition law can serve as basis for § 1983 action, even though extradition law in question is state law, where this violation of state law causes the deprivation of rights protected by the Constitution and statutes of the United States. Harden v. Pataki, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 320 F.3d 1289. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Complaint stated § 1983 claim against city for failure to train employees when it alleged that city failed to train and supervise its employees properly, including police, to take some efforts to identify person in custody before processing detainee for extradition, that city maintained deliberately indifferent official policy of rounding up persons for arrest or extradition without verifying their identities, and that, pursuant to such policy, mentally disabled city resident was improperly extradited to another state, where he was incarcerated for two years. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 250 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Criminal suspect has no prearrest extradition rights, violation of which can give rise to cause of action under § 1983. Ortega v. City of Kansas City, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 875 F.2d 1497, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 325, 493 U.S. 934, 107 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fact that defendants in civil rights suit were alleged to have had "knowledge" of the illegal extradition and ignored it did not constitute a violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights by defendants as officials of demanding state. Waits v. McGowan, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1975, 516 F.2d 203. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Fugitive may bring civil rights action against proper state officials to remedy alleged unconstitutional departures from proper extradition process. Bradley v. Extradition Corp. of America, W.D.La.1991, 758 F.Supp. 1153. Civil

Rights 1088(1)

1407. ---- Habeas corpus, extradition, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Although there is federal right to challenge extradition, and denial of that right can be basis of civil rights claim, challenge as to extradition must be made by petition for writ of habeas corpus where permissible scope of challenge is very narrow. Good v. Allain, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1987, 823 F.2d 64. Habeas Corpus 525.1

1408. ---- Guilt or innocence, extradition, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State officials were not required to make determination of guilt or innocence of accused held for extradition and dismissal of charges against accused following extradition did not furnish accused with cause of action against them under this section. Smith v. Ellington, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1965, 348 F.2d 1021, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 589, 382 U.S. 998, 15 L.Ed.2d 486, rehearing denied 86 S.Ct. 1207, 383 U.S. 954, 16 L.Ed.2d 216. Extradition And Detainers 39; False Imprisonment 7(5)

1409. ---- Waiver, extradition, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Once a fugitive has been brought within custody of the demanding state, legality of extradition is no longer the proper subject of any legal attack; hence, although extradition papers were rubber stamped with signatures of requesting state officials, instead of being personally signed, the subject's civil rights were not violated where such papers were never executed since he voluntarily waived extradition and returned to the demanding state. Siegel v. Edwards, C.A.5 (La.) 1978, 566 F.2d 958. Civil Rights 1088(4); Extradition And Detainers 42

While there was a dispute as to specific advice given to plaintiff before he signed waiver of extradition as a condition precedent to his parole, where there was no dispute as to fact that plaintiff generally understood consequences of his waiver, civil rights liability of defendant authorities could not be predicated on a failure to show that waiver was knowingly made after plaintiff was specifically advised as to various rights which he would surrender in waiver. Pierson v. Grant, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1975, 527 F.2d 161. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where, even though formal extradition procedures were not followed, plaintiff was taken into custody and transferred pursuant to order prepared by plaintiff's attorney and signed by judge of criminal court of state, and where plaintiff subsequently waived extradition, there was no cognizable cause of action under 1871 civil rights statute. Martin v. Sams, E.D.Tenn.1984, 600 F.Supp. 71. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff stated no claim under this section against police officer who allegedly threatened plaintiff, while in custody, to sign an extradition waiver, but who in fact merely informed plaintiff that if he did not sign the waiver, it would take 40 days to obtain a "Governor's warrant" to extradite him; thus, the officer merely stated that plaintiff would be taken to California sooner or later. Dunkin v. Lamb, D.C.Nev.1980, 500 F.Supp. 184. Civil Rights 1395(5)

1410. Bail, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally-- Generally

Police officers could not be held liable in civil rights action based on arrestee's claim of violation of her right against excessive bail where arrestee made no allegation and pleaded no set of facts that suggested that police officers had any involvement, directly or as supervisors, in alleged violation of her right against excessive bail. Ellis v. City of Fairburn, Ga., N.D.Ga.1994, 852 F.Supp. 1568, reversed 50 F.3d 1039. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Parolee did not have cognizable Eighth Amendment claim against sheriff who contacted parolee's parole officer after parolee's arrest, resulting in parole arrest and detain order being issued against parolee by another parole officer, or against sheriff's department, despite parolee's claim that sheriff lied to parolee's parole officer; parolee had no constitutional right to be released on bond or bail and arrest warrant was supported by probable cause based on parolee's violation of parole rules by being charged with burglary, theft, and misdemeanor criminal damage to property, by possessing firearms, and by being outside assigned parole district without permission. Harris v. Roberts, D.Kan.1993, 817 F.Supp. 895. Sentencing And Punishment 1574

In civil rights action brought against county sheriff by prisoner who was formerly incarcerated at county jail, prisoner failed to establish that county sheriff improperly prevented allegedly excessive $20,000 bond, which was imposed upon burglary charge, from being reduced, in view of affidavit of magistrate indicating that sheriff did not request nor suggest the amount of bond. Cook v. Brockway, N.D.Tex.1977, 424 F.Supp. 1046, affirmed 559 F.2d 1214. Civil Rights 1420

Arrestee's claim that a change in his bail from $100 to $200 was "arbitrary" and violated his rights was not grounded in a federal constitutional right, so as to support a claim under § 1983. Mayer v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21222515, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1411. ---- Bondsmen, bail, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Accused whose bail had been revoked at request of bondsmen was not deprived of any federally protected rights. Smith v. Rosenbaum, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 460 F.2d 1019. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Common sense, which dictated that there existed possibility that individual might flee or hurt law enforcement officer after becoming aware of unexecuted arrest warrant, did not demonstrate that Texas anti-solicitation statute directed toward bail bondsmen, which prohibited bail bonding companies from soliciting persons who were subject of unexecuted arrest warrant, directly and materially advanced state's interest in preserving safety of public and of law enforcement officers, in civil rights lawsuit alleging violation commercial speech under First Amendment, since there was no data showing that persons subject to outstanding warrant absconded, obstructed justice, or injured officer after they became aware of warrant. Pruett v. Harris County Bail Bond Bd., S.D.Tex.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 967, entered 2005 WL 3047787, motion denied 2005 WL 3047786, subsequent determination 2005 WL 3047789. Bail 60

Allegation of isolated incident of negligence on part of bondsman in refusing to "re-sign" plaintiff's bond for his release on state criminal charge after plaintiff had failed to appear in state court on date set for such appearance did not constitute a deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by Constitution and laws of United States within this section. Lemmons v. Tranbraw, E.D.Tenn.1976, 425 F.Supp. 496. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Fact that surety overcharged plaintiff on bail bond premium and that bail was forfeited did not give rise to a claim for federal relief under this section or § 1985(3) of this title. Croy v. Skinner, N.D.Ga.1976, 410 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1041; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

1412. Speedy trial, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A state may not be required to respond as a defendant in a civil rights complaint by an accused seeking a speedy trial in the state courts. U. S. ex rel. Barber v. Com. of Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1970, 429 F.2d 518. Civil Rights 1389

The state's attorney for an Illinois county could not be sued in federal district court under this section for alleged failure to afford plaintiff a speedy trial of pending criminal charges. Phillips v. Nash, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1962, 311 F.2d 513, certiorari denied 83 S.Ct. 1700, 374 U.S. 809, 10 L.Ed.2d 1033. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

Fourth Amendment right to judicial determination of probable cause as prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest extended to individual arrested under validly executed warrant; 38-day detention constituted "unnecessary delay" under Arkansas criminal procedural rule governing pretrial detentions. Hayes v. Faulkner

County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Arrest 70(2)

Denial of constitutional right to a speedy trial does not alone justify or permit federal pretrial intervention in the state criminal process. Clark v. Zimmerman, M.D.Pa.1975, 394 F.Supp. 1166. Courts 508(7)

1413. Jury trial, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Right to trial by jury under Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments could not serve as basis for municipal judge's § 1983 claim against city council that denied his reappointment, where he did not allege that he was deprived of right to jury trial, but rather that he was prevented from asserting right to jury trial of those issued speeding tickets and brought before him in court. Salmon v. Miller, E.D.Tex.1996, 951 F.Supp. 103. Civil Rights 1128

Refusal of jury trial in state proceedings is not denial of either due process or equal protection, and cannot serve as basis for 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 civil rights action in federal court. Ruley v. Nevada Bd. of Prison Com'rs, D.Nev.1986, 628 F.Supp. 108. Civil Rights 1056; Constitutional Law 249(7); Constitutional Law 313

1414. ---- Selection of jurors, jury trial, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In § 1983 action against police officer, juror's deliberate concealment during voir dire of his relationship with other police officers did not require new trial, despite plaintiff's contention that juror's concealment deprived him of opportunity to exercise peremptory strike against juror; plaintiff was entitled to new trial only if juror's correct response during voir dire would have provided valid basis for challenge of juror for cause, and plaintiff admitted that juror's relationship with police officers would not have justified challenge for cause. Zerka v. Green, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 49 F.3d 1181. Federal Civil Procedure 2337

Federal court should not undertake to enforce state laws governing jury selection process in absence of clear showing of inability to obtain relief through state judicial processes. Simmons v. Jones, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 519 F.2d 52. Courts 490

Where 37.9 percent of persons in master jury pool of more than 2700 names were women, their presence in substantial numbers was established precluding any further discussion in civil rights action concerning alleged infringement of rights of females to serve on grand and petit juries in county. Thompson v. Sheppard, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1974, 490 F.2d 830, rehearing denied 502 F.2d 1389, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1415, 420 U.S. 984, 43 L.Ed.2d 666. Civil Rights 1058

1415. Perjury, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally-- Generally

Civil Rights Act of 1871 does not authorize a convicted state defendant to assert a damages claim against a police officer for giving perjured testimony at the criminal trial. Briscoe v. LaHue, U.S.Ind.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 460 U.S. 325, 75 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Evidence failed to establish that police detective and investigator for district attorney's office made false statements in affidavits they submitted to magistrate to obtain arrest of private investigator for intimidating a witness; thus, detective and investigator did not violate private investigator's right to due process of law by swearing out affidavits in support of his arrest and by arresting him nor did their actions otherwise give rise to a cause of action under Section 1983. St. John v. Justmann, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1985, 771 F.2d 445. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Where plaintiff prevailed in state tort action, and there was no indication that he was damaged by allegedly perjurious testimony given by defendants in trial of such action, such alleged perjury was not actionable. Landrigan v. City of Warwick, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1980, 628 F.2d 736. Civil Rights 1056

Allegation that misleading and fabricated evidence was presented to grand jury, if properly pleaded, could state actionable wrong if FBI agents and insurance company involved in investigation of alleged racketeering knowingly or with reckless disregard for truth presented false evidence to grand jury; negligent conduct, however, would not be actionable. Clayton v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, S.D.Tex.1982, 554 F.Supp. 628. United States 50.10(3)

Police officers violated plaintiff's rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 by their false accusations and testimony regarding plaintiff's possession of a concealed gun. Spears v. Conlisk, N.D.Ill.1977, 440 F.Supp. 490. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1416. ---- Suborning of perjury, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Evidence failed to establish that police detective was involved in plan to suborn perjury and to deprive defendant of fair trial and that detective violated civil rights statutes, even though detective had conducted rough interrogation of plaintiff, had told plaintiff's sister on morning of arrest that plaintiff needed no attorney, had attended murder victim's autopsy, and had performed certain other tasks at request of district attorney. Venegas v. Wagner, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 831 F.2d 1514. Civil Rights 1420; Conspiracy 19

Unless federal officials were immune from suit, action could be maintained for damages for alleged falsification of document offered into evidence against plaintiff in criminal prosecution, for giving false testimony under oath, and for soliciting fraudulent testimony, all in violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights. U. S. ex rel. Moore v. Koelzer, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1972, 457 F.2d 892. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1417. Sentence and punishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Federal court lacked jurisdiction to stay death row inmate's execution, based upon alleged defect in clemency review proceedings, pursuant to federal civil rights statute. Beets v. Texas Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 205 F.3d 192. Civil Rights 1098

Civil rights action in which injunction is sought provides appropriate vehicle for challenge by death row inmate to state clemency procedures on basis that such procedures fail to comport with due process. Woodard v. Ohio Adult Parole Authority, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 107 F.3d 1178, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 2507, 521 U.S. 1117, 138 L.Ed.2d 1011, reversed 118 S.Ct. 1244, 523 U.S. 272, 140 L.Ed.2d 387, on remand 145 F.3d 1335. Civil Rights 1090

Plaintiff who had fully discharged sentences resulting from challenged convictions could not use an action under this section providing cause of action for deprivation of federally protected rights to attack the integrity of such criminal convictions. Cavett v. Ellis, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 578 F.2d 567. Civil Rights 1088(5)

The demand for vacation of sentence is improper in an action under this section. Owens v. Oakes, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1978, 568 F.2d 355. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Pro se inmate alleged sufficient facts to establish correctional officials' §§ 1983 liability for violation of his Fourteenth Amendment right to procedural due process in the alleged miscalculation of his prison sentence and resulting incarceration for 65 days beyond mandatory release date; officials deprived inmate of protected liberty interest in being released on mandatory release date by allegedly ignoring his requests to recalculate his sentence, and even though it was unclear whether inmate alleged his incarceration was due to officials' predeprivation mistakes or inadequate postdeprivation procedures, complaint when liberally construed stated valid procedural due process claim. Russell v. Lazar, E.D.Wis.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 716. Civil Rights 1395(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where four named defendants had not ever been asked to approve or recommend sentence reduction for prisoner who assertedly furnished prison administration with information pertaining to, inter alia, escape plots and the abuse of dangerous drugs, defendants could in no way be held liable for any violation of prisoner's civil rights which may have arisen from fact that corrections officials refused to order reduction in prisoner's incarceration as reward for the services. Marshall v. Godwin, W.D.Va.1976, 408 F.Supp. 1202. Civil Rights 1358

Challenge to method by which inmate sentenced to death will be executed may be brought pursuant to §§ 1983. Cooper v. Rimmer, N.D.Cal.2004, 2004 WL 231325, Unreported, affirmed 379 F.3d 1029. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Convict's § 1983 suit seeking damages against public defender and declaratory relief against state court judges arising from allegedly unconstitutional sentence was barred by Heck v. Humphrey, where sentence had not been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Andrews v. Superior Court of California, N.D.Cal.2004, 2004 WL 114972, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

1418. ---- Cruel and unusual punishment, sentence and punishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged violation of state inmate's Fourteenth Amendment right to due process occurred at the moment he was deprived of his property interest in funds derived from his veteran's disability benefits check without notice and a predeprivation hearing; therefore, inmate's procedural due process claim would not be rendered moot even if he ultimately was successful in recovering seized funds pursuant to claim asserted under federal statute prohibiting attachment, levy, or seizure of veteran's disability benefits, but rather inmate would still be entitled to nominal damages on a successful procedural due process claim even though unable to prove actual injury from the deprivation of his property interest in funds. Higgins v. Beyer, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2002, 293 F.3d 683. Civil Rights 1461; Constitutional Law 46(1)

Death row inmate's complaint alleging that his veins were such that, with anesthesia protocol that he believed would be used at his execution, the state would have to use a cut-down procedure or some other surgically invasive procedure to access his veins, and that such conduct would violate the Eighth Amendment, stated claim under §§ 1983, notwithstanding certain broad contentions. Boyd v. Beck, E.D.N.C.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 879. Sentencing And Punishment 1796

Prisoner seeking to challenge the method of his execution, rather than the validity of the death sentence itself, may bring a suit challenging that method under §§ 1983; suit that seeks to enjoin a particular means of effectuating a sentence of death does not directly call into question the fact or validity of the sentence itself and therefore does not raise a challenge to a conviction more properly addressed by the federal habeas statute. Ross ex rel. Ross v. Rell, D.Conn.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 224. Civil Rights 1311

Inmate alleged sufficient facts necessary to establish correctional officials' §§ 1983 liability for his incarceration for 65 days beyond mandatory release date in violation of the Eighth Amendment; inmate alleged that he informed officials that his sentence had been miscalculated and requested a recalculation but they deliberately ignored his request, thus causing him to be unjustifiably detained. Russell v. Lazar, E.D.Wis.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 716. Sentencing And Punishment 1531

Claims that are purely based on negligence when brought under Eighth Amendment cannot be basis for relief under § 1983. Lawhorn v. Duckworth, N.D.Ind.1987, 736 F.Supp. 1501, affirmed 902 F.2d 37. Civil Rights 1090

In context of civil rights claims for infliction of cruel and unusual punishment, something more than negligence is predicate for damages liability. Strachan v. Ashe, D.C.Mass.1982, 548 F.Supp. 1193. Civil Rights 1090

1419. ---- Concurrent or consecutive sentences, sentence and punishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Whether sentences are to run consecutively or concurrently is within the discretion of the state trial judge and federal district court has no power under this section to review his decision unless in violation of some constitutional prescription. Green v. Ballou, W.D.Va.1975, 391 F.Supp. 806, affirmed 551 F.2d 306. Courts 509

1420. ---- Credits, sentence and punishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Inmate could not bring action against state prison officials under § 1983 for their failure to give him credit on state sentence for time he served on federal conviction that was later reversed on appeal, even if they violated state statute by not giving inmate his credit sooner, as violation of state law, without more, does not state claim under Federal Constitution or § 1983. Bagley v. Rogerson, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 5 F.3d 325, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1090

1421. ---- Presentence reports, sentence and punishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Inmate could not maintain action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, under either Pennsylvania law or § 1983, with respect to disclosure in presentence report of her confidential medical and mental health information; disclosure was not "outrageous," but, rather, necessary to assist sentencing court, prison system, and child welfare system in providing appropriate care to inmate and her family, information was not disclosed to general public, and inmate offered no expert medical testimony to support claim that disclosure caused severe emotional distress. Faison v. Parker, E.D.Pa.1993, 823 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1463; Damages 57.25(4)

1422. ---- Probation, sentence and punishment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Grandfather's claim that the state of Indiana, by virtue of the conditions of probation it imposed on his daughter-in-law, deprived him of his constitutionally protected interest in the nurturing and development of his grandchild was actionable under this subchapter. Drollinger v. Milligan, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1977, 552 F.2d 1220. Civil Rights 1098

Convicted felons did not state viable § 1983 claim based on allegation that $50 monthly assessment they were required to pay as condition of participating in intensive probation program amounted to excessive fine under Eighth Amendment; there was nothing under federal law per se that makes monthly $50 assessment excessive, and none of felons were incarcerated because of their inability to pay assessment. Harper v. Forrest County, Mississippi, S.D.Miss.1994, 859 F.Supp. 251, affirmed 55 F.3d 633. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Failure of Virginia probation officer to act on probationer's complaint regarding alleged refusal of officials of veterans administration hospital behavior modification program to issue him periodic passes to leave the hospital, which refusal violated conditions of probation, did not necessarily constitute a denial of access to the courts, warranting relief in suit under this section; sentencing court was available to clear up any case of noncompliance with its probation order and officer's failure to aid probationer did not block access to the courts but only caused that access to become more attractive and necessary. Lee v. Baroski, W.D.Va.1975, 404 F.Supp. 1394. Civil Rights 1091

1423. Expungement of criminal record, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Inmate seeking expungement of state court conviction failed to state claim under § 1983 in that right to expungement of state records was not federal constitutional right. Eutzy v. Tesar, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1989, 880 F.2d 1010. Civil Rights 1098

District court did not err in denying plaintiff's request to expunge records of state convictions obtained against him on ground that convictions were unconstitutionally invalid, in view of fact that a lower federal court is prohibited from ordering the editing of state public records in the absence of special circumstances. Cavett v. Ellis, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 578 F.2d 567. Criminal Law 1226(3.1)

Even though the defendant had served the sentence imposed for his convictions, the maintenance of his criminal records continued to operate to his detriment so that he was entitled to have court consider his claim that his state conviction was invalid on federal constitutional grounds and to consider his request for expungement of the state criminal records. Shipp v. Todd, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1978, 568 F.2d 133. Criminal Law 1226(3.1)

1424. Administrative proceedings, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where no binding administrative order could be or was entered as result of state labor agency hearing on wage claim filed against employer and employer was not deprived of his property interest in retaining amount of wage claim and penalties in that he ultimately prevailed in civil action to enforce administrative order to pay claim, hearing at which presiding officer allegedly treated employer in insulting and arrogant manner, failed to allow him to present effective defense and rendered a decision against employer on claim which presiding officer allegedly knew was false did not give rise to civil rights action by employer for damages based on denial of due process. Paskaly v. Seale, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 506 F.2d 1209. Civil Rights 1120

1425. Crime victims, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

City was not liable under § 1983 to wife and children of murder victim for negligent hiring, after victim was stabbed to death by city employee's son, where employee had found victim's address on city computer system and stole knife from police department evidence room; although city had not screened employee's background when it hired her, there was no evidence that there was anything in employee's background that would have caused relevant policy-makers to conclude that the plainly obvious consequences of the decision to hire her would be the deprivation of a third party's federally protected right. Abdeljalil v. City of Fort Worth, N.D.Tex.1999, 55 F.Supp.2d 614, affirmed 234 F.3d 28. Civil Rights 1035; Civil Rights 1350

Allegation of robbery of civil rights plaintiff's personal property did not rise to level of constitutional violation. Clark v. Brandom, W.D.Mo.1976, 415 F.Supp. 883. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1426. ---- Prevention of crimes, crime victims, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City housing authority could not be held liable under § 1983 for injury suffered by resident of public housing when he was shot by another resident who bore grudge against him, even assuming that housing authority's failure to move assailant, as promised, played causal role in plaintiff's injury, notwithstanding plaintiff's argument that city had him in the functional equivalent of custody, and that state statute promised him safe housing; city's provision of subsidized housing services could not be considered custody, and any remedy for violation of state statute lay in state court. Dawson v. Milwaukee Housing Authority, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1991, 930 F.2d 1283. Civil Rights 1082

Witnesses under subpoena who have received police protection for a brief period are not denied a constitutional right to substantive due process if not provided with continued protection. Clarke v. Sweeney, D.Conn.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 277. Constitutional Law 253(1)

Evidence failed to support tenant's allegation that city housing and preservation department violated civil rights statute or Fourteenth Amendment in connection with alleged failure to take action preventing drug sales on premises; director of department's narcotics control unit testified that premises were considered narcotic problem building and that his unit had started four to five eviction proceedings. S.D.N.Y.1991, 761 F.Supp. 7. Civil Rights 1419

1427. ---- Prosecution of perpetrators, crime victims, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Mother and child failed to state § 1983 cause of action against Puerto Rican judge and prosecutor who allegedly used their influence to quash arrest of father for failure to provide child support; plaintiffs had no cause of action as victims under § 1983 for failure to prosecute crime, inasmuch as there was no federal constitutional right to have criminal wrongdoers brought to justice; nor were they deprived of discernable property right by quashing of arrest, since conviction of father would have led either to jail or fine and prospect that prosecution would have resulted in payment of support was only speculative. Nieves-Ramos v. Gonzalez-De-Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 737 F.Supp. 727. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Alleged victim of assault and attempted murder failed to state cognizable civil rights conspiracy claim against justice court judges, prosecutor and justice court clerk to prevent state prosecution of alleged perpetrators; victim had no federal constitutional right to have criminal wrongdoers brought to justice. Johnson v. Craft, S.D.Miss.1987, 673 F.Supp. 191. Conspiracy 18

1428. ---- Escaped prisoners, crime victims, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Escaped inmate's alleged rape of woman at location over 50 miles from inmate's rehabilitation facility two months and nine days after inmate's escape did not constitute "state action," for purposes of satisfying required "state action" element of woman's § 1983 civil rights claim, which was based on alleged gross negligence of county officials in maintaining rehabilitation facility so as to permit inmate's escape; no special relationship existed between woman and the county or between woman and inmate. Ketchum v. Alameda County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 811 F.2d 1243. Civil Rights 1326(8)

1429. ---- Furloughed prisoners, crime victims, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parents of daughter, who was killed by inmate driving fully equipped official patrol car with the authorization of the sheriff and deputy sheriff and using apparent authority of patrol car to pull over daughter's car prior to beating daughter to death, established claim that conduct of sheriff and deputy sheriff deprived daughter of constitutionally protected interest in life; inmate remained in custody of the sheriff's department before, during, and after the murder, and sheriff and deputy sheriff failed to respond to dispatcher's report alerting them to the possibility that inmate was using patrol car to stop vehicles traveling county roads. Nishiyama v. Dickson County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1987, 814 F.2d 277. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1430. ---- Probationers, crime victims, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Probation officer's supervision of probationer did not deprive murder victim of due process, despite contentions that officer accepted unreasonably heavy caseload, failed to make home visits, and failed to recognize that probationer's mental condition was worsening; probation officer's supervision of probationer did not create or increase harm to probationer's victims or somehow make them more vulnerable, and officer never had any knowledge of substantial risk of serious harm to any of probationer's victims. Weinberger v. State of Wis., W.D.Wis.1995, 906 F.Supp. 485, affirmed 105 F.3d 1182, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 336, 522 U.S. 932, 139 L.Ed.2d 261. Constitutional Law 254(4); Courts 55

1431. State created danger, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State did not deprive murder witness of her substantive due process right to life or liberty, for purpose of estate's §§ 1983 lawsuit under state-created danger theory, by assuring witness that she would be protected after she was subjected to numerous threats upon her life and then by failing to provide that requested protection; state's promises, whether false or merely unkept, did not deprive witness of liberty to act on her own behalf and state did not force witness, against her will, to become dependent upon it, and state did not take away witness's power to decide whether to testify. Rivera v. Rhode Island, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2005, 402 F.3d 27. Constitutional Law 255(2); States 112.2(2)

State social worker's alleged failure to investigate numerous bruises on child and allegations that father abused child, together with social worker's recommendation to court that father assume legal custody, were sufficient to state § 1983 due process claim based on state-created danger theory. Currier v. Doran, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2001, 242 F.3d 905, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 543, 534 U.S. 1019, 151 L.Ed.2d 421. Civil Rights 1395(1)

City placed undercover police officers and their family members in special danger, such that officers could maintain due process tort action against city under § 1983 in absence of special relationship between city and either officers or alleged drug conspirators, when city released private information from officers' personnel files to counsel for alleged drug conspirators; officers had investigated alleged conspirators, and conspirators had demonstrated propensity for violence. Kallstrom v. City of Columbus, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1998, 136 F.3d 1055, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, on remand 165 F.Supp.2d 686. Civil Rights 1039; Civil Rights 1040

To state substantive due process claim based on "state-created danger theory," plaintiff must show that: (1) harm ultimately caused was foreseeable and fairly direct; (2) state actor acted with degree of culpability that shocks conscience; (3) relationship between state and plaintiff existed such that plaintiff was foreseeable victim of defendant's acts, or member of discrete class of persons subjected to potential harm brought about by state's actions, as opposed to member of public in general; and (4) state actor affirmatively used his authority in way that created danger to citizen, or that rendered citizen more vulnerable to danger than had state not acted at all. Carmichael v. Pennsauken Tp. Bd. of Educ., D.N.J.2006, 462 F.Supp.2d 601. Constitutional Law 253(1)

State corrections department officials who heard department employee complain that she had unexpectedly found herself alone with inmate janitor in department business office, including official who allegedly promised that situation would not recur, did not affirmatively place employee in position of danger she would not otherwise have faced by failing to prevent inmate's future presence in office, and thus could not be liable under state-created danger theory in employee's §§1983 substantive due process action against officials arising from inmate's subsequent sexual assault upon employee in office; officials did not act knowingly to create or enhance danger, since inmate had been assigned to janitorial duties in office almost one month prior to employee's complaint. Erickson v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, W.D.Wis.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 709, motion to certify appeal denied 2005 WL 552168. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Prisons 10

Danger creation exception to rule that state actors could be held liable under § 1983 only for their own acts, and not for acts of third parties, applied to Fourteenth Amendment due process claim against state, school district, and school board brought by parent and natural guardian, on behalf of four-year old, non-verbal, autistic child who also suffered from tuberous sclerosis, a genetic disorder that caused tumors to form in many different organs including brain, eyes, heart, kidneys, skin, and lungs, on allegations that preschooler on four occasions was made to walk from bus to classroom without shoes, preschooler was slapped by teacher or taken by his hands and forced to slap himself, and preschooler was "slammed" in a chair by teacher. Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 89.2

Complaint failed to state claim that school personnel created or enhanced danger to victims of school attack, in violation of victims' due process rights; although victims were members of limited and specifically definable group, and risk of harm was obvious and known to several personnel, risk was neither immediate nor proximate, and any acts or omissions by personnel pursuant to risk did not rise to level of shocking conscience of court. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Law 278.5(1); Schools 89.2

For purposes of civil rights claim that police officers ordered mother to drive out of town with her children in the car when officers knew that she was under influence of high dosage of medication, the children, as plaintiffs, adequately identified constitutional right that was allegedly violated, in that the Due Process Clause places affirmative duties to protect or care for individuals on the State if State has affirmatively placed individuals in dangerous position which they would not otherwise have faced. Mason v. Barker, E.D.Ark.1997, 977 F.Supp. 941. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Under "state-created danger" theory, constitutional violation might occur if the state creates danger that deprives individual of Fourteenth Amendment rights, where harm ultimately caused was foreseeable and fairly direct, state actor acted in willful disregard for plaintiff's safety, there existed some relationship between the state and plaintiff, and state actors used their authority to create opportunity that otherwise would not have existed for third party's crime to occur. Hodgson v. Mississippi Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Wis.1997, 963 F.Supp. 776. Constitutional Law 253(1)

State-created danger doctrine, pursuant to which, by increasing individual's risk of harm or rendering him or her more vulnerable to danger, state official violates individual's Fourteenth Amendment right to substantive due process, was clearly established as required for doctrine to be basis of liability under Civil Rights Act, on date police officers shot individual after officers returned gun to him despite individual's anxious behavior, and knowledge of officers that he suffered from psychological problems. DiJoseph v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1997, 953 F.Supp. 602, new trial denied 968 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1376(6)

1432. Special relationship, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Co-administratrices did not state claim against county probation office and probation officers through special relationship exception to general rule that state and its officials did not have affirmative obligation to protect citizens from violent acts of private individuals, in § 1983 action under Fourteenth Amendment, since defendants, through their affirmative conduct, did not place decedent in custodial environment or otherwise restrain her personal liberty. Petrone v. Pike County Probation Dept., M.D.Pa.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 317. Constitutional Law 253(1); Courts 55

County law enforcement officers had "special relationship" with teacher, who had been shot by students in school massacre but whose wounds were survivable during time period after which officers knew that shooters had died, giving rise to substantive due process duty to protect and care for him, since officers affirmatively delayed and prevented rescue or medical help from reaching teacher despite officers' knowledge of identity of teacher, his increasingly serious condition, and his precise location. Sanders v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Jefferson, Colorado, D.Colo.2001, 192 F.Supp.2d 1094. Constitutional Law 253(1); Counties 148

Survivors of a student who was shot and killed outside of his high school during a shooting spree failed to state a § 1983 claim against law enforcement officers for violation of substantive due process based on the special relationship doctrine, absent allegations that the student was in the custody or under the control of the officers. Rohrbough v. Stone, D.Colo.2001, 189 F.Supp.2d 1088. Civil Rights 1395(5)

No "special relationship" existed between woman, who had made report to police that she had been sexually assaulted by police officer and who participated in internal affairs office sting operation aimed at officer, and police department, as would give rise to duty on part of police to protect woman under due process clause, and woman could not recover on that basis in federal civil rights action based on allegations that she was again sexually assaulted by officer during sting; woman was not in custody of State, but voluntarily participated in sting operation. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Constitutional Law 255(2); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

State has "special relationship," giving rise to § 1983 civil rights liability for actions of third parties, when state has directly prevented plaintiff from taking action to protect him or herself. Elliott v. New Miami Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ohio 1992, 799 F.Supp. 818. Civil Rights 1039

1433. Autopsies, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Adequate state postdeprivation process was available under Louisiana law to remedy injuries asserted by parents in complaint against deputy coroner who performed unauthorized medical experimentation on dead body of infant, with respect to quasi-property rights possessed by parents in body of their infant daughter under Louisiana law, and parents accordingly had not suffered constitutional invasion of any property right for purposes of federal civil rights statute through deprivation without procedural due process of property interest in body of their child after death. Arnaud v. Odom, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 870 F.2d 304, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 159, 493 U.S. 855, 107 L.Ed.2d 117. Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

Right to autopsy report and examination on part of parents of minor who died while incarcerated in county jail is not right, privilege or immunity secured by Constitution or laws of United States for purposes of application of deprivation provision of this section. Black v. Cook, W.D.Okla.1977, 444 F.Supp. 61. Civil Rights 1057

1434. Assault and battery, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Malicious infliction of bodily injury constitutes deprivation of a property interest within due process for purposes of this section. Howell v. Tanner, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 650 F.2d 610, rehearing denied 659 F.2d 1079, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1775, 456 U.S. 918, 72 L.Ed.2d 178, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1777, 456 U.S. 919, 72 L.Ed.2d 180. Civil Rights 1035

Degree of force exerted and extent of physical injury inflicted that together amount to a constitutional deprivation warranting relief under this section must be determined by the facts of the given case. Shillingford v. Holmes, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 634 F.2d 263, on remand 512 F.Supp. 656. Civil Rights 1035

Person who was subjected to an assault and battery by person acting under color of state law can have a claim for relief under this section. Meredith v. State of Ariz., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1975, 523 F.2d 481. Civil Rights 1035

Person who allegedly was shot by acting mayor could not pursue procedural due process claim under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983], though acting mayor's actions could in allegedly shooting plaintiff during confrontation concerning drinking beer in public place could be deemed official action, where the action was nonetheless not taken pursuant to established state procedure and there were adequate postdeprivation remedies available in the form of state claims of assault and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Brooks v. Miller, N.D.Miss.1985, 620 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1321

1435. Extortion, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Fact finder could infer that developers' payments to town officials were made pursuant to coercive extortion by those officials and thus did not constitute the voluntary payment of bribe with corrupt intent, so that there was causal link between officials' coercive extortion and developers' losses, allowing recovery under civil rights statute. Roma Const. Co. v. aRusso, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1996, 96 F.3d 566, on remand 1998 WL 156708. Civil Rights 1401

1436. Conversion, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even assuming that creditor bank converted judgment debtor's property when property was sold at execution sale, judgment debtor had available state law tort claim and could not maintain civil rights action based on conversion; civil rights statute was not intended to federalize state tort claim. Huxall v. First State Bank, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1988, 842 F.2d 249. Civil Rights 1034; Civil Rights 1056

1437. Trespass, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Landowners who had no gate or "no trespassing" sign at entrance to their property had no reasonable expectation of privacy with respect to the premises and thus did not suffer any violation of constitutional rights such as could give rise to civil rights claim when sheriff and humane society member came upon the property in order to inform landowners that the humane society had received complaints about the owners' dog-breeding business. Avenson v. Zegart, D.C.Minn.1984, 577 F.Supp. 958. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Duck hunters, who were stopped by deputy as they carried their boat over strip of land between lake and pond and were told that they were trespassing on private property of landowner by whom deputy was employed, did not show a violation of this section providing liability for deprivation of rights under color of law, where hunters introduced no sworn evidence to support inference that they had a federal right to use of such land as state sovereignty land, that the land in question was state sovereignty land, and that landowner's title to such land was defeated by hunters' right of use. Skipper v. Phipps, N.D.Fla.1980, 483 F.Supp. 1213. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claims for prima facie tort, negligence, conversion, trespass. and interference with contract rights made against bank holder of mortgage over plaintiff's leasehold interest, and against receiver, who had been appointed upon an ex parte application, his agent and bank officers, stated claims under this section proscribing a deprivation of rights on basis of claim that receiver and others had acted without authority with respect to premises of plaintiff not subject to mortgage. City Partners, Ltd. v. Jamaica Sav. Bank, E.D.N.Y.1978, 454 F.Supp. 1269. Civil Rights 1395(3)

A trespass to property, negligent or intentional, is merely a common law tort and does not infringe the Federal Constitution. Kao v. Red Lion Municipal Authority, M.D.Pa.1974, 381 F.Supp. 1163. See, also, Com. of Pa. ex rel. Feiling v. Sincavage, D.C.Pa.1970, 313 F.Supp. 967, affirmed 439 F.2d 1133. Trespass 1

1438. Emotional distress, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Mental and emotional distress caused by denial of procedural due process itself is compensable under this section, but neither the likelihood of such injury nor the difficulty of proving it is so great as to justify awarding compensatory damages without proof that such injury actually was caused. Carey v. Piphus, U.S.Ill.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 435 U.S. 247, 55 L.Ed.2d 252. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1463

For plaintiff to recover for nonphysical injury under § 1983, there is no requirement that defendant's conduct be outrageous or that plaintiff's injury be extreme. Chatman v. Slagle, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 107 F.3d 380. Civil Rights 1463

Claims of physical and emotional distress were not actionable under this section. Robinson v. McCorkle, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1972, 462 F.2d 111, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 529, 409 U.S. 1042, 34 L.Ed.2d 492. Civil Rights 1034

Prison inmate who sought to recover for emotional distress which allegedly resulted after his name was wrongfully printed in newspaper as having died in prison fire failed to make prior showing of physical injury, and thus could not recover under § 1983. Orum v. Haines, N.D.W.Va.1999, 68 F.Supp.2d 726. Civil Rights 1098

Count stating claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress was not a claim cognizable under this section but was merely common law cause of action recognized by Michigan law. Stern v. New Haven Community Schools, E.D.Mich.1981, 529 F.Supp. 31. Civil Rights 1034

Mental distress caused by a denial of procedural due process is compensable under this section; the injury may be purely mental or emotional--concurrent physical injury need not occur. James v. Board of School Com'rs of Mobile County, Ala., S.D.Ala.1979, 484 F.Supp. 705. Civil Rights 1463; Damages 57.9; Damages 57.11

1439. Wrongful death, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Widows and dependents of deceased coal miners could not maintain action under this section for death of miners in coal mine explosion as no federal constitutional or statutory rights had been violated. Kaznoski v. Consolidated Coal Co., W.D.Pa.1974, 368 F.Supp. 1022, affirmed 506 F.2d 1051. Civil Rights 1035; Civil Rights 1326(1)

1440. Loss of consortium, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parents could not recover for loss of consortium of their son under the Pennsylvania wrongful death statute related to wrongful death action against hospital where son was involuntarily committed, but parents could recover for loss of consortium of son related to their civil rights claim stemming from same events. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1462; Death 88

Allegations that motorist's wife suffered loss of consortium under state law as result of physical and emotional injuries allegedly sustained by her husband when he was arrested by police officer were insufficient to allege violations of wife's due process rights necessary to support claim for loss of consortium under §§1983; complaint gave no hint that wife planned to make novel argument that her own constitutional rights were violated. Pahle v. Colebrookdale Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1395(6); Husband And Wife 209(4)

Spouse may not bring loss of consortium action under § 1983, since derivative claims are not actionable under § 1983 and there is no constitutional right to spousal consortium. Winton v. Board of Com'rs of Tulsa County, Okl., N.D.Okla.2000, 88 F.Supp.2d 1247. Civil Rights 1332(1); Constitutional Law 82(10)

Ex parte temporary restraining order that required husband to avoid his home and children for seven days deprived him of property and liberty without due process, where wife's petition contained no allegation of a risk of immediate harm, but only alleged that husband had assaulted her two weeks earlier and there had been previous assaults. Blazel v. Bradley, W.D.Wis.1988, 698 F.Supp. 756. Breach Of The Peace 20; Constitutional Law 274(5); Constitutional Law 312(4)

Loss of consortium is a state law tort which does not rise to level of a constitutional violation sufficient to maintain claim under this section. Stanley v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1984, 587 F.Supp. 393. Civil Rights 1034

Right to consortium was not within spectrum of interests guaranteed by the federal Constitution or federal law and thus was not cognizable in action for deprivation of civil rights arising from arrest of wife's husband. Walters v. Village of Oak Lawn, N.D.Ill.1982, 548 F.Supp. 417. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Mother's loss of consortium claim arising out of teacher's alleged sexual misconduct against her son was not redressable under § 1983 or Title IX since it did not represent an injury based on a deprivation of mother's rights, privileges or immunities. Hart v. Paint Valley Local School Dist., S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31951264, Unreported. Parent And Child 7(1)

1440A. Loss of society and companionship clause to recover for the loss of society and companionship of son, absent state action directed at interfering with parent-child relationship; overruling Bell v. City of Milwaukee, 746 F.2d 1205. Russ v. Watts, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 414 F.3d 783, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1065, 163 L.Ed.2d 861. Death 88

1441. Marriage, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A due process complaint based on prisoners' interest in marriage states a claim under § 1983. Martin v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 329 F.3d 919, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1098

Marriage is a fundamental right and is entitled to the constitutionally guaranteed right of privacy. Newborn v. Morrison, S.D.Ill.1977, 440 F.Supp. 623. Constitutional Law 82(10)

1442. Familial association, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged civil right of suspect to familial association was not violated by prosecutor and police officers as result of wrongful prosecution of suspect and her incarceration, where prosecutor and police officers did not have intent to interfere with relationship between suspect and her daughter. Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 447 F.3d 569. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Allegations by parents of infant born with severe brain damage that county children's services agency and county social worker initiated an investigation into child abuse allegations against parents did not state §§ 1983 claim against county agency or social worker for violation of parents' due process right to familial integrity. Kottmyer v. Maas, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 436 F.3d 684, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Infants 17

Complaint by mentally disabled former prisoner and his mother, alleging, inter alia, that mother began searching for her son after his arrest, and that unknown employees of police department told her they had no record of her son, when in fact they knew or should have known that they had falsely arrested him and caused him to be extradited, and further alleging that reckless, intentional, and deliberate acts and omissions of city and police officials constituted direct and legal cause of deprivation of their constitutionally protected rights, stated cause of action under First and Fourteenth Amendments for denial of right of familial association. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 250 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1395(6)

County officials did not impermissibly interfere with rights of familial association of mother and child when they removed child from her parents' home to interview her about suspected child abuse, absent evidence that county officials intended or directed their conduct at familial relationship of mother and child with knowledge that such conduct would adversely affect that relationship. J.B. v. Washington County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1997, 127 F.3d 919. Constitutional Law 82(10); Infants 192

County's alleged threat to remove other children from home if parents did not cooperate with respect to placement of first child, and county's alleged promises that first child would receive apartment, car, clothes, and new school, did not unconstitutionally interfere with parent's right to familial relations; county social workers' conduct, though seemingly inappropriate, did not effectively deprive parents of free choice. King v. Olmsted County, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1065. Constitutional Law 82(10); Infants 17

Prison officials' failure to prevent suicide of detainee in protective custody did not violate detainee's minor daughter's right to familial associational privacy, and thus, afforded her no right of recovery under § 1983; daughter had no liberty interest protected by due process clause in her familial relationship with her father. Manarite By and Through Manarite v. City of Springfield, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 957 F.2d 953, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 113, 506 U.S. 837, 121 L.Ed.2d 70. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps (JROTC) Senior Aerospace Science Instructor (ASI) did not interfere with high school instructor's right to familial or marital association through accusation that instructor had sexual relations with cadet's mother in the armory, absent evidence that senior instructor acted with specific intent to interfere with instructor's marital relations with his wife. Trujillo v. Board of Educ. of Albuquerque Public Schools, D.N.M.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 994. Schools 147.12

Parent could not bring suit under § 1983, against state department of youth services and specified employees, being sued in their official capacities, for alleged violation of her constitutional rights in connection with search of her living quarters and interview with her allegedly neglected children. Coleman v. State of New Jersey Div. of Youth and Family Services, D.N.J.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 384. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1360

Mother of deceased inmate did not have a cognizable constitutional claim under § 1983 for alleged violation of her right to familial association relating to denial of right to accompany and protect her son while he was ill at hospital; in denying access to her son, government did not interfere with any private decision or interfere with her right to rear young child. Gonzalez Rodriguez v. Alvarado, D.Puerto Rico 2001, 134 F.Supp.2d 451. Constitutional Law 272(2); Constitutional Law 274(5); Prisons 4(6)

State's temporary removal of children from parents' home, while state investigated allegations that father was alcoholic, had exposed children to pornography, and might have been dangerous to children, did not amount to violation of parents' due process rights to familial association, which would be potentially actionable under § 1983. Strail ex rel. Strail v. Department of Children, Youth and Families of State of R.I., D.R.I.1999, 62 F.Supp.2d 519. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 192

Foster parents failed to state a claim under § 1983 for invasion of their familial relationship with their natural children, which they alleged was disrupted by their children's psychological problems caused by assaults by foster children, absent allegation of intent on the part of county defendants to interfere with this relationship. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1057

Wife of man who was arrested, but who was not present when he was arrested, was not deprived of her civil rights; thus, her § 1983 claim had to be dismissed. Johnson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1088(4)

To state claim for interference with familial relationships under § 1983, defendant must have intended to violate rights of family survivor; intent to violate rights of victim are not transferable to establish intent to deprive surviving family members of their personal constitutional rights. Sollars v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.1992, 794 F.Supp. 360. Civil Rights 1032

Siblings could not recover under § 1983 for loss of their associational rights; even if siblings could be beneficiaries of action under Illinois Wrongful Death Act, deprivation of their interest in sibling association was not of constitutional significance. McBride v. Lindsay, N.D.Ill.1989, 718 F.Supp. 24. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Right of association protected by United States Constitution does not extend so far as to allow action under this section for death of one's brother. Beck v. Kansas University Psychiatry Foundation, D.C.Kan.1984, 580 F.Supp. 527, reconsideration denied 671 F.Supp. 1552.

Family members and administrator of estate of man shot and killed by police could not recover for loss of rights to familial relationship pursuant to Fourteenth Amendment and § 1983 where man shot was independent adult living alone and there was no evidence of purposeful intent on part of officers to interfere with familial relationship. Busch v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22171896, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(2); Constitutional Law 274(5); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1443. Divorce, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally-- Generally

Husband's "marital rights" were not unconstitutionally violated by state court's act in granting divorce to wife. Killian v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1974, 377 F.Supp. 988. Civil Rights 1032

1444. ---- Alimony and support, divorce, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Possibility that plaintiff's civil rights might be infringed in state support proceeding which had not taken place did not give rise to cause of action under this section. Thompson v. Groshens, E.D.Pa.1972, 342 F.Supp. 516, affirmed 475 F.2d 127, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 127, 414 U.S. 825, 38 L.Ed.2d 58. Federal Courts 13.10

1445. Parent-child relationship, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

The ordinary dispute between a parent and child does not arise as a civil rights issue since it would lack the requisite state action in support of one side or the other, but in those situations where there is state involvement, the outcome of the parent-child conflict often turns on whether the state chooses to exercise its discretionary power to favor one side or the other, a result which is often determined by state law and state decision, not by constitutional mandate. Schleiffer v. Meyers, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1981, 644 F.2d 656, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 110, 454 U.S. 823, 70 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Social workers did not violate substantive due process rights of parent, when they indicated dissatisfaction with condition of home and indicated they would continue investigation of whether children were being neglected, while mentioning belief that one child was victim of unreported sexual abuse and their understanding that parent's husband committed suicide after she was caught with another man; adverse conduct was insufficiently egregious. Coleman v. State of New Jersey Div. of Youth and Family Services, D.N.J.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 384. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 17

Disruption in parent-child relations allegedly caused by high school officials' deliberate indifference to locker room videotaping scheme did not rise to level of infringing upon parents' constitutionally protected interest in companionship and society of their children; constitutional protection was only for termination of parent-child relationships or interference so intrusive as to be equivalent of termination. Harry A. v. Duncan, D.Mont.2005, 351 F.Supp.2d 1060. Constitutional Law 82(10); Schools 89.4

For purposes of rule that governmental action that affects the parent-child relationship only incidentally can not be challenged under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, "incidental injury" is that injury where the offending conduct is directed toward the children themselves and not the parent-child relationship. Baynard v. Lawson, E.D.Va.1999, 76 F.Supp.2d 688. Constitutional Law 274(5)

1446. Birth certificates, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parents possessed identifiable liberty interests in personal information Rhode Island registrar of vital statistics requested parents to provide on live birth work sheets and registrar, by insisting that parents supply him with the personal information under threat of otherwise refusing to provide their children with birth certificates, violated parents' substantive due process rights rendering state liable for money damages. deLeiris v. Scott, D.R.I.1986, 642 F.Supp. 1552. Civil Rights 1040; Constitutional Law 274(5)

1447. Naming of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Refusal of the registrar of births to accept the fused surname "Jebef" as the surname of child born to Alena Jech and Adolf Befurt was a deprivation under color of state law of a right secured by the Constitution to the child and his parents. Jech v. Burch, D.C.Hawai'i 1979, 466 F.Supp. 714. Constitutional Law 274(5)

1448. Custody of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

When the state places a child in state-regulated foster care, the state has entered into a special relationship with that child which imposes upon it certain affirmative duties, because foster children, like the incarcerated or the involuntarily committed, are thereby placed in a custodial environment and are unable to seek alternative living arrangements, and the state's failure to perform such duties can give rise, under sufficiently culpable circumstances, to liability under § 1983. Nicini v. Morra, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2000, 212 F.3d 798. Civil Rights 1057; Infants 17

Parents possess a constitutionally protected liberty interest in the companionship and society of their children, and state's interference with such liberty interest without due process of law is remediable under § 1983; declining to follow White v. Talboys, 573 F.Supp. 49; Jackson v. Marsh, 551 F.Supp. 1091; and Dohaish v. Tooley, 670 F.2d 934. Kelson v. City of Springfield, C.A.9 (Or.) 1985, 767 F.2d 651. Constitutional Law 274(5)

An apparent violation of state law in connection with the removal of children from the custody of their natural parent is not necessarily a basis for a claim under this section; there must also be a constitutional deprivation. Duchesne v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 566 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1057

Allegations that judge serving as attorney for mother in custody proceeding had interest in outcome of case and had influence over judge hearing case, that judge-attorney influenced or prejudiced proceedings, and that damages were sought against judge-attorney for conspiring to or aiding and abetting or contributing to kidnap of child did not support §§ 1983 claim that judge-attorney conspired with judge hearing case. Plaisance v. Reese, E.D.La.2004, 353 F.Supp.2d 735. Conspiracy 18

No constitutional violation occurred as to scalding of minor child allegedly due to county employee's failure to adequately test water system in home of guardian with whom child was placed following jailing of child's parent, as required to support parent's § 1983 action against county, absent showing that any county representative was aware of specific risk to child. Hoisington v. County of Sullivan, S.D.N.Y.1999, 55 F.Supp.2d 212. Civil Rights 1057

Parent who is wrongfully deprived of physical custody of his or her children without due process of law has cause of action under federal civil rights statute. Sipka v. Soet, D.Kan.1991, 761 F.Supp. 761, appeal dismissed 940 F.2d 1539. Civil Rights 1057

Parents' claim that alleged baby switching by hospital violated their civil rights raised question for trier of fact despite hospital's assertion that no constitutionally protected right to raise one's own offspring existed. Twigg v. Hospital Dist. of Hardee County, Fla., M.D.Fla.1990, 731 F.Supp. 469. Civil Rights 1431

1449. ---- Adoption, custody of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Adoptive parents of five "hard to place" children failed to state claim in their § 1983 complaint that state interfered with parents' "fundamental interests" in deciding to adopt by placing children in their home without developing complete information about children's backgrounds and without releasing all available information to parents, and thus did not demonstrate deprivation of liberty interests; Constitution did not require state to develop and present additional information to prospective parents and to train them about how to care for handicapped children. Griffith v. Johnston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 899 F.2d 1427, rehearing denied 904 F.2d 705, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 712, 498 U.S. 1040, 112 L.Ed.2d 701. Civil Rights 1395(1) confer on plaintiffs rights or entitlements which were enforceable through private action under § 1983. E.F. By and Through Mississippi Protection and Advocacy System, Inc. v. Scafidi, S.D.Miss.1994, 851 F.Supp. 249, affirmed 110 F.3d 793, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 65, 522 U.S. 816, 139 L.Ed.2d 27. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Prospective adoptive parents could not maintain constitutional claims for interference with their or their prospective adoptive child's right to family association arising out of failure of Children and Youth Services to adequately disclose medical information about child, where adoption of child was never completed, as required under Pennsylvania law to convey protected status of parents. Young v. Francis, E.D.Pa.1993, 820 F.Supp. 940. Constitutional Law 82(10); Infants 17

Alleged misrepresentations made during adoptive process that child "came from good physical and mental stock" did not violate any of adoptive mother's federal constitutional rights and, thus, mother could not maintain action under § 1983; no fundamental right of familial association was implicated by conduct that occurred before adoption and adoption was a matter of uniquely state law which set forth no provision for protecting "rights" of adoptive parents to obtain "suitable" child. Collier v. Krane, D.Colo.1991, 763 F.Supp. 473. Civil Rights 1057

Adoption Act created individual rights in foster children, enforceable under § 1983, to individual case plan containing specific mandated elements and to have that plan implemented; foster children were clearly intended beneficiaries of Act, since language of Act focused on needs of individual foster children, Act lacked enforcement mechanism, and Act was not too vague and amorphous to be enforced by judiciary. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1057

1450. ---- Foster care, custody of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State law, that required county to perform background checks on foster parent before placing foster child in home, could not provide basis to impose special relationship duty upon county, as exception to rule that government ordinarily did not have substantive due process duty under §§ 1983 to protect private citizens from doing harm to each other. Waubanascum v. Shawano County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 416 F.3d 658, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1045, 163 L.Ed.2d 858. Infants 17

Child's removal from mother's home by county social worker and permanent placement outside home was justified, precluding social worker's liability to mother under § 1983; although child's allegations of abuse implicated only child's stepfather, who purportedly informed social worker that he would leave house if necessary for child to remain, social worker indicated that mother was hostile to child with respect to allegations, juvenile court found that prima facie case was established for child's detention out of home, family reunification was attempted, and mother opted not to appeal from court orders requiring child's four-year placement in foster care. Mabe v. San Bernardino County, Dept. of Public Social Services, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 237 F.3d 1101. Infants 17; Infants 177

State and county social services agencies did not have affirmative duty to protect child who was in agencies' legal custody when his father abducted and killed him during an unsupervised visit, so that child's mother failed to state § 1983 claim against the agencies' officers and employees for violation of the child's substantive due process rights; child was in physical custody of mother, mother had control over child, consented to father's visits, and had access to courts if she was displeased with unsupervised visitation, and, after placing child in mother's home, child did not rely solely upon state for his physical needs and safety, but, rather, state's sole responsibility was to monitor and arrange child's visitations with father. Wooten v. Campbell, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 49 F.3d 696, rehearing denied 58 F.3d 642, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 379, 516 U.S. 943, 133 L.Ed.2d 302. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 17 liability under federal civil rights provision. K.H. Through Murphy v. Morgan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 914 F.2d 846, on remand 765 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1057

Foster child's allegations that Florida Department of Children and Families (DCAF) employees' gross dereliction of duties as officers of state in placing him in foster home and allowing his adoption resulted in unremitting and intense abuse, including brutalization with beatings, persistent malnourishment, dehydration, neglected illness, mace, and being bound, were sufficient to plead cognizable violation of child's Fourteenth Amendment liberty interest in physical safety. Omar ex rel. Cannon v. Lindsey, M.D.Fla.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 1339, affirmed 334 F.3d 1246. Constitutional Law 255(4); Infants 17

Domestic partner of mother whose child was placed in foster care stated claim under § 1983 that state officials failed to observe their own internal polices, violating partner's equal protection rights, by not offering her and mother family treatment plan, and individual treatment plan for child, and denying visitation rights, that would have been available had partner been half of traditional heterosexual couple. Zavatsky v. Anderson, D.Conn.2001, 130 F.Supp.2d 349. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Pennsylvania Child Welfare Law did not create rights secured by federal constitution or statutes, and alleged violations of Law by provider of foster care services were not actionable under § 1983. Donlan v. Ridge, E.D.Pa.1999, 58 F.Supp.2d 604. Civil Rights 1057

Neither caseworker nor her supervisor were involved in screening, training, or investigation of foster parent applicants, and thus, they could not be held liable in § 1983 suit for violating foster children's substantive due process rights by failing to properly screen foster parents who physically abused those children; caseworker's responsibilities only included monitoring foster children after they had been placed with foster parents, and supervisor had no responsibility to perform actual screening or investigating of foster parents. Miracle by Miracle v. Spooner, N.D.Ga.1997, 978 F.Supp. 1161. Civil Rights 1057; Civil Rights 1360

County department of human services, in placing foster child with licensed foster parents, did not have constitutional duty, based on due process, to disclose all the information in its records concerning harmful behavior of the children, and thus was not subject to § 1983 claim for compensation for damages resulting from injuries caused by the foster children, and department employees were entitled to qualified immunity. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1376(4); Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 17

Children who had been removed from their families and placed in custody of state social services agency stated viable substantive due process claim against agency to be free from unreasonable and unnecessary intrusions upon their physical and emotional well-being and to be provided with adequate food, shelter, clothing and medical care and minimally adequate training. B.H. v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1989, 715 F.Supp. 1387. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Provision of funds by county, which was not charged with responsibility for foster care placement or regulation, did not create special relationship between former ward of state and county so as to give rise to constitutional duty on part of county to protect former ward; therefore, former ward could not maintain civil rights cause of action against county for alleged gross negligence in placing her in a foster care home. Atchley v. Du Page County, N.D.Ill.1986, 638 F.Supp. 1237. Civil Rights 1057

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether city had policy resolving any ambiguity concerning the safety of a child in favor of removal of the child from a foster home, whether city acted pursuant to such policy in effectuating an emergency removal of children from foster home without a hearing, and whether post-deprivation procedures provided a sufficient opportunity for foster parent to explain or defend her care of the children, precluding summary judgment in favor of city or foster parent on foster parent's due process claim. Johnson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1826122, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

1451. ---- Visiting rights, custody of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether state family court officials violated father's constitutional rights by refusing to process his ex parte petition for visitation, precluding summary judgment for officials on father's claim under §§ 1983 grounded on family court officials' alleged failure to process his petition. McKnight v. Baker, E.D.Pa.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 422. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Childrens' allegation that foster care contractors violated their constitutional right in maintaining their family relations by refusing to permit siblings to visit one another was sufficient to state civil rights claim. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Father claiming that former wife's false accusations of child abuse resulted in denial of his visitation rights did not have constitutionally protected parental liberty interest in continued companionship and association with his child that would be cognizable in civil rights action; even assuming that such interest existed, father did not allege type of permanent, physical separation from child necessary to show constitutional deprivation for purposes of civil rights claim. Norton v. Cobb, N.D.Ohio 1990, 744 F.Supp. 798. Constitutional Law 254.1; Constitutional Law 274(5)

Siblings who were wards of the court stated cause of action for denial of substantive due process against officials of Illinois Department of Children and Family Services by alleging that they were supporting policies of foster homes in which some of the children had been placed which did not allow any visitation with their siblings and that they had failed to facilitate visits between siblings when the foster parents expressed their willingness to cooperate. Aristotle P. v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1002. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1452. ---- Child abuse, custody of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State's seizure of allegedly abused child did not violate parents' right to equal protection under state law, based on allegation that state's investigation was biased because of parents' poverty and relative lack of education, absent showing of causal connection between allegedly biased investigations and any injury resulting from removal of child from parents' custody. Donald v. Polk County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 836 F.2d 376. Constitutional Law 225.1; Infants 192

State owed duty of care to children abused by foster parents, as required to support § 1983 action for violation of children's substantive due process rights, despite biological parents' consent to placement of children into foster care. Miracle by Miracle v. Spooner, N.D.Ga.1997, 978 F.Supp. 1161. Civil Rights 1057

Allegations in federal civil rights action by mother of child, who was beaten to death by her father after she had been returned to father's custody following placement in custody of county child services department, that treatment of child by department violated child's rights as child was entitled under federal Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) statutes and regulations to benefits which are protected by Constitution did not state claim for relief; mother had provided no authority that statutes and regulations provide basis for recovery. Ford v. Johnson, W.D.Pa.1995, 899 F.Supp. 227. Civil Rights 1057

G.S.N.C. § 7A-284, which provides that if it appears that child is in danger, subject to such serious neglect as may endanger his health or morals or that best interest of child requires that court assume immediate custody of child prior to hearing, parent can be deprived of custody for at least five days before hearing is held, is constitutionally defensible means to protect state's interest in protecting and caring for neglected children and does not deprive parents of custody without due process. Newton v. Burgin, W.D.N.C.1973, 363 F.Supp. 782, affirmed 94 S.Ct. 889, 414 U.S. 1139, 39 L.Ed.2d 96. Constitutional Law 255(4); Infants 132

County probation officer and county deputy sheriff who forcibly removed minor child from his parents' home due to unspecified allegations of child neglect were subject to individual liability for Fourth Amendment violations in child's § 1983 action brought after he achieved age of majority. Brokaw v. Mercer County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1000. Civil Rights 1360

Allegations that state social worker directed county employees to forcibly remove minor child from his parents' home were sufficient to subject social worker to individual liability for Fourth Amendment violations in child's § 1983 action brought after he achieved age of majority. Brokaw v. Mercer County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1000 . Civil Rights 1395(1)

Five "hard to place" adopted children failed to state that state violated their liberty interests despite their allegations that state, as previous custodial parent, failed to maximize their personal psychological development by providing postadoption services to them and adoptive parents; due process clause did not require affirmative acts by state. Griffith v. Johnston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 899 F.2d 1427, rehearing denied 904 F.2d 705, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 712, 498 U.S. 1040, 112 L.Ed.2d 701. Civil Rights 1395(1); Constitutional Law 274(5)

Parents' right, under Wisconsin law, to receive social services was not constitutionally protected right, and thus parents failed to establish essential element for their § 1983 claim following state's seizure of their allegedly abused child. Donald v. Polk County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 836 F.2d 376. Civil Rights 1057

Mother who alleged that employees of New Mexico Department of Human Services who brought parental rights termination proceeding against her acted in bad faith by not assisting her to alter her homelife so that she could be reunited with her children failed to state a § 1983 cause of action absent evidence of a federal right to such assistance. Pepper v. Alexander, D.C.N.M.1984, 599 F.Supp. 523. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1454. ---- Notice and hearing, custody of children, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parents were not denied procedural due process though Department of Social Services took their allegedly abused child into custody without prior notice or opportunity for hearing, absent showing of actual damages resulting from postdeprivation notice and hearing, which resulted in judicial determination that removal was justified. Donald v. Polk County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 836 F.2d 376. Constitutional Law 274(5)

The "liberty" protected by due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 includes right to custody of one's minor children, and it would be deprivation of such "liberty" without due process of law for persons acting under color of state law permanently to separate children from their parents without notice and hearing. Ellis v. Hamilton, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1982, 669 F.2d 510, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 488, 459 U.S. 1069, 74 L.Ed.2d 631. Constitutional Law 274(5)

Complaint alleging that guardian ad litem appointed for child was involved in improperly depriving parents of custody of their child without a hearing stated a cause of action under this section. Roe v. Borup, E.D.Wis.1980, 500 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1455. Sterilization, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In evaluating physician's conduct with respect to alleged conspiracy to sterilize plaintiff, a deaf mute, against her will, cognizance was to be taken of extraordinary degree of helplessness of plaintiff and whether conduct was wanton or reckless when considered in context of ability of plaintiff to protect herself. Downs v. Sawtelle, C.A.1 (Me.) 1978, 574 F.2d 1, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 278, 439 U.S. 910, 58 L.Ed.2d 255. Conspiracy 7.5(2) operation alleged denial of civil rights. Cox v. Stanton, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 47. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint alleging violation of plaintiff's civil rights by virtue of failure to notify them of their sterilization under Virginia involuntarily sterilization statute and to otherwise provide information and assistance as might be appropriate stated claim on which relief could be granted under this section. Poe v. Lynchburg Training School and Hospital, W.D.Va.1981, 518 F.Supp. 789. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1456. Conservators and guardians, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Speculation and conclusory statements were insufficient to support § 1983 civil rights claim based on allegations that guardian and attorney conspired to control probate court proceedings and thereby, violated due process by requiring claimant to return valid gifts made by ward; gift recipient failed to present evidence of conspiracy. Worrall v. Irwin, S.D.Ohio 1994, 890 F.Supp. 696. Conspiracy 19

Alleged private misuse of West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 1751 by plaintiff's parents and deprogramming foundation in allegedly knowingly and fraudulently misusing conservatorship/guardianship process with ulterior purpose to obtain custody of plaintiff so that they could "spirit him to Arizona, imprison him and subject him to brainwashing and mind-control in an effort to dissuade him of his religious beliefs" presented neither denial of constitutional rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 nor claim upon which relief could be granted under this section. Baer v. Baer, N.D.Cal.1978, 450 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1037; Constitutional Law 255(2)

1457. Child abuse, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Although child who had suffered permanent brain damage from father's beating had been deprived of liberty within meaning of due process clause, state welfare authorities did not share responsibility for that deprivation in federal constitutional sense by virtue of their failure to remove child from abusing father's custody; child had no federal constitutional right to effective protection from his father, and fact that authorities may have brought about trivial increase in probability that child would be severely injured did not enable conclusion that state had deprived child of his right to bodily integrity. DeShaney by First v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1987, 812 F.2d 298, certiorari granted 108 S.Ct. 1218, 485 U.S. 958, 99 L.Ed.2d 419, affirmed 109 S.Ct. 998, 489 U.S. 189, 103 L.Ed.2d 249. Civil Rights 1057; Constitutional Law 254(2); Constitutional Law 255(4)

State did not have baby in its custody or its control such that it had to provide basic human necessities to baby as would create special relationship between baby and state, and so state owed no substantive due process duty to protect baby from abuse. Powell v. Department of Human Resources of State of Ga., S.D.Ga.1996, 918 F.Supp. 1575, affirmed 114 F.3d 1074. Constitutional Law 253(1); Infants 17

County department of social services and its employees were not obligated to protect abused children from their mother's boyfriend, a private actor, for purposes of civil rights claim based on deprivation of liberty without due process; though their actions in connection with abuse report might have been negligent under Wisconsin common law, they were not constitutionally reckless. Doe by Nelson v. Milwaukee County, E.D.Wis.1989, 712 F.Supp. 1370, affirmed 903 F.2d 499. Civil Rights 1057

Mother of juvenile who died of gastric asphyxiation, allegedly as result of punitive use of "baskethold" at children's home, stated claim under federal civil rights statute against home and its director based on alleged policy of allowing continued use of baskethold by inadequately trained individuals. and county board of department of social services with respect to reporting and referral of cases of child abuse, promulgation of programs, facilitation of research and training of investigative personnel did not amount to "regulation" of conduct of parent child abuser or coercion or significant encouragement of his or her conduct so as to provide required "state action" under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14 in context of civil action for deprivation of rights brought by administratrix of estate of child for alleged failure to protect child from physical abuse inflicted upon her by her parents. Jensen v. Conrad, D.C.S.C.1983, 570 F.Supp. 91, affirmed 747 F.2d 185, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1754, 470 U.S. 1052, 84 L.Ed.2d 818. Civil Rights 1326(1)

1458. ---- Investigations, child abuse, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Employees of state agency who were ordered to assist mother in care of her child did not have constitutional duty to protect child from private violence and, thus, employees were not liable in § 1983 action which alleged that employees' reckless indifference to child's safety resulted in child being beaten by father's lover's son, where there was no evidence that employees knowingly placed child in position of danger. Bank of Illinois v. Over, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 65 F.3d 76. Civil Rights 1057; Constitutional Law 253(1)

Exigent circumstances did not justify warrantless entry into children's home in response to child neglect report, where any perceived danger resulting from young children being left under supervision of 12-year-old and authorities' inability to contact parents was merely speculative and insufficiently serious, there was no indication that any potential harms would imminently come to fruition, and child protective services caseworker testified that he saw only "potential for harm." O'Donnell v. Brown, W.D.Mich.2004, 335 F.Supp.2d 787. Searches And Seizures 42.1

Biological parents of children who were physically abused, and one killed, by foster parents failed to prove that caseworker's supervisor was deliberately indifferent to children's welfare, as required for imposition of § 1983 liability for violation of children's substantive due process rights, even if supervisor did conspire with caseworker to falsify records after child's death; evidence showed only that supervisor knew caseworker had failed to return phone calls to several foster parents or to turn in her records of home visits in timely fashion. Miracle by Miracle v. Spooner, N.D.Ga.1997, 978 F.Supp. 1161. Civil Rights 1360

Township mental health board that funded children's advocacy center did not act with deliberate indifference to rights of arrestee who was arrested as result of interview of child witness by center's director concerning arrestee's alleged acts of sexual abuse, based on board's alleged failure to verify director's qualifications; board relied on director's stated qualifications and recommendation of social services provider that administered center. Fittanto v. Children's Advocacy Center, N.D.Ill.1993, 836 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1352(6)

1459. ---- Register of child abusers, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State social services agency's placement of father's name in register of suspected child abusers did not deprive father of constitutionally protected liberty or property interest; father's employment prospects had not suffered, and his relationship with his family was not altered as result. Glasford v. New York State Dept. of Social Services, S.D.N.Y.1992, 787 F.Supp. 384. Constitutional Law 274(5); Constitutional Law 277(1)

1460. ---- Reporting requirements, child abuse, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Neither private hospital, public hospital, county, municipality nor their employees were liable under § 1983 for their alleged failure to properly report alleged child abuse committed by foster parents, after child had been privately placed in home by parents. Milburn by Milburn v. Anne Arundel County Dept. of Social Services, C.A.4 (Md.) 1989, 871 F.2d 474, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 148, 493 U.S. 850, 107 L.Ed.2d 106. Illinois requirement that tenured teacher-school psychologist and others in similar positions of responsibility promptly report child abuse to state agency did not unconstitutionally infringe school psychologist's federal constitutional right of confidentiality derived from student's right to privacy; Illinois had compelling state interest in protecting abused children. Pesce v. J. Sterling Morton High School, Dist. 201, Cook County, IL, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 830 F.2d 789. Constitutional Law 82(7); Infants 12(9)

Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act (AACWA) section requiring that state plans provide for reporting of known or suspected instances of physical or mental injury, sexual abuse or exploitation, or negligent treatment or maltreatment of an adopted child, does not confer an implied private cause of action against individual public employees for money damages enforceable under §§ 1983, absent unambiguous Congressional intent to create such an enforceable private right of action. Johnson ex rel. Estate of Cano v. Holmes, D.N.M.2004, 377 F.Supp.2d 1084 . Infants 17

Alleged violation by state officials of federal regulation requiring that state agency which administers child support enforcement program provide an alleged father, as appropriate, the opportunity to voluntarily acknowledge paternity did not create a right which support obligees could individually enforce under § 1983. Brinkley v. Hill, S.D.W.Va.1997, 981 F.Supp. 423. Civil Rights 1057

Missouri child abuse reporting statute created no duty in nonsupervisory public school teacher to report alleged sexual misconduct by fellow teacher toward female students to law enforcement or child protective agencies such as would support students' § 1983 action against the nonsupervisory teacher. Thelma D. v. Board of Educ. of City of St. Louis, E.D.Mo.1987, 669 F.Supp. 947. Civil Rights 1057

1461. Child support, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Federal statute setting terms for distribution of state-collected Title IV-D child support payments does not provide support recipients with individual rights, enforceable against state under §§ 1983. Arrington v. Helms, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 438 F.3d 1336, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 2006 WL 1112954. Civil Rights 1057

Provision of Title IV-D of Social Security Act, stating that "an amount collected on behalf of a family as support by a State pursuant to a plan approved under this part shall be distributed as follows," did not create federal right to state distribution of child support payments in strict compliance with statute that was individually enforceable by custodial parents under §§ 1983, even though statute reflected some congressional intent to benefit custodial parents, inasmuch as right to strict compliance was not unambiguously imposed as binding obligation on the states, and was too vague and amorphous for judicial enforcement. Walters v. Weiss, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 392 F.3d 306. Civil Rights 1057

Social security statute that requires state to adopt plan for child support enforcement in order to participate in Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program created individual federal civil rights claim where statutory and regulatory scheme created binding obligations upon state, provided highly detailed requirements and administrative procedures state must follow and detailed criteria for measuring compliance with statute; phrase "substantial compliance" was not what created enforceable rights but right was enforceable, where state could meet substantial compliance standard only by satisfying concrete requirements specified in statutory and regulatory scheme. Freestone v. Cowan, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1141, certiorari granted 116 S.Ct. 1671, 517 U.S. 1186, 134 L.Ed.2d 775, motion to dismiss denied 117 S.Ct. 38, 518 U.S. 1058, 135 L.Ed.2d 1129, vacated 117 S.Ct. 1353, 520 U.S. 329, 137 L.Ed.2d 569, on remand 116 F.3d 412. Civil Rights 1057

Custodial parents failed to state claim against agency responsible for overseeing state's child support enforcement services based on alleged misappropriation of child support arrearages, given absence of affirmative allegation that any parent had previously received public assistance or that state had improperly appropriated child support arrearage payments to reimburse itself for those prior payments. 98 Fed.Appx. 360, 2004 WL 435890, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Although complaint failed to tie parents' claims against state agency to specific provisions of federal law, it alleged both existence of such rights, by asserting that parents had right to receive distribution of all collected child support payments belonging to them within two business days of receipt by state and without deduction of administrative fees, and deprivations thereof, and therefore district court was required to consider whether underlying statutes conferred upon parents federal rights enforceable under §§ 1983 in deciding motion seeking dismissal. Hughlett v. Romer-Sensky, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 98 Fed.Appx. 360, 2004 WL 435890, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

1462. Education, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, which was passed in response to critically urgent needs of homeless, confers on homeless children educational rights enforceable under § 1983; state undertakes well-defined obligations when it elects to accept funds under Act, as Act not only informs state in great detail on how its plan must be implemented, it imposes obligations that are independent of plan, nothing in Act suggests that its beneficiaries may not invoke § 1983 to enforce their rights, and courts are competent to ensure fulfillment of statutory requirement that school be selected in accordance with "best interest" of homeless child. Lampkin v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1994, 27 F.3d 605, 307 U.S.App.D.C. 155, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 578, 513 U.S. 1016, 130 L.Ed.2d 493, on remand 879 F.Supp. 116. Civil Rights 1070

Child's right to get best possible education was not a right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution, and thus mother and her minor children could not maintain § 1983 action against child's foster parent for allegedly refusing to allow mother's child to attend public school of her choice, even if foster parent were considered a state actor for § 1983 purposes. P.G. v. Ramsey County, D.Minn.2001, 141 F.Supp.2d 1220. Constitutional Law 206(1)

Elementary school student's due process property right to receive public school education was not violated, giving rise to claim under § 1983, when he voluntarily left public school to attend private school after repeated beatings at hands of bullies. Stevenson ex rel. Stevenson v. Martin County Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.C.1999, 93 F.Supp.2d 644, affirmed 3 Fed.Appx. 25, 2001 WL 98358, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 54, 534 U.S. 821, 151 L.Ed.2d 23. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 148(1)

1463. Trusts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally-- Generally

This section was never designed nor intended to redress breach by a trustee of his equitable duties to the trust beneficiaries. Siegel v. Ragen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1950, 180 F.2d 785, certiorari denied 70 S.Ct. 1015, 339 U.S. 990, 94 L.Ed. 1391, rehearing denied 71 S.Ct. 12, 340 U.S. 847, 95 L.Ed. 621. Civil Rights 1071

1464. ---- Indians, trusts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even if there was right on part of individual Indians to have United States government hold their land in trust for them, it was not right secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or by any federal statute passed by Congress under authority thereof, and hence denial was not actionable under this section. Chase v. McMasters, D.C.N.D.1975, 405 F.Supp. 1297. Civil Rights 1071

1465. Involuntary commitment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Where state mental hospital's superintendent, as an agent of the state, knowingly confined mental patient who was not dangerous and who was capable of surviving safely in freedom by himself or with the help of willing and responsible family members or friends, superintendent violated patient's constitutional right to "liberty." v. Donaldson, U.S.Fla.1975, 95 S.Ct. 2486, 422 U.S. 563, 45 L.Ed.2d 396, on remand 519 F.2d 59. Constitutional Law 83(1)

Even if subjective intent were relevant in evaluating patient's due process claim against doctors who participated in his involuntary commitment to a New York mental health facility, patient failed to establish that defendant doctors acted for non-medical or otherwise improper reasons in having him temporarily committed; while patient cited evidence that one doctor told patient's sister that the doctor could not commit patient on the basis of sister's description of the alleged contents of a letter that she had not seen, as well as evidence that a doctor told patient that the doctor had no reason to keep him in the hospital, it was entirely speculative to leap from that evidence to a conclusion that patient was committed for reasons other than the doctors' conclusion that he posed an imminent danger to himself or others. Olivier v. Robert L. Yeager Mental Health Center, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 398 F.3d 183. Civil Rights 1422

Patient's allegation that she was involuntarily committed to private mental hospital stated a claim for deprivation of constitutional right; involuntary commitment implicates liberty interest protected by due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment. Harvey v. Harvey, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 949 F.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1395(1); Constitutional Law 255(5)

Deputy sheriff's deposition testimony that he believed he called sheriff concerning involuntary emergency commitment of plaintiff for observation but that he wasn't sure did not establish a causal connection between commitment and the sheriff for purpose of holding sheriff liable under this section and, in any event, in view of authority of V.A.M.S. § 202.123 (Repealed) for involuntary commitment without a hearing there was no basis for liability unless it was alleged that the sheriff advised deputy to commit plaintiff regardless of her condition or in contravention of V.A.M.S. § 202.123 (Repealed), which was not alleged to be unconstitutional. Harris v. Pirch, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1982, 677 F.2d 681. Civil Rights 1395(5); Civil Rights 1422

Where disabled person had suffered severe brain damage and was unable to provide for his food, clothing and shelter, he was difficult to control, violent, destructive, and threat to the safety of others, and his father had served substantial prison term and had history of psychiatric problems, involuntary commitment of disabled person, rather than placing him with his father, did not violate disabled person's civil rights. Schlette v. Burdick, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1980, 633 F.2d 920. Civil Rights 1037

Neither provision of United States Constitution enumerating powers of Congress, Article IV, nor the First, Sixth, and Eighth Amendments conferred causes of action, either directly, through Fourteenth Amendment, or through section 1983, for harms allegedly suffered by patient involuntarily committed to hospital and psychiatric center for nearly two months. Davenport v. Saint Mary Hosp., E.D.Pa.1986, 633 F.Supp. 1228. Civil Rights 1037

As to plaintiff's claim that he and his wife agreed to defendants' request for voluntary and involuntary commitment due solely to defendants' deliberate misrepresentations concerning their authority to order plaintiff's involuntary commitment, that defendants failed to advise him of his right to challenge his involuntary status and prevented him from doing so, that he was deprived of proper medical and psychiatric care and was forcibly subjected to harmful medication and physically and emotionally abusive treatment while in defendants' custody, plaintiff alleged acts which constituted deprivation of his federal constitutional rights, privileges or immunities and which were therefore actionable under this section. Ruffler v. Phelps Memorial Hospital, S.D.N.Y.1978, 453 F.Supp. 1062. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1466. ---- Procedures generally, involuntary commitment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

because of patient's filing of grievances against hospital staff, as would prove patient's First Amendment retaliation claim; patient admitted that he could not say that administrator denied him privileges because of his grievances, patient acknowledged that he frequently disengaged from treatment, which was a factor in determining his entitlement to privileges, and there was no showing that administrator took any adverse action against patient. Revels v. Vincenz, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 382 F.3d 870, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 371, 163 L.Ed.2d 140, rehearing denied 126 S.Ct. 721, 163 L.Ed.2d 618. Constitutional Law 91; Mental Health 51.1

Allegations in plaintiff's complaint, that he was admitted to mental treatment facilities on strength of voluntary admission forms he signed while heavily medicated, disoriented, and apparently suffering from psychotic disorder, that he was never provided with court-ordered evaluation necessary for involuntary placement, and that he was released only 152 days later, stated cause of action against facility and other defendants for violation of procedural due process rights in violation of § 1983. (Per Johnson, Circuit Judge, with five Judges concurring and two Judges specially concurring.) Burch v. Apalachee Community Mental Health Services, Inc., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1988, 840 F.2d 797, certiorari granted 109 S.Ct. 1337, 489 U.S. 1064, 103 L.Ed.2d 807, affirmed 110 S.Ct. 975, 494 U.S. 113, 108 L.Ed.2d 100. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Persons involuntarily confined in state mental institution could challenge the constitutionality of state commitment procedures under this section on basis of claim that unconstitutional procedures in their continued confinement were a violation of their civil rights, and they were not required to bring habeas corpus proceedings subject to requirement of exhaustion of state remedies, where they were not asking for immediate release from confinement and would not be entitled to such immediate release even if they prevailed. Chancery Clerk of Chickasaw County, Miss. v. Wallace, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1981, 646 F.2d 151. Civil Rights 1313; Civil Rights 1321

In absence of authorities directly in point, it was proper to test civil rights claim that plaintiff had been denied his right to due process when he was committed to state hospital without a hearing while a prisoner in state correctional institution by reference to precedents which had determined constitutional parameters of involuntary civil commitment procedures in New York. Mignone v. Vincent, S.D.N.Y.1976, 411 F.Supp. 1386. Civil Rights 1091

1467. ---- Notice and hearing, involuntary commitment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State hospital's court commitment procedure utilized in individual's admission in commitment proceeding which admittedly violated a liberty interest protected by the Fourteenth Amendment constituted an "established state procedure" and thus, predeprivation hearing was required under the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause, and availability of postdeprivation remedy in state court did not preclude relief under § 1983, where, although the procedure utilized violated both the state's Involuntary Commitment Act [16 Del.C. § 5001 et seq.] and the state hospital's internal regulations, the state hospital in fact observed its usual procedure for court commitments. Hicks v. Feeney, C.A.3 (Del.) 1985, 770 F.2d 375, on remand 124 F.R.D. 79. Civil Rights 1037

Commitment of plaintiff to a state hospital without benefit of a prior hearing while confined to a state correctional institution did not operate to violate plaintiff's due process rights and, therefore, did not state a claim under this section where a compelling state interest was established in that there was an immediate threat of harm to self, others or society. Mignone v. Vincent, S.D.N.Y.1976, 411 F.Supp. 1386. Civil Rights 1395(7); Constitutional Law 272(2)

involved at time of original commitment and copies of psychiatric reports and examinations relating to prisoner's mental condition by all doctors who have examined him in state hospital for purpose of pursuing state court remedies he could seek relief in federal court under this section. U. S. ex rel. Hill v. Johnston, S.D.N.Y.1971, 321 F.Supp. 818. Civil Rights 1091

Where order committing plaintiff to state hospital until competent to defend pending felony charges rule was valid on its face and complied with requirements of McKinney's N.Y.Code Cr.Proc. § 662-b, and plaintiff did not contend that he was presently competent to stand trial on felony charges, and he had not taken steps for a number of years to secure his release or dismissal of criminal charges presently pending against him, he could not recover damages in civil rights action against Commissioner of the New York State Department of Correction and Charge Officer of hospital. King v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.1968, 289 F.Supp. 466. Civil Rights 1321

1469. ---- Cost of confinement, involuntary commitment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Patient's interest in patient deposit fund and disability insurance benefits, affected as they were by order entered without notice to patient at hearing at which patient was not present, would serve as basis for civil rights suit under this section alleging that order requiring him to pay cost of his own involuntary confinement at state mental hospital violated his constitutional rights. Fayle v. Stapley, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1979, 607 F.2d 858. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1052

1470. Mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Where patient who had been involuntarily committed to mental health facility pursuant to New York law failed to establish that defendant doctors violated his due process rights, mental health facility that employed the doctors could not be held derivatively liable for any such violation. Olivier v. Robert L. Yeager Mental Health Center, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 398 F.3d 183. Civil Rights 1341; Health 783

Individual admitted to private chemical dependency unit pursuant to emergency certificate provided for by Louisiana statute on ground he was so gravely disabled as to be unable to care for himself or that he was potentially dangerous to himself or others did not have civil rights cause of action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 against private institution based on alleged deprivation of his rights by institution employees during his course of treatment, where there was neither evidence nor allegation that state's authority was linked to the specific conduct of private employees which was complained of, even though state might have forced confinement and treatment of individual. Jarrell v. Chemical Dependency Unit of Acadiana, C.A.5 (La.) 1986, 791 F.2d 373. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Genuine issues of material fact existed underlying issues as to as to whether private physician defendants complied with substantive admission/confinement requirements of New York Mental Hygiene Law in involuntarily admitting plaintiff to mental hospital, as to whether plaintiff was actually "admitted," and whether he was given written notice upon such admission, and whether plaintiff had capacity to consent to admission, precluding summary judgment in favor of either side on false arrest/imprisonment claims under federal and New York law. Ruhlmann v. Ulster County Dept. of Social Services, N.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 140. Federal Civil Procedure 2515

Claims that Secretary of state Department of Public Welfare violated rights of involuntarily committed disabled persons under Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Rehabilitation Act by keeping them institutionalized when they should have been transferred to community living situations could be brought under § 1983. violation of state law, rather than federal right, and thus could not support claim under § 1983, even though adult claimed that corporation was required to comply with federal Medicaid Waiver program and its regulations, and that violations of state regulations showed lack of compliance with federal regulations. Brown, by Brown v. Kennedy Krieger Institute, Inc., D.Md.1998, 997 F.Supp. 661. Civil Rights 1052

Right to placement in intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded (ICF-MR) for individuals with conditions related to mental retardation, but who are not diagnosed as mentally retarded, was a federal right sufficient for Medicaid claimant to state § 1983 claim against state officials for denying his claim; claimant would have personally benefited from placement in such a facility with funding from state and federal government. Parry By and Through Parry v. Crawford, D.Nev.1998, 990 F.Supp. 1250. Civil Rights 1052

Right of class of patients institutionalized for mental illness in mental health facilities operated by state to "minimally adequate services" in "minimally adequate setting," as requested in complaint against state under § 1983, was limited to training and services necessary to preserve patients' liberty interests in safety and freedom from unnecessary restraints, and did not include general right to training or services. K.L. v. Edgar, N.D.Ill.1996, 948 F.Supp. 44. Mental Health 51.5

In context of § 1983 action brought by mother/guardian of adult son/ward, mother/guardian had no constitutionally based right of action against any medical or supervisory personnel involved in son/ward's care at state facility for mentally retarded in view of son/ward's status as voluntarily committed mental patient as opposed to involuntarily committed patient. Duvall v. Cabinet for Human Resources, E.D.Ky.1996, 920 F.Supp. 111. Civil Rights 1037

Complaint of involuntarily committed mentally retarded persons residing at state operated institution, which contained allegations indicating that there had been a total failure on part of defendants to exercise professional judgment where residents were concerned with regard to providing reasonably safe conditions of confinement, freedom from unreasonable bodily restraint and minimally adequate training, was sufficient to state cause of action for violation of residents' liberty interests under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment. Nicoletti v. Brown, N.D.Ohio 1987, 740 F.Supp. 1268. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Challenges to conditions of confinement of mentally retarded residents of State Training Center are proper subjects of civil action for deprivation of rights. Davis v. Buckley, E.D.Va.1981, 526 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1037

1471. ---- Injuries to patients generally, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Voluntary mental health patient who was injured when he jumped out of van driven by employee of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as he was being transported back to group home from mental health center failed to state claim under the Civil Rights Act for denial of substantive due process based on failure to provide restraints in van; because the Commonwealth did not commit patient involuntarily, it did not affirmatively act to restrain his liberty, so as to trigger corresponding due process duty to assume special responsibility for his protection. Monahan v. Dorchester Counseling Center, Inc, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 961 F.2d 987, as amended. Constitutional Law 255(5); Health 703(2)

Parents of profoundly retarded resident of community living arrangement stated claim under federal civil rights statute against operator of arrangement as result of resident's choking death, based on alleged deprivation of resident's constitutional rights to safety and life through negligence and gross negligence. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Although failure of staff of state mental hospital to prevent pattern of attacks, injuries, or violent behavior is actionable under § 1983, right to protection is not activated by isolated mishap, or called into question by each bruise that patient may suffer. Shaw by Strain v. Strackhouse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 920 F.2d 1135, 118 A.L.R. Fed. 755. Civil Rights 1054

Mental hospital had duty to protect patients from injury by another patient, and involuntarily institutionalized persons had constitutional right to safe and humane living environment, but, in order for female patient's claim of negligence against hospital officials to be actionable under this section, more than isolated event of unconsented touching by male patient was required. Knight v. People of State of Colo., D.C.Colo.1980, 496 F.Supp. 779. Civil Rights 1039; Health 700

1473. ---- Communications with outsiders, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint stated a cause of action against hospital insofar as it could be construed to allege that minor, who entered hospital as a voluntary mental patient, became a de facto involuntary patient, that hospital's rule precluding communication between minor and her parents was utterly nontherapeutic and medically illegitimate, and that such rule was a condition of her receipt of state-provided medical services. Doe By and Through Doe v. Public Health Trust of Dade County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1983, 696 F.2d 901. Mental Health 51.20

Oregon statute providing that every mentally ill person "shall" have right to communicate freely by sending and receiving sealed mail created protected liberty interest for all persons committed to custody of state so that any decision to censor or withhold delivery of patient's mail had to be accompanied by minimum procedural safeguards. Martyr v. Mazur-Hart, D.Or.1992, 789 F.Supp. 1081. Mental Health 32

1474. ---- Medical care, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Involuntarily confined patient did not have a § 1983 claim against physician at state hospital for violation of due process rights based on physician's alleged failure to administer drug to block side effects of Thorazine and failure to monitor patient for adverse side effects when patient's expert asserted only that hospital personnel had to either prescribe a side effect blocker or monitor patient for side effects and staff did monitor patient. Kulak v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 88 F.3d 63. Civil Rights 1037

Physician at state mental hospital was not deliberately indifferent to health and safety of patient who was strangled in his bed by another patient, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, by failing to restrain patient who had earlier threatened to "kill someone"; physician spoke with patient after he had made threats and believed that he was not homicidal or suicidal, but rather, was acting out as was his usual practice, and she did not believe he was a danger to himself or others. Coley v. Castillo, M.D.Ga.2000, 115 F.Supp.2d 1383. Constitutional Law 255(5); Health 700

Person with paranoid schizophrenia could not recover in § 1983 civil rights action under state created danger theory for injuries she inflicted on herself by injecting insulin into her eyes where acts or omissions of state-associated mental health care facility, which allegedly resulted in her having access to instrumentalities used to inflict her injuries, constituted, at the most, negligence, rather than deliberate indifference. Randolph v. Cervantes, S.D.Miss.1996, 950 F.Supp. 771, affirmed 130 F.3d 727, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 140 F.3d 1040, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 65, 525 U.S. 822, 142 L.Ed.2d 51. of civil rights claim. Clark v. Donahue, S.D.Ind.1995, 885 F.Supp. 1164. Civil Rights 1037

1475. ---- Medication, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint of involuntarily committed patient in mental institution alleging that he had been forced to take antipsychotic medication stated more than mere disagreement with type of medication prescribed, but rather, alleged that patient was being forced, against his will, to take medication and stated claim cognizable under this section. Johnson v. Silvers, C.A.4 (Md.) 1984, 742 F.2d 823. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1476. ---- Privacy of patients, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Because state-created liberty interests are entitled to protection of federal due process clause, full scope of involuntarily committed mental patient's due process rights relating to unwanted administration of antipsychotic drugs may depend in part on substantive liberty interests created by state as well as federal law. Mills v. Rogers, U.S.Mass.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2442, 457 U.S. 291, 73 L.Ed.2d 16, on remand 738 F.2d 1. Federal Courts 411

Constitutional right to privacy of civil committee confined as a sexually violent predator (SVP) at state hospital was not violated when hospital employees reviewed his medical records in assessing whether he was an SVP; state had compelling governmental interest in identifying, confining, and treating SVPs, who had been diagnosed as sexually violent and represented distinct threat to health and safety of public, which outweighed committee's right to privacy in his medical records. Hubbs v. Alamao, C.D.Cal.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 1073. Constitutional Law 82(10); Mental Health 21

1477. ---- Theft of patient's property, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged theft of government check owned by involuntary patient in Florida state hospital was not basis for civil rights action. Collins v. State of Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1970, 432 F.2d 60. Civil Rights 1054

1478. ---- Treatment, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Section 1983 substantive due process claim by patients of state mental health facility, pursuant to adjudications of not guilty by reason of insanity (NGRI), that they would have been rehabilitated and released if they had not been subjected to systemic deficiencies giving rise to substandard care and treatment, against facility and state officials, did not appear to merely replace state tort law, and thus weighed in favor of finding that officials' alleged actions shocked the conscience; patients relied on evidence that officials knew of assaults, overcrowding, understaffing, and insufficient care at facility. Neiberger v. Hawkins, D.Colo.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1140. Constitutional Law 255(5); Mental Health 439.1

Mental patient who was member of minority and deaf failed to state claim that state hospital denied him substantive due process right to minimal level of care and training; while creating fact issue as to whether there were past shortcomings in those areas, there was no showing patient was currently suffering from their effects. Wilson by Hinn v. State of N.C., E.D.N.C.1997, 981 F.Supp. 397. Civil Rights 1395(1)

State's alleged failure to provide mental health patient with adequate psychiatric care and treatment, including adequate supervision, was not intentional conduct which "shocked the conscience" and, thus, was not substantive due process violation necessary to support § 1983 civil rights claim. Nichols v. Laymon, N.D.Ill.1980, 506 F.Supp. 267. Mental Health 475.1

1479. ---- Assaults by patients, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Failure of staff of state mental institution to increase level of supervision of profoundly retarded adult resident or ward in which resident lived from levels that had proven adequate for over decade after two sexual assaults were perpetrated against other residents of institution in preceding few months amounted at most to negligence, and thus, was not actionable under § 1983 as due process violation absent any evidence of more general security problem at institution or that risk of ongoing harm suggested by prior assaults was focused specifically on individual resident or other residents of his ward. Shaw by Strain v. Strackhouse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 920 F.2d 1135, 118 A.L.R. Fed. 755. Civil Rights 1054

There was no substantive due process violation entitling plaintiff, who was stabbed by patient at state hospital five weeks after latter's release, to recovery under this section against hospital superintendent and physician who allegedly negligently released the patient where it was not alleged that patient singled plaintiff out of general public or that if patient harbored such hostility the defendants knew or had reason to know of it and it was not alleged that the patient was acting under color of state law at time of the attack. Holmes v. Wampler, E.D.Va.1982, 546 F.Supp. 500. Civil Rights 1039

Assault in which male mental patient attacked, kissed and "felt up" female patient without her consent while both were fully clothed was not of sufficient degree to rise to level of unconstitutional deprivation of civil rights, where, although state hospital officials were on notice that sexually harassing behavior was occurring at state hospital, officials did take measures to correct situation, and did not acquiesce in continuing acts or omissions which had effect of producing pattern of sexual assaults, and state took measures to prosecute male patient for his sexual assault upon female patient. Knight v. People of State of Colo., D.C.Colo.1980, 496 F.Supp. 779. Civil Rights 1039

Assuming that members of the Illinois Department of Mental Health had a state law duty to supervise released patients, any breach of that duty would give rise at most to a state law tort claim and not to liability under this section with respect to violent action taken by one released from confinement by the Department. Bowers v. DeVito, N.D.Ill.1980, 486 F.Supp. 742, affirmed 686 F.2d 616. Civil Rights 1039

1480. ---- Homicides by patients, mental health hospitals and patients, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegations that Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, state Department of Health, hospitals where assailant was allegedly treated, various doctors and others permitted gross and inexcusable negligence by failing to provide necessary and proper medical care, treatment and surveillance to mentally ill assailant and that such conduct was proximate cause of stabbing death of victim failed to state cause of action under § 1983; although decision to treat assailant as ambulatory patient was action by state, assailant's criminal action could not be considered state action and state was not aware that victim, as distinguished from public at large, faced any special danger so that victim's death was too remote a consequence of state's action to hold state responsible. Igartua-Olivieri v. Com. of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1988, 690 F.Supp. 122. Civil Rights 1396

1481. Medical service, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parents of child who suffered injury in childbirth failed to establish that interest protected by due process clause was at stake, or that there was governmental conduct that shocked conscience, as required to maintain § 1983 civil rights action against physicians who performed birth procedure. Frances-Colon v. Ramirez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 107 F.3d 62. Civil Rights 1057

Paramedic's decision to summon police assistance before or instead of offering patient opportunity to sign release indicating his desire not to be treated did not support § 1983 claim against paramedic for failure to respect patient's refusal of treatment, in light of volatile and erratic behavior of highly intoxicated patient, and absent any allegation that patient ever actually received any forced medical treatment. Sheik-Abdi v. McClellan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 37 F.3d 1240, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 937, 513 U.S. 1128, 130 L.Ed.2d 882. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Indigent patient's allegations that hospital and ambulance service were under contract with state to provide medical services to indigent citizens and that they refused to provide medical services to him because of his indigent status stated claim under § 1983; under either joint action or government nexus analysis, allegations set forth claim that hospital and ambulance service acted under color of state law and that they violated patient's right to equal protection. Lopez v. Department of Health Services, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 939 F.2d 881. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

Constitution did not of its own force support § 1983 action against fire department dispatcher based on dispatcher's refusal to send rescue squad after two requests by telephone, although woman for whom assistance had been requested died; state did not cause woman's diseases or otherwise propel her into danger, state did not take woman into custody, state did not hinder woman from seeking other sources of aid, and she could have called private ambulance or asked others to take her to local hospital, so state did not violate woman's rights under the due process clause. Archie v. City of Racine, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 847 F.2d 1211, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1338, 489 U.S. 1065, 103 L.Ed.2d 809. Civil Rights 1039

States and municipalities are not constitutionally required to provide medical services for citizens, except for persons who are in custody of state or otherwise in special need of state care and protection. Tank v. Chronister, D.Kan.1996, 941 F.Supp. 969. Health 461

Allegations that city's policies, practices, or customs in inadequately training and supervising emergency personnel caused delays in response time to emergency call did not demonstrate that city violated specific constitutional right and thus did not state § 1983 claim. Regalbuto v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1995, 937 F.Supp. 374, affirmed 91 F.3d 125, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 435, 519 U.S. 982, 136 L.Ed.2d 333. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Allegations by plaintiff that physicians at municipal hospital where he was born had acted with reckless disregard and deliberate indifference to his rights by inducing labor and delivering plaintiff vaginally with Simpson forceps, even though plaintiff's mother told physicians that she could not give birth vaginally and was to deliver by caesarean section, failed to state violation of plaintiff's due process rights for purposes of federal civil rights action; plaintiff had no general liberty interest in bodily integrity or adequate medical treatment, mother had not been taken into custody by state, and conduct, while possibly grossly negligent, did not "shock the conscience." Colon v. Ramirez, D.Puerto Rico 1996, 913 F.Supp. 112, affirmed 107 F.3d 62. Constitutional Law 274(2); Health 684

Ambulance driver's conduct of driving through red light while responding to emergency cardiac call which resulted in collision with plaintiff's vehicle did not shock the conscience, and thus did not rise to level of violation of substantive due process cognizable under § 1983. Parton v. City of Bentonville, W.D.Ark.1995, 901 F.Supp. 1440 . Automobiles 175(1); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment does not grant right to state-provided emergency ambulance service, and, thus, heirs of person who died, allegedly as result of failure to receive ambulance service, did not have cause of action against city under § 1983, even if city had policy of denying ambulance service to those outside of city limits. Handley v. City of Seagoville, Tex., N.D.Tex.1992, 798 F.Supp. 1267. Constitutional Law 252.5; Municipal Corporations 747(4)

Allegation that fire department's ambulance service exhibited poor response time in rendering emergency medical care did not, by itself, establish violation of right entitled to constitutional protection under § 1983. Griggs v. Lexington Police Dept., D.Mass.1987, 672 F.Supp. 36, affirmed 867 F.2d 605. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Lieutenant with city emergency medical services (EMS) responding to 911 call for help did not violate Fourteenth Amendment right to refuse medical treatment of individual with Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS) when he transported individual to hospital even though individual, who was unable to speak, had allegedly communicated by other means to his wish not to go to hospital; crisis atmosphere in home which lacked working mechanical ventilator necessary for individual to be able to breathe would reasonably have caused lieutenant to conclude that this was not setting in which individual could make informed and competent decision regarding his treatment. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 213009, Unreported. Constitutional Law 274(2); Health 909

1482. Drug testing and approval, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Failure of state university to experiment with drug or to endorse it did not create cause of action under this section. Rutherford v. American Medical Ass'n, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1967, 379 F.2d 641, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 787, 389 U.S. 1043, 19 L.Ed.2d 835, rehearing denied 88 S.Ct. 1027, 390 U.S. 975, 19 L.Ed.2d 1195. Civil Rights 1070; Civil Rights 1039; Federal Courts 221

1483. Licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Statute governing deprivation of civil rights does not guarantee person right to bring federal suit for denial of due process in every proceeding in which he is denied license or permits, but rather, statute entitles person to sue only for deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution and laws. Yale Auto Parts, Inc. v. Johnson, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1985, 758 F.2d 54. Civil Rights 1072

For purposes of this section, cases involving denials or revocations of licenses can be viewed about equally well as complaining of a deprivation of the personal liberty to pursue the profits or emoluments deriving therefrom. Eisen v. Eastman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1969, 421 F.2d 560, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 82, 400 U.S. 841, 27 L.Ed.2d 75.

1484. ---- Adoption and foster care, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Adoption agency which alleged that it was deprived of property interest in its operating license by state agency could not maintain § 1983 action alleging violation of procedural due process; deprivation was random and unauthorized and meaningful postdeprivation remedies were available under Illinois law. Easter House v. Felder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1387, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 783, 498 U.S. 1067, 112 L.Ed.2d 846. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Any property interest foster parents had in foster home care license was not deprived without due process of law by suspension of license; State provided postdeprivation tort remedy to foster parents which was sufficient to fully compensate them for any property lost, and very procedural default of which foster parents complained was corrected through state procedures. Joshua v. Newell, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1989, 871 F.2d 884, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 545, 493 U.S. 994, 107 L.Ed.2d 542. Constitutional Law 230.3(1); Infants 226

Private adoption agency was deprived of property interest for purposes of federal civil rights provision through its former employee's use of its files and its name, as a part of conspiracy with state officials to transfer adoption agency's license to former employee's adoption agency. Easter House v. Felder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 852 F.2d 901, rehearing granted, vacated on other grounds 861 F.2d 494, on rehearing 879 F.2d 1458, vacated on other grounds 110 S.Ct. 1314, 494 U.S. 1014, 108 L.Ed.2d 490, on remand 910 F.2d 1387. Civil Rights 1072; Civil Rights 1071

1485. ---- Billiard parlors, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Village could be held liable in action under this section for denial of billiard parlor operator's liberty interest to engage in legal business without arbitrary interference, where, though amusement device ordinance did not reach operation of conventional pool tables, council member nonetheless apparently asserted inherent municipal power to approve new business within the village irrespective of any existing regulatory ordinance and solely upon unmotivated and unreasonable opinions of the business. Sanderson v. Village of Greenhills, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1984, 726 F.2d 284. Civil Rights 1350

1486. ---- Charities, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Ordinance prohibiting solicitation and collection of funds for charitable purposes except under direction of city council, but expressly permitting one named charity to conduct annual campaign for funds, was repugnant to U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 as applied to plaintiff charity, in that it did not contain definite standards governing action of city council in granting or withholding permit for charitable fund raising and exemption of named charity constituted deprivation of equal protection. Adams v. City of Park Ridge, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1961, 293 F.2d 585. Constitutional Law 250.5; Constitutional Law 238(1)

1487. ---- Drivers, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

United States Supreme Court's Parratt decision is restricted to cases where it is impossible for the state to provide predeprivation procedural due process before a person is unpredictably deprived of his liberty or property interest, and did not bar suit by motorist who alleged that she was denied due process in proceedings which resulted in revocation of her driver's license. Plumer v. State of Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1990, 915 F.2d 927. Civil Rights 1318; Civil Rights 1321

Chicago Public Vehicle License Commission failed to accord applicant due process when it denied him a public chauffeur's license on basis of 14-year-old psychiatric records and without checking applicant's present mental condition or showing him the "evidence against him." Freitag v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 489 F.2d 1377. Constitutional Law 287.3

If officials treat in good faith the suspension of an automobile operator's license as a matter of ordinary procedure, even if they might be thought to have been overdemanding in their requirements for reinstatement of license, licensee has no federal claim, but if officials employ their official powers for purpose of injuring the licensee, rather than to serve proper ends of their governmental duties, licensee might well have a claim under this section. Moran v. Bench, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1965, 353 F.2d 193, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 1341, 384 U.S. 906, 16 L.Ed.2d 359 . Civil Rights 1072

Commissioner of Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles acted properly pursuant to Virginia statutory authority in including information regarding driver's state conviction for driving under the influence (DUI) in driver's record, requiring driver to meet conditions for license reinstatement, and revoking driver's license, even assuming that, as driver alleged in § 1983 action, he was wrongfully convicted and Commissioner knew or should have known that; Commissioner had no authority to stray from statutory provisions. Edwards v. Oberndorf, E.D.Va.2003, 309 F.Supp.2d 780, affirmed 63 Fed.Appx. 756, 2003 WL 21224212. Automobiles 144.1(1.11); Automobiles

Motorist's due process rights were not violated in connection with suspension of his driver's license for failure to pay a fine imposed by an administrative tribunal, despite his claims that he never received a notice indicating that his license would be suspended as of a specified date unless he paid his fine by that date, and that the notice should have provided additional information as to procedures by which he could appeal or contest the suspension; defendant officials acted reasonably in providing for the notice to be sent by regular mail to the motorist's current address on file, and the motorist was afforded a hearing on his underlying speeding violation, could have appealed his conviction on that offense, and was given 14 days to pay the fine imposed as a result of the conviction. Evans v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 316, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 433, 2005 WL 348377. Automobiles 144.2(2.1); Constitutional Law 287.3

1488. ---- Food vendors, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Refusal of village officials to issue individual a renewal license for her mobile food vending business was not a basis for alleging a conspiracy claim under civil rights statute when individual was required by Illinois law to obtain a certificate of registration from the Illinois Department of Revenue in order to lawfully engage in retail sale of tangible personal property and, without such a certificate, had no right of which she could be deprived by village officials. Vaden v. Village of Maywood, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 809 F.2d 361, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 2489, 482 U.S. 908, 96 L.Ed.2d 381. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

1489. ---- Fortune tellers, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City council's denial of request for conditional use permit to operate fortune telling and palmistry business, a business permitted with a license specified under the city code, was arbitrary, irrational, and unconstitutional. Marks v. City Council of City of Chesapeake, Va., E.D.Va.1988, 723 F.Supp. 1155, affirmed 883 F.2d 308. Zoning And Planning 384.1

1490. ---- Gambling, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Gaming Commission's notification to all state licensees, that gaming license applicants were no longer able to conduct business in gaming industry in the state, did not invade applicants' constitutional liberty interest in reputation, and thus did not give rise to § 1983 liability, in that Commission's letter did not state any reasons for denial and did not even state that applicants had been declared unsuitable. Kraft v. Jacka, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1989, 872 F.2d 862. Civil Rights 1038; Constitutional Law 287.2(1)

1491. ---- Gun dealers, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiff could not obtain damages under this section, a tort statute, albeit a constitutional tort statute--for the loss of his municipal license as a gun seller, when sections 922 and 923 of Title 18 forbade him to sell guns. Baer v. City of Wauwatosa, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1983, 716 F.2d 1117. Civil Rights 1034; Civil Rights 1072

1492. ---- Liquor, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even assuming that city's current liquor license revocation process amounted to a procedural deprivation, gentlemen's clubs whose liquor licenses were the subjects of revocation hearings did not have procedural due process claim cognizable in federal civil rights action, where state provided adequate means by which to remedy any allegedly unlawful deprivation, by means of petition for certiorari to review city's liquor license decision. Foxy Lady, Inc. v. City of Atlanta, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 347 F.3d 1232. Constitutional Law 287.2(3); Intoxicating Liquors 108.1

Municipal ordinance, that restricted sale or consumption of alcohol on premises of businesses that served as venues for adult entertainment, was reasonable attempt to reduce or eliminate undesirable "secondary effects" associated with barroom adult entertainment, in § 1983 lawsuit under free speech clause of First Amendment; regulation of alcohol was within city's general police powers, regulation did not have any impact on tavern's ability to offer nude or semi-nude dancing to its patrons, and liquor prohibition was no greater than was essential to further city's substantial interest in combating secondary effects resulting from combination of nude and semi-nude dancing and alcohol. Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 316 F.3d 702. Constitutional Law 90.4(5); Intoxicating Liquors 15

Fact that California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control initially denied liquor license did not preclude applicants from recovering in civil rights action against city officials whose protests were intended to, and did, cause Department to delay issuance of license, in view of evidence that it was Department's policy to sustain official protest if there was any color of merit to it, at least in the first instance, and in view of testimony of Department's regional director that if city officials had not protested he would have recommended initial issuance of license. Flores v. Pierce, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1980, 617 F.2d 1386, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 218, 449 U.S. 875, 66 L.Ed.2d 96. Civil Rights 1072

Where, about a week after beer license was issued to plaintiff, city council rescinded approval of license pending full consideration of facts by alcohol control committee at public hearing and notified plaintiff of hearing and, at the time, city had valid ordinance permitting reconsideration of prior council action in such a matter, plaintiff was not denied procedural due process or deprived of civil rights. Turner v. Thompson, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1970, 421 F.2d 771, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1839, 398 U.S. 937, 26 L.Ed.2d 269. Civil Rights 1072; Constitutional Law 287.2(3)

Denial, under color of state statute, Code §§ 58-103, 58-1031, of application for retail liquor dealer's license in manner which did not meet constitutional standards of due process and equal protection constituted deprivation of rights within this section. Hornsby v. Allen, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1964, 326 F.2d 605, rehearing denied 330 F.2d 55.

Once governing authority promulgates an ordinance which outlines standards for issuance of malt-beverage license, applicants for such license possess a protectible property interest that may be basis for due process claim. McCollum v. City of Powder Springs, Ga., N.D.Ga.1989, 720 F.Supp. 985. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Liquor permits were not contracts and created no vested rights, but rather were merely temporary permits subject to revocation by power authorizing their existence, and therefore state employees' alleged conduct in interfering with or denying company opportunity to market its alcohol-infused gelatin product, by delaying approval of liquor license, did not deprive company of constitutionally protected right. BPNC, Inc. v. Taft, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 525, 2005 WL 1993426, Unreported. Intoxicating Liquors 99

1493. ---- Optometrists, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Optometrist, who had availed himself of state court procedure to attack constitutionality of S.D.C.Supp. 27.0701 under which his license was revoked, could not, after failing to appeal to United States Supreme Court from adverse decision of state Supreme Court, procure in the federal district court either injunctive relief or damages for alleged civil rights violation, predicated upon alleged unconstitutionality. Norwood v. Parenteau, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1955, 228 F.2d 148, certiorari denied 76 S.Ct. 852, 351 U.S. 955, 100 L.Ed. 1478. Courts 508(2.1); Judgment 828.21(1); Judgment 828.21(1)

1494. ---- Physicians, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Physician was not entitled to instruction that he could recover damages in § 1983 action under theory that chief administrative officer of state board of medical licensure and discipline deprived him of his property interest in medical license without due process by imposing additional restrictions on his authority to supervise nurse midwives at hospital; conduct that may have have deprived him of his rights was precisely the type of unauthorized and not foreseeable official conduct that state could not have prevented through imposition of predeprivation remedies. Lowe v. Scott, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1992, 959 F.2d 323. Civil Rights 1439

Physician alleged malicious or reckless taking of his property by the Nevada State Board of Medical Examiners and its individual members, acting under color of official right, and thus alleged cause of action under civil rights statute for deprivation of property secured by the Constitution of the United States, where physician alleged that the Board delayed for 17 months in providing verification to the Ohio Board of Medical Examiners that physician was in good standing, thereby rendering him unable to obtain a medical license in Ohio and preventing him from practicing in that state after he had accepted a position there, closed his practice in Nevada, and moved to Ohio. Mishler v. Nevada State Bd. of Medical Examiners, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1990, 896 F.2d 408. Civil Rights 1395(3); Civil Rights 1396

State Medical Board of Examiners' alleged violation of its own internal rules, with respect to appointment of examiner who presided over license revocation hearing, did not result in any due process deprivation that district court could address in § 1983 action brought by obstetrician whose license was revoked. Ramirez v. Ahn, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 843 F.2d 864, rehearing denied 849 F.2d 1471, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1545, 489 U.S. 1085, 103 L.Ed.2d 849. Civil Rights 1072

Physician whose license was revoked stated § 1983 claim against Commissioner of Education of the State of New York by alleging that Commissioner violated physician's due process and equal protection rights by disciplining him more severely than Hearing Committee had recommended, without having heard and seen witnesses who testified before Committee. Blake v. Ambach, S.D.N.Y.1987, 691 F.Supp. 646. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1495. ---- Physician staff privileges, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Psychiatrist's property interest, under New York law, in clinical staff privileges at state psychiatric center was clearly established in 1982, when alleged deprivation of that interest occurred, for purposes of qualified immunity claimed by staff doctors allegedly liable for deprivation, given clarity of existing rule governing when benefit was property interest protected by due process, unanimity of case law in other circuits, and absence of contrary statements by Second Circuit Court of Appeals. Greenwood v. New York, Office of Mental Health, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 163 F.3d 119, on remand 2000 WL 1336281. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Health services district's exercise of supervisory power to grant, limit or deny practice privileges at government-sponsored medical facilities, by requiring physician to apply for and obtain full provisional privileges under the medical staff bylaws, did not deny a substantive constitutional liberty or property right to practice medicine or to make contracts with patients for physician's professional services. MacArthur v. San Juan County, D.Utah 2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 1098. Health 271

Complaint in which physician alleged that hospital and hospital officials had violated his First Amendment free speech rights through conspiracy of retaliatory harassment, which included refusal to recommend renewal of hospital privileges, was insufficient to state cognizable § 1983 claim against hospital's senior director of administrative services, as complaint did not mention administrator as member of board or hospital or as individual who engaged in retaliatory actions; allegation that administrator was member of hospital was too vague and conclusory to withstand motion to dismiss. Franzon v. Massena Memorial Hosp., N.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 160. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Physician who sued hospital and its various members based on revocation of staff privileges was not restricted to recovery of nominal damages in § 1983 claim, despite hospital's argument that physician would have been suspended for same period even if proper due process hearing had been accorded, where hospital bylaws entitled physician to present evidence to medical staff before adverse action could be finalized and physician's alleged offense was not listed as one warranting automatic suspension under bylaws. Medeiros v. Randolph County Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1469. Civil Rights 1464

1496. ---- Real estate, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiff, who sought damages for decision of the Connecticut Real Estate Commission to deny his application for real estate license because he was a minor, was not entitled to recover under this section, even though actions of defendants, who were all officials of the Connecticut Real Estate Commission, which was established by state statute, were alleged to have been taken in exercise of their official duties, where plaintiff was not denied equal protection since there was a rational basis for distinction, and where plaintiff was not denied due process since he was afforded a hearing in which he was represented by counsel, was allowed to present evidence and was given right to cross-examine witnesses. Smith v. Walsh, D.C.Conn.1981, 519 F.Supp. 853. Civil Rights 1072

1497. ---- Utilities, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Actions of county and its executive in seeking to influence Nuclear Regulatory Commission's decision regarding license for nuclear power facility were not in and of themselves an unlawful interference with the licensing process so as to permit utility to maintain civil rights action alleging that it was denied its federally protected right to seek license for facility. Citizens for an Orderly Energy Policy, Inc. v. Suffolk County, E.D.N.Y.1985, 604 F.Supp. 1084. Civil Rights 1072

1498. ---- Notice and hearing, licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Applicant for license for sidewalk cafe in New York City was not denied due process of law when it was not permitted to address members of Board of Estimate of City of New York when they held executive session prior to public hearing on such application, but was required to make its statements only at public hearing, where bureaucratic functionaries often substituted for board members. Fertile Land, Ltd. v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1977, 445 F.Supp. 548. Constitutional Law 287.2(1); Food 3

1499. ---- Miscellaneous licenses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Action of members of city's board of aldermen in allowing new licensee to sell up to 18 used cars, after having limited former licensee to 15 cars, was not nearly grave enough to trigger constitutional concern under the equal protection clause, for purposes of § 1983 claim, where there was no evidence that the new licensee had engaged in four years of license violations, as former licensee undisputably did. Collins v. Nuzzo, C.A.1 (Mass.) 2001, 244 F.3d 246. Constitutional Law 230.3(1); Licenses 7(1)

Applicant who sought renewal of her license to act as bail bondsman's agent was not entitled to relief based on claims that county bail bond board violated her due process rights when it postponed vote on renewal due to deficiencies in application, given that applicant never appeared before board to seek approval of corrected application, despite invitation to do so, and chose not to exercise her right to appeal board's decision under Texas law. Burns v. Harris County Bail Bond Bd., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1998, 139 F.3d 513, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1321

Owners of nursing home which had operating certificate revoked by New York State Department of Health (DOH) and sought money damages only did not sufficiently assert violation of Federal Supremacy Clause for which they could recover under § 1983, even though owners claimed DOH interfered with federal administrative process applicable to nursing homes participating in Medicare-Medicaid program, or intruded into area reserved for federal authorities by holding "premature" hearing; owners pointed to no specific federal right or federally-granted benefit or privilege that was denied them or interfered with by DOH officials. Beechwood Restorative Care Center v.

Leeds, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 248, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 436 F.3d 147. Civil Rights 1072; Health 276; States 18.15

Genuine issue of material fact as to validity of solid waste disposal license agreement between out-of-state disposal business and county utilities authority precluded summary judgment in business' § 1983 action against county arising out of New Jersey's "self-sufficiency" policy on solid waste disposal. Waste Management of Pennsylvania, Inc. v. Shinn, D.N.J.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1243, amended 969 F.Supp. 906. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Louisiana officials were not liable for violating plaintiffs' civil rights by temporarily suspending their warehouse licenses without according adequate procedural safeguards where postdeprivation state remedies were provided which were adequate in light of fact that suspension of the licenses was not caused by conduct pursuant to established state procedure but rather by random and unauthorized action. Delahoussaye v. Seale, W.D.La.1985, 605 F.Supp. 1525, affirmed 788 F.2d 1091. Civil Rights 1072

Absent any allegation as to legitimate entitlement to stevedore license, stevedore company did not have valid due process claim against marine terminal operators in connection with denial of such license; company failed to allege entitlement to license under either state or federal law, and failed to allege anything more than expectation of license. Maritrend, Inc. v. Galveston Wharves, S.D.Tex.1993, 152 F.R.D. 543. Constitutional Law 287.2(1)

1500. Hospital privileges, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even though physician's initial criticisms of county hospital were protected by First Amendment as matter of public concern, medical staff had sufficient foundation to recommend that physician's privileges at hospital be temporarily suspended pending peer review, even in absence of protected speech; physician had engaged in course of disruptive behavior over period of three to four years, which included nonprotected personal attacks on various people connected with hospital. Smith v. Cleburne County Hosp., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1989, 870 F.2d 1375, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 142, 493 U.S. 847, 107 L.Ed.2d 100. Constitutional Law 90.1(1); Health 273

Hospital's entering into exclusive contract with professional medical corporation for provision of anesthesiology services on a 24-hour-per-day, seven-day-per-week basis was reasonable and justified by community's and hospital's needs, and did not violate civil rights of physician who was denied anesthesiology privileges at hospital. Capili v. Shott, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1980, 620 F.2d 438. Civil Rights 1032

If defendants, commissioner of hospitals of city, deputy commissioner and president of union local, conspired to bring about removal of physician from his position with city hospital and to deny him hearing on notice prior to discharge while he was falsely being charged with anti-Negro bias and with abusing Negro subordinates and if department of hospitals advised other city hospitals by letter not to employ physician, defendants would be guilty of violating this section providing civil action for deprivation of rights in that they would have deprived physician of due process. Birnbaum v. Trussell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 371 F.2d 672. Civil Rights 1128

Surgeon's allegations that, at time hospital's medical executive committee and surgical case review committee recommended suspension of his medical privileges at hospital, some of the committees' members were his surgical competitors who had been involved in dispute over his hiring of additional surgeons were sufficient to state due process claim in his action against hospital under §§1983. Braswell v. Haywood Regional Medical Center, W.D.N.C.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 639. Constitutional Law 275(1.5); Health 273

County medical center and private corporation providing physicians to center had not violated discharged physician's due process rights by revoking staff privileges without hearing; there was no absolute property right as to practicing privileges, none was provided for in contract, and in fact understanding of parties was such that physician knew he could lose staff privileges if discharged by employer. Bloom v. Hennepin County,

D.Minn.1992, 783 F.Supp. 418. Constitutional Law 275(1.5); Health 273

Podiatrist was not deprived of federal civil rights by being denied staff membership on public hospital's medical staff. Feldman v. Jackson Memorial Hospital, S.D.Fla.1981, 509 F.Supp. 815, affirmed 752 F.2d 647, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3504, 472 U.S. 1029, 87 L.Ed.2d 635. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1054

Requirement that a physician carry malpractice insurance as a condition of his employment at hospital is not per se unreasonable and does not violate physician's civil rights, and, a hospital which requires a physician to carry malpractice insurance as a condition of his employment at hospital must be afforded wide discretion in setting a proper amount. Pollock v. Methodist Hospital, E.D.La.1975, 392 F.Supp. 393.

1501. Medical malpractice, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

If claim arising out of alleged inadequate treatment of patient at state mental hospital was only one of negligence or malpractice at most, this section authorizing action for deprivation of rights would not afford relief. Goodman v. Parwatikar, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1978, 570 F.2d 801. Civil Rights 1037

Medical malpractice action will not lie under this section. Bass v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1977, 550 F.2d 229, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 195, 434 U.S. 864, 54 L.Ed.2d 138. Civil Rights 1034

To state claim under this section, plaintiff was bound to allege that conduct fairly attributable to state had resulted in deprivation of rights secured by Constitution, and allegations that plaintiff received inadequate medical care by incompetent staff of hospital and that notwithstanding staff's assurance that they would comply with her instructions to baptize newborn child the staff nevertheless failed to do so and child still unbaptized died shortly thereafter failed to show either deprivation of constitutional right or conduct fairly attributable to state. Korevec v. Warren Hosp., E.D.Pa.1983, 559 F.Supp. 29, affirmed 729 F.2d 1447. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1502. Law practice, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

License to practice law, continuation of such license, regulation of practice, and procedure for disbarment and discipline, are within province of states. Saier v. State Bar of Mich., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1961, 293 F.2d 756, certiorari denied 82 S.Ct. 388, 368 U.S. 947, 7 L.Ed.2d 343. Attorney And Client 3; Attorney And Client 32(3); Attorney And Client 34

Right to practice law in state courts was not privilege granted by federal Constitution or laws within this section. Mitchell v. Greenough, C.C.A.9 (Wash.) 1938, 100 F.2d 184, rehearing denied 100 F.2d 1006, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 788, 306 U.S. 659, 83 L.Ed. 1056.

States cannot exclude person from practice of law in manner or for reasons that contravene due process or equal protection, and state may not, under guise of regulating legal profession, ignore constitutional rights. Louis v. Supreme Court of Nevada, D.C.Nev.1980, 490 F.Supp. 1174. Constitutional Law 230.3(9); Constitutional Law 287.2(5)

1503. ---- Bar admission generally, law practice, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Attorney who was admitted to state bars of two states having comity with North Carolina had no comity barrier to comity admission to North Carolina's bar, did not risk exclusion from practice of law by state action in North Carolina by virtue of state's comity requirement, and suffered no injury in fact from that requirement, and thus could not challenge constitutionality of comity requirement in §§ 1983 action. Morrison v. Board of Law Examiners of State of North Carolina, E.D.N.C.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 751, reversed 2006 WL 1644010. Attorney And Client 10; Constitutional Law 42.1(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Requirement of Oregon Board of Bar Examiners that applicant for admission to Oregon Bar disclose expunged offenses was a rational and reasonable method by which to promote the state purpose of determining moral character of applicant and such requirement did not violate applicant's constitutional rights. Wilson v. Wilson, D.C.Or.1976, 416 F.Supp. 984, affirmed 97 S.Ct. 1540, 430 U.S. 925, 51 L.Ed.2d 768. Attorney And Client 5

1504. ---- Bar examination, law practice, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even if the district court had subject-matter jurisdiction to determine whether South Carolina bar examiners acted arbitrarily and capriciously in failing two black applicants, such applicants, who satisfied all requirements for admission to South Carolina bar except that they received failing scores on bar examination, but who showed factually only that two other applicants at other times appeared to have received more favorable treatment in grading than that which was afforded them, were not entitled to individual relief in action challenging constitutionality of South Carolina bar exam as applied. Richardson v. McFadden, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1977, 563 F.2d 1130, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1606, 435 U.S. 968, 56 L.Ed.2d 59. Attorney And Client 6

In absence of showing that applicant had been denied admission to state bar for a constitutionally impermissible reason, applicant was not entitled to have federal court overrule judgment of state board of law examiners on theory that, in light of applicant's background, it was impossible for him to have failed bar examination five times and, therefore, he must have passed and should be so certified. Whitfield v. Illinois Bd. of Law Examiners, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 504 F.2d 474. Attorney And Client 7; Injunction 83

California committee of bar examiners refusal to certify applicant to California Supreme Court for admission to bar because of his failure to pass essay type bar examination was not a deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States which would permit applicant to institute a suit under this section. Chaney v. State Bar of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1967, 386 F.2d 962, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 1262, 390 U.S. 1011, 20 L.Ed.2d 162, rehearing denied 88 S.Ct. 1803, 391 U.S. 929, 20 L.Ed.2d 670, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1262, 440 U.S. 927, 59 L.Ed.2d 483. Civil Rights 1072

Allegations that Justices of Louisiana Supreme Court engaged in unethical conduct in disposition of applicant's petition for writ allowing him to take bar exam, in that Justices had conflict of interest as members of State Bar Association before them as adversary party, had private communications with members of Association regarding petition, allowed Association to file pleadings without serving copies thereof on applicant and that this conduct went so far as to deny applicant fair hearing in violation of due process, did not state claim for deprivation of civil rights. Moity v. Louisiana State Bar Ass'n, E.D.La.1976, 414 F.Supp. 180, affirmed 537 F.2d 1141, rehearing denied 540 F.2d 1085. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1505. ---- Discipline of attorneys, law practice, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Disbarred lawyers failed to state § 1983 claim against another attorney; upon his assignment to Attorney Discipline Board (ADB) panel to hear complaints against plaintiff lawyer, defendant attorney immediately disqualified himself because of his firm's involvement with litigation concerning plaintiff, and defendant played no role in this litigation. Ortman v. Thomas, E.D.Mich.1995, 894 F.Supp. 1104, affirmed 99 F.3d 807. Civil Rights 1072

Neither the civil rights nor the constitutional question jurisdiction of a federal court may be construed as authorizing the court to pass upon a procedure employed by state courts to discipline attorneys who practice before them or to interfere with their judgments in such matters. Mildner v. Gulotta, E.D.N.Y.1975, 405 F.Supp. 182, affirmed 96 S.Ct. 1489, 425 U.S. 901, 47 L.Ed.2d 751. Federal Courts 172; Federal Courts 221

Even if city attorney committed legal malpractice under state law in representing both fire department recruit and members of police and fire merit commission in state law civil suit brought against them for intentional tort, and even if attorney was a state actor, such conduct did not rise to the level of creating a violation of recruit's due process rights so as to render attorney liable under civil rights statute. Hutcherson v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1990, 908 F.2d 243. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Municipal Corporations 170

Claim that defendant, as counsel for plaintiff in state murder prosecution, was liable for malpractice and negligence in permitting plaintiff to be tried without valid grand jury indictment having been returned against him amounted to no more than a tort claim for malpractice and as such was not cognizable under this section. Smith v. Clapp, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1970, 436 F.2d 590. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Complaint alleging that defendant attorney inadequately represented plaintiff's interests in certain cases was, in effect, action for legal malpractice, and was not cognizable under this section since there was total absence of state action required by that provision. Sommer v. Rankin, E.D.N.Y.1978, 449 F.Supp. 66. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint in action which was essentially a legal malpractice action stated claim for deprivation of rights under this section. Strain v. Citizens Bank & Trust Co., E.D.La.1975, 68 F.R.D. 697. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1507. ---- Miscellaneous claims, law practice, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Mere abstract need or desire to represent state criminal defendant did not rise to level of a constitutionally protected property right invoking due process protection in connection with refusal to permit out-of-state counsel to undertake the desired representation. Bundy v. Rudd, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 581 F.2d 1126, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1992, 441 U.S. 905, 60 L.Ed.2d 373. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Attorney did not have federally protected right not to be opposed by pleadings ghost written by undisclosed attorney, when suing party allegedly appearing pro se, precluding suit against undisclosed attorney under § 1983. Shalaby v. Jacobowitz, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 1907664, Unreported, affirmed 138 Fed.Appx. 10, 2005 WL 1220523. Civil Rights 1056

1508. Employment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

County employee did not have § 1983 cause of action against his employer, supervisor, or others in his department, based on claim that his position was abolished as a result of his running for public office, in violation of his First and Fourteenth Amendment rights, where employee's position with county was replaced at least a month before employee began campaign, and employee did not contend that he told anyone before that time that he was going to run for office. Nisenbaum v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 333 F.3d 804. Constitutional Law 82(11); Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Counties 67

Allegations of child care providers' former employees that "indicated" findings made during Illinois Department of Children and Family Services' (DFCS) child neglect investigations effectively precluded them from obtaining employment in child-care services because state laws strongly discouraged or effectively prohibited hiring of individual recorded in central register sufficiently alleged violation of liberty interest to pursue occupation in field of their choice, as required to support their civil rights claims against DFCS employees. Doyle v. Camelot Care Centers, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 305 F.3d 603. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Employee of private nonprofit corporation providing treatment and support to alcohol and drug abusers stated a claim under § 1983 that he was deprived of his property interest in continued employment when state and federal agents intentionally coerced corporation to fire him, by conditioning further funding of corporation on requirement that he be fired. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Denial of employment by private hospitals, even if such denial inhibited free speech, as result of alleged conspiracy with head nurse of municipal hospital following plaintiff-nurse's criticisms of hospital practices did not state cause of action for deprivation of civil rights, or constitute denial of equal protection, where there was alleged no racial or class-based discrimination. Place v. Shepherd, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1971, 446 F.2d 1239. Conspiracy 1.1; Constitutional Law 238(2)

Equal protection clause was not appropriate vehicle for employment retaliation claim, by retired judge, that he was denied appointment as judicial hearing officer in retaliation for his conduct while on bench; suit should have been brought under First Amendment or Title VII. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1502

Municipal employee established prima facie case that defendant municipality's denial of proposed transfer of employee to position in Commonwealth department was political discrimination in violation of First Amendment; employee and defendant mayor were political rivals in sensationalistic mayoral campaign, mayor made public statements that employee, his political opponent, was a rat, a thief, and a crook, and mayor's secretary allegedly told employee that his transfer request was unimportant to the mayor. Rivera Torres v. Ortiz Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 306 F.Supp.2d 76, appeal denied 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Workforce Investment Act (WIA) provisions prohibiting discrimination based on political affiliation or belief and requiring adoption of implementing regulations did not expressly bar § 1983 action for political discrimination brought by former employee of municipal consortium operating under the WIA. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1126

Workforce Investment Act (WIA) regulations requiring that recipients of financial assistance under WIA establish local grievance procedures and providing other safeguards did not expressly foreclose § 1983 claims by employees against municipal consortium alleging political discrimination. Delgado-Greo v. Trujillo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 189, appeal dismissed as improvidently granted 395 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1320

In action under § 1983, existence of legitimate, constitutionally protectable claim of entitlement to property interest in continued employment is to be determined in accordance with state law. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Federal Courts 411

Even if applicant for position as director of private real estate school had entitlement to whatever protection substantive due process afforded, applicant did not establish that Pennsylvania Real Estate Commission acted in arbitrary and capricious manner in denying application; after reading letters of recommendation, Commission could rationally have concluded that applicant did not have adequate experience in area of educational supervision and administration to properly run real estate school such that students' investments and public trust would be well served, and Commission could rationally have concluded that applicant's term as school board member did not provide him with sufficient experience in educational supervision and administration to run real estate school. Black v. Barnes, M.D.Pa.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1000. Colleges And Universities 7

N.J.S.A. Const. Art. 1, par. 1 providing, inter alia, that all persons have certain natural and unalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and property, does not guarantee a person's expectation in holding a particular job, and therefore store customer, who was detained by store personnel when suspected of shoplifting, was not deprived of any constitutional right to property when actions of store owner subsequent to incident led to loss of his job, and thus customer could not maintain action under this section against store owner on that basis. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former police officers' speech to the media on alleged corruption in the police department, including allegations that police chief "fixed" parking tickets, that chief helped friends receive lower fines for moving violations, and that chief received an undeserved bonus, concerned matters of public concern, for purposes of officers' §§ 1983 claim alleging retaliation in violation of the First Amendment. Graham v. City of Mentor, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 27, 2004 WL 2711031, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 340, 163 L.Ed.2d 51. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

Allegations by former assistant high school principal, who was terminated after his required state certification lapsed, that school board and school district destroyed his freedom to take advantage of other employment opportunities failed to state due process claim under § 1983 for harm to reputation; loss of future employment opportunities was insufficient to establish protected liberty interest. Moiles v. Marple Newtown School Dist., E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1964393, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Schools 147.28

County employee's right not to be retaliated against for filing charge of discrimination was created by employment discrimination statutes, not by Constitution, and thus her claim that county retaliated against her could not be brought under § 1983. Blunt v. McKinstry, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2002, 54 Fed.Appx. 227, 2002 WL 31856363, Unreported. Civil Rights 1249(1)

1509. ---- Migrant workers, employment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

This section could be utilized by migrant workers to seek redress for denial of rights of an essentially personal nature, touching such things as living and eating conditions and work at starvation levels and in degrading poverty, as against contention that this section was not available since type of rights which plaintiffs alleged they were denied or deprived of were not those protected under this section. Gomez v. Florida State Employment Service, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 417 F.2d 569. Civil Rights 1120

1510. ---- Safety of work environment, employment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

California governor did not violate federal law by notifying Secretary of Department of Labor of California's withdrawal of state Occupational, Safety and Health plan, as needed to recover award of attorney fees incurred in civil rights action under § 1988, since federal law regulated duties and responsibilities of federal officials only, and governor did not act in concert with federal officials to deprive California workers of federal rights to notice and hearing for withdrawal of California plan. Cabrera v. Martin, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 973 F.2d 735. Civil Rights 1479

1511. ---- Unemployment benefits, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Unemployment compensation claimant did not establish § 1983 claim that Kansas Employment Security Board of Review deprived him of due process by denying him unemployment benefits; claimant's claims made their way through agency procedure and through every level of the state court system and the process that claimant received was all that he was due. Blackford v. Kansas Employment Sec. Bd. of Review, D.Kan.1996, 938 F.Supp. 739, affirmed 113 F.3d 1245. Civil Rights 1321

State's use of United States Department of Labor figures in determining areas of high persistent unemployment in connection with administering state policy of not providing unemployment benefits to claimants who moved to such area was proper. Galvan v. Catherwood, S.D.N.Y.1971, 324 F.Supp. 1016, affirmed 490 F.2d 1255, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2652, 417 U.S. 936, 41 L.Ed.2d 240.

1512. ---- Workers' compensation, employment, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Workers' compensation claimant failed to state claim against Connecticut Workers' Compensation Commission and Commissioner under § 1983 based on alleged violation of equal protection rights; claimant failed to allege membership in constitutionally protected suspect or quasi-suspect group and actions taken by Commission and Commissioner were taken in accordance with Connecticut workers' compensation system and statutes regulating payment of benefits, a scheme rationally related to Connecticut's legitimate interest in regulating costs of workers' compensation. Gyadu v. Workers' Compensation Com'n, D.Conn.1996, 930 F.Supp. 738, affirmed 129 F.3d 113, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 49, 525 U.S. 814, 142 L.Ed.2d 38. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Claimants' complaint, alleging that recent amendments to state's Workers' Compensation Act denied them due process of law in that amendments had prevented them from obtaining hearing on claims stated cause of action under section 1983, though denial of hearing was only "temporary" until such time as special magistrates could be appointed and trained to hear claims. Michigan Injured Workers v. Blanchard, W.D.Mich.1986, 647 F.Supp. 571. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1513. Firefighters, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Revocation of membership in volunteer fire department, whether such membership was right or privilege, was kind of injury that could support action under 1871 civil rights statute. Adams v. Bain, C.A.4 (Va.) 1982, 697 F.2d 1213 . Civil Rights 1032

1514. Military service, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

No remedy for civil rights claims against state officials under § 1983 is available for injuries that arise out of or in the course of activity incident to military service, and the same is true under kindred statutes, including the federal whistleblower statute; such claims are not justiciable. Wright v. Park, C.A.1 (Me.) 1993, 5 F.3d 586. Civil Rights 1032

1515. ---- National guard, military service, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Injury to Alabama National Guard officer when he was not retained pursuant to annual review by selective retention board (SRB) was incident to service in the Alabama Guard, and thus was nonjusticiable, precluding injunctive and declaratory relief on theory officer was subjected to racial discrimination and denied equal protection and due process. Speigner v. Alexander, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2001, 248 F.3d 1292, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 647, 534 U.S. 1056, 151 L.Ed.2d 565. Civil Rights 1455

National guard member did not have a property or liberty interest protected by the due process clause in continued military service in the national guard, nor did he have constitutionally protected right to reenlist, and in view of Congress' mandate that a technician be discharged if his military enlistment expired, national guard member, barred from reenlisting, failed to state § 1983 claim regarding action barring his reenlistment and his termination as civilian technician. Holdiness v. Stroud, C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 808 F.2d 417. Constitutional Law 277(2)

National guard member's action alleging that his nonretention was the result of discrimination was actionable under this section even though nonretention was accomplished under guidance of federal regulation where one of the named defendants was the state governor as commander-in-chief of the National Guard, other defendants were part of the state militia, state legislature had set up extensive statutory scheme to organize and regulate its National Guard and the federal regulation appeared to be limited in effect to presenting statement of policy to guide state national guard commanders and did not divest state officers of any authority under state law they might hold. Gant v. Binder, D.C.Neb.1984, 596 F.Supp. 757, affirmed 766 F.2d 358. Civil Rights 1327

Civil rights action by air national guard officer challenging the withdrawal of his federal recognition as guard member and officer was appropriate for judicial review, where substantial claims of infringement of due process and free speech rights were raised, potential injury to officer was substantial if review was refused in that it would result in loss of both his military and civil position of guard technician, interference with military functions would be slight and issues raised did not involve specialized military expertise or discretion but required only interpretation of statutes and regulations and application of basic constitutional principles. Bollen v. National Guard Bureau, W.D.Pa.1978, 449 F.Supp. 343. Civil Rights 1032

1516. Security guards, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Corporate security agency, alleging that the Private Detective Act of Puerto Rico deprived it of liberty and property without due process on ground that prohibitions therein apply to it but not to guards or detectives employed other than by security agents was asserting a right encompassed by this section. Wackenhut Corp. v. Union De Tronquistas De Puerto Rico, Local 901, D.C.Puerto Rico 1971, 336 F.Supp. 1058. Civil Rights 1028

1517. Cable television, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Jury could conclude that cable television company's decision to shut down its operations for a few days in reaction to notice from city building inspector giving it and its customers 15 days to cease use of the cable television system was a reasonable reaction and that the damages resulting from the shutdown were thus a result of the violation of its civil rights by the city in sending the violation notices. Video Intern. Production, Inc. v. Warner-Amex Cable Communications, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 858 F.2d 1075, rehearing denied 866 F.2d 1417, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1955, 490 U.S. 1047, 104 L.Ed.2d 424, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 3189, 491 U.S. 906, 105 L.Ed.2d 697. Civil Rights 1073; Civil Rights 1462

Independent television programmer that brought action against cable television company, city and state, stemming from company's purported refusal to cablecast programs without revised access user contract, failed to establish that company's actions violated federal Cable Act, and thus programmer could not maintain § 1983 claim against city and state, since programmer was not deprived of any right, privilege, or immunity secured by constitution or laws of United States. Goldberg v. Cablevision Systems Corp., E.D.N.Y.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 595. Civil Rights 1041; Telecommunications 1246

1518. Collective bargaining, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purposes of asserting actionable claim under § 1983, right to bargain collectively belongs not only to union but also to individual employee. Livadas v. Aubry, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 987 F.2d 552, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari granted 114 S.Ct. 907, 510 U.S. 1083, 127 L.Ed.2d 97, motion granted 114 S.Ct. 1395, 511 U.S. 1016, 128 L.Ed.2d 69, motion granted 114 S.Ct. 1535, 511 U.S. 1028, 128 L.Ed.2d 188, reversed 114 S.Ct. 2068, 512 U.S. 107, 129 L.Ed.2d 93, on remand 30 F.3d 1252. Civil Rights 1331(5)

1519. Competition with private businesses, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Absent discriminatory intent, there was no violation of this section resulting from city's competing with rubbish collection business by entering business of rubbish collection. Heille v. City of St. Paul, Minn., D.C.Minn.1981, 512 F.Supp. 810, affirmed 671 F.2d 1134. Civil Rights 1052

1520. Contracts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Contractor did not allege viable § 1983 claim premised on deprivation of property without due process by alleging that state university failed to give it contractually required notice of cancellation of contract prior to expiration of contract term; contractor's claim was premised on simple breach of contract, and such breach did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation. Dover Elevator Co. v. Arkansas State University, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 64 F.3d 442. Civil Rights 1041

Fact that funds used by private, nonprofit corporation to conduct mosquito spraying program were derived from public participation of funds and assessments for areas actually sprayed did not convert its status to that of "public corporation;" thus, dusting pilot failed to establish right under State Preference Act [W.S.1977, § 16-6-102] to award of contract from corporation on ground that he was lowest bidder, and thus did not have property right to support his action under § 1983. Wright v. No Skiter Inc., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1985, 774 F.2d 422. Civil Rights 1041

A simple breach of contract claim does not give rise to a claim under §§ 1983. Gannett Fleming West, Inc. v. Village of Angel Fire, D.N.M.2004, 375 F.Supp.2d 1104. Civil Rights 1041

Legal aid provider's agreement with city giving city right to reduce provider's caseload and to transfer that caseload to other entities was legitimate waiver of any rights pursuant to National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) that provider might have asserted in challenge to city's issuance of requests for proposals (RFPs) for contracts to provide legal representation for indigent criminal defendants. Legal Aid Society v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2000, 114 F.Supp.2d 204, reconsideration denied 2001 WL 11063. Labor And Employment 1286

Breach of contract claim does not give rise to § 1983 constitutional claim. Boyce v. Augusta-Richmond County, S.D.Ga.2000, 111 F.Supp.2d 1363. Civil Rights 1041

Not all injuries resulting from official misconduct give rise to constitutional violation which is cognizable in action under § 1983, and ordinary breach of contract by state officers, for example, does not necessarily establish constitutional violation. McCormack Sand Co. v. Town of North Hempstead Solid Waste Management Authority, E.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 589. Civil Rights 1041

State may not through one of its creatures, punish or discriminate against corporation for its willingness, past or present, to make contracts with blacks; and if it does so, then person so punished or discriminated against has § 1983 right of action. Pisello v. Town of Brookhaven, E.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1041

Ordinary breach of contract is not actionable under § 1983. Blackwell v. Mayor and Com'rs of Delmar, D.Md.1993, 841 F.Supp. 151. Civil Rights 1041

Independent contractor could not state actionable claim that First Amendment rights were violated by alleged retaliatory termination of his trash hauling contract with county, where contract was neither necessary condition for contractor to do business nor guarantee that contractor would receive trash hauling business from cities within county. Umbehr v. McClure, D.Kan.1993, 840 F.Supp. 837, reversed 44 F.3d 876, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2616, 515 U.S. 1161, 132 L.Ed.2d 859, certiorari granted 115 S.Ct. 2639, 515 U.S. 1172, 132 L.Ed.2d 878, motion granted 116 S.Ct. 416, 516 U.S. 962, 133 L.Ed.2d 334, affirmed and remanded 116 S.Ct. 2342, 518 U.S. 668, 135 L.Ed.2d 843, dissenting opinion 116 S.Ct. 2361, 518 U.S. 668, 135 L.Ed.2d 843. Parratt-Hudson doctrine did not apply to Illinois Department of Public Aid's (IDPA) cancellation of contract under which health maintenance organization (HMO) provided services to Illinois Medicaid recipients where Illinois law vested in Department authority to effect deprivation complained of and concomitant duty to initiate procedural safeguards to guard against risk of deprivation. MEDCARE HMO v. Bradley, N.D.Ill.1992, 788 F.Supp. 1460. Civil Rights 1321

Breach of contract claim was not actionable in federal civil rights action, even if independent public contractor's sole stockholder claimed that he was deprived of his civil rights when contract had been terminated. Rivera Diaz v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., D.Puerto Rico 1989, 724 F.Supp. 1069. Civil Rights 1041

1521. ---- Availability of state remedy, contracts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State court action for breach of contract provided general contractor with all of the process that was due under federal constitutional principles; contractor was not entitled to predeprivation hearing before withholding of payments on construction contract and thus did not have § 1983 claim for deprivation of rights without due process of law. North Star Contracting Corp. v. Long Island Rail Road Co., E.D.N.Y.1989, 723 F.Supp. 902. Civil Rights 1321; Constitutional Law 312(4)

1522. ---- Affirmative action programs, contracts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Contractor which had previously been certified as a "concrete contractor" under a city's minority business enterprise program was afforded due process when the city proposed to limit certification so as to exclude the contractor's operation as a "concrete supplier"; a certification committee reviewed the contractor's evidence and, following denial of certification as a "concrete supplier," the contractor was given an opportunity to appeal and received an explanation of reasons for the denial. Baja Contractors, Inc. v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 830 F.2d 667, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1301, 485 U.S. 993, 99 L.Ed.2d 511. Constitutional Law 276(2)

Unsuccessful bidder for city contract, joint venture, contractors' association, and another contractor failed to establish causal connection between rejection of bids and affirmative action program of Pennsylvania Convention Center Authority and, therefore, were not entitled to monetary damages; rejection of bids resulted from legitimate construction decisions, not purchaser's alleged lack of compliance with affirmative action requirements. General Bldg. Contractors Ass'n, Inc. v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1991, 762 F.Supp. 1195. Civil Rights 1471

1523. ---- Interference with contract rights, contracts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Conclusory allegation by construction contractor that contractor was effectively debarred from government contracting for period of seven years did not establish pattern or practice of exclusion by the Puerto Rico Public Housing Authority (PRPHA), as would state §§ 1983 claim against PRPHA officials for procedural due process deprivation of protected property interest, where allegation was not supported by any showing that contractor bid on any PRPHA contracts, except one for which the contractor's bid award was annulled, during the alleged seven-year period of debarment. Redondo-Borges v. U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 421 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Maryland Apprenticeship and Training Council's refusal to register contractor's apprenticeship program did not constitute interference in labor-management dispute actionable under § 1983. Associated Builders and Contractors, Inc. Baltimore Metropolitan Chapter v. O'Connor, D.Md.1999, 75 F.Supp.2d 440. Civil Rights 1072

Plaintiffs alleging that Department of Hawaiian Home Lands and named persons interfered with oral contract between plaintiffs and widow of plaintiffs' grandfather under which plaintiffs would take over homestead following grandfather's death failed to state violation of federal rights essential to suit under § 1983. Naliielua v. State of

Hawaii, D.Hawai'i 1991, 795 F.Supp. 1015, affirmed 963 F.2d 379. Civil Rights 1071

Tow truck operator who was prevented by police from towing vehicle did not have § 1983 action based upon deprivation of property rights; if officers had acted within scope of their employment, there was no actionable deprivation of property as there had been no allegation of unreasonable conduct, and if officers were not acting within scope of their employment operator had adequate postdeprivation remedy in form of state action for tortious interference with contract. Hoagy Wrecker Service, Inc. v. City of Fort Wayne, N.D.Ind.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1350. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1319

1524. ---- Subcontractors, contracts, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Subcontractors who were denied access to future contracts with government telephone company could not maintain § 1983 action alleging violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process right; subcontractors did not have legitimate claim or entitlement to continue receiving contract awards. Mojica v. Galarza, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 761 F.Supp. 217. Civil Rights 1041

1525. Franchises, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even though towing company's complaint alleging defamation by state police officers at least minimally touched on matter of public concern and even assuming that complaint was substantial motivating factor in decision by state police to terminate company's towing assignments, and that company's status was elevated to level of state employee or franchisee, there was no violation of First Amendment rights in light of evidence that towing company's assignments would have been terminated even absent such complaint. White Plains Towing Corp. v. Patterson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 991 F.2d 1049, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 185, 510 U.S. 865, 126 L.Ed.2d 144. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

1526. Antitrust, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Activity protected by Noerr-Pennington could not form basis of § 1983 liability. Boulware v. State of Nev., Dept. of Human Resources, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1992, 960 F.2d 793. Civil Rights 1374

1527. Banks and banking, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegations in depositors' complaint, that the Director of the Nebraska Department of Banking and Finance had fraudulently induced them to deposit money in insolvent bank by requiring bank to advertise that deposits were insured up to $30,000, were not sufficient to state procedural due process claim; depositors did not allege any loss resulting from state system itself, which state could reasonably anticipate and guard against. Weimer v. Amen, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1989, 870 F.2d 1400. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Operating subsidiary of national bank did not have right to bring § 1983 suit against Connecticut Banking Commissioner, claiming that its right to conduct mortgage lending activities was harmed; while Congress showed intent to confer right in passing statute restricting visitation of national banks to national bank inspectors, there was no showing of any similar Congressional intent to establish actionable right underlying regulation placing subsidiaries under federal regulatory control. Wachovia Bank, N.A. v. Burke, D.Conn.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 275, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 414 F.3d 305, petition for certiorari filed 2005 WL 2463529, miscellaneous rulings 126 S.Ct. 791, 163 L.Ed.2d 626. Action 3

Complaint alleging that federally chartered thrift institution conspired with Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to wrongfully obtain receivership of state-chartered thrift institution and sell assets of that institution to the federal association did not bring the latter under jurisdiction of this subchapter, because this subchapter did not apply to the purely private conduct of the federally chartered association. First Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Hawaii, D.C.Hawai'i 1982, 547 F.Supp. 988. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Claims in which national bank and its state-chartered operating subsidiary asserted preemption interests against Commissioner of California Department of Corporations conflated operating subsidiary's federal interests with the state obligations to which operating subsidiary subjected itself as California licensee in a manner that caused federal interests of bank and operating subsidiary to lack judicially manageable standard, and therefore claims were not cognizable under § 1983 and did not support award of attorney fees under § 1988. National City of Indiana v. Boutris, E.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21536818, Unreported. Civil Rights 1072; Civil Rights 1479

1528. Bonds, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In view of fact that issuance of industrial revenue bonds was discretionary, and that approval of other bond applications did not in itself create a legitimate expectation of entitlement to issuance of bonds on part of developer, community development corporation's refusal to issue bonds did not deprive developer of a property right that was actionable under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983]. Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Community Imp. Corp., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 769 F.2d 324, opinion supplemented on denial of rehearing 774 F.2d 162. Civil Rights 1073

1529. Alcoholic beverages, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Property owner could not recover under § 1983 for city's alleged violation of due process rights in selling alcoholic beverages on city property which adjoined his land while at the same time withdrawing police protection from land; property owner did not allege deprivation of any fundamental right and offered no evidence to refute defendant's contention that all of the acts complained of satisfied rational basis test. Russell v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.Kan.1988, 690 F.Supp. 947. Civil Rights 1088(1)

1530. Dining facilities, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Patrons who alleged that they were peaceable, quiet, clean and neatly dressed when they attempted to secure service at proprietor's tavern-restaurant and that proprietor obtained assistance of two police officers in evicting patrons after patrons refused to leave when requested to do so by proprietor stated cause of action under this section. Nanez v. Ritger, E.D.Wis.1969, 304 F.Supp. 354. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1531. Insurance, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Neither insurer nor its parent companies became state actors, as required to support policyholder's § 1983 claim, by taking advantage of provisions in state law that authorized conversion from mutual to stock form or by seeking and obtaining permission from Commissioner of Insurance. Gayman v. Principal Financial Services, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 311 F.3d 851, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2610, 539 U.S. 943, 156 L.Ed.2d 629. Civil Rights 1326(7); Civil Rights 1326(9)

Not every allegedly unjustifiable refusal by state superintendent of insurance to conduct a hearing with respect to true claim of insurance rate discrimination would constitute sufficient basis for an action under this section. Shaw v. Harnett, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 587 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1042

Section of Civil Rights Act of 1866 that is aimed at remedying racial discrimination relating to property did not apply to discrimination in issuing insurance contracts, as section did not apply to contract rights. Hunter v. American General Life and Acc. Ins. Co., D.S.C.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 442, subsequent determination 384 F.Supp.2d 888. Insurance 1519

Despite fact that African-Americans were charged higher premiums by insurer than were Caucasians for the same life insurance coverage, insurer was not liable for race discrimination under Sections 1981 and 1982 since record established that insurer's differential in the pricing of premiums for life insurance between African-American and Caucasians was based on risk, not race. Guidry v. Pellerin Life Ins. Co., W.D.La.2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 592. Civil Rights 1042; Civil Rights 1071

Since any dissatisfied policy holder can institute a breach of contract suit in a state court of the State of Maryland to have his respective assertions of violation of contract rights determined, beneficiary under life policy who sought to recover dividends for year in which insured died could not show that alleged failure of State Insurance Commissioner to enforce rules relating to dividends against the insurer deprived the beneficiary of property without due process and thus beneficiary did not have standing to bring action against State Insurance Commissioner based on Commissioner's alleged failure to perform statutory duty. Paturzo v. Home Life Ins. Co., D.C.Md.1974, 382 F.Supp. 357. Federal Courts 223

1532. Lotteries, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Plaintiff's action challenging payment terms of New York State Lottery failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted under this section which prohibits deprivation of civil rights under color of state law where plaintiff did not set forth any authority for proposition that she had a right to a lump-sum payment of the lottery prize, and all lottery tickets at time in question specifically stated that any player who submitted his ticket for validation agreed to abide by lottery rules and regulations. Zapata v. Quinn, S.D.N.Y.1982, 564 F.Supp. 23, affirmed 707 F.2d 691. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1533. Transportation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

While county may have been under a legal duty to maintain existing roads and to ensure the safety of those roads even where they cross fords, the county had no general duty to undertake construction of a bridge over creek, which under normal circumstances was safe to ford; accordingly, the county commissioner's administrative decision not to construct such bridge was not compensable under this section in action brought against county by parents of two children who drowned while attempting to cross rain-swollen ford at creek with their mother. Dollar v. Haralson County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1983, 704 F.2d 1540, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 399, 464 U.S. 963, 78 L.Ed.2d 341. Bridges 20(1); Civil Rights 1039

Provision of Interstate Commerce Commission Termination Act (ICCTA) prohibiting state and local regulation of any motor carrier's "price, route, or service" created no personal rights enforceable under § 1983, precluding tow truck operators' action seeking damages based on county's policy of charging operators for cost of identifying and notifying owners of impounded vehicles. Henry's Wrecker Service Co. of Fairfax County, Inc. v. Prince George's County, D.Md.2002, 214 F.Supp.2d 541. Civil Rights 1048; Civil Rights 1088(1)

Interstate transporter of infectious medical waste showed violation of civil rights by state Public Service Commission when transporter was threatened with criminal prosecution if it did not obtain certificate of convenience and necessity from the West Virginia Public Service Commission. Medigen of Kentucky, Inc. v. Public Service Com'n of West Virginia, S.D.W.Va.1992, 787 F.Supp. 602. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Motor carriers and trucking industry trade associations could not maintain civil rights action against Commissioner of Tennessee Department of Transportation based on allegation that Commission intended under color of state law to deprive them of right to operate trucks on interstate route passing through Nashville, where, despite statute purporting to prohibit operation of trucks on route, no trucks otherwise complying with law had been banned from interstate route since it was opened to traffic. Evans v. Burnley, M.D.Tenn.1988, 695 F.Supp. 365.

1534. Motor vehicles, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Vehicle owners stated claim under § 1983 against city, whether such claim was grounded in procedural due process or in Fourth Amendment, by alleging that city issued baseless parking tickets in order to increase revenues; however, under New York law, plaintiffs would also be required to plead that the underlying proceedings were terminated in their favor. C.A.U.T.I.O.N., Ltd. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1995, 898 F.Supp. 1065. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Motorists arrested for exceeding posted speed limit stated § 1983 claim against town and police officer for violation of due process rights by alleging that mayor and police officer were enforcing village ordinance which changed posted speed limit without first securing permission of Ohio Director of Transportation, as required by Ohio law, and that this was done for purpose of increasing village's revenues. Rose v. Village of Peninsula, N.D.Ohio 1993, 839 F.Supp. 517. Civil Rights 1395(6)

1535. ---- Accidents, motor vehicles, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Motor vehicle accidents caused by public officials or employees do not rise to threshold of constitutional violation as required to support civil rights action, absent showing that official knew accident was imminent but consciously and culpably refused to prevent it; it is insufficient to show that public official acted in face of recognizable but generic risk to public at large. Hill v. Shobe, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 93 F.3d 418. Automobiles 196; Civil Rights 1395(5)

City street sweeper's collision with child on bicycle did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation sufficient to support claim under § 1983. Freeman v. Elgin Sweeper Co., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 885 F.2d 825, rehearing denied 892 F.2d 89, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1929, 495 U.S. 907, 109 L.Ed.2d 293. Civil Rights 1035

Alleged negligent, grossly negligent, and reckless conduct of state officials in hiring and supervising state contractor, and in failing to utilize adequate lighting, warning, and traffic control devices at accident site, did not violate any right of estate and survivors of persons killed at site to postdeprivation procedural due process, where decedents' survivors and estate had available procedure against state officials in state courts under Maryland Tort Claims Act. Smith v. Bernier, D.Md.1988, 701 F.Supp. 1171.

1536. ---- Towing, motor vehicles, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Towing company owner was entitled to remedy under § 1983 for city's violation of federal statute barring local regulation of towing industry; city's enforcement of ordinance requiring that all tow drivers in city obtain special towing license violated owner's federal right under statute not to be so regulated, and statute did not have comprehensive enforcement mechanism precluding § 1983 relief due to unlawful local regulation of towing industry. Petrey v. City of Toledo, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 246 F.3d 548. Civil Rights 1072

Unregistered automobile's owner was not entitled to recover any damages he might have suffered as result of tow in civil rights action under § 1983, where towing of the automobile was proper, without pretowing notice or hearing, pursuant to state statute authorizing towing of vehicle found upon public lands that has been unregistered for more than one year. Scofield v. City of Hillsborough, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 862 F.2d 759. Civil Rights 1054; Civil Rights 1071

Plaintiff could maintain suit under this section for alleged deprivation of property rights in connection with towing and impoundment of his stolen car, even though personal liberties were not involved. Bunkley v. Watkins, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 567 F.2d 304. Civil Rights 1071

Even if city was justified in ordering that arrestee's car be towed away to storage lot, failing to give arrestee any opportunity before or after towing to dispute towing or cost of recovering car and failing to tell arrestee where car was being taken or how he could regain possession of it rendered city liable under § 1983 for permanent deprivation of property without due process of law; towing company later foreclosed lien and obtained title to arrestee's car. Katona v. City of Cheyenne, D.Wyo.1988, 686 F.Supp. 287. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Car owner alleging deprivation of his constitutional rights based on towing of vehicles parked on his property under invalid municipal "nuisance vehicle" ordinance established "actual injury" sufficient to support § 1983 claim against city and others, since question of whether required predeprivation hearing would have prevented the towing was merely speculative and since present location of owner's vehicles or whether they still existed subsequent to towing was not known. Kness v. City of Kenosha, Wis., E.D.Wis.1987, 669 F.Supp. 1484. Civil Rights 1333(3)

1537. ---- Taxis and limousines, motor vehicles, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City of Chicago did not violate civil rights of city-licensed airport limousine services by excluding them from delivery dispatch booths used by suburban-licensed services at O'Hare International Airport; city rationally could have ordered suburban services to operate out of booths following 1973 study indicating that those services were largely responsible for traffic congestion and illegal solicitation at airport, and even if it was city policy after 1982 to let city-licensed services sue to have booths at airport, that policy did not violate equal protection. Pontarelli Limousine, Inc. v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1990, 735 F.Supp. 782, affirmed 929 F.2d 339, rehearing denied. Aviation 229; Civil Rights 1048; Constitutional Law 234.6

1538. Negligence, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Unavailability of negligence as a basis for claims under §§ 1983 precluded suit by claimant that he was negligently arrested for extorting money from police. Dawkins v. Williams, N.D.N.Y.2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 161. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Allegation of former public utility executive who was subject of state criminal prosecution that district attorney and district attorney's office acted negligently during investigation and prosecution of executive did not support executive's § 1983 claim against district attorney and district attorney's office, as mere negligence does not amount to deprivation of constitutional rights. Smith v. Gribetz, S.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 145. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Negligent action that results in injury is not a violation of the due process clause and hence is not actionable under federal civil rights statute. Marshall v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1997, 951 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1032; Constitutional Law 253(1)

Claim for gross negligence brought against state department of transportation by patron of highway rest area who was injured when she slipped on icy stairway was not cognizable under §§ 1983. Polaski v. Colorado Dept. of Transp., C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 198 Fed.Appx. 684, 2006 WL 2147526, Unreported. Civil Rights 1054

1539. Vessels, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State conservation officer, who checked plaintiff's boat because it did not have a current registration sticker, could not be held liable under this section where there was no showing that he acted in abusive and malicious manner in derogation of plaintiff's constitutional rights, especially as it was undisputed that plaintiff did not have a current registration sticker and was operating vessel without proper safety equipment. Prochaska v. Marcoux, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1980, 632 F.2d 848, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 2316, 451 U.S. 984, 68 L.Ed.2d 841. Civil Rights 1072 allegedly unsanitary conditions at the residence were, the error in granting immunity was harmless in light of a subsequent jury determination, at a trial of claims against the city, that the officers did not violate the residents' constitutional due process rights by ordering an immediate vacation of the premises. Sell v. City of Columbus, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 127 Fed.Appx. 754, 2005 WL 742745, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(4); Federal Courts 893

1540. Parking garages, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purposes of § 1983 action brought against city and its parking authority by tenant who operated underground parking garage, city's mayor and managing director knew or recklessly disregarded relevant facts that disclosed that tenant's underground parking garage was not in imminent danger of collapse when mayor summarily decided to close it; mayor closed garage without conducting any load tests to determine whether structure was unsafe, load tests performed by tenant and independent engineers immediately before and after closing revealed that garage could withstand several times the necessary capacity, garage was closed less than three weeks after tenant had complied with specific repairs previously ordered by city, and garage had considerably more value to city if city could relieve itself of tenant's lease. Parkway Garage, Inc. v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 5 F.3d 685, as amended, rehearing en banc denied, on remand 1994 WL 412430. Civil Rights 1071

Claim by tenants operating parking garage on city property that they were denied due process as guaranteed by U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14 because they were not properly served with notice of summary eviction proceeding failed to raise constitutional questions sufficient to invoke jurisdiction of federal district court under this section, where summary procedure was constitutional on its face. Brody v. Moan, S.D.N.Y.1982, 551 F.Supp. 443. Civil Rights 1071

1541. Publishing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Write-in candidate and political party did not have constitutional right to compel newspaper to publish material they deemed newsworthy and they were not entitled to damages if newspaper chose not to publish the material when requested; thus, write-in candidate and political party did not suffer deprivation of any federal right at hands of newspaper editor which would have entitled them to relief under civil rights statute. Christian Populist Party of Arkansas v. Secretary of State of State of Ark., E.D.Ark.1986, 650 F.Supp. 1205. Civil Rights 1029

Newspaper's alleged refusal to honor plaintiffs' request that certain information referred to by plaintiffs be published did not give rise to civil rights cause of action against newspaper, as newspaper had no duty to publish such information. Tosta v. Hooks, E.D.Pa.1983, 568 F.Supp. 616. Civil Rights 1032

1542. Racetracks, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

The Constitution does not create property interest, and hence, if customer had property interest in being admitted to racetrack, it must derive from a statute, legal rule or mutually explicit understanding that entitles him to attend races there. Rodic v. Thistledown Racing Club, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1980, 615 F.2d 736, 16 O.O.3d 386, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 535, 449 U.S. 996, 66 L.Ed.2d 294.

Where claim by assistant trainer of thoroughbred race horses that he was deprived by defendants of constitutionally protected rights was essentially based on allegation that plaintiff had not received a due process hearing concerning defendants' refusal to allow him access to certain race tracks, and where, under Pennsylvania law, plaintiff could not be permanently excluded from any race track without a hearing and hearing procedures were at all times and remained available to him, plaintiff's complained of exclusion was only temporary and did not constitute a deprivation of liberty or property cognizable under this section. Whetzler v. Krause, E.D.Pa.1976, 411 F.Supp. 523, affirmed 549 F.2d 797. Civil Rights 1047

1543. ---- Notice and hearing, racetracks, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where gist of complaint of racetrack patron who was expelled was not that his expulsion was wrongful but that it was done without a hearing, the complaint did not allege a denial of liberty on which to base a due process claim. Rodic v. Thistledown Racing Club, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1980, 615 F.2d 736, 16 O.O.3d 386, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 535, 449 U.S. 996, 66 L.Ed.2d 294. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1544. Utilities, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

City's conditioning landlords' receipt of water service on satisfaction of past due charges for services rendered to their tenants did not raise question of substantive due process violation for purposes of landlords' § 1983 action. Mansfield Apartment Owners Ass'n v. City of Mansfield, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 988 F.2d 1469. Constitutional Law 291.6; Waters And Water Courses 203(13)

Homeowners whose water was nearly turned off by city when they refused to allow city to inspect their home for illegal sewer connections failed to allege that they were deprived of constitutionally protected liberty or property interest, and in absence of such allegation, could not recover in § 1983 action by alleging deficiencies in city's compliance proceedings. Magnuson v. City of Hickory Hills, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 933 F.2d 562. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Drawing a boundary of utility district so as to exclude landowner's land did not violate his civil rights by denying him the right to vote in elections in the district. Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist. of Harris County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 836 F.2d 921. Civil Rights 1032

1545. ---- Notice and hearing, utilities, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint under this section alleging that power company, under county auspices, had removed electric fuse and meter from, and cut off electrical power to, plaintiff's residence without notice, resulting in destruction of his food, pets and appliances, in violation of due process clause, was sufficient to invoke federal jurisdiction. Keniston v. Roberts, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1983, 717 F.2d 1295. Federal Courts 221

Complaint alleging that gas utility and its managing agent acted to violate procedural due process rights of plaintiffs by terminating gas service without adequate notice and an opportunity for a prior evidentiary hearing was sufficient to state a cause of action under this section. Dawes v. Philadelphia Gas Commission, E.D.Pa.1976, 421 F.Supp. 806. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1546. Title to property, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

This section was inapplicable to action to remove cloud on titles alleged to be due to claims of city under its charter and under acts of state legislature. Devine v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1906, 26 S.Ct. 652, 202 U.S. 313, 50 L.Ed. 1046.

1547. Condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

To be basis for federal relief, claim of civil rights organization, whose property was being condemned for school that its federal civil rights would be denied in state court must be based on state Constitution, statute, municipal ordinance, rule of court or regulatory provisions binding on state court expressly denying such federal rights. Sunflower County Colored Baptist Ass'n v. Trustees of Indianola Municipal Separate School Dist., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1966, 369 F.2d 795. Civil Rights 1071

Complaint alleging that water management district endorsed adoption of allegedly illegal county ordinances which allegedly resulted in taking of plaintiff's land was insufficient to allege actionable conduct under color of state law for purposes of civil rights statute. Bensch v. Metropolitan Dade County, S.D.Fla.1994, 855 F.Supp. 351. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Claims of homeowners and residents that conduct of city, superintendent of public works, and city engineer and mayor in failing to adequately maintain lift station resulting in flooding of their property constituted partial taking of their property without adequate compensation stated a claim under this subchapter. Dutton v. City of Crest Hill, N.D.Ill.1982, 547 F.Supp. 38. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Where Puerto Rico officers had approved portions of resort project centered around thermal springs and where resolution merely provided for compensation for value of land and buildings contained within 25 cuerdas on which thermal springs were located but did not provide for any compensation for taking of vested rights of corporation in developing its total project or for diminution in value of remainder of corporation's land, action under resolution was unconstitutional taking of corporation's property which arbitrarily deprived corporation of its rights under this section. Hotel Coamo Springs, Inc. v. Hernandez Colon, D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 426 F.Supp. 664. Civil Rights 1071

1548. ---- Availability of state remedy, condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Ohio action in mandamus, without any mandated procedures governing inverse condemnation, is not reasonable, certain and adequate procedure for obtaining compensation, after property has been physically taken in violation of appropriations statutes, such that landowner would have to pursue mandamus action before bringing action for compensation under § 1983. Kruse v. Village of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 74 F.3d 694, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 71, 519 U.S. 818, 136 L.Ed.2d 31. Eminent Domain 277

In view of the fact that Missouri courts have long recognized the theory of inverse condemnation, and have allowed a cause of action for it, plaintiffs claim that provisions of ordinance regulating massage parlors amounted to taking could represent only a pendent state claim and did not state a cause of action under § 1983. JBK, Inc. v. City of Kansas City, Mo., W.D.Mo.1986, 641 F.Supp. 893. Civil Rights 1318

1549. ---- Purpose of condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Elimination of urban blight and economic revitalization of city were legitimate public purposes underlying adoption of urban renewal plan and, thus, condemnation of property within area did not violate property owners' civil rights. Oberndorf v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1990, 900 F.2d 1434, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 129, 498 U.S. 845, 112 L.Ed.2d 97. Eminent Domain 18.5

Economic revitalization of downtown was legitimate public purpose underlying urban renewal project and, thus, there was no unconstitutional "taking" of private property in violation of the due process or equal protection clauses of the United States Constitution in connection with project, in view of determination that city's actions in enacting urban renewal project were taken pursuant to clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy as embodied in Colorado's urban renewal law. Oberndorf v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.1988, 696 F.Supp. 552, affirmed 900 F.2d 1434, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 129, 498 U.S. 845, 112 L.Ed.2d 97. Eminent Domain 2.10(2)

Property owner and lessee who alleged that condemnation of their property for use in redevelopment project, ostensibly designed to eradicate blight in Times Square in New York City and to revitalize area culturally and commercially, was in fact unconstitutional private taking for economic benefit of private developer, in that plaintiffs' property was not blighted, failed to state claim for relief under section 1983, since overall project for area was rationally related to serving public purpose of eliminating blight, and plaintiffs failed to allege public fraud or to allege that project existed solely to benefit private developer, rather than merely that project was shaped in such a way as to make it more profitable for him. Rosenthal & Rosenthal Inc. v. New York State Urban Development Corp., S.D.N.Y.1985, 605 F.Supp. 612, affirmed 771 F.2d 44, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1204, 475 U.S. 1018, 89 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Allegation that governmental officials acted in bad faith and in arbitrary and capricious manner in effecting a taking of property for an ostensibly public use asserted no more than an abuse of discretion and did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation which could support section 1983 action. Pastan v. City of Melrose, D.C.Mass.1985, 601 F.Supp. 201. Civil Rights 1071

1550. ---- Inverse condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Property owners' inverse condemnation claim under § 1983 against city was action at law, which entitled property owner to trial by jury, considering nature of action and owner's request for compensatory or legal damages. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd. v. City of Monterey, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 95 F.3d 1422, rehearing granted 118 F.3d 660, rehearing en banc denied 127 F.3d 1149, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 1359, 523 U.S. 1045, 140 L.Ed.2d 509, affirmed 119 S.Ct. 1624, 526 U.S. 687, 143 L.Ed.2d 882. Jury 14(1)

Action for inverse condemnation is cognizable under this section. MacLeod v. Santa Clara County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1984, 749 F.2d 541, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2705, 472 U.S. 1009, 86 L.Ed.2d 721. Civil Rights 1071

That interest in property may have been taken without just compensation by Delaware would not enable property owner and its tenant to bring federal civil rights action against Delaware officials, based on Fourteenth Amendment's requirement of procedural due process; plaintiffs had no right to notice, hearing, or compensation prior to taking by inverse condemnation due to alleged restraint on alienation, as there was adequate mechanism for obtaining compensation. Abbiss v. Delaware Dept. of Transp., D.Del.1989, 712 F.Supp. 1159. Civil Rights 1071; Constitutional Law 281

1551. ---- Delay as taking of property, condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Owner of tract of land and holder of option to purchase that tract, whose subdivision applications state courts on appeal ultimately determined should have been granted, could not recover damages in action under this section on theory that delay which occurred in prosecuting their appeal from town planning board's denial of the subdivision applications rose to the level of a taking of property requiring just compensation. Alton Land Trust v. Town of Alton, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1984, 745 F.2d 730. Civil Rights 1073

Property owner's allegations, that expense of building improvements increased during city's unlawful delay in granting variance, and that he lost use of improvements for period of delay, were insufficient to establish constitutionally impermissible temporary taking for which damages could be recovered. Moore v. City of Costa Mesa, C.D.Cal.1987, 678 F.Supp. 1448. Eminent Domain 293(1)

1552. ---- Abstention, condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Doctrine of abstention was applicable under reasoning of Burford to law school's § 1983 action against city for alleged taking of private property without just compensation; land use planning was area of uniquely local concern and was subject of extensive regulatory scheme which included provisions for challenge to zoning decisions. Northern Virginia Law School, Inc. v. City of Alexandria, E.D.Va.1988, 680 F.Supp. 222. Federal Courts 48

1553. ---- Exhaustion of state remedies, condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Taking is not "without just compensation" in violation of Fifth Amendment, and thus is not actionable under §

1983, unless plaintiff has exhausted all state remedies that may provide just compensation. Frooks v. Town of Cortlandt, S.D.N.Y.1998, 997 F.Supp. 438, affirmed 182 F.3d 899. Civil Rights 1318; Eminent Domain 277

Failure of homeowner, who was temporarily forced to abandon his home by order of county officials, to seek compensation through state procedures precluded him from recovering damages from county officials by asserting taking claim under just compensation clause of Fifth Amendment. Miller v. Campbell County, Wyo., D.Wyo.1989, 722 F.Supp. 687, affirmed 945 F.2d 348, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1174, 502 U.S. 1096, 117 L.Ed.2d 419. Eminent Domain 277

Until plaintiff alleging unconstitutional taking pursues state law remedies, federal courts must assume that state courts will interpret state law in line with United States Supreme Court's "fundamental constitutional commands" concerning just compensation. Mitchell v. Mills County, Iowa, S.D.Iowa 1987, 673 F.Supp. 332, affirmed 847 F.2d 486.

Federal civil rights action based upon alleged conspiracy to deny equal protection and procedural and substantive process rights through taking of property in violation of public use clause was not ripe for decision absent final taking and, even if it had been final, absent determination in state court whether taking was for public or private use, through available condemnation procedures, where circuit court had not granted a fee simple title as provided in state's quick-taking statute. HMK Corp. v. Chesterfield County, E.D.Va.1985, 616 F.Supp. 667. Federal Courts 13.10

1554. ---- Consequential damages, condemnation, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

If town unlawfully took landowner's property without hearing and without just compensation and landowner suffered heart attack as consequence, landowner could recover from town damages arising from heart attack. McCulloch v. Glasgow, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 620 F.2d 47. Eminent Domain 302

1555. Demolition of buildings, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Affidavit of property owner's expert offered in opposition to city's motion for summary judgment, stating that city officials acted hastily in ordering demolition of owner's building, and without resorting to available means of determining true condition of building, was insufficient to establish that officials acted arbitrarily and in bad faith, as required to maintain substantive due process claim under § 1983. Harris v. City of Akron, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 20 F.3d 1396, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 512, 513 U.S. 1001, 130 L.Ed.2d 419. Federal Civil Procedure 2539

Allegations by building owners that city had demolished building pursuant to "fast-track" program for demolition of buildings posing hazard to community, prior to which owners received only notice that city would demolish building if it was not repaired, demolished, or securely boarded by owner within 30 days, and that owners had taken action to board up and then repair building within 30 days, were sufficient to state § 1983 claim based on deprivation of their property without provision of notice required by due process clause. McCullough v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 971 F.Supp. 1247. Civil Rights 1395(3)

City's demolition of property before owner's right to appeal demolition order expired did not violate substantive due process and could not be basis for § 1983 civil rights claim. Aubuchon v. Com. of Mass. by and through State Bldg. Code Appeals Bd., D.Mass.1996, 933 F.Supp. 90. Constitutional Law 320; Municipal Corporations 628

Owners of homes damaged or destroyed by fires that started in abandoned houses owned or controlled by city could not show that alleged unconstitutional policy of city of not maintaining, securing, or tearing down abandoned houses caused owners' losses, and thus, owners could not maintain § 1983 claim against city and officials; fires were set by private citizens who trespassed on municipal property, rather than city officials. Saldana v. City of Camden, D.N.J.1989, 727 F.Supp. 891. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Allegations that New York City acted negligently in demolishing unsafe buildings, destroying personal property stored in buildings, did not state claim under Fourteenth Amendment or section 1983; complaint did not allege that City knew that personal property was stored in buildings or that City acted intentionally or with reckless disregard of owners' rights. Friedman v. New York City Dept. of Housing and Development Admin., S.D.N.Y.1988, 688 F.Supp. 896, affirmed 876 F.2d 890, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2570, 495 U.S. 961, 109 L.Ed.2d 752. Civil Rights 1395(3)

1556. Nuisance, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Town marshal's execution of town ordinance declaring that maintenance of cattle within town limits was nuisance, in strict compliance with ordinance's abatement provision, by issuing citation notifying owner of steers, charged with violation of ordinance, that his steers would he impounded if not removed within 24 hours and impounding steers when owner refused to remove them, was not within ambit of this section. Martin v. King, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1969, 417 F.2d 458. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Padlocking of nightclub property on order of a court in a nuisance proceeding instituted under law of Tennessee does not deprive owner of property of his federal right to due process of law or any other right he has under the Federal Constitution. Wilson v. Winstead, E.D.Tenn.1978, 470 F.Supp. 263. Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

1557. Animal control, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Alleged failure of district attorney and humane society officer to provide horse owner with notice and opportunity for hearing prior to termination of ownership interest on basis of neglect violated procedural due process; termination of ownership rights five days after letter to bailee was predictable since statute requires owner to redeem seized animal within five days after notice or humane society may treat it as stray, and requiring opportunity for hearing at end of five-day redemption period was not impossible or excessive. Porter v. DiBlasio, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 93 F.3d 301. Animals 41; Constitutional Law 293

City animal control officer's warrantless entry into abandoned residence and seizure of dogs did not violate Fourth Amendment, needed for § 1983 civil rights claim by owner; Texas law permits animal control officer to enter property without warrant after receiving report of animal abuse and viewing animals from outside premises, and to impound mistreated and abandoned animals. Gall v. City of Vidor, Tex., E.D.Tex.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1062. Searches And Seizures 79

Town constable's destruction of owner's dogs did not violate owner's substantive due process rights on theory that constable's conduct shocked the conscience and amounted to invasion of owner's personal security because it lead to emotional distress manifested in fear that owner could be killed with impunity. Engsberg v. Town of Milford, W.D.Wis.1985, 601 F.Supp. 1438, affirmed 785 F.2d 312. Constitutional Law 293

Where dog owner knew her dog was at pound and knew she could, as she did, get him back following morning, there was no deprivation of property which rose to constitutional level cognizable under this section. Kostiuk v. Town of Riverhead, E.D.N.Y.1983, 570 F.Supp. 603. Civil Rights 1071

1558. Flood control, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even assuming legitimacy of county's purpose in requiring drainage system, application of design criteria by singling out developer to provide entire drainage system may not be rational under Equal Protection Clause.

Christopher Lake Development Co. v. St. Louis County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 35 F.3d 1269, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Constitutional Law 228.2; Zoning And Planning 382.2

Although only people who were offered opportunity to have bulkheads built to avoid or minimize damage to property adjacent to drainage canal due to soil and bank erosion were those property owners along canal who had been in attendance at neighborhood meetings, and no notice was mailed to any of other property owners along canal, in view of ongoing attempts by parish to solve drainage problems, not only along other canals but along subject canal as well, mere fact that some property owners were not given notice of program offered to others was not evidence of constitutional violation that would bring suit within purview of this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights; failure to give notice at best constituted isolated incident which did not indicate kind of systematic abuse required for cause of action under this section. Boihem v. Drainage & Sewerage Dept. of Jefferson Parish, E.D.La.1983, 558 F.Supp. 1275. Civil Rights 1071

1559. Pollution, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Even if county officials did not cooperate with landowner with respect to claim that county road project and adjacent drainage ditch caused surface water from toxic chemical site and cattle feed lot on other side of road to flow onto landowner's property, failed to check out fish kill, and did not give landowner same drainage control assistance as neighbors received, it could not reasonably be concluded that county went about drainage improvement with intent of flooding landowner's land, and thus the damage allegedly caused did not amount to a constitutional deprivation on which a federal civil rights action could be based, despite conclusory allegations that the county acted recklessly and maliciously. Mitchell v. Mills County, Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1988, 847 F.2d 486. Civil Rights 1071

Alleged unlawful conduct on part of individuals which was said to have resulted in release or threat of release of hazardous substances at site, when conduct occurred before owner took title to property and at a time when present owner's interest therein was no different from that of any other member of general public, was not a basis for owner to state a cause of action against individuals under statute governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. State of N.Y. v. Shore Realty Corp., E.D.N.Y.1986, 648 F.Supp. 255. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1071

1560. Smoking, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Cause of action under this section was not stated by complaint by nonsmokers alleging that they were deprived of constitutional rights by policy of Louisiana superdome in allowing patrons to smoke tobacco products within superdome. Gasper v. Louisiana Stadium and Exposition Dist., E.D.La.1976, 418 F.Supp. 716, affirmed 577 F.2d 897, rehearing denied 581 F.2d 267, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 846, 439 U.S. 1073, 59 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1561. Fire protection, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Genuine issue of material fact, precluding summary judgment for city in § 1983 action by homeowner who was allegedly directed to vacate his home after it was declared "dangerous," existed as to whether city fire chief's actions or inactions with respect to requirement that he notify and hold hearing regarding decision to direct plaintiff to vacate his home constituted deprivation of plaintiff's due process rights. Capozzi v. City of Olean, N.Y., W.D.N.Y.1995, 910 F.Supp. 900. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

The State of New York, the New York State Police Department and the Superintendent of State Police, in his official capacity, could not be liable under this section for deprivations of civil rights which allegedly occurred when police and fire protection was withdrawn from an Indian reservation. Thompson v. State of N. Y., N.D.N.Y.1979, 487 F.Supp. 212. Civil Rights 1348

1562. Zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

City landowners' claim that certain zoning ordinances violated their vested property rights constituted matter of state law not actionable under this section. Scott v. City of Sioux City, Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1984, 736 F.2d 1207, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1864, 471 U.S. 1003, 85 L.Ed.2d 158. Civil Rights 1073

Zoning dispute was a matter within the jurisdiction of the state courts of Ohio, as the record in the case revealed no deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or any laws of the United States. Studen v. Beebe, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1978, 588 F.2d 560. Federal Courts 219.1

Property management company and its sole shareholder were afforded procedural due process in connection with seizure of their offices by town and town officials for alleged zoning violations, and therefore company and shareholder could not maintain § 1983 claim against town and town officials for deprivation of procedural due process, though company and shareholder were not provided with advance notice of temporary restraining order effecting such seizure, as state law did not prohibit company's and shareholder's participation in subsequent hearing regarding issuance of preliminary injunction, town did not have unfettered right under state law to obtain temporary restraining order, and shareholder utilized post deprivation remedies provided by state law. Pisello v. Town of Brookhaven, E.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 202. Constitutional Law 278.2(2); Zoning And Planning 784

To prove that zoning regulation violates substantive due process in context of civil rights action, plaintiffs must show that they were deprived of constitutionally protected interest and that deprivation was result of abuse of government power sufficient to raise ordinary tort to stature of constitutional violation. Moore v. City of Edgewood, M.D.Fla.1992, 790 F.Supp. 1561, affirmed 985 F.2d 578, affirmed 985 F.2d 579. Constitutional Law 278.2(1)

Zoning decision affecting rights in property may be challenged as deprivation of due process and equal protection under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Cowart v. City of Ocala, Fla., M.D.Fla.1979, 478 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1073

1563. ---- Building permits, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City did not deprive property owner of due process by denying permit to build marina in area which had been zoned to prohibit storage facilities; even if city's interpretation of ordinance had been arbitrary and capricious, owner had no protectible property interest in building permit under Florida law, and thus its denial could not form basis for due process claim. Mackenzie v. City of Rockledge, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 920 F.2d 1554. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 384.1

Landowners and developer could not assert procedural due process claim under § 1983 arising out of denial of building permit, inasmuch as Illinois law provided unsuccessful applicants for building permits with sufficient state remedy to cure the sort of random and unauthorized denial of which developer and landowners complained. New Burnham Prairie Homes, Inc. v. Village of Burnham, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1474. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Accepting allegations in plaintiffs' complaint as true, actions of county and its officials in wrongfully issuing building permit upon land which they knew or should have known was unsuitable for septic tank system, resulting in inability of plaintiffs to use dwelling as a residence, as part of established custom to award building permits improperly and in furtherance of conspiracy to develop unusable land as residential property in order that officials might derive unjust profit were not sufficient to raise tort alleged to stature of constitutional violation, and thus plaintiffs failed to state a cognizable § 1983 claim based on violation of substantive due process. Rymer v. Douglas County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 764 F.2d 796. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Where city council properly restricted area to nonresidential use, council's denial of building permit to make repairs for residential use after housing inspector sent notice that repairs were required or buildings would be demolished did not deny plaintiff property owners due process or entitle them to recover under this section. Elmwood Properties, Inc. v. Conzelman, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1969, 418 F.2d 1025, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1498, 397 U.S. 1063, 25 L.Ed.2d 684. Civil Rights 1073; Constitutional Law 278.2(1)

Township's delay of 65 days beyond statutory response deadline in approving reconstruction permits for owner's renovation of apartment buildings did not shock the conscience, precluding recovery in owner's §§ 1983 substantive due process action against township; actual delay was not significant, township's alleged improper motive to coerce owner into using union labor did not rise to level of gross misconduct, and township had legitimate concerns about whether renovation plans complied with disabled-access requirements. Cherry Hill Towers, L.L.C. v. Township of Cherry Hill, D.N.J.2006, 407 F.Supp.2d 648. Health 392

Allegation that the city commissioner of buildings intentionally failed to follow the law due to political reasons, in granting a building permit to a third party, and that this intentional act resulted in the violation of plaintiff's right to due process, failed to state a claim under § 1983, as New York provides adequate appellate procedures to contest the grant of a building permit and plaintiff had the full opportunity to take advantage of them, though it failed to do so. Hi Pockets, Inc. v. Music Conservatory of Westchester, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2002, 192 F.Supp.2d 143. Constitutional Law 278.2(2); Zoning And Planning 378.1

Building construction company, its president, and president's real estate company could not lawfully perform contracts for construction and sale of condominiums, in that they lacked general contracting and real estate broker licenses required under state law, and therefore alleged actions of village and village officials in revoking and refusing to reissue necessary permits, halting project until allegedly improper fine was paid, and requiring companies and president to withdraw from condominium projects did not violate due process or equal protection. Carrico v. Village of Sugar Mountain, W.D.N.C.2000, 114 F.Supp.2d 422, affirmed 13 Fed.Appx. 79, 2001 WL 687591. Constitutional Law 228.2; Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 469

District of Columbia Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs' (DCRA) temporary suspension of building permit for contaminated soil remediation facility did not violate owner's procedural due process rights for purposes of his § 1983 claim against District, in light of owner's history of noncompliance with environmental, building and zoning laws and safety concerns concerning illegal presence of contaminated soil at site, which justified interim suspension to allow gathering of further information of facility's impact on surrounding community, and in light of availability of adequate post-deprivation remedies with which to challenge suspension; owner could have sought expedited administrative hearing within 72 hours of suspension, could have sought direct review of suspension in Court of Appeals, or could have sued for injunctive relief or writ of mandamus. Tri-County Industries, Inc. v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1996, 932 F.Supp. 4, vacated 104 F.3d 455, 322 U.S.App.D.C. 412. Constitutional Law 278.1; Environmental Law 432

Section §§ 1983 claims that owner of real property asserted against village, officials, and consulting architect, challenging lateness and conditional nature of permission to build large drugstore on premises, were not ripe for adjudication, where, following village planning board's indication that proposal did not conform to zoning provisions, owner and planning board continued to discuss possible modifications to plan, and owner did not press board to a final determination, but instead, brought suit. R-Goshen LLC v. Andrews, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 115 Fed.Appx. 465, 2004 WL 2278555, Unreported. Federal Courts 13.10; Federal Courts 13.25

1564. ---- Development approvals, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Developer failed to establish, in his civil rights action alleging violation of equal protection clause, that county commissioners' denial of his application for special zoning designation was based on his status as nonresident of county, even though activist at hearing on application stated that she wanted to know where developer "came from"

and that "outside people" were developing county; ten other citizens testified at hearing, there was no other comment or question on subject of developer's out-of-county residence, commissioner noted irrelevance of activist's comments, and, in ensuing debate among commissioners, no reference was made to activist's comments. Sylvia Development Corp. v. Calvert County, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1995, 48 F.3d 810. Civil Rights 1073

In absence of claim that plans would have been accepted at time acceptance was denied because private school with possible interest in land had not consented and inadequate number of plans had been submitted, developers who later complied with requirement and still later withdrew plans because of adoption of setback requirement which nullified plans had no cause of action against members of planning board. Cote v. Seaman, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 625 F.2d 1. Civil Rights 1073

Housing developer did not state due process claim against city and city officials for denial of his right to practice his profession by alleging string of incidents involving arbitrary enforcement of city code against his development projects that made his work more difficult, but did not preclude him from engaging in his occupation. Thompson v. City of Shasta Lake, E.D.Cal.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 1017. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Health 392

City commission had rational basis for denying developer's proposed redevelopment project, and thus, the denial did not violate the developer's equal protection rights, where the denial was based on the commission's legitimate concerns, such as the size and scope of the proposal, the underlying liability of the city to pay for such a large development, and the concerns of citizens in the community, among others. Klauber v. City of Sarasota, M.D.Fla.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 1263, affirmed 350 F.3d 1301. Constitutional Law 228.2; Zoning And Planning 381.5

Giving effect to referendum of citizens of city disapproving city ordinance that had approved site plan for low income housing, as city council members were required to do by city charter, did not violate equal protection rights of low income families with children, given traditional deference to referenda, absent evidence of discriminatory of intent or purpose. Buckeye Community Hope Foundation v. City of Cuyahoga Falls, N.D.Ohio 1997, 970 F.Supp. 1289. Constitutional Law 228.2; Zoning And Planning 136

Landowners failed to state substantive due process claim under § 1983 in connection with denial of permit for toxic and hazardous waste disposal facility by Puerto Rico Planning Board, even if Board did intentionally delay consideration of project and intentionally denied permit despite landowners' compliance with requirements of document addressing public policy and criteria for siting of hazardous and toxic waste disposal facilities. Nestor Colon Medina & Sucesores, Inc. v. Custodio, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 758 F.Supp. 784, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 964 F.2d 32. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Property owners had no constitutional entitlement to privately develop property zoned "P" for public use so as to make defendants' refusal to allow plaintiffs to develop their property as proposed reach constitutional dimension required for action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Culebra Enterprises Corp. v. Rios, D.C.Puerto Rico 1985, 613 F.Supp. 146. Civil Rights 1073

1565. ---- Enforcement, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Developer failed to state § 1983 cause of action against city, mayor, and city council members when it alleged that city deprived it of property, without due process of law, by enforcing invalid zoning ordinance against it; mere violation of state law did not automatically give rise to federal substantive due process claim and even if city knowingly enforced invalid zoning ordinance in bad faith, bad-faith violation of state law remained only a violation of state law. Chesterfield Development Corp. v. City of Chesterfield, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 963 F.2d 1102. Civil Rights 1073

Property owners would not show equal protection violation by county commission's alleged failure to enforce zoning ordinance against nearby junkyard absent showing that junkyard had been the only one that commission refused to move against and that refusal to file suit against it constituted a denial of a right, privilege or immunity secured by Federal Constitution; to the contrary, denial alleged was of right to receive benefit of zoning ordinance which was secured solely by state laws. Muckway v. Craft, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1986, 789 F.2d 517. Civil Rights 1073

Resource Conservation and Recovery Act's (RCRA) statutory scheme was sufficiently comprehensive to preclude cause of action under § 1983. Leland v. Moran, N.D.N.Y.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 153, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 133, 2003 WL 22533185.

City's enforcement of dangerous buildings ordinance against Hispanic owners was not motivated by discriminatory intent, and thus did not violate owners' equal protection rights, even if they were the only Hispanic building owners in town and theirs was only building demolished under ordinance, where city had neutral, legitimate safety reasons, in that city had received numerous complaints, bricks had fallen off building, engineers had reported that building was hazard to general public, and city's mayor had attempted to help owners obtain funds to fix building. Valdivia v. City of Villisca, S.D.Iowa 2001, 460 F.Supp.2d 978. Municipal Corporations 628

1566. ---- Family dwelling limitations, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Village zoning ordinance limiting, with certain exceptions, the occupancy of one-family dwellings to traditional families or to groups of not more than two unrelated persons is not aimed at transients, involves no procedural disparity inflicted on some but not on others, involves no deprivation of any "fundamental" right, bears a rational relationship to a permissible state objective, and constitutes valid land-use legislation addressed to family needs, notwithstanding claims that the ordinance is unconstitutional as violative of equal protection and rights of association, travel and privacy. Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, U.S.N.Y.1974, 94 S.Ct. 1536, 416 U.S. 1, 39 L.Ed.2d 797. Constitutional Law 82(7); Constitutional Law 83(4.1); Constitutional Law 91; Constitutional Law 228.2; Zoning And Planning 66

Ordinances zoning certain neighborhoods "single-family residential" and defining "family" as "one person living alone, or two or more persons related by blood, marriage or legal adoption, or a group not exceeding four persons living as a single housekeeping unit" were not unconstitutional as discriminatory. Palo Alto Tenants' Union v. Morgan, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 487 F.2d 883, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2608, 417 U.S. 910, 41 L.Ed.2d 214. Zoning And Planning 34

1567. ---- Occupancy certificates, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Township officials' alleged delay in granting occupancy permit for daycare center did not amount to unconstitutional regulatory taking, absent showing that delay denied developer all economic use of land, or that limited use it was able to make was permanent rather than temporary. Aardvark Childcare and Learning Center, Inc. v. Township of Concord, E.D.Pa.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 427. Eminent Domain 2.10(6)

Property owners had no right of action under this section to compel city to issue certificate of occupancy for three-family house or to restrain it from attacking validity of previously issued certificate of occupancy; the freedom claimed to be lost or impaired was the result of an alleged infringement of a property right, i.e., the alleged unlawful revocation of the prior certificate, therefore, the loss of freedom was dependent on the infringement of a property right and not within the jurisdiction of the act. Walsh v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.1974, 379 F.Supp. 954. Civil Rights 1071

1568. ---- Open spaces, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Citizens and taxpayers who alleged impermissible bias or political animus on part of county officials affecting county-owned open spaces and water resources failed to assert property right necessary to support § 1983 civil rights action based on county's lease of county-owned property; no plaintiff owned land or held lease on property in question. Blankman v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.1993, 819 F.Supp. 198, affirmed 14 F.3d 592. Civil Rights 1071

1569. ---- Preexisting uses, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City's action in refusing to issue permit for landfill that had existed prior to city's incorporation denied landfill operator vested property right and constituted taking of private property without compensation. Browning-Ferris Industries of St. Louis, Inc. v. City of Maryland Heights, Mo., E.D.Mo.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1340. Constitutional Law 101; Eminent Domain 2.27(1); Environmental Law 358

1570. ---- Rezoning, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City was not liable to developer for inequitable precondemnation activities absent showing that, as result of city's zoning changes, there was no economically viable use for land. Kaiser Development Co. v. City and County of Honolulu, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1990, 913 F.2d 573, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1414, 499 U.S. 947, 113 L.Ed.2d 467, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1430, 499 U.S. 954, 113 L.Ed.2d 484. Eminent Domain 63

County's decision to rezone landowner's property from desert land accommodating commercial uses to residential deprived landowner of protected property interest, and thus landowner was entitled to constitutional due process prior to deprivation. Harris v. County of Riverside, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 904 F.2d 497. Constitutional Law 278.2(2); Zoning And Planning 191

Landowners failed to show that city council members acted irrationally or arbitrarily in rejecting landowners' rezoning plan to have their land rezoned from single-family residential to planned development district, despite landowners' argument that city officials acted solely on partisan political reasons unrelated to merits of landowners' proposal; thus, landowners were not entitled to damages and injunctive relief under § 1983. Greenbriar, Ltd. v. City of Alabaster, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1989, 881 F.2d 1570, rehearing denied 893 F.2d 346. Zoning And Planning 167.1

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether town planning board received and began processing site plan application submitted by developer of proposed subdivision, precluding partial summary judgment, as to issue of liability, for developer on its claim that board's refusal to receive and process its application was a denial of its right to petition the government under the First Amendment. Ridgeview Partners, LLC v. Entwistle, S.D.N.Y.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 395. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

1571. ---- Variances, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Town was not liable under §§ 1983 for any equal protection violation that occurred in connection with property owner's permit applications, absent evidence that town, through members of its board of health acting in their official capacities, had any municipal custom or policy of deliberate indifference to commission of constitutional violations of kind alleged. Walsh v. Town of Lakeville, D.Mass.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 134. Civil Rights 1352(3)

Participation of township zoning board's assistant secretary, who had met briefly with landowner's tenant two years earlier and asked him if he was interested in purchasing secretary's son's property for his business, in hearings regarding landowner's application for use variance to allow tenant to continue his business was insufficient to support allegation that determination that property was in violation of municipal zoning ordinance and denial of use variance were based upon unlawful criteria, and so violated landowner's right to substantive due process.

Deblasio v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment for Tp. of West Amwell, D.N.J.1993, 820 F.Supp. 876, affirmed in part, reversed in part 53 F.3d 592, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 352, 516 U.S. 937, 133 L.Ed.2d 247. Constitutional Law 278.2(2); Zoning And Planning 543

Landowners' allegations that town and others conspired to deny landowners' application for special zoning permit to construct radio tower on their property did not implicate any fundamental constitutional rights and failed to state civil rights cause of action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983; even assuming that town engaged in arbitrary or adversarial tactics in land use dispute, those tactics did not create issues of constitutional dimension. Carter v. Rollins Cablevision of Massachusetts, Inc., D.C.Mass.1985, 618 F.Supp. 425, amendment denied 634 F.Supp. 944. Conspiracy 18

1572. ---- Abortion clinics, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

For purposes of constitutional challenge, preexisting city zoning ordinance, which permitted medical clinic in subject area only if it did not include rooms for major surgery, was not abortion specific, especially since validity of land use scheme was not contested and it was the definition of abortion as major surgery which was the defect of which applicant for certificate of occupancy complained and there was no direct regulation of a fundamental right. Bossier City Medical Suite, Inc. v. City of Bossier City, W.D.La.1980, 483 F.Supp. 633. Zoning And Planning 76

1573. ---- Dance halls, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Proprietor's civil rights did not authorize operation of teenagers' dance hall business for profit in violation of zoning ordinances enacted under the police power for welfare of the community. Mosher v. Beirne, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1966, 357 F.2d 638. Civil Rights 1073

Property owners' protected property interest under Fourteenth Amendment to use their property for lawful purpose unrestricted by arbitrary and discriminatory governmental zoning action was not satisfied by city's ultimate issuance of permit to operate teenage dance facility, and thus did not preclude property owners from bringing civil rights action alleging constitutional violations with respect to application process. Zaintz v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1462. Civil Rights 1318; Constitutional Law 278.2(1)

1574. ---- Interstate commerce, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Engagement in business involving interstate commerce does not excuse noncompliance with valid zoning ordinances, and no civil rights action exists by reason of enforcement of lawful ordinance. Wallach v. City of Pagedale, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1966, 359 F.2d 57. Civil Rights 1073; Zoning And Planning 762

Connecticut officials' environmental protection-motivated moratorium on operation of high-voltage fiber optic cable running to New York, which allegedly unreasonably delayed and interfered with supply of electric power to residents of New York, potentially constituted imposition of burden on interstate commerce incommensurate with local benefits secured, in violation of dormant Commerce Clause, as required to support New York county officials' §§ 1983 action against Connecticut officials. Levy v. Rowland, E.D.N.Y.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 267. Commerce 52.10; Commerce 62.1; Electricity 8.6

1575. ---- Low-income housing, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Absent showing that adequate low-cost housing was unavailable in county in areas not in town but accessible to poor persons' jobs and social services utilized by the poor, city was not required to show compelling interest to justify large-lot zoning ordinance even if ordinance discriminated against the poor. Ybarra v. Town of Los Altos Hills, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 503 F.2d 250. Zoning And Planning 63

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1576. ---- Notice and hearing, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

County was required by procedural due process to hold a pre-deprivation hearing before vacating developer's approved plats based on his alleged creation of environmental problems by stripping buffer area of vegetation in violation of permits; county effectively deprived developer of economic value of property and rendered nugatory his prior effort to develop it, informal hearing would have entailed only minor administrative costs, and there was marked absence of any alternative procedural safeguards. Weinberg v. Whatcom County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 2001, 241 F.3d 746. Constitutional Law 278.2(2); Zoning And Planning 471.5

While plaintiff, complaining of the issuance of a building permit to his next door neighbor to convert a tool shed into a small apartment, argued that he was deprived of his property without due process of law when the city council refused to enforce the zoning board's decision for plaintiff, it was apparent that plaintiff was afforded due process and was continuing to receive due process; he was granted a hearing before the city council and, as result of his petition in state court, he received a hearing before the board of zoning appeals, and he continued to have the right to seek relief in state court for further review and enforcement. Crocker v. Hakes, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 616 F.2d 237. Constitutional Law 278.2(2)

1577. ---- Miscellaneous claims, zoning and land use, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

City's enactment of ordinance purportedly barring mineral lessee from drilling within 1,000 feet of lake that served as city's main source of water was rationally related to city's interest in protecting its water supply and, thus, did not violate lessee's substantive due process rights, even though the ordinance was subsequently deemed preempted by state law. Energy Management Corp. v. City of Shreveport, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 467 F.3d 471. Mines And Minerals 92.13

As applicant for land use permit did not suffer damage to protected interest in business goodwill as result of any damage to reputation flowing from investigative report issued by district attorney, applicant was not deprived of liberty in violation of due process under stigma-plus test of Paul v. Davis, as no deprivation of protected property interest existed. WMX Technologies, Inc. v. Miller, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 197 F.3d 367. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 438

Landowners in residential zone stated claim against municipal officials for retaliating against landowners for exercising First Amendment rights by complaining about alleged zoning violations by adjoining landowner in industrial zone; residential landowners began exercising First Amendment rights in 1981, officials then allegedly failed to enforce zoning code and noise ordinance and granted permit and variances, and the detailed allegations provided chronology from which inference could be drawn that officials were motivated by landowners' exercise of rights. Gagliardi v. Village of Pawling, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 18 F.3d 188. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Wireless telecommunications company had remedy under § 1983 for violation by town zoning board of appeals (ZBA) of Telecommunications Act; the ZBA acted under color of state law, as a local zoning board, and by violating the Telecommunications Act's prohibition against unreasonable discrimination with effect of prohibiting services, the ZBA deprived company of its federally guaranteed rights. Payday loan business was not entitled to relief on its due process challenge to municipal ordinance, which required nighttime closing of loan stores, for purpose of its request for preliminary injunction in § 1983 lawsuit under Fourteenth Amendment, since due process claim rested on same ground as unavailing equal protection claim, i.e., that ordinance had no rational basis, and business otherwise did not assert it was denied any procedural rights to which it was entitled. Even assuming that local environmental quality board did not adequately consider issue of stormwater runoff when it approved environmental impact statement for highway project, such approval did not violate substantive due process; such conduct did not rise to the level of an egregious abuse of governmental power which was shocking to the court. To plead substantive due process claim, developer, landowners and bank were required to allege separate constitutional violation or inadequacy of state law remedies and action by city and officials in invidious or irrational manner in preventing residential developments. Standard Bank & Trust Co. v. Village of Orland Hills, N.D.Ill.1995, 891 F.Supp. 446. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 590

District court would not impermissibly serve as super zoning board in ruling on property owners' § 1983 claim that city unconstitutionally delegated its land use authority to neighborhood review board; determination of whether unlawful delegation took place did not require court to analyze each imposition of substantive conditions on property owners' proposal for remodeling of home and determine, using its independent judgment, whether conditions best served public interest. Schulz v. Milne, N.D.Cal.1994, 849 F.Supp. 708. Civil Rights 1073

A developer's failure to complete a project within 18 months and failure to show that the delay was beyond its control, as required by zoning ordinance, did not preclude the developer from bringing a civil rights suit based on town's alleged violation of the developer's due process rights by refusing to extend expired site plan approval; town failed to offer any reasonable explanation for its actions, which had effect of freezing development as a cottage court with two duplexes rather than permitting completion of the planned cottage court with three duplexes. 1578. Taxes, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Determination that state taxpayers may recover damages under this subchapter because of unconstitutional administration of state tax system would be fully as intrusive upon state administration of tax laws as equitable actions which are barred by principles of comity. Decision of county tax assessor, to reassess game farm and recreational area without similarly reassessing other properties, was objectively reasonable, for purpose of Indian tribe's class-of-one equal protection civil rights claim, where assessor received letter from Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) containing unusually detailed information about agricultural and non-agricultural income of that property, which justified reclassification, such information was not readily available about other similar properties, and it was not irrational for assessor to await outcome of litigation by tribe before pursuing similar cases. State imposition of license and fuel taxes on company which contracted with tribe to perform logging operations on Indian reservation, although held invalid under the Supremacy Clause because it was deemed to interfere in general way with authority and policies of federal government, did not "violate" any federal statute, and thus did not form basis for § 1983 claim or award of attorney fees under § 1988. Even assuming that employer acted under color of state law in withholding state taxes from taxpayer's wages, his complaint failed to state a claim under this section, which allows a party to bring civil action for constitutional deprivations against persons acting under color of state law, since employer's actions in withholding taxes prior to hearing did not deprive him of any constitutional right. Tax Injunction Act and principles of comity barred county taxpayers' federal suit under § 1983 against members of county board of supervisors, seeking refund of payments made to county under unconstitutional solid waste disposal fee; federal action to refund previously-paid taxes interfered with state's system of taxation and revenue collection, taxpayers had plain, speedy, and efficient remedy available in state court, and disposal fee was a tax for purposes of the Act, given that it was broad-based and designed to enhance county's revenue and provision of general welfare services. Indian Creek Monument Sales v. Adkins, W.D.Va.2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 555. Courts 508(6); Federal Courts 27

Virgin Islands' methods of valuing real property subject to taxation did not result in property tax which was based on actual value of property involved, as required by federal statute, since only cost approach was used to value improvements on all commercial properties, use of mass appraisals approach assessed real property at an average of one-and-one-half times its actual, market value, and replacement cost method of valuation used no reliable market research or documentation to support that cost had any relationship to actual cost of construction in current market; under replacement cost method, assessor used 110 year straight-line depreciation to subtract accumulated depreciation from replacement cost valuation, reset effective year of a building's construction, rather than using actual year of construction, and used unreliable estimates of actual value of underlying land, which were added to depreciated cost of improvements to obtain assessment value. Berne Corp. v. Government of Virgin Islands, D. Virgin Islands 2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 540, modified 276 F.Supp.2d 435, affirmed 105 Fed.Appx. 324, 2004 WL 1443889, opinion clarified 313 F.Supp.2d 522. Taxation 2515; Taxation 2516

Virgin Islands property taxpayers were entitled to permanent injunction on real property tax assessments, since tax assessor violated their civil rights by systematically employing a method of assessment not calculated to determine the actual value of their properties; public interest weighed in favor of ordering executive arm of Virgin Islands Government to comply with federal law and enjoining it permanently from violating that law, and competing harms weighed in plaintiffs' favor against allowing continued illegal property tax assessments, since harm to Government was discounted by fact that it had been given, and declined to take, every opportunity to fix numerous problems at Office of Tax Assessor without court injunction. Berne Corp. v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.Virgin Islands 2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 540, modified 276 F.Supp.2d 435, affirmed 105 Fed.Appx. 324, 2004 WL 1443889, opinion clarified 313 F.Supp.2d 522. Developer failed to state a claim under § 1983 against officers and employees of the Puerto Rico Institute of Culture (PRIC) and the Collection Center for Municipal Income (CRIM), in their individual capacities, in connection with PRIC's denial of an endorsement for tax exemption, though those defendants were clearly acting under color of state law, as denial of the application for the endorsement did not mean that developer was deprived of his property rights, and there were no convincing facts indicating that the defendants' conduct was causally connected to the developer's deprivation. Lugo Rodriguez v. Puerto Rico Institute of Culture, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 229, affirmed 98 Fed.Appx. 15, 2004 WL 964272, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 416, 543 U.S. 958, 160 L.Ed.2d 321. Virgin Islands statute prescribing factors that tax assessor must evaluate in computing "actual value" of real property subject to taxation did not supersede federal statute governing valuation of Virgin Islands real property for tax purposes, and thus taxpayer was not barred from bringing suit under § 1983 to enforce its rights under federal statute. Federal statute governing valuation of Virgin Islands real property for tax purposes created federally protected right actionable under § 1983: statute provided that property "shall" be assessed based on actual value, and was thus mandatory; statute created interest, namely use of actual value to compute property taxes, sufficiently specific to be judicially enforceable; and statute was intended to benefit taxpayers. Berne Corp. v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.Virgin Islands 2000, 120 F.Supp.2d 528, appeal dismissed 105 Fed.Appx. 324, 2004 WL 1443889. Civil Rights 1071

1579. Medicaid, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

Provision of Medicaid statute, requiring participating state to ensure that medical services for eligible beneficiaries were accessible and available, and requiring reimbursement rates for services in general be sufficient to enlist enough providers, did not confer private right of action to compel enforcement of that provision under §§ 1983 by association of Home and Community-Based Services (HCBS) providers; provision never established an "identifiable class" of rights-holders. Mandy R. ex rel. Mr. and Mrs. R. v. Owens, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 464 F.3d 1139. Civil Rights 1052

Requirement of Medicaid Act that state agency provide recipient with medical assistance for prescribed disposable incontinence underwear under program for "early and periodic screening, diagnostic, and treatment services" (EPSDT) was enforceable under §§ 1983; pertinent statutes contained "rights-creating" language, right asserted was not so vague and amorphous that its enforcement would strain judicial competence, and statute unambiguously imposed EPSDT obligations on participating states. Congress did not intend for third-party liability provisions of federal Medicaid statutes to confer a benefit upon health care providers, but rather sought to protect Medicaid program from paying for health care in situations in which third party had legal obligation to pay for care, and did not grant providers the right to collect payment from third parties as compensatory benefit in exchange for duties imposed upon them; therefore, provisions did not support private cause of action for health care providers under § 1983. Wesley Health Care Center, Inc. v. DeBuono, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 244 F.3d 280. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6); Health 496(1)

Letter sent by federal Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) which allegedly continued "reasonable and adequate" standard for Medicaid reimbursement rates, as had applied under since-repealed Boren Amendment, did not give rise to a federal right enforceable under § 1983 by operator of nursing homes who participated in Medicaid program. HCMF Corp. v. Allen, C.A.4 (Va.) 2001, 238 F.3d 273, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 2522, 533 U.S. 916, 150 L.Ed.2d 694. Civil Rights 1052

Federal regulation requiring State Medicaid plan to specify that Medicaid agency will ensure necessary transportation for recipients to and from providers did not define content of any specific right conferred upon Medicaid recipients by Congress; thus, regulation was not enforceable in § 1983 action. Harris v. James, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 127 F.3d 993. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid providers and recipients could enforce Medicaid statute, as amended by Hyde Amendment, through § 1983; providers and recipients were intended beneficiaries of Amendment, which contained sufficient mandatory language to impose binding obligation on states to fund certain abortions. Medicaid statutory provisions requiring state Medicaid plans to provide system for applying for aid and to furnish aid with reasonable promptness and mandating that states set reasonable reimbursement rates and implement effective reimbursement procedures did not evidence Congressional intent to create individual rights enforceable by Medicaid providers through §§ 1983. Bio-Medical Applications of NC, Inc. v. Electronic Data Systems Corp., E.D.N.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid Act provisions that required states to provide Medicaid services with reasonable promptness to eligible individuals, to ensure that services provided to certain categories of individuals were sufficient in amount, duration, and scope compared to others, and to include reasonable standards for determining eligibility, created private right of action for Medicaid recipients to maintain §§ 1983 claims against Massachusetts Division of Medical Assistance (DMA), alleging that DMA's policy and practice of denying doctor-recommended breast reduction surgery violated their rights under federal law; all three sections contained rights-creating language and identified discrete classes of beneficiaries. disabilities who were dissatisfied with state's funding of community care facilities; statute did not employ "no person shall" language, effect of conferring benefit was not enough to warrant recognition of private right, there was no specific monetary entitlement conferred upon Medicaid recipients, and statute spoke only of state's obligation to develop methods and procedures for providing medical services. Right of action created by this section relating to deprivation, under color of state law, of a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States encompasses claims which are based solely on statutory violations of federal law and apply to claim that claimants had been deprived of welfare benefits to which they were entitled. Maine v. Thiboutot, U.S.Me.1980, 100 S.Ct. 2502, 448 U.S. 1, 65 L.Ed.2d 555. Civil Rights 1052

AFDC recipient voluntarily participating in job opportunities and basic skills training program (JOBS program) had no private right of action under § 1983 to enforce statutory provision requiring state agencies to "guarantee" child care; while child care provision was intended to benefit individuals such as recipient, it did not impose binding obligation upon states to provide child care to such volunteers on unlimited basis in light of cross-reference to section requiring that AFDC recipients be allowed to voluntarily participate in JOBS program to extent that "state resources otherwise permit," and that section's cross-reference to child care guarantee provision only in portion addressing individuals required to participate in JOBS program, not in subclause discussing voluntary participation. Maynard v. Williams, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 72 F.3d 848. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Failure of state officials to act upon public assistance applications within 30 days of filing thereof denied the applicants due process, equal protection and their civil rights, notwithstanding the large volume of applications and the inability of state Welfare Department to employ sufficient number of competent case workers, where there was no indication that delays were caused by any fault of the applicants and there were courses which could have been pursued by the state Welfare Department which would have greatly minimized the delays. Like v. Carter, C.A.8

(Mo.) 1971, 448 F.2d 798, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1309, 405 U.S. 1045, 31 L.Ed.2d 588, on remand 353 F.Supp. 405. Civil Rights 1055; Constitutional Law 250.4; Constitutional Law 278.7(3)

State agency violated civil rights statute by denying applicant food stamp eligibility to which he was entitled under federal law. Velez v. Coler, M.D.Fla.1991, 767 F.Supp. 253, affirmed 978 F.2d 647, 118 A.L.R. Fed. 749.

Arizona authorities did not violate state prisoner's constitutional rights, for purpose of civil rights claim, by allegedly not cooperating in Pennsylvania criminal investigation relating to alleged abuse of prisoner's daughter and by allegedly denying daughter state services, since prisoner did not have general right to governmental aid and Arizona authorities did not act intentionally to discriminate against prisoner based upon membership in protected class. Trimble v. Arizona Child Protective Services, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2005, 150 Fed.Appx. 621, 2005 WL 2277592, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

1582. ---- Food stamps, welfare benefits, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Food Stamp Act provisions, requiring that administering state agency promptly determine eligibility of applicant households, and promptly provide coupons, conferred federal rights to benefits enforceable under §§ 1983. M.K.B. v. Eggleston, S.D.N.Y.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 400. Civil Rights 1052

Submissions supporting prospective welfare beneficiaries' allegations that certain changes in city's food stamp and Medicaid procedures threatened to endanger numerous individuals in need of public assistance were sufficient to establish risk of immediate and irreparable harm, as required to support preliminary injunction. Reynolds v. Giuliani, S.D.N.Y.1999, 35 F.Supp.2d 331, modified in part 43 F.Supp.2d 492. Injunction 147

Private cause of action may be brought under § 1983 to enforce no-cost prohibition of Food Stamp Act, under which costs of documents or systems required to convert to computerized system for distributing food stamp benefits may not be imposed on retailers participating in food stamp program; retail stores are specifically mentioned in statute and are intended beneficiaries, right protected is not vague and amorphous, and statute unambiguously imposed binding obligation not to shift costs to retailers. Pennsylvania Food Merchants Ass'n v. Houstoun, M.D.Pa.1998, 999 F.Supp. 611. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6)

State's delays in processing applications for food stamp and Aid to Families with Needy Children (AFNC) programs were not caused merely by workers' negligence such that, arguably, Commissioner of Department of Welfare could not be held liable under § 1983; consistent failure rate of 8 to 10 percent in meeting deadlines transcended mere negligence, and Commissioner recognized that problem existed but took no action. Robidoux v. Kitchel, D.Vt.1995, 876 F.Supp. 575. Civil Rights 1052

1582A. ---- Women Infant and Children (WIC) Program, welfare benefits, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights, generally

Department of Agriculture regulations, which were phrased in terms of imperatives that state agencies must follow in their selection of vendors for Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Woman, Infants and Children (WIC program), did not confer private rights upon WIC vendors so as to permit them to sue for compliance under §§ 1983; regulations' focus on the "policy and practice" that state agencies were to follow in their administration of the WIC program was inconsistent with an intent to create individual rights enforceable under §§ 1983, and nothing in the regulations suggested an intent to include vendors among the group specifically identified by Congress as the intended beneficiaries of the WIC program. Morningside Supermarket Corp. v. New York State Dept. of Health, S.D.N.Y.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 334. Civil Rights 1052

1583. ---- Notice and hearing, welfare benefits, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

County workfare participant had no due process claim against county board for denying him public assistance benefits without hearing, where county did provide workers' compensation and disability benefits to participants in work program, and participant never applied for those benefits. Brogan v. San Mateo County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 901 F.2d 762. Civil Rights 1321

1584. Homelessness, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Eighth Amendment ban against cruel and unusual punishment was violated by city's arrests of homeless persons under various ordinances prohibiting them from lying down, sleeping, standing, sitting or performing other essential, life-sustaining activities in any public place at any time. Pottinger v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.1992, 810 F.Supp. 1551. Sentencing And Punishment 1453

1585. Housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally-- Generally

Regulations promulgated by Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) with respect to accessibility of housing, pursuant to §§ 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, did not construe or articulate personal rights created by statute, as required for finding that private right of action or cause of action under §§ 1983 existed against city housing authority for enforcement thereof; regulations were generally directed at housing authority's conduct and obligations as grantee, rather than being phrased in terms of any beneficiary's entitlement, related to institutional policy and practice rather than to individual instances of discrimination, and had systemwide focus. Three Rivers Center for Independent Living v. Housing Authority of City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 382 F.3d 412. Civil Rights 1021; Civil Rights 1330(6)

Developer's affirmative fair housing and marketing plan for filling residential rental units, which limited preference for former residents of urban renewal area at issue in order to increase minorities' ability to rent such units in accordance with federal fair housing requirements, did not violate equal protection principles, because units which were not subject to preference for former residents were available to all applicants regardless of race. Raso v. Lago, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1998, 135 F.3d 11, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 44, 525 U.S. 811, 142 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1082; Constitutional Law 220.5(1)

Simply because management of low and moderate income housing project has been previously apprised of some facts and has made tentative judgments without full hearing cannot by itself justify charge of prejudice and inability of management to fairly review facts more adequately developed. Wilson v. Lincoln Redevelopment Corp., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1973, 488 F.2d 339. Civil Rights 1082

Proposed amended complaint failed to demonstrate that ordinance's occupancy limit and permit system was arbitrary and capricious and therefore violative of substantive due process since city, which justified ordinance as vehicle to protect the integrity of single family districts, articulated a rational basis for the occupancy limit and permit system. Jones v. Wildgen, D.Kan.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 1358. Constitutional Law 278.2(1); Zoning And Planning 66; Zoning And Planning 86

Regulatory provisions pertaining to Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) requirements for the contents and maintenance of administrative plans were not enforceable under § 1983. Langlois v. Abington Housing Authority, D.Mass.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 33. Civil Rights 1082

Allegations by property management company and its sole shareholder that town and town officials engaged in pattern of harassment against them, including refusing to issue permits for building in which they sought to locate their offices and singling out their minority-occupied properties for inspection, in retaliation for their work in providing housing to low income minorities were not sufficient to state § 1983 claim for violation of substantive due process. Pisello v. Town of Brookhaven, E.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 202. Constitutional Law 278.3; Health 392

Allegations by nonminority sole shareholder of property management company which provided housing to low income minorities that town and town officials sought to curtail his business by seizing his office space, issuing false press release, refusing to process his landlord's building permits, inspecting minority-occupied properties he managed in absence of any complaints and delaying social service applications of his minority clients were sufficient to state § 1981 claim against town and town officials. Pisello v. Town of Brookhaven, E.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Federal regulations mandating that resident councils at public housing development be "democratically elected," and that such elections be "fair," did not provide private right of action under § 1983 for resident who alleged that he was elected president of resident council, but that defendant housing authority and its employees harassed him and undermined his ability to have tenant meetings; he did not claim that housing authority recognized resident council that was not democratically elected, but rather, contended that his election to position of president had not been honored, and, because he was not "resident council" of apartments, he could not contend that housing authority must recognize him as tenants' representative. Mungiovi v. Chicago Housing Authority, N.D.Ill.1995, 914 F.Supp. 207, affirmed 98 F.3d 982, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1082; Civil Rights 1330(3)

1586. ---- Construction contractors, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

A homeowner alleging inadequate and unworkmanlike construction by private contractor who sought to rehabilitate homeowner's property using funds provided through federal loan program did not have a private right of action under this section against city as administrator of the loan program. Rousseau v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1984, 589 F.Supp. 961. Civil Rights 1055

1587. ---- Damage to leased premises, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

In view of lease provision allowing damage assessments only upon fault of tenants of city housing authority, tenants were entitled to expect continued enjoyment of low-cost housing benefits without unwarranted assessments and that expectation was sufficient to implicate due process protection; thus tenants could maintain suit on theory that housing authority and its director had illegally assessed plaintiffs and similarly situated low-income tenants for damage to their apartments, when assessments were made without finding that tenants were at fault, without providing notice of grounds for assessments and without giving notice of opportunity to challenge assessments. Chavez v. City of Santa Fe Housing Authority, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1979, 606 F.2d 282. Civil Rights 1082; Constitutional Law 278.3

1588. ---- Dislocation benefits, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Tenants who were displaced as a result of downtown development authority's acquisition of building stated cause of action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for violation of equal protection of laws with respect to their claim that other tenants similarly situated received benefit of relocation as provided by Florida statute. Ward v. Downtown Development Authority, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1986, 786 F.2d 1526. Civil Rights 1395(3)

1589. ---- Eviction, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Claim of tenants, who received adequate due process prior to issuance of eviction orders and had ample notice that they would be evicted, that they were entitled to demand possession of certain property during eviction, was not constitutionally cognizable and thus did not rise to level of § 1983 violation. McGruder v. Will, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 204 F.3d 220, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1077

This section does not empower a federal judge to interfere with a "state" landlord's decision not to renew a lease simply because he thinks the decision harsh or unwise; he is authorized to do this only if the tenant has been deprived of due process of law. Lopez v. Henry Phipps Plaza South, Inc., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 498 F.2d 937. Civil

Tenant's interest in not being evicted is sufficiently "personal," as opposed to being only a property right, to be within protection of this section. McGuane v. Chenango Court, Inc., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1970, 431 F.2d 1189, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 1238, 401 U.S. 994, 28 L.Ed.2d 532. Civil Rights 1077

Tenants who rented units in mortgaged property from mortgagor ten days before entry of foreclosure judgment had valid leasehold interest in property under Illinois law that constituted legitimate entitlement protected by due process clause for purposes of civil rights suit brought by tenants after they were evicted; mortgagee did not obtain sheriff's deed to property until after tenants had rented it. Scott v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1991, 760 F.Supp. 1288, affirmed 975 F.2d 366, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2421, 508 U.S. 942, 124 L.Ed.2d 643. Constitutional Law 277(1)

Eviction of tenant in retaliation for exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 is actionable under this section. Walton v. Darby Town Houses, Inc., E.D.Pa.1975, 395 F.Supp. 553.

Public housing tenant was entitled to damages for violation of her civil rights, where tenant was physically removed from her residence, without due process of law, on two occasions, and incidents resulted in loss of at least portion of tenant's modest stock of household goods and other personal property. In re Adams, Bkrtcy.E.D.Pa.1989, 94 B.R. 838. Civil Rights 1082

Landlords, who obtained judgment for possession but who delayed in enforcing execution and attempted to allow debtors to become current in rent, did not create a new tenancy in the debtors and landlords' utilization of an execution to evict debtors was not in bad faith or based on an improper motive so as to constitute a violation of debtors' civil rights under color of state law. Matter of Pickus, Bkrtcy.D.Conn.1980, 8 B.R. 114. Civil Rights 1326(9); Landlord And Tenant 285(6)

1590. ---- Inspections, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Housing inspections conducted under false pretenses and warrantless searches were not appropriately addressed in civil rights suit as violations of substantive due process as such conduct was actionable under Fourth Amendment. Jones v. City of Youngstown, N.D.Ohio 1997, 980 F.Supp. 908, appeal dismissed 182 F.3d 917. Constitutional Law 278.1; Constitutional Law 319.5(1); Health 380; Searches And Seizures 85

Even if county negligently conducted building inspection on homes in certain residential development and even if such conduct constituted a tort, purchasers, who alleged that county's actions caused them to pay more for their homes than they were worth and to incur additional expenses both in attempts to correct the defects and in meeting extraordinary operating expenses, did not sustain an injury cognizable under this section or under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Wooters v. Jornlin, D.C.Del.1979, 477 F.Supp. 1140, affirmed 622 F.2d 580, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 528, 449 U.S. 992, 66 L.Ed.2d 289. Civil Rights 1081

1591. ---- Personal property, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Complaint seeking $10,000 compensatory damages for period for which plaintiffs were deprived of their medicines and other belongings when hotel manager, allegedly under color of state law, seized their belongings without notice or hearing following eviction was cognizable under this section. Culbertson v. Leland, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1975, 528 F.2d 426. Civil Rights 1395(1)

This section providing that district courts have original jurisdiction of civil actions relating to civil rights and elective francise was applicable to suit challenging constitutionality of Vernon's Ann.Civ.St. art. 5238a giving landlord a lien on personal goods of tenants and authorizing landlord to enforce that lien by peremptory seizure of the property, since rights that petition sought to protect were not merely property rights but included the right of the individual to be secure in his home and free from invasion of that home without any prior procedure to protect his interests. Hall v. Garson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1970, 430 F.2d 430. Federal Courts 223

Former tenants raised substantial constitutional issue by claim that due process rights were violated when landlord, following eviction, sold their household belongings pursuant to Delaware statute, despite contention that loss of the property was not attributable to "state action," as sale was predicated upon a state court judgment and issuance of warrant of removal, and Del.C. § 5715(d) created irrebuttable presumption that goods were abandoned after 30 days and risk of erroneous deprivation of the goods was high. Mombro v. Louis Capano & Sons, Inc., D.C.Del.1981, 526 F.Supp. 1237. Constitutional Law 46(2)

1592. ---- Rent, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

There was no basis for claim of statutory violation under this section in suit arising from failure of apartment complex developer and State Housing Development Authority to apply for and implement rent supplement program or alternative. Weems v. Pierce, C.D.Ill.1982, 534 F.Supp. 740. Civil Rights 1082

Tenants residing in unsubsidized housing constructed under program administered by Department of Housing and Urban Development were not deprived of a property right when their rents were increased. Rodriguez v. Towers Apartments, Inc., D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 416 F.Supp. 304.

1593. ---- Site selection, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Where for more than nine months no committee of city council had conducted hearings as to acquisition of real property by housing authority for dwelling units in conformity with prior judgment order, failure to conduct hearings was unjustified and effectively prevented authority from providing additional dwelling units, thereby thwarting correction of state-imposed segregation and denying equal protection to plaintiffs, city would be ordered to file addresses of sites and housing authority would be required to begin procedures appropriate to acquire such sites and to provide dwelling units. Gautreaux v. Chicago Housing Authority, N.D.Ill.1972, 342 F.Supp. 827, affirmed 480 F.2d 210, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 895, 414 U.S. 1144, 39 L.Ed.2d 98, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 896, 414 U.S. 1144, 39 L.Ed.2d 98. Civil Rights 1448

1594. ---- Uninhabitability, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Homeowner's inability to use his home for seven days after village building inspector posted home as uninhabitable amounted to constitutionally significant deprivation for purposes of homeowner's civil rights suit. McGee v. Bauer, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 956 F.2d 730. Civil Rights 1081

Public housing authority's alleged violations of state law warranty of habitability, lease agreements, and consent decree concerning repairs of tenant units were not violation of public housing tenants' federal or constitutional rights required to bring § 1983 civil rights suit. Imes v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 928 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1082

Property owner's procedural due process rights were violated by municipal officials who boarded up several rental units on owner's property without giving him notice or opportunity to be heard before they took such action; although the units severely needed many significant improvements, there was no evidence of an emergency or lifesaving situation. Smith v. Village of Maywood, N.D.Ill.1988, 699 F.Supp. 157, stay granted. Constitutional Law 278.3; Health 373

1595. ---- Utilities, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Tenants in private housing authority buildings had right of action under § 1983 to challenge authority's determination as to what constituted reasonable allowance for utilities subject to the statutory 30% of income maximum rental charge, and what could be assessed as a surcharge for excess utility usage, both as to adequacy of substantive determinations and adequacy of procedural notice, hearing and appeals procedures. Dorsey v. Housing Authority of Baltimore City, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 984 F.2d 622. Civil Rights 1082

1596. ---- Vouchers, housing, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Holders of rental assistance voucher under federal housing program had property right to continued participation in program, as required to maintain action under § 1983 challenging city housing authority's refusal to extend time period for use of vouchers. Chesir v. Housing Authority of City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1992, 801 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1082; Constitutional Law 277(1)

1597. Defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally--Generally

To establish a claim under this section and the Fourteenth Amendment more must be involved than simple defamation by a state official. Paul v. Davis, U.S.Ky.1976, 96 S.Ct. 1155, 424 U.S. 693, 47 L.Ed.2d 405, rehearing denied 96 S.Ct. 2194, 425 U.S. 985, 48 L.Ed.2d 811. Civil Rights 1038

Defamation by state actors is not actionable under § 1983, because reputation is not deemed property within meaning of due process clause. Smart v. Board of Trustees of University of Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 34 F.3d 432, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 941, 513 U.S. 1129, 130 L.Ed.2d 885, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1443, 520 U.S. 1173, 137 L.Ed.2d 549. Civil Rights 1038; Constitutional Law 277(1)

Conclusory allegation of reputational injury fails to state cause of action under civil rights statute absent cognizable stigma and ensuing loss of tangible interest. Hodge v. Jones, C.A.4 (Md.) 1994, 31 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Slander is not constitutional tort, actionable under § 1983, as person's interest in his reputation is neither liberty nor property interest for purposes of due process clause; however, injury to reputation may produce loss of liberty or property, such as loss of employment. Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 20 F.3d 789, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 740, 513 U.S. 1085, 130 L.Ed.2d 642, on remand 1996 WL 10899. Civil Rights 1038

Although neither defamation nor malicious prosecution as such is actionable under Constitution, either tort can be link in chain showing deprivation of liberty or property without due process of law. Mahoney v. Kesery, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1992, 976 F.2d 1054. Civil Rights 1038; Civil Rights 1037

Mere defamation by itself does not constitute a cause of action for deprivation of a constitutional right. Clark v. Solem, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1980, 628 F.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1038

This section does not give rise to a cause of action for slander. Azar v. Conley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 456 F.2d 1382. See, also, Church v. Hamilton, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 444 F.2d 105; Peoples Cab Co. v. Bloom, D.C.Pa.1971, 330 F.Supp. 1235, affirmed 472 F.2d 163. Civil Rights 1038

A claim for relief based on alleged libel was concerned solely with a right arising out of state law and had no connection with any right federally protected by this section. Association for the Preservation of Freedom of Choice, Inc. v. Simon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1962, 299 F.2d 212. Federal Courts 221

Generally to state defamation claim under § 1983, in addition to alleging defamation, plaintiff must allege that defamation occurred in course of termination of governmental employment or was coupled with deprivation of a legal right or status; deleterious effects which flow directly from sullied reputation, which include impact that defamation might have on job prospects, or romantic aspirations, friendships, self-esteem, or any other typical consequence of a bad reputation, would normally be insufficient to state claim. Houghton v. Cardone, W.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 268. Civil Rights 1038

To hold defendant liable for defamation-plus under § 1983, plaintiff must show that injury to reputation allegedly suffered as a result of defamatory statements was inflicted "in connection with" a federally protected right, or that alleged injury to reputation "caused the denial of" a federally protected right. Crowe v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 740. Civil Rights 1038

The constricture that damage to reputation is not actionable under § 1983 unless it is accompanied by some more tangible interests cannot be avoided by alleging that defamation by public official occurred in retaliation for exercise of First Amendment right. Guy v. State of Ill., N.D.Ill.1997, 958 F.Supp. 1300. Civil Rights 1038

Plaintiff's assertion of defamation claim based upon member of racing commission's alleged slanted, distorted, and untrue account of plaintiff's alleged involvement in fixed race at raceway and in fixing races in general did not allege general deprivation of federal or constitutional right as required to state civil rights cause of action. Cirasuola v. Westrin, E.D.Mich.1996, 915 F.Supp. 909, affirmed 124 F.3d 196. Civil Rights 1038

Publication by state university official of messages which referred to arrest and criminal charges against university employee and letter to students and their families on status of pending charges was not cognizable in § 1983 action. Boykin v. Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.1995, 893 F.Supp. 378, affirmed 91 F.3d 122, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 739, 519 U.S. 1078, 136 L.Ed.2d 678. Civil Rights 1126

Action for defamation cannot be transformed into federal claim under § 1983. Hodge v. Carroll County Dept. of Social Services, D.Md.1992, 812 F.Supp. 593, reversed in part, vacated in part 31 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1038

Rights to be free from defamation and invasion of privacy are not federally guaranteed rights, but rather, if they exist at all, are state rights; thus, they cannot form basis of § 1983 action. Brooks v. American Broadcasting Companies, Inc., N.D.Ohio 1990, 737 F.Supp. 431, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 932 F.2d 495 . Civil Rights 1040; Civil Rights 1038

Slander or defamation does not constitute basis upon which relief may be granted under § 1983. Solomon v. Dixon, E.D.N.C.1989, 724 F.Supp. 1193, affirmed 904 F.2d 701, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1038

Defamation by state official does not result in deprivation of "liberty" or "property" protected by Fourteenth Amendment, absent state law extending any legal guaranty of present enjoyment of one's reputation, beyond providing remedy and tort for damage thereto. Thomas v. News World Communications, D.D.C.1988, 681 F.Supp. 55. Constitutional Law 255(2); Constitutional Law 278(1.3)

Defamation and related common-law causes of action do not, standing alone, give rise to claim under this section. Stern v. Sommerville Communications Corp., E.D.Mich.1981, 529 F.Supp. 29. Civil Rights 1038

No action lies under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights for mere damage to reputation. In re Selcraig, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 705 F.2d 789. See, also, Estes v. Tuscaloosa County, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1983, 696 F.2d 898; Holladay v. State of Mont., D.C.Mont.1981, 506 F.Supp. 1317.

Publication of defamatory remarks, even where defendant is alleged to have made the statements with knowledge of their falsity, is outside the scope of the constitutionally protected right to privacy. Reilly v. Leonard, D.C.Conn.1978, 459 F.Supp. 291. Constitutional Law 82(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Defamatory statements and malicious conduct on the part of state officials do not standing alone, establish a constitutional violation for which relief may be obtained under this section. Christensen v. Rice, E.D.Wis.1978, 456 F.Supp. 419. Civil Rights 1038

A defamation does not become a deprivation of liberty merely because the defamer is an individual acting under color of state law, and a person so defamed is not entitled to any due process protections prior to the time that the alleged defamatory conduct takes place; instead, he must subsequently resort to state law remedies. Harris v. Harvey, E.D.Wis.1977, 436 F.Supp. 143. Constitutional Law 255(2)

Libel or slander by a state official, even if malicious, does not generate cause of action under this section, for the right to be free of defamation and to secure the redress for its infliction is within the province of state law and is not an incident of federal citizenship. Cook v. Brockway, N.D.Tex.1977, 424 F.Supp. 1046, affirmed 559 F.2d 1214. Civil Rights 1038

This section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law does not give rise to a cause of action for defamation. Weisser v. Medical Care Systems, Inc., D.C.Pa.1977, 432 F.Supp. 1292. See, also, Duff v. Sherlock, D.C.Pa.1977, 432 F.Supp. 423; Morris v. Danna, D.C.Minn.1976, 411 F.Supp. 1300, affirmed 547 F.2d 436; Everett v. City of Chester, D.C.Pa.1975, 391 F.Supp. 26; Hahn v. Sargent, D.C.Mass.1975, 388 F.Supp. 445, affirmed 523 F.2d 461, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1495, 425 U.S. 904, 47 L.Ed.2d 754; Jervey v. Martin, W.D.Va.1972, 336 F.Supp. 1350.

Defamation alone is not sufficient to create an action under § 1983. Lee v. Donnaruma, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 39, 2003 WL 21105326, Unreported. Civil Rights 1038

1598. ---- Equal protection, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegedly racially motivated campaign by county judge to discredit and damage city police lieutenant, which campaign was perpetrated under color of state law, constituted denial of equal protection and, hence, was cognizable under this section and was not outside its scope as a mere libel action. Harris v. Harvey, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1979, 605 F.2d 330, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1331, 445 U.S. 938, 63 L.Ed.2d 772. Civil Rights 1326(2); Constitutional Law 219.1

1599. ---- Business, contract, employment or status loss, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Any damage to reputation of applicant for landfill permit, arguably flowing from allegedly defamatory statements in district attorney's investigative report prepared in connection with application, that did not otherwise impinge on protected property interest, did not become redressable in federal civil rights claim simply because reputational damage was to business, and arguably might affect applicant's business relations with others and thus its business goodwill; injury to business goodwill that did not go beyond injury to business reputation was insufficient to satisfy requirement that constitutionally protected property interest be at stake. WMX Technologies, Inc. v. Miller, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 197 F.3d 367. Civil Rights 1038

Terminated basketball coach stated facts in complaint sufficient to establish that allegedly defamatory statements by university officials were made in course of termination, for purposes of his claim that officials deprived him of liberty interest without due process; seven to nine-day interval between termination and publication of statements did not attenuate temporal connection between statements and termination. Campanelli v. Bockrath, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1476, on remand 1997 WL 325422. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Local rule limiting release of information before and during criminal trial did not protect against loss of employment or business goodwill, and thus, could not be used as basis of defamation claim that prosecutor violated federal statutory right by making statements erroneously implying that arrestee was laundering illegally-gotten money. Aversa v. U.S., C.A.1 (R.I.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1200. Civil Rights 1038

Business and reputation losses alone do not constitute "plus" that is required to transform ordinary defamation claim into § 1983 claim. Buckey v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 968 F.2d 791, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 599, 506 U.S. 999, 121 L.Ed.2d 536, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 600, 506 U.S. 999, 121 L.Ed.2d 536. Civil Rights 1038

To extent that defamatory statements made by state prosecutor injured plaintiff's good will in business without due process of law, plaintiffs can recover for such injury in an action under this section. Marrero v. City of Hialeah, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 625 F.2d 499, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1353, 450 U.S. 913, 67 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1038

Mere fact that persons other than terminated probationary police officer, her supervisors, and persons to whom supervisors' disclosure of employment-related facts would have been privileged were aware that officer had been terminated due to allegation that she had tested positive for marijuana was insufficient to permit inference that supervisors had been responsible for disclosure, as required to permit officer to maintain defamation action under § 1983 against supervisors, in absence of any evidence that supervisors or their privileged confidants had disclosed reason for officer's termination to anyone. Ryan v. Carroll, S.D.N.Y.1999, 67 F.Supp.2d 356. Civil Rights 1405

Alleged harm to attorneys' in-state law practices resulting from accusations of criminal misconduct by public officials and private citizen did not amount to significant alteration of "some other right or status" so as to satisfy "stigma-plus" test and support due process claim premised on deprivation of liberty or property interest. McDonough v. O'Rourke, S.D.Fla.1995, 897 F.Supp. 1445. Constitutional Law 277(1); Constitutional Law 287.2(5); Libel And Slander 9(3)

Even if defendants who signed press release issued by Nevada conference of police and sheriffs acted under color of state law, conduct was not shown to have resulted in deprivation of constitutional rights on theory plaintiff was no longer "at liberty to interact with the community on the same level" as he used to because he had been labeled a gangster, or on theory plaintiff suffered deprivation of property interest because his clientele had dropped off due to his damaged reputation. Tate v. Lau, D.Nev.1994, 865 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1088(1)

When loss of employment was simply an extended and indirect consequence of defamation, tort claim under Massachusetts law, rather than § 1983 claim, was most appropriate route of recovery. Concannon v. Capuano, D.Mass.1994, 840 F.Supp. 178. Civil Rights 1320

Automobile salvager failed to prove "reputation plus" damages necessary to give rise to cognizable § 1983 civil rights claim for relief based on allegedly defamatory statements relating to police and grand jury investigations of his business operation, notwithstanding fact that his township towing privileges were temporarily revoked; salvager alleged that police chief revoked towing privileges to retaliate for salvager's failure to cooperate in investigation, not because chief believed that salvager was operating illegal salvage business, salvager did not have constitutionally protected interest in towing privileges, and salvager failed to establish that he suffered monetary or professional damages due to allegedly defamatory statements. Garner v. Township of Wrightstown, E.D.Pa.1993, 819 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 16 F.3d 403. Civil Rights 1038

Former township employee and his wife did not have right or status guaranteed by state law or Constitution which had been extinguished as result of any alleged harm to their reputations resulting from Attorney General investigation into alleged conflict of interest so as to state claim under § 1983 for violation of due process; fact that plaintiff was unable to obtain employment in his chosen field for almost two years following his voluntary resignation from government job after defendants made accusations of conflict of interest allegedly to derail his candidacy for public office was not evidence of lost right. Lahaza v. Azeff, E.D.Pa.1992, 790 F.Supp. 88. Constitutional Law 275(1)

State court judge's interest in his real property and his interest in continued employment in his chosen profession were, in combination, sufficient to establish "tangible interest" beyond defamation, and thus judge stated cause of action under § 1983 against newspaper and reporters that published allegedly erroneous representation that judge had committed misdemeanor by erecting barriers on public roadway. Lewis v. News-Press & Gazette Co., W.D.Mo.1992, 782 F.Supp. 1338. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Alleged conspiracy by members of county board of tax assessors to damage former chairman's reputation was not actionable under § 1983; damage to reputation, alone, was not deprivation of liberty or property interest, and chairman had no constitutionally protected property interest in position. Smith v. Turner, N.D.Ga.1991, 764 F.Supp. 632. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Plaintiff has no liberty or property interest in his reputation and, unless accompanied by tangible loss of privileges or benefits, reputational injury inflicted by state is not actionable under § 1983. Huffaker v. Bucks County Dist. Attorney's Office, E.D.Pa.1991, 758 F.Supp. 287. Civil Rights 1038; Constitutional Law 254.1; Constitutional Law 277(1)

An incorporator and director of not-for-profit corporation engaged in child protection activities did not have viable civil rights claim against public officials who purportedly defamed him in his work; although it was alleged that defamation would interfere with enforcement of child protection laws and limit career opportunities of director, there was no allegation that defamation had caused director to actually lose his position, as required to create harm to constitutionally protected right. Katz v. Molic, S.D.N.Y.1989, 727 F.Supp. 114, affirmed 909 F.2d 1473. Civil Rights 1038

Claims by manufacturer and distributor of Kosher food products that director of Kosher Law Enforcement Division of New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets deprived manufacturer of its property and liberty without due process of law, based on damage to its reputation, was insufficient to permit manufacturer to maintain § 1983 suit, absent damage to some more tangible interests. National Foods, Inc. v. Rubin, S.D.N.Y.1989, 727 F.Supp. 104. Civil Rights 1038

"Tangible injury" which, when combined with injury to reputation as result of defamation by public official, will be considered injury to a liberty or property interest protected by the due process clause does not include interference with business opportunity but only loss of employment, loss of government contract, or some other change of status vis-a-vis the governmental entity responsible for the defamatory remarks. Dower v. Dickinson, N.D.N.Y.1988, 700 F.Supp. 640. Constitutional Law 277(2); Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

For purposes of motion to dismiss, officers and employees of state agency violated information management company's Fourteenth Amendment liberty interest, after unilaterally terminating company's contract, by allegedly stating that company had been derelict in providing services to Colorado Medicaid program, leading to stigmatization and adverse effect on company's ability to secure contracts with governmental bodies. Computer Sciences Corp. v. Ibarra, D.Colo.1988, 685 F.Supp. 748. Constitutional Law 278.7(1)

Real estate developer, who was conditionally designated as developer of publicly owned land, pleaded a section 1983 claim for deprivation of liberty interest based on allegations that false charges were made against him by a city official which impaired his interest in his good name, reputation, honor or integrity and resulted in his de-designation. Waltentas v. Lipper, S.D.N.Y.1986, 636 F.Supp. 331. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Allegation that physician suffered loss of income caused by decrease in number of patient referrals made to him following censure of physician by hospital board was no more than claim for consequential damages resulting from injury to physician's reputation and thus, was not actionable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, absent allegation that decrease in referrals was caused by loss or alteration of legal status recognized and protected by state law. Chaudhry v. Prince George's County, Md., D.Md.1985, 626 F.Supp. 448. Civil Rights 1038

Plaintiff's claim of defamation properly stated a claim under this section, where complaint asserted that all defendants agreed to damage plaintiff's reputation and to defame his character and that as result plaintiff lost his business and suffered difficulty in finding suitable employment. Petrone v. City of Reading, E.D.Pa.1982, 541 F.Supp. 735. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1600. ---- False arrest and imprisonment, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

State's attorney's defamatory statements, which were alleged to have adversely influenced the prosecuting attorneys who were continuing § 1983 plaintiff's prosecution and the judicial tribunals hearing his case, implicated plaintiff's due process rights and elevated State's attorney's statements from defamation to a possible constitutional violation actionable under §§ 1983. Patterson v. Burge, N.D.Ill.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 878. Constitutional Law 257.5; District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

Even where libel is coupled with charge of false imprisonment against store personnel, there is no claim cognizable under provision of this section pertaining to deprivation of rights under color of state law. Stordahl v. Harrison, E.D.Va.1982, 542 F.Supp. 721. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Claim with respect to damage to plaintiff's reputation as a direct and proximate result of alleged unlawful act of defendant police officer in arresting plaintiff for disorderly conduct did not implicate any federally protected right and, hence, was not cognizable under this section. Zurek v. Woodbury, N.D.Ill.1978, 446 F.Supp. 1149. Civil Rights 1088(4)

1601. ---- Stigmatization, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

New York City community school board member who was removed by chancellor after other board members publicly charged her with harassment and terrorism stated claim for deprivation of "stigma-plus" liberty interest without procedural due process; combination of other board members' highly stigmatizing statements, which they sought to publicize in local news sources and which explicitly requested her removal, and chancellor's removal decision, the "plus," was sufficient. Velez v. Levy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 401 F.3d 75. Constitutional Law 278.5(1); Schools 53(5)

Alleged damage to plaintiffs' business reputation, and deprivation of the good will in their business as result of allegedly defamatory statements about the physical condition of their business made by city and its mayor, was not state-imposed burden necessary to support "stigma plus" civil rights claim; such harms were not in addition to the alleged defamation, but rather were direct deleterious effects of that defamation. Sadallah v. City of Utica, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 383 F.3d 34. Civil Rights 1038

Pro se civil rights plaintiff, who alleged that state employee defamed her in denying her license to operate day care facility by making false remarks to facility's owner insinuating that plaintiff and owner were intimately involved, failed to state claim for deprivation of liberty interest in her reputation; if statement were true, it was incapable of supporting § 1983 defamation claim, and if false, owner would have known it was false and, thus, it could not have stigmatized plaintiff. Whitney v. State of N.M., C.A.10 (N.M.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1170. Civil Rights 1038

Terminated university basketball coach stated facts in complaint sufficient to establish that university officials imposed stigma on him, for purposes of his claim that officials deprived him of liberty interest without due process by making negative public statements regarding his termination; coach alleged that official made statement to the effect that coach personally attacked his players to the point that they became physically ill and were in trouble psychologically, and that he was unable to find employment as college basketball coach as a result. Campanelli v. Bockrath, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1476, on remand 1997 WL 325422. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Corporation failed to state § 1983 action under stigma-plus test by claiming that stigma caused by allegedly defamatory remarks in report by district attorney to county board, which concluded there was connection between corporation and Mafia, plus injury to goodwill deprived them of liberty interest; at most corporation alleged injury to business reputation, and thus corporation had no distinct alteration or extinction of previously recognized right to add to alleged stigmatization. WMX Technologies, Inc. v. Miller, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 80 F.3d 1315, rehearing en banc granted 99 F.3d 289, on rehearing 104 F.3d 1133, on subsequent appeal 197 F.3d 367. Civil Rights 1038

Towing company whose towing assignments by New York State Police were terminated failed to establish deprivation of interest protected by due process on "stigma plus" theory where there was no showing of any dissemination of defendant police officers' stigmatizing statements sufficient to affect towing company's standing in the community or to foreclose future job opportunities. White Plains Towing Corp. v. Patterson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 991 F.2d 1049, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 185, 510 U.S. 865, 126 L.Ed.2d 144. Constitutional Law 276(2)

A psychologist made out a prima facie case that a liberty interest had been violated by the actions of the director of a publicly funded counselling service; the director acted under state law in suggesting to county and state agencies that the psychologist was not professionally qualified to handle cases and not only defamed psychologist but created a stigma that foreclosed his freedom to take advantage of other employment opportunities. Corbitt v. Andersen, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1985, 778 F.2d 1471. Civil Rights 1421

Stigmatization or reputational damage alone, no matter how egregious, is not sufficient to support cause of action under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights and in order to justify relief under liberty clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 via this section, claimant's alleged reputational damage must be entangled with some other tangible interests such as employment. McGhee v. Draper, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1981, 639 F.2d 639. Civil Rights 1038

Village police chief stated §§ 1983 "stigma-plus" claim based on county District Attorney's "negative and false public comments" which allegedly impugned chief's honesty, reliability and job performance, thereby causing loss of his job and hindering his ability to obtain other employment in the law enforcement field; DA's comments implicated chief's interest in pursuing his occupation, a form of liberty protected by due process. Hoffman v. Kelz, W.D.Wis.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1007. Municipal Corporations 182

Allegations by apartment complex owner that public statements by county officials linking complex with high incidence of crime caused damage to owner's business reputation, and a loss of business goodwill, and that statements were false, did not state a §§ 1983 stigma-plus due process claim against officials, absent assertions that owner suffered an additional deprivation of a legal right or status as result of the public statements. University Gardens Apartments Joint Venture v. Johnson, D.Md.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 733. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Denial of retired state court judge's application for appointment as judicial hearing officer did not stigmatize judge, as required for §§ 1983 claim that denial was violation of his constitutionally protected due process liberty interest. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Constitutional Law 278.4(2); Reference 39

Town manager could not recover from town, under § 1983, for deprivation of liberty interest based on defamation of town manager during public disciplinary hearings, absent showing that town manager was stigmatized in connection with denial of right or status previously recognized under state law. Koelsch v. Town of Amesbury, D.Mass.1994, 851 F.Supp. 497. Civil Rights 1126

To constitute a deprivation of liberty within U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, the stigmatizing information must be false and made public by the offending governmental entity during the course of the employment termination and must call into question plaintiff's good name, reputation, honor, or integrity. McCarthy v. Cortland County Community Action Program, Inc., N.D.N.Y.1980, 487 F.Supp. 333. Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

A plaintiff must allege loss of a property or a liberty interest arguably plausible under state law or Bill of Rights in order to state a federal claim for stigmatization of reputation; unless he alleges infringement of such interest in conjunction with injury to his reputation he will not state a claim for stigmatization under this section but, at most, a state law claim for defamation, libel or slander. Poirier v. Hodges, M.D.Fla.1978, 445 F.Supp. 838. Civil Rights 1394

To assert claim for fundamental due process under this section, one must meet the "stigma-plus" test, but, to do so, it is not necessary that plaintiff ultimately prevail on his claim to property interest or liberty interest; rather, plaintiff need only allege denial of property or liberty interest that is arguable or putatively plausible under state law or bill of rights, in order to allege as well a federal claim for stigmatization of reputation, good name or integrity. Tanner v. McCall, M.D.Fla.1977, 441 F.Supp. 503. Civil Rights 1394

Former employee who brought action against state parole division failed to establish that his discharge from probationary position without hearing deprived him of protected liberty interest, as required to maintain § 1983 claim for due process violation; employee was not stigmatized by his loss of employment, since reason for dismissal was not published to any third parties at time of action. Pagan v. New York State Div. of Parole, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22723013, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.4(5); Pardon And Parole 56

1602. ---- Prosecutors' comments, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Arrestee failed to state § 1983 claim against prosecutor for his alleged defamatory statements concerning arrestee at press conference announcing arrestee's indictment, notwithstanding contention that press conference aroused community against arrestee, increasing chance that court would order him imprisoned pending trial and reducing chance of acquittal; interest in reputation is not itself liberty or property interest for purposes of due process clause, press conference itself did not cause arrestee's detention, indictment was untainted by press conference, and arrestee did not identify any constitutional problem in detention hearing or trial. Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 20 F.3d 789, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 740, 513 U.S. 1085, 130 L.Ed.2d 642, on remand 1996 WL 10899. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Claim that defendant prosecuting attorney made continual, baseless accusations of criminal activity without filing any charges and made derogatory statements to the news media was not actionable under this section, in light of fact that the only injury involved in those allegations did not relate to a denial of a constitutional right, but merely to possible harm to plaintiffs' reputations. Kaylor v. Fields, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 661 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Alleged defamation through county prosecutor's letter to house committee with copies to press did not deprive plaintiff of any life or liberty guaranteed by due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and gave rise to no cause of action under this section. Walker v. Cahalan, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1976, 542 F.2d 681, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1647, 430 U.S. 966, 52 L.Ed.2d 357. Civil Rights 1038; Constitutional Law 255(2)

Alleged defamatory television comments by state prosecuting attorney constituted public comment falling within the civil immunity of a public official and, therefore, did not give rise to the requisite denial of due process to sustain a civil rights action against the state attorney. Wolf v. Carey, N.D.Ill.1977, 438 F.Supp. 545, affirmed 582 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1376(9)

1603. ---- Freedom of press, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Nursing home operator's civil rights claim for damages against newspaper reporter premised on the publication of misleading reports was barred by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 where the claim was not that the nursing home operator had been libeled but rather that he was deprived of constitutional rights because of the publication of information about him. Bergman v. Stein, S.D.N.Y.1975, 404 F.Supp. 287. Constitutional Law 90.1(8)

1604. ---- Attorneys as plaintiffs, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Attorney's claim that grand jury intentionally disseminated their report to injure his reputation without providing due process did not state claim under § 1983. DeCamp v. Douglas County Franklin Grand Jury, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1992, 978 F.2d 1047, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 3036, 509 U.S. 923, 125 L.Ed.2d 723. Civil Rights 1088(5)

White attorney's allegation, that newspaper and others placed "defamatory cloud" over his "employment opportunities" due to alleged falsities in newspaper articles about his representation of black persons, was insufficient to state deprivation of liberty or property interest, which would be necessary for attorney to state claim for denial of due process under federal civil rights statute; attorney's status as attorney and his existing legal rights had to be significantly altered before claim would arise. Phelps v. Wichita Eagle-Beacon, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 886 F.2d 1262. Civil Rights 1395(1)

1605. ---- Defendants in defamation actions, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Bringing of defamation suit by local board of education president did not provide defamation defendant with basis for civil rights suit under § 1983, although defamation defendant claimed that bringing the defamation suit infringed his First and Fourteenth Amendment rights by forcing him to endure burden and expense of defending himself in court for speaking. Jungherr v. San Francisco U.S.D. Bd. of Educ., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 923 F.2d 743, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 51, 502 U.S. 808, 116 L.Ed.2d 28. Civil Rights 1037

No state action was involved in bringing of libel action against black real estate developer, nor could state action be predicated on failure of state court to consider certain claims of black real estate developer in libel action; therefore, black real estate developer could not maintain 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 action against person allegedly defamed. Fleming v. Moore, C.A.4 (Va.) 1985, 780 F.2d 438, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1644, 475 U.S. 1123, 90 L.Ed.2d 189. Civil Rights 1326(9)

1606. ---- Miscellaneous claims, defamation, libel or slander, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

School district employee failed to show that school district made false statements that allegedly denied him his constitutionally-protected liberty interest in his reputation, honor, and integrity; although there was circumstantial evidence that third party heard something negative about employee, there was no evidence that school district made any of those statements or that those statements were false. Speziale v. Bethlehem Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 366. Constitutional Law 278.5(2.1); Schools 63(1)

Property owners who alleged only injury to their reputations as result of allegedly defamatory statements made by town employees following dispute regarding zoning and issuance of certificates of occupancy did not allege injury to protected liberty interest, and thus could not recover in § 1983 action based on defamation. Frooks v. Town of Cortlandt, S.D.N.Y.1998, 997 F.Supp. 438, affirmed 182 F.3d 899. Civil Rights 1038

Allegation in § 1983 civil rights action that liquor licensing board commissioners who voted to suspend restaurant's liquor license based on assault charge against owner had engaged in smear campaign to ruin owner's business was without merit, where only evidence in support of this claim was liquor board's issuance to local police of a notice of suspension which was the standard notice issued whenever a liquor license suspension was imposed; even if issuance of notice "caused" police to spread word that closing of restaurant was imminent, such dissemination of the suspension decision did not give rise to constitutional violation. D'Agostino v. New York State Liquor Authority, W.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 757, affirmed 104 F.3d 351. Civil Rights 1046

Private school which also sold packages to parents interested in educating their children at home had no § 1983 claim against school officials for deprivation of liberty and property interests in its reputation, in connection with truancy prosecutions of home schoolers. Clonlara, Inc. v. Runkel, E.D.Mich.1989, 722 F.Supp. 1442. Civil Rights 1038

State employees' allegedly defamatory statements did not violate company's due process rights, given that alleged defamation alone did not establish constitutional deprivation, and only injury alleged beyond harm to company's reputation was loss of sales of company's alcohol-infused gelatin product, which was indirect injury not actionable under Fourteenth Amendment. BPNC, Inc. v. Taft, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 525, 2005 WL 1993426, Unreported. States 112.2(1)

1607. Privacy, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally-- Generally

Under some circumstances there can be such a gross abuse of privacy as to amount to abridgement of fundamental constitutional guarantees. Baker v. Howard, C.A.9 (Or.) 1969, 419 F.2d 376. Constitutional Law 82(7)

Under Ohio law, decedent's surviving siblings sufficiently alleged that they had constitutionally protected privacy right to be free from photographer's unwarranted intrusion by taking pictures of decedent's body without family's permission, for purposes of § 1983 claim against county coroner and photographer alleging that siblings were denied privacy without due process; siblings had legitimate claim of entitlement to decedent's body and the right not to be embarrassed by exposure to public view of the decedent's remains for commercial purposes. Melton v. Board of County Com'rs of Hamilton County, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 859. Constitutional Law 82(7); Constitutional Law 274(5); Dead Bodies 9

Right to be free from unwanted publicity is protected, if at all, by the common law; and because it is not a federal right, an action under this section will not lie for its invasion. Reilly v. Leonard, D.C.Conn.1978, 459 F.Supp. 291. Civil Rights 1040

1608. ---- Bodily privacy, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Parolee had fundamental right to bodily privacy for purposes of qualified immunity defense in § 1983 civil rights suit against opposite-sex parole officer who entered stall while parolee was collecting urine sample. Sepulveda v. Ramirez, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 967 F.2d 1413, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 342, 510 U.S. 931, 126 L.Ed.2d 307, on remand. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Municipality was not liable, in §§ 1983 action, for violating Fourth Amendment privacy rights of female arrestee, allegedly subjected to strip search, through policy of authorizing strip searching when officer had reasonable suspicion that arrestee was threat to facility security. Beasley v. City of Sugar Land, S.D.Tex.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 524. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Counts alleging invasion of privacy arising out of school employee's observation of high school student in boys' restroom through two-way mirror failed to state cause of action under this section, where privacy allegedly invaded did not involve those zones of privacy which emanate from specific constitutional guarantees, nor did it deal with those substantive aspects of the U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 which are fundamental or implicit in concept of ordered liberty and privacy which plaintiff claimed to have been invaded and interest which plaintiff attempted to vindicate derived their legal foundations from traditional state tort law. Stern v. New Haven Community Schools, E.D.Mich.1981, 529 F.Supp. 31. Civil Rights 1395(2)

1609. ---- Confidential relationships, privacy, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Statute limiting disclosure of records of substance abuse programs does not create individual entitlements that can be enforced via § 1983, since the statute is a criminal prohibition and there is nothing in the text of the statute to indicate that Congress had in mind the creation of individual rights. Doe v. Broderick, C.A.4 (Va.) 2000, 225 F.3d 440. Civil Rights 1040

Catholic priest failed to state claim for deprivation of his constitutional right of privacy by violation of agreement to keep identity and whereabouts of men depicted on video engaging in sex with him; release of names and addresses of men alone did not involve intimate details of priest's life to implicate any privacy interests. Cinel v. Connick, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1338, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 189, 513 U.S. 868, 130 L.Ed.2d 122. Constitutional Law 82(10)

Violations of confidentiality right of privacy may be actionable under § 1983. Scheetz v. The Morning Call, Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 946 F.2d 202, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1171, 502 U.S. 1095, 117 L.Ed.2d 417. Civil Rights 1040

Plaintiff infected with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) had constitutional right to privacy which encompassed nondisclosure of her HIV status. Doe v. Town of Plymouth, D.Mass.1993, 825 F.Supp. 1102. Constitutional Law 82(7)

Mental health professionals did not violate patient's substantive due process right to privacy, as needed for patient to prevail on § 1983 civil rights claim, by disclosing patient's threats to kill co-workers to law enforcement personnel and one of individuals threatened, even if disclosure violated Pennsylvania Mental Health Procedures Act, since state's interest in protecting citizens from violent assault was sufficiently strong to outweigh patient's interest in maintaining confidentiality of psychiatric records. Ms. B. v. Montgomery County Emergency Service, Inc., E.D.Pa.1992, 799 F.Supp. 534, affirmed 989 F.2d 488, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 174, 510 U.S. 860, 126 L.Ed.2d 133. Constitutional Law 274(5); Mental Health 21

Police officer violated family members' Fourteenth Amendment privacy rights by publicly disclosing that husband/father was infected with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) virus; medical evidence available at time of disclosure conclusively established that AIDS was not transmitted by casual contact, and there had not even been casual contact with those to whom disclosure was made. Doe v. Borough of Barrington, D.N.J.1990, 729 F.Supp. 376. Constitutional Law 274(5); Municipal Corporations 189(1)

Asserted right to privacy in psychiatrist patient relationship was not supported by Constitution or any federal law and afforded no basis for civil rights attack on C.G.S.A. § 19-48A compelling practitioners of healing arts to report names of, and other information about, drug-dependent persons to Commissioner of Health. Felber v. Foote, D.C.Conn.1970, 321 F.Supp. 85. Chemical Dependents 2; Constitutional Law 82(7)

1610. ---- Media disclosures, privacy, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Crime victim's privacy interest in preventing dissemination of confidential and intimate details of rape perpetrated against her outweighed state's interest in releasing the details, absent any valid law enforcement-related justification for disseminating the details of the rape at the time of sheriff's press conference, and, thus, victim and her husband raised cognizable privacy claim under § 1983, based on allegations that sheriff violated their right to privacy by publicly revealing details of the rape, in retaliation for plaintiffs' publicly criticizing sheriff's investigation of the case. Bloch v. Ribar, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1998, 156 F.3d 673. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Attorney's allegation, that newspaper and others violated Kansas Supreme Court Rule when sealed information had been leaked to newspaper, did not state violation of right protected by federal civil rights statute. Phelps v. Wichita Eagle-Beacon, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 886 F.2d 1262. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Plaintiff's invasion of privacy claim did not rise to constitutional dimensions, where it was based on front page newspaper article which identified plaintiff by name as welfare recipient and as former dancer at local nightclub and which included statements from doctor about plaintiff's disabled status, the amount of public assistance received by him, time when he received assistance and number of details surrounding circumstances under which assistance was paid. Morris v. Danna, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1977, 547 F.2d 436. Constitutional Law 82(7)

Since substantial information regarding federal prisoner's mental competency was a matter of public record by virtue of court order for psychiatric examination to determine competency to stand trial and judge's reading portions of psychiatric report in open court and newspaper article concerning the report contained little if anything not generally disclosed in open court, publication of portions of the report which were not read in open court did not support a claim for invasion of any constitutional right of privacy. McNally v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 532 F.2d 69, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 150, 429 U.S. 855, 50 L.Ed.2d 131. Constitutional Law 82(13)

1611. ---- State privacy rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Although issues of state law can arise in federal substantive due process analysis, § 1983 violation cannot be based solely on alleged violation of state privacy rights. Pesce v. J. Sterling Morton High School, Dist. 201, Cook County, IL, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 830 F.2d 789. Civil Rights 1040

1612. ---- Miscellaneous claims, privacy, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Allegations by city employee that director of city agency employer unlawfully disclosed employee's name, address, work schedule, and social security number during an employment hearing before the agency did not state §§ 1983 claim for violation of employee's privacy rights; information allegedly disclosed was not highly personal, it was related to public employment, and it was presented during employee's own hearing. Pennyfeather v. Tessler, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 431 F.3d 54. Civil Rights 1126

Allegations by crop duster that sheriff drove his vehicle directly into path of airplane to create a violation of Louisiana pesticide laws, which the Louisiana Department of Agriculture used to prosecute crop duster, were insufficient to show that crop duster had legitimate expectation of privacy in area of alleged search, and thus, crop duster failed to state § 1983 cause of action against sheriff for a violation of Fourth Amendment; crop duster did not own the field that sheriff inspected for pesticide use. Johnson v. Louisiana Dept. of Agriculture, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 18 F.3d 318, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Catholic priest failed to state claim for violation of his constitutional right of privacy against district attorney, assistant district attorney, and investigator from release to church and another private litigant of sexually oriented material found in his room, where church had viewed materials before giving them to district attorney's office, and other private litigant had participated in making videotape. Cinel v. Connick, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1338, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 189, 513 U.S. 868, 130 L.Ed.2d 122. Constitutional Law 82(10)

Wife of police union official could not recover under § 1983 for invasion of privacy based on radio talk show program in which mayor's administrative assistant asked union official whether union's recent criticism of mayor was because official's wife had not qualified for position as police officer; disclosures, although exhibiting poor judgment and lack of sensitivity, neither involved fundamental rights nor addressed highly personal medical or financial information. Alexander v. Peffer, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1993, 993 F.2d 1348. Civil Rights 1040

Where independent consumer reporting firm obtained information about which plaintiff complained merely by searching its own files containing a summary of its own private reports on plaintiff, any intrusion giving rise to cause of action for invasion of plaintiff's privacy had to stem from fact that the firm collected and retained information concerning plaintiff's past insurance history. Tureen v. Equifax, Inc., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1978, 571 F.2d 411. Torts 341

City employees did not have objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in their offices, maintenance shop, lift station, weld shop, and various other open areas of their workplace that would support claim that surveillance of those areas violated their civil rights under the Fourth Amendment. Williams v. City of Tulsa, OK, N.D.Okla.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1124. Searches And Seizures 26

Federal statutes mandating confidentiality of drug abuse and mental health records in federally regulated or funded programs did not require school district to maintain confidentiality of its staff members' knowledge of students' pregnancies, i.e. did not preclude district's adoption of policy generally requiring parental notification of such pregnancies, especially given applicability of Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA). Port Washington Teachers' Ass'n v. Board of Educ. of Port Washington Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2005, 361 F.Supp.2d 69. Schools 157

Student and his parents failed to show that communications between school social worker, guidance counselor, and assistant superintendent regarding student's history of sexual abuse while testing to see if student was emotionally disturbed within meaning of IDEA, which would have qualified student for special education services, violated student's right to privacy, as required to support §§ 1983 action against school officials and district; school officials had substantial interest in setting forth all relevant details about events which were likely to have impacted student's emotional well-being during evaluation of student's emotional state and all communications occurred during course of evaluation. N.C. ex rel. M.C. v. Bedford Central School Dist., S.D.N.Y.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 32. Constitutional Law 82(12); Schools 148(3)

Allowing noninvestigating officers in sheriff's department to view surveillance videotape of attorney and client's sexual activities was not an unconstitutional invasion of attorney's privacy in violation of his substantive due process rights; video contained not just documentation of attorney's private sexual conduct, but of his alleged criminal activity in trading sexual favors for a reduction in legal fees, and the videotape was destined to become public inasmuch as it was evidence to be used, and was in fact used, in the criminal prosecution of attorney. Cawood v. Haggard, E.D.Tenn.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 863, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 700, 2005 WL 773946. Constitutional Law 274(5); Sheriffs And Constables 100

County's dissemination to individual county officials of psychologist's report containing conclusion that police officer had impaired judgment was not actionable as invasion of privacy in officer's § 1983 due process suit against county, since report did not concern reproduction, contraception, abortion, or marriage. Mansoor v. County of Albemarle, W.D.Va.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 367. Constitutional Law 278.4(1); Counties 67

Postal customer did not have objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in address card filed with postal service in connection with her postal box, since information was voluntarily provided and exposed to postal employees in ordinary course of business, or in her address itself, and thus federal agents did not engage in unreasonable search for Fourth Amendment purposes, which might have subjected them to Bivens liability, when they examined her postal registration card. Wesley v. Don Stein Buick, Inc., D.Kan.1997, 985 F.Supp. 1288, vacated in part 996 F.Supp. 1299. Postal Service 47

Bus passenger who had brought action against transit authority in connection with which authority had placed passenger under surveillance to determine if passenger's injuries were as severe as she claimed could not recover in federal civil rights action based on alleged violation of passenger's constitutional right to privacy where all surveillance occurred in public places in which passenger had no reasonable expectation of privacy and passenger offered no evidence to support assertion that surveillance amounted to unconstitutional invasion of her mind. Frazier v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1995, 907 F.Supp. 116, affirmed 91 F.3d 123. Civil Rights 1040

Plaintiffs in § 1983 action failed to meet burden of proving that action taken by Nevada conference of police and sheriffs, which issued press release signed by defendants and in which plaintiff was called a "biggot," was under pretense of state law. Tate v. Lau, D.Nev.1994, 865 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Abandoned automobile salvager failed to state cognizable § 1983 right to relief based on disclosure that his business operations were implicated in police and grand jury investigations, regardless of whether investigation was properly initiated; alleged disclosure fell within ambit of public information in which salvager did not have constitutional privacy interest. Garner v. Township of Wrightstown, E.D.Pa.1993, 819 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 16 F.3d 403. Civil Rights 1088(1)

City dispatcher had no reasonable expectation of privacy with respect to personal phone call made during work hours which she erroneously believed was unrecorded, given nature of her employment and work environment and given that telephone calls were routinely reviewed. Hart v. Clearfield City, Davis County, D.Utah 1993, 815 F.Supp. 1544. Constitutional Law 82(11); Telecommunications 1440

For purposes of his federal civil rights claim, property owner's constitutionally protected right of privacy was not violated by act of flying over property in helicopter, particularly as property was in rural setting rather than in urban subdivision. Darvoe v. Town of Trenton, N.D.N.Y.1992, 785 F.Supp. 305, affirmed 979 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1071; Constitutional Law 82(6.1)

Requirement that husband produce joint income tax returns in connection with proceeding to enforce judgment for child support did not violate privacy rights of either husband or his wife, and their action under this section was thus properly dismissed. O'Sullivan v. Saperston, S.D.N.Y.1984, 587 F.Supp. 1041. Civil Rights 1040; Civil Rights 1057

Neither juvenile offender nor his younger brother had constitutionally protected right to confidentiality in offender's records, and thus could not claim that city's release of records to scientists conducting psychiatric study of offenders' brothers violated right to privacy. Johnson ex rel. Johnson v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22743675, Unreported. Constitutional Law 82(7); Infants 133

1613. Travel rights, deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights generally

Acting Chief of Immigration and Naturalization Office for Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) violated suspect's liberty interest in international travel by taking away suspect's passport without giving suspect either predeprivation or postdeprivation hearing. DeNieva v. Reyes, C.A.9 (N. Mariana Islands)1992, 966 F.2d 480. Aliens 51.5; Constitutional Law 274.3

Alleged violation of petitioner's right to travel unimpeded as a result of the use of a drug courier profile in his state criminal prosecution could not form a basis for habeas corpus relief; such claim was cognizable only upon an action for damages and injunctive relief based on this section. Wolkind v. Selph, E.D.Va.1979, 473 F.Supp. 675, on reconsideration 495 F.Supp. 507, affirmed 649 F.2d 865. Habeas Corpus 461

1641. Deprivation of education rights generally

Public high school students have substantive and procedural rights while at school. Wood v. Strickland, U.S.Ark.1975, 95 S.Ct. 992, 420 U.S. 308, 43 L.Ed.2d 214, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 1589, 421 U.S. 921, 43 L.Ed.2d 790, on remand 519 F.2d 744. Schools 169

Claims under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) may be actionable under § 1983. Ridgewood Bd. of Educ. v. N.E. ex rel. M.E., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1999, 172 F.3d 238. Civil Rights 1069

Federal court should be loathe to intrude into internal school affairs. Megill v. Board of Regents of State of Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 541 F.2d 1073. Colleges And Universities 10

School district's alleged "retaliation" against parents of disabled student could not support claim under §§1983, where parents failed to identify a constitutional or statutory provision that was violated by the alleged retaliation. Alex G. ex el. Stephen G. v. Board of Trustees of Davis Joint Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1315. Civil Rights 1069

IDEA violations can be the predicate for a § 1983 claim based on those statutory violations. R.S. v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 23. Civil Rights 1069

Claim against state university under Title IX does not preempt plaintiff's enforcement of independent constitutional rights under § 1983 where both claims arise from same underlying conduct. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 1309

To prevail in action against school district under § 1983 on negligent hiring theory, where underlying claim is based on district employee's violation of student's constitutional right, student must show that district was deliberately indifferent to risk that violation of particular constitutional right at issue would follow decision to hire employee, or in other words, that employee was highly likely to inflict particular injuries suffered by student. Doe v. Granbury I.S.D., N.D.Tex.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 667. Civil Rights 1352(2)

1642. Right to education, deprivation of education rights

While there is legal entitlement to public education provided by state, free from impairment of protected liberties, there is no requirement under paramount law to receive public education on special terms and conditions designed by student. Ouimette v. Babbie, D.C.Vt.1975, 405 F.Supp. 525. Schools 148(1)

1642A. No Child Left Behind Act, deprivation of education rights

Provisions of the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLBA), requiring local educational agencies to notify parents of students enrolled in schools that were identified for "school improvement" "corrective action" or "restructuring" of such identification and students' rights to transfer to different schools, and to offer supplemental educational services (SES) to certain students, did not create individual rights that were enforceable under § 1983. Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. New York City Dept. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 338 . Civil Rights 127.1

1643. Property interest, deprivation of education rights

Private vocational school, as indirect beneficiary of the Higher Education Act and the Act's student loan programs, did not have protected liberty or property interest on which to base its procedural due process claim for alleged violation of the Act, and thus did not have basis for § 1983 claim. Dumas v. Kipp, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 90 F.3d 386. Colleges And Universities 9.25(2); Constitutional Law 278.5(1)

Physician who had been accepted into university hospital's graduate residency program in dermatology failed to state § 1983 claim against university hospital, university, and university and hospital officials for infringement of property interest in pursuit of continuance of her graduate medical education when hospital discontinued its dermatology residency program before physician could enter program; physician only had abstract type of unilateral expectation which was insufficient to constitute a property interest protected by Fourteenth Amendment. Unger v. National Residents Matching Program, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 928 F.2d 1392, rehearing denied. Colleges And Universities 9.35(1); Constitutional Law 277(1)

1644. Administrative procedure, deprivation of education rights

Action under this section is not a plenary review of a challenged school administrative procedure. Whitsel v. Southeast Local School Dist., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1973, 484 F.2d 1222, 71 O.O.2d 381.

Likelihood of prevailing on merits requirement, for preliminary injunction requiring reinstatement of high school student suspended for disruptive conduct, was not satisfied by claim that student's procedural due process rights were violated when suspension did not follow school regulations, as required by state statute; noncompliance with procedures was insufficient grounds for due process violation, and in any event same suspension would have resulted if regulations had been observed. J.S. ex rel. Duck v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 675. Civil Rights 1457(3)

1645. Administrators, deprivation of education rights

Disabled student could not recover against school officials under § 1983 for failure to provide a free appropriate public education as required by the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), absent evidence that school board's policy was to ignore the responsibilities imposed by IDEA, as opposed to failing to fulfill its responsibilities. Ridgewood Bd. of Educ. v. N.E. ex rel. M.E., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1999, 172 F.3d 238. Civil Rights 1069

This section is not a vehicle for federal court correction of errors which have been committed by school administrators in exercise of their discretion and which do not rise to level of violation of specific constitutional guarantees. Prebble v. Brodrick, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1976, 535 F.2d 605. Civil Rights 1060

To prevail on § 1983 claim that corporate manager of public charter school created a culture in which expressions of Christian belief were tolerated and even encouraged, and through failure to restrain or correct the resulting excesses, tacitly approved them, parents of school's students had to show that the need for corrective action was so obvious that manager's and school's conscious decision not to act was tantamount to a policy of deliberate indifference to plaintiffs' constitutional rights, and that this policy or custom of deliberate indifference was the 1646. Admissions, deprivation of education rights--Generally

Issue of constitutionality of requirement, for admission to university study program, that applicant possess JD or equivalent degree from law school accredited by American Bar Association did not turn on plaintiff's personal credentials but, rather, upon whether any state of facts reasonably could be conceived to justify challenged admissions standard, and, course of study being a graduate course, and admission requirement was reasonable and justifiable and thus not violative of equal protection. Pappanastos v. Board of Trustees of University of Alabama., C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 615 F.2d 219. Colleges And Universities 9.15; Constitutional Law 242.2(5.1)

1647. ---- Racial discrimination, admissions, deprivation of education rights

Even though university improperly considered race of its applicants for Ph.D. program in counseling psychology, unsuccessful white applicant suffered no cognizable injury warranting relief under § 1983, where students ultimately admitted to program had credentials that admissions committee considered superior to plaintiff's, so that plaintiff would have been rejected even under race-neutral policy. Texas v. Lesage, U.S.Tex.1999, 120 S.Ct. 467, 528 U.S. 18, 164 A.L.R. Fed. 785, 145 L.Ed.2d 347. Civil Rights 1061

Where law school admissions committee gave individual consideration to application submitted by black applicant, considered applicant's entire educational experience but rejected application of applicant whose academic credentials placed him in bottom one percent of all applicants to law school, black applicant could not recover in civil rights suit alleging that he was denied admission to law school because of his race. Henderson v. Florida Bd. of Regents of Division of Universities of Dept. of Ed., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 569 F.2d 1309. Civil Rights 1061

1648. Alcoholic beverages, deprivation of education rights

School regulation, properly construed, prohibited use and possession of beverages containing any alcohol, rather than only beverages containing in excess of a certain alcoholic content, and accordingly, in view of students' admission that they intended to "spike" the punch at school function and that they mixed malt liquor into the punch that was served, there was no absence of evidence before the school board to prove the charge against the students. Wood v. Strickland, U.S.Ark.1975, 95 S.Ct. 992, 420 U.S. 308, 43 L.Ed.2d 214, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 1589, 421 U.S. 921, 43 L.Ed.2d 790, on remand 519 F.2d 744. Schools 177

1649. Armbands, buttons and insignia, deprivation of education rights

In absence of demonstration of any facts which might reasonably have led school authorities to forecast substantial disruption of, or material interference with, school activities or any showing that disturbances or disorders on school premises in fact occurred when students wore on their sleeves black armbands to exhibit their disapproval of Vietnam hostilities, regulation, adopted by school principals, prohibiting wearing armbands in schools and providing for suspension of any student refusing to remove such was an unconstitutional denial of students' right of expression of opinion. Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist., U.S.Iowa 1969, 89 S.Ct. 733, 393 U.S. 503, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, 49 O.O.2d 222. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4)

1650. Acts of other students, deprivation of education rights

Montana high school's lax building access policy, even if negligent, was not proximate cause of male students' scheme to videotape female students' locker room, and thus did not amount to type of deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of videotaped female students that would support imposition of §§ 1983 liability; scheme was not reasonably foreseeable consequence of policy. School district defendants had no constitutional duty to protect school children from acts of other students. Garza v. Galena Park Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1994, 914 F.Supp. 1437. Schools 89.11(1)

1651. Acts of self, deprivation of education rights

School board did not, for § 1983 purposes, assume affirmative due process duty to prevent junior high school student from committing suicide at home after he attempted to do so at school, even though, when third party informed school official of student's suicide attempt at school, official said he would "take care" of situation, and even though third party testified that, absent official's assurance, third party would have called student's mother directly; school did not "affirmatively prevent" mother from saving student's life, as official did not prevent third party from calling mother, but rather, third party herself chose not to do so. Wyke v. Polk County School Bd., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 129 F.3d 560, certified question withdrawn 137 F.3d 1292. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 89.2

1652. Acts of nonstudents, deprivation of education rights

Even assuming constitutional soundness of state-created danger theory for imposing § 1983 liability, no claim was stated in connection with death of high school student hit in head by stray bullet shot by nonstudent during melee; it was questionable whether high school environment was "dangerous," it could not be inferred that school officials were actually aware of high risk that nonstudent invader would enter campus and fire pistol randomly during school hours, and even if deployment of security measures such as identification badges and metal detectors was haphazard or negligent, deliberate indifference could not be inferred. Johnson v. Dallas Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 38 F.3d 198, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1361, 514 U.S. 1017, 131 L.Ed.2d 218. Civil Rights 1065

Allegation that teacher's assistant failed to prevent or report fifth-grade teacher's alleged sexual abuse of female student was not sufficient to support §§ 1983 claim based on violation of student's substantive due process right to bodily integrity; assistant had no authority to take action against teacher. Doe v. D'Agostino, D.Mass.2005, 367 F.Supp.2d 157. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 147

Comments that school lunchroom monitor allegedly made in presence of another monitor regarding Asian-American elementary student, which included referring to student's "crazy lies" about his reports of racial harassment by other pupils, calling him a "freakin' Chinese liar," and describing student's family as "crazy," were not sufficiently extreme or egregious so as to shock the conscience, and thus, monitor was not liable under § 1983 for allegedly violating student's right to due process; portions of comments were amenable to race-neutral interpretations and were asserted in private conversation rather than directed toward student, and comments were made during single incident. Yap v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 284. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 63(3)

1652A. ---- Acts of teachers and staff, acts of nonstudents, deprivation of education rights

School district could be liable on student's §§ 1983 claim, alleging that school district was deliberately indifferent to his physical and emotional integrity by repeatedly failing to take remedial action to prevent teacher's sexual molestation of young male students, only if student established by a preponderance of the evidence each of the following: (1) the existence of a clear and persistent pattern of sexual abuse or a substantial risk of sexual abuse by a school employee; (2) notice of such pattern, or substantial risk, of sexual abuse on the part of the school district; (3) the school district was deliberately indifferent to known facts which demonstrated an unreasonable risk to the safety of student; and (4) that the school district's deliberate indifference was a moving force or was a direct causal link in the constitutional deprivation. 1653. Assaults by other students, deprivation of education rights--Generally

Student could not maintain equal protection claim against school district based on district's alleged failure to take steps to eradicate hostile environment created by fellow student who was allegedly sexually harassing and assaulting plaintiff student, absent any allegation that district engaged in official policy of deliberate indifference to sexual harassment, or that principal or teachers involved possessed final policymaking authority; acts of sexual harassment by a student directed solely at plaintiff did not demonstrate a custom or policy of district to be deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment as a general matter. Murrell v. School Dist. No. 1, Denver, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1999, 186 F.3d 1238. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Homosexual student could not maintain § 1983 claim that school officials violated his right to due process by acting with deliberate indifference in maintaining policy or practice of failing to punish students who harassed and harmed student, based on his sexual orientation, thereby encouraging harmful environment; even if state actor could be liable for intentionally adopting policy that encouraged one private actor to harm another, officials had no duty to act to protect student and thus could not be held liable for such failure. Nabozny v. Podlesny, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 92 F.3d 446. Civil Rights 1068

School district did not owe duty of care to assaulted high school student under Fourteenth Amendment based on state-created danger theory; evidence of generally dangerous school environment did not make it foreseeable that student would receive punch intended for someone else, school's allegedly inadequate security was at most result of negligence, and school's conduct did not create foreseeable risk that student would suffer harm that actually occurred. Mohammed ex rel. Mohammed v. School Dist. of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 779. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 89.11(1)

School did not create danger by placing junior high special education student in detention with nonspecial education students for purposes of § 1983 action brought against school by estate of special education student who, following detention, was chased off school grounds by nonspecial education students and, in attempt to flee his pursuers, either slipped or was forced into stream where he drowned; there was no evidence that special education student would be attacked and pursued after detention period ended by nonspecial education students, only notice that school had of any danger to special education student was incident which occurred the day before which led to him being detained after school, and unwarranted assault against special education student was perpetrated by private individuals off school property and after school was over for the day. Public school district did not have "special relationship" with high school student needed to impose liability in § 1983 civil rights suit for preventing other students from harassing and assaulting student. Elliott v. New Miami Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ohio 1992, 799 F.Supp. 818. Civil Rights 1064; Civil Rights 1065

Elementary student's allegations of 17 incidents of physical and verbal abuse by other students and of school officials' failure to prevent continuing attacks and abuse stated duty to student and § 1983 claim; repeated negligence could be considered as rising to level of deliberate indifference to affirmative duty. School district was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 for failure to train high school cheerleading advisor, even though advisor failed to follow district guidelines in investigating allegation that cheerleaders had consumed alcohol before school event, where advisor attended two-day orientation seminar when she began her employment, at which time she received training on student code of conduct and district's discipline code, received written materials about state guidelines, and attended meeting for coaches to receive training on discipline code and student code of conduct. Jennings v. Wentzville R-IV School Dist., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 397 F.3d 1118. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Former scholarship athlete enjoyed no right under Constitution nor under state law to maintain his position either as first or second string defensive back or as first string punter, and demotion from such positions was not "grievous loss" for purposes of this section, and thus demotion of athlete could not be basis for a claim under this section. Hall v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, N.D.Ill.1997, 985 F.Supp. 782. Civil Rights 1063

Black football players did not have property interest in contractual rights to play football for university, but only had property right in scholarship funds, and accordingly, university and its officials were not liable in action under civil rights statute, where football players were not deprived of funds they were entitled to under scholarship agreements, on theory university and officials deprived football players of property right without due process. 1662. Board of Education, deprivation of education rights--Generally

Actions of city, county, and board of public education in deliberately choosing to build school building directly beneath high voltage conductor line, deliberately delaying removal of line, and willfully disregarding very high risk thereby created to contractor's employees, even if gross negligence, were insufficient to constitute constitutional violation, and thus, contractor's employee who was injured by contact with conductor line while constructing school building could not recover against governmental units under § 1983; governmental units' actions clearly did not constitute arbitrary conduct intentionally designed to punish someone but merely nonintentional torts. Lewellen v. Causation requirement was unsatisfied in § 1983 suit brought by unsuccessful female candidate for county board of education vacancy against district attorney and foreman of grand jury that was charged with providing recommendations for filling vacancy, alleging that defendants' expressed interest in recommending male candidates constituted sex discrimination in violation of equal protection; various acts intervened to destroy any causal link, including votes of independent grand jurors and final approval by independent state judge, and no coercion or extraordinary influence was shown. Dixon v. Burke County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2002, 303 F.3d 1271. Civil Rights 1067(5); Civil Rights 1088(1)

To be entitled to a special exemption from the categorical remedial language of this section in a case in which his action has violated a student's constitutional rights, a school board member, who has voluntarily undertaken the task of supervising the operation of the school and the activities of the students, must be held to a standard of conduct based not only on permissible intentions, but also on knowledge of the basic, unquestioned constitutional rights of his charges. Sullivan v. Meade Independent School Dist. No. 101, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1976, 530 F.2d 799.

Eighth grade student who was sexually involved with her basketball coach failed to prove deprivation of constitutionally protected right, as required to recover under § 1983 against school board members; no member was aware of affair before middle school principal (nonparty) became aware, confronted coach, and fired him and, despite student's sweeping generalizations regarding members' knowledge of coach's incidents with other students, evidence showed only that one member was told of rumored relationship, but was told by superintendent that matter had been handled, that second member knew that coach had made some comment about taking member's daughter dancing after she graduated, but that member did not think it to be threat or anything serious, and there was no evidence of any relationship between coach and third student or that any defendant was aware of that alleged relationship. Title IX, prohibiting gender discrimination in educational programs by institutions receiving federal funding, provided sufficient relief to complainants to preclude §§ 1983 suit against school officials who allegedly failed to prevent or adequately respond to fifth-grade teacher's alleged harassment of female students. In § 1983 action, mandatory state law child abuse reporting requirements furnish plausible basis for jury to find deliberate indifference on part of defendant who fails to report suspected child abuse. Zappala v. Albicelli, N.D.N.Y.1997, 980 F.Supp. 635, affirmed 173 F.3d 848. Civil Rights 1057

Parents' admitted refusal to allow son to attend high school on days he did not first complete his home chores and parents' practice of handcuffing son were reasonably considered to be probable cause to believe that son was being subjected to form of neglect or abuse arguably prohibited by state law, so that school officials were obligated by statute to report any observed information about suspected neglect of son and division of family services was required to undertake thorough investigation, which would reasonably include interview with son, and failure to inform parents of interview did not violate their constitutional rights to privacy, to due process, to control education of their son, or to exist as a family. Doe A v. Special School Dist. of St. Louis County, E.D.Mo.1986, 637 F.Supp. 1138. Schools 89.13(1)

1665. Child care, deprivation of education rights

Fact that effects of challenged "policy" regarding child care in community college district did not fall exclusively upon women but affected as well men with child-rearing responsibilities did not bar suit by four young women who were burdened with problems of child rearing and who alleged that lack of campus child care facilities deprived them of equal educational opportunities. De La Cruz v. Tormey, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1978, 582 F.2d 45, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 2416, 441 U.S. 965, 60 L.Ed.2d 1072. Constitutional Law 42.2(2)

1666. Children with disabilities, deprivation of education rights

Disabled infants could bring, under § 1983, class action suit against state officials, alleging that state was not complying with early intervention requirements of Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA); IDEA's early intervention provisions created enforceable rights, and IDEA did not preclude remedy of suits under § 1983. Marie O. v. Edgar, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 131 F.3d 610. Civil Rights 1069

Parents of disabled student failed to state claim against school district under Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), and thus could not maintain action against school district under § 1983 based upon alleged IDEA violations; parents' complaint requested only monetary damages, facts of case precluded possibility of compensatory services or reimbursement for such services, parents refused district's offer to provide remainder of tutoring required under student's educational program, and parents' counsel conceded at oral argument that relief in form of damages was not available and that she was bringing claim on principle. Hoekstra By and Through Hoekstra v. Independent School Dist. No. 283, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 624, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1852, 520 U.S. 1244, 137 L.Ed.2d 1054. Civil Rights 1069; Schools 155.5(5)

IDEA confers right upon disabled children, enforceable under §§ 1983, to free appropriate public education. Schmelzer ex rel. Schmelzer v. New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 363 F.Supp.2d 453. Civil Rights 1069; Schools 148(2.1)

Section 1983 is available as remedy when state refuses to grant benefits provided by federal law, including right to enforce "stay-put" provision of IDEA. J.D. v. Manatee County School Bd., M.D.Fla.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 1316. Schools 155.5(2.1)

Complaint failed to allege existence of special circumstances that school district's conduct in violation of the IDEA was persistently egregious and prevented disabled student from securing equitable relief, or that district's custom or practices gave rise to IDEA violations alleged, as required to state § 1983 claim based on district's failure to provide child with free and appropriate public education (FAPE) pursuant to the IDEA; even though complaint alleged that district inappropriately denied a FAPE by failing to conduct reevaluations of child and by providing an inadequate review process, complaint did not include sufficient factual basis for the allegation of a municipal policy or custom. R.S. v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 23. Civil Rights 1395(2)

There were no violations of § 1983 with respect to education provided educationally disabled student where there was no underlying violation of IDEA or federal disability statutes. McGraw v. Board of Educ. of Montgomery County, D.Md.1997, 952 F.Supp. 248.

Texas school district did not violate handicapped student's civil rights through its alleged failure to provide adequate education for her, absent allegation or evidence that instructors failed to adequately administer program based on bias or prejudice because student was handicapped. School Dist., S.D.Tex.1990, 737 F.Supp. 386. Schools 148(2.1)

Insofar as complaint alleged that state of New York provided educational services to nonhandicapped students beyond those required by Education to the Handicapped Act [20 U.S.C.A. § 1401 et seq.], but discriminately denied those services to handicapped children, complaint stated claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for alleged violations of equal protection clause. Council For the Hearing Impaired Long Island, Inc. v. Ambach, E.D.N.Y.1985, 610 F.Supp. 1051. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Learning disabled children and their father were not entitled to damages for school committee's failure to provide residential placement during 1979-80 school year under this section for alleged violation of equal protection clause of U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14, in that school committee's alleged policy of providing residential placement for visually and emotionally handicapped children, but not for learning disabled students like plaintiffs, was not so arbitrary and irrational as to violate the equal protection clause. Colin K. v. Schmidt, D.C.R.I.1982, 536 F.Supp. 1375, affirmed 715 F.2d 1. Schools 155.5(2.1)

1667. Class assignments, deprivation of education rights

There was no violation of 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1981 and 1983 in removing black first grader from the "highest" math class, which utilized individual style of teaching, and placing her in the second-highest math class, which utilized group teaching method, notwithstanding that the second highest math class was predominantly black where the student ranked tenth of ten among first graders in the "highest" math class and ranked fifth out of ten among first graders in the second highest math class, time spent in math class was approximately 45 minutes per day and child allegedly had short attention span and did not effectively utilize her time in the "highest" math class. Bond v. Keck, E.D.Mo.1985, 616 F.Supp. 565. Schools 13(17)

1668. Closing of schools, deprivation of education rights

School district's letting bids and selling school property after complaint had been brought in state court to enjoin closing, consolidation and annexation of school did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 4, 5 or 14, or under this section, or §§ 1981 or 1985 of this title. Laurales v. Desha County School Dist. No. 4 of Snowlake, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1980, 632 F.2d 72. Civil Rights 1041; Civil Rights 1070

Since plaintiffs, who sought to prevent school board from closing a predominantly black school, failed to assert a primary interest which was cognizable or protected under the laws of Ohio, the complaint's first claim, alleging a denial of property without due process, was insufficient to satisfy the second element required under this section, i.e., that the conduct in question operated to deprive a person of rights secured by the constitution or laws of the United States. Bronson v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1982, 550 F.Supp. 941. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Despite a claim that school closings placed burden of busing to achieve racial integration more heavily on black students than on white students, decisions to close certain elementary schools in school system were based on legitimate reasons and were not shown to have a racially discriminatory impact. Greene v. School Bd. of City of Alexandria, E.D.Va.1979, 494 F.Supp. 467, affirmed 634 F.2d 622. Schools 13(12)

1669. Compulsory attendance, deprivation of education rights

Parent of school-age child failed to state a claim under § 1983 or the Constitution in challenging constitutionality of Arkansas compulsory school attendance law. Stephan v. State of Ark., Cleburne County, E.D.Ark.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1327. Civil Rights 1395(2)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1670. Credits, deprivation of education rights

College which expunged credits from teacher's transcript would not be liable for deprivation of teacher's liberty interest in his employment and reputation without due process of law if school board discharged teacher as result of expungement. Merrow v. Goldberg, D.Vt.1986, 674 F.Supp. 1130. Civil Rights 1340

1671. Curriculum, deprivation of education rights

To require teaching of every theory of human origin would be unwarranted intrusion into authority of public school system to control academic curriculum. Wright v. Houston Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1973, 486 F.2d 137, rehearing denied 487 F.2d 1401, rehearing denied 489 F.2d 1312, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 3173, 417 U.S. 969, 41 L.Ed.2d 1140. 1672. Defamation, deprivation of education rights

High school teacher's allegations of injury to his reputation as result of allegedly defamatory statements made to and about him were insufficient to support claim for deprivation of liberty interest under § 1983. Peloza v. Capistrano Unified School Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 37 F.3d 517, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2640, 515 U.S. 1173, 132 L.Ed.2d 878. Civil Rights 1038

Complaint by high school student alleging injury to his reputation and public embarrassment resulting from printing in high school yearbook of a photograph of student competing in foot race in which his sexual organ was accidentally exposed, and subsequent refusal of school board and school and county officials to cease distribution of photograph failed to state a claim under § 1983. Carroll by Carroll v. Parks, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 755 F.2d 1455. Civil Rights 1395(2)

1673. Demonstrations, deprivation of education rights

State had significant interests in protecting the educational experience of the students in furtherance of state university's educational mission, ensuring students' safety, and fostering diversity, for purpose of street preacher's § § 1983 claim challenging university's policy restricting use of outdoor common areas by non-university entities as violative of free speech; educated electorate was essential to vitality of democracy, safety was fundamental human need, and diversity was necessary to meet educational needs. Bowman v. White, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 444 F.3d 967. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4)

College student who had participated in unruly and disorderly college demonstrations on two successive nights was subject to disciplinary action under college regulations that college spectators at such gatherings were considered as contributing to such gathering. Esteban v. Central Missouri State College, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1969, 415 F.2d 1077, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 2169, 398 U.S. 965, 26 L.Ed.2d 548.

Students who attended state-supported New York State College of Ceramics which Alfred University operated under contract with state and who refused to observe an order of dean of students to alter their participation in demonstration in University's football field during parents' day ROTC ceremony were not deprived of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, and hence were not entitled to civil rights relief, where University's demonstration guidelines were reasonable and students' demonstration was violating one guideline and was threatening to violate another. State education officials were not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged constitutional violations committed by subordinates who disciplined disabled student where they were not personally involved in either disciplinary incident taken against disabled student and did not induce the actions of either subordinate. Doe ex rel. Doe v. State of Hawaii Dept. of Educ., D.Hawai'i 2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 998, reconsideration denied 351 F.Supp.2d 1021. Civil Rights 1356

School district could not be held liable for any violation of disciplined eighth-grade student's due process rights, absent showing that any such violation was result of district policy or custom. Demers ex rel. Demers v. Leominster School Dept., D.Mass.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 195. Civil Rights 1351(2)

City was not liable under § 1983 for removal of high school student from science class on disciplinary complaint where there were no allegations or evidence that the complaint filed by teacher or student's removal from the class resulted from any official policy or any custom or practice of either the city or the school committee; there was no allegation that teacher had authority to act as a decision maker on behalf of either body, no evidence as to who made the decision to remove the student from the class, and no evidence of a similar incident, from which custom or practice could be inferred. Casey v. Newport School Committee, D.R.I.1998, 13 F.Supp.2d 242. Civil Rights 1351(2)

When adequate procedural safeguards have been provided as regards disciplinary charges against public school student, sole function of the district court in an action alleging constitutional violations is to determine whether there was substantial evidence supporting the charge and this section does not entitle student to relitigate evidentiary questions arising in the disciplinary proceedings or the proper construction of school regulations. Diggles v. Corsicana Independent School Dist., N.D.Tex.1981, 529 F.Supp. 169. Civil Rights 1397

Even assuming that disciplinary committee's legal advisor provided some unknown type of assistance to student's legal counsel regarding college disciplinary hearing, such did not amount to a deprivation of the student's due process rights. 1675. ---- Corporal punishment, discipline, deprivation of education rights

Even if corporal punishment of student is excessive and beyond common-law privilege accorded school teachers, it does not necessarily follow that student's substantive due process rights have been violated. Wise v. Pea Ridge School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1988, 855 F.2d 560. Constitutional Law 278.5(6)

Corporal punishment of school students is a deprivation of substantive due process when it is arbitrary, capricious, or wholly unrelated to the legitimate state goal of maintaining an atmosphere conducive to learning. Woodard v. Los Fresnos Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1984, 732 F.2d 1243. Constitutional Law 278.5(6)

Disciplinary corporal punishment does not per se violate public school child's substantive due process rights. Hall v. Tawney, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1980, 621 F.2d 607. Constitutional Law 278.5(6)

Record in action under this section action alleging that infliction of corporal punishment deprived students of liberty without due process of law supported finding that plaintiffs had not shown that the corporal punishment in concept or as authorized by the school board or as applied throughout the school system was arbitrary, capricious, or wholly unrelated to legitimate state purpose of determining its educational policy. Ingraham v. Wright, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 525 F.2d 909, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 2200, 425 U.S. 990, 48 L.Ed.2d 815, affirmed 97 S.Ct. 1401, 430 U.S. 651, 51 L.Ed.2d 711. Schools 176

Teacher training program in place at high school, or lack thereof, with regards to physically restraining students, did not amount to deliberate indifference to student's rights, as would subject school district and school to liability under § 1983 for alleged excessive force that teacher used on student. Knicrumah v. Albany City School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Parent and natural guardian, on behalf of four-year old, non-verbal, autistic child who also suffered from tuberous sclerosis, a genetic disorder that caused tumors to form in many different organs including brain, eyes, heart, kidneys, skin and lungs, stated excessive force claim in §§ 1983 action under Fourth Amendment, on allegations that preschooler on four occasions was made to walk from bus to classroom without shoes, preschooler was slapped by teacher or taken by his hands and forced to slap himself, and preschooler was "slammed" in a chair by teacher. Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Arrest 68(2)

Although junior high school teacher-coach violated school regulations in that he did not secure presence of another school official while administering corporal punishment to a junior high school student there was no violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 actionable by way of civil rights suit and student had adequate Louisiana remedies to protect any rights he may have had for the alleged violation. Rhodus By and Through Rhodus v. Dumiller, M.D.La.1982, 552 F.Supp. 425. Civil Rights 1065; Civil Rights 1317

Failure of superintendent to promulgate regulations limiting effect of state statute, 16 V.S.A. § 1161, which authorized corporal punishment, could not be responsible for alleged actions of principal which, if proved, would make out violation of the statute, 16 V.S.A. § 1161, in that unreasonable punishment was used and in that there was failure to request teacher's permission. 1677. ---- Suspension, discipline, deprivation of education rights

Male Pennsylvania high school student who was given four-day suspension for alleged nonconsensual sexual touching of female student was not subjected to differential treatment because of his gender, in violation of equal protection; suspended male student and his female accuser, though treated differently, were not similarly situated in the first place as she was not accused of any wrongdoing, other than his charge that she willingly took part in the sexual misconduct at issue. Shuman ex rel. Shertzer v. Penn Manor School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 422 F.3d 141. Schools 177

High school cheerleaders were afforded due process prior to their 10-day suspensions, where cheerleaders received notice they were being charged with violating school policy by consuming alcohol before school event, principal spoke to one cheerleader about charge and gave her opportunity to respond, other cheerleader terminated discussion without permitting principal to explain what evidence he possessed, and principal informed parents about suspensions and invited them to contact him to discuss matter, but parents failed to contact principal. Jennings v. Wentzville R-IV School Dist., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 397 F.3d 1118. Constitutional Law 278.5(7); Schools 177

Disciplinary action taken against student, consisting of student being placed on in-school suspension for three days as a result of seven unexcused tardies, did not violate student's substantive due process rights; student was placed in room providing 34 square feet per student, room had good lighting as well as several windows, special education committee determined that student, a special education student, would not be adversely affected by being placed in suspension room, and student did not fall behind in his studies as a result of placement. Wise v. Pea Ridge School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1988, 855 F.2d 560. Constitutional Law 278.5(6); Schools 177

Alleged failure of school administrators to adhere to state statutes and administrative rules governing student due process in connection with high school student's 31-day suspension were not random and unauthorized acts so as to preclude §§ 1983 liability; alleged deprivation was not unpredictable, a predeprivation process capable of addressing the problem was possible, and the alleged deprivation was unauthorized only in the sense that it was not an act sanctioned by state law, but was a deprivation of constitutional rights by an official's abuse of his position. Waln By and Through Waln v. Todd County School Dist., D.S.D.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 994. Schools 177

Substantive due process was not violated in connection with high school senior's ten-day disciplinary suspension at end of school year; student did not have a fundamental right to attend school, commencement ceremony, or other graduation events, and suspension was rationally related to his offense involving inappropriate and disrespectful behavior toward school official. Posthumus v. Board of Educ. of Mona Shores Public Schools, W.D.Mich.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 891. Schools 177

Likelihood of prevailing on merits requirement for preliminary injunction requiring reinstatement of male high school student suspended for disruptive conduct was not satisfied by claim that student's procedural due process rights were violated when he was not given copy of statement made by alleged female victim of sexual abuse, taking place in girl's washroom, which triggered suspension; student was given summary of statement, student knew that victim was alleging sexual activity and had ample opportunity to tell his side of story, which was not dependant on knowing exact claims being made by victim, and it was not apparent how possession of statement would have helped suspended student. 1678. Dismissals, deprivation of education rights--Generally

Record in medical student's action challenging her dismissal on due process grounds left no doubt, notwithstanding references to lack of personal hygiene and timeliness, that her dismissal was for pure academic reasons. Board of Curators of University of Missouri v. Horowitz, U.S.Mo.1978, 98 S.Ct. 948, 435 U.S. 78, 55 L.Ed.2d 124. Colleges And Universities 9.35(4)

A state university's interest in protecting its academic integrity clearly outweighed any interest graduate student/teaching assistant had in publicly presenting in a scientific publication what the university determined to be fraudulent data, and thus dismissal from university for academic misconduct and resulting loss of employment as teaching assistant, stemming from the fraudulent presentation, did not violate student's First Amendment free speech rights. Pugel v. Board of Trustees of University of Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 378 F.3d 659, rehearing en banc denied. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Colleges And Universities 9.35(3.1); Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Dismissals of medical students from university due to minimal passing grades, standings near bottom of their class, and failure to pass required examination after two attempts were not arbitrary and capricious, and thus students could not recover injunction, declaratory judgment and damages against university under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights. Stevens v. Hunt, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1981, 646 F.2d 1168. Civil Rights 1452

Private company operating charter school, and its employee who was acting as principal, were "state actors," capable of being sued under § 1983 for firing of teacher in alleged violation of her First Amendment rights. Riester v. Riverside Community School, S.D.Ohio 2002, 257 F.Supp.2d 968. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Parents of student expelled from school failed to state federal civil rights claim against school where parents only claimed that school officials violated state law, parents did not assert any direct private right of action under relevant state statute, and parents did not raise claim under state Civil Rights Act to enforce state law which officials allegedly violated. Carey on Behalf of Carey v. Maine School Administrative Dist. No. 17, D.Me.1990, 754 F.Supp. 906. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Evidence, in medical student's action charging that her dismissal from medical school violated her constitutional and civil rights, established that student was expelled because of quality of her work and that the dismissal was not because of bad faith, arbitrary or capricious action by any instructor. Horowitz v. Fact that student in doctoral program at pharmacy college, who was a native of Nigeria, received better grades from nondepartment instructors than from those within department, that some other Black Africans also experienced difficulties in the college, that one instructor destroyed tests and gave preferential treatment to other students, and that testimony was conflicting, did not establish that student, who received academic dismissal from college, was a victim of racial discrimination; there was ample evidence of student's academic shortcomings, such as misprescribing drugs and giving incorrect dosages, from which jury could have determined that student's dismissal had a sound academic basis. Ikpeazu v. University of Nebraska, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1985, 775 F.2d 250. Civil Rights 1544

Student who was terminated from doctorate program at state university after failing to pass minimum number of qualifying tests required to remain in program failed to show that race was substantial or motivating factor in her termination program, and, thus, failed to state § 1983 race discrimination claim against university or university officials. Middlebrooks v. University of Maryland at College Park, D.Md.1997, 980 F.Supp. 824, affirmed 166 F.3d 1209. Civil Rights 1070

Student's mere accusations that school board's code of good student behavior had been selectively or inconsistently enforced and had been used to discriminate against black students could not defeat summary judgment of student's § 1983 claim, absent even scintilla of evidence of inconsistent or discriminatory enforcement of code. L.Q.A. By and Through Arrington v. Eberhart, M.D.Ala.1996, 920 F.Supp. 1208, affirmed 111 F.3d 897. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Former university medical school student failed to raise inference of discrimination as to her dismissal from school, as required to establish prima facie case of race discrimination under §§ 1981, §§ 1983, Title VI of Civil Rights Act, Pennsylvania Human Relations Act, and Pennsylvania Fair Educational Opportunities Act; student provided no evidence of a link between her dismissal and alleged stereotyping involved in university's provision of academic support program in which all African-American students were invited to participate, and professor who referred student to program also provided student with advice on study method that proved helpful to student. Manning v. Temple University, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 157 Fed.Appx. 509, 2005 WL 3288162, Unreported. Civil Rights 1745

1680. ---- Religious discrimination, dismissals, deprivation of education rights

Evidence of a doctoral student's poor research ability supported the finding that his termination from a graduate physics program was attributable to his lack of research ability, rather than a result of any religious discrimination on the part of the chairman of the student's Ph.D. committee. Al-Zubaidi v. Ijaz, C.A.4 (Va.) 1990, 917 F.2d 1347, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1583, 499 U.S. 960, 113 L.Ed.2d 648. Civil Rights 1418 notify parents that permanent expulsion was being contemplated, and deprived them of opportunity to effectively challenge evidence. Johnson v. Collins, D.N.H.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 241. Civil Rights 1457(3)

University's alleged conduct during disciplinary proceedings concerning charges against graduate student for academic dishonesty, which resulted in student's dismissal from state university and resulting loss of employment as teaching assistant, did not violate graduate student's due process rights, where five decisionmaking entities found evidence that student had fabricated data and then publicly had presented that data knowing it to be invalid, and throughout the 17-month disciplinary process, student received notice of the charges against her and of the decisionmakers' determinations and had an opportunity both to present evidence on her behalf and to appeal the discharge decision. Pugel v. Board of Trustees of University of Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 378 F.3d 659, rehearing en banc denied. Colleges And Universities 8.1(4.1); Colleges And Universities 9.35(4); Constitutional Law 278.5(4); Constitutional Law 278.5(7)

High school students stated due process civil rights claim against county school district and school officials on allegations that they were suspended from school without being informed of charges against them, they were not given explanation of evidence against them, and they were not given opportunity to respond. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999. Schools 177

In making determination which prevented student from completing education degree program university was not obliged to adopt all the formalities of a court of law; the test was whether the proceedings leading to the determination were fundamentally fair and reasonable. Lai v. Board of Trustees of East Carolina University, E.D.N.C.1971, 330 F.Supp. 904. Colleges And Universities 9.30(7)

1682. ---- Stigmatization, dismissals, deprivation of education rights

Record in medical student's action challenging her dismissal on due process grounds left no doubt, notwithstanding references to lack of personal hygiene and timeliness, that her dismissal was for pure academic reasons. Board of Curators of University of Missouri v. Horowitz, U.S.Mo.1978, 98 S.Ct. 948, 435 U.S. 78, 55 L.Ed.2d 124. Colleges And Universities 9.35(4)

1683. Disruptive students, deprivation of education rights

College discipline cannot be achieved by wholesale elimination of select students who, hypothetically, may provoke disruptions; undifferentiated and unrealized fears of such nature may not be used as basis for denying constitutional rights. Lansdale v. Tyler Jr. College, E.D.Tex.1970, 318 F.Supp. 529, affirmed 470 F.2d 659, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 2268, 411 U.S. 986, 36 L.Ed.2d 964. Colleges And Universities 9.30(6)

1684. Educational malpractice, deprivation of education rights

Educational malpractice was not cognizable theory in § 1983 action; educational malpractice is matter of state law that does not, by itself, deprive victims of their constitutional rights, even if characterized as breach of contract. Bishop v. Indiana Technical Vocational College, N.D.Ind.1990, 742 F.Supp. 524. Schools 127 violate team member's First Amendment right to free association; relationships of members of the same swim team, whether during school or summer break, were of a purely social nature, and therefore were not protected under First Amendment. Dominic J. v. Wyoming Valley West High School, M.D.Pa.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 560. Constitutional Law 91; Schools 164

Provision of public college student government constitution requiring candidates for elective position to be registered for a minimum of twelve credits and to maintain a grade average of 2.5 on a 4.0 system was not unreasonable under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 as it was a fair and reasonable attempt to achieve legitimate purposes of insuring qualified candidates with the requisite interest in campus activities and of limiting office to those capable of discharging their duties without risk of academic failure; that the line drawn was an imprecise one could not undermine the constitutional validity of such provision. Sellman v. Baruch College of City University of New York, S.D.N.Y.1979, 482 F.Supp. 475. Constitutional Law 242.2(5.1)

1686. Expulsion, deprivation of education rights

Claim was stated that high school student was expelled, pursuant to policy or custom of district regarding conduct of expulsion proceedings that violated student's due process rights, allowing for §§ 1983 suit against district. Pomeroy v. Ashburnham Westminster Regional School Dist., D.Mass.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 7. Civil Rights 1395(2)

College of veterinary medicine and its professors could not be characterized as state actors for purposes of former student's § 1983 claim, which arose when student was expelled after twice failing her first year exam; notwithstanding the college's strong state ties, including statutory creation, and receiving some state funding, the state did not have direct operational authority over the administration of the college, employees of the college were not classified as members of the state civil service, and the vast majority of the day-to-day operations at the college were expressly committed to its private discretion, such as creating the academic curriculum, hiring faculty, maintaining discipline and formulating educational policies. Curto v. Smith, N.D.N.Y.2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 132, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 87 Fed.Appx. 788, 2004 WL 287290, affirmed 93 Fed.Appx. 332, 2004 WL 539234, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1689, 544 U.S. 935, 161 L.Ed.2d 504, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 1653, 544 U.S. 919, 161 L.Ed.2d 475, rehearing denied 125 S.Ct. 2293, 544 U.S. 1057, 161 L.Ed.2d 1105. 1687. Extracurricular activities, deprivation of education rights

Employees of black students union, who alleged that BSU received inadequate funds to pay their salaries because of BSU's involvement in campus disorders, were entitled to no relief under this section where it was found that demands for money by various student groups exceeded available funds, that BSU received funds and, in effect, had received a disproportionately larger share of the available funds. Jackson v. Hayakawa, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 605 F.2d 1121, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1601, 445 U.S. 952, 63 L.Ed.2d 787. Civil Rights 1448

1688. Files, deprivation of education rights

Plaintiff failed to show that her reputation had been damaged by placing in her permanent file at state university letters to effect that she lacked ability to complete graduate program and therefore was denied admission to it, where it did not appear that plaintiff had been foreclosed from attending graduate schools in other parts of the country or that the letters had prevented her from doing so; thus no deprivation of her liberty interest occurred. 1689. Fraternities and sororities, deprivation of education rights

Action of Board of trustees of State University banning social organizations having a direct or indirect affiliation with any national organization outside such University did not deprive members and affiliates of national fraternities and sororities of any civil rights. Webb v. State University of New York, N.D.N.Y.1954, 125 F.Supp. 910, appeal dismissed 75 S.Ct. 113, 348 U.S. 867, 99 L.Ed. 683. Civil Rights 1063

1690. Free education, deprivation of education rights

In action for an alleged civil rights violation by imposition of an $8 annual high school "enrollment fee" which plaintiff as a pupil refused to pay, and for which she was excluded from school, where it was claimed that the acts of defendants were unlawful under the "gratuitous instruction" mandate of the state Constitution, the validity of which was not attacked, court might conclude that the right asserted by the plaintiff was not one secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and afforded no basis for a suit under this section. Byrd v. Sexton, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1960, 277 F.2d 418, certiorari denied 81 S.Ct. 49, 364 U.S. 818, 5 L.Ed.2d 48. Civil Rights 1070; Constitutional Law 242.2(6)

Wisconsin high school student was not deprived of his right to receive education without due process when principal called him out of class on three or four occasions in order to permit police officers to question him. Burreson v. Barneveld School Dist, W.D.Wis.2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 588. Schools 169

1691. Grading, deprivation of education rights

Nursing student who received failing grade for her clinical performance could not recover for denial of her civil rights due to teachers' and college officials' bad faith grading and evaluation of her performance, where student was given three chances to pass clinical test, rather than two as allowed by school policy, student did not challenge faculty members' evaluations of her performance, and student did not challenge merits of her failure. Clements v. Nassau County, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1987, 835 F.2d 1000. Civil Rights 1070

Courts will ordinarily defer to broad discretion vested in public school officials and will rarely review educational institution's evaluation of academic performance of its students; even so, judicial intervention in school affairs regularly occurs when state educational institution acts to deprive individual of significant interest in either liberty or property. Greenhill v. Bailey, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1975, 519 F.2d 5. Colleges And Universities 9.35(4)

Grades given to student in nursing school, and basis for such grades, were not subject of judicial scrutiny in student's later suit against school officials for violation of her civil rights. Hubbard v. John Tyler Community College, E.D.Va.1978, 455 F.Supp. 753. Civil Rights 1070

Grading and evaluation system of medical school was applied fairly and reasonably to student who did not satisfy clinical skills requirements of medical school to graduate. Horowitz v. 1692. Graduation requirements, deprivation of education rights

New York community college student who was denied transfer to four-year state university on basis of his failure to possess state-recognized high school diploma or general equivalency diploma (GED), the same reason community college had denied him associate's degree despite his having earned enough credits, had no claim for damages, representing difference between tuition he was paying at private college that accepted him and tuition he would have paid had he been accepted at state university, against members of community college board of trustees; even though state university's director of admissions allegedly told student he would have assumed that student was high school graduate if he possessed degree from community college, there was no reason for community college to help student misrepresent his educational background and no guarantee that student would have been admitted to state university had community college graduated him. Owens v. Parrinello, W.D.N.Y.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 353. Colleges And Universities 9.20(1)

Action taken by university board of trustees in adopting new bulletin which contained change in graduation requirements was reasonable exercise of its educational responsibilities and could not form basis for § 1983 civil rights action by student against members of the board in their individual capacities; there was no personal activity on part of members specifically toward student, and adoption of the bulletin and neutral change of academic policy contained therein was not constitutional violation. Hammond v. Auburn University, M.D.Ala.1987, 669 F.Supp. 1555, affirmed 858 F.2d 744, rehearing denied 860 F.2d 1092, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1134, 489 U.S. 1017, 103 L.Ed.2d 195. Civil Rights 1070

1693. Hair, deprivation of education rights

School board's endorsement of football coach's "clean shaven" policy for team members was not rendered unconstitutional on theory that some team members were concerned that shaving could cause them skin problems where no evidence was presented that students who were challenging regulation were likely to suffer from such problems and coach testified that he would not enforce policy if it would have injurious results. Davenport by Davenport v. Randolph County Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1984, 730 F.2d 1395. Schools 172

Claim that local school regulation, by requiring the cutting of student's Indian braided hair, violated rights of his parents, one of whom was an American Indian, to raise their child according to their own religious, cultural and moral values lacked constitutional substance and was not cognizable in civil rights suit. Hatch v. Goerke, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1974, 502 F.2d 1189. Civil Rights 1062

Junior high school hair regulation could not be condemned, as violative of students' civil rights, unless it in fact impinged on exercise of fundamental constitutional rights or liberties. New Rider v. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 1, Pawnee County, Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1973, 480 F.2d 693, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 733, 414 U.S. 1097, 38 L.Ed.2d 556, rehearing denied 94 S.Ct. 1456, 415 U.S. 939, 39 L.Ed.2d 497. Civil Rights 1062

Regulation adopted by school board as to acceptable length of hair for male public high school students, absent showing of justifications therefor, would not be upheld on ground that disciplinary powers of school authorities would otherwise be diminished. Breen v. Kahl, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1969, 419 F.2d 1034, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1836, 398 U.S. 937, 26 L.Ed.2d 268. Schools 172

School regulation as promulgated by principal, banning long hair, was not discriminatory under this section and § 1981 of this title, or violative thereof. Ferrell v. 1694. Hazing, deprivation of education rights

University officials did not violate right of former member of voluntary student military training organization to bodily integrity, under due process clause, by implementing or condoning organization's alleged custom and policy of hazing by student cadet leaders, absent evidence that officials' conduct reflected conscious disregard for risk that students would suffer bodily injuries of constitutional dimensions at the hands of student cadet leaders. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1695. Home education, deprivation of education rights

Stress allegedly placed upon parents' home schooling rights by superintendent's request for portfolio of records and materials, allegedly made without authority under Pennsylvania home education law, did not establish deprivation of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution or laws of United States, as required to state claim under § 1983; no determination had been made that appropriate education was not taking place, nor had parents been threatened with cessation of their rights under home education statute. Stobaugh v. Wallace, W.D.Pa.1990, 757 F.Supp. 653. Civil Rights 1070

Parents' claimed right to educate their children through program of home study free from requirement of compliance with state education laws involving teacher certification does not rise above personal or philosophical choice, and therefore is not within bounds of constitutional protection. Hanson v. Cushman, W.D.Mich.1980, 490 F.Supp. 109. Constitutional Law 274(1)

1696. Home life interference, deprivation of education rights

It is fundamentally unfair to keep student out of school indefinitely because of difficulties between student and her parents, unless those difficulties manifest themselves in real threat to school discipline. Cook v. Edwards, D.C.N.H.1972, 341 F.Supp. 307. Schools 177

1697. Housing requirements, deprivation of education rights

Yale College's policy of requiring freshmen and sophomores to reside in college residence halls unless they are married or 21 or older is not "state action" for purposes of § 1983; complaint did not allege that the State of Connecticut, either through a regulation or policy, exercised coercive power or significantly encouraged Yale to adopt its housing policy, but only that there was a 300-year history of partnership, and neither allegation that Yale received some financial support from the state nor fact that Yale serves the public and that this service may benefit the State of Connecticut was sufficient to establish that Yale's conduct was state action. Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale College, D.Conn.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 183, affirmed 237 F.3d 81, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 201, 534 U.S. 888, 151 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1326(6)

1698. Investigations, deprivation of education rights

Student in § 1983 action failed to establish damage to some tangible interest entangled with his reputation and failed to establish deprivation of due process liberty interest and good reputation when vice principal took him from class for 20 minutes and questioned him about accusations that student had made bomb threat. Edwards For and in Behalf of Edwards v. Rees, C.A.10 (Utah) 1989, 883 F.2d 882. Civil Rights 1071

High school officials' placement of undercover policewoman in two classes to investigate drug trafficking was not alleged to be any more than "subjective" chilling of rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 under circumstances in which surveillance did not disrupt classroom activities or education and in which, though it was alleged that investigation focused on classes involving students and teachers with "liberal" sociopolitical views, there was no indication that investigation had any tangible and concrete inhibitory effect on expression of particular views in classroom; mere allegations that students and teachers were harmed when news of the covert operation spread through community did not satisfy "causation" requirement. Gordon v. Warren Consol. Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1983, 706 F.2d 778. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Even if claim was not preempted by Title IX, school officials could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for fifth-grade teacher's alleged sexual harassment of female students absent showing of deliberate indifference; officials took adequate steps to investigate situation. 1699. Military instruction, deprivation of education rights

As a matter of law, school board did not violate high school student's clearly established constitutional rights, and thus members thereof were not liable to student in damages, where student's claim of right not to be compelled to take course of military instruction was not supported by authoritative decisions from the Supreme Court or from the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, or even from other circuits. Sapp v. Renfroe, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 511 F.2d 172. Schools 62

1700. Narcotics and controlled substances, deprivation of education rights

Student failed to state § 1983 claim against school officials concerning his indefinite expulsion for possession of marijuana in class, absent any evidence showing deprivation of constitutional or federal right. L.Q.A. By and Through Arrington v. Eberhart, M.D.Ala.1996, 920 F.Supp. 1208, affirmed 111 F.3d 897. Civil Rights 1062

While wisdom of director of state technical institute in ordering student off campus after finding marijuana in his room might be questioned, director's action did not rise to level of constitutional deprivation. Morale v. Grigel, D.C.N.H.1976, 422 F.Supp. 988. Colleges And Universities 9.30(6)

1701. Negligence, deprivation of education rights

Individual high school teachers could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for their failure to terminate locker room videotaping scheme, absent evidence that they knew of or were willfully blind to scheme's existence; teachers' failure to discern physical evidence of scheme, or to follow up on student comments hinting at scheme's existence, were at most negligent. Harry A. v. Duncan, D.Mont.2005, 351 F.Supp.2d 1060. Civil Rights 1356

School district was not liable under § 1983 for releasing student into hands of his stepmother and accomplice, who murdered him, though case might have presented jury issue of gross negligence, where school district did not intentionally inflict injury, as required to establish liability for violation of substantive due process. Baker v. Clay County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.1994, 871 F.Supp. 930, affirmed 78 F.3d 584. Civil Rights 1065

High school shop teacher's act of removing safety guard from bench saw, even if negligent, was not sufficiently egregious as to be constitutionally tortious so as to permit student to recover under civil rights statute. Voorhies v. Conroe Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1985, 610 F.Supp. 868. Civil Rights 1070

Where plaintiff minor was allegedly injured by act or omission of state actor while student was attending school and was participating in class for which he would receive credit toward graduation, and where there was no remedy available to minor under state law, minor could maintain action under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights against teacher and school district on basis of teacher's negligent act. 1703. Promotions, deprivation of education rights

Claim which, though denominated a denial of equal educational opportunity by reason of failure of school officials to promote second grade students to third grade level for failure to complete requisite level of Ginn Reading Series, sounded rather in tort as a breach of some duty owed by teachers or school boards to their pupils to give them an education, if there was any such cause of action, did not rise to level of a constitutional claim and, hence, was not cognizable in an action under this section. Sandlin v. Johnson, C.A.4 (Va.) 1981, 643 F.2d 1027. Civil Rights 1070

1704. Quality of education, deprivation of education rights

Parents of disabled child were not entitled to damages under Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), § 1983, or Rehabilitation Act for physical illness and emotional distress allegedly caused by school district's allegedly incompetent and unprofessional failure to provide child with adequate education; district offered child a free appropriate public education, and damages were not available for IDEA violations. Fort Zumwalt School Dist. v. Clynes, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 119 F.3d 607, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1840, 523 U.S. 1137, 140 L.Ed.2d 1090. department and alleged deprivation of student's Fourth Amendment rights through use of drug-sniffing dog at high school, thus defeating money damages claims against sheriff's department officials in their official capacities, where student presented no credible evidence to refute sheriff's department evidence that departmental policy only permitted use of drug-sniffing dogs on objects, not on persons, and officials produced uncontroverted evidence that officers were trained in the use of dogs, and that they were trained to use dogs to sniff property, not people. B.C. v. Plumas Unified School Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 192 F.3d 1260. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Student subjected to strip search failed to state claim establishing deliberate indifference by school district, so as to support imposition of liability on "failure to train" theory, despite one alleged previous strip search and subsequent endorsement by school board president of strip searches of students conducted with parental consent. Cornfield by Lewis v. Consolidated High School Dist. No. 230, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 991 F.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Parent and natural guardian, on behalf of four-year old, non-verbal, autistic child who also suffered from tuberous sclerosis, a genetic disorder that caused tumors to form in many different organs including brain, eyes, heart, kidneys, skin and lungs, stated excessive force claim in § 1983 action under Fourth Amendment, on allegations that preschooler on four occasions was made to walk from bus to classroom without shoes, preschooler was slapped by teacher or taken by his hands and forced to slap himself, and preschooler was "slammed" in a chair by teacher. Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Arrest 68(2)

Parent and natural guardian, on behalf of preschool-aged, non-verbal, autistic child, could bring excessive force claim in § 1983 action under both Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, since Fourth Amendment unreasonable seizures analysis generally applied in school context, but student's claim might have been more appropriately analyzed under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment because school official could have used excessive force against student without seizing or searching that student. Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Arrest 68(2); Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 89.2; Schools 169.5

Genuine issue of material fact, regarding whether teacher had requisite individualized suspicion of wrongdoing needed to support her visual inspection of interior of pants which third grade student was wearing for evidence of $10 missing from her desk, precluded entry of summary judgment in civil rights action brought by student to recover for alleged teacher's alleged violation of her Fourth Amendment rights. Watkins v. Millennium School, S.D.Ohio 2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 890. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of student, school security officer's alleged conduct of violently restraining student during a combative dialogue with student after student was ordered to leave the school premises supported student's § 1983 claim of violation of students' Fourth Amendment rights against school district and school officials. Nicol v. Auburn-Washburn USD 437, D.Kan.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1092. Civil Rights 1395(2)

This section provided no remedy to student of state technical institute for action of school authority in conducting illegal search of student's dormitory and improperly seizing marijuana found therein. Morale v. Grigel, D.C.N.H.1976, 422 F.Supp. 988. Civil Rights 1062

1708. Segregation, deprivation of education rights

Where Negro public school pupils asserted in suit under this section that board of education members had been and were depriving pupils of rights protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 by maintaining segregated school, it was immaterial whether board's conduct was legal or illegal as a matter of state law, and pupils' claims were entitled to be adjudicated in federal court. McNeese v. Board of Ed. for Community Unit School Dist. 187, Cahokia, Ill., U.S.Ill.1963, 83 S.Ct. 1433, 373 U.S. 668, 10 L.Ed.2d 622. Federal Courts 225

New York officials had full knowledge of nature, cause, and extent of segregation in city schools and knew or should have known that school segregation was de jure such that failure of officials to take actions toward desegregation in city, though they took remedial action in other cities, created liability under § 1983 on claims for injunctive relief to remedy vestiges of school segregation in city; evidence included testimony from former department officials as well as documents that showed that department and department officials knew of segregation and failed to take action due to heavy pressure from state legislature. U.S. v. City of Yonkers, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 96 F.3d 600, on remand 1996 WL 696121, on remand 1997 WL 311943, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2479, 521 U.S. 1104, 138 L.Ed.2d 988, on remand 984 F.Supp. 687, on remand 992 F.Supp. 672. Schools 13(19)

Challenged policies of Arkansas school districts had no current segregative effect in violation of 14th Amendment or applicable federal statutes, and interdistrict remedies for imbalance between black and white student populations were thus not available to parent of school-aged children who sought redress for intentional discrimination; challenged policies were no longer in effect, and ongoing exodus of whites from predominantly black school districts could be accounted for by demographic factors other than past effect of challenged policies. Edgerson on Behalf of Edgerson v. Clinton, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 86 F.3d 833. Constitutional Law 220(4); Schools 13(15)

Relief is not necessarily precluded because racial segregation of schools is one step removed from the cause, such as land use control. Ybarra v. City of San Jose, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 503 F.2d 1041. Schools 13(2)

Mere existence of apparent racially imbalanced school system does not trigger remedial powers of court such that court can order particular defendant to alter distribution of black and white students within that school system; rather, court must determine if that school system is unlawfully segregated by examining conduct of defendant before it to determine if that defendant acted with segregative intent in creating, maintaining, and/or perpetuating segregated school system which plaintiff seeks to have altered. Bronson v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1983, 573 F.Supp. 767, mandamus denied 725 F.2d 682. Schools 13(5)

1709. Sex discrimination, deprivation of education rights

Student who was terminated from doctorate program at state university after failing to pass minimum number of qualifying tests required to remain in program failed to show that her gender was substantial or motivating factor in her termination from program, and, thus, failed to state § 1983 claim for gender discrimination in violation of Equal Protection clause against university officials. Middlebrooks v. University of Maryland at College Park, D.Md.1997, 980 F.Supp. 824, affirmed 166 F.3d 1209. Civil Rights 1067(5)

School district's failure to train employees and students about sexual harassment did not constitute discrimination on the basis of sex. Doe v. Londonderry School Dist., D.N.H.1997, 970 F.Supp. 64, modified on denial of rehearing 32 F.Supp.2d 1360. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Those acting under color of state law may not deprive one of the equal opportunity to receive an education because he is a male and may not discriminate against an applicant for public education because he is a male. Cortner v. Baron, W.D.Okla.1975, 404 F.Supp. 316. Civil Rights 1067(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1710. Sexual harassment, deprivation of education rights

Remedies provided under Title IX did not foreclose former female student's claim against state-university professor under §§ 1983, alleging violation of equal protection resulting from sexual harassment, pursuant to Sea Clammers doctrine; only possible effect of applying doctrine would have been to immunize professor from liability for alleged federal constitutional tort, which could not have been intended by Congress when it enacted Title IX. Delgado v. Stegall, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 367 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1309

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether state-university professor's use of nickname for female student based on her supposed physical resemblance to White House intern involved in widely-covered, scandalous affair with President of the United States, and comments to student based on same theme, were sufficiently pervasive to create hostile environment precluded summary judgment on student's claim under § 1983 alleging that professor violated her equal protection rights by engaging in sexual harassment. Hayut v. State University of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 733, 197 A.L.R. Fed. 659. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Supervisory college officials reasonably responded to student's complaint concerning professor's offensive behavior and thus were not liable to student under § 1983 for alleged equal protection violations; following student's initial complaints of sexual harassment to college dean, and college officials, student was instructed to provide a written complaint, college officials met prior to receiving the written complaint, dean, associate dean and supervisory professor met with professor day after the written complaint was received, and professor resigned approximately one month from the date student submitted her written complaint. Hayut v. State University of New York, N.D.N.Y.2002, 217 F.Supp.2d 280, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 352 F.3d 733, 197 A.L.R. Fed. 659. Civil Rights 1356

Title IX plaintiff could not also maintain § 1983 claim for alleged violation of her constitutional rights by institutional defendants, where such claim was based on same factual predicate as Title IX claim. Norris v. Norwalk Public Schools, D.Conn.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 791. Civil Rights 1309

Availability of Title IX remedies for sexual harassment precluded suit by male high school student against school district under § 1983, alleging that female teacher subjected him to sexual harassment in violation of his substantive due process rights. Doe v. School Administrative Dist. No. 19, D.Me.1999, 66 F.Supp.2d 57. Civil Rights 1309

School district owed junior high school student no duty of constitutional magnitude, actionable under § 1983, to protect her from the sexual harassment, on theory of special relationship, absent evidence that district took student into custody and made her unable to care for herself. Doe v. Londonderry School Dist., D.N.H.1997, 970 F.Supp. 64, modified on denial of rehearing 32 F.Supp.2d 1360. Civil Rights 1067(3)

Compulsory school attendance did not create custodial relationship necessary to impose affirmative constitutional duty on school district to protect high school student from sexual harassment from her fellow students, so as to support civil rights action under § 1983, regardless of district's knowledge of the harassment. Burrow By and Through Burrow v. Postville Community School Dist., N.D.Iowa 1996, 929 F.Supp. 1193. Civil Rights 1067(3)

Student's complaint against community college, based on alleged sexual harassment by professor, failed to state causes of action under § 1983 for violations of Equal Protection Clause, Americans with Disabilities Act, Title IX and § 504 of Rehabilitation Act; deficiencies included absence of allegations that college purposely discriminated against student or was aware of and acquiesced in discrimination, or that student was excluded from or denied benefits of any college program. Slater v. Marshall, E.D.Pa.1995, 906 F.Supp. 256. Civil Rights 1395(2) presenting evidence that professor first told her that she would have to have sexual intercourse with him in order to graduate and that he later said that she could graduate if she would allow him to take nude photographs of her. Parks v. Wilson, D.S.C.1995, 872 F.Supp. 1467. Civil Rights 1427
