No legal principles developed under equal protection clause clearly established that state officials could not award public contracts on basis of partisan politics or party affiliation; thus, Ohio officials were entitled to qualified immunity from civil damages on claim that they deprived plaintiff of equal protection by causing state to refuse, on partisan political grounds, to award plaintiff a bid to operate a golf course at a state park. Lundblad v. Celeste, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 924 F.2d 627, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2889, 501 U.S. 1250, 115 L.Ed.2d 1054. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Independent contractor's longstanding relationship with city to provide variety of services to homeless and to people with AIDS was "pre-existing commercial relationship," for purposes of clearly established federal law prohibiting termination of at-will government contracts in retaliation for contractor's exercise of its First Amendment rights, and thus city officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in contractor's § 1983 retaliation suit, even if there was no contract between parties at time of alleged retaliation. Housing Works, Inc. v. Guiliani, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 56 Fed.Appx. 530, 2003 WL 56921, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3806. Court officials, clearly established right

Court reporter was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for failing to timely prepare criminal trial transcript; defendant's due process right to timely appeal his conviction was so "clearly established" as to alert court reporter as to its constitutional parameters, and reporter was notified of her tardiness, yet did not seek extension of time, submit written explanation for delay or ask for assistance. Hargrove v. Riley, E.D.Wash.2000, 100 F.Supp.2d 1271. Civil Rights 1376(8)

Clerk of county court did not violate clearly established law by retaining interest accrued on spousal and child support payments which were paid to clerk and who then later paid recipients; therefore, she was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by recipients who claimed that interest belonged to them. Winters v. Mowery, S.D.Ind.1993, 836 F.Supp. 1419, amended on other grounds 153 F.R.D. 132, on reconsideration in part 884 F.Supp. 321. Civil Rights 1376(8)

3807. Developers, clearly established right

Alleged conduct of village officials in rejecting developers' business registration application and refusing to accept subdivision applications or approve final plats due to personal animosity did not violate any clearly established right to equal protection, and thus, officials enjoyed qualified immunity from developer's equal protection claim. Norton v. Village of Corrales, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 103 F.3d 928. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3808. Education or schools, clearly established right--Generally

School board member who brought § 1983 action against other board members, stemming from her purportedly improper removal from board and investigation leading thereto, failed to allege that other members' actions violated clearly established legal rights of which they should have known, since conduct as alleged did not impermissibly infringe upon member's constitutional rights, and thus other members were entitled to qualified immunity from claims in their personal capacities. Velez v. Levy, S.D.N.Y.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 444, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 401 F.3d 75. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School official is entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 action insofar as his conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known, or even where rights were clearly established, if it was objectively reasonable to believe his act did not violate those rights. Mazza v. Hendrick Hudson Cent. School Dist., S.D.N.Y.1996, 942 F.Supp. 187. Civil Rights 1376(5)

State school board officials were entitled to qualified immunity in their individual capacities for violations of federal civil rights provision insofar as their conduct did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known. Peelman v. Delaware Joint Vocational School Dist. Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ohio 1991, 763 F.Supp. 268, on subsequent appeal 992 F.2d 1217. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3809. ---- Equal protection, education or schools, clearly established right

Even assuming that noncustodial divorced parent had federal constitutional right to participate in his children's education, and that school deprived him of that right by excluding him from school grounds to monitor school's protection of his children from bullies and by improperly denying him access to his children's educational records, school principal enjoyed qualified immunity in parent's §§ 1983 substantive due process/equal protection action, since purported constitutional right was not established law. Crowley v. McKinney, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 400 F.3d 965, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 750, 163 L.Ed.2d 573. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Defendant school officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by male student alleging that officials violated equal protection due to their differing treatment of male and female victims of harassment by other students, as law clearly provided for equal protection in context of gender discrimination at relevant time, and officials did not proffer important governmental objective in support of their conduct. Nabozny v. Podlesny, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 92 F.3d 446. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Defendant school officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by male student who was harassed by other students and alleged that officials violated equal protection due to their differing treatment of student due to student' sexual orientation, as it was established, at relevant time, that Constitution prohibited intentional invidious discrimination between otherwise similarly situated persons based on one's membership in definable minority, absent at least rational basis for discrimination, homosexuals were definable minority, and officials failed to show rational basis for their conduct. Nabozny v. Podlesny, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 92 F.3d 446. Civil Rights 1376(5) excessive force by school officials, where plaintiffs properly alleged violations of clearly established Fourth Amendment rights, plaintiffs alleged that their rights were violated because defendants implemented discriminatory procedures, policies, and customs, and it was not precisely clear what role, if any, defendants played in alleged violations. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1376(5)

State university's president, athletic director, and assistant athletic director had qualified immunity from suit alleging that they violated equal protection rights of cheerleading coordinator when they placed her on probation after she allegedly interjected her Christian religion into cheerleading activities, and then terminated her after she read statement critical of probation to cheerleading squad; there were no other similarly situated individuals who received preferential treatment. Braswell v. Board of Regents of University System of Ga., N.D.Ga.2005, 369 F.Supp.2d 1371. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School superintendent did not have qualified immunity from suit claiming that he violated due process and equal protection rights of female elementary school students by not taking measures to protect them against teacher with history of sexual harassment; failure to take actions was well-established basis for liability on part of superintendent. Rasnick v. Dickenson County School Bd., W.D.Va.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 560. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Even if high school principal's alleged conduct of turning student over to police officer to be taken into custody after student was allegedly unable to articulate her name violated the Fourth Amendment, student's rights in such context were not clearly established, and thus principal was entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment claim. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Civil Rights 1376(5)

At time of allegedly impermissible conduct, law clearly established that equal protection clause clearly prohibited sex-based intentional discrimination, for purpose of determining whether principal, in her individual capacity, was entitled to qualified immunity from student's § 1983 action. Nicole M. By and Through Jacqueline M. v. Martinez Unified School Dist., N.D.Cal.1997, 964 F.Supp. 1369. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Present and former Secretaries of Puerto Rico Department of Education and Licensing Director enjoyed qualified immunity from liability on prospective teacher's equal protection claim that certification examination should have been administered to her in English; court decisions involving minority language groups in equal protection were few and scattered throughout circuits and did not establish right that any official reasonably could have known existed. Smothers v. Benitez, D.Puerto Rico 1992, 806 F.Supp. 299. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3810. ---- Freedom of speech, education or schools, clearly established right

High school principal was not entitled to qualified immunity in student's §§ 1983 action alleging violation of his First Amendment rights for his punishment for displaying banner saying "Bong Hits 4 Jesus" during school-authorized activity taking place off of school campus; principal's actions violated student's First Amendment rights, and right was clearly established in light of fact that there was no concern about educational activities being disrupted and principal admitted to being aware of relevant law. Frederick v. Morse, C.A.9 (Alaska) 2006, 439 F.3d 1114. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Right of state university student editors under First Amendment to print school newspaper without prior review and approval by university officials was not clearly established, and thus university dean was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in students' §§ 1983 action alleging prior restraint violations of First Amendment; many aspects of law with respect to students' speech, not only role of age, were difficult to understand and apply, and Supreme Court had not ruled on whether Hazelwood legal framework applied in university settings. Hosty v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 412 F.3d 731, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1330, 164 L.Ed.2d 47. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Chancellor was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for issuing preclearance directive in March of 2001 that banned all speech directed toward prospective student athletes without prior permission, in civil rights action brought by state university students and faculty members, who wished to contact prospective student athletes to make them aware that university and its athletic program utilized mascot that they believed was degrading to Native Americans, since fact that public employees retained certain rights to free speech on matters of public concern had been apparent since Pickering decision in 1968, NTEU in 1995, and Jones in 1999. Crue v. Aiken, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 370 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Staff of university actor training program were not entitled to qualified immunity from Mormon student's claim that program's script adherence requirement constituted compelled speech in violation of the First Amendment because it forced her to recite words in class exercises she considered offensive; claim alleged a violation of the First Amendment, and law clearly established that a pretextual speech restriction that was not justified by a legitimate pedagogical concern, and was based rather on religious discrimination, would violate student's First Amendment rights. Axson-Flynn v. Johnson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 356 F.3d 1277. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Rights of state university student editors under the First Amendment to print school newspaper without prior review and approval by university officials were clearly established for purposes of determining whether university dean was qualifiedly immune § 1983 action brought by students against school officials; notwithstanding United States Supreme Court restrictive First Amendment standard announced in Hazelwood, holding that high school journalism students' First Amendment rights could be limited, there were distinct differences between First Amendment rights at stake for university students versus high school students and the dangers of chilling individual thought and expression were especially threatening in the university setting, where the creative power of student intellectual life is a vital measure of a school's influence and attainment. Hosty v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 325 F.3d 945, rehearing granted, opinion vacated. Civil Rights 1376(5)

It was clearly established prior to 1996 that handbills posted on bulletin boards at state university, which was a designated public forum, by former professor at university, through which professor sought to promote his appearance at upcoming conference to be held at university, were speech protected by First Amendment, and thus, second professor, who took down handbills, was not protected by qualified immunity in former professor's § 1983 action alleging a violation of his free speech rights. Giebel v. Sylvester, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2001, 244 F.3d 1182. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Even if history department display case at state university was nonpublic forum, such status did not compel finding that student's and professors' First Amendment right to display certain materials relating to department professors was not clearly established, for purpose of chancellor's claim to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by professors and students; suppression was unreasonable since forum was designated for type of expression engaged in by professors and students, and suppression amounted to viewpoint-based discrimination. Burnham v. Ianni, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1997, 119 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Public school principal and teacher were entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action against them in their personal capacities brought by parent of public school student, as next friend of student, alleging violation of student's right to equal protection, based on actions of principal and teacher in prohibiting students from speaking Spanish in school, absent showing that right to speak a foreign language at a public school was clearly established. Rubio v. Turner Unified School Dist. No. 202, D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1295. Civil Rights 1376(5)

State university's president, athletic director, and assistant athletic director had qualified immunity from suit alleging that they violated free speech rights of cheerleading coordinator by terminating her after she read statement to cheerleaders naming Jewish student who had complained of her interjection of Christian religion into cheerleading activities and expressing strong disagreement with decision to place her on probation; inability to terminate employee under circumstances of present case were not clearly established. Braswell v. Board of Regents of University System of Ga., N.D.Ga.2005, 369 F.Supp.2d 1371. Civil Rights 1376(10)

California school officials were entitled to qualified immunity from claims that they violated high school student's religious and speech rights under the First Amendment when they suspended him for wearing T-shirt which with message expressing religious condemnation of homosexuality, as it was unclear whether student's right to free speech and religion was overcome by state statutes prohibiting sexual orientation harassment. Harper ex rel. Harper v. Poway Unified School Dist., S.D.Cal.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 1096, affirmed and remanded 445 F.3d 1166. Civil Rights 1376(5)

It was clearly established at time state university faculty members allegedly retaliated against graduate student for exercising First Amendment rights, after student accused advisor of misappropriating his research, that state university officials cannot retaliate against or punish graduate student for content of his speech, regardless of whether that speech touches matters of public or private concern, and thus defendant faculty members could not establish defense of qualified immunity in § 1983 suit. Qvyjt v. Lin, N.D.Ill.1997, 953 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School board members, in their individual capacities, were not entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiffs' § 1983 claim, alleging temporary restraining order (TRO) sought by members enjoining plaintiffs from distributing charges filed by school board against principal and from disseminating any information that could lead to identity of student named in charges violated their free speech rights; right to speak out on political and social issues was clearly established, fundamental constitutional rights and reasonable jury could find TRO adversely impacted First Amendment rights and that members' belief in lawfulness of their actions was unreasonable. Mazza v. Hendrick Hudson Cent. School Dist., S.D.N.Y.1996, 942 F.Supp. 187. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Contours of right of free speech of students and teachers were sufficiently clear that reasonable university official would understand that requiring removal of photographs of members of history department from display case because they were depicted as historical figures holding weapons violated the right. Burnham v. Ianni, D.Minn.1995, 899 F.Supp. 395, reversed 98 F.3d 1007, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 119 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3811. ---- Religion, education or schools, clearly established right

Staff of university actor training program were not entitled to qualified immunity from Mormon student's claim that program's script adherence requirement violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment because it forced her to recite words in class exercises which offended her religious beliefs, insofar as claim was based on allegation that defendants maintained an ad hoc system of individualized case-by-case exemptions to curricular requirements that they failed to extend to her because of the religious basis for her request; it was clearly established at time of alleged violation that if a defendant has in place a system of individualized exemptions, it must extend that system to religious exemptions or face strict scrutiny review. Axson-Flynn v. Johnson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 356 F.3d 1277. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Staff of university actor training program were not entitled to qualified immunity from Mormon student's claim that program's script adherence requirement that script adherence requirement violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment because it forced her to recite words in class exercises which offended her religious beliefs; law was clearly established at time of alleged violation that if a governmental requirement burdening a religious practice is not neutral or generally applicable, it is subject to strict scrutiny and will not pass constitutional muster unless it is narrowly tailored to advance a compelling government interest. Axson-Flynn v. Johnson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 356 F.3d 1277. Civil Rights 1376(5)

State university's president, athletic director, and assistant athletic director had qualified immunity from claim they violated free exercise of religion rights of cheerleading coordinator when they placed her on probation for allegedly interjecting her Christian religion into cheerleading activities; coordinator's right to do so was not clearly established, given right of university to regulate activities of instructors. University System of Ga., N.D.Ga.2005, 369 F.Supp.2d 1371. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School officials did not violate any clearly established constitutional or statutory right in precluding first-grade student from distributing religious tracts in classroom, and thus they were entitled to qualified immunity from claims under the First Amendment and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA). Harless by Harless v. Darr, S.D.Ind.1996, 937 F.Supp. 1339. Civil Rights 1376(5)

First Amendment law concerning school curriculum or religious music in public schools was not clearly established during 1994-95 school year, and thus, public school officials and board members were entitled to qualified immunity in Jewish student's § 1983 action alleging that music teacher's requirement that school choir sing explicitly Christian religious music and perform at Christian religious sites violated her First Amendment rights. Bauchman By and Through Bauchman v. West High School, D.Utah 1995, 900 F.Supp. 254, affirmed 132 F.3d 542, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2370, 524 U.S. 953, 141 L.Ed.2d 738. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3811A. ---- Social services, education or schools, clearly established right

County officials and employees were not entitled to qualified immunity on claim that they violated church members' Free Exercise right to practice their religion where reasonable official would have known that their alleged conduct of initiating sham investigations motivated by religious animus and enticing children to leave parents' faith violated clearly established right. Words of Faith Fellowship, Inc. v. Rutherford County Dept. of Social Services, W.D.N.C.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 675. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3812. ---- Searches, education or schools, clearly established right

Federal case law at the time did not provide school defendants and police with "fair warning" that a strip search of an elementary school class for missing money would be unconstitutional under Fourth Amendment, and therefore they were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Thomas ex rel. Thomas v. Roberts, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 323 F.3d 950, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 73 Fed.Appx. 389, 2003 WL 21788455. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(6)

High school vice principal who ordered search of students suspected of smoking was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by student who, during that search, was found to be carrying knives, as it was not clearly established that student had claimed right to have search based on individualized suspicion, and search was reasonable. Smith v. McGlothlin, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 119 F.3d 786. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Law regarding searches of students at school was not clearly established to extent that teacher and school counselor should have known at time that their conduct in strip searching two eight-year old elementary students twice in attempt to find $7 stolen from classmate was unreasonable under Fourth Amendment, and, thus, teacher and counselor were entitled to qualified immunity for their actions. Jenkins by Hall v. Talladega City Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 115 F.3d 821, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 412, 522 U.S. 966, 139 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of student, school security officer's alleged actions of violently restraining student who was being noncompliant with orders to leave the school premises would have violated well-known constitutional principals, and thus school district and school officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on student's Fourth Amendment claim for unreasonable search and seizure brought pursuant to § 1983. Nicol v. Auburn-Washburn USD 437, D.Kan.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1092. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Principal was entitled to qualified immunity from damages for suspending student who refused to consent to search for stolen property, despite absence of required individualized suspicion, as such requirement was not so clear that a school official would have known he was violating clearly established law. E.D.Va.1997, 974 F.Supp. 542, reversed 156 F.3d 571. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Middle school principal and teachers were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising after students were subjected to improper general searches for marijuana and portable radios; requirement that defendants have individualized suspicion to make such searches was not "clearly established" at time searches were made. Burnham v. West, E.D.Va.1987, 681 F.Supp. 1160, supplemented 681 F.Supp. 1169. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Principal was entitled to qualified immunity for his role in acquiescing to police officers' brief private interview of one of his students while student was in school, where acquiescence did not violate student's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights of which a reasonable person would have known. Douglas v. Beaver County School Dist. Bd., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 82 Fed.Appx. 200, 2003 WL 22872699, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3813. ---- Discipline generally, education or schools, clearly established right

Second-grade student's right to be free of excessive physical punishment was a clearly established right at the time school vice-principal taped his head to a tree for disciplinary purposes, and thus vice-principal was not entitled to qualified immunity in student's § 1983 action premised on claim of excessive force in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Doe ex rel. Doe v. Hawaii Dept. of Educ., C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 2003, 334 F.3d 906, on remand 351 F.Supp.2d 998. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School official was not entitled to qualified immunity on high school student's "class of one" selective enforcement claim, which was grounded on allegations that his punishment for his conversations with fellow students concerning handguns and his subsequent possession of a handgun off school property was disproportionate to the punishment imposed upon other two students who either supplied or obtained handguns; in light of clearly established case law, a reasonable school official would have understood that it would be wrong to irrationally treat student differently than the other students involved in the incident. Cohn v. New Paltz Central School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 421, appeal dismissed in part 2006 WL 522102. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Even if disciplining of eighth-grade student, who had made violent and threatening drawing, violated that student's constitutional rights, such violation was not clearly established at time that student was suspended, and thus school officials were entitled to qualified immunity from any § 1983 liability. Demers ex rel. Demers v. Leominster School Dept., D.Mass.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 195. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School board members had qualified immunity from liability on student's § 1983 claims for expulsion for possession of marijuana in class, absent presentation of any case demonstrating clearly established right to particular expulsion procedures, right not to expelled on basis of school official's probable cause to believe student possessed marijuana, right to prevent school officials from gathering and sharing information concerning disciplinary accusations, right to not be accused of violating school rules by officials with probable cause to believe student violated rules, right not to be asked to display contents of pockets, right to have board of education compel presence of witnesses at expulsion hearing, or right to preclude board from considering written statements of witnesses. L.Q.A. By and Through Arrington v. Eberhart, M.D.Ala.1996, 920 F.Supp. 1208, affirmed 111 F.3d 897. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Teacher who allegedly violated high school student's due process rights when he momentarily grabbed her wrist and elbow to send her from classroom could not be held to constitutional standard which had not been addressed by Supreme Court or Seventh Circuit. Wallace by Wallace v. Batavia School Dist. 101, N.D.Ill.1994, 870 F.Supp. 222, affirmed 68 F.3d 1010. Constitutional Law 278.5(6)

Recess supervisor, school district, school board, school board president, superintendent, and principal were on notice that due process would be violated by punishment which was not disciplinary or which was so disproportionate to need as to amount to brutal and inhumane abuse of power and, therefore, were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for death of handicapped student required to run 350 yards in less than two minutes as punishment for talking in line with another student. Waechter v. School Dist. No. 14-030 of Cassopolis, Mich., W.D.Mich.1991, 773 F.Supp. 1005. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3814. ---- Corporal punishment, education or schools, clearly established right

Law that some high level of force in corporal punishment context would violate student's substantive due process rights was clearly established before Court of Appeals' analogous decision and was clearly established when corporal punishment was inflicted on student for first time, and, thus, principal, teacher, administrative associate and others did not enjoy qualified immunity from liability. Garcia by Garcia v. Miera, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1987, 817 F.2d 650, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1220, 485 U.S. 959, 99 L.Ed.2d 421. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3815. ---- Suspensions, education or schools, clearly established right

State university dean was not entitled to qualified immunity as defense to graduate student's claims for damages for violation of due process in disciplinary dismissal, as law at the time of dismissal in 1994 was clearly established that in the case of a suspension for disciplinary reasons, due process required notice of the charges and an opportunity for the student to be heard, which were not provided, and dismissal was for reasons totally unrelated to academic standing. Roach v. University of Utah, D.Utah 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1446. Civil Rights 1376(5)

It was not clearly established in February 1996 that Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination applied to school expulsion hearing, and thus, police officer who had allegedly introduced student's un-Mirandized confession, which was obtained during officer's investigation of fire at elementary school, in student's expulsion hearing was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to student's Fifth Amendment claim in § 1983 action. Bills by Bills v. Homer Consol. School Dist. No. 33-C, N.D.Ill.1997, 967 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Middle school officials who suspended student without notice to parents were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability after student was injured in accident while suspended; student had no clear substantive due process right to supervision or protection after being suspended and after leaving school grounds, or to notice to his parents of suspension. Thrower v. Barney, N.D.Ala.1994, 849 F.Supp. 1445, affirmed 43 F.3d 680. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School officials who were involved in suspension of students for misconduct were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for damages under § 1983; students alleged that they were suspended without being afforded proper hearing, and right to procedural safeguards in connection with suspension was clearly established. Cole By and Through Cole v. Newton Special Mun. Separate School Dist., S.D.Miss.1987, 676 F.Supp. 749, affirmed 853 F.2d 924. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3816. ---- Assaults on students, education or schools, clearly established right

Public university president, athletic director, and former coach of university basketball team were entitled to qualified immunity, in student's §§ 1983 action against them in their individual and official capacities, as to claim alleging violation of student's equal protection rights based on alleged sexual harassment of student by three student-athletes; even if defendants acted recklessly, in view of their alleged knowledge regarding one student-athlete's prior misconduct at other schools before recruiting him, student failed to present any cases showing that defendants violated her clearly established equal protection rights by recruiting and admitting that student-athlete. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 441 F.3d 1287, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 2006 WL 1173185. Civil Rights 1376(5) alleging that student was sexually assaulted by other students, because student had no present right to protection from assaults of private individuals, much less clearly established constitutional right at time superintendent allegedly failed to take actions to prevent assaults. Stevens v. Umsted, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 131 F.3d 697. Civil Rights 1376(5)

High school principal was not entitled to qualified immunity regarding students' § 1983 action alleging excessive use of force for his actions including slapping, punching, and choking students which students alleged bore no reasonable relation to need and which were taken for purpose of causing harm including significant pain, bruising, and emotional injury; students' right to be free from excessive force or unwanted intrusions was clearly established and principal could not have reasonably believed that his actions were lawful. P.B. v. Koch, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1996, 96 F.3d 1298. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Officials of Georgia school for the deaf were entitled to qualified immunity from the civil rights claim of residential student, who was sexually assaulted by a classmate, in that state's duty to protect student was not clearly established at time of sexual assault. Spivey v. Elliott, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1522, on reconsideration 41 F.3d 1497. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Student's due process right to be free from sexual abuse by teacher was clearly established, for qualified immunity purposes, by at least 1992. Arbaugh v. Board of Educ., County of Pendleton, N.D.W.Va.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 762 . Civil Rights 1376(5)

Students failed to establish that in 1992, when alleged incidents took place, it was clearly established in Eleventh Circuit that government officials violated students' substantive due process rights by not having sexual abuse prevention policy and by failing to train and/or supervise its personnel in sexual abuse prevention/intervention and, therefore, school officials, in their individual capacities, were entitled to qualified immunity from students' § 1983 action for substantive due process violation based on officials' alleged failure to comply with Title IX's regulatory requirements to implement such policy and practices. Does v. Covington County School Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1996, 930 F.Supp. 554. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Even if high school football coach had constitutional duty to protect team member against assault by fellow students during hazing ritual on team bus, doctrine of qualified immunity shielded coach from liability under § 1983 ; no prior decision had ruled that school officials were constitutionally required to protect students from assault by fellow students during extracurricular activities. Reeves by Jones v. Besonen, E.D.Mich.1991, 754 F.Supp. 1135. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Estate of student that brought action against state university officials, stemming from student's murder in dormitory, failed to establish that officials' purported failure to provide adequate building security constituted violation of clearly established law, and thus officials were entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability; law was not clear that student had special relationship giving rise to duty on part of state, pursuant to substantive due process, to protect against injury by third parties. Griffin v. Troy State University, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 739, 2005 WL 913278, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3817. ---- Harassment, education or schools, clearly established right

Alabama community college officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit by male security officers who alleged that, between 1983 and 1998, they were sexually harassed by male supervisor; at time of alleged violations, it was not clearly established that same-sex sexual harassment violated Equal Protection Clause, and neither that clause nor case law before Eleventh Circuit's 2003 Downing decision provided fair and clear warning that male supervisor sexually harassing male employees would violate employees' constitutional rights. Snider v. Jefferson State Community College, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 344 F.3d 1325, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 90 Fed.Appx. 391, 2003 WL 23190922. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was not clearly established that school officials had duty to prevent student-on-student harassment, and thus middle school principal was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for failing to prevent harassment of student by fellow students. Risica ex rel. Risica v. Dumas, D.Conn.2006, 2006 WL 3345410. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School director was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 to school teacher for alleged sexual harassment by student; teacher had alleged constitutionally protected right to be free from sexual harassment, teacher also had, at a minimum, controverted school director's allegations that her right to be free from sexual harassment was clearly established at time of facts alleged in complaint, and teacher had presented sufficient evidence to create material issue of fact as to whether objectively reasonable government actor, performing discretionary functions, would have understood her conduct to violate teacher's rights under Title VII. Plaza-Torres v. Rey, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 376 F.Supp.2d 171. Civil Rights 1376(10)

University's dean of graduate school and head of education department were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim filed by graduate assistant, alleging that dean and department head took actions in response to her claim of sexual harassment by professor that violated her constitutional right to be free from sexual harassment under the Fourteenth Amendment; dean and department head did not dispute that her right to be free from sexual harassment was a clearly established right, or that reasonable official would have understood that alleged misconduct violated that right. Mandsager v. University of North Carolina at Greensboro, M.D.N.C.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 662. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Neither state university's soccer coach, who allegedly engaged in sexual harassment of players, nor supervisory employees who allegedly failed to act on complaints, were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability; players' rights of privacy and to be free of sexual harassment were clearly established at time of alleged misconduct. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Individual school district defendants sued in their individual capacity were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability for alleged sexual harassment of student by fellow student, absent violation of clearly-established rights of which reasonable person knew or should have known at time of incident in question. Garza v. Galena Park Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1994, 914 F.Supp. 1437. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3818. ---- Handicapped children, education or schools, clearly established right

Conduct of school district in using blanket wrapping technique with respect to handicapped student did not violate student's clearly established constitutional right to be free from unreasonable bodily restraint, and district was thus entitled to qualified immunity on student's due process claim as matter of law; student had verified severe mental retardation, epilepsy, visual impairments, hearing impairments, and learning disabilities, defendant physical therapist was licensed professional therapist and school district was following therapist's recommendation in using blanket wrapping technique, and even if blanket wrapping treatment constituted substantial departure from professional norms, reasonable official would not have known that to be true. Heidemann v. Rother, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1021, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(5); Constitutional Law 82(12); Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1)

Requirement that school officials identify and evaluate children suspected of having qualifying disability under Individuals with Disability Education Act (IDEA) within reasonable time was clearly established in September of 1991, so that school officials were not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to the failure to do so. W.B. v. Matula, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 67 F.3d 484. Schools 63(3)

Due process rights of retarded child, who was not committed to state school through formal judicial proceedings, were clearly established, and, thus, former superintendent and physicians of state school were not entitled to qualified official immunity in § 1983 action against them in their individual capacities. Savidge v. Fincannon, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 836 F.2d 898, rehearing denied 843 F.2d 499. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School officials were not qualifiedly immune from §§ 1983 claims based on alleged violations of disabled student's rights under ADA's Title II, which prohibits discrimination in services, programs, or activities of public entity, and Rehabilitation Act section prohibiting discrimination under federal grants and programs, inasmuch as such rights were clearly established with respect to peer disability harassment given Supreme Court case involving peer sexual harassment, and reasonable teacher or administrator could not have believed that refusing to become more involved when student sought their help would not violate his rights. K.M. ex rel. D.G. v. Hyde Park Cent. School Dist., S.D.N.Y.2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 343. Civil Rights 1376(5)

IDEA prohibition of any arbitrary limit on early intervention services was clearly established law, for purposes of county officials' claim of qualified immunity against autistic children's parents' § 1983 action alleging de facto policy limiting provision of Applied Behavior Analysis (ABA) therapy during early intervention. BD v. DeBuono, S.D.N.Y.2000, 130 F.Supp.2d 401. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3819. ---- Miscellaneous rights, education or schools, clearly established right

Staff of university actor training program were entitled to qualified immunity from Mormon student's claim that program's script adherence requirement violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment because it forced her to recite words in class exercises which offended her religious beliefs, insofar as claim was based on "hybrid-rights" exception to rational basis review of neutral requirement which incidentally burdens a particular religious practice or belief, as law regarding "hybrid-rights" exception was not clearly established at time of alleged violation. Axson-Flynn v. Johnson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 356 F.3d 1277. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School superintendent was entitled to qualified immunity in a § 1983 suit in connection with expulsion of a high school student under zero tolerance policy for presence of friend's knife in student's car, even if presence was without student's knowledge; as an abstract matter, the right of public school students not to be expelled arbitrarily or irrationally has been clearly established since at least 1975, but the contours of that right were not sufficiently clear to put a reasonable school superintendent on notice in 1996 that a school disciplinary policy's lack of a conscious-possession requirement could produce irrational expulsions and thus violate the legal rights of students expelled under the policy. Seal v. Morgan, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 229 F.3d 567, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School superintendent did not violate a clearly established constitutional right by allegedly not permitting student's sttendance at elementary school for seven days, and not consistently providing student with an in-home tutor for last three months of school year, and, thus, superintendent had qualified immunity from civil rights action under §§ 1983 brought by student's mother, alleging that superintendent violated her Fourteenth Amendment right as a parent to the orderly rearing and education of her child. Jenkins v. Board of Educ., S.D.Ohio 2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 747. Civil Rights 1376(5)

President and Vice President of Student Affairs for public university had qualified immunity from claim that they violated First Amendment rights of all-male fraternity by enforcing rule conditioning official recognition on admission of female students; associational rights of fraternities were not clearly defined prior to present case. Chi Iota Colony of Alpha Epsilon PI Fraternity v. City University of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 374. Civil Rights 1376(5)

University officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from athlete's claim that they violated his procedural due process rights by dismissing him from track team in retaliation for his appeal of scholarship nonrenewal, inasmuch as it was well established that government officials could not retaliate against individuals who engaged in constitutionally protected conduct. Richard v. Perkins, D.Kan.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 1211. Civil Rights

Police officer had qualified immunity from suit, by female high school athlete, claiming that he engaged in gender discrimination in violation of student's privacy, due process, and equal protection rights by reporting to school principal that athlete was smoking off campus; it was not clearly established that report violated athlete's rights. Schultzen v. Woodbury Cent. Community School Dist., N.D.Iowa 2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1376(6)

School officials were entitled to qualified immunity from suit for damages in their individual capacities for adoption and implementation of a school uniform policy which allegedly infringed upon and violated the free exercise of great-grandmother's religion and her substantive due process right as a parent to direct great-grandson's education and religious upbringing; while an individual's right to freely exercise her religion was a clearly established constitutional right, the law with respect to that right in the context of a facially neutral school uniform policy that purportedly infringes that right was not settled. Hicks ex rel. Hicks v. Halifax County Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.C.1999, 93 F.Supp.2d 649. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Student's right to freedom from school officials' deliberate indifference to, or affirmative acts that increase danger of, serious injury from unjustified invasions of bodily integrity perpetrated by third parties in school setting was clearly established at time high school wrestler was injured, for purpose of determining whether school officials, who had invited older, alumni wrestlers to practice with team, were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Sciotto v. Marple Newton School Dist., E.D.Pa.1999, 81 F.Supp.2d 559. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School principal was entitled to qualified immunity for any violation of parents' rights when he allowed child to leave school grounds with foster parents before school was dismissed for the day, without a court order, without notifying parents, and without parental permission, knowledge, or consent, where scenario presented to him involved foster parents being allowed by county juvenile officer to accept child into their home, apparently on a foster parent basis, with everyone's knowledge of facts which arguably established probable cause to believe that child was victim of neglect and abuse. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School officials, in their individual capacities, were entitled to qualified immunity from students' § 1983 action alleging substantive due process violation based on failure to supervise teachers by ignoring and failing to investigate complaints regarding teacher as students failed to establish that in 1992, when alleged incidents took place, it was clearly established in Eleventh Circuit that constitutional violation occurred when school principal received complaints on several occasions about teacher that teacher appeared to exhibit homosexual mannerisms, sometimes insisted students sit on his lap, that at one conference missing student was discovered coming out of teacher's office holding teacher's hand, that teacher sent student cards, candy and money, as well as note wherein teacher told student he sat in student's classroom desk, and thereafter principal reprimanded teacher when he saw teacher with student on his lap but took no other action. Does v. Covington County School Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1996, 930 F.Supp. 554. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3820. Elections, clearly established right

Fundamental right to vote, right to secret ballot, and right to equal protection were clearly established, for qualified immunity purposes, when Board of Elections for the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands implemented new voter challenge procedures that provided for pre-election review of voter challenges raised by one political party and post-election review of challenges by opposing party and resulted in preclusion of certain voters from casting pivotal votes in island school board election via secret ballot process. Charfauros v. Board of Elections, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)2001, 249 F.3d 941, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(5)

It was not clearly established in September 1992 that constitutional right to seek election to public office included right to be free from abuse of process motivated by desire to interfere with right to seek office, and members of board of elections who had authorized filing of motion for stay from injunction which required board to include candidate on ballot for Congressional election were entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action by candidate based on stay, even though stay motion was objectively baseless. Hirschfeld v. Spanakos, S.D.N.Y.1995, 909 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3821. Employment, clearly established right--Generally

It was not clearly established at time when state lottery director made qualitative changes in employee's job duties, without discharge, transfer, demotion, or salary loss, that such action constituted adverse employment action, and director thus was qualifiedly immune from civil damages regarding rearrangement of employee's duties; although some cases hinted that gutting central job functions could constitute adverse action, those cases addressed quantitative rather than qualitative reductions in responsibilities. Dahm v. Flynn, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 60 F.3d 253, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Proposition argued by developer that city official was not entitled to qualified immunity for alleged malicious actions resulting in denial of public employment to developer causing developer to lose numerous other employment opportunities did not involve clearly established right at time of official's action, and thus, official's conduct was protected by qualified immunity with respect to developer's § 1983 action even if such conduct was unlawful. Walentas v. Lipper, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 862 F.2d 414, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1747, 490 U.S. 1021, 104 L.Ed.2d 183. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Assistant director of county police department was not apprised of an extent of alleged discrimination which would have put him on notice that his failure to halt any unjustified transfers of police officers of non-Cuban heritage would rise to the level of a constitutional violation, such that he could be deprived of qualified immunity in § 1983 action based on alleged failure to adequately train subordinates; assistant director was responsible for 2,000 employees dispersed among eight districts, and any violation of department policy in connection with transfers was not a constitutional violation. Buzzi v. Gomez, S.D.Fla.1998, 24 F.Supp.2d 1352. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Superintendent was shielded by doctrine of qualified immunity from liability in individual capacity in revocation of teacher's coaching assignments for derogatory comment about former athletic director, as superintendent's conduct was not shown to have been retaliatory with respect to protected speech, and his actions were not unreasonable in light of clearly established constitutional principles. Hill v. Silsbee Independent School Dist., E.D.Tex.1996, 933 F.Supp. 616. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Public employer may not invoke qualified immunity when it investigates matters unrelated to employee's public duties, as reasonable employer would understand that investigation violates clearly established constitutional right. Hughes v. City of North Olmsted, N.D.Ohio 1995, 894 F.Supp. 1120, reversed 93 F.3d 238. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Plaintiff, an applicant for a government job, did not have a clearly established constitutional right in 1976 not to have search committee member referred to her personnel files and therefore government employee who referred search committee member to plaintiff's personnel files was immune from suit for damages arising out of denial of plaintiff's job application; furthermore, another government employee who complied with search committee member's request that she attempt to locate plaintiff's employment records and who conveyed a message to search committee member to continue accepting applications until he was certain he had selected the best qualified applicant was immune from suit regardless of whether her actions were performed because she knew of plaintiff's political beliefs. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former police officers' right not to have governmental entities inflict an adverse employment decision against them, in retaliation for exercising their First Amendment rights, was clearly established when police chief allegedly retaliated against officers and no reasonable officer could have held a contrary belief and, thus, chief was not entitled to qualified immunity in officers' §§ 1983 action, alleging they were disciplined and terminated for speaking against misfeasance within police department, an ongoing cover-up, and an attempt to silence those who spoke out against it. Skehan v. Village of Mamaroneck, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 96. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City officials' contention that state of the law was unclear with respect to whether public employee could be speaking on matters of public concern when speech was made in capacity as public employee did not entitle officials to qualified immunity from city engineer's First Amendment unlawful discharge claims; at time of engineer's termination, cases made clear that speech touched upon matter of public concern when it dealt with issues of interest to community, and employee's comments regarding dam project clearly addressed issues that public would be interested in, not issues of personal interest only to engineer. Kincade v. City of Blue Springs, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 64 F.3d 389, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1565, 517 U.S. 1166, 134 L.Ed.2d 665. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Mayor of Philadelphia was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability to former Deputy Police Commissioner on his §§ 1983 claim relating to his termination in alleged retaliation for filing equity complaint seeking to enjoin his removal pending results of District Attorney's investigation into whether he had obtained illegal gun permit and for appearing on radio program and discussing results of that investigation; former Deputy Commissioner had alleged violation of his First Amendment rights to petition government for redress of grievances and to engage in free speech, which were clearly established. Mitchell v. Street, E.D.Pa.2005, 415 F.Supp.2d 490. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Puerto Rico government agency, its executive director, and its human resources director were not entitled to qualified immunity from suit by employee, alleging that she was demoted due to political affiliation in violation of First Amendment; protection from political patronage in government employment had been recognized long before events giving rise to employee's claim, and executive and human resources directors were expected to know that employee could not be subjected to altered conditions of employment because of political inclination. Concepcion v. Zorrilla, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 201. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Corrections facility employee's right to be free from retaliation was clearly established as First Amendment right and as statutory right under Title VII, for purposes of determining whether facility's officials in their individual capacities were qualifiedly immune from employee's § 1983 claim that retaliation by officials violated his equal protection rights. Eldridge v. Morrison, M.D.Ala.1996, 970 F.Supp. 928, affirmed 120 F.3d 275. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Former supervisors of former state employee, in their individual capacities, were entitled to qualified immunity with regard to former state employee's § 1983 claim that he was constructively discharged in violation of First Amendment; though constructively discharging public employee for protected speech would violate clearly established right, challenged conduct of former supervisors was within their discretionary authority, and former state employee failed to demonstrate that reasonable official in former supervisors' position would have known their actions were in violation of such right. Flood v. State of Ala. Dept. of Indus. Relations, M.D.Ala.1996, 948 F.Supp. 1535, affirmed 136 F.3d 1332. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Plaintiffs who were issued citation for interfering with peaceful conduct of business while attempting to gather signatures to petition in front of public building failed to establish that officers violated clearly established right so as to render inapplicable defense of qualified immunity. Police department and city officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by police officer denied permission to hold press conference to address certain issues, problems, and past incidents of behavior within police departments, as no reasonable public official could have known that denial of permission may have violated officer's clearly established rights under First Amendment to United States Constitution; when police department can show that speech in question actually disrupts officer's efficiency or internal operation of department or that speech has reasonable tendency to lead to such disruption, court should not substitute its judgment for that of department. Angle v. Dow, S.D.Ala.1993, 822 F.Supp. 1530. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Superintendent of schools and president of board of education were entitled to qualified immunity for their roles in actions taken against teacher in violation of her First Amendment rights; in light of preexisting law, unlawfulness of their actions was not "apparent" at that time. Rothschild v. Board of Educ. of City of Buffalo, W.D.N.Y.1991, 778 F.Supp. 642. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Fire department officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability with respect to paramedic's claim that he was transferred in retaliation for his exercise of First Amendment rights, notwithstanding fact that transfer did not take place until three and a half years after the protected activity, since there was established case law holding that transferring an employee against his or her will in retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights violates Constitution even when no loss of pay or seniority is incurred. Nowak v. Szwedo, N.D.Ill.1989, 704 F.Supp. 153. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3823. ---- Freedom of speech, employment, clearly established right

At time that attorney for Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS) was discharged, after engaging in protected speech objecting to the OIDS procedure for approval of expert witnesses, law that public employer could not retaliate against an employee for exercising her protected right of free speech was "clearly established," barring qualified immunity defense, in attorney's §§ 1983 free speech claim; on point case law prohibiting such free speech retaliation existed for several years before attorney's discharge. McFall v. Bednar, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 2005 WL 896453, amended and superseded 407 F.3d 1081. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity in officer's §§ 1983 claim that he was transferred in retaliation for his speech on matter of public concern since it was well established that a public employer could not retaliate against an employee who exercised his First Amendment rights; in addition to the numerous cases prohibiting retaliatory transfer, the chief himself had been a defendant in another case alleging retaliatory transfer and should have been familiar with the law. Miller v. Jones, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 444 F.3d 929. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Supervisor of special investigator for Pennsylvania Office of Inspector General (OIG) was entitled to qualified immunity from investigator's §§ 1983 claim that supervisor retaliated against him, in violation of First Amendment, for speaking out against pharmaceutical industry, since constitutional right allegedly violated was not clearly established; reasonable official in supervisor's position would not have been aware that making a few comments over the course of a few months, the gist of which was asking an employee to focus on his job, could violate First Amendment. McKee v. Hart, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 436 F.3d 165. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Municipal administrator and street commissioner were entitled to qualified immunity to §§ 1981, §§ 1983, and equal protection claims of Spanish-speaking Hispanic employees, with regard to implementation of English-only policy, since right to speak foreign language in workplace had not been clearly established by Supreme Court or Court of Appeals at time that English-only policy had been adopted, and published authority from other circuit courts suggested that English-only rules as applied to bilingual speakers generally were not discriminatory. Maldonado v. City of Altus, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 433 F.3d 1294. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School superintendent and high school principal were not entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability to teacher whose contract was not renewed as result of public outcry engendered by assignment of protected materials that had been approved by school board; their conduct violated constitutional right that was clearly established. Evans-Marshall v. Board of Educ. of Tipp City Exempted Village School Dist., C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 428 F.3d 223. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on school nurse's First Amendment retaliation claim based on allegation that officials gave her an unsatisfactory employment rating for raising matters of public concern; law was clearly established that nurse's speech advocating on behalf of two disabled students, and objecting to pesticide spraying by an unlicensed individual was constitutionally protected because it was a matter of public concern and because school defendants were unable to set forth a sufficient countervailing interest. McGreevy v. Stroup, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 413 F.3d 359. Civil Rights 1376(10)

As a matter of law, a city inspector's constitutional rights in speaking publicly about illegal activities of the city building department were clearly established, for purposes of § 1983 civil rights claim brought by inspector against city and city officials alleging termination of employment in retaliation for exercising his First Amendment rights; a reasonable official would have known that terminating an employee with the motivation, even in part, of quieting the employee's public speech about illegal activities of the department violated the Constitution. Hoover v. Radabaugh, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2002, 307 F.3d 460. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Investigator's First Amendment right not to be terminated in retaliation for exercising his free speech rights, in connection with his internal investigation of fellow law enforcement officers' alleged buying of previously leased county vehicles at below market price, was clearly established in 1995, and, thus, acting county prosecutor was not qualifiedly immune from investigator's § 1983 claim. Baldassare v. State of N.J., C.A.3 (N.J.) 2001, 250 F.3d 188. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County commissioner was entitled to qualified immunity from county employee's § 1983 claim, which alleged that she was discharged in violation of the First Amendment for informing commissioner that county's failure to pay wages for overtime would violate the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA); precedent did not clearly establish that such statement involved a "matter of public concern." Chesser v. Sparks, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2001, 248 F.3d 1117. Civil Rights 1376(10)

By limiting the time and place for county employees to discuss an alleged incident of sexual misconduct involving a coworker, which these employees had heard about but had not witnessed, county commissioners did not violate "clearly established" First Amendment law and, thus, they were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 on employees' First Amendment claims. Domina v. Van Pelt, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1091. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County employee's First Amendment right to comment on traffic safety and snow removal at a particular intersection was clearly established in 1993, and director of county highways department thus was not qualifiedly immune from employee's § 1983 claim that his termination violated such right. Lee v. Nicholl, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1999, 197 F.3d 1291. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Even if school psychologist alleged First Amendment violation based on claim that school district superintendent influenced psychologist's employer, which was independent contractor that provided special education services to school district, in its refusal to renew psychologist's contract, superintendent was entitled to qualified immunity upon psychologist's resulting § 1983 claim, since constitutional standards regarding independent contractors were unclear at time psychologist's contract was not renewed. Khuans v. School Dist. 110, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 123 F.3d 1010. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State corrections officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 suit brought by employee who alleged she was fired for speaking out about department policies regarding sex offenders, since law was clearly established that public employees may not be discharged in retaliation for speaking on matters of public concern, absent showing that employer's interest in efficiency of its operations outweighed employee's interest in speech. Andersen v. McCotter, C.A.10 (Utah) 1996, 100 F.3d 723, on remand 3 F.Supp.2d 1223. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Journalist's right to be free from improper acts of retaliation for exercise of her First Amendment right to report to citizenry about political matters of public concern was "clearly established" at time village governmental officials allegedly violated that right, and thus officials were not entitled to qualified immunity for those improper acts of retaliation in journalist's § 1983 action; however, proper exercise by government officials of their own free speech rights could not serve as basis for imposition of liability upon those individuals. McBride v. Village of Michiana, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 100 F.3d 457, on remand 1998 WL 276139. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1374

Right to be free of adverse employment action by public employer for exercise of First Amendment rights was clearly established at time county undersheriff discharged former probationary corrections officer, and therefore undersheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity in subsequent § 1983 action. Sagendorf-Teal v. County of Rensselaer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 100 F.3d 270. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Law was clearly established that public official would violate public employee's free speech rights by taking adverse action against employee for employee's cooperation with law enforcement investigation, and so sheriff did not have qualified immunity from civil rights action brought by deputy whose commission as deputy sheriff was not renewed by sheriff as result of deputy's cooperation with Georgia Board of Investigation's (GBI) investigation into corruption at sheriff's office; deputy's statements about corruption were matters of public concern, and deputy's interest in making statements outweighed sheriff's interest in efficient operation of department. Cooper v. Smith, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 89 F.3d 761, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 106 F.3d 420. Civil Rights 1376(10)

At time supervisor discharged public employee, public employee's First Amendment right to appear at supervisor's divorce proceeding pursuant to subpoena of supervisor's wife was clearly established, and therefore supervisor was not entitled to qualified immunity in public employee's subsequent § 1983 action which alleged she was discharged in retaliation for activity protected by First Amendment, though there existed split among Courts of Appeals at time of discharge regarding whether public employee's actions constituted constitutionally protected speech. Pro v. Donatucci, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 81 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1376(10)

General administrator of Oklahoma Corporation Commission (OCC), a public employer, was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to § 1983 action brought by black public utility coordinator who was ordered by administrator to remove from her office picture depicting black girl being escorted to school by marshals and brick wall on which word "nigger" was written and picture depicting group of black children with white cat looking at group of white children with black dog in response to discrimination allegations made by coordinator's white subordinate; coordinator did not show that it was clearly established that forced removal of these pictures would violate employee's right of free speech and administrator's statement that he knew he was violating coordinator's civil rights was irrelevant to efficacy of administrator's qualified immunity defense. Furnace v. Oklahoma Corp. Com'n, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1995, 51 F.3d 932. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Specific and unrefuted evidence that state employee's speech criticizing agency programs affected morale and substantially disrupted work environment supported determination that his free speech rights were not "clearly established" and, thus, that supervisors were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for damages in civil rights action. Grantham v. Trickey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 21 F.3d 289. Civil Rights 1423

Punishment of public employee for writing a novel without any legitimate reason for the punishment is such an elementary violation of First Amendment that it may be found to be clearly established and, thus, defeat claim of qualified immunity, even in the absence of a reported case with similar facts. Eberhardt v. O'Malley, C.A.7 (Ill.)

1994, 17 F.3d 1023. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Discharge of university professor after he accused a colleague of plagiarism did not violate professor's First Amendment rights, entitling university officials sued in their personal capacities to qualified immunity. Feldman v. Bahn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 12 F.3d 730, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 571, 513 U.S. 1014, 130 L.Ed.2d 489. Colleges And Universities 8.1(3); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.3)

Municipal employees were entitled to qualified immunity for dismissal of public employee for exercise of protected free speech where clarity of law on contours of public employee speech were by no means clearly established in early 1988 when dismissal occurred. Meyers v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 979 F.2d 1154. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Municipal officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from employee's claim that he was discharged in retaliation for disclosure of criminal activities to Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI); any reasonable public official would have been aware that in 1986 employee's statements were protected under the First Amendment. Gorman v. Robinson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 977 F.2d 350. Municipal Corporations 218(3)

Any retaliation for speech on manner of such prominent public concern as workplace sexual harassment will represent violation of clearly established right, so university health center officials alleged to have retaliated against officer with center's police force for officer's speech would not be entitled to qualified immunity from officer's claim under First Amendment. Wilson v. UT Health Center, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1263, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1644, 507 U.S. 1004, 123 L.Ed.2d 266. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City manager was not entitled to qualified immunity from employee's claim that she was fired in retaliation for her exercise of free speech, where law concerning whether public employee's expression was constitutionally protected conduct was clearly established. Martinez v. City of Opa-Locka, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 971 F.2d 708. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City police department regulations that delayed employee's access to public forum to voice her complaints until after police department's internal affairs division could investigate complaints did not so clearly violate employee's constitutional right to free speech that officials would have been put on notice that enforcement of regulations would violate First Amendment and, thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action; police department had strong interest in maintaining loyalty, discipline, morale and favorable reputation with public. Busby v. City of Orlando, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 931 F.2d 764. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Action of officer in charge of naval station commissary in terminating licensee grocery bagger after she circulated petition among other baggers calling for discharge of head bagger did not violate any clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known and, accordingly, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by licensee grocery bagger; bagger's speech was not a matter of public concern and accordingly, was not protected by the First Amendment. Havekost v. U.S. Dept. of Navy, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 925 F.2d 316. Civil Rights 1376(10); Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Supervisors of government social work unit were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with their transfer of an employee who had publicly criticized them and the department to undesirable work at same pay; at time action was taken it was not clear that the law forbade transfers on account of protected speech. Greenberg v. Kmetko, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 922 F.2d 382, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County employees were not entitled to qualified immunity in connection with deputy sheriff's claims that he was denied promotions and harassed because of his criticism of his department's promotion system and practices, as officer's criticism, which concerned efficient operation of department, involved matters of public concern and was clearly protected by First Amendment. Powell v. Basham, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1990, 921 F.2d 165. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County fire marshal's right not to be discharged in retaliation for protected speech allegedly opposing passage and enforcement of ordinances believed to conflict with state fire flow and private road standards was clearly established for purposes of determining whether county executive was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Burgess v. Pierce County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1990, 918 F.2d 104. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City police commissioner was not entitled to qualified or absolute immunity for his alleged conduct in authorizing the commencement of and continuing a meritless lawsuit seeking to disqualify city police officer's attorneys in disciplinary action against officer, allegedly in retaliation for officer's comments on matters of public concern, for purpose of officer's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim; officer's right to comment on matters of public concern as a public employee was clearly established. Chittenden v. Connors, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 463. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Even if Office of Legislative Auditor (OLA) employee's speech was in fact constitutionally protected, defendants in §§ 1983 action relating to his subsequent demotion, allegedly in retaliation for that speech, were entitled to affirmative defense of qualified immunity as employee's asserted First Amendment rights were not clearly established. Levy v. Office of Legislative Auditor, M.D.La.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 494. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether supervisor at state mental health hospital filed work rule violation complaint against nurse as result of nurse's protected conduct, and as to whether supervisor should have known that filing such complaint would violate First Amendment, precluding summary judgment as to qualified immunity in nurse's retaliation action under §§ 1983. Barclay v. Michalsky, D.Conn.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 386. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

New York Metropolitan Transit Authority (MTA) Inspector General was not entitled to dismissal of terminated employee's First Amendment retaliation claim on basis of qualified immunity; employee's right to be free from retaliation based on protected speech was defined with sufficient clarity to have been clearly established at time of Inspector General's alleged adverse employment actions, and there was no record yet in case to establish whether Inspector General acted reasonably. Anemone v. Metropolitan Transp. Authority, S.D.N.Y.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 255. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County public library employee's right to wear pendant with cross while at work was not clearly established at time that employee was terminated for refusing to remove it, pursuant to library's dress code prohibiting any "ornament depicting religious ... decoration," and thus library officials who fired employee enjoyed qualified immunity in her § § 1983 action alleging violation of her free speech and free exercise rights; wearing of pendant implicated gray area between First Amendment's Free Speech/Free Exercise clauses and its Establishment Clause. Draper v. Logan County Public Library, W.D.Ky.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State Secretary of Administration was not entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim, by director of motor pool, that Secretary terminated director in retaliation for his complaints that reorganization of pool was not cost-effective; at time of termination it was clearly established that public employees were protected from retaliation when they spoke out regarding matter of public concern. Spiess v. Fricke, D.Kan.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County officials were not qualifiedly immune from employee's First Amendment claim if they retaliated against him for complaining about safety issues, inasmuch as public employee's right not to be retaliated against for speaking out on matters of public concern was well-settled. Magilton v. Tocco, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 495 . Civil Rights 1376(10)

New Mexico high school instructor's supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for any constitutional violation associated with instructor's support for spouse's underlying Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) charge, as law was not clearly established in Tenth Circuit whether that charge had to be matter of public concern to warrant First Amendment retaliation protection. Trujillo v. Board of Educ. of Albuquerque Public Schools, D.N.M.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 994. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Supervisor of state employee was not entitled to qualified immunity from employee's claim that supervisor terminated her in retaliation for exercising her First Amendment right to freedom of speech in disclosing to agency legal counsel alleged illegal acts of supervisor; unlawfulness of retaliating against or terminating a public employee who reports, even internally and privately, some evidence of ostensible corruption, impropriety, or other integrity lapses on the part of government officials, was apparent from well-established law at time of employee's termination. Gansert v. Colorado, D.Colo.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1215. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Supervisor of librarian for county library did not violate a clearly established First Amendment free speech or associational right of librarian, and supervisor therefore was entitled to qualified immunity from individual liability for alleged violation of First Amendment, as to supervisor's decision to prohibit librarian from attending, during working hours and without being accompanied by supervisor, meetings of private nonprofit corporation for which librarian served on board of directors and which raised funds for library, and for which it would be difficult to anticipate whether matters of public concern would be discussed at its meetings. Sheaffer v. County of Chatham, M.D.N.C.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 709. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County sheriff did not have qualified immunity from suit claiming that assistant county jail administrator was wrongfully terminated in response to his exercise of First Amendment rights, after assistant accused his supervisor of improper supervision of transported prisoner and challenged overtime budget; sheriff could not have felt justified in terminating assistant based on evidence in support of transportation misconduct, and it was clearly established that officials could not interfere with employees exercising their First Amendment rights. Shepard v. Wapello County, Iowa, S.D.Iowa 2003, 303 F.Supp.2d 1004. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Agency's employees sufficiently alleged that inspector general's directives indicating that staff members could not communicate about agency policies to agency head, press, or any external agents except with his prior knowledge and approval operated as a prior restraint on speech, and that their right to be free from such a restriction was clearly established at time first directive was issued, as required to support claim that inspector general was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for civil damages for violating their First Amendment rights; before directive was issued that there was heavy presumption against constitutional validity of any prior restraint on expression, and employees' proposed speech did not present likelihood of imminent lawless action so as to demonstrate that prior restraint was reasonable. Wernsing v. Thompson, C.D.Ill.2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 983, reversed and remanded 423 F.3d 732, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1476, 164 L.Ed.2d 249. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was clearly established in September 2002, for purposes of a fire chief's qualified immunity defense to a firefighter's free speech action, that a fire chief's disagreement with a firefighter's views on fire department safety issues and the firefighter's manner of expressing those views was insufficient to justify conditioning continued employment upon the cessation of the protected expression based on a perceived threat of disruption. Lilienthal v. City of Suffolk, E.D.Va.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 684. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Employee's supervisor was not entitled to qualified immunity from employee's First Amendment claim under § 1983 alleging that adverse employment actions including termination were taken against her for complaining about employer's gender and age discrimination; employee's First Amendment rights to express such complaints were clearly established at time of events giving rise to claim. Hall v. Missouri Highway and Transp. Com'n, E.D.Mo.1998, 995 F.Supp. 1001, affirmed 235 F.3d 1065. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was not clearly established that governor's public statement about mob corruption by officials immediately prior to loss of employment by union employees on public project violated employees' liberty interest, and, thus, governor was entitled to qualified immunity for § 1983 action in his individual capacities arising out of alleged violation. Sacco v. Pataki, S.D.N.Y.1997, 982 F.Supp. 231, affirmed 278 F.3d 93. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School administrators who told public high school student not to display Confederate flag and who suspended him after he objected were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit as it was not clearly established that their conduct violated First Amendment. Denno v. School Bd. of Volusia County, M.D.Fla.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1481, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 182 F.3d 780, rehearing granted and vacated 193 F.3d 1178, reversed in part on rehearing 218 F.3d 1267, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 235 F.3d 1347, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 382, 531 U.S. 958, 148 L.Ed.2d 295. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Neither town nor mayor in his official capacity could be liable for punitive damages based on town employee's free speech claim. Myers v. Town of Landis, M.D.N.C.1996, 957 F.Supp. 762, affirmed in part, dismissed in part 107 F.3d 867. Civil Rights 1474(2)

City council members were entitled to qualified immunity from former public employee's claim that he was terminated as member of board of police commissioners after he exercised free speech rights in closed meeting of board; council members who voted in favor of motion premising employee's removal on issues of credibility reasonably could have concluded that employee could be removed without violating his First Amendment rights. Reinhart v. City of Maryland Heights, E.D.Mo.1996, 930 F.Supp. 410. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for civil damages arising from city employee's discharge following his statements on matter of clear public concern; employee's complaints to supervisors regarding inefficient management of significant public project and of extortion and threats related to it clearly constituted speech addressing matters of public concern, for which employee could not have been constitutionally terminated, existence of that right was well established at time employee was terminated, and any reasonable official would have understood at time that it was unconstitutional to dismiss employee for such reason. Rao v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corp., S.D.N.Y.1995, 905 F.Supp. 1236. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Public university officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by professor who alleged that officials violated her right to be free of retaliatory action for the exercise of First Amendment rights; although professor took steps to make the charges of discrimination public, charges that professor made public were apparently focused on her own experiences and it was not clearly established whether these actions were protected and even if the speech at issue was a matter of public concern, it was not clearly established that professor's interest outweighed the interest of public university in running effective academic atmosphere. Howze v. Virginia Polytechnic, W.D.Va.1995, 901 F.Supp. 1091. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Community college president was not entitled to qualified immunity for alleged violation of tenured teacher's First Amendment rights in suspending teacher, where corpus of law governing retaliatory action on basis of exercise of freedom of speech was clearly established at time of events in question. Gardetto v. Mason, D.Wyo.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1520. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Although First Amendment prohibited government officials from discharging certain employees solely because of their political affiliation in 1991, it was not clearly established at that time that position of legal assistant was not one for which political affiliation was proper requirement, and thus state superintendent of education was entitled to qualified immunity from employee's § 1983 claim based on constructive discharge in violation of First Amendment. Rouse v. Nielsen, D.S.C.1994, 851 F.Supp. 717, motion to amend denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Employees of school district and education service district were entitled to qualified immunity from school psychologist's §§ 1983 claim of retaliation for speech protected by the First Amendment, given that any mistake

they made with regard to her free speech rights was within "hazy border" between lawful and unlawful conduct; psychologist's manner of communicating her concerns regarding potential Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) violations was in some respects disruptive, and her co-workers complained to supervisors that she was hard to work with. Sweet v. Tigard-Tualatin School Dist. #23J, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 482, 2005 WL 19531, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Right of public employees to be free from retaliation for speaking on matters of public concern was well established, and thus state prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 arising from their retaliation against correctional officer for reporting use of excessive force by fellow officers against inmates. Bounds v. Taylor, C.A.3 (Del.) 2003, 77 Fed.Appx. 99, 2003 WL 22325312, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Deputy sheriff's right to express views about racial prejudice or discrimination inside sheriff's department was clearly established at time he was allegedly terminated for doing so, and thus sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity as matter of law from liability on First Amendment retaliation claim, at least where speech occurred at departmental meeting called to discuss prior racial incident, and prior incident involved potential candidate for election as sheriff, such that reasonable official would have recognized that firing could be deemed retaliatory. Brown v. Scotland County, M.D.N.C.2003, 2003 WL 21418099, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3824. ---- Freedom of association, employment, clearly established right

Police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability on police officer's claim that he was assigned to Sunday duty in retaliation for his membership in union and his invocation of his collective bargaining rights; not only did the First Amendment freedom of association protect public employee from retaliation for participation in union with which his employer had signed collective bargaining agreement (CBA), but the unconstitutionality of retaliating against public employee for participating in union was clearly established. Shrum v. City of Coweta, Okla., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 449 F.3d 1132. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Elementary school teacher's fundamental right to raise his child was clearly established at time when school superintendent allegedly conditioned teacher's employment on whether teacher sent his son to public school and terminated him once his son was removed from public school, and, therefore, superintendent was not entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 claim brought by teacher. Barrett v. Steubenville City Schools, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 388 F.3d 967, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 334, 163 L.Ed.2d 47. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County commissioner was entitled to qualified immunity from county employee's claim that commissioner terminated her in violation of her First Amendment right to association because she was married to sheriff, who was political enemy of commissioner; employee also alleged that she was terminated in part for insubordination and lack of cooperation, and precedent did not clearly establish that such a termination violated the First Amendment. Chesser v. Sparks, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2001, 248 F.3d 1117. Civil Rights 1376(10)

At time of relevant actions underlying § 1983 complaint filed by state probate court judge's secretary against judge alleging that he took adverse employment actions against her based on her engagement to another probate court employee, constitutional protection of right of marital association did not clearly extend to dating relationship or to engagement; therefore, qualified immunity attached to judge's interference with secretary's relationship by his employment actions. Cameron v. Seitz, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 38 F.3d 264. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State officials were entitled to qualified immunity from former state employee's claim that he was constructively discharged in violation of his First Amendment right of association; although employee alleged that he was constructively discharged or forced to resign on basis of association with friends and acquaintances in his hometown, there is no clearly established law that associations with friends and acquaintances are sufficiently intimate to be entitled to constitutional protection or freedom of association. Vieira v. Presley, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 988 F.2d 850. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in his individual capacity for transferring deputies to less desirable positions in retaliation for announcing their candidacy for sheriff's office; law was clearly established at time of transfers that transfers, as distinguished from discharges, were actionable, even without reduction of pay, and that political activity, as distinguished from political belief, was protected under First Amendment when such activities had no effect on deputies' performance, on others' performance, on discipline, or on harmony among co-workers. Click v. Copeland, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 970 F.2d 106. Civil Rights 1376(10)

In determining whether public officials who allegedly denied promotion to public employee because of his exercise of First Amendment rights were entitled to qualified immunity, court is entitled to determine whether the employee's action was entitled to First Amendment protection and, if so, whether his First Amendment right was clearly established so that reasonable officials could have believed that the failure to promote was unlawful. McEvoy v. Shoemaker, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1989, 882 F.2d 463, 109 A.L.R. Fed. 1, rehearing denied. Constitutional Law 82(11)

It was clearly established in September 2002, for purposes of a fire chief's qualified immunity defense to a firefighter's free association claim, that a firefighter had a right to associate with other persons in order to express his personal views on a matter of public concern without being threatened with termination motivated by the fire chief's opposition to the expression of those views. Lilienthal v. City of Suffolk, E.D.Va.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 684. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Individual members of city housing authority's board of commissioners were entitled to qualified immunity from former executive director's claim under § 1983 that board's instructions that she was not to contact authority employees while she was on administrative leave and after she was discharged violated First Amendment; director cited no pre-existing law from which it would have been apparent that individual commissioners' actions were unlawful. Boggess v. Housing Authority of City of Charleston, S.D.W.Va.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 729. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Teacher's constitutional right to intimate association with person with whom one shares home and intends to marry was not clearly established at time teacher's contract was not renewed by school officials, and, thus, individual school officials were entitled to qualified immunity in their individual capacities from teacher's § 1983 constitutional claims arising out of nonrenewal of her contract. LaSota v. Town of Topsfield, D.Mass.1997, 979 F.Supp. 45. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Community college president was not entitled to qualified immunity for alleged violation of tenured teacher's First Amendment rights to freedom of association, where corpus of law governing retaliatory action on basis of associational values was clearly established at time of events in question. Gardetto v. Mason, D.Wyo.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1520. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Chancery clerk was entitled to qualified immunity as to former deputy clerk's §§ 1983 claim that she was terminated in violation of her First Amendment freedom-of-association right in connection with statements made by her husband; there was no apparent decisional authority suggesting that the chancery clerk violated a "clearly established" right of the deputy to freely associate with her husband. Burge v. Pearl River County, Mississippi, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 823, 2004 WL 1576578, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3825. ---- Political affiliation, employment, clearly established right

Clearly established law precludes government officials from discharging civil or "career" employees for politically-motivated reasons, precluding qualified immunity for officials alleged to have done so. Acevedo-Garcia

v. Monroig, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 2003 WL 21982002, withdrawn and superseded on rehearing 351 F.3d 547 . Civil Rights 1376(10)

President of city assembly was not entitled to qualified immunity for his conduct in terminating employee or allowing employee to be deprived of his work duties, for purpose of city employee's §§ 1983 First Amendment political retaliation claim; employee supported different candidate for city assembly than everyone else in employee's office, the office was turned into campaign headquarters for candidate that employee opposed, employee was deprived of his work duties and later terminated because of his political support for the other candidate, and it was clearly established that public officials could not terminate or deprive employees of their job duties on the basis of political affiliation at the time that employee was subjected to that treatment. Bisbal-Ramos v. City of Mayaguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 467 F.3d 16.

Mayor was not entitled to qualified immunity on claims of career employees in Puerto Rico municipal sanitation department, that they had been terminated in violation of their First Amendment political affiliation rights, where jury readily could have found violation of employees' rights, right of career employees to not have their employment terminated due to their political affiliation had been clearly established, and jury easily could have found that mayor had been explicitly warned that he should not engage in scheme. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was clearly established that the special investigators for county district attorney's office were not policymakers or confidential employees, within exception to prohibition against making employment action based on political affiliation, so that district attorney was not entitled to qualified immunity, in investigators' § 1983 action alleging that discharge because of their public support of district attorney's opponent in the election violated the First Amendment; investigators performed mostly ministerial duties, such as serving subpoenas, locating witnesses, and transporting witnesses to court, and prior case law rejected argument that investigators performing similar duties were policymakers or confidential employees. Carlson v. Gorecki, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 374 F.3d 461, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1723, 544 U.S. 960, 161 L.Ed.2d 601. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Reserve deputy's statements supporting sheriff's opponent in election, albeit made in private, involved matter of public concern, and thus it was clearly established that depriving reserve deputy of his commission for making statements could have violated his First Amendment rights, as required to deny qualified immunity to sheriff, undersheriff, deputy sheriff, and board of county commissioners in reserve deputy's § 1983 action. Bass v. Richards, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2002, 308 F.3d 1081. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Commissioner of Municipal Affairs for Puerto Rico and Director of Legal Division of Commissioner's Office were not entitled to qualified immunity from hearing examiner's § 1983 claim, alleging they violated her First Amendment rights by dismissing her due to her political beliefs; when defendants discharged hearing examiner, First Circuit law regarding discharge based on political discrimination was clearly established, and hearing examiner's inherent job duties did not reveal borderline case in which defendants could have reasonably determined that discharging her for political reasons was consonant with her constitutional rights. Roldan-Plumey v. Cerezo-Suarez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 115 F.3d 58. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Law was clear as of 1993 that the permissibility of dismissing public employee for patronage reasons was determined by reference to inherent powers of employee's particular office, not to title of that office, for purposes of determining whether public official was qualifiedly immune from § 1983 claim alleging patronage dismissal in violation of First and Fourteenth Amendments. Flenner v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 107 F.3d 459. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Unconstitutionality of considering applicants' political affiliation in filling highway maintainer positions was not clearly established when state officials filled positions, and thus officials enjoyed qualified immunity from suit. Vickery v. Jones, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1334, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1553, 520 U.S. 1197, 137 L.Ed.2d

701. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State's attorney was immune from liability for damages in § 1983 suit brought by former employee who alleged that state's attorney discharged her from stenographer's position in which she was performing work of paralegal because of her political affiliation, in violation of First Amendment, since both law and its application to the facts were uncertain. Hernandez v. O'Malley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 98 F.3d 293. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Although lack of specific precedent holding that particular position is outside political patronage exception to First Amendment protection of public employees is necessary condition to arguing that First Amendment right to be free from patronage dismissal is unclear as to particular position, lack of such precedent is not a sufficient condition for concluding that law is unclear on subject such that qualified immunity must be granted to public employer. McCloud v. Testa, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 97 F.3d 1536, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Former county property appraiser's office employees failed to establish that it was clearly established at time appraiser dismissed employees that their dismissal for political reasons violated their First Amendment rights and, therefore, appraiser, in his individual capacity, was entitled to qualified immunity from employees' action against him; Court of Appeals recently held in controlling case that it was not clearly established that dismissal of clerical employees of county tax collector's office for political reasons violated their First Amendment rights; moreover, district court, with full briefing and two years after appraiser's actions, concluded that those actions did not violate law, and argument that law was clearly established by two Supreme Court decisions was undermined by split of circuits concerning those decisions. Parrish v. Nikolits, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 86 F.3d 1088, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1818, 520 U.S. 1228, 137 L.Ed.2d 1027. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Even assuming that job duties of deputized employees of county tax collector's office were ministerial and that county tax collector discharged such employees for political reasons, it was not clearly established at time of the discharges whether termination of deputized employees' employment for political reasons violated any asserted First Amendment right not to be fired for political patronage reasons, and therefore county tax collector, in his individual capacity, was entitled to qualified immunity in deputized employees' subsequent § 1983 action for alleged violation of their First Amendment rights. Beauregard v. Olson, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1402. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from deputy's claim under § 1983 that sheriff violated deputy's First Amendment rights by engaging in campaign of retaliatory harassment after deputy announced that he would run against sheriff in an upcoming election; law prohibiting retaliatory harassment was not clearly established in light of prior decisions permitting sheriffs to dismiss or demote politically disloyal deputies. Wallace v. Benware, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1995, 67 F.3d 655, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County district attorney was entitled to qualified immunity from claim that he violated the First Amendment by refusing to reappoint investigator employed by district attorney's office in retaliation for investigator's political support of former district attorney; right was not clearly established because neither the Fifth Circuit nor the Supreme Court had addressed issue of political patronage in hiring or firing investigators in district attorney's office, and neither had addressed issues sufficiently analogous that reasonable official would have understood from its resolution that it is a First Amendment violation to dismiss or not to hire an investigator on grounds that investigator supported campaign of official's opponent. Gunaca v. State of Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 65 F.3d 467. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Texas sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to § 1983 action brought against him by deputy sheriffs who alleged that they were not rehired because they supported sheriff's opponent; sheriff's alleged actions violated clearly established law. Brady v. Fort Bend County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 58 F.3d 173, rehearing en banc granted, dismissed. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Sheriffs and other supervisory members of sheriff's department were entitled to qualified immunity from claims of subordinates that they were subject to adverse employment actions because of their political support of sheriff's opponent, in violation of their First Amendment rights; Pickering balancing did not lead to inevitable conclusion that warnings and attempts to sway subordinates' political views were unlawful. Rogers v. Miller, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 57 F.3d 986. Civil Rights 1376(10)

At time of public employee's removal and demotion, May of 1990 and May of 1991, reasonable official would have understood that such actions on basis of employee's constitutionally protected statements criticizing political patronage employment practices and statements that she suspected employees were engaging in political patronage and other politically corrupt activities would violate her free speech rights and, thus, officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in her § 1983 action; sole countervailing state interest was disruption of working relationship between employee and two other employees. Williams v. Com. of Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 24 F.3d 1526, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 358, 513 U.S. 947, 130 L.Ed.2d 312. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Retired county official was not entitled to qualified immunity from suit by sheriffs' deputies and state paramedic allegedly terminated for failing to support successful sheriff candidate or work in political campaign since it was "clearly established" at time of dismissal that deputies and paramedic could not be dismissed for political activities. Burns v. County of Cambria, Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 971 F.2d 1015, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1049, 506 U.S. 1081, 122 L.Ed.2d 357. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Mayor was entitled to qualified immunity on civil rights claims arising from alleged politically motivated personnel actions short of discharge, as it was not clearly established prior to 1986 that such personnel actions, even if politically motivated, violated the First Amendment. Valiente v. Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 966 F.2d 21. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was not clearly established at time sheriff declined to rehire deputies what political affiliation was proper job requirement for deputy sheriff and, therefore, sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims of former deputies that failure to rehire them, allegedly because they supported sheriff's opponent in election, violated First Amendment. Cagle v. Gilley, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1992, 957 F.2d 1347, as amended, rehearing dismissed. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Sheriffs were entitled to qualified immunity from claims of former deputy sheriffs who alleged their discharges were impermissibly motivated by their political party affiliations, infringing on their First Amendment rights; at time of deputies' firings it was not clearly established that deputies were protected from patronage firings under prevailing doctrines. Upton v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 930 F.2d 1209, rehearing denied 938 F.2d 84, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1262, 503 U.S. 906, 117 L.Ed.2d 491, on remand. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Education officials in Puerto Rico were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in school teacher's § 1983 action alleging she was denied promotional opportunities out of political animus where law at that time was unclear as to whether First Amendment barred politically motivated demotion of career civil servant. Roque-Rodriguez v. Lema Moya, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1991, 926 F.2d 103. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Any prohibition against allegedly political demotion of career government employee was not clearly established in 1985 at time of demotion, and thus, employer and other defendants were immune from § 1983 liability. Nunez-Soto v. Alvarado, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 918 F.2d 1029, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

District attorney was not entitled to qualified immunity in suit by former employee alleging that discharge was politically motivated; rights at issue were clearly established constitutional rights, and reasonable person would have known that refusing to retain or firing low-level staff employee for exercising those rights was unlawful. Laidley v. McClain, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 914 F.2d 1386. Civil Rights 1376(10)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Aide to governor of Puerto Rico was not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims of low-echelon employees, discharged in violation of First Amendment, inasmuch as it was sufficiently clearly established that employees in low-echelon positions could not be fired because of political affiliations. Rosario-Torres v. Hernandez-Colon, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 889 F.2d 314. Civil Rights 1376(10)

The question in a "qualified immunity" case is whether, at the time of dismissal of government employees for political reasons, it was clearly established that employees in the particular positions at issue, in light of responsibilities inherent in those positions, were protected from patronage dismissal; a defendant enjoys "qualified immunity" as long as the job in question potentially concerned matters of partisan political interest and involved at least a modicum of policymaking responsibility, access to confidential information, or official communication. Figueroa-Rodriguez v. Lopez-Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 878 F.2d 1478. Civil Rights 1376(10)

There was legitimate question at time that members of county electoral board and general registrar refused to rehire registrars because of political affiliation as to whether there existed a "small office" exception to the general prohibition against political affiliation as a consideration for public employment, so that the officials enjoyed qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by persons who were not rehired to the position of registrar because of their political affiliation. McConnell v. Adams, C.A.4 (Va.) 1987, 829 F.2d 1319, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1731, 486 U.S. 1006, 100 L.Ed.2d 195. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Puerto Rico Department of Justice (PRDOJ) officials were not entitled to dismissal of former prosecutor's §§ 1983 claims on basis of qualified immunity; he alleged §§ 1983 violations of clearly established constitutional rights to freedoms of speech, affiliation, and procedural due process, and allegations indicated that reasonable officials in their shoes would know their actions violated his rights. Calderon-Garnier v. Sanchez-Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 229. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Regional director of Puerto Rico Family Department was not entitled to qualified immunity for her alleged conduct in transferring Department employee to a different office with less responsibility, on the basis of the employee's political affiliation, in employee's §§ 1983 First Amendment claim; employee had clearly established right not to be reassigned based on political affiliation. Acevedo Luis v. Zayas, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was clearly established in 2002 that discharging public employee based upon political affiliation from position other than trust violated employee's First Amendment rights, and thus agency supervisors were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in employee's §§ 1983 action against them. Lopez-Sanchez v. Vergara-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 78. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was not clearly established that statutory reclassification of employees at state historic preservation office (SHPO) from trust positions to career was valid, and thus state officials who terminated employees after new political party won governorship were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983, even though reclassification was eventually upheld, where state secretary of justice and outside counsel advised officials that reclassifications were invalid. Sueiro Vazquez v. Torregrosa de la Rosa, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 124. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Government officials were not entitled to qualified immunity to civil rights claims of former public employees who alleged political discrimination, since alleged violation of employees' right to be free from political discrimination was recognized under constitution and employees controverted officials' allegations that objectively reasonable government actor, performing discretionary functions, would not have understood that their conduct violated employees' constitutional rights. Martinez-Baez v. Rey-Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1376(10)

fund had a clearly established First Amendment right that protected them from municipality's failure to recall them or rehire them on account of their political affiliation, defeating municipality's qualified immunity claim in employees' §§ 1983 action alleging that they were not rehired following the expiration of their contracts due to political discrimination. Cruz-Baez v. Negron-Irizarry, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 326. Civil Rights 1376(10)

If interim director of regional office of Puerto Rico agency was motivated by political animus at the time he took adverse employment actions, he knew or should have known that such actions were unconstitutional, and therefore he was not entitled to qualified immunity on employee's political discrimination claim under the First Amendment. Velez-Herrero v. Guzman, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 62. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 suit brought by former employee, alleging that he was terminated in retaliation for campaigning for another candidate for sheriff, in violation of his First Amendment rights; when disputed actions were taken, it was clearly established by Supreme Court and Fourth Circuit precedent that employee could not be discharged for exercising right to free speech, and sheriff's comments during tape-recorded conversation showed that he was aware of such rights and that he clearly intended to violate written policy of his own department in order to squelch support by his staff of any other candidate. Carter v. Good, W.D.N.C.1996, 951 F.Supp. 1235, reversed 145 F.3d 1323, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 509, 525 U.S. 1000, 142 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Correctional officers failed to demonstrate that they possessed clearly established right to avoid patronage dismissal and, thus, sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims regarding their patronage termination; law was unclear at time of dismissal as to whether correctional officers were subject to patronage dismissal. Flenner v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 920 F.Supp. 905, reversed 107 F.3d 459. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County and clerk were entitled to qualified immunity in deputy clerk's § 1983 action alleging that her discharge violated her free speech rights; given deputy clerk's support of clerk's opponent in election, conduct of both proper and improper campaign activities, and disruptive attitude and behavior after election, reasonable public employer would not have believed that it was against clearly established law to discharge her. Taylor v. Bartow County, Ga., N.D.Ga.1994, 860 F.Supp. 1526. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State officials in their individual capacities were entitled to qualified immunity in former employee's civil rights action alleging that they maintained and operated patronage system in which political and financial supporters of political party were favored with respect to temporary employment as state highway maintainers; at time of alleged violation, it was not clearly established that analysis used to determine whether political affiliation may be considered in hiring, promotion, transfer, recall, and dismissal of public employees applied to temporary as well as permanent employees. Vickery v. Jones, S.D.Ill.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1313, affirmed 100 F.3d 1334, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1553, 520 U.S. 1197, 137 L.Ed.2d 701. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Puerto Rico officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by teacher who alleged that she was not hired for other available positions when her contract was not renewed on the basis of political discrimination given that there was no clearly established law that would have given teacher federally protected right disallowing use of political factors in hiring process. Saquebo v. Roque, D.Puerto Rico 1989, 716 F.Supp. 709. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County and county officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in former county public defender's § 1983 action, claiming that the termination of his employment allegedly because he ran for judge against a candidate whom one official supported, in violation of his First and Fourteenth Amendment rights; clearly established federal law precluded the termination of a public defender based upon his political affiliation. Yurchak v. County of Carbon, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 218, 2003 WL 23101853, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3826. ---- Freedom of religion, employment, clearly established right

Police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity on officer's claim of interference with free exercise of his religion. as officer alleged a violation of his clearly established constitutional rights; while mere refusal of chief and police department to accommodate the officer's religious scheduling needs, without more, would not establish a constitutional violation, officer alleged he was moved to day shift precisely because of chief's knowledge of his religious commitment, meaning that transfer decision was not neutral but rather motivated by officer's religious commitments, and religious discrimination was means to entirely secular end of forcing him out by making him choose between his duties as police officer and his duties as minister. Shrum v. City of Coweta, Okla., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 449 F.3d 1132. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State officials were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action of former state employee, who alleged she was discharged for using peyote in violation of her rights under free exercise clause; at time of discharge, legitimate question existed regarding whether employee's First Amendment rights were violated, in view of dispute as to whether she used peyote in bona fide religious ceremonies and whether she, as non-Indian, was member of Native American Church, and lack of legal precedent controlling case. Warner v. Graham, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1988, 845 F.2d 179. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County public library's dress code prohibiting any "ornament depicting religious ... decoration" was not impermissibly vague under Due Process Clause; term "religious" was not too vague to defy categorization, and any irregularity could be remedied through employee grievance process. Draper v. Logan County Public Library, W.D.Ky.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 608. Counties 67

State natural resources department officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from employee's § 1983 action against officials in their individual capacities, alleging that officials violated Rehabilitation Act and First Amendment by allegedly refusing to transfer employee due to his disability and religion; Act and First Amendment were clearly established at time of alleged violations, facts were to be viewed most favorably to employee, and plaintiff presented documentary evidence that employment decisions were based on his disability. Bodiford v. State of Ala., M.D.Ala.1994, 854 F.Supp. 886. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3827. ---- Privacy right, employment, clearly established right

Chairperson of house administrative committee, which supervised house employment matters and investigated allegations of sexual harassment by former state representative, enjoyed qualified immunity from liability in 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 action brought by former state representative; charges that chairperson, in violation of due process, damaged personal and political reputation of former state representative, diminished his personal and family privacy and deprived him of his position as state legislator could not show loss of a federal right which would have precluded chairperson from claiming qualified immunity. Flinn v. Gordon, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1985, 775 F.2d 1551, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1972, 476 U.S. 1116, 90 L.Ed.2d 656. Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Former county employee who brought §§ 1983 action against county legislator, alleging disclosure of her sexual harassment accusations and identity to news media, failed to allege violation of clearly established federal rights, as required to rebut legislator's qualified immunity defense; protections afforded by New York rape shield laws did not equate to constitutional privacy rights. Nassau County Employee "L" v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 293. Civil Rights 1376(10)

President of school board of trustees who did not know that trustee's telephone conversation was recorded illegally was entitled to qualified immunity in trustee's § 1983 action alleging that president violated his right to privacy under Fourth Amendment by allowing transcript of conversation to be read at board meeting and to be distributed to media, as there was no clearly established right that such actions would violate right to privacy. Peavy v. Dallas

Independent School Dist., N.D.Tex.1999, 57 F.Supp.2d 382. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(10)

United States Postal Service employee was entitled to qualified immunity from job applicant's Bivens claim, alleging that employee violated applicant's constitutional right to privacy by disclosing to applicant's employer that applicant had applied for employment with Postal Service, since any right to privacy that applicant may have had to information disclosed by employee was not "clearly established" at time of employee's actions; while preexisting case law recognized general right of privacy in certain matters, it did not support broad right of privacy concerning disclosure of job applicant's identity. Sullivan v. U.S. Postal Service, W.D.N.Y.1996, 944 F.Supp. 191 . United States 50.10(7)

Investigation into nature of off-duty activities of police officer and his wife, their marital understanding or alleged "swinging" lifestyle was of no consequence to city and police department's legitimate interest, any investigation regarding those subjects violated clearly established constitutional rights of privacy and free association of police officer and his wife, and thus defendants city and police department officials were not entitled to qualified immunity. Hughes v. City of North Olmsted, N.D.Ohio 1995, 894 F.Supp. 1120, reversed 93 F.3d 238. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officer had no "clearly established" constitutional privacy right to nondisclosure of confidential information in his personnel file, so that member of town board of selectmen was entitled to qualified immunity in officer's § 1983 action which alleged that member's press release concerning reasons he considered officer unqualified for promotion revealed information obtained either by looking at personnel file or from discussion of confidential information at board's executive sessions. Hansen v. Lamontagne, D.N.H.1992, 808 F.Supp. 89. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Whether deputy sheriffs' extramarital intimate relationship was entitled to protection under the First Amendment right to intimate association was not clearly established, and thus, their supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity with regard to deputies' § 1983 claims that supervisor had retaliated against them based on their relationship. Bates v. Bigger, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 56 Fed.Appx. 527, 2002 WL 31875633, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3828. ---- Equal protection, employment, clearly established right

County, corrections commissioner and corrections chief of operations were not entitled to qualified immunity on corrections officers' Olech "class of one" equal protection claim on basis that relevant standards were not clearly established at time of alleged unconstitutional conduct at issue. Cobb v. Pozzi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 363 F.3d 89. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Law was clearly established when African-American members of board of county commissioners voted to replace white female clerk with African-American clerk they were not shielded from § 1983 liability by statutorily created personal staff exemption and, thus, county commissioner members were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in white female clerk's civil rights action alleging equal protection violation. Smith v. Lomax, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 45 F.3d 402. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Town officials were entitled to qualified immunity from damages arising from alleged violations of police officers' rights to equal protection and procedural due process resulting from police department's former policy prohibiting reserve participation and its current policy of reimbursing reservists for difference between their wages as police officers and their military pay while they were on active duty; town officials violated no clearly established rights to due process or equal protection. Boyle v. Burke, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1991, 925 F.2d 497. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City police chief and director of public safety were entitled to qualified immunity on former police officer's §§

1983 claim that he was deprived of procedural due process when chief and director, without notice to officer, decided to consider departmental records outside of disciplinary hearing record in determining what disciplinary action officer would face for violation of police department procedure, since law on police officers' pre-suspension due process rights was not settled. Reilly v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.2006, 427 F.Supp.2d 507. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State police officials who denied employee's request under state statute to use accrued sick leave following birth of his child were not entitled to qualified immunity with regard to employee's § 1983 claim for violation of equal protection, which was based on officials' use of gender-based presumption that mothers were "primary care givers" entitled to greater amount of leave under the statute, though statute was recently amended, and no guidelines had yet been issued regarding amended statute; law against gender discrimination in employment was clearly established. Knussman v. State of Md., D.Md.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from claims that they violated Hispanic corrections officer's right to be free from discrimination under equal protection clause by failing to promote him to lieutenant. Perez v. Lane, C.D.Ill.1992, 794 F.Supp. 286. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Members of city council were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on civil rights claims based on failure of city to pay certain civil rights judgments against off-duty policemen as moral obligations where, even assuming that city's refusal to pay judgments constituted a violation of equal protection, city council members would not have been reasonably aware, based upon case law existing at the time, that their conduct infringed upon plaintiffs' rights. Stengel v. City of Columbus, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1989, 737 F.Supp. 1460, affirmed 902 F.2d 35. Civil Rights 1376(4)

No clearly established right existed under the Equal Protection Clause to be free from retaliation, and thus, city manager and fire chief were entitled to qualified immunity on §§ 1983 claims by fire department employees that they were retaliated against in violation of their right to equal protection. Gardner v. City of Camilla, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 186 Fed.Appx. 860, 2006 WL 1687650, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

No clearly established right existed under the equal protection clause to be free from retaliation, and thus, city fire department employee's supervisors were entitled to qualified immunity on his retaliation claim under §§ 1983. Jolivette v. Arrowood, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 2006 WL 1308626, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Prior supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity as to state employee's equal-protection claim of retaliation under §§ 1983, since no clearly established right existed under the equal protection clause to be free from retaliation. Clark v. Alabama, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2005, 141 Fed.Appx. 777, 2005 WL 1317037, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City employees appeal board members, police chief, mayor, and city council members were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for damages under § 1983 which were sought by police officer who alleged that his termination for misconduct violated his due process rights; district court found, and record supported that, officials had not violated officer's clearly established right to due process because he received an abundance of due process before and after his termination. Sutherland v. Tooele City Corp., C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 632, 2004 WL 198306, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3829. ---- Racial discrimination, employment, clearly established right

State university employee's supervisor's alleged acts of creating a hostile work environment violated employee's well-established right under Title VII not to be subjected to a hostile work environment based on her race, and thus, supervisor was not entitled to qualified immunity on employee's hostile work environment claim. Thompson v. Connecticut State University, D.Conn.2006, 2006 WL 3702271. Civil Rights 1529

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Wichita, Kansas police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for alleged race discrimination against minority officers; chief allegedly had consistently ignored complaints about discriminatory working conditions, inadequately addressed minority complaints, and failed to implement steps to eliminate these unlawful working conditions and been aware of disparate impact upon minorities that department's policies and procedures had on minorities, yet failed to correct those policies, and chief's inaction in the face of actual knowledge of discriminatory conduct, if proven, would violate officers' constitutional rights to equal protection. Fulcher v. City of Wichita, D.Kan.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 1271. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Corrections facility employee's right to be free from being subjected to harsher discipline and termination on account of his race was clearly established, for purposes of determining whether facility's officials in their individual capacities were qualifiedly immune from employee's § 1983 claim that such alleged actions violated his equal protection rights. Eldridge v. Morrison, M.D.Ala.1996, 970 F.Supp. 928, affirmed 120 F.3d 275. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Town mayors who allegedly discriminated against black police officer in the terms and conditions of his employment were not entitled to qualified immunity for purposes of officer's § 1983 action; reasonable official should have known that the alleged conduct violated clearly established federal law. Lightner v. Town of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1489. Civil Rights 1376(10)

College officials and employees who were alleged to have taken actions including but not limited to racial discrimination in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims; defendants did not contend law concerning racial discrimination in employment or the Fourteenth Amendment was unclear at the pertinent time or that extraordinary circumstances existed. Folse v. Delgado Community College, E.D.La.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1133. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3830. ---- Sex discrimination, employment, clearly established right

At the time that elementary school principal and district personnel director allegedly discriminated against school psychologist based on gender stereotypes about suitability for employment of mothers with young children, it was clearly established that psychologist had equal protection right to be free from sex discrimination, that adverse actions taken on basis of gender stereotypes could constitute sex discrimination, and that it was unconstitutional to treat men and women differently simply because of presumptions about respective roles they played in family life, and therefore principal and director were not shielded by qualified immunity from § 1983 liability to psychologist, even if they believed their alleged stereotypes to be true. Back v. Hastings On Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 365 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Female county employee had clearly established right, in 1988, to be free of gender discrimination with respect to denial of promotion, alteration of job responsibilities, and other hostile treatment, so that county official was not entitled to qualified immunity in employee's civil rights action, provided that he took those adverse actions with discriminatory motive, notwithstanding official's contention that employee possessed only right not to be refused employment on basis of gender. Lindsey v. Shalmy, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1382. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County attorney was not entitled to qualified immunity with regard to discharged assistant county attorney's § 1983 claim for sex discrimination in violation of Equal Protection Clause, as law was clear that at-will employee could not be fired for illegal, discriminatory reasons. Lococo v. Barger, E.D.Ky.1997, 958 F.Supp. 290, affirmed in part, reversed in part 234 F.3d 1268. Civil Rights 1376(10)

University officials were not entitled to defense of qualified immunity in suit by employee of university under § 1983 alleging sexual harassment and sex discrimination in violation of Fourteenth Amendment, where right of individual to be free from sexual harassment or sex discrimination in public employment was clearly established at time of events in question. Kelley v. Troy State University, M.D.Ala.1996, 923 F.Supp. 1494. Civil Rights

School officials were not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to § 1983 action by teacher who alleged that officials refused to renew her contract based upon her pregnancy by artificial insemination and her status as unwed mother; contours of her rights under Title VII to be free from sexual discrimination in workplace were clearly established at time officials did not renew her contract. Cameron v. Board of Educ. of Hillsboro, Ohio, City School Dist., S.D.Ohio 1991, 795 F.Supp. 228. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Corrections officers did not have clearly established right to serve in all staff positions involving opposite-sex inmates at time they filed suit complaining of corrections department's gender-based restrictions, and thus department officials were entitled to qualified immunity against officers' claims for damages. Csizmadia v. Fauver, D.N.J.1990, 746 F.Supp. 483. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School board members acted in violation of teacher's clearly established substantive due process rights by discharging her on basis of her out-of-wedlock pregnancy and decision to raise her child as a single parent, so that defense of qualified immunity was not available in teacher's civil rights action. Eckmann v. Board of Educ. of Hawthorn School Dist. No. 17, N.D.Ill.1986, 636 F.Supp. 1214. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3831. ---- Sexual harassment, employment, clearly established right

Officers and supervisors were entitled to qualified immunity from dispatchers' claims that sexual harassment violated their equal protection rights where alleged misconduct occurred prior to date that it became clearly established in Circuit that sexual harassment under color of state law violated equal protection; law was not clearly established in Circuit until case on point was decided in May of 1978. Woodward v. City of Worland, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1992, 977 F.2d 1392, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 3038, 509 U.S. 923, 125 L.Ed.2d 724. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police captain and sergeant were not entitled to qualified immunity in sexual harassment action brought by female officers; general right which jury found defendants to have violated, right to be free from discrimination based upon sex in workplace, was well grounded in law and widely known to public by time of beginning of scenario for lawsuit. Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 895 F.2d 1469. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Right of applicant for position of police officer to be free from any sexually related questions in preemployment interview was not "clearly established" at time that interview was conducted in 1986, so that police department employees were entitled to qualified immunity in applicant's § 1983 action. Hedge v. County of Tippecanoe, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1989, 890 F.2d 4. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Although qualified immunity shielded former sheriff as to deputy sheriff's allegations of hostile work environment sexual harassment under §§ 1983, it did not protect him as to her allegations of quid pro quo sexual harassment; former alleged violation was not of a clearly established right of which a reasonable person would have known, but latter was. Briggs v. Waters, E.D.Va.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 508. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Male co-worker of female county employee was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to sexual harassment claim; when co-worker allegedly began harassing employee, the law was clearly established that making repeated unwelcome sexual overtures to a co-worker, and making other derogatory remarks of a sexual nature, could be considered unlawful sexual harassment. McDaniel v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 1364. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Male co-worker of female county employee was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to sexual harassment claim; when co-worker allegedly began harassing employee, the law was clearly established that making repeated unwelcome sexual overtures to a co-worker, and making other derogatory remarks of a sexual nature, could be considered unlawful sexual harassment. McDaniel v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 1364. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Female former city employee's right under equal protection clause to be free from retaliation for complaining about sexual harassment was not clearly established for qualified immunity purposes, and thus qualified immunity defeated former employee's § 1983 claim against supervisor for retaliation in violation of equal protection clause. Palisano v. City of Clearwater, M.D.Fla.2002, 219 F.Supp.2d 1249, affirmed 62 Fed.Appx. 320, 2003 WL 678350. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Unlawfulness of village employee's alleged use of his position of authority to sexually and racially harass female employee was clearly established at time that female employee complained of such harassment, and, thus, village officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from employee's equal protection § 1983 action against officials in their individual capacities. Carroll v. Village of Shelton, Neb., D.Neb.1996, 973 F.Supp. 900. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Former public employee's former supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity with regard to former employee's § 1983 claim for same-sex sexual harassment, as it was not clearly established at time of alleged harassment that same-sex sexual harassment was violation of Title VII. McCoy v. Macon Water Authority, M.D.Ga.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1209. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was clearly established in 1994 that a state actor's sexual harassing and discriminatory conduct could provide basis for violation of equal protection rights under § 1983, and public employee's supervisors thus were not qualifiedly immune from equal protection claim alleging such conduct. Guy v. State of Ill., N.D.Ill.1997, 958 F.Supp. 1300. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Chief of police, deputy chief of police and township clerk were protected by qualified immunity from civilian dispatcher's § 1983 claim that they failed to adequately investigate her claim of sexual harassment, since courts had not yet "clearly established" proper response required under the Constitution. Foster v. Township of Hillside, D.N.J.1992, 780 F.Supp. 1026, affirmed 977 F.2d 567. Civil Rights 1376(10)

In state agency employee's §§ 1983 action against agency supervisor, alleging sexual harassment in violation of Equal Protection Clause, under employee's version of facts, supervisor's conduct was sufficiently severe and pervasive to create hostile work environment in violation of clearly established right to equal protection, and thus, supervisor was not entitled to summary judgment on ground of qualified immunity; supervisor asked employee on four separate occasions for specific details of conduct of another supervisor against whom employee had lodged sexual harassment complaint, employee considered the questioning hostile or abusive, and reasonable jurors could conclude that supervisor pursued questioning for his own sexual gratification. Fye v. Oklahoma Corp. Com'n, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 175 Fed.Appx. 207, 2006 WL 895237, Unreported.

3832. ---- Searches generally, employment, clearly established right

State university officials did not violate any clearly established constitutional rights by conducting warrantless search of employee's computer for work-related materials, and thus officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for violating employee's Fourth Amendment right to privacy, where university conducted search primarily to provide documentation related to lawsuit and ensuing arbitration against third party, university's computer policy permitted search, and university suspected at time of search that employee had exceeded his authority with respect to technology transfer contracts and violated orders of his superiors forbidding pre-arbitration contact with third party. Biby v. Board of Regents, of University of Nebraska at Lincoln, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2005, 419 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1376(10)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Correctional officials were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with correctional officer's Fourth Amendment-based civil rights claim inasmuch as officials acted reasonably in detaining officer, searching him, and seizing fruits of that search during course of investigation into allegations that officer had engaged in illegal transactions with inmates. Brennan v. Hendrigan, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 888 F.2d 189. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State university officials did not violate any clearly established constitutional rights by conducting warrantless search of employee's computer for work-related materials, and thus officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for violating employee's Fourth Amendment right to privacy, where university conducted search primarily to provide documentation related to lawsuit and ensuing arbitration against third party, university's computer policy permitted search, and university suspected at time of search that employee had exceeded his authority with respect to technology transfer contracts and violated orders of his superiors forbidding pre-arbitration contact with third party. Biby v. Board of Regents of University of Neb. at Lincoln, D.Neb.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 1063, amended in part 340 F.Supp.2d 1031, affirmed 419 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Assuming that jail officials performed nonconsensual strip search and visual bodily cavity search of jail guard suspected of smuggling cocaine into prison, and further assuming that officials lacked reasonable suspicion that guard was smuggling drugs, officials had qualified immunity; it was not clearly established at time of searches that reasonable suspicion was necessary. Profitt v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1991, 790 F.Supp. 304. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State agency officials were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims asserted by employees whose offices and desks were searched in connection with investigation into allegations of misconduct at facility at which employees served in supervisory capacities; in 1986, when searches were conducted, it was not clearly established that search of public employee's office and desk was unreasonable and violative of Fourth Amendment. Ross v. Hinton, S.D.Ohio 1990, 740 F.Supp. 451, affirmed 937 F.2d 609. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Prison administrators were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for conducting intrusive strip search on corrections officer after receiving uncorroborated anonymous tip that a corrections officer would be carrying narcotics into jail, despite lack of a reasonable suspicion, in view of fact that, at time of search, it was not clearly established that reasonable suspicion was required for intrusive searches of corrections officers or that search of officer in instant case was an intrusive search in violation of limited frisk search regulations. Adrow v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1985, 623 F.Supp. 1085. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3833. ---- Discipline, employment, clearly established right

Community college officials were entitled to qualified immunity as to professor's claim for civil damages arising from officials' imposition of discipline for professor's alleged violation of sexual harassment policy, in violation of professor's First Amendment rights, as legal issues raised in case were not readily discernable, and appropriate conclusion to each was not so clear that officials should have known that their actions violated professor's rights. Cohen v. San Bernardino Valley College, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 92 F.3d 968, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1290, 520 U.S. 1140, 137 L.Ed.2d 364. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City police chief and director of public safety were not entitled to qualified immunity on former police officer's §§ 1983 claim that he was deprived of procedural due process because someone other than person vested with authority to make final disciplinary decisions made decision as to his discipline, since reasonable official in positions of chief and director would have known that they had to follow New Jersey state law procedures in making disciplinary decisions, including New Jersey law requirement that decision maker vested with authority make disciplinary decision. Reilly v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.2006, 427 F.Supp.2d 507. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3834. ---- Drug testing, employment, clearly established right

Law was not "clearly established" at time of 1986 urinalysis of state prison guard that urine testing was search under Fourth Amendment, entitling prison officials who administered test to qualified immunity in guard's civil rights action. Molinelli v. Tucker, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 901 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Law governing extent to which employees could be randomly tested for drugs was not clearly established, and consequently Secretary of Florida Department of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) had qualified immunity, in his individual capacity, from backpay claim by employee, alleging he was wrongfully subjected to random testing and fired when he refused to submit, in violation of his Fourth Amendment rights. Wenzel v. Bankhead, N.D.Fla.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City commissioner of sanitation, director of personnel and employee's supervisor had qualified immunity from an employee's allegation that a compulsory urinalysis violated a government employee's Fourth Amendment rights, as right was not clearly established at the time of the drug test incident at issue. Watson v. Sexton, S.D.N.Y.1991, 755 F.Supp. 583. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3835. ---- Discharges or dismissals, employment, clearly established right

City employee's right to procedural due process prior to termination from her classified position was clearly established at time of deprivation in 2002, such that board members were not entitled to qualified immunity for terminating employee without hearing, where no reasonable official could have misunderstood nature of position or fact that, as holder of classified position, employee was entitled to predeprivation hearing. Silberstein v. City of Dayton, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 440 F.3d 306, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Qualified immunity defense was not available to supervisors and directors in New Mexico State Personnel Office (SPO) in disabled employee's §§ 1983 action challenging constitutionality, on due process and equal protection grounds, of her termination without hearing, despite their argument they were merely enforcing state law; they were not mere minions obeying commands and had clear expertise in hiring and firing of state employees, including relevant state and federal law. Brown v. New Mexico State Personnel Office, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 399 F.3d 1248. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Director of the Missouri Department of Agriculture and other officials were entitled to qualified immunity on terminated employee's § 1983 due process claim because there was confusion as to whether employee, who was director of the Division of Grain Inspection and Warehousing of the Department, had continued right of employment. Hopkins v. Saunders, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 93 F.3d 522, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Since public employee's due process claim hinged on unsettled question of statutory construction, she did not have a clearly established right to receive due process before her termination, and state officials were entitled to qualified immunity on employee's § 1983 claim for damages arising from termination. Pace v. Moriarty, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 83 F.3d 261. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Bureau of Taxation supervisors were entitled to qualified immunity from tax examiner's claim that supervisors violated her right against self-incrimination when she was fired after refusing to answer questions asked during investigation into her conduct as Bureau employee, since supervisors' actions did not amount to violation of clearly established Fifth Amendment right under applicable precedent at time of events; plaintiff did not explicitly claim privilege, was not told that she would be dismissed if she failed to answer questions, and was not asked to sign waiver of immunity, and neither statute nor Bureau rules mandated dismissal for refusal to answer questions. Singer v. State of Me., C.A.1 (Me.) 1995, 49 F.3d 837. Civil Rights 1376(10)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

It was not clearly established as matter of law in Alabama at time of firing of state university vice president that words of employment contract between university and vice president or words of university policy manual or both gave vice president protected property right in continued employment or that vice president was due hearing prior to his discharge, and thus, university officials were entitled to qualified immunity in former vice president's civil rights suit; employment contract was ruled ambiguous as a matter of law by Court of Appeals in prior decision, and implied contract from personnel manual theory on which vice president relied was not validated until decision of Alabama Supreme Court issued after vice president had been fired. Lassiter v. Alabama A & M University, Bd. of Trustees, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 28 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Alabama law at time of firing of vice president of state university was not clearly established that import of evidentiary facts about formation of contract would be to oblige judge to conclude as matter of law that contract's words had legal effect that vice president advanced, i.e., that he had right to continued employment protected by due process requiring hearing prior to his firing; thus, reasonable university officers, even if fully informed of vice president's intent and understandings of pertinent contract and rest of his trial evidence surrounding making of contract, would not have known that vice president had protected property right that demanded due process protection. Lassiter v. Alabama A & M University, Bd. of Trustees, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 28 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officer's due process right to pretermination hearing was not clearly established in November of 1987 when request for reinstatement following injury was denied, and, thus, police chiefs were entitled to qualified immunity; although United States Supreme Court in Loudermill required hearing before deprivation of constitutionally protected property interest, it was unclear in 1987 whether officer had unrestricted property right to continued employment. Prue v. City of Syracuse, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 26 F.3d 14. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Discharged city employee provided sufficient basis upon which to conclude that alleged violation of his occupational liberty interest, if true, violated clearly established right, and thus city officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action; complaint alleged that officials discharged employee in connection with publicly communicated, false and stigmatizing statements that employee either participated in or condoned criminal activity, and that employee was not provided opportunity for "name clearing" hearing. McMath v. City of Gary, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 976 F.2d 1026, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Terminating teacher's employment in conformity with Puerto Rican statutory prohibition against aliens holding teaching positions did not violate clearly established federal constitutional right of teacher in September of 1986, and, thus, education officials were entitled to qualified immunity in teacher's § 1983 suit. Quintero de Quintero v. Aponte-Roque, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 974 F.2d 226. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Members of city council which had terminated employment of police officer were entitled to qualified immunity from damages on officer's property interest claims absent any clearly established law which would have prevented them from participating in tribunal, despite evidence that one tribunal member was biased against employee; law was not clearly established that arguable bias of one council member required other council members to refrain from participating. Hicks v. City of Watonga, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 942 F.2d 737. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County officials were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with their discharge of employee who was hired due to mistake as to her qualifications; officials consulted with county counsel prior to discharging employee, and law was unsettled as to entitlement to job acquired pursuant to mistake of fact. Lucero v. Hart, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 915 F.2d 1367. Civil Rights 1376(10)

University chancellor was not entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim for terminating tenured professor in violation of his right to procedural due process since such action violated clearly established rights. Collins v. Marina-Martinez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 894 F.2d 474. Civil Rights 1376(10)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former Puerto Rico Secretary of Commerce was protected by qualified immunity from individual liability for compensatory and punitive damages arising out of 1985 discharge of regional directors; at that time, law forbidding dismissal of officials in "upper-level managerial-type government positions" was not clearly established. Batistini v. Aquino, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 890 F.2d 535. Territories 23

Supervisors of a state employee were entitled to qualified immunity from his substantive due process claim that his termination was arbitrary; at the time employee was fired there was no clearly established substantive due process right to continued public employment that would preclude arbitrary, capricious and pretextual termination in light of absence of binding precedent in Ninth Circuit and conflict between other circuits. Lum v. Jensen, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 876 F.2d 1385, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 867, 493 U.S. 1057, 107 L.Ed.2d 951. Civil Rights 1376(10)

New York insurance officials were entitled to immunity with respect to § 1983 claims that officials deprived auto club president of liberty interest without due process by making defamatory statements that led to foreclosure of president's ability to engage in chosen occupation auto repair contract business; alleged defamation did not occur in course of dismissal from government job or termination by New York of any legal right or status enjoyed by president, and it would not have been clear to reasonable government official that alleged defamation was deprivation of protected liberty interest. Neu v. Corcoran, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1989, 869 F.2d 662, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 66, 493 U.S. 816, 107 L.Ed.2d 33. Civil Rights 1376(3)

State medical examiner's supervisor did not have qualified immunity for her discharge of medical examiner, accompanied by public charges of dishonesty, without due process as law clearly established at time demonstrated examiner had right to a hearing; the law was clear that upon examiner's termination amid public charges of dishonesty, his liberty interests were implicated and he was entitled to hearing to attempt to clear his name. Brady v. Gebbie, C.A.9 (Or.) 1988, 859 F.2d 1543, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1577, 489 U.S. 1100, 103 L.Ed.2d 943. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Guam's Governor and chief of staff violated clearly established rights by forcing resignation of classified employee, who was director of retired senior volunteer program, and, therefore, did not enjoy qualified immunity. Roberto v. Bordallo, C.A.9 (Guam) 1988, 839 F.2d 573. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Given that law was unsettled regarding termination of a police chief, without notice and a hearing, former police commissioner, who was sued in his personal capacity, enjoyed qualified immunity from chief's procedural due process claims, although former commissioner was subject to money damages for any Maryland state constitutional tort he may have committed; furthermore, current commissioner, who was sued in his official capacity, could remain in the case under §§ 1983 because the only claims brought against him were for injunctive relief. Franklin v. Clark, D.Md.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 356. Civil Rights 1376(10)

For purposes of county employee's §§ 1983 claim alleging violation of procedural due process, county did not violate employee's liberty interest in his good name and reputation by placing in his personnel file termination letter which allegedly contained false and defamatory information, absent sufficient evidence of "publication"; information was not actually disseminated and intragovernmental dissemination generally fell short of Supreme Court's notion of "publication," and as to possibility of future disclosure outside county, employee had not alleged or produced evidence that publication was likely or imminent or sought injunctive relief in that regard. Bell v. Board of County Com'rs of Jefferson County, D.Kan.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 1016. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); Counties 67

State university's chancellor was not entitled to qualified immunity from former assistant chancellor's race and sex discrimination claims under §§ 1981 and 1983 on ground that it was not clearly established that refusing to renew a contract was an adverse employment action, given that there were no cases in which a court held that universities could discriminate against at-will employees in context of renewing contracts. Walker v. Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System, W.D.Wis.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 836. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School superintendent and supervisor of school board employee were entitled to qualified immunity from individual liability under § 1983 for their actions in informing employee of board's suspicion that employee had violated policy against alcohol and/or drug abuse, and in declining to reappoint employee to further one-year contracts, as such actions were within scope of their authority and did not violate any clearly established law of which reasonable person would have known. Cox v. McCraley, M.D.Fla.1998, 993 F.Supp. 1452. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State officials and employees were entitled to qualified immunity regarding public employee's retaliatory harassment claim under Title VII and the First Amendment as employee did not show that employees or officials violated a clearly established law since employee was presently employed by public employer, had not lost any back pay, and had suffered no tangible injury. Gorman v. Roberts, M.D.Ala.1995, 909 F.Supp. 1479. Civil Rights 1376(10); Civil Rights 1529

3836. ---- Hirings, employment, clearly established right

County sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity for allegedly making defamatory statements about sheriff's department employees in retaliation for statements they made to outside law enforcement agencies concerning department's activities; even if there was cause of action under § 1983 for defamation in retaliation for exercising First Amendment rights, such action was not based on a clearly established legal principle of which sheriff should have been aware at the time. Blume v. Meneley, D.Kan.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(10)

At time deputy mayor for finance development for city allegedly defamed real estate developer, causing developer to lose public development project and other prospective opportunities to freely engage in chosen occupation, it was not clearly established that public defamation of one seeking state employment, but not yet having obtained it, which impairs changes for other employment, violates constitutional right to liberty of occupation, unless due process of law is followed; thus, deputy mayor was entitled to immunity in civil rights action brought against him by real estate developer. Walentas v. Lipper, S.D.N.Y.1987, 662 F.Supp. 902, affirmed 862 F.2d 414, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1747, 490 U.S. 1021, 104 L.Ed.2d 183. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3836A. ---- Rehiring, employment, clearly established right

County District Attorney (DA) was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in village police chief's §§ 1983 action; chief alleged that village failed to rehire him "in conjunction with publicly communicated, false statements" that he was dishonest and unreliable, properly setting out violation of his clearly established right to a name clearing hearing. Hoffman v. Kelz, W.D.Wis.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1007. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3837. ---- Medical benefits, employment, clearly established right

Individual members of county board of supervisors who were involved in decision not to give accrued sick leave or medical insurance benefits to discharged public defender were entitled to qualified immunity from suit under civil rights statute since it was not clear whether entitlement to that type of benefit is a constitutionally protected property right. Portman v. County of Santa Clara, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 995 F.2d 898. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3838. ---- Promotions or demotions, employment, clearly established right

Supervisors of state employee were entitled to qualified immunity as to employee's claim that he was effectively demoted from his position without due process, due to his purported misconduct; employee had no legitimate expectation grounded in Illinois law that he would not be subjected to type of personnel action taken against him, and employee's reassignment did not violate clearly established constitutional right. Atterberry v. Sherman, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 453 F.3d 823. Civil Rights 1376(10)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

No reasonable public official could have assumed he or she had authority to retaliate against employee for employee's disclosure of misconduct by another public official and, thus, former police chief's allegations of demotion in retaliation for disclosure of possible misconduct by city councilman were sufficient to overcome city officials' motion to dismiss civil rights claim on qualified immunity grounds. Schultea v. Wood, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1112, rehearing en banc granted, on rehearing 47 F.3d 1427. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Director of Department of Public Safety and fire chief were immune from civil rights liability for the 1988 promotion of fire department captain to position of battalion chief, allegedly in retaliation for his criticism of his superiors; reasonable supervisors acting at that time would not have understood that the law "clearly established" that promotion to a suitable job could nonetheless violate the Constitution when it diminished employee's opportunity to make money elsewhere. Walsh v. Ward, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 991 F.2d 1344. Civil Rights 1376(10)

"Clearly established" equal protection right to be free of race and sex discrimination in employment extended to community college president's alleged discrimination against female instructor, including failure to promote her to athletic director position and award her summer work contracts on same basis as male instructors, as required to overcome president's claim of qualified immunity to instructor's § 1983 claim. Morris v. Wallace Community College-Selma, S.D.Ala.2001, 125 F.Supp.2d 1315, affirmed 34 Fed.Appx. 388, 2002 WL 518045. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Corrections officials who were members of interview panel which denied promotion to African-American correctional sergeant knew or should have known, at time of their decision, that discrimination against African-American individual in promotion context violated clearly established equal protection rights, and therefore such officials were not entitled to qualified immunity with regard to sergeant's § 1983 claim for violation of his equal protection rights. Beckett v. Department of Corrections of the State of Del., D.Del.1997, 981 F.Supp. 319. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Law was clearly established at time of plaintiff's demotion from her position as assistant chief fire marshal that she was entitled to due process; thus, where plaintiff was denied due process by, inter alia, not receiving notice of any hearings or charges against her, city officials responsible for demotion were not free from liability based on qualified immunity in plaintiff's action under § 1983 and Title VII. Myers v. City of Fort Wayne, Ind., N.D.Ind.1990, 729 F.Supp. 625.

3839. ---- Referral lists, employment, clearly established right

Wrecking service had constitutionally protected "property right" under Fourteenth Amendment not to be removed from Highway Department's wrecking service rotation list summarily, without any prior notice, opportunity to be heard, or other process; thus, state officer who so removed service was not entitled to qualified immunity in service's § 1983 action alleging procedural due process violation. Pritchett v. Alford, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1992, 973 F.2d 307. Civil Rights 1376(3); Constitutional Law 277(1)

Police officers did not have qualified immunity from § 1983 suit alleging cooperation with school officials in cover-up of assault of high school student by teacher; it was well established that alleged cover-up activities of officers were violation of student's First Amendment right to petition government for redress of grievances. Estate of Morris ex rel. Morris v. Dapolito, S.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 680. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3840. ---- Reinstatements, employment, clearly established right

Qualified immunity did not shield state officials from public employee's § 1983 claims for reinstatement or other equitable remedies related to her procedural due process claims arising out of her termination. Pace v. Moriarty, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 83 F.3d 261. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Supervisors' delay in reinstating state employee after criminal charges of sexual assault against employee were dismissed did not constitute deprivation of clearly established right, especially considering that employee was ultimately provided back pay for delay period; thus, supervisors were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action. Komlosi v. New York State Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 64 F.3d 810, on remand 1998 WL 830524. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Hospital's executive director was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for due process violations that occurred when hospital authority refused to reinstate paramedic after he was cleared of misconduct charges; it was clearly established in Georgia that public employee who could only be fired for cause had constitutionally protected property interest in continued employment absent misconduct, that paramedic was entitled to reinstatement, and that medical advisor's withdrawal of his sponsorship, which allegedly formed basis for refusal to reinstate, was based on same charges on which paramedic had been cleared. Baxter v. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Authority, N.D.Ga.1991, 764 F.Supp. 1510. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3841. ---- Resignations, employment, clearly established right

Law of procedural due process and fact that contract could vest right or interest that required due process protection were clearly established at time of police officer's forced resignation, for purposes of police commission members' claims of qualified immunity in officer's civil rights action. Moffitt v. Town of Brookfield, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1991, 950 F.2d 880. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Puerto Rico Environmental Quality Board official was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for any alleged violation of employee's constitututional rights resulting from postponement of decision to accept or reject employee's resignation pending an administrative investigation; official, who relied upon the recommendations and advice of various Puerto Rico governmental agencies and attorneys while pondering whether to accept or reject the resignation, was not objectively unreasonable in believing that the action taken at the time the decision was made violated a clearly established constitutional right. Ramirez-De Leon v. Mujica-Cotto, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3842. ---- Retirement benefits, employment, clearly established right

It was not clearly established in January 1985 that denying pension fund admission to probationary fire fighter would violate fire fighter's due process rights, and, thus, individual defendants enjoyed qualified immunity from liability. Marvin v. King, S.D.Ind.1990, 734 F.Supp. 346. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3843. ---- Suspensions, employment, clearly established right

Actions of officials at New York Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities (OMRDD) in suspending psychologist without pay did not constitute deprivation of clearly established right; thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity in a § 1983 action. Komlosi v. New York State Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 64 F.3d 810, on remand 1998 WL 830524. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School board members were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to claim that lengthy postsuspension hearing process deprived teacher of due process, as case law established no bright line test for when delay would become a constitutional violation and school board members were responsible, at most, for two of the 19 months between the suspension and their reinstatement of the teacher pursuant to hearing officer's recommendation. Collins v. School Bd. of Dade County, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 981 F.2d 1203. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Superior officers in Missouri State Highway Patrol were entitled to qualified immunity defense to trooper's procedural due process claim arising out of trooper's suspension, where it was reasonable for superiors to conclude that they had provided trooper with "fundamentals of due process"; trooper had been provided with notice of charges being investigated and informal opportunity to respond before formal charges were initiated, full evidentiary hearing before disciplinary review board, and private two-hour meeting with ultimate decision maker at which trooper responded to charges and argued his speech "retaliation" theory which he had been precluded from presenting at board hearing. Bartlett v. Fisher, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 972 F.2d 911. States 79

Director of corrections facility and personnel director of county were entitled to qualified immunity on civil rights claim by corrections facility guard who was placed on suspension following arrest, where guard alleged entitlement to name-clearing hearing, but case which established right to name-clearing hearing was rendered during pendency of guard's litigation. Bailey v. Board of County Com'rs of Alachua County, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 956 F.2d 1112, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 98, 506 U.S. 832, 121 L.Ed.2d 58. Civil Rights 1376(10)

District attorney's temporary suspension of deputy district attorney without providing deputy with opportunity to deny allegations leading to suspension violated clearly established law, and, thus, district attorney was not entitled to qualified immunity; deputy had protected property interest in job under California law. Finkelstein v. Bergna, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 924 F.2d 1449, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 75, 502 U.S. 818, 116 L.Ed.2d 49. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police superintendent's alleged campaign of harassment against and suspension of police officer in alleged retaliation for exercising First Amendment rights when cooperating with Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and when testifying against fellow officer in court were clearly established, and, thus, superintendent was entitled to no qualified immunity on First Amendment claim. Dobosz v. Walsh, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1989, 892 F.2d 1135. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Employer who suspended public employee was entitled to qualified immunity in employee's § 1983 action as, at time of suspension in August, 1990, law was unclear as to whether due process requirements which clearly applied to discharge of public employees also required hearing, in all instances, prior to temporary suspension without pay; employer's telephone call to employee plus confirming letter which specifically detailed reasons for suspension as well as procedure which was to be followed were objectively reasonable in light of existing law. Cheathon v. Brinkley, M.D.La.1993, 822 F.Supp. 1241. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3844. Environment and conservation, clearly established right--Generally

Owners of home near lake, and of dam and land beneath lake, did not satisfy the burden of showing that, at time of alleged wrong, they had clearly established due process right to notice and opportunity to be heard before dam's breach by California DSOD (Division of Safety of Dams), and thus chief engineer of DSOD who made decision to breach dam was entitled to qualified immunity from owners' civil rights suit. Sinaloa Lake Owners Ass'n v. City of Simi Valley, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1095. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Commissioner and Executive Deputy Commissioner of New York State Department of Environmental Conservation were entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claims for damages against them in their individual capacities for their actions in imposing summary abatement orders prohibiting owners from operating their oil and sludge barges in New York harbor; although parameters of Commissioners' powers were not well-defined, it was not clearly established that they lacked authority to act as they did under state law authorizing abatement orders. Berman Enterprises, Inc. v. Jorling, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 3 F.3d 602, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 883, 510 U.S. 1073, 127 L.Ed.2d 78. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Officials of Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claim by officers of participant in joint venture which was owner and operator of landfill, for officials' conduct in causing ex parte order to be issued requiring that water quality bond be posted in connection with operation of landfill, and naming certain individual officers in that order; officials exercised discretion in obtaining the order and designating the individuals, and conduct did not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights of which they should have been aware. Winn v. Lynn, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 941 F.2d 236, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Landowner seeking to halt effluent runoff from methane production activities alleged facts sufficient to show that conduct of state Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) officials sued in their individual capacities violated landowner's constitutional rights, and that such law was clearly established when violation occurred, as required to overcome officials' qualified immunity defense to landowner's Fifth Amendment takings claim; landowner alleged that state's failure to perform its statutory and regulatory obligations by allowing gas company to discharge coal bed methane process water effectuated physical taking of his private property, and that his continuing efforts to have state enforce its statutory and regulatory obligations was sufficient to put state officials on notice that their conduct may have been unlawful under preexisting law. Swartz v. Beach, D.Wyo.2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 1239. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Owners of homes near lake, and of dam and land beneath lake, did not satisfy their burden of showing that in 1983 they had clearly established due process right to notice and opportunity to be heard before dam's breach and to not have dam breached in arbitrary and capricious manner, and in any event officials of California DSOD (Division of Safety of Dams) were entitled to qualified immunity as reasonable dam safety engineering official, similarly situated, could have believed that breaching dam was lawful; decision to breach dam was based on collective evaluations, test data, and recommendations of subordinate engineers who had overseen and performed studies on dam specifically to determine dam's safety as well as appropriate response measures. Sinaloa Lake Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Stephenson, C.D.Cal.1992, 805 F.Supp. 824, affirmed 70 F.3d 1095. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3845. ---- Arrests, environment and conservation, clearly established right

Conservation agent did not violate any clearly established constitutional right of taxidermist when agent reached across threshold to arrest taxidermist without warrant, and, thus, agent was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action; taxidermist at least partially relinquished expectation of privacy when he opened door to residence that was also used for business, and taxidermist knew immediately of agent's intention to arrest taxidermist and went to door in response to agent's knock. Dailey v. Lyles, W.D.Mo.1992, 785 F.Supp. 812, affirmed 993 F.2d 175, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County social worker should have known that her alleged conduct in thwarting parents' attempts to have children returned to parents' home, after children were removed due to unsanitary conditions, and in effectively denying parents prompt hearing on children's placement had effect of violating parents' clearly established rights to procedural due process by involuntarily depriving parents of physical custody of children, and therefore qualified immunity did not apply to preclude social worker's liability under §§ 1983. Smith v. Williams-Ash, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 2005 WL 3304101, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3846. ---- Searches, environment and conservation, clearly established right

Even though right of gas station owner not to be subjected to warrantless search of its property under a statute such as the Wyoming Environmental Quality Act was clearly established at the time that the Department of Environmental Quality official conducted the search, official was entitled to qualified immunity where he had fully informed high ranking government attorneys of the facts and had been informed by them that the statute, which had not yet been tested in any court, permitted him to conduct a warrantless search. V-1 Oil Co. v. State of Wyo., Dept. of Environmental Quality, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1990, 902 F.2d 1482, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 295, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L.Ed.2d 249. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3847. Horse racing, clearly established right

Ohio State Racing Commission officials were entitled to qualified immunity for monetary damages in suit by licensed thoroughbred trainer arising from request for drug testing of trainer given that constitutionality and propriety of administrative drug testing upon reasonable cause was unsettled when trainer submitted to Commission's drug screening procedure. Carrelli v. Ginsburg, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 956 F.2d 598. States 79

3848. Hospitals, clearly established right--Generally

County medical center's security chief and general counsel did not violate clearly established law when they complied with family court order prohibiting plaintiff from visiting his son in medical center without son's consent and, therefore, were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability, despite plaintiff's claim that security chief and general counsel impaired obligation of separation agreement granting unrestricted access to son and right to approve medical treatment and that they violated right to practice religious belief in exercising supervision over medical treatment. Fariello v. Rodriguez, E.D.N.Y.1993, 148 F.R.D. 670, affirmed 22 F.3d 1090. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3849. ---- Mental hospitals or institutions, clearly established right

No clear line of federal law established that it was a substantial departure from accepted practice for physician to fail to inform a patient of risks of psychotropic medications; therefore, physicians at state hospital who treated involuntarily committed patient enjoyed qualified immunity from liability in patient's § 1983 action alleging that physicians' treatment decisions violated his due process rights. Kulak v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 88 F.3d 63. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Social worker at state adolescent home who was aware of patient's history of mental illness, including suicide threats and attempts and self-injurious behavior, but failed to notify psychiatrists or psychologists at hospital or continue protective measures already in place for patient was not entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought after patient was severely injured when he tried to hang himself; it was clearly established in March 1992 that social worker's conduct, which rather than protecting patient actually put him at greater risk of suicide, violated patient's due process rights. Dolihite v. Maughon By and Through Videon, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 74 F.3d 1027, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 185, 519 U.S. 870, 136 L.Ed.2d 123. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Existence of due process right in safe and humane environment on part of voluntarily admitted patient at state psychiatric hospital was not clearly established at time of patient's suicide death, in 1992, entitling state officials to defense of qualified immunity in subsequent civil rights action if patient was properly classified as voluntary patient. Kennedy v. Schafer, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 71 F.3d 292, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 2548, 518 U.S. 1018, 135 L.Ed.2d 1068. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Mental patient's right to personal security in institution to which he or she is committed was clearly established in 1988, when first charge of sexual abuse was made against psychiatric aide, in determining whether former superintendent of state psychiatric center was entitled to qualified immunity in patient's civil rights action asserting failure to protect patient from sexual abuse by aide. Neely v. Feinstein, C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 50 F.3d 1502. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Director of hospital and chief administrative officer of admissions unit at hospital were entitled to qualified immunity for purposes of § 1983 action brought by involuntarily civilly committed patient who was allegedly raped at hospital since it was not clearly established in the Eleventh Circuit, at time of the alleged rape, that it was unconstitutional for mental institution to fail to supervise patient for 15 minutes in smoking room when she was on close watch status for health problem, when institution had history of some sexual contact involving individuals other than patient but no history of rape for the past 12 years, and when patient had never before complained of unwanted sexual contact. Rodgers v. Horsley, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 39 F.3d 308. Civil Rights 1376(3)

State hospital's rule, requiring seclusion of all involuntary patients for seven to ten days, did not provide doctors who followed it with qualified immunity from civil rights suit, particularly where rule violated clearly established law in state at time seclusion occurred. Walters v. Western State Hosp., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1988, 864 F.2d 695. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Former Massachusetts commissioner of mental health and chief administrator at treatment center were entitled to qualified immunity from civil damages in psychiatric patient's civil rights action based upon refusal of his repeated requests for individualized psychological therapy; those individuals were entitled to assert that defense by virtue of their positions as state officials charged with making policy involving discretionary judgment, and there was no clearly established constitutional or statutory right to psychological treatment at time in question. Knight v. Mills, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1987, 836 F.2d 659. Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1376(7)

Psychiatrists were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action arising from involuntary commitment of plaintiff to psychiatric unit for 15 days on ground that he posed danger to himself and others; acts of defendants did not constitute clear, constitutional violation in light of fact that plaintiff, when examined by the two defendant physicians, was carrying knives "for his own protection," and was found to be "delusional, paranoid and potentially violent" as well as "dangerous." Richardson v. Nassau County Medical Center, E.D.N.Y.1994, 840 F.Supp. 219. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Any due process right of voluntary resident to safe conditions at facility for severely retarded individuals would not have been clearly established at time of resident's death, and, thus, state defendants were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Jordan v. State of Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1990, 738 F.Supp. 258. Civil Rights 1376(3)

There was no clearly established constitutional right to psychiatric treatment for civilly committed mentally ill persons in 1982 so that physicians and psychologists could not be held liable for any violation of patients civil rights for failing to provide him with mental treatment in 1982 as they enjoyed qualified immunity. Parillo v. Sura, D.Conn.1987, 652 F.Supp. 1517. Civil Rights 1376(2)

On December 19, 1980 when plaintiffs' son committed suicide while involuntarily committed to state mental hospital the right of inmates to safety was clearly established by decisional law, for purpose of defeating qualified official immunity defense in civil rights action, and such right was general one that officials at a state mental hospital should have been applying daily. Gann v. Schramm, D.C.Del.1985, 606 F.Supp. 1442. Civil Rights 1376(3)

When forensic patient in mental health facility became hostile, slammed window shut on hand of another patient, and made threatening remarks to the other patient, forensic patient presented danger to others and, hence, employees did not violate any clearly established right of patient to refuse forced submission to intravenous injections of psychotropic drug; hence, individual employees involved in administration of the drug were entitled to official immunity from liability therefor. Weiss v. Missouri Dept. of Mental Health, E.D.Mo.1984, 587 F.Supp. 1157. Asylums 7

3850. Housing, clearly established right--Generally

Executive director of metropolitan housing authority was not entitled to qualified immunity under this section with regard to allegations that prospective and current recipients of Section 8 [section 1437f of this title] public housing benefits were denied benefits without procedural due process, where at time of acts on which liability was based, it was established beyond question that at least some type of hearing was necessary before person could be deprived of public assistance that had been awarded because of need. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Town administrator was protected by doctrine of qualified immunity from house owner's claim that she was denied equal protection of laws based on allegation that she was treated differently from other persons who had purchased beach houses and wanted to move them; administrator's decision that house owner could move her house but only on same day that another house was to be moved was discretionary and did not violate any clearly established statutory or constitutional rights. Jacobs v. Town of Scituate, D.Mass.1996, 948 F.Supp. 7. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Government officials of Housing and Urban Development Department (HUD) had immunity from suit brought by public housing resident absent any showing that government officials violated clearly established constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known or showing that residents were detained by government agency. Bourret v. Cisneros, D.Utah 1995, 896 F.Supp. 1104. Civil Rights 1376(1)

3851. ---- Evictions, housing, clearly established right

City police officers did not have qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for evicting residents of women's shelter without predeprivation process, despite officers' contention that, based on shelter manager's representations, they did not believe residents were protected by landlord-tenant law; Kentucky laws forbidding self-help evictions without judicial process and providing for preeviction notice and forcible detainer actions were well-established, as were relevant United Supreme Court decisions. Thomas v. Cohen, C.A.6 (Ky.) 2002, 304 F.3d 563, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2075, 538 U.S. 1032, 155 L.Ed.2d 1061. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Parish sheriff and deputy sheriff did not act reasonably in light of clearly established law at the time they evicted plaintiff from her residence pursuant to temporary restraining order (TRO) which had been obtained by her ex-husband, and therefore, sheriff and deputy were not entitled to qualified immunity on plaintiff's § 1983 claim; TRO stated that ex-husband no longer occupied the home, and the term "eviction" was unmistakably absent from the TRO. Cozzo v. Tangipahoa Parish Council--President Government, C.A.5 (La.) 2002, 279 F.3d 273. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment when officers prevented former tenant from entering his former apartment which was in possession of landlord due to eviction of tenant, absent showing that alleged right not to have police prevent entry was clearly established at time of police action; officers' conduct was not contrary to precedent, nor so shocking as to render precedent unnecessary. Spiegel v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 106 F.3d 209, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 65, 522 U.S. 816, 139 L.Ed.2d 27. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City building inspector was not qualifiedly immune from § 1983 liability for failure to afford tenants evicted pursuant to emergency evacuation posteviction notice of right to administrative hearing, as required by due process; inspector had advised landlord of right to hearing, yet took no action on behalf of tenants, who had at least clearly established right to process of sort inspector afforded to landlord. Flatford v. City of Monroe, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 17 F.3d 162. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Commissioner and real property manager of city department of housing preservation and development were within their qualified immunity and, thus, were not liable in their individual capacities to trespassers, squatters, and illegal occupants who were evicted from city-owned building, in that no constitutional right of trespassers, squatters, or illegal occupants was violated by the eviction, and any alleged rights of trespassers, squatters, and illegal occupants were not clearly established at time of the event in question. De Villar v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1986, 628 F.Supp. 80. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3852. ---- Inspections, housing, clearly established right

Homeowner failed to show that law regarding third-party consent to warrantless administrative searches was well established at time of search of her home, and, thus, city building inspectors were entitled to qualified immunity from homeowner's § 1983 action arising out of their search of home with consent of building contractor to determine whether renovations complied with local building ordinances. Montville v. Lewis, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 87 F.3d 900, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 961, 519 U.S. 1117, 136 L.Ed.2d 847. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3853. Housing codes, clearly established right

City officials were not entitled to qualified immunity against claims by low-income housing property owners that overenforcement of city housing code, to deflate value of property and facilitate redevelopment of property as shopping center, violated equal protection in light of clearly established precedent that city cannot make land-use decisions based simply on its own desire to acquire private owner's property for purposes unrelated to city's action. Armendariz v. Penman, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 75 F.3d 1311. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Right of corporate owner of rental properties to refuse consent to a warrantless inspection of tenants' apartments, for the benefit of the tenants, was not clearly established, and thus fire chief was entitled to qualified immunity in claim brought by owner under § 1983 alleging that issuance of a citation for refusal to consent violated the Fourth Amendment; in light of the fact that the inspection was for the safety and benefit of the tenants, a reasonable code enforcement official could have believed that a landlord had no right to refuse entry for an inspection of tenants' apartments, and that such a landlord could be cited for obstructing access to tenant apartments for a duly authorized inspection, and, further, the fire chief had issued previous citations under similar circumstances that had been approved by state court judges. Grimm v. Sweeney, E.D.Pa.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 571. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3854. Licenses and permits, clearly established right

Pennsylvania officials were qualifiedly immune from liability in §§ 1983 action in which Native American owner of black bears alleged that officials' refusal to grant waiver of fee for permit to keep wildlife in captivity violated his free exercise rights, where governing precedents were complex and developing, and Court of Appeals' decisions on general applicability principles could have reasonably been interpreted as sending conflicting signals. Blackhawk v. Pennsylvania, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 381 F.3d 202. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Regardless of whether there was a clearly established right to an English-language real estate licensing test in Puerto Rico, members of the Puerto Rico Real Estate Examining Board were not entitled to qualified immunity for their equal protection violation when they, having chosen to give an English language examination, intentionally discriminated by making the English language test more difficult than the Spanish language test and by falsely grading the exam, giving failing grades which were not warranted, even though the Equal Protection Clause has seldom been invoked to protect "Americans" from national origin discrimination. DiMarco-Zappa v. Cabanillas, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2001, 238 F.3d 25. Civil Rights 1376(3)

At time that police officials allegedly caused revocation of business' firearms license, law was not clearly established as to whether individual had constitutional right to gun dealer license when that person was committed to violence and was member of organization supporting violence, so as to defeat officials' claim of qualified immunity against First Amendment claims of owners of business whose license allegedly was revoked due to purported political beliefs and associations of owners. Rivera-Ramos v. Roman, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1998, 156 F.3d 276, on remand 83 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County officials did not enjoy qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action arising out of county's suspension of petroleum bulk permits where it was alleged that permits were suspended due to the exercise of First Amendment rights and at time of suspension an individual had clearly established right to be free of intentional retaliation by government officials based upon constitutionally protected expression. Soranno's Gasco, Inc. v. Morgan, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 874 F.2d 1310. Civil Rights 1376(4)

State officials who suspended commercial campground operators' license were not entitled to qualified immunity in subsequent civil rights suit alleging that they had suspended license in retaliation for operators' refusal to submit to warrantless searches, in that law was clear that such retaliation was violation of operators' civil rights. Freeman v. Blair, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1988, 862 F.2d 1330, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(3)

City officials who suspended massage therapist's massage establishment license due to alleged misconduct involving patient were not entitled to qualified immunity as to therapist's procedural due process claim stemming from failure to provide pre-deprivation hearing; reasonable official would have known that strong private interest was affected by summarily suspending license, and that there was risk of erroneous deprivation through procedures used. Jones v. City of Modesto, E.D.Cal.2005, 408 F.Supp.2d 935. Civil Rights 1376(4)

County planning director was entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 speech, assembly, religious freedom, due process, and equal protection claims and Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) claims by religious organization which was denied special use permit for religious use of land classified as agricultural; contours of organization's rights under RLUIPA and free exercise clause were not sufficiently clear, and director was applying provisions of duly enacted and facially-constitutional laws. Hale O Kaula Church v. Maui Planning Com'n, D.Hawai'i 2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 1056.

Sheriff, who denied bail bond company due process by effectively suspending its license without predeprivation hearing, was not entitled to qualified immunity on company's § 1983 claim, as reasonable official would have known that sheriff's refusal to accept all bonds written by company without any notice or hearing violated company's clearly established rights. Holt Bonding Co., Inc. v. Nichols, W.D.Ark.1997, 988 F.Supp. 1232. Civil Rights 1376(6)

There was no violation of clearly established constitutional right in officer's filing of criminal complaint against restaurant operator for violation of statute prohibiting refusal to give to licensing investigator, inspector or agent such information as may be required for proper enforcement and, thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in operator's § 1983 suit; in 1987, it was not clearly established that operator's Fourth Amendment rights were implicated as result of summons to appear in court to defend himself against criminal charges, and in any event, evidence did not show that officer behaved in objectively unreasonable manner, regardless of whether he acted in good faith, as probable cause at least arguably supported application for complaint following operator's refusal to provide information upon direct questioning. Duca v. Martins, D.Mass.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1281. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City council member was entitled to qualified immunity from liquor license applicant's claim under § 1983 that council member retaliated against applicant, by urging council to deny license application, for applicant's exercise of his First Amendment right to criticize fees charged for abatement of weeds in council member's district; right not to be retaliated against by public official for exercise of First Amendment rights was not "clearly established," inasmuch as most First Amendment retaliation claims within the circuit involved public employees. Arrington v. Dickerson, M.D.Ala.1996, 915 F.Supp. 1516. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Members of county board of commissioners had qualified immunity from § 1983 action brought by applicant seeking damages for denial of permit to operate nude dancing establishment, which had been made pursuant to statute subsequently found unconstitutional on its face; county commissioners could not be expected to know that statute violated First Amendment, as law regarding constitutionality of nude dancing was "unstable" at time permit was denied. B Street Commons, Inc. v. Board of County Com'rs of El Paso County, D.Colo.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1266. Civil Rights 1376(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Members of Illinois Medical Disciplinary Board who voted to revoke physician's license to practice medicine were entitled to qualified immunity in physician's civil rights action based on claim that alleged illegal political composition of Board violated due process; it had never been clearly established that any violation of Illinois statute concerning political complexion of Board caused any hearings conducted by Board to be flawed in due process terms. McCabe v. Caleel, N.D.Ill.1990, 739 F.Supp. 387, affirmed 931 F.2d 895, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3855. Lotteries, clearly established right

Under the law of Puerto Rico, regardless of whether former Executive Director of the Puerto Rico Human Resources and Occupational Development Council (HRODC) had a property interest in continued employment for the duration of her four-year term, such right was not clearly established at the time of her termination, and thus governor and other officials responsible for her termination were entitled to qualified immunity in claim brought by executive alleging violations of her Fourteenth Amendment right to due process occurred when she was terminated without a pre-termination hearing. Santana v. Calderon, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 342 F.3d 18. Civil Rights 1376(10)

If a seizure of construction workers occurred and village manager acted without probable cause or reasonable suspicion of the illegality, and with knowledge of his lack of authority to detain, jury could reasonably find that village manager acted in violation of clearly established constitutional rights of which he should have been aware, and thus was not entitled to qualified immunity for violation of construction workers' Fourth Amendment rights. Dejesus v. Village of Pelham Manor, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1376(4)

State officials were not liable in their individual capacities to members of handicapped persons association, even if officials breached settlement stipulation to require state lottery ticket sellers to provide access to disabled persons by certain date, absent showing that members' allegedly violated equal protection and substantive due process rights were clearly established. Florida Paraplegic Ass'n v. Martinez, S.D.Fla.1990, 734 F.Supp. 997. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3856. Medical status, clearly established right

At time state education department published training guide regarding setting up programs aimed at preventing spread of HIV (human immunodeficiency virus), constitutional right to privacy as to one's medical status, including one's HIV status, was clearly established, for purposes of determining whether state education department officials were entitled to qualified immunity in HIV positive individuals' § 1983 action alleging that publication of their full names in training guide as persons living with HIV violated their right to privacy. Doe v. Marsh, N.D.N.Y.1996, 918 F.Supp. 580, affirmed 105 F.3d 106. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3857. Medicaid payments, clearly established right

Director and former director of Division of Medical Services in the Arkansas Department of Human Services (ADHS) were not entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability for violating clearly established rights of recipients and medical providers under Medicaid Act when they manipulated the prior authorization system in a way that denied children essential medical services solely because they wanted to cut costs. Pediatric Specialty Care, Inc. v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 443 F.3d 1005. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Medicaid Commissioner was entitled to qualified immunity from any § 1983 liability for failure to provide hearing to physician following suspension of Medicaid payments during investigation; suspension of payments was not clearly established as suspension of provider agreement within meaning of Kentucky rule requiring evidentiary hearing following termination or suspension of provider agreement. Levin v. Childers, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1996, 101 F.3d 44. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3858. Police activities, clearly established right--Generally

Qualified immunity shields police officer from suit when he makes decision that, even if constitutionally deficient, reasonably misapprehends law governing circumstances he confronted; i.e., whether right in question is "clearly established" depends on whether it would be clear to reasonable officer that his conduct was unlawful in situation he confronted. Brosseau v. Haugen, U.S.2004, 125 S.Ct. 596, 543 U.S. 194, 160 L.Ed.2d 583, on remand 396 F.3d 1036. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claim that they violated automobile passenger's due process rights by insisting that he and intoxicated driver leave in automobile, with result that passenger was killed in automobile accident; under the circumstances, there was no clearly established constitutional right to police protection from actions of driver, inasmuch as police did nothing to prevent passenger from protecting himself; rejecting Tittiger, 678 F.Supp. 177; Russell, 851 F.Supp. 859. Foy v. City of Berea, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 58 F.3d 227. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Individual officers were entitled to qualified immunity for their actions in allegedly violating arrestee's Fifth Amendment right to counsel in taking statement that was never used in court of law; it could not be said that reasonable officer would have known that conduct alleged, intent to compel statement despite giving of Miranda rights, violated substantive rights under Fifth Amendment, even though officer might have recognized that conduct could have been basis for suppression of arrestee's statement; substantive Fifth Amendment norm alleged was not clearly established at time of challenged actions. Giuffre v. Bissell, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1994, 31 F.3d 1241. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Generally, police officers are entitled to qualified immunity if their conduct does not violate clearly established constitutional rights, or it was objectively reasonable for them to believe their acts did not violate those rights. Oliveira v. Mayer, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 23 F.3d 642, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 721, 513 U.S. 1076, 130 L.Ed.2d 627, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 722, 513 U.S. 1076, 130 L.Ed.2d 627. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officials sued under § 1983 are entitled to qualified immunity if the right they allegedly have violated was not clearly established at time of violation, or if reasonable officer would have thought that defendants' actions were constitutional. Palmer v. Sanderson, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In determining whether town fire captain and police lieutenant were entitled to qualified immunity in club owner's civil rights action, district court had to consider whether officers' conduct violated any of owner's clearly established rights and had to discuss any direct evidence presented by owner of proper intent or motive on part of officers. Wegener v. City of Covington, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1991, 933 F.2d 390. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Defendant police officers' due process duty not to affirmatively misuse government power so as to create danger to plaintiff or render her more vulnerable to harm was not clearly established in spring of 1991; thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action alleging that they improperly alerted plaintiff's former boyfriend of their decision to place parking lot of plaintiff's apartment complex under surveillance in response to plaintiff's repeated complaints that her car had been vandalized, which information enabled boyfriend to avoid arrest at that time, and to assault plaintiff two months later. Cook v. City of Groton, D.Conn.1997, 952 F.Supp. 101, affirmed 129 F.3d 113. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established in 1987 that allegedly defamatory statements made by detective to press accompanying arrest of restaurant operator and manager, asserting that manager and others were selling cocaine at restaurant, violated constitutional rights of manager and operator and, thus, detective was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit. Duca v. Martins, D.Mass.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1281. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police chief and deputy sheriff did not violate mother's constitutional rights or clearly established law by allegedly failing to assist mother in "retrieving" her minor child from paternal grandparents, and thus, police chief and deputy sheriff were entitled to qualified immunity in mother's § 1983 action; First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments imposed no duty on police chief or deputy sheriff to assist mother in retrieving her daughter, no special relationship existed that created that type of duty, and police chief and deputy sheriff did not interfere with mother's right to associate with her daughter by withholding police assistance. Van Loo v. Braun, E.D.Wis.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1390. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Local law enforcement officers who are sued for constitutional violations are entitled to immunity from suit if their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Swenson v. Culberson County, W.D.Tex.1996, 925 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1376(6)

If constitutional or statutory right is clearly established, court assumes that police officer in question knew of this right and qualified immunity will only be denied in § 1983 action if reasonable official should have known that challenged conduct violated that established right. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Interrogating officers could not escape liability for alleged violation of criminal defendants' Miranda rights merely by claiming that they were enforcing policies or orders promulgated by superiors; claim of following orders applies only when reliance is objectively reasonable, and a reasonable person could not reconcile alleged practice of ignoring assertion of Miranda rights with commands of Miranda. California Attorneys for Criminal Justice v. Butts, C.D.Cal.1996, 922 F.Supp. 327, affirmed 195 F.3d 1039, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2717, 530 U.S. 1261, 147 L.Ed.2d 983. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer who stopped motorist for making allegedly improper left-hand turn was qualifiedly immune from motorist's claim under § 1983 that officer was grumpy and discourteous; officer's conduct was not so outrageous as to constitute infliction of emotional harm under § 1983, nor any other tort of constitutional dimension. Lanigan v. Village of East Hazel Crest, N.D.Ill.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1202. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In determining police officer's right to qualified immunity for making arrest, law as it stood at time of arrest must be considered in determining whether reasonable officer could have believed his conduct to be lawful; officer could not be penalized for failing to predict legal developments that come later. Fordyce v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.1993, 840 F.Supp. 784, affirmed in part, vacated in part and reversed in part 55 F.3d 436, 147 A.L.R. Fed. 811, on remand 907 F.Supp. 1446. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers are shielded from liability under § 1983 if the right they are alleged to have violated was not clearly established at the time of the incident; contours of the right alleged to have been violated must be sufficiently clear that a reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right. Keller v. Frink, S.D.Ind.1990, 745 F.Supp. 1428. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who fails to follow accepted procedure is still immune from damages under § 1983 unless failure amounts to violation of clearly established law. Pennington v. Hobson, S.D.Ind.1989, 719 F.Supp. 760. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers have qualified good-faith immunity to liability under § 1983, and such immunity shields police officers from liability unless conduct violates clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. LaBate v. Butts, E.D.Mich.1987, 673 F.Supp. 887, affirmed 865 F.2d 258. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief was entitled to qualified immunity from police officer's § 1983 claims, arising from chief's refusal to renew officer's expired firearms license after officer was accused of abusing his wife; chief's denial of license did not violate any clearly established law, in that, it was reasonable in light of the accusations of abuse. Rosenfeld v. Egy, D.Mass.2003, 2003 WL 222119, Unreported, affirmed 346 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(10)

City police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from detainee's claims under § 1983; officer did not violate detainee's constitutional rights, in that, he did not use any force on detainee and officer did not have duty to intervene and protect detainee when another officer was spraying her with mace. Wallace v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31844688, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3859. ---- Access to courts, police activities, clearly established right

City police chief and detective of city police department were not entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiff's § 1983 claims alleging denial of access to courts due to inadequate investigation of individual's death, where right of access to courts was clearly established at time of conduct alleged and reasonable person in position of each of the defendants would have known that acts alleged in complaint could preclude plaintiff's exercise of that right. Stump v. Gates, D.Colo.1991, 777 F.Supp. 808, affirmed 986 F.2d 1429. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3860. ---- Equal protection, police activities, clearly established right

Even if allegations by male cohabitant of city councilman that officers denied him police protection from domestic violence by councilman because of councilman's official position presented a cognizable class of one equal protection violation, officers had qualified immunity because the law on the matter was not clearly established at the time of the incident, and an ordinary police officer could not have known that failure to arrest councilman would violate equal protection; there was no precedent in the Circuit upholding a class of one claim on similar facts, and the precise contours of class of one claims eluded even some judges. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to claim in civil rights suit that they had violated woman's right to equal protection by reason of allegedly discriminatory implementation of police policy concerning domestic violence; at time of events in question in 1985, equal protection rights of domestic violence victims had not been sufficiently established to enable reasonable officials to anticipate that their conduct might give rise to liability for damages. Brown v. Grabowski, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1990, 922 F.2d 1097, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2827, 501 U.S. 1218, 115 L.Ed.2d 997. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officer, on the basis of race, called an African-American complainant after he reported being abused and threatened at a gas station, and threatened him with arrest if he returned to the station, precluding summary judgment, on basis of qualified immunity, for officer in §§ 1983 action alleging an Equal Protection violation; even though there was no precisely analogous case law, officer should have been aware that he could not engage in adverse official conduct against a citizen based on bias or prejudice. Johnson v. Anhorn, E.D.Pa.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 338. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

The right to be free from the corruption of the truth-seeking function of the trial process by purposely fabricating or suppressing evidence was a clearly established right of which a reasonable person would be aware, and, thus, state and court officials had no qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability in suit alleging conspiracy to fabricate evidence and suppress evidence in connection with criminal case arising out of domestic abuse. Greene v. Wright, D.Conn.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 416. Conspiracy 13

Domestic violence victim's right to equal protection when police respond to calls for assistance was not clearly established and thus, sheriff and deputies were entitled to qualified immunity to personal liability in § 1983 civil rights suit by mother of domestic abuse victim, based on allegations that custom of sheriff's department was to treat domestic assault cases less seriously than nondomestic assault cases. Hakken v. Washtenaw County,

E.D.Mich.1995, 901 F.Supp. 1245. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's duty to protect domestic abuse victim was not clearly established and, thus, qualified immunity applied to § 1983 civil rights claims against officers in their individual capacities alleging that failure to remove former husband from victim's home violated victim's due process and equal protection rights. Smith v. City of Elyria, N.D.Ohio 1994, 857 F.Supp. 1203. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers sued in their personal capacities were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to equal protection claim brought under § 1983 based on membership in the class of victims of domestic violence, rather than on gender, brought by representative for estate of wife who was killed by husband following reported incidents of domestic violence; conduct complained of did not meet the objective "clearly established law" test for avoiding qualified immunity. Cellini v. City of Sterling Heights, E.D.Mich.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1215. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3861. ---- Freedom of association, police activities, clearly established right

Police department investigation into marital sexual relations of police officer accused of sexual harassment did not violate his or his wife's clearly established constitutional rights to privacy and free association and, therefore, city and police officers who conducted investigation were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by officer and his wife. Hughes v. City of North Olmsted, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 93 F.3d 238. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Investigators for county sheriff's department who did not sufficiently allege violations of clearly established constitutional right did not show that sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to their § 1983 action alleging violation of their First Amendment right to freedom of political association. Harris v. Hayter, W.D.Va.1997, 970 F.Supp. 500. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Sheriff and sheriff's deputies were entitled to qualified immunity from claims that they violated homeless persons' rights to peaceably assemble and to freedom of association under Florida and United States Constitutions when deputies forced them from homeless campsite on private property, as it was not clearly established that homeless persons retained rights to peaceably assemble and to freedom of association while living on private property without permission of owner. D'Aguanno v. Gallagher, M.D.Fla.1993, 827 F.Supp. 1558, affirmed in part, vacated in part 50 F.3d 877. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3862. ---- Freedom of speech, police activities, clearly established right

Protesters had clearly established First Amendment right not to have police officers interfere with their demonstration on private property, and thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity for their conduct in dispersing crowd and interfering with demonstration, in protesters' §§ 1983 First Amendment action, even if some of the protesters briefly ventured out into adjoining highway, absent showing of a clear and present danger of riot, imminent violence, interference with traffic, other immediate threat to public safety, that protesters had engaged in disorderly conduct, unlawful assembly, or other criminal activity, or that officers gave dispersal order and protesters ignored it. Jones v. Parmley, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 46. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Viewing the evidence in light most favorable to arrestee, arrestee did not utter fighting words in heckling baseball player at ballpark, and thus, police officer violated arrestee's clearly established right to be free from arrest for exercise of his First Amendment right to free speech by arresting him for violating Cleveland disorderly conduct, so as to render officer ineligible for qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 claim against him for violation of First Amendment; player who was subject of arrestee's comments apparently did not hear arrestee's jeers, and there was no evidence that other fans in ballpark were offended by the jeers or incited to become violent. Swiecicki v. Delgado, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 463 F.3d 489. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right of voter referendum sponsors to exercise their free speech rights free from retaliatory harassment by police officers opposing referendum was clearly established, for purpose of determining officers' entitlement to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability; prohibition of retaliation against citizens for exercise of First Amendment rights was settled law. Bennett v. Hendrix, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 423 F.3d 1247, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 295203. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County officials were entitled to qualified immunity on deputy's § 1983 claim for First Amendment retaliation since reasonable public official would have believed that decision to terminate deputy would not violate clearly established First Amendment rights; although deputy was terminated after he had testified against county constable in grand jury proceeding, he would have been terminated even if he had not testified against constable, since deputy's decision to draw his weapon on shoplifting suspect was improper conduct and cause for termination. Gonzales v. Dallas County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 249 F.3d 406. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Individual's First Amendment right to shout "f--k you" and make offensive gesture at group of abortion protestors was clearly established at time individual was arrested for disorderly conduct based on those acts, and reasonable officer should have known that such words and gesture amounted to protected speech; thus, police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in individual's resulting § 1983 action alleging false arrest. Sandul v. Larion, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1997, 119 F.3d 1250, certiorari dismissed 118 S.Ct. 439, 522 U.S. 979, 139 L.Ed.2d 377. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time police officer was investigated and disciplined, it was not clearly established that it was unconstitutional for police officials to investigate and suspend officer for making vulgar, insulting, and defiant criticisms of police department while giving testimony in deposition pursuant to subpoena; accordingly, police officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by police officer alleging that his discipline for making such comments violated First Amendment. Hansen v. Soldenwagner, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1994, 19 F.3d 573. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Arrest of abortion protesters for carrying signs reading "the killing place" outside abortion clinic violated clearly established constitutional right of protesters to picket on public sidewalk in front of clinic, and, thus, arresting officers were not entitled to assert qualified immunity defense to civil right action brought against them by protesters for violating First Amendment rights; although signs were likely to offend those entering clinic, they were not inherently likely to cause immediate breach of peace. Cannon v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 998 F.2d 867. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for stopping and arresting car passenger who had made obscene gesture and yelled profanities at officer on deserted, rural highway late at night; officer should have known that traffic stop was illegal; and he had to have known that he was exercising authority in violation of well-established First Amendment rights, if he detained passenger as punishment for insults. Duran v. City of Douglas, Ariz., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1990, 904 F.2d 1372. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Supervisors allegedly violated clearly established rights when they disciplined county police officer for his remarks critical of department's emergency services unit (ESU), precluding claim of qualified immunity from officer's First Amendment claims. Wallace v. Suffolk County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officers were entitled qualified immunity on protesters' §§ 1983 claim that officers' action in arresting them for verbally criticizing officers constituted a "prior restraint" in violation of the First Amendment since law was not clearly established such that a reasonable officer would know it prohibited such actions. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 130 Fed.Appx. 987, 2005 WL 1221632. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fact that signs posted in family's yard critical of public and private individuals were set ablaze did not qualify as act of harassment or retaliation with respect to city, county attorney, mayor, and city chief of police, for purposes of family's § 1983 claim of conspiracy to retaliate against family for exercising their First Amendment rights, where cause of fire had yet to be determined, family had no evidence, other than speculation, that any defendant was involved in fire, court did not know what signs were set afire, for purposes of determining whether speech was protected, and family failed to present any evidence as to why signs predating fire qualified as protected speech. Libbra v. City of Litchfield, Ill., C.D.Ill.1995, 893 F.Supp. 1370. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

City manager and city police officer violated clearly established law when they caused arrest of newspaper publisher for selling newspapers in newsrack without license, in determining whether they were entitled to qualified immunity in publisher's civil rights action based on alleged violation of his First Amendment free speech rights; ordinance under which publisher was arrested subjected newspaper vendors to fines of up to $500 for failing to undergo semi-weekly licensure procedure involving payment of $25 fee and completion of comprehensive license application. Jacobsen v. Lambers, D.Kan.1995, 888 F.Supp. 1088. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff did not violate any clearly established constitutional rights of reporter when deputy took from reporter unedited transcripts of interviews with defendant in criminal case, and, thus, deputy was entitled to qualified immunity from liability on claims that he violated First Amendment, Fourth Amendment, and due process clause. Duluth News-Tribune v. Medure, D.Minn.1992, 808 F.Supp. 671. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Mayor and police chief did not have qualified immunity protecting from Fourth Amendment challenge their conduct in prohibiting city council member from tape recording session and in ejecting him from meeting when he refused to refrain from recording; reasonable officials in their position should have know at time that seizure of recorder and/or ejection of council member were unreasonable acts in violation of council member's clear First Amendment right to record council proceedings. Thompson v. City of Clio, M.D.Ala.1991, 765 F.Supp. 1066. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

3863. ---- Investigations, police activities, clearly established right

Mother had no clearly established right under Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to strike her son with belt on school grounds without law enforcement investigation of her conduct and filing of report with county prosecutor at time of alleged misconduct; thus, deputy sheriff who conducted investigation and filed report was entitled to qualified immunity in mother's § 1983 action, as were sheriff and county. Sweaney v. Ada County, Idaho, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1997, 119 F.3d 1385. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if allowing noninvestigating officers in sheriff's department to view surveillance videotape of attorney and client's sexual activities constituted an unconstitutional invasion of attorney's privacy in violation of his substantive due process rights, county officials were entitled to qualified immunity since law was not clearly established at the time that viewing a videotape obtained as evidence in a criminal investigation would violate attorney's constitutional rights. Cawood v. Haggard, E.D.Tenn.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 863, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 700, 2005 WL 773946. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Defendant police officials were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to claim that their investigation of § 1983 plaintiff's arrest violated his Fourth Amendment and equal protection rights; even if plaintiff's arrest violated plaintiff's constitutional rights, relevant constitutional standards were not "clearly established" at time of investigation. David v. Village of Oak Lawn, N.D.Ill.1996, 954 F.Supp. 1241. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3864. ---- Taking without compensation, police activities, clearly established right

It was not clearly established in 1989 that state troopers' actions constituted taking under Fifth Amendment, so that troopers were entitled to qualified immunity, where tavern failed to cite any authority holding that establishment of state police sobriety roadblock which momentarily detained motorists on highway near tavern constituted taking of nondetained persons' property. Get Away Club, Inc. v. Coleman, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 969 F.2d 664. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Borough commissioner and chief inspector of city department of buildings were not entitled to qualified immunity from claim by owner of inactive roller coaster that city's demolition thereof violated substantive due process; it was clearly established at time of demolition that exercise of power without any reasonable justification in service of legitimate governmental objective violated due process. Wantanabe Realty Corp. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 315 F.Supp.2d 375, reconsideration denied 2003 WL 21939028. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3865. ---- Training and supervision, police activities, clearly established right

Any law that would require training of deputy sheriffs on how to detain students was not clearly established, such that reasonable person in sheriff's shoes would have known that failure to provide such training constituted deliberate indifference, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis in student's §§ 1983 action seeking to hold sheriff liable for deputy sheriff's deprivation of student's Fourth Amendment rights by handcuffing student following student's alleged making of physical threat toward teacher. Gray ex rel. Alexander v. Bostic, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 458 F.3d 1295. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established that police chief violated police officer's constitutional right to bodily integrity by requiring him to wear his riot helmet during training exercises, rather than a more protective face mask, resulting in an eye injury, and thus police chief was entitled to qualified immunity in officer's §§ 1983 claim that his substantive due process right of bodily integrity was violated. Moore v. Guthrie, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 438 F.3d 1036. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was objectively reasonable for police lieutenant to believe that his conduct in supervising, from police headquarters, officers at scene of suicide intervention did not violate constitutional rights of subject of intervention, and therefore lieutenant was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims that he should have taken various actions to avert subordinates' allegedly unconstitutional conduct during intervention, which ended in subject's death. Ford v. Moore, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 237 F.3d 156. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claims that chief failed to train subordinate officers regarding constitutional limitations of Florida's disorderly conduct statute and regarding proper response to arrestee's handcuff complaints, inasmuch as reasonable person in chief's position would not have known that such failure infringed on constitutional rights. Gold v. City of Miami, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 121 F.3d 1442, rehearing en banc denied 138 F.3d 886, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 165, 525 U.S. 870, 142 L.Ed.2d 135. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known when he failed to train, supervise, and discipline officer regarding use of excessive force after officer allegedly fired warning shots in violation of department policy and after police chief allegedly received other reports of excessive force, and therefore police chief was entitled to qualified immunity in connection with officer's killing of bystander at crime scene, absent any showing that warning shots violated anyone's constitutional rights or that any complaints were made before incident at issue. Otey v. Marshall, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 121 F.3d 1150. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Conduct of police official, who was supervisor of disciplinary affairs bureau, in failing to identify and take any remedial action concerning "problem" police officer who killed a person could, if proven, create supervisory liability, and thus, superintendent was not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action; it was clearly established at time of incident that reasonable police officer, charged with duties that police official bore, would have understood that he could be held constitutionally liable for failing to identify and take remedial action concerning officer with demonstrably dangerous predilections and checkered history of grave disciplinary problems. Diaz v. Martinez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 112 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief should have known that his alleged failure to screen officer was deliberate indifference to Fourteenth Amendment rights of detainees, and thus chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in detainee's § 1983 suit alleging that officer attempted to sexually assault him. Romero v. City of Clanton, M.D.Ala.2002, 220 F.Supp.2d 1313. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established at time of plaintiff's arrest that a police chief would be deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs of pretrial detainee if he failed to instruct or train his officers to hospitalize a pretrial detainee who was under arrest for battery, who was suffering from depression, who had made some suicidal statements, and who may have attempted suicide, but who did not appear delusional, hysterical or disoriented, and thus, police chief was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in a § 1983 action alleging deliberate indifference in violation of due process clause. Houck v. City of Prairie Village, D.Kan.1996, 942 F.Supp. 493, reconsideration denied 950 F.Supp. 312, affirmed 166 F.3d 347. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3866. ---- Travel rights, police activities, clearly established right

State officers were entitled to qualified immunity from Native American truck driver's claim that officials violated his right to hold specific private employment, under the Fourteenth Amendment, by issuing citations against him for nonpayment of license, permit, and use fees which were unenforceable by virtue of treaty with tribe which owned trucks; scope of travel rights under treaty was not clearly established at time the citations were issued. Cree v. Waterbury, E.D.Wash.1994, 873 F.Supp. 404, reversed 78 F.3d 1400, on remand 955 F.Supp. 1229. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officers did not violate detainee's clearly established rights when they allegedly forcibly put him in patrol car, drove him to city limits and left him by side of road just outside city limits, entitling officers to qualified immunity in detainee's civil rights action; right to local, intrastate travel was not clearly established constitutional right. Klock v. Cain, C.D.Cal.1993, 813 F.Supp. 1430. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3867. ---- Extraditions, police activities, clearly established right

Extra-circuit cases finding that fugitives have right to government officials' compliance with formal extradition procedures did not so clearly foreshadow applicable direct authority as to eliminate doubt that noncompliance was unconstitutional, and thus did not deprive police officer of qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging that officer's transport of arrestee across state line without following formal extradition procedures violated arrestee's constitutional rights, where intra-circuit precedent held that fugitives lack such right, though case was nearly 40 years old and was cursory per curiam opinion that relied on reasoning of unpublished district court opinion; where decisions of other courts did not point unmistakably to unconstitutionality of officer's conduct; and where most contrary cases involved distinguishable facts. Barton v. Norrod, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1997, 106 F.3d 1289, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 341, 522 U.S. 934, 139 L.Ed.2d 265. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3868. ---- Malicious prosecutions, police activities, clearly established right

Special agent in Illinois Department of State Police Fraud and Forgery division was entitled to qualified immunity against § 1983 claims brought by insurance broker who had been convicted of theft based on agent's investigation; agent performed his official duties by conducting investigation and could not have known that Illinois Appellate Court would later hold that broker's breach of fiduciary duty could not form basis of criminal complaint. Davis v. Owens, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 973 F.2d 574. Civil Rights 1376(6)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Good-faith qualified immunity defense would not be available to police officer and police chief in civil rights action if they initiated criminal prosecution against plaintiff maliciously or without reasonably concluding that the criminal statutes under which they acted were applicable to plaintiff, since arrest lacking probable cause is violation of clearly established law and law protecting plaintiff from officers' use of official position to launch private vendetta was clearly established and not uncertain; thus it was unnecessary to consider whether defendants took action with malicious intention to cause deprivation of civil rights or other injury, and issue as to their reasonableness and good faith pertained only to their defense on the merits of the claim. Losch v. Borough of Parkesburg, Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1984, 736 F.2d 903. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who allegedly made false statements in police report, which led to arrestee's prosecution in case that subsequently was dismissed for lack of probable cause, were not entitled to qualified immunity to arrestee's claim of malicious prosecution under Colorado law in lawsuit under §§ 1983, since law was clearly established that police officer who made false statements in police report could be held liable in §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action. Barton v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(6)

The law was not settled as to whether an arrestee could bring a §§ 1983 action against law enforcement officers for malicious prosecution premised on a Fourth Amendment violation, and thus, law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim. Bloomquist v. Albee, D.Me.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers accused of malicious prosecution in a § 1983 action are entitled to qualified immunity if other officers of reasonable competence could disagree on the existence of probable cause, and nothing occurred between the arrest and the prosecution to alter this belief. Wilder v. Village of Amityville, E.D.N.Y.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 341, affirmed 111 Fed.Appx. 635, 2004 WL 2381295, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1708, 544 U.S. 949, 161 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from malicious prosecution action on basis of it not being clear that interest asserted by plaintiff was protected by federal statute or constitution or that it was not clear that exception did not permit the complained of act; alleged constitutional violation complained of involved right not to be arrested without probable cause, which was clearly established and was not subject to exception. Golino v. City of New Haven, D.Conn.1991, 761 F.Supp. 962, affirmed 950 F.2d 864, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 3032, 505 U.S. 1221, 120 L.Ed.2d 902. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Issue of whether malicious prosecution charge could be grounded upon constitutional violations was not clearly established, and thus Puerto Rican officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for alleged malicious investigation and prosecution of prison officer for misappropriation of automobile parts from penitentiary's repair shop. Rodriguez-Mateo v. Fuentes-Agostini, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 212, 2003 WL 21243479, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3869. ---- Third parties injured by police actions, police activities, clearly established right

It was not clearly established in June 1989 that conduct of police officer who struck and fatally injured motorist while driving through intersection against light and at high speed without using siren while responding to nonemergency call violated due process rights of motorist, and thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Assuming that sheriff violated constitutional rights of hostage held by gunman, by dismissing city police crew specially trained in hostage negotiations and attempting to secure her release by use of county personnel, actions were not sufficiently clearly established to be wrongful at time made to cause loss of immunity; only conduct which was clearly wrongful at time would have been deliberate indifference to plight of hostage, change of negotiating personnel did not reflect such indifference, and it could not be known that change of personnel would have any effect on whether gunman would kill hostage. Salas v. Carpenter, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 980 F.2d 299. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by bicyclist who sustained injuries when struck by suspected felon during high speed automobile chase; it was not clearly established at time of accident that recklessness could give rise to liability under § 1983 or that police officer could be liable to third parties for injuries caused by suspect. Medina v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1992, 960 F.2d 1493, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Backup police officers' refusal to allow beauty salon customer to reenter salon to remove "the rollers and stuff" from her hair after customer was taken from salon during "drug raid" on the premises did not represent violation of constitutional right that was "clearly established" at time of incident; thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in customers' § 1983 action. James by James v. Sadler, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1990, 909 F.2d 834. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was immune under § 1983 for injury allegedly caused beating victim when co-workers moved victim from parking lot on officer's orders; the officer's conduct was at most grossly negligent, and at time of alleged injury it was not clearly established that gross negligence was sufficient basis for cause of action under § 1983 for violation of due process clause. Tucker v. Callahan, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 867 F.2d 909, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State trooper, who allegedly left passenger of impounded vehicle stranded at night in high-crime area, was not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action where law in 1984 at time of the incident provided that a police officer could be held liable for abandoning passengers of arrested drivers, thereby exposing them to unreasonable danger. Wood v. Ostrander, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1988, 851 F.2d 1212, on rehearing 879 F.2d 583, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 341, 498 U.S. 938, 112 L.Ed.2d 305. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established in August 1992 that conduct of deputy sheriff in instructing bystander, who was civilian dressed in his bathrobe, to subdue suspect with whom deputy was struggling for control of gun by hitting him with flashlight, and after suspect gained possession of gun abandoning bystander by hiding in bushes and taking no steps to protect bystander, shocked the conscience and gave rise to violation of bystander's due process rights, and thus, deputy was not entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought after bystander was fatally shot by suspect. Radecki v. Barela, D.N.M.1996, 945 F.Supp. 226, reversed 146 F.3d 1227, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 869, 525 U.S. 1103, 142 L.Ed.2d 771. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim brought by bystanders allegedly injured when officer fired gun in direction of fleeing suspect; officer acted with discretionary authority in returning fire from suspect when he was unaware of any other persons in the area and officer's conduct did not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory law. Porter v. Jameson, M.D.Ala.1995, 889 F.Supp. 1484. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Shooting victim's Fourteenth Amendment liberty interest in not being put in danger by police officers was sufficiently clear at time of incident complained of so as to deprive officers of qualified immunity in subsequent civil rights suit; officers created dangerous situation by traversing across and around private property, at night, in dangerous neighborhood, without notifying property owners such as victim. Ward v. City of San Jose, N.D.Cal.1990, 737 F.Supp. 1502, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 967 F.2d 280, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Federal and state law enforcement officials were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to Bivens and § 1983 claims asserted by homeowners whose Fourth Amendment rights were violated when officers brought media reporters into homeowners' home to observe and record attempted execution of arrest warrant on homeowners' son in April 1992; it was not unreasonable for police officer to have believed at that time that bringing media observers along during execution of arrest warrant (even in home) was lawful; abrogating Ayeni v. Mottola, 35 F.3d 680; and Berger v. Hanlon, 129 F.3d 505. Wilson v. Layne, U.S.Md.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1692, 526 U.S. 603, 143 L.Ed.2d 818. Civil Rights 1376(6); United States 50.10(3)

Motorist's right to be free from arrest for careless driving under Arkansas law after a bridge, without a weight limit posting, collapsed under motorist's truck, was clearly established, and thus, sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity for his conduct in arresting motorist, in motorist's §§ 1983 unlawful arrest action. Robinson v. White County, AR, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 452 F.3d 706. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity for allegedly carrying out mock arrest of airline employees as part of prank designed by her supervisors, as their actions in making mock arrest without legal justification, if true, were unreasonable under Fourth Amendment and violated clearly established legal rights of which reasonable person would have been aware. Fuerschbach v. Southwest Airlines Co., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 439 F.3d 1197. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers did not violate clearly established law by arresting arrestee for state law offense of obstructing governmental operations after arrestee blocked access to back door of her house and falsely stated that her son was not in the house when police officer attempted to enter to serve two valid arrest warrants for arrestee's son, who had just run into house, and thus, officers had qualified immunity on arrestee's §§1983 claim alleging arrest without probable cause. Ward v. Moore, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 414 F.3d 968. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Animal control officer did not violate dog owner's clearly established rights, for purposes of her qualified immunity defense in resulting civil rights action, when she witnessed deputy sheriff's allegedly illegal arrest of dog owner while they were both responding to complaint about unleashed dogs. Wilson v. Strong, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1998, 156 F.3d 1131. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County investigator was entitled to qualified immunity on claim that he violated Posse Comitatus Act when he allowed military police officer to ride in his vehicle during joint drug investigation and officer shot passenger of truck they had stopped while making arrest; allowing military officer to ride along to investigate possible drug activity was not violation of clearly established law, and county investigator did not willfully use officer, who acted on his own initiative in making arrest. Riley v. Newton, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 94 F.3d 632, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 955, 519 U.S. 1114, 136 L.Ed.2d 842. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputies did not violate any clearly established constitutional right in effecting arrest of jail visitor pursuant to facially valid warrants on bad check charges, even if deputies had at least some reason to believe that statute of limitations had expired at time they executed warrants; warrants were issued upon probable cause to believe that visitor had committed charged offenses, and officers did not have duty to investigate and decide potential viability of limitations defense even though visitor raised issue at time of her arrest. Pickens v. Hollowell, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 59 F.3d 1203. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity shields arresting officers from personal liability for damages in a § 1983 suit insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known, or insofar as it was objectively reasonable for them to believe that their acts did not violate those rights. Brown v. D'Amico, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 35 F.3d 97. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of park rangers and police officer did not violate any constitutional principles that were clearly established under current law, and thus they were entitled to qualified immunity, in connection with removal of intoxicated individual from fairgrounds and release of individual in parking lot near police station, after which he was struck and killed by automobile; officers were trying to control behavior of crowd of more than 600,000 fairgoers, individual's conduct was not so threatening that it required he be jailed for protection of others, and officers may have placed him in safer position than that in which they found him. Sellers By and Through Sellers v. Baer, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 28 F.3d 895, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 739, 513 U.S. 1084, 130 L.Ed.2d 641. Civil Rights 1376(6); United States 50.10(1)

Police chief, supervisor of canine unit, and officers who trained canine were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by arrestee who was bitten by dog during arrest where at time of dog's assault on arrestee, there was no clearly established law prohibiting use of dogs to make arrests. Chew v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1432, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1097, 513 U.S. 1148, 130 L.Ed.2d 1065. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer in arresting officer's position could reasonably have believed that there was probable cause to make arrest based on observation of growing marijuana plants on arrestee's property, entitling arresting officer to qualified immunity in arrestee's civil rights action; although arresting officer did not believe that he had probable cause to arrest and had been informed that arrestee had not planted marijuana, he had reason to believe that arrestee knew about marijuana patches on his property, that someone had been harvesting the marijuana, and that arrestee wanted to conceal marijuana plants. Bridgewater v. Caples, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1994, 23 F.3d 1447. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were entitled to qualified immunity for making arrest of plaintiff; officers heard plaintiff yelling obscenity from porch some 100 yards away, and had reasonable suspicion that plaintiff had committed offense of disorderly conduct and arguably had probable cause to make arrest when plaintiff fled. Kelly v. Bender, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1994, 23 F.3d 1328. Civil Rights 1376(6); False Imprisonment 13

State troopers violated no clearly established federal or state standards in arresting driver for making illegal lane change on interstate highway, and thus, troopers enjoyed qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's § 1983 actions, even though troopers made arrest based on radio report by trooper who saw traffic violation. Topp v. Wolkowski, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1993, 994 F.2d 45. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time police officers took apartment tenant in for emergency psychiatric evaluation in 1987, law regarding seizures in mental health seizure context was not so clear that officers could be denied qualified immunity; although some cases existed regarding seizures in such context, those cases could not have given officers any clear indication that their conduct was unlawful because none of circumstances in those cases resembled situation confronting officers. Gooden v. Howard County, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1992, 954 F.2d 960. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers who arrested members of Indian tribe for unlawful gathering of shellfish were entitled to qualified immunity in members' civil rights action, where it was not clearly established under various treaties or state and federal law that members of tribe had right to take shellfish in nonreservation areas at their usual and accustomed fishing places. Romero v. Kitsap County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 931 F.2d 624.

Arresting officers, called to property by person in possession, had obvious factual evidence that property owners trespassed in their attempt to recover possession and, bolstered by sheriff's instruction to arrest owners, were following clearly established statutory and constitutional law when they arrested owners and inventoried contents of their truck, and, thus, sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from owners' § 1983 action since he merely verified the appropriate action under Florida law by instructing officers to arrest owners; officers had probable cause to arrest when they arrived on scene so that owners' belief concerning legality of their entry onto property was irrelevant to whether sheriff was entitled to immunity. Hutton v. Strickland, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 919 F.2d 1531 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

Commonwealth police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity for arresting attorney for misdemeanor offense not occurring in officer's presence; officer could not turn attorney's failure to cooperate with investigation into justification for arrest, suspect's right not to be arrested because of refusal to answer officer's questions was clearly established, and reasonable law enforcement officer would have believed that arresting attorney violated that right. Rodriguez v. Comas, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 888 F.2d 899, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In § 1983 action brought by police chief against state and local law enforcement officials alleging that he was arrested for first-degree murder of another police officer without probable cause, even assuming that police chief had raised factual issue with respect to probable cause issue, defendants were entitled to qualified immunity, as they were performing discretionary functions and did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of police chief in connection with investigation; once police officers had discovered sufficient facts to establish probable cause that police chief murdered subordinate officer, they had no constitutional obligation to conduct any further investigation in hopes of uncovering potentially exculpatory evidence. Schertz v. Waupaca County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1989, 875 F.2d 578. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State trooper was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action alleging that trooper's arrest of plaintiff violated Fourth Amendment; trooper arrested plaintiff in area of his driveway, there was substantial authority for proposition that area such as driveways that are reasonably accessible to visitors are not entitled to the same degree of Fourth Amendment protection as are interiors of defendants' houses, and there was strong likelihood that reasonable person in trooper's position would have believed that he had implied consent from plaintiff to be on his property at time of arrest. Krause v. Penny, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 837 F.2d 595. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers did not violate clearly established federal rule by arresting plaintiff on basis of teletype from Kentucky State Police requesting that plaintiff be picked up because he possessed stolen firearms, even though teletype did not recite existence of felony warrant, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by plaintiff. Donta v. Hooper, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 774 F.2d 716, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 3261, 483 U.S. 1019, 97 L.Ed.2d 760. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time police allegedly injured arrestee by handcuffing her behind-her-back in mid-2000, it was clearly established, for purposes of qualified immunity, that when a non-threatening, non-flight-risk, cooperating arrestee for a minor crime tells the police she suffers from an injury that would be exacerbated by handcuffing her arms behind her back, the arrestee has a right to be handcuffed with her arms in front of her even if the injury is not visible. Aceto v. Kachajian, D.Mass.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 121. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers who arrested plaintiff in his home pursuant to a capias were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action alleging unreasonable search and seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment; at time of arrest it was not clearly established that such a home arrest violated the arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights, particularly given that the capias was signed by a court clerk and apparently issued by a Judge. Milner v. Duncklee, D.Conn.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 360. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not violate any clearly established constitutional right of which a reasonable person would have known in arresting reporter who was with a group of protesters, and was therefore entitled to qualified immunity; in effectuating the arrest, officer properly relied on information provided by his fellow officers that reporter was with a group of individuals which matched description of people who were throwing rocks. Delgado v. Miami-Dade County, S.D.Fla.2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 1234. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In light of the established state of the law at the time in question, defendant officers had notice that their alleged conduct in arresting plaintiff under loitering statute without probable cause and in using excessive force to effectuate that arrest was unconstitutional, and officers were not entitled to summary judgment on plaintiff's Fourth Amendment claims on qualified immunity grounds since there were triable issues of fact as to whether the officers had probable cause to arrest plaintiff and whether the force used to arrest plaintiff was unreasonable. Phillips v.

City of Fairfield, E.D.Cal.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1101, reconsideration denied 2006 WL 335472. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fourth Amendment violation in execution of misdemeanor arrest warrant at arrestee's home in the middle of the night without exigent circumstances justifying nighttime execution of warrant was not so patently obvious as to eliminate requirement of Supreme Court or Court of Appeals precedent in order to clearly establish the constitutional violation for purposes of defeating claim of qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action against arresting officer. Cipes v. Graham, D.Conn.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 34. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer called to scene of vehicular accident had qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim of false arrest for reckless driving, brought by driver of pickup truck struck in rear by tractor trailer; driver did not have clearly established constitutional right to not be arrested under circumstances of case, which involved submission of written versions of accident by both drivers and officer's acceptance of tractor trailer driver's version, under which pickup truck driver was reckless. Christman v. Kick, D.Conn.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 82. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In the absence of any dispersal order to the group of people, including protestors, gathered in a park, and an opportunity for them to disperse, police official's belief that some of the group had broken laws earlier did not provide probable cause for the mass arrest of the entire group, and thus arrests violated clearly established law and was not objectively reasonable, such that official was not entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action alleging that the arrests, allegedly for violating an order to disperse, violated the First and Fourth Amendments. Barham v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 48, affirmed in part 434 F.3d 565, 369 U.S.App.D.C. 146. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity applied to shield police officers from § 1983 liability based on their conduct in detaining restaurant patron because her two companions had been identified by restaurant's assistant manager as possible bank robbers and based on officers' use of felony take-down procedures, including weapons pat-down, in detaining companions, given absence of clearly established law precluding officers from assuming that persons suspected of being bank robbers would be armed and dangerous. Eisnnicher v. Bob Evans Farms Restaurant, S.D.Ohio 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 936. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Constitutional right of fleeing suspect not to be subjected to deadly force in absence of threatening behavior was clearly established in April, 2001, and thus city police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for suspect's shooting death, despite officer's contentions that shooting was accidental or inadvertent, and that suspect fled at night through neighborhood with highest crime in city; it was not clear that officer had reasonable belief that suspect was armed or dangerous, officer allegedly pursued suspect with gun out and hand on trigger, in violation of department policy, suspect did not pose obvious danger to public or to officer, and department allegedly had unwritten policy and practice of heavy-handed abusive enforcement against African-Americans. Leisure v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 848. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers, responding to night time call of firearm discharges in high crime area, were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability to suspect who they shot after he refused to drop handgun; reasonable officers could have found probable cause to believe that suspect presented serious threat of personal harm at time officers fired their weapons, and thus there was no Fourth Amendment violation. Cunningham v. Hamilton, E.D.Va.2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 457, affirmed 84 Fed.Appx. 357, 2004 WL 48857, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 68, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 25. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law regarding probable cause was clearly established at time that police officer arrested television cameraman, on officer's assertion of qualified immunity to cameraman's § 1983 and Florida law arrest without probable cause claims; although the facts of underlying action were unique and specific case law that would have put officer on notice of the legal constraints of her action was lacking, officer's conduct of arresting cameraman who had approached police officer in cleared street, was instructed to return to sidewalk, and was complying with instruction, was obviously illegal. Durruthy v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 1291, reversed 351 F.3d 1080, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 97 Fed.Appx. 908, 2004 WL 385594, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 45, 543 U.S. 917, 160 L.Ed.2d 201. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Claimant's right to be free from arrest for charge of resisting arrest, where no arrest was attempted in the first instance, was clearly established, and therefore, officer who issued citation for resisting arrest after issuing citations for disorderly conduct and obstructing traffic was not entitled to qualified immunity from claimant's § 1983 action alleging violation of his Fourth Amendment rights. Hummel v. City of Carlisle, S.D.Ohio 2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 839 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' arrest of plaintiff for refusing to stop using profanity directed against the officers, in a situation in which a suspected explosive device was present, did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known, and therefore officers were entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim based on Fourth Amendment violation; plaintiff's statements would support a belief by a reasonable police officer that he had probable cause to arrest her for violation of Pennsylvania disorderly conduct statute. Russoli v. Salisbury Tp., E.D.Pa.2000, 126 F.Supp.2d 821. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim that his constitutional rights were violated by officer's failure to comply with lawful extradition procedures; it was clearly established at time that arrestee was brought across state lines by officer that arrestee had constitutional right to have governmental officials comply with extradition procedures, that agents of demanding state could be held liable for depriving arrestee of extradition rights, and that waiver of extradition rights must be knowing and voluntary. Buchanan v. City of Kenosha, E.D.Wis.2000, 90 F.Supp.2d 1008. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Any exemption that armored car operators had from criminal liability for suspected unlawful use of weapons did not deprive state troopers of qualified immunity from civil rights liability for allegedly unlawful arrest and search; operators' right not to be searched or arrested was not so clearly established that any law enforcement officer would have know of it at time of arrest. McGarvey v. Biswell, C.D.Ill.1998, 993 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of qualified immunity, it was clearly established as of suspect's arrest in 1993 that police must base probable cause determinations on reasonably trustworthy information and, if necessary, conduct thorough investigation to find it. Spiegel v. Cortese, N.D.Ill.1997, 966 F.Supp. 684. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right to be free from arrest without probable cause is clearly established for purposes of qualified immunity. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's § 1983 claim against arresting officer in his official capacity alleging that arrest violated Fourth Amendment, which was essentially claim against city, was precluded as matter of law where officer did not violate arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Civil rights plaintiff's right not to be arrested for violation of provision of disorderly conduct statute prohibiting use of "obscene gesture" when plaintiff gestured toward police officer with his hand, middle finger extended was not clearly established at time of incident and, thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit; reasonable officials could have differed as to whether court opinion purporting to define "obscene" in manner consistent with Supreme Court authority interpreting First Amendment did so in valid manner. Brockway v. Shepherd, M.D.Pa.1996, 942 F.Supp. 1012. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity shields arresting officer from § 1983 civil rights suit if reasonable officer could have believed arrest to be lawful, in light of clearly established law and information arresting officers possessed. Kumar v. Chicago Housing Authority, N.D.Ill.1994, 862 F.Supp. 213. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from detainee's civil rights claim that his seizure and eight-hour detention violated Fourth Amendment insofar as officers maintained that detention was based on good faith suspicion; it was clearly established at relevant time that transportation of suspect to, and prolonged detention at, station was indistinguishable from arrest and required probable cause. Craig v. St. Martin Parish Sheriff, W.D.La.1994, 861 F.Supp. 1290. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Given validity of arrest warrant, there was probable cause and absence of malice entitling officers to qualified immunity as to arrestee's § 1983 claim. Parham v. Suppa, S.D.N.Y.1994, 844 F.Supp. 148. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In order for police officer to establish right to qualified immunity from civil rights action, officer had to show it was not clear at time of arrest that interest asserted by arrestee was protected, that it was not clear at time of arrest that exception did not permit arrest or that it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that arrest did not violate arrestee's rights. Roberts by Roberts v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1990, 753 F.Supp. 480. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3871. ---- Applications for arrest warrants, police activities, clearly established right

State investigator was protected by qualified immunity from § 1983 suit for false arrest and malicious prosecution based on claim that his affidavit in support of arrest warrant omitted information alleged to undermine probable cause, notwithstanding that omitted information had previously been considered by Connecticut investigatory grand jury which made finding of probable cause; right to be free from arrest under such circumstances was not clearly established when officer applied for arrest warrant. Brown v. D'Amico, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 35 F.3d 97. Civil Rights 1376(6)

If police officer submits affidavit in support of arrest warrant containing statements he knows to be false or would know to be false if he had not recklessly disregarded truth, officer failed to observe right that was clearly established, and he would not be entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by arrestee based on unreasonable seizure claim. Lippay v. Christos, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1490. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law was clearly established at time of arrest in November of 1984 that omission of material information from an arrest affidavit violated the Fourth Amendment, and officer making a material omission could not claim qualified immunity from liability for violation of civil rights. Salmon v. Schwarz, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1991, 948 F.2d 1131. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity as to arrestee's claim that he was deprived of due process when he was arrested in his home pursuant to a capias, even though the capias was not a valid arrest warrant since it was unsupported by a finding of probable cause; at time of arrest it was not clearly established that such a home arrest violated the arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights. Milner v. Duncklee, D.Conn.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 360. Civil Rights 1376(6)

An officer who relies in good faith upon a warrant issued by a neutral and detached magistrate upon a finding of probable cause is presumptively shielded from personal liability for damages; an officer loses that qualified immunity, however, when he knows, or has reason to know, that he has materially misled a magistrate on the basis for a finding of probable cause. Spafford v. Romanowsky, S.D.N.Y.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 40. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Affiant clearly violated arrestees' rights, and was not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability, after she recklessly or intentionally submitted probable cause statement based on informant's tip, either knowing of omitted statements or with reckless disregard for truth about informant's reliability; affiant knew that informant was sole source of information in affidavit and of problems with informant's reliability, yet affidavit gave no indication of those problems. Haywood v. Nye, D.Utah 1998, 999 F.Supp. 1451. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) task force agents were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on driver's Bivens claims for constitutional rights violation by federal officers, alleging that agents illegally seized cash from vehicle; when vehicle was stopped, agents knew that search warrant authorizing search of vehicle had been issued and, under the circumstances, reasonable officer would have believed that his reliance upon facially valid search warrant obtained by another officer was lawful. Pou v. U.S. Drug Enforcement Admin., S.D.N.Y.1996, 923 F.Supp. 573, affirmed 107 F.3d 3. United States 50.10(3)

3872. ---- Warrantless arrests, police activities, clearly established right

Warrantless arrest of suspected misdemeanant, where misdemeanor did not occur in officers' presence, did not violate clearly established federal law, and thus, arresting officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's § 1983 action. Vargas-Badillo v. Diaz-Torres, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 114 F.3d 3. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police detective's warrantless arrest and detention of homeless man pending his testimony in murder prosecution violated homeless man's civil rights, detective was entitled to qualified immunity in homeless man's § 1983 action because his conduct did not violate clearly established Tennessee law. White by Swafford v. Gerbitz, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 892 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by arrestee who claimed that the officers violated his Fourth Amendment rights when they arrested him in his home without a warrant, since the officers acted in accordance with state law and since, at time of the arrest in 1979, there was no "clearly established" law that warrantless entry into a suspect's home to make routine felony arrest violated the Fourth Amendment. Schlothauer v. Robinson, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1985, 757 F.2d 196. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officer lacked probable cause to make warrantless arrest of motorist for interference with official acts, officer's arrest of motorist did not violate motorist's clearly established constitutional rights, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in motorist's §§ 1983 action; in light of the lack of detailed judicial guidance of terms used in statute setting forth the offense, a reasonable officer could have believed that motorist's conduct, in entering his truck in violation of officer's instructions and refusing to come out when told to do so, constituted interference with official acts. Davis v. City of Albia, S.D.Iowa 2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 692. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer was qualifiedly immune from §§ 1983 claim arising from warrantless arrest of suspect in his residence, inasmuch as it would not be clear to reasonable officer that warrantless arrest was unlawful, given that suspect verbally provoked and repeatedly shoved police officer, that other people at scene seemed to be afraid of suspect, that suspect had strong odor of alcohol, and that officers did not know that suspect lived at residence. Davis v. Township of Paulsboro, D.N.J.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 835. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had qualified immunity from claim of malicious prosecution, under §§ 1983 action brought by employee who was alleged to have participated with two others in robbery of restaurant, assuming, contrary to precedent, that malicious prosecution was violation of Fourth Amendment rights, so as to satisfy §§ 1983 requirement of federal constitutional or statutory violation; right was not clearly established. Sheppard v. Aloisi, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 478. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer was entitled to qualified immunity from challenging constitutionality of arrest absent state arrest warrant; law was not clearly established at time of arrest that officer had to secure Idaho warrant before arresting suspect wanted on felony charges in Florida. Elder v. Holloway, D.Idaho 1995, 874 F.Supp. 278. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit for illegal arrest, where at time officers handcuffed suspect and took him into custody, it was clearly established that such conduct constituted arrest and not merely Terry type detention, and officers could not have reasonably believed that action did not constitute arrest requiring probable cause. Desales v. Woo, N.D.Cal.1994, 860 F.Supp. 1436. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Trooper who made warrantless arrest for driving while intoxicated did not violate clearly established constitutional right of driver and was entitled to qualified immunity, where trooper had probable cause to arrest after he observed driver's failure to dim her headlights, failure to notice and respond to flashing red and green lights, and her loud and slurred speech, and smelled alcohol on her breath. Holton v. Mohon, N.D.Tex.1987, 684 F.Supp. 1407. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3873. ---- Probable cause determinations, police activities, clearly established right

Viewing the evidence in light most favorable to arrestee, police officer violated arrestee's clearly established right to be free from arrest without probable cause by arresting him for violating Cleveland disorderly conduct ordinance prohibiting engaging in conduct likely to be offensive or cause inconvenience, annoyance, or alarm in a public place, and thus, officer was not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim against him for making arrest without probable cause; arrestee did not use profane language in heckling baseball players at ballpark, his behavior was not inappropriately loud or offensive, almost everyone in the stands was shouting, ballpark encouraged fans to cheer and make noise, and no one complained about arrestee's behavior. Swiecicki v. Delgado, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 463 F.3d 489.

It was clearly established at the time of suspect's arrest that a law enforcement officer could not affect a mental health seizure without probable cause, and thus, given that officers did not have probable cause, qualified immunity did not shield officers from civil liability in §§ 1983 action brought by suspect alleging that his seizure violated his Fourth Amendment rights. Fisher v. Harden, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 398 F.3d 837, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 828, 163 L.Ed.2d 706, on remand 2006 WL 1697538. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively unreasonable for police officers to believe that there was probable cause to arrest husband for violating a domestic protection order whose contents they had not ascertained, and thus, they violated clearly established law by relying on wife's unsubstantiated claim that husband violated the order, and were not entitled to qualified immunity from husband's Fourth Amendment false arrest claim; officers confirmed with dispatcher that a protection order against husband had been issued and served, but made no attempt to ascertain its terms from authorized personnel or by reading readily available document, and therefore had no way to know whether it was violated. Beier v. City of Lewiston, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2004, 354 F.3d 1058. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officers would not have known that, under clearly established law, arrest of arrestee for violation of Illinois Deceptive Practices Act would have been unlawful for lack of probable cause, and officers were thus entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's resulting § 1983 action for false arrest; officers had obtained information indicating that check given to travel agency by arrestee for payment of airline tickets had been returned unpaid, and officers were not required to accept defenses asserted by arrestee at time of his arrest. Marks v. Carmody, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 234 F.3d 1006, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 2243, 533 U.S. 903, 150 L.Ed.2d 232. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sexual assault victim's failure to identify arrestee as her attacker in detective's presence did not preclude finding that detective's arrest of arrestee comported with clearly established law, for purpose of detective's assertion of qualified immunity in arrestee's resulting § 1983 claim alleging lack of probable cause for arrest. Tangwall v. Stuckey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1998, 135 F.3d 510. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police detective's failure to present all of the facts to magistrate judge so that judge could make a neutral and independent determination of probable cause supporting issuance of arrest warrant violated clearly established law, and, thus, detective was not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's action under §§ 1983, alleging that her Fourth Amendment right to be free from arrest without probable cause was violated, where reasonably trained police officer would have known that a bare-bones, conclusory affidavit did not establish probable cause, and that additional information was required to establish probable cause. Butts v. City of Bowling Green, W.D.Ky.2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 532, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 2099805. Civil Rights 1375

Police officer's arrest of complainant for whose protection temporary restraining order (TRO) was issued did not violate any clearly established law, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in complainant's § 1983 false arrest suit, even if there was no clear term in TRO restraining complainant, where officer examined TRO, interpreted it to provide that either party could violate it, and believed that complainant had falsely reported violation of TRO. Byford v. Stephens, S.D.Fla.2003, 299 F.Supp.2d 1253. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In analyzing whether arresting officer is entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that arrest was without probable cause, issue is whether officer violated clearly established law in making arrests based on the objective factors that gave rise to his probable-cause determination and not whether arrestees' actions actually constituted crime. Hall v. Stewart, S.D.Fla.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers accused of false arrest in a § 1983 action are protected by a qualified immunity if other officers of reasonable competence could disagree on the existence of probable cause. Wilder v. Village of Amityville, E.D.N.Y.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 341, affirmed 111 Fed.Appx. 635, 2004 WL 2381295, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1708, 544 U.S. 949, 161 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right of officer in county sheriff's department not to be charged and arraigned for crime without probable cause was clearly established constitutional right of which objectively reasonable officers should have known, for purposes of determining county defendant's qualified immunity in officer's § 1983 action. Ahlers v. Schebil, E.D.Mich.1997, 966 F.Supp. 518. Civil Rights 1376(4)

At time of her warrantless arrest and subsequent 20-hour detention in township jail, arrestee's constitutional right to have probable cause determination as soon as magistrate was available was clearly established, and therefore, if it was found that officers detained arrestee for purposes of further investigation or to "cool down" arrestee's situation with victim despite fact that magistrate was available, detaining officers would not be entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim that her detainment violated her Fourth Amendment rights. Williams v. Van Buren Tp., E.D.Mich.1996, 925 F.Supp. 1231. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police officer who entered a home "to make sure everything was okay" while responding to a complaint and knowing of recent disturbances was entitled to qualified immunity on the home resident's claim that the warrantless entry violated her Fourth Amendment rights; the resident failed to show that the law placed the officer on notice that his conduct was unlawful. Burr v. Hasbrouck Heights Police Dept., C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 799, 2005 WL 1153868, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 651, 163 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3874. ---- False arrests and imprisonments, police activities, clearly established right

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity, in §§ 1983 action alleging they committed false arrest and false imprisonment when they arrested plaintiff in the face of unambiguous evidence that their warrant was unenforceable; jury could find the officers' actions, of ignoring documentary evidence that the warrant had been previously executed, objectively unreasonable and a violation of plaintiff's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights. Pena-Borrero v. Estremeda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 365 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrest of civil rights plaintiff who was apparently intoxicated and hitting his head against building did not violate clearly established rights of which reasonable person would have known and therefore, police officers were entitled to qualified immunity on plaintiff's false arrest claim brought under § 1983. Jones v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 26 F.3d 727, certiorari granted 115 S.Ct. 713, 513 U.S. 1071, 130 L.Ed.2d 621, affirmed 115 S.Ct. 2151, 515 U.S. 304, 132 L.Ed.2d 238. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff's deputy was not entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action alleging that deputy violated her due process rights by detaining her on basis of misidentification as fugitive; arrestee had clearly established right against false imprisonment without due process at time of arrest, and reasonable officer would have attempted to obtain information from arrestee for purposes of filling out arrest report, rather than copying data from computer printout concerning fugitive, and would have been unlikely, in face of arrestee assertions of mistaken identity, to sign affidavit swearing to belief that arrestee was fugitive without taking any steps to verify that belief. Cannon v. Macon County, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1993, 1 F.3d 1558, modified on rehearing 15 F.3d 1022. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's possession of facially valid arrest warrant at time he made arrest did not give officer qualified immunity from liability and civil rights action for false arrest where officer knew that warrant was not supported by probable cause; at time officer executed warrant, reasonable officer would have known that Fourth Amendment forbade execution of facially valid arrest warrant that was not supported by probable cause. Juriss v. McGowan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 957 F.2d 345. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Bus driver had good faith and reasonable belief that passenger's spitting in face of driver and uttering racial epithet constituted commission of crime, and therefore driver was justified in detaining passenger, such that she could not maintain action for violation of federal civil rights statute, in light of determination that driver did not violate clearly established right of passenger. Saidi v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, D.D.C.1996, 928 F.Supp. 21. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Alleged conduct of clerk of circuit court and county sheriff in failing to correct deficient computer systems listing outstanding arrest warrants, despite their knowledge that hundreds of people were being arrested on invalid warrants as result of deficient systems, violated arrestee's clearly established right to be free from unlawful arrest, and therefore, if alleged conduct was proven, clerk and sheriff would not be entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim against such officers in their individual capacities for violation of his constitutional rights in connection with his unlawful arrest pursuant to invalid warrant. McMurry v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1082. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(8)

Arresting officers were entitled to qualified immunity from claim of false arrest under civil rights deprivation statute, with respect to arrest for disorderly conduct arising from arrestee's attempts to disrupt private luncheon featuring Vice-President and Governor of Arkansas; any reasonable officer could have believed arrest to be lawful, in light of clearly established law and information arresting officers possessed. McIntosh v. White, E.D.Ark.1987, 676 F.Supp. 912, affirmed 856 F.2d 1185. Civil Rights 1376(6)

District court's alleged failure to conduct full analysis in determination of whether city police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for damages sought by arrestee under §§ 1983 did not amount to reversible error; although it might have been helpful for court to have been more explicit in determining that officers' conduct violated the arrestee's constitutional rights and that such rights were clearly established at the time of their alleged violation, the court's denial of officers' summary judgment motion grounded on immunity was based on conclusion in arrestee's favor as to both the existence of a right and the fact that it was clearly established at the time. Aczel v. Labonia, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 17, 2004 WL 287164, Unreported. Federal Courts 914

3875. ---- Protective custody, police activities, clearly established right

Law was not clearly established in 2001 that Fourth Amendment barred law enforcement officials from seizing apparently intoxicated individual in their role as community caretakers or from restraining detainee during medical procedure being conducted for non-investigatory purposes, and thus deputy sheriffs were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in detainee's §§ 1983 suit alleging that his seizure and detention violated Fourth Amendment, where individual was walking along rural road in winter, and was not wearing appropriate winter clothing. Tinius v. Carroll County Sheriff Dept., N.D.Iowa 2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 1064. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Issue as to whether placing person in protective custody for more than 12 hours constituted unreasonable seizure in violation of Fourth Amendment was one of first impression, and thus was not clearly established, as would preclude police officers from claiming qualified immunity in detainee's § 1983 suit against officers. Ringuette v. City of Fall River, D.Mass.1995, 906 F.Supp. 55. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3876. ---- Restraints, police activities, clearly established right

Police officers who hog-tied arrestee, causing his death, had fair and clear warning that such conduct was excessive force in violation of arrestee's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights, precluding qualified immunity from § 1983 claim by arrestee's representative, despite lack of fact-specific precedent involving hog-tie restraints; officers knew that arrestee had a head wound and had been sprayed with pepper spray, arrestee was compliant at the time of restraint, and existing case law did establish that use of force after suspect is compliant is unconstitutional. Garrett v. Unified Government of Athens-Clarke County, M.D.Ga.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 1262, reversed in part 378 F.3d 1274. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if arresting officer violated arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights by applying handcuffs with excessive tightness and delaying loosening of the handcuffs for ten minutes after arrestee complained about pain caused by the handcuffs, a reasonable officer would not consider the officer's actions in the situation to be unlawful, and thus, arrestee's rights were not clearly established, and the officer was entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights. Kopec v. Tate, E.D.Pa.2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 619, reversed and remanded 361 F.3d 772, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 453, 543 U.S. 956, 160 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law regarding handcuffing of police detainees and placing of detainees in squad cars was not settled, so that a reasonable officer in position of officers who handcuffed detainee and put him in back of squad car following traffic stop would have clearly known that such measures violated detainee's Fourth Amendment rights, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in detainee's §§ 1983 action alleging Fourth Amendment violations; neither Supreme Court nor Court of Appeals had addressed a case with closely parallel facts. Woodlen v. Jimenez, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 2006 WL 772894, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3877. ---- Stops, police activities, clearly established right

Fourth Amendment right of elementary school student that was violated by deputy sheriff who, while serving as school resource officer (SRO), detained and handcuffed student after she allegedly acted in disrespectful manner and threatened teacher during physical education class was clearly established, and thus deputy was not entitled to qualified immunity in student's resulting §§ 1983 action; even if there was no factually similar pre-existing caselaw to put deputy on notice this his conduct was objectively unreasonable, handcuffing of compliant nine-year-old girl, who posed no safety concerns, for sole purpose of punishing her was obvious violation of her Fourth Amendment rights. Gray ex rel. Alexander v. Bostic, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 458 F.3d 1295.

It was not clearly established in November 1997 that actions of officer of New York Department of Environmental Conservation in stopping vehicles, and making a brief detention and inquiry of vehicle occupants in order to perform deer tag and weapon safety checks during hunting season, were unreasonable and constituted an impermissible seizure in violation of Fourth Amendment, and thus, officer making stop was protected by qualified immunity in § 1983 action in which hunter who had been stopped alleged that his rights had been violated. Mollica v. Volker, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 229 F.3d 366. Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State trooper was not required to use least intrusive means available to verify his suspicions that plaintiff motorist's temporary license registration was altered, and thus, trooper was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action alleging that his continued detention of motorist violated clearly established law governing scope of detention for traffic violation because trooper first went to passenger side of vehicle and asked for driver's license and identification instead of immediately checking registration; trooper's actions were only minimally more intrusive than stop itself and were justified by his concern for his own safety. Foote v. Spiegel, C.A.10 (Utah) 1997, 118 F.3d 1416, on remand 995 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of officers in ordering suspects who had been stopped from automobile at gunpoint were reasonable under clearly established law, and officers were entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by suspects, where officers had reasonable particularized suspicion to stop vehicle as suspects and automobile met general description given by witnesses of robbery and officers had information that suspects had fired on witness and were armed and dangerous. Alexander v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 64 F.3d 1315. Arrest 63.5(7); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity against civil rights claim in connection with detaining individual without reasonable suspicion; officers offered no reason why they would believe that citizens' Fourth Amendment rights were somehow diminished in airports and, in any event, law concerning airport stops of suspected drug couriers was well developed by the time the events leading to the present suit took place. Morgan v. Woessner, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 997 F.2d 1244, certiorari dismissed 114 S.Ct. 671, 510 U.S. 1033, 126 L.Ed.2d 640. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State highway patrol officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in federal civil rights suit seeking damages based on his stopping a truck without a warrant where officer did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional right by stopping truck to determine whether it was overweight based upon his observation of its squatty tires. Brierley v. Schoenfeld, C.A.10 (Utah) 1986, 781 F.2d 838. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right of robbery suspects' companion not to be detained any longer than necessary for police officers to secure scene of investigatory detention of suspects was clearly established, and therefore qualified immunity did not apply to preclude officers' § 1983 liability to companion on claim that length of her detention was unreasonable under Fourth Amendment. Eisnnicher v. Bob Evans Farms Restaurant, S.D.Ohio 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 936. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for initial Terry stop of detainee suspected of carrying a gun; it was unclear at time of stop that anonymous tip that detainee was carrying a gun, without more, was insufficient to justify stop. Brown v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 962. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' conduct in performing field sobriety test on side of road during lawful traffic stop did not violate clearly established constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim brought by estate of detainee, who was struck by speeding vehicle and killed while performing field sobriety tests during traffic stop. Estate of George ex rel. George v. Michigan, E.D.Mich.2001, 136 F.Supp.2d 695, affirmed 63 Fed.Appx. 208, 2003 WL 1949584. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers' stop and search of arrestee did not violate clearly established constitutional law, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to arrestee's § 1983 Fourth Amendment claim; officers detained arrestee pursuant to anonymous tip that was relayed from police in another city, tip predicted future behavior, and arrestee matched tip's description of drug courier. Ferguson v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1997, 969 F.Supp. 674, affirmed 141 F.3d 1189. Civil Rights 1376(6) computer check after traffic stop was clearly established at time of traffic stop, for purposes of determining whether officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Foote v. Spiegel, D.Utah 1995, 903 F.Supp. 1463, affirmed in part, reversed in part, dismissed in part 118 F.3d 1416, on remand 995 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's conduct in preventing debtor's employee from following wrecker during repossession of wrecker did not violate any clearly established constitutional right of debtor, so that officer was entitled to qualified immunity in debtor's § 1983 action; officer was present at repossession on "civil standby" in order to keep peace, and officer merely stopped employee and requested his driver's license. Haverstick Enterprises, Inc. v. Financial Federal Credit, Inc., E.D.Mich.1992, 803 F.Supp. 1251, affirmed 32 F.3d 989. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's decision to stop truck based on tip by informant, who had provided information in the past, that truck was being used to transfer drugs and based on officer's investigation that truck owner was known to be trafficking in drugs did not violate clearly established precedent; therefore, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in passenger's § 1983 action. Timberlake by Timberlake v. Benton, M.D.Tenn.1992, 786 F.Supp. 676. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police officers, who allegedly stopped vehicle because occupants were not wearing seatbelts, were not entitled to qualified immunity from claims by passenger that seizure violated the Fourth Amendment; it was clearly established, under Pennsylvania law, that vehicle occupants' failure to wear seatbelts did not provide probable cause for traffic stop, police department knew law, and department had policy consistent with law. Stewart v. Trask, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21500018, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3878. ---- Roadblocks, police activities, clearly established right

Police officer who backed his squad car into path of fleeing motorcycle was entitled to qualified immunity from damages for violating motorcyclist's right to be free from unreasonable seizures; there was no clear authority at time of incident that intentional use of deadman roadblock was seizure. Donovan v. City of Milwaukee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 17 F.3d 944. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right of motorist to be free from unreasonable seizure involving roadblock was clearly established in 1994 when motorist collided with vehicle at roadblock, for purposes of determining whether state troopers were qualifiedly immune from § 1983 action arising from roadblock; Supreme Court had established right of fleeing suspect to be free from unreasonable seizure in form of roadblock designed to kill him. Seekamp v. Michaud, D.Me.1996, 936 F.Supp. 23, affirmed 109 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3879. ---- Excessive use of force, police activities, clearly established right

It was not clearly established in particularized sense that police officer violated Fourth Amendment's deadly-force standards by shooting disturbed suspect who was subject to felony no-bail warrant and who fled from officer in vehicle, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in suspect's §§ 1983 excessive-force action against officer; persons in immediate area were at risk from flight, and suspect had demonstrated that he would do almost anything to avoid capture, since he started and accelerated vehicle even after officer had ordered him from it at gunpoint, had broken driver's-side window, and had struck suspect in head with weapon. Brosseau v. Haugen, U.S.2004, 125 S.Ct. 596, 543 U.S. 194, 160 L.Ed.2d 583, on remand 396 F.3d 1036. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 claim for their use of excessive force in employing a flashbang device to force shooting suspect from his home when they allegedly knew that the home contained accelerants, where the law was not clear that such conduct would violate suspect's rights. Bing ex rel. Bing v. City of Whitehall, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 456 F.3d 555. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

The right to be free from excessive force during an investigative detention was clearly established for qualified immunity purposes at the time that law enforcement officers made seizure. Cortez v. McCauley, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 438 F.3d 980. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers violated suspect's clearly established Fourth Amendment right to be free from excessive force where they shot an unarmed suspect from behind as he retreated from the scene of an apparent arson; thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in suspect's civil rights action. Whitfield v. Melendez-Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 431 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State police officers were qualifiedly immune from §§ 1983 claims that they used excessive force in deciding to activate Pennsylvania's Special Emergency Response Team (SERT) at suspect's house, inasmuch as Sharrar factors for deciding objective reasonableness of force were clearly established in 1999 when decision occurred, and officers did not apply such factors unreasonably, given their belief that suspect had targeted officer with laser-sighted weapon, and their limited knowledge of his medical conditions, including heart condition. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 430 F.3d 140. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if arrestee had established a cognizable constitutional claim with respect to her allegation that police officer violated the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments by using excessive force in tackling her while making her arrest, she failed to establish violation of a "clearly established" constitutional right, and so officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to that claim in arrestee's §§ 1983 action; the constitutional violation, if any, was by no means "obvious," given the officer-safety problem faced by the officer who, upon entering a house from which a fellow officer had just placed a distressed call for backup help, immediately saw that the resident and the other officer were in close proximity to each other and in the middle of some form of confrontation, and no precedent squarely governed the case, as court could not identify a single case predating the conduct at issue that prohibited tackling in a materially similar context. Lyons v. City of Xenia, C.A.6 2005, 417 F.3d 565. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right of nonviolent arrestee to be free from unnecessary pain knowingly inflicted during arrest was clearly established as of November 9, 2000, for purposes of determining whether arresting officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 on arrestee's claim that they violated his Fourth Amendment rights by attempting to place him in back seat of police cruiser after he specifically explained that his legs would not bend on account of his muscular dystrophy, where arrestee had not committed severe crime and posed no imminent risk of active physical resistance, violence, or flight, and no exigent circumstances required officers to immediately place arrestee in cruiser. St. John v. Hickey, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 411 F.3d 762, on remand 2006 WL 293790. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Earned income tax credits (EITCs) to which Chapter 7 debtors were entitled on their federal income tax returns did not lose them exempt character under Alabama law, as "amounts paid or payable as public assistance to needy persons," simply because debtors chose to receive them as lump-sum refunds. In re James, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2005, 406 F.3d 1340. Exemptions 37

Right to be free from excessive force was clearly established at time officer seized motel occupant, and thus officer was not entitled to qualified immunity for pointing gun at guest motel's face, jerking him from room, spinning him around, handcuffing him, and twisting guest's back so as to aggravate prior injury without grounds for believing that guest was dangerous, posed risk of flight, or had committed crime. Turmon v. Jordan, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 405 F.3d 202. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officer would not have been on notice in October 1997 that use of flash-bang device inside dark apartment where five to eight people might have been sleeping was unconstitutional, and, consequently, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in citizen's civil rights lawsuit against officers under Fourth Amendment alleging excessive use of force in search; although court held that officers violated citizen's Fourth

Amendment rights in use of flash-bang, error was not so egregious without guidance from courts as to have been unreasonable application of law that existed at time of incident. Boyd v. Benton County, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 374 F.3d 773. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Right of arrestee to be free from use of excessive force in course of being handcuffed was clearly established, precluding qualified immunity for arresting officer in disorderly conduct arrestee's §§1983 Fourth Amendment action against officer alleging that officer placed excessively tight handcuffs on arrestee and needlessly failed to respond for 10 minutes to arrestee's pleas to loosen them, resulting in permanent nerve damage. Kopec v. Tate, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 361 F.3d 772, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 453, 543 U.S. 956, 160 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity for violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights by using pepper spray on her while she was handcuffed and secured in the back of a patrol car; officer's conduct was so obviously at the very core of what the Fourth Amendment prohibited that the unlawfulness of the conduct was readily apparent to him, notwithstanding the lack of fact-specific case law. Vinyard v. Wilson, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2002, 311 F.3d 1340. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer was entitled to qualified immunity for releasing police dog, after giving appropriate warnings to suspect to stop, to apprehend suspect who had fled from minor traffic accident, as it was not clearly established in 1994 that using police dog trained in "bite and hold" method was excessive force, particularly under existing circumstances; officer knew that suspect was also suspect in prior robbery, and officer did not know whether suspect, who was fleeing through residential area, was armed. Jarrett v. Town of Yarmouth, C.A.1 (Mass.) 2002, 309 F.3d 54, rehearing granted, opinion withdrawn, rehearing en banc denied, opinion after grant of rehearing 331 F.3d 140, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 573, 540 U.S. 1017, 157 L.Ed.2d 431. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established in June 1996 that use of "hog-tie" restraint, in which subject's ankles are bound to his wrists behind his back, to subdue arrestee, who had been running around naked outside, and whose diminished capacity, which was apparently due to drug use, was obvious, constituted the use of excessive force in violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights, and thus, arresting officers were protected by qualified immunity in § 1983 action by administrator of estate of arrestee, who had died while so restrained. Cruz v. City of Laramie, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2001, 239 F.3d 1183. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not have clearly established duty to warn store proprietors that they were about to enter dangerous crime scene, thus entitling officer to qualified immunity on proprietors' excessive force claim based on any failure to warn, with respect to alleged maltreatment of proprietors by other officers when proprietors attempted to enter area around their stores; officer had not affirmatively assured proprietors that he would protect or assist them in their rush to store, so as to give rise to special relationship, nor did proprietors allege that they faced a special danger. Ensley v. Soper, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1998, 142 F.3d 1402. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Force that defendant police officer used in firing at fleeing car in which his partner's arm was momentarily caught was not "excessive" under clearly established law, as entire incident took only few short seconds, and officer's partner was in serious danger during that period; thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by passenger whom officer's bullet struck. Pittman v. Nelms, C.A.4 (Md.) 1996, 87 F.3d 116. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police officers, who, inter alia, rammed fist into testicles of man who filed and won lawsuit against law enforcement agencies, were entitled to qualified immunity where, in 1988, when conduct occurred, constitutional tort of retaliation against individual for having filed and won lawsuit was not so clearly established that reasonable official would understand that actions taken with this intent violated First Amendment. Hale v. Townley, C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 45 F.3d 914, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 51 F.3d 1047. Civil Rights

1376(6)

Reasonable police officer could have believed that limited force applied was proper and was not unconstitutionally excessive in light of clearly established law, and thus police officer was entitled to qualified immunity in connection with his use of physical force to remove boy from private residence after homeowner asked that boy be removed and it became clear that he would not leave of his own volition, and boy had been informed that police officer was chief of police; no closely analogous case would have notified officer that actions would violate Fourth Amendment, and limited force applied was not so plainly excessive that officers should have known, even in absence of closely analogous case, that he was violating boy's constitutional rights. Jones by Jones v. Webb, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 45 F.3d 178. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Rights to be free from unreasonable seizures, and to be free from use of excessive force, are both clearly established under Fourth Amendment for purposes of claim of qualified immunity of government official from liability on civil rights claim. Buckner v. Kilgore, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1994, 36 F.3d 536, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Police officers, who arrested homeowners and their guests after neighbor complained about loud party, were protected by qualified immunity from claim that officers violated Fourth Amendment through use of excessive force, where partygoers fled into house trying to escape arrest after police ordered them to disperse, partygoers struggled with police, all but one partygoer suffered no injury or minor injury, and other partygoer's more serious injury of severed tendon was caused by her own actions. Greiner v. City of Champlin, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 suit alleging that deputy sheriff handcuffed arrestee so tightly as to cause pain and bruises and refused to loosen handcuffs after arrestee complained of pain, since Fourth Amendment right to be free from use of excessive force during arrest was clearly established at time of plaintiff's arrest, and, in absence of showing of justification, no reasonable officer could have believed that abusive application of handcuffs was constitutional. Palmer v. Sanderson, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fisherman's right not to be handcuffed at time of his arrest for violation of reporting regulation was not clearly established, and state officers were entitled to qualified immunity in context of fisherman's excessive force claim; at time of arrest, there was no case standing for proposition that person had right not to be handcuffed in course of particular arrest, even if he did not resist or attempt to flee, and there was some authority indicating that policy of always using handcuffs during transportation of persons in custody was reasonable. Soares v. State of Conn., C.A.2 (Conn.) 1993, 8 F.3d 917. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from claim that they used excessive force in recapturing arrestee when officers hit arrestee in back, knocking him to ground; arrestee failed to point out closely analogous case that established that he had constitutional right to be free from type of force that officers used on him, and arrestee failed to show that force used by officers was so plainly excessive that officers should have been on notice that they were violating Fourth Amendment. Rice v. Burks, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 999 F.2d 1172. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to dismissal of civil rights action alleging use of excessive force even though there was no precisely analogous prior case proscribing officer's conduct of holding gun to head of nine-year-old boy and threatening to pull trigger during course of search of boy's residence, there was no claim that officers at scene were in danger or that child was a suspect or was attempting to evade or assault officers at time of incident. McDonald by McDonald v. Haskins, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 966 F.2d 292. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who used "Taser" on apartment occupant reported to be potentially homicidal and suicidal was entitled to qualified immunity from claims asserted under the federal civil rights statute, § 1983, for excessive force; when "Taser" was used, apartment occupant stood facing police officers from a few feet with a knife in each hand, apartment occupant had made threatening statements to officers, and officer's use of nonlethal force to subdue potentially homicidal person did not transgress clearly established law, and use of "Taser" allegedly violated official policy. Russo v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 953 F.2d 1036. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In order to establish qualified immunity defense to charge of excessive force, police officer must show either that his conduct did not violate clearly established rights of which reasonable person would have known or that it was objectively reasonable under Fourth Amendment for officer to believe that his acts did not violate clearly established rights. Finnegan v. Fountain, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 915 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Claimant failed to show that police officer violated clearly established right by failing to loosen tight handcuffs, and, thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity; claimant presented no evidence of contusions, lacerations or damage to bones or nerves of wrists, did not prove amount of force was substantial, and did not establish malice on part of officer. Hannula v. City of Lakewood, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1990, 907 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Defendants were entitled to qualified immunity for alleged excessive force used in bringing plaintiff to mental hospital and his attorney into jury room, because their conduct did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Chathas v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1989, 884 F.2d 980, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1169, 493 U.S. 1095, 107 L.Ed.2d 1071. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were protected by qualified immunity for their use of deadly force in order to effect a lawful arrest of fleeing narcotics suspects where, at time of incident, law in area was still unsettled. Hamm v. Powell, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1989, 874 F.2d 766, on rehearing in part on other grounds 893 F.2d 293, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 3218, 496 U.S. 938, 110 L.Ed.2d 665. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time of police shooting of suspected burglar in 1982, the shooting did not violate clearly established state law, so that police officer was entitled to qualified immunity. Washington v. Starke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1988, 855 F.2d 346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Corrections officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in prisoner's excessive force claim for violation of the Eighth Amendment, based upon officers' conduct of pushing prisoner to floor, and handcuffing him, when prisoner tried to show officer a written medical excuse in an effort to explain noncompliance with officer's order; such conduct violated the Eighth Amendment, and the law prohibiting such conduct was clearly established at the time of the occurrence. Jackson v. Austin, D.Kan.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 1313. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Taking the facts in light most favorable to arrestee, state troopers used excessive force in effecting arrest, in violation of arrestee's well-established Fourth Amendment rights, and thus, troopers were not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force claim against them; arrestee contended that trooper beat his head against the floor several times after he was already on the ground. Manning v. Washington, W.D.Wash.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 1229. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's alleged acts of violently wrenching passive arrestee off of stairs where he was sitting and throwing him to the ground while thrusting a knee into his back, causing his face to smash into a cement pad, and second officer's alleged act of standing by and watching, violated defendant's clearly established Fourth Amendment right to be free from use of excessive force, as would have been understood by reasonable officers, and thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim alleging use of excessive force. Smith v. Jackson, D.Me.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 72. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who grabbed female resident by front of tank top during execution of search warrant, jerked her through door opening, ripped her shirt and refused to allow her to change it for several hours, and pointed guns at her were not entitled to qualified immunity at summary judgment stage in resident's §§ 1983 claim alleging excessive force; resident was complying with search, and law was sufficiently clearly established to place reasonable law officer on notice that using this type of force was unlawful. Hansen v. Schubert, E.D.Cal.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 973. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who dragged resident out of bed by arm during execution of search warrant, pinned him up against entertainment center, pushed shotgun against his head, placed him in handcuffs, and searched his mouth were not entitled to qualified immunity at summary judgment stage in resident's §§ 1983 excessive force claim; although law that handcuffing person during search for evidence violated Fourth Amendment was not clearly established at time of search, law was sufficiently clear to place officer on notice that using this type of force against individual complying with search was unlawful. Hansen v. Schubert, E.D.Cal.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 973. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who executed search warrant at auto service and storage garage and, in course of executing warrant, stepped on back and knee of innocent bystander, who was at garage to pick up parts, were entitled to qualified immunity in bystander's §§ 1983 excessive force action; no clearly established rule prohibited officers from using their feet to force bystander to comply with an order to remain on the ground after bystander moved his head and leg while being detained. Paul v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 223. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officer's conduct in kicking and stomping suspect in the buttocks area and groin constituted use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment, it was not a violation of established law, and thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in suspect's §§ 1983 action; no prior case law addressed situation in which officers conducting buy-bust operation saw drug seller run to rear of apartment building and speak to another man who became a suspect when he ran or walked briskly with seller into building, suspect appeared to be reaching for waistband of his shorts, as if he was armed, and when officers entered building and identified themselves as police, suspect did not put his hands up as ordered, but instead turned around and fell into doorway of his apartment, lying on his stomach. Johnson v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 1.

Fourth Amendment right to be free from excessive force, which police officer allegedly violated by beating motorist after traffic stop, was clearly established as of December 6, 2002, and officer thus was not qualifiedly immune from §§ 1983 claim asserted by motorist's survivors. Reindl v. City of Leavenworth, Kansas, D.Kan.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1222. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established law that police officer could not explicitly encourage private actor to commit assault, and thus officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 in victims' action alleging that officer spoke with perpetrator immediately before attack, then watched attack from his car until other officers arrived. Garcia v. Brown, S.D.N.Y.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 132. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Although evidence could support finding that police officer used excessive force when he sprayed motorist with pepper spray while attempting to arrest him during a traffic stop, motorist's constitutional right not to be subjected to excessive force was not clearly established in the context of motorist's case, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in motorist's §§ 1983 action; case law gave no notice that officer's conduct was constitutionally impermissible and provided some basis to believe it was permissible. Davis v. City of Albia, S.D.Iowa 2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 692. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law was not "clearly established," as to whether alleged misdemeanor offender, who did not resist or attempt to flee, had right to not be handcuffed in course of arrest, and thus arresting police officers were entitled to qualified immunity to arrestee's excessive force claim under Fourth Amendment in lawsuit under §§ 1983; although there was authority from two other Circuits which supported arrestee's claim, neither Supreme Court nor relevant Circuit had so held, and other Circuit authority was to the contrary. Barton v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officers' use of force in arresting mentally handicapped minor child was not clearly unreasonable, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity as to §§ 1983 claim brought by child and parent, alleging violations of child's Fourth Amendment rights; child put up significant resistance to arrest, and although he suffered cuts and bruises, he did not suffer more serious injuries, and may have caused injuries as much as officers allegedly did. Barlow ex rel. Moncebaiz v. Owens, S.D.Tex.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 980. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of determining supervisory officials' entitlement to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983, on-duty officer's fatal shooting of off-duty officer in January, 2000, was violation of off-duty officer's clearly established Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure by police use of deadly force. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Commander of local law enforcement drug unit, in his individual and official capacities, was entitled to qualified immunity as to Fourth Amendment excessive force claims asserted by arrestee in §§ 1983 action; although arrestee had a Fourth Amendment right to be free from unlawful arrest and seizure, there was no evidence commander participated in any alleged illegal activity or promulgated any rule or custom that led to any alleged illegal conduct. Jones v. Pandey, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1371. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Contours of applicable law regarding handcuffing of suspect who advised officers of pre-existing arm condition were not sufficiently settled such that reasonable warning could be inferred, and thus arresting officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force action, even if officers knew that arrestee had reverse shoulder prosthesis in her shoulder, and arrestee suffered broken humerus when her hands were handcuffed behind her back. Schultz v. Hall, N.D.Fla.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1218. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Female police officer, who had probable cause to believe detainee was carrying drugs, had qualified immunity from claim that excessive force was used in search, during which officer's gloved hand allegedly made contact with detainee's vagina and rectum, and vigorous pulling on underpants caused garment to enter rectum and cause damage; there were no cases in which comparable levels of alleged harm were found to violate victim's Fourth Amendment rights, precluding realization on part of officer that her conduct violated Constitution. Dominguez v. Metropolitan Miami-Dade County, S.D.Fla.2004, 359 F.Supp.2d 1323, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 147, 2006 WL 334243. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At the time altercation allegedly occurred between resident and animal control officer, the law concerning substantive due process violations was clearly established such that reasonable person in officer's position would have known that physically injuring someone with metal baton merely because that person tried to take tape recorder away from officer would violate person's Fourteenth Amendment rights, and therefore law was clearly established for purposes of officer's summary judgment motion based on qualified immunity defense. Tate v. Fish, D.N.M.2004, 347 F.Supp.2d 1049. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established in December 1999 that a reasonable officer could not believe it was lawful to "take down" or physically assault a person who did not pose a threat and/or was not actively resisting arrest and attempting to escape, that an officer has a duty to intervene to prevent the use of excessive force by other officers, and that use of force is unreasonable and therefore excessive if need to use such force resulted from officer's own reckless or deliberate conduct during seizure, and thus, police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by arrestee who alleged that excessive force had been used by officer who made arrest, and that other officers present had failed to intervene. Hays v. Ellis, D.Colo.2004, 331 F.Supp.2d 1303. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability, in excessive force claim brought by arrestee who sustained sprained and bruised wrist during handcuffing, absent showing that officer's conduct during the handcuffing and arrest violated any clearly established constitutional right. Mladek v. Day, M.D.Ga.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1373, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 978, 2004 WL 2805985, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 129

Fed.Appx. 600, 2005 WL 179012. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of evaluating law enforcement officers' qualified immunity defense to victim's estate's excessive force claim, facts alleged a violation of victim's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights; under the facts alleged by victim's estate, victim was not committing any relatively severe crime, did not pose an immediate threat to the safety of the officers, and was not resisting arrest by attempting to flee the scene when officers shot victim in excess of five times with high-powered weapons while victim was approximately fifteen feet away from the officers. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1376(6)

The constitutional rights of mentally ill driver, who died after sustaining multiple gunshot wounds by police officers when police officers shot into his vehicle as his vehicle was allegedly traveling at a slow rate of speed and allegedly not posing a serious threat to the officers or others, were sufficiently clear that a reasonable officer would have had fair warning at the time of the shooting that the use of deadly force to apprehend the driver would violate individual's constitutional rights, and thus officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by the survivors of the driver against the police officers. Waterman v. Batton, D.Md.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 709, reversed 393 F.3d 471. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established in 2000, for purposes of qualified immunity, that the excessive use of force during an arrest or other seizure constituted a Fourth Amendment violation, and that the use of deadly force was permissible only when the officer reasonably believed that the suspect posed an immediate threat to the officer or others. Buchanan v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 954. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer's use of violence against arrestee during questioning at police station regarding possible drunk driving violated arrestee's clearly established right to be free from excessive force, and thus officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action; in response to arrestee's attempt to exit interrogation room, officer grabbed arrestee by the arm, throwing her in the direction of a chair and causing her to fall, after which arrestee weakly kicked officer, causing officer to kick arrestee in return, even though arrestee was lying on the floor and presented no threat to him. Eberle v. City of Newton, D.Kan.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1269, motion to amend denied 296 F.Supp.2d 1276. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for highly intrusive tactics used to effectuate Terry stop of detainee, which involved officer and others surrounding detainee, shining lights at her to prevent her from seeing, pointing weapons at her, cocking them, and bombarding her with profanity-laced threats to shoot, based only on anonymous tip that she had a gun; it was clearly established that use of deadly force to apprehend a suspect was unreasonable, absent probable cause that suspect was dangerous or had committed violent crime, and detainee suffered permanent physical injury. Brown v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 962. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers accused of the use of excessive force in a § 1983 action, who do not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights which they may reasonably be expected to be aware of, are protected by a qualified immunity that protects all but the plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law. Wilder v. Village of Amityville, E.D.N.Y.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 341, affirmed 111 Fed.Appx. 635, 2004 WL 2381295, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1708, 544 U.S. 949, 161 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Unconstitutionality of use of gratuitous force against a suspect after he had been subdued was well established at time police officers kicked and struck motorist with their knees for 53 seconds as he lay on the ground, and thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from motorist's excessive force claim under § 1983, given that right to be free from excessive force was clearly established under Fourth Amendment's prohibition against unreasonable seizures of the person at time of arrest, and there was no governmental interest in continuing to exert force against motorist in attempt to obtain evidence he had put in his mouth. Coleman v. Rieck, D.Neb.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 1101, affirmed 154 Fed.Appx. 546, 2005 WL 3068056. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Television cameraman's right to be free from excessive force in arrest was clearly established at time police officer arrested him; officer's conduct, forcing cameraman to the ground, holding him down by kneeling on his back, wrenching his arms behind him, and handcuffing him, was clearly excessive, given that cameraman was not fleeing, presented no danger to officer or others, and had complied with police instructions while filming demonstration. Durruthy v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 1291, reversed 351 F.3d 1080, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 97 Fed.Appx. 908, 2004 WL 385594, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 45, 543 U.S. 917, 160 L.Ed.2d 201. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who allegedly apprehended motorist, after coming to motorist's home to issue citations for traffic violations, and threw him against his car were not entitled to qualified immunity from motorist's § 1983 action alleging excessive force; motorist's right to be free from such conduct was clearly established. Hummel v. City of Carlisle, S.D.Ohio 2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 839. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Parole officer's actions in imposing neckhold upon parolee was not contrary to clearly established standards, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity on Fourth Amendment excessive force claim under § 1983 brought by parolee; neckhold imposed by officer, while alleged to have obstructed parolee's breathing, did not cause him to lose consciousness or pass out, did not cause damage to his trachea or larynx, and was administered for only very brief period of time, it was administered in context of parolee, who was a large man who had tested positive for cocaine use, who had a history of resisting arrest, resisting arrest in a small room with dangerous conditions, such as unsecured chairs and a sharp ledge, and civilians nearby. Ferguson v. Leiter, N.D.Ohio 2002, 220 F.Supp.2d 875. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was clearly established right to be free of police officers' use of excessive force, and thus township was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in individual's § 1983 action if officers did indeed use excessive force as result of township's failure to properly supervise and train its officers. Campbell v. Erie Tp., E.D.Mich.2001, 133 F.Supp.2d 953. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Due process right to be free from excessive force was not clearly established when passenger in school van was shot by police in attempt to stop driver who commandeered van, and thus officers enjoyed qualified immunity from § 1983 claim brought by administratrix of passenger's estate. Medeiros v. O'Connell, D.Conn.1997, 955 F.Supp. 21, affirmed 150 F.3d 164. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Hunters who exchanged gunfire with police officers sufficiently alleged violation of hunters' constitutional rights, for purpose of determining whether officers were entitled to qualified immunity in hunters' § 1983 action, where hunters asserted that officers used excessive force. Wicker v. City of Galveston, S.D.Tex.1996, 944 F.Supp. 553. Civil Rights 1396

It was clearly established in 1990 that unreasonable beating of arrestee by police officers violated persons rights and that denial of needed medical attention was also a violation. Gonsalves v. City of New Bedford, D.Mass.1996, 939 F.Supp. 921. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established at time of encounter between deputy sheriff and arrestee in May of 1991 that Fourth Amendment provided protection against use of excessive force and that only that force which was reasonably necessary to defend against bodily harm while making the arrest was justified. Denmark v. Lee County, M.D.Fla.1996, 931 F.Supp. 831. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Section 1983 plaintiff failed to allege constitutional violation against town officer in connection with death of allegedly mentally ill individual who was shot by deputy during attempt by officer and deputy to execute involuntary commitment order; there was no evidence that officer shot individual or was in any way liable for deputy's actions, and officer was not required to immediately take individual into custody without identifying himself or deputy or informing individual of purpose of their visit. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity on excessive force claim asserted by § 1983 plaintiff who was shot by one of officers while in process of demonstrating expressed intent to kill officer by throwing metal bar at officer, as plaintiff failed to show violation of clearly established law and that officers, acting reasonably, should have known that they were in violation of law; essence of excessive force claim was that officers exercised poor judgment when they failed to heed plaintiff's early demand to leave him alone, when they drew their weapons and pointed them at plaintiff, and when officer decided to shoot plaintiff rather than attempt to duck or dodge metal bar. McRae v. Tena, D.Ariz.1996, 914 F.Supp. 363, affirmed on other grounds 113 F.3d 1241. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Defendant police officer's alleged "violent" poking and pushing of motorist whom second officer had stopped for allegedly improper left turn was not statutory or constitutional violation of excessive force; motorist did not allege that he was physically injured by poke or push, motorist disobeyed defendant's order to stay in his car, and officers rejected motorist's statement suggesting that he be "locked up." Lanigan v. Village of East Hazel Crest, N.D.Ill.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1202. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by minors who alleged that officer had used excessive force in searching minors after they had been detained; it was clearly established in September 1993, when search occurred, that unresisting suspect had right not to be subjected to excessive force during search, and amount of force actually used was material fact in dispute. Irvin v. Kaczmaryn, N.D.Ill.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1190. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer loses qualified immunity and can be sued under § 1983 if shooting by officer was constitutional violation and constitutional standards were clearly established at time of shooting. Estate of Saldana by Saldana v. Weitzel, E.D.Wis.1996, 912 F.Supp. 413. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Use of excessive force during arrest, investigatory stop, or any other seizure of person at liberty violates person's Fourth Amendment rights and is actionable under federal civil rights statute. Valanzuela v. Snider, D.Colo.1995, 889 F.Supp. 1409. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer's alleged threat to break car window with crow bar and to physically drag driver out of the car did not rise to level of constitutional violation required to state claim under § 1983. Schilling v. Swick, W.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police officer did not violate any clearly established law in entering assault suspect's home with his weapon drawn, entitling officer to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising when suspect was fatally shot; officer knew that suspect had fled arrest and was currently threatening fellow officers with a knife could have reasonably believed that use of weapon to subdue suspect was necessary. Alto v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1994, 863 F.Supp. 658. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's Fourth Amendment right to be free of excessive force during arrest was clearly established at time of arrest and, thus, arresting officers did not have qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim for unreasonable use of force. Gibson v. City of Clarksville, Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1993, 860 F.Supp. 450. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police did not violate clearly established Fourth Amendment rights of motorcyclist and passenger by engaging in high-speed chase or establishing roadblock, as needed to overcome claims that a doctrine of qualified immunity applied to § 1983 civil rights claims for liability against individual police officer; Supreme Court decision establishing rights of fleeing suspect who was shot did not apply to high-speed pursuit and roadblocks, police department training bulletin regarding use of deadly force was in context of using firearms, and operating procedure allowed use of roadblock when vehicle being pursued creates substantial risk of injury or death.

Donovan v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1992, 845 F.Supp. 1312, affirmed 17 F.3d 944. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief, acting as reasonable person, could not have known that policies he was instituting and implementing to govern use of force on arrested persons would violate constitutional rights of allegedly intoxicated arrestee and, thus, chief was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action. Scott v. City of Lanett, M.D.Ala.1993, 845 F.Supp. 815. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officer's conduct in using pepper spray against an arrestee and striking the arrestee in the thigh with a flashlight had violated the arrestee's constitutional rights, the contours of those rights were not sufficiently clear that a reasonable official would have understood that what he was doing violated those rights, and thus, the officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to the arrestee's excessive force claim. Portillo v. Montoya, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2006, 170 Fed.Appx. 453, 2006 WL 475457, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity did not apply to shield from liability deputies who allegedly caused death of detainee by restraining him to point of positional asphyxia, following his arrest on misdemeanor charge of trespass, even though detainee, while uncooperative, was not endangering himself or officers, given that county's own regulations warned against danger of restraint chair causing positional asphyxia and that the law was clearly established that deputies could not deploy such potentially lethal force under existing circumstances. Agster v. Maricopa County Sheriff's Office, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2005, 144 Fed.Appx. 594, 2005 WL 1684962, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officer's conduct in effecting arrest of developmentally-disabled student, when she took student to ground, handcuffed him, and, with help of other officers, hobbled his legs and sent him to hospital on mental hold, violated student's Fourth Amendment rights against excessive force, officer was nonetheless entitled to qualified immunity because student's right was not clearly established at time incident occurred; general Fourth Amendment cases and even those in school context suggested that officer's conduct fell into hazy border between excessive and acceptable force. Hayenga ex rel. Hayenga v. Nampa School Dist. No. 131, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 783, 2005 WL 375731, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's suit under § 1983, despite lack of caselaw expressly prohibiting officer's specific conduct, where undisputed facts established prima facie case of claim for excessive force, no caselaw permitted officer's specific conduct, and Fourth Amendment right to be free from excessive use of force by law enforcement officers was clearly established; arrestee, teenage girl weighing less than 100 pounds, with no known history of violence, fled from officer attempting to arrest her for nonviolent offense of truancy, officer chased and tackled her, and her pelvis was broken as result of tackle. Brown v. Long Beach Police Dept., C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 105 Fed.Appx. 549, 2004 WL 1588214, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers did not have qualified immunity from claim that they assaulted victim in course of arresting him for disorderly conduct and public urination; assault in course of arrest clearly violated established statutory and constitutional rights of which officer was or should have been aware. Lazaratos v. Ruiz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22283832, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Defense of qualified immunity would not be available to arresting officer, on property owner's § 1983 excessive force claim, arising from deputy's alleged use of excessive force in grasping owner's wrist and alleged throwing of owner into back seat of police cruiser when owner was already hand-cuffed and not resisting, as right to be free from excessive force was sufficiently clear at time of arrest. Collin v. Stephenson, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31409874, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law was clearly established, for purposes of qualified immunity, that macing motorist for refusing to get into police cruiser, while she was handcuffed and was demanding to see trooper's identification, would violate motorist's Fourth Amendment rights; officer's conduct lay so obviously at very core of what Fourth Amendment prohibited that its unlawfulness was readily apparent to official, notwithstanding lack of case law. Martinez v. New Mexico Dept. of Public Safety, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2002, 47 Fed.Appx. 513, 2002 WL 1753176, Unreported, certiorari dismissed 123 S.Ct. 1015, 537 U.S. 1180, 154 L.Ed.2d 930. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3880. ---- Medical attention, police activities, clearly established right

Police sergeant's alleged conduct of brutally and incessantly questioning suspect, after he had been shot in the face, back, and leg, interfering with suspect's medical treatment while he was screaming in pain and going in and out of consciousness, and continuing the "interrogation" over suspect's pleas for him to stop so that he could receive treatment, if proven, violated suspect's clearly established due process rights, thus police sergeant was not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by suspect. Martinez v. City of Oxnard, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2003, 337 F.3d 1091, rehearing en banc denied 354 F.3d 1168, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2932, 542 U.S. 953, 159 L.Ed.2d 835. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's allegations that police officers denied him medical attention for express reason that he had fled scene of accident without regard for plight of other victims, even though his face and chest were scarred with abrasions, he was in pain, he informed officers that he needed attention, and officers knew that he had been involved in automobile accident, were sufficient to allege violation of arrestee's clearly established right to medical attention, as required for arrestee to maintain civil rights action against officers. Nerren v. Livingston Police Dept., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 86 F.3d 469. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Failure to render medical aid to intoxicated arrestee who had been involved in motorcycle accident by transporting him to hospital against his wishes did not violate any clearly established Fourth Amendment right, as required to deny qualified immunity to police officers. Patrick v. Lewis, D.Minn.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1134. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had qualified immunity from § 1983 action brought by wife of deceased husband for police officers' failure to assist when husband suffered heart attack, because wife presented no analogous cases which would suggest that officers acted or failed to act as required by Constitution, and therefore, police officers enjoyed benefit of doubt that they did not violate husband's clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known. Cowgill v. City of Marion, N.D.Ind.2000, 127 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3881. ---- Evidence, police activities, clearly established right

County law enforcement officers' alleged conduct in mishandling and destroying DNA sample that could have been used for DNA testing by citizen in challenging his conviction for kidnapping, rape, and murder violated citizen's well established due process right not to have officers fail to preserve potentially useful evidence in bad faith, and thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on citizen's §§ 1983 claim, since citizen alleged that officers knew of the exculpatory value of the evidence at time it was destroyed. Yarris v. County of Delaware, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 465 F.3d 129. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Homeowners asserted violation of constitutional right, as required to defeat police officers' claims of qualified immunity, when they alleged that officers intentionally disposed of evidence pertaining to theft of homeowners' property to prevent homeowners from suing person believed to be thief. Harrell v. Cook, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1999, 169 F.3d 428. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity from claims alleging that he wrongfully investigated, prosecuted, convicted, and incarcerated plaintiffs, that he fabricated evidence and manufactured probable cause, that plaintiffs were held in custody despite a lack of probable cause to do so, and that deputy and others conspired to maliciously prosecute and convict them, since plaintiffs sufficiently raised claims that alleged violations of their constitutional rights, and these constitutional rights were clearly established at time in question. Spurlock v. Satterfield, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1999, 167 F.3d 995. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police department forensic criminalist had clearly established independent duty under Brady to disclose directly to a criminal defendant material serological evidence that was favorable to defendant, and therefore criminalist was not entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim brought by former convict, who was released after DNA testing on the physical evidence used against him exonerated him of sex offenses for which he was convicted; criminalist had a significant role in the prosecution since he accompanied officers to the crime scene to collect evidence, tested that evidence, tested former convict, tested a boyfriend of one of the victims, and then lied on the stand about the inculpatory nature of his findings. Charles v. City of Boston, D.Mass.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 82. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not violate plaintiff's clearly established constitutional rights and was immune from monetary liability in civil rights action under § 1983 where his participation in case in which plaintiff may have been falsely imprisoned and maliciously prosecuted was limited to testimony before grand jury based on police file, offense/incident report, and packaging and labeling of some of the evidence sent to police laboratory, and where officer merely followed instruction of superior and there was no probative evidence that he knew of information pointing to lack of probable cause to arrest plaintiff, or that he gave testimony to grand jury which he knew to be false, or otherwise acted in bad faith. Dean v. Earle, W.D.Ky.1994, 866 F.Supp. 336. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Former police officer failed to state a claim for discrimination in connection with the denial of a pistol license; the notice of disapproval contained an independent ground for denial, namely his failure to disclose a suicide attempt, which did not pertain to any allegedly manufactured false statements. Acista v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 691270, Unreported. Civil Rights 1072

3882. ---- False reports, police activities, clearly established right

Arrestee's allegation that fire marshall agent knowingly transmitted false statements over National Crime Information Center (NCIC) computer system, to cause unjustifiedly extended incarceration, stated violation of arrestee's clearly established Fourteenth Amendment rights of which reasonable agent would have known, as required to overcome marshall's qualified immunity defense. Clanton v. Cooper, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 129 F.3d 1147. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Deputy marshal's alleged filing of false reports of animal cruelty by tenant on property subject to forfeiture did not violate clearly established constitutional right, and, thus, marshal was entitled to qualified immunity. Brayman v. U.S., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1996, 96 F.3d 1061. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Although police officers' filing of allegedly false reports, which were unsworn, was not itself actionable under § 1983, arrestee stated § 1983 claim by alleging that false reports served as basis for prosecution and that officers subsequently "ratified" filing of such reports by testifying falsely at suppression hearing and trial. Wilson v. Lyons, D.Me.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 73. Civil Rights 1088(5)

3883. ---- Failure to act, police activities, clearly established right

Police officials were entitled to qualified immunity for their alleged conduct in implicitly condoning and encouraging officer's conduct in drinking excessively and driving, by drinking with officer on numerous occasions while on-duty and off-duty, for purpose of §§ 1983 substantive due process action asserted by family members of pedestrians who were killed when officer drank excessively with other officers and then drove his car through several red lights; it was not clearly established law that such conduct constituted implicit sanctioning of such behavior. Pena v. DePrisco, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 432 F.3d 98. Civil Rights 1376(6)

District Court's determination in denying summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds to police officers in equal protection action against them that there were triable issues of fact as to whether officers acted out of illegitimate animus and improper motive, and not for any legitimate state objective, did not thwart Court of Appeals' jurisdiction to review purely legal question whether, at time of alleged misconduct, law was clearly established that refusal to arrest city councilman for domestic violence due to his official position constituted selective withdrawal of police protection in violation of Equal Protection Clause. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Federal Courts 579

Officer who stopped plaintiff was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that officer breached his duty to protect plaintiff from another officer's use of excessive force, where other officer's use of force was reasonable, and there was no clearly established standard to govern actions of officer who stopped plaintiff. Lowery v. Stovall, C.A.4 (Va.) 1996, 92 F.3d 219, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 954, 519 U.S. 1113, 136 L.Ed.2d 841. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established, at time of conduct giving rise to civil rights claim, that officer has affirmative duty for law enforcement official to intervene to prevent another law enforcement official's use of excessive force, for purposes of police officer's qualified immunity defense to civil rights claim against police officer who allegedly watched as another police officer allegedly used excessive force during investigative stop. Mick v. Brewer, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1996, 76 F.3d 1127, on remand 923 F.Supp. 181, on remand 1997 WL 225908. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law was clearly established as of December 6, 2002, that law enforcement officer who failed to intervene, if he had opportunity, to prevent another officer's use of excessive force could be liable under §§ 1983, and, thus, officers were not qualifiedly immune from claim asserted by motorist's survivors. Reindl v. City of Leavenworth, Kansas, D.Kan.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1222. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if arrestee had an individual Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms, that right was not clearly established, and thus, law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim that officers violated arrestee's individual Second Amendment rights by seizing his firearms during search of his residence. Bloomquist v. Albee, D.Me.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Alleged conduct of police officers in failing to report fellow officer's alleged use of excessive force did not violate any clearly established law, and therefore, officers who did not make report were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claims. Franklin v. City of Kansas City, D.Kan.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1380. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Duty of a law enforcement officer to intervene in an unlawful arrest was clearly established at time of arrest of mobile home occupant, as required to defeat qualified immunity claim of deputy sheriff in the arrestee's §§ 1983 action against the deputy for unlawful arrest, excessive force, and unlawful search in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Lepone-Dempsey v. Carroll County Com'rs, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 159 Fed.Appx. 916, 2005 WL 3455821, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3884. ---- Searches generally, police activities, clearly established right

Law enforcement officer was entitled to qualified immunity, for purpose of arrestee's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim, based on officer's search of arrestee's office and the seizure of arrestee's camera, allegedly in retaliation for lawsuit against county and other officers arising from prior arrest and other incidents; although the search was supported by probable cause, and a lack of probable cause was not required to prove retaliation claim, the right of an individual to be free of police action motivated by retaliatory animus, but supported by probable cause, was not clearly established at time officer conducted search. Skoog v. County of Clackamas, C.A.9 (Or.) 2006, 469 F.3d 1221. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officer who frisked manager of office that was subject to search warrant as part of a vandalism investigation, when manager attempted to enter office while police were executing the warrant, was not entitled to qualified immunity for such conduct, in manager's §§ 1983 claim for violation of his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures; although case law allowed detention of persons on the premises during execution of a search warrant in situations involving dangerous circumstances or investigations of dangerous crimes, the law clearly did not permit searches of persons attempting to enter the premises, in a situation that did not involve dangerous circumstances. Denver Justice And Peace Committee, Inc. v. City Of Golden, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2005, 405 F.3d 923, certiorari dismissed 126 S.Ct. 1164, 163 L.Ed.2d 1016. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Although jury could find that strip searches and body cavity searches of arrestees were conducted in an unconstitutional manner, police officer was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestees' Fourth Amendment claims; the law was not clearly established at the time that application of some physical force to keep apparently resistant arrestees against the wall during the search, and anal and genital contact with a slender object, all accompanied by verbal abuse but in the absence of any injury or anal penetration, would violate arrestees' rights under the Fourth Amendment. Evans v. City of Zebulon, GA, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 351 F.3d 485, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 364 F.3d 1298, on rehearing 407 F.3d 1272, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 163 Fed.Appx. 850, 2005 WL 2314522. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of qualified immunity, homeowner's right to be free from a search of the curtilage of his home premised only upon reasonable suspicion, without probable cause plus either a warrant or exigent circumstances, was clearly established at the time of incident in August, 1997. Rogers v. Pendleton, C.A.4 (Va.) 2001, 249 F.3d 279. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff's alleged reliance on legal advice in permitting search warrant for owner's home to be used to facilitate private individual in conducting independent search of home for items unrelated to those specified in warrant did not entitle deputy to qualified immunity in owner's resulting action alleging Fourth Amendment violation, where there was no indication that deputy's situation was otherwise extraordinary, and deputy did not follow advice he received. Buonocore v. Harris, C.A.4 (Va.) 1998, 134 F.3d 245. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers, by permitting television crew to enter house and film during execution of search warrant, did not violate clearly established Fourth Amendment right of which they should have been aware and, thus, were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action arising out of search. Parker v. Boyer, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 93 F.3d 445, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1081, 519 U.S. 1148, 137 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Allegation that federal agent and deputy sheriff invited private citizen into owner's home so that private citizen, acting independently of government agents, could conduct search for items not mentioned in search warrant stated violation of clearly established constitutional right, for purposes of agents' qualified immunity defense in homeowner's civil rights action. Buonocore v. Harris, C.A.4 (Va.) 1995, 65 F.3d 347. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff and state police officer who prepared rape suspect profile on which deputy relied on seeking search warrant were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with § 1983 claim premised on inclusion of original profile's race component in warrant application; it was not clear that there was any infringement on plaintiff's rights and, even if there was, allegedly unconstitutional use of race component was not clearly established at time warrant was obtained in 1992. Simmons v. Poe, C.A.4 (Va.) 1995, 47 F.3d 1370. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Clearly established law existed at time of Secret Service agent's search of home that forbade bringing members of press into private home to observe and report on their activities, for purposes of determining whether agent was qualifiedly immune. Ayeni v. Mottola, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 35 F.3d 680, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1689, 514 U.S. 1062, 131 L.Ed.2d 554. United States 50.10(3)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Arresting officer and police chief were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim arising from employment of force in obtaining blood sample from DUI arrestee; at time of arrest, case law had established that withdrawal of a subject's blood was permissible when subject was unconscious or objecting, provided that force used did not shock the conscience, and standard was not violated by arresting officer. Hammer v. Gross, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 932 F.2d 842, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 582, 502 U.S. 980, 116 L.Ed.2d 607, on remand 981 F.2d 1115. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' search of another officer's closed, personal briefcase found inside automobile they were lawfully searching as part of internal misconduct investigation was reasonable and officers were immune from civil rights liability, since it was not clearly established at time of search that search as part of investigation into work-related misconduct would violate the Fourth Amendment. Shields v. Burge, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1989, 874 F.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Even if police sergeant did not have reasonable and articulable basis for making radio broadcast about possibility of there being weapons in vehicle, he was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 lawsuit brought by driver and passengers; driver and passengers did not have a "clearly established" right to immunity from suspicions of sergeant after he was informed by two detainees that driver and passengers had weapons inside of their vehicle. Alexander v. Haymon, S.D.Ohio 2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 820. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if arresting officer's pat-down searches outside opposite sex arrestees' clothing were unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment, officer would be entitled to qualified immunity in arrestees' civil rights action under § 1983, where arrestees did not show they had a clearly established Fourth Amendment right to be searched by a person of their own gender or in a different manner. Wyatt v. Slagle, S.D.Iowa 2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 931. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police lieutenant had malicious state of mind when he ordered female officer to strip search female arrestee, and even if lieutenant did so to punish arrestee for refusing to answer his questions, lieutenant was nonetheless qualifiedly immune from arrestee's claim that search violated her Fourth Amendment rights; arrestee did not have clear right in circumstances not to be subjected to strip search, but rather, case law stood for opposite proposition. Swain v. Spinney, D.Mass.1996, 932 F.Supp. 25, affirmed in part, reversed in part 117 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Motorist's claim of unreasonable seizure due to fact that officers who stopped her at roadblock did not identify themselves as officers was barred by qualified immunity as it had not been established at time of the incident in 1992 that the "knock and announce" rule had constitutional status or that the rule could apply to searches and seizures outside the home. Johnson v. Grob, W.D.Mo.1996, 928 F.Supp. 889. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer could be held liable for unconstitutional search of arrestees only if reasonable person in her position would have been charged with knowledge that her actions violated clearly established rights of arrestees. Lopez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1995, 901 F.Supp. 684. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if parolee had not consented to parole officer's warrantless search of his residence, and thus, in absence of authorizing regulation, search was unconstitutional, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability, in that contours of constitutional right were not clearly established at time of search. Patterson v. Board of Probation and Parole of Com. of Pa., E.D.Pa.1994, 851 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Conduct of probation and parole officers in forcibly entering parolee's home when he opened door, and conduct of those officers and police officers who were called in as backup, in searching the home after they handcuffed parolee when he began yelling at the officers, was not clearly unlawful, and thus, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity in parolee's §§ 1983 suit for alleged violations of his Fourth Amendment rights. Bruton v. Paesani, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 162 Fed.Appx. 151, 2006 WL 41276, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

City police officers acted reasonably in light of clearly established law and information they possessed, as to body cavity search of shopper after she had activated security sensors when leaving store, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from shopper's §§ 1983 claim alleging violation of Fourth Amendment; she told male officer that she had no objection to being searched and that she had no objection to female officer being called to perform the search, and shopper cooperated with officers and did not refuse any of their requests. McNeal v. Roberts, C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 129 Fed.Appx. 110, 2005 WL 977674, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3885. ---- Seizures, police activities, clearly established right

Officer who had no reason to suspect motel guest of arson or other crimes did not have qualified immunity for unreasonably seizing motel guest, as right to be free of unreasonable seizures was clearly established at time; officer should have realized before reaching room that it was not on fire as he originally suspected and that guest's closing of motel door did not give rise to reasonable suspicion of any particular crime. Turmon v. Jordan, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 405 F.3d 202. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In arrestee's § 1983 action against detective, detective was entitled to qualified immunity for participating in staged "perp walk" that violated arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights; unconstitutionality of staged perp walk was not clearly established at time it occurred. Lauro v. Charles, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 219 F.3d 202. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Government officials were entitled to qualified immunity on deputy sheriffs' constitutional claims arising from their alleged seizure and questioning during an internal investigation into a citizen's claim that he was assaulted by one of the deputies who were near an intersection at a specific time; it was not clearly established at the time that deputies, who were ordered to remain at work to be questioned, were seized within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment, that probable cause did not support defendants' conduct given that the facts made it more likely than not that one of the deputies was the assailant, or that defendants' conduct in reassigning deputies after their refusal to answer investigator's questions violated a constitutional right. Aguilera v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 1203. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Assuming peace officer and other employees of not-for-profit animal protection organization acted under color of state law, their conduct, in searching animal owner's house and seizing some of her animals pursuant to facially valid warrant, did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known, as would have caused forfeiture of their right to qualified immunity as government officials; it was objectively reasonable for employees to search home based upon warrant because of their belief, supported by complaints from public, that mistreatment of animals took place in owner's home, and it was objectively reasonable for employees to seize animals that were in apparent squalor, confined, and without food and water. Fabrikant v. French, N.D.N.Y.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 303. Civil Rights 1373; Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who had seized minors after their companion had been observed entering police car despite lacking probable cause to do so was not entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by minors challenging their detention; standards governing seizures under Fourth Amendment and probable cause were well-known to reasonable police officers in September 1993, when seizure occurred, and officer had failed to conduct any investigation before making seizure despite having been told that only companion entered police car. Irvin v. Kaczmaryn, N.D.Ill.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1190. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3886. ---- Applications for search warrants, police activities, clearly established right

Police department employees were entitled to qualified immunity for their involvement in invalid administrative search warrant for officer's garage, where interplay between Fourth Amendment rights of police officers and right of police departments to demand obedience was unclear at time of issuance of warrant in 1982, and employees had relied in good faith on advice of assistant city attorney. Los Angeles Police Protective League v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 907 F.2d 879, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

For purposes of determining whether state's attorney and sheriff's deputy were entitled to qualified immunity in preparation of search warrant applications allegedly permitting unconstitutional prior restraint of allegedly obscene materials, there was clearly established right to adversarial hearing prior to mass seizure, and judge's issuance of warrant did not, in itself, shield these defendants from liability, so that finding of qualified immunity depended on whether defendants' actions were reasonable. Hicks v. Cassilly, D.Md.1997, 971 F.Supp. 956, reversed 153 F.3d 720, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1037, 525 U.S. 1143, 143 L.Ed.2d 45. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(9)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action arising out of officers' use of suspect profile which included suspect's race, even though race of assailant was unknown and victim's speculation as to assailant's race was different than race included in profile; law clearly prohibited use of race in profile as evidence in determining probable cause for search warrant. Simmons v. Baker, E.D.Va.1994, 842 F.Supp. 883, reversed in part 47 F.3d 1370. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law on issue whether no-knock search warrant was permissible for six pounds of marijuana was not clearly established, and, thus, detective who prepared warrant application and captain who reviewed it were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability; training manual of police department contained dicta from Colorado Supreme Court to effect that any search for narcotics, regardless of any particularized showing that evidence may be destroyed, is presumptively exigent and justifies no-knock entry. Hall v. Lopez, D.Colo.1993, 823 F.Supp. 857. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Search of drug suspect's vagina was not so unreasonable as to violate clearly established constitutional right and deprive officer who applied for and initiated execution of warrant of qualified immunity; suspect did not have clearly established constitutional right to be free from manual body cavity search conducted by physician at hospital pursuant to warrant issued on probable cause. Rodriquez v. Furtado, D.Mass.1991, 771 F.Supp. 1245, affirmed 950 F.2d 805. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Alleged unconstitutionality of zoning ordinance upon which search warrant was based and alleged violation of landowners' constitutional rights were not sufficiently obvious to warrant waiver of police officers' qualified immunity. Johnson v. City of Willoughby Hills, N.D.Ohio 1989, 720 F.Supp. 612. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3887. ---- Execution of search warrants, police activities, clearly established right

Police officer who executed search warrant that ambiguously described location of search as apartment "upstairs on the right" violated clearly established Fourth Amendment rights of residents of apartment mistakenly searched, precluding qualified immunity in residents' §§ 1983 action against officer, where officer knew from his prior surveillance of same building that warrant was insufficiently particular due to building's twin opposite-facing entrances; although ambiguity alone did not render warrant defective, officer's knowledge required him to clarify description prior to execution, rather than using his own assumptions or deductions to resolve ambiguity. Jones v. Wilhelm, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 425 F.3d 455. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County sheriff and sheriff's deputies were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for their conduct in executing invalid search warrant for automobile, in automobile owner's §§ 1983 action against sheriff and deputies; the warrant described a vehicle completely different than the one ultimately searched, the Fourth Amendment prohibition on the search of one vehicle when the warrant described another vehicle was clearly established, and reliance on the obviously inaccurate warrant was objectively unreasonable. Knott v. Sullivan, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 418 F.3d 561. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Strip-search of mother and her minor daughter in the course of execution of a search warrant for drugs at their home was in violation of their clearly established rights at the time the search occurred in 1999, and thus, officers who executed the search were not entitled to qualified immunity for the violation of the Fourth Amendment, where the search of the mother and daughter exceeded scope of the warrant and there was no probable cause to search them. Doe v. Groody, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 361 F.3d 232, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 111, 543 U.S. 873, 160 L.Ed.2d 121. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officers' five to 12 second wait between knock and announce and entry into home for purpose of executing search warrant was violation of homeowners' Fourth Amendment rights, officers would be entitled to qualified immunity in homeowners' § 1983 action, based on homeowners' failure to establish that an interval of that length was unconstitutional at the time the search was conducted. Molina ex rel. Molina v. Cooper, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 325 F.3d 963. Civil Rights 1376(6)

That officers searching claimants' house for evidence in murder investigation of claimants' former boarder were in claimants' bedroom, rather than boarder's, when claimants' cash and pistol were seized did not preclude application of plain view doctrine or qualified immunity for individual officers in claimants' § 1983 action; officers did not know which bedroom was claimants' and which was boarder's, and search of all bedrooms was authorized. Perkins v. City of West Covina, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1004, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 1690, 523 U.S. 1105, 140 L.Ed.2d 812, reversed 119 S.Ct. 678, 525 U.S. 234, 142 L.Ed.2d 636, on remand 167 F.3d 1286. Civil Rights 1376(6); Searches And Seizures 47.1

Alleged general privacy violation occurring through presence of news reporter and camera crew at search of animal shelter and shelter operator's house was not established right that would overcome qualified immunity defense in operator's § 1983 action. Stack v. Killian, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 96 F.3d 159, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(1)

Even if plain clothes police officers executing search warrant did not announce their identity and purpose before shooting suspect, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action by wife of killed suspect, because duty to announce identity and state purpose was not "clearly established" at time suspect was shot, and because police officer had reasonable belief that he had to use deadly force against suspect when suspect reached for firearm. St. Hilaire v. City of Laconia, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1995, 71 F.3d 20, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 2548, 518 U.S. 1017, 135 L.Ed.2d 1068. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established in June 1987 that police officers executing warrant cannot rely on information gathered at scene to reinterpret warrant's identification of premises to be searched, even if warrant's identifications were regarded as erroneous, and police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in action under federal civil rights statute alleging that search of third home on street made after officers in executing warrant for search of fourth home on street in which named suspect was believed to live learned that suspect actually lived in third home was unlawful warrantless search. Velardi v. Walsh, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 40 F.3d 569. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's civil rights action in connection with execution of search warrant even though party for which officer was searching lived at another residence as, even if probable cause to search was lacking, that conclusion was not the necessary result of clearly established laws; officer had found hand-rolled cigarettes in plastic bags, narcotics pipe, and bag of white powder and box of baggies in course of conducting search. Warlick v. Cross, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 969 F.2d 303, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff and deputy were not entitled to qualified immunity from property owner's civil rights claim for allegedly searching beyond scope of warrant that permitted search of gravel-filled well, lying in affidavit to obtain warrant, and searching land beneath pasture without warrant; alleged conduct would violate clearly established constitutional rights. Husband v. Bryan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 946 F.2d 27. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Officers who dragged resident out of bed by arm during execution of search warrant, pinned him up against entertainment center, pushed shotgun against his head, placed him in handcuffs, and searched his mouth were not entitled to qualified immunity at summary judgment stage in resident's §§ 1983 excessive force claim; although law that handcuffing person during search for evidence violated Fourth Amendment was not clearly established at time of search, law was sufficiently clear to place officer on notice that using this type of force against individual complying with search was unlawful. Hansen v. Schubert, E.D.Cal.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 973. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time of actions at issue, Fourth Amendment's prohibition against unreasonable searches did not require police to identify themselves as police and state their purpose, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 suit for allegedly entering arrestee's residence pursuant to search warrant without identifying themselves as police. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who entered suspect's home to serve arrest warrant was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action; reasonable officer could have concluded that suspect resided, and was present, in home at time officer attempted to serve warrant and that objectively valid arrest warrant authorized entry into home to effectuate service without consent, and officer did not violate any laws which, at time of his actions, were clearly established. Smith v. Tolley, E.D.Va.1997, 960 F.Supp. 977. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Where deputies were acting pursuant to M.C.L.A. § 780.656, specifically authorizing the breaking of doors and windows in order to execute warrants if, after notice of authority and purpose, officer is refused admittance, their actions in executing the warrant in that manner did not deprive them of qualified immunity in subsequent action under this section. Eliason Corp. v. Bureau of Safety and Regulation of Michigan Dept. of Labor, W.D.Mich.1983, 564 F.Supp. 1298. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3888. ---- Warrantless searches, police activities, clearly established right

Law as to whether an "all persons" warrant, authorizing the search of all persons present where search was to be executed, was constitutional was not clearly established at time occupants of residence were either strip-searched or patted-down pursuant to warrant authorizing search of residence and all persons located therein for drugs, and thus, county sheriff, deputy sheriff, and two unnamed county deputies were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action brought by occupants of searched residence, where neither Supreme Court nor Court of Appeals had addressed issue, and persuasive authority from other jurisdictions did not provide a clear view or consensus. Owens ex rel. Owens v. Lott, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2004, 372 F.3d 267, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 876, 543 U.S. 1050, 160 L.Ed.2d 771. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Apartment residents' allegation that officers from sheriff's department continued searching their apartment pursuant to search warrant even after officers independently verified that targets of investigation no longer occupied apartment alleged violation of residents' clearly established Fourth Amendment rights, thus precluding dismissal of residents' resulting § 1983 action at motion to dismiss phase based on officers' assertion of qualified immunity. Peterson v. Jensen, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 371 F.3d 1199. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's right to be free from public exposure, touching, and penetration of her genitalia and kneading of her buttocks during search conducted in public view and incident to arrest for misdemeanor noise violation, when there was no security risk or threat of concealment or destruction of evidence, was clearly established at the time of search, and therefore officer who allegedly conducted search in such manner was not entitled to summary judgment in arrestee's § 1983 action on qualified immunity grounds. Amaechi v. West, C.A.4 (Va.) 2001, 237 F.3d 356. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Warrantless search of dentist's office by staff-investigator for state board of dental examiners was administrative search that did not violate any clearly established constitutional or statutory rights, and, thus, investigator was entitled to qualified immunity in dentist's § 1983 and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) action, even though investigator suspected dentist of criminal activity regarding improper use of controlled substances and he was accompanied by law enforcement officer; regulation and monitoring of use of controlled substances in dentistry profession was substantial state interest, records and documents in dental offices were subject to on-site inspections, inspection programs provided adequate substitute for warrant, and fact that investigator suspected dentist of criminal wrongdoing did not render administrative search unreasonable. Beck v. Texas State Bd. of Dental Examiners, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 204 F.3d 629, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 171, 531 U.S. 871, 148 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Objectively reasonable law enforcement officer in wildlife conservation officer's position would have known that searches of taxidermist's home and business, seeking evidence of criminal wrongdoing, could only be carried out under properly executed warrant, and would have known that warrantless searches were not authorized by governing Pennsylvania administrative statute or regulation, thus precluding conservation officer from claiming qualified immunity from taxidermist's § 1983 suit. Showers v. Spangler, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1999, 182 F.3d 165. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Plaintiffs stated Fourth Amendment violation to which police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on ground that warrantless entry of individual's house was justified by exigent circumstances; plaintiffs claimed that officers broke down door of empty home and left individual, who had been outside, there alone after they had determined that he was in dire need of care, that no emergency aid was given, and that, by moving him inside, officers prevented individual from receiving aid that had already been requested by others. Penilla v. City of Huntington Park, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 115 F.3d 707, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2059, 524 U.S. 904, 141 L.Ed.2d 137. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers, police chief, and town were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 civil rights action in which plaintiff parents alleged that officers' entry into their home without search warrant to arrest their son, who did not reside at parents' home, violated their Fourth Amendment rights, since law was not settled whether police entry into home without search warrant to arrest nonresident subject of arrest warrant, when subject answers door, violates Fourth Amendment. Joyce v. Town of Tewksbury, Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 112 F.3d 19. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Highway patrol officer's random warrantless safety inspection of commercial propane truck, which occurred at port of entry after valid traffic stop on nearby road, did not violate clearly established law so as to preclude qualified immunity defense to § 1983 action. V-1 Oil Co. v. Means, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1420. Civil Rights 1376(6)

While some of the police officers involved in raid pursuant to search warrant on upper duplex unit had been present during previous warrant execution for that unit, initial mistake in entering the lower unit, for which there was no warrant, was a reasonable one under the circumstances, and was protected by qualified immunity, given the circumstances of raid at night when vision was poor and any delay could have been potentially detrimental to arrest of suspect and seizure of evidence, while prior search had been by daylight, was not a raid and door leading to stairs to upper unit was then open; further, any search or seizure that occurred while officers were still under mistaken but reasonable belief that they were in fact executing warrant at correct residence would be protected by qualified immunity, but any search or seizure thereafter would no longer be protected by qualified immunity. Pray v. City of Sandusky, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 49 F.3d 1154. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer, who conducted protective sweeps of house after arrests of homeowners and their guests upon neighbor's complaint about loud party, was protected by qualified immunity from claim that officer violated Fourth Amendment by conducting sweeps; sweeps were at least arguably permissible, as officer testified she did not know whether additional people were in house, that situation was chaotic, that everyone was aggressive toward officers, and that she did quick sweep to make sure no one else was in house for officer safety. Greiner v. City of Champlin,

C.A.8 (Minn.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Homeowner never had clearly established right permitting plain view seizure of stolen property in her home only if discovery was inadvertent, and, thus, state troopers seeking discovery of the property while executing arrest warrant were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability, whether discovery was purposeful or inadvertent; majority of United States Supreme Court never believed that inadvertence is requirement of plain view doctrine. Bradway v. Gonzales, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 26 F.3d 313. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Parole officers were entitled to qualified immunity from claim that they exceeded scope of otherwise lawful protective sweep for dangerous individual when they searched between mattress and box spring of bed; it was unclear whether, during course of otherwise justified protective sweep, Fourth Amendment permits simultaneously conducted limited search of places that might contain weapon readily accessible to as-yet undiscovered individual. Crooker v. Metallo, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1993, 5 F.3d 583. Civil Rights 1376(7)

For purposes of determining qualified immunity of state official who conducted search of gas station property, the right of the gas station owner not to be inspected pursuant to a statute such as the Wyoming Environmental Quality Act without a search warrant was clearly established at the time of the search. V-1 Oil Co. v. State of Wyo., Dept. of Environmental Quality, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1990, 902 F.2d 1482, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 295, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L.Ed.2d 249. Civil Rights 1376(3)

State officials were not entitled to qualified immunity arising from strip and body cavity search of citizen arrested for failure to pay parking tickets, in light of prior holdings that such searches were in violation of Fourth Amendment, and an absence of reasons objectively demonstrating need for the searches. Walsh v. Franco, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1988, 849 F.2d 66. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Departmental investigators were not entitled to qualified immunity on claim that they violated public employee's Fourth Amendment rights in conducting warrantless search of her home and seizing her personal computers as part of investigation into alleged workplace wrongdoing, as necessity of obtaining warrant to intrude on employee's privacy interest in her home was clearly established when investigators acted in 2002. Sabin v. Miller, S.D.Iowa 2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 943. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Officers were qualifiedly immune from §§ 1983 claim arising from their warrantless entry into suspect's residence, inasmuch as it would not be clear to reasonable officer that exigent circumstances did not exist, given volatile situation at residence and officers' knowledge of prior events that night, including suspect's involvement in fight. Davis v. Township of Paulsboro, D.N.J.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 835. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Property owners' Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures was clearly established, and thus employees of state Department of Environmental Management (DEM) were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 arising from their warrantless search of private property suspected of being site of illegal dumping, even though state statute permitted warrantless searches, where there were no exigent circumstances, state supreme court had not upheld statute's constitutionality, and DEM's proposed internal guidelines required warrant. Vinagro v. Reitsma, D.R.I.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 425. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Police officer who searched student's vehicle at school after receiving anonymous tip that student had handgun in his vehicle was entitled to qualified immunity despite claimed absence of probable cause, in that it was not clearly established that probable cause was required. James By and Through James v. Unified School Dist. No. 512, D.Kan.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1407. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clear that sheriff deputy's act of ordering strip search of nonviolent minor offense arrestee was in violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches, and thus officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 action alleging deprivation of her Fourth Amendment right. Dugas v.

Jefferson County, E.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 1315, affirmed 127 F.3d 33. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Strip search of motorist was not reasonable under clearly established law, and thus did not support qualified immunity of trooper from § 1983 liability, absent any evidence that motorist possessed drugs or any risk that motorist would be intermingled with general jail population; although motorist had been arrested for driving while under influence of marijuana, no drugs or drug paraphernalia had been found on motorist, on her passenger, or in her vehicle. Foote v. Spiegel, D.Utah 1995, 903 F.Supp. 1463, affirmed in part, reversed in part, dismissed in part 118 F.3d 1416, on remand 995 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer could reasonably believe that his warrantless entry into misdemeanor suspect's home did not violate "clearly established" constitutional right, protecting officer from liability in civil rights action arising when suspect was fatally shot; officer knew that suspect had fled from two other officers when they had attempted to make Terry stop and was brandishing a knife and refusing one of the officer's request to put down the weapon. Alto v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1994, 863 F.Supp. 658. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Individual officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on Fourth Amendment claims of deputy sheriff who brought § 1983 action based on drug test which was administered without her consent; deputy's Fourth Amendment right was clearly established at time of test, and no reasonable officer could have believed that recommended search of deputy was lawful. Pike v. Gallagher, D.N.M.1993, 829 F.Supp. 1254. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Female arrestee failed to show that pat-down search conducted by male officer after her arrest was unconstitutional and therefore, officers were entitled to qualified immunity on pat-down claim in § 1983 action; arrestee did not specifically argue that method in which officer conducted search gave rise to constitutional violation, but instead implied that because male officer, rather than female officer, conducted search, search was per se constitutional violation and arrestee's testimony that she felt search was inappropriate was too general a statement to satisfy arrestee's burden of showing that officer violated her clearly established constitutional rights. Greiner v. City of Champlin, D.Minn.1993, 816 F.Supp. 528, rescinded 27 F.3d 1346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from parents' Fourth Amendment claim alleging that officers engaged in unconsented warrantless inspections of home and of child's vaginal area as part of criminal sexual abuse investigation; Fourth Amendment at time of search clearly established that officers were prohibited from conducting warrantless searches of home and of child's body for evidence, absent consent or exigent circumstances. Franz v. Lytle, D.Kan.1992, 791 F.Supp. 827, affirmed 997 F.2d 784. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State law enforcement officers did not violate clearly established constitutional norms in searching property, although property owners contended search was within curtilage and required warrant, and therefore, state law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action based on search; genuine dispute existed over whether area searched could reasonably have been thought to have been outside curtilage. Williams v. Garrett, W.D.Va.1989, 722 F.Supp. 254. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' warrantless search of arrestees' residence did not violate clearly established law, entitling officers to qualified immunity in subsequent civil rights action based on the search; resident at home had consented to search, and officers had reasonable grounds to believe that there was possible kidnapping in progress. Harris v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.Kan.1988, 703 F.Supp. 1455, reconsideration denied 714 F.Supp. 1138. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of state troopers in searching detainee's house after he withdrew consent and in the absence of exigent circumstances violated clearly established law of the Third Circuit so that they were not immune from liability in arrestee's action under federal civil rights statue, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

3889. ---- Confiscation of property, police activities, clearly established right

Police chief's consultation with city attorney before chief's warrantless seizure of more than 70 purportedly derelict vehicles from landowner's property did not constitute "extraordinary circumstances" that prevented him from knowing the clearly established law, and so chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from landowner's suit for violation of her Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable seizures and her Fourteenth Amendment right to due process; chief and attorney never once discussed the applicable constitutional law governing his conduct, which required a warrant or notice-and-hearing, and chief pointed to nothing in his consultation with attorney that prevented him from knowing the law. Lawrence v. Reed, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2005, 406 F.3d 1224. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established that city police officers' allegedly illegal eviction of residents of women's shelter constituted "seizure" of property for Fourth Amendment purposes, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity in residents' § 1983 action alleging that officers forced them to vacate their rooms at shelter without any colorable legal authority, where officers never asserted physical control over property in question. (Per opinion of Gilman, Circuit Judge, for a majority of the court). Thomas v. Cohen, C.A.6 (Ky.) 2002, 304 F.3d 563, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2075, 538 U.S. 1032, 155 L.Ed.2d 1061. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity for federal civil rights claims against him individually for his participation in repossession of vehicle from plaintiffs by dealership where it was not clear that repossession effectuated by dealership was unlawful, and where, under plaintiffs' version of facts, repossession appeared to have been completed prior to officer's involvement; officer could not have known his actions might violate constitutional rights as no precedent clearly held that officer's mere presence at or after lawful instance of self-help repossession could violate Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments. Cofield v. Randolph County Com'n, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 90 F.3d 468. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not violate clearly established law at time he seized allegedly obscene videotapes by seizing all volumes of videotapes within two series named in warrant, entitling him to immunity from personal liability in video store owner's civil rights action, where warrant gave titles to two of the series without referring to specific volume number, leaving open reasonable interpretation that seizure of all volumes within series was permissible. Supreme Video, Inc. v. Schauz, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1435, on remand 927 F.Supp. 321. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from claim that they wrongfully seized detainee's property, without probable cause and without providing due process, by forcing him to disclaim interest in property after unlawful detention; probable cause requirements and right to due process were clearly established at time of seizure, and reasonable person would have understood that alleged actions would have violated detainee's rights. Craig v. St. Martin Parish Sheriff, W.D.La.1994, 861 F.Supp. 1290. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Alabama deputy sheriff who moved to dismiss, for failure to state claim, § 1983 action against him in his individual capacity arising from his participation in repossession of automobile was not entitled to qualified immunity at that stage of proceedings; he was clearly acting in his capacity as deputy sheriff in "repossessing" automobile without displaying court order or any other official documentation supporting appropriateness of his actions, and it was unclear whether reasonable person would have believed that he did not violate clearly established constitutional right not to be deprived of one's property without due process of law. Cofield v. Randolph County Com'n, M.D.Ala.1994, 844 F.Supp. 1499. Civil Rights 1376(6)

District of Columbia police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in action by owner of stolen automobile alleging deprivation of property without due process where police, as part of undercover sting operation, held her automobile in storage; officer's conduct resulted in violation of clearly established constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. O'Callaghan v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1990, 741 F.Supp. 273. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3890. ---- High speed chase, police activities, clearly established right

State police officer was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit arising out of fatal accident occurring during high-speed chase; officer violated no clearly established constitutional right of victim when he conducted high-speed chase of suspect without activating his lights or siren and without maintaining radio contact in fashion prescribed by police regulation. Magdziak v. Byrd, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 96 F.3d 1045. Civil Rights 1376(6)

The law that, absent certain inapplicable exceptions, police officers may not without a warrant enter an area in which there is a reasonable expectation of privacy, was clearly established when police officers made warrantless entry into dressing room occupied by dancer at club which was subject to city's sexually-oriented business ordinance, and thus, the officers lacked qualified immunity to the dancer's §§ 1983 claim against the officers for violation of her Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable searches and seizures. Bevan v. Smartt, D.Utah 2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 1153. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Motorist's right not to be stopped without reasonable articulable suspicion was clearly established, and thus police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by innocent victims of high-speed chase that occurred after officers made attempt to stop motorist; motorist was legally stopped at stop sign when officers first saw him, and did not travel at high rate of speed until officers attempted to pull him over. Slusarchuk v. Hoff, D.Minn.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 1007, reversed in part 346 F.3d 1178, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2018, 541 U.S. 988, 158 L.Ed.2d 492. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if Fourth Amendment seizure occurred when operator of all terrain vehicle (ATV) crashed into drainage ditch while being pursued by police, pursuing officers were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit as officers did not violate any clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable persons would have known, in that there was no case law in which finding of unreasonable seizure was predicated solely on hot pursuit of fleeing suspect, even when pursuit follows suspect into known and dangerous obstacle. Wozniak v. Cavender, N.D.Ill.1995, 875 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3891. ---- Harassment, police activities, clearly established right

Continued police surveillance of physician's office following search of office for evidence of Medicare fraud did not amount to harassment that violated clearly established right, as required to support federal civil rights claim. Mays v. City of Dayton, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1998, 134 F.3d 809, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2352, 524 U.S. 942, 141 L.Ed.2d 722. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established, as of August 25, 2000, that inmate had a federal right to due process protections in connection with the revocation of good time credits which an auditor believed had been erroneously awarded in light of the inmate's refusal to admit to sex offenses, as required for admission into a sex offender treatment program (SOTP), an thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on the inmate's §§ 1983 claim; the revocation was in the nature of a ministerial action that retroactively implemented the consequences of the choice presented to the inmate at an adjustment review. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 5, 14; DeYonghe v. Ward, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 335, 2005 WL 165449, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3892. ---- Special relationship, police activities, clearly established right

Bar fight participant was not in police custody either in bar parking lot or when he was driven by police to nearby service station to call for a ride home, where officer told participant he was free to leave from beginning, participant knew charges were not being pressed against him, participant was not handcuffed, child-safety lock on rear passenger compartment of squad car which would have prevented him from exiting was disengaged, and participant left squad car voluntarily and thanked officer for ride; accordingly, no "special relationship" implicating due process duty to provide protective services existed between participant and police, and qualified immunity protected police officers from liability in participant's estate's civil rights action. Estate of Stevens v. City of Green Bay, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1997, 105 F.3d 1169. Arrest 68(3); Civil Rights 1376(6); Constitutional Law 253(1)

3893. ---- State created danger, police activities, clearly established right

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim arising from beating death of undercover operative during attempted drug buy; law surrounding violation of operative's asserted due process right to be protected from third-party violence in context of State endangerment was not sufficiently clear that reasonable officer would have understood that what he was doing violated that right. Butera v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2001, 235 F.3d 637, 344 U.S.App.D.C. 265, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 due process claim brought by mother on behalf of her children, who were killed by father, allegedly as result of failure of police to provide protection from father, since whole question of constitutional duty not to affirmatively abuse governmental power so as to create danger to individuals and render them more vulnerable to harm was not clearly established at time children were killed. Soto v. Flores, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 103 F.3d 1056, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 71, 522 U.S. 819, 139 L.Ed.2d 32. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Any constitutional right of a vehicle passenger violated by a police officer's interactions with the vehicle's driver prior to an accident resulting in the driver's conviction for vehicular manslaughter and driving under the influence was not clearly established, thus defeating the passenger's claim, in a §§ 1983 suit, that the officer violated her Fourteenth Amendment right to substantive due process under the state-created danger doctrine; mere inaction in the face of a known or suspected danger was not enough to constitute a state-created danger. Jamison v. Storm, W.D.Wash.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1144. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Contours of constitutional duty arising under state endangerment theory were not sufficiently clear at time that postal supervisors' allegedly misrepresented to employees that facility was not contaminated with anthrax, and thus supervisors were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in employees' action alleging violation of their substantive due process rights, where case law in circuit was unclear as to whether state endangerment theory could apply to individual who voluntarily participated in activity that ultimately caused him harm. Briscoe v. Potter, D.D.C.2004, 355 F.Supp.2d 30. United States 50.10(1)

Deputy sheriffs had qualified immunity from § 1983 claim, of students wounded in attack on high school by two armed students, for alleged substantive due process violation based on alleged improper responses to the attack and lack of rescue efforts; although the law on which the wounded students relied, the state created/enhanced danger and special relationship exceptions to the to the general rule that a state is not obligated by substantive due process principles to protect individuals against private violence, were clearly established at the time of the attack, the contours of the rights flowing from these exceptions in the situation confronted were far from clear and provided no notice to reasonable officers that their conduct violated substantive due process rights. Schnurr v. Board of County Com'rs of Jefferson County, D.Colo.2001, 189 F.Supp.2d 1105. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity on claim of supervisory liability in § 1983 action brought by survivors of high school students who were shot and killed during shooting spree at school; even if supervisory liability for personal direction or actual knowledge and acquiescence in conduct violating constitutional rights was clearly established in the abstract, the rights allegedly violated related to the state-created danger and special relationship exceptions to the rule that a state has no duty to protect citizens from harm inflicted by third parties, and the contours of such rights were not sufficiently clear in the situation presented. Rohrbough v.

Stone, D.Colo.2001, 189 F.Supp.2d 1088. Civil Rights 1376(6)

"State-created danger" due process right was not clearly established at time of neighborhood unrest arising from death of African-American child, and thus former mayor and city police commissioner were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 suit brought by members of Hasidic Jewish community, in which members claimed that defendants emboldened participants in unrest by failing to arrest individuals for unlawful assembly and by ignoring pleas for assistances by individuals and community at large. Estate of Rosenbaum by Plotkin v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1997, 975 F.Supp. 206. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

3894. ---- Legal participants, police activities, clearly established right

Principle, that legal participants could be liable for violations by those under their control of due process right to bodily integrity, was not clearly established in 1993 when internal affairs division police personnel allegedly failed to prevent sexual assault on woman by police officer during sting operation, and internal affairs personnel thus were qualifiedly immune from woman's § 1983 suit alleging denial of such right. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 953 F.Supp. 793. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3895. ---- Reliance, police activities, clearly established right

State detective was not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action brought by individuals arrested for extortion on basis of detective's reliance on county prosecutor's determination that probable cause existed to support arrest; law was clearly established that threatening lawsuit for sexual harassment, and incident disclosure of extramarital affair, did not provide basis for crime of extortion in Michigan. Manetta v. County of Macomb, E.D.Mich.1997, 955 F.Supp. 771, reversed 141 F.3d 270. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3896. ---- Miscellaneous activities, police activities, clearly established right

Even if police officers were so involved in aiding title holder's repossession of boat from purported owner under contract for deed that the deprivation of the boat was state action, for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment's due process guarantee, it was not clearly established that officers' conduct under the circumstances would amount to state action, and, thus, officers had qualified immunity from purported owner's civil rights action alleging that officers had deprived him of his property without due process when they permitted title holder to repossess boat; officers were required to make a close decision in midst of a repossession fracas and could not have determined they were becoming so entangled in title holder's private self-help remedy pursuant to Missouri law that they could be held liable under §§ 1983. Moore v. Carpenter, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 404 F.3d 1043. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from suit under § 1983 for removing minor daughter from mother's custody pursuant to unenforceable custody order issued by court in another state, in violation of mother's and daughter's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights; due process requirement of notice and opportunity to be heard in state court before daughter could be seized pursuant to out-of-state default order, and unreasonableness of seizing daughter pursuant to out-of-state order, were not clearly established. Dunn v. City of Elgin, Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 641, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

When police officers allegedly disposed of evidence of theft to preclude victims from suing suspected thief, it was not clear that such misconduct would amount to constitutional violation, rather than simple state tort action, and therefore officers were entitled to qualified immunity from victims' § 1983 claim alleging that officers' intentional disposal of evidence violated their right of access to the courts. Harrell v. Cook, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1999, 169 F.3d 428. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City's mayor, police officer, and parking monitor were entitled to qualified immunity in vehicle owner's civil rights action under § 1983 against them in their individual capacities, alleging that his constitutional right to due process was violated when a "wheel boot" was placed upon and immobilized his vehicle while parked in city, where each was acting in good faith in an effort to perform their respective jobs and to enforce city's ordinances as written, and law in area of "wheel booting" was not patently clear. Gross v. Carter, W.D.Ark.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 995. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

City and county law enforcement officers had qualified immunity as to claims brought against them in their individual capacities, in former tenant's §§ 1983 action alleging a violation of tenant's federal due process rights through alleged violation of Minnesota statute giving a residential tenant 24 hours to leave and take personal property from leased premises when writ of recovery is executed; officers did not violate a clearly established statutory or constitutional right. Pahnke v. Anderson Moving and Storage, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 892. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if attorney's consensual, albeit adulterous, sexual activities with client in the confines of his private office fell within boundaries of constitutional protection, county officials were entitled to qualified immunity from claims arising from surveillance of attorney's activities, which occurred in response to client's complaint regarding attorney's actions with the Tennessee Board of Professional Responsibility, since law was not clearly established at the time of the investigation of attorney that attorney was entitled to constitutional protection. Cawood v. Haggard, E.D.Tenn.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 863, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 700, 2005 WL 773946. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officers committed a First Amendment violation by erasing protesters' audio and video recordings, they were entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability since it was not clearly established that destruction of recordings constituted violation of the First Amendment. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 130 Fed.Appx. 987, 2005 WL 1221632. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For qualified immunity purposes, it was not clearly established that fact witnesses under a subpoena in a criminal prosecution were constitutionally entitled to police protection, or that providing temporary visible protection of such individuals gave rise to such a right. Clarke v. Sweeney, D.Conn.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 277. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established at time that sheriff deputies arrested club patrons at club for violating Florida statute, prohibiting lewdness, that patrons' conduct had to offend someone other than law enforcement officers to be considered lewd, and thus deputies were entitled to qualified immunity from patrons' claims that arrests were made without probable cause in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments; Florida statute did not explicitly contain "offensiveness to others" element, and preexisting case law had not construed statute to include such element. Hall v. Stewart, S.D.Fla.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City and county defendants were entitled to qualified immunity in claims for monetary damages in § 1983 action alleging unconstitutional use of wiretapping, inasmuch as the unconstitutionality of defendants' actions in concealing the existence of wiretaps was not clearly established at the time of the activity. Whitaker v. Garcetti, C.D.Cal.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1132. Civil Rights 1376(4)

House occupant's allegation that police officers intentionally burned house during search while occupant was present was sufficient to state violation of clearly established right to be free from unreasonable searches or use of excessive force, for purposes of determining officers' entitlement to qualified immunity in § 1983 action. Johnson v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 944 F.Supp. 586. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who transported an individual to a hospital without his consent for a psychiatric evaluation did not violate any clearly established constitutional right, and thus, were entitled to qualified immunity in the individual's § § 1983 suit; the individual presented no case law that would have put the officers on notice that his indisputably strange behavior did not rise to a level justifying an involuntary psychiatric evaluation. Must v. West Hills Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 126 Fed.Appx. 539, 2005 WL 605831, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police chief and police officer were not entitled to qualified immunity in action, brought by murder victim's husband, claiming that officers violated his First Amendment privacy rights by disclosing honeymoon photographs, depicting the couple naked, to people not connected with the investigation; privacy right in such pictures was clearly established. Donohue v. Hoey, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 109 Fed.Appx. 340, 2004 WL 2095661, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1641, 544 U.S. 921, 161 L.Ed.2d 478. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who left a mental health facility, after placing a violent patient in restraints at the request of staff members, without removing the restraints, again at the request of staff and on the assurance that the patient would shortly be transported to another facility, were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action alleging unlawful seizure and due process violations; no clearly established law existed that would make it clear to any reasonable officer that their actions violated any constitutional right. Lucero v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 77 Fed.Appx. 470, 2003 WL 22301239, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not violate any clearly established law in keeping a patient in custody and sending him to a hospital for evaluation in 1995, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability; police officers under the defendant officer's command knew that the patient was in psychiatric care, and the filthy conditions in his apartment and his refusal to respond to questions or allow a complete physical examination were evidence that he might not have been able to care for himself. Kerman v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 328297, Unreported, reversed 374 F.3d 93. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of police officer in pushing aside clothing worn by arrestee who had been apprehended by a police dog, and photographing areas of arrestee's body that he alleged had been injured by the dog, did not violate a clearly established right to privacy on part of arrestee, and thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action. Franklin v. Texarkana, Arkansas Police Dept., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 205 F.3d 1345, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3897. Prisons and prisoners, clearly established right--Generally

Inmate's constitutional right is clearly established for purposes of determining whether prison official is entitled to qualified immunity if contours of right are sufficiently clear that reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right. Prosser v. Ross, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1005. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Qualified immunity shields prison officials from liability for their discretionary acts that do not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Hathaway v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 37 F.3d 63, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1108, 513 U.S. 1154, 130 L.Ed.2d 1074, on subsequent appeal 99 F.3d 550. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials are entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by inmate unless officials violated inmate's clearly established constitutional rights; contours of such right must be sufficiently clear that reasonable official would understand what conduct violates that right. Brown v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1994, 33 F.3d 951, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Before prison official can be granted qualified immunity in civil rights suit brought by inmate, court must decide whether inmate has identified clearly established right alleged to have been violated and whether official reasonably should have known that conduct at issue was undertaken in violation of that right. Nelson v. Overberg, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 999 F.2d 162. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials are entitled to qualified immunity unless their conduct violates clearly established statutory or constitutional rights; they knew or should have known right was clearly established; and they knew or should have known their conduct violated right. Smith v. Marcantonio, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 910 F.2d 500. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

"Qualified immunity" allows law enforcement personnel and prison officials to perform their discretionary duties in good faith and shields them from civil damages for inadvertent infringements of constitutional rights; such immunity is not, however, available as defense if officer knew or reasonable should have known that law clearly proscribed action taken and that action violated clearly established statutory or constitutional rights. Oswald v. Graves, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 680. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison employees were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 claims, absent showing how the law or its applicability to them was unclear. Younger v. Chernovetz, D.Conn.1992, 792 F.Supp. 173. Prisons 10

3897A. ---- Administrative detention, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

At time of prisoner's 399-day administrative detention, it was not clearly established that such confinement would deprive prisoner of constitutionally cognizable liberty interest, and, thus, officials of the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's action under §§ 1983, alleging that conditions and duration of his administrative detention created a liberty interest triggering procedural due process protections which officials violated. Hill v. Fleming, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 173 Fed.Appx. 664, 2006 WL 856201, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3898. ---- Freedom of association, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Inmates had no clearly established constitutional right of association which was violated by policy authorizing strip and body cavity searches of visitors regardless of probable cause, for purpose of determining whether prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity. Long v. Norris, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1111, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 187, 502 U.S. 863, 116 L.Ed.2d 148. Civil Rights 1376(7)

There was no clearly established constitutional right of Jewish inmates to a kosher diet free of all conditions from 1998 to 2000, and thus, officials of Colorado prison system were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in §§ 1983 action brought by Jewish inmates alleging that failure to provide them with a kosher diet from 1998 to 2000, free of any conditions, violated their First Amendment right to the exercise of their religion. Rachamim v. Ortiz, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 731, 2005 WL 2093018, Unreported. Prisons 10

3899. ---- Freedom of religion, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

It was clearly established in 2000, for purposes of determining whether prison officials were qualifiedly immune from inmate's free-exercise and RLUIPA claims, that prison officials could not substantially burden inmates' right to religious exercise without some justification. Salahuddin v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 467 F.3d 263. Civil Rights 1376(7)

The First Amendment right that, viewing the evidence in light most favorable to inmate, was violated when prison officials punished inmate for refusing to handle or assist in preparing pork while working in prison kitchen was a clearly established right, and thus, officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's §§ 1983 claim that officials violated his right to free exercise of religion; although neither Supreme Court nor Court of Appeals had directly addressed whether requiring Muslim inmate to handle pork violated right to free exercise of religion, other courts that had considered precise question had uniformly held that prison officials had to respect and accommodate, when practicable, Muslim inmate's religious beliefs regarding prohibitions on handling pork. Williams v. Bitner, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 186. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity against inmate's §§ 1983 claim that prison officials' hindering of his observance of religious fast violated his right to religious exercise; law was clearly established that prison officials must have a legitimate penological interest before imposing a substantial burden on the free exercise of an inmate's religion, even when that inmate is in disciplinary segregation, and prison officials offered insubstantial evidence to support their asserted interest in rigid sign-up deadline for participation in the religious fast. Conyers v. Abitz, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 416 F.3d 580. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State corrections officials were not entitled to qualified immunity against inmate's § 1983 Free Exercise Clause claim arising from officials' refusal to serve Muslim religious feast to inmate in high-security area; inmate's right to receive diet consistent with his religious scruples was clearly established, as was his right to participate in religious services even in high-security area, and officials' belief that refusal did not violate these rights, based solely on opinion of corrections system's religious authorities that postponement of feast deprived it of its religious significance, was unreasonable. Ford v. McGinnis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 582. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from damages under § 1983 in inmate's action alleging that requiring inmate to unbraid his dreadlocked hair, to facilitate hair searches, violated inmate's right to free exercise of religion under Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) because inmate's hair style was dictated by his religion, absent clearly established right to be free from such searches or evidence that reasonable official would have understood that undoing inmate's dreadlocks violated such right. May v. Baldwin, C.A.9 (Or.) 1997, 109 F.3d 557, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 312, 522 U.S. 921, 139 L.Ed.2d 241. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established in 1984 or 1985 that denying an inmate kosher food violated his right to practice his religion, and accordingly, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action, despite retroactivity of Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA); Act could not be applied retroactively to make the law clear in such way as to create liability for prison officials. Friedman v. South, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1996, 92 F.3d 989. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials and female prison guard were entitled to qualified immunity against Muslim inmate's § 1983 action alleging that guard's participation in strip search and daily observations of male inmates violated inmate's First Amendment right to observe Muslim nudity taboos where, at time of events in question, it was not clear that a Muslim inmate's interest in observing religious nudity taboos outweighed prison's interests in having guards observe prisoners at all times and in all situations and in providing equal employment opportunity to women. Canedy v. Boardman, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 91 F.3d 30. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Muslim inmates had clearly established right not to handle pork at time when inmate was disciplined for refusing to handle pork, for purposes of determining whether prison officials were qualifiedly immune from inmate's § 1983 suit; Finney v. Hutto , which was decided before inmate was disciplined, clearly established such right, and, given that case was decided in jurisdiction in which present case arose and involved same prison system, it would be unreasonable for officials to be unaware of such right. Hayes v. Long, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 72 F.3d 70, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

New York state prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability in connection with their rejection of prisoner's requests in 1989 and 1990 for meals prepared in accordance with dietary laws of his religion; as early as 1975, United States Supreme Court had established that prison officials had to provide prisoner a diet that was consistent with his religious scruples, and that principle was not placed in any reasonable doubt by intervening rulings. Bass v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 976 F.2d 98. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Superintendent of correctional facility and Commissioner of New York State Department of Correctional Services were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought against them by inmate disciplined for violating regulations prohibiting group prayer and prayer in prison yard, where, at time discipline was imposed, legitimate question existed as to whether prisoner had right to engage in group prayer in prison yard. Shabazz v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 852 F.2d 697. Civil Rights 1376(7) institution did not have any "clearly established constitutional right" not to be disciplined for failing to respond to committed name during prison role call; accordingly, the prison officials who imposed such discipline were entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's § 1983 action. Muhammad v. Wainwright, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1987, 839 F.2d 1422. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging that his First Amendment rights were violated by the denial of his newspaper subscription; enforcement against inmate of rules restricting certain inmates' ability to subscribe to newspaper, magazine, and newsletter publications did not violate a clearly established constitutional right. Calia v. Werholtz, D.Kan.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1210. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established in 2002 that atheism was "religion" for purposes of state inmate's request to form atheist study group, and prison officials thus were qualifiedly immune from inmate's Establishment Clause claim, where no case had held that atheism was religion, and, although courts had recognized that secular humanism and other non-theistic belief systems were protected by Free Exercise Clause, inmate did not tell officials he was adherent of any such belief system, and did not indicate that his proposed group was connected to "religious" principles. Kaufman v. McCaughtry, W.D.Wis.2006, 422 F.Supp.2d 1016. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials who provided prisoner with a pork-free diet but allegedly refused his request for the vegetarian diet purportedly required by his Muslim religion were not entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's §§ 1983 claim for violation of his rights under the free exercise clause of the First Amendment; prisoner clearly alleged a deprivation of actual rights under the First Amendment, it was well established at the time of the alleged deprivation that prisoners retain their First Amendment rights inside prison walls, an objectively reasonable official would have known that he could not impinge on those rights unless his actions were reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and genuine issues of material fact remained as to whether denial of prisoner's request for a vegetarian diet was reasonably related to legitimate penological concerns. Shaheed-Muhammad v. Dipaolo, D.Mass.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 80. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections employees and officials did not have qualified immunity in Muslim inmate's §§1983 claim against them alleging that they violated RLUIPA by disciplining him for refusing to assist in preparation of pork while working in prison kitchen, since the right of Muslim inmates to avoid handling pork was clearly established at time of incidents. Williams v. Bitner, M.D.Pa.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 370. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's § 1983 claim of interference with his religious observance in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments; officials did not violate a clearly established law in following established policies and procedures while removing and disposing of prisoner's excess materials located inside his cell, and offering him options for disposing of those materials, which were in violation of those policies, which limited prisoners to possession of twelve books, plus one dictionary, one thesaurus and the primary religious text. Neal v. Lewis, D.Kan.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 1231, reconsideration denied 2004 WL 2009427, affirmed 414 F.3d 1244. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State inmates' First Amendment right to reasonable meal and dining accommodations that complied with their religious beliefs was clearly established by 1998, for purposes of determining whether prison officials were entitled to summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in Jewish inmate's § 1983 action alleging that officials unlawfully interfered with his right to take his meals in properly-secured booth during Sukkot. Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1237. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prisoner's right to reasonable opportunity to exercise his religion was clearly established constitutional right at time that prison chaplain's alleged conduct in interfering with prisoner's ability to observe a particular religious holiday occurred, and thus chaplain was not entitled to qualified immunity in his individual capacity from prisoner's civil rights suit based on that conduct, where the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals recognized that prisoner had right to reasonable opportunity to pursue his religion years before chaplain's alleged conduct.

Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prisoner's right to reasonable opportunity to exercise his religion was clearly established constitutional right at time that prison chaplain's alleged conduct in interfering with prisoner's ability to observe a particular religious holiday occurred, and thus chaplain was not entitled to qualified immunity in his individual capacity from prisoner's civil rights suit based on that conduct, where the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals recognized that prisoner had right to reasonable opportunity to pursue his religion years before chaplain's alleged conduct. Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Right of Shi'ite prisoners to be given separate religious accommodation from Sunnis was not clearly established at time that New York Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) employees allegedly violated inmate's free exercise right, and thus DOCS employees were entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's § 1983 free exercise claim. Cancel v. Mazzuca, S.D.N.Y.2002, 205 F.Supp.2d 128. Civil Rights 1376(7)

In related case brought by inmate, Court of Appeals' ruling that drug treatment program in which inmate participated while incarcerated at state correctional institution violated his rights under Establishment Clause, due to program's religious component, did not clearly establish any law in Seventh Circuit applicable when inmate was in prison, for purposes of state officials' qualified immunity defense in current case, since Court of Appeals' decision was issued after he was released. Kerr v. Puckett, E.D.Wis.1997, 967 F.Supp. 354, affirmed 138 F.3d 321 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established in October 1993, prior to enactment of Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), that actions of prison officials in isolating prisoner, who refused to undergo tuberculosis (TB) screening test on religious grounds, in medical isolation unit until court order allowing test could be obtained violated prisoner's free exercise rights under First Amendment, and thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's civil rights action; prior to enactment of RFRA, and its reinstatement of substantial burden test, officials would have had no reason to believe that their actions were unlawful. Jones-Bey v. Wright, N.D.Ind.1996, 944 F.Supp. 723. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from Muslim prisoner's civil rights claim based on prison's no hats policy; at time policy was enforced against prisoner, it was not clearly established that such rules violated prisoners' right to free exercise of religion. Muslim v. Frame, E.D.Pa.1995, 897 F.Supp. 215. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate failed to prove that it was "clearly established" that First Amendment right to free exercise of religion precluded prison officials from requiring him to undo his dreadlocks in order to facilitate hair search prior to his transfer from facility and, thus, prison officials were qualifiedly immune from liability for damages in inmate's § 1983 suit; case law clearly established that prison officials could freely regulate style and length of inmates' hair without offending their right to free exercise of religion. May v. Baldwin, D.Or.1995, 895 F.Supp. 1398, affirmed 109 F.3d 557, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 312, 522 U.S. 921, 139 L.Ed.2d 241. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials enjoyed qualified immunity from liability for any alleged violation of the RFRA for conduct which occurred before enactment of the RFRA as the RFRA was clearly a change in the law so that prison officials' conduct could not have violated a clearly established statutory or constitutional right. Woods v. Evatt, D.S.C.1995, 876 F.Supp. 756, affirmed 68 F.3d 463. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison chaplain was entitled to qualified immunity on claim that he violated inmates' right to free exercise of religion in denying requests for diet in compliance with religious beliefs of inmates not affiliated with recognized religious group, though prisons should make all reasonable accommodations to any sincerely held religious dietary belief of prisoner; split in authority concerning prisoner's right to special religious diet and lack of controlling precedent demonstrated that right was not clearly established. Kurtz v. Denniston, N.D.Iowa 1994, 872 F.Supp.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

631. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity respecting prisoners' claim that their constitutional rights were violated by officials' refusal to allow use of prison facilities for production of taped programs for broadcast on public-access television channel for purpose of promoting a particular religious belief, since law was not clear enough that reasonable official would have understood such refusal to be violation of constitutional rights; cases cited by prisoners were far removed from facts of instant case. Thompson v. Clarke, D.Neb.1994, 848 F.Supp. 1452. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Any right of protective custody inmates to participate in congregate religious services had not been clearly established, and, thus, warden and deputy warden were entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's civil rights action, which alleged that voluntarily segregated prisoner had been wrongfully denied opportunity to participate in congregate religious services in violation of First Amendment. Jones v. Stine, W.D.Mich.1994, 843 F.Supp. 1186. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Arrestee who was held in county jail as pretrial detainee did not have clearly established constitutional right to additional servings of food permitted by his religious diet, even if arrestee made his religious diet requirements sufficiently clear to sheriff and deputies, entitling sheriff and deputies to qualified immunity on arrestee's civil rights claim that they unduly delayed providing arrestee with diet in compliance with his religious requirements. Fillmore v. Ordonez, D.Kan.1993, 829 F.Supp. 1544, affirmed 17 F.3d 1436. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's claim that they violated his right to exercise his religious beliefs while he was in protective custody by failing to permit him to attend congregational religious services; at time inmate was incarcerated, prison officials could restrict inmate's desire to practice sincerely held religious belief upon showing that restriction was reasonably related to legitimate penological interest and did not clearly establish that prison officials were required to provide inmate with opportunity to attend congregational religious services, instead of, or in addition to providing inmate with religious counseling, Bible and other religious reading material. Gawloski v. Dallman, S.D.Ohio 1992, 803 F.Supp. 103. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3900. ---- Freedom of speech, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

First Amendment right of prisoner to approach and speak to prison officer while officer was disciplining another inmate was not clearly established, and so even if officer fabricated accusation that he saw prisoner's mother pass contraband into prison, which led to administrative segregation of prisoner from general prison population, in retaliation for prisoner's remarks, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's civil rights action. Rodriguez v. Phillips, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 66 F.3d 470. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Right to be free from retaliation for exercise of constitutional rights was clearly established at time prison officials banned prisoners' rights organization and its employees from prison during work strike threatening prison security, and thus, officials were not protected by qualified immunity from liability to organization and its employees for alleged violation of right to be free from retaliation for exercise of First Amendment right to speak out publicly about conditions at prison and to litigate to change conditions. Abel v. Miller, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 824 F.2d 1522, rehearing denied 849 F.2d 1018. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials did not act outside scope of their qualified immunity from inmate's federal civil rights action for allegedly violating his free speech rights by suppressing distribution of revolutionary publication within the prison system by failing to clip those portions of the publication which officials found threatening to prison security and allowing remainder to be distributed where, when officials acted, free speech rights of prisoners and scope of prison censorship were not clearly established law. Hernandez v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 788 F.2d 1154, rehearing denied 793 F.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate's conduct of writing letters to supervisor of combined records for North Carolina Department of Corrections was not so clearly protected by U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1 as to make it a "clearly established constitutional right," and therefore, prison authorities were entitled to immunity for disciplining inmate under prison regulation. Ross v. Reed, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1983, 719 F.2d 689. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3)

Prison employees' alleged creation of bogus misbehavior reports, improperly motivated prison transfers, and threats and attacks on inmate's life in retaliation for inmate's exercise of his First Amendment rights violated clearly established law, making qualified immunity unavailable in inmate's §§ 1983 action. Hernandez v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 537. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State corrections officials had qualified immunity from damages on claim inmate's First Amendment rights were violated when he was punished for circulating petition among prisoners; no case had been cited that held as of May 8, 1987, that First Amendment barred prison officials from regulating circulation through prison of petition with language such as that included in inmate's petition. Richardson v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1991, 763 F.Supp. 1228 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

First Amendment rights of prisoners were clearly established at time inmate wrote memorandum voicing opposition to disciplinary treatment of fellow inmate and, therefore, state corrections officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's civil rights action. Salahuddin v. Harris, S.D.N.Y.1988, 684 F.Supp. 1224. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3901. ---- Privacy right, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claim that his constitutional rights were violated by their disclosure of his human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)-positive status to other inmates or prison staff or by other measures taken against him on basis of his HIV status; at the time, an inmate's constitutional right to confidentiality of his HIV-positive status was not clearly established. Anderson v. Romero, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 72 F.3d 518. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmates' constitutional right to bodily privacy was not clearly established at time female correctional officers viewed inmates while they were nude and, thus, correctional officials enjoyed qualified immunity from civil damages liability in inmates' § 1983 action but not from injunctive relief. Fortner v. Thomas, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1993, 983 F.2d 1024. Civil Rights 1376(7)

A state assistant attorney general was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in a civil rights action growing out of an inmate's claim that his right to privacy was violated by use of a presentence report to formulate requests for admissions in the inmate's civil defamation suit against a police officer; there was no clearly established constitutional right to privacy in information contained in a presentence report. Wheeler v. Gilmore, E.D.Va.1998, 998 F.Supp. 666. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Privacy rights of inmates concerning disclosure of their human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) status was not clearly established when prison employee allegedly disclosed inmate's HIV status to other inmates who were nearby when inmate cut himself; therefore, prison employee was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action brought alleging a violation of his constitutional rights due to employee's communication to others regarding inmate's HIV-positive status. Quinones v. Howard, W.D.N.Y.1996, 948 F.Supp. 251. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3902. ---- Arrestees, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Arresting officer could not reasonably have believed that his threat to disclose suspected homosexuality of 18-year-old arrestee to arrestee's grandfather was lawful in light of established law protecting privacy rights and officer's acknowledgement that disclosure of arrestee's sexuality was matter of private concern, and therefore officer was not entitled to qualified immunity against § 1983 claim asserted by executrix for estate of arrestee, who committed suicide following his release from custody, even though conduct such as officer's had not previously been held to be unlawful. Sterling v. Borough of Minersville, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2000, 232 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In order to determine whether government official is entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims, district court must first determine whether a constitutional right would have been violated on the facts alleged, and if so, court must determine whether right was clearly established at time such that it would be clear to objectively reasonable officer that his conduct violated that right. Lynn v. O'Leary, D.Md.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 306. Civil Rights 1376(1); Civil Rights 1376(2)

3903. ---- Pretrial detainee status, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Pretrial detainee's right to be free from deliberate indifference to risk that he would attempt suicide was clearly established prior to his suicide attempt, for purposes of § 1983 action alleging police officer's deliberate indifference to risk of detainee's attempting suicide in holding cell. Cavalieri v. Shepard, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 321 F.3d 616, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 531, 540 U.S. 1003, 157 L.Ed.2d 408 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) agents were not entitled to qualified immunity from Mexican national's § 1983 and Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) action, which arose out of national's abduction and transportation to United States to face murder charges, where complaint alleged that DEA agents threatened Mexican national during interrogation session, withheld food throughout interrogation, incarcerated him under false name, and denied him adequate medical attention. Alvarez-Machain v. U.S., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 107 F.3d 696, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 60, 522 U.S. 814, 139 L.Ed.2d 23. United States 50.10(3)

Officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in connection with violation of arrestee's civil rights in denying arrestee access to telephone; state statute clearly provided that officer should have permitted arrestee up to three phone calls immediately upon being booked or at least within three hours thereof, and existence of due process protection for state-created liberty interests for prisoners had been clearly established since at least 1974. Carlo v. City of Chino, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 105 F.3d 493, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1336, 523 U.S. 1036, 140 L.Ed.2d 496 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not clearly established in 1987 that 17-day detention of fugitive without bringing him before magistrate violated clearly established Fourth Amendment rights where he was being detained while sheriff awaited extradition papers from another state, so that sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit arising out of that detention. Sivard v. Pulaski County, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 17 F.3d 185. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was clearly established law in late 1991 and early 1992 that blanket policy of strip searches for detainees was unconstitutional, so that sheriff was not qualified immunity in civil rights action arising out of strip searches. Chapman v. Nichols, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1993, 989 F.2d 393. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who was acting as jail houseman was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit arising from jail detainee's suicide where officer's failure to remain at station to monitor detainees in lockup did not rise to level of "deliberate indifference" and it was not obvious that officer's conduct violated clearly established law. Bowen v. City of Manchester, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1992, 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police chief was entitled to qualified immunity on claim that he violated arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights to a probable cause hearing by allowing arrestee to remain in jail on disorderly conduct charges overnight, in small town with no court official on duty to conduct hearing; contours of law were not so developed that reasonable police officer would realize that immediate hearing was required. White v. Taylor, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1992, 959 F.2d 539. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff and deputy were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 civil rights suit brought by relatives of pretrial detainee who hung himself in jail cell; unlawfulness of not doing anything to attempt to save detainee's life when he was found hanging in cell, even though body was warm and detainee's feet were touching floor, would have been apparent to reasonable officials in defendants' position in light of preexisting law. Heflin v. Stewart County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1992, 958 F.2d 709, rehearing denied, on reconsideration 968 F.2d 1, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 598, 506 U.S. 998, 121 L.Ed.2d 535. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who shot and killed pretrial detainee during attempted escape was entitled to qualified immunity in detainee's parents' § 1983 lawsuit alleging violation of Fourth Amendment; right to press claim of excessive force under Fourth Amendment, asserted on behalf of pretrial detainee against whom deadly force was used during escape attempt was not clearly established when shooting occurred. Wright v. Whiddon, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 951 F.2d 297. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity was not available to sheriff and deputies being sued in their official capacities for violating detainee's constitutional rights. Rivas v. Freeman, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 940 F.2d 1491. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Utah law allowing involuntary medication of mental patient did not give jail psychiatrist qualified immunity from liability for involuntary medication of pretrial detainee since Utah law applied only after judicial involuntary commitment proceeding, which was not provided to detainee. Bee v. Greaves, C.A.10 (Utah) 1990, 910 F.2d 686. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Law which existed at time of police officers' action did not clearly establish right to have officers diagnose pretrial detainee's condition as prone to suicide and to take extraordinary measures to restrain pretrial detainee; therefore, police officers had qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action arising out of suicide of pretrial detainee. Danese v. Asman, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1989, 875 F.2d 1239, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1473, 494 U.S. 1027, 108 L.Ed.2d 610. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Unconstitutionality of strip search of arrestees for traffic violations and nonviolent minor offenses was clearly established at time of arrest for failure to appear for hearing on traffic violations, even though intermingling of arrestee with general population at jail was asserted basis for strip search, and, thus, county officers and employees were not entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action; nothing supported reasonable belief that arrestee was carrying weapons or other contraband. Masters v. Crouch, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1989, 872 F.2d 1248, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 503, 493 U.S. 977, 107 L.Ed.2d 506. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Deputy sheriffs were entitled to qualified immunity in their individual capacities in civil rights action for detention and transportation to sheriff's station of woman who reported coresident had been shot by unknown intruder, but was later found to have killed coresident herself, for seizure that was allegedly unlawful under Fourth Amendment; at time woman was detained, the law was ambiguous as to when detention of the only suspect/eyewitness to recent homicide became impermissible. Barts v. Joyner, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1989, 865 F.2d 1187, rehearing denied 871 F.2d 122, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 101, 493 U.S. 831, 107 L.Ed.2d 65. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County sheriff, in his individual capacity, and assistant supervisor of court services in sheriff's department were entitled to qualified immunity from liability arising from failure to release misidentified arrestee for some 11 hours after issue of his identification was first raised in court, where case law at time of defendant's arrest was not well-established, but merely suggested that some prerelease identification procedures could be so time-consuming as to violate Fourth Amendment. Lewis v. O'Grady, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 853 F.2d 1366. False Imprisonment 15(1)

Jail doctor, warden, and assistant warden, whose alleged failure to provide medical treatment for epileptic condition of pretrial detainee resulted in detainee's death, were not entitled to invoke doctrine of qualified immunity, because Eighth Amendment right to adequate medical treatment was clearly established at time of detainee's incarceration. Miranda v. Munoz, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1985, 770 F.2d 255. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Sheriff, who arrested plaintiff, was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action for detaining plaintiff for 18 days without appearance before judge or magistrate where sheriff had followed his obligation under Indiana law to bring about first appearance by properly returning arrest warrant to clerk of court and repeatedly calling prosecutor's office to arrange time for the first appearance. Coleman v. Frantz, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1985, 754 F.2d 719. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Good faith of police officers, prison officials, and private citizens in question was no defense to claim that they were deliberately indifferent to pretrial detainee's serious medical needs; inasmuch as law requiring adequate medical attention in such instances is clearly established, the defendants were not entitled to any good-faith immunity. Whisenant v. Yuam, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1984, 739 F.2d 160. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Arresting officer and police chief were not entitled to the protection afforded by qualified immunity for violations of arrestee's due process rights resulting from arrestee's excessive detention since, at the time of arrestee's incarceration, the law clearly established that a pre-trial detainee could not be detained for twelve days without being brought before a judge or allowed to pay bail. Bunyon v. Burke County, S.D.Ga.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1310. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who shot pretrial detainee could not be held liable for violation of detainee's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure; law on Fourth Amendment rights of pretrial detainees was not clearly established. Jordan v. Cobb County, Georgia, N.D.Ga.2001, 227 F.Supp.2d 1322. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Absent any evidence that detainee showed arresting officers suicidal tendencies, officers were entitled to immunity from civil rights action in connection with detainee's suicide as there was no clearly established right possessed by intoxicated detainees to be screened for suicidal tendencies. Dawson on Behalf of Young v. Campbell County, Tenn., E.D.Tenn.1994, 894 F.Supp. 1135. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputies and supervising officer at county jail were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claim of administrators of arrestee's estate for their alleged deliberate indifference to arrestee's vulnerability to suicide and their alleged failure to take adequate measures to present his suicide attempt; constitutional right allegedly violated was clearly established, and extraordinary circumstances were not presented that would justify actions of deputies and supervisor in failing to maintain adequate suicide watch over arrestee and in leaving him with access to means to commit suicide. Camps v. City of Warner Robins, M.D.Ga.1993, 822 F.Supp. 724. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Officers' behavior in transporting to sheriff's station occupants of house in which homicide occurred during execution of search warrant was not reasonable in light of clearly established law that investigatory detention must employ least intrusive means to confirm or dispel officers' suspicions quickly, so that officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in occupants' § 1983 action, notwithstanding officers' contention that they were justified in detaining occupants until they determined whether their drug investigation, which prompted warrant, and homicide investigation provided them with probable cause to arrest any occupant; occupants were detained at station for 17 hours while officers investigated, and officers transported occupants for express purpose of custodial interrogation. Orozco v. County of Yolo, E.D.Cal.1993, 814 F.Supp. 885. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Jailers were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to claim alleging indifference to prisoner's medical needs brought by widow of intoxicated prisoner who had hung himself in jail; reasonable official could conclude that failure to include special accommodations for detainees subject to potential suicide did not violate clearly established constitutional rights. Zwalesky v. Manistee County, W.D.Mich.1990, 749 F.Supp. 815. Civil Rights

3904. ---- Access to courts, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Inmates have no clearly established right to transportation to court for purpose of filing criminal charges, and thus prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmates' suit alleging that policy of screening inmate requests that they be transported to court to press criminal charges violated due process. Lopez v. Robinson, C.A.4 (Md.) 1990, 914 F.2d 486. Civil Rights 1376(7)

No clearly established law required state prisoner's presence during inspection of legal documents in his cell and thus, even if search did violate prisoner's First Amendment rights, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from damages liability. Giba v. Cook, D.Or.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 1171. Civil Rights 1376(7); Prisons 4(7)

State prison official had fair warning in 2000 that he could not restrict prisoner communications unless such restrictions were reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and thus was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that another inmate's right to petition for redress for grievances was violated when he was placed in disciplinary confinement in retaliation for providing authorized legal assistance to other inmate as part of his assigned work activities. Auleta v. LaFrance, N.D.N.Y.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 396. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity with regard to inmate's § 1983 claim that he had been unconstitutionally retaliated against for filing administrative complaints; inmate's right to seek redress of grievances without fear of retaliation was well-established, and reasonable person would have known of such right. Brown v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 965 F.Supp. 401. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Sheriff and director of county jail were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claim that he was denied his constitutional right of access to court when he was not permitted to take his legal papers upon his transfer to state prison, and that loss of papers prevented his drafting complaint concerning alleged beating by jail guards; it was clearly established law at time of alleged deprivation that it was a violation of constitutional right of access to the courts to deprive a prisoner of legal papers needed for court proceedings. Banks v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1995, 914 F.Supp. 231. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Jail warden, as chief administrator of jail, was not entitled to qualified immunity in pretrial detainee's suit under § 1983 alleging that county jail officials deprived him of meaningful access to courts during his detention; relevant law was clearly established at time of detention that reliance on courthouse library paging system and court-appointed counsel in criminal proceedings was inadequate to provide meaningful access to courts, and no prison warden in jail warden's position could have believed that he was acting lawfully. Turiano v. Schnarrs, M.D.Pa.1995, 904 F.Supp. 400. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were qualifiedly immune from inmates' claim for damages arising from prison's "ink tube policy," under which inmates confined in punitive segregation unit at prison were permitted to use only plastic inner ink insert from ballpoint pen for all legal and personal writing; although it was clearly established at time of conduct in question that prison officials were obligated to provide inmates with reasonable access to courts and with pen and paper to draft legal documents, it was clearly established that prison officials were obligated to provide inmates with any particular type of writing implement. Kirsch v. Smith, E.D.Wis.1995, 894 F.Supp. 1222, affirmed 92 F.3d 1187. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Chief clerk and motion clerk were entitled to qualified immunity from claim that clerks violated plaintiff's rights by failing to file his pro se motion for writ of habeas corpus because he was represented by counsel in pending state court criminal action; plaintiff had no clearly established right of access to court to present his petition or to proceed pro se while being represented by counsel. Woodard v. Mennella, E.D.N.Y.1994, 861 F.Supp. 192. Civil

Rights 1376(8)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in state inmate's § 1983 action alleging that he was forced to choose between law library time and outdoor recreation on any given day; rights of access to the courts and to outdoor exercise were clearly established rights and to sanction policy of forcing inmate to choose between them would be tantamount to denying inmate one of the rights. Allen v. City and County of Honolulu, D.Hawai'i 1993, 816 F.Supp. 1501, affirmed 39 F.3d 936. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Chief librarian was not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by inmate who alleged that his constitutional right of meaningful access to courts was violated; constitutional right of meaningful access to courts was clearly established well before conduct alleged in complaint and alleged pattern of harassment, exclusion, and confiscation in connection with inmate's use of law library clearly infringed his right of access to courts. Martin v. Ezeagu, D.D.C.1993, 816 F.Supp. 20. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Warden and other officials of Tennessee correctional institution were entitled to defense of qualified immunity in suit alleging deprivation of segregated inmates' constitutionally guaranteed right of access to the courts; although institution's arrangement for providing access to prison law library materials and legal assistance was insufficient, there was no body of authority such that any reasonable officer should have known in advance that arrangement was unconstitutional. Watson v. Norris, M.D.Tenn.1989, 729 F.Supp. 581. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3905. ---- Access to libraries, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Director of Virginia Department of Corrections was entitled to immunity against prisoner's claim that he had been denied sufficient access to adequate law library during his two and one-half years in city jail where, prior to a Supreme Court decision, reasonable public official could not be said to have been incorrect in stating that duties of local jails to their inmates were not clearly established and after the decision, the time period during which books were acquired for a law library was not so long that the director was stripped of his immunity. Harris v. Young, C.A.4 (Va.) 1983, 718 F.2d 620. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison librarian, who deprived inmate of free photocopying services and temporarily removed inmate's name from library call-out list, was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability; inmate had no clearly established statutory or constitutional right to free photocopying or specific amount of time in library. Oswald v. Graves, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 680. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3905A. ---- Access to internet materials, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Prisoners' constitutional right to access internet-generated material was not clearly established at time prison officials denied access, and thus officials had qualified immunity, where they reasonably relied upon existing state appellate decision upholding policy, at time before pronouncement of federal decisions first finding that policy violated First Amendment. Nelson v. Giurbino, S.D.Cal.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 946. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3906. ---- Access to mails, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Publisher's and prisoners' First Amendment rights in prisoners' receipt of subscription non-profit organization standard mail were not clearly established at time state corrections department enforced ban on receipt of such mail, and corrections officials were thus entitled to qualified immunity in publisher's and prisoners' resulting § 1983 action alleging First Amendment violation. Prison Legal News v. Cook, C.A.9 (Or.) 2001, 238 F.3d 1145. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prisoner's claimed right to sealed exit of his mail going to governmental agency was not clearly established at time that prison officials refused to allow sealed mail to be sent by prisoner, and, thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's § 1983 action alleging constitutional violation. Davidson v. Scully, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 114 F.3d 12. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison official neither knew nor could have known of relevant legal standard pertaining to inspection of outgoing legal mail from inmate who attempted to borrow additional postage for letter, but who refused to allow resident unit manager to inspect legal mail to determine if it qualified for postage loan, and, thus, official was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action; prison's policy directive was triggered only if inmate wanted subsidized postage, official's inspection was limited to scanning legal mail for docket numbers, case title, requests for documents, et cetera, inspection was conducted in inmate's presence in his cell, and inmate could seal his mail after inspection was completed. Bell-Bey v. Williams, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 87 F.3d 832. Civil Rights 1376(7)

New York Department of Correctional Services directive requiring inmates desiring to correspond with one another to secure approval of superintendents of both prisons did not sufficiently curtail discretion of prison officials to clearly establish a protected liberty interest, and therefore prison superintendents were entitled to immunity from inmate's claim that revocation of his privilege to correspond with female inmate in a different facility violated his due process rights. Purnell v. Lord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 952 F.2d 679. Prisons 10

Prison official who did not examine government surplus catalog before deciding to disallow inmate's request for catalog could not have reasonably assessed whether his conduct violated clearly established law, and thus was not entitled to qualified immunity from damages in a civil rights action. Allen v. Higgins, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 902 F.2d 682, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action brought by inmate alleging that prison officials violated due process by failing to follow state regulation allowing inmate to receive books that did not threaten security where, by following invalid policy directive prohibiting inmates from receiving books except from publishers, prison officials violated clearly established conflicting state regulation. Spruytte v. Walters, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 753 F.2d 498, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 788, 474 U.S. 1054, 88 L.Ed.2d 767. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison official had fair warning in 2000 that he could not restrict prisoner communications unless such restrictions were reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and thus was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that another inmate's right to petition for redress for grievances was violated when he was placed in disciplinary confinement in retaliation for providing authorized legal assistance to other inmate as part of his assigned work activities. Auleta v. LaFrance, N.D.N.Y.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 396. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was clearly established in October 1996 that absolute prohibition on receipt by prisoners of paid-for mail subscriptions, without any reasonable connection to legitimate, neutral prison policy, and failure to provide prisoner notice of rejection of subscription, violated prisoner's First Amendment and due process rights, so that prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by prisoner after his subscription to newsletter regarding legal developments of significance to prisoners was rejected pursuant to prison bulk mail policy without his being notified. Miniken v. Walter, E.D.Wash.1997, 978 F.Supp. 1356. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Since their conduct did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to prisoner's § 1983 claim alleging that they violated his constitutional rights by opening his incoming mail from Michigan Attorney General; contrary to requirements of Michigan Department of Corrections' mail policy, prisoner failed to show that he requested to be present at opening of this mail. Hall v. Conklin, W.D.Mich.1996, 966 F.Supp. 546. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's suit against them in their individual capacities alleging that prison rule restricting personal correspondence between inmate and members of news media was facially unconstitutional; prison officials did not violate clearly established rights of inmate by enforcing rule since unconstitutionality of rule was not plainly apparent. Mujahid v. Sumner, D.Hawai'i 1992, 807 F.Supp. 1505, affirmed 996 F.2d 1226. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison official who read prisoner's legal mail during search of cell for contraband did not act unreasonably in violation of clearly defined legal duty, especially where envelopes were oversized and contained enclosures likely to contain contraband, and thus official was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit. Proudfoot v. Williams, E.D.Pa.1992, 803 F.Supp. 1048. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' policy of opening special mail adequately identified as such but which did not precisely comply with prison labeling requirements was not so obviously contrary to law as to deprive officials of qualified immunity from damages. Burt v. Carlson, C.D.Cal.1990, 752 F.Supp. 346. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Since constitutionality of prison procedure governing the opening of inmate mail was unclear, prison officials enjoyed a qualified immunity with respect to civil rights suit challenging opening of a particular piece of mail from the Federal Bureau of Investigation where the prison officials were acting pursuant to official regulations when they opened prisoner's mail. Campbell v. Sumner, D.C.Nev.1984, 587 F.Supp. 376. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3907. ---- Telephone access, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity against liability to inmates for installing computerized collect telephone call system in prison should system be found unconstitutional, as parameters of inmates' right to use telephones were not clearly established. Carter v. O'Sullivan, C.D.Ill.1996, 924 F.Supp. 903. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3908. ---- Discipline generally, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Corrections officials were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to prisoner's due process claim that corrections officials ordered him disciplined without some reliable evidence of misconduct; due to the lack of clearly defined standards for determining what constituted "some evidence" in the context of prison disciplinary hearings, it was objectively reasonable for officials to think that an independent assessment of the credibility of the confidential informants who proffered evidence against prisoner satisfied due process, and that hearing officer could, without further inquiry, rely on the third-party hearsay disclosed by those informants as some reliable evidence of prisoner's participation in a prohibited strike. Sira v. Morton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 380 F.3d 57. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for disciplinary action based on determination that prisoner's conversation with fellow inmate about obtaining handgun immediately upon prisoner's imminent release was sufficient plan to constitute attempt to possess firearm as convicted felon in violation of prison rules, absent established contrary judicial interpretation of distinction between prohibited planning and mere talk. Moorman v. Thalacker, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1996, 83 F.3d 970. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate's due process right not to be disciplined for positive urine test for marijuana under prison rule prohibiting possession of dangerous contraband was not clearly established at time of discipline, so that prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action; officials' reading of rule to cover marijuana violations was not unreasonable, and there was not yet judicial decision alerting them to inapplicability of rule to testing positive for marijuana. Mahers v. Harper, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 12 F.3d 783, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Procedural due process rights of prisoner placed on dry cell watch for contraband in bowel movements were not clearly established, and, thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for failing to provide notice of reason for action, opportunity to respond, and consideration of the response. Mendoza v. Blodgett, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1992, 960 F.2d 1425, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1005, 506 U.S. 1063, 122 L.Ed.2d 154, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1027, 506 U.S. 1071, 122 L.Ed.2d 173. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's § 1983 claim brought against them in their individual capacities alleging that they violated his due process rights by denying him access to educational computers as discipline for his having allegedly downloaded pictures of women wearing bikinis from the Internet; prisoner's right to have some evidence supporting reason for discipline was clearly established at time of alleged violation, prisoner alleged that he was accused of and punished for actions that were impossible for him to have taken, and reasonable official would have known that any disciplinary action had to be supported by at least some evidence. Damron v. North Dakota Com'r. of Corrections, D.N.D.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 970, affirmed 127 Fed.Appx. 909, 2005 WL 1076645. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was clearly established in 1995 that fabricating disciplinary charge would violate constitutional rights of pretrial detainee if it resulted in detainee being deprived of liberty interest without due process of law, and thus, correctional officer who was alleged to have made up charges against detainee which resulted in detainee being placed in disciplinary segregation was not entitled to qualified immunity in detainee's federal civil rights action. Marshall v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1997, 951 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity against prisoners' claims for money damages based on the imposition of sanctions on prisoners for actual violation of prison rules prohibiting false or defamatory statements in grievances; previously, it was not clearly established that disciplining inmate for actual rules violations could run afoul of constitutional requirements. Hancock v. Thalacker, N.D.Iowa 1996, 933 F.Supp. 1449. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officer was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by prisoner alleging that corrections officer in disciplining prisoner relied on tainted evidence in disciplinary report which was contradicted by testimony of officer who had cosigned and endorsed report in violation of prisoner's constitutional rights; although reliance on tainted evidence did not meet requirement that some evidence support prison disciplinary action and was improper, neither Supreme Court or Second Circuit had previously held that reliance on tainted evidence was violation of prisoner's due process rights, and officer was not placed on notice that such reliance was improper. Walsh v. Finn, S.D.N.Y.1994, 865 F.Supp. 126. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for violation of prisoner's due process rights as result of failure to inform prisoner of penalties for misconduct with which he was charged where prisoner's right to be informed had not been previously established. McMillan v. Healey, S.D.N.Y.1990, 739 F.Supp. 153. Prisons 10

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity for their failure to file a misbehavior report at any time during inmate's stay in "keeplock" which clearly defied well-delineated boundaries of official discretion at the time the actions were taken, and, in light of procedural significance of filing predicate misbehavior report, subjected them to liability under federal civil rights provision. Scott v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1990, 727 F.Supp. 806. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3909. ---- Disciplinary hearings, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Correctional officials were entitled to qualified immunity on federal civil rights claim that prison disciplinary ruling that relied upon information from confidential informants was based on insufficient reliable evidence to satisfy due process; standards for determining what constitutes "some evidence" in the context of prison disciplinary hearings were not clearly established at time, notwithstanding due process obligation to make independent assessment of confidential informant's credibility, as it was objectively reasonable for defendants to think that independent assessment of informant's credibility allowed reliance on third-party hearsay disclosed by informant. Sira v. Morton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 2004 WL 1719285, opinion withdrawn, superseded 380 F.3d 57. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Hearing officer's refusal to allow inmate to call witnesses in prison disciplinary hearing did not violate the inmate's clearly established rights, entitling the officer to qualified immunity in inmate's civil rights action, where the inmate was unwilling to state relevance of witnesses' proposed testimony and offered no defense to the charges against him. Walker v. McClellan, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 126 F.3d 127. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Procedure followed by hearing officer in prison disciplinary proceeding was not clearly established at time of hearing, or at the time of the instant opinion, to have been constitutionally inadequate independent examination of credibility of informants, and thus officer was protected by qualified immunity, where hearing officer did not rely solely on assessments of credibility by officer who wrote misbehavior report, but inquired whether informants had history of reliability, and author of report indicated number of years that she had dealt with each informant and stated that each had been extremely reliable, and hearing officer knew that reporting officer's confidential informants had been historically reliable. Russell v. Scully, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 15 F.3d 219, modified on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established at time of inmate's disciplinary hearing that under Second Circuit law he had right to have presiding officer independently examine credibility of confidential informants; therefore, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's civil rights action alleging that officials' failure to make independent assessment of reliability of confidential informant deprived them of due process. Richardson v. Selsky, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 5 F.3d 616. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials did not violate inmate's clearly established rights when they gave inmate only five hours to review statement of charges prior to disciplinary hearing, entitling them to qualified immunity in inmate's subsequent civil rights action; although it was established that inmate was entitled to written notice of charges 24 hours before disciplinary hearing, no court had ruled that requirement meant that officials were required to allow inmate to retain written notice for 24 hours. Benitez v. Wolff, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 985 F.2d 662. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Hearing officer who imposed discipline on inmate in connection with mess hall riot was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action; there was no reliable evidence of inmate's guilt and inmate's right not to be adjudicated guilty without some evidence to support the finding was clearly established when hearing occurred. Zavaro v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 970 F.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1358

As of date of action, law was clearly established that any prison official actively involved in conducting investigation could not sit as member of disciplinary committee, reasonable prison official would have known about law, and prison supervisor who sat in judgment on her own complaint in disciplinary proceedings against inmate was aware that her conduct violated inmate's due process rights, and thus supervisor was not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 claim. Diercks v. Durham, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 959 F.2d 710. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials did not violate clearly established law in 1976 prison disciplinary hearing entitling officials to qualified immunity in subsequent civil rights action, although official who investigated underlying incident later served on disciplinary committee. McDuffie v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 935 F.2d 682. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Law was not clearly established that disciplinary committee of correctional center violated inmate's right to due process by failing to give inmate written notice of drug test results prior to disciplinary hearing, failing to provide inmate with copy of results, failing to let inmate view evidence log to establish chain of custody at hearing, and failing to administer second, corroborative drug test, and thus, members of disciplinary committee were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 claim. Harrison v. Dahm, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1990, 911 F.2d 37, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that he had been wrongfully restricted to his cell for ten days without receiving notice of charges against him and without receiving hearing; at time of inmate's confinement, it was clearly established that New York's keeplock regulations created liberty interest in remaining out of administrative confinement, and prison officials could not have reasonably believed that releasing inmate on his tenth day of confinement, without providing notice or opportunity to be heard, complied with due process. Russell v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 910 F.2d 75. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Under doctrine of qualified immunity, prison officials were not liable to prisoner under federal civil rights statute for refusing to assist him in preparations for disciplinary proceeding and for failure to elicit testimony from two prison guards prisoner wished to have testify; officials' conduct did not violate clearly established constitutional right of which they should have been aware, as case law at time of disciplinary hearing did not require such assistance or the calling of requested witnesses. Fox v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 893 F.2d 475. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Under laws that existed in 1982, inmate charged with violating state disciplinary regulations had clearly established constitutional right to hearing before hearing officer who had not prejudged his guilt, and thus prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action for alleged violation of that right. Francis v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1989, 891 F.2d 43, on remand 755 F.Supp. 618. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Since the hearing officer's obligation to conduct an independent assessment of confidential informant had not been established in the district, prison corrections officers were protected by qualified immunity from civil damages liability for failure to permit inmate to cross examine a confidential informant in prison disciplinary hearing. Rivera v. Wohlrab, S.D.N.Y.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) employees did not violate clearly established law by denying prisoner an adjournment during disciplinary hearing, after correctional officer testified that time of incident as stated on misbehavior report was incorrect, and, thus, DOCS employees had qualified immunity from prisoner's action under §§ 1983, alleging claim for deprivation of his right to due process, where there was no precedent that indicated that a relatively modest inaccuracy or ambiguity concerning reported time of alleged incident could, without more, render a prisoner's notice of charges constitutionally inadequate. Wright v. Dixon, W.D.N.Y.2006, 409 F.Supp.2d 210. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 civil rights suit arising from prison disciplinary proceeding, based on allegations that inmate was not given fair notice that drafting and mailing legal pleadings for other inmates was prohibited; there was no clearly established law that inmates are entitled to send draft legal pleadings to one another. Schenck v. Edwards, E.D.Wash.1996, 921 F.Supp. 679, affirmed 133 F.3d 929. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison hearing officer was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to inmate's claim of violation of his due process rights by denying right to assistant to aid him in preparing for disciplinary hearing, as at time of hearing there was clearly established right to inmate assistant in the Second Circuit, hearing officer's statements during hearing attested understanding that what he was doing violated inmate's right to assistant, and no reasonable officer could believe that inmate waived his right to assistant because, on initial and only visit of sergeant appointed to assist him, he told that sergeant that he would prefer one of the assistants he had chosen. Lee v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1995, 902 F.Supp. 424, reconsideration granted 914 F.Supp. 1004, on reconsideration 26 F.Supp.2d 615. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Qualified immunity applied to § 1983 civil rights claims against Deputy Commissioner of Office of Mental Health by inmate, alleging that commissioner failed to properly supervise staff or clarify confusion that resulted in staff consulting with prison disciplinary hearing officer off the record, given that law as to whether psychiatric testimony should be presented to hearing officer was not clearly established at time of disputed hearing. Zamakshari v. Dvoskin, S.D.N.Y.1995, 899 F.Supp. 1097. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claim that he was falsely or wrongly accused; since inmate was afforded his full due process rights with respect to his disciplinary hearing, inmate's claim did not allege violation of any clearly established statutory or constitutional right. Hodges v. Jones, N.D.N.Y.1995, 873 F.Supp. 737. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials had qualified immunity in § 1983 suit brought by prisoner claiming that officials refused to permit him to call witness from outside prison population in a disciplinary case; as there was a lack of precedent requiring point, there were no "contours of a protected federal right" of which officials should have been aware when they denied prisoner's request for outside witnesses. Matthews v. Selsky, S.D.N.Y.1994, 870 F.Supp. 66. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability to inmate who alleged he was deprived of right to call witness and right to have disciplinary action supported by some evidence, in that such rights were clearly established at time of disciplinary hearing; however, right to independent assessment of confidential informant's credibility was not clearly established at time of hearing, and thus officials were immune from liability for any such failure. Gilbert v. Selsky, S.D.N.Y.1994, 867 F.Supp. 159, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3910. ---- Restraints, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Alabama prison guards were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claim he was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment when he was handcuffed to hitching post, in light of binding Eleventh Circuit precedent, an Alabama Department of Corrections (ADOC) regulation, and a Department of Justice (DOJ) report informing the ADOC of constitutional infirmity in its use of hitching post. Hope v. Pelzer, U.S.2002, 122 S.Ct. 2508, 536 U.S. 730, 153 L.Ed.2d 666, on remand 304 F.3d 1331. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison guard violated clearly established right of inmate to be free of excessive force, precluding grant of qualified immunity, when, as found by jury, guard hit inmate in face, knelt on him and otherwise inflicted pain in course of securing inmate in four point restraint. Ziemba v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 248. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials did not have qualified immunity from claim that they violated due process rights of inmate by placing him on his back, with restraints on arms and legs and over chest, for period of 47 hours and 20 minutes, with brief breaks, without providing any process to determine if restraint continued to be required; it was well established that restrained inmates were entitled to due process. Sadler v. Young, W.D.Va.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 689, reversed 118 Fed.Appx. 762, 2005 WL 19486. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison's written procedures providing that superintendent of security would issue restraint order if supervisor determined "in his/her opinion" that particular inmate "may be assaultive" did not confer liberty interest on inmate to be free from handcuffs while outside his cell absent current restraint authorization order, and thus prison officials enjoyed qualified immunity against inmate's § 1983 claim arising out his having been handcuffed outside cell. Atkins v. Latanzio, W.D.N.Y.1995, 918 F.Supp. 668. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(2)

Sheriff of county to which pretrial detainee was transferred, because it had detoxification facilities and was thus better equipped to deal with detainee's delirium tremens, did not violate any clearly established right of which reasonable sheriff should have known in failing to instruct his staff on potentially life-threatening nature of medical conditions associated with delirium tremens, and was qualifiedly immune from any liability under section 1983 for failing to so instruct, given lack of evidence that any inmate had previously suffered adverse serious health problems which jail personnel handled inappropriately, or that sheriff had promulgated any policy that would deny or even impede prompt provision of medical care to detainee in distress. Thompson v. Upshur County, TX, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 245 F.3d 447. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County jail nurse sued under §§ 1983 was not entitled to qualified immunity from claim that she was not deliberately indifferent to needs of detainee who committed suicide, in violation of detainee's substantive due process rights; law was clear that supervisor could be liable for condoning improper conduct of subordinate, and was aware of social worker's inadequate appraisal of detainee. Estate of Abdollahi v. County of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 1194. Civil Rights 1376(7)

In 2003, it was clearly established, for purposes of qualified immunity, that a supervisor could be liable under §§ 1983 personally for omissions by his subordinates as to whom he has a duty to supervise and whose actions the supervisor has the ability to control. Billops v. Sandoval, S.D.Tex.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 766. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Law enforcement officers could not assert defense of qualified immunity to supervisory liability claim of personal representative of teacher, since contours of supervisory liability claim itself and underlying substantive due process claims were clearly established as of date of officers' allegedly illegal conduct. Sanders v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Jefferson, Colorado, D.Colo.2001, 192 F.Supp.2d 1094. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3912. ---- Harassment, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Inmate's right, as male prisoner employed in prison laundry, not to be subject to male supervising officer's immature sexually-based diatribes, or be recipient of officer's feigned combative strikes toward inmate's groin area, was not clearly established under federal law at time of incident and, thus, official was qualifiedly immune from liability for alleged same-sex harassment. Blueford v. Prunty, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 108 F.3d 251. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3913. ---- Retaliation, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

State prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action alleging retaliation, as right to be free from retaliation was "clearly established" at time inmate's status was changed to Central Monitoring Case (CMC) following complaints regarding transfer to different facility. Rivera v. Senkowski, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 62 F.3d 80. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Correctional officers were not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to otherwise viable deliberate indifference and retaliation claims that implicated clearly established constitutional rights to be free of excessive force, other cruel and unusual punishments, and retaliation for exercising First Amendment rights. Thomas v. Walton, S.D.Ill.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 786. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action based on alleged administrative confinement of inmate in retaliation for prior complaints he made about prison conditions; at time of alleged confinement, courts had clearly established inmate's right to be free from retaliation for filing grievances. Sullivan v. Schweikhard, S.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 910. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3914. ---- Medical care, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prisoner's right to receive medical information, derived from his due process right to refuse medical treatment, was not clearly established in 1997 when he had liver biopsy, and, thus, prison officials were qualifiedly immune from his claim that they violated his due process rights by performing biopsy and providing medication for his Hepatitis C without warning him of possible side effects. Pabon v. Wright, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 459 F.3d 241. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officers alleged delay in providing medical care to a jail inmate having a heart attack, whose condition was obviously life threatening, constituted conduct that violated clearly established law, and thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity, in inmate's §§ 1983 Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim. Plemmons v. Roberts, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 439 F.3d 818. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Detainee's due process right to adequate medical care was clearly established at the time he was restrained by police officers and in their custody, and therefore officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability on claim that officers denied detainee adequate medical care, resulting in his death, regardless of whether detainee had attempted to flee or resisted being taken into custody. Estate of Owensby v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 414 F.3d 596, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2023. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Never-competent patient who was in state custody and whose death was imminent did not have clearly established liberty interest in avoiding medical intrusions that would prolong the dying process, and thus state attorney general and assistant attorney general were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action in which it was alleged that attorneys intervened in patient's medical care by directing the administration of invasive procedures to sustain patient's life. Blouin ex rel. Estate of Pouliot v. Spitzer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 356 F.3d 348. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Sheriff of jail located in small rural county was qualifiedly immune from liability under section 1983 in connection with death of pretrial detainee from complications associated with his delirium tremens, following his transfer to another county with detoxification facilities that first county lacked; in allowing detainee to be transferred to another county, rather than instructing his staff to force detainee to submit to medical care against his clearly communicated wishes or to make reasonable effort to locate substitute decisionmaker, sheriff did not violate any clearly established right of which reasonable sheriff would have known. Thompson v. Upshur County, TX, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 245 F.3d 447. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Pretrial detainee's right, under due process clause, to at least be free from law enforcement officials' deliberate indifference to detainee's serious medical needs was clearly established at time detainee committed suicide, for purpose of officials' claim of qualified immunity in resulting § 1983 action brought by detainee's estate. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1998, 135 F.3d 320. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Constitutional right of state prisoner in psychiatric hospital to specific medical approval of segregation and restraint was clearly established at time prison medical director approved such segregation and restraint, for purpose of director's qualified immunity claim in prisoner's resulting § 1983 action. Buckley v. Rogerson, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1998, 133 F.3d 1125. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Objective reasonableness standard asserted in § 1983 action by heirs of pretrial detainee who committed suicide in county jail, following warrantless arrest and prior to being taken before magistrate, was not clearly established at time of suicide, for purpose of qualified immunity defense asserted by county and county officers, as proper standard was in fact deliberate indifference, not objective reasonableness. Barrie v. Grand County, Utah, C.A.10 (Utah) 1997, 119 F.3d 862. Civil Rights 1376(7)

County sheriff and jailers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by administrator of estate of pretrial detainee who was chronic alcoholic and who died due to injury sustained while in custody at county jail because, despite knowledge that detainee had urgent medical condition which would be exacerbated by delay, sheriff and jailers delayed obtaining treatment for detainee until after he suffered seizure, which conduct amounted to deliberate indifference under clearly established law at that time. Lancaster v. Monroe County, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 116 F.3d 1419. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Right at issue to qualified immunity defense in inmate's action alleging that fumes in cell rendered him unconscious and that correctional officers should have removed him during lock down was correctly defined as Eighth Amendment right to have prison officials avoid deliberate indifference to serious medical needs; thus, right at issue was clearly established. Kelley v. Borg, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 60 F.3d 664. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate's existing serious medical needs, arising from exposure to environmental tobacco smoke, was "clearly established" constitutional right, needed for inmate to state § 1983 civil rights claim based on prison officials' unwillingness to enforce smoking ban in inmate's room and unresponsiveness to inmate's protests despite qualified immunity defense asserted by officials. Weaver v. Clarke, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1995, 45 F.3d 1253. Civil Rights 1376(7)

At time arrestee committed suicide in jail cell, law did not clearly establish that police officers' failure to notify competent authorities of inmate's request for medication and psychiatric help were guilty of deliberate indifference to inmate's psychiatric needs, and thus officers, as sued in their individual capacities, were entitled to qualified immunity from that claim under § 1983; decided law at time of arrestee's death dealt with liability of physicians in state hospitals, and police officers' primary responsibility involved law enforcement, rather than mental health of inmates. Belcher v. City of Foley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1390. Civil Rights 1376(7)

In inmate's § 1983 action for denial of proper medical treatment for serious hand injury during preconviction incarceration, sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity in his individual capacity; at time of inmate's incarceration, it was clearly established that knowledge of need for medical care and intentional refusal to provide that care constituted deliberate indifference, law was clearly established that for kind of serious injury suffered by inmate, delay of several weeks was too long to fail to properly respond to medical need, and thus delaying prescribed treatment for nearly two months was objectively unreasonable. Harris v. Coweta County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 21 F.3d 388. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials had qualified immunity from prisoner's action under § 1983 to challenge procedures used to abridge prisoner's right to refuse to take psychotropic drugs before issuance of judicial decision outlining constitutionally permissible procedures for forcing prisoners to remain on such drugs; officials' use of then-existing administrative rules, which required express findings of physician and warden that without drugs prisoner would endanger himself or others, did not violate prisoner's clearly established constitutional rights. Sullivan v. Flannigan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 8 F.3d 591, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1376, 511 U.S. 1007, 128 L.Ed.2d 52. Civil Rights 1376(7)

At times prison officials acted in administering forced medications to inmate, contours of inmate's rights to avoid unwanted administration of antipsychotic drugs were not sufficiently clear; therefore, officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action based on forced medication. Gay v. Turner, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 994 F.2d 425, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate failed to establish that examining physician deliberately withheld treatment for ruptured appendix in order to secure confession about ingestion of drug-filled balloons, and, thus, physician was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action; physician was not told about inmate having vomited blood, found no etiology for abdominal pain, admitted inmate to hospital for observation, and made no mention of contraband or blood vomiting in clinical notes. Taylor v. Bowers, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 966 F.2d 417, modified on rehearing, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 394, 506 U.S. 946, 121 L.Ed.2d 302. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Prison physician and nurse were qualifiedly immune from § 1983 liability in connection with forced administration of antipsychotic drug to inmate; in 1985, it was not clearly established that their action violated due process or Eighth Amendment. Williams v. Anderson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 959 F.2d 1411. Civil Rights 1376(7)

At time prison pharmacist withheld inmate's seizure medication, law clearly established that prison pharmacist could not intentionally interfere with or fail to carry out treatment prescribed for prisoner so as to preclude application of qualified immunity doctrine to pharmacist who intentionally refused to fill inmate's prescriptions. Johnson v. Hay, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 931 F.2d 456. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's claim that she wanted to have an abortion and was not enabled to do so as a result of their actions; it was not clearly established at time of alleged actions that constitution required federal prison employees to facilitate prisoners in their requests for an abortion, and there was no indication that officials did anything other than exercise their honest medical judgment. Gibson v. Matthews, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1991, 926 F.2d 532. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate's right to another due process hearing before he could be forcibly injected with medication after transfer from security medical facility to penitentiary for treatment on outpatient basis was not clearly established, and, thus, prison officials, who forcibly injected medication, enjoyed qualified immunity from liability under statute, which prohibits deprivation of federal constitutional rights under color of state law, where inmate was given full hearing on issue of involuntary commitment to security medical facility, where inmate could be forcibly medicated while at security medical facility, and where district court conditioned release to penitentiary on continued medication. Lappe v. Loeffelholz, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1987, 815 F.2d 1173. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not immune from liability in civil rights action arising from death of prisoner by cardiorespiratory arrest on basis of good-faith immunity defense, since deliberate indifference or willful neglect standard for determining liability of prison officials was clearly established at time of prisoner's death. Bass by Lewis v. Wallenstein, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 769 F.2d 1173. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials who were defendants in suit for damages under this section brought by administrator of estate of prisoner based on charge that prisoner suffered and died as result of inhumane conditions and inadequate medical care in hospital unit were not entitled to qualified or good-faith immunity, since law on willful neglect of prisoners' medical needs was clearly established at time prisoner died. Joseph v. Brierton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 739 F.2d 1244. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials violated clearly established law in 1999-2000 and thus were not eligible for qualified immunity, if they denied prisoner necessary Rebetron Therapy for his Hepatitis C, which had been unanimously recommended by prisoner's physicians, on basis of prisoner's failure of drug test, as same involved denial of medically necessary and available treatment based on non-medical considerations. Johnson v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 352. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate's Eighth Amendment right to be free from levels of second-hand smoke that posed an unreasonable risk of serious damage to inmate's future health was clearly established, and, thus, jail officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's Eighth Amendment claim based on exposure to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS). Abdullah v. Washington, D.D.C.2006, 437 F.Supp.2d 137. Civil Rights 1376(7)

With respect to claims of qualified immunity of government officials, the law regarding claims of deliberate indifference to a serious medical need and unconstitutional conditions of confinement was sufficiently established, at the time of the alleged violations of inmate's rights, to put correctional defendants on notice that they could be liable for violating the Eighth Amendment if they deliberately ignored evidence of stroke. Pimentel v. Deboo, D.Conn.2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 118. Civil Rights 1376(7)

New York Department of Correctional Services (DOCS), its Commissioner, correctional facility superintendent and medical director, and correctional officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 to wheelchair-using prisoner who was allegedly injured while being transported in unsafe van, although neither Supreme Court nor Second Circuit had held that failure to provide safe transportation to wheelchair-using inmates constituted deliberate indifference to their serious medical needs under Eighth Amendment; defendants' alleged conduct amounted to more than ordinary lack of due care for prisoner's interest or safety in violation of Second Circuit's 1987 Gill v. Mooney decision, and their decision to place inmate back in wheelchair after he fell once demonstrated complete disregard for his safety. Allah v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 265. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Law was clearly established that officials were required to act if they had knowledge of substantial risk to jail detainee, precluding qualified immunity defense to §§ 1983 claim that officials having contact with jail detainee violated his due process rights by not following suicide prevention steps that might have forestalled his death. Gaston v. Ploeger, D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1211. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was clearly established in Estelle v. Gamble that inmate's right to access to mental health services fell within ambit of Eighth Amendment, and thus prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § § 1983 as result of their alleged failure to timely provide medication or treatment to mentally ill inmate. Ziemba v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 173, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 430 F.3d 623. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Qualified immunity was not available to orthopedic surgeon on incarcerated prisoner's claim that surgeon deliberately failed to schedule him for needed shoulder surgery for almost two years while knowing that excessive delay could mean permanent disability, as prisoner's Eighth Amendment right to be free from deliberate indifference to serious medical needs was clearly established; issue presented was whether surgeon failed to schedule operation in disregard of prisoner's right to adequate medical care. Benjamin v. Schwartz, S.D.N.Y.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Security and nursing staff at state prison were not entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's claims alleging that they were deliberately indifferent to her serious medical needs, since Eighth Amendment prohibition against deliberate indifference to a prisoner's serious medical needs was clearly established law. Doe v. Gustavus, E.D.Wis.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 1003. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was clearly established that prison officials could violate the Eighth Amendment through deliberate indifference to an inmate's exposure to levels of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) that posed an unreasonable risk of future harm to the inmate's health, for purposes of correctional officer's qualified immunity defense from inmate's § 1983 claims for Eighth Amendment violations. Gill v. Smith, N.D.N.Y.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 763. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Representative of inmate who died in custody of Alabama Department of Corrections failed to establish that warden would have known that failure to take steps to insure that inmate went to chronic care clinic was unlawful in light of clearly established law and information he possessed, and thus, warden had qualified immunity from representative's civil rights action based on warden's alleged deliberate indifference to inmate's serious medical need; representative failed to present any evidence from which it could be found or inferred that warden had anything to do with lack of transfer or that he was aware that medical personnel had determined that chronic care clinic was appropriate treatment for inmate. Pinkney v. Davis, M.D.Ala.1997, 952 F.Supp. 1561. Civil Rights 1376(7)

For purposes of asserting qualified immunity in civil rights action arising from pretrial detainee's suicide, law was clearly established at time of incident in 1989 that police officers had minimum duty to detainee not to be deliberately indifferent to her serious medical needs if they were subjectively aware of substantial risk of harm to detainee. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., N.D.Miss.1996, 949 F.Supp. 456, reversed 135 F.3d 320. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison doctor's refusal to provide inmate with "high performance" footwear, which was not specially made or even therapeutic, for inmate's ankle pain, while providing inmate with comprehensive course of appropriate treatment, was objectively reasonable and not in contravention of any clearly established federal or constitutional right, and thus doctor was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's claims in § 1983 suit alleging denial of equal protection and willful indifference to serious medical problem. Alston v. Howard, S.D.N.Y.1996, 925 F.Supp. 1034. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Even if prison nurse violated inmate's First and Eighth Amendment rights by yelling at inmate and threatening to punish him for directing method of surgery by which prison physician was to remove cyst-like growth on inmate's forehead, qualified immunity protected nurse from liability for damages in her individual capacity; nurse's alleged conduct did not violate any clearly established constitutional right of which reasonable nurse would have known. Arce v. Banks, S.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 307, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on claim by inmate, purporting to be transsexual, that he was denied separate classification to accommodate his needs; officials did not violate any clearly established constitutional rights of which reasonable prison officials would have known, as claimant had no right to particular medical treatment or to be classified in certain way. Long v. Nix, S.D.Iowa 1995, 877 F.Supp. 1358, affirmed 86 F.3d 761, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police officers have clearly established duty not to remain deliberately indifferent to arrestees' serious needs for psychological and medical treatment and, thus, officers would not be entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action if arrestee had told them that she had just been raped; although arrestee's right may have been somewhat general, it was necessary to consider that action for damages may have been only realistic avenue for vindication of constitutional guarantees as applied to particular facts. Carnell v. Grimm, D.Hawai'i 1994, 872 F.Supp. 746, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 74 F.3d 977. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from incontinent prisoner's § 1983 civil rights action in which prisoner alleged that refusal of his request for daily showers was deliberate indifference to his condition in violation of Eighth Amendment, since law was not clearly established that defendant was entitled to daily showers. De La Paz v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 909. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Right of pretrial detainee to be free from deliberate indifference to her serious medical needs by arresting officer was "clearly established," barring officer's qualified immunity defense, in pretrial detainee's § 1983 action, alleging that officer denied her medical care; precedent establishing arresting officer's duty to provide medical care and establishing same protection from deliberate indifference to serious medical needs for pretrial detainees as for convicted prisoners was decided fifteen years prior to detainee's arrest. Prado v. Lane, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 98 Fed.Appx. 757, 2004 WL 882149, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3915. ---- Involuntary administration of medication, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Although prison psychiatrist who ordered administration of antipsychotic medications to prisoner without his consent, and without following state policy, thus giving rise to prisoner's § 1983 action, was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to administrations given before and within short period of time after Supreme Court's Harper decision, which set forth due process requirements for such administrations, psychiatrist should have known of that decision when she met with prisoner some three weeks after it was handed down, and thus, psychiatrist was not entitled to qualified immunity for administrations which occurred thereafter. Doby v. Hickerson, C.A.8 (Ark.)

1997, 120 F.3d 111. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison physician did not violate clearly established law in ordering involuntary administration of psychotropic medication to prison inmate whose conduct constituted danger to himself or others without first conducting predeprivation hearing, despite prior holding in Washington v. Harper, and physician was thus entitled to qualified immunity with respect to such order; while Harper re-established inmate's constitutionally protected liberty interest in avoiding involuntary administration of psychotropic drugs, it did not establish any particular process required to precede one-time administration of antipsychotic drug in emergency circumstance at issue. Hogan v. Carter, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1996, 85 F.3d 1113, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 408, 519 U.S. 974, 136 L.Ed.2d 321. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3916. ---- Classification of inmates, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 civil rights claim by inmates, alleging that randomly assigning new inmates to double cells produced increased risk of cellmate violence in violation of Eighth Amendment; diversity of precedent on need for classifying cellmates precluded finding that random cell assignment violated clearly established rights. Jensen v. Clarke, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1191. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State official who recommended that inmate be classified as a sex offender based upon earlier rape charge that had been dismissed was entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's §§ 1983 claim for Due Process violation; at the time inmate was classified, it was not clearly established that the classification of an inmate as a sex offender implicated a liberty interest and that so classifying an inmate without procedural safeguards created liability under § § 1983. Kritenbrink v. Crawford, D.Nev.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 1139. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Placement of mentally ill prison inmate in continuously illuminated maximum security cell without windows was not clearly established as conduct violative of inmates' Eighth Amendment rights, and consequently prison officials responsible for placement of mentally ill patient in maximum security had qualified immunity from inmate's damages suit under §§ 1983. Scarver v. Litscher, W.D.Wis.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 986, affirmed 434 F.3d 972. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3916A. ---- Minimum housing standards, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Sheriff with supervisory responsibilities for city jail was not entitled to qualified immunity from claim that she violated Eighth Amendment right of inmate to minimum housing standards, leading to his contracting and dying from bacterial meningitis; existence of minimal housing right was clearly established at time inmate was in jail, and sheriff know it was being violated. Brown v. Mitchell, E.D.Va.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 615. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3917. ---- Number of inmates in cell, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmates' claim that double celling of inmates violated Eighth Amendment; right claimed was not clearly established, and prison officials would have been reasonably justified in their belief that law did not proscribe their actions and that their actions did not violate inmates' statutory or constitutional rights. Barajas v. Waters, E.D.Mich.1993, 815 F.Supp. 222, affirmed 21 F.3d 427. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3918. ---- Temperature in cells, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by inmates alleging that they were subjected to freezing temperatures, even though the inmates were so subjected during period of abnormally cold weather and malfunctioning heating system; inmates had clearly established constitutional right to have adequate heat and shelter. Henderson v. DeRobertis, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 940 F.2d 1055, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1578, 503 U.S. 966, 118 L.Ed.2d 220, on remand. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claim that they failed to clean up or allow him to clean up human feces from his cell and claim that temperature in his cell fell below freezing during three days in January; inmate's rights were clearly established. Wilson v. Schomig, N.D.Ill.1994, 863 F.Supp. 789. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3919. ---- Exercise and recreation, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Inmate's Eighth Amendment right to exercise was clearly established, for purposes of qualified immunity asserted by prison official, at time inmate was confined to "medical keeplock" without opportunity for out-of-cell exercise unless he submitted to latent tuberculosis (TB) testing. Williams v. Greifinger, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 97 F.3d 699. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Contours of state inmates' right to exercise were not sufficiently clear in 1982 such that a reasonable prison official would understand that limiting state inmate to one hour exercise per day, five days a week every 30 days, as a punitive sanction, violated the Eighth Amendment and, accordingly, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that limiting his outdoor exercise violated Eighth Amendment. Rodgers v. Jabe, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1082. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmates had a clearly established right to some recreation over a one-year time period at time that manager of prison's segregation unit deprived inmate of all recreation time for over a year and thus manager was not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 suit. Watts v. Ramos, N.D.Ill.1996, 948 F.Supp. 739. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison inmate's alleged right to outdoor exercise while he was confined for 70 days in segregation was not clearly established in summer of 1994, so that prison official was immune from civil rights liability for his alleged wrongful denial of inmate's yard privileges, where inmate did not maintain that he was precluded from exercising in his cell or during his visits to medical unit, law library or visitation area. Thomas v. Ramos, N.D.Ill.1996, 918 F.Supp. 228, affirmed 130 F.3d 754, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3920. ---- Grooming standards, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Right of prisoner who was Hasidic Jew to grow his beard and sidelocks in contravention of state prison grooming regulations was not clearly established at time he was forced to cut his hair in 1996 and 1998, and thus prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit alleging violation of prisoner's First Amendment rights. Flagner v. Wilkinson, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2001, 241 F.3d 475, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 678, 534 U.S. 1071, 151 L.Ed.2d 590. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to official immunity from inmate's claim that he was denied haircut in violation of state statute; inmate's claim was not novel. Anderson v. Romero, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 72 F.3d 518. Prisons 10

3921. ---- Informants, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

There was no clearly established right in 1998 that required police or jail guards to embargo and detain threatening prison mail or to protect cooperating confidential informants from retaliatory violence, for purposes of determining whether police officer was entitled to qualified immunity on civil rights claim brought by estate of cooperating witness who was murdered after prison mail identifying him as informant was released. Gatlin ex rel. Gatlin v. Green, D.Minn.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 1064, affirmed 362 F.3d 1089, appeal after remand from federal court 2006 WL 1320467. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(7)

3922. ---- Intimidation, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Intimidation of state inmate by another inmate where intimidation did not result in any actual injury but only in inmate giving other inmate his pork and beef from his meals and being forced to sleep on mattress on floor of cell was not a violation of clearly established constitutional right; therefore, state officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action with respect to intimidation claims. Allen v. City and County of Honolulu, D.Hawai'i 1993, 816 F.Supp. 1501, affirmed 39 F.3d 936. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3923. ---- Assault, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

County jail detainee had clearly established Fourteenth Amendment right to be free from a county correctional officer's deliberate indifference to assault by another inmate, for purpose of officer's claimed qualified immunity defense. Velez v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 395 F.3d 732, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Law was clearly established at time of inmate's injuries that prison officials could be liable for failure to protect inmate from use of excessive force if they were deliberately indifferent to substantial risk of serious harm to inmate, and thus, other members of "movement team," sent to restrain inmate and remove him from cell, were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for failing to intercede when correctional officer assaulted inmate. Estate of Davis by Ostenfeld v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1388. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Deputy sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claim of prisoner who was assaulted by two other inmates at the county jail; law governing duty to protect inmates from other inmates was unclear when assault occurred, and there was no showing that sheriff had reason to know that this particular inmate was in danger. Price v. Sasser, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 65 F.3d 342. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Prison superintendent was not entitled to qualified immunity from claim that he violated Eighth Amendment rights of inmates by permitting them to be homosexually raped by other inmates, as constitutional right to be free of sexual attacks by other inmates is a clearly established constitutional right about which superintendent either knew or should have known. Butler v. Dowd, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 979 F.2d 661, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2395, 508 U.S. 930, 124 L.Ed.2d 297. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights actions arising when inmate was assaulted by fellow prisoners; officer failed to comply with clearly established constitutional duty of protecting prisoners from violence at hands of other prisoners when he failed to come to inmate's aid, and officer's failure to act was unreasonable. Ayala Serrano v. Lebron Gonzalez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 909 F.2d 8. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from paying damages in civil rights action brought as result of death of psychiatrically disturbed prisoner whose body was dismembered a few months after his transfer to district jail as result of "deliberate indifference" of prison officials to prisoner's health or safety problems; at time of prisoner's death it was well established that deliberate indifference to prisoner's health and safety violated Eighth Amendment, prison officials knew of federal court decree finding entire system unconstitutionally unsafe and medically deficient and emphasizing need for segregation of mentally ill prisoners from general population, and prison officials failed to take measures within their control, such as segregating mentally ill inmates, despite fact that prisoner in Puerto Rican jail was more likely to be murdered than prisoner in other penal institutions in United States. Cortes-Quinones v. Jimenez-Nettleship, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1988, 842 F.2d 556, certiorari denied 109

S.Ct. 68, 488 U.S. 823, 102 L.Ed.2d 45. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity on §§ 1983 claim arising out of fatal assault on county jail inmate by other inmates; inmate's estate and his survivors made a prima facie case of a constitutional violation, and the allegedly violated duty of prison officials to take reasonable measures to guarantee inmate safety was clearly established at the time of the assault. Wilson v. Maricopa County, D.Ariz.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 987. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County deputy sheriff alleged to have shoved a pretrial detainee without provocation, causing severe injury to the detainee's knee, was not entitled to qualified immunity in the detainee's §§ 1983 suit; case law put the officer on notice that his conduct was clearly unlawful. Harris v. Adams, S.D.Ohio 2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 707. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Detective was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's Eighth Amendment claim for failure to adequately protect arrestee while incarcerated; even if detective had a duty to inform the inmate reception center at the jail of arrestee's status as an immediate family member of a law enforcement officer, so that he could be segregated from the general prison population, such a duty had not been clearly established in the law of the circuit, and the evidence failed to establish that such failure constituted a "sufficiently serious" deprivation, viewed objectively, since arrestee was already segregated from the general population due to the nature of the charges against him. Ramirez v. County of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time of inmate's death following alleged beating by prison guards, it was clearly established that prison warden could face liability under §§ 1983 predicated on his failure to take reasonable steps in the face of a history of widespread abuse that created a known substantial risk of serious harm to inmates or his adoption of custom or policies that resulted in deliberate indifference to the constitutional rights of prison inmates, and thus, warden was not entitled to qualified immunity on §§ 1983 supervisory liability claim brought by estate of inmate. Valdes v. Crosby, M.D.Fla.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1084, affirmed 2006 WL 1474726. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Eighth Amendment violations alleged by inmate in §§ 1983 action against prison personnel, including beating by correction officers that required medical attention, and deliberate indifference to inmate's serious medical needs after beating and brain surgery, were violations of clearly established rights, and thus, prison personnel were not entitled to dismissal of complaint on qualified immunity grounds. Davis v. Carroll, D.Del.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 415 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

Freedom from the use of excessive force is a clearly established constitutional right, for purpose of law enforcement officers' claim of qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action alleging Eighth Amendment violation. Atkins v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 372 F.Supp.2d 377. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Correctional officers, who allegedly caused detainee severely debilitating facial and head injuries by engaging in a physical struggle in an effort to apply restraints to his wrists after detainee refused an order to get on the water-covered floor of his cell, were not entitled to qualified immunity on pre-trial detainee's due process excessive force claim; pre-trial detainee's right to be free from constitutionally excessive force under the Fourteenth Amendment was "clearly established" as of September 1998, when the incident took place. Simms ex rel. Simms v. Hardesty, D.Md.2003, 303 F.Supp.2d 656, affirmed 104 Fed.Appx. 853, 2004 WL 1595700. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Even if deputy sheriff violated pretrial detainee's due process right to protection from violence at the hands of other inmates when the deputy housed the inmate, a gang member who told the deputy he had gang affiliation but did not identify his affiliation, in a cell with a member of a rival gang, the deputy was entitled to qualified immunity under § 1983; although the law was clearly established that a correctional officer could not disregard a substantial risk of serious harm to an inmate of which he was aware, there was no clearly established right for an inmate to choose his cellmates, and the law had not fleshed out at what point a risk of inmate assault became sufficiently substantial for Eighth Amendment or due process purposes. Mooring v. San Francisco Sheriff's Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate's Eighth Amendment right not to be intentionally punched in back of his head by correctional official after he had been successfully restrained and posed no apparent disciplinary threat was clearly established on February 1, 2001, and thus official was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for his alleged beating of inmate. Bafford v. Nelson, D.Kan.2002, 241 F.Supp.2d 1192. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Jailer was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to § 1983 Fourteenth Amendment claim brought by arrestee who alleged that he was physically assaulted because jailer encouraged inmates to beat him up; law was not clearly established that prison officials violate constitutional laws when they make statements in presence of inmates that particular inmate is "sick" and "should have his ass beat." Martinez v. Mathis, S.D.Ga.1997, 970 F.Supp. 1047, reversed in part, vacated in part 159 F.3d 1360. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established in March of 1995 that inmate had constitutional right to be secure in bodily integrity and free from attack by prison guard, so as to defeat claim of qualified immunity by prison officials on Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment claims by inmate who claimed that she was raped by guard. Carrigan v. State of Del., D.Del.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1376. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison counselor who denied inmate's request for protective custody was not entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action; inmate had clearly established right not to be subjected through correctional officer's deliberate indifference to risk of serious harm from fellow prisoners. Hill v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 945. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Director of security for county correctional facility was not qualifiedly immune from inmate's § 1983 claim that director violated inmate's due process rights by sodomizing and otherwise sexually abusing him; any reasonable director of security would know that it was objectively unreasonable, and a violation of inmate's rights, to try to force unwanted and prohibited acts on powerless inmate. Mathie v. Fries, E.D.N.Y.1996, 935 F.Supp. 1284, affirmed 121 F.3d 808. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison official who allegedly opened door of prisoner's cell, to allow another inmate to enter in order to "f___ that b____ up," was not entitled to qualified immunity; right of an inmate not to be recklessly subjected to attacks by other inmates was clearly established at time that incident occurred. Jones v. Banks, N.D.Ill.1995, 892 F.Supp. 988 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action arising out of inmate's being stabbed by another inmate; inmate's constitutional right alleged to be at issue, the right to reasonable protection from inmate-on-inmate violence, was clearly established at time of assault, and previous court opinion had set forth conditions of confinement for open barracks unit which required a correctional officer in hallway to constantly monitor two opposing open barracks containing up to 100 inmates each and hourly security patrols, yet prison officials failed to carry out required security patrols and, thus, knew that they were violating clearly established constitutional rights. Smith v. Norris, E.D.Ark.1995, 877 F.Supp. 1296, affirmed in part, reversed in part 103 F.3d 637. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State inmate's claim that prison officials failed to protect him when he was attacked by fellow inmate did not allege violation of any clearly established statutory or constitutional rights; therefore, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on inmate's § 1983 claim. Abdul-Matiyn v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, N.D.N.Y.1994, 871 F.Supp. 1542, affirmed 66 F.3d 309. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on a state prison inmate's claim of excessive force; right of inmates to be free from excessive force by their jailers was well established, and the inmate testified that one officer initiated the altercation without provocation, and that a second officer mauled him after he and the first officer had been separated. McCrory v. Belden, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22271192, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison official responsible for articulating, copying, and distributing use of force policy was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action under § 1983, brought by estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by guard during altercation between inmates in exercise yard, where, even if official had control over promulgation of policy, Court of Appeals had previously determined that identical use of force policy was constitutionally sound. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107989, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3924. ---- Death of prisoner, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Police chief was entitled to qualified immunity in his individual capacity from liability for suicide of arrestee, who first threatened suicide, but then withdrew threat, where no clearly established law required chief to staff jail or train his officers more thoroughly to prevent suicide under circumstances; blanket, sheets and mattress were removed from arrestee's cell and she was observed every 15 minutes. Heggs v. Grant, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 73 F.3d 317. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Chief criminal investigator for county and county jail guard were entitled to qualified immunity under § 1983 for any actions they took with regard to prisoner's suicide; officials were not physicians and were not responsible for meeting prisoner's psychiatric and medical needs while she was in jail and case law did not clearly establish constitutional or statutory rights in suicide situation. Haney v. City of Cumming, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 69 F.3d 1098, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1826, 517 U.S. 1209, 134 L.Ed.2d 931. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(7)

At time arrestee committed suicide in jail cell, law did not clearly establish that police officers' actions in leaving inmate unguarded in cell with barred doors and means to hang himself, when they knew that inmate had attempted suicide, constituted deliberate indifference to inmate's taking of his own life, and thus officers, as sued in their individual capacities, were entitled to qualified immunity from that claim under § 1983, where officers did take steps to prevent arrestee from committing suicide, including placing him in stripped-down cell and checking on him every five minutes. Belcher v. City of Foley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1390. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Warden was not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability to family of inmate who hanged himself in cell, notwithstanding lack of "goose case" (i.e., controlling precedent) dealing with constitutional duty of warden to protect prisoner prone to suicide from self-destruction. Lewis v. Parish of Terrebonne, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 894 F.2d 142, rehearing denied 901 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prisoner's constitutional right to be free from wanton and obdurate misconduct of corrections officials that proximately causes prisoner's death under Fourteenth or Eighth Amendments was clearly established at time of alleged misconduct of state corrections officials in failing to prevent unexplained and violent murder of inmate, and reasonable corrections officials would have known of it, for purposes of officials' claim of qualified immunity from liability under civil rights statute. Harris By and Through Harris v. Maynard, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1988, 843 F.2d 414. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officers were not entitled to qualified immunity to § 1983 claims brought by estate and survivors of prisoner who committed suicide, since officers had clearly established affirmative duty under Eighth Amendment at time of prisoner's suicide to take reasonable measures to abate known risk that prisoner was suicidal, and reasonable officers would have understood that their behavior violated that right. Estate of Sisk v. Manzanares,

D.Kan.2002, 262 F.Supp.2d 1162. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3925. ---- Release of prisoner, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Officials at county detention center were protected by qualified immunity from detainee's § 1983 claim alleging that officials should have released him on basis of order requiring detainee's release from detention facility in another county; detainee did not have constitutional or statutory right to be released from county detention center based on order, and, even if he did, it was not clearly established at time of detention that order was valid as to county detention center, even though center was not named therein. Scull v. New Mexico, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2000, 236 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Executive Director of Colorado Department of Corrections (DOC), sued for damages in his individual capacity by inmate in § 1983 action alleging that Director improperly denied retroactive earned-time credits, had qualified immunity from suit; no court had interpreted governing statute at time of Director's decision, and statute did not clearly prohibit decision. Duncan v. Gunter, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1994, 15 F.3d 989. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Florida prison official was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action brought by former inmate who was allegedly not credited with proper gain time due to official's misinterpretation of amended gain-time statute, where only one decision by intermediate appellate court had construed new statute. (Per Curiam, with one Circuit Judge concurring specially.) Lee v. Dugger, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 902 F.2d 822. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Defense of qualified immunity from § 1983 liability did not apply to prison officials who allegedly were deliberately indifferent to state inmate's constitutional right to timely release from prison, inasmuch as it was clearly established that inmate could not be held in prison beyond the end of his sentence and that prison official could not be deliberately indifferent to a claim of unlawful imprisonment when prisoner presented information reasonably raising issue, and inmate raised genuine dispute as to whether reasonable investigation of his claim for release was undertaken by officials. McCurry v. Moore, N.D.Fla.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 1167. Civil Rights 1376(7)

For qualified immunity purposes, inmate had clearly established right in 1989 to be released prior to date sentence pronounced by the judge expired, in light of time served in county jail; Oregon law clearly established liberty interest in both time served credits, and in parole release date and prison term once those had been established by Parole Board, and that sheriff had duty to transmit credit for time served (CTS) certifications, and correctional institution's records department had duty to promptly forward those certificates to Parole Board once received. Plumb v. Prinslow, D.Or.1994, 847 F.Supp. 1509. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Commissioner of Department of Corrections and prison warden who were ordered by court to release certain prisoners to remedy prison overcrowding, but who refused to release them on orders of Governor, were not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by prisoners who were to be released; officials knew that prisoners had been ordered released and that further incarceration was violation of clearly established constitutional rights. Tasker v. Moore, S.D.W.Va.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1005. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Even if former inmate established constitutional violation in connection with his alleged incarceration past his properly calculated release date, inmate could not show that his rights were clearly established in law, as was required to defeat Department of Correction (DOC) officials' qualified immunity to §§ 1983 claim; prior to Montana Supreme Court's holding all consecutive sentences merged into concurrent terms upon grant of parole, controlling precedent provided that rule applied only if sentencing court did not specify whether sentences were to run concurrently or consecutively, and each of inmate's three escape and attempted escape sentences was expressly stated to be consecutive by sentencing judge. Barnacascel v. Montana, Dept. of Corrections, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 195, 2004 WL 1447710, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3926. ---- Parolee status, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Legitimate question existed as to whether parolee possessed right to be free from visual observation while furnishing urine sample required as condition of parole status; thus, correction facility officials did not violate any clearly established constitutional right in requiring parolee to urinate in bottle in presence of correction official and had qualified immunity from civil rights liability. Tyler v. Barton, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1990, 901 F.2d 689. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Massachusetts Parole Board employees were immune from inmate's action for damages under § 1983 alleging that his due process rights were violated by rescission of his previously established reserve parole date; at time of rescission, no court had held that laws or practices of Massachusetts created a protected liberty interest in a reserve parole date. Lanier v. Fair, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 876 F.2d 243. Pardon And Parole 56

Any due process right of state prison inmates to hearing before Parole Board comprised of members validly appointed under state law was not clearly established when inmates' parole hearings included members who were appointed by the Governor without Senate confirmation, in alleged violation of state statute requiring appointment of Parole Board members by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate, and thus, the Governor and Parole Board members were entitled to qualified immunity from inmates' § 1983 claim that such proceedings violated the inmates' due process rights, where state Attorney General's office had, after one such temporary appointment and before another, issued opinion that such appointments were valid under state law. Sonntag v. Papparozzi, D.N.J.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 320, affirmed as modified 94 Fed.Appx. 970, 2004 WL 737021. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established in July 1996 that arbitrary and capricious behavior by employees of board of probation and parole in intentionally delaying processing of prisoner's reparole review and considering inaccurate information in deciding reparole status violated rights of prisoner which were protected under due process clause, and thus, employees were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by prisoner; while there was some precedent to the contrary, substantial authority existed upon which employees could reasonably believe that their conduct did not violate clearly established rights. Jubilee v. Horn, E.D.Pa.1997, 975 F.Supp. 761, affirmed 151 F.3d 1025. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Although parolee had protected right in legitimate employment, this right was not clearly established at time that parole officer impeded parolee's potential employment as paralegal and reasonable person in officer's position would not have known that his conduct would violate that right and therefore, officer was entitled to qualified immunity in parolee's § 1983 action. Kaufhold v. Bright, W.D.Va.1993, 835 F.Supp. 294. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Director and Deputy Director of Illinois Department of Corrections, superintendents of youth centers, Chairman of Illinois Prisoner Review Board, and Director, Deputy Administrator, and Supervisor of Illinois Department of Children and Family Services, who continued incarceration of juvenile parolee eligible for parole until finding of postparole placement, continued to retain custody over juvenile parolee in order to protect juvenile parolee, acted with rational relationship to legitimate governmental objective, did not violate "clearly established" equal protection rights of juvenile parolee, and, therefore, were entitled to qualified immunity on equal protection claim. Flood v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1986, 638 F.Supp. 677. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3927. ---- Parole revocation hearings, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

It was not clearly established at time that prison officials refused to release inmate on expiration date of sentence that imposing short period of "delinquency time" without providing final parole revocation hearing violated due process rights of inmate, and thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 claim alleging that extension of maximum expiration date by five days based upon "declaration of delinquency" without affording final parole revocation hearing violated due process. Calhoun v. New York State Div. of Parole Officers, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 999 F.2d 647. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Mississippi Commissioner of Corrections, who failed to establish adequate policies or procedures to govern preliminary hearing in parole revocation proceeding, an elementary case, should have known that his conduct violated clearly established right; therefore, Commissioner was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by parolee. Farrish v. Mississippi State Parole Bd., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1988, 836 F.2d 969. Civil Rights 1376(7)

County sheriff was not required by Idaho law to provide a prisoner with notice of a claimed parole violation nor to advise prisoner of his right to a parole revocation hearing; thus, since the sheriff was holding the prisoner in custody under a state parole officer's warrant and had no authority to release the prisoner or interfere with state parole revocation procedures, his conduct did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known and consequently he enjoyed a qualified immunity from damages under § 1983. Shouse v. Ljunggren, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1986, 792 F.2d 902. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3928. ---- Work release programs, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Constitutional right of inmate faced with revocation of work release status to due process protections of Morrissey -type hearing due to parolees, rather than to protections due in prison disciplinary hearings, was not clearly established at time inmate's work release status was revoked, and thus Director of Department of Corrections was entitled to qualified immunity for his failure to provide such hearing; although there were similarities between parolees and work release participants, department exercised significant control over work release inmates, and relevant statutes referred to work release participants as "inmates." Jackson v. Lockhart, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1993, 7 F.3d 1391. Civil Rights 1376(7); Constitutional Law 272(2)

State correctional officials were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claim of imprisoned resident alien who charged that revocation of his participation in work release program based on issuance of immigration warrant against him violated due process; while it was clear that liberty interest existed in work release program, boundaries of that interest were not drawn with such clarity that officials could know precisely what was required to remove alien from program. Severino v. Negron, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1439. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Non-consensual sex between prisoner and government employees with authority over prisoner violated clearly established federal law, and thus state drivers license examiner was not entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's § 1983 suit alleging that he forced her to have sex with him in exchange for increased privileges while prisoner was on work release at drivers license examination center. Smith v. Cochran, N.D.Okla.2001, 216 F.Supp.2d 1286, affirmed 339 F.3d 1205. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Defendants, who were directors of State Division of Corrections during part of time that former prisoner was enrolled in work release program, were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit brought to recover maintenance costs which had been deducted from prisoner's earnings while enrolled in program, in that their conduct was objectively reasonable and their discretionary acts violated none of the former prisoner's clearly established constitutional rights. Ervin v. Blackwell, W.D.Mo.1983, 585 F.Supp. 680, affirmed 733 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3929. ---- Searches generally, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Assuming that juvenile had Fourth Amendment right not to be required to strip to her undergarments upon admission to juvenile detention facility, such right was not clearly established in 1999, and county officials thus were qualifiedly immune from liability for any violation of such right, where there was no appellate decision from Supreme Court or any federal circuit ruling on such issue, and, although many courts had concluded that strip search of adult offenders without individualized suspicion was unreasonable, those cases did not consider interests involved when state had responsibility to act in loco parentis. Smook v. Minnehaha County, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2006, 457 F.3d 806. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Although strip searches and body cavity searches of arrestees were not supported by reasonable suspicion, police officer was entitled to qualified immunity because, as of January 22, 1999, the law was not clearly established that an arrestee detained in the general jail population could not constitutionally be strip searched without reasonable suspicion. Evans v. City of Zebulon, GA, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 351 F.3d 485, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 364 F.3d 1298, on rehearing 407 F.3d 1272, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 163 Fed.Appx. 850, 2005 WL 2314522. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims asserted by arrestees who were subjected to illegal strip and visual body cavity searches, since, at time of searches, it was not clearly established that blanket strip searches of misdemeanant arrestees, conducted without particularized suspicion at maximum security prison, were unconstitutional, or that such searches were never constitutional when security needs they addressed could be met by less intrusive means. (Per Selya, Circuit Judge, by an equally divided court, with three judges concurring.) Savard v. Rhode Island, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2003, 338 F.3d 23, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1109, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established in October 1993 that male inmates had Fourth Amendment privacy interests prohibiting cross-gender body cavity searches, so that female guards were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights suit by male prisoner whom they searched. Somers v. Thurman, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 109 F.3d 614, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 143, 522 U.S. 852, 139 L.Ed.2d 90. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Although inmate suspected of drug use told truth when he said he could not urinate when sample for drug test was requested, and although prison guard and prison physician could have waited instead of inserting catheter up inmate's urinary tract, guard and physician were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's civil rights action for violating his fourth amendment rights, since right to be free from having catheter inserted was not "clearly established" at time of procedure and inmate could have been lying. Sparks v. Stutler, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 71 F.3d 259, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 357, 519 U.S. 948, 136 L.Ed.2d 249. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Female prisoners had "clearly established" Fourth Amendment right to be free from body-cavity searches in conjunction with general security search of prison, and thus, government officials were not entitled to immunity from section 1983 liability with regard to searches; prisoners alleged that searches were conducted by police officers, without medical personnel, involved touching, and were conducted in nonhygienic manner and in presence of male officers. Bonitz v. Fair, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1986, 804 F.2d 164. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Correction officials who ordered unconstitutional strip searches, unconstitutional body-cavity searches and searches pursuant to random-search policy were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for damages, in view of fact that they operated in area in which law was not charted clearly and in view of fact that it appeared that such searches were conducted based upon good-faith reliance on rules and regulations in effect at the time. Security and Law Enforcement Employees, Dist. Council 82, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO by Clay v. Carey, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 737 F.2d 187. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Right to be free from blanket strip-search policy under which all female, but not male, pre-presentment arrestees were strip searched, regardless of the offenses with which they were charged or any individualized suspicion that they were concealing contraband, was clearly established in arrestees' §§ 1983 action against former U.S. Marshal, such that marshal was not entitled to qualified immunity at pre-trial stage of action, since the unconstitutionality of such a policy would have been clear to any reasonable official in former marshal's position. Johnson v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 48. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

County sheriff had qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim that he violated Fourth Amendment rights of county jail detainees by implementing policy of strip searching all detainees alleged to have committed non-violent, non-weapon, non-drug felonies, without reasonable suspicion they were harboring contraband on or within their bodies; it was not clearly established that suspicion was required before felons in these categories could be strip searched. Tardiff v. Knox County, D.Me.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriffs were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to jail detainees' Fourth Amendment claims challenging jail's "strip search" policy, which required detainees to submit to a visual "front and back" inspection upon leaving a shower without regard to reasonable suspicion; policy in place at county jail did not violate clearly established rights of detainees at the time the searches were purportedly performed in 2003 and 2004. Powell v. Barrett, N.D.Ga.2005, 376 F.Supp.2d 1340. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Contours of the constitutional rights that parolees enjoy against unreasonable searches are not "clearly established" for qualified immunity purposes. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State corrections officer who conducted routine unclothed body cavity search of inmate during transfer from one segregation cell to another, which inmate found degrading and humiliating because of presence of female guard, was entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment action against officer alleging unreasonable search; there was no clearly established right of inmates to be free from bodily exposure to guards of opposite sex. Lay v. Porker, C.D.Cal.2004, 371 F.Supp.2d 1159. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Former and current directors of county juvenile detention facility were not entitled to qualified immunity in detainees' §§1983 class action bringing Fourth Amendment challenge to facility's policy of conducting suspicionless strip searches of all juveniles admitted to facility regardless of charged offense; by time of searches in question it was clearly established that suspicionless strip searches of non-felony arrestees were unlawful, given Court of Appeals decision in circuit in which facility was located plus like decisions in seven other federal circuits, and national standards for operation of juvenile correctional facilities, on which directors purportedly relied, could not override clearly established law. Smook v. Minnehaha County, D.S.D.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 1037, adhered to on reconsideration 353 F.Supp.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from male inmate's suit arising from use of force to conduct strip search after inmate refused to submit to strip search by female officer; clearly existing law at time of incident authorized prison officials to have male inmates strip searched by female officers, and use of force was restrained. Collins v. Scott, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1009. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether group strip search of inmates, who alleged that search violated tenet of inmates' religion prohibiting exposure of genital area of body to others and which occurred after altercation involving employees and other inmates, was objectively reasonable and did not violate First and Fourth Amendments precluded summary judgment for prison officials on basis of qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by inmates. Show v. Patterson, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 182. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison official was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to inmate's § 1983 claim that nonrandom urinalysis testing of inmate not based on reasonable suspicion violated inmate's Fourth Amendment rights; neither Supreme Court nor Second Circuit had held, as of time of test (or since), that nonrandom urine tests of prisoners not based on reasonable suspicion are unreasonable under Fourth Amendment. Strauch v. Demskie, S.D.N.Y.1995, 892 F.Supp. 503. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Requirement of consultation with clinician prior to strip and body cavity search was not clearly established by Due Process Clause at time of search of inmate in correction facility, and so facility officials had qualified immunity from suit brought on basis of failure to supervise search. Cameron v. Fair, D.Mass.1995, 887 F.Supp. 387. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Sheriff who was sued for civil rights violations that allegedly occurred during arrestee's strip-search was not entitled to qualified immunity merely because none of the case law on strip-searches specifically addressed particular factual scenario in question. Kelly v. Foti, E.D.La.1994, 870 F.Supp. 126, affirmed in part and remanded 77 F.3d 819, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 85 F.3d 627. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law that required rectal cavity searches of prisoners to be conducted in reasonable manner was clearly established when digital, rectal cavity searches were conducted, and, thus, prison officials did not enjoy qualified immunity from liability. Vaughn v. Ricketts, D.Ariz.1987, 663 F.Supp. 401. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Jail officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on claim that jail policy permitted unconstitutional strip searches on jail detainees charged with minor offenses, as right to be free of a strip search absent reasonable suspicion was clearly established at time of incidents. Marriott v. County of Montgomery, N.D.N.Y.2005, 227 F.R.D. 159, affirmed 2005 WL 3117194. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3930. ---- Cell searches, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

A prison guard was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for civil damages by a prisoner subjected to retaliatory cell searches and conduct violations for bringing the illicit conduct of a prison guard to the attention of prison officials; although no court had previously held cell searches to amount to an Eighth Amendment violation, the unlawfulness of the retaliatory conduct was apparent. Scher v. Engelke, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 943 F.2d 921, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1516, 503 U.S. 952, 117 L.Ed.2d 652. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Searching cell without inmate being present and reading legal pleadings found in cell could not be basis for § 1983 civil rights claim against prison officials; ordering search was not harassment in violation of Eighth Amendment in light of inmate's admission that he drafted legal pleading, which was contraband, for another inmate, inmate did not have constitutionally protected interest in being present during inspection of legal papers, and officials were entitled to qualified immunity given that inmate had no clearly established right to be present when officers inspected or read legal pleadings. Schenck v. Edwards, E.D.Wash.1996, 921 F.Supp. 679, affirmed 133 F.3d 929. Civil Rights 1098; Civil Rights 1376(7); Sentencing And Punishment 1545; Prisons 4(7)

3931. ---- Visitor searches, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

In authorizing strip searches of prison visitors, prison superintendent did not violate their clearly established Fourth Amendment rights, thus entitling him to qualified immunity from visitors' § 1983 claims, since superintendent could have reasonably believed that there was reasonable suspicion that visitors would be bringing drugs to inmate, based on report from his staff stating that police detective had learned from two unconnected confidential informants that inmate's visitors were smuggling drugs into prison in her granddaughter's booties; although detective had actually reported uncorroborated, anonymous tip, and nature of tip was then erroneously reported to superintendent, he could not be charged with notice of facts that were not actually known to him when he made decision to authorize searches. Wood v. Clemons, C.A.1 (Me.) 1996, 89 F.3d 922. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Warden was not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by prison visitor who was subjected to visual body cavity search before being permitted to visit her husband; at time of incident, search of prison visitors without at least reasonable suspicion that they carried contraband violated clearly established law. Daugherty v. Campbell, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1991, 935 F.2d 780, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 939, 502 U.S. 1060, 117 L.Ed.2d 110. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Sheriff and county jailers were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim brought by jail visitor who alleged that her Fourth Amendment right was violated when she was searched at jail after visit to inmate, as nothing in prior cases suggested that Fourth Amendment rights of prison visitors not to be searched without a warrant could be abridged after their visit and after danger of smuggling contraband into jail had passed. Marriott By and Through Marriott v. Smith, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 931 F.2d 517, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(7)

Right of prison visitors to be free from strip and body cavity searches absent probable cause was not clearly established at time prison officials authorized such searches, for purpose of determining whether officials were entitled to qualified immunity. Long v. Norris, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1111, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 187, 502 U.S. 863, 116 L.Ed.2d 148. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Qualified immunity did not, as a matter of law, protect prison officials from liability in 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 action for alleged civil rights violations arising out of strip search of prison visitor, despite allegation that unit of state prison relied on state law and prison rule as authority to strip search indiscriminately anyone who entered prison, and allegation that prison officials had received informant's tip that visitor would be carrying drugs, where record was devoid of any information as to nature of tip or reliability of informant or decree of corroboration, visitor was 68-year-old mother of inmate who had been visiting inmate on weekly basis without incident over eight years, visitor had been strip searched seven times before with no contraband ever being discovered, and Fourth Amendment rights prohibiting search were "clearly established" at time search was conducted. Smothers v. Gibson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1985, 778 F.2d 470. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3932. ---- Sentence, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Director of Illinois Department of Corrections (IDOC) was on notice that discriminating between prisoners based upon where they served their sentences, IDOC facility or non-IDOC facility, was probably unlawful and thus, qualified immunity did not protect director from claim for money damages sought in § 1983 action brought by former state prisoner who served time in both IDOC and non-IDOC facilities alleging that as result of director's policy of requiring inmates to serve at least 60 days in IDOC facility his incarceration exceeded time served by person with the same sentence who was incarcerated exclusively in IDOC facility. Rooding v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1994, 864 F.Supp. 732. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3933. ---- Solitary confinement or segregation of prisoners, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Prison officials' sentencing of inmate to nine years of administrative segregation for various disciplinary violations was not violation of substantive due process, thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action; inmate had no fundamental right to be housed in general prison population and officials' conduct did not shock the conscience. Brown v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1994, 33 F.3d 951, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7); Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 13(4)

For purpose of prison officials' qualified immunity claim with respect to decision not to release prisoner from segregation, prisoner had clearly established right to be released from segregation after he no longer qualified for confinement in administrative segregation. Mackey v. Dyke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1086. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Liberty interest in prison inmate's involuntary confinement in special housing unit (SHU) was not established in 1983 when inmate was confined to SHU, and prison officials had qualified immunity with respect to inmate's claims that he was unconstitutionally placed into SHU. Wright v. Smith, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 21 F.3d 496. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' placement of inmates in administrative segregation for nine, 13 and 15 days without hearing did not violate inmates' clearly established constitutional rights and therefore, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on due process claims raised in inmates' § 1983 action. Jones v. Coonce, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 7 F.3d 1359, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

For purposes of determining whether prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with inmate's § 1983 claim that they failed to release him from special management facility after multiple recommendations for his release had been approved, requiring inmate's release after recommendation for release had been approved was clearly established at time of inmate's prolonged detention; although court had not specifically held at the time that prison regulations created a liberty interest, later decision so holding was predictable. Hall v. Lombardi, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 996 F.2d 954, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 698, 510 U.S. 1047, 126 L.Ed.2d 665. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's § 1983 civil rights claim alleging that placement of inmate in administrative segregation for 15 days without hearing violated due process; Missouri law did not create liberty interest in avoiding administrative segregation when first transferred to new prison. Swenson v. Trickey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 995 F.2d 132, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 568, 510 U.S. 999, 126 L.Ed.2d 468 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were shielded by doctrine of qualified immunity from inmate's damage claims arising out of administrative segregation in violation of procedural due process, where responsible prison officials at time of inmate's administrative segregation could reasonably have thought that prison rules did not create cognizable liberty interest triggering due process safeguards and, therefore, that noncompliance with procedures outlined in rules would not infract prisoner's constitutional rights. Rodi v. Ventetuolo, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1991, 941 F.2d 22. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Although Missouri statute requiring hearing within three working days after prisoner is confined in administrative segregation created protected liberty interest, statute did not give inmate due process right to hearing within three working days, entitling prison officials to qualified immunity in civil rights action based on alleged violation of statute. Brown v. Frey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 889 F.2d 159, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1156, 493 U.S. 1088, 107 L.Ed.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1376(7); Constitutional Law 272(2)

Prison officials enjoyed qualified immunity from civil rights suit based on denial of due process when inmate was placed in special housing unit for administrative purposes for four days where regulation creating liberty interest which was violated was not a model of clarity and there had been no prior judicial decision or interpretation of the regulation which could have guided the actions of the prison officials. Matiyn v. Henderson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 841 F.2d 31, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 2876, 487 U.S. 1220, 101 L.Ed.2d 911. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Assuming state inmate's complaint implicated a liberty interest protected by due process clause and process he received was deficient in some manner, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for damages in inmate's § 1983 action; it was not clearly established that inmate had a liberty interest in avoiding administrative segregation while prison officials conducted investigation of misconduct and while threats by other inmates were being directed toward inmate. Christianson v. Clarke, D.Neb.1996, 932 F.Supp. 1178. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 action challenging prisoner's placement in segregation following his refusal to identify prisoner he had seen assaulting another prisoner; Supreme Court decision establishing prevailing law at time did not allow for due process complaints arising out of administrative segregation, and under circumstances officials could have reasonably believed that prisoner had been segregated for administrative purpose of expediting investigation of assault, and in any event he had received some due process consisting of notice prior to placement in segregation. Bruns v. Halford, N.D.Iowa 1996, 913 F.Supp. 1295 . Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Official of correctional center was not entitled to qualified immunity where, at time official acted, it was clearly established that placing inmate into segregative custody for no reason violated inmate's constitutional rights, even though Supreme Court had subsequently ruled otherwise. Leslie v. Doyle, N.D.Ill.1995, 896 F.Supp. 771, affirmed 125 F.3d 1132, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Jail officials were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with 17-day confinement of pretrial detainee in administrative segregation, even if due process required provision of formal hearing in addition to periodic review of status, as there was no clearly established case law available to officials when they acted alerting them of that requirement and officials complied with applicable state regulations then in effect. Ramsey v. Squires, W.D.N.Y.1995, 879 F.Supp. 270, affirmed 71 F.3d 405. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity for civil rights claims asserted against them in their individual capacities for failure to segregate inmates who had tested positive for HIV (Human Immunodeficiency Virus) from the general inmate population and failure to disclose to general prison population which inmates had tested positive, as such failures were not clearly established violations of the Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Goss v. Sullivan, D.Wyo.1993, 839 F.Supp. 1532. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Question of whether administrative segregation of prisoners inheres due process rights was not settled in Hawaii at time that prisoner's due process rights were violated by state prison officials through placement in administrative segregation without notice or hearing, and thus, state prison officials were individuals entitled to limited immunity from § 1983 suit by prisoner alleging violation of procedural due process rights. Hatori v. Haga, D.Hawai'i 1989, 751 F.Supp. 1401. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3934. ---- Transfer of prisoners, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on claim of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)-positive inmate that his transfer to housing unit for HIV-positive inmates violated his constitutional rights of equal protection, privacy, due process, freedom from cruel and unusual punishment, and freedom of association; any such rights that inmate had were not clearly established at the relevant time period. Camarillo v. McCarthy, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 998 F.2d 638. Civil Rights 1376(7)

At time of violation of inmate's due process rights by prison officials in conducting untimely posttransfer hearing, relevant law clearly established inmate's protected liberty interest, so that in § 1983 action, none of prison officials could claim immunity from damages for violation of inmate's due process rights unless one or more could show extraordinary circumstances supporting finding that he neither knew nor should have known of relevant legal standard. Maldonado Santiago v. Velazquez Garcia, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1987, 821 F.2d 822. Civil Rights 1376(7)

No clearly established legal norm was violated by absence of hearing before federal prisoner was transferred from penitentiary to medical center, allegedly for physical and psychiatric evaluation, and prison officials were thus shielded by qualified immunity from burden of defending prisoner's civil rights action based on procedural due process claim. Trapnell v. Ralston, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 819 F.2d 182. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials acted in good faith in confining prisoner, who was furnished medical treatment after complaining to prison authorities, to administrative unit at the institution, since the prison had no medical facilities and it was the only place to put the prisoner, and since the transfer was not for disciplinary reasons but rather for the purpose of continuing evaluation of his ailment, and was a decision made as a result of consultation between treating doctors and prison psychiatrist, and thus, the prison officials could not have known that they were violating "clearly established statutory or constitutional rights" of the inmate, and were entitled to immunity from section 1983 liability. Adams v. Brierton, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1985, 752 F.2d 546, rehearing denied 767 F.2d 938, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 538, 474 U.S. 1010, 88 L.Ed.2d 468. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison defendants were entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's § 1983 claim based on allegedly retaliatory transfer for exercise of First Amendment rights in filing Bar grievance against prison librarian; law on issue of transfer of a prisoner in response to an unfounded Bar grievance against a librarian with whom the prisoner had contact on a daily basis was not sufficiently clearly established at the time of the transfer. Osterback v. Kemp, N.D.Fla.2003, 300 F.Supp.2d 1238, on reconsideration 300 F.Supp.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to claims of inmate law clerks that there was a violation of a personal constitutional right of such clerks in transfer to other institutions, as there was no clearly established federal cause of action under civil rights statute for violation of personal constitutional right unique to law clerks. Adams v. James, M.D.Fla.1992, 797 F.Supp. 940. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 suit for damages resulting from reassignment of prisoner, along with 21 other prisoners who worked with prisoner in Administration Building, from his job to another job after theft of engraver owned by Department of Corrections; officials demonstrated that their actions could have been objectively justified on security grounds by reasonable prison officials, and no clearly established law at time that defendants acted taught that such set of security-oriented transfers would be "disciplinary" within meaning of Illinois statute relating to disciplinary actions against prison inmates. Baptist v. O'Leary, N.D.Ill.1990, 742 F.Supp. 975, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate's widow failed to prove that state prison warden and correctional sergeant violated any clearly established law in failing to transfer an inmate to another facility after the inmate testified against a correctional officer, and thus, they were entitled to qualified immunity in the widow's § 1983 action arising from a subsequent, fatal stabbing of the inmate; decision of where to house the inmate after he was subject to regulations providing that placement decisions were discretionary and to be based on a number of factors, and the defendants could have reasonably believed that a decision not to transfer the inmate was lawful. Boyd v. Fallman, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 262323, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3935. ---- Work conditions, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

Even if librarian who was assaulted while working in prison did have actionable due process claim against prison officials, right was not so clearly established in March of 1992 that prison officials would have understood that they were violating her due process rights by having her work in prison library in the absence of prison guard. Liebson v. New Mexico Corrections Dept., C.A.10 (N.M.) 1996, 73 F.3d 274. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability to inmate who claimed he was injured on table saw which officials knew posed serious risk of injury; even though Supreme Court had not addressed specific issue of whether work-related injuries in prison environment could violate the Eighth Amendment, official should have known that alleged conduct violated clearly established prohibition against reckless indifference to prisoner's safety. Warren v. State of Mo., W.D.Mo.1990, 754 F.Supp. 150, affirmed 995 F.2d 130. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3936. ---- Visitor privileges, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in pro se § 1983 action for damages brought by prisoner and his fiance, alleging that prison officials violated due process by postponing their marriage for a period of 12 months, as a consequence of the restriction of their visitation privileges due to a prison rules violation; it was not clearly established that such delay was unconstitutional. Martin v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 329 F.3d 919, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Superintendent of forensic program at mental health center was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to inmate's claim that he was deprived of visitation, as there was no authority expressly holding that state law provided a constitutional liberty interest in unimpeded visitation. Maust v. Headley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 959 F.2d

644, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Assistant warden was shielded by doctrine of qualified immunity from Illinois state prisoner's suit for alleged denial of his protected liberty interest in visitation; existence of statutorily created liberty interest in visitation in Illinois was not established at time of alleged denial. Gavin v. McGinnis, N.D.Ill.1994, 866 F.Supp. 1107. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Employees of Florida Department of Corrections were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action arising out of denial of inmate visitation privileges; unlawfulness of denying inmate visitation privileges without legitimate penological objectives was clearly established at time of actions challenged. Van Poyck v. Dugger, M.D.Fla.1991, 779 F.Supp. 571. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3937. ---- Miscellaneous rights, prisons and prisoners, clearly established right

For purposes of warden and assistant warden's qualified immunity defense, inmate demonstrated violation of his clearly established Eighth Amendment rights when he alleged that, along with other members of his work crew, he was confined outdoors overnight with no shelter, jacket, blanket, or source of heat while temperature dropped and wind blew and without bathroom facilities for 49 inmates sharing small bounded area, which showed sufficiently serious deprivation, and also alleged that warden ordered "sleep-out" and threatened another such night outdoors if inmates refused to work, and that both warden and assistant warden were present during evening of "sleep-out," showing requisite deliberate indifference to inmate's health and safety, even though confinement lasted only 17 hours. Palmer v. Johnson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1999, 193 F.3d 346. Sentencing And Punishment 1536; Prisons 17(1)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity even if prisoner's constitutional right against self-incrimination prevents state officials from making benefits conditional on prisoner's admission of guilt and even if denial of parole, work release, and less restrictive confinement because he refused to admit to his crime and was thus ineligible for sex offender program constituted violation of his right, where no court with jurisdiction over the state had held that such conduct was a violation at time of officials' conduct and other courts had ruled on issue with mixed results. McMorrow v. Little, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1997, 109 F.3d 432. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Although prison officials' failure to repair oven, the door to which fell off and burned prisoner's arm, put at issue prisoner's need for personal safety, in light of clearly established principles at time of incident a reasonable prison official could have believed that failure to repair oven did not violate Eighth Amendment, and thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's § 1983 suit, where prisoner failed to plead exacerbating conditions or facts rising to level of serious safety hazard. Osolinski v. Kane, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 92 F.3d 934. Civil Rights 1376(7)

In action by prison inmate against prison officials for allegedly violating statutory and constitutional rights by refusing to process mail and documents in which inmate used his religious, rather than his committed, name, inmate's First Amendment interest in using his new, legal name, at least in conjunction with his committed name, was clearly established for purposes of qualified immunity. Malik v. Brown, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1995, 71 F.3d 724. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Mayor and corrections officials had qualified immunity from civil rights claims for injuries suffered by prison inmates and pretrial detainees during course of prison riot and fire in 1983; decisions concerning prison administration and alleviation of overcrowded conditions, which allegedly caused riot and fire, were in performance of defendants' discretionary functions related to prison administration, and constitutional rights asserted were not clearly established in 1983. Brogsdale v. Barry, C.A.D.C.1991, 926 F.2d 1184, 288 U.S.App.D.C. 311. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Aggravated second offender's right to good-conduct and work/study time credits was clearly established at time that territorial corrections official refused to add credits to offender's record, precluding qualified immunity in offender's post-release §§ 1983 action alleging that official and others unconstitutionally had extended her imprisonment; official continued to deny credits even after being advised on two separate occasions by attorney in corrections department's legal offices that offender was entitled to credits. Ayuso-Figueroa v. Rivera-Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 456 F.Supp.2d 309. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Any First Amendment right of prison inmates to receive gift publications was not "clearly established" in the middle of 2000, and thus, Kansas prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity against inmates' §§ 1983 claims for damages from alleged violation of the inmates' First Amendment rights from enforcement of state prison regulations prohibiting inmates from receiving publications ordered for them by third parties, where there was only one Ninth Circuit case with ambiguous relevant statements to support the existence of the right. Prison Legal News, Inc. v. Simmons, D.Kan.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 1181. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Placement of mentally ill prison inmate in continuously illuminated maximum security cell without windows was not clearly established as conduct violative of inmates' Eighth Amendment rights, and consequently prison officials responsible for placement of mentally ill patient in maximum security had qualified immunity from inmate's damages suit under §§ 1983. Scarver v. Litscher, W.D.Wis.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 986, affirmed 434 F.3d 972. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Sheriff's deputy who requested bail enhancement from $50,000 to allegedly excessive $1 million for well-respected attorney arrested for domestic violence, and deputy's superior who authorized enhancement request, were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§1983 Eighth Amendment action, based on lack of clearly established constitutional violation and lack of causation; deputy and superior reasonably could have believed that there was risk of flight, that arrestee posed danger to alleged victim given extent of her injuries, and that setting bail at amount arrestee could not pay was functional equivalent of pretrial detention unavailable under state law, and they provided no false information to judicial officer who enhanced bail. Galen v. County of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 1045. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Standard defining inmate's right to be free from compelled self-incrimination was not clearly established, and therefore qualified immunity applied to shield state prison officials from liability for monetary damages on inmate's claim that requiring him to divulge history of sexual conduct as part of sexual offender counseling program or face loss of good time credits violated his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Donhauser v. Goord, N.D.N.Y.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 119. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's § 1983 claim brought against them in their individual capacities alleging that they violated Due Process Clause by unlawfully removing legal papers from his cell; prisoner's right to be free from deprivation of property was not absolute, there was no evidence that prisoner's right to keep legal papers in cell was clearly established at time of alleged violation, and reasonable official might not have known that alleged actions violated prisoner's rights. Damron v. North Dakota Com'r. of Corrections, D.N.D.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 970, affirmed 127 Fed.Appx. 909, 2005 WL 1076645. Civil Rights 1376(7)

The alleged due process right of a schizophrenic inmate to be free from requests to take his psychotropic medication, and the right to have counsel and any desired witnesses at a prison misconduct hearing, were not clearly established rights, and therefore, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 claim for due process violations. Whittington v. Vaughn, E.D.Pa.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 621. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Exposure of inmate to asbestos or any other substance causing delayed manifestation of harm could not present colorable Eighth Amendment claim at time of inmate's exposure and, thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's cruel and unusual punishment claim; inmate's exposure to asbestos predated controlling case law that found possible Eighth Amendment claims. Doyle v. Coombe, W.D.N.Y.1997, 976 F.Supp. 183, affirmed 159 F.3d 1346. Civil Rights 1376(7)

In challenging prison drug treatment programs, alleging, inter alia, that programs used psychological torture to achieve political and moral reeducation, former inmate failed to establish constitutional violations or to cite case law showing that constitutional standards were clearly established at time in question, thus entitling state prison officials to qualified immunity on inmate's damages claims for violations of due process, equal protection, cruel and unusual punishment, denial of court access, bills of attainder, and conspiracy. Kerr v. Puckett, E.D.Wis.1997, 967 F.Supp. 354, affirmed 138 F.3d 321. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was clearly established by June, 1992, that Rehabilitation Act and Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) applied to state correctional facilities, and thus, defendant prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action alleging that they violated those statutes after that time with respect to bilateral amputee parole violator who was awaiting trial on new charges. Kaufman v. Carter, W.D.Mich.1996, 952 F.Supp. 520. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Supervisors at prison did not have qualified immunity from civil rights action of prisoners, in which prisoners alleged that their exposure to high levels of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) violated their Eighth Amendment rights, since supervisors were chargeable with knowledge of conditions of prison, and with knowledge that second hand smoke could cause serious health problems. Warren v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1996, 937 F.Supp. 301, affirmed and remanded 196 F.3d 330. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was not clearly established that placing hold on inmate's prison account in order to collect costs judgments violated prisoner's constitutional rights and, therefore, even if state procedures for placing hold on inmate's account were unsound, government officials were entitled to qualified immunity for their actions. Spradley v. Martin, M.D.Fla.1995, 897 F.Supp. 560, affirmed 104 F.3d 370. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prohibiting cross-dressing and use of female makeup by male prisoner did not violate any clearly established constitutional right, and, thus, warden was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Star v. Gramley, C.D.Ill.1993, 815 F.Supp. 276. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State inmate's constitutional right not to inform against fellow inmates was not clearly established in 1993, and thus prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity against liability under §§ 1983 for retaliating against inmate for his refusal to act as informant. Allah v. Juchenwioz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 2006 WL 962150, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

At time of prisoner's 399-day administrative detention, it was not clearly established that federal regulation governing housing of inmates in administrative detention provided prisoner with a "state-created" liberty interest, and, thus, officials of the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's action under §§ 1983, alleging that conditions and duration of his administrative detention created a liberty interest triggering procedural due process protections which officials violated. Hill v. Fleming, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 173 Fed.Appx. 664, 2006 WL 856201, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was objectively reasonable for a correction officer to believe that requiring an inmate to clean pesticide residue did not violate the inmate's constitutional rights, and thus, the officer was entitled to qualified immunity in the inmate's § 1983 suit; the officer did not violate a clearly established right when he relied on the department of correctional services for the appropriate usage of toxic materials at the prison. Croswell v. McCoy, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 962534, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

When prison officials removed state prisoner from special diet, the law was clearly established that a decision that was not motivated by a retaliatory purpose or that advanced a legitimate penological interest was not actionable retaliation, thus entitling officials to judgment as a matter of law on qualified immunity defense asserted in prisoner's pro se § 1983 action; evidence showed that official spoke to doctor to process prisoner's request for a move to a special diet unit, and that prisoner was taken off medical diet because doctor who reviewed medical records determined that it was no longer medically necessary for him to remain on special diet, no reasonable prison guard would have thought it unlawful to check with a prison doctor to determine the prisoner's actual medical needs in processing a request for special housing, and no reasonable doctor would have thought it unlawful to take an inmate off a medically unnecessary special diet. Gray v. Terhune, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31819232, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

3938. Property owners, clearly established right

Police chief's reliance on city's derelict vehicle ordinance, which provided no form of pre- or post-deprivation hearing, in seizing more than 70 purportedly derelict vehicles from landowner's property did not constitute "extraordinary circumstances" that prevented him from knowing the clearly established law, and so chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from landowner's suit for violation of her Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable seizures and her Fourteenth Amendment right to due process; because ordinance provided no hearing whatsoever, officer did not need to understand the niceties of the Supreme Court's Mathews balancing test to know that it was unconstitutional, as decisions of the Tenth Circuit, as well as other circuits, had made it abundantly clear that when the state deprives an individual of property, for example, by impounding an individual's vehicle, it must provide the individual with notice and a hearing. Lawrence v. Reed, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2005, 406 F.3d 1224. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Owners of rental properties had clearly established substantive due process right to use and enjoyment of their property without arbitrary and capricious interference by borough officials, for purposes of determining whether officials were entitled to qualified immunity from owners' § 1983 claim alleging that officials' issuance of citations and condemnation notices were arbitrary and capricious in violation of their due process rights. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3939. Prosecutor activities, clearly established right--Generally

Although a prosecutor is protected by absolute immunity for his actions in presenting evidence at trial, cases holding such acts unconstitutional served to inform every prosecutor that his knowing use of false evidence is unconstitutional and, for purposes of defeating qualified immunity, any prosecutor aware of these cases would have understood in 1996 that fabricating evidence in his investigative role violated the standards of due process and that a resulting loss of liberty was a denial of a constitutional right, though no court decided before 1996 that a prosecutor deprived a criminal defendant of liberty without due process by fabricating evidence in an investigative role under circumstances where it was reasonably foreseeable that the false evidence would be used to deprive the defendant of liberty, and two courts appeared to have reached a contrary conclusion. Zahrey v. Coffey, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 221 F.3d 342. Civil Rights 1376(9); District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

Prosecutor did not violate gun shop owner's clearly established rights when he charged owner with reckless endangerment under Maryland law for failing to adequate secure guns and ammunition in his shop, and was entitled to qualified immunity in owner's civil rights action brought after charge was dropped; exception in Maryland's reckless endangerment statute for conduct involving manufacture, production, or sale of any product or commodity did not clearly apply to owner's conduct. Springmen v. Williams, C.A.4 (Md.) 1997, 122 F.3d 211. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Prosecutor was entitled to qualified immunity for compelling police officers, upon threat of job loss, to take polygraph examinations regarding suspected police involvement in shooting where officers were not compelled to waive their Fifth Amendment rights and no charges were ever brought against them; law was not clearly established as to whether compelling officers to take polygraph examination violated their right against self-incrimination, where statements were never used. Wiley v. Doory, C.A.4 (Md.) 1994, 14 F.3d 993. Civil Rights 1376(9); Civil Rights 1376(10)

State prosecutor's decision to retain personal property confiscated and retained in connection with third party's arrest after grand jury's decision not to indict did not violate owner's clearly established constitutional rights, and thus prosecutor was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983. Morris v. Jackson, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 750, 2006 WL 177575, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(9)

3940. ---- Confessions, prosecutor activities, clearly established right

Prosecutor was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for his demand that mother swear to her innocence on a bible in a church as a condition of dropping charges that she had sexually abused her son; right of mother not to be forced to participate in religious ceremony was clearly established. Doe v. Phillips, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 81 F.3d 1204, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1244, 520 U.S. 1115, 137 L.Ed.2d 326. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Case law on whether suspect could constitutionally be asked to submit to hypnosis was not clearly established when prosecutor authorized interrogation of mother while hypnotized about shooting of her children and, thus, prosecutor was entitled to qualified immunity in mother's civil rights action after all charges were dropped against her; at time of interrogation, courts were split on validity of admitting confessions from suspects who complained about hypnosis, and opinions addressing hypnotically refreshed testimony did not address constitutionality of asking suspect to submit to hypnosis. Burns v. Reed, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 44 F.3d 524, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2583, 515 U.S. 1145, 132 L.Ed.2d 832. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Citizen's allegations that deputy district attorney assisted police officer in extracting involuntary confession stated civil rights claim against deputy district attorney to which qualified immunity did not extend, as law with respect to involuntary confessions and ability to knowingly waive constitutional rights was clear at time the questioning took place. Rex v. Teeples, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1985, 753 F.2d 840, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 332, 474 U.S. 967, 88 L.Ed.2d 316. Civil Rights 1398

3941. ---- Probation, prosecutor activities, clearly established right

Prosecutor was qualifiedly immune from liability in connection with his advice to probation officer to proceed with petition for probation revocation during pendency of appeal by probationer who had posted bail, allegedly in violation of Pennsylvania rule; rule in question did not clearly establish that filing of revocation petition while probationer was free on bail would be constitutional violation. Felker v. Christine, M.D.Pa.1992, 796 F.Supp. 135, affirmed 983 F.2d 1050. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Prosecuting attorney who took it upon himself to act as probation officer and who, in so doing, acted improperly by seeking issuance of warrant for arrest after arrestee's probation had expired, was not entitled to qualified immunity; prosecutor's conduct violated clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Roberts v. Ross, S.D.Ohio 1987, 680 F.Supp. 1144. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

3942. Retaliatory prosecution, clearly established right

Postal inspectors were not entitled to qualified immunity in plaintiff's civil rights action alleging retaliatory prosecution based on plaintiff's public criticism of postal service, as retaliatory prosecution based on exercise of First Amendment rights was violation of clearly established law, and evidence indicated that two postal inspectors heard prosecutor state that plaintiff's innocence was irrelevant to prosecution. Moore v. Valder, C.A.D.C.1995, 65

F.3d 189, 314 U.S.App.D.C. 209, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 75, 519 U.S. 820, 136 L.Ed.2d 35. United States 50.10(3)

Township supervisor was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to §§ 1983 claim based on initiation of criminal investigations in retaliation for exercise of free speech under First Amendment; reasonable person in supervisor's position would have understood his actions to be violating clearly established right. Heller v. Fulare, W.D.Pa.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 743. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3943. Retaliatory condemnation, clearly established right

Accepting as true all well-pleaded allegations, reasonable public officials would have understood that their actions in seeking condemnation of landowners' land in retaliation for landowners' exercise of First Amendment rights violated landowners' clearly established constitutional right to be free from retaliation for exercising their First Amendment right to free speech, and deprived landowners of their clearly established liberty interest in speech, and thus, city officials, in their individual capacities, were not entitled to qualified immunity from landowners' § 1983 action. Rolf v. City of San Antonio, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 77 F.3d 823. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3944. Securities, clearly established right

Indiana Securities Commissioner's investigation and dissemination of her conclusions as to whether financial investment company had failed to supervise its alleged employee with due care were acts for which Commissioner was entitled to qualified immunity; in investigating company's alleged failure to properly supervise, Commissioner was carrying out duties she was obligated to perform and she therefore had no reason to believe that those actions violated company's constitutional rights. Trust and Inv. Advisors, Inc. v. Hogsett, S.D.Ind.1993, 830 F.Supp. 463, affirmed in part, reversed in part 43 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3945. Social workers, clearly established right

State social worker was not entitled to qualified immunity in high school student's §§ 1983 action alleging that social worker and sheriff's deputy had unreasonably seized her by confronting her at school and coercing her into returning to live with her father rather than with her mother, in contravention of temporary restraining order still in effect against father; requirement that seizure must be, at minimum, justified at its inception, as well as Fourth Amendment's applicability to social workers, were clearly established at time of social worker's alleged actions. Jones v. Hunt, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 410 F.3d 1221. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Warrantless entry into home by social workers and their seizure of 12-year-old child they suspected was a victim of Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy (MSBP) did not violate clearly established law under the Fourth Amendment, entitling workers to qualified immunity, where they had probable cause to believe that child's presence in his own home was the reason for his being restrained to a wheelchair and having to be fed through an intravenous tube even though he was not physically handicapped. Roska ex rel. Roska v. Peterson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 328 F.3d 1230, on remand 311 F.Supp.2d 1307. Civil Rights 1376(3)

State social workers and private occult investigators whom they hired to assist in investigation of reports, by children in social workers' care, of ritual child abuse and murder were protected by qualified immunity from any liability on civil rights claims arising out of police sergeant's arrest and prosecution, notwithstanding expert criticism of allegedly coercive nature of interviewing techniques that were used, given eyewitness testimony implicating police sergeant in this alleged abuse, which testimony was corroborated, in some respects, by physical evidence; court could not say that no reasonable officer would have concluded that there was probable cause. Brown v. Lyford, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 243 F.3d 185, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 46, 534 U.S. 817, 151 L.Ed.2d 17. Civil Rights 1373; Civil Rights 1376(3)

At the time allegedly deficient child abuse investigation was conducted, social workers had little or no basis to conclude that their investigation, however flawed, potentially intruded upon "clearly established" rights to family integrity of subject of investigation and his son and stepson, and therefore social workers were entitled to qualified immunity against federal civil rights claims of father and children. Wilkinson ex rel. Wilkinson v. Russell, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1999, 182 F.3d 89, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1160, 528 U.S. 1155, 145 L.Ed.2d 1072. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Social worker's decision allowing baby to leave safety of aunt's home and be taken by grandmother could not be basis for substantive due process claim, especially where she instructed that child not be returned to mother. Powell v. Georgia Dept. of Human Resources, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1997, 114 F.3d 1074. Constitutional Law 274(5); Infants 17

State social worker was entitled to qualified immunity from custodial father's § 1983 claim for violations of his constitutional rights to care, custody, and maintenance of his child, to family integrity, and to procedural due process; there was no clearly established constitutional right that required social worker to notify custodial father of whereabouts of his daughter when the social worker had done nothing to assist the non-custodial parent in taking or hiding the child, and social worker's conduct was objectively reasonable in light of what she knew at the time. Dunlap v. Hilgenkamp, D.Neb.2000, 82 F.Supp.2d 1052. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Social workers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that they deprived mentally disabled adult ward of his constitutional rights by transporting him without authorization; there was no clearly established federal law governing what employees had to do when guardian pushed ward into state's custody and guardian neither carried out his own responsibilities nor authorized state to pursue other reasonable options, and there was no evidence that social workers departed from accepted professional judgment, practice, or standards. Liverseed by Liverseed v. County of Rice, D.Minn.1997, 977 F.Supp. 952. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Juvenile's right to confer in private with counsel was not clearly established, and, therefore, social worker employed by Department for Social Services (DSS) had qualified immunity from civil rights claims under § 1983, where juvenile was in DSS custody as child in need of care and protection, rather than as delinquent, and action in which attorney was providing representation was against another state. Doe By and Through Doe v. Massachusetts Dept. for Social Services, D.Mass.1996, 948 F.Supp. 103. Civil Rights 1376(3)

County social worker should have known that her alleged conduct in thwarting parents' attempts to have children returned to parents' home, after children were removed due to unsanitary conditions, and in effectively denying parents prompt hearing on children's placement had effect of violating parents' clearly established rights to procedural due process by involuntarily depriving parents of physical custody of children, and therefore qualified immunity did not apply to preclude social worker's liability under §§ 1983. Smith v. Williams-Ash, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 2005 WL 3304101, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Mother had no clearly established constitutional right to state initiated hearing following her children's removal and placement, and thus social worker who handled removal and placement was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for alleged violation of mother's procedural due process rights, where children were placed with their father, who had joint legal custody. Shiraki v. Cannella, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 896, 2003 WL 22928726, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3946. Taxation, clearly established right--Generally

Unconstitutionality of North Carolina taxation scheme granting state income tax exemptions to retired state employees but not to federal or private retirees was not clearly established at time former secretary for North Carolina Department of Revenue was enforcing taxation scheme and, therefore, former secretary was entitled to qualified immunity for her actions in collecting taxes from retired federal employees. Swanson v. Powers, C.A.4

(N.C.) 1991, 937 F.2d 965, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 871, 502 U.S. 1031, 116 L.Ed.2d 777. Civil Rights 1376(3)

City property tax officials had qualified immunity from §§ 1983 suit by landowner, claiming breach of agreement to refrain from further tax enforcement proceedings if landowner made agreed upon payments toward back and current taxes; there were no court decisions warning officials that they were violating landowner's federally protected rights by concluding that landowner did not abide by repayment schedule. and seeking termination of landowner's equity of redemption, and there were state court determinations that officials did not violate landowner's rights. Matney v. City of North Adams, D.Mass.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 20. Civil Rights 1376(4)

North Carolina Department of Revenue Controlled Substance Tax Division enforcement officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action arising out of assessment of controlled substance tax, penalty, and interest following his arrest while in possession of crack cocaine and cash; it would not have been clear to reasonable person in officer's shoes that his actions would possibly have violated plaintiff's rights, since state courts had upheld drug tax prior to assessment, and contrary decision had not yet been issued by Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Williams v. Starling, M.D.N.C.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 607. Civil Rights 1376(3)

North Carolina Department of Revenue Controlled Substance Tax Division enforcement officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action arising out of assessment of controlled substance tax, penalty and interest following his arrest while in possession of crack cocaine and cash; it would not have been clear to a reasonable person in officer's shoes that his actions would possibly have violated plaintiff's rights, since state courts had upheld drug tax prior to the assessment, and contrary decision had not yet been issued by Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Williams v. Starling, M.D.N.C.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 521, withdrawn from bound volume, superseded 353 F.Supp.2d 607. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3947. ---- Searches, taxation, clearly established right

Store owner's contention that Attorney General of Kansas acted without jurisdiction in applying for and executing search warrants against owner's business located on Indian reservation, in connection with Attorney's investigation into charges that owner failed to pay state sales tax and that she possessed untaxed cigarettes, could not survive Attorney General's claim of qualified immunity in § 1983 action; power of state to enforce state sales tax collections upon sales made to non-Indians on Indian reservations was recognized in the case law at the time of the searches. Kaul v. Stephan, D.Kan.1993, 828 F.Supp. 1504. Civil Rights 1376(9)

3947A. ---- Refunds, taxation, clearly established right

Director and enforcement officer of North Carolina Department of Revenue Controlled Substance Tax Division were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action arising out of their refusal after charges against arrestee were dismissed to refund controlled substance tax assessed against him when he was arrested while in possession of crack cocaine and cash; refund was not required by law, and thus reasonable people in director's and officer's positions would not have been aware that their failure to take action would violate arrestee's constitutional rights. Williams v. Starling, M.D.N.C.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 521, withdrawn from bound volume, superseded 353 F.Supp.2d 607. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3948. ---- Seizures, taxation, clearly established right

At time that state agents filed North Carolina controlled substance tax assessment and tax lien, law was not clearly established that filing tax lien was seizure implicating Fourth Amendment, or that probable cause was required, thus entitling agents to qualified immunity from land owner's civil rights claims; determinative case was not decided until five months after events in question, and experienced officer could reasonably have reached opposite conclusion based on prior case law. Andrews v. Crump, W.D.N.C.1996, 984 F.Supp. 393. Civil Rights 1376(3)

State agents were entitled to qualified immunity from malicious prosecution claims under § 1983 alleging continuing unreasonable Fourth Amendment seizure of farm owner's property based on agents' failure to cancel North Carolina controlled substance tax assessment and tax lien, since law was not clearly established at time of occurrence, and reasonable, experienced officer could reasonably have concluded that Fourth Amendment was not implicated and that probable cause standard did not apply. Andrews v. Crump, W.D.N.C.1996, 984 F.Supp. 393. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3949. Trusts, clearly established right

Trustees of Office of Hawaiian Affairs (OHA) were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability that trustees violated Hawaii Admission Act by managing, administering, and expending public trust funds under referendum to define native Hawaiians as all people of Hawaiian ancestry; no clearly established law prohibited trustees from expending the funds in support of the referendum. Price v. Akaka, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1993, 3 F.3d 1220, as amended, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1645, 511 U.S. 1070, 128 L.Ed.2d 365. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3950. Witness testimony, clearly established right

First Amendment protects right to testify truthfully at trial, and the law to that effect is clearly established for qualified immunity purposes. Langley v. Adams County, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 987 F.2d 1473. Constitutional Law 90.1(1)

Solicitation of false testimony for use in criminal prosecution violates clearly established constitutional rights, and thus, government official who solicits false testimony is not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 suit. Spurlock v. Whitley, M.D.Tenn.1997, 971 F.Supp. 1166, affirmed 167 F.3d 995. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Even if detective violated arrestee's constitutional rights by testifying to grand jury with reckless disregard for the truth, she was entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action since those rights were not clearly established at the time of the alleged violation. Davidson v. Wakefield, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 588, 2006 WL 122317, Unreported. Civil Rights 1375

3951. Zoning issues, clearly established right

Assistant city attorney and city fire inspector enjoyed qualified immunity from Fair Housing Act (FHA) lawsuit alleging that they conspired through use of zoning regulations to deny housing to emotionally disturbed women, since it was not clearly established at time of challenged conduct that FHA extended personal liability to municipal officials who were not involved in selling or renting of property and who did not have decision making authority. Meadowbriar Home for Children, Inc. v. Gunn, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 81 F.3d 521. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Property owner's right to develop his property under recorded development plan and subdivision plan before acquiring building permit and commencing construction through some ground-breaking activity was not so "clearly established" as to strip local zoning officials and county attorney of qualified immunity defenses based on actions relating to rezoning of property to less intensive use; reasonable county officials could have believed their action voiding owner's record development plan was lawful in light of lack of clear discussion of vested rights doctrine by highest court in Delaware and complex nature of body of law underlying vested rights doctrine. Acierno v. Cloutier, C.A.3 (Del.) 1994, 40 F.3d 597. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Local official was entitled to qualified immunity on claim that he violated land developer's substantive due process rights by allegedly requiring mitigation payments to issue building permit, as it was not clearly established that allegations of corruption or bribery could make out substantive due process claim in land-use disputes, given reluctance to recognize any type of §§ 1983 claim in land-use context. Mongeau v. City of Marlborough, D.Mass.2006, 462 F.Supp.2d 144. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Landowners' constitutional right to approval of their subdivision plan for a commercial plaza was not clearly established at the time approval was denied, and, thus, individual members of planning commission were entitled to qualified immunity in landowners' claim alleging that by denying approval of their subdivision plan, the members violated their right to due process under the Fourteenth Amendment; the decision to deny approval was not prohibitively based solely on religious objections to the proposed use of property but rather against the aspects of the project which included alcohol sales and video lottery machines, as well as based on public opinion and emotional aspects. Pennington v. Teufel, N.D.W.Va.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 715, affirmed 169 Fed.Appx. 161, 2006 WL 460921. Civil Rights 1376(4)

City officials who passed zoning ordinance prohibiting maintenance of farm animals, allegedly in retaliation for speech by property owners, had qualified immunity from action under §§ 1983 brought by daughter and son-in-law of owners, alleging violation of their First Amendment right of intimate association, where right of intimate association was not clearly established when officials passed farm animal ordinance. Moran v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 507. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Township officials did not have qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that they violated constitutional rights of abortion clinic operator, by selectively enforcing ordinance requiring that medical clinic be located on minimum three-acre plot; officials could not claim they were unaware that interference with right to obtain abortion was violation of known constitutional right. Associates In Obstetrics & Gynecology v. Upper Merion Tp., E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 633. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3952. Crime victims privacy right, clearly established right

Alleged rape victim's constitutionally protected privacy interest in the contents of the videotape depicting her alleged rape was clearly established at the time police officer disclosed the tape to the media, and thus, officer was not entitled to qualified immunity for the disclosure, in alleged victim's §§ 1983 claim, absent showing that officer had a compelling state interest for releasing the tape and that he used the least intrusive means of disclosing the tape; even though no prior case was directly on point, case law established that an individual had protected privacy interest in personal sexual matters. Anderson v. Blake, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 469 F.3d 910. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3981. Objective reasonableness requirement generally

Whether an official protected by qualified immunity may be held personally liable for an allegedly unlawful official action generally turns on the objective legal reasonableness of the action, assessed in light of the legal rules that were clearly established at the time it was taken. Wilson v. Layne, U.S.Md.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1692, 526 U.S. 603, 143 L.Ed.2d 818. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Doctrine of qualified immunity shields public officials from damage actions unless their conduct was unreasonable in light of clearly established law. Elder v. Holloway, U.S.Idaho 1994, 114 S.Ct. 1019, 510 U.S. 510, 127 L.Ed.2d 344, on remand 22 F.3d 897. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Generally, government officials performing discretionary functions have qualified immunity, shielding them from civil damages liability as long as actions could reasonably have been thought consistent with rights they are alleged to have violated. Anderson v. Creighton, U.S.Minn.1987, 107 S.Ct. 3034, 483 U.S. 635, 97 L.Ed.2d 523, on remand 724 F.Supp. 654. Officers And Public Employees 114

Even defendants who violate constitutional rights enjoy qualified immunity that protects them from liability for damages unless it is further demonstrated that their conduct was unreasonable under the applicable standard. Davis v. Scherer, U.S.Fla.1984, 104 S.Ct. 3012, 468 U.S. 183, 82 L.Ed.2d 139, rehearing denied 105 S.Ct. 26, 468 U.S. 1226, 82 L.Ed.2d 919. Civil Rights 1376(2)

To meet their burden of showing that a reasonable public official would have known that his conduct was unlawful, as required to overcome a qualified immunity defense, a §§ 1983 plaintiff may point to closely analogous cases demonstrating that the conduct is unlawful or demonstrate that the violation is so obvious that a reasonable state actor would know that what he is doing violates the Constitution. Green v. Butler, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 420 F.3d 689, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(2)

In § 1983 action in which public official claims qualified immunity, if public officers of reasonable competence could disagree on issue in dispute, qualified immunity should be recognized as official has shown that conduct did not violate any clearly established federal statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. McCloud v. Testa, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 97 F.3d 1536, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(2)

To determine whether defendant is entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiff's claim of violation of civil rights, Court of Appeals first determines whether plaintiff has alleged violation of clearly established constitutional right, and if so, defendant is only entitled to qualified immunity if defendant's conduct was objectively reasonable. Nerren v. Livingston Police Dept., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 86 F.3d 469. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Qualified immunity is available as matter of law when undisputed facts establish that it was objectively reasonable for defendants to believe that their actions did not violate clearly established rights. Defore v. Premore, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 86 F.3d 48. Civil Rights 1432

For purposes of determining civil rights violations, official's conduct is protected by qualified immunity if, in light of legal rules that were clearly established at time of action, it was objectively reasonable. Hale v. Townley, C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 45 F.3d 914, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 51 F.3d 1047. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Government official may claim qualified immunity from civil rights suit only when, in light of clearly established law and the information that official possesses, it was objectively reasonable for official to think that his actions were lawful. Hill v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 45 F.3d 653. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Qualified immunity shields government officials performing discretionary functions from civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Cotnoir v. University of Maine Systems, C.A.1 (Me.) 1994, 35 F.3d 6. Civil Rights 1376(2)

If reasonable public officials could differ on unlawfulness of public official's conduct claimed to have violated a constitutional right, public official is entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action. White v. Taylor, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1992, 959 F.2d 539. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Even when plaintiff's federal rights are so clearly defined that reasonable public official would know that actions might violate those rights, qualified or good faith immunity would still be available as bar to § 1983 suit if it was objectively reasonable for public official to believe that acts did not violate those rights. Kaminsky v. Rosenblum, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 929 F.2d 922. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Government officials may be shielded from liability for damages in a § 1983 action if, at the time they acted, statutory or constitutional right which was allegedly violated was not clearly established; right must be sufficiently clear that reasonable officer would understand that what he or she did violated that right. Brown v. City of Fort Lauderdale, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 923 F.2d 1474. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Qualified immunity shields public official from personal liability for constitutional violations if his conduct was objectively reasonable as measured by clearly established law; to overcome defense, contours of right must be clear enough to enable reasonable official to understand that what he or she is doing violates that right, though it is not necessary to show that very action in question has previously been held unlawful. Powell v. Basham, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1990, 921 F.2d 165. Civil Rights 1376(2)

In order to determine whether official is entitled to qualified immunity for his actions in a § 1983 case, appropriate standard is objective reasonableness of official's conduct, as measured by reference to clearly established law. Pfannstiel v. City of Marion, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 918 F.2d 1178. See, also, Harrison & Burrowes Bridge Constructors, Inc. v. Cuomo, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 981 F.2d 50; Enlow v. Tishomingo County, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1992, 962 F.2d 501, rehearing denied 971 F.2d 750; Duckett v. City of Cedar Park, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 950

F.2d 272. Civil Rights 1376(2)

For purposes of qualified immunity, it is not sufficient for plaintiff to claim that Fourteenth Amendment and § 1983 provide clearly established right to due process which defendants should have been aware of; test of whether clearly established law is violated must be applied at level such that reasonable public official would understand that specific action he is taking violates law. Horlock v. Georgia Dept. of Human Resources, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 890 F.2d 388, rehearing granted and vacated. Civil Rights 1376(1)

Test for determining whether an official protected by qualified immunity acted in a manner which was objectively legally reasonable is a standard which is entirely objective. Melear v. Spears, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 862 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Question of qualified immunity from liability under this section is one of reasonableness, i.e., whether reasonable person in shoes of defendant would have known that he was violating another's constitutional rights. B.C.R. Transport Co., Inc. v. Fontaine, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1984, 727 F.2d 7. Civil Rights 1376(2)

The touchstone of qualified immunity is objective reasonableness; thus, the appropriate inquiry is whether objectively it would be clear to all reasonable officials that the actions taken were unlawful under the situation the official faced, without any reference to the official's subjective motivations. Vukelic v. Bartz, D.N.D.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 1068. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Whether an official protected by qualified immunity may be held personally liable under § 1983 for an allegedly unlawful official action generally turns on the objective legal reasonableness of the action, assessed in the light of the legal rules that were clearly established at the time it was taken. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Inquiry of "objective reasonableness" under qualified immunity defense to § 1983 liability includes consideration of whether rights alleged to have been violated by public official were clearly established at time of challenged action; if law supporting allegedly violated rights was not clearly established, then immunity must lie, but where law is clearly established, and no reasonable official could believe he was acting in accordance with it, qualified immunity will not attach. Castaldo v. Stone, D.Colo.2001, 192 F.Supp.2d 1124, reconsideration denied 191 F.Supp.2d 1196. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Test for qualified immunity is purely objective: immunity shields public officials insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Myers v. Town of Landis, M.D.N.C.1996, 957 F.Supp. 762, affirmed in part, dismissed in part 107 F.3d 867. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Whether defendant asserting qualified immunity may be personally liable turns on objective legal reasonableness of defendant's actions in light of clearly established law; this objective standard not only allows many claims to be decided on summary judgment, but also provides defendant officials with ability to anticipate when their conduct may give rise to liability for damages, and, if reasonable public officials could differ on lawfulness of defendant's actions, defendant is entitled to qualified immunity. Wicker v. City of Galveston, S.D.Tex.1996, 944 F.Supp. 553. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Actions taken by local officials are considered "objectively unreasonable," thus defeating application of qualified immunity, if right allegedly violated is clearly established in sufficiently particularized sense at time of actions at issue; as result of this reasonableness test, doctrine of qualified immunity applies to all but plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate law. Van Loo v. Braun, E.D.Wis.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1390. Civil Rights 1376(2)

3982. Subjective standard distinguished, objective reasonableness requirement--Generally

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

In evaluating official's conduct for purposes of determining his entitlement to qualified immunity, court does not focus on official's subjective state of mind, such as bad faith or malicious intention; rather, applicable standard requires court to make objective analysis of reasonableness of conduct in light of the facts actually known to officer and not consider individual officer's subjective assessment of those facts. Sheehy v. Town of Plymouth, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1999, 191 F.3d 15, on remand 2000 WL 110140. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Subjective intent is not relevant to reasonableness prong of qualified immunity test because that factor is governed by objective test. Sweaney v. Ada County, Idaho, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1997, 119 F.3d 1385. Civil Rights 1376(2)

For purposes of the doctrine of qualified immunity, court's inquiry does not focus on state actor's subjective intent, but rather on whether belief of state actor that actions taken were authorized would have been objectively reasonable. Rosario v. Brooks, D.Mass.1995, 877 F.Supp. 765. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Objective standard applied, in deciding whether Attorney Generals violated any clearly established right of undercover police informant in failing to provide him with hearing prior to terminating relocation and redocumentation assistance promised; Attorney Generals' subjective beliefs about nature of their relationship with informant was irrelevant to question of liability under civil rights statute. G-69 v. Degnan, D.N.J.1990, 748 F.Supp. 274. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Qualified immunity was defense to state employee's claim that officials' search of his office and desk in connection with investigation into allegations of misconduct was in fact in retaliation for complaints employee had made about one official's performance; whether good-faith immunity defense was unavailable to officials depended on whether they objectively knew that they were in violation of clearly established constitutional principles at time they conducted search and not on whether they subjectively had ulterior motive for conducting search. Ross v. Hinton, S.D.Ohio 1990, 740 F.Supp. 451, affirmed 937 F.2d 609. Civil Rights 1376(10)

3983. ---- Extraordinary circumstances, subjective standard distinguished, objective reasonableness requirement

Ordinarily, qualified immunity defense will fail if the law was clearly established at time action occurred since reasonably competent public official should know law governing his conduct; however, if official claims that extraordinary circumstances existed and can prove, based on objective facts, that he neither knew nor should have known relevant legal standard, defense should be applied. E-Z Mart Stores, Inc. v. Kirksey, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1989, 885 F.2d 476. Officers And Public Employees 114; Officers And Public Employees 116

Except in extraordinary circumstances, public officials' actual knowledge is irrelevant to determination as to whether they are entitled to good-faith immunity from suit. McKinley v. Trattles, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1984, 732 F.2d 1320. Officers And Public Employees 114

Even where law is clearly established, qualified immunity may apply if government official can prove extraordinary circumstances such that he or she neither knew nor should have known of relevant legal standard. Molloy v. Blanchard, D.R.I.1995, 907 F.Supp. 46, affirmed 115 F.3d 86. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Even if plaintiff shows defendant's alleged conduct violated the law and that the law was clearly established when the action was taken, defendant may prevail on claim of qualified immunity if he can show extraordinary circumstances and prove that he neither knew nor should have known of the relevant legal standard. Elam v. Williams, D.Kan.1990, 753 F.Supp. 1530, affirmed 953 F.2d 1391. Civil Rights 1376(2); Officers And Public Employees 114

3984. Legal question, objective reasonableness requirement claim alleging excessive use of force by officials. Bell v. Irwin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 321 F.3d 637, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 84, 540 U.S. 818, 157 L.Ed.2d 36. Civil Rights 1429

To extent that relevant discrete, historic facts are undisputed, question of objective reasonableness of defendant's conduct, for purpose of determining whether defendant is entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action, is question of law. Pierce v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 117 F.3d 866. Civil Rights 1432

While reasonableness in the Fourth Amendment context will frequently be left to the trier of fact to determine, reasonableness in the qualified immunity context in a § 1983 action ordinarily should be decided by the court long before trial. Hummel v. City of Carlisle, S.D.Ohio 2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 839. Civil Rights 1432

In § 1983 action in which officials assert defense of qualified immunity, inquiry about objective reasonableness of officials' actions is one of law, not fact, that should be decided at earliest possible stage of litigation. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1432

3985. Reasonable in light of applicable law, objective reasonableness requirement

Doctrine of qualified immunity gives government officers qualified immunity in § 1983 suit unless they violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Pallottino v. City of Rio Rancho, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1994, 31 F.3d 1023. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Relevant question in determining whether public official is entitled to qualified immunity is whether reasonable official could have believed that his or her actions were lawful in light of clearly established law and information the official had at time of his or her allegedly unlawful conduct. Doe By and Through Doe v. Massachusetts Dept. for Social Services, D.Mass.1996, 948 F.Supp. 103. Civil Rights 1376(2)

In performing analysis of whether state official is entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action, court must focus on objective legal reasonableness of official's actions in light of rules which were clearly established at time of actions in question, and in so doing is not to look at broad, generalized statements of rights, but must consider rights in more particularized sense; contours of right must be sufficiently clear that reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right, and in light of preexisting law, unlawfulness must be apparent. Hilliard v. Walker's Party Store, Inc., E.D.Mich.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1162. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Relevant inquiry in determining whether conduct of state official violated clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known, as will prevent official from asserting defense of qualified immunity in federal civil rights action, focuses on whether reasonable official in defendant's position could have believed his conduct to be lawful, considering state of law as it existed when defendant took his challenged action. Hilliard v. Walker's Party Store, Inc., E.D.Mich.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1162. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Secretary of State and Deputy Secretary of State were entitled to defense of qualified immunity with respect to processing of plaintiffs' petition seeking civilian control board for metropolitan police department; deputy indicated in his affidavit that he followed all statutory and constitutional procedures and mandates, and plaintiffs failed to set forth specific facts indicating that actions of secretary and deputy were not reasonable in light of clearly established laws and information available at time of alleged violation. Tate v. Lau, D.Nev.1994, 865 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Test for qualified immunity to liability of government official performing discretionary functions in § 1983 civil rights suit is objective and, thus, issue is what official with same information could reasonably have believed. Przyborowski v. Howard, D.Me.1994, 863 F.Supp. 22. Civil Rights 1376(2)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

If reasonable public officer in defendant officer's position could have believed that his conduct was lawful in light of clearly established law and information possessed at time conduct occurred, defendant is protected from liability by qualified immunity. Dennis v. Thurman, C.D.Cal.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1253. Civil Rights 1376(2)

3986. Deliberate indifference distinguished, objective reasonableness requirement

Objective qualified immunity standard and "deliberate indifference" standard differ in sense that former does not require inquiry into whether prison official "actually intended" to deprive prisoner of his constitutional right, provided that official's conduct satisfies objective good faith test. Miller v. Solem, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1984, 728 F.2d 1020, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 145, 469 U.S. 841, 83 L.Ed.2d 84. Civil Rights 1376(7)

"Deliberate indifference" is a stringent standard of fault in § 1983 action, requiring proof that a municipal actor disregarded a known or obvious consequence of his action. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1352(1)

3987. Mistaken judgments, objective reasonableness requirement

A police officer is entitled to qualified immunity from suit for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment rights in making arrest if he reasonably but mistakenly concluded that probable cause is present. Donovan v. Briggs, W.D.N.Y.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 242. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even officials who reasonably, but mistakenly, commit a constitutional violation are entitled to immunity from § 1983 claims. Herrera v. Medical Center Hosp., E.D.La.2002, 241 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Law enforcement officials who reasonably but mistakenly conclude that probable cause for arrest is present are entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action; standard for immunity is objective one that leaves ample room for mistaken judgments. Cook v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Wyandotte, D.Kan.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1049. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even law enforcement officials who reasonably but mistakenly conclude that probable cause is present are entitled to immunity. Spiegel v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1996, 920 F.Supp. 891, affirmed 196 F.3d 717, as amended, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2688, 530 U.S. 1243, 147 L.Ed.2d 961. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3988. Good faith, objective reasonableness requirement

Any entitlement of private defendants to good-faith defense to § 1983 claim would not establish their additional entitlement to the qualified immunity from suit accorded government officials. Wyatt v. Cole, U.S.Miss.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1827, 504 U.S. 158, 118 L.Ed.2d 504, on remand 994 F.2d 1113. Civil Rights 1373

Defendant's good faith or bad faith is irrelevant to qualified immunity inquiry in civil rights action. Burk v. Beene, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 948 F.2d 489. Civil Rights 1376(2)

In considering good-faith component of qualified immunity defense in § 1983 action, courts apply objective standard: whether reasonable officer would have believed that his conduct violated plaintiff's clearly established rights. Williams v. City of Albany, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1991, 936 F.2d 1256, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Label "good faith immunity" which refers to doctrine of qualified immunity which shields federal officials from liability when they are sued directly under Constitution in same manner that state officials are protected in civil rights action, incorrectly implies that subjective factors are important; central question is whether conduct complained of violated established constitutional or statutory rights, based on "state of the law" at time of act giving rise to litigation, and no other circumstances are relevant. Bates v. Jean, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1984, 745 F.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Government officials may be sued directly under § 1983, but enjoy qualified immunity if they have acted in good faith in carrying out their duties; purpose of qualified immunity is to shield government officials performing discretionary functions from civil trials and liability if their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Denno v. School Bd. of Volusia County, M.D.Fla.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1481, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 182 F.3d 780, rehearing granted and vacated 193 F.3d 1178, reversed in part on rehearing 218 F.3d 1267, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 235 F.3d 1347, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 382, 531 U.S. 958, 148 L.Ed.2d 295. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Question of whether official is protected by qualified immunity turns not on subjective good faith of official, but on objective legal reasonableness of action, assessed in light of legal rules that were clearly established at time it was taken; under this standard, individual claims of immunity must be analyzed on fact-specific, case-by-case basis to determine whether plaintiff's federal or constitutional rights were so clearly established when alleged misconduct was committed that any official in defendant's position would understand that what one was doing violates those rights. Robertson v. Johnson County, Ky., E.D.Ky.1995, 896 F.Supp. 673. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Under § 1983, good faith on part of social worker or other state officer constitutes valid defense of qualified immunity unless individual defendant involved knew or reasonably should have known that action taken within officer's sphere of official responsibility would violate constitutional rights. Gottlieb v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.1994, 871 F.Supp. 625, affirmed 84 F.3d 511. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Doctrine of qualified immunity protects government officials from personal liability in § 1983 actions for actions taken in good faith pursuant to their discretionary authority. Sanders v. Miller, N.D.Ala.1992, 837 F.Supp. 1106. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Generally, government official is entitled to qualified immunity when she acts within her authority, though if she acts unlawfully, she must act in good faith; qualified immunity will protect her if reasonable person in her position would not have known at time that her conduct was unlawful. Heller v. Plave, S.D.Fla.1990, 743 F.Supp. 1553. Officers And Public Employees 114; Officers And Public Employees 116

Public officials are generally entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for good faith performance of their official duties. Coleman v. McHenry, E.D.Va.1990, 735 F.Supp. 190, affirmed 945 F.2d 398. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Qualified immunity standard is one of objective legal reasonableness of official conduct and government official's objective good faith is not a part of qualified immunity inquiry. Grass Roots Organizing Workshop (GROW) v. Campbell, D.S.C.1988, 704 F.Supp. 644. Officers And Public Employees 114

School officials could not assert good faith defense to civil rights suit challenging adoption of mandatory drug testing of students which required students to strip to the waist and provide urine sample while being observed, despite claim that the testing was used as a mere "tool of exoneration." Anable v. Ford, W.D.Ark.1985, 663 F.Supp. 149. Civil Rights 1376(5)

3989. Malice, objective reasonableness requirement

Allegation of malice is not sufficient to defeat qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action for false arrest if defendant police officer acted in objectively reasonable manner. Hansen v. Black, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 885 F.2d

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

642. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Objective legal reasonableness standard in § 1983 actions for determining whether government official violated plaintiff's "clearly established" constitutional rights eliminates from court's consideration allegations about official's subjective state of mind, such as bad faith or malicious intent. Hansen v. Lamontagne, D.N.H.1992, 808 F.Supp. 89 . Civil Rights 1376(2)

Qualified immunity depends on the objective reasonableness of an official's conduct, as measured by reference to clearly established law, not upon malice or other subjective factors. Adams v. Thompson, M.D.La.1983, 560 F.Supp. 894. Officers And Public Employees 114

3990. Motive, objective reasonableness requirement

For purposes of determining whether defense of qualified immunity is available in context of retaliatory claim, conduct that is objectively reasonable is not converted into constitutional violation by mere allegation of unconstitutional motive. Mascetta v. Miranda, S.D.N.Y.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1346. Civil Rights 1376(2)

3991. Retaliation, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable public official should have known that he or she could not retaliate against subordinate employee for reporting environmental problem to state Department of Natural Resources or for initiating investigation of public office's billing practices, which was authorized by supervisory committee and taken up by corporation counsel, and thus county workers did not enjoy qualified immunity from employee's claim that he suffered retaliation for reporting highway department's open burning of potentially toxic materials, and requesting that corporation counsel investigate suspicious billing practices. Hulbert v. Wilhelm, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1997, 120 F.3d 648. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Governor was not qualifiedly immune from First Amendment retaliation claim of coal company's chairman, inasmuch as reasonable chief executive officer (CEO) of state could not have believed that publicly threatening close governmental scrutiny of political opponent's business affairs, resulting in reluctance of potential landlord to enter into lease with company, was justified if based solely upon content of chairman's speech. Blankenship v. Manchin, S.D.W.Va.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 483. Civil Rights 1376(3)

City of Baltimore, its police department, chief of police and other officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on former police officer's claim she was discharged in retaliation for protected speech in form of statements about gender/discrimination and/or sexual harassment and horseplay within department; reasonable official in defendants' positions would have known under Supreme Court and Fourth Circuit law at time officer was discharged that some of her comments addressed matters of public concern. Campbell v. Town of Southern Pines, M.D.N.C.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 480. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Member of borough council, assistant police chief, and police officer did not have qualified immunity from claim they retaliated against borough tax collector for exercise of his First Amendment right arising out of his state court lawsuit to have his office restored to borough government building; there was evidence showing that restoration of office was followed closely by claims that collector stole checks belonging to colleagues, placement of surveillance camera aimed at his desk, unauthorized search of desk and institution of criminal charges after tape recorder used to make unauthorized conversation recordings was discovered, and reasonable official would know that conduct violated right to be free from retaliation. Konopka v. Borough of Wyoming, M.D.Pa.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 666. Civil Rights 1376(6)

3992. Banks and banking officials, objective reasonableness requirement-- Generally

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Pennsylvania Secretary of Banking's seizure and resolution of bank allegedly for political reasons and without necessity for emergency action violated clearly established due process rights of which reasonable person would have known, and, thus, Secretary was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action. Kenworthy v. Hargrove, E.D.Pa.1993, 826 F.Supp. 138, affirmed 855 F.Supp. 101. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3993. ---- Attachment proceedings, banks and banking officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Bank was entitled to qualified immunity from liability for its invocation of Nebraska attachment mechanism which deprived wife of her property rights in jointly held property without due process of law because bank reasonably could not have known that it was violating wife's constitutional rights when it attached the jointly held property. Woodring v. Jennings State Bank, D.C.Neb.1985, 603 F.Supp. 1060. Civil Rights 1374

3994. Child welfare workers, objective reasonableness requirement--Generally

State officials who removed minor from parents' home after mother signed voluntary placement agreement (VPA) authorizing state to take temporary custody were qualifiedly immune from parents' claim that officials violated their constitutional right to parental control by administering medical treatment to which they did not consent; VPA authorized medical treatment, and reasonableness of officials' arranging for minor's hospitalization was shown by VPA, minor's reports of parental abuse, and her subsequent suicide attempts. Defore v. Premore, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 86 F.3d 48. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Employees of Nebraska Department of Social Services were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 claim alleging that employees violated father's federal due process rights by disregarding plan approved by Nebraska court aimed at reuniting him with his children; employee's actions were objectively reasonable and § 1983 claim alleged violation of state rather than federal law. Ebmeier v. Stump, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1012. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Child welfare supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability for sending letter asserting custodial authority over child, because his belief that emergency situation existed and his resulting assertion of custodial authority, based upon information from and recommendation of case worker, were objectively reasonable under clearly established law. Cecere v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 967 F.2d 826. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether a reasonable Montana social worker could believe that the existence of pending, unadjudicated proceedings in another jurisdiction regarding another child established an imminent or apparent danger of harm to mother's newborn baby such that it was necessary for social worker to take the child from the hospital without judicial approval, precluding summary judgment in favor of social worker on basis of qualified immunity on mother's due process claim. Brown v. Montana, D.Mont.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 982. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County officials and employees were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on parents' claims that county violated their Establishment Clause rights by promoting their own faiths and forcing parents' children to listen to "Christian music," during child abuse interviews, as alleged violations were not so egregious that reasonable official would anticipate constitutional problem with their actions. Words of Faith Fellowship, Inc. v. Rutherford County Dept. of Social Services, W.D.N.C.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 675. Civil Rights 1376(4)

3995. ---- Emergencies, child welfare workers, objective reasonableness requirement

In parents' §§ 1983 due process action alleging that state's child and family services agency had removed infant child from home without notice or hearing and without suspicion of immediate danger, agency officials were entitled to qualified immunity, since reasonably competent officers could have disagreed as to whether emergency circumstances had been present, and thus law governing pre-hearing removals was not clearly established; while examining physician had stated he was comfortable leaving infant in mother's care, there was evidence of significant head injury, questionable explanation from parents, and delay in seeking medical treatment. Gomes v. Wood, C.A.10 (Utah) 2006, 451 F.3d 1122. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Following Court of Appeals' 1999 holding that state officials violate procedural due process guarantees if they effect child's removal on "emergency" basis where there is reasonable time to obtain judicial authorization consistent with child's safety, child welfare workers would no longer be able to claim immunity from liability under § 1983 based on such principle not being clearly established; however, their actions would continue to be protected if it was objectively reasonable for them to believe that their acts did not violate these clearly established rights. Tenenbaum v. Williams, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1999, 193 F.3d 581, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1832, 529 U.S. 1098, 146 L.Ed.2d 776. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Police officer who made warrantless entry into home with social worker pursuant to anonymous tip that children were neglected and abused was chargeable with knowledge possessed by social worker that tip was some two weeks old and had been classified by social services agency as not presenting emergency situation, and thus officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability on basis that he reasonably believed that exigent circumstances were present. Rogers v. County of San Joaquin Human Services Agency, E.D.Cal.2004, 363 F.Supp.2d 1227. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Caseworkers' belief that their emergency removal of children from mother's home did not violate mother's Fourth Amendment rights was objectively reasonable, and thus caseworkers were entitled to qualified immunity from mother's § 1983 action, where foster child in mother's care had sustained serious injuries for which mother was unable to offer any reasonable explanation, and hospital had filed report of suspected child abuse as required under state law based upon pediatric radiologist's conclusion that foster child's injuries were caused by abuse. Taylor v. Evans, S.D.N.Y.1999, 72 F.Supp.2d 298. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Caseworkers' belief that emergency circumstances justified removal of children from mother's home without her consent and without court order was objectively reasonable, and thus caseworkers were entitled to qualified immunity from mother's § 1983 action based upon alleged procedural due process violation, where foster child in mother's care had sustained serious injuries for which mother was unable to offer any reasonable explanation, and pediatric radiologist who examined foster child's x-rays opined that injuries were due to abuse. Taylor v. Evans, S.D.N.Y.1999, 72 F.Supp.2d 298. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Caseworker's believe that emergency circumstances were present requiring her to remove children from their home without parental consent was objectively reasonable, and thus, caseworker was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 action by mother, her children and her boyfriend, where allegations by boyfriend's daughter gave caseworker reason to believe that children were subjected to ongoing emotional and physical abuse and neglect, there was no reason to believe that such conduct would not continue, some allegations were corroborated by child and judge's order expressly stated that no parental notice was required. Spencer v. Lavoie, N.D.N.Y.1997, 986 F.Supp. 717. Civil Rights 1376(4)

County social worker was immune from liability under Ohio Political Subdivision Tort Liability Act in guardian's § § 1983 action related to warrantless entrance into home and removal of children; social worker reasonably relied on police officer's assessment of home, dangers presented to children in home, and decision to enter home without warrant. Jordan v. Murphy, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 513, 2005 WL 1869506, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether city official had an objectively reasonable basis for concluding that foster children were in imminent danger of harm at the time of the children's emergency removal from grandmother's foster home without a hearing, precluding summary judgment in favor of official on grandmother's

3996. ---- Child abuse and neglect investigations, child welfare workers, objective reasonableness requirement

Alleged conduct of state and county officials of removing minor child from his parents' home based on false allegations of child neglect by relatives was so severe that a reasonable person would have understood that he was violating child's constitutional rights, and therefore, officials' claims of qualified immunity did not defeat § 1983 action child brought as an adult. Brokaw v. Mercer County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 235 F.3d 1000. Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1376(4)

Responsible government official would have known that consent or warrant was required for entry into parental home to conduct administrative search to protect welfare of children, where clearly established precedent established that Fourth Amendment was applicable to such searches and that entry without consent or warrant would violate parents' Fourth Amendment rights. Calabretta v. Floyd, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 189 F.3d 808. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Employees of state social services agency were entitled to qualified immunity with regard to § 1983 claim premised on their alleged disparate treatment of members of religious community in handling complaints of possible abuse of children at community; even if employees' actions were motivated in part by prejudice against community's religious beliefs, such fact standing alone was not bar to claim of immunity, and, under circumstances and state of law as it existed at time (1993), it was not objectively unreasonable for employees to act as they did, i.e., placing one child in foster care, interviewing other children, and holding multidepartmental meeting of state officials. Foy v. Holston, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1528. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Social worker to whom school-age children were referred to investigate possibility of parental abuse acted in objectively reasonable manner and did not violate any clearly established right of children's parents by detaining children for two-and-one-half hours for interview without notifying parents; accordingly, social worker was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising out of her alleged unlawful interference with parents' liberty interest in custody of their children. Williams v. Pollard, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1995, 44 F.3d 433, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 69, 516 U.S. 815, 133 L.Ed.2d 30. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Social worker for private employers enjoyed qualified immunity in child's § 1983 action alleging that due process rights were violated when she was separated from her father as result of investigation by South Dakota Department of Social Services and subsequent dependency and neglect proceeding; mother's report of possible child abuse and child's confession of abuse by father gave social worker reasonable suspicion of abuse by father. Lux by Lux v. Hansen, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1989, 886 F.2d 1064. Civil Rights 1373

Teacher's actions in reporting her observations and concerns regarding suspected abuse of disabled student to child protective services (CPS) were objectively reasonable, and thus teacher was entitled to qualified immunity as to substantive due process claim brought by student's parents; there was uncontroverted evidence that other teachers saw student exhibit seemingly sexual behavior before teacher placed any calls to CPS, and that student had red mark on her breast that teacher saw. Martin v. Texas Dept. of Protective and Regulatory Services, S.D.Tex.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 775. Civil Rights 1376(5)

State investigative social worker exercised her professional judgment in investigating alleged physical abuse of foster child, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 after child was killed by her adoptive parent, even though social worker had received credible information from health care worker that foster parent was physically abusing child, brought case worker with her to interview parent, and failed to contact health care worker or child's physician, where social worker visited child and parent, nothing suspicious or indicative of danger was disclosed during interview, and social worker was handling more than twice number of cases she should have been assigned. Johnson ex rel. Cano v. Homes, D.N.M.2004, 377 F.Supp.2d 1039. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Police officer and social worker were not entitled to qualified immunity on civil rights claim that they violated parents' Fourth Amendment rights by making warrantless entry into home to perform welfare check on children, as reasonableness of their actions depended on disputed facts that were determinative of whether parents impliedly consented to entry and search of premises. Rogers v. County of San Joaquin Human Services Agency, E.D.Cal.2004, 363 F.Supp.2d 1227. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of state social workers in suspecting and finding that foster parent abused foster child were objectively reasonable, and thus social workers were entitled to qualified immunity in foster parent's § 1983 action alleging gross abuse of power; although foster child had lied in the past about injuries, social workers spoke to school nurse, emergency room physician, school social worker, school principal, physician from child's pediatric group, child's therapist, and others to determine whether abuse had caused child's injuries, which consisted of a bump on his head, bruising, spots on his neck and under his eyes, and finger marks on his right cheek and left forearm. Carroll v. Ragaglia, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 324, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 109 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 2165397. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Assuming right to family integrity was a clearly established right, it was objectively reasonable for state officials to believe minor had been abused by her father and grandmother and were justified in removing her from their custody, entitling them to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by father and grandmother; officials investigated child's claims of abuse and followed up on leads provided by father and grandmother, who admitted handcuffing child to bed and locking in her room, probation office corroborated statements regarding abuse, and child's medical records confirmed concerns of her malnutrition. Strain v. Kaufman County Dist. Attorney's Office, N.D.Tex.1998, 23 F.Supp.2d 685. Civil Rights 1376(3)

City human rights official was entitled to qualified immunity from parents' § 1983 action alleging administration of x-rays without prior notice or parental consent, absent any evidence that official directed hospital to take skeletal x-rays of child for investigatory purposes or that x-rays were not medically necessary or advisable. Schwimmer v. Kaladjian, S.D.N.Y.1997, 988 F.Supp. 631, affirmed 164 F.3d 619. Civil Rights 1376(4)

County employees' conduct in temporarily removing developmentally disabled child from her parents' home based on child's allegations, through experimental communication technique, of sexual abuse by her father and in subsequently bringing child neglect petition against parents based on such information was objectively reasonable, as would entitle county employees to qualified immunity in § 1983 action for alleged violation of parents' right to custody of child, in light of disagreement among experts as to reliability of the experimental communication technique. Zappala v. Albicelli, N.D.N.Y.1997, 954 F.Supp. 538, affirmed 173 F.3d 848. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Social worker who sent police to remove two children from civil rights plaintiffs' family home was entitled to qualified immunity where social worker acted upon a good-faith belief that the children were being sexually abused by one of the plaintiffs, a household member subsequently convicted on a sexual assault charge. Cobb v. City and County of Denver, State of Colo., D.Colo.1991, 761 F.Supp. 105. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Social worker acted in an objectively reasonable manner, and was entitled to qualified immunity from damages in suit brought by mother and children, where decision to remove children from the home was made after receiving reports that one of the children had been subjected to sexual abuse and after talking with parents' grown children, some of whom asserted that their father had sexually abused them. Navis v. Fond du Lac County, E.D.Wis.1989, 721 F.Supp. 182. Civil Rights 1376(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Social worker was entitled to qualified immunity with regard to her role in filing child abuse petition against custodial grandparents requesting removal of child from their care since it was objectively reasonable for social worker to believe that she did not violate any federal rights when she filed her verified petition; at time petition was filed, no one could determine who was abusing the child, but it was recommended that she be removed from care of both grandparents and mother until a determination could be made. Reynolds by Reynolds v. Strunk, S.D.N.Y.1988, 688 F.Supp. 950. Civil Rights 1376(1)

County social worker was entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action brought by guardian of children related to warrantless entry into home and removal of children, since reasonable case worker would have understood that there was an imminent threat of physical harm to children inside home; social worker was assigned to investigate anonymous tip that guardian was caring for up to 25 children in home in deplorable conditions, upon arrival at home worker was told by police officer that he had observed children in home and that condition of house required immediate intervention to prevent physical harm, police officers made decision as to why, where, and how to enter home, and after officers gained access worker followed them inside. Jordan v. Murphy, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 513, 2005 WL 1869506, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Employees of the Connecticut Department of Children and Families (DCF) were entitled to qualified immunity on foster parent's § 1983 claim that they investigated a claim of child abuse against him in a manner that was shocking to the conscience; facts appeared to demonstrate that the case workers did have a reasonable basis for their findings of abuse, as not only a DCF investigator and a caseworker but also the child's school social worker and hospital employees believed that it was possible, based upon the physical evidence, that abuse had occurred. Carroll v. Ragaglia, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 109 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 2165397, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3997. ---- Foster care placements, child welfare workers, objective reasonableness requirement

Caseworkers for city government agency having foster child placement responsibility, and independent contractor providing placements, had qualified immunity from claim they violated substantive due process rights of two children by placing them in unsuitable foster homes; it was not objectively unreasonable to leave children with foster parents, given statements of children, and inspections exonerating foster parents in two instances of alleged abuse reported by natural mother. Richards v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1376(4)

City caseworker's continuing approval of children's placement in foster home was not objectively unreasonable, and he thus was immune from suit under §§ 1983 based on federal doctrine of qualified immunity, even though two case records that he reviewed contained identical language, and even if contracting agency's caseworker made only one visit to foster home in six months instead of two as required by regulations, where second case record also contained updated information, and record indicated numerous contacts with children other than visit by agency caseworker. Tylena M. v. Heartshare Children's Services, S.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Social workers who removed children from home and placed them in foster care could have believed that, pursuant to consent order entered by juvenile and domestic relations court, they had the right to change the children's placement without advance hearing and to permit only supervised visitation and had qualified immunity from liability even if parents' constitutional rights were violated. Pfoltzer v. County of Fairfax, E.D.Va.1991, 775 F.Supp. 874, affirmed 966 F.2d 1443. Civil Rights 1376(2)

3998. Consumer affairs officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Puerto Rican officials could not reasonably have anticipated judicial interpretation of statute eliminating public hearing requirement for certain regulations of the Puerto Rico Department of Consumer Affairs and they were thus entitled to qualified immunity in action which sought damages for deprivation of due process arising out of Secretary of Consumer Affairs' issuance without hearing of new maximum interest rates for automobile loans. Altair Corp. v. Pesquera De Busquets, D.C.Puerto Rico 1984, 597 F.Supp. 104. Civil Rights 1376(3)

3999. Education and school officials, objective reasonableness requirement-- Generally

State university officials were entitled to qualified immunity in students' § 1983 action alleging that officials' decision to release list of black male students' names and addresses to law enforcement officers violated Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), because it was objectively reasonable for university officials to believe their acts were authorized under emergency exception to FERPA, in view of information that person who attacked victim with knife might be on campus and that list of students was necessary to address threat. Brown v. City of Oneonta, N.Y., Police Dept., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 106 F.3d 1125. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School principal's sighting of female high school student with male coach and his receipt of inconclusive response when he inquired of another coach whether there was "anything going" between coach and student did not constitute facts or pattern of inappropriate sexual behavior by subordinate pointing plainly toward sexual abuse of student, as would trigger principal's duty to report suspected sexual abuse and thus principal enjoyed qualified immunity from lawsuit alleging that he wrongfully failed to report abuse. Doe v. Rains County Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 76 F.3d 666. Infants 13

Principal and assistant principal were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by former student for allegedly condoning sexual misconduct by teachers and school employees; there was testimony that principal and assistant principal discouraged and minimized reports of sexual misconduct by teachers and jury could reasonably conclude that the conduct communicated condonation of misconduct. Stoneking v. Bradford Area School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 882 F.2d 720, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 840, 493 U.S. 1044, 107 L.Ed.2d 835. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School officials were entitled to qualified immunity from student's civil rights action alleging that student was deprived of due process when officials failed to reinstate him to class attendance upon issuance of an interim order of the New York Commissioner of Education staying disciplinary proceedings against the student pending disposition of his criminal prosecution; it was not irrational, arbitrary, or capricious for the school officials to fail to heed the Commissioner's order on ground that, because it was based upon defective first hearing on student's suspension, it had been rendered moot by conducting a second hearing. Pollnow v. Glennon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1985, 757 F.2d 496. Civil Rights 1376(5)

High school superintendent and principal were entitled to qualified immunity from student's § 1983 claims, arising out of incident in which teacher allegedly used excessive force on student in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment; actions of superintendent and principal, with regards to instructing possible further investigation into student's complaints, and wanting to be kept apprised of any change in investigative findings, did not violate any of student's constitutional rights, and actions were objectively reasonable. Knicrumah v. Albany City School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Puerto Rico elementary school principal, social worker, and homeroom special education teacher were entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action by parents of autistic student as challenged actions did not amount to actionable retaliation; parents alleged they were retaliated against for exercising their rights under ADA and Rehabilitation Act through, inter alia, deprivation of services essential to their son's education, restriction of access to school premises, denial of access to their son's records, and filing of complaint against them before Department of Education (DOE), whereas defendants contended they had no reason to retaliate inasmuch as parent's complaints with Office of Civil Rights (OCR) were not brought against them personally, they had nothing to do with student's speech therapy and language services, and their DOE complaint was justified in light of parents' recorded negligence in responding to multiple reports regarding student's health and attitude. Vives v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 50. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School officials had qualified immunity from claim that they violated first amendment, privacy and due process rights of students and parents by offering middle and high school students opportunity to complete voluntary, anonymous and confidential questionnaire which contained sensitive questions regarding drug use and sexuality; reasonable school officials could not have known that their conduct violated constitution. C.N. ex rel. J.N. v. Ridgewood Bd. of Educ., D.N.J.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 483, affirmed 430 F.3d 159. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Individual school board members who imposed year-long suspension upon high school student, after student drove brother's car containing knife, gun, and drug paraphernalia to school, were charged with knowing parameters of student's substantive due process rights at time of suspension, and thus were not entitled to qualified immunity against student's claim under Fourteenth Amendment; New Mexico statute upon which school suspension regulations were based stated that disciplinary measures applied only to students who knowingly brought weapons to school, and suspending student for unknowingly transporting weapon onto school campus did not rationally support legitimate state interest in maintaining school safety and discipline. Butler ex rel. Butler v. Rio Rancho Public School Bd. of Educ., D.N.M.2002, 245 F.Supp.2d 1188, reconsideration denied in part, reversed in part 341 F.3d 1197. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Principal and school resource officer were entitled to qualified immunity in action by parents of student who was killed with gun he took to school alleging that their failure to remove gun from school campus violated student's substantive and procedural due process rights; parents presented no binding law that declared similar conduct in similar circumstances to be violation of law such that reasonable official would have understood that what he was doing violated constitutional right. Niziol v. Pasco County Dist. School Bd., M.D.Fla.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 1194. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Reasonable school officials should have known that student's constitutional right to be free from officials' deliberate indifference to, or affirmative acts that increased danger of serious injury from unjustified invasions of bodily integrity perpetrated by third parties was threatened by their custom of inviting and allowing older, heavier, more experienced alumni wrestlers to live wrestle students at practice, for purpose of determining whether officials were entitled to qualified immunity in injured student's § 1983 action. Sciotto v. Marple Newton School Dist., E.D.Pa.1999, 81 F.Supp.2d 559. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Where determination of parents' federal constitutional rights involved weighing and comparison of interests of parents and interests of state and school district in protecting child, superintendent could not have had any notice that actions of principal would violate parents' rights, and they could not state cause of action against him under § 1983. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1356

Reasonable official in principal's position would not have believed that principal's actions, including encouraging student to tell principal about sexual harassment that occurred and to identify harassers, moving student into new classes, indicating principal would make further suspensions if she verified student's complaints, and suspending other student who allegedly touched student's breast, were reasonably calculated to end sexual harassment reported to principal, and thus, principal, in her individual capacity, was not entitled to qualified immunity from student's § 1983 action to enforce rights under Title IX, forbidding sex discrimination in education program receiving federal financial assistance, where student alleged both verbal harassment and sexual assault. Nicole M. By and Through Jacqueline M. v. Martinez Unified School Dist., N.D.Cal.1997, 964 F.Supp. 1369. Civil Rights 1376(5)

It was objectively reasonable for state education department officials to believe their actions in publishing full names of HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) positive individuals in department training guide as persons living with HIV did not violate such individuals' constitutional right to privacy in their medical status, and therefore officials were entitled to qualified immunity in HIV positive individuals' § 1983 action, as law regarding waiver of right to privacy was uncertain at time training guide was published, the HIV positive individuals were visible participants in HIV/AIDS advocacy and awareness movement, and numerous persons knew of the individuals' HIV status. Doe v. Marsh, N.D.N.Y.1996, 918 F.Supp. 580, affirmed 105 F.3d 106. Civil Rights 1376(5)

4000. ---- Hazing, education and school officials, objective reasonableness requirement

University students, members of voluntary student military training organization and alleged perpetrators of violent hazing incidents, were not entitled to qualified immunity from suit brought under § 1983 by student injured in numerous hazing incidents, as no objectively reasonable persons in perpetrators' position could have believed that conduct such as that alleged was not violative of injured student's constitutional rights. Alton v. Hopgood, S.D.Tex.1998, 994 F.Supp. 827, affirmed 168 F.3d 196, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(5)

4000A. ---- Assaults against students, education and school officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Qualified immunity applied to preclude §§ 1983 liability of school and police officials to high school student who was beaten by group of students, even though officials' alleged conduct in failing to address and in concealing ongoing attacks upon students by group of students gave rise to state-created danger supporting student's claim alleging deprivation of his substantive due process right to bodily integrity, given that, at the time student was attacked, a reasonable state actor in officials' position could reasonably have believed that their acts and omissions did not violate student's constitutional rights. Gremo v. Karlin, E.D.Pa.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 771. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(6)

4001. ---- Freedom of speech, education and school officials, objective reasonableness requirement

School board members were entitled to qualified immunity on public high school students' First Amendment claims arising from superintendent's interpretation and application of dress code prohibition on wearing apparel advertising alcoholic beverages to t-shirts bearing phrase "The best of the night's adventures are reserved for people with nothing planned"; school board members could believe that dress code did not violate students' First Amendment rights and that wearing clothing advertising alcoholic beverages would materially interfere with teaching of adverse effects of alcohol and school discipline and there was no evidence that members approved of, directed or ratified superintendent's application of dress code provision to t-shirts. McIntire v. Bethel School, Independent School Dist. No. 3, W.D.Okla.1992, 804 F.Supp. 1415. Civil Rights 1376(5)

4002. ---- Discipline, education and school officials, objective reasonableness requirement

High school principal was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action arising from his alleged use of constitutionally excessive force in disciplining student; although principal claimed that at time of incident in question the due process right to be free from corporal punishment was not clearly established, nature and extent of force he allegedly applied was clearly excessive and presented foreseeable risk of serious bodily injury. Kirkland ex rel. Jones v. Greene County Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 347 F.3d 903, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 88 Fed.Appx. 393, 2003 WL 22994441. Civil Rights 1376(5)

School teacher and principal did not have qualified immunity from liability to second-grade student who was tied to chair for entire school day, and for substantial portion of second day, as educational exercise, with no suggested justification, such as punishment or discipline; competent teacher knew or should have known that young student who was not being properly punished or disciplined had constitutionally protected substantive due process right not to be lashed to chair through school day and denied, among other things, basic liberty of access to bathroom when needed. Jefferson v. Ysleta Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 817 F.2d 303. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Even if high school student's First Amendment rights were violated by his suspension based on his conversations with fellow students concerning handguns and his subsequent possession of a handgun off school property, school official was entitled to qualified immunity; an objectively reasonable school official would not have known that disciplining student on basis of conclusion that student's conduct threatened the health, safety and welfare of the school would violate student's First Amendment right to free speech. Cohn v. New Paltz Central School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 421, appeal dismissed in part 2006 WL 522102. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Even if student's constitutional rights were violated and those rights were clearly established, school principal, who expelled student for possession of graphic and violent drawing depicting destruction of school and weapon, was entitled to qualified immunity since his acts were objectively reasonable in light of the law clearly established at the time principal acted. Porter ex rel. LeBlanc v. Ascension Parish School Bd., M.D.La.2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 576, affirmed 393 F.3d 608, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2530, 544 U.S. 1062, 161 L.Ed.2d 1112. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Even if public school officials' enforcement of school policy by punishing certain high school students who had consumed alcohol on school trip was based on incorrect or incomplete information resulting in improper selective enforcement, school officials would be entitled to qualified immunity from students' equal protection claims; officials' reliance on information supplied by chaperones was reasonable, and their act of preventing students from participating in graduation ceremonies comported with clearly established equal protection jurisprudence. Carlino v. Gloucester City High School, D.N.J.1999, 57 F.Supp.2d 1, affirmed in part 44 Fed.Appx. 599, 2002 WL 1877011. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Sheriff, sheriff's deputies and teacher were entitled to qualified immunity in student's civil rights action in connection with placing eighth-grade student briefly in holding cell for misbehaving during class tour of detention facility, in that student's constitutional rights were not violated thereby. Harris by Tucker v. County of Forsyth, M.D.N.C.1996, 921 F.Supp. 325. Civil Rights 1376(5); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Teacher's actions in grabbing high school student by the wrist and elbow to send her from classroom was outside usual scope of corporal punishment and within bounds of school's disciplinary code, so that it would be unreasonable to expect him to know that his actions might constitute constitutional violation, and he was entitled to qualified immunity. Wallace by Wallace v. Batavia School Dist. 101, N.D.Ill.1994, 870 F.Supp. 222, affirmed 68 F.3d 1010. Civil Rights 1376(5)

4003. ---- Searches, education and school officials, objective reasonableness requirement

High school principal's alleged conduct of briefly detaining student in order to ascertain her identity, and then turning student over to police officer to ascertain her identity after his efforts at identifying her were unsuccessful, was reasonable, and thus did not violate the Fourth Amendment. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Schools 169.5

Faculty and staff members of state veterinary college were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to alleged constitutional violations arising out of their strip search of graduate student, even though search was conducted because student was suspected of cheating on exam rather than of violating any provision of penal code, and even recognizing that university students might possess higher degree of privacy than their similarly situated minor counterparts; officials were reasonable in concluding that search of student's person was justified, scope of search was not unreasonable, status of law with respect to scope of authority of state supported university faculty to conduct searches of university students was unclear, and officials were reasonably led to believe that student's ready acquiescence to search indicated her implied consent thereto. Carboni v. Meldrum, W.D.Va.1996, 949 F.Supp. 427, affirmed 103 F.3d 116. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Strip searching seventh-grade girls in effort to recover allegedly stolen $4.50 was not reasonable under the circumstances and, therefore, principal, teacher, and substitute teacher were not entitled to qualified immunity from

4004. Election officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Members of Board of Elections for the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action in which voters challenged Board's implementation of new voter challenge procedures that resulted in voters being precluded from voting in island school board election, notwithstanding any reliance upon advice of legal counsel, inasmuch as reasonable elections official would have known that it would violate voters' equal protection rights and right to vote to handle voter challenges differently based on voter's political party, to decide to exclude voters in reliance on subjective testimony of head of opposing party, who also was responsible for asserting voter challenges at issue, and in failing to notify voters of changed decision, made on day of election, that allowed them to vote. Charfauros v. Board of Elections, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)2001, 249 F.3d 941, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Members of Ohio Elections Commission sued in their individual capacities were entitled to qualified immunity for carrying out of provision of election law plaintiff alleged was unconstitutional; at time of their action reasonably competent public officials in like circumstances would not reasonably have known that provisions of election law were unconstitutional in any respect. Pestrak v. Ohio Elections Com'n, S.D.Ohio 1987, 670 F.Supp. 1368, opinion clarified 677 F.Supp. 534, affirmed in part, reversed in part 926 F.2d 573, certiorari dismissed 112 S.Ct. 672, 502 U.S. 1022, 116 L.Ed.2d 763, certiorari dismissed 112 S.Ct. 673, 502 U.S. 1022, 116 L.Ed.2d 763. Civil Rights 1376(3)

4005. Employers, objective reasonableness requirement--Generally

Defendant is entitled to qualified immunity as school administrator in § 1983 employment discrimination action if reasonable officials in defendants' position at relevant time could have believed, in light of clearly established law, that their conduct comported with established legal standards. Long v. Board of Educ. of City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1993, 812 F.Supp. 525, affirmed 8 F.3d 811. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4006. ---- First Amendment generally, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

No reasonable state employee could have thought that he was allowed to discipline an employee more severely because of the employee's expression of his First Amendment rights and, thus, police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity on §§ 1983 claims of former police officers, alleging that chief brought them before board of police commissioners because they exercised their First Amendment rights and did not charge or discipline other similarly-situated officers. Skehan v. Village of Mamaroneck, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 96. Civil Rights 1376(10)

In employee's § 1983 claim alleging that individual public officials failed to reasonably accommodate his Sabbath observance in violation of free exercise clause, officials were qualifiedly immune from their actions that took place following Supreme Court's decision in Employment Division v. Smith, since officials could reasonably have believed at that time that actions taken in accordance with collective bargaining agreement that was reached to establish neutral and fair method of selecting work shifts, not to burden religion, would withstand free exercise challenge under that case. Genas v. State of N.Y. Dept. of Correctional Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 75 F.3d 825. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police department official's intent or motive in developing and bringing disciplinary charges against police officer was appropriate consideration in determining whether official was entitled to qualified immunity in officer's § 1983 action alleging that charges were brought in retaliation for his exercise of his First Amendment rights. Broderick v. Roache, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1294. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Superior officers in Missouri State Highway Patrol were entitled to qualified immunity to trooper's claim that he was suspended in violation of his First Amendment rights for sending letter to Governor complaining that Patrol's new "minimum work standards" policy was in fact a ticket-writing quota system, even if letter was motivating factor in trooper's suspension. Bartlett v. Fisher, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 972 F.2d 911. States 79

Police chief who was responsible for dismissing city police officer for exercising his First Amendment rights by writing letter requesting investigation of police department to Attorney General was not entitled to qualified immunity, as reasonable police chief should have been on notice that it would violate First Amendment to terminate police officer who wrote letter alleging, inter alia, antiunion animus, on part of chief, particularly where letter caused no significant disruption of police department operations. Wulf v. City of Wichita, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 883 F.2d 842, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Village mayor and former village employee's supervisor were not entitled to judgment on the pleadings, on ground of qualified immunity, on employee's claim that village did not rehire him when he was able to return from disability in retaliation for the exercise of his First Amendment rights, in filing complaint and notice of claim against village, where no reasonable official charged with hiring public employees could possibly have thought that it was constitutional to refuse to rehire an employee after his disability ended solely and simply because he was planning to sue village and village police officer for wrongfully breaking his arm. Torres v. Village of Sleepy Hollow, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 478, appeal dismissed 2006 WL 755958. Federal Civil Procedure 1061

City officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from claim of former city employee that he was denied seasonal leave and terminated because of his political affiliation in violation of the First Amendment; it was not objectively reasonable for officials to believe that denial of seasonal leave and termination based on political affiliation did not violate the law. Hennessy v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 200. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4007. ---- Freedom of association, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Superintendent of county school system was charged by Kentucky law with recommending hiring and personnel decisions to school board and, thus, superintendent could be required to be aware of and observe school board employee's right to freedom of association in her marriage relationship, and superintendent could not claim qualified immunity from employee's civil rights action for denial of continued public employment that allegedly resulted from employee's association with her husband. Adkins v. Board of Educ. of Magoffin County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 982 F.2d 952. Civil Rights 1376(10); Constitutional Law 91; Schools 63(3)

Reasonable person would have known in September 2003, for purposes of qualified immunity, that fire chief would violate firefighter's free association rights by instituting policy preventing him from speaking to city officials about fire department matters. Lilienthal v. City of Suffolk, E.D.Va.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 684. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4008. ---- Freedom of speech, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

It was not objectively reasonable for County District Attorney to believe that he could demote an employee for making a hyperbolic statement to a reporter regarding the crime rate in the district without violating First Amendment right of public employees to be free from retaliation for speech on matters of public concern, and thus, District Attorney was not entitled to qualified immunity in employee's §§ 1983 action alleging adverse employment actions in retaliation for exercise of his First Amendment rights; it was well-established by Supreme Court precedent that hyperbolic speech was protected by First Amendment, and that speaker's motive was not dispositive of whether speech was protected. Reuland v. Hynes, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 460 F.3d 409. Civil Rights 1376(10)

University administrators were entitled to qualified immunity from university employee's claim that he was transferred as a penalty for protected speech in speaking out about director of university computer-based education and research laboratory given uncontroverted evidence establishing that employee was transferred only after administrators had received numerous complaints from coemployees concerning destruction of working relationships in laboratory and after completion of independent audit that absolved director of wrongdoing. Propst v. Bitzer, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 39 F.3d 148, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1400, 514 U.S. 1036, 131 L.Ed.2d 288. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Supervisors of black employee of county department of community affairs were entitled to qualified immunity for suspending employee for his remarks from his sermon appearing in newspaper, expressing his frustration at having to speak Spanish at restaurants and urging blacks to boycott white and Hispanic businesses; reasonable person in supervisors' positions could have believed that employee's statements were racially divisive, diminished his ability to perform his job and infuriated members of Hispanic community, and supervisors could have believed that their actions did not violate clearly established law. Sims v. Metropolitan Dade County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 972 F.2d 1230. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability suit brought by former deputy sheriff who allegedly was discharged in violation of his First Amendment free speech right for writing letter concerning sentencing of convicted criminal; letter unquestionably dealt with matters of public concern and there was no evidence to justify decision to punish sheriff for his speech. Buzek v. County of Saunders, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1992, 972 F.2d 992. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County officials were qualifiedly immune from § 1983 liability in connection with their termination of county board of health employee, as they could reasonably have believed that employee had knowingly or recklessly made false statements to media and to court involving functioning of board and, thus, that termination of employee for such statements would not violate her First Amendment rights. Gossman v. Allen, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1991, 950 F.2d 338 . Civil Rights 1376(10)

In determining whether university administrators were entitled to qualified immunity from university employee's claim that she was transferred as penalty for protected speech, which defense was premised on claim that law had not clearly established impropriety of transferring public employee whose speech created disturbance undermining productivity of other workers, question was not what conditions in laboratory where employee worked were, but rather was what administrators reasonably believed them to have been; objectively reasonable but mistaken conclusions would not violate the Constitution. Elliott v. Thomas, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 937 F.2d 338, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 973, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L.Ed.2d 138, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1242, 502 U.S. 1121, 117 L.Ed.2d 475. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officers who were allegedly denied promotions because of another officer's grievances concerning police department's promotional practices violated latter officer's clearly established free speech rights when they allegedly sought to have officer fired in retaliation, precluding officers from claiming qualified immunity in resulting civil rights action. Thompson v. City of Starkville, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1990, 901 F.2d 456. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Assuming that state court judge discharged his confidential secretary because she spoke to district attorney regarding individual being considered for prosecution, after judge instructed her not to, judge was entitled to qualified immunity on grounds that reasonable official in his circumstances could have concluded his action did not violate his employee's First Amendment rights; secretary's participation in investigation was not vital, there was evidence secretary had personal animus toward target of investigation, alleged crime was relatively minor, importance of keeping judicial office separate from prosecutorial functions was far reaching and crucial, and loyalty was essential quality for a confidential secretary to a judge. McDaniel v. Woodard, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1989, 886 F.2d 311. Judges 36

Provost and former dean were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to former university department head's claim that his removal was in retaliation for protected speech; reasonably competent university officials could have concluded that department head's criticism of his superior's actions regarding allocation of funds within department, review of faculty grievances, and departmental votes on faculty nonretention were not matters of public concern or, if they were, that department head's interest in speaking freely was outweighed by administration's interest in maintaining authority and good working relationships. Garvie v. Jackson, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1988, 845 F.2d 647. Civil Rights 1376(10)

College officials were not entitled to immunity with respect to professor's action to recover for termination resulting from professor's exercise of his constitutionally protected rights, since a reasonable person should have known at the time of professor's termination that professor's speech, which was found to have been the basis for professor's termination, was constitutionally protected. Stern v. Shouldice, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1983, 706 F.2d 742, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 487, 464 U.S. 993, 78 L.Ed.2d 683. Civil Rights 1373

County sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 in his individual capacity, for discharging jail employee who had filed grievance complaining about sheriff's violation of state open records law; even if jail employee's speech was protected, sheriff acted reasonably under the circumstances in discharging employee, about whom he had received complaints from coworkers and inmates. Shape v. Barnes County, N.D., D.N.D.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 1067. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police chief did not have qualified immunity from suit by police detective, claiming that chief transferred him in retaliation for his disclosure of letter from informant, asserting that drug house was being patronized by close relative of public official, who in turn was close personal friend of police chief; reasonable officer would have known that action taken in retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights was unlawful. Delgado v. Jones, E.D.Wis.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 956, affirmed 95 Fed.Appx. 185, 2004 WL 729172, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 346, 543 U.S. 925, 160 L.Ed.2d 223. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Reasonable person would have known in September 2003, for purposes of qualified immunity, that fire chief would violate firefighter's speech rights by instituting policy preventing him from speaking to city officials about fire department matters. Lilienthal v. City of Suffolk, E.D.Va.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 684. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City council members alleged by former senior aid to have conspired to terminate aid because of their disapproval of one council member's voting record were not entitled to qualified immunity, in aid's § 1983 action for deprivation of First Amendment rights; no reasonable person could believe that council members' alleged conduct in warning council member that, because of his political views, they intended to fire aid, and their actions in carrying out threat were permissible under § 1983, and aid was not terminated for his political views but for those of council member. Camacho v. Brandon, S.D.N.Y.1999, 56 F.Supp.2d 370, on reconsideration in part 69 F.Supp.2d 546, appeal dismissed 236 F.3d 112. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City officials were qualifiedly immune from former city employee's § 1983 claim that his First Amendment rights were violated when city official issued memorandum discouraging city employees from discussing topics related to former employee's termination with former employee; reasonable public official would not have known that action of barring subordinates from talking with former employee regarding such topics was contrary to Constitution, in light of fact that right to receive speech from certain public employees after filing claims against city had not been defined by Second Circuit or Supreme Court. Walsh v. City of Auburn, N.D.N.Y.1996, 942 F.Supp. 788. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Secretary of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare (DPW), Director of the Department's Bureau of Personnel, and Director of the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OH&A) were not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to § 1983 claim brought by attorney examiner with OH&A alleging that he was terminated in retaliation for writing letter to Pennsylvania governor accusing OH&A Director of incompetence; attorney's letter parroted statements made by member of governor's transition team who was not associated with attorney's employment problems and no reasonable public official could conclude that comments echoing statements made by official reviewing agency would not be protected speech. Sullivan v. Houstoun, M.D.Pa.1996, 928 F.Supp. 521. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Preliminary discovery was required on whether public officials' belief that terminating employee did not violate his freedom of speech rights was objectively reasonable before granting their motion to dismiss on qualified immunity grounds, where employee alleged that he spoke of official misconduct, sexual harassment, racial discrimination and corruption, which may be matters of public concern within free speech protection. Moray v. City of Yonkers, S.D.N.Y.1996, 924 F.Supp. 8. Federal Civil Procedure 1264; Federal Civil Procedure 1828

State officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in regard to former state general counsel's claim that she was discharged for engaging in protected speech in violation of First Amendment; as firing claimant comported with First Amendment, it followed that reasonable state officer could have believed that firing did not violate counsel's First Amendment rights, and even if counsel's speech was protected by First Amendment, law was sufficiently murky or factual question was sufficiently close that reasonable state officer could still believe that counsel's firing was permissible under Constitution. Volberg v. Pataki, N.D.N.Y.1996, 917 F.Supp. 909, affirmed 112 F.3d 507, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1252, 520 U.S. 1119, 137 L.Ed.2d 333. Civil Rights 1376(10)

New Secretary of State was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to § 1983 suit brought by former employees who alleged that they were discharged based on their political affiliations in violation of the First Amendment; employees occupied confidential and policymaking positions within the Secretary of State's office, such as Legislative Director and Communications Director positions, and Secretary could reasonably have assumed that her relationship to employees' positions was confidential in nature, and, therefore, her decision to dismiss employees and hire people in whom she had complete trust was not clearly prohibited and it was reasonable for Secretary to assume that she could dismiss incompetent employee. Smith v. Cook, W.D.Mo.1995, 914 F.Supp. 348 . Civil Rights 1376(10)

Fire chief was not entitled to qualified immunity on fire department employee's § 1983 claim that chief violated employee's First Amendment rights by denying employee promotion in retaliation for employee's complaints about department to newspaper reporter; chief's alleged conduct would violate clearly established constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Sundstrom v. Village of Arlington Heights, N.D.Ill.1993, 826 F.Supp. 1143. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Detective's allegations that sheriff's office employees recommended that sheriff fire her due to her alleged support of former sheriff, and that she was thereafter transferred, that subsequent transfers were actually demotions, and that she was subject to annoyance, harassment, humiliation, and ostracism for having exercised her free speech rights alleged sufficient facts to withstand motion to dismiss based on qualified immunity of sheriff and his employees. Morris v. Crow, M.D.Fla.1993, 825 F.Supp. 295. Civil Rights 1398

4009. ---- Political affiliation, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Sheriff was not qualifiedly immune from jailer's § 1983 claims that sheriff terminated her on July 19, 1995 because of her association with her husband, who had opposed sheriff in election, in violation of her First Amendment rights of political and intimate association, inasmuch as her rights of political and intimate association were clearly established at that time, and it was objectively reasonable for sheriff to understand he was violating those rights when he terminated her. Sowards v. Loudon County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 203 F.3d 426, 123 A.L.R.5th 783, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 179, 531 U.S. 875, 148 L.Ed.2d 123. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County council chairman, county administrative director, and county councilman could have reasonably believed that termination of councilman's administrative assistant for political reasons was proper and therefore, they were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 suit brought by assistant; assistant did not have clearly established right to be free from patronage dismissals. Billingsley v. St. Louis County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 70 F.3d 61. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Sheriff and other supervisory members of sheriff's department were entitled to qualified immunity from claims of subordinates that they were transferred in retaliation for exercising their First Amendment right to support political opponent of sheriff; Pickering balancing did not lead to inevitable conclusion that transferring plaintiffs was unlawful, especially considering the transfers involved no loss of pay or rank, but were based on concerns that ability of supervisors to effectively direct and discipline subordinates had been compromised because of litigation. Rogers v. Miller, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 57 F.3d 986. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Commissioner of Public Safety was not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by state trooper who was transferred as result of political activities; government failed to show that reasonable official would have found trooper's First Amendment rights were outweighed by government's interest in promoting effective law enforcement, and government was required to make stronger showing than merely perceiving potential threat to effective government operations, without verifying underlying allegations or affording trooper opportunity to respond. Bieluch v. Sullivan, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1993, 999 F.2d 666, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 926, 510 U.S. 1094, 127 L.Ed.2d 219. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Reasonable officials would have known that alleged conduct of officials of Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority (PREPA) in connection with employee's transfer, which involved treating him differently than similarly situated employees for being affiliated with certain political party with intent to injure his constitutional rights, would violate clearly established constitutional rights guaranteed by Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses, and, thus, officials were not qualifiedly immune from employee's §§ 1983 claims. Rivera Sanchez v. Autoridad de Energia Electrica, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City's chief of police had qualified immunity from claims of police lieutenant that he was disciplined as result of political opinions; at time action was taken, it was unclear whether political affiliation was an appropriate job qualification for position of police lieutenant. Nitschneider v. Miller, N.D.Ill.1993, 821 F.Supp. 1258. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Administrator of state insurance fund was entitled to qualified immunity from employee's claim for monetary damages in civil rights action based on employee's dismissal from position as director of insurance fund's legal services division because of his political affiliation; reasonable person in administrator's position could believe that political affiliation was appropriate requirement for effective performance of director's job. Mafuz Blanco v. Tirado Delgado, D.Puerto Rico 1986, 641 F.Supp. 1287. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4010. ---- Privacy rights, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Evidence that employee did not sign authorization for release of various documents because it was "an invasion of privacy," "too personal," "not necessary," and "unconstitutional," was sufficient to raise fact issue for jury on issue of whether employer's intrusion into the confidentiality of his medical records was the cause of his injury, or termination, in § 1983 action. Denius v. Dunlap, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 330 F.3d 919. Civil Rights 1430

Fire fighter failed to demonstrate that no officer of reasonable competence would have required him to take drug urinalysis test as would preclude defense of qualified immunity to charge that test violated fire fighter's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights. immunity in § 1983 action brought by police officer alleging that police department's requirement that she submit her mental health records during her continuing treatment for depression as condition for full reinstatement following suicide attempt violated her right to privacy, where, at worst, individual defendants exercised poor judgment in scope of their request and reasonably could have thought that their actions were consistent with rights they were alleged to have violated, and defendants acted in objectively reasonable manner. Thompson v. City of Arlington, Tex., N.D.Tex.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1137. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4011. ---- Racial discrimination, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Given clear state of law prohibiting racial discrimination in public employment at the time two African-American members of board of county commissioners voted to replace white female clerk with African-American clerk, no reasonable commissioner, with information possessed by those board members would have believed that his or her discriminatory acts were constitutional; therefore, those members were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by white female clerk alleging violation of equal protection clause. Smith v. Lomax, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 45 F.3d 402. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Mayor, police captain, police lieutenant and chief of city police did not have qualified immunity in individual capacities with respect to discharged black employee's § 1983 claim regarding racial harassment and discrimination in employment; equal protection clause afforded employee right to be free from racial discrimination. Busby v. City of Orlando, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 931 F.2d 764. Civil Rights 1376(10); Constitutional Law 219.1

Black former police superintendent was not entitled to qualified immunity from discrimination claims of high-ranking white officers who alleged they were demoted without any just cause or complaint about their professional performance, but only because of race, so as to make their police supervisory command positions available to be filled by black officers, absent any evidence of affirmative action rationale; reasonable superintendent of major metropolitan police force could not have reasonably concluded that he could reorganize police department's highest level managers by reassigning or demoting 25 white officers from exempt rates, but demoting no black officers, and then promoting 13 black officers into new vacancies created by white demotions, all in total absence of any affirmative action concept or criteria, defective or otherwise. Auriemma v. Rice, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1449, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2796, 501 U.S. 1204, 115 L.Ed.2d 970. Civil Rights 1376(10)

City officials named in their individual capacities were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability with regard to white female police officer's claim that she was terminated because of her race; it would not have been objectively reasonable for the officials to believe they could lawfully terminate the officer based, even in part, on her race. Disher v. Weaver, M.D.N.C.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 614. Civil Rights 1376(10)

No reasonable official could have believed that it was lawful to discriminate against an employee on the basis of race in the way alleged by a city fire department employee, and thus, the employee's supervisors were not entitled to qualified immunity as to the employee's §§ 1983 claim of discrimination; the employee claimed that the supervisors refused to allow him to take a certification course required for a promotional position, which white employees were allowed to take, and that the supervisors issued him punishments of more heightened severity and frequency than those issued white employees for similar conduct, in an effort to sabotage his chance for a promotion. Jolivette v. Arrowood, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 2006 WL 1308626, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4012. ---- Sex discrimination, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Municipal officials were not entitled to qualified immunity, in sex discrimination suit brought by police department employee, in that they should have reasonably known that their alleged harassment of and retaliation against employee violated constitutional norms; other defendants, who allegedly failed to report such harassment, however, were protected by qualified immunity, in that such failure would not presumably have been known to have constitutional implications. Dirksen v. City of Springfield, C.D.Ill.1994, 842 F.Supp. 1117. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4013. ---- Sexual harassment, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Supervisor was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for his conduct toward deputy sheriff, since no male officer could reasonably have thought at time conduct took place that it was not sexual harassment to announce that it was his turn to "make out" with woman who was subject to his command, especially when that woman had previously protested his gender oriented behavior. Beardsley v. Webb, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 30 F.3d 524. Civil Rights 1376(10)

County sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity under §§ 1983 from female correctional officer's claims of sexual harassment, where sheriff never sexually harassed plaintiff, never observed plaintiff's alleged sexual harassment, never took any adverse employment action against her, and was never personally aware of plaintiff's allegations of sexual harassment; moreover, sheriff also had a reasonable policy for his subordinates to pursue in the event they opted to complain of harassment, and sheriff investigated those matters brought to his attention. Dunbar v. County of Saratoga, N.D.N.Y.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Physician employed by public transportation authority was not entitled to qualified immunity in female employee's § 1983 claim that physician sexually harassed her during physical examination, despite physician's contention that reasonable physician might have acted as he did, as reasonable physician would have known that intentional sexual harassment of patients violated clearly established constitutional rights. Ascolese v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 925 F.Supp. 351. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from individual suit by female police officer under § 1983 on theory that police chief was acting in official capacity in violating officer's charges of sexual harassment at time officer filed her first complaint alleging sexual harassment, police chief should reasonably have known that intentionally permitting hostile work environment, including continuing harassment and retaliatory behavior against female police officers, deprived officer of her right to free speech and equal protection under the law. Poulsen v. City of North Tonawanda, N.Y., W.D.N.Y.1993, 811 F.Supp. 884. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4014. ---- Discharges or dismissals, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

As bearing upon good-faith immunity from liability for wrongful discharge, it was not unreasonable, under Fourteenth Amendment due process principles, for the Florida Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles, as employer, to conclude that civil service employee had been provided with fundamentals of due process in view of fact that his statement of reasons and other relevant information were before senior official who made decision to discharge and in view of Florida law providing for full evidentiary hearing after termination. Davis v. Scherer, U.S.Fla.1984, 104 S.Ct. 3012, 468 U.S. 183, 82 L.Ed.2d 139, rehearing denied 105 S.Ct. 26, 468 U.S. 1226, 82 L.Ed.2d 919. Civil Rights 1376(10)

State official responsible for operation of state mental hospital was not entitled to qualified immunity with regard to violation of First Amendment free speech rights occurring when she failed to renew contract of psychiatrist who worked at hospital as independent contractor, allegedly in retaliation for his memoranda raising concerns on state of care at the facility; although official relied on new state bidding requirements when she did not renew the contract, she did not send non-renewal letters to other independent contractor physicians, and provided no plausible reason for her targeting of the physiatrist. Springer v. Henry, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 435 F.3d 268. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Even if deputy sheriffs were subject to patronage dismissal as matter of law in 1993, reasonable official would not have believed that deputy sheriffs and correctional officers should be treated the same for patronage purposes solely because the two offices were covered by same Illinois statutory provision regarding termination, for purposes of determining whether sheriff was qualifiedly immune from correctional officers' § 1983 action alleging patronage dismissal. Flenner v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 107 F.3d 459. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Members of city's board of education could not have reasonably believed that they were acting illegally in relieving school superintendent of his responsibilities while continuing to pay him economic benefits of position, and thus members as individuals were qualifiedly immune from superintendent's suit claiming deprivation of property right without due process; when board acted, courts agreed that public official had constitutionally protected property interest only in economic benefits of his position and did not have any right to actually hold position and execute its duties. Harris v. Board of Educ. of the City of Atlanta, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1997, 105 F.3d 591. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officers who allegedly sexually harassed dispatchers were entitled to qualified immunity in dispatchers' § 1983 action based on claim of constructive discharge; officers lacked any power or authority to discharge dispatchers, and they had no personal constitutional obligation to provide dispatchers with any kind of due process hearing in event dispatchers were discharged. Woodward v. City of Worland, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1992, 977 F.2d 1392, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 3038, 509 U.S. 923, 125 L.Ed.2d 724. Civil Rights 1376(10)

School board officials were entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim alleging violation of due process brought by school principal whose contract was not renewed and who was instead reassigned to teaching position; New Mexico law did not afford principal any procedural protection for nonrenewal of her contract, and even if statute providing for certain procedural protections could be applied to principal, it was not shown that school board reasonably should have known that principal was entitled to such protections. Cole v. Ruidoso Mun. Schools, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1991, 947 F.2d 903. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Supervisor of managerial state employee was entitled to qualified immunity in employee's civil rights action challenging his removal from his position because, at time of removal, it would not have been apparent to reasonable supervisor that employee had property interest in his management service employment. Wheaton v. Webb-Petett, C.A.9 (Or.) 1991, 931 F.2d 613. Civil Rights 1376(10)

University officials could reasonably have believed that their investigation of plagiarism charges against tenured professor satisfied requirements of procedural due process and, thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity in professor's civil rights action; professor was notified of charges against her and was given multiple opportunities to respond, explain, and defend, she was given opportunity to respond to reports filed by outside experts and by dean's committee, and she was allowed to call and cross-examine witnesses at hearing. Newman v. Com. of Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 884 F.2d 19, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1132, 493 U.S. 1078, 107 L.Ed.2d 1037. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Former District of Columbia mayor was entitled to qualified immunity from personal liability for alleged violation of substantive due process rights of former Director of the District of Columbia (D.C.) Office of Human Rights (OHR); while director's termination allegedly created a stigma or disability that foreclosed his freedom to take advantage of other employment opportunities, the alleged unlawfulness of mayor's conduct would not have been apparent to a reasonable officer. Holman v. Williams, D.D.C.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 68. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Objectively reasonable school board officials should have known that they were acting in disregard of clearly established law and public school regulations by failing to reinstate maintenance director to his position after it allegedly was recreated following its elimination ostensibly as a result of reduction-in-force, particularly when quality control/compliance department circulated memorandum acknowledging that board could be violating policy by advertising position to which director, as tenured employee, was entitled, and therefore qualified immunity did not apply to shield school board officials from liability on director's procedural due process claims. Brannan v. Amato, E.D.La.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 523. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Principal, who recommended African-American teacher's termination, was entitled to qualified immunity from teacher's individual capacity claims under § 1981 and § 1983; principal did not violate any of teacher's constitutional rights, in that, he was not decisionmaker who terminated her, and even if he had violated her constitutional rights, principal's recommendation to terminate teacher was objectively reasonable, in light of teacher's history of unprofessional behavior toward colleagues, students, and supervisors despite repeated warnings and reprimands. Bluitt v. Houston Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 703. Civil Rights 1376(10)

It was objectively reasonable for members of Port Authority's board of commissioners to believe that their adoption of resolution authorizing reductions in work force by department directors did not violate any contractual, property or procedural rights of Authority employees, and therefore commissioners were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by discharged employees; law with respect to rights vested in Authority employees had not been clearly defined and established. Baron v. Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, S.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 646, affirmed 271 F.3d 81. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Town manager's decision to terminate town police chief for lying under oath about authorship of pornographic letter, and in so lying, acting in manner unbecoming an officer was objective and reasonable and, therefore manager was protected by qualified immunity in police chief's § 1983 action where there was substantial evidence before manager that handwriting in letter was police chief's and that chief had lied about it under oath. Cronin v. Town of Amesbury, D.Mass.1995, 895 F.Supp. 375, affirmed 81 F.3d 257. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Four superiors of tax examiner employed by state were not protected by doctrine of qualified immunity with respect to tax examiner's claim that they abridged her Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination by terminating her for failing to answer their questions about her conduct on the job after she had invoked right; superiors should have known that forcing her to choose between her job and her Fifth Amendment rights violated Constitution. Singer v. State of Me., D.Me.1994, 865 F.Supp. 19, reversed in part 49 F.3d 837. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Reasonable state court district judge would not have known that discharging secretary of judge's predecessor would violate secretary's due process rights and, thus, judge was entitled to qualified immunity as to discharged secretary's procedural due process claim; judge could reasonably have concluded that representations on part of predecessor that state personnel rules applied to secretary did not create property interest in her continued employment. Munroe v. Kautz, D.Wyo.1993, 833 F.Supp. 854, affirmed 33 F.3d 62. Civil Rights 1376(10)

In action by former teacher and athletic coach alleging that school district and district employees violated his due process, equal protection and First Amendment rights, individual employees were entitled to qualified immunity from liability absent showing by teacher that individual defendants knew or should have known that their failure to rehire teacher and coach violated his constitutional rights. Nelson v. Payne, S.D.Tex.1992, 827 F.Supp. 1273, affirmed 18 F.3d 935. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Members of city housing authority were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability for due process violation in failing to accord terminated executive director an impartial tribunal at termination hearing; disqualifying personal bias of authority members was readily apparent by any objective standard. Salisbury v. Housing Authority of City of Newport, E.D.Ky.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1433. Civil Rights 1376(10)

President of state university reasonably should have known that consideration of information not presented in hearing without affording university academic advisor notice and an opportunity to respond before dismissing advisor denied advisor due process, and thus, president, in his individual capacity, was not entitled to qualified immunity. supervisors' motion to dismiss based on qualified immunity, that supervisors' conduct was not objectively reasonable, as element for defeating qualified immunity, in §§ 1983 action alleging procedural due process violation relating to termination of employment; if it was true, as employee alleged, that supervisors forced him to choose between resigning or being terminated, without predeprivation hearing, then supervisors should have known that such an ultimatum would violate his right to procedural due process. 4015. ---- Promotions or demotions, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable public official in May of 1991 could not have reasonably anticipated that following requirements of Kentucky statute, and thereby failing to provide predemotion hearing to public employee, would violate employee's right to constitutional due process and, thus, defendant officials were entitled to qualified immunity on employee's due process claim in § 1983 action. Williams v. Com. of Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 24 F.3d 1526, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 358, 513 U.S. 947, 130 L.Ed.2d 312. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Reasonable fire commissioner or personnel commissioner could have concluded that they could take race into consideration in promotions for limited reorganization of engineer and captain ranks and, thus, were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in equal protection challenge to affirmative action policy on promotion from ranks of fire fighter and lieutenant; city was bound by consent order to promote black and Hispanic persons; collective bargaining agreement had affirmative action provision; there was significant statistical disparity between the portion of minority members engineering and captain ranks compared to proportion in ranks immediately below; and affirmative action policy had limited duration. Chicago Fire Fighters Union Local No. 2 v. Washington, N.D.Ill.1990, 736 F.Supp. 923, affirmed 962 F.2d 1269, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 989 F.2d 890, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 290, 510 U.S. 908, 126 L.Ed.2d 240, on remand. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4016. ---- Suspensions, employers, objective reasonableness requirement

School officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in high school teacher's § 1983 action based on their conduct in suspending teacher from her assignment as basketball coach; no reasonable school official would have known that suspending teacher and paying her full stipend due for coaching season pending investigation into complaints about her coaching conduct would have violated any clearly established constitutional rights to due process and equal protection. Schneeweis v. Jacobs, E.D.Va.1991, 771 F.Supp. 733, affirmed 966 F.2d 1444. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Allegations that city police detective was suspended without pay without presuspension hearing, that pretermination notice gave detective no reasons for his discharge beyond boilerplate statement, that operative work rules were vague and overbroad, and that applicable ordinance requiring progressive discipline was not followed, rendering discharge arbitrary and capricious, sufficiently set forth violations of clearly established law which reasonable state officials would not have believed were lawful so as to preclude qualified immunity defense of city officials in civil rights action. Byrd v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1988, 683 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Housing authority officials possessed qualified immunity in action brought by former police officer against authority and officials, following officer's suspension and termination due to his alleged imminent arrest, since reasonable persons in officials' position would not have known that pre-suspension notice was required under Due Process Clause. Solomon v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 143 Fed.Appx. 447, 2005 WL 1805616, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(10) malicious prosecution, since undisputed evidence demonstrated that investigator told prosecutor in timely fashion of information establishing plaintiff's innocence, and consequently, it was objectively reasonable for investigator to believe that his conduct did not violate any of plaintiff's clearly established rights. Kinzer v. Jackson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 139. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Chief engineer of California DSOD (Division of Safety of Dams) was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights lawsuit filed by owners of homes near lake, and of dam and land beneath lake, arising out of breach of dam because reasonable dam safety engineering official, similarly situated, could have believed that breaching dam was lawful where engineer was responsible for safety of people downstream and was confronted with earthen dam, extensive portion of which had sloughed off in heavy rain, engineering officials advised him that dam should be breached, and there was likely possibility that there would not be another opportunity to breach dam if it filled up even partway. Sinaloa Lake Owners Ass'n v. City of Simi Valley, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1095. Civil Rights 1376(3)

It was not objectively reasonable for member of town planning board to believe that he was not violating town councilwoman's equal protection right against selective enforcement when he swore out deposition indicating that town councilwoman's home had not received requisite building permit, and thus member was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in councilwoman's §§ 1983 action, where deposition was not made until six years after alleged violations had occurred, four years after applicable statute of limitations had run, and less than two months before town building inspector's initiation of criminal proceedings against councilwoman, but shortly after councilwoman had publicly criticized inspector's performance, and deposition was facially incorrect. Burns v. Citarella, S.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 464. Civil Rights 1375

Mayor was not entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 political discrimination action brought by lessors of vendor kiosk located in public market on city-owned property, alleging that lessors' political affiliation was motivating factor in mayor's refusal to permit enlargement of their kiosk; allegation, if true, established First Amendment violation, right not to be treated differently by government when it improved areas leased to individuals based only on lessor's political beliefs was clearly established, and similarly situated reasonable official would have understood that alleged action violated that right. Rodriguez Cruz v. Trujillo, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 240. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Even if city restaurant inspector violated restaurant owner's due process rights when he temporarily closed restaurant based on exterminator's use of spray fogger to emit pesticide in restaurant and notified the media, inspector was entitled to qualified immunity; reasonable inspector would not have known that suspending a license after observing the improper application of a pesticide in a restaurant and notifying the media, was a constitutional violation. Camuglia v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 1299, affirmed 448 F.3d 1214. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Director and enforcement officer of North Carolina Department of Revenue Controlled Substance Tax Division were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action arising out of their refusal, after charges against arrestee were dismissed, to refund controlled substance tax assessed against him when he was arrested while in possession of crack cocaine and cash; refund was not required by law, and thus reasonable people in director's and officer's positions would not have been aware that their failure to take action would violate arrestee's constitutional rights. Williams v. Starling, M.D.N.C.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 607. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Former governor, former secretary of justice, and other officials of government of Puerto Rico were not entitled to qualified immunity in action brought by judgment creditor under § 1983, alleging that their conduct directed towards goal of evading payment of judgment against corporation which was allegedly commonwealth's alter ego violated substantive due process and equal protection; reasonable officials should have known that such conduct violated clearly established constitutional rights. Future Development of Puerto Rico v. Estado Libre Asociado De Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 228. Civil Rights 1376(3)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Reasonable official presiding over quasi-judicial body probably would not have known that action of stopping individual's speech during public comment period because speaker used names violated speaker's First Amendment rights, and thus chairperson of township zoning hearing board was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for violating of speaker's rights. Zapach v. Dismuke, E.D.Pa.2001, 134 F.Supp.2d 682. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Officer of the Mississippi Public Safety Commission (MPSC), in his individual capacity, was entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim arising out of stop of commercial truck driver, even if Mississippi statute authorizing the inspection of motor vehicle by the MPSC did not limit the discretion of inspecting officers, driver failed to show that stop was not objectively reasonable in light of the legal rules clearly established at the time of the incident, since at least one Mississippi case had upheld the random stops of commercial truckers. Kelly v. Sheriff's Dept. of Sunflower County, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 113 Fed.Appx. 582, 2004 WL 2341840, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(3)

4018. Housing officials, objective reasonableness requirement

City building inspector was entitled to qualified immunity for any failure to provide predeprivation process in connection with emergency eviction of tenants, absent evidence that reasonable inspector could not have concluded that condition of structure posed immediate threat to safety of its occupants; examination of entire multiunit apartment building, rather than tenants' unit in isolation, was appropriate, and landlord's affidavit merely questioned inspector's judgment as to degree of seriousness of conditions. Flatford v. City of Monroe, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 17 F.3d 162. Civil Rights 1376(4)

4019. Housing investigations, objective reasonableness requirement

Even if child abuse detective violated the Fair Housing Act by conducting an investigation of child abuse allegations at foster care facility, which allegedly resulted in the closing of the facility that house predominantly handicapped and minority children, the investigation was objectively reasonable, and thus detective was shielded from liability based on qualified immunity. Omni Behavioral Health v. Miller, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2002, 285 F.3d 646, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied.

4020. Licensing and permit officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Sheriff was not qualifiedly immune from § 1983 claim by bail bonding company arising from sheriff's suspension of company's right to act as surety on bail bonds; right to earn living by writing bail bonds was property interest protected by Texas Constitution since company owner's reputation and integrity were at stake, and no reasonable official could conclude that suspending bonding privilege without providing owner with opportunity to refute allegations of misconduct would not violate owner's procedural due process rights. Vera v. Tue, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 73 F.3d 604. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even after state courts had determined that landowners were entitled to zoning permits, it would not have been unreasonable for president of town zoning commission to give his opinion as to whether discretionary application for property swap should be granted, and he would enjoy qualified immunity with respect to denial of a property swap which landowners sought in order to meet property setback requirements. Natale v. Town of Ridgefield, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1991, 927 F.2d 101. Civil Rights 1376(4)

City council members did not enjoy qualified immunity from liability for constitutional injuries suffered by property owner after they arbitrarily and unreasonably withheld building permit for which owner qualified and bank then withdrew its loan commitment and foreclosed on property. State Department of Mental Health officials, who had adjudicated director of nursing at private mental health facility licensed by state guilty of misconduct with prior hearing, were qualifiedly immune from liability to nursing director on her due process claim; it was reasonable for state officials to conclude that state statute provided nursing director with adequate postdeprivation evidentiary hearing to adjudicate any challenge to her misconduct finding. Birkenholz v. Sluyter, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1988, 857 F.2d 1214, rehearing denied. Mental Health 20

Plainclothes Puerto Rico treasury agents were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for violation of nightclub owner's Fourth Amendment rights occurring when they used force to attempt entry into nightclub to conduct warrantless licensing inspection; reasonable officer should have known that use of force would violate owner's rights. Alvarez Sepulveda v. Colon Matos, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 76, reconsideration denied 306 F.Supp.2d 100. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not objectively reasonable for town building inspector to believe that he was not violating town councilwoman's equal protection right against selective enforcement when he issued appearance ticket and filed criminal information against her after she publicly criticized his performance, and thus inspector was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in councilwoman's §§ 1983 action, where inspector did not enforce building code against councilwoman for six years, building code violations were governed by two year statute of limitations, councilwoman had required permits before criminal proceeding was commenced, and town maintained well-established policy of not prosecuting code violators. Burns v. Citarella, S.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 464.

City officials who suspended massage therapist's practitioner and massage establishment licenses due to alleged misconduct involving patient were not entitled to qualified immunity as to therapist's procedural due process claim stemming from failure to provide timely post-deprivation hearing; there was no evidence that officials had any governmental interest which necessitated 60-day hearing delay, and reasonable official would have known that delay was not justified without such interest. Jones v. City of Modesto, E.D.Cal.2005, 408 F.Supp.2d 935. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI) officials could reasonably believe that issuance, without notice and opportunity to object, of order summarily suspending farm and forest labor contractor's license did not violate procedural due process under the circumstances, and officials were thus entitled to qualified immunity from damages claims in § 1983 action; payroll records corroborated third party allegations that contractor had used untrained firefighters, presenting serious danger to general public and workers themselves, and while better course might have been to apply emergency order only to licensee's authority as forest contractor, law was not clearly established that failing to carve license into two categories would be unconstitutional. Lumbreras v. Roberts, D.Or.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 156 Fed.Appx. 952, 2005 WL 3304174. Civil Rights 1376(3)

State liquor authority (SLA) official who denied restaurant owner's application to make alterations to restaurant, based on long-standing SLA order requiring disapproval of applications where revocation proceedings were pending, could reasonably have believed that his conduct did not violate owner's constitutional rights, even if he knew about prior plea agreement between SLA and owner under which assault charge against owner would be withdrawn in return for his guilty plea to noise charge, where the charges were pending at time of denial, had been brought by liquor licensing board, were scheduled to be heard by an administrative law judge, and were outside official's area of responsibility; thus, official's action, even if ministerial, did not subject him to liability in owner's § 1983 civil rights action. D'Agostino v. New York State Liquor Authority, W.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 757, affirmed 104 F.3d 351. Civil Rights 1376(3) appraisal of objective legal reasonableness of official's conduct, as measured by reference to clearly established law. Manion v. Michigan Bd. of Medicine, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 765 F.2d 590. Civil Rights 1376(3)

4022. Mental hospital or institution officials, objective reasonableness requirement--Generally

Treating physician's interpretation of court order to permit involuntary administration of antipsychotic drugs to accused, who was found incompetent to stand trial but was ordered to be held in institution pending determination as to whether he could be restored to competency within reasonable period of time, was reasonable, and physician was thus entitled to qualified immunity in accused's resulting § 1983 action challenging forced medication. Kulas v. Valdez, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1998, 159 F.3d 453, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1187, 528 U.S. 1167, 145 L.Ed.2d 1093. Civil Rights 1376(1)

State mental health administrators acted in objectively reasonable manner based on what reasonably competent public official would know of law in deciding to eliminate special unit in mental hospital that was reserved for criminally insane and, thus, administrators had qualified immunity from § 1983 liability under creation of danger theory seeking recovery for death of activity therapist killed by patient transferred from special unit. Uhlrig v. Harder, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1995, 64 F.3d 567, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 924, 516 U.S. 1118, 133 L.Ed.2d 853. Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Doctors and nurse were entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiff's due process and Fourth Amendment claims arising out of his involuntary commitment; it was objectively reasonable for doctors and nurse to believe that plaintiff was dangerous, in light of his hostile demeanor and extensive psychiatric history which included history of violent behavior, multiple instances of hospitalization for psychiatric care, and family history of mental illness. Glass v. Mayas, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 984 F.2d 55. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Program director of state psychiatric center, who allegedly ordered search of patient without a reasonable suspicion that he possessed weapons or contraband, was not entitled to qualified immunity from patient's § 1983 action; such conduct violated patient's clearly defined Fourth Amendment rights which a reasonable competent state official should have been aware. Aiken v. Nixon, N.D.N.Y.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 211, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 146, 2003 WL 22595837. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Three supervisory officials of state psychiatric center were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims by patient who was strip searched, alleging that they failed to train center staff to follow lawful rules and procedures for searching patients other than center's own search policy; a reasonable official would not know that failure to train staff in policies and practices other than center's official policy violated clearly established law. Aiken v. Nixon, N.D.N.Y.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 211, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 146, 2003 WL 22595837. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Even if actions of county official and subordinate social workers in causing the arrest of plaintiff, a released insanity acquitee, and recommitment to mental institution were not supported by probable cause, they were objectively reasonable under the circumstances, and therefore defendants were entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim for false arrest; in light of plaintiff's past history of mental illness and violence, his noncompliance with his order of conditions, and the clinical evidence pointing to his decompensation, it was objectively reasonable for official and social workers to believe that plaintiff was dangerous. Vallen v. Connelly, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 555698, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(4)

4022A. ---- Restraints, mental hospital or institution officials, objective reasonableness requirement

member in the face very hard, employees reacted to call for help from other staff members, after employees put patient to floor, they did not strike or attempt to hurt patient, and as soon as employees realized that patient was short of breath, they and others took action to revive and assist patient. Unzueta v. Steele, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1230. Civil Rights 1037

4023. ---- Medical care, mental hospital or institution officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Officials of state medical residency program were entitled to qualified immunity in resident's § 1983 action alleging that urinalysis drug testing required of resident after she slapped patient violated resident's Fourth Amendment rights; reasonable, similarly situated officials would not necessarily have believed that their conduct was unreasonable under the circumstances, and in violation of Fourth Amendment, upon balancing resident's privacy interests against interests of program. Pierce v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 117 F.3d 866. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Psychiatrist at state adolescent home who conducted initial evaluation of patient and later prescribed Vistaril (hydroxyzine pamoate) over telephone did not commit total departure from professional judgment, practice, or standards as would violate patient's due process rights, and was entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought after patient attempted to hang himself three days after prescription; no other doctor or psychologist had suggested that patient be evaluated for antipsychotic medication at time of initial evaluation, and psychiatrist did not have entire record to review when making prescription and could rely on home staff to monitor patient. Dolihite v. Maughon By and Through Videon, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 74 F.3d 1027, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 185, 519 U.S. 870, 136 L.Ed.2d 123. Civil Rights 1376(3); Constitutional Law 255(5); Mental Health 51.15

Reasonable actor in position of private psychiatric facility that participated in involuntary detention and treatment of arrestee pursuant to Indiana law could not have known what due process clause required with respect to forced administration of antipsychotic drugs to arrestee and, therefore, facility was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's subsequent civil rights action. Sherman v. Four County Counseling Center, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 987 F.2d 397. Civil Rights 1373

For purposes of objective reasonableness test for qualified immunity in patient's § 1983 action arising out of his suicide attempt while involuntarily committed to state mental health facility, mental health professionals, facility administrator, contractor which provided consultants, and state mental health officials demonstrated that they were acting within their discretionary authority; claims was based on alleged conditions at mental health facility and treatment decisions with respect to patient. Dolihite v. Videon, M.D.Ala.1994, 847 F.Supp. 918, affirmed in part, reversed in part 74 F.3d 1027, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 185, 519 U.S. 870, 136 L.Ed.2d 123. Civil Rights 1376(3)

4024. Parole officers, objective reasonableness requirement

No reasonable parole officer could believe that entering and remaining in bathroom stall while opposite sex parolee collected urine sample was lawful, for purposes of qualified immunity defense in § 1983 civil rights suit. Sepulveda v. Ramirez, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 967 F.2d 1413, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 342, 510 U.S. 931, 126 L.Ed.2d 307, on remand. Civil Rights 1376(7)

A parole officer's reliance on a facially valid, although incorrect, parole release form was objectively reasonable in light of the law at the time and thus the officer was entitled to qualified immunity from a federal civil rights claim arising from the erroneous extension of a parole supervision term. Moiser v. Blum, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 875 F.2d 202. Civil Rights 1376(7)

light of existing law, and thus, had qualified immunity, in their individual capacities, from § 1983 suit by former parole revokee for alleged violation of his Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights when they calculated his sentence, even though a state court subsequently found the application of the new regulation to parole revokee to be a violation of the ex post facto clause, where, at the time of the application of the new regulation to parole revokee, no state court had decided whether it could be applied to individuals who committed their underlying crime prior to its adoption and closely analogous state court case found no ex post facto violation. Young v. McKune, D.Kan.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 1250, affirmed 85 Fed.Appx. 723, 2004 WL 95875. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State corrections officials and parole commissioners were qualifiedly immune from monetary damages in connection with ex post facto violation resulting from Division of Correction Directive (DCD) removing inmates serving life sentences to higher security classification, combined with Parole Commission's refusal to recommend parole unless inmates were on active work release, which required lower security classification, as a reasonable official would not have seen combination of actions as violation of inmates' clearly established ex post facto rights; only combination of different defendants' conduct violated ex post facto clause, and violation was found to exist only after fairly complex analysis of that less than commonly invoked constitutional provision. Knox v. Lanham, D.Md.1995, 895 F.Supp. 750, affirmed 76 F.3d 377. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Issue of whether it would be clear to reasonable parole officer that retroactive application of statute to avert inmate's unconditional release would violate inmate's due process rights involved fact question that could not be resolved on motion to dismiss on qualified immunity grounds inmate's § 1983 suit seeking damages for improper denial of unconditional release. Bollinger v. Oregon State Bd. of Parole & Post-Prison Supervision, C.A.9 (Or.) 2003, 86 Fed.Appx. 259, 2003 WL 23019018, Unreported, on remand 2005 WL 563742. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

4025. Police officers, objective reasonableness requirement--Generally

Under doctrine of qualified immunity, police officers are shielded from suit for damages if reasonable officer could have believed action taken was lawful in light of clearly established law and information officers possessed. Estate of Starks v. Enyart, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 5 F.3d 230. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In determining whether police officer is shielded from liability for civil damages because officer's conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known, question is not whether law was settled when viewed abstractly but whether, measured by objective standard, reasonable officer would know that his or her conduct is illegal; certainty of the law must be measured against objectively reasonable view of the facts facing officer. White v. Walker, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1991, 950 F.2d 972. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if a police officer's conduct actually violates a citizen's constitutional rights, officer is entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action if conduct was objectively reasonable. Pfannstiel v. City of Marion, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 918 F.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer is entitled to qualified immunity when his or her conduct is objectively reasonable based on information available at time of and in light of clearly established law. Torres Ramirez v. Bermudez Garcia, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 898 F.2d 224. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action under §§ 1983, alleging Fourth Amendment violation based on officer's actions in accidentally shooting motor vehicle passenger in the head while trying to extract passenger from vehicle, where no constitutional violation occurred, given that officer's actions were not objectively unreasonable. Tallman v. Elizabeth Police Dept., W.D.Ky.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 992, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 459, 2006 WL 166610. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Qualified immunity inquiry is filtered through lens of officer's perceptions at time of incident, and using officer's perceptions limits judicial second-guessing of reasonableness of officer's actions with benefit of 20/20 hindsight which, almost inevitably, is better than limited opportunity afforded by fast-moving events which confront officer; use of this perspective limits need for decision makers to sort through conflicting versions of actual facts and allows them to focus instead on what officer reasonably perceived. Smith v. Tolley, E.D.Va.1997, 960 F.Supp. 977 . Civil Rights 1376(2)

For purposes of claim of qualified immunity asserted by police officer in connection with alleged violation of due process, court must look to facts with which officer acted and question whether unlawfulness of officer's act was apparent; unless unlawfulness of officer's act was so apparent that no reasonable officer in his or her position could have believed in lawfulness of act at time, qualified immunity doctrine protects officer from suit. Swenson v. Culberson County, W.D.Tex.1996, 925 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1376(6)

No objectively reasonable police officer informed by manual from the state's attorney that telephone call between a lawyer and a client cannot be monitored regardless of whether police actually listen to the recording of the call would believe that recording of conversations between arrestees and their attorneys was lawful, and officials thus could not assert qualified immunity to claim based on recording. In re State Police Litigation, D.Conn.1995, 888 F.Supp. 1235, appeal dismissed 88 F.3d 111. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officer in deputy sheriff's position on April 23, 1992 would or should have known that forcing motorist to drive while intoxicated constituted unjustifiable intrusion on motorist's interest in personal security and, thus, deputy was not entitled to official immunity in motorist's § 1983 action alleging violation of his Fourteenth Amendment liberty interests. Russell v. Steck, N.D.Ohio 1994, 851 F.Supp. 859. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Evaluation of reasonableness of law enforcement officers' actions for purposes of qualified immunity defense in § 1983 action must be based on facts known to them at time of actions. Smith v. Walsh, W.D.Okla.1993, 833 F.Supp. 844, affirmed 48 F.3d 1233. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer is entitled to qualified immunity from citizen's civil rights action if officer can establish as matter of law that reasonable officer, confronted with same circumstances, could have believed that actions, even if mistaken, were reasonable. Fittanto v. Klein, N.D.Ill.1992, 788 F.Supp. 1451. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4026. ---- First Amendment generally, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Sheriff's decision to order license checkpoints on either side of road leading to farm where "rock" concert was to be held was in nature of impermissible "prior restraint," which reasonable sheriff could not have believed was proper under the First Amendment, and which would prevent sheriff from successfully asserting qualified immunity defense to resulting civil rights claims, to the extent that checkpoints were set up to prevent concert from taking place, whether because sheriff did not want to receive complaints about another concert, because farm owner had not supported sheriff in election, or because sheriff wanted to elicit bribe. Collins v. Ainsworth, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 382 F.3d 529, on subsequent appeal 2005 WL 3502174, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1661, 164 L.Ed.2d 397. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's disputed allegations, in action against police officer for civil rights violation, false arrest, use of excessive force, and violation of First Amendment rights, were sufficiently supported by record to overcome officer's qualified immunity defense that a reasonable officer could believe arrest was lawful; testimony of arrestee and his companion lent sufficient support that arrestee was not guilty of any disorderly conduct and that he was merely "walking around the country with his cross and preaching the Gospel of Jesus." Gainor v. Rogers, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1379, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1423

qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action growing out of citizen's claim that his First Amendment rights were violated when he was ruled out of order while addressing public meeting and then evicted. Collinson v. Gott, C.A.4 (Md.) 1990, 895 F.2d 994. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee's complaint that he was punished by arresting officer for refusing to give his name and address to the officer after the officer ordered him and his companion off of a frozen, fenced-in pond failed to allege facts to show the officer could have reasonably believed he was clearly acting unlawfully, and thus failed to show that arrestee's First Amendment right was violated because of his silence, and the officer was therefore entitled to qualified immunity against arrestee's § 1983 claim for a First Amendment violation. Kopec v. Tate, E.D.Pa.2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 619, reversed and remanded 361 F.3d 772, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 453, 543 U.S. 956, 160 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4027. ---- Freedom of press, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for violating news photographer's First Amendment rights at accident scene; officer was or should have been aware that his authority was limited to preventing photographer from interfering with police activity. Connell v. Town of Hudson, D.N.H.1990, 733 F.Supp. 465. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4028. ---- Freedom of religion, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Constitutional right in passing out religious leaflets does not constitute grounds of reasonable suspicion of solicitation for purposes of police officer's qualified immunity from suit in action alleging illegal arrest under Fourth Amendment. Gainor v. Rogers, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1379, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4029. ---- Freedom of speech, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

State university campus police officer was qualifiedly immune from evangelist's claim that officer violated his speech rights by arresting him for disorderly conduct during confrontation with students, in that evangelist's remarks to lesbian were abusive, evangelist had been convicted before for similar conduct, scene to which officer was summoned was "near riot situation," and officer had limited information. Gilles v. Davis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 427 F.3d 197. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officer could not have believed that, under federal and California law, violent protests that occurred in wake of verdict in highly publicized criminal trial in another city justified ban on all public demonstrations the following evening, and thus city police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity for his actions of ordering arrests of persons who had assembled to protest verdict; violence and disorder that had occurred the previous day had been limited, most of the city had been free from any form of unlawful conduct, and there had been other large demonstrations that had been completely peaceful. Collins v. Jordan, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 110 F.3d 1363. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Antiabortion protestors did not have clearly established right to picket in route encompassing residence of administrator of medical facility which provided abortion services and two to three homes on either side of it, and thus arrest of protestors by officers was objectively reasonable in light of legal rules in existence at time action occurred and officers were entitled to qualified immunity from protestors' § 1983 action. Veneklase v. City of Fargo, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1996, 78 F.3d 1264, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 178, 519 U.S. 867, 136 L.Ed.2d 118. speech rights by forcing them to march on sidewalk after granting them permit to march in street, inasmuch as no reasonable officer could have believed that it was lawful to discriminate against marchers based on content of their speech or to deprive organization of its chosen public forum for reasons not related to vehicular or pedestrian traffic safety. Seattle Affiliate of October 22nd Coalition to Stop Police Brutality, Repression and Criminalization of a Generation v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 1185. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police chief and director of public safety were not entitled to qualified immunity on former police officer's §§ 1983 claim that chief and director increased the discipline officer received for a violation of department policy, and thereby effectively forced his retirement, in retaliation for his participation in an internal investigation of alleged criminal wrongdoing within police department, since a recent Court of Appeals opinion had made it clear to a reasonable official in chief's or director's position that increasing officer's punishment in retaliation for his participation in investigation would violate officer's First Amendment rights. Reilly v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.2006, 427 F.Supp.2d 507. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officers were entitled to protection of qualified immunity as to First Amendment free speech claim of person who was arrested for painting words on side of his automobile, which stated that he was "a fucking suicide bomber communist terrorist!" with "W.O.M.D. on Board," since reasonable officer could have concluded that language used was not protected by First Amendment; state of case law did not provide clear answer as to whether language on automobile was true threat or political commentary. Fogel v. Grass Valley Police Dept., E.D.Cal.2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 1084. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police chief and town council members would not have known that terminating police officer because of his complaints to chief, his association with neighborhood watch group, or his political discussion would be violation of his First Amendment free speech rights, and thus chief and council members were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in officer's §§ 1983 action alleging retaliatory discharge under First Amendment. Conley v. Town of Elkton, W.D.Va.2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 514. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Reasonable police officer would have known that confiscating abortion protesters' signs depicting aborted fetuses at Halloween parade was not most narrowly tailored manner of handling hostilities that occurred between protesters and crowd, and thus officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in protesters' §§ 1983 action alleging violations of their First Amendment rights of free speech, freedom of assembly, and free exercise of religion, even though protesters did not have permit to parade, where, apart from a few hecklers, there were no altercations between crowd and protesters as they walked parade route prior to being ushered to sidewalk by officers, and officers permitted protesters to parade after confiscating signs. Grove v. City of York, Penn., M.D.Pa.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief was entitled to qualified immunity from damages, in police officer's civil rights lawsuit under free speech clause of First Amendment, although chief violated officer's free speech rights; reasonable police chief could have objectively believed, based upon case law, that his conduct was constitutional because cases did not speak directly to precise situation at issue. Bates v. Mackay, D.Mass.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 173. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Town resident's assertion of general propositions of First Amendment jurisprudence with respect to use of public forum were insufficient to overcome town marshall's qualified immunity defense in resident's civil rights action claiming that his First Amendment rights were violated after he allegedly engaged in nonverbal expression by removing ribbon from wall in town hall. Kirby v. Largo, D.Colo.1992, 790 F.Supp. 239. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising when they allegedly arrested arrestee for engaging in constitutionally protected speech. Elbrader v. Blevins, D.Kan.1991, 757 F.Supp. 1174. Civil Rights 1376(6)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action, where reasonable police officer in 1986 would have known that he would be violating gas station proprietor's free speech rights by appearing in uniform at proprietor's place of business, requesting and having private discussion behind closed door in proprietor's office, objecting to comments that proprietor had been making to media about local police, and telling proprietor to "quit talking to the media" and to "keep his mouth shut." Bennett v. Village of Oak Park, N.D.Ill.1990, 748 F.Supp. 1329. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4030. ---- State and local laws contrary to claimed right, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from traveling ministers' § 1983 claims, alleging that first minister's arrest for disorderly conduct, while preaching on public sidewalk, violated both ministers' First Amendment rights; though ministers were engaging in protected speech in traditional public forum at time of arrest, officers had arguable probable cause to arrest minister, his arrest was content-neutral, and Alabama disorderly conduct statute was presumptively valid. Redd v. City of Enterprise, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1998, 140 F.3d 1378 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer that arrested demonstrator pursuant to city ordinance was entitled to qualified immunity in demonstrator's § 1983 action alleging that ordinance was unconstitutional restriction on free speech; ordinance was duly enacted by city council and was not so obviously unconstitutional as to require reasonable officer to refuse to enforce it. Grossman v. City of Portland, C.A.9 (Or.) 1994, 33 F.3d 1200. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Neither police officers nor sheriff had reason to believe, for purposes of qualified immunity from § 1983 action, that officers' conduct of monitoring wife's court-approved removal of various household items from marital home where husband lived, in connection with divorce proceeding, could have violated the husband's rights, although wife tape recorded the process of removing items and allegedly recorded unrelated information that was relevant to divorce proceedings; presence of officers during spouse's collection of personal property was authorized by statute. Todd v. City of Natchitoches, Louisiana, W.D.La.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 793, appeal dismissed 72 Fed.Appx. 969, 2003 WL 21997581. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police department officials were entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 civil rights claim by police federation fundraiser alleging that prosecution under Colorado Fraud in Effecting Sales Act and Charitable Solicitation Act violated fundraiser's freedom of speech; numerous citizen reports of misrepresentation by fundraiser established reasonable belief that probable cause existed for prosecution. Gehl Group v. Koby, D.Colo.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1409, affirmed 63 F.3d 1528. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4031. ---- Enforcement of court orders, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity on wife's due process claim based on their failure to enforce domestic abuse restraining order; a reasonable officer would not have known that a restraining order, coupled with Colorado statute mandating its enforcement, would create a constitutionally protected property interest. Gonzales v. City of Castle Rock, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 366 F.3d 1093, certiorari granted 125 S.Ct. 417, 543 U.S. 955, 160 L.Ed.2d 316, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 945, 543 U.S. 1047, 160 L.Ed.2d 767, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 1413, 543 U.S. 1185, 161 L.Ed.2d 187, reversed 125 S.Ct. 2796, 162 L.Ed.2d 658, on remand 144 Fed.Appx. 746, 2005 WL 2438875. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State troopers could not have objectively viewed family court's order, temporarily restraining custodial mother from residing with minor child's grandfather, as blanket authorization for troopers to enter grandfather's home to deliver custody of minor child to father, so as to provide qualified immunity to troopers. was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for violation of debtor's Fourth Amendment rights, even though it was ultimately determined that creditor did not have right to possession of premises after completing inventory, where deputy initially permitted creditor to take possession of premises and to change locks pursuant to lawful replevin order. Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat. Bank, S.D.Iowa 2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1159. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officer could not conclude he had probable cause, under Hawai'i law, to arrest for disorderly conduct involving excessive noise proprietor of judgment debtor, who was protesting manner in which judgment was being executed on his property, precluding claim of qualified immunity from civil liability for arrest under § 1983; undisputed evidence indicated that while proprietor was initially shouting, he heeded officer's admonition that he quiet down. Pourny v. Maui Police Dept., County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 2000, 127 F.Supp.2d 1129. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers reasonably believed that they could arrest abortion protestor for violating temporary restraining order (TRO) against yelling, shouting, or screaming that substantially interferes with services at abortion clinic, and, thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity, even if enforcement of TRO was later found to be violation of right to free speech and peaceable assembly in public forum; officers could have assumed that TRO was facially valid and superseded any inconsistent training regarding First Amendment, applicability of otherwise clearly established law to circumstances was not evident, officers had right to resolve uncertainty in favor of arrest, and officers could reasonably find that protestor's speech, delivered while many fellow demonstrators were being arrested, substantially interfered with clinic operations. Habiger v. City of Fargo, D.N.D.1995, 905 F.Supp. 709, affirmed 80 F.3d 289, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 518, 519 U.S. 1011, 136 L.Ed.2d 407. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not objectively reasonable for police officers to refuse to go into basement of marital home to investigate as to whether husband was there upon wife's report of husband's violation of protective order, and thus, officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action. Eagleston v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1992, 790 F.Supp. 416, affirmed 41 F.3d 865, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 18. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriffs were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability with regard to their warrantless arrest of election poll watcher, even though deputies alleged they were dispatched to polling place pursuant to oral order given by judge, and allegedly received two orders from sheriff's department to remove poll watcher; judge allegedly ordered deputies to polls to "ascertain whether there was disturbance," not strictly to remove watcher, only individuals deputies spoke to were a deputy who had not intervened and election judge who had definite interest and possible bias in seeing watcher removed, thus any later order received from judge would have been based on the deputies' inadequate assessment of situation at polls. Shoop v. Dauphin County, M.D.Pa.1991, 766 F.Supp. 1327, affirmed 945 F.2d 396, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1178, 502 U.S. 1097, 117 L.Ed.2d 422. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of deputy sheriffs who executed temporary order of protection against ex-husband were objectively reasonable, and thus deputies were entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability. Rosen v. County of Suffolk (New York), C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 885, 2005 WL 147743, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4032. ---- Sex discrimination, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officials' decision to detain overnight disorderly conduct arrestees, who had disobeyed police orders to remain on sidewalk during large march/demonstration, rather than issuing desk appearance warrants (DATs) authorized under state law, was not objectively unreasonable under Fourth Amendment, precluding recovery in arrestees' §§1983 action against city and police; DATs were discretionary rather than required, length of detentions was well within range of flexibility allowed to states, and arrestees were all members of difficult-to-control crowd that demanded substantial police manpower, while additional paperwork required for DATs would have drawn officers off streets. Bryant v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 404 F.3d 128. Arrest 70(1)

Police officer loses qualified immunity to claim that facially neutral policy has been executed in discriminatory manner only if reasonable police officer would know that policy has discriminatory impact on women and that bias against women was motivating factor behind adoption of policy, and no important public interest is served by adoption of policy. Hynson By and Through Hynson v. City of Chester Legal Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1988, 864 F.2d 1026, on remand 731 F.Supp. 1236. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4033. ---- Confiscation of property, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

To be entitled to qualified immunity on a claim of unreasonable seizure, defendant police officers needed only to have possessed arguable probable cause to seize plaintiff, a fellow officer, not actual probable cause, and "arguable probable cause" exists when a reasonable police officer in the same circumstances and possessing the same knowledge as the officer in question could have reasonably believed that probable cause existed in the light of well established law. Cerrone v. Brown, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 246 F.3d 194, on remand 2001 WL 1217186. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State police officer's transfer of money discovered during search of arrestee to federal drug agency was reasonable, for purpose of officer's qualified immunity claim in resulting § 1983 action, even if drug dog did not "alert" to money, where second officer informed first officer that dog had alerted to money. Conrod v. Davis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 120 F.3d 92, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1531, 523 U.S. 1081, 140 L.Ed.2d 681. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's brief questioning of employee of debtor following self-help repossession by creditor under Michigan self-help statute was not objectively unreasonable and did not violate Fourth Amendment rights of employee so as to give rise to § 1983 liability, where officer acted under color of state authority, had legitimate reason for questioning employee, i.e., to gather information for his official report on repossession, and detention consumed, at most, only five minutes and was not otherwise unduly intrusive. Haverstick Enterprises, Inc. v. Financial Federal Credit, Inc., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 32 F.3d 989. Arrest 63.5(5)

Patrol officer had arguably reasonable suspicion to search car after being informed of occupants' offer of approximately $2,500 in cash not to report accident to police and after finding $2,600 in cash on one passenger, and, thus, patrol officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability for seizing money found in car; no one claimed the cash, and it was accompanied by handwritten receipts strikingly similar to receipt accompanying cash found in passenger's pocket. Lindsey v. Storey, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1991, 936 F.2d 554. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Search warrant, which clearly described with particularity place to be searched and objects to be seized, was not required to also articulate foundation for finding of probable cause; therefore, police officer's reliance upon warrant could not have been unreasonable and did not preclude him from asserting qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by owners of property seized. Mills v. Graves, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 930 F.2d 729, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6); Searches And Seizures 123.1

Reasonable law enforcement officer in position of deputy sheriff could have believed that seizure of truck was lawful, and thus deputy sheriff had immunity in civil rights action brought by truck owner, even though deputy did not have probable cause to seize truck; when deciding to seize truck, officers knew that federal inspection sticker was missing, that rivets securing plate bearing vehicle identification number appeared to have been tampered with, no vehicle with truck's license plates or vehicle identification number had been reported stolen, and vehicle identification number seemed not to be stamped in customary location on engine. Bigford v. Taylor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 896 F.2d 972, rehearing denied 901 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1376(6)

A reasonable police chief who knew that there was a parking permit affixed to window of vehicle indicating that vehicle was legally parked could not have reasonably believed that he was authorized to allow his officers to tow vehicle as abandoned within meaning of New York Vehicle and Traffic Law, and thus, chief was not entitled to qualified immunity on vehicle owner's §§ 1983 claim alleging that chief deprived vehicle owner of her property without due process of law by directing officers to tow vehicle if it was not moved from its parking place, despite presence of parking permit affixed to window of vehicle indicating that it was legally parked. Calderon v. Burton, S.D.N.Y.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 480. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who impounded motorcycle did not violate motorcycle purchaser's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights, as officer could reasonably have believed that impounding motorcycle was lawful under circumstances, entitling officer to qualified immunity from purchaser's § 1983 action; although motorcycle seller told him that motorcycle was subject of private dispute, officer knew that seller made report that vehicle was stolen, and purchaser refused to give officer any proof that he made payments toward the motorcycle or had ownership title to the motorcycle, and purchaser refused to give officer any information about location of the motorcycle. Pickens v. Miller, N.D.Cal.2002, 216 F.Supp.2d 1011. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police lieutenant was shielded by qualified immunity from civil rights liability for his alleged participation in investigation and in raid, seizure, and destruction of fireworks; it was objectively reasonable for the lieutenant to believe that his actions, taken in reliance on information and instructions he received from inspector in command of operation, and from assistant district attorney and officer, did not violate fireworks owner's constitutional rights. East Coast Novelty Co., Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 809 F.Supp. 285. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' suspicion that automobile owner's son was using automobile to facilitate sale of cocaine was objectively reasonable and, therefore, police officers were qualifiedly immune from liability in civil rights action arising out of seizure of automobile under forfeiture provision of Kansas Controlled Substances Act. Ulmer v. City of Overland Park, Kan., D.Kan.1992, 784 F.Supp. 807. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Treasury Department agents and police officers who were involved in dispute with travelers over inspection for possible tax violations of large, unmarked boxes travelers were attempting to bring into Puerto Rico were entitled to qualified immunity in travelers' subsequent action under § 1983 alleging violation of Fourth Amendment; conduct of agents and officers and seizure of boxes were reasonable. Salas Garcia v. Cesar Perez, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 777 F.Supp. 137. Civil Rights 1376(6)

As required to determine whether police chief was entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action by landowners alleging the police chief caused their personal property to be seized, in violation of the Fourth Amendment, from lot adjacent to lot foreclosed upon, view of facts favorable to the landowners showed that the police chief could not have believed that his actions in directing continued removal of property from the adjacent lot were reasonable, and thus, he was not entitled to qualified immunity, where the two lots were uniformly sized, sat on a grid where every other lot was also of equal size, and were divided by a fence and survey stakes. Hansen v. Cannon, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 122 Fed.Appx. 265, 2004 WL 2829016, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4034. ---- Detention, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Detention of suspects whose vehicle had been stopped in patrol car for period of almost one hour until eyewitness could be brought to scene to identify suspects was reasonable, and officers were entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by suspects, where suspects drove vehicle of same color and body type described by witnesses as having been used by perpetrators and wore some clothing matching description of perpetrators, vehicle was rented and was not leased in either suspect's name, woman's purse was found in vehicle, and suspect told police he was on probation. Alexander v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 64 F.3d 1315. Arrest 63.5(8); Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officer had objectively reasonable belief in existence of probable cause to arrest detainee for misdemeanor larceny under North Carolina law and, thus, officer was protected by qualified immunity from liability to detainee respecting § 1983 unreasonable detention claim, where officer saw woman drop money, detainee pick it up, and detainee keep money, it appeared to officer that detainee knew identity of owner of money when he took it, officer observed detainee leave bus station where incident took place, which could be construed as flight, and officer confirmed with woman that money had not been returned before officer gave chase. Rowland v. Perry, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 41 F.3d 167. Civil Rights 1376(6)

At time police allegedly injured arrestee by handcuffing her behind-her-back in mid-2000, it was clearly established, for purposes of qualified immunity, that when a non-threatening, non-flight-risk, cooperating arrestee for a minor crime tells the police she suffers from an injury that would be exacerbated by handcuffing her arms behind her back, the arrestee has a right to be handcuffed with her arms in front of her even if the injury is not visible. Aceto v. Kachajian, D.Mass.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 121. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Assuming that city's operations manager for public works and city's senior utility worker violated a clearly established Fourth Amendment right of vehicle passenger by preventing vehicle from leaving city park until driver and passengers picked up trash from picnic area, reasonable officer could have believed that the alleged seizure did not violate passenger's Fourth Amendment rights, and thus, operations manager and utility worker were entitled to qualified immunity from passenger's §§ 1983 claim. Freece v. Clackamas County, D.Or.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1080 . Civil Rights 1376(4)

Corrections officials to whom an arrestee protested that he had been misidentified were not entitled to qualified immunity on the arrestee's claim of a due process violation in his 37-day detention; arrestee claimed that his constantly reasserted claims of misidentification were never investigated, even though his date of birth, physical appearance and Social Security number differed from that of the wanted suspect, and even though the officials had ready access to both parties' fingerprints, such that it would have been easy to confirm that he was not the man named in a warrant. Atkins v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 921. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable officer reasonably could have believed that deputy sheriff's trainees being detained in connection with non-criminal investigation by sheriff's department into allegations of trainee misconduct had remained at school to avoid adverse employment action, rather than because they felt they were not free to leave, and so could have reasonably believed that no seizure under Fourth Amendment had taken place, or that seizure, if it had occurred, was not unreasonable in violation of Fourth Amendment, and therefore department employees were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on trainees' §§ 1983 claims alleging unlawful seizures. Myers v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police detective and captain who took fellow police officer into custody for psychiatric evaluation were protected from liability in § 1983 action under doctrine of qualified immunity, given lack of clearly established authority to put them on notice of what conduct would have violated rights in mental health seizures context; given report of officer's wife that he was threatening suicide and had pointed his service revolver both at himself and his wife during three previous days, and decline in his work performance, reasonable detective and captain would have concluded that involuntarily detaining officer was not only reasonable, but prudent. Ransom v. Baltimore County, D.Md.2000, 111 F.Supp.2d 704. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(10)

Even if officers' detention of naked occupant during drug search of house did violate her rights in some manner, individual officers would be entitled to qualified immunity, as it was objectively reasonable for officers to believe that reasonably prudent officer would have acted as they did, where occupant was not made to strip but, rather, was in shower when officers arrived and was simply made to remain where she was until other occupant had been removed and quick security sweep had been performed. Crosby v. Hare, W.D.N.Y.1996, 932 F.Supp. 490. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Belief by police officers who continued detention of minors who had been seized and taken into police station after their companion had been observed entering police car that probable cause existed for detention was reasonable, and officers were entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action based on detention even though probable cause did not exist for initial seizure, where mechanic at station who had observed entry into police car did not affirmatively tell officers that minors had done nothing wrong, and officers could reasonably have believed that minors were involved. Irvin v. Kaczmaryn, N.D.Ill.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1190. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively reasonable for police officer to believe he was not violating any clearly established law in keeping a patient in custody and sending him to a hospital for evaluation in 1995, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability; police officers under the defendant officer's command knew that the patient was in psychiatric care, and the filthy conditions in his apartment and his refusal to respond to questions or allow a complete physical examination were evidence that he might not have been able to care for himself. Kerman v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 328297, Unreported, reversed 374 F.3d 93. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4035. ---- Restraints, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from claim of unconstitutionally excessive force if they handcuffed non-threatening, cooperating arrestee with her arms behind her back after she informed them that she suffered from a shoulder injury that would be exacerbated by having her hands placed behind her body and requested handcuffing in front of her body. Aceto v. Kachajian, D.Mass.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 121. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purpose of qualified immunity analysis, arresting officer acted with objective reasonableness in executing a routine arrest for trespass, and thus, arrestee's complaint that the officer applied handcuffs with excessive tightness and maliciously refused to loosen the handcuffs within a reasonable time after arrestee complained about pain caused by the handcuffs failed to establish a Fourth Amendment violation. Kopec v. Tate, E.D.Pa.2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 619, reversed and remanded 361 F.3d 772, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 453, 543 U.S. 956, 160 L.Ed.2d 317. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers acted in objectively reasonable manner when they handcuffed suspect pursuant to his lawful arrest for public intoxication, and thus were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by individual; standard practice calls for officers to handcuff suspect after arrest to eliminate possibility of assault. Palacios v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1997, 970 F.Supp. 732, affirmed 152 F.3d 928. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officer could have believed that it was constitutional to place suspect, who matched some but not all particulars of description of murderer, in handcuffs in course of investigatory stop, and, thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from suspect's civil rights action. Lester v. Brown, N.D.Ill.1995, 889 F.Supp. 1039, reconsideration denied 1995 WL 447764. Arrest 63.5(7); Civil Rights 1376(6)

4036. ---- Evictions, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with their assistance in effectuating emergency eviction of tenants without warrant or other court order, allegedly in violation of Fourth Amendment; given extensive disrepair and dilapidation of wood-framed structure, officers had reasonable basis for believing city building inspector's determination that conditions posed immediate danger to its occupants and public. Flatford v. City of Monroe, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 17 F.3d 162. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4037. ---- Extraditions, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Pennsylvania state troopers were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil damages under § 1983 for failing to obtain valid waiver to fugitive's extradition rights prior to releasing him to New York, since reasonable person in troopers' position would have known that more was required to waive extradition rights, under Pennsylvania and federal law, than equivocal statements by fugitive made without any verification that waiver was either knowing or voluntary. Morrison v. Stepanski, M.D.Pa.1993, 839 F.Supp. 1130. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4038. ---- High speed chase, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

A reasonable officer in position of police officer who engaged in high-speed pursuit of suspect traveling in wrong lane on freeway in August 1996 either would or should have known that his actions potentially violated clearly established rights under due process clause, and thus, officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought after motorist who was traveling in proper direction on freeway suffered fatal injuries in head-on collision with suspect. Feist v. Simonson, C.A.8 (Minn.) 2000, 222 F.3d 455, rehearing dismissed. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In context of claim of qualified immunity, a reasonable police officer in defendant's position could not have believed his conduct in instituting pursuit of motorcycle and manner in which he conducted it was lawful; only apparent basis for instituting pursuit was that driver did not stop when officer yelled something, and officer must have known that extended, high-speed pursuit, with officer's patrol car following motorcycle very closely, placed driver and his passenger in great physical danger, and no reasonable officer could have believed such conduct was completely immune from liability. Lewis v. Sacramento County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 98 F.3d 434, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 2406, 520 U.S. 1250, 138 L.Ed.2d 173, reversed 118 S.Ct. 1708, 523 U.S. 833, 140 L.Ed.2d 1043. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity with regard to substantive due process claim asserted in § 1983 action based on fatal accident occurring when officer engaged in high-speed pursuit of suspect without activating warning siren and only using police cruiser's overhead emergency lights; even if, under law at time of pursuit (1991), third parties enjoyed substantive due process right to be free of injuries resulting from recklessly and callously indifferent behavior of police officer during high-speed pursuit, reasonable officer in defendant's position would not have known that her conduct constituted violation of such right. Corbin v. City of Springfield, D.Mass.1996, 942 F.Supp. 721. Civil Rights 1376(6)

A reasonable officer in deputy sheriff's circumstances at the time of fatal shooting of motorist could validly have inferred that motorist, who made high-speed flight through a residential neighborhood, posed a continuing danger to others, such that deputy sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action brought by motorist's wife. Martin v. Dishong, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2004, 102 Fed.Appx. 780, 2004 WL 1535175, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4039. ---- Informants, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Officer's decision to authorize release of prisoner's letter identifying confidential informant in murder investigation, after officer was unable to reach prosecuting attorney to determine whether release of letter was legally appropriate, was objectively reasonable, for purposes of qualified immunity, particularly where officer took other steps, including repeatedly warning informant and taking steps to enable him to leave state, to protect informant. Gatlin ex rel. Gatlin v. Green, D.Minn.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 1064, affirmed 362 F.3d 1089, appeal after remand from federal court 2006 WL 1320467. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4040. ---- Interrogations, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Under objective reasonableness standard for qualified immunity, officer could reasonably believe that he was not violating arrestee's rights by telling arrestee, who had earlier disposed of gun, that officer was only interested in getting gun off street so that no child would find it and that any help that arrestee gave police in recovering gun could not be used against him since officer had not read arrestee his Miranda rights. Veilleux v. Perschau, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police detectives were not entitled to qualified immunity as to statements made by them during a defendant's interrogation relative to inability of a lawyer to help him and threat of life sentence for refusal to cooperate, in that reasonable police officer should have known that it would be a violation of defendant's constitutional rights to denigrate the role of his lawyer and attempt, in lawyer's absence, to coerce defendant into cooperating, particularly in light of police department policies and procedures in effect at the time, precluding such conduct. Cinelli v. Cutillo, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1990, 896 F.2d 650. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff's office detective had probable cause to arrest murder suspect prior to his interrogation of suspect, and thus had qualified immunity in suspect's §§ 1983 action alleging that detective violated his Fourth Amendment rights by failing to videotape the interrogation so that he could fabricate suspect's confession, and by lying to Medical Examiner's Office about suspect's interrogation, causing state to prosecute suspect. Arline v. City of Jacksonville, M.D.Fla.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1300. Arrest 63.4(1); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police commissioner and police chief were entitled to qualified immunity as to § 1983 claims asserted against them in their individual capacities by mother of minor who was allegedly interrogated in his home by police officer who entered without mother's knowledge or permission, which claims were based on allegations that defendants condoned police misconduct towards minors, selectively ignored civilian complaints, and had policy of harassment towards juveniles and teenagers; defendants' conduct was "discretionary" in light of various policy alternatives presented to them, and no reasonable jury could conclude that it was objectively unreasonable for defendants to believe that they were acting in fashion that did not violate established federally protected right. Johns v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.1996, 942 F.Supp. 99. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In light of claim by government employee that city employees who conducted wrongful investigation of employee possessed evidence that exculpated employee from any wrongdoing at time of his seizure, seizure of his person and forced confession was objectively unreasonable so that public officials were not entitled to qualified immunity. Angara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1995, 897 F.Supp. 355. Civil Rights 1376(10)

4041. ---- Investigations, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Investigator was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging that arrest and prosecution were unsupported by probable cause, as investigator could reasonably have believed that probable cause existed; arrestee had lived with confessed narcotics dealer for many years, dealer was believed to have used apartment as base of operations for drug distribution activities, items consistent with conversion of cocaine into cocaine base and with drug distribution were found in common areas of apartment, and large amount of currency in arrestee's bedroom along with information disclosed in bank statements were consistent with involvement in cocaine distribution conspiracy. Taylor v. Waters, C.A.4 (Va.) 1996, 81 F.3d 429. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer and chief of university police were entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by victim of alleged sexual assault who alleged that extra-jurisdictional character of university police department's investigation of allegations violated her constitutional rights; officers had objectively reasonable basis for belief that they were within university's jurisdiction and that victim wanted investigation undertaken, and it was not clearly established in April 1991 that individual's right to privacy includes right to be free of investigation conducted in absence of jurisdiction. Cantu v. Rocha, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 77 F.3d 795. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Social worker and deputy sheriffs were entitled to qualified immunity from foster parent's § 1983 claim for their alleged unconstitutional entry of foster parent's home to search for children, as social worker and deputy sheriffs correctly understood that natural parents had right to retrieve children, and foster parent's grudging willingness to return children and her invitation to social worker to help search justified reasonable belief that their assistance was also required. Wildauer v. Frederick County, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 993 F.2d 369. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fact that seizure of children by Vermont state trooper and assistant state's attorney to investigate abuse reports may have violated state statutes did not deprive them of qualified immunity from any due process claim arising from seizure since taking of children was objectively reasonable under pertinent federal standards. Robison v. Via, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1987, 821 F.2d 913. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(9)

Police officer conducting official investigation of fellow officer's alleged withholding of narcotics was entitled to assert qualified immunity defense to civil rights action brought by subject of investigation; even if investigating officer alleged to have used fabricated evidence did violate subject's constitutional rights, he might still enjoy qualified immunity if he acted under objectively reasonable, albeit mistaken, belief that what he was doing was lawful. Tomer v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 811 F.2d 1240. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers did not act unreasonably in their investigation of student's complaint that teacher had touched him inappropriately, so as to lack probable cause to arrest teacher for alleged sexual assault of student, where principal and student's mother verified student's complaint, student's complaint was coherent and credible, and student said he had no reason to hurt teacher because teacher had given student's family gifts. Forest v. Pawtucket Police Dept., D.R.I.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 215, affirmed 377 F.3d 52, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1315, 543 U.S. 1149, 161 L.Ed.2d 111. Arrest 63.4(9)

Sheriff and sheriff's department employees were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by foster parents, individually and on behalf of their minor natural children who were injured by foster children, where there was no evidence that any of them participated in any conduct which they reasonably should have known would constitute a violation of constitutional rights; sole basis for the claim against one employee appeared to be the report he did concerning his investigation after the injuries complained of, and employee who responded to initial complaint was not asked to remove offending foster child from the home. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were protected by qualified immunity from liability in connection with investigation and arrest of restaurant's operator and manager, despite claim that officers demonstrated intentional or reckless disregard for truth of confidential informant's statements regarding purported drug buys through officers' awareness of "inconsistent" evidence and their failure to perform adequate investigation; officer's failure to corroborate informant's first two controlled buys and federal undercover agent's failure to purchase narcotics on separate occasion were not substantial evidence of intentional or reckless disregard for truth, nor was such disregard shown by alleged investigative inadequacies, magistrate's determination of probable cause would not have been altered even if all information alluded to had been included in application for arrest warrants, and evidence was insufficient to permit reasonable fact-finder to infer existence of willful conspiracy. Duca v. Martins, D.Mass.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1281. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police detectives' actions with respect to investigation which implicated trainee police officers in robbery were objectively reasonable, despite fact that grand jury eventually no-billed trainee officers, and thus, detectives were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to trainee officers' § 1983 claims; fact that grand jury eventually no-billed trainee officers did not, without more, establish that investigation was in violation of trainee officers' civil rights, complainant gave detectives license number of car in which alleged perpetrator left the scene and that license plate belonged to trainee officer's car, and trainee officers were with the alleged perpetrator on night of the crime. Scott v. City of Dallas, N.D.Tex.1995, 876 F.Supp. 852. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police officer who made warrantless entry into plaintiff's apartment was entitled to qualified immunity; landlord told officer that heat and water were inoperable in building due to leak in plaintiff's apartment, and there was objectively reasonable basis for officer to believe there existed exigency threatening health and safety of tenants.

Osipova v. Dinkins, S.D.N.Y.1994, 864 F.Supp. 360. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity, in pre-trial detainee's civil rights lawsuit under Fourth Amendment alleging false arrest, since officers had reasonable belief that they could start investigation and make arrest when they responded to gunfire and encountered plaintiff standing near body of man who had just been shot dead at point-blank range with handgun. Graham v. Pinal County, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2005, 138 Fed.Appx. 47, 2005 WL 1463483, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer conducted an objectively reasonable investigation before the arrest and had probable cause for arrest, and thus, was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action for violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights, even though the officer did not interview arrestee for his version of the incident, where the officer knew arrestee was a suspect in a terroristic threat case and conducted investigation which included discovery of police interview of victim who detailed arrestee's death threat, and the officer requested victim to personally identify arrestee as the person who had threatened him. Alhofen v. Monteilh, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 170, 2004 WL 2725998, Unreported. Arrest 63.4(9); Arrest 63.4(13); Civil Rights 1376(6)

4042. ---- Line ups, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Genuine issues of material fact, regarding whether it was objectively reasonable for police officer, who allegedly arranged for witness to observe arrestee in jail cell, to believe that he acted in manner that was lawful at time of showup, precluded summary judgment for officer on claim against him in his individual capacity for use of unconstitutionally impermissible showup. Wray v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 291. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity for lineup at precinct, in § 1983 lawsuit brought by citizen alleging that police violated his constitutional rights by subjecting him to unduly suggestive identifications, since ruling by state trial judge at Wade hearing, that lineup identifications were admissible, was not tainted by any false or mistaken testimony, and, thus, ruling was important consideration in determining whether reasonable official would have determined that lineup identifications were appropriate. Rojas v. Iannatto, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 169798, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4043. ---- Third parties injured by police actions, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officer did not act with any level of culpability beyond mere negligence in loaning gun to confidential informant for self-protection prior to shooting incident, and so officer's actions did not violate shooting victim's constitutional right to bodily integrity under the substantive component of the due process clause, for purposes of first prong of Siegert analysis for qualified immunity; although officer was informed that victim potentially posed threat to informant's safety, there was no indication that officer was aware that informant had any violent intentions toward victim, as informant had no criminal history and had a longstanding, positive working relationship with officer, officer had no reason to anticipate that informant and victim would have chance encounter, and so officer could not have predicted that informant would have opportunity to assault victim with gun. McClendon v. City of Columbia, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2002, 305 F.3d 314, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 1355, 537 U.S. 1232, 155 L.Ed.2d 196. Civil Rights 1376(6); Constitutional Law 274(2); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Police officers who allowed child victim to return to custody of murderer after child was found naked and injured in street were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with substantive due process claims asserted by victim's family as victim was not "in custody" or in "special relationship" with officers as result of encounter, and circumstances surrounding encounter were not such that officers should have known that victim faced certain danger if allowed to stay with murderer. Estate of Sinthasomphone by Sinthasomphone v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1320. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4044. ---- Training and supervision, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Supervisors of officer of state department of public safety who allegedly assaulted victim following routine traffic stop did not have qualified immunity from § 1983 suit claiming failure to adequately train and supervise officer; reasonable supervisors knew that supervisory failures could lead to liability in § 1983 actions. McGrath v. Scott, D.Ariz.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 1218. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Material issues of fact existed as to whether need for additional supervision was obvious at the time town police officer sent unsigned search warrant to Internet service provider (ISP) to obtain subscriber information for sender of anonymous e-mail, and whether city's policymakers ignored alleged constitutional violations arising from purported policy permitting that practice, precluding summary judgment for town on e-mail sender's §§ 1983 claim alleging failure to supervise. Freedman v. American Online, Inc., D.Conn.2005, 412 F.Supp.2d 174. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Reasonable police supervisor would have understood that failure to provide adequate training regarding on-duty/off-duty confrontations between officers where city had always armed/always on-duty policy could subject him to liability for unconstitutional seizure by his subordinate, for purposes of determining supervisors' entitlement to qualified immunity from liability in §§ 1983 action alleging that on-duty officer's shooting of off-duty officer in friendly fire incident violated Fourth Amendment, despite absence of other friendly fire cases, where there was evidence that police department was on notice of misidentification problems. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Police chief could not be held liable in his individual capacity in arrestee's § 1983 action alleging excessive force by police officer in connection with her arrest; there was no evidence that police chief participated in officer's actions or acquiesced in them, and police chief was not officer's direct supervisor. Eberle v. City of Newton, D.Kan.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1269, motion to amend denied 296 F.Supp.2d 1276. Civil Rights 1358

City was not liable under § 1983 on grounds of inadequate supervision, deliberate indifference, or failure to properly train its officers when underlying shooting of suspect by police officer did not involve use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment. Santana v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 720. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police chief was entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim that he violated due process by failing to promulgate and enforce appropriate guidelines, regulations, policies, or procedures regarding suicide risk assessment and suicide prevention by members of police department, as no legal authority was found that required chief to promulgate policies and provide training and there was no evidence that any police department ever did more than city to prevent police suicide either before or after officer's death. Hanrahan v. City of Norwich, D.Conn.1997, 959 F.Supp. 118, affirmed 133 F.3d 907. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4045. ---- Medical attention, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable police officer would not have known on intake that pre-trial detainee, who was found standing next to creek, soaking wet, and reporting that his vehicle was going to "blow up," and who was combative during arrest, had objectively serious medical need, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis of deliberate indifference civil rights claim of detainee's estate under Fourteenth Amendment, since detainee sat calmly in back of patrol car once arrested, followed directions, answered questions posed, and remained quiet and seated on bench once inside jail. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting police officer, who knew on intake that pretrial detainee likely was under influence of methamphetamine, did not subjectively know that detainee required medical attention, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis of deliberate indifference civil rights claim of detainee's estate under Fourteenth Amendment, since officer was unsure whether detainee was hallucinating. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Constitutional Law 262

Police officers failed to present legitimate governmental objective for denying medical attention to arrestee, as required for denial to have been objectively reasonable so as to entitle officers to qualified immunity from arrestee's civil rights action; arrestee was not subject to any punishment, so that denial of medical attention to punish arrestee for his lack of concern for other accident victims, as arrestee alleged officers told him, would not have been objectively reasonable. Nerren v. Livingston Police Dept., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 86 F.3d 469. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who did not commit any constitutional violation in electing to transport severely wounded shooting victim to hospital in police wagon rather than waiting for ambulance crew were entitled to qualified immunity from claim that they violated victim's substantive due process rights by allegedly lessening his chances for survival. Hansberry v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers did not act unreasonably in failing to seek medical aid for arrestee during booking process for driving while intoxicated (DWI) following motorcycle accident, as required to violate any duty they owed under Fourth Amendment to provide medical care to arrestee, notwithstanding arrestee's intermittent expressions of discomfort, where arrestee never asked for medical assistance and denied that he needed medical assistance when asked, and nothing indicated that officers should have suspected that arrestee was suffering from internal injuries, as opposed to lacerations and intoxication. Patrick v. Lewis, D.Minn.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1134. Arrest 70(1)

Even if seizure of motorist was not supported by probable cause, officer had objective reasonable grounds for believing motorist to be intoxicated, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity on motorist's § 1983 claims based on seizure, including unlawful seizure, false arrest, and assault and battery, given that motorist was involved in single-car accident in which he crashed through traffic sign and fire hydrant before coming to rest on curb or roadside, motorist was in need of medical attention when officer arrived at scene of accident, and state's implied consent statute appeared to permit officer to take motorist into custody. Cuvo v. De Bias, E.D.Pa.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 650, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 169 Fed.Appx. 688, 2006 WL 332546. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were qualifiedly immune from § 1983 excessive force claim challenging their use of force, including use of police canine, to subdue automobile passenger after stopping automobile and conducting pat-down search, inasmuch as reasonable officers could have believed force was necessary given passenger's vague, potentially threatening statements and sudden movements not authorized by police. Holeman v. City of New London, D.Conn.2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 99, reversed in part, appeal dismissed in part 425 F.3d 184. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Test for determining whether police officers had been deliberately indifferent to arrestee's needs for medical care, if arrestee had informed officers that she had just been raped, did not require criminal recklessness before officers could lose their qualified immunity. Carnell v. Grimm, D.Hawai'i 1994, 872 F.Supp. 746, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 74 F.3d 977. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4046. ---- Arrests generally, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

County sheriff did not have probable cause to arrest motorist who drove truck over bridge without a weight limit posting causing bridge to collapse for careless driving in violation of Arkansas law, for purpose of motorist's §§ 1983 unlawful arrest claim; reasonable law enforcement officer would not have believed that motorist collided with objects adjacent to the road, that motorist was inattentive in his driving, that he failed to maintain proper control over his truck, or that the careless driving statute was otherwise violated. Robinson v. White County, AR, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 452 F.3d 706. Automobiles 349(2.1)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that probable cause existed to arrest arrestee for resisting arrest and disorderly conduct, precluding summary judgment for police officer on basis of qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 claims against police officer alleging Fourth Amendment violations arising from his arrest and prosecution. McClellan v. Smith, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 439 F.3d 137. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Reasonable officer would have found probable cause to believe that arrestee had obstructed official business under Ohio law, by committing affirmative acts that interfered with police business, and so officer was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to false-arrest claim brought against her in arrestee's §§ 1983 action; arrestee not only prevented officer from questioning her daughter about an assault allegedly committed by daughter, by refusing to answer officer's questions about daughter and refusing to allow officer to take daughter to police station, but arrestee also exhibited uncooperative and hostile behavior, engaging in loud, profanity-laced yelling and finger-pointing at officer. Lyons v. City of Xenia, C.A.6 2005, 417 F.3d 565. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability, in arrestee's §§ 1983 wrongful arrest claim, since reasonable officer would not have concluded that there was probable cause to support arrest for burglary, or other criminal wrongdoing, under Ohio law; although arrestee was found to have entered the residence and owner of residence advised officers that arrestee had abandoned his apartment, officers were aware that arrestee and owner had a prior dispute, arrestee insisted to officers that he lived at residence and denied any wrongdoing, arrestee had personal property inside the residence, and arrestee's driver's license had address of residence on it. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4; Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 291 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had probable cause to arrest special education teacher for the alleged sexual assault of a student, and thus were qualifiedly immune from liability in §§1983 claim brought by teacher alleging he was arrested without probable cause in violation of Fourth Amendment; although the officers did not interview the other students or teaching assistant who were present in the classroom at the time of the alleged assault, the officers interviewed the school principal, as well as the student and mother on evening of the alleged assault, and a written statement was provided indicating that teacher rubbed student's penis in the classroom. Forest v. Pawtucket Police Dept., C.A.1 (R.I.) 2004, 377 F.3d 52, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1315, 543 U.S. 1149, 161 L.Ed.2d 111. Arrest 63.4(7.1); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for arresting abortion protestors who were demonstrating within two or three feet of street at busy intersection when protestors refused either to move back or to remove signs that were distracting drivers, despite being advised that the location and manner of their demonstrations were impeding the safe and free flow of traffic; officers had arguable probable cause to believe that protestors were violating loitering ordinance by impeding traffic. Frye v. Kansas City Missouri Police Dept., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 375 F.3d 785, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1639, 544 U.S. 920, 161 L.Ed.2d 477. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action alleging that officer arrested him for assault without probable cause; officer consulted county prosecutor before making arrest, and thus had reasonable basis for believing that he had probable cause to make arrest. Kijonka v. Seitzinger, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 363 F.3d 645 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' use of pepper spray in attempt to disarm suspect armed with axe was objectively reasonable, and thus did not violate Fourth Amendment; police encountered situation fraught with hazard for themselves and for suspect, who was distraught, seemingly suicidal, had briefly held two hostages, and was refusing to comply with continuous requests to put down his axe. Isom v. Town of Warren, Rhode Island, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2004, 360 F.3d 7. Arrest 68(2)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether police officer reasonably believed that arrestee was physically resisting him or inciting crowd of bystanders when officer arrested her for obstructing officer in performance of his duties and disorderly conduct under Illinois law precluded summary judgment for officer in arrestee's action under § 1983 alleging that officer arrested her without probable cause, in violation of Fourth Amendment, on basis of qualified immunity. Payne v. Pauley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 337 F.3d 767. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A reasonable law enforcement officer could not have concluded that detainee consented to being transported to police station and interrogated by police detectives, barring detectives' qualified immunity defense in detainee's § 1983 Fourth Amendment action based upon arrest without probable cause; although detainee indicated that he would cooperate, and he signed waiver of Miranda rights during interrogation, such conduct occurred after police officers confronted detainee at door of his home with their guns drawn, pulled him out onto the grass where detectives handcuffed him, and then transported him to station, waiver form did not explain detainee's right to be free from arrest without probable cause or right to terminate consensual encounter, detainee's car was impounded, and detectives repeatedly declined to honor detainee's request to go home. Hatheway v. Thies, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1199. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sexual assault victim's undisputed clear and positive identification of arrestee as her attacker to county law enforcement officers would have led reasonable police officer to believe that officer was obeying Fourth Amendment's probable cause requirement in making arrest, and detective who made arrest was thus entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's resulting § 1983 action alleging lack of probable cause for arrest. Tangwall v. Stuckey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1998, 135 F.3d 510. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State police officer's act of arresting driver was objectively reasonable, for purpose of officer's claim of qualified immunity in § 1983 action, notwithstanding claim that arrest was racially motivated, as officer had probable cause to stop driver based on undisputed evidence that driver was speeding. Conrod v. Davis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 120 F.3d 92, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1531, 523 U.S. 1081, 140 L.Ed.2d 681. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who arrested two African-American men with assistance of at least three other officers, police dog, spotlight, and drawn weapons after officer decided that men, who had stopped at restaurant after professional baseball game, resembled vague description of serial robbery suspects was not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestees' § 1983 action; at time of arrest, law was clearly established concerning permissible degree of intrusiveness during Terry stop, and reasonable officer could not have believed that it was reasonable to employ so highly intrusive a means of making stop. Washington v. Lambert, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 98 F.3d 1181. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively reasonable for state police officers in charge of investigation of misconduct by city officials to believe that they had probable cause to arrest city councilman for official misconduct, and officers were entitled to qualified immunity in context of councilman's subsequent 1983 action based on violation of his Fourth Amendment rights; while councilman relied on evidence purportedly showing that officers conducted investigation that negligently, issue in context of claim of arrest without probable cause was whether information gathered through investigation would warrant reasonable person to believe that offense had been or was being committed, and officers relied on taped conversations implicating councilman in fraudulent scheme to acquire for contractor gift shop concession at city airport, and there was no allegation that officers in any way altered tapes or misrepresented their context in affidavit of probable cause. Orsatti v. New Jersey State Police, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 71 F.3d 480. Arrest 63.4(11); Civil Rights 1376(6)

If officer who arrests plaintiff without probable cause can show that it was objectively reasonable to believe he had probable cause or that officers could disagree about existence of probable cause, officer is entitled to qualified immunity, regardless of his underlying motives for arresting plaintiff. Cook v. Sheldon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 41 F.3d 73. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Arresting officer has qualified immunity from civil rights claim of unlawful arrest either if it was objectively reasonable to believe that probable cause for arrest existed, or if reasonably competent officers could disagree on whether probable cause test was met. Wachtler v. County of Herkimer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 35 F.3d 77. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Peace officer was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by arrestee for illegal arrest and detention based on mistaken identity because reasonable officer in peace officer's position could have believed that there was reasonable cause to believe that arrestee was individual named in facially valid warrant; arrestee was of the same height, weight, sex, race, and age and had the same nickname as individual named in warrant, arrestee was at location where officer expected to find individual named in warrant, there was no evidence that officer had available information as to individual's skin tone or facial features and discrepancies in hair and eye color or skin tone between arrestee and individual named in warrant were not determinative since use of hair dyes, cosmetic contact lenses and tanning salons was relatively common. Blackwell v. Barton, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 34 F.3d 298. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In arrestee's § 1983 action against arresting officer, arising from arrest and prosecution for public intoxication, Court of Appeals' determination, for purposes of officer's qualified immunity defense, of whether arrestee had alleged sufficient facts from which it would be discerned that no reasonable officer could have believed that probable cause existed to make arrest for public intoxication, was objective one. Babb v. Dorman, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 33 F.3d 472. Civil Rights 1398

Department store security guard acted reasonably under circumstances in detaining customer for shoplifting and was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 suit; security guard observed customer take computer disks, place them in shopping bag as he approached exit of store, customer was unable to produce receipt and customer did not have checkbook, cash or charge card with him. Sanders v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., C.A.8 (N.D.) 1993, 984 F.2d 972, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1373

Police officers could have reasonably believed that there was probable cause to arrest, and thus were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action, where they were told by storekeeper that arrestees handled missing ring before leaving store and that no one else in the store had the ring, and where they learned that one of the arrestees had run into a rest room and asked everyone to exit, appearing to be attempting to make herself throw up, which was conduct consistent with an attempt to dispose of the ring after she was confronted by the storeowner, even though officers did not interview jewelry store owner prior to making the arrest. Fuller v. M.G. Jewelry, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 950 F.2d 1437. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer acted with objective reasonableness and thus was entitled to immunity from civil rights claim brought by plaintiffs who were arrested for assault but later released when victim said plaintiffs were not actually his attackers, even though victim offered differing statements about cause of his injuries; victim originally identified plaintiffs as his attackers and officer's supervisor corroborated his judgment that he had probable cause to believe plaintiffs committed the assault. Torchinsky v. Siwinski, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 942 F.2d 257. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims of security guard arrested for obstructing official business in violation of Ohio law, as reasonable police officer in like circumstances could have reasonably believed that security guard's arrest was lawful; security guard refused to permit officer entry onto private facility to issue traffic citation to driver who had just entered facility. Johnson v. Estate of Laccheo, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 935 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers are entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising from allegedly wrongful arrest if officers of reasonable competence could disagree on whether there was probable cause to make arrest. Simkunas v. Tardi, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 930 F.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officers in same circumstances and possessing same knowledge as arresting deputies could have believed that probable cause existed to arrest lessor for leasing commercial premises used for prostitution, and deputies were entitled to qualified immunity from lessor's subsequent civil rights claim, even though lessor did not have knowledge of such use at time lease was executed and there was no evidence of mens rea, and irrespective of lessor's cooperation with authorities; evidence indisputably revealed that lessor knew prostitution was occurring at leased premises, reasonable officer could have believed that offense was violated by lessor who leased premises which were thereafter used for prostitution, provided lessor had knowledge of such use at any time during term of lease, and reasonably competent persons could disagree on whether offense required element of mens rea. Von Stein v. Brescher, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 904 F.2d 572. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff who caused arrest to identify 42-year-old arrestee whose name was similar to suspect in mid 20s acted unreasonably and did not enjoy qualified immunity in § 1983 action; although arrestee and suspect had similar appearance and arrestee lived near drug sale, sheriff had approximately three months to investigate and resolve doubts about arrestee's identity. Tillman v. Coley, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 886 F.2d 317, rehearing denied 893 F.2d 346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity protects law enforcement officers in cases in which they mistakenly conclude that probable cause to arrest is present; actual probable cause is not necessary for arrest to be objectively reasonable. Gorra v. Hanson, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1989, 880 F.2d 95. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Whether police officer being sued for civil rights violation based on arrest is entitled to immunity depends upon whether officers of reasonable competence would disagree on issue of whether arrest was reasonable. Bailey v. Andrews, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1987, 811 F.2d 366. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Where plaintiff had been found in possession of stolen car and there was warrant out for arrest of his father in connection with theft of the car, where plaintiff had just dropped his father off at bus station and plaintiff was convicted felon out on parole and was driving with expired driver's license, and with plaintiff's statements "it was getting too hot" and "he probably dumped it" reviewed in light of other facts available to officer, officer could reasonably believe that plaintiff knew car was stolen prior to being questioned, and officer was immune from any liability under 1871 civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] arising out of arrest. Floyd v. Farrell, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1985, 765 F.2d 1. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity for directing Puerto Rico treasury agents to arrest nightclub owner for obstructing justice, for resisting agents' efforts to gain entry to club, notwithstanding that charge was later dismissed, as reasonably competent officer could have found probable cause. Alvarez Sepulveda v. Colon Matos, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 76, reconsideration denied 306 F.Supp.2d 100. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether county police sergeant, who responded to 9-1-1 emergency call regarding disturbance at city park, conducted an adequate investigation before arresting vehicle passenger for interference with a police officer and disorderly conduct, and as to events after sergeant took passenger by the arm, precluded summary judgment for sergeant, based on qualified immunity, in passenger's §§ 1983 action. Freece v. Clackamas County, D.Or.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1080. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from wrongful arrest civil rights claim, as reasonable law enforcement officer, similarly situated, would have recognized he lacked probable cause assuming that facts were as asserted by arrestee, who alleged he was detained at gunpoint despite insufficient resemblance to suspect and lack of close proximity to place of trespass offense and then falsely arrested for alleged disobedience of officer's commands, based on animosity from his prior encounters with police. Burr v. Burns, S.D.Ohio 2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 779. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police captain was not entitled to qualified immunity as to Fourth Amendment claim brought by arrested suspect, since no reasonable officer in captain's position could have thought that forcing suspect to come to police department for questioning against his will fell short of seizing him for custodial interrogation, and captain did not argue that he had probable cause to make arrest. Svitlik v. O'Leary, D.Conn.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County police officer had arguable probable cause for the arrest of §§ 1983 plaintiff on simple assault charges, and therefore, officer was entitled to qualified immunity on plaintiff's claim for false arrest, where off-duty officer had informed him that plaintiff had threatened off-duty officer and her daughter, and assured responding officer that she had explained the situation to a magistrate judge and the judge had approved the arrest and would issue a warrant. Payne v. DeKalb County, N.D.Ga.2004, 414 F.Supp.2d 1158. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who arrested and removed alderman from session could reasonably belief they had probable cause, allowing them qualified immunity from false arrest suit under §§ 1983; state statute governing recording was not sufficiently clear that police knew or should have known they were violating alderman's rights when they arrested him. King v. Jefferies, M.D.N.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 624. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's arrest of passenger of lawfully stopped vehicle and his use of force were shielded under the doctrine of qualified immunity; because his order to remain in the vehicle was lawful, officer's belief that passenger was violating the obstruction statute by getting out of the car was likewise reasonable, as was his use of force to effectuate the resulting arrest when passenger resisted arrest by pulling away from officer when he tried to handcuff her. Coffey v. Morris, W.D.Va.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 542. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State police officers who arrested protestor on construction site were entitled to qualified immunity as to protestor's claims of false arrest and malicious prosecution brought under §§ 1983; in light of situation where construction truck was attempting to enter site flanked on all sides by protestors and their children, it would not have been clear to reasonable officer that there was no probable cause to arrest protestor for disorderly conduct under New York law. Zellner v. Summerlin, E.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 154. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police detective who arrested rape suspect at hospital, based upon alleged victim's in-person identification of suspect and her description of alleged rape, had qualified immunity from suspect's §§ 1983 claims for false arrest and false imprisonment after charges were dismissed for lack of evidence; detective had objectively reasonable belief that totality of circumstances warranted suspect's arrest. Smith v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 179. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer, called to scene of vehicular accident, had qualified immunity from false arrest suit brought under §§ 1983 by driver of pickup truck struck in rear by tractor trailer; it was objectively reasonable for officer to arrest driver, based on officer's review of conflicting written assessments of accident, presented by drivers, admission by pickup truck driver that he had braked in front of tractor trailer, and physical evidence. Christman v. Kick, D.Conn.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 82. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action alleging false arrest and malicious prosecution in connection with her arrest on charges of obstructing governmental administration by failing to step away from a tree which officials were trying to remove, as police officers of reasonable competence could, at the very least, disagree as to presence of probable cause for arrest and prosecution. Wilder v. Village of Amityville, E.D.N.Y.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 341, affirmed 111 Fed.Appx. 635, 2004 WL 2381295, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1708, 544 U.S. 949, 161 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Probable cause did not exist for police officer to find that television cameraman willfully failed to comply with police officer's direction regarding traffic laws, on officer's assertion of qualified immunity to cameraman's § 1983 and Florida law arrest without probable cause claims; statute was directed at preventing pedestrians from walking among vehicular traffic, but street had been shut off to vehicular traffic due to demonstrations, and cameraman was acting in scope of journalistic duties. Durruthy v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 1291, reversed 351 F.3d 1080, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 97 Fed.Appx. 908, 2004 WL 385594, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 45, 543 U.S. 917, 160 L.Ed.2d 201. Arrest 63.4(5); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officer could not conclude he had probable cause to arrest for disorderly conduct under Hawai'i law proprietor of judgment debtor, who was protesting civil execution on his property by walking around premises and trying to persuade persons executing writ not to take exempt property, precluding claim of qualified immunity from civil liability under § 1983 arising from arrest; proprietor's activities did not constitute intentional or reckless conduct causing alarm to any member of public. Pourny v. Maui Police Dept., County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 2000, 127 F.Supp.2d 1129. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State troopers were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability for allegedly unlawful arrest and search of armored car operators for suspected weapons violations; at time of arrest, operators were not hauling an armored load, they were dressed in street clothes rather than in uniforms, and they were driving armored semi-tractor trailer, rather than more conventional armored car. McGarvey v. Biswell, C.D.Ill.1998, 993 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer is entitled to qualified immunity where it is either objectively reasonable for officer to believe that there was probable cause for arrest, or if officers of reasonable competence could disagree as to whether there was probable cause. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Federal officers were entitled to qualified immunity as a matter of law, even though they violated clearly established right to be free from arrest without probable cause, if undisputed facts and all permissible inferences favorable to civil rights claimant showed either that it was objectively reasonable for officers to believe that probable cause existed, or that officers of reasonable competence could disagree on whether probable cause existed. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. United States 50.10(3)

Investigating officers and prosecutors had objectively reasonable belief that there was probable cause to arrest arrestee on rape charges, entitling them to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising from arrestee's acquittal, despite existence of exculpatory evidence at time of arrest, including statements of five alibi witnesses; arrestee's vehicle and place of employment matched information provided by victim, and victim unequivocally identified arrestee in photographic lineup. Jackson v. Jackson County, Miss., S.D.Miss.1995, 956 F.Supp. 1294, affirmed 95 F.3d 47. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(9)

Objective reasonableness of probation officer's actions in arresting probationer for alleged violation of probation entitled probation officer to qualified immunity with regard to probationer's civil rights claim that he was unlawfully arrested in violation of Fourth Amendment, even if probationer could establish that probation officer had arrested him despite knowledge that probationer was innocent. Presley v. Morrison, E.D.Pa.1996, 950 F.Supp. 1298. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police officers reasonably concluded that probable cause to arrest motorist existed, and were thus entitled to qualified immunity from motorist's action alleging violation of civil rights, malicious prosecution, false arrest, and false imprisonment, where one officer observed partially exposed "stun gun" in motorist's jacket in backseat of automobile while speaking with motorist. Jag v. City of Warren, E.D.Mich.1996, 944 F.Supp. 606. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State troopers who arrested antique gun dealer for alleged violations of state statutes governing sale of firearms were not entitled to qualified immunity from dealer's § 1983 claim since no reasonable police officer would have made arrest without at least some investigation into accuracy of claim that guns in question were not subject to statutes based on allegation that they were antiques. Cyprus v. Diskin, E.D.Pa.1996, 936 F.Supp. 259. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not objectively unreasonable for police officers to arrest accused for third-degree assault of transit officer based solely on transit officer's uncorroborated allegations, and therefore police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in accused's subsequent civil rights action for false arrest, though transit officer's allegations did not provide probable cause for arrest, where police officers made arrest pursuant to police department patrol guide which required officers to arrest individuals upon transit officer's claim of assault, and state law allowed police officers to find probable cause based solely upon statements of crime eyewitnesses or victims. Wu v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 581. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's alleged conduct in arresting individual during traffic stop due to fact computer system check revealed outstanding warrant for his arrest, without making inquiry as to validity of warrant despite arrestee's protestations that warrant was no longer valid and despite fact police officer knew computer system was highly deficient, was unreasonable and violated clearly established constitutional rights of the arrestee to not be arrested pursuant to invalid warrant, and therefore, if alleged conduct was proven, police officer would not be entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim for violation of his constitutional rights in connection with his arrest pursuant to invalid warrant. McMurry v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1082. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Belief of police officer that probable cause existed to arrest notary public for third degree felony of fraudulent transfer of motor vehicle title was reasonable, and officer was entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action after fraudulent transfer and other charges were dismissed, where officer had knowledge of back-dating of notarization of automobile title transfer and of discrepancy between recorded direct transaction of automobile and actual transaction in which automobile was transferred to notary public and then to eventual purchaser. Mincieli v. Bruder, S.D.Fla.1994, 914 F.Supp. 512, affirmed 73 F.3d 1107, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 294, 519 U.S. 927, 136 L.Ed.2d 213. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively reasonable for police officers to have believed both that probable cause existed for arrest and that their actions did not contravene established federal right, and, consequently, they were immune from liability under federal civil rights statute on grounds of qualified immunity, where arrestee had been driving with high beams, and officers' assertions concerning arrestee's inability to perform some field sobriety tests were necessarily undisputed. Haussman v. Fergus, S.D.N.Y.1995, 894 F.Supp. 142. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers reasonably reasonably believed that they had probable cause to make arrest under Hawai'i's disorderly conduct statute even if arrestee told them that she had been raped and was fleeing from rapist and, thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's civil rights action; arrestee had been running on or near busy city street, she was agitated and resisted officers' attempts to calm her, and her conduct indicated that she could place herself and others who traveled on road at risk. Carnell v. Grimm, D.Hawai'i 1994, 872 F.Supp. 746, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 74 F.3d 977. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrest of hospital visitor for assault was objectively reasonable, and therefore arresting officers were protected from § 1983 claim by qualified immunity; upon being summoned to hospital, officers were told by hospital employees that visitor had been found with her hand around her mother's neck as her mother was choking, and officer saw red marks on mother's throat. Velaire v. City of Schenectady, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had probable cause to arrest resident of condominium complex for harassment of resident manager, and thus, officer was protected from liability under § 1983 pursuant to doctrine of qualified immunity, where resident followed manager around for three and one-half days before her arrest for express purpose of finding ways in which manager's job performance was lacking, there was no evidence that manager had received notification from his employers that his job performance would be under surveillance by resident, and manager was aware of surveillance and found it so intrusive that he contacted police on three separate occasions in effort to get resident to stop. Fraser v. County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 1994, 855 F.Supp. 1167. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Undercover officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by fellow officer alleging lack of probable cause to arrest fellow officer during undercover operation for possession of controlled substances, where reasonable officer could not have believed that arrest of fellow officer was lawful in light of clearly established law and information that arresting officers possessed. Osborne v. Howard, E.D.Ark.1994, 844 F.Supp. 511. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Rule of qualified immunity shielded police officers from § 1983 claims by a plaintiff who was videotaping a public demonstration when he was arrested under a state statute prohibiting the recording of private conversations; reasonable officers could have believed that it was lawful to arrest the plaintiff for having recorded the conversation. Fordyce v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.1993, 840 F.Supp. 784, affirmed in part, vacated in part and reversed in part 55 F.3d 436, 147 A.L.R. Fed. 811, on remand 907 F.Supp. 1446. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity as against seventh grader's claim that they violated Fourth Amendment by taking her to police station, even though her mother testified that she did not consent to having her daughter taken to police station; officers believed in good faith that parental permission had been granted, as officer testified that vice principal of school told him that mother had given permission to allow police to take her daughter to station. Gardiner v. Incorporated Village of Endicott, N.D.N.Y.1993, 838 F.Supp. 32, affirmed 50 F.3d 151. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who arrived at scene after another police officer had pulled motorist over for failing to obey his traffic directions was entitled to rely on information communicated to him by this other officer regarding motorist's actions, and had arguable probable cause to arrest like this other officer, so as to be entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for allegedly making false arrest. Carroll v. Henry County, Ga., N.D.Ga.2006, 336 B.R. 578. Criminal Law 394.1(3); Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action as to claim that they used excessive force to seize suspect before handcuffing him, since a reasonable officer would not have believed that suspect's rights were violated by the force he said the officers used in an attempt to stop him from trying to drive away with them in his truck bed. Hill v. Kansas City Metro Task Force, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 182 Fed.Appx. 620, 2006 WL 1479025, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff's belief that road that arrestee was blocking with flatbed trailer bed was a public road on which traffic laws were required to be enforced was a reasonable one, for purposes of determining whether deputy was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's §§ 1983 action alleging violation of Fourth Amendment; road met definition of public road under Georgia law by virtue of undisputed fact that it was open to the public and intended or used for its enjoyment and for the passage of vehicles. Whitner v. Moore, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 918, 2005 WL 3501867, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Warrant for arrestee's arrest for burglary was supported by arguable probable cause, and thus, arresting officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action against her alleging false arrest; officer attested to facts that victim owned apartment complex that was under construction, appliances had been stolen from apartments in new construction area, security guard identified arrestee in photographic line-up as person he saw on balcony of burglarized building and fleeing scene in maroon van that was parked in garage that had interior and exterior access to burglarized apartments, and that arrestee had co-signed for the van less than one month before burglaries. Brown v. Abercrombie, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 151 Fed.Appx. 892, 2005 WL 2404574, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had probable cause to believe that arrestee violated a South Carolina statute prohibiting pedestrians from walking in a roadway where a sidewalk is provided, and was thus entitled to qualified immunity in the arrestee's §§ 1983 claim for false arrest; officer observed the arrestee interacting with a motorcycle passenger, who was herself located in the roadway, and the arrestee conceded that he may have stepped down off of the sidewalk.

Smith v. McCluskey, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 126 Fed.Appx. 89, 2005 WL 567539, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Parole officer's decision to arrest parolee for technical parole violations was not unreasonable, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 for depriving parolee of his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unlawful seizure, even though officer was aware that intermediate appellate court had vacated parolee's conviction, and conviction was subsequently declared nolle prosequi, where officer was not aware that state supreme court had denied state's appeal or that conviction had been vacated. Donaldson v. Mugavero, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 126 Fed.Appx. 63, 2005 WL 565282, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Even if arrestee had established that city police officers had violated his constitutional rights, he failed to make out claim of municipal liability under § 1983 against city, where he did not offer any evidence suggesting a specific failure in police officers' training. Williams v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22434151, Unreported, affirmed 120 Fed.Appx. 388, 2005 WL 154275. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Former police detective had qualified immunity from arrestee's false arrest, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution claims under § 1983, where it was objectively reasonable for detective to believe there was probable cause to arrest and prosecute arrestee, in light of repeated victim identifications of arrestee as assailant, coupled with arrestee's admission that he was present at scene of stabbing and that victim bore no animosity towards him. Williams v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22434151, Unreported, affirmed 120 Fed.Appx. 388, 2005 WL 154275. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4047. ---- Stops, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Deputy sheriff who served as a school resource officer (SRO) acted reasonably in stopping student to question her about her conduct, after witnessing student threaten to do something physically to teacher in her physical education class, even if neither of two teachers that was present feared for their safety, in view of state statute providing that certain verbal threats would constitute misdemeanor of harassment. Gray ex rel. Alexander v. Bostic, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 458 F.3d 1295. Schools 169

Reasonable police officer would not have had specific, articulable suspicion of illicit activity necessary for brief, investigatory Terry stop in seizing mother and her four small children in vehicle, for purpose of claim to qualified immunity in civil rights lawsuit under Fourth Amendment, on basis that subject police officer was looking for fugitive who was believed to have been at location nearby, young man exited vehicle parked near house, he walked from vehicle into garage of house while carrying skateboard and then looked into window of house, and vehicle then drove into driveway of house, turned on its bright lights, and honked. Couden v. Duffy, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 446 F.3d 483. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officer lacked probable cause or reasonable suspicion to stop automobile driving in high crime neighborhood at approximately 4:30 a.m., officer's act of stopping automobile was not objectively unreasonable under clearly established federal law, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to claim that stop was unlawful, where officer was investigating a prowler call in the area at the time he observed the automobile, automobile was the only vehicle the officer saw on the road, and automobile had tinted windows, thereby obstructing officer's view into the vehicle. Holeman v. City of New London, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 425 F.3d 184. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff's decision to institute license checkpoints on either side of road that led to farm where "rock" concert was to be held had impermissible programmatic purpose, which reasonable sheriff could not have believed was proper under the Fourth Amendment, and which would prevent sheriff from successfully asserting qualified immunity defense to resulting civil rights claims, to extent that checkpoints were set up to discourage concert from taking place, whether because sheriff did not want to receive complaints about another concert, because farm owner had not supported sheriff in prior election, or because sheriff wanted to elicit bribe. Collins v. Ainsworth, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 382 F.3d 529, on subsequent appeal 2005 WL 3502174, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1661, 164 L.Ed.2d 397. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if motorist's Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable stops was violated when police officer stopped his vehicle shortly after another officer had stopped and released him, officers' conduct was not objectively unreasonable, and officers were therefore entitled to qualified immunity against motorist's § 1983 claim; although first officer released motorist, he could have believed it that was permissible to alert second officer to his observations of possible intoxication and to recommend that second officer investigate situation, and second officer could have concluded, based on his own observations, that motorist's loud exhaust independently justified second stop. Nelson v. Kline, C.A.1 (Me.) 2001, 242 F.3d 33. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 malicious prosecution claim, arising from her forcible removal by officers from automobile registered to her husband, from whom she was separated, since it was objectively reasonable for officers to conclude that they had probable cause to believe arrestee obstructed governmental administration; husband showed police valid registration which officers verified, arrestee then locked herself in automobile and attempted to start engine with apparent intention of driving away, and arrestee refused to leave driver's seat after unlocking doors. Lennon v. Miller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 66 F.3d 416. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's action for damages stemming from violation of Fourth Amendment rights in relation to stop and pat-down search; although on direct appeal state appellate court found that officers did not have reasonably articulable suspicion on which to base investigatory stop of car, movements of car reasonably led officers to believe that arrestee might have been planning to commit robbery. Losee v. Dearinger, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1990, 911 F.2d 48. Municipal Corporations 189(3)

It was objectively reasonable for police officers to believe, based on a third police officer's radio call indicating that a motorist was traveling through a residential neighborhood at a high rate of speed, that there was reasonable suspicion to stop the motorist, and thus, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity on the motorist's §§ 1983 claim for false arrest. Siegel v. Miller, E.D.Pa.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 346. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had right to stop and detain mentally handicapped minor child for purpose of investigating reported criminal behavior, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity as to §§ 1983 claim brought by child and parent, alleging violations of child's Fourth Amendment rights; officers had reasonable suspicion to believe that crime had been committed and that child was person reported by neighbor, and when child ran away officers reasonably believed that he had violated Texas statute making it misdemeanor to resist arrest. Barlow ex rel. Moncebaiz v. Owens, S.D.Tex.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 980. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether particular police officer was entitled to qualified immunity, on basis that he had reasonable suspicion to stop arrestee's vehicle, which led to questioning, frisk, car search, and ultimate arrest and strip search of arrestee by other officers, precluding summary judgment on arrestee's false arrest and false imprisonment claims against officer in lawsuit under §§ 1983. Travis v. Village of Dobbs Ferry, S.D.N.Y.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 740. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers who allegedly made daytime stop in area known for drug transactions of driver on suspicion that he might have some drugs, based solely on their past associations with him and his narcotics record, were not entitled to qualified immunity on civil rights claim for unreasonable seizure; objectively reasonable officer could not have fairly believed that such investigatory detention was permitted under Fourth Amendment. Cowles v. Peterson, E.D.Va.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 472. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were not qualifiedly immune from § 1983 claim arising from stop of automobile, inasmuch as it would have been clear to reasonable officer that Fourth Amendment required more than observing automobile driving through high crime neighborhood at odd hour to show probable cause for traffic stop. Holeman v. City of New London, D.Conn.2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 99, reversed in part, appeal dismissed in part 425 F.3d 184. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had reasonable articulable suspicion to stop vehicle for failure to activate turn signal for distance required by state law, and thus police officers were entitled to qualified immunity on passengers' § 1983 claims of unreasonable detention, where passengers did not dispute that driver failed to activate turn signal for distance required. Lewis v. City of Topeka, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1209. Automobiles 349(2.1); Civil Rights 1376(6)

County patrol officer was entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability under § 1983 for conducting investigatory stop of vehicle for which he lacked reasonable suspicion that criminal activity was afoot as required by Fourth Amendment; even though nothing suspicious about vehicle, which he observed exiting on late Saturday evening at what he considered an excessive speed from parking lot of fertilizer plant that was closed, gave him reason to suspect an improper purpose, reasonable minds could differ about reasonableness of officer's evaluation of circumstances so as to reach same conclusion as officer did in determining that stop was warranted. Liston v. Steffes, W.D.Wis.2002, 300 F.Supp.2d 742. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively reasonable for police officers to believe they had probable cause to stop motorist and issue summonses for violating state statute requiring commercial vehicles garaged in state to be registered in state, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability as to motorist's § 1983 false arrest claim, even though officers cited statute applicable to non-commercial vehicles, where vehicle had business's name and telephone number painted on its sides, and officers had reason to believe that vehicle was most frequently garaged in state. Gagne v. DeMarco, D.Conn.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 390. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers acted in objectively unreasonable manner and thus were not entitled to qualified immunity for alleged constitutional violations surrounding search and arrest of arrestee, precluding summary judgment for police officers on arrestee's § 1983 claim; anonymous tip was insufficient to allow officers to conduct Terry stop, without Terry stop, there was no basis to effect search or arrest arrestee who complied with officers' commands to take his hands out of his pockets and did nothing to provoke manner in which he was arrested. Feathers v. Aey, N.D.Ohio 2002, 196 F.Supp.2d 530, reversed 319 F.3d 843, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officers could disagree on whether Terry stop escalated into de facto arrest without probable cause, and thus, federal officers were qualifiedly immune from arrestee's constitutional claims even though right to be free from arrest without probable cause was clearly established; reasonable officers could disagree on existence of probable cause and also whether detention of arrestee at bus station escalated into de facto arrest when officers removed arrestee from line boarding bus and ask that she accompany them into bus terminal while allowing bus to depart. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. United States 50.10(3)

Even if allegedly defective taillight on driver's vehicle was not in such need of repair that it justified allegedly wrongful investigative stop, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from driver's civil rights action, as reasonable officer observing broken taillight would have believed he had reasonable suspicion of traffic violation which would justify stopping truck. Fillmore v. Eichkorn, D.Kan.1995, 891 F.Supp. 1482, affirmed 77 F.3d 492. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer who initiated investigatory stop of suspect based upon directions from other officers was entitled to qualified immunity from suspect's civil rights suit for allegedly stopping suspect without reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity, so long as his reliance upon directions of other officers was in good faith, and he reasonably believed that other officers had lawful reasons to direct him to make investigatory stop. Braxton v.

Matthews, S.D.W.Va.1994, 865 F.Supp. 345. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer was entitled to qualified immunity for encounter with driver of lead truck in house moving detail; reasonable officer would have thought that the encounter constituted investigatory stop, for which only reasonable suspicion was required, and reasonable officer could have thought that reasonable suspicion existed. Lyle v. Dodd, N.D.Ga.1994, 857 F.Supp. 958. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had reasonable suspicion that arrestee's squealing of her vehicle's tires was a violation of state traffic regulation prohibiting unnecessary noise, and thus acted lawfully in stopping vehicle, and had probable cause to arrest motorist when she committed criminal offense in his presence by refusing to sign traffic tickets, entitling officer to qualified immunity from civil damages in motorist's subsequent civil rights action based on stop and arrest. McPherson v. Auger, D.Me.1994, 842 F.Supp. 25. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers enjoyed qualified immunity from liability in federal civil rights suit brought by detainees whose automobile was pulled over because passenger resembled description of robber; officers acted reasonably under Fourth Amendment standards in conducting investigatory stop and transporting passenger to scene of crime for showup; even if there had not been sufficient basis for stop or if 20-minute stop had been too long, it was nonetheless objectively reasonable for officer to believe that stop was lawful; fact that other competent officers might have acted differently was not controlling. Dempsey v. Town of Brighton, W.D.N.Y.1990, 749 F.Supp. 1215, affirmed 940 F.2d 648, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 338, 502 U.S. 925, 116 L.Ed.2d 278. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action arising from their Terry stop of plaintiff; even if officers' actions violated plaintiff's federal constitutional rights, reasonable officer under circumstances faced by officers in question could have concluded that there were articulable facts supporting reasonable suspicion that plaintiff had committed criminal offense. Harbin v. City of Alexandria, E.D.Va.1989, 712 F.Supp. 67, affirmed 908 F.2d 967. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who arrested motorist for ignoring his hand signals to stop, and for instead driving out of community in motor vehicle that tow truck operator was attempting to repossess, had arguable probable cause to arrest, and was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983, notwithstanding that motorist was allegedly unable to see officer's hand signals, possibly due to headlights shining in his eyes. Carroll v. Henry County, Ga., N.D.Ga.2006, 336 B.R. 578. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4048. ---- Applications for arrest warrants, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Standard of objective reasonableness defines qualified immunity accorded an officer whose request for a warrant allegedly caused an unconstitutional arrest; only where warrant application is so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence unreasonable will shield of immunity be lost and officer be liable for damages under section 1983. Malley v. Briggs, U.S.R.I.1986, 106 S.Ct. 1092, 475 U.S. 335, 89 L.Ed.2d 271. See, also, Krause v. Bennett, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1989, 887 F.2d 362. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even assuming that application for arrest warrant for assault and battery featuring alleged victim's identification of suspect was not supported by probable cause, officer who applied for warrant based on alleged victim's affidavit enjoyed qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment action alleging lack of probable cause; absence of probable cause would not have been evident to objectively reasonable officer, given prosecutor's and magistrate's independent judgments of probable cause. McKinney v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 431 F.3d 415. Civil Rights 1376(6)

When officer sought search and arrest warrants against suspect, officer's belief that probable cause existed was sufficient to support qualified immunity, where statements by suspect's girlfriend gave suspect plausible motive for shooting, suspect had opportunity to fire shots, another witness' account provided direct evidence that suspect was gunman, and suspect mentioned girlfriend as intended victim in conversation with officer; as disinterested party, witness had no apparent motive for lying, officer could have reasonably believed that girlfriend's reputation and intoxication did not seriously undermine the reliability of her account, which was consistent with account of suspect and other witnesses, and officer's failure to pursue other possible suspect did not make it unreasonable for her to seek warrants against actual suspect. Smith v. Reddy, C.A.4 (Md.) 1996, 101 F.3d 351. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriff who was accused of submitting a recklessly false affidavit in support of arrest warrant was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by arrestee because a corrected affidavit would still have provided probable cause to arrest. Bagby v. Brondhaver, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 98 F.3d 1096. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer does not have qualified immunity under § 1983 from claim that he lied in affidavit in order to obtain warrant to arrest innocent person to cover up officer's own unlawful acts; no reasonable officer could think that Fourth Amendment would permit arrest under such circumstances. Moody v. St. Charles County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 23 F.3d 1410, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

University officials and employees had qualified immunity from arrestee's suit under § 1983 for seeking arrest warrant without probable cause for assault of female student; officials and employees reasonably could have assumed that probable cause existed based on fact that arrestee's wallet was found at scene of crime, victim identified arrestee as her assailant, arrestee could not be located at his address after the incident, and arrestee gave inconsistent statements during the investigation. Hutsell v. Sayre, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 5 F.3d 996, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1071, 510 U.S. 1119, 127 L.Ed.2d 389. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Arresting officers failed to establish that they had objectively reasonable grounds for obtaining an arrest warrant to arrest defendant as suspected gambler and, thus, failed to establish their entitlement to qualified immunity in the defendant's subsequent civil rights action, even though officers found the defendant's name, address and phone number in rolodex in home of a suspected gambler, and had voice comparison of defendant's voice with voice of gambler who had same first name as defendant; voice identification was by person who did not have expert training in voice identification, tape of voice was made on hand-held tape recorder and entire conversation lasted less than 60 seconds. Ricci v. Urso, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1992, 974 F.2d 5. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity protected police officer who obtained warrant for arrest of former corrections officer who allegedly helped inmate escape, even though charges against corrections officer were subsequently dismissed; police officer's reliance on uncorroborated statements of prisoner informants who had provided other reliable information was objectively reasonable. Hoffman v. Reali, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1992, 973 F.2d 980. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Issue as to whether a police officer is entitled to qualified immunity for seeking arrest warrants is not whether affidavit actually established probable cause, but whether officer had an objectively reasonable belief that it established probable cause. Thompson v. Reuting, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1992, 968 F.2d 756. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer need not have actual probable cause for arrest to be entitled to qualified immunity in action brought by arrestee; only where warrant application is so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence unreasonable will the shield of immunity be lost. Lowe v. Aldridge, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1565. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Intentional or reckless omissions of material information from magistrate may serve as basis for challenge to qualified immunity in § 1983 civil rights action against arresting officers for alleged arrest without probable cause; recklessness may be inferred where omitted information was critical to probable cause determination. Golino v. City of New Haven, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1991, 950 F.2d 864, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 3032, 505 U.S. 1221, 120 L.Ed.2d 902. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1404

Director of Arkansas State Board of Private Career Education knew or at the very least should have known that certain material statements in her affidavit in support of arrest warrant were false, and therefore Director, in her individual capacity, was not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by arrested instructor, where affidavit stated that unlicensed organization, with instructor as its representative, conducted seminar on five dates, but seminar was only planned for the last date, and Director was present when instructor cancelled seminar and left location after being advised that organization did not have proper license to conduct seminar. Burk v. Beene, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 948 F.2d 489. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Evidence might be insufficient to sustain finding of probable cause for arrest warrant application, yet be adequate to establish it was reasonable for officer seeking warrant to believe he had good basis for his actions, such that officer would be entitled to qualified immunity; only where warrant application is so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence unreasonable will shield of immunity be lost. Magnotti v. Kuntz, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1990, 918 F.2d 364. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff's investigator and Federal Bureau of Investigation agent were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for violations of aggravated kidnapping arrestees' Fourth Amendment rights; investigator submitted affidavit found to contain material misstatements and omissions which no reasonable official would have submitted to magistrate, and agent had knowledge of exculpatory information which he failed to disclose to magistrate issuing arrest warrant. Hale v. Fish, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 899 F.2d 390. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer did not have qualified immunity, in § 1983 action, when he arrested, pursuant to warrant, owner of lawfully registered firearms and ammunition, on suspicion of uttering threats; occasional bellicose statements made in presence of officers did not support legitimate belief there was probable cause to arrest, required to support warrant. Walczyk v. Rio, D.Conn.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 385. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Information available to police officer at time he sought warrant for arrest of store customer for larceny provided probable cause for issuance of warrant, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in his individual capacity in customer's §§ 1983 action, even though store later declined to press charges, where officer was told by store employees that customer had tendered bad check and left store with her groceries while employees were discussing problem with her check and before she was told that payment had been accepted. Kling v. Harris Teeter Inc., W.D.N.C.2002, 338 F.Supp.2d 667, affirmed 86 Fed.Appx. 662, 2004 WL 238337. Civil Rights 1376(6); Criminal Law 211(4)

In order to mount challenge to issuance of warrant by magistrate, so as to overcome arresting officer's qualified immunity defense, § 1983 plaintiff must make substantial preliminary showing that affiant knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for truth, made a false statement in his affidavit and that allegedly false statement was necessary to finding of probable cause. Abramowitz v. Romano, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 79. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer and detective were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability in false arrest and malicious prosecution claims brought by landlord under § 1983, who was arrested after seizing property from tenant pursuant to a self-help provision in lease which permitted landlord to enter tenant's garage and seize property if, as occurred, tenant fell behind in paying his rent, where officer and detective were aware of the agreement and the self-help provision but obtained an arrest warrant without disclosing to the issuing judge the existence of the lease agreement or the self-help provision. Noga v. Potenza, N.D.N.Y.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 345. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrest warrant affiant's reliance on affidavits prepared by prosecutor's office did not make her actions objectively reasonable and, thus, she was not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability for recklessly or intentionally submitting probable cause statement based on informant's tip, either knowing of omitted statements or with reckless disregard for truth about informant's reliability; there was no indication that affiant made full disclosure to prosecutor and she did not ask whether it was permissible to omit material information about a confidential informant from the probable cause statement. Haywood v. Nye, D.Utah 1998, 999 F.Supp. 1451. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Claim that police officers fabricated evidence put before magistrate or, at least, proceeded with reckless disregard for truth in seeking arrest warrant, if supported by sufficient facts, was viable under § 1983. Duca v. Martins, D.Mass.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1281. Civil Rights 1088(4)

For purposes of determining police detective's entitlement, in his individual capacity, to qualified immunity from arrestee's civil lawsuit alleging wrongful or illegal arrest, application for arrest warrant was not so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence unreasonable under totality of circumstances, where arrestee fit description of suspect given by inmate during his interview with detective, and detective had learned before arrest that arrestee was working at store at time theft occurred, that person who claimed to be eyewitness identified person matching arrestee's description, and that participant in theft had implicated arrestee. Byers v. City of Eunice, C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 157 Fed.Appx. 680, 2005 WL 3228114, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee did not demonstrate that no reasonably competent official would have found indicia of probable cause supporting complaint and arrest warrant charging arrestee with attempting to intimidate witness, and therefore state prosecutor was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging that prosecutor made false or misleading statements in affidavit of probable cause in support of complaint. Coburn v. Nordeen, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 744, 2003 WL 21662064, Unreported. Civil Rights 1375; Civil Rights 1376(9)

4049. ---- Execution of arrest warrants, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Deputies had reasonable belief that suspect for whom they had valid Oregon felony warrant was residing at, and was in, third party's home when they went there to arrest her, and therefore reasonable officer in deputies' position could reasonably have believed that deputies could lawfully enter home by force to effect arrest, as required for deputies to be entitled to qualified immunity on suspect's § 1983 claims arising from arrest, particularly given that entry into home was consistent with state law. Case v. Kitsap County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.9 (Wash.) 2001, 249 F.3d 921. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Assuming that city officials effected Fourth Amendment seizure when they allowed police to set explosive on roof of building while attempting to make arrest and allowing resulting fire to burn and that seizure was unreasonable, officials were entitled to qualified immunity on basis that they reasonably could have considered their conduct to be lawful; use of explosives and burning of rooftop bunker to provide safe means to inject tear gas into house to arrest armed and dangerous occupants barricaded inside was in response to exceptional circumstances unprecedented in case law. In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1995, 49 F.3d 945, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 176, 516 U.S. 863, 133 L.Ed.2d 116, on remand 910 F.Supp. 212, on remand 938 F.Supp. 1264. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Officer's reliance on arrest warrant was reasonable, where information on which officer acted was not inherently unreliable or obviously less credible than evidence opposed to it, and thus officer was shielded from § 1983 liability for reliance on warrant. Stigall v. Madden, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 26 F.3d 867. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers who erroneously arrested plaintiff instead of his son were entitled to qualified immunity in plaintiff's subsequent civil rights action, inasmuch as officers attempted to execute facially valid arrest warrant based on federal indictment and their actions were supported by probable cause. Mensh v. Dyer, C.A.4 (Va.) 1991, 956 F.2d 36. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's actions in making arrest pursuant to facially valid warrant were objectively reasonable, despite arrestee's protestations that warrant had been withdrawn, entitling officer to qualified immunity in arrestee's civil rights action arising when it was discovered that warrant had been withdrawn. Duckett v. City of Cedar Park, Tex.,

C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 950 F.2d 272. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers acted reasonably in arresting father for kidnapping his three-year-old daughter and were thus entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 based on information received via teletype from sheriff's department in another state and based on their confirmation of existence of arrest warrant from which they could infer that judicial officer had reviewed information and found probable cause. Lowrance v. Pflueger, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1989, 878 F.2d 1014. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not immune from § 1983 liability arising from nighttime search of residence pursuant to daytime bench warrant for contempt issued by small claims court; police officers should have known that nighttime execution of the warrant was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment. O'Rourke v. City of Norman, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1989, 875 F.2d 1465, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 280, 493 U.S. 918, 107 L.Ed.2d 260. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who reasonably relies upon bulletin that establishes existence of warrant for arrest is entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought against him for unlawful arrest. Capone v. Marinelli, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 868 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officers could reasonably conclude that there was probable cause to make arrests and, therefore, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's civil rights claim based upon alleged lack of probable cause for arrests, in view of information contained in search warrant affidavits, when combined with discovery of items listed on search warrants and arrestee's presence at places where items were found, and in view of information contained in arrest warrant. Jones v. City and County of Denver, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1988, 854 F.2d 1206. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Town police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim that he was arrested for breach of peace without probable cause; arrest was based on warrant, issued by judge, which created presumption that it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that there was probable cause for arrest, and arrestee did not show that officer misled judge in order to obtain warrant, so as to overcome presumption. Abramowitz v. Romano, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 79. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Decision of county district attorney, county chief detective, and state police officials to use state police sudden emergency response team (S.E.R.T.) to execute warrant for arrest of suspect on charges of harassment by communication and making terroristic threats was objectively reasonable, and thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action based on Fourth Amendment excessive force claim brought after suspect was fatally shot by S.E.R.T. team; history of threats by suspect, suspect's prior assault of police officer, and nature of crimes supported reasonable belief that suspect would pose immediate threat to safety of officers. Estate of Fortunato v. Handler, W.D.Pa.1996, 969 F.Supp. 963. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(9)

Police officers arguably possessed probable cause to arrest suspect for sexually assaulting neighbor between ages of five and ten, acted with objective reasonableness, and, therefore, were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability, even though officer omitted from affidavit fact of suspect's disability and confinement to wheelchair, even though discrepancies existed between account given by victim and accounts given by victim's mother and boyfriend as to victim's prior statements, and even though statement in affidavit was inconsistent with investigative report and victim's deposition as to when victim remembered the assaults; before seeking warrant, officers conducted reasonable investigation, reasonable person could find probable cause even with full disclosure of disability, disclosure of discrepancies in affidavit would not have undercut probable cause, and time that victim remembered the assault was immaterial. Mutter v. Town of Salem, D.N.H.1996, 945 F.Supp. 402. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity for arrest of defendant based on warrant which had been recalled, where the information which he obtained pursuant to computer warrant check and confirmation of the active status of the warrant with the dispatch center led him to believe that the warrant was valid. Lauer v. Dahlberg, N.D.Ill.1989, 717 F.Supp. 612, affirmed 907 F.2d 152, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who executed an apparently valid arrest warrant could not be held liable under § 1983 for wrongful arrest, in absence of allegation the officer had any reason to question warrant. Theis v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1988, 676 F.Supp. 874. Civil Rights 1088(4)

State troopers acted in objectively reasonable manner when they handcuffed arrestee and shackled her to barracks wall, even if such conduct violated arrestee's clearly established constitutional rights, and therefore qualified immunity applied to shield officers from § 1983 liability; although arrestee contended that trooper who obtained arrest warrant should have instead issued her an appearance ticket, she did not appear at barracks when trooper was on duty. Ingersoll ex rel. Estate of Ingersoll v. LaPlante, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 350, 2003 WL 21949752, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4050. ---- Warrantless arrests, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

No reasonable police officer could have believed that he had arguable probable cause to arrest, for obstruction of governmental operations or any other purported crime, citizen who, from considerable distance, observed police officers while they were engaged in traffic stop of two young men, and who spoke only when spoken to by officers and complied with request for identification after pointing out that he had done nothing wrong, regardless of whether state obstruction statute had been judicially construed at time of arrest, and therefore officer who arrested onlooker allegedly under such circumstances was not entitled to summary judgment based on qualified immunity in onlooker's §§ 1983 action. Walker v. City of Pine Bluff, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 414 F.3d 989. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer did not have qualified immunity for his warrantless arrest of citizen for criminal mischief to city laundromat, for purpose of citizen's § 1983 action that alleged false arrest and malicious prosecution in violation of Fourth Amendment, because jury would not necessarily have concluded that officers of reasonable competence would disagree on whether probable cause test was met; even though officer had probable cause to arrest two other individuals who were removing equipment from laundromat, citizen had just dropped by to see how things were going and officer had no information suggesting citizen had committed any crime. Rogers v. City of Amsterdam, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 303 F.3d 155. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' alleged reliance on prosecutor's advice did not entitle them to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims alleging that they lacked probable cause in arresting bail bondsman on charges of first-degree burglary and second-degree assault, where prosecutor did not tell officers to arrest bondsman, but rather advised them to present their police report and warrant application in his office during the next business day. Womack v. City of Bellefontaine Neighbors, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1999, 193 F.3d 1028. Civil Rights 1376(6)

When considering qualified immunity in § 1983 case alleging arrest without probable cause, issue is not probable cause in fact, but arguable probable cause, as actual probable cause is not necessary for arrest to be objectively reasonable; it is inevitable that law enforcement officials will in some cases reasonably but mistakenly conclude that probable cause is present, and in such cases those officials should not be held personally liable. Madiwale v. Savaiko, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1321. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officers acted in an objectively reasonable fashion in light of clearly established law at time they made warrantless arrest of suspected misdemeanant, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's § 1983 action; driver informed officers that suspected misdemeanant was driver of truck which collided with her vehicle and that suspected misdemeanant and other men in his vehicle smelled of alcohol and had glassy eyes. Vargas-Badillo v. Diaz-Torres, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 114 F.3d 3. Civil Rights 1376(6)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Even if probable cause was lacking with regard to arrest despite police officers' subjective belief that they had probable cause, they were entitled to qualified immunity so long as their belief was objectively reasonable. Edwards v. Cabrera, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 58 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officer would have made further inquiries before effecting warrantless arrest, even though police had received original report that person had been kidnapped, and thus officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action, where police officers subsequently obtained information that alleged victim of kidnapping had returned, knew that arrestee was local school teacher and victim's long-time boyfriend, also knew that suspect had telephoned police station and stated he was available for police questioning, and suspect was cooperative and volunteered his version of what happened at time of arrest. Merriman v. Walton, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 856 F.2d 1333, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 3188, 491 U.S. 905, 105 L.Ed.2d 696. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer did not have a reasonable basis for warrantless arrest of mother for damage to property under the theory that mother herself had run car into garage, which was inconsistent with mother's statement that her child had done so, where officer did not avail himself of readily available information which would have clarified matters by making rudimentary inquiries of neighbors then on the scene who would have verified mother's assertion that her child, not she, had done the property damage; thus, officer did not have qualified immunity from damages. Sevigny v. Dicksey, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1988, 846 F.2d 953. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Taking the facts in light most favorable to arrestee, exigent circumstances did not exist to justify state troopers' warrantless arrest of arrestee, in violation of arrestee's well-established Fourth Amendment rights, and thus, troopers were not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 false arrest claim against them; the only facts suggesting presence of exigent circumstances were that arrestee's alleged crime involved a firearm that was not accounted for, that residence where troopers effected the arrest was located some distance from trooper's vehicle, and that another suspect may have been involved, and incident underlying arrest occurred more than four hours before arrest. Manning v. Washington, W.D.Wash.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 1229. Arrest 71.1(6)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county police sergeant had probable cause to arrest vehicle passenger for interference with a police officer and disorderly conduct precluded summary judgment for sergeant, based on qualified immunity, in passenger's §§ 1983 action alleging a Fourth Amendment violation. Freece v. Clackamas County, D.Or.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1080. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

There was reasonable basis for police to believe they had probable cause to arrest female apartment resident for murder of male companion, allowing for qualified immunity claim to false arrest action under §§ 1983; there was firearm with spent rounds in apartment, resident was observed trying to smuggle marijuana out of apartment in children's backpacks, and police were unable to find evidence substantiating resident's claim that an intruder was murderer. Richards v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's §§ 1983 claim for violation of Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure based on warrantless arrest just inside door of arrestee's home; no officer could have reasonably concluded that it was lawful for officers to lie to arrestee about having a warrant in order to gain entry into her house, without a warrant or her consent and absent exigent circumstances, to arrest her for a minor offense. Breitbard v. Mitchell, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 237. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had qualified immunity from false arrest claim, arising from his arresting of employee as accomplice in armed robbery of restaurant; objectively reasonable officer could believe there was probable cause to arrest, based on suspicious conduct of employee who encountered robbers in parking lot outside of restaurant and led them into establishment. Sheppard v. Aloisi, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 478. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers could reasonably believe there was probable cause to arrest town meeting participant, who got into shouting match with crowd and accused them of being "assholes," allowing for qualified immunity from claims of improper arrest. Nolan v. Krajcik, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 447. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity, in citizen's §§ 1983 lawsuit under Fourth Amendment, where they made warrantless arrest on tip given by informant, who indicated that citizen had been making drug buy each Friday, but police had been watching citizen for eight consecutive Fridays and they saw nothing at all to corroborate informant's story, and no augmentation or corroboration of tip otherwise occurred, and strip search was undertaken in hope that discovery of contraband would have corroborated officers' hunch that she might have been carrying drugs. Travis v. Village of Dobbs Ferry, S.D.N.Y.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 740. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Three police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from motorist's claim, under §§ 1983, that warrantless arrest for driving under the influence was not supported by probable cause; weaving of motorist's pickup truck, redness of his eyes, his failure to follow instructions, and his ever-so-slight side step during walk-and-turn field sobriety test precluded finding that there was clearly no probable cause, or that no reasonably competent officer would have found probable cause. Blackstone v. Quirino, D.Me.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was not reasonable for police officers to believe that individual accused by neighbors of disturbing peace presented substantial and imminent risk to himself or others, and thus officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 arising from their warrantless arrest of individual and warrantless entry into his residence, even if arrestee was in violation of restraining order, had recently been placed under observation for suicide threats, and was allegedly mumbling and making rambling statements on eve of arrest, where complaining neighbors did not fear for their safety, there was no evidence that arrestee possessed any weapons, and arrestee did not make any suicidal gestures. Sepatis v. City and County of San Francisco, N.D.Cal.2002, 217 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1376(6)

When warrantless arrest is subject of § 1983 action, arresting officer is entitled to qualified immunity if reasonable officer could have believed that probable cause existed to arrest plaintiff, and burden is on plaintiff to show that officer unreasonably arrested plaintiff without probable cause. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1407

Police officer had arguable probable cause to arrest § 1983 plaintiff for disorderly conduct, for purposes of qualified immunity from claim that officer deprived plaintiff of liberty without due process, despite claim that plaintiff could not be arrested for creating public disturbance because she was on private property; reasonable law enforcement officers, possessing same knowledge and in same circumstances as officer, could have reasonably interpreted plaintiff's involvement in domestic disturbance as creating public inconvenience, annoyance, or alarm to neighbors or passersby, even while plaintiff was on private property. Rose v. Town of Jackson's Gap, M.D.Ala.1996, 952 F.Supp. 757. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity doctrine protected detective from any liability for any mistake as to who was responsible for attempting to flush cocaine down toilet just before detective arrived pursuant to search warrant relating to drug conspiracy, and, thus, qualified immunity protected detective from any liability for arresting conspiracy suspect's spouse who had just emerged from bathroom where cocaine was found on toilet seat and cocaine vials were found in toilet; detective reasonably believed that he had probable cause to arrest wife. Bryant v. Rudman, S.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 270. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had qualified immunity in connection with their arrest of civil rights complainant who was found in state of extreme intoxication while attempting to gain entrance to an apartment building, even if there was no reasonable cause to arrest, or circumstances allowing reasonable officer to believe there was reasonable cause to arrest, on charged crime of criminal trespass; reasonable officer could believe that he could arrest complainant for related charge of disorderly conduct. Fink v. Gonzalez, N.D.Ill.1996, 911 F.Supp. 332. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officer who made warrantless arrest based on woman's complaint that arrestee had assaulted her and refused to leave her apartment had qualified immunity from arrestee's suit for damages under § 1983, regardless of whether arrestee was legitimate tenant of apartment; it was reasonable for officer to assume that arrestee had no right to be on the premises. Green v. City of Welch, S.D.W.Va.1993, 822 F.Supp. 1236. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Pennsylvania state trooper was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability with regard to warrantless arrest of election poll watcher, even though trooper reasonably believed he had probable cause to arrest; trooper should have obtained warrant, trooper did not personally witness the watcher's fight with deputy sheriffs, and charges on which he argued that he had probable cause, assault and resisting arrest, were misdemeanors in Pennsylvania. Shoop v. Dauphin County, M.D.Pa.1991, 766 F.Supp. 1327, affirmed 945 F.2d 396, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1178, 502 U.S. 1097, 117 L.Ed.2d 422. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' warrantless arrest of father for abduction and rape of his four-year-old daughter was "objectively reasonable," even if officers did not have probable cause to arrest father, entitling officers to qualified immunity in father's civil rights action arising when scientific tests indicated that father was not the perpetrator; victim had stated that "Daddy did it," and circumstances of abduction made it unlikely that someone other than the father could have entered victim's bedroom. Marx v. Gumbinner, S.D.Fla.1989, 716 F.Supp. 1434, affirmed 905 F.2d 1503. Civil Rights 1376(6)

After suspect had allegedly violated the law in Pennsylvania and left the state, it was not unreasonable for police officer to designate him as a "fugitive" for the purposes of arrest, regardless of the suspect's subjective intentions, and thus, the officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to the arrestee's civil rights claim challenging the fugitive designation. Mitchell v. Obenski, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 134 Fed.Appx. 548, 2005 WL 1394940, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable officer in the position of a sheriff's deputy, who was allegedly scratched in her arm by a dog's claws, teeth, or collar as the dog brushed past her while running from a house into a yard, could not reasonably have believed there was probable cause to arrest the dog's owner for assault in the second and third degrees and battery in the third degree, and thus, was not entitled to qualified immunity in the owner's §§ 1983 suit; owner never ordered the dog to attack, or did anything to encourage him to do so. Gaines v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 132 Fed.Appx. 67, 2005 WL 1074811, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For qualified immunity purposes in arrestee's §§ 1983 claim for arrest without probable cause, it was not objectively unreasonable for officer to believe probable cause existed to arrest arrestee, where a co-defendant of arrestee's made statements implicating arrestee in the murder of arrestee's girlfriend and son, arrestee failed polygraph examination, indicating that arrestee lied when he responded affirmatively that girlfriend was alive when he last saw her, arrestee failed to report girlfriend and son missing, and arrestee made inconsistent statements about whether he had argued with girlfriend on the last night he claimed he saw her. Gliatta v. Jones, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 249, 2004 WL 1114469, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4051. ---- Excessive use of force, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable police officers would not have jumped on 14-year-old boy, put knee in his back, pointed guns at his head, handcuffed him, and sprayed him with mace on suspicion of burglary, for purpose of officers' claim to qualified immunity to boy's civil rights claim under Fourth Amendment, where boy exited vehicle parked near house, he walked from vehicle into garage of house while carrying skateboard and then looked into window of house, and boy was cooperative, four police officers were present, and police had no reason to believe that boy was armed or that any accomplice was present. Couden v. Duffy, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 446 F.3d 483. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer confronted with mentally disturbed person who, during course of night's events, had refused to put down his rifle, discharged rifle into air while officers were nearby, and pointed rifle in general direction of law enforcement officers, had reason to believe that this person posed threat of serious harm to officers or others, and acted in objectively reasonable manner in using deadly force by shooting this person through the mouth, regardless of angle and direction in which rifle was pointed when officer discharged his weapon, and regardless of officer's knowledge about whether rifle was cocked or loaded; thus, officer did not violate person's Fourth Amendment rights by using deadly force against him and was not liable in damages under §§ 1983. Ballard v. Burton, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 444 F.3d 391. Arrest 68(2)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity on claim that he violated clearly established right to be free of excessive force in effecting seizure of arrestee who suffered dislocated right ankle and fracture of fibula near ankle, and who alleged that officer had used pepper spray after he was handcuffed, as reasonableness of officer's actions depended upon whose version of events was believed. Henderson v. Munn, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 439 F.3d 497. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers who suspected child molestation by babysitter's husband were entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability for use of allegedly excessive force by entering babysitter's home in the middle of the night, physically separating her from her telephone, taking her by the arm, escorting her from her home, and placing her in the locked back seat of a patrol car; the officers' conduct was not so clearly unlawful under prior case law that a reasonable officer could not have believed the conduct was legal. Cortez v. McCauley, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 438 F.3d 980. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity, for purpose of §§ 1983 excessive force claim brought by mother of drug trafficking suspect who was fatally shot by officer, where, viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the suspect's mother, the officer was in no immediate danger at time of shooting, and suspect did not pose immediate threat to other officers. Sigley v. City of Parma Heights, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 437 F.3d 527. Civil Rights 1376(6)

No reasonable police officer could have believed that it was reasonable for officer to shoot with beanbag propellant unarmed suspect at riot who committed no crime and whose conduct did not suggest that he posed immediate threat to safety of officer and therefore officer was not entitled to qualified immunity against suspect's §§ 1983 excessive force claim; suspect alleged that he slowly approached officer with his hands in surrender position and there was no evidence to suggest that suspect was attempting to resist or evade arrest by flight. Ciminillo v. Streicher, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 434 F.3d 461. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State police officers were not qualifiedly immune from §§ 1983 claims that they used excessive force in deciding to storm suspect's house, after state troopers had reported their belief that suspect had targeted officer with laser-sighted weapon, and Pennsylvania's Special Emergency Response Team (SERT) had been activated, inasmuch as severity of threat had lessened since activation, and members of SERT had since learned that suspect had heart problems and flashbacks to Vietnam. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 430 F.3d 140. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's use of deadly force was reasonable, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by shooting victim's mother pursuant to §§ 1983 alleging Fourth Amendment violations of unnecessary and excessive force, where shooting victim repeatedly refused to comply with the reasonable requests of law enforcement and continued his approach towards officer, ultimately reaching toward the officer's gun. Blossom v. Yarbrough, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 429 F.3d 963. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee failed to show that police officer used excessive force in handcuffing her, and so officer was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to that claim in arrestee's §§ 1983 action; arrestee alleged little in the way of physical injuries caused by the handcuffing, more critically, she did not allege that her physical complaints to the officers went unheeded but, to the contrary, she did not even claim that she told the officers that the handcuffs were too tight, and so, absent an obvious physical problem caused by the handcuffs or a plea by arrestee to loosen them, it was fair to ask how a reasonable officer should have known that a problem had occurred. Lyons v. City of Xenia, C.A.6 2005, 417 F.3d 565. Arrest 68(2)

City, police department, and chief of police were not liable in §§ 1983 action brought by plaintiff who was shot by police officer, where no constitutional violation occurred inasmuch as officer's conduct was objectively reasonable. Jiron v. City of Lakewood, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 392 F.3d 410. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

For qualified immunity purposes in §§ 1983 action brought by suspect's wife alleging officer's use of deadly force violated suspect's Fourth Amendment rights, officer's conduct of firing gun at suspect was reasonable, where officer was aware that suspect had violated protective order four times within several hours, officer was in radio contact with the other officers who were in pursuit of the suspect, the suspect had escaped from an armed policeman and the chase was still underway with a number of officers in pursuit, the suspect was running at full speed directly toward officer's police cruiser, and, ignoring orders to stop, the suspect kept charging at the officer who held his fire until the muzzle of his gun was two feet away from suspect. Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 381 F.3d 235, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 236, 163 L.Ed.2d 219, rehearing denied, rehearing denied 126 S.Ct. 724, 163 L.Ed.2d 621. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fact issues as to whether automobile that officer had pulled over was bearing down on officer, and as to whether officer tried but was unable to get driver to stop, precluded finding of either objective reasonableness of officer's use of deadly force, or reasonableness of officer's belief that his life was in danger, and in turn precluded summary judgment for officer in driver's estate's § 1983 excessive force action against officer and town. Cowan ex rel. Estate of Cooper v. Breen, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 352 F.3d 756. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Section 1983 protects plaintiffs from constitutional violations, not violations of state laws, police department regulations, or police practices. Scott v. Edinburg, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 346 F.3d 752. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police officer's conduct in drawing his gun upon exiting police cruiser after pursuing shooting victim's motor vehicle was not objectively unreasonable use of force, entitling officer to qualified immunity from liability in victim's § 1983 action, arising from shooting when officer slipped and his gun accidentally discharged, where suspect drove his vehicle into ditch, it was late at night, and there was no evidence that officer could see victim or the ice on which he slipped. McCoy v. City of Monticello, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 342 F.3d 842. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who, in 1999, shot suspect with intention of killing him, as he had been trained, acted in objectively reasonable manner to perceived imminent threat to fellow officer to save his life, and fellow officer's subsequent shooting that did not strike either suspect was reaction to same perceived threat from distinctive sound of chambering of bullets to protect himself; thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for use of excessive force. Carr v. Tatangelo, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 338 F.3d 1259, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Under the Constitution, for purposes of a § 1983 claim alleging excessive force, the right question to determine whether an officer's particular conduct was reasonable within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment is how things appeared to objectively reasonable officers at the time of the events, not how they appear in the courtroom to a cross-section of the civilian community. Bell v. Irwin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 321 F.3d 637, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 84, 540 U.S. 818, 157 L.Ed.2d 36. Arrest 68(2)

Officers' conduct of using bean-bag rounds to stun arrestee during standoff with arrestee was reasonable within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging officers used excessive force, where arrestee acknowledged that he was armed with knives, drove his wife out of their home, refused to emerge or admit police for discussion, held a knife to his throat while threatening suicide, and made a move toward a propane tank. Bell v. Irwin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 321 F.3d 637, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 84, 540 U.S. 818, 157 L.Ed.2d 36. Arrest 68(2)

Police officer's conduct in killing unarmed felon by firing three shots into him at close range while felon was hiding behind water heater and brick column in dimly lit cellar was reasonable, for purpose of officer's assertion of qualified immunity to § 1983 claim under Fourth Amendment brought by parents of felon; even though parents told officers beforehand that felon was unarmed, officers were informed that felon was violent and armed with knife and officer did not fire until he thought he was shot after being hit by debris from ricochet from weapon that another officer discharged by accident. Seiner v. Drenon, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2002, 304 F.3d 810. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of sheriffs' deputies, who had responded to 911 call by husband and wife who reported that they had inadvertently triggered burglar alarm at convenience store, in throwing husband against the wall, kicking his legs apart, handcuffing him, and placing him in squad car after husband attempted to leave to turn off cooking device he had left on at his residence, and spraying wife twice in the face with pepper spray from close range after she reacted to handcuffing of her husband, were not objectively reasonable, so that deputies were not protected by qualified immunity in § 1983 action by husband and wife. Park v. Shiflett, C.A.4 (Va.) 2001, 250 F.3d 843. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officer would have believed that use of deadly force was necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm to himself or another, and, thus, Florida police officer who had shot and killed suspect was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action, where suspect was known drug abuser who had threatened to commit suicide, when officers arrived, suspect had already cut his wrists with box-cutter, officers located suspect in small bedroom where he was repeatedly told to drop box-cutter clenched in his fist, suspect instead shouted obscenities at officers and slid off dresser, with his momentum carrying him toward officers, and officer fired three shots in rapid succession when suspect came within six to eight feet of another officer. Wood v. City of Lakeland, FL, C.A.11 (Fla.) 2000, 203 F.3d 1288. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State trooper's failure to warn detainee before trooper twice shot detainee did not make trooper's conduct objectively unreasonable, and thus, did not preclude grant of summary judgment to him on qualified immunity grounds in detainee's § 1983 action alleging excessive force; trooper was lying on his back after being knocked down by detainee, detainee was standing nearby, and trooper thus had to immediately decide whether to shoot. Colston v. Barnhart, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 130 F.3d 96, rehearing en banc denied 146 F.3d 282, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 618, 525 U.S. 1054, 142 L.Ed.2d 557. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee failed to meet burden of showing that no police officer reasonably could have believed that arrestee posed risk of serious physical injury to officer or others, as he fled with sawed-off shotgun in hand, and thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 excessive force claim, where arrestee had fired shotgun while in crowd of people in near-riot situation, arrestee failed to heed officer's repeated orders to drop shotgun, and arrestee's weapon was designed or altered and frequently used by criminals to kill people. Montoute v. Carr, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 114 F.3d 181. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer who shot juvenile in midst of struggle over officer's weapon was entitled to qualified immunity against excessive force action as matter of law; no rational jury could find that officer's decision to use deadly force was so flawed that no reasonable officer would have made similar choice, as juvenile was actively resisting arrest, officer was being pummelled by more than five people, and officer shot juvenile "instinctively" in reaction to seeing juvenile's hand on barrel of his gun. Salim v. Proulx, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1996, 93 F.3d 86. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim by plaintiff who was shot by that officer after being stopped by another officer; upon seeing plaintiff attack officer who stopped plaintiff and hearing that officer yell that plaintiff had a knife, officer who shot plaintiff would have had probable cause to believe that plaintiff posed threat of serious harm to officer who stopped plaintiff. Lowery v. Stovall, C.A.4 (Va.) 1996, 92 F.3d 219, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 954, 519 U.S. 1113, 136 L.Ed.2d 841. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers did not use excessive force in detaining and arresting individual who died of "positional asphyxiation" after he was taken into custody and detained in automobile with his feet on rear seat and his head in space between front and rear seats, in which position he was unable to adequately inhale oxygen, and were entitled to qualified immunity in action brought following arrestee's death. Cottrell v. Caldwell, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 85 F.3d 1480. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy acted reasonably in using deadly force and, therefore was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims asserted by shooting victim's estate, where victim was behaving erratically and had a weapon. Reynolds v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Jury finding, that reasonable officer would not have believed himself to be in danger by suspect attempting to escape in car so as to justify shooting and killing suspect, as basis for conclusion that officer violated suspect's constitutional right by use of excessive force, was supported by sufficient evidence, even if car began to move while officer was in front of car; jury could have found from evidence that reasonable officer would have positioned himself facing driver closer to side of car so that officer could avoid injury when car moved slowly. Acosta v. City and County of San Francisco, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 83 F.3d 1143, as amended, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 514, 519 U.S. 1009, 136 L.Ed.2d 403. Civil Rights 1420

Lack of bright line rules governing permissible use of force during Terry stop did not mean that officers who conducted Terry stop automatically were entitled to qualified immunity from detainee's civil rights claim against officers for use of allegedly excessive force; rather, question was whether officers' actions were objectively reasonable. Mick v. Brewer, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1996, 76 F.3d 1127, on remand 923 F.Supp. 181, on remand 1997 WL 225908. Civil Rights 1376(6)

There are three criteria for evaluating objective reasonableness of the force used for purposes of § 1983 claim alleging excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment: what is severity of the crime at issue; whether suspect poses immediate threat to safety of officers or others; and whether suspect is actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight. Alexis v. McDonald's Restaurants of Massachusetts, Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1995, 67 F.3d 341, on remand 1996 WL 463675. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 excessive force claim, arising from her forcible removal by officers from automobile following her refusal to leave automobile on her own, since it was objectively reasonable for officers to believe that force alleged was objectively reasonable in light of circumstances; officer wrapped his arm around arrestee's neck, shoulder, and arm and pulled her from automobile. Lennon v. Miller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 66 F.3d 416. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Determining whether force used during arrest is "reasonable," for purposes of § 1983 claim, requires balancing nature and quality of intrusion on individual's Fourth Amendment interests against countervailing governmental interests at stake; this standard evaluates reasonableness of force used by considering totality of circumstances faced by officer on scene. Lennon v. Miller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 66 F.3d 416. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer acted in objectively reasonable manner in drawing his gun and pointing it at suspect after extended pursuit of suspect for purposes of effecting arrest, and officer was entitled to qualified immunity in context of suspect's excessive force claim. Edwards v. Giles, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1995, 51 F.3d 155. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of determining, as part of civil rights claims, if objectively reasonable law enforcement officer would have known that force was excessive, defendant must show significant injury that resulted directly and only from use of force that was clearly excessive to need and that was objectively unreasonable. Hale v. Townley, C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 45 F.3d 914, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 51 F.3d 1047. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who shot intoxicated arrestee who became belligerent after police attempted to arrest him and who was carrying knives was entitled to qualified immunity in action by suspect under federal civil rights statute where arrestee was armed, tried to kick and strike at officers attempting to arrest him, and disobeyed repeated instructions to put down weapons, and where police had been told by suspect's wife that suspect had threatened to use knives against any policeman who approached him; conduct of officer was objectively reasonable, even though jury may have rationally been able to find that officer could have done better job. Roy v. Inhabitants of City of Lewiston, C.A.1 (Me.) 1994, 42 F.3d 691. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In determining whether defense of qualified immunity applied to shield police officer from liability for civil damages arising from use of deadly force against suspect, district court must carefully examine all evidence in record, such as medical reports, contemporaneous statements by officer and available physical evidence to determine whether officer's story is internally consistent and consistent with known facts, rather than simply accept what may be self-serving account by police officer. Scott v. Henrich, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1994, 39 F.3d 912, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2612, 515 U.S. 1159, 132 L.Ed.2d 855. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Evidence supported finding that, under circumstances confronting them, police officers' use of police dog to locate bank robbery suspect and to secure him until he stopped struggling and was handcuffed was objectively reasonable, and officers were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with suspect's § 1983 excessive force claim. Mendoza v. Block, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1357, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(6)

To determine whether police officers have used excessive force in effecting seizure, for purposes of determining whether officers are entitled to defense of qualified immunity, Fourth Amendment objective reasonableness standard is applied, under which officer's actions are considered objectively unreasonable only if right allegedly violated is clearly established in sufficiently particularized sense at time of actions at issue. Estate of Starks v. Enyart, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 5 F.3d 230. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Though plain clothes police officer may have violated state law by attempting to arrest suspect for misdemeanor without displaying badge, when suspect sped toward officer with car, officer had probable cause to believe he was justified in shooting at suspect to prevent his death or great bodily harm, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity in suspect's subsequent civil rights suit. Drewitt v. Pratt, C.A.4 (Va.) 1993, 999 F.2d 774. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer acted reasonably in chasing suspect into business who was attempting to evade arrest and in pulling gun when employee menacingly approached officer while he had handcuffed suspect in custody, and thus, officer was immune from § 1983 action. Mouille v. City of Live Oak, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 977 F.2d 924, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2443, 508 U.S. 951, 124 L.Ed.2d 660. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for fatally shooting suspect; under witness' version of shooting, officers could not reasonably have believed that use of deadly force was lawful because victim did not point gun at officers and apparently was not facing them when they shot him the first time. Curnow By and Through Curnow v. Ridgecrest Police, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 952 F.2d 321, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 460, 506 U.S. 972, 121 L.Ed.2d 369. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Narcotics officer participating in "sting" operation could have believed that arrestee whom he shot posed deadly threat, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging excessive use of force; past incidents involving weapons and violence had occurred at location of arrest, and arrestee ignored officer's order to raise his hands and instead turned toward officer with object in his hand. Slattery v. Rizzo, C.A.4 (Va.) 1991, 939

Police officer's actions in arresting traffic violator in a business office were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by a bystander; bystander incurred severe injury to groin and pinched nerve in leg while falling against a door trying to avoid officer, officer's action in bursting into office, yelling threats and expletives, drawing gun, waving it wildly at everyone in office, and pushing it against bystander's throat was greatly disproportionate to need for action, and his repeated threat to "blow [all bystanders'] heads off" established malice. Mouille v. City of Live Oak, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 918 F.2d 548, rehearing denied 923 F.2d 851. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Whether police officer had qualified immunity from liability for use of excessive force in shooting suspect turned on whether the actions of the officer in using deadly force were objectively reasonable in light of the circumstances. Zuchel v. Spinharney, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1989, 890 F.2d 273. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity is available as a defense to monetary liability for objectively unreasonable use of excessive force by police under Fourth Amendment. Brown v. Glossip, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 878 F.2d 871. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Government agents acted reasonably in authorizing use of fire in attempting to flush armed fugitive out of private residence, and were thus entitled to qualified immunity in connection with suit brought by residence owner to recover for loss of personal property in fire. Ginter v. Stallcup, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1989, 869 F.2d 384, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who fired at fleeing burglary suspect reasonably believed that deadly force was necessary to prevent his escape and enjoyed qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action, even if suspect was unarmed and did not threaten officers in any way; officers told suspect to halt and reasonably believed that suspect heard them; and suspect then got into car and began to drive away with no resistance from any other officer. Klein v. Ryan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 847 F.2d 368. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Any reasonably competent police officer would have known that it was not reasonable to handcuff arrestee so tightly as to cause injury that was immediately apparent because it was visible to the naked eye, and thus, officer who allegedly kept arrestee tightly cuffed for more than two hours despite his repeated cries of pain and redness and swelling of his hand and wrist that were apparent to the naked eye was not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim alleging use of excessive force. Golio v. City of White Plains, S.D.N.Y.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 259. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's alleged act of shooting into stolen car that posed no threat to officer because it was driving past him rather than at him constituted an unreasonable use of force against passenger in car who was hit by gunfire, in violation of passenger's clearly established right not to be seized by use of unreasonable deadly force, and thus, officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in passenger's §§ 1983 action alleging use of excessive force. Tubar v. Clift, W.D.Wash.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1252. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's excessive force claim under the Fourth Amendment, where a reasonable officer should have known that repeatedly striking a subdued suspect violated a clearly established constitutional right not to be subjected to excessive force during arrest. Ostroski v. Town of Southold, E.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 325. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officer would not have known that physically restraining arms of citizen behind her back for one minute, after previously arresting her and then letting her go, while other police officer searched purse of citizen for her driver's license, was excessive use of force, and thus police officers were entitled to qualified immunity to excessive force claim under Fourth Amendment in lawsuit under §§ 1983, since law at that time would not have placed officers on notice that their actions were unlawful. Barton v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether security guards who worked at public hospital acted reasonably when they were involved in altercation with motorist during dispute over motorist's illegally parked vehicle precluded summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in motorist's civil rights action. Monge v. Cortes, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 42. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer's single baton strike of political party worker, incident to attempted arrest of worker during worker's physical confrontation with mayor, was not unreasonable use of force, and therefore, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from worker's §§ 1983 excessive force claim; officer was trying to re-establish order by herself in a large crowd gathered at a campaign event. Vega-Santiago v. Ortiz-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 170. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who allegedly slammed head of alderman against brick wall and concrete floor, in process of arresting him for refusal to leave board meeting when ordered to do so, were aware that their conduct constituted excessive force, precluding claim they were entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment action brought by alderman. King v. Jefferies, M.D.N.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 624. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Determining whether force is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment, for purposes of §§ 1983 excessive force claim, requires a careful balancing of the nature and quality of the intrusion on the individual's Fourth Amendment interests against the countervailing government interests, and court must gauge the reasonableness of the force from the perspective of the officer on the scene, rather than with 20/20 hindsight. Thomas v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 992. Arrest 68(2)

Police officers, who did not render necessary assistance after using pepper spray without warning to arrest patrons of nightclub who were fighting among themselves but who posed no threat to officers safety and who had not resisted arrest, were not entitled to qualified immunity, in §§ 1983 lawsuit under Fourth Amendment alleging excessive force; although there was no case law directly on point, it would have been clear to reasonable officer that use of pepper spray had to be preceded by warning when officer's safety was not threatened and officer was not trying to overcome resistance to arrest. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who shot armed robbery suspect reasonably believed that suspect was armed, as would allow the use of deadly force; officers had been advised that a handgun was used in the robberies and that a search of the suspect's abandoned vehicle had not revealed a gun. Foster v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1140. Arrest 68(2)

Arresting police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity, in arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force claim, where they allegedly used pepper spray on arrestee and hit him repeatedly with a baton, and arrestee was allegedly seated in his truck following a traffic stop, he allegedly did not resist or attempt to flee, and arrestee was allegedly passive and cooperative when officers sprayed him and began beating him. Reed v. City of Lavonia, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1347. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fact question as to whether police officer could have reasonably believed that force he used following participant's removal from town meeting was within bounds of appropriate police responses precluded summary judgment, based on qualified immunity, on excessive force claim. Nolan v. Krajcik, D.Mass.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 447. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer who allegedly broke arrestee's wrist even though he was not resisting arrest was not entitled to judgment on the pleadings, on ground of qualified immunity, on excessive force claim in arrestee's civil rights action under §§ 1983, where, if facts were as alleged by arrestee, no reasonable police officer could possibly have thought it was necessary to use the degree of force that officer allegedly used to make arrest. Torres v. Village of Sleepy Hollow, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 478, appeal dismissed 2006 WL 755958. Federal Civil Procedure 1061

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether handcuffing of arrestee was reasonable, precluding summary judgment on police officer's claim to qualified immunity in arrestee's civil rights action under Fourth Amendment which alleged use of excessive force during arrest. Nauman v. Bugado, D.Hawai'i 2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 893. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officers' use of force in making arrest in response to domestic violence complaint was not objectively unreasonable, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in arrestee's §§ 1983 action, even though officers hit arrestee about neck, shoulders, and wrist with their nightsticks and wrestled him to ground, where arrestee refused to cooperate with officers, participated in altercation with officers, disarmed one officer, and grabbed another officer by groin. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 385, subsequent determination 379 F.Supp.2d 475. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer had qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 action alleging the use of excessive force in effecting arrest; reasonable officer would have believed the use of force was necessary to subdue and arrest arrestee who had fled the scene of a search warrant and was potentially armed, and thus that it comported with clearly established law. Brown v. Pfaff, D.Del.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 781. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's claim of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment, since reasonable officers would have known that it was unreasonable to forcibly handcuff unarmed woman, who was not resisting, and who had informed officers that she had disability preventing her from placing her hands behind her back, without making further inquiry. Rex v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 1008. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether victim was in possession of a knife, if so, whether he held the knife blade up or down, whether victim was walking briskly and aggressively toward the officers or whether he was merely "taking steps," whether victim was waiving his arms in an aggressive manner toward the officers, whether officer waited to see the effect of fellow officer's shots prior to firing, and whether victim made any threatening or aggressive gesture toward the officers that reasonably would place them in fear for their lives, precluding summary judgment in favor of officers on excessive force claims on grounds of qualified immunity. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Constable's shooting of residence inhabitant, while conducting protective sweep following drug arrest, was not objectively reasonable, precluding qualified immunity from excessive force suit by inhabitant; inhabitant was lying on her bed, obviously unarmed, her only movement when constable entered room was to incline her head in his direction, and constable's warning to "freeze" was uttered at same time he pulled trigger. Johnson v. Waters, E.D.Tex.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 726, dismissed 120 Fed.Appx. 555, 2005 WL 350587. Civil Rights 1376(6)

No police officer could reasonably have believed that the law allowed officer to act as he did when he shot 28 times at motorist who was exiting crashed vehicle following car chase that led to motorist's arrest, given evidence that motorist had his hands out in front of him and was trying to surrender and that officer both overreacted and failed to reassess situation while he was shooting, and therefore officer, who sought judgment as a matter of law following adverse jury verdict on motorist's §§ 1983 claim for use of excessive force, was not entitled to qualified immunity. Parker v. Town of Swansea, D.Mass.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 356. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issue of material fact existed with respect to reasonableness of the force that arresting officer used on plaintiff, precluding summary judgment in favor of officer on excessive force claim; officer allegedly had his weapon drawn and pointed directly at plaintiff, cocked the hammer of the firearm, then sprayed him with pepper spray, grabbed him in a choke hold and dragged him by the neck for several feet. Cea v. Ulster County, N.D.N.Y.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 321. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Three police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from motorist's claim, under §§ 1983, that they used excessive force during warrantless arrest for driving under the influence; motorist offered no resistance to officers' efforts to place him under arrest, precluding finding that any reasonably well-trained officers confronted with similar circumstances could reasonably have believed that their actions were lawful under clearly established law. Blackstone v. Quirino, D.Me.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deadly force may be used if an officer has probable cause to believe that the suspect's actions place the officer or others in imminent danger of death or serious bodily harm; the standard is an objective one, i.e., whether the officer's belief was objectively reasonable in light of the facts and circumstances confronting him. Buchanan v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 954. Arrest 68(2)

Reasonableness standard for judging police conduct, for purposes of a § 1983 suit premised on alleged use of excessive force, implores the court to consider factors including the alleged crime's severity, the degree of potential threat that the suspect poses to an officer's safety and to others' safety, and the suspect's efforts to resist or evade arrest. Eberle v. City of Newton, D.Kan.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1269, motion to amend denied 296 F.Supp.2d 1276. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action alleging excessive force premised on allegedly tight handcuffing, as handcuffing resulted only in slight, untreated inflammation of arrestee's wrists, which did not demonstrate objectively unreasonable use of force. Wilder v. Village of Amityville, E.D.N.Y.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 341, affirmed 111 Fed.Appx. 635, 2004 WL 2381295, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1708, 544 U.S. 949, 161 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had qualified immunity from suit claiming that he violated Fourth Amendment by applying excessive force to automobile owner, in course of seizing his allegedly improperly parked automobile; no reasonable officer could conclude he was using excessive force when he rubbed owner on stomach and gave him gentle push, as owner was leaving area where automobile was parked. Qutb v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 33. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who restrained and handcuffed resident by means including an officer's knee onto the resident's back, while making in-home arrest for supplying alcohol to minors, were not entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's subsequent § 1983 action alleging use of excessive force; factual dispute existed regarding whether resident resisted arrest, rather than simply directing profanities and threats to sue at officers. Radloff v. City of Oelwein, N.D.Iowa 2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1145, affirmed 380 F.3d 344, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 967, 543 U.S. 1090, 160 L.Ed.2d 900. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if police officer used excessive force when he discharged his firearm upon being charged by suspect with knife, other officer at scene reasonably could have believed that such conduct was in fact lawful under Fourth Amendment, and therefore was entitled to qualified immunity on § 1983 claim alleging failure to intercede to protect suspect against violation of his constitutional rights. Santana v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 720. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer's action in firing non-lethal, beanbag round from shotgun from distance of 10 feet at citizen who had threatened third party and officers with knife was objectively reasonable when citizen emerged from her residence holding knife to her own throat and failed to comply with commands to drop knife, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity. Brown v. City of Bloomington, D.Minn.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 889, appeal after remand from federal court 706 N.W.2d 519, review denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if officers used excessive force in apprehending a fleeing suspect who physically attacked one officer, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity; officers were acting within their discretionary authority, and officers, whose use of minimal force resulted in only minor injuries, would not reasonably believe that their actions were unconstitutional. Moreland v. Dorsey, N.D.Ga.2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 1338. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' conduct, in forcing motorist to a stop and forcibly removing him from his truck through use of pepper spray, baton blows, and bites from a police dog, was such that an objectively reasonable officer would not have believed that it violated motorist's constitutional rights, and therefore officers were entitled to qualified immunity, in motorist's § 1983 action; stop was justified by need to investigate cause of motorist's erratic driving and to keep people from being killed by it, officers were entitled to use reasonable force to subdue motorist when he failed to comply with lawful orders to shut off his truck, and officers' escalating use of force was a measured response to motorist's continued refusal to obey orders and his perceived continuing danger to others. Moore v. Winer, D.Md.2002, 190 F.Supp.2d 804. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who allegedly broke arrestee's arm during unnecessary and unwarranted subduing and thereafter sprayed him with pepper spray, then allowed police dog to bite him after he was handcuffed and on ground, could not have believed that their conduct was warranted, and thus were not entitled as matter of law to qualified immunity as to claims against them in their individual capacities in arrestee's § 1983 suit. Wilkerson v. Thrift, W.D.N.C.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 322. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriffs could have believed that arrestee whom they shot posed deadly threat, and thus were entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging excessive use of force; deputies knew that arrestee had earlier threatened his sister with a stick and had violently resisted deputies when they entered his house to take him into custody, and arrestee repeatedly ignored deputies' requests to show his hands and instead turned toward deputies with object in his hand and assumed what appeared to be a shooting stance. Little v. Smith, W.D.N.C.2000, 114 F.Supp.2d 437. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer's conduct in handcuffing, shackling, and verbally harassing arrestee who he believed to have been involved in robbery and murder was objectively reasonable and not clearly excessive under the circumstances, and therefore, officer was not liable to arrestee for excessive force under § 1983; there was no evidence that officer hit or otherwise physically injured arrestee. Peters v. City of Biloxi, Mississippi, S.D.Miss.1999, 57 F.Supp.2d 366. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity for claimant's § 1983 excessive force claim, which claim was based on assertion that officers threw claimant to ground, applied substantial pressure to her back, handcuffed her, and patted her down, despite any lack of physical resistance by claimant; such force was so plainly excessive that no reasonable police officer would believe that force did not violate Fourth Amendment. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Claims that a police officer used excessive force in making an arrest are properly analyzed under the Fourth Amendment's "objective reasonableness" test rather than under a substantive due process standard. Wallace v. City of Shelby, N.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1204. Arrest 68(2)

Officer did not enjoy qualified immunity from claim that he pointed gun to motorist's head in course of arrest for reckless driving, striking motorist and causing him to fall, without provocation assuming that allegations were true. Oliver v. Cuttler, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 83. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's claim that officers used excessive force by shooting arrestee after they entered his residence while executing search warrant; arrestee admitted that he grabbed his rifle to protect himself from "invaders" and to scare them away, arrestee admitted that he exhibited rifle in a threatening manner, and officers had probable cause to believe that arrestee had committed crime involving sale of drugs and further was committing serious crime of unlawful use of weapon. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonableness inquiry in excessive force case is an objective one, for purposes of qualified immunity: question is whether officers' actions are objectively reasonable in light of facts and circumstances confronting them. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff and investigator were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that they used excessive force in seizing plaintiff and searching her motel room; officers' conduct in shoving plaintiff and striking her with wooden baton, in holding plaintiff on bed with baton at her throat, and in refusing to allow plaintiff to take her medication during time period in which room was searched was not objectively reasonable. Toth v. City of Dothan, Ala., M.D.Ala.1996, 953 F.Supp. 1502. Civil Rights 1376(6)

District court would not find, as matter of law, that federal law enforcement officer who shot plaintiff was entitled to qualified immunity in plaintiff's subsequent civil rights action alleging excessive force, as officer's use of deadly force was not reasonable absent evidence that plaintiff threatened officers in any way, and officer would not be deemed to have made reasonable mistake absent evidence that officer was in position of danger or subject to immediate threat. Harris v. Roderick, D.Idaho 1996, 933 F.Supp. 977, affirmed 126 F.3d 1189, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1051, 522 U.S. 1115, 140 L.Ed.2d 114. United States 50.10(3)

Police officers' actions in seizing large, unkempt individual who exhibited bizarre behavior and tightly clenched two ballpoint pens in his fists while resisting officers' attempts to get him to release pens were objectively reasonable, and therefore officers were immune from suit under doctrine of qualified immunity, though detainee stopped breathing while he was detained and died next day, where officers attempted to talk to detainee to get him to release pens, seized detainee after he refused to release pens, brought detainee to ground, handcuffed detainee, and monitored detainee while he was on ground for no more than two minutes before ambulance arrived to transport him for mental health observation. Estate of Phillips v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1996, 928 F.Supp. 817, affirmed 123 F.3d 586, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1052, 522 U.S. 1116, 140 L.Ed.2d 115. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from passenger's claim, under § 1983, that officers used excessive force in connection with stop of vehicle and arrest of driver and passenger; it was not unreasonable for officer to unholster gun while approaching vehicle, to separate driver and passenger, to handcuff passenger, or to transport handcuffed passenger to park office after driver was arrested. Wiers v. Barnes, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 1079. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity applied in civil rights suit against police officers for alleged unconstitutional use of deadly force given that reasonable officer could have believed that using deadly force against plaintiff was lawful act needed to prevent imminent loss of life; police officers observed plaintiff firing gun in small bedroom with another adult and two crying children present. Isquierdo v. Frederick, M.D.N.C.1996, 922 F.Supp. 1072, affirmed 121 F.3d 698. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's conduct in taking down arrestee who was allegedly screaming into telephone, refusing to follow directions, and attempting to strike officer with telephone was violation of arrestee's clearly established constitutional right to be free from excessive force, thus, officer was not entitled to qualified immunity on that claim in § 1983 action; officer's conduct was not reasonable under Fourth Amendment as videotape of incident showed no sign of physical aggression or violence by arrestee and officer grabbed arrestee and placed him in chokehold after phone was removed from arrestee's hand. Pyka v. Village of Orland Park, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1196. Civil Rights 1376(6) against arrestee was not entitled to qualified immunity as to § 1983 claim of failure to intervene, as reasonable officer would have made effort to prevent second officer's conduct. Pyka v. Village of Orland Park, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1196. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In determining whether qualified immunity will be accorded to police officers charged in civil rights action with excessive use of force in violation of Fourth Amendment, it is not expected that officers will be constitutional scholars able to make fine, academic distinctions about how the law may apply to circumstances they are confronting while they are in heat of arrest; rather, court will look to what reasonable officer can be expected to know and understand about contours and extent of Fourth Amendment excessive force law. Nemeckay v. Rule, E.D.Mich.1995, 894 F.Supp. 310. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's claim in civil rights action that officers engaged in excessive use of force in violation of First Amendment by failing to loosen arrestee's handcuffs, thereby resulting in permanent wrist injury; it was not clear that reasonable officer would understand and comprehend that failure to respond to complaint about tight handcuffs and to loosen them could result in excessive force violation. Nemeckay v. Rule, E.D.Mich.1995, 894 F.Supp. 310. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who acted as leader of special weapons and tactics (SWAT) team dealing with hostage situation, and two SWAT officers whom leader ordered into building, and who shot and killed hostage taker when he pointed his rifle at them, were qualifiedly immune from hostage taker's § 1983 excessive force claim; even if leader's spontaneous decision to send officers into building were "premature," no objectively reasonable officer would believe that such decision would violate hostage taker's civil rights, and leader did not authorize use of excessive force at any time. Malignaggi v. County of Gloucester, D.N.J.1994, 855 F.Supp. 74. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging that officers used excessive force in making arrest by tackling and holding arrestee at scene of arrest; officers' belief that arrestee was guilty of burglary or drunk and disorderly conduct was unreasonable, and, although arrestee fled from police, there was no evidence that arrestee was armed. Nelson v. Mattern, E.D.Pa.1994, 844 F.Supp. 216. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action as to claim that they used excessive force during and after handcuffing suspect, since there were disputed facts concerning whether the suspect resisted and, if not, whether the officers beat him anyway. Hill v. Kansas City Metro Task Force, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 182 Fed.Appx. 620, 2006 WL 1479025, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to claim that she used excessive force in shooting drug crime suspect in home after being confronted with weapon upon entry, since evidentiary record did not support contention that officer shot suspect when he was helpless or after he was incapacitated. Sterling v. Weaver, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2005, 146 Fed.Appx. 136, 2005 WL 1994415, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who grabbed fleeing suspect who was attempting to jump on train was entitled to qualified immunity on §§ 1983 excessive force claim brought by suspect, whose legs were severed when he fell beneath train, as officer's actions were objectively reasonable. Holmes v. City of Bastrop, C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 141 Fed.Appx. 315, 2005 WL 1793018, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers could reasonably believe they could use some force during arrest, and thus, they were entitled to qualified immunity with regard to suspect's civil rights claim that they used excessive force when they threw suspect to the ground during arrest, where officers were investigating a threatened shooting, they saw what appeared to be a weapon under suspect's shirt, and suspect gave evasive answer when asked whether he had a weapon and then attempted to brush the officers aside. Feinthel v. Payne, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 121 Fed.Appx. 60, 2004 WL 3021780, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Use of force by law enforcement officers was objectively reasonable under the Fourth Amendment, where officers encountered a man in the woods with two knives whose actions indicated he was prepared to use them against officers, man refused to drop the knives after repeatedly being instructed to do so and then advanced on one officer after expressly being warned not to come any closer, and, after first officer shot man, two other officers saw man continue to advance on first officer, prompting each to fire their weapons. Huggins v. Weider, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2004, 105 Fed.Appx. 503, 2004 WL 1729793, Unreported. Arrest 68(2)

Alleged conduct of state game and fish officer, when he arrested driver of pickup truck after the officer witnessed, from about a mile away, someone in the truck's bed shoot at an antelope, and after the officer gave chase to the truck, of screaming at the truck's occupants to raise their hands, having his hand near his holstered weapon, and threatening possible incarceration, was objectively reasonable, and thus, was not excessive force in violation of the Fourth Amendment, and entitled the officer to qualified immunity against truck driver's § 1983 claim for use of excessive force. Wheeler v. Scarafiotti, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 85 Fed.Appx. 696, 2004 WL 37976, Unreported. Arrest 68(2); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from paraplegic arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging they used excessive force when they arrested him, since there were no similar cases or authority rendering unreasonable their belief that their actions were lawful, and officers followed instructions of their supervisor and police procedures in effecting arrest. Brant v. Volkert, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 463, 2003 WL 21772148, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police chief was entitled to qualified immunity from detainee's § 1983 claims, arising from chief's alleged continuance of unconstitutional policy of treating uses of mace by police officers on detainees as "non-uses" of force; there was no showing that reasonable official in chief's position would have known that classifying use of mace as non-use of force violated clearly established constitutional right. Wallace v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31844688, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had qualified immunity from excessive force claim brought by mother of teenaged arrestee, when mother protested alleged excessive force being used on arrestee by grabbing an officer's shoulder, officer threw her to ground and placed his knee on her neck; officer could consider force used on mother reasonable under circumstances, as arrestee was apparently intoxicated and was vigorously resisting arrest. Carrasco v. City of Vallejo, E.D.Cal.2001, 2001 WL 34098655, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4051A. ---- Failure to act, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether other officers participating in attempt to subdue and arrest detainee should have recognized that officer who knelt on detainee's back while he was lying on the ground was using unreasonable amount of force, and that they had a reasonable opportunity to intervene, precluded summary judgment in §§1983 action by detainee's estate against officers, alleging failure to intervene to prevent use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment. Abdullahi v. City of Madison, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 423 F.3d 763 . Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police officer who was in surveillance position across street from where suspect was shot was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action premised on his failure to intervene to prevent shooting of suspect by fellow officer; although he was in radio contact with fellow officers, his view was of suspects' backs and he was not in position to see whether they possessed weapon, and he did not participate in shooting and was unaware of rapidly developing situation until he heard racking of gun immediately preceding shooting, which gave him no time to react. Carr v. Tatangelo, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 338 F.3d 1259, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who allegedly failed to intervene when he saw another officer keep arrestee tightly handcuffed for more than two hours despite arrestee's repeated cries of pain and redness and swelling of his hand and wrist that were apparent to the naked eye witnessed a clearly settled constitutional violation but did nothing to alleviate the problem, and thus, he was not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim alleging failure to intervene in a situation where excessive force was being used by another officer. Golio v. City of White Plains, S.D.N.Y.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 259. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers did not have qualified immunity in lawsuit under §§ 1983 to substantive due process claims of patrons of restaurant and nightclub who suffered secondary exposure from pepper spray that officers used on persons who were fighting, since reasonable officer would have known that officers' refusal to provide assistance to injured patrons, refusal to allow patrons to assist one another, and refusal to allow patrons to exit building after pepper spray was used would have resulted in violation of patrons' Fourteenth Amendment rights. Logan v. City of Pullman, E.D.Wash.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1246. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer is entitled to qualified immunity from liability in §§ 1983 alleging that officer failed to intercede to prevent his fellow officers from violating citizen's constitutional rights, unless his failure to intercede was under circumstances making it objectively unreasonable for him to believe that his fellow officers' conduct did not violate those rights. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 385, subsequent determination 379 F.Supp.2d 475. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4052. ---- False arrests and imprisonments, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Allegations that police officers, who arrested plaintiff on the basis of an already-executed warrant, did so despite being shown facially authentic documentary evidence that the warrant was no longer effective, were sufficient to state a claim, in a §§ 1983 action, for false arrest and false imprisonment in violation of the Fourth Amendment; allegations would support a jury conclusion that officers acted unreasonably in arresting plaintiff and taking him into custody. Pena-Borrero v. Estremeda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 365 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police department forensic chemist was not entitled to qualified immunity on claim under § 1983 for constitutional tort of malicious prosecution based on her alleged withholding of exculpatory evidence and fabrication of inculpatory evidence; an official in chemist's position in 1986 had "fair warning" that the deliberate or reckless falsification or omission of evidence was a constitutional violation, even though the arrest had already occurred. Pierce v. Gilchrist, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 359 F.3d 1279. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fear of dissuading police officers from enforcing domestic protection orders in the future did not warrant grant of qualified immunity from arrestee's action under § 1983, alleging Fourth Amendment false arrest claim, to officers who arrested husband on their mistaken belief that he had violated a protection order whose contents they had not ascertained, although officers might have believed they had probable cause to arrest had they read the order, since knowledge that they could be liable if they did not ascertain terms of a protection order would encourage officers to do so. Beier v. City of Lewiston, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2004, 354 F.3d 1058. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff's deputies were not qualifiedly immune from suspect's claim that they violated her Fourth Amendment rights in arresting her after telling her they believed she possessed stolen diamond and after she began to walk away, inasmuch as deputies could not have reasonably believed that they had probable cause to arrest, since they had failed to investigate convicted felon's statement that suspect had diamond, and suspect had been told, before she began to walk away, that she was not under arrest. Thompson v. Wagner, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 319 F.3d 931, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Department of motor vehicles investigator was entitled to qualified immunity to claim under § 1983 alleging malicious prosecution, since undisputed evidence demonstrated that investigator told prosecutor in timely fashion of information establishing plaintiff's innocence, and consequently, it was objectively reasonable for investigator to believe that his conduct did not violate any of plaintiff's clearly established rights. Kinzer v. Jackson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 139. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Undisputed facts concerning drunk driving arrestee's appearance and behavior at time of arrest fell short of establishing officer's "objectively reasonable" belief that arrestee was intoxicated, precluding entitlement to qualified immunity as a matter of law in arrestee's § 1983 false arrest action against officer; arrestee's eyes were red, but officer was aware that arrestee had been burning brush on his property for some time, and arrestee answered "not very much" to question of whether he had been drinking, which was insufficient to imply intoxication. Kent v. Katz, C.A.2 (Vt.) 2002, 312 F.3d 568. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had qualified immunity for his warrantless arrest of citizens for criminal mischief to city laundromat, for purpose of citizens' § 1983 action that alleged false arrest in violation of Fourth Amendment, on basis that officers of reasonable competence could have disagreed as to whether probable cause existed to arrest citizens; even though citizens told officer that they were entitled to remove their equipment from laundromat, officer had no reason to believe that citizens were entitled to remove equipment and officer could have concluded that resultant damage to city owned building was intentional and deliberate. Rogers v. City of Amsterdam, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 303 F.3d 155. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police cannot obtain qualified immunity for liability for false arrests by arresting people on preposterous charges and then pointing to absence of any judicial decision that declares statutory interpretation underlying charges to be preposterous; rather, their interpretation must be reasonable in light of existing law. Northen v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 126 F.3d 1024, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1306, 523 U.S. 1023, 140 L.Ed.2d 471, on remand 1999 WL 342441. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for false arrest in light of sufficient undisputed facts and information available to support reasonable law enforcement officer's belief that probable cause existed to arrest suspect for murder; at time of arrest, sheriff was aware of circumstances tending to point to arrestee as killer including that victim had been dating arrestee's ex-wife with whom arrestee sought renewed relationship, that victim was shot while driving on same highway in same direction at about same time as arrestee, that polygraph examination suggested arrestee lied about whether he was innocent of wrongdoing in killing, that arrestee had been with others who reported victim's vehicle off road, and that presumed accomplice was determined to be lying in separate polygraph examination. Johnson v. Schneiderheinz, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 102 F.3d 340, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 false arrest claim, arising from her forcible removal by officers from automobile registered to her husband, from whom she was separated, since it was objectively reasonable for officers to conclude that they had probable cause to believe arrestee obstructed governmental administration; husband showed police valid registration which officers verified, arrestee then locked herself in automobile and attempted to start engine with apparent intention of driving away, and arrestee refused to leave driver's seat after unlocking doors. Lennon v. Miller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 66 F.3d 416. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment false arrest claim arising from his arrest without probable cause of festival participant for taking pictures of officers assigned to festival security who also worked as undercover officers and whose photos might have been useful in carrying out death threat against one officer or in failing other officers' undercover operations; no officer could have reasonably concluded that probable cause existed for arrest where there was no link between such suspected criminal activity and festival participant. Williamson v. Mills, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 65 F.3d 155. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Codirectors of four-county drug task force were protected by qualified immunity from § 1983 claim based on erroneous arrest of individual, even though mistake could have been avoided; records on which arrest was based provided reasonable basis for officers to believe that probable cause existed. Eversole v. Steele, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 59 F.3d 710, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officer had objectively reasonable basis to arrest plaintiff for public intoxication based on smell of alcohol on his breath, information that arrestee had been drinking beer, arrestee's belligerence and cumulative circumstances of the night, and therefore officer was entitled to qualified immunity on false arrest, malicious prosecution, and § 1983 claims to extent they were grounded on wrongful arrest. Gibson v. Rich, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 44 F.3d 274. Arrest 63.4(15); Civil Rights 1376(6); False Imprisonment 15(1); Malicious Prosecution 42

Arresting officer was protected by qualified immunity from liability to arrestee in § 1983 action arising from arrest under Texas law for public intoxication, despite facts that officer changed charge of arrest from driving while intoxicated (DWI) after defendant took blood alcohol test and that arrestee was later acquitted of offense, where reasonable officer could have believed that he was justified in holding arrestee for public intoxication after arrestee had operated automobile after consuming five beers, had blood alcohol content of 0.08, and had entrusted to his care an extremely intoxicated passenger. Babb v. Dorman, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 33 F.3d 472. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer was not entitled to defense of qualified immunity in § 1983 action alleging unlawful arrest of father for alleged sexual abuse; reasonable officer could not have believed probable cause existed for arrest of father given that there was no medical evidence of abuse, the parents were involved in a dispute over custody of the child, and the county attorney had recently advised the officer to keep investigating. Ripson v. Alles, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1994, 21 F.3d 805, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from citizen's § 1983 suit for false arrest arising out of his arrest for obstructing police officer, following arrest of driver of citizen's vehicle for driving under influence of alcohol, as under Illinois law, citizen's drunken tirade created probable cause to arrest him for disorderly conduct and facts surrounding driver's arrest created probable cause to arrest him for allowing another person to operate his vehicle in manner contrary to law. Biddle v. Martin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 992 F.2d 673. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Evidence supported jury finding that arresting officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action alleging wrongful arrest for shoplifting; officers did not have sufficiently good view of one arrestee's action for reasonable officer to conclude that he had probable cause to arrest, officers failed to arrest and search arrestee when she left store from which sweater was allegedly taken evidencing lack of reasonable basis for probable cause, sweater was never found, and there was evidence that police had planted belt in arrestees' vehicle. Coates v. Daugherty, C.A.4 (Va.) 1992, 973 F.2d 290. Civil Rights 1423

Reasonable officer could not have concluded that suspect's former wife knew that suspect was a fugitive or that former wife intended to aid fugitive and, therefore, arrest lacked probable cause and arresting officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by former wife for false arrest; possibility that former wife could have inferred that officer was attempting to arrest suspect had been diminished by fact that suspect's arrest warrant had been sealed, police officer told former wife's co-worker that suspect was not wanted by the authorities, and police officer allegedly gave misleading testimony to grand jury about former wife's conduct in order to procure former wife's indictment. Juriss v. McGowan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 957 F.2d 345. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Deputy sheriffs were protected by qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for arrest, because plaintiff could reasonably have been suspected of aiding and abetting his brother's acts of false imprisonment of Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources conservation warden. Hughes v. Meyer, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1989, 880 F.2d 967, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2172, 495 U.S. 931, 109 L.Ed.2d 501. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by arrestee, and owner of motorcycle, arising out of the arrest for possession of stolen motorcycle, and the owner's deprivation of the use of the motorcycle, alleging Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment violations, where motorcycle had not been reported stolen, and arrestee offered to provide paperwork showing ownership of motorcycle prior to arrest.

Daley v. Harber, D.Mass.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 27. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers did not have qualified immunity to claim made by intravenous drug user, as participant in needle exchange program, that user's arrest for criminally possessing hypodermic instrument was not justified, in § 1983 action under Fourth Amendment, since no reasonable officer could have believed that circumstances established necessary probable cause; at time of user's arrest, there was no question pending in any court that would have called into question validity of needle exchange law, and user identified himself as authorized needle exchange program participant and his status as needle exchange program participant was not called into question. L.B. v. Town of Chester, S.D.N.Y.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 227. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Fact questions as to whether probable cause supported state trooper's arrest of arrestee for disorderly conduct, and as to whether trooper's conduct was objectively reasonable under circumstances, precluded summary judgment on issue of whether trooper was entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claims for unlawful arrest and false imprisonment. Mantz v. Chain, D.N.J.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 486. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 false arrest and false imprisonment action brought by arrestee, who suffered from a delusional disorder and was taken to medical center, since it was not objectively reasonable for officer to believe that arrestee was dangerous; there was no indication that arrestee ever threatened to harm herself or anyone else, there was no indication that arrestee intended to seek out or confront those she believed responsible for voices she heard, and while fact that arrestee had access to gun indicated that she had means to become dangerous, the fact that she was permitted to continue to hold gun permit suggested that police did not have cause to believe that she would use gun inappropriately. Hoyer v. DiCocco, D.Conn.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 110.

Police officers had qualified immunity from arrestee's malicious prosecution claim in civil rights action under §§ 1983, arising out of prosecution which resulted in her acquittal on charge of obstruction of governmental administration, where arrestee's conviction on harassment charge resulting from same incident showed that there was probable cause to find that arrestee had struck an officer during search of her residence, which arguably gave rise to probable cause to believe that arrestee had obstructed governmental administration in connection with the search. Ostroski v. Town of Southold, E.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 325. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer, acting as community caretaker, had qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim that he falsely arrested resident of house when he entered bathroom, where resident had sequestered himself, subdued and handcuffed him and took him into another room, where he was placed on gurney for transportation to hospital emergency room; officer reasonably believed that resident, known to officer to be diabetic, may have been in need of medical treatment for drug reaction. Policky v. City of Seward, Neb., D.Neb.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 1013. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer had "arguable probable cause" to arrest, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's §§ 1983 claim premised on false arrest; evidence demonstrated that officer received report that arrestee was stalking complainants, was observed seated in her truck in parking lot, and that complainants were afraid of her. Crocco v. Advance Stores Co. Inc., D.Conn.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 485. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from neighbor's §§ 1983 claim for false arrest since officer could not have reasonably believed, under clearly established law, that her neighbor had committed the crime of simple assault upon officer or officer's daughter by threatening harm if officer or daughter did not leave neighbor's property; neighbor's alleged threats to officer's daughter were made from upstairs window when daughter was in neighbor's yard, and neighbor's demand that officer leave her property did not create any immediate apprehension of violent injury. Payne v. DeKalb County, N.D.Ga.2004, 414 F.Supp.2d 1158. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity on the false arrest claim asserted in a §§ 1983 suit by an arrestee who was arrested for no valid driver's license based on an outstanding bench warrant issued for another African-American female of similar height, with a similar first name, and the same last name and date of birth, even though she told the officer that she possessed a valid driver's license, she displayed the license, and backup vehicles contained computers on which the officer could allegedly have verified the name on the bench warrant and the arrestee's driver's license. Walker v. Prieto, S.D.Fla.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Prosecutors and police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claims of false arrest and prosecution in light of evidence that officials may have had always had exclupatory evidence in their possession, which was eventually discovered and led to arrestee's acquittal on charges of rape, robbery, and weapons law violations. Nunez Gonzalez v. Vazquez Garced, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 214. Civil Rights 1376(9)

New York Department of Environmental Conservation officer who arrested property owner for spreading large amount of chlorine near swimming pool was entitled to qualified immunity from owner's §§ 1983 claim for false arrest, since it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that owner had violated state Environmental Conservation Law (ECL) in light of established law and information he possessed. Segal v. Crotty, S.D.N.Y.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 424. Civil Rights 1376(3)

There was at least arguable probable cause for police officers to make arrest, and it was objectively reasonable for officers on scene to believe that arrestee was one of robbers that they observed committing crime and then attempting to escape, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity against arrestee's claims against officers in their individual capacity for false arrest and false imprisonment. Wray v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging false arrest for burglary of hotel rooms, since it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that probable cause existed for the arrest; arrestee was hotel employee who worked during the hours when rooms were burglarized, a stolen credit card was used at grocery store near arrestee's home when she was not at work, suspect in grocery store surveillance tape was wearing a black down jacket, and arrestee owned a black down jacket. Colon v. Ludemann, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 747. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights liability for any false arrest of female bar patron where it was reasonable for him to believe that arrest of patron for assault on bouncer was based on probable cause; bouncer had head laceration and neutral eyewitnesses reported that patron had assaulted bouncer, although patron claimed that there were other witnesses that would have supported her story that bouncer assaulted her. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer was entitled to qualified immunity against arrestee's § 1983 claim for false imprisonment based on continued detention after eye-witness retracted identification, as reasonably well-trained officer could reasonably believe that probable cause to detain arrestee existed, even after one eyewitness informed police that wrong man was in custody, based on statements and positive identifications of other eye-witnesses; arresting officer did not knowingly and willfully ignore substantial exculpatory evidence based on witness's retraction, especially where it was not shown that officer himself knew witness withdrew identification. Rowe v. Romano, E.D.Pa.1996, 940 F.Supp. 798. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiff's § 1983 false arrest and malicious prosecution claims since it was objectively reasonable to conclude officers had probable cause to believe that plaintiff violated order of protection with regard to complainant where officer was told by witness that plaintiff assaulted complainant, complainant presented order of protection against plaintiff, and officer observed bite marks on complainant despite statements by other witnesses that complainant initiated conflict. Steiner v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1996, 920 F.Supp. 333. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestees' § 1983 false arrest claim, as it was objectively reasonable for officers to believe that they had probable cause to make arrest, where one officer had three opportunities to observe driver of car in high speed chase, chasing officer observed both driver and passenger outside of their vehicle, another officer was told by passing motorist that occupants of vehicle pursued by chasing officer had just fled around corner, turning that corner, other officer saw two individuals fitting description provided by chasing officer, he attempted to question individuals and struggle ensued, and after their apprehension, chasing officer identified individuals as driver and passenger which he had chased. Ferreira v. Westchester County, S.D.N.Y.1996, 917 F.Supp. 209. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who made arrest without probable cause were not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 unlawful arrest suit, since no reasonable officer could have believed that probable cause existed, where warrantless arrest was made on basis of uncorroborated tip from anonymous bus driver that five black men were at bus station and may have engaged in drug deal, and on basis of officers' subsequent discovery of drugs in possession of arrestee's brother, but officers had no information linking arrestee to drugs in brother's bag or to any drug deal. Edwards v. Cabrera, N.D.Ill.1994, 861 F.Supp. 664, reversed 58 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of affirmative defense of qualified immunity in civil rights case based on allegation of false arrest, objective reasonableness does not turn on whether probable cause in fact existed and can exist if it shown either that it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that probable cause existed or that officers of reasonable competence could disagree on whether probable cause test was met. Miloslavsky v. AES Engineering Soc., Inc., S.D.N.Y.1992, 808 F.Supp. 351, affirmed 993 F.2d 1534, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 68, 510 U.S. 817, 126 L.Ed.2d 37. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Actions of county solicitor in deciding to prosecute motorist broke the chain of causation and entitled arresting officers to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983 on a malicious prosecution claim. Carroll v. Henry County, Ga., N.D.Ga.2006, 336 B.R. 578. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if probable cause to arrest was lacking because of an error in State computer records that was the fault of the system, it was objectively reasonable for police officers to believe, based on a computer record indicating the arrestee's motor vehicle registration was suspended, that probable cause existed for the arrest, and thus, they were entitled to qualified immunity on the arrestee's § 1983 claim for false arrest. Mayer v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21222515, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arresting officer's determination that he had probable cause to arrest sexual assault suspect was objectively reasonable, and thus he was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability arising out of allegedly false arrest; officer was entitled to rely on victim's complaint, absent showing that it was inherently incredible. Obilo v. City University of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 715749, Unreported, opinion corrected and superseded 2003 WL 1809471. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if actions of assistant district attorney (ADA), with respect to police officer's arrest and prosecution for perjury, were outside scope of his official duties, such that he was not entitled to absolute immunity from officer's § 1983 false arrest and malicious prosecution claims, attorney, as well as police officers and investigators, were entitled to qualified immunity from claims; it was reasonable for defendants to believe that officer had committed perjury at administrative hearing for motorist, who officer had arrested for driving while intoxicated (DWI). Tartaglione v. Pugliese, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31387255, Unreported, affirmed 89 Fed.Appx. 304, 2004 WL 474011. Civil Rights 1376(10); Civil Rights 1376(9)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officers had qualified immunity from false arrest suit brought under § 1983 by participant in neighborhood altercation; police could have reasonably believed probable cause existed to arrest participant, based upon statement of neighbor that participant had cracked windshield of her vehicle, and inspection of vehicle that revealed crack. Hughes v. Shestakov, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1742666, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 450, 2003 WL 22234866. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4053. ---- Searches generally, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Determination of whether it was objectively legally reasonable to conclude that given search was supported by probable cause or exigent circumstances, so that officer conducting search is protected by qualified immunity from civil liability, will often require examination of information possessed by searching officer. Anderson v. Creighton, U.S.Minn.1987, 107 S.Ct. 3034, 483 U.S. 635, 97 L.Ed.2d 523, on remand 724 F.Supp. 654. Civil Rights 1376(2)

For purposes of qualified immunity, reasonable parole agents would have known in 2003 that entering home in which parolee had rented room, without announcing their identity and purpose, absent manifest exigency or demonstration that compliance would be futile, would violate homeowner's Fourth Amendment rights, despite parolee's prior consent to search. Green v. Butler, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 420 F.3d 689, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State police officer's acts of holding over $10,000 which was discovered during search of driver in connection with arrest and subjecting money to canine sniff were objectively reasonable, for purpose of officer's assertion of qualified immunity in driver's § 1983 action, in view of officer's knowledge that drug couriers often carried large amounts of cash in small denominations and fact that driver's explanation of where money came from conflicted with information from driver's mother who was in separate automobile. Conrod v. Davis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 120 F.3d 92, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1531, 523 U.S. 1081, 140 L.Ed.2d 681. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if reasonable jury could find that driver's oral and written consents to search his vehicle were involuntary, reasonable police officers in defendant officers' position could have believed that their search was constitutional in light of consents they had obtained, thus entitling them to qualified immunity from driver's § 1983 suit; reasonable officer in defendants' position could have believed that his conduct was lawful, in light of existing appellate decisions upholding findings of voluntary consent where evidence of duress or coercion was as strong or stronger than that relied on by driver. Valance v. Wisel, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 110 F.3d 1269. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Objective reasonable officer could not have concluded that inviting television crew, or any third party not providing assistance to law enforcement, to participate in search of private home was within Fourth Amendment requirements, for purposes of determining whether Secret Service agent was qualifiedly immune from suit by residents of home. Ayeni v. Mottola, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 35 F.3d 680, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1689, 514 U.S. 1062, 131 L.Ed.2d 554. United States 50.10(3)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claim that they unlawfully strip-searched misdemeanor arrestee who refused to provide pedigree information; arrestee's refusal to identify himself could provide reasonable suspicion that arrestee was engaged in criminal conduct of more serious nature than that for which he was arrested. Wachtler v. County of Herkimer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 35 F.3d 77. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action by suspect whose home was illegally searched, in violation of Fourth Amendment; officers' belief that "exigent circumstances" existed was objectively reasonable where suspect initially came to door with gun in hand, barricaded himself in home, and had history of violence and mental problems. O'Brien v. City of Grand Rapids, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 23 F.3d 990, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In determining whether law enforcement officer asserting qualified immunity from liability for Fourth Amendment violations objectively could have believed his conduct was lawful, court examines whether law governing official's conduct was clearly established and whether reasonable officer could have believed conduct was lawful, under that law. Act Up!/Portland v. Bagley, C.A.9 (Or.) 1993, 988 F.2d 868. Civil Rights 1376(6)

A reasonable police officer who arrived at scene after arrestee had been arrested for driving with a suspended license could have offered assistance to arresting officer by participating in search of arrestee, and thus, officer who arrived at scene after arrest and participated in search was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's §§ 1983 claim alleging false arrest. Golio v. City of White Plains, S.D.N.Y.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 259. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had qualified immunity from arrestee's unreasonable search and seizure claim in civil rights action under §§ 1983, where officers had reasonable belief that owner of residence from which arrestee's weapons were seized had authority to consent to the search and seizure. Ostroski v. Town of Southold, E.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 325. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officer conducted a second search of a detainee's person after failing to discover anything during first search, whether the cocaine was found in detainee's front right pocket or his small coin pocket, and whether the contraband seemed by touch to be a potential weapon, precluding summary judgment, on basis of qualified immunity, for officer in action alleging an illegal search; second search was not reasonably necessary to secure the officer's safety and size of the coin pocket made it unlikely a weapon would be discovered there. Johnson v. Anhorn, E.D.Pa.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 338. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A reasonable officer similarly situated to state drug enforcement agent who secured condominium by requiring tenants to either leave premises or allow officers to accompany them inside while awaiting issuance of warrant to search condominium would not have understood that securing residence from inside violated tenants' right to be free from unreasonable seizures, and thus, agent had qualified immunity in tenants' §§1983 action alleging illegal search and seizure; probable cause for search warrant was not clearly lacking when agent secured premises, and securing was necessary to preserve evidence and protect officers. Clark v. Webster, D.Me.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 371. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Assistant chief of police for borough did not have qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim, by tax collector, that his right to be secure from unreasonable search and seizure was violated when assistant chief opened drawer of collector's desk, without warrant or probable cause, discovering tape recorder collector was using to make unauthorized recordings of office conversations; no reasonable officer could believe that such action did not violate collector's rights. Konopka v. Borough of Wyoming, M.D.Pa.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 666. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police chief and officers who assisted in alleged illegal repossession action at restaurant were not entitled to qualified immunity from restaurant owner's §§ 1983 action, alleging Fourth Amendment violations; although officers did not actually commit illegal search or seizure themselves, they facilitated search of owner's business premises and seizure of his property, action was not necessarily reasonable under circumstances, and chief essentially instructed officers in their actions. Pruitt v. Pernell, E.D.N.C.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 738, affirmed 2006 WL 870638. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officer who participates in search that violates Fourth Amendment may not be held personally liable for money damages under §§ 1983 if reasonable officer could have believed that search comported with Fourth Amendment. Demster v. City of Lenexa, Kan., D.Kan.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1182. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in journalist's § 1983 challenge to home search warrant that lacked probable cause due to staleness; reasonable officer would have known that no probable cause existed for warrant based on statement of single individual who claimed to have been shown by journalist photographic images of terrorist attack, on one occasion six years earlier, on government-owned laptop computer in congressional office rather than in journalist's home. Arkansas Chronicle v. Easley, E.D.Va.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 776. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether county jail deputies believed statement of state trooper that he had smelled marijuana on vehicle's driver and passenger who had both been arrested following investigatory stop but were not visibly intoxicated or believed to be armed and were being released after they were booked, and whether deputies acted reasonably in strip-searching them based on trooper's statement that pat-down search and search of vehicle did not result in finding evidence of drugs, precluded summary judgment as to deputies' entitlement to qualified immunity from § 1983 claims of passenger and driver that their constitutional rights were violated. Liston v. Steffes, W.D.Wis.2002, 300 F.Supp.2d 742. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

California state officials were not entitled to qualified immunity against § 1983 claim by operator of day care center that officials seized and removed client files from center, destroying and losing some files in process; no reasonable official would have believed that alleged loss of files was authorized by Fourth Amendment, nor that state regulatory scheme, which authorized only reproduction of files, also authorized seizure. Golden Day Schools, Inc. v. Pirillo, C.D.Cal.2000, 118 F.Supp.2d 1037. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Application for warrant authorizing search of nonexistent address was not so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to deprive police detective of qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by resident of searched home; application was objectively reasonable since suspect's own statement was corroborated by computer printout, and another officer provided a description of the property confirmed by a personal visit. Gales v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1999, 47 F.Supp.2d 43. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Relevant question in § 1983 action with respect to claims of unreasonable search and seizure is the objective question whether reasonable officer could have believed search and seizure to be lawful, in light of clearly established law and information searching officers possessed. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) agent, having received from arrestee's father broadly worded consent forms to take from father's home "any letters, papers, or materials or other property which they may desire," did not violate any of arrestee's clearly established constitutional rights by seizing his firearms and certificates of title, even if no independent lawful cause existed for seizure of those items, and thus agent was entitled to qualified immunity, as was assistant United States Attorney(AUSA) who advised him, since reasonable person would have interpreted consent as extending to seizure of property at issue, and father never revoked or limited consent. Lavin v. Thornton, S.D.N.Y.1997, 959 F.Supp. 181. United States 50.10(3)

Sheriff, who was sued by arrestee for alleged civil rights violations that occurred when arrestee was strip-searched following arrest for minor traffic infraction, was not entitled to qualified immunity where subjecting arrestee to strip-search was not objectively reasonable, despite arrestee's lack of picture identification that would have enabled police to check her criminal history; arrestee's appearance and conduct at time of arrest and thereafter did not give rise to reasonable suspicion that arrestee had possible contraband. Kelly v. Foti, E.D.La.1994, 870 F.Supp. 126, affirmed in part and remanded 77 F.3d 819, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 85 F.3d 627. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Qualified immunity to § 1983 civil rights liability applied to police detective who returned allegedly stolen letter seized from auction house to law enforcement officials in state where theft allegedly occurred given that person who cosigned letter to auction house was not able to establish clear title to letter, detective made intention to obtain search warrant known, and reasonable police officer would have believed that letter was fruit of out-of-state crime and should be turned over to that state's authorities as evidence. Przyborowski v. Howard, D.Me.1994, 863 F.Supp. 22. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4054. ---- Applications for search warrants, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Affidavit in support of search warrant to take dental impressions from defendant, to see if these impressions matched bite marks found on murder victim's body, was not so lacking in probable cause as to overcome law enforcement officers' qualified immunity to defendant's § 1983 claims; probable cause existed on face of affidavit, and any omissions by officers were either neutral as to probable cause or helpful to defendant. Keko v. Hingle, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 318 F.3d 639, rehearing en banc denied 61 Fed.Appx. 123, 2003 WL 342359. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer was not objectively unreasonable in omitting, from application for search warrant, that informants had prior hostile relationship with homeowner, and thus officer enjoyed qualified immunity from claims that he deliberately left information out of application. Lombardi v. City of El Cajon, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1117. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had reasonable grounds to believe probable cause supported warrant to search plaintiff's house, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim, where officers knew about drug sales from plaintiff's address prior to informant's unsolicited offer to obtain drugs from plaintiff, informant bought cocaine from plaintiff in uncontrolled buy, and recorded conversation between plaintiff and informant indicated they were well acquainted and had recently engaged in some type of dealing. Martinez v. City of Schenectady, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 115 F.3d 111. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who unreasonably obtained and executed warrant to search all persons present for evidence were not entitled to qualified immunity; affidavit that supported warrant not only was lacking in any indicia of probable cause to search all persons but itself requested permission only to search two persons for evidence of crime under investigation and all others only for officer safety. Marks v. Clarke, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1996, 102 F.3d 1012, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 264, 522 U.S. 907, 139 L.Ed.2d 190. Civil Rights 1376(6)

To constitute constitutional violation sufficient to overcome qualified immunity of arresting officer who allegedly omitted material statements and made false statements in affidavit underlying arrest warrant for plaintiffs, material misstatements and omissions must be of such character that no reasonable official would have submitted affidavit to magistrate, and specific omitted facts must be clearly critical to finding of probable cause. Morin v. Caire, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 77 F.3d 116, 144 A.L.R. Fed. 719. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Omitted facts from deputy sheriff's search warrant application were not so clearly material that every reasonable law officer would have known that their omission would lead to search in violation of federal law, so as to overcome qualified immunity defense, where deputy had been physically present at what looked to be typical drug deal; reasonable officer in deputy's position could have concluded that informant's use of alias, tape recorder problems during drug buy operation, and greater than expected weight of substance purchased were not material. Haygood v. Johnson, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 70 F.3d 92, rehearing denied, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 86 F.3d 1172, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 359, 519 U.S. 949, 136 L.Ed.2d 251. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Search warrant affidavit was so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to plaintiffs' residence that reasonable officer would not have sought a search warrant, making qualified immunity defense unavailable to requesting officer in civil rights action; affidavit provided almost no information about plaintiffs' residence, and officer contributed to magistrate's incorrect probable cause determination by applying for warrant during the night. Greenstreet v. County of San Bernardino, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 41 F.3d 1306. Civil Rights 1376(6); Searches

And Seizures 114

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action based on their seeking and securing search warrant for residence; police officers' reliance on, and verification of, confidential informant's information was reasonable and adequate, and it was thus reasonable for officers to suspect illegal narcotics activity and to proceed to initiate and execute search warrant. George v. City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 26 F.3d 55. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's failure to inform magistrate judge that his search warrant affidavit was referring to title of series of allegedly obscene videotapes, rather than specific title of a movie did not expose him to liability in his personal capacity in civil rights action brought by video store owner; officer's assumption that use of word "copies" in his affidavit included all works within series was not objectively unreasonable. Supreme Video, Inc. v. Schauz, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1435, on remand 927 F.Supp. 321. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Police officer had at least arguable probable cause for seeking search warrants based on the repeated, detailed and explicit statements of children that they had been ritualistically sexually abused by their father, grandmother and great-aunt, and were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising from searches, notwithstanding doctor's conflicting opinions as to whether there was physical evidence of sexual abuse. Lowe v. Aldridge, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1565. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer is qualifiedly immune from suit for damages arising from allegedly illegal arrest or search unless reasonably well-trained officer in his position would have known that his affidavit failed to establish probable cause and that he should not have applied for warrant. Forster v. County of Santa Barbara, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 896 F.2d 1146. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who received tip that weapons were located in particular house, who knew that other officers had received similar anonymous tips, who presented facts to deputy district attorney and was told that probable cause existed for search warrant, and who obtained search warrant affidavit from deputy district attorney and who presented affidavit to judge who issued warrant was entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action arising out of the suit. Ortiz v. Van Auken, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 887 F.2d 1366. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Special agent for Kansas Bureau of Investigation (KBI) did not act with reckless disregard for the truth in preparing affidavit in support of search warrant that named the wrong trailer home to be searched, and thus, agent was entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 claim brought by residents of trailer home that was searched; while agent did not see drug buyer enter a trailer home on the street on which the trailer home that was searched was located, and while drug buyer later stated that he had gone to another trailer home behind the one specified in the affidavit, agent clearly saw drug buyer leave the trailer home specified in the affidavit. Hernandez v. Conde, D.Kan.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1131. Civil Rights 1375

Detective was not entitled to qualified immunity on false arrest claim; no officer could reasonably conclude that the Constitution would permit arrest of suspect based on the manipulation of victim's identification, given its equivocal nature and inconsistencies in victim's description of her kidnapper. Ramirez v. County of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's alleged intentional misleading of magistrate judge was not proximate cause of damage to arrestee for purposes of § 1983 action brought by arrestee against officer based upon unlawful arrest; although in his warrant application, officer incorrectly used the pronoun "they" when referring to single informant who had identified arrestee, any confusion was clarified by officer's sworn oral testimony before magistrate judge, so that judge made independent determination of probable cause. Peters v. City of Biloxi, Mississippi, S.D.Miss.1999, 57 F.Supp.2d 366. Civil Rights 1088(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Sheriff and investigator were entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiff's § 1983 action claiming that they subjected her to unreasonable search and seizure when they searched her motel room given that reasonably well-trained officer would have believed that search warrant affidavit established probable cause to search motel room, even though affidavit contained conclusory statements, where affidavit stated that informant had identified name of man accused of selling contraband and described counterfeit merchandise, and investigator corroborated informant's claims by affirming that suspect had previously been arrested for selling counterfeit merchandise. Toth v. City of Dothan, Ala., M.D.Ala.1996, 953 F.Supp. 1502. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim based on unconstitutional search and seizure; affidavit supporting search warrant contained so few indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable, and sheriff could not have reasonably relied on any grounds for warrantless search. DePugh v. Penning, N.D.Iowa 1995, 888 F.Supp. 959. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Factual allegations in officer's affidavit in support of application for search warrant were sufficient to establish probable cause to believe one owner of residence possessed cocaine, and thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability, in civil rights action brought against officer by owners of residence searched; officer received information contained in affidavit from informant known for two years who had previously provided officer with reliable information, no evidence indicated that officer should have known that residence did not contain drugs, although none were found during search, warrant was executed three days after issuance, and no evidence indicated that officer should have known that informant harbored grudge against one owner, although affidavit did not allege precisely where in house cocaine was being kept. Harden v. Peck, N.D.Ill.1988, 686 F.Supp. 1254. Civil Rights 1376(6); Controlled Substances 149

4055. ---- Execution of search warrants, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officer who forcibly and mistakenly entered wrong apartment to serve search warrant targeting suspected methamphetamine laboratory, and allegedly waited only two seconds after knocking before doing so, was not entitled to qualified immunity in apartment residents' §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment action against officer alleging violation of knock-and-announce rule; nothing in warrant suggested or predicted particular risk of violence or destruction of evidence warranting brief interval, nor did interval permit inference of developing exigent circumstances. Jones v. Wilhelm, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 425 F.3d 455. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police detective who served attorney with search warrant for attorney's person and effects, while client was testifying before grand jury, was entitled to qualified immunity upon attorney's claim that search violated his due process right to practice his profession, as warrant expressly stated that it could be served at any time, warrant was served at direction of prosecutor, and detective had no control over timing of prosecutors' calling client to grand jury room. Gabbert v. Conn, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 131 F.3d 793, certiorari granted in part 119 S.Ct. 39, 525 U.S. 809, 142 L.Ed.2d 30, reversed 119 S.Ct. 1292, 526 U.S. 286, 143 L.Ed.2d 399. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who dispense with knock-and-announce requirement in executing search warrant that does not authorize forcible entry are shielded by qualified immunity in ensuing § 1983 action only if they could reasonably have decided that urgent need existed for such entry into premises. Kornegay v. Cottingham, C.A.3 (Del.) 1997, 120 F.3d 392. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was reasonable under prevailing law regarding plain view doctrine for officer to believe that starter pistol found during search of claimants' house, which pistol was not listed in search warrant, could have been used in criminal or gang activity to frighten victim, and therefore, officers were entitled to qualified immunity in claimants' § 1983 action alleging unlawful seizure of pistol, though starter pistol was not automatically considered firearm or deadly weapon. Perkins v. City of West Covina, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1004, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 1690, 523 U.S. 1105, 140 L.Ed.2d 812, reversed 119 S.Ct. 678, 525 U.S. 234, 142 L.Ed.2d 636, on remand 167 F.3d 1286. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Police officer acted reasonably in concluding that in executing search warrant, immediate entry into suspect's home after knocking was needed to reduce risk that police would be met with violent resistance, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in suspect's § 1983 suit; officer knew that suspect was housed within and that suspect had a history of violent offenses and a reputation for violence, and facts supported reasonable belief that suspect had received some warning that police were approaching residence. Thompson v. Mahre, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 110 F.3d 716, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 414, 522 U.S. 967, 139 L.Ed.2d 317. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who conducted indiscriminate searches of all persons present at family homes where search warrant was executed failed to act in objectively reasonable manner and thus searches were not justified under "den of thieves" theory; large number of family members, including children, were, as officers might have anticipated, present before and during search. Marks v. Clarke, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1996, 102 F.3d 1012, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 264, 522 U.S. 907, 139 L.Ed.2d 190. Searches And Seizures 148

Deputy sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity from homeowners' § 1983 claim arising from execution of search warrant at wrong house, in light of deputy's failure to make reasonable effort to identify place to be searched as required by clearly established law; search warrant had been procured based on deputy's own prior observations, house searched was located on different part of street and was separated by another residence from house identified in warrant, numbers on both houses were clearly marked, and raid took place during daylight hours. Hartsfield v. Lemacks, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 50 F.3d 950, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Drug agents were not entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action arising out of mistaken execution of valid search warrant on wrong premises; right not to be subjected to unreasonable mistaken execution of valid search warrant was clearly established, and there was question of fact about whether officers' entry of home was mistake amounting to plain incompetence. Dawkins v. Graham, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 50 F.3d 532. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Doctrine of qualified immunity did not apply to officers and prosecutors who executed warrant for search of birthing clinic at two a.m., forcing parents of newborn child to sit in waiting room for over three hours, in that no objectively reasonable law enforcement officer could have believed that search was reasonable and, thus, individuals were not immune from liability in parents' § 1983 civil rights action. Hummel-Jones v. Strope, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 25 F.3d 647, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(9)

As of date on which search was executed a reasonable police officer would not have known that it was violation of Fourth Amendment rights to participate purposefully in search, notwithstanding lack of knowledge regarding contents of warrant, by looking in otherwise concealed areas for and identifying stolen property not described in warrant during otherwise lawful search encompassing same areas for stolen items listed in warrant; therefore, police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights action brought by owners of business searched. Crowder v. Sinyard, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 884 F.2d 804, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2617, 496 U.S. 924, 110 L.Ed.2d 638. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police chief's approving the use of a special weapons and tactics (SWAT) team to execute a search warrant on arrestees' home was not objectively unreasonable, and thus, the chief was entitled to qualified immunity on the arrestees' §§ 1983 claim that he violated their Fourth Amendment rights; the chief relied on the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's (KBI) assessment that the SWAT team was required. Hernandez v. Conde, D.Kan.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 1141. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity as matter of law for allegedly unreasonably executing search warrant by violating knock and announce rule, remaining on premises after they became aware that warrant described wrong dwelling unit, and unreasonably damaging property, as their alleged actions were objectively unreasonable. Foreman v. Beckwith, D.Conn.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 500. Civil Rights 1376(6)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Officers who shot and killed homeowner during execution of search warrant were not entitled to qualified immunity where facts, as alleged by homeowner's estate, indicated that officers had no reasonable basis for believing homeowner posed immediate threat and that it was unreasonable for officers to mistake either phone or water bottle in homeowner's hands for gun. Wingrove v. Forshey, S.D.Ohio 2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 808. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from suit under § 1983 with respect to execution of search warrant, despite fact that officers noticed serious discrepancies between searched premises and their information almost immediately upon commencement of search, absent any evidence that officers unreasonably continued to search after they knew they were in wrong apartment or that officers conducted search in manner inconsistent with its professed purpose, where officers' belief that execution of warrant did not violate occupants' Fourth Amendment rights was objectively reasonable. Lewis v. City of Mount Vernon, Mount Vernon Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1997, 984 F.Supp. 748. Civil Rights 1376(6)

When police officer acts within scope of facially valid warrant, issued by judge, officer has acted in good faith in conducting search, for purposes of claim of qualified immunity. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity from Bivens or § 1983 liability for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment from evidentiary search conducted after execution of in rem seizure warrant, in light of officers' reasonable belief that homeowner orally consented to search, and despite homeowner's refusal to sign written consent form; officer was advised of legality of search by Assistant United States Attorney. Trujillo v. Simer, D.Colo.1996, 934 F.Supp. 1217. Civil Rights 1376(6); United States 50.10(3)

Law enforcement officers were entitled to qualified immunity from Bivens or § 1983 liability for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment during execution of in rem seizure warrant, absent violation of clearly established law, and in light of officers' reasonable belief that their conduct of looking in closets, cabinets and crawl spaces was lawful for purposes of inventorying their condition and contents and discovering potentially dangerous weapons. Trujillo v. Simer, D.Colo.1996, 934 F.Supp. 1217. Civil Rights 1376(6); United States 50.10(3)

County sheriff, captain and sergeant of sheriff's department acted reasonably, and thus were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action based upon search of home of sheriff's department lieutenant for missing murder investigation file, where captain and sergeant simply executed search warrant obtained by prosecutor and signed by magistrate, and sheriff simply told captain and sergeant to execute warrant if it appeared valid. Davison v. Frey, E.D.Mich.1993, 837 F.Supp. 235. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In absence of evidence suggesting lack of good faith, police officers who were not involved in procuring no-knock search warrant were entitled to rely on its validity and implicit representation of exigent circumstances and, therefore, were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability; police work would not be feasible if officers were required to investigate background of every search warrant, arrest warrant, or request for back up deriving from another officer. Hall v. Lopez, D.Colo.1993, 823 F.Supp. 857. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in trailer owner's § 1983 action regarding execution of search warrant; whether or not probable cause supported issuance of warrant or warrant was facially valid, reasonable officer reading that warrant would not have known that searching trailer was clearly illegal. Somavia v. Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Dept., D.Nev.1993, 816 F.Supp. 638, affirmed 15 F.3d 1089. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively reasonable for police officers to rely on validity of search warrant, even though the actual physical characteristics of the residence to be searched may have varied to some degree from the description contained in the warrant, and it was not unreasonable for officers to believe that warrant was not overbroad in including a cottage area to be searched, so that they were entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action.

Zawacki v. City of Colorado Springs, D.Colo.1991, 759 F.Supp. 655. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State and federal search warrants and officers' observations provided probable cause for arrest and attendant right to seize arrestee's weapons and other evidence and thus, officers were protected by qualified immunity from arrestee's claims that arrest and seizure of property violated his civil rights. Bemis v. Kelley, D.Mass.1987, 671 F.Supp. 837, affirmed 857 F.2d 14. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4056. ---- Warrantless searches, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity for his alleged conduct in directing landlord to open tenant's apartment door, in tenant's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment claim; although officer was dispatched to keep the peace during tenant's former boyfriend's repossession of his belongings from the apartment, it would be unreasonable for officer to act affirmatively to aid the repossession, and unreasonable for officer to assume that tenant consented to the entry, despite officer's knowledge that boyfriend's attorney sent tenant a letter advising her of the repossession and listing the items that the boyfriend intended to take from the apartment. Harvey v. Plains Tp. Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 421 F.3d 185, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2325. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity for making forced warrantless entry into resident's home after resident attempted to end consensual encounter by closing partially opened doorway that was blocked by officer's foot, as entry into home was presumptively unreasonable and officers had no reasonable basis for believing their actions were justified under hot pursuit exception; they were not pursuing resident for commission of any crime in public place and should have realized that any claim that resident committed assault in public place by closing door was highly questionable. Cummings v. City of Akron, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 418 F.3d 676, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State parole officers who entered homeowner's residence without search warrant, to search for absconded parolee who they had been informed was residing there, were entitled under "special needs" doctrine and state parole rules and regulations to search home of parolee without probable cause or a warrant, and thus, officers were entitled to qualified immunity from homeowner's civil rights action alleging that officers violated her Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches, although information regarding parolee's whereabouts turned out to be mistaken, where search was rationally related to officers' duty to supervise parolee, reasonable officer, in same circumstances, could have believed that search was consistent with the Fourth Amendment, and officers left residence as soon as they saw picture proving that homeowner's son and parolee were not same person. Moore v. Vega, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 371 F.3d 110. Civil Rights 1376(7); Pardon And Parole 68

Exigent circumstances justified officers' warrantless entry of home of individual with Down Syndrome, for purposes of individual's § 1983 claim against officers alleging Fourth Amendment violations, where a 911 call originated from the home and the caller claimed to be under attack. Anthony v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 339 F.3d 129. Searches And Seizures 42.1

For purposes of determining that police lieutenant was entitled to qualified immunity on arrestee's § 1983 claim that lieutenant conducted unreasonable warrantless search and seizure by removing door hinges to enter locked room, lieutenant could have reasonably believed that search was lawful in light of proprietor's consent to search building, although arrestee leased locked room, as proprietor did not inform lieutenant that locked room was leased and did not attempt to limit consent to search, and it was not clear from established Fourth Amendment precedent that lieutenant was required to ask consent giver for key to unlock room. Forman v. Richmond Police Dept., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 104 F.3d 950, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 563, 522 U.S. 997, 139 L.Ed.2d 403. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers had reasonable belief that someone inside house in which individual could be heard shouting was in imminent peril of bodily harm, and thus were qualifiedly immune from § 1983 action alleging that they violated

Fourth Amendment by failing to knock and announce before entering; officers had been informed that drunk person inside house had fired nine shots, and it was not unreasonable for officers to infer from seeing taut telephone cord leading into another room that victim had grabbed telephone to call for help and could not be heard over drunk person's shouting. Dickerson v. McClellan, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1151. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers involved in warrantless search of home were not entitled to qualified immunity in resident's subsequent § 1983 suit; although officers claimed that they did not obtain warrant because they were concerned for safety of resident's son, knowledge possessed by officers at time of search, which was second in two days, was not such that officers could have had rational basis for believing that exigent circumstances existed. Parkhurst v. Trapp, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 77 F.3d 707. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers, who conducted two warrantless raids on nightclub were not entitled to qualified immunity, in civil rights action by nightclub proprietors and patrons alleging violation of their Fourth Amendment rights, as officers could not have reasonably believed that probable cause for raids, which allegedly involved search of premises, seizure of all persons present at gunpoint for approximately one and one-half hours, and search of some of those detained, existed based on information from reliable informant regarding sales of narcotics in nightclub, undercover agent's completion of single drug transaction with person in nightclub before each raid, or arrest of seller during first raid. Swint v. City of Wadley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1995, 51 F.3d 988. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Members of extradition squad were not entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action brought by arrestee who had been taken into custody pursuant to "wanted person" request from another state, where they acted without arrest or search warrant or any exigent circumstances sufficient to justify the intrusion into arrestee's home. Buenrostro v. Collazo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 973 F.2d 39. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer, probation officer, and summer intern at probation office were acting within contours of law at time they made warrantless search of house rented by probationer's girlfriend and, thus, were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action brought by girlfriend; probationer had listed girlfriend's home as his home and girlfriend admitted that he resided in her home approximately one half of time so that reasonable police officer would have believed that girlfriend's home was probationer's residence, and warrantless entry was not a general search for criminal activity but was instead a search to determine if probationer had violated his probation. Shea v. Smith, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 966 F.2d 127. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable police officers could have concluded that there was probable cause to search woman present at residence when search warrant was executed for concealed evidence and that warrantless strip search was justified by exigency to prevent woman from disposing of incriminating evidence, thus providing officers with qualified immunity in § 1983 civil rights action based on warrantless strip search; woman had been passenger in car of suspected drug dealer for approximately two hours prior to execution of warrant, the suspected drug dealer and known drug dealer openly conducted felonious cocaine distribution in the woman's immediate presence, and woman twice requested to use bathroom, but was refused permission to do so, before she was strip searched. Burns v. Loranger, C.A.1 (Me.) 1990, 907 F.2d 233. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Persons involved in warrantless entries of private property to abate suspected and known nuisances were not entitled to qualified immunity from suit on ground that warrant requirement was not clearly established in 1983 and 1985; existing case law made clear that Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement applied to entries onto private land to search for and abate suspected nuisances, and it was not reasonable to believe that same rule did not apply to known nuisances. Conner v. City of Santa Ana, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 897 F.2d 1487, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 59, 498 U.S. 816, 112 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1376(6) enforcement officer is immune from liability under federal civil rights statute is whether reasonable officer could have believed the warrantless search to be lawful, in light of clearly established law and information the searching officer possessed. Bigford v. Taylor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 896 F.2d 972, rehearing denied 901 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Since police officers should have known that their acts in entering house without a warrant violated clearly established constitutional standards of probable cause, defense of qualified immunity was unavailable to them in action under this section as a matter of law. Llaguno v. Mingey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 739 F.2d 1186, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 763 F.2d 1560, on remand. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Given that police officer's traffic stop of motor vehicle was lawful, driver's Fourth Amendment rights were not violated by subsequent warrantless search of vehicle, following passenger's arrest after he handed marijuana to officer; search was a lawful search incident to arrest. Johnson v. Anhorn, E.D.Pa.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 338. Automobiles 349.5(1)

Police officer of borough did not have qualified immunity from claim that he violated Fourth Amendment rights of tax collector, when he listened to audio tape from recorder taken from tax collector's desk by fellow officer, without warrant or probable cause to search desk. Konopka v. Borough of Wyoming, M.D.Pa.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 666. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who searched motorist and his vehicle after he "mouthed off" was not entitled to judgment on the pleadings, on ground of qualified immunity, in motorist's civil rights action under §§ 1983, alleging claim for illegal search of his vehicle, where, if facts were as alleged by motorist, no reasonable police officer could possibly have believed he had probable cause to search either motorist or his car for cocaine. Torres v. Village of Sleepy Hollow, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 478, appeal dismissed 2006 WL 755958. Federal Civil Procedure 1061

Police officer had qualified immunity from claim that he violated Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights of girlfriend of recently deceased house owner, when he ordered her to remain outside house while separate wife searched for and removed items of personal property; officer was acting reasonably, simply preserving the peace, rather than collaborating with wife. Ostensen v. Suffolk County, E.D.N.Y.2005, 378 F.Supp.2d 140. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on claim that they engaged in unreasonable search of driver's car, where search followed allegedly unconstitutional investigatory stop of driver's car; objectively reasonable officer could not have fairly believed he was engaged in constitutional seizure, and thus, could not have believed that search was proper. Cowles v. Peterson, E.D.Va.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 472. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Detective who arrested drug trafficking suspect had qualified immunity as to suspect's § 1983 claim alleging lack of probable cause for arrest, since objective officer, under totality of circumstances, could have concluded that suspect had constructive possession of drugs, drug paraphernalia and weapons in house where he was living; suspect had full access to bedroom, computer room, bathroom and living area where contraband was found. DeVatt v. Lohenitz, E.D.Pa.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 588. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who entered homeowners' residence with warrant to arrest suspect were entitled to qualified immunity under § 1983 from homeowners' claims that officers violated their rights under Fourth Amendment and state constitution, even though officers mistakenly entered wrong home based on arrest warrant that described suspect's former address; officers were not involved in underlying investigation that led to determination of suspect's address, had no knowledge of facts that would have alerted them that suspect no longer lived at residence, and were under no duty to conduct own investigation, officers' presence at residence was based on facially valid arrest warrant and reasonable belief that suspect lived in residence and would be home when warrant was executed, and officers did not open any doors, unwrap any sealed containers, or remove any property so as to support that search was unreasonable. Tyson v. Willauer, D.Conn.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who answered complaint of possible underage drinking at residence reasonably could have believed that they had probable cause to enter residence without warrant based on exigency, as required to assert qualified immunity against resident/arrestee's § 1983 Fourth Amendment action alleging unreasonable search and seizure; one officer saw individual he knew to be minor drinking beer in kitchen and observed several others run away or into house after officers arrived, and it was not clearly established that officers' knowledge that underage drinking was occurring inside house did not present exigency. Radloff v. City of Oelwein, N.D.Iowa 2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1145, affirmed 380 F.3d 344, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 967, 543 U.S. 1090, 160 L.Ed.2d 900. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Arrestee who brought § 1983 action against police officers demonstrated that officers' training, pursuant to seizure and transportation of arrestee to premises of search warrant, was contrary to decided body of case law, as would preclude qualified immunity for officers' actions; since warrant to search arrestee in advance had been denied, and there was no probable cause subsequently to search him, it was not objectively reasonable in light of established precedent to detain him en route to search of premises. Pappas v. New Haven Police Dept., D.Conn.2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer's arrest and prosecution of motorist after he was told by drug-sniffing dog's handler that dog had alerted to glove compartment were objectively reasonable, in light of fact that cocaine was in fact found in glove compartment, and thus officer was entitled to qualified immunity in motorist's malicious prosecution action under § 1983, even though subsequent prosecutions were dismissed on ground that dog did not alert. Jones v. Fountain, E.D.Tex.2000, 121 F.Supp.2d 571. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Claimant's Fourth Amendment rights were not violated when federal officers searched black bag that was in luggage portion of bus where claimant repeatedly denied ownership of black bag to officers and so forfeited any reasonable expectation of privacy in abandoned property. Bordeaux v. Lynch, N.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 77. Searches And Seizures 28

Police officers were qualifiedly immune from suit brought under § 1983, claiming alleged violations of Fourth Amendment rights in connection with warrantless search of social club; based on information possessed by them, it was objectively reasonable to believe that warrantless entry was lawful because club was open to public. Washington Square Post No. 1212 v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 808 F.Supp. 264. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Officers who searched arrestee's truck were entitled to qualified immunity, in arrestee's subsequent illegal search claim; officers were unaware that arresting officer lacked reasonable suspicion to detain arrestee, and thus acted reasonably in assuming that search of truck followed lawful arrest. Schwab v. Wood, D.Del.1991, 767 F.Supp. 574 . Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if warrantless search of home for fugitive violated owners' Fourth Amendment rights, officer conducting search was entitled to qualified immunity from damages; officer reasonably relied on advice of county district attorney and district justice that search warrant was unnecessary, because arrest warrant and probable cause to believe that fugitive was in residence were sufficient to conduct search. Bratton v. Toboz, M.D.Pa.1991, 764 F.Supp. 965. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City officials, police chief, and female clerk of city who conducted illegal warrantless strip search of homeowner at direction of police chief during search of homeowner's home pursuant to warrant were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for strip search; although clearly established law prohibited expanding scope of search warrant, and no true exigent circumstances could justify search, it was possible that reasonable officers might mistakenly believe that their actions to have been necessary response to emergency, i.e., homeowner's request to use bathroom and officers' fear of "furtive" disposal of evidence. Munz v. Ryan, D.Kan.1990, 752 F.Supp. 1537. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether property owner, by blocking telephone worker's vehicle from leaving driveway, was restraining telephone worker or only telephone worker's vehicle, precluding summary judgment on deputy's §§ 1983 defense of qualified immunity to owner's unreasonable seizure claims arising from her arrest for unreasonable restraint. Collin v. Stephenson, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31409874, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police did not have qualified immunity from suit, by mother arrested for interfering in arrest of her minor son, claiming that warrantless post arrest search of her house violated Fourth Amendment; no reasonable officer could conclude that protective sweep of house was necessary following arrests occurring outside of house, and in any event search exceed scope of protective sweep. Carrasco v. City of Vallejo, E.D.Cal.2001, 2001 WL 34098655, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4057. ---- Officers' perceptions, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Pre-trial detainee, who was found standing next to creek, soaking wet, and reporting that his vehicle was going to "blow up," and who was combative during arrest, did not have objectively serious medical need on intake that required immediate medical attention, from perspective of arresting police officer, as layperson, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis of deliberate indifference civil rights claim of detainee's estate under Fourteenth Amendment, since detainee sat calmly in back of patrol car once arrested, followed directions, answered questions posed, and remained quiet and seated on bench once inside jail. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802 . Constitutional Law 262

Police officer's actions in allowing plaintiff to leave her friend's apartment with her alleged abuser while officer drove her car back to her apartment was not objectively unreasonable, and therefore, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that he violated plaintiff's constitutional rights; plaintiff failed to alert officer about potential danger presented by alleged abuser. Waters v. City of Morristown, TN, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2001, 242 F.3d 353. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Law enforcement officers who searched and effected seizure of truck were entitled to qualified immunity in truck owners' resulting § 1983 action, in view of suspicions raised under circumstances including fact that various vehicle identification numbers (VINs) were missing, that truck was registered to dealer, that truck's present condition did not match its damage record, that truck was reported stolen, that truck was sold with lien on it, that certification form indicating legitimacy of reconditioned truck was suspicious, and that truck was linked to alleged illegal "chop shop." Wren v. Towe, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 130 F.3d 1154, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 51, 525 U.S. 815, 142 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Under doctrine of qualified immunity for § 1983 purposes, perspective, that immunity inquiry must be filtered through lens of officer's perceptions at time of incident in question, serves two purposes: first, using officer's perception of facts at the time limits second-guessing reasonableness of actions with benefit of 20/20 hindsight and, second, using this perspective limits need for decision makers to sort through conflicting versions of "actual" facts. Rowland v. Perry, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 41 F.3d 167. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Off-duty police officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights lawsuit under Fourth Amendment for officer's shooting and killing of unleashed 55 to 60 pound dog that was running in circles within approximately 15 feet of officer; even if officer's shooting of dog was unreasonable seizure, reasonably competent officers could have disagreed as to appropriate course of conduct when faced with potential harm posed by that situation. Dziekan v. Gaynor, D.Conn.2005, 376 F.Supp.2d 267. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Town police officer and chief of police were entitled to qualified immunity from liability as to personal capacity claims brought by owner of pitbull dog seeking damages under § 1983 for officer's shooting and killing of pitbull when it escaped from residence and ran toward officer and police canine as they were attempting to track fleeing suspect; even if officer's shooting of pitbull was an unreasonable seizure under the Fourth Amendment, it was objectively reasonable for him to believe that his actions were lawful at the time. Warboys v. Proulx, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 111. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers of reasonable competence could disagree as to whether any rights of vehicle owner were violated when police officers towed vehicle owner's automobile without warrant, based on suspicion that it was involved in hit-and-run accident, and refused to allow owner to take vehicle, and therefore qualified immunity applied to protect officers from §§ 1983 liability on owner's claims alleging unlawful seizure of vehicle and false imprisonment in violation of his constitutional rights. Figetakis v. City of Cuyahoga Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 112 Fed.Appx. 393, 2004 WL 1859630, Unreported, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2519, 544 U.S. 1064, 161 L.Ed.2d 1116. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' belief that probable cause to charge arrestee existed, based on an error in State computer records indicating that the arrestee's motor vehicle registration was suspended, was objectively reasonable, and thus, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity on the arrestee's malicious prosecution claim under § 1983; arrestee did not allege that, after his arrest and before he appeared in court, any officer received any other information regarding whether he had committed the offense. Mayer v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21222515, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police had qualified immunity from § 1983 claim that they arrested participant in neighborhood altercation for minor offense, not committed in presence of officers, without first obtaining arrest warrant; as law was unclear whether warrant was required in those circumstances, officers could reasonably believe they could arrest based upon probable cause. Hughes v. Shestakov, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1742666, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 450, 2003 WL 22234866. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4058. ---- Involuntary servitude, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officer and youth services officer involved in taking action against student involved in rock-throwing incident were entitled to qualified immunity in connection with student's mother's Thirteenth Amendment claim for involuntary servitude; while student had a clearly established right to be free from involuntary servitude, a reasonable public official would not be aware that instructing a minor in the custody of a juvenile officer to wash police vehicles or depriving minor of food for four hours would constitute involuntary servitude prohibited by the Thirteenth Amendment, and there was no evidence that officers used or threatened to use physical restraint or injury against student or used threat of coercion through law or legal process to compel student to wash vehicles. Buchanan v. City of Bolivar, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1352. Civil Rights 1376(4); Civil Rights 1376(6)

4059. ---- Reliance, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Police officer who, along with Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) agent, participated in allegedly unlawful arrest of arrestee for immigration offense was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's resulting § 1983 action, where officer relied on INS agent's statement that offense was committed, which was result of mistake of law, and officer's own lack of knowledge that such offense existed was not unusual under the circumstances. Liu v. Phillips, C.A.1 (Mass.) 2000, 234 F.3d 55. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action claiming use of tape recorded telephone conversation between arrestee and witness to convince witness to become confidential informant violated wiretap laws, where officers sought prosecutor's advice concerning how tape recording could be used, prosecutor specifically advised them that tape could not be used directly to prosecute arrestee but could be used to persuade witness to testify, officers had no reason to believe that advice was erroneous, and officers acted promptly after receiving advice. Davis v. Zirkelbach, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1998, 149 F.3d 614, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 902, 525 U.S. 1121, 142 L.Ed.2d 901. Civil Rights 1376(6)

When police officer makes arrest on basis of oral statements by fellow officers, officer will be entitled to qualified immunity from liability in civil rights suit for unlawful arrest provided it was objectively reasonable for him to believe, on basis of statements, that probable cause for arrest existed. Rogers v. Powell, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 120 F.3d 446. Civil Rights 1376(6)

State trooper who, in making arrest, acted in reliance on statements of other arresting trooper that clearly and unambiguously related to existence of arrest warrant in adjoining county was protected by qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for unlawful arrest, in that it was objectively reasonable, as a matter of law, for trooper to believe that probable cause existed for arrest. Rogers v. Powell, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 120 F.3d 446. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Emergency order purportedly authorizing police officers to take any steps necessary to cause dispersal of any gathering in city that endangered persons or property would not have led reasonable officer to believe that order altered long-standing California law that assemblies could be dispersed as unlawful only when they constitute clear and present danger, and thus officers were not entitled to qualified immunity for their actions in arresting and detaining protestors. Collins v. Jordan, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 110 F.3d 1363. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers' belief that mother gave her consent to removal of her daughter from school was objectively reasonable, so that officers were entitled to qualified immunity in mother's § 1983 action alleging that removal violated her constitutionally protected liberty interest in custody of daughter, regardless of whether she actually consented; school official told officers that mother consented to removal of daughter from school, and, given close working relationship between officers and official, officers had no reason to believe that mother did not actually consent. Gardiner v. Incorporated Village of Endicott, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 50 F.3d 151. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officers who reasonably relied on caseworkers' assessments when they assisted caseworkers in removing children from parents' home based on report of suspected child abuse were entitled to qualified immunity in parents' civil rights action. Chayo v. Kaladjian, S.D.N.Y.1994, 844 F.Supp. 163. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4060. ---- Private assistance, police officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Even if a request for assistance in making an arrest came from a known law enforcement official, a private defendant in a § 1983 suit for false arrest is not entitled to qualified immunity unless the defendant's belief that probable cause existed was objectively reasonable, as gauged by the standard of a reasonable private citizen in the defendant's position, rather than that of a reasonable law enforcement official; facts necessary to establish the objective reasonableness of a private actor's belief under this standard will necessarily turn on the circumstances of the case. Mejia v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 232. Civil Rights 1373

Private citizen's belief in the existence of probable cause, for purposes of a qualified immunity defense to a § 1983 suit for false arrest arising from assistance rendered to a law enforcement officer, is unreasonable when the assistance he furnishes to the officer is a patently abusive misuse of police authority. Mejia v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 232. Civil Rights 1373

allegedly endangered her safety in violation of due process and seized her in violation of Fourth Amendment. Lockhart-Bembery v. Town of Wayland Police Dept., D.Mass.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 11. Civil Rights 1376(6)

It was objectively reasonable for police officers to take young children into custody when arresting their mother for murder of apartment occupant, providing qualified immunity from claim that action, undertaken without benefit of mother's consent or pre-deprivation hearing, violated mother's due process rights. Richards v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Reasonable police officer would have known that intentionally delaying arrestee's probable cause hearing was unconstitutional act on his part, for purpose of obtaining qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability. Smith v. Eggbrecht, W.D.Ark.2005, 414 F.Supp.2d 882. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who ordered female motorist to push her inoperable vehicle from roadway, without his assistance, or face towing, was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability on civil rights claims, as it was unclear whether reasonable officer would have believed his actions were lawful under clearly established law. Lockhart-Bembery v. Town of Wayland Police Dept., D.Mass.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 373. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4061. Prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement--Generally

A reasonable person in the position of state typist who was responsible for handling prisoners' paperwork would not have known that failing to inquire about inmate's sentencing status when he returned from court without the requisite "court return" form was unlawful, and therefore, typist was entitled to qualified immunity on former state inmate's § 1983 action against prison officials, alleging due process violations in connection with his 57-day incarceration after he was ordered released. Davis v. Hall, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 375 F.3d 703, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Qualified immunity is available to prison official if it was objectively reasonable for public official to believe that his acts did not violate inmate's federal rights. Hathaway v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 37 F.3d 63, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1108, 513 U.S. 1154, 130 L.Ed.2d 1074, on subsequent appeal 99 F.3d 550. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials, who acted "reasonably, but mistakenly" in making a good faith effort to put into effect what the Court of Appeals later characterized as its own legally erroneous interpretation of Maryland law concerning "diminution credits," were entitled to qualified immunity on claims that they violated procedural due process rights of released prisoners who were reincarcerated; rights of released prisoners to continued liberty and/or to procedural due process under the unique circumstances of the case were not so clearly established that a reasonable official should have known of them and that their alleged conduct violated them. Henderson v. Simms, D.Md.1999, 54 F.Supp.2d 499, affirmed 223 F.3d 267, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 770, 531 U.S. 1075, 148 L.Ed.2d 670. Civil Rights 1376(7)

To overcome official's qualified immunity defense, plaintiff must show that official knew or reasonably should have known that action he took within his sphere of official responsibility would violate constitutional rights of plaintiff; in addition, plaintiff must set forth facts underlying his claim, not mere conclusions, before he may subject public officials to trial or to pretrial discovery in § 1983 civil rights case. Jolly v. Klein, S.D.Tex.1996, 923 F.Supp. 931. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1398

Even if federal prisoner stated Eighth Amendment claim against high-level prison officials based on allegations that prisoner was assaulted and abused by other inmates based on his presumed status as homosexual, officials were entitled to qualified immunity absent showing that officials in responding to prisoner's letters violated clearly established law or were objectively unreasonable; prisoner conceded that officials responded to his letters, and letters themselves did not suggest anything other than reasonable action taken by officials. Risley v. Hawk,

D.D.C.1996, 918 F.Supp. 18, affirmed 108 F.3d 1396, 323 U.S.App.D.C. 367, rehearing denied. United States 50.10(3)

Inmates sufficiently established allegations which properly raised legitimate question that their constitutional rights may have been violated by conditions at medium security unit of Nebraska State Penitentiary, and that prison officials knew or should have known that their conduct may have violated such rights; thus, officials were not entitled to defense of qualified immunity. Kitt v. Ferguson, D.Neb.1990, 750 F.Supp. 1014, affirmed 950 F.2d 725. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4061A. ---- Disparate treatment, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Chief deputy county sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity to civil rights claim that he was deliberately indifferent to Eighth Amendment right of arrestee, who committed suicide while in custody; although sheriff told deputy to keep a close eye on arrestee and deputy was only other official available to help jailer with arrestee, deputy did not know that arrestee presented suicide risk and deputy did not know that sheriff forbade jailer from entering cell alone. Turney v. Waterbury, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2004, 375 F.3d 756, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's § 1983 claim brought against them in their individual capacities alleging that officials treated him differently than other inmates in violation of his right to equal protection by taking away his calculator while allowing other inmates to keep similar calculators or calculators with more memory; prisoner sufficiently asserted a violation of a constitutional or statutory right by alleging that officials intentionally treated him differently than other similarly situated inmates without any rational basis for difference in treatment, right was clearly established at time of its alleged violation, and reasonable official would have known that alleged actions violated his right. Damron v. North Dakota Com'r. of Corrections, D.N.D.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 970, affirmed 127 Fed.Appx. 909, 2005 WL 1076645. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4061B. ---- Due process, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Correctional officers were not entitled to qualified immunity on due process claim that they withheld substance of evidence presented at disciplinary proceeding from prisoner, given lack of justification in record to withhold certain information supplied by confidential informants, which formed bulk of evidence against prisoner, and lack of any basis for reasonable officer to have thought otherwise. Sira v. Morton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 2004 WL 1719285, opinion withdrawn, superseded 380 F.3d 57. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials who failed to release inmate for 57 days after judge ordered his release deprived him of his Fourteenth Amendment right to be free from wrongful, prolonged incarceration, thus precluding officials' claim of qualified immunity in inmate's subsequent § 1983 action, since a reasonable government actor would have known that failing to respond to the inmate's requests to be released in keeping with court order that he possessed was unlawful. Davis v. Hall, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 375 F.3d 703, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4061C. ---- Supervision, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

County jailer was entitled to qualified immunity to civil rights claim that she was deliberately indifferent to Eighth Amendment right of arrestee, who committed suicide while in custody, although arrestee had attempted suicide at another jail and jailer did not complete jail intake form, which was typically done when inmate arrived and included questions of whether inmate "ever tried suicide" and "If yes, where at." Turney v. Waterbury, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2004, 375 F.3d 756, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4061D. ---- Excessive force, prison officials, objective reasonable requirement

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Reasonable corrections officers would have exerted force in response to inmate resisting their attempts to restrain him, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's §§ 1983 suit alleging that they used excessive force against him, where inmate was biting one officer, and there was no evidence that amount of force used was malicious and sadistic for purpose of causing harm. Wilkins v. Ramirez, S.D.Cal.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 1080. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4062. ---- Freedom of religion, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's claims against them for damages arising from officials' actions of requiring inmate to attend religion-based narcotics rehabilitation meetings under threat of being rated a higher security risk and suffering adverse effects for parole eligibility; reasonable prison official would not necessarily have known that her actions were unreasonable. Kerr v. Farrey, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 95 F.3d 472. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' decision to deny use of prison chapel to inmate who pastored small new denomination was objectively reasonable, as required for officials to enjoy qualified immunity from suit, since under law then applicable, inmates' religious freedom did not include right to receive facilities identical to that of more populous denominations. Ganther v. Ingle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 75 F.3d 207. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials had objectively reasonable belief that prisoner's participation in residential substance abuse program that allegedly contained religious elements did not violate his rights, and therefore were entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's §§ 1983 action claiming that he was compelled to participate in program in violation of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment; prison officials had previously taken actions in order to bring program into compliance with Establishment Clause, including making Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) and Narcotics Anonymous (NA) participation optional, removing any religious references from inspirational readings, separating religious library materials from secular ones, making use of any religious library materials completely optional, and enacting a rule prohibiting participants from proselytizing but allowing them to discuss the role of religion in their personal recovery, and these steps created an objectively reasonable belief that the program complied with Establishment Clause. Gray v. Johnson, W.D.Va.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 795. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability arising from their enforcement of grooming policy; at relevant time, officials had no reason to believe policy violated Rastafarian inmate's statutory or constitutional rights. Ragland v. Angelone, W.D.Va.2006, 420 F.Supp.2d 507. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether state prison warden's determination to prohibit wearing of religious garb during transport of inmates outside of facility was reasonable restriction on inmate's free exercise of his religious practices, consistent with prison security needs, precluded summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging violation of his First Amendment free exercise rights. Boles v. Neet, D.Colo.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 1237. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's §§ 1983 claim arising from their confiscation of newspaper published by Muslim organization; prisoner clearly alleged a deprivation of actual rights under the First Amendment, it was well established by the time in question that prisoners retain their First Amendment rights inside prison walls, an objectively reasonable official would know that he could not impinge on those rights unless his actions were reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether officials' actions were reasonably related to legitimate penological concerns. Shaheed-Muhammad v. Dipaolo, D.Mass.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 80. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Even if prison officials violated inmate's constitutional rights by transferring him from one correctional facility to another following his constitutionally protected activities of making complaints to prison and church officials while incarcerated, given inmate's disciplinary history and his attempt to obtain personal information about a staff member at first facility, it was objectively reasonable for officials to believe that inmate's transfer did not violate clearly established law, and thus they had qualified immunity in inmate's §§1983 retaliation action. Gonzalez v. Narcato, E.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 486. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections employees and officials did not have qualified immunity in Muslim inmate's §§1983 claim against them alleging that they violated his First Amendment right to free exercise of religion by disciplining him for refusing to assist in preparation of pork while working in prison kitchen, since defendants should have known under governing law that their actions would constitute a deprivation of that constitutional right. Williams v. Bitner, M.D.Pa.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 370. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials did not act in objectively reasonable manner when they forced inmate to participate in religious components of prison's alcohol and substance abuse treatment program, despite inmate's objections to program on religious grounds, and thus were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 claim that his forced participation in program violated Establishment Clause; state's highest court had declared coerced entry into program unconstitutional three months before inmate was forced into program, and governing law did not condition Establishment Clause violation on sincerity of inmate's professed religious beliefs. Alexander v. Schenk, N.D.N.Y.2000, 118 F.Supp.2d 298. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from Muslim inmate's § 1983 claim for alleged violation of his First Amendment rights to freedom of religion; reasonable corrections officer in same position would have known that he could not shove inmate and disrupt his prayer when inmate was praying quietly during quiet time without disturbing others. Arroyo Lopez v. Nuttall, S.D.N.Y.1998, 25 F.Supp.2d 407. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Decision by prison employees to enforce prison rule restricting length of inmates hair was not objectively unreasonable so as to deprive them of qualified immunity for alleged § 1983 violation, where Director of Department of Rehabilitation and Correction had circulated memorandum informing managing officers that legal decision supported department's decision to apply uniformly policy requiring all inmates to receive haircuts and that no exceptions were to be made. Wellmaker v. Dahill, N.D.Ohio 1993, 836 F.Supp. 1375. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Absent evidence that prisoner informed officials that he considered drawing of blood contrary to his religious principles, officials would not have believed they were violating prisoner's First Amendment rights by proceeding with blood draw, and, thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's First Amendment claim. Ryncarz v. Eikenberry, E.D.Wash.1993, 824 F.Supp. 1493. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in state inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging that restrictions placed on his practice of his Native American Religion violated his rights under the First Amendment; restrictions placed on the tobacco and sweat-lodge ceremonies, and the denial of the Lowampi ceremony, were constitutional, and reasonable officials would not have understood they were violating any free-exercise rights in alleged denial of access to a religious advisor, denial of peyote, permitting female employees to handle religious objects or observe religious ceremonies, and denial of certain sacred foods. Runningbird v. Weber, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2006, 198 Fed.Appx. 576, 2006 WL 2466194, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials could reasonably have believed that they effectively and validly revoked inmate's exemption from prison's beard-length policy when they personally informed him of the change in policy, first through corrections officer's giving inmate a copy of memo explaining policy change, and second through hearing on inmate's first misbehavior report conduct, such that they did not violate inmate's due process rights and, thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity from suit under §§ 1983. Young v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 192 Fed.Appx. 31, 2006 WL 2268237, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Reasonable prison official would not have known that denying inmate access to books pertaining to his religion violated First Amendment, and therefore prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability on state inmate's free exercise claim. Roddy v. Banks, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 469, 2005 WL 433404, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was objectively reasonable for a superintendent of a correctional facility to deny an inmate's request for a larger room to conduct meetings of a religious organization and thus, the superintendent was entitled to qualified immunity in the inmate's § 1983 suit; the superintendent relied on a memorandum stating that the room provided for the meetings was "more than adequate." Croswell v. McCoy, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 962534, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials would not reasonably have known that placing inmate in medical keeplock for 41 days for his refusal, on religious grounds, to submit to a tuberculosis (TB) screening test, and subsequently for another 52 days when he refused to accept medication for tuberculosis after he agreed to submit to the test and tested positive, was a violation of his First Amendment freedom of religion rights at the time the conduct occurred in July and October, 1999, and thus, the prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity against the inmate's § 1983 claim for violation of his First Amendment rights. Delisser v. Goord, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 133271, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on federal civil rights claims asserted by non-prisoner who claimed that he was teacher of Nation of Islam doctrine who had divine command to serve as prisoner's religious advisor, where the evidence did not indicate that prison officials were aware that the non-prisoner was prisoner's spiritual advisor, that officials' actions were preventing non-prisoner from fulfilling his divine command to serve as prisoner's religious advisor, that non-prisoner was similarly situated to other people who sent materials to inmates, or that non-prisoner was a member of the Nation of Islam. Proctor v. Toney, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2002, 53 Fed.Appx. 793, 2002 WL 31780046, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4063. ---- Freedom of speech, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for violation of prisoner's constitutional rights in connection with interpretation of regulation allowing punishment of inmates for circulating petition aimed at redressing grievances against prison conditions even though regulation was later held unconstitutionally vague as applied; reasonable official could have thought that regulation provided sufficient notice that inmate's actions could be punished. Wolfel v. Morris, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 972 F.2d 712, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether reasonable person would have known that document that prisoner gave to correctional officer was draft of legal complaint against correctional officer, which fact issue was relevant to whether prison authorities violated clearly established constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known, precluded summary judgment for prison authorities based on qualified immunity, in prisoner's §§ 1983 action alleging that prison authorities violated prisoner's First Amendment free speech rights by placing him in administrative segregation in alleged retaliation for exercising his First Amendment free speech rights by drafting a lawsuit against correctional officer. Bacon v. Taylor, D.Del.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 475.

4064. ---- Access to mail, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable prison administrators would not have realized that they were violating prisoners' First Amendment free speech rights by opening prisoners' legal mail outside of prisoners' presence to protect health and safety of prisoners and staff, although administrators maintained policy after three relatively uneventful years had passed after September 11 terrorist attacks and subsequent anthrax concerns; policy was reasonable when established and case upon which prisoners' claim had been based effectively had been overruled as to other point of law and otherwise had not been clarified as to claim. Jones v. Brown, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 461 F.3d 353. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's claim, under § 1983, that Oregon regulation prohibiting prisoner from receiving materials sent by bulk mail was unconstitutional; reasonable prison officials would have had no basis for assuming that regulation was unconstitutional in face of two district court decisions from district in which prison was located which had concluded that regulation was not unconstitutional, and fact that there was conflict in views of district court judges demonstrated that constitutionality of regulation was not clearly established until Court of Appeals held, eighteen months later, that prohibiting receipt of commercial bulk mail was unconstitutional. Bahrampour v. Lampert, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 356 F.3d 969. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Resident unit manager at correctional facility could reasonably have concluded that prison regulation prohibiting receipt of bulk mail by inmates was constitutional, and thus manager was entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's suit that alleged violations of his First Amendment right to receive mail. Sheets v. Moore, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 97 F.3d 164, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1261, 520 U.S. 1122, 137 L.Ed.2d 339. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable prison official would not believe that it was proper to punish an inmate for mailing out correspondence with both his committed name and his religious name on it, and thus prison officials were not entitled to summary judgment based on qualified immunity in action by inmate alleging violation of his statutory and constitutional rights by refusing to process out-going mail in which inmate used his religious, rather than his committed, name. Malik v. Brown, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1995, 71 F.3d 724. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was objectively reasonable for prison officials who in November 1994 screened prison inmate's outgoing mail, which has been reclassified as "incoming" due to insufficient postage, pursuant to prison regulations, to believe that their actions did not violate inmate's First Amendment rights, and thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action; at time of events in question, existing law held that prison officials may permissibly inspect or read outgoing mail for good cause, which was established when letter was reclassified as "incoming" mail due to insufficient postage. Minigan v. Irvin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 607. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison warden was entitled to qualified immunity from individual liability for money damages on inmate's civil rights claim based on prison policy directive banning bulk mail delivery, absent any binding precedent providing that inmate's right to receive bulk mail was clearly established constitutional right of which reasonable person would have known. Kalasho v. Kapture, E.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 882. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4065. ---- Privacy rights, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's action challenging alleged violation of his privacy rights resulting from design of prison dormitory's bathroom area; reasonable persons in officials' positions could have failed to appreciate that the construction of prison facility and guard assignments would violate inmate's rights. Arey v. Robinson, D.Md.1992, 819 F.Supp. 478. Prisons 10

4066. ---- Pretrial detainees, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable jailer would not have known on intake that pre-trial detainee, who said that he had lost his straw when asked about taking drugs, had objectively serious medical need, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis of deliberate indifference civil rights claim of detainee's estate under Fourteenth Amendment, since detainee followed directions, answered questions posed, and remained quiet and seated on bench once inside jail. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police officers' conduct regarding possibility that pretrial detainee would commit suicide was objectively reasonable in light of detainee's clearly established right to be free from officers' deliberate indifference to detainee's serious medical needs, and officers were thus entitled to qualified immunity in resulting, § 1983 action brought by detainee's estate, where officers removed detainee's shoes because they had laces, ensured that detainee had no belt, determined that detainee could not harm herself with blanket because she was not strong enough to tear it, and instructed others to keep close check on detainee. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1998, 135 F.3d 320. Civil Rights 1376(6)

City police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability to female arrestee who alleged that bathroom at county jail was exposed to view of male officers and prisoners; officers were directed to bring detainees to jail, had no control over its design, and had no ability to permit arrestees to use other facilities, and, thus, reasonable officer would not have known about any illegality in taking arrestee to the designated jail. Walton v. City of Southfield, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1993, 995 F.2d 1331. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In determining whether officer was entitled to qualified immunity in connection with suicide death of jail detainee, issue was whether objective officer in officer's position would have reasonably believed that his conduct amounted to "deliberate indifference"--not whether officer's conduct was reasonable. Bowen v. City of Manchester, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1992, 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1376(7)

County official acted reasonably in dealing with disruptive arrestee while in county jail, so as to receive qualified immunity from suit after arrestee died from choking on bar of soap; on previous day officer had ordered city, for whom county was providing facilities for part of time, to take patient away after she injured herself banging her head on bars, and on day in question official had observed arrestee pacing in partially flooded cell with excrement lying on floor, had ordered water turned off and arrestee returned to custody of city prior to soap swallowing incident. Hardin v. Hayes, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1992, 957 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Jail officials acted with discretion with respect to their placement and treatment of a pretrial detainee, and thus, were entitled to official immunity under Minnesota law with respect to the negligence claims arising from the detainee's attempted suicide, absent any evidence that they acted maliciously; officials exercised their judgment and discretion in determining how to best care for the detainee in accordance with a physician's orders and with his conclusion that the detainee could be manipulating the system, and they promptly took the detainee to the hospital when they discovered he had harmed himself. Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 756, affirmed 439 F.3d 441, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 445 F.3d 1038, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Prisons 10

Officers of sheriff's department did not violate clearly established law in 1986 when they allegedly denied pretrial detainee access to telephone for first 67 hours of his incarceration and, thus, officers were qualifiedly immune from § 1983 liability; detainee's attorney represented him at bond hearing one or two days after his incarceration and had conference with him at jail within two or three days, and detainee was allowed free phone access after fourth day of his incarceration. Tucker v. Randall, N.D.Ill.1993, 840 F.Supp. 1237. Civil Rights 1376(6)

County prison warden and deputy warden did not have qualified immunity from liability for violation of pretrial detainees' due process rights by doubling-up of detainees in cell designed for one inmate and forcing detainees to sleep on mattresses on cell floors for period greater than few days; warden and deputy warden should have known similar conduct had been declared unconstitutional. Newkirk v. Sheers, E.D.Pa.1993, 834 F.Supp. 772. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Police chief was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for forcing middle school students, who had been detained for suspected disorderly conduct, to wash police patrol cars; reasonable officer at that time would have known that he could not punish pretrial detainees. C-1 by P-1 v. City of Horn Lake, Miss., N.D.Miss.1990, 775 F.Supp. 940. Civil Rights 1376(6)

4067. ---- Access to counsel, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison mailroom supervisor was entitled to qualified immunity from damages in inmate's suit challenging mailroom policy of preventing inmates' access to telephone directory listings of attorneys sent to them through mail, where supervisor reasonably believed that inmates had reasonable alternatives to acquire names of attorneys. Foster v. Basham, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 932 F.2d 732, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4068. ---- Access to court, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Reasonable prison officer would have known that seizing computer-generated legal papers prepared on behalf of another inmate from prisoner's cell was unlawful, so that prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's § 1983 action, as regulation that prohibited prisoner from possessing unauthorized materials could not be reasonably understood to give prisoner, who was also librarian, adequate notice that his conduct was forbidden, and in view of evidence that prison officials created regulation specifically governing possession of other prisoners' legal materials three weeks after incident. Newell v. Sauser, C.A.9 (Alaska) 1996, 79 F.3d 115. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were not entitled to summary judgment on their claim of qualified immunity since inmate made adequate showing of actual injury to court access so as to show that prison officials' conduct in denying inmate photocopying services and use of pen, if true, violated clearly established constitutional rights; inmate was injured when his petition to court was refused since inmate submitted only a single copy, regardless of fact that inmate eventually had his petition duplicated and filed with court. Allen v. Sakai, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1994, 48 F.3d 1082. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability for alleged denial of court access for prisoner who was housed in maximum security unit and was not allowed to use main law library, but was provided with satellite law library, paging system to obtain photocopies of materials at main law library, and varying degrees of assistance by paralegals and attorney; constitutional standard was inexplicitly defined, and reasonable officials could conclude that their conduct was not unlawful. Abdul-Akbar v. Watson, C.A.3 (Del.) 1993, 4 F.3d 195. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison library defendants were not entitled to dismissal of prisoner's access to courts and First Amendment retaliation claims on basis of qualified immunity; it was not objectively reasonable for defendants intentionally to frustrate prisoner's access to the courts by denying his initial requests for copies and requiring him to procure a court order to receive copies of a court-issued order to show cause (OTSC) when prison regulations did not require such an order and the OTSC could not be copied longhand nor was it reasonable for defendants to damage prisoner's typewriter to punish him for filing grievances and exercising his First Amendment rights. Collins v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 399. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's § 1983 claim for prison's refusal to send legal mail, where addressee was not listed as member of state bar in up-to-date edition of directory, and addressee's last name was similar to inmate's; officials could reasonably have concluded that addressee was attempting to mail personal letter to relative. Pacheco v. Comisse, N.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 671. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Illinois prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's civil rights action based on allegation that they withheld Washington state legal materials until after his Washington appeal had been dismissed; interference with inmate's right of access to courts was not objectively reasonable, and officials advanced no legitimate security justification for their actions. LaRue v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1991, 780 F.Supp. 1190. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

For purpose of determining whether state prison officials had qualified immunity from liability under this section for depriving state prisoner of right of access to courts, the prison officials reasonably should have known, when they transferred the prisoner to a federal penitentiary which had allegedly had no state legal materials in its law library, of both the prisoner's constitutional right of access to the courts and their own duty to help provide for its fulfillment. Blake v. Berman, D.C.Mass.1984, 598 F.Supp. 1081. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was objectively reasonable for prison officials to believe that inmate was not denied access to the courts by expecting him to cooperate with the contract attorney assigned to assist him, and by declining to provide him further legal assistance after he filed a bar complaint against the contract attorney who in fact had been attempting to assist him, and thus, officials were protected by qualified immunity in § 1983 action in which inmate alleged that their actions violated his right of access to the courts. Scholl v. Delaney, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1363, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Actions of state prison authorities in instituting and implementing a new inmate legal-assistance program, under which prison law library was closed in favor of providing contract attorneys to assist inmates with their legal needs, were objectively reasonable, and thus, authorities were protected by qualified immunity in § 1983 action in which inmate alleged that program violated his constitutional rights. Eaton v. Dooley, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1362, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4069. ---- Assault, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Evidence that anonymous note was delivered to prison security officer, indicating that cellmate planned to stab inmate while inmate slept, and that officer failed to separate the two inmates or check for weapons in the barracks was insufficient to establish that officer recklessly disregarded known risk, so as bar qualified immunity defense in inmate's Eighth Amendment action arising when he was stabbed by cellmate in prison cafeteria; officer promptly investigated the note, both inmate and cellmate denied there were any problems. Jackson v. Everett, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1998, 140 F.3d 1149, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate who had been beaten by another inmate failed to show that prison officials violated Eighth Amendment by failing to act reasonably despite knowledge of substantial risk of serious harm to inmate, and thus prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity; inmate's pleadings alleged that he had been threatened by attacker, but threats between inmates are common, prison officials consulted inmate prior to attacker's transfer to inmate's facility, prison officials had assurances from both inmates that there would be no trouble, and inmate and his attacker were incarcerated together for substantial period of time without incident. Prater v. Dahm, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 89 F.3d 538. Sentencing And Punishment 1537; Prisons 17(4)

Prison officials were not held to higher standard of behavior than existing law at time in federal civil rights suit brought by prisoner who was burned in fire started by cellmate; prison officials admitted that they knew they had duty to protect inmates from other inmates and could not have reasonably believed that their indifference to prisoner's pleas for help was lawful. Haley v. Gross, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 86 F.3d 630. Civil Rights 1093; Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Prison official was entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's § 1983 action that claimed that official failed to prevent attack by fellow inmate, given surprise nature of attack. Prosser v. Ross, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1005. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison sergeant was not entitled to qualified immunity from claim that he pulled inmate from his cell by shoulder and hair, slammed inmate's head against bars of adjacent cell and struck him twice in the face and kneed him in the groin; reasonable prison sergeant should reasonably have known that such conduct violated Eighth Amendment. Hill v. Shelander, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 992 F.2d 714. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officer was not immune from inmate's § 1983 suit; it was not objectively reasonable for officer to stand by and watch another officer beat a handcuffed and naked inmate. Buckner v. Hollins, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 983 F.2d 119, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison guard who fatally shot prisoner who was attempting to escape could reasonably have believed his actions were lawful, and was thus entitled to qualified immunity in civil rights action based on the shooting; it was objectively reasonable for guard to believe escape could not reasonably be prevented in less violent manner, given that guard recognized prisoner and knew about prior incident involving serious assault by prisoner on correctional officer with mop wringer and of prior escape attempt by prisoner, and guard saw prisoner climb over interior fence, climb up perimeter fence and jump into open land which separated prison from wooded area, although numerous guards and inmates were calling to prisoner to stop. Clark v. Evans, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1988, 840 F.2d 876. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Warden, Director of Prisons, and Secretary of Corrections were not entitled to qualified immunity from money damages awarded prisoner who was subjected to water hosing, tear gas and beating, since officials had explicit legal guideposts to follow in discharging their duties, and they were or should have been aware of their firmly established duty to ensure that legitimate instruments of control were not misused; moreover, whether or not officials were actually aware of their constitutional and statutory obligations, they were presumed to know what the law required, and could be legally accountable for conduct that violated fixed standards. Slakan v. Porter, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1984, 737 F.2d 368, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1413, 470 U.S. 1035, 84 L.Ed.2d 796. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison official was entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action for alleged deliberate indifference in violation of Eighth Amendment, in connection with official's response to incident in which he accidentally opened two cells, allowing inmates to get out and allegedly attack inmate, and did not immediately open another door to allow responding staff in to help, as a reasonable officer could have believed that his response was lawful. Glenn v. Berndt, N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison guard was not entitled to affirmative defense of qualified immunity, in suit by inmate for Eighth Amendment violation in form of three blows to inmate's face; evidence showed that guard knew his actions were unlawful, guard acted with wanton state of mind, and law of circuit made it clear that contemporary standards of decency are always violated when prison guard wantonly applies force to a prisoner to cause harm regardless of whether significant injury is evident. Romaine v. Rawson, N.D.N.Y.2001, 140 F.Supp.2d 204. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable official in prison guard's alleged position would have understood that ignoring threat of assault upon inmate by another prisoner would violate inmate's Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment, and thus, guard was not entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 suit. Rider v. Louw, E.D.Mich.1997, 957 F.Supp. 983. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Parents of inmate who was killed in prison sufficiently stated § 1983 claim against prison officials for damages for violation of both their son's constitutional rights and their own constitutional rights to parent-child relationship, and thus, officials were not entitled to qualified immunity; parents alleged that officials acted with deliberate indifference to son's constitutional right to be reasonably protected from attack from fellow inmates and reasonable jury could conclude that reasonable persons in officials' position could have known that their conduct violated constitutional right to be reasonably protected from attack by fellow inmates. Steffenhagen v. Armontrout, W.D.Mo.1990, 749 F.Supp. 997. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in their individual capacities with regard to constitutional claims brought by widow of repeat prisoner who hung himself in jail; even if jailers violated state regulations, statutes or departmental procedure regarding jail staffing or observation of prisoners, jailers' conduct did not constitute deliberate indifference to prisoner's safety from self-harm and reasonable officer in each of jailers' positions could have believed that he was acting consistently with Constitution. Popham v. City of Talladega, N.D.Ala.1989, 742 F.Supp. 1504, affirmed 908 F.2d 1561. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison official alleged to have used excessive force when handcuffing an inmate was entitled to qualified immunity, given the inmate's admission that he violated cuffing procedures by withdrawing his uncuffed hand, disobeying the officer's orders, and demanding his other hand be uncuffed, together with the official's and other officers' reasonable belief that the inmate was attempting to pull the cuffs into his cell and might use them as a weapon. Avery v. Anderson, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 94 Fed.Appx. 735, 2004 WL 723243, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison official was not shielded by qualified immunity against excessive force claim by state prisoner, arising from incident in which official allegedly punched prisoner in ribs during pat down search; reasonable official would have believed that punching prisoner in ribs violated prisoner's rights. Kalwasinski v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22973420, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4070. ---- Classification of inmates, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

When associate warden reviewed inmate's classification and allowed him to be continued to be double-celled, reasonable correctional officer would not have clearly understood that risk of serious harm was so high that authorizing inmate's double-celling was impermissible under Eighth Amendment, and therefore associate warden was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability to estate and family of cellmate killed by inmate; although associate warden was aware of inmate's extensive history of violent behavior toward inmates and staff and knew that inmate could be housed in single cell while awaiting transfer to special handling unit, inmate had been under observation for two weeks since incident with different cellmate, had been returned on medications to unit without recommendation for single-celling, and had been housed safely with another cellmate for several days. Estate of Ford v. Ramirez-Palmer, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2002, 301 F.3d 1043. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable official in correctional officer's position could have believed that inmate did not pose substantial or intolerable safety risk to particular cellmate when officer had recently reviewed inmate's file, was aware of inmate's history of violence and aggressive behavior toward a cellmate when off medications, and knew that inmate and particular cellmate had previously been housed together without problems, had requested to cell together, were not enemies, did not have gang-related conflict, and were not considered "predator" and "victim" respectively; thus, officer was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 and Eighth Amendment in connection with inmate's killing of cellmate, even though officer failed to re-review inmate's files before approving double-celling of inmate and cellmate. Estate of Ford v. Ramirez-Palmer, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2002, 301 F.3d 1043. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officials who were personally involved in involuntary protective custody (IPC) determination were not entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's due process claims arising from her IPC confinement; officials' concerns for the safety and security of the facility did not support prisoner's IPC confinement, and officials' fears for prisoner's safety were not objectively reasonable. Smart v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials sued under § 1983 did not have qualified immunity from prisoner's claim that they showed deliberate indifference to his safety when they moved him from administrative segregation, where he was placed after being stabbed by alleged gang member, back to same part of prison which housed gang, members of which had threatened to kill him; reasonable officer would know that return under those circumstances was Eighth Amendment violation. Sweet v. Hernandez, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21920921, Unreported, affirmed 107 Fed.Appx. 775, 2004 WL 1859842. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4071. ---- Conditions of confinement, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Given known dangers of friable asbestos at time of alleged violation, reasonable person would have understood that exposing inmate to friable asbestos could violate Eighth Amendment, and thus defendant prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim, alleging that inmate's continuous health problems caused by exposure to friable asbestos in air went unattended at correctional facility due to officials' failure to keep him in asbestos-free environment. LaBounty v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 137 F.3d 68, on remand 1999 WL 165711. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether reasonable correctional officers in a similar situation could disagree that correctional officer's alleged smoking in law library violated inmate's right to be free from involuntary exposure to unreasonable levels of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS), precluded summary judgment for officer based upon qualified immunity defense, in inmate's § 1983 action. Gill v. Smith, N.D.N.Y.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 763. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Correctional officers did not act unreasonably in assigning inmate with mental problems to double cell with plaintiff, and thus, they could not be held liable in §§ 1983 action alleging deliberate indifference in violation of Eighth Amendment, given uncontradicted evidence that inmate had been taking his prescribed medication, had been screened for classification placement, and had been cleared for general population housing. Jones v. Beard, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 743, 2005 WL 1995438, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1538

4072. ---- Disciplinary hearings, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Correctional officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on due process claim arising from inadequacies of prison disciplinary charge, as reasonable officer would not have believed that report, which did not provide notice of date of disciplinary offense or of identity of victims, and which did little more than track language of disciplinary rules, was sufficiently specific to allow inmate to prepare defense. Sira v. Morton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 2004 WL 1719285, opinion withdrawn, superseded 380 F.3d 57. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Corrections officials were not entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's due process claim of inadequate notice of charges constituting basis of prison disciplinary hearing; a reasonable corrections officer could not have believed that the misbehavior report, which was devoid of any factual detail and contained an inaccurate incident date, was adequate to permit prisoner to identify and marshal the facts pertinent to a defense, satisfied due process. Sira v. Morton, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 380 F.3d 57. Civil Rights 1376(7)

At time of hearing officers' decisions in prison disciplinary matter, reasonable officer would not have known that quantum of evidence relied on in finding prisoner guilty of stabbing another inmate, namely misbehavior report and letter from inmate claiming to have been stabbed by prisoner, together with fact that inmate had actually been stabbed, was clearly insufficient, and thus officers were entitled to qualified immunity in prisoner's § 1983 action for violation of his due process rights; "some evidence" standard employed at hearing was not precise, no controlling decisions existed on facts presented, and there was state law that arguably supported officers' positions. Luna v. Pico, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 356 F.3d 481. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was objectively reasonable for prison superintendent to believe that it was permissible for inmate's administrative hearing to commence within 14 days of inmate's initial confinement for making overtures to female employee, even though confinement was initiated by filing of misbehavior report and pertinent state regulation required that disciplinary hearing with regard to misbehavior report be commenced within seven days, where inmate was transferred fairly promptly after his initial confinement from keeplock to involuntary protective custody (IPC) under prison's policy to treat displays of affection by male inmates toward female employees not as disciplinary matters but as matters for administrative confinement, requiring hearing within 14 days; thus, superintendent had qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging violation of due process as result of superintendent's failure to commence hearing within seven days of initial confinement. Green v. Bauvi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 46 F.3d

189. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Precluding prison monitor from testifying at disciplinary hearing was objectively reasonable since New York courts had found the policy to be reasonable, and, thus, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability. Smith v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 938 F.2d 19. Civil Rights 1376(7); Prisons 13(9)

Neither hearing officer presiding over prison disciplinary hearing nor reviewing officer could invoke protection of qualified immunity with respect to inmate's § 1983 action alleging that hearing officer's failure to make independent assessment of reliability of confidential informant violated inmate's right to due process; at time of hearing, clearly established law required prison disciplinary hearing officers to make independent assessment of reliability of confidential informants. Gomez v. Kaplan, S.D.N.Y.1997, 964 F.Supp. 830. Civil Rights 1376(7)

It was objectively reasonable, at prison disciplinary hearing, for hearing officer to believe that his questioning of two corrections officers regarding credibility of confidential informants, rather than questioning informants directly, was sufficient to satisfy his due process obligation to assess credibility of confidential informants, and therefore the hearing officer was protected by doctrine of qualified immunity in the prisoner's subsequent § 1983 action which alleged hearing officer's failure to interview confidential informants violated his due process rights. Campo v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 814. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claims that officials interfered with his exercise of his due process rights with regard to his release from prehearing confinement or disciplinary hearing, since it was objectively reasonable for officials to believe that their conduct was within constitutional limits. Hodges v. Jones, N.D.N.Y.1995, 873 F.Supp. 737. Civil Rights 1376(7)

No reasonable prison official would have believed that conduct of disciplinary hearing was unconstitutional and, thus, officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action; inmate's own testimony and clear record of hearing established that inmate was given opportunity to exercise his due process rights and there was no evidence supporting reasonable inference of bias. Abdul-Matiyn v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, N.D.N.Y.1994, 871 F.Supp. 1542, affirmed 66 F.3d 309. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison superintendent was not entitled to qualified immunity with respect to inmate's claim that he was allowed to call only two of his requested 21 witnesses, notwithstanding superintendent's contention that he was not involved in disciplinary hearing at which request was denied; at time of disciplinary proceeding, superintendent reasonably should have known that inmate had clearly established right not to be denied witnesses without reason, and inmate's statutory entitlement to superintendent's review of disciplinary board determinations potentially placed superintendent among those who might bear responsibility for screening officer's denial of witness request. Feagin v. Broglin, N.D.Ind.1988, 693 F.Supp. 736. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Members of prison disciplinary committee acted in objectively reasonable manner, and were entitled to qualified immunity for their acts, in enforcing visitation rule challenged by prisoner as unconstitutionally vague. Shaddy v. Gunter, D.Neb.1988, 690 F.Supp. 860. Prisons 10

4073. ---- Exercise or recreation, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

It would not have been objectively reasonable for prison official to believe that possibility of staff unrest, or of contagion, from inmate's refusal to submit to latent tuberculosis (TB) testing was sufficient to trigger safety exception to clearly established Eighth Amendment right to exercise and, thus, official was not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 liability for keeping inmate in "medical keeplock" without out-of-cell exercise until he submitted to testing; prisoners with latent TB were permitted to remain in general population, inmate had not objected to test for contagious active TB, and arrangements could have made for inmate to exercise separately.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Williams v. Greifinger, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 97 F.3d 699. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' failure to provide inmate with outdoor recreation when officials had knowledge of prison's goal to provide five hours of exercise per week precluded summary judgment for prison officials on their claim of qualified immunity, even though officials claimed that logistical problems made it difficult to provide adequate exercise; inmate met both objective and subjective elements of his Eighth Amendment claim as he alleged deprivation of basic human need and proved that for six weeks, inmate was permitted out of his cell only weekly for exercise. Allen v. Sakai, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1994, 48 F.3d 1082. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Warden and other prison official could not have reasonably believed that withholding out-of-cell exercise from inmate for six months, even during prison lockdown, was constitutionally justified, in light of prior case law that had firmly established that prisoners had constitutional right to exercise, and in light of both consent decree and case law that prohibited prolonged and severe denials of exercise; thus, warden and other officials were not entitled to qualified immunity with regard to inmate's § 1983 suit alleging that deprivation of exercise for six months was cruel and unusual punishment. Delaney v. DeTella, N.D.Ill.2000, 123 F.Supp.2d 429, order affirmed and remanded 256 F.3d 679. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from inmate's claims that they violated the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment by depriving him of outdoor exercise on certain occasions and for short periods of time; although it might have been apparent at the time that complete deprivation of outdoor exercise for substantial period of time violated the Eighth Amendment it was not apparent that limited and sporadic deprivations of such exercise were unlawful. Davidson v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 121. Civil Rights 1376(7)

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action under § 1983, alleging that inmate's constitutional rights were violated on ground that officials knew of and disregarded obvious danger that there would be violent retaliation among inmates when groups who had been placed on lockdown were released into exercise yard together, where officials could reasonably have believed that their conduct in implementing yard release was lawful. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107989, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4074. ---- Medical care, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Jailer, who was aware that pretrial detainee likely was under influence of methamphetamine on intake, did not subjectively know that detainee required medical attention, for purpose of qualified immunity analysis of deliberate indifference civil rights claim of detainee's estate under Fourteenth Amendment, since jailer did not know amount of methamphetamine taken or time that it had been taken, jailer could not readily determine degree of detainee's intoxication because detainee would not answer questions about his drug use and later refused to consent to blood draw, and detainee's behavior at time of intake did not suggest high degree of intoxication. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Constitutional Law 262

County sheriff had no knowledge of pre-trial detainee's serious medical needs, and thus was entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action brought by pre-trial detainee's sister under the Due Process clause alleging deliberate indifference to detainee's needs resulted in his death; the sheriff had no personal interaction with the pre-trial detainee during his incarceration, and there was no indication that the sheriff knew the pre-trial detainee had been vomiting for several hours, was not provided with his anti-depressant medication for two to three days preceding his death, or had heart problems that put him at risk for a heart attack. Vaughn v. Greene County, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 438 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Prison personnel's refusal to give prisoner medical treatment during his time in strip cage despite his complaints of pain and swelling in his leg was not objectively unreasonable in light of clearly established Eighth Amendment rights, for purpose of prison personnel's claim to qualified immunity in prisoner's civil rights lawsuit which alleged deliberate indifference to serious medical needs, since medical records did not support prisoner's argument that he suffered sufficiently serious injury such that even lay person easily would have recognized necessity for doctor's attention. Jarriett v. Wilson, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 414 F.3d 634. Civil Rights 1376(7)

County sheriff was not entitled to qualified immunity to civil rights claim that he was deliberately indifferent to Eighth Amendment right of arrestee, who committed suicide while in custody, where sheriff knew of, but did not investigate, arrestee's earlier suicide attempt at jail from which he was transferred, sheriff did not permit jailer to complete arrestee's intake form, sheriff placed arrestee in cell alone with bed sheet and exposed ceiling bars, and sheriff ordered jailer not to enter arrestee's cell without backup and yet he left her as only official at jail. Turney v. Waterbury, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2004, 375 F.3d 756, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Decision of director of prison's medical services to adhere to prison doctor's order that prison need not provide inmate with continuous positive air pressure machine (CPAP) to treat his obstructive sleep apnea (OSA) was objectively reasonable in light of legal rules in place at time of her adherence, and thus director was entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for alleged Eighth Amendment violation, even though director had some medical training as nurse and inmate personally told director about his condition, where director was functioning in administrative role, and was not responsible for examining or treating inmate herself. Meloy v. Bachmeier, C.A.8 (N.D.) 2002, 302 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Law was clearly established at time of detention that if reasonable official would have known that observation and treatment of detainee was necessary, refusal to provide access to treatment would constitute deliberate indifference to detainee's constitutional rights, for purposes of determining whether jail officials were entitled to qualified immunity from resulting civil rights claim. Foulks v. Cole County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 991 F.2d 454. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials who deliberately ignore serious medical needs of inmates cannot claim it was not apparent to reasonable person that such actions violated law, and officials have shown deliberate indifference precluding finding of qualified immunity. Hamilton v. Endell, C.A.9 (Alaska) 1992, 981 F.2d 1062. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable prison official who observed, or who was notified about, prisoner's injuries sustained from inappropriate footwear, would know that delays or failure to mitigate or prevent further pain and damage to prisoner's right foot would constitute the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain, and would therefore violate a clearly established constitutional right, on qualified immunity analysis. Lavender v. Lampert, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 821. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' alleged denial of necessary medical treatment recommended by prisoner's physicians for his Hepatitis C was not objectively reasonable, and thus could not form basis for qualified immunity against civil rights liability, if denial was in fact based upon prisoner's testing positive for marijuana and not for any medical reason. Johnson v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 352. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Issue of whether reasonable physician in prison doctor's position would have understood that he was violating inmate's constitutional rights by withholding warm water compresses as treatment for his jaw condition involved fact question that could not be resolved on motion to dismiss inmate's §§ 1983 suit against doctor on qualified immunity grounds. Carter v. Fagin, S.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 661. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Reasonable prison official ought to have understood in 1998 that restraining mentally ill prisoner for twenty-two hours, with no penal justification, no food or water, and no access to bathroom, violated that prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights, and thus officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under §§ 1983. Ziemba v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 173, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 430 F.3d 623. Civil Rights 1376(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Qualified immunity did not apply to shield from §§ 1983 liability prison medical employees who allegedly were deliberately indifferent to prisoner's urgent medical needs and city administrative employees who allegedly knew of, but failed to remedy, such constitutional violations by prison medical employees, inasmuch as deliberate indifference to prisoner's medical needs and failure to remedy deliberate indifference were not objectively reasonable actions. Carrasquillo v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison physicians, nurse, and social worker were entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's suit alleging violation of Eighth Amendment based on delay in treatment of his mental illness, since reasonable persons could have disagreed whether prisoner's condition presented serious medical need, and whether failure to transfer prisoner to state psychiatric hospital, or not give other care, constituted denial of constitutionally adequate care and treatment. R.T. v. Gross, N.D.N.Y.2003, 298 F.Supp.2d 289. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Lieutenant in his individual capacity was entitled to qualified immunity to claim of deliberate indifference brought by guardian of head-injured arrestee, in § 1983 lawsuit under Fourteenth Amendment, where guardian only made conclusory allegation that lieutenant was present at jail when arrestee was injured; there were no allegations suggesting that lieutenant was present after arrestee had been treated, or that lieutenant had any direct knowledge that arrestee subsequently exhibited strange behavior or that his subordinates failed to transport arrestee to hospital after having been ordered to do so by doctor. Layman v. Alexander, W.D.N.C.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 784. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Physicians and hospitals involved in treatment of state prison inmate's alleged kidney stones and other ailments were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action for alleged violation of his Eighth Amendment rights; physicians and hospitals had objectively reasonable belief that their actions in treating inmate were appropriate and lawful, and none knowingly engaged in conduct that violated inmate's rights. Brown v. Selwin, S.D.N.Y.1999, 250 F.Supp.2d 299, affirmed 29 Fed.Appx. 762, 2002 WL 355901.

Physician, who was to provide supervision of medical care and evaluate programs, service, and adequacy of jail treatment facilities, trained nurses regarding alcohol withdrawal, and thus physician did not have sufficiently culpable state of mind as would defeat defense of qualified immunity to § 1983 failure to train claim on behalf of deceased pretrial detainee; physician provided nurses with protocols and policies to deal with alcohol with alcohol withdrawal and conducted monthly meetings during which the policies were discussed, and nurses were experienced licensed practical nurses (LPN). Smith v. LeJeune, D.Wyo.2002, 203 F.Supp.2d 1260. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Detention facility nurse was not entitled to qualified immunity from pre-trial detainee's claim under § 1983, where nurse reasonably should have understood that her conduct constituted deliberate indifference to detainee's serious medical needs, in violation of detainee's clearly established due process rights; nurse relied exclusively on detainee's pulse rate to determine that her vaginal bleeding was not miscarriage, made no attempt to confirm whether detainee was pregnant, refused to provide detainee with sanitary supplies, and thereafter left detainee without medical attention. Ferris v. County of Kennebec, D.Me.1999, 44 F.Supp.2d 62. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Conduct of correctional facility's superintendent, medical director, and staff physicians in attempting to remedy prisoner's foot discomfort was objectively reasonable, entitling officials to qualified immunity from § 1983 civil rights suit by prisoner alleging failure to provide appropriate medical care; officials responded promptly to prisoner's complaint, and both orthotics and special boots were requisitioned and fitted on numerous occasions. Williams v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 566. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison nurse was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability for civil damages arising from nurse's administering a tranquilizer to inmate in each of his buttocks; it was not objectively reasonable for nurse to believe that her conduct was constitutionally permissible. Blissett v. Eisensmidt, N.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 449. Civil

Rights 1376(7)

County jail physician was not shown to be entitled to qualified immunity defense in inmate's § 1983 civil rights action against county jail physician, arising from alleged denial of prompt and adequate medical treatment of inmate's penile and testicular problems; inmate alleged specific facts that, if proven, indicated that physician knew or reasonably should have known that his actions and/or omissions would violate inmate's constitutional right to adequate medical care. Jolly v. Klein, S.D.Tex.1996, 923 F.Supp. 931. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Personal representative of estate of pretrial detainee who committed suicide in jail failed to demonstrate that reasonable person in shoes of police officers would have known that he or she was acting with deliberate indifference to detainee's serious medical needs, as would preclude officers from enjoying qualified immunity; detainee's behavior did not suggest that he was imminent danger to himself since he answered questions directly and clearly, walked to his cell without problems, ate breakfast, and engaged in telephone conversation. Estate of Frank v. City of Beaver Dam, E.D.Wis.1996, 921 F.Supp. 590. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Reasonable prison nurse would have been aware that failure to examine inmate complaining of stroke symptoms was in derogation of inmate's constitutional rights, and thus nurse was not entitled to qualified immunity from liability under § 1983 for damages arising from delay in procuring medical care for inmate. Tate v. Coffee County, Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2002, 48 Fed.Appx. 176, 2002 WL 31245966, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4075. ---- Probation, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials did not act reasonably in light of preexisting law mandating due process in connection with Idaho program which placed individuals in correctional institutions to be evaluated for potential release on probation, and officials thus were not qualifiedly immune from suit alleging denial of due process; officials should have known, even though no court had specifically so held, that they violated inmates' rights when they informed inmates only 24 hours in advance of evaluation rebuttal hearing, failed to give inmates copies of recommendations regarding probation, and immediately placed inmates in solitary confinement so that they could not contact witnesses or use law library. Browning v. Vernon, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1995, 44 F.3d 818. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4076. ---- Plumbing, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Doctrine of qualified immunity barred inmate's § 1983 claims against correctional facility officials, where claims were based on alleged cruel and unusual punishment arising from confinement in cell with inoperative sink for nine days; the confinement did not violate inmate's Eighth Amendment rights, and thus, reasonable person could not have perceived them to exist at time of alleged violation. Johnson v. Commissioner of Correctional Services, S.D.N.Y.1988, 699 F.Supp. 1071. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4077. ---- Retaliation, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison warden was not entitled to qualified immunity on prisoner's claim that warden upheld disciplinary ticket written against prisoner in retaliation against prisoner for his exercise of his First Amendment rights by complaining about prison conditions, since a reasonable public official in warden's position would have understood that retaliating against a prisoner on the basis of his complaints about prison conditions was unlawful. Pearson v. Welborn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 471 F.3d 732. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Defense of qualified immunity was not available to prison official for allegedly retaliating against inmate for exercise of his constitutional right to petition government for redress of grievances. Pacheco v. Comisse, N.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 671. Civil Rights 1376(7)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Even assuming that state inmate's conclusory allegations of retaliation for filing suit and denial of religiously acceptable diet could have implicated clear federal rights, no rational trier of fact could have found on the record before district court that prison officials did not have objectively reasonable belief that their conduct met requisite constitutional standards; therefore, prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in inmate's § 1983 action. Abdul-Matiyn v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, N.D.N.Y.1994, 871 F.Supp. 1542, affirmed 66 F.3d 309. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4078. ---- Searches, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

State prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in § 1983 action based on their implementation of policy permitting digital rectal probe searches on inmates prior to their entry into secured area of prison; reasonable officials could have believed that their conduct was lawful at the time given that such a policy was permissible and sanctioned by federal regulations, and officials testified that they had researched legality of searches before implementing policy. Hemphill v. Kincheloe, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 987 F.2d 589, as amended. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials conducting violative searches are entitled to qualified immunity if searches are reasonably related to legitimate penological goal or if defendants reasonably could have believed that searches were conducted to further such a purpose. Vaughan v. Ricketts, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 950 F.2d 1464. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison officials' reasonable, although mistaken, conclusion that emergency existed permitting visual body cavity search conducted within visual range of prison guards of opposite sex entitled them to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action alleging violations of Fourth Amendment. Cookish v. Powell, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1991, 945 F.2d 441. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Low-ranking correctional officers were entitled to qualified immunity for conducting strip search on jail visitor, who was arrested on warrant for serious non-violent felonies, pursuant to then-existing written policy calling for strip searches of prisoners, where reasonable officers in their position would not have known that their actions would violate Fourth Amendment. DeToledo v. County of Suffolk, D.Mass.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 138. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4079. ---- Solitary confinement or segregation, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison official's belief that inmate's three-day administrative confinement, without opportunity to be heard, did not violate inmate's Fourteenth Amendment due process rights, was reasonable in light of perceived threat to security and safety of prison from report that inmate's mother had passed contraband into prison, and time to search public spaces of cell block and interview informer, and so official had qualified immunity from inmate's civil rights action. Rodriguez v. Phillips, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 66 F.3d 470. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Prison official was entitled to qualified immunity on inmate's action alleging that he was placed in adjustment unit for more than ten days in violation of statute; such placement was established practice at prison at time official became head administrative officer and thus, official objectively had reason to believe that her behavior was lawful. Coffman v. Trickey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 884 F.2d 1057, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1523, 494 U.S. 1056, 108 L.Ed.2d 763. Prisons 10

Psychologists employed at state correctional institution were not entitled to qualified immunity from claim that lengthy seclusion placements they ordered violated substantive due process rights of civilly committed sexual offenders; reasonable professionals would have known that their treatment decisions had to conform to accepted professional norms. West v. Macht, E.D.Wis.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 966, affirmed 333 F.3d 745. Civil Rights 1376(7)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Doctrine of qualified immunity shielded members of prison disciplinary board from individual liability for money damages resulting from alleged violation of prisoner's due process rights by segregating him from general prison population; no reasonable prison official could have known that Morris Rules endowed Rhode Island prisoners with liberty interest protected by Fourteenth Amendment. Morgan v. Ellerthorpe, D.R.I.1992, 785 F.Supp. 295. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4080. ---- Strip cells, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials did not violate inmate's clearly established Eighth Amendment rights when they confined inmate to strip cell for control purposes, entitling them to qualified immunity in inmate's subsequent civil rights action; officials could reasonably have believed that conditions in strip cell did not subject inmate to wanton infliction of pain or serious physical injury, in view of short duration of confinement and absence of injury. Johnson v. Boreani, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 946 F.2d 67. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4081. ---- Transfer of prisoners, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights claims by inmate who alleged he was transferred in retaliation for exercise of constitutional rights; prisoner retained First Amendment right to respond to questions posed to him by prison investigator, and, under then existing law, it was not objectively reasonable for officials to punish prisoner because he participated in prison investigation that resulted in forced resignation of prison officer. Cornell v. Woods, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1995, 69 F.3d 1383. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Genuine issue of fact, as to objective reasonableness of officers' alleged use of arm bar twist to force female exercise walker to ground to effect arrest for suspected public intoxication without having identified themselves as police officers and as to objective reasonableness of their belief that walker was under influence of alcohol, precluded summary judgment in favor of officers on ground of qualified immunity on claims of unconstitutional arrest and use of unreasonable force. Newell v. City of Salina, D.Kan.2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 1148. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison guard should reasonably have known that his action in transferring prisoner, who had reputation as a squealer and whose life had been threatened because of his involvement with task force investigating corruption in prison system, would violate prisoner's clearly established constitutional rights and, hence, guard was not entitled to any official immunity from prisoner's civil rights claim. Blizzard v. Quillen, D.C.Del.1984, 579 F.Supp. 1446. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Transfer of an inmate would have been a lawful exercise of prison superintendent's authority had he been involved, in light of a prison policy mandating a transfer whenever a civilian employee was assaulted by an inmate, and thus, the superintendent was entitled to qualified immunity regarding the allegedly retaliatory transfer in the inmate's § 1983 suit. Croswell v. McCoy, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 962534, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4082. ---- Visitor privileges, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity as to inmate's claim that his equal protection rights were violated when he was denied overnight visitation from his infant son while inmates of correctional facility for women were permitted similar visits; official could reasonably have believed that security concerns at the two prisons were distinguishable on basis of their security level designations and concomitant physical security structures and, further, official could have believed that denial of visitation was rationally related to legitimate penological objective of internal security. Bills v. Dahm, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1994, 32 F.3d 333. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Sheriff and jail administrator were entitled to qualified immunity with respect to restrictions on inmate visitation by minors unless accompanied by appropriate adult even if the policy violated First, Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights; reasonable official would not have known that alleged actions violated constitutional rights. Navin v. Iowa Dept. of Corrections, N.D.Iowa 1994, 843 F.Supp. 500, on reconsideration in part. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Correction officials were entitled to qualified personal immunity damages in § 1983 civil rights claim by death row inmate and girlfriend alleging violation of constitutional right to marry, even though there was no showing of interest needed to justify depriving plaintiffs of right to marry, since officials could reasonably have believed that regulation which denied girlfriend general visitation privileges should apply generally. Buehl v. Lehman, E.D.Pa.1992, 802 F.Supp. 1266. Civil Rights 1376(3)

4083. ---- Work assignment, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Conduct of corrections officer in ordering student-inmate to participate in sandbagging in response to road flooding, after inmate informed officer that he was on "no duty status," was not objectively legally reasonable so as to entitle officer to qualified immunity on claim of cruel and unusual punishment in light of alleged emergency conditions; it appeared officer had time to check inmate's file, only students, rather than all available inmates, were ordered to participate in sandbagging, and little evidence was offered of the actual emergency circumstances. Sanchez v. Taggart, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1998, 144 F.3d 1154. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Conclusion by prison officials that assignment of inmate to work in prison mess hall did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment in violation of Eighth Amendment was objectively reasonable, so that officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's § 1983 action; nothing had suggested, during course of events in question, that inmate had serious medical condition that would be exacerbated by mess hall work. Wilson v. Johnson, W.D.N.Y.1998, 999 F.Supp. 394. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4084. ---- Work release, prison officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Correctional officers were entitled to qualified immunity for failing to accord hearing to prisoner before revoking his participation in temporary release program in violation of his due process rights, where a reasonable officers could have believed that, because charges which formed basis for revocation had been sustained at disciplinary hearing and because prisoner was physically confined to prison for 30 days as result of disciplinary hearing, they had no discretion and no further hearing was required. Anderson v. Recore, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 446 F.3d 324. Civil Rights 1376(7)

New York prison officials' actions in removing prisoner from temporary work release were not objectively reasonable, and therefore they were not entitled to qualified immunity for violation of prisoner's due process rights; not only did officials fail to comply with their own regulations governing notice and a statement of reasons, regulations with which they presumably were familiar, they failed to provide any due process at all to prisoner, who was never charged with or found guilty of any misconduct or rule violation while in temporary work release program, who was not given an opportunity to call witnesses or present other evidence at his hearing, and who was not provided with reason for his removal. Quartararo v. Hoy, E.D.N.Y.2000, 113 F.Supp.2d 405. Civil Rights 1376(7)

4085. Privacy right, objective reasonableness requirement

Assuming that town council member violated police chief's right to privacy by publicly disclosing chief's diabetes, council member was entitled to qualified immunity against chief's § 1983 action; contours of confidentiality branch of Fourteenth Amendment's privacy protection were not sufficiently established such that reasonable public officer would have understood that such a disclosure would violate chief's rights, and in fact reasonable similarly situated officer would likely have concluded that no violation of privacy occurred. Pouliot v. Town of Fairfield, D.Me.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1376(4)

4086. Probation officers, objective reasonableness requirement

Qualified immunity did not apply to claims that juvenile court probation officer and four employees of Illinois Department of Corrections violated juvenile's civil rights by failing to take reasonable steps in response to juvenile's suicidal tendencies; Eighth Amendment prohibited defendants from being deliberately indifferent to juvenile's strong risk of suicide and whether defendants' actions were reasonable was fact question. Viero v. Bufano, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 1374. Civil Rights 1376(7); Sentencing And Punishment 1607

4087. Prosecutors, objective reasonableness requirement

Even assuming that Eighth Amendment right to be protected from harm inflicted by fellow inmates was properly invoked by inmate asserting § 1983 claim based on county attorney's public disclosure of plea agreement information allegedly leading to stabbing of inmate in prison by gang members, county attorney was qualifiedly immune; attorney could not have known that his actions would violate such right, and nature of his position would not put him on notice of potential § 1983 liability for his actions. Latimore v. Widseth, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1993, 7 F.3d 709, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1124, 510 U.S. 1140, 127 L.Ed.2d 433. Civil Rights 1376(9)

County attorney was entitled to qualified immunity for presenting arrest warrant to clerk-magistrate, even if he vouched for truth of police officer's affidavit, based on sufficient facts supporting finding of probable cause that reasonable officers could disagree whether probable cause in fact existed; affidavit stated that plaintiff left restaurant while bar owner was eating when theft from bar owner's van occurred, plaintiff had no money to pay for hotel room, but he later paid for lodging with cash from large roll of bills. Kohl v. Casson, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1993, 5 F.3d 1141. District And Prosecuting Attorneys 10

District attorneys were not entitled to qualified immunity from civil rights action brought by family of murdered township officer, alleging that defendants failed to protect officer despite threats from perpetrator, with respect to interactions with perpetrator in attempting to elicit confession; unlawfulness of their actions under state-created danger theory of substantive due process should have been apparent to reasonable officials in their position. Walter v. Pike County, Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.2006, 2006 WL 3437384. Civil Rights 1376(9)

City's corporate counsel was entitled to qualified immunity from §§ 1983 liability in firefighters' action alleging that their First Amendment rights were violated when disciplinary charges were initiated against them in retaliation for their political affiliation, where no reasonable lawyer/sexual harassment compliance officer in her position would have believed that she was violating the First Amendment by carrying out her investigative and advisory functions in conducting an investigation after receiving female fire dispatcher's letter complaining of harassment by firefighters, and then writing a memorandum to city manager recommending that charges should be brought against firefighters. Contes v. Porr, S.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 372. Civil Rights 1376(10)

As an attorney, assistant state's attorney was charged with greater knowledge of the law than are law enforcement officers, for purposes of determining, for qualified immunity purposes, the reasonableness of her reliance on validity of search warrant, when substantially involved in the execution of the warrant. Hicks v. Cassilly, D.Md.1997, 971 F.Supp. 956, reversed 153 F.3d 720, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1037, 525 U.S. 1143, 143 L.Ed.2d 45. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Reasonable official would not have believed that probable cause existed to believe that arrestees had committed extortion under Michigan law, and so county prosecutor and state detective were not entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 civil rights action brought by arrestees, even though arrestees sought money from former employer, where they did so in pursuit of settlement releasing right to bring action against for sexual harassment. Manetta v. County of Macomb, E.D.Mich.1997, 955 F.Supp. 771, reversed 141 F.3d 270. Civil Rights 1376(6); Civil Rights 1376(9)

Correctional officer did not have federally protected right to have investigatory interview of participant in crime in which officer was also alleged to have participated conducted outside presence of prosecuting attorney, and prosecuting attorney thus did not violate clearly established constitutional right of officer by being present at such interview and was entitled to qualified immunity from suit under § 1983 with respect to his presence at such interview. Rhodes v. Smithers, S.D.W.Va.1995, 939 F.Supp. 1256, affirmed 91 F.3d 132. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Prosecuting and district attorneys had qualified immunity in § 1983 action brought by prisoner alleging that they had wrongfully transmitted information to prison authorities and media in order to remove him from work release program; while prisoner had protectible liberty interest in not being removed from program without being accorded due process, reasonable prosecutor could believe that his or her conduct did not violate prisoner's due process rights. Quartararo v. Catterson, E.D.N.Y.1996, 917 F.Supp. 919. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Town attorney who had sought imposition of term of incarceration against defendant who had not paid fines imposed following her convictions for violations of town ordinances was entitled to qualified immunity in federal civil rights action brought by defendant alleging that incarceration violated defendant's civil rights due to her inability to pay fines where fact issue existed as to whether judge who sentenced defendant to incarceration had sufficiently considered alternative remedies, so that attorney could have reasonably believed incarceration was proper. Fahle v. Braslow, E.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 145, affirmed 111 F.3d 123. Civil Rights 1376(4)

4088. State created danger, objective reasonableness requirement

Danger creation doctrine was inapplicable to police officer's claim under §§ 1983 alleging his due process right to bodily integrity was violated by police chief's directive to use riot helmets during training exercises rather than more protective gear, resulting in an eye injury, where the bullet that injured the police officer was fired by a fellow officer and not a private party. Moore v. Guthrie, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 438 F.3d 1036. Municipal Corporations 182

Reasonable officer would not have understood that his conduct, in connection with formation of initial perimeter around suspect's house, activation of Pennsylvania's Special Emergency Response Team (SERT), and officers' allegedly inadequate search for suspect in woods, was conscience-shocking, and officers thus were qualifiedly immune from state-created danger claim asserted under Fourteenth Amendment by suspect's survivors, arising from suspect's fatal heart attack. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 430 F.3d 140. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Incident in which agency employee allegedly refused to allow resident of New Mexico Commission for the Blind Adult Orientation Center (AOC) to remove her sleep shades during cane traveling class so that she could use her limited vision to fight off her attacker, if proven, did not amount to state-created danger, so as to preclude qualified immunity defense to resident's claim of violation of her right to bodily integrity and personal security, inasmuch as resident successfully fended off attacker, and danger existed prior to employee's alleged intervention. Baumeister v. New Mexico Com'n for the Blind, D.N.M.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 1250. Civil Rights 1376(3)

County police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity from wife's claims that officer violated due process and equal protection by driving wife's intoxicated estranged husband to her home and forcing wife admit husband, who subsequently assaulted wife; any reasonable officer in the officer's position should have been aware that an affirmative act on the part of an officer that places an individual in clear and imminent danger implicates that individual's constitutional liberty interest. Pullium v. Ceresini, D.Md.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 600. Civil Rights 1376(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4089. Zoning officials, objective reasonableness requirement

Building inspectors were entitled to qualified immunity in landowner's § 1983 action alleging that revocation of building permit violated his substantive due process rights as their actions were objectively reasonable; landowner removed second floor of building he was renovating without submitting new plans to building department reflecting one story building, stop work order was issued, landowner did nothing to cure problem, revocation was initially upheld on appeal to zoning board, and town code expressly permitted revocation. Zahra v. Town of Southold, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 48 F.3d 674. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Town zoning commission president who had reasonable belief that land was not properly subdivided when landowners applied for zoning permit, and thus that town had discretion to deny application, enjoyed qualified immunity in civil rights action alleging violation of civil rights of the landowners. Natale v. Town of Ridgefield, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1991, 927 F.2d 101. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Township board of trustees did not act in objectively reasonable manner, precluding grant of qualified immunity in suit claiming that denial of real estate developer's rezoning request when other requests were granted was denial of equal protection; admissions tending to show predisposition to deny request precluded necessary finding that board members denied application with reasonable belief they were acting lawfully. J.D. Partnership v. Berlin Tp. Bd. of Trustees, S.D.Ohio 2005, 412 F.Supp.2d 772. Civil Rights 1376(4)

4111. Abatement or survival of action, practice and procedure generally

Section 1983 does not provide a cause of action on behalf of a deceased for events occurring after death. Riley v. St. Louis County of Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1998, 153 F.3d 627, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1113, 525 U.S. 1178, 143 L.Ed.2d 109. Civil Rights 1032

Pursuant to Oklahoma abatement statute, retired state employee's § 1983 suit, challenging state's forfeiture of more than two-thirds of his pension as result of his conviction for bribery, did not abate upon employee's death; because employee's suit alleging double jeopardy and excessive fines violations did not constitute claim for slander, libel, or malicious prosecution, Oklahoma law called for survival of his suit despite his death. Hopkins v. Oklahoma Public Employees Retirement System, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1998, 150 F.3d 1155. Abatement And Revival 58(.5)

State's motion to dismiss pro se civil rights appeal of prisoner who died while appeal was pending, on the ground that there had been no substitution for the party decedent, was premature where state filed motion less than one month after prisoner died and, while Court of Appeals supposed that the next of kin were notified of the death, it had no reason to believe that they were notified of prisoner's pending appeal; in those circumstances it was unreasonable to have expected next of kin to move to be substituted for prisoner and equally unreasonable to infer from their failure to file such motion that they decided to abandon the lawsuit. Ward v. Edgeton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 59 F.3d 652. Federal Courts 729

Action for alleged violation of plaintiff's civil rights survived upon the death of the defendant. Pritchard v. Smith, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1961, 289 F.2d 153. Abatement And Revival 52

Execution of a state prisoner could not be stayed in order that his civil rights action might proceed to judgment, in view of fact that such an action abates with death of injured party. Moss v. Jones, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1961, 288 F.2d 342, certiorari denied 82 S.Ct. 98, 368 U.S. 868, 7 L.Ed.2d 65, rehearing denied 82 S.Ct. 244, 368 U.S. 922, 7 L.Ed.2d 137. Sentencing And Punishment 1798

Action under this section against city officials who allegedly maliciously destroyed decedent's business by enactment of illegal ordinances and enforcement thereof survived decedent's death and passed to his representative. Nelson v. Knox, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1956, 230 F.2d 483. Abatement And Revival 58(.5)

Motorist's heirs inherited his claim under §§ 1983 against police officers, arising out of traffic stop during which motorist was allegedly injured by officers, where motorist died over a year after traffic stop of causes unrelated to claims asserted under §§ 1983. Gotay Sanchez v. Pereira, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 65. Abatement And Revival 57; Civil Rights 1332(4)

General rule is that § 1983 claim survives plaintiff's death if that would be result under applicable state law. Cossio v. City and County of Denver, Colo., D.Colo.1997, 986 F.Supp. 1340, affirmed 139 F.3d 911. Abatement And Revival 57

Prisoner's civil rights action was brought against correctional officer in his personal capacity and, therefore, suit survived against officer's estate after officer purportedly died; prisoner alleged that officer violated his right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment by assaulting him without provocation for purpose of inflicting pain, based on personal bias against him. Young v. Patrice, S.D.N.Y.1993, 832 F.Supp. 721. Abatement And Revival 58(.5)

Death of civil rights plaintiff seeking "good time credit" warranted dismissal without prejudice. Devine v. Byrd, N.D.Tex.1982, 667 F.Supp. 414. Federal Civil Procedure 1721

Heirs, legal representatives, and estate of handicapped quadriplegic child whose death occurred while committed to care, custody and control of state school were vested with standing under law of Texas to maintain a survival action against state officials under substantive and conspiratorial civil rights statutes. Clift by Clift v. Fincannon, E.D.Tex.1987, 657 F.Supp. 1535. Death 31(3.1); Death 31(5)

Fact of civil rights complainant's death from causes unrelated to shooting by police officer did not abate cause of action against municipalities where such would clearly disserve purposes of this section. Larson v. Wind, N.D.Ill.1982, 542 F.Supp. 25. Abatement And Revival 57

Although no cause of action based solely on death of decedent survives under Wisconsin law, where decedent's estate in instant case sought to recover for deprivation of decedent's civil rights which occurred before his death, action brought under this section survived decedent's death. Bell v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1980, 498 F.Supp. 1339. Abatement And Revival 57

4112. Continuances, practice and procedure generally

Plaintiff in civil rights action alleging, inter alia, that police officers used excessive force in course of apprehending him was not entitled to continuance, requested on day of trial and three years after incident in question, in order to extract bullet that physician had discovered in his hand six days earlier than trial and to prove that bullet came from one of officers' service revolvers and obtain expert opinion on extent of damage to hand. Scott v. James, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 902 F.2d 672, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 198, 498 U.S. 873, 112 L.Ed.2d 160. Federal Civil Procedure 1855.1

In prisoner's civil action against warden in connection with alleged beating administered to prisoner, there was no abuse of discretion in denying continuance on ground of absence of prisoner witness where plaintiff prisoner's version of the events was sufficiently seconded by the testimony of several other prisoners. Ellis v. Capps, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1974, 500 F.2d 225. Federal Civil Procedure 1856

Federal district court's denial of plaintiff-prisoner's request for continuance in order to subpoena three potential witnesses for his civil rights case was abuse of discretion, where plaintiff had discovered identities of witnesses just before trial, timing issues prevented plaintiff from filing motion requesting subpoenas or a continuance any earlier than morning of trial, pro se prisoner was unable to explain his request for continuance clearly to court, and the additional witnesses could have led to discovery of evidence that was highly relevant to his claim. Woodham v. Sayre Borough Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 191 Fed.Appx. 111, 2006 WL 1371575, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1857

4113. Stay of action, practice and procedure generally

Proper course for district court to take with regard to § 1983 excessive force claim which could have impact on plaintiff's state-court conviction, even though it neither depended upon nor necessarily resulted in conviction's invalidation, was to stay further proceedings on claim pending termination of plaintiff's state-court criminal proceedings, given that claim had accrued and statute of limitations was running. Jackson v. Suffolk County Homicide Bureau, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 135 F.3d 254. Action 69(5)

Appropriate action was to stay inmate's § 1983 action for damages arising out of disciplinary proceeding pending decision on habeas corpus petition seeking restoration of good-time credits which were taken away as a result of discipline, not dismiss habeas petition, given Supreme Court's decision in Heck that unless order depriving person of liberty has been set aside on collateral attack or in some other way, complaint about events leading to deprivation does not state a claim on which relief may be granted under § 1983 and given that time waiting for conclusion of § 1983 action was not excludable from time for bringing habeas petition. Post v. Gilmore, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 111 F.3d 556. Habeas Corpus 679

District court properly stayed county jail inmate's civil rights action, alleging unlawful taking of blood and tissue samples from him and other violations of his constitutional rights, pending conclusion of state court criminal proceedings, where defendant did not allege that staying of civil rights suit would prejudice him in any way, inmate's claim for monetary relief would not be addressed in criminal prosecution, and magistrate judge had determined that adjudication of claim that blood and tissue samples were unconstitutionally seized could interfere with progress of state court proceedings. Lewis v. Beddingfield, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 20 F.3d 123. Action 69(5)

Stay of proceedings was warranted in former police officers' § 1983 action against state officials, pending finalization of parallel state court action against state, even though parties were not identical, where state court judgment, if finalized, would have had res judicata effect under state law, determination in federal case could have directly contradicted findings of state court, and case involved multiple parties and witnesses. Lozano v. Corona, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 144. Action 69(5)

Stay would issue against arrestee's going forward with false arrest and excessive force claims against police officer prior to resolution of pending criminal charge against arrestee for battery of officer, as favorable determination on false arrest claim would necessarily imply invalidity of any subsequent conviction of battery, thereby calling into play rationale of Heck rule, which requires favorable determination on underlying criminal conviction to bring civil rights action that necessarily calls validity of that conviction into question. Guillory v. Wheeler, M.D.La.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 808. Action 69(5)

Overlap of issues between § 1983 claim brought by deceased police sergeant alleging that city negligently hired and supervised police officer who allegedly shot and killed sergeant by ignoring officer's psychological problems, and criminal action in which officer was prosecuted for two counts of second degree murder, provided support for city to seek stay of civil proceedings pending outcome of criminal prosecution; both actions arose from same underlying events, and evidence from criminal action concerning officer's emotional state during employment with city police department could have altered city's liability in civil action. Hicks v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 238. Action 69(5)

City did not demonstrate possibility of suffering undue prejudice as required to obtain stay of § 1983 action, brought by estate of deceased police sergeant alleging city negligently supervised police officer who had psychological problems and fatally shot sergeant, pending outcome of officer's prosecution for second degree murder; city did not demonstrate that homicide investigation was necessary to civil action, city could access officer's medical and personnel files to proceed with discovery as to officer's psychological state, and stay would needlessly delay resolution of civil case due to fact discovery had been stayed pending motion for stay. Hicks v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 238. Action 69(5)

Stay of § 1983 action would be appropriate, where anticipated United States Supreme Court decision could effect district court's ruling on issue of defendants' immunity. Wysinger v. City of Benton Harbor, W.D.Mich.1997, 968 F.Supp. 349. Action 69(5)

Section 1983 action brought by arrestee against city police department and police officer for damages for alleged wrongful detention arising from altercation would be stayed until parallel state court criminal proceedings against arrestee were resolved; section 1983 action and the state court criminal action were based on the same events, disposition of criminal charges might be determinative of arrestee's § 1983 claims, interest of judicial economy supported stay, and proceeding with civil discovery could prejudice police department and officer or even arrestee. Estes-El v. Long Island Jewish Medical Center, S.D.N.Y.1995, 916 F.Supp. 268. Action 69(5)

Rule that § 1983 claims that are merely related to admissibility of evidence issues in criminal proceedings are not prevented from accruing, for limitations purposes, because of existence of pending conviction means that a plaintiff who is ultimately successful in challenging conviction may have to bring § 1983 suit for unlawful arrest, search, or seizure prior to being able to obtain full amount of damages and court hearing civil suit may be considering Fourth Amendment claims that are also before court hearing criminal case; therefore, it may often be appropriate to stay proceedings or abstain in § 1983 suit while challenges to conviction are pending. Booker v. Ward, N.D.Ill.1995, 888 F.Supp. 869. Action 69(5); Federal Courts 48

Stay was not required for § 1983 claim of use of excessive force in arrest as whether excessive force was used had no bearing on arrestee's guilt or innocence with respect to assault charges pending in state court and conviction or acquittal on those charges would have no impact on excessive force claim; fact that alleged assault precipitated arrest did not mean that suit challenging manner in which arrest was performed had to be stayed pending resolution of assault charges. Manning v. Tefft, D.R.I.1994, 839 F.Supp. 126, 142 A.L.R. Fed. 795. Action 69(5)

Stay of arrestee's § 1983 action against police officers was warranted until resolution of pending criminal case against arrestee arising out of same incident; action alleged that arrestee was subjected to unconstitutional search, false arrest and malicious prosecution, in violation of his Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, conviction in criminal case would bar false arrest and malicious prosecution claims, arrestee was indicted in criminal matter, and officers could be prejudiced if stay was not granted, since pendency of criminal case precluded their review of grand jury transcripts and prosecutor's records. Johnson v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21664882, Unreported. Action 69(5)

4113A. Pleadings

In suit alleging violations of § 1983, Equal Pay Act, ADA, Rehabilitation Act, and intentional infliction of emotional distress, by physician who had been employed for thirty years at District of Columbia medical clinic, District would be granted 90 day enlargement of time to file responsive pleading in suit, because of time span encompassed by complaint and attendant investigation demands. Turner v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 23. Federal Civil Procedure 735

4114. Ripeness, practice and procedure generally

Federal constitutional issues were ripe for judicial review, in civil rights lawsuit which challenged amendment to state constitution, which limited state-recognized institution of marriage to heterosexual couples; although no court had struck down law passed by state legislature as inconsistent with amendment, bill that would have violated amendment, in opinion of state attorney general, did not advance out of legislative committee due to opinion. Citizens for Equal Protection v. Bruning, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2006, 455 F.3d 859. Constitutional Law 46(1)

Arrestee's potential false arrest claim under Fourth Amendment against police was not ripe until his underlying extortion, racketeering, and weapons convictions were reversed, as false arrest claim would have directly called into question propriety of convictions which could not stand without evidence stemming from arrest. Ienco v. Angarone, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 429 F.3d 680. Federal Courts 13

Because a violation of the Takings Clause did not occur until just compensation had been denied, owners' takings claim was unripe because they did not use available state procedures to seek such compensation before they brought their § 1983 takings claim to federal court; although owners initially brought their claims to state court, they subsequently nonsuited city and demolition company, and therefore they had not been denied just compensation. John Corp. v. City of Houston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 214 F.3d 573. Eminent Domain 277

Claim under § 1983 based on unlawful search or arrest may be brought immediately, because violation of fourth amendment does not necessarily impugn validity of conviction--evidence may be properly admitted anyway, or it may be excluded and defendant convicted on other evidence. Gonzalez v. Entress, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1998, 133 F.3d 551. Civil Rights 1088(3); Civil Rights 1088(4)

Suit by personal injury law firm, against state bar, claiming violation of its First Amendment right to advertise that three members were named in book purporting to list best lawyers in country, was ripe for adjudication even though no formal disciplinary proceeding had been commenced against firm; there was credible threat of enforcement and uncertainties regarding advertisement was hardship to firm. Allen, Allen, Allen & Allen v. Williams, E.D.Va.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 614. Constitutional Law 46(1)

Denial by zoning inspector, of request made by owner of undeveloped property for zoning permit, involved final decision by government agency or government agent responsible for applying township's zoning regulations to owner's zoning permit application, and, consequently, owner's equal protection civil rights claim against township was ripe for review; owner was not required to seek compensation from government because equal protection claim arose from land-use decision and it could be made independent of takings claim. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 570

Puerto Rico lessees' inverse condemnation takings claim under §§ 1983 was premature and unripe for adjudication before United States District Court, where Puerto Rico had adequate procedure in place through which lessees could seek just compensation for inverse condemnation and lessees had yet to pursue that remedy. Davison v. Puerto Rico Firefighters Corps, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 33. Federal Courts 13.25

Teachers' union's and school counselor's §§ 1983 due process and equal protection action against school district, on behalf of themselves and district's female students, seeking to enjoin implementation of district's policy generally requiring parental notification of students' pregnancies, was unripe; there was evidence that few students in district became pregnant in any given year and almost all of those voluntarily reported pregnancy to their parents, precluding finding of any immediate dilemma that would make case fit for judicial resolution or suggest hardship to parties if court consideration was withheld. Port Washington Teachers' Ass'n v. Board of Educ. of Port Washington Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2005, 361 F.Supp.2d 69. Federal Courts 13.10

Section 1983 action brought against city by provider of supervised residential programs for ex-offenders following denial of application for special use permit, which allegedly violated provider's due process and equal protection rights, was ripe for adjudication, even though provider did not pursue administrative appeal of decision of board of adjustment. Bannum, Inc. v. City of Fort Lauderdale, S.D.Fla.1997, 996 F.Supp. 1230, affirmed 157 F.3d 819, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 166 F.3d 355, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 67, 528 U.S. 822, 145 L.Ed.2d 57. Federal Courts 13.10; Federal Courts 13.25

Physician's § 1983 claim against hospital officials alleging that officials had violated his First Amendment free speech rights through conspiracy of retaliatory harassment, which included refusal to recommend renewal of hospital privileges, was not premature, even though privileges had not yet been denied, since even if physician retained his privileges officials were still alleged to have committed multiple acts in retaliation for physician's exercise of his First Amendment free speech rights. Franzon v. Massena Memorial Hosp., N.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 160. Civil Rights 1384

Owners of proposed "physical culture establishment" catering predominantly to gay male clientele, who withdrew application for permit for club because of alleged bias of city board of standards and appeals, failed to demonstrate that it would have been futile to go through application process, and thus owners' § 1983 claim alleging disparate treatment was not ripe. Dix v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31175251, Unreported. Federal Courts 13.10

4115. Collateral attack, practice and procedure generally

State prisoner's claims against his public defender, alleging that he conspired with prosecuting attorney to deprive prisoner of his constitutional rights by fabricating evidence used at trial, withholding exculpatory evidence, suborning perjury, and attempting to intimidate him into accepting a guilty plea, were not cognizable under §§ 1983, since plaintiff's conviction had not been reversed on direct appeal or otherwise invalidated; even though plaintiff did not explicitly challenge the lawfulness of his conviction, plaintiff's allegations of extensive conspiratorial misconduct between defense counsel and the prosecution would have rendered the conviction invalid if they were proved. Peay v. Ajello, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2006, 470 F.3d 65. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

State prisoner's claim seeking post-conviction access to physical evidence from his criminal trial for the purpose of DNA testing was cognizable under §§ 1983; prisoner would not be released from prison, nor would his sentence be shortened, if he successfully gained access to the physical evidence, so that the claim would not intrude upon the territory of habeas relief. Savory v. Lyons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 469 F.3d 667. Civil Rights 1311

A prisoner subject to a single disciplinary proceeding that gave rise to sanctions that affected both the duration of his imprisonment and the conditions of his confinement may, without satisfying the favorable termination requirement that the challenged disciplinary proceedings or resulting punishments have been invalidated, maintain a §§ 1983 action challenging the sanctions or procedures affecting the conditions of confinement, but the prisoner may only bring such an action if he agrees to abandon forever any and all claims he has with respect to the sanctions that affected the length of his imprisonment. Peralta v. Vasquez, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 467 F.3d 98. Civil Rights 1092

Excessive force complaint brought by arrestee against deputy sheriff under §§ 1983 did not contain factual allegations that necessarily implied invalidity of arrestee's criminal convictions stemming from same confrontation, and thus was not barred as matter of law; complaint could have been read as alleging that arrestee never posed threat of violence, attempted escape, or resisted arrest to degree that would have justified use of deadly force as response. McCann v. Neilsen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 466 F.3d 619. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Former state prison inmate's §§ 1983 action asserting claims for damages based on issues related to his state convictions could not proceed, and was subject to dismissal under the statute governing in forma pauperis actions, where there was no indication that the convictions had been set aside. Michau v. Charleston County, S.C., C.A.4 (S.C.) 2006, 434 F.3d 725, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1079075. Federal Civil Procedure 2734 was to seek review by writ of certiorari to Supreme Court of the United States, and not collateral attack in federal district court under this section. Almon v. Sandlin, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1979, 603 F.2d 503. Federal Courts 1142

This section is not a vehicle for collateral attack on final state court judgment. Brown v. DeLayo, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1173. See, also, Cincinnati Bar Ass'n, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1970, 431 F.2d 1209; Rodes v. Municipal Authority of Borough of Milford, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1969, 409 F.2d 16, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 133, 396 U.S. 861, 24 L.Ed.2d 114, rehearing denied 90 S.Ct. 377, 396 U.S. 950, 24 L.Ed.2d 256. Judgment 828.21(1)

Legality of confinement of Florida prisoner allegedly extradited from Georgia to Florida on charge of issuing worthless checks instead of on charge of auto theft, the charge actually outstanding in Florida, should be raised either by direct appeal or by collateral proceedings in the state court, not through a federal damage action against Georgia judges and state of Georgia. Collins v. Moore, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1971, 441 F.2d 550. Civil Rights 1319

This section is not intended to allow person knowledgeable of procedures of law to ignore his chance to have error corrected and then attack in action for damages and administrators of justice who have thereby been denied opportunity to correct the error. Rhodes v. Meyer, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1964, 334 F.2d 709, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 263, 379 U.S. 915, 13 L.Ed.2d 186. Civil Rights 1315

This section does not confer jurisdiction upon a federal district court to collaterally attack a state criminal contempt conviction after it has been affirmed by the highest state court and certiorari has been denied by the United States Supreme Court where the plaintiff seeks a declaratory judgment which would relitigate the very issues which had been litigated in the state court. Goss v. State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1963, 312 F.2d 257. Federal Courts 221

Decision that state inmate was entitled to damages due to revocation of inmate's parole, based on his alleged impermissible expulsion from residential treatment program, would imply that inmate was being improperly incarcerated and would bring into question validity of his parole revocation, which in turn went to fact or duration of his confinement, and therefore inmate could not proceed with his §§ 1983 action for damages against state probation and parole board and its employees until he established, first by resort to state-court remedies, that his confinement following parole revocation was improper. Boykin v. Siena House Gaudenzia Program, M.D.Pa.2006, 464 F.Supp.2d 416. Civil Rights 1097

Arrestee's §§ 1983 claim that police officers used excessive force against him in arresting him for criminal trespass did not carry a necessary implication of the invalidity of his criminal trespass conviction under Maine law, and thus, doctrine of issue preclusion did not apply to preclude arrestee's §§ 1983 claim. Smith v. Jackson, D.Me.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 72. Judgment 828.20(1)

Heck v. Humphrey rule, which precluded actions which would imply invalidity of conviction or sentence, did not preclude state prisoner's civil rights action under §§ 1983, seeking DNA testing of biological evidence used eight years before in his felony murder trial, since the action did not necessarily imply the invalidity of prisoner's earlier conviction, given that the results of DNA testing could be exculpatory, inconclusive, or even inculpatory. Wade v. Brady, D.Mass.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 226. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Individuals who were arrested and prosecuted on open burning charges, arising from their burning of a rainbow-colored flag at a gay pride parade, failed to show that their convictions were reversed, as was required to recover damages in a §§ 1983 action for harm allegedly caused by government actions whose unlawfulness would have rendered conviction invalid. Daubenmire v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 794. Civil Rights 1088(5)

State prisoner, who had been convicted of crime, could not bring civil rights action against public appellate defender, on basis that defender inadequately represented him by not timely filing his habeas petition, since prisoner's conviction had not been reversed by state court, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determination, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Stroman v. South Carolina Office of Appellate Defense, D.S.C.2005, 447 F.Supp.2d 515. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Arrestee's claims for damages for lack of probable cause for his arrest, misleading statements in a search warrant affidavit, and malicious prosecution called into question the validity of his conviction, which had not been overturned, and thus, the claims were not cognizable in his civil rights action. Fernandez v. Alexander, D.Conn.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 128. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Defendant convicted of rape, sodomy and lesser crimes could not bring §§ 1983 action to recover damages from county, when prosecutors were found to have withheld exculpatory materials in violation of defendant's due process rights, convictions were set aside, defendant was found guilty of lesser charges, sentenced to time served and released; necessary showing that there was favorable termination of earlier case had not been made. Stein v. County of Westchester, N.Y., S.D.N.Y.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 175. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Under Heck, arrestee could assert § 1983 claims against state officer for use of excessive force during arrest, even though state criminal charges were pending against arrestee for disorderly conduct, menacing, and resisting arrest; charges did not require showing that arrest was lawful, and arrestee could be convicted of all charges and still succeed on excessive force claim without invalidating convictions. Clark v. Kentucky, E.D.Ky.2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 718. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Party who pleaded guilty to various criminal offenses could not subsequently challenge those convictions by collateral attack in civil action alleging that prosecution of him violated his constitutional civil rights on ground that guilty plea was coerced or obtained upon advice of ineffective counsel; furthermore, there was no viable basis for damages arising out of party's arrest and prosecution on charges that were nol-prossed. Henley v. Octorara Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.1988, 701 F.Supp. 545. Civil Rights 1088(5); Judgment 501

This section is not available for state prisoners to collaterally attack their convictions; it is only when prisoner succeeds in obtaining habeas corpus relief because of a violation of his constitutional rights by someone affiliated with prosecution forces that he may bring a civil action against the person whose misconduct led to the illegal conviction, assuming that person does not have immunity in an action for damages. Jackson v. State of S. C., D.C.S.C.1979, 498 F.Supp. 186. Civil Rights 1090

If any valid claim existed against New Jersey State court judge who apparently entered orders for custody, visitation and support, such claim should have been raised in the New Jersey proceeding and on appeal from any final order or judgment in that proceeding and where no such claim was raised and no appeal appeared to have been taken, the custody order court not be collaterally attacked by suit in federal court based on allegation that N.J.S.A. 9:2-3, 4, unconstitutionally discriminated against fathers on the basis of their sex. Barbier v. Governor, State of N. J., D.C.N.J.1979, 475 F.Supp. 127. Judgment 828.5(3)

Federal prisoner's defective search warrant claim against Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), state drug task force, and city was not categorically barred by his conviction for distributing cocaine base, since success on the civil rights claim would not necessarily imply the invalidity of his conviction. Collins v. Bruns, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 195 Fed.Appx. 533, 2006 WL 1961199, Unreported. United States 50.10(3)

Claims brought by state prisoner, alleging that his Fourth, Fifth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated by prosecutor's alleged use of peremptory strikes against African-American jurors, were not cognizable under §§ 1983, since prisoner's conviction had not been reversed, vacated, or called into question, and claims, if successful, necessarily would have implied invalidity of conviction. Cook v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 2006 WL 1327817, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State prisoner failed to state cognizable claim under § 1983, on allegations that parole officer and parole supervisor violated his due process rights by returning him to prison, since prisoner could not demonstrate that decision regarding incarceration had been invalidated. Vincent v. Borges, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22519412, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

District court's decision granting partial summary judgment to plaintiff in § 1983 suit against police officers was not appealable collateral order, despite fact that decision involved rejection of officers' qualified immunity defense, where officers' principal contention was that genuine issues of fact precluded summary judgment, and that they were not willing to accept plaintiff's version of facts for purposes of appeal. Brocuglio v. Proulx, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 58, 2003 WL 21369258, Unreported. Federal Courts 579

Inmate could not maintain § 1983 action against state officials for allegedly unconstitutional conviction and imprisonment due to their tampering with evidence and committing perjury during proceedings underlying his state convictions without first demonstrating that his convictions had been overturned. Nichols v. Simpson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 221 F.3d 1343, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

4116. Stare decisis, practice and procedure generally

Where factual situations in two civil rights actions were essentially the same as in prior civil rights action and law in regard to those facts were the same, doctrine of stare decisis was applicable. Rhodes v. Meyer, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1964, 334 F.2d 709, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 263, 379 U.S. 915, 13 L.Ed.2d 186. Courts 89

Section 1983 plaintiffs' claims relating to raid by Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) agents were barred by doctrines of stare decisis, res judicata, and collateral estoppel, where plaintiffs had fully litigated propriety of the search and arrest warrants at previous criminal trial, and the warrants and the method of service were determined to be lawful; although not all § 1983 plaintiffs were involved in the previous criminal trial, the legal and factual determinations were equally binding upon them. Andrade v. Chojnacki, W.D.Tex.1999, 65 F.Supp.2d 431. Courts 89

The United States District Court sitting in Virginia was bound by decision of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit that exhaustion of state remedies, administratively or through the state court, is not a prerequisite to the exercise of federal jurisdiction under this chapter. Borror v. White, W.D.Va.1974, 377 F.Supp. 181. Courts 96(7)

District court was bound by prior decisions, under principle of stare decisis, to holding that exhaustion of state remedy was not prerequisite to proceeding under this section. Abbott v. Thetford, M.D.Ala.1973, 354 F.Supp. 1280, reversed 529 F.2d 695, on rehearing 534 F.2d 1101, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1598, 430 U.S. 954, 51 L.Ed.2d 804. Courts 89

4117. Venue, practice and procedure generally

Georgia prisoner who had three cases pending in the federal district courts in the three federal districts in Georgia all relating to his claim of improper censorship of his mail was entitled to have his claim considered on merits in light of United States Supreme Court decisions, and claim would be determined in suit pending in the district in which he was presently incarcerated where he sought both damages and injunctive relief against, among others, the head of state prison system. Hardwick v. Brinson, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 523 F.2d 798. Federal Courts 92

District court would transfer, rather than dismiss, §§ 1983 action filed in wrong venue, where identities of "John Doe" defendants, and thus their residences, remained unknown to plaintiffs, plaintiffs were first advised that defendants intended to challenge personal jurisdiction and venue after three-year statute of limitations had expired, plaintiffs claimed that they made numerous discovery requests about identity of "John Doe" defendants, only six months had elapsed since plaintiffs were first advised that defendants intended to contest personal jurisdiction and venue, less than eight months had elapsed since filing of action, and impact on defendants of transfer from Connecticut to Massachusetts was not negative. Bunn v. Gleason, D.Conn.2006, 462 F.Supp.2d 317.

Proper venue for § 1983 case alleging violation of constitutional rights in connection with arrest warrant allegedly issued improperly was area where warrant was issued, rather than where arrest took place. Clark v. Harp, D.D.C.1990, 737 F.Supp. 676. Federal Courts 74

Where inmate at State Correctional Institution at Dallas, Pennsylvania, filed civil rights action against warden of Schuylkill Prison, Superintendent of State Correctional Institution at Graterford, Pennsylvania, and Superintendent of State Correctional Institution at Dallas in the United States District for Eastern District of Pennsylvania, on ground of cruel and unusual punishment by reason of prison conditions, venue was proper; even if claims of suit as against the three defendants were improperly joined such issue was covered by rule 20, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, as to permissive joinder and did not present venue problem, and case was improperly transferred to Middle District of Pennsylvania. Buhl v. Jeffes, M.D.Pa.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1149. Federal Courts 122

Venue in the district court for the Western District of New York over civil rights action challenging constitutionality of practices which were authorized by the director of the New York State Division for Youth and which were in effect in state camps to which juveniles were civilly committed was proper, where claims of some plaintiffs arose in this district even though director had office in another district, and one plaintiff was confined to camp outside the district. King v. Carey, W.D.N.Y.1975, 405 F.Supp. 41. Federal Courts 91

Since all defendants except one resided in Western District of Arkansas and all events on which claim was based occurred in that district and there was no diversity of citizenship between plaintiff and any defendant, suit under this section involving alleged deprivation of constitutional rights in connection with election of physician to perform proposed operation on ward could be maintained only in the Western District; venue could not be changed on ground that jurors would be drawn from chancery circuit in which defendant state judge resided. Harley v. Oliver, W.D.Ark.1975, 400 F.Supp. 105. Federal Courts 74; Federal Courts 101

Civil rights complaint filed under § 1983 by pro se prisoner who was housed in state hospital, alleging various violations of his constitutional rights while he was housed at three state prison facilities, would be dismissed; venue for claims against two of the facilities was proper in different district court and would be dismissed without prejudice to prisoner raising them in proper venue, and remaining claim was raised in proper venue but did not state cognizable claim because it was based on allegation that officer who was attempting to place him in administrative segregation pushed him into a corner and left him with abrasion to his forehead, and allegation fell outside Eighth Amendment's recognition of excessive use of force. Brown v. California Dept. of Corrections, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21321362, Unreported. Federal Courts 74; Prisons 13(4); Sentencing And Punishment 1548

4118. Service of process, practice and procedure generally

Indiana trial rules permitted inmate to serve associate warden and correctional officers with § 1983 complaint at their place of employment and permitted someone other than defendants to accept service if those persons were authorized to accept service; however, remand was required since it could not be determined whether prison mailroom employees who accepted service were authorized to accept service and, if they were authorized to accept service, whether receipt by them could be said to be adequate notice in context of prison environment. Robinson v. Turner, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 15 F.3d 82, on remand 886 F.Supp. 1451, on remand 886 F.Supp. 1460. Federal Civil Procedure 423.1

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Action of state attorney general in filing motion on behalf of Governor and State Post Prison Transfer Board (PPTB) to consolidate death row inmate's § 1983 action, in which inmate challenged constitutionality of clemency process and sought stay of execution, with inmate's prior § 1983 action, constituted entry of appearance on behalf of state defendants, and waived any claim with regard to alleged insufficiency of service of process. Perry v. Brownlee, E.D.Ark.1997, 972 F.Supp. 480, reversed 122 F.3d 20, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 572

Section 1983 does not authorize nationwide service of process. Hodgson v. Mississippi Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Wis.1997, 963 F.Supp. 776. Federal Civil Procedure 467.1

State prisoner did not demonstrate good cause for his failure to prosecute civil rights action in timely fashion against correctional facilities and their personnel, by not serving defendants in timely fashion, on allegations that he sent waiver of service forms to defendants, with no response; defendants did not have obligation to waive service of process and it was not court's chore to serve defendants. Cooley v. Cornell Corrections, D.R.I.2004, 220 F.R.D. 171. Federal Civil Procedure 417; Federal Civil Procedure 1751

Prison guard would not be dismissed as defendant in prisoner's § 1983 excessive force action, for prisoner's failure to serve summons and complaint within 120 days of filing, where pro se inmate appeared to be making good faith effort to serve guard and had run into hurdles outside of his control. David v. G.M.D.C., S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31748592, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1751

State inmate's § 1983 claims against prison officials should be dismissed, as officials had never been served in action. Faison v. Travis, N.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31640541, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1751

4119. Removal of actions, practice and procedure generally

Entire case alleging violations of § 1983 and state law was properly removed, and district court was therefore without discretion to remand it to state court, notwithstanding fact that federal and state courts shared concurrent jurisdiction over § 1983 claims. Williams v. Ragnone, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1998, 147 F.3d 700. Removal Of Cases 19(1); Removal Of Cases 101.1

Arrestee's state court suit against city and officers, alleging violations of his constitutional rights in contravention of § 1983, arose from federal statute, allowing removal of both § 1983 claim and related state tort claims. Jimenez v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 584. Federal Courts 15; Removal Of Cases 19(1)

Defendants' §§ 1983 counterclaim could not be considered in determining whether federal court had removal jurisdiction over action seeking protective order, where defendants did not assert counterclaim until after case had been removed to federal court. In re Whatley, D.Mass.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 50. Removal Of Cases 15

Employer would be permitted to amend notice of removal after expiration of 30- day period governing removal, to plead supplemental jurisdiction over employee's state law claims, following determination that district court had federal question jurisdiction over action by virtue of employee's claim for damages for violation of his due process rights under §§ 1983; failure to allege court's supplemental jurisdiction did not divest court of its properly pleaded original jurisdiction over entire case, and any amendment of removal notice to plead supplemental jurisdiction would not add new ground for assuming jurisdiction but would only serve to clarify extent of court's existing jurisdiction. McNerny v. Nebraska Public Power Dist., D.Neb.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 1109. Removal Of Cases 94

The filing of a § 1983 counterclaim and cross-claim in federal court after removal does not create removal jurisdiction in that court over those claims. Redevelopment Agency of City of San Bernardino v. Alvarez, C.D.Cal.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 1112. Removal Of Cases 111

Federal district court in which plaintiffs had brought action against city under § 1983 and state tort law in connection with shooting involving sheriff's deputies who allegedly were also employed by city was not proper court in which to file petition for order relieving them from operation of provision of California law dealing with presentment of claims to public entities as precondition of bringing suit; relief provision contemplates petition for relief in separate civil proceeding, not motion in pending action; additionally, provision did not appear to include federal courts as "proper court" since such language was adopted to eliminate state venue problem. Luers v. Smith, C.D.Cal.1996, 941 F.Supp. 105. Courts 489(1)

State courts civil rights action brought under § 1983 was removable to federal court. Doran v. City of Clearwater, Fla., M.D.Fla.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1077. Removal Of Cases 70

That § 1983 grants state courts concurrent jurisdiction did not require district court to remand properly removed § 1983 suit, as nothing in § 1983 expressly prohibits removal. Aben v. Dallwig, E.D.Mich.1987, 665 F.Supp. 523. Removal Of Cases 13

Impact of state's Tender Offer Disclosure Act, G.S.N.C. § 78B-1 et seq., upon federal concerns was not encompassed within the interest protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or this section, and thus removal predicated on this section was not warranted, whether pursuant to §§ 1343 or 1441 of Title 28. Eure v. NVF Co., E.D.N.C.1979, 481 F.Supp. 639.

This section, despite its obvious protection of civil rights, is not law providing for "equal civil rights" within meaning of removal statute, § 1443 of Title 28, at least where it is not invoked to vindicate racially motivated denial of equal protection. Sweeney v. Abramovitz, D.C.Conn.1978, 449 F.Supp. 213. Removal Of Cases 19(1)

This section providing civil action for deprivation of civil rights is not one providing for equal rights stated in terms of racial equality, and action not otherwise removable may not be removed through this provision. Denson v. Williams, S.D.Tex.1972, 341 F.Supp. 180. Removal Of Cases 70

Where an available and adequate state judicial remedy had not been exhausted, an impediment which was jurisdictional in nature arose, and secondary school discipline suit was not maintainable in federal court under this section, and was improvidently removed, and had to be remanded. Egner v. Texas City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1972, 338 F.Supp. 931. Civil Rights 1317; Removal Of Cases 11

4119A. Remand, practice and procedure generally

Remand to the District Court was required, in civil litigant's § 1983 claim against officials of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, seeking injunction to secure Commonwealth court system's compliance with the ADA, if litigant intended to pursue that claim, in order to determine whether such claim was stated under the ADA, and whether the Eleventh Amendment barred that claim. Badillo-Santiago v. Naveira-Merly, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 378 F.3d 1. Federal Courts 947

4120. Joint or separate trials, practice and procedure generally

Death row inmate's § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of executive clemency proceeding would not be consolidated with his earlier § 1983 action, in which he alleged that his prior habeas corpus proceedings had been tainted by misinformation; only common factor in cases was that inmate sought injunction against his execution, and neither that fact nor judicial economy warranted consolidation, as issues were independent. Perry v. Brownlee, E.D.Ark.1997, 972 F.Supp. 480, reversed 122 F.3d 20, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 8.1

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Bifurcation of arrestee's § 1983 claims against booking officers from § 1983 claims against city, chief of police, and city commissioner of public safety was warranted, given likelihood of unfair prejudice against officers resulting from admission of evidence on Monell claim and efficiency concerns. Amato v. City of Saratoga Springs, N.D.N.Y.1997, 972 F.Supp. 120, affirmed in part, vacated in part 170 F.3d 311. Federal Civil Procedure 1956

Trial on all claims against police officer as well as § 1981 and state law claims against city would be separated from trial of § 1983 claim against city where trial of claims against police officer would be determinative of city's liability, § 1983 claim against city would involve great deal of evidence which was entirely unnecessary to resolution of the other claims, and § 1983 claim would present different and far more complicated standards of liability and causation for jury and greatly expand length and scope of trial. Ismail v. Cohen, S.D.N.Y.1989, 706 F.Supp. 243, affirmed 899 F.2d 183. Federal Civil Procedure 1959.1

Cases brought against state authorities on ground of violation of constitutional rights in isolated confinement of two children in state training schools would not be consolidated for trial, inasmuch as issue in one case of handcuffing of child did not arise in other case. Lollis v. New York State Dept. of Social Services, S.D.N.Y.1970, 322 F.Supp. 473. Federal Civil Procedure 8.1

4121. Joinder of claims, practice and procedure generally

District court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting county's motion to sever claims of § 1983 plaintiffs; even if each plaintiff had separate trial, evidence of pattern of misconduct would still have been admitted because each plaintiff presented claim against at least one individual defendant and against county. Davis v. Mason County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 927 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Federal Civil Procedure 1956

Compulsory joinder of police officers was warranted in arrestee's claim against city alleging officers used unreasonable force in effecting his arrest, resulting in serious injuries; as the perpetrators of the alleged constitutional injury on which the city's liability was allegedly based, the officers' presence in the action was plainly desirable, and, as a practical matter, the city could have less interest than the officers in defending the constitutionality of the officers' conduct because even if arrestee suffered constitutional injury at the hands of the officers, the city could escape liability for the injury by showing that the officers did not act pursuant to official policy or custom. Frazier v. City of Norfolk, E.D.Va.2006, 236 F.R.D. 273. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Former deputies' § 1983 First Amendment claims against sheriff satisfied permissive joinder rule since all of deputies' allegations revolved around claims of termination after alleged violations of First Amendment rights; this included enforcement of the law as to sheriff's supporters and/or failure to support sheriff in his reelection bid and/or speaking at public meeting and such conduct could constitute a single transaction or occurrence for purposes of permissive joinder rule and the alleged discriminatory activity directly affecting each of the deputies included common legal and factual questions. Guedry v. Marino, E.D.La.1995, 164 F.R.D. 181. Federal Civil Procedure 256

4122. In forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally--Generally

Two-stage procedure is used to process a prisoner's pro se civil rights complaint filed in a forma pauperis, in that first the district court determines whether plaintiff satisfies economic eligibility criterion and, on finding of economic justification, the court should allow the complaint to be docketed without prepayment of fees and, second, once leave has been granted the complaint may be dismissed prior to service of process on a determination that it is frivolous or malicious. Woodall v. Foti, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 648 F.2d 268. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10; Federal Civil Procedure 2734

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where a constitutional right is one of great importance and proof of intentional and serious violation is clear and definite, enforcement should not be inhibited by reason of litigation costs. Stolberg v. Members of Bd. of Trustees for State Colleges of State of Conn., C.A.2 (Conn.) 1973, 474 F.2d 485. Federal Civil Procedure 2721

District court may condition continued in forma pauperis proceedings by prison inmate seeking civil rights relief upon his clarification and particularization of his complaint. Allison v. California Adult Authority, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 419 F.2d 822. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4123. ---- Discretion of court, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by requiring state prisoner who had cash credit with the prison warden of $218 to pay $15 filing fee in civil rights action arising out of alleged unconstitutional parole revocation. In re Stump, C.A.1 1971, 449 F.2d 1297. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Where complaint did not allege facts sufficient to constitute claim for relief under this section, denial of leave to file complaint in forma pauperis was not abuse of discretion. Alexander v. California Court Director of Correction, Adult Authority, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 433 F.2d 360. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

In making finding that forma pauperis action is frivolous or malicious, district court has specially broad discretion in case wherein state prisoner seeks to prosecute a civil rights suit in forma pauperis against his keepers. Diamond v. Pitchess, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 411 F.2d 565. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4124. ---- Considerations governing, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

District court is entitled to inquire whether, if prisoner who has no cash credit with warden at moment of filing of civil rights action, had disabled himself by recent drawing on his account, and if so, for what purposes, before permitting prisoner to proceed in forma pauperis. In re Stump, C.A.1 1971, 449 F.2d 1297. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

It is not necessary for litigant to improverish himself before he can appeal in forma pauperis, but it is necessary that he can show something more than mere hardship. Grisom v. Logan, C.D.Cal.1971, 334 F.Supp. 273. Federal Courts 663

4125. ---- Effect on merits, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Denial of leave to proceed in forma pauperis in action under this section was not adjudication on merits of complaint. Woods v. Crumlish, E.D.Pa.1966, 260 F.Supp. 473. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4126. ---- Frivolous actions, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Inmate's in forma pauperis claim for damages against clerk of state circuit court for failure to provide inmate with transcript of his criminal trial for use on appeal had arguable basis in law, and thus was not subject to dismissal as frivolous; it was not clear that clerk's failure to provide transcript when ordered to do so by state circuit judge constituted discretionary act entitling clerk to immunity. McCullough v. Horton, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 69 F.3d 918. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Dismissal of jail inmate's pro se in forma pauperis § 1983 complaint as "frivolous" in raising claim of unreasonable search and seizure against four law enforcement officers and prosecutor was premature, where record did not clearly reflect that successful attack on inmate's arrest would implicate validity of his confinement; if inmate was tried and convicted and in his contested criminal case no evidence was presented resulting directly or indirectly from any of his arrests, illegality in any of his arrests may not be inconsistent with his conviction.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Mackey v. Dickson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 47 F.3d 744. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmate's pro se and in forma pauperis § 1983 action against defense counsel and law enforcement officers challenged constitutionality of his state conviction or sentence by alleging ineffective assistance of counsel and failure to disclose exculpatory evidence, and thus action could be dismissed with prejudice as frivolous, absent showing that state conviction or sentence had been reversed, expunged, invalidated, or impugned by grant of writ of habeas corpus. Boyd v. Biggers, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1994, 31 F.3d 279. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

District court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing, on prisoner's application to proceed in form pauperis, prisoner's second § 1983 civil rights case as frivolous on ground of claim preclusion/res judicata, where prisoner's prior case was dismissed as frivolous on his application to proceed in forma pauperis, and both cases arose from failure of police to honor state court order requiring them to return property seized from prisoner when he was arrested. Hudson v. Hedge, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 27 F.3d 274, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 641, 513 U.S. 1046, 130 L.Ed.2d 547. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

If civil rights suit by prison inmate is frivolous or malicious, district court may withdraw leave to proceed in forma pauperis. Allison v. California Adult Authority, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 419 F.2d 822. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Considering that civil rights action against state correctional authorities for delay in furnishing plaintiff with a transcript of his trial in state court was frivolous, it was not improper to deny plaintiff the right to proceed in forma pauperis. Davis v. Brierley, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1969, 412 F.2d 783. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prisoner's action under this section against warden, state director of corrections and several other state officers seeking injunctive and declaratory relief on basis that statute and regulations had been applied to curtail his liberty in penitentiary was frivolous and district court did not abuse its discretion in denying prisoner leave to commence and prosecute suit in forma pauperis. Shobe v. People of State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1966, 362 F.2d 545, certiorari denied 87 S.Ct. 185, 385 U.S. 887, 17 L.Ed.2d 115. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prisoner's complaint under this section charging that prison official subjected him to religious prosecution, deprived him of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14, and denied him right to attend group services with his faith and to services of minister of faith and restricted his purchase of religious literature stated good cause under this section and complaint therefore met statutory requirement for leave to proceed in forma pauperis that action not be frivolous. Richey v. Wilkins, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1964, 335 F.2d 1. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prison inmate's claim in § 1983 action, that her right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment was violated by a corrections officer who did nothing to protect her after being notified that a fellow inmate threatened plaintiff inmate, was not frivolous within meaning of in forma pauperis statute. Figalora v. Smith, D.Del.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 658. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

In forma pauperis plaintiff's § 1983 claim which alleged that law enforcement officers violated his constitutional rights by issuing allegedly overbroad press release which resulted in his being charged with crimes to which he pled guilty was frivolous; plaintiff had no constitutional right to have his crimes remained undiscovered. Kleiss v. Short, S.D.Iowa 1992, 805 F.Supp. 726, affirmed 995 F.2d 229. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Complaint in which former jail inmate alleged that he complained to sheriff of threats which he had received from other inmates, that no action was taken, and that those inmates later attacked him and inflicted severe injuries was not frivolous, so that he was entitled to proceed in forma pauperis. Smith v. Artison, E.D.Wis.1991, 779 F.Supp. 113. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Pro se inmate's § 1983 claim that denial of his request to buy television with videotape machine built into it denied him his right to education on basis that he would use video player to take educational courses that involved viewing videotapes was frivolous and, accordingly, inmate was not entitled to proceed in forma pauperis; because prison was not community correctional center, state law gave inmate no property right to ownership of any recording device nor did inmate have constitutional right to educational, rehabilitative or vocational programs. Rial v. McGinnis, N.D.Ill.1991, 756 F.Supp. 1070. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmate did not articulate nonfrivolous claim under § 1983, as required to have in forma pauperis status, in light of evidence supporting disciplinary finding against inmate in connection with assault where inmate did not claim that he was denied notice of charges against him. Umar v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1993, 150 F.R.D. 139. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Section 1983 claim that former governor of Utah, acting in her official capacity as governor, promoted and protected illegal corruption and prostitution of minors, which rested on plaintiff's belief that waitresses at local restaurant were prostitutes, was based on fantastic or delusional scenarios, warranting claim's dismissal, as "frivolous," under in forma pauperis (IFP) statute. Curiale v. Walker, C.A.10 (Utah) 2005, 136 Fed.Appx. 139, 2005 WL 1332350, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4127. ---- Pendency of like actions, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

State prisoner's application to proceed in forma pauperis in his civil rights action claiming religious discrimination by prison officials was not to be denied by reason of pendency of like actions by fellow inmates. Richey v. Wilkins, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1964, 335 F.2d 1. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4128. ---- Appeal, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Appropriate procedure for prisoner claiming denial of medical attention would be to file a new action rather than pursue appeal of lawsuit involving events occurring about six years earlier, and accordingly leave to appeal in forma pauperis and appointment of counsel were denied. Clark v. Fortner, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1979, 590 F.2d 1309. Federal Courts 663

Inasmuch as it was error to dismiss state prisoner's complaint on pleadings without affording prisoner an opportunity to present evidence to substantiate his allegations, it was error to refuse to permit petition to be docketed without the payment of costs and likewise to refuse to allow appeal to proceed in forma pauperis. Campbell v. Beto, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1972, 460 F.2d 765. Federal Civil Procedure 2734; Federal Courts 662.1

Where complainant was barred by res judicata from prosecuting his "civil rights" complaint, order permitting appeal to court of appeals in forma pauperis was improvidently granted. Scott v. California Supreme Court, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 426 F.2d 300. Federal Courts 662.1

Plaintiff, whose request to proceed in forma pauperis in civil rights action had been denied by district court on ground that action was "plainly without merit" was entitled to proceed in district court in forma pauperis, where district court had granted him leave to prosecute his appeal in forma pauperis on ground that court could not say that his claim was entirely frivolous. Lockhart v. D'Urso, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1969, 408 F.2d 354. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

In § 1983 action which plaintiffs' counsel had taken on contingency, plaintiffs qualified for in forma pauperis status on appeal; protracted nature of the case, which was caused in part by repeated transfer of the case for which plaintiffs bore no responsibility, made it unrealistic to assume that plaintiffs could readily obtain new counsel who could adequately represent them on appeal, and plaintiffs would have material difficulties advancing costs of their appeal. Fodelmesi v. Schepplerly, S.D.N.Y.1996, 944 F.Supp. 285. Federal Courts 663

Appeal from action brought under this section following judgment on verdict adverse to plaintiffs who claimed damages for wrongful death, conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of right to recovery for wrongful death, wrongful injury to infant, and falsification of evidence to support perjury charge presented no issues arguable on law or facts, was frivolous and not taken in good faith, and was not to be permitted in forma pauperis. Grisom v. Logan, C.D.Cal.1971, 334 F.Supp. 273. Federal Courts 663

4129. ---- Affidavit, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Attack on truth of affidavit of poverty or sufficiency of complaint in civil rights action sought to be prosecuted in forma pauperis should be left for appropriate disposition after service has been made on the defendants. Lockhart v. D'Urso, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1969, 408 F.2d 354. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4130. ---- Miscellaneous actions leave granted, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Inmate's in forma pauperis § 1983 complaint seeking to enjoin prosecutor and her successors from obstructing execution of writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum to allow inmate to testify in workers' compensation proceeding on his own behalf was not "frivolous"; it was at least arguable that continued imprisonment of inmate in face of validly issued state writ of habeas corpus, in absence of any justification or excuse, effectively denied inmate "meaningful" access to courts and unlawfully deprived him of writ's effect. Lemmons v. Law Firm of Morris and Morris, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 39 F.3d 264. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Where Negro prisoner filed complaint under this section alleging that although one-half of prison population was Negro only two Negro magazines were allowed in prison while 123 magazines catering to taste of white inmates were allowed, and that when he requested leave to subscribe to a Negro national magazine request was denied because magazine was not on official list of approval magazines issued by prison officials, district court properly permitted filing in forma pauperis but should not have dismissed without benefit fit of a responsive pleading. Owens v. Brierley, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 452 F.2d 640. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10; Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Pretrial detainee would be allowed to proceed in forma pauperis on § 1983 claim against medical staff of county department of corrections based on his assertion that he was denied medical attention by staff following prison bus accident; however, in view of fact that detainee was taken to hospital after accident, leave to proceed against members of hospital's medical staff would be denied, without prejudice to detainee's amending complaint to assert claim for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs. Harris v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1994, 847 F.Supp. 611. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Indigent inmate was entitled to proceed in forma pauperis on his § 1983 claim against assistant district attorney, as inmate's allegation that assistant district attorney tried to cover up police department investigation misconduct, if proved, could demonstrate assistant district attorney was performing investigatory function and therefore enjoyed only qualified immunity. Chavers v. Teggatz, E.D.Wis.1992, 786 F.Supp. 759. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prisoner who alleged that police officer conducted search and seizure of his house and personal effects without warrant and in absence of probable cause would be permitted to proceed with complaint in forma pauperis even though claim presumably was determined adversely to prisoner in his criminal prosecution. Chavers v. Stuhmer, E.D.Wis.1992, 786 F.Supp. 756. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Pretrial detainee confined in county jail would be granted permission to proceed in forma pauperis in federal civil rights suit filed against county officials, where detainee alleged serious charges of poor conditions at county jail which, if sufficiently developed, might constitute violation of Eighth Amendment. Kyle v. Allen, S.D.Fla.1990, 732 F.Supp. 1157. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4131. ---- Miscellaneous actions leave denied, in forma pauperis, practice and procedure generally

Where detainee's in forma pauperis § 1983 action against police officer and department claimed that officer altered and destroyed evidence relevant to charges against detainee, in violation of due process, action could be dismissed with prejudice as "frivolous," absent showing that state conviction or sentence had been reversed, expunged, invalidated, or otherwise called into doubt, since finding that officer altered evidence would necessarily imply invalidity of subsequent convictions and sentences based on those charges. Hamilton v. Lyons, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 74 F.3d 99. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Complaint by state prisoner alleging that state officials denied him equal protection and due process of law in that they denied him the right to seek a writ of habeas corpus, the right to testify freely before a state court, the right to be free and secure from suffering prohibited punishment, and the right to prosecute an action under this section before a federal court was insufficient to entitle state prisoner to proceed in forma pauperis in action in federal district court under this section. Weller v. Dickson, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1963, 314 F.2d 598, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 97, 375 U.S. 845, 11 L.Ed.2d 72. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Complaint in which Muslim inmate of state correctional facility alleged discriminatory application of regulation pursuant to which prison officials denied requests to bring food into cellhouse at night to permit Muslim inmates to properly celebrate Fast of Ramadan and placed limitations on attendance at Muslim services did not raise justiciable issues and therefore, inmate's motion to proceed in forma pauperis would be denied. Cochran v. Sielaff, S.D.Ill.1976, 405 F.Supp. 1126. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Plaintiff was not entitled to file in forma pauperis in § 1983 action against police officer based on officer's allegedly false affidavit in prior civil rights action, as there was no legal basis for claim; officer was entitled to absolute immunity based upon his testifying as police officer in court proceedings. Hardiman v. Fitzsimmons, N.D.Ill.1993, 148 F.R.D. 592. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4132. Assistance of counsel, practice and procedure generally--Generally

General rule that non-attorney parents may not represent their children applied to preclude hearing non-attorney mother's appeal from dismissal of claims brought on behalf of her child under IDEA, Rehabilitation Act, ADA, and §§ 1983, regardless of whether mother was actually capable of representing child. Tindall v. Poultney High School Dist., C.A.2 (Vt.) 2005, 414 F.3d 281. Infants 90

Court must bear in mind, when counsel has been appointed or recruited for § 1983 action, that usual assumptions about agency relationship between lawyer and client must be relaxed; thus, in considering dismissal for want of prosecution, court should satisfy itself that appointed counsel is on the job and should consider appointing substitute counsel in cases in which fault seems to lie primarily with lawyer. Dunphy v. McKee, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1998, 134 F.3d 1297. Civil Rights 1442

Trial court did not err in denying request for appointed counsel made by teacher bringing age discrimination claim against school district, based on analysis of appointed counsel requests followed in § 1983 cases; case did not involve great complexity and prior history of claims effort established teacher's ability to represent himself. Salmon v. Corpus Christi Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 911 F.2d 1165, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1557 town officials, although attorneys represented town officials as individuals in another case, where after consultation officials expressly consented to representation, and other case was not a substantially related matter and involved different parties and legal issues. Bochese v. Town of Ponce Inlet, M.D.Fla.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 1240. Attorney And Client 21.5(2)

Generally, no right to counsel exists in cases under this section. Hardwick v. Ault, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 517 F.2d 295 . Civil Rights 1442

District court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing §§ 1983 action without first considering plaintiff's arguments regarding alleged unethical and negligent behavior of his prior counsel; action was not the proper forum to consider those complaints, and any impropriety by prior counsel did not affect the result of the case inasmuch as case was dismissed due to plaintiff's failure to comply with court order requiring him to retain new counsel and have new counsel make an appearance by a certain deadline. Castrodad-Soto v. Rivera-Sanchez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 401, 2004 WL 1379655, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1832

4133. ---- Prisons and prisoners, assistance of counsel, practice and procedure generally

Prison inmate asserting claim that prison officials failed to protect inmate from violence by other inmates, in violation of Eighth Amendment, was entitled to appointment of counsel, as inmate had colorable claim, and inmate may have been ill-equipped to represent himself in view of medical evidence that inmate suffered from paranoid delusional disorder. Hamilton v. Leavy, C.A.3 (Del.) 1997, 117 F.3d 742. Civil Rights 1445

Assertion by inmate bringing pro se § 1983 action that his "mental anguish" prevented his attending to suit did not satisfy "exceptional circumstances" requirement for appointment of counsel. Cooper v. Sheriff, Lubbock County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1078. Civil Rights 1445

Appointing counsel for inmate was appropriate in civil rights action alleging sexual abuse and deliberate indifference to medical needs; the sensitive nature of the sexual abuse claims made appointment of counsel appropriate, and the inmate had a likelihood of success on some claims. Wood v. Idaho Dept. of Corrections, D.Idaho 2005, 391 F.Supp.2d 852. Civil Rights 1445

Counsel would not be appointed for inmate in his pro se §§ 1983 action against prison health care provider, where inmate was able to articulate alleged facts clearly, his allegations coincided with provider's records, issue was predominately legal one that would not be decided by credibility determinations, inmate was able to undertake his own factual inquiry and obtain medical records, and case most likely would not require expert testimony. Daniels v. Correctional Medical Services, Inc., D.Del.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 379, affirmed 2006 WL 623039. Civil Rights 1445

No compelling reason existed for appointment of counsel in pro se inmate's § 1983 action against corrections officials alleging overcollection of court filing fees as well as interference with legal correspondence; difficult factual issues were not involved, inmate could argue issue of interpretation of Prisoner Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) based on his access to prison law library, and inmate was experienced in § 1983 litigation and was both articulate and reasonably cognizant of procedural requirements. Davidson v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2002, 259 F.Supp.2d 236, appeal denied 259 F.Supp.2d 238. Civil Rights 1445

Court would not appoint counsel for inmate, suing prison employees under §§ 1983 for providing insufficient medical care; issues were simple and clear, and inmate's communications with court showed ability to represent himself. Green v. Howard R. Young Correctional Institution, D.Del.2005, 229 F.R.D. 99. Civil Rights 1445

Denial of inmate's request for appointment of counsel was a proper exercise of discretion in the inmate's §§ 1983 suit claiming that prison officers subjected him to a cruel and excessive strip search; district court determined that the case did not involve complex, technical issues, that counsel could not affect the outcome because the case had little merit, and that the inmate's pleadings and numerous past lawsuits showed him to be sufficiently experienced to try the case. Cherry v. Frank, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 125 Fed.Appx. 63, 2005 WL 589975, Unreported. Civil

Indigent state prisoner was not entitled to court-appointed counsel, in 1983 action against various correctional officers; although prisoner's ability to investigate facts could be limited, claim focused on single incident, factual circumstances surrounding claim were not complicated, there was no showing that appointment of counsel would increase the likelihood of just determination of the case, and prisoner had made no other effort to secure representation on his own. Allen v. Sakellardis, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22232902, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

Appointment of pro bono counsel for state prison inmate bringing pro se in forma pauperis § 1983 action against prison officials for alleged improper medical treatment was not warranted where inmate demonstrated an ability to investigate and present the relevant facts; inmate, on his own, engaged in discovery, filed motions to compel and amend, and responded to defendants' motions to dismiss, generally appeared capable of understanding and presenting the legal issues raised by his claims, and the factual circumstances surrounding his claims did not appear complicated. Verley v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22047859, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

Refusal to recruit an attorney to help state prison inmate conduct discovery in his § 1983 suit against prison officials for alleged use of excessive force by prison guards was within district court's discretion absent any evidence that he adequately tried to obtain private counsel or that circumstances prevented his doing so. Bieber v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 62 Fed.Appx. 714, 2003 WL 1870892, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 113, 540 U.S. 843, 157 L.Ed.2d 78. Civil Rights 1445

Prison inmate was not constitutionally entitled to representation in connection with his § 1983 action against prison nurse. Beers v. Stockton, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2000, 242 F.3d 373, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

4134. ---- Merits of claim, assistance of counsel, practice and procedure generally

If it is apparent to district court that pro se litigant has colorable claim but lacks capacity to present it, district court should appoint counsel to assist him. Gordon v. Leeke, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 574 F.2d 1147, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 464, 439 U.S. 970, 58 L.Ed.2d 431. Attorney And Client 23

Factors district court must consider in determining whether to appoint counsel to a pro se civil litigant are same in both the Title VII and § 1983 context: court should first determine whether indigent's position seems likely to be of substance, if claim meets this threshold requirement, court should then consider indigent's ability to investigate crucial facts, whether conflicting evidence implicating need for cross-examination will be major proof presented to fact finder, indigent's ability to present case, complexity of legal issues and any special reason in case why appointment of counsel would be more likely to lead to a just determination. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1446; Civil Rights 1557

Counsel would not be appointed to represent state prisoner in civil rights action where a prisoner's complaint was without merit. Sanno v. Preiser, S.D.N.Y.1975, 397 F.Supp. 560. Attorney And Client 23

If civil rights case by state prisoner against arresting officer and city for false arrest and illegal detention has merit and a trial is required, counsel for state prisoner should be appointed. Chubbs v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1971, 324 F.Supp. 1183. Civil Rights 1445

Where state prisoner's action under this section against warden for alleged grievances was frivolous, prisoner's application for assignment of counsel would be denied. U. S. ex rel. Stuart v. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Indigent state prisoner satisfied the threshold requirement that he make a showing of merit for appointment of counsel in § 1983 action against correctional officers by alleging that officers restrained him in a headlock and repeatedly banged his head against the wall, that he suffered lacerations to the face and head, which required medical attention, that officers fabricated story that prisoner had assaulted the officers, and that prisoner was sentenced to solitary confinement and charged with felony as a result. Allen v. Sakellardis, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22232902, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

4135. ---- Indigent parties, assistance of counsel, practice and procedure generally

Trial court should have appointed counsel for indigent prisoner seeking to bring § 1983 action against jail officials with regard to restraints used against him; district court should have realized that it was highly probable that prisoner would not have recognized need to call expert witnesses to present prima facie case. Jackson v. County of McLean, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 953 F.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1445

Civil rights suit brought in forma pauperis by inmate against prison officials for alleged infringement of his constitutional right to practice religion and for retaliation for his practice of religion and his exercise of legal rights did not present "exceptional circumstances" justifying appointment of counsel; claims were relatively straightforward and involved incidents which took place in prison, most of which inmate witnessed himself, and inmate was accomplished writ writer who was capable of representing himself adequately, as demonstrated by quality of his written pleadings and his conduct at trial. Fowler v. Jones, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1990, 899 F.2d 1088. Civil Rights 1445

There was no constitutional or statutory right for indigent to have appointed counsel in civil case and counsel should not be appointed in every civil rights case filed by state prisoner. Randall v. Wyrick, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1981, 642 F.2d 304. Civil Rights 1445

In civil rights action brought by state prisoner in forma pauperis, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appointment of counsel. Wimberly v. Rogers, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1977, 557 F.2d 671. Civil Rights 1445

Inmate's § 1983 claim alleging deprivation of eyeglasses, access to courts, and soap and toilet paper as well as censorship of his mail was not sufficiently complex to warrant appointment of counsel pursuant to in forma pauperis statute. Williams v. ICC Committee, N.D.Cal.1992, 812 F.Supp. 1029. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Appointment of pro bono counsel for citizen was not warranted in § 1983 action, even though citizen demonstrated that he was indigent, he was disabled, and he made threshold showing of merit; citizen did not detail nature or extent of his disability and his disability did not significantly hamper his ability to prosecute his case, citizen was not incarcerated and he did not present any other reason why he would be unable to pursue and present evidence relevant to his claims, he was capable of understanding and presenting legal issues raised by his claims, and he did not make sufficient effort to obtain lawyer. Walters v. NYC Health Hosp. Corp., S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31681600, Unreported. Civil Rights 1447

Indigent arrestee was not unable to pursue and present evidence relevant to his false arrest and malicious prosecution claims, and thus he was not entitled to appointment of pro bono counsel to represent him in civil rights action under § 1983 and state law against city, where he was not incarcerated, and he had shown a substantial ability to investigate and present relevant facts. Rissman v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31499003, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445; Federal Civil Procedure 1951

Indigent arrestee's allegations describing circumstances of his arrest and reasons why he claimed city's conduct with respect to that arrest was improper were sufficient to make threshold showing of merit as to false arrest and malicious prosecution claims, as would support arrestee's application for appointment of pro bono counsel to represent him in civil rights action under § 1983 and state law against city. Rissman v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31499003, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445; Federal Civil Procedure 1951

4136. ---- Time for assistance, assistance of counsel, practice and procedure generally

Where plaintiff seeking relief for alleged misconduct of police officers after his arrest was pursuing proceedings in state courts in connection therewith which were not final and where plaintiff had assistance of counsel in state proceedings, counsel would not be assigned for plaintiff and court would not consider whether counsel should be assigned until state proceedings had reached final decision. Beyer v. Werner, E.D.N.Y.1969, 299 F.Supp. 967. Attorney And Client 23

4137. ---- On remand, assistance of counsel, practice and procedure generally

Court of appeals was not persuaded that it should order that counsel be appointed for indigent prison inmates on remand following vacation of judgment dismissing civil rights complaint asserting improper restrictions on exercise of religion by prison officials, and would instead leave matter to trial judge's consideration as he examines case. Kennedy v. Meacham, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1976, 540 F.2d 1057. Federal Courts 943.1

4138. Hearing, practice and procedure generally--Generally

While certain prisoner suits under this section and habeas corpus suits may be dismissed without requiring a hearing, when the file and record requires the district court to make credibility choices, a petitioner is entitled to a day in court with live testimony; however, this does not mean that the petitioner's presence will always be required. Ballard v. Spradley, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 557 F.2d 476. Federal Civil Procedure 1825

Where there are substantial allegations of violations of constitutional rights in treatment of state prisoners, civil rights complaint must be considered on its merits by proper hearing. Gregory v. Wyse, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1975, 512 F.2d 378. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegation that procedural due process was denied in prison disciplinary proceedings should no longer require district court, except perhaps in extreme case, to hold evidentiary hearing. Willis v. Ciccone, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1974, 506 F.2d 1011. Prisons 13(3)

4139. ---- Presence of petitioner, hearing, practice and procedure generally

Inmate had no right to attend pretrial conferences held in his § 1983 suit against the correctional facility and its officers and doctors. Woods v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31296325, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1921

4140. ---- Miscellaneous hearings granted, practice and procedure generally

Inmate, who brought action against prison officials seeking declaratory relief, injunctive relief and damages after he was held in segregation before hearing on charges regarding various violations of prison rules in connection with taking of books, raised issues of material fact as to which he was entitled to a hearing in district court. Muhammad v. Rowe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 638 F.2d 693. Civil Rights 1092; Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Claims that former prisoner at training center for men had been prevented personally from participating in church worship services and Bible study classes, from wearing long hair and beard as incident of exercise of his religion or from distributing religious literature of his church were not frivolous and, in absence of the prisoner having had opportunity to litigate those claims, evidentiary hearing must be held by district court to determine truth of his claims and, if true, whether his civil rights had been violated. Green v. White, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1979, 605 F.2d 376, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1038, 444 U.S. 1083, 62 L.Ed.2d 767, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1060, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L.Ed.2d 782. Civil Rights 1424

Where Nevada State Prison inmate alleged in civil rights complaint that he had been subjected to cruel and unusual punishment as the result of overcrowded cell conditions, denial of showers and basic sanitary items, denial of miscellaneous items such as shoes and tobacco and by a diet consisting entirely of cold and possibly inadequate good, such allegations, when read liberally as was appropriate in reviewing a motion to dismiss, were sufficient to require that a hearing be held at which facts and circumstances surrounding the allegations could be developed. Shapley v. Wolff, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1978, 568 F.2d 1310. Civil Rights 1395(7)

In civil rights action brought by female inmates at correctional facility who sought preliminary injunction enjoining assignment of male correction officers to duties in housing and hospital units of facility on claim of deprivation of constitutionally guaranteed right to privacy by causing inmates to be "involuntarily exposed" to officers, fact that briefs and affidavits presented disputed issues of fact required an evidentiary hearing to determine credibility issues. Forts v. Ward, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 566 F.2d 849, on remand 471 F.Supp. 1095. Civil Rights 1424

Allegation of state prisoner relative to the alleged directive that he tell his correspondents not to send him postage stamps sufficiently alleged infringement of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 to require a hearing thereon in action brought under this section. Morgan v. LaVallee, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 526 F.2d 221. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prisoner was entitled to full evidentiary hearing on his claim under this section that he received inadequate medical treatment while awaiting trial because physician employed as a county health officer diagnosed the prisoner's problem as hemorrhoids when the prisoner was suffering from rectal cancer. Robinson v. Jordan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 494 F.2d 793. Civil Rights 1424

Allegations by African-American licensed sidewalk vendors that they received no notice of new application procedure which restricted vending to certain locations in city whereas vendors who were not African-American did receive notice and that this was part of deliberate plan on part of city stated claim for denial of equal protection entitling African-American vendors to evidentiary hearing in support of motion for preliminary injunction. Lindsay v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1994, 844 F.Supp. 229. Constitutional Law 219

Even if Medicaid provider experienced repercussions from Department of Social Service's letter expressing concerns about quality of his medical care, he was not entitled to evidentiary hearing to challenge Department's denial of reenrollment in Medicaid program; denial of reenrollment was equivalent to denial of initial application and was not sanction interrupting provider's continuing participation. Senape v. Constantino, S.D.N.Y.1990, 740 F.Supp. 249, affirmed 936 F.2d 687. Administrative Law And Procedure 470; Health 505(2)

4141. ---- Miscellaneous hearings denied, practice and procedure generally

District court in civil rights action by nonresident fireman challenging city's residency ordinance was not required to hold evidentiary hearing where "compelling interest test" on which plaintiffs solely relied did not apply and it was not claimed that complaint stated sufficient facts to invalidate ordinance under rationality test. Wright v. City of Jackson, Mississippi, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 506 F.2d 900. Civil Rights 1424

Due process was not violated by village's termination of waste disposal and recycling contract without a hearing, for § 1983 purposes, as contractor had readily available state court remedies both before and after termination date. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Claimed denial of phone call to plaintiff's attorney while plaintiff was in county jail awaiting postconviction case and one isolated instance of failure to mail a letter, even if true, were not of sufficient merit to justify hearing in suit brought under this section in view of counsel's affidavit that he was afforded access to plaintiff at all times and had sufficient communication with him. Russell v. Enser, D.C.S.C.1979, 496 F.Supp. 320, affirmed 624 F.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1424

In civil rights action challenging prison's visitor strip-search policy, alleged failures by prison officials to recall details as to information they had received that prisoner's wife would be bringing contraband to prison, ambiguity about details, and failure to reveal identities of sources, did not amount to an offer of proof pointing to specific portions of affidavits which were falsely made, either intentionally or with reckless disregard for the truth, so as to warrant an evidentiary hearing as to whether searches of prisoner's wife were undertaken with reasonable suspicion or probable cause. Cate v. Reynolds, E.D.Tenn.1991, 138 F.R.D. 95. Evidence 154

4142. Magistrates, practice and procedure generally

Section 1983 claims challenging county sheriff department's requirement that person in custody wear jail clothing when appearing in nonjury proceedings, brought by individual placed in state mental health facility after being found incompetent to stand trial, did not involve conditions of confinement, so that district court did not have jurisdiction to refer matter to magistrate to conduct evidentiary hearing on merits of § 1983 action. Houghton v. Osborne, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1987, 834 F.2d 745. United States Magistrates 21

Order of district court authorizing magistrates to issue appropriate writs in habeas corpus proceedings and in performing certain duties in criminal actions did not authorize magistrate to conduct evidentiary hearing in civil rights case. Cruz v. Hauck, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 515 F.2d 322, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1118, 424 U.S. 917, 47 L.Ed.2d 322. United States Magistrates 20

In action under this section brought by inmate alleging that he had been subjected to unreasonable body cavity search, genuine issue of material fact remained as to whether body probe of inmate's rectum preceded enema which inmate gave himself in presence of correctional officer, which issue would be resolved in hearing before magistrate and, in accordance with inmate's request, with a jury. Coleman v. Hutto, E.D.Va.1980, 500 F.Supp. 586. United States Magistrates 21

4143. Special masters, practice and procedure generally

Since progress of prison officials in obtaining compliance with court order showed that assistance was required with respect to many of the terms, all steps taken by the officials would be supervised, coordinated, and approved by special master acting for the court and the special master would have the authority to state to the prison officials the actions required to be taken by them to effectuate full compliance with the order and to seek orders from the court requiring prison officials to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt for failure to carry out such actions. Taylor v. Perini, N.D.Ohio 1976, 413 F.Supp. 189. Prisons 4(2.1)

4144. Jury selection, practice and procedure generally

Sheriff's counsel's explanation for exercising peremptory challenge against black school board employee based on counsel's experience that school board employees were "pro-labor" and "pro-employee" was not legally insufficient as matter of law, even though white school board employees were not challenged during jury selection in employment discrimination action. Barfield v. Orange County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 911 F.2d 644, rehearing denied 920 F.2d 13, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2263, 500 U.S. 954, 114 L.Ed.2d 715. Jury 33(5.15) civil rights plaintiff was white and potential jurors who were excluded were black and essential element of claim for relief under Batson is that peremptory challenges were used to remove from venire members of complaining party's race. Wilson v. Cross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1988, 845 F.2d 163. Civil Rights 1422

Where jurors were aware that their service was not limited to two weeks and furthermore plaintiff agreed to bifurcated trial, with liability and damages tried separately, court was not required to question jurors as to whether their judgment on liability issue in civil rights case would be affected by fact that they would have to return for subsequent trial on damages, based on plaintiff's counsel's concern that jurors, on last day of their two weeks' service, would favor the defense because it would enable them to go home earlier. Armstrong v. Borie, E.D.Pa.1980, 494 F.Supp. 902. Jury 131(4)

4145. Jury trial, practice and procedure generally--Generally

Action under § 1983 seeking legal relief is an "action at law," within the meaning of Seventh Amendment right to jury trial. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., U.S.Cal.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1624, 526 U.S. 687, 143 L.Ed.2d 882. Jury 14(1.5)

To extent that discharged teacher pressed civil rights action against school board members in their individual capacities, the individuals were entitled to trial by jury. Burt v. Board of Trustees of Edgefield County School Dist., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 521 F.2d 1201. Jury 14(1.4)

Sheriff was not entitled to bifurcate §§ 1983 action brought against him by former detainee in county jail, which alleged deprivation of Fourteenth Amendment due process right to be released from confinement within reasonable time after reason for confinement ended, into two phases, the first to determine whether detainee was deprived of a federally protected right and second to determine whether sheriff had unconstitutional policy; it was essentially conceded that detainee was detained too long, principal issue was whether sheriff's policies were moving force behind delay in release, bifurcation would unduly confuse jury, and there was little risk of undue prejudice to sheriff if matter was not bifurcated. Green v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 226 F.R.D. 624, clarified 2005 WL 283361. Federal Civil Procedure 1959.1

With respect to when a jury trial can be granted or denied, a civil rights suit is no different from any other civil action. Devore v. Edgefield County School Dist., D.C.S.C.1975, 68 F.R.D. 423. Jury 14(1.5)

Trial of liability and damages issues would be bifurcated in a § 1983 action arising from a deputy sheriff's fatal shooting of a victim, to avoid exposing the jury to evidence of the victim's extensive criminal history before the jury had determined the question of liability, despite claim that the victim's criminal history was relevant to explain the deputy's behavior and to prove his motive and intent, and that the victim's conduct immediately before the shooting was characteristic of his "habitual behavior when intoxicated and in a jealous rage"; there was a strong likelihood jurors would tend to judge the liability facts in favor of the deputy if they were aware of the victim's criminal record, even if the court gave a limiting instruction. Estate of Layman ex rel. Layman v. Blalack, D.Or.2003, 2003 WL 21087975, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1961

4146. ---- Judge/jury combined trial, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Where government was entitled to nonjury trial of count of complaint seeking damages against it under 33 V.I.C. § § 3408 et seq., 3413, for alleged assault and battery perpetrated upon plaintiff by government officer, government officer was entitled to a jury to hear count seeking to recover damages from him under this section, both claims involved identical fact situations, civil rights claim was the broader of the two issues in terms of evidence necessary to prove it and all evidence on the assault and battery was relevant to civil rights claim, counts would not be severed but combined judge/jury procedure would be used and trial would proceed on evidentiary plane as if it were on civil right claims alone and court at end of evidence would decide question of assault and battery on that part of evidence relevant thereto. Simon v. Lovgren, D.C.Virgin Islands 1973, 368 F.Supp. 265. Federal Civil Procedure 1; Jury 12(1.2)

4147. ---- Back pay, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Prayer for back pay, by Negro school teachers alleging violation of civil rights in failure of school district to renew teaching contract when school system was desegregated, was not claim for damages but was integral part of equitable remedy of injunctive reinstatement, and thus neither such claim nor factual issues which formed the basis of claim for reinstatement were appropriate for trial by jury. Harkless v. Sweeny Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1970, 427 F.2d 319, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 451, 400 U.S. 991, 27 L.Ed.2d 439. Jury 13(12)

Applicant, who alleged that Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency discriminated against him by rejecting his application for employment because of his race, sex and religion, had right to jury trial on claim for back pay under this section. Powell v. Pennsylvania Housing Finance Agency, M.D.Pa.1983, 563 F.Supp. 419. Jury 14(1.5)

With respect to allegations by plaintiffs, who alleged that their termination from employment was motivated by their efforts to promote union organization among ports authority employees, under this section, it was apparent that equitable relief in form of back pay and reinstatement was being sought, which was not subject to jury trial; moreover, plaintiffs did not change the essentially equitable nature of their claim merely by adding "unsupported allegations of compensatory and punitive damages." Hodges v. Tomberlin, S.D.Ga.1980, 510 F.Supp. 1280. Jury 14(1.5)

4148. ---- Damages, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Where employment discrimination complaint requested both compensatory and punitive damages in addition to request for equitable relief, trial court properly placed case on its jury docket. Whiting v. Jackson State University, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 616 F.2d 116, rehearing denied 622 F.2d 1043. Jury 14(1.5)

In action for damages under federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights, U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 7 requires a jury trial upon demand where amount in controversy exceeds $20. Burt v. Abel, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 585 F.2d 613, on remand 466 F.Supp. 1234. Jury 15

Defendants are not entitled to a jury trial under the Seventh Amendment on front-pay requests under Title VII, § 1981, or § 1983; front pay draws upon those classic broad principles of fairness that a trial judge would rely upon in granting or denying equitable relief in general. Kennedy v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.2000, 78 F.Supp.2d 1246. Jury 14(1.5)

Right to trial by jury existed in action under this section brought by tenant against landlord, public housing authority, and its officers and agents that sought compensatory and punitive damages to enforce tenant's "legal rights," sounded essentially in tort, and was analogous to an action for intentional infliction of distress. Douglas v. Burroughs, N.D.Ohio 1984, 598 F.Supp. 515. Jury 12(1.1)

Defendants' motion to strike plaintiff's request for a jury trial in civil rights action was subject to being denied where plaintiff not only sought reinstatement and back pay, but also sought compensatory damages for alleged violation of his civil rights arising under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and, under this section, plaintiff had a right to a jury trial in an action for monetary damages. Terrien v. Metropolitan Milwaukee Criminal Justice Council, E.D.Wis.1978, 455 F.Supp. 1375. Jury 14(1.5)

Where action was brought under this section for injunctive and monetary relief and to challenge constitutionality of state prison regulations pursuant to which defendant correction officials allegedly refused to deliver to plaintiff law books purchased by him and brought to prison by his relatives, prohibited plaintiff from keeping prison library law books in his cell overnight and on weekends and limited his use of such law books to two hours per week, defendants were entitled to jury trial on the damage claim. Van Ermen v. Schmidt, W.D.Wis.1974, 374 F.Supp. 1070. Jury 14(1.5)

Defendants in action under this section for damages were not entitled to jury trial. Lawton v. Nightingale, N.D.Ohio 1972, 345 F.Supp. 683, 31 Ohio Misc. 263, 60 O.O.2d 417. Jury 14(1.5)

4149. ---- Equitable relief, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Action against city official for alleged violation of fireman's civil rights in connection with his discharge was subject to being tried to court without a jury where relief sought by fireman was essentially equitable in nature. Gerrin v. Hickey, E.D.Ark.1979, 464 F.Supp. 276. Jury 14(1.5)

Inmate of state prison who raises solely equitable claims against prison officials has no constitutional right to a jury trial. Johnson v. Teasdale, W.D.Mo.1978, 456 F.Supp. 1083. Jury 14(1.5)

Essentially, injunctive, equitable nature of state prisoner's action for relief under this section would preclude a jury. Lee v. Crouse, D.C.Kan.1967, 284 F.Supp. 541, affirmed 396 F.2d 952.

4150. ---- Reinstatement, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Probationary teacher who brought civil rights action against board of education asserting an illegal discharge from employment was not entitled to a jury trial on issue of his entitlement to reinstatement. Lombard v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1166. Jury 14(11)

4151. ---- Time for request, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Inmate who was appointed counsel in § 1983 action against state correctional officials and officers after time for requesting jury trial had passed was not entitled to jury trial, in absence of persuasive reason to grant belated request. Wise v. Lanham, D.Md.1997, 171 F.R.D. 187. Jury 25(6)

4152. ---- Waiver, jury trial, practice and procedure generally

Statement by plaintiff's counsel that "I'm not jumping up and down to try it before a jury," made in response to district court's suggestion that trial to jury would result in delay, coupled with counsel's commencement of trial without objection before the court constituted a waiver of an earlier demand for jury trial of plaintiff's civil rights action. Amburgey v. Cassady, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 507 F.2d 728. Jury 28(5)

4153. ---- Miscellaneous jury trials granted, practice and procedure generally

Suit in which property owner sued city under § 1983, alleging that city's repeated rejections of owner's development proposals effected a regulatory taking without providing just compensation, was an "action at law," within meaning of Seventh Amendment right to jury trial; action sounded in tort, and owner sought damages for unconstitutional denial of just compensation, which is a legal remedy. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., U.S.Cal.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1624, 526 U.S. 687, 143 L.Ed.2d 882. Jury 14(1.5)

Under this section and § 1985 of this title pertaining to conspiracy to deprive of rights, demoted department head was entitled to jury trial. An-Ti Chai v. Michigan Technological University, W.D.Mich.1980, 493 F.Supp. 1137.

District court's decision, to not allow prisoner to call childhood physician to testify as to treatment he received for his original hip infection and as to physician's opinion that he would require hip replacement surgery at some point in future, was not abuse of discretion, in § 1983 lawsuit under Eighth Amendment, since medical service provider stipulated to any facts physician might have presented as to surgery and care he gave physician 25 years before his hip replacement surgery. Herman v. Correctional Medical Services, Inc., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 183, 2003 WL 21235499, Unreported. Evidence 509

4154. Issues determinable, practice and procedure generally

District court's decision in county employee's civil rights action alleging that his dismissal violated his substantive due process rights was not limited to due process claims but could include examination of facts behind county's decision to terminate employment; employee's legal arguments were inextricably intertwined with his factual allegations about county's method of operation. Adams v. Sewell, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 946 F.2d 757. Civil Rights 1122

Since state prisoner had not shown a deprivation of a constitutionally protected interest, in that denial of parole did not amount to loss of liberty in the due process context, federal court, in prisoner's civil rights action against State Parole Board, did not need to address whether the board's procedures comported with due process. Jackson v. Reese, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1979, 608 F.2d 159. Constitutional Law 46(1)

In action brought by Canadian citizen challenging McKinney's N.Y. Social Services Law § 131-k rendering aliens unlawfully residing in United States ineligible for benefits under aid to families with dependent children program, in which action district court awarded retroactive welfare benefits against county commissioner of social services but denied such award against state commissioner of social services, there was no persuasive reason to consider plaintiff's elaborate theory supporting contention that state defendant was not entitled to immunity under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11 where plaintiff was entitled to judgment against county defendant for same amount she could recover against state defendant. Holley v. Lavine, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1979, 605 F.2d 638, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1843, 446 U.S. 913, 64 L.Ed.2d 266. Federal Courts 757

When a constitutional claim is made under this section that is of "sufficient substance" to support federal jurisdiction, a district court has power under § 1343 of Title 28 to consider other claims based on this section without determining that latter claims, standing alone, are sufficient to support jurisdiction. Gonzalez v. Young, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1977, 560 F.2d 160, certiorari granted 98 S.Ct. 1232, 434 U.S. 1061, 55 L.Ed.2d 761, affirmed 99 S.Ct. 1905, 441 U.S. 600, 60 L.Ed.2d 508, on remand 599 F.2d 111. Federal Courts 219.1

Since record in civil rights action of terminated college instructor, claiming infringement of his constitutional right to free speech, contained sufficient evidence to indicate that termination was justified in light of those charges delineated in termination letter other than the charge involving issue of free speech, considering record as a whole trial court did not err in failing to determine claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Stewart v. Bailey, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1977, 556 F.2d 281, on rehearing 561 F.2d 1195, rehearing denied 565 F.2d 163. Constitutional Law 46(1)

A prisoner's custodians cannot lawfully deny him adequate medical care even in instances of deliberate self-injury and, thus, issue whether plaintiff injured himself while incarcerated in penal institution administered by defendants was irrelevant to issues in action wherein plaintiff sought to recover against defendants on ground that he suffered two amputation operations to his right arm because he was denied adequate medical treatment during his incarceration. Scharfenberger v. Wingo, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1976, 542 F.2d 328. Civil Rights 1091

Where court found that nonrenewal of nontenured school teacher's contract of employment involved no property or liberty interest such as to require procedural due process, it was not required, in teacher's civil rights action against board, to consider teacher's contention that nonrenewal was substantively arbitrary and capricious. Weathers v. West Yuma County School Dist. R-J-1, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1976, 530 F.2d 1335. Federal Courts 757

In action challenging school disciplinary procedures, issues which person who had not been made party plaintiff might have had standing to raise as a representative plaintiff but which plaintiffs had no standing to raise were not properly before the court. Black Coalition v. Portland School Dist. No. 1, C.A.9 (Or.) 1973, 484 F.2d 1040. Federal Civil Procedure 881

Where junior high school teacher had no right to hearing in connection with nonrenewal of his contract for succeeding term, adequacy of hearing gratuitously granted to him was not open to review. Woodward v. Hereford Independent School Dist., N.D.Tex.1976, 421 F.Supp. 93. Schools 147.44

A state official may act unlawfully under state law without thereby violating Federal Constitution, and thus district court could not by indirection in reaching federal issues pass judgment on adequacy of conduct addressed by state laws. 4155. Presence of petitioner, practice and procedure generally

Federal district court did not abuse its discretion by conducting trial of state prison inmate's §§ 1983 action against corrections officials by videoconference, with pro se inmate, defense counsel, and witnesses all appearing remotely; there was evidence that inmate was high escape risk and aggressive, requiring two officer escorts to court from prison 120 miles away, there were approximately 20 potential witnesses from state's corrections department scattered in various locations, court put appropriate safeguards in place to allow jurors to see all parties at same time, and action was one with straightforward issues. Thornton v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 428 F.3d 690, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 2006 WL 584103. Federal Civil Procedure 1951

In order to determine whether prisoner should appear at trial of his civil litigation, court must consider such factors as whether prisoner's presence will substantially further resolution of the case, security risk presented by prisoner's presence, expense of prisoner's transportation and safekeeping, and whether suit could be stayed until prisoner is released without prejudice to the cause; consideration of those factors ensures that district court properly weighs interest of inmate in presenting his case in person against interest of state in maintaining inmate's incarceration. Latiolais v. Whitley, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 93 F.3d 205. Convicts 6

In determining whether prisoner should be present for trial of his civil action, district court should consider the following factors: whether prisoner's presence will substantially further resolution of case and whether alternative ways of proceeding, such as trial on depositions, offer acceptable alternative, expense and potential security risk entailed in transporting and holding prisoner in custody for duration of trial, and likelihood that stay pending prisoner's release will prejudice his opportunity to present his claim, or defendant's right to speedy resolution of claim. Dismissal of debtors' § 1983 takings claims for failure to prosecute was warranted, since one-year statute of limitations for such claims had expired, district court on appeal had given debtors 20 days to amend their complaint but they did not do so, and even though years had passed, bankruptcy court asked them if they planned to amend and debtors answered "no." Dismissal with prejudice of arrestee's § 1983 suit against city and police alleging malicious prosecution was justified, under rule governing sanctions for discovery violations and under court's inherent authority to address flagrant contempt, even though the suit might have had some merit, where arrestee filed suit using false name, served unverified interrogatory answers containing lies about his true identity, birth date, and arrest record, lied under oath about his name and birth date in related case, gave same false name to avoid outstanding arrest warrants when underlying arrest was made, and used same false name throughout multi-year duration of his three state criminal trials and incarceration. Dotson v. Bravo, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 321 F.3d 663. Federal Civil Procedure 1537.1; Federal Civil Procedure 2791; Federal Civil Procedure 2820

Issue of whether police officer deliberately refused for several minutes to help arrestee cover her breast while rear-handcuffed presented fact questions that could not be resolved on motion to dismiss on qualified immunity grounds arrestee's § 1983 action alleging violation of her Fourth Amendment rights. Fieldcamp v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 388. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Pro se inmate's failure to timely serve doctor and nurse warranted dismissal of his §§ 1983 claims against them, where inmate complied with District Court's order to submit United States Marshal 285 forms for all defendants but, because doctor and nurse were no longer employed by prison's health care provider, forms were returned unexecuted, and inmate made no further attempts to serve doctor and nurse or to obtain their addresses. Daniels v. Correctional Medical Services, Inc., D.Del.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 379, affirmed 2006 WL 623039. Federal Civil Procedure 1751

Voluntary dismissal without prejudice, of pro se plaintiff's § 1983 action alleging fraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy, was warranted where defendant debt collection agency would not suffer any plain legal prejudice by grant of the motion; parties were still in early stages of the litigation. Estate of Williams-Moore v. Alliance One Receivables Management, Inc., M.D.N.C.2004, 335 F.Supp.2d 636. Federal Civil Procedure 1700

In forma pauperis civil rights suit of prisoner was subject to dismissal without prejudice under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) based on assertion of claims against arresting officer and public defender that did not state a claim because they were based on non-existent constitutional rights, were barred by guilty plea, involved actions not taken under color of state law, were based on speculation unsupported by factual allegations, or challenged validity of conviction without first satisfying Heck rule requiring favorable termination of habeas or postconviction challenges to conviction. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Issue of whether city had permanent and well settled unwritten policy and practice of heavy-handed abusive enforcement against African-Americans presented fact questions that could not be resolved on city's motion to dismiss § 1983 claims against it under respondeat superior theory arising from shooting death of African-American suspect by police officer. Leisure v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 848. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Issue whether prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity on §§ 1983 free speech claims arising from officials' alleged interception of prisoner's outgoing, non-legal mail, could not be resolved at motion to dismiss phase, due to issues of fact relating to issue of whether officials' conduct was reasonable. Knight v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.2002, 247 F.Supp.2d 379. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

"keeplock" conditions could not be resolved at motion to dismiss phase, absent factual discovery as to whether prison officials complied with due process requirements. Knight v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.2002, 247 F.Supp.2d 379. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Upon determining that mother's civil rights action against state and its officials, challenging child custody decisions, was barred by Rooker-Feldman doctrine, district court should have dismissed all of mother's claims, i.e., her state and federal claims, without prejudice, not just her state claims; jurisdictional deficiency in action derived from structural limitation on power of lower federal courts to review state court decisions, it did not turn on particular legal grounds on which mother attempted to obtain such review. Atkinson-Bird v. Utah, Div. of Child and Family Services, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 645, 2004 WL 267754, Unreported. Federal Courts 15

Prisoner failed to establish that circuit court dismissed his prior petition for writ of certiorari, disputing prison disciplinary conviction, based on prisoner's failure to provide court with copy of past grievance form, as required to support prisoner's §§ 1983 action against prison officials alleging they denied him access to courts by refusing to give him copies of previous grievances; writ of certiorari was denied because prisoner did not include correct filing fee and several necessary documents, and grievance form was not listed as one of missing documents. Tyler v. Bett, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 86 Fed.Appx. 970, 2004 WL 102875, Unreported. Prisons 4(10.1)

State prison inmate who had filed untimely motion to substitute successors for deceased corrections officials in § 1983 due process action against officials in their individual capacities, which also named wrong parties to be substituted, would not be given additional time prior to dismissal of claims against deceased officials in order to file amended motion naming proper successors and attempting to show excusable neglect for delay; there was no evidence that one official, then chief executive of entire corrections system, had any personal involvement in subject disciplinary proceedings, and claim against other official was totally conclusory. Swiggett v. Coombe, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 174311, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 364

Issue of whether prosecution was terminated in arrestee's favor, so that arrestee could maintain malicious prosecution claim against village police department, county, county sheriff's department, and police officers, could not be resolved at motion to dismiss phase of § 1983 action because of factual dispute as to whether charges against arrestee were validly adjourned in contemplation of dismissal (ACD). Freedman v. Monticello Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 135751, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Sanction of dismissal of § 1983 complaint against police officer was warranted, where plaintiff failed to timely file amended complaint as ordered by the court and to serve the complaint and summons on defendant within time limit. Carreras-Rosa v. Alves-Cruz, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2000, 215 F.3d 1311, Unreported, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1356, 532 U.S. 920, 149 L.Ed.2d 286. Federal Civil Procedure 1741; Federal Civil Procedure 1751

Claim by prison inmate whose § 1983 action was dismissed without prejudice, after he failed to respond to second motion to dismiss within 30 days, that he had in fact responded, but that response was not timely filed in district court by authorities, was properly raised by moving for reconsideration of dismissal, rather than for first time on appeal. Shields v. Harris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 208 F.3d 218, Unreported. Federal Courts 625

Grant of summary judgment against pro se civil rights litigant had to be reversed, where litigant did not have adequate notice of district court's intention to treat government's filing as Rule 12(b)(6) motion converted into Rule 56 motion for summary judgment. Neal v. Kelly, C.A.D.C.1992, 963 F.2d 453, 295 U.S.App.D.C. 350. Federal Courts 914

In artist's civil rights action under §§ 1983 and 1988 against city, alleging that city ordinance which prohibited him from selling his art on city's streets and parks without first obtaining a license violated his rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments, artist's claim in his reply brief to city's opposition to his motion for partial summary judgment that his art was constitutionally protected simply because it was art was clearly and unequivocally set forth in his motion, and thus, reply would not be struck on ground that it contained new claim; artist claimed in his motion that art was always entitled to First Amendment protection because it always communicated some idea or concept. White v. City of Sparks, D.Nev.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 1129. Federal Civil Procedure 2554

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether statute of limitations had run on citizen's civil rights complaint against Puerto Rican municipality and mayor, precluding summary judgment. Class v. Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, D. Puerto Rico 2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 235. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed, as to reasonableness of city's action in dropping bomb on building in order to arrest occupants, and precluded summary judgment for city on resulting civil rights claims. In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, E.D.Pa.1995, 910 F.Supp. 212. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

District court had jurisdiction to reconsider grant of summary judgment against one of multiple § 1983 defendants on issue of liability, as court had not directed entry of opinion and order determining liability as "final judgment." Waste Conversion, Inc. v. Sims, D.N.J.1994, 868 F.Supp. 643. Federal Civil Procedure 2643.1

Pro se plaintiff's filing, in §§ 1983 action, entitled "Dispositive Motion of Facts," did not comply with requirements of local rule setting forth additional summary judgment motion procedures, and thus, could not be accepted as a summary judgment motion, where the filing provided factual statements, but those propositions were neither the results of a stipulation between the parties nor supported by evidentiary citations. Guy v. Maio, E.D.Wis.2005, 227 F.R.D. 498. Federal Civil Procedure 2547.1

Failure of university student editors to submit copies of potential newspaper articles that were not published due to dean's act of calling publishing company and directing that school newspaper not be published until approved by a university official was not a complete failure of proof entitling dean to summary judgment in § 1983 suit brought by university student editors against dean alleging First Amendment violations, as there was a copy of the last newspaper printed prior to dean's call in the record and there was nothing in the record indicating that future copies of the paper would have differed. Hosty v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 325 F.3d 945, rehearing granted, opinion vacated. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

physician was acting under color of state law when he arranged to remove the patient to the county jail, precluding summary judgment for the physician on the civil rights claim. Morrison v. Washington County, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1983, 700 F.2d 678, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 195, 464 U.S. 864, 78 L.Ed.2d 171. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether city councilman was acting under color of state law when he allegedly used his position as a councilman to try to influence police not to arrest him after his male cohabitant called 911 to report domestic violence, precluding summary judgment on the cohabitant's § 1983 claim against the councilman for alleged violation of his equal protection rights. Lunini v. Grayeb, C.D.Ill.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 893, reversed in part 395 F.3d 761, amended on denial of rehearing. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact regarding whether police officer was acting under color of law at time he injured his former spouse precluded summary judgment on § 1983 excessive force claims against officer and city, though it was uncontested that officer was on duty and in uniform in marked squad car when he stopped spouse's car, where reason that officer pulled spouse over was disputed. Czajkowski v. City of Chicago, Ill., N.D.Ill.1992, 810 F.Supp. 1428. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed, precluding summary judgment, on whether public television stations and members of commission governing Pennsylvania's state-funded public television network conspired to deny funding to applicant and, thus, whether television stations were state actors potentially liable for alleged constitutional deprivations. Independence Public Media of Philadelphia, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Public Television Network Com'n, E.D.Pa.1992, 808 F.Supp. 416, reconsideration denied 813 F.Supp. 335. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence raised fact issue as to whether newspaper and reporter conspired with state actor when newspaper published story containing information taken from confidential police report, precluding summary judgment on grounds that newspaper and reporter did not act under color of state law in civil rights action brought by police officer and his wife, who were subject of the reports; evidence indicated that reporter received the reports from another police officer with intent that reports be published. Scheetz v. Morning Call, Inc., E.D.Pa.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1515, affirmed 946 F.2d 202, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1171, 502 U.S. 1095, 117 L.Ed.2d 417. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4160. ---- Custom or policy, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Material issues of fact as to whether it was policy of jail not to inform detainees of their bail status until they asked and whether this policy was reasonably related to legitimate goals precluded summary judgment for city on § 1983 action brought by arrestee who alleged that his due process rights were violated by keeping him in jail for five-day period without a hearing before magistrate and by not informing him about his bail status. Gaylor v. Does, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1997, 105 F.3d 572. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether need for municipality to be alert for new civilian complaints filed against abusive police officer after his reinstatement to full-duty status was obvious, precluding summary judgment in § 1983 claimant's action against municipality and police department for police officer's excessive use of force against claimant following claimant's bus accident with off-duty police officer's automobile, was presented by evidence that police officer had been identified by police department as "violent-prone" individual who had personality disorder manifested by frequent quick-tempered demands for "respect," escalating into physical confrontations for which he always disavowed responsibility. Vann v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 72 F.3d 1040. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

There were genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment in favor of city as to claims of civil rights violation under § 1983, concerning whether harassment of antiabortion protesters was city policy; evidence could have allowed trier of fact to infer existence of general municipal practice of First Amendment violations against antiabortion protesters. Cannon v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 998 F.2d 867. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence concerning alleged municipal policy permitting police officers to exercise unlimited discretion in making arrest and handling arrested persons in jail following arrest raised fact issue as to whether city approved unconstitutional practices, precluding summary judgment for city in action arising when arrestee died following arrest. Fields v. City of South Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1183, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material question of fact, whether a prison policy contributed to health care professionals' alleged improper denial of pain medication to inmate suffering from granulocytic leukemia, precluded entry of summary judgment for prison officials in inmate's § 1983 action. Crooks v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1989, 872 F.2d 800. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Substantial issues of material fact existed as to whether city and police department followed policy or custom of affording less protection to victims of domestic violence than to victims of nondomestic attacks, precluding summary judgment in civil rights action brought against city by domestic abuse victim alleging violation of civil rights and equal protection. Watson v. City of Kansas City, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1988, 857 F.2d 690. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Arrestee's testimony that police officers questioning him about theft "charged" him after he referred to theft accusation as "bullshit," threw him down on ground and punched him several times, kicked him repeatedly, then stood him up in an aggressive and brutal manner even though he did not resist arrest created fact question as to whether excessive force was used, precluding summary judgment in arrestee's § 1983 excessive force claim against officers. Wilson v. Lyons, D.Me.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 73. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact, as to whether consensual sexual relationships between correctional officers and female jail inmates were so widespread that policymaking officials had constructive knowledge of them yet did nothing, precluded summary judgment on claim that sexual assault on female jail inmate by correctional officer was result of municipal custom or practice of ignoring sexual misbehavior. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact regarding whether county sheriff and his department had a custom or policy of condoning a "code of silence," which sought to inhibit officers from reporting each other's malfeasance, precluded summary judgment on officer's § 1983 claim against sheriff and his department, alleging that such custom resulted in harassment by coworkers after officer reported fellow officer's misconduct. Baron v. Hickey, D.Mass.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 66. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Occupant of house that was allegedly intentionally burned by city police officers during search failed to create genuine issue of material fact regarding whether city had policy or custom of authorizing or allowing its officers to set houses ablaze in course of their duties as would preclude summary judgment on occupant's § 1983 claim against city for use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment, where occupant did not point to any provision of police department manual which authorized burning of houses and also failed to prevent any evidence of other incidents of police officers' intentional burning of houses. Johnson v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 944 F.Supp. 586. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence that city manager possessed policy-making authority for municipality was essential element to § 1983 civil rights claim seeking to impose municipal liability for alleged retaliatory transfer and, thus, employee's failure to present evidence of policy-making authority entitled city to summary judgment. Jones v. City of Elizabeth City,

N.C., E.D.N.C.1991, 840 F.Supp. 398, affirmed 2 F.3d 1149. Civil Rights 1351(5); Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether practice challenged by motorists was county policy precluded summary judgment for board of county commissioners in action brought by motorists claiming that investigatory stops violated Fourth Amendment's prohibition against unreasonable seizures. Whitfield v. Board of County Com'rs of Eagle County, Colo., D.Colo.1993, 837 F.Supp. 338. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County and county commissioners were entitled to judgment as a matter of law in § 1983 action based on search of home of sheriff's department lieutenant pursuant to search warrant, where lieutenant made no showing of policy, practice or custom on part of county or board of supervisors which led to alleged constitutional violations. Davison v. Frey, E.D.Mich.1993, 837 F.Supp. 235. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether police department implemented adequate disciplinary procedures, whether there was customary practice within department of condoning use of excessive force and domestic violence against wives of police officers, whether the continued existence of such practices amounted to deliberate indifference, and whether there was a causal link between such practices and injuries to officer's spouse and child precluded summary judgment for city on civil rights claim of spouse and child for officer's alleged use of excessive force. Czajkowski v. City of Chicago, Ill., N.D.Ill.1992, 810 F.Supp. 1428. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact question as to existence of police department policy of permitting arrest and incarceration without probable cause precluded summary judgment on council member's claim arising out of her arrest. Brown v. Smythe, E.D.Pa.1991, 780 F.Supp. 274. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence in § 1983 suit arising from mistaken arrest and jailing of plaintiff for failure to appear to serve sentence he had in fact already served raised disputed factual issues regarding whether alleged constitutional violations resulted from policy of sheriff's or from a custom of which sheriff was actually or constructively aware, precluding summary judgment on claim against sheriff in his official capacity. McDonald v. Dunning, E.D.Va.1991, 760 F.Supp. 1156. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Issue of material fact as to whether municipal officials' allegedly deliberate indifference to inmate's serious medical needs was result of official policy, custom or decision of involved municipal entities precluded summary judgment for entities in inmate's § 1983 action alleging respondeat superior liability. Brown v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1991, 758 F.Supp. 876, on reargument 869 F.Supp. 196. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether county had policy allowing tape-recording of employees' conversations and whether director of certain county office was policy maker precluded summary judgment on office employees' § 1983 claim against county for alleged violation of their constitutional rights in connection with director's tape-recording of their conversations in office. Dorris v. Absher, M.D.Tenn.1997, 959 F.Supp. 813, affirmed in part, reversed in part 179 F.3d 420. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

specifically seek protection from attackers, identify gang members who threatened him after first attack, or inform officials of threats against him on day of second attack, after prisoner made officials aware that gang targeted him, officials transferred prisoner, and officials did not know before second attack that attackers belonged to gang. Lewis v. Richards, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 107 F.3d 549. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether city had been deliberately indifferent to rights of citizens precluded summary judgment in federal civil rights action brought against city after police officer, about whose hiring reservations had been expressed by several officials within hiring process due to officer's driving record, struck and fatally injured motorist while driving through intersection at high speed without turning on siren while responding to emergency call. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether prison officials had knowledge of risk to safety of prisoner posed by other inmates as would allow finding of deliberate indifference to rights of prisoner, precluding summary judgment in federal civil rights action brought by prisoner after he was assaulted by other inmates, was presented by prisoner's testimony that he had prior to assaults identified to prison officials source of threats which had been made to him and by evidence that inmate who was believed to be posing threat was present at meeting at which inmate alleged that he informed officials of threats. Hayes v. New York City Dept. of Corrections, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 84 F.3d 614. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether municipality and police department acted with "deliberate indifference" to dangers posed by abusive policeman who had been fully restored to full duty service, precluding summary judgment in § 1983 claimant's action against municipality and police department for police officer's excessive use of force against claimant following claimant's bus accident with off-duty police officer's automobile, was presented by evidence that police department understaffed its supervisory units that dealt with problem officers and that there was systematic lack of communication to supervisory divisions of information with regard to new civilian complaints against officers. Vann v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 72 F.3d 1040. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed, precluding summary judgment for sheriff and county, on whether sheriff knowingly or recklessly disregarded risk of serious harm from conditions in group cell but failed to take reasonable measures to abate it, for purposes of showing sheriff's deliberate indifference to risk as required to support § 1983 claim arising from pretrial detainee's injuries suffered in beating by other inmates; although sheriff worked toward construction of new jail, existing jail had no policy for classifying and segregating inmates, jailer had received no professional training, and jailer was stationed out of eyesight and earshot of cell. Hale v. Tallapoosa County, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1995, 50 F.3d 1579. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

When party fails to timely object to trial court's evidentiary rulings during proceedings, those rulings are reviewed under plain error standard. Abrams v. Lightolier Inc., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 50 F.3d 1204. Federal Courts 635

Genuine issue of material fact precluding summary judgment existed in prisoner's civil rights action based on alleged inadequate medical treatment as to whether physician-in-charge at state correctional facility knew that prisoner, who had suffered stroke, should receive physical therapy and deliberately failed to provide it for nonmedical reasons, where, at time physician first saw prisoner, prisoner had already spent over seven months in prison system without receiving physical therapy prescribed by his preincarceration physician despite prisoner's notification to authorities of his deteriorating condition and need for immediate therapy, time was of essence since physical therapy must take place within approximately 18 months of stroke to be effective, physician sent prisoner to neurologist for expert evaluation rather than beginning physical therapy, physician then sent prisoner to other doctors for over four and one-half months before following neurologist's recommendation of physical therapy, and physical therapy would have placed considerable burden and expense on prison. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Issue of material fact as to whether corrections officer failed to intervene in altercation between inmate and other corrections officer precluded summary judgment for corrections officer on inmate's § 1983 claim; officer's failure to intervene to stop beating of inmate who was naked, handcuffed, and defenseless would provide ample basis for jury to conclude that officer had acted with deliberate indifference. Buckner v. Hollins, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 983 F.2d 119, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether physician intentionally prolonged surgical intervention in order to prompt inmate to confess to swallowing drug-filled balloons was question of fact precluding summary judgment on issue whether physician was deliberately indifferent to inmate's need for surgery for ruptured appendix. Taylor v. Bowers, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 966 F.2d 417, modified on rehearing, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 394, 506 U.S. 946, 121 L.Ed.2d 302. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material fact issues existed as to whether detainee made suicide threats to fellow inmates, whether inmates reported such threats to jail personnel in such manner as to be taken seriously, and whether jail personnel responded reasonably or with deliberate indifference, precluding summary judgment for jail personnel in civil rights action. Elliott v. Cheshire County, N.H., C.A.1 (N.H.) 1991, 940 F.2d 7. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Questions of fact precluded summary judgment on whether juvenile's caseworkers with Massachusetts Department of Youth Services were recklessly or callously indifferent and violated juvenile's due process right of access to courts when caseworkers failed to tell juvenile and court of parent's statement indicating fabrication of charge that led to delinquency adjudication of juvenile. Germany v. Vance, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 868 F.2d 9, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact, as to whether state prison officials were aware of danger of rape which certain inmates posed to others and whether those officials acted in deliberate indifference to that danger, precluded summary judgment in rape victim inmate's civil rights suit. Roland v. Johnson, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1988, 856 F.2d 764. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact existed as to whether state correctional officials evidenced deliberate indifference in connection with inmate's unexplained death in order to hold correctional officials liable under § 1983 for death of inmate, precluding summary judgment; inmate's mother had made phone calls to prison officials expressing son's need for protection from other inmates, order requiring separation of inmate from fellow inmate was not enforced, and inmate's mother had been denied access to deceased inmate's personal effects, including threatening letters from other inmate. Harris By and Through Harris v. Maynard, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1988, 843 F.2d 414. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether the Due Process Clause triggers a duty on the part of governmental actors to provide protection against an attack by private actors in a given factual setting is a question of law appropriate for resolution on summary judgment in a §§ 1983 action. Matican v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 497. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether failure to treat prisoner's cavities and broken tooth for at least seven months, during which time prisoner complained of pain, constituted deliberate indifference on part of prison medical contractor, precluded summary judgment in contractor's favor in civil rights damages suit. Goodnow v. Palm, D.Vt.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 125. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officials had actual knowledge of an objectively substantial risk of harm to pretrial detainee who committed suicide while in their custody, and whether they responded to that risk with deliberate indifference, precluding summary judgment for officials on issue of liability in civil rights action based on that suicide. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., N.D.Miss.1996, 949 F.Supp. 456, reversed 135 F.3d 320. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact precluded summary judgment on whether New York correctional superintendent's knowledge and failure to intercede regarding prisoner's requests for medical treatment and medically necessary diet constituted deliberate indifference to prisoner's medical needs for purposes of his individual liability for § 1983 claim. Mandala v. Coughlin, E.D.N.Y.1996, 920 F.Supp. 342. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact, precluding summary judgment on behalf of prison officials, existed as to whether prisoner had been subjected to cruel and unusual punishment by being left in cell without running water in sink; there was dispute as to whether prisoner had notified authorities, and as to whether officers had shown necessary deliberate indifference to his plight. Thomas v. Brown, N.D.Ind.1993, 824 F.Supp. 160. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material fact issues remained as to whether sheriff and deputies acted with deliberate indifference to suicidal detainee's medical needs, precluding summary judgment on issue of liability for alleged § 1983 civil rights violation. Merideth v. Grogan, N.D.Ga.1992, 812 F.Supp. 1223, affirmed 985 F.2d 579. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether officer physically harmed his former spouse, whether officer's partner knew or should have known that officer was assaulting former spouse, and whether partner acted deliberately indifferent in either turning away or failing to attempt to stop officer precluded summary judgment on former spouse's civil rights claims against partner. Czajkowski v. City of Chicago, Ill., N.D.Ill.1992, 810 F.Supp. 1428. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4162. ---- Discrimination

Georgia Environmental Protection Division (EPD) was entitled to summary judgment in neighborhood association's civil rights action for alleged racial discrimination in the siting and permitting of solid waste landfill given complete absence of any showing of discriminatory conduct by EPD coupled with plaintiffs' apparent abandonment of any such claims by concession during oral argument; it was county, not EPD, which selected site, and principal responsibility of EPD lay in ascertaining technical suitability of already chosen site. Rozar v. Mullis, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 85 F.3d 556. Civil Rights 1073; Federal Civil Procedure 2498.3

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant mayor and municipality would have refused to accept employee's resignation until after elections, which included mayoral race in which defendant and employee were candidates, regardless of employee's political affiliation precluded summary judgment for defendants in employee's action alleging political discrimination in violation of the First Amendment. Rivera Torres v. Ortiz Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 306 F.Supp.2d 76, appeal denied 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Material issues of fact, as to whether city parks official intentionally discriminated against black representatives of nonprofit organization by denying presence of vendors when granting meeting permit and refusing to clean up park, precluded summary judgment that parks department had not violated representatives' equal protection rights. Epileptic Foundation v. City and County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 2003, 300 F.Supp.2d 1003. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact, as to whether enhanced scrutiny was given to work of African-American employees of state department of human services, and attempt was made to fire one of them, in response to their prior employment discrimination complaints, precluded summary judgment against employees in their § 1983 action claiming unlawful retaliation. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

as African-American employee were treated differently than plaintiff precluded summary judgment on plaintiff's § 1983 claim for failure to state prima facie case. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Chandler v. City of Newark, D.Del.2001, 2001 WL 902209, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

4163. ---- Personal participation, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether state prison official's personal involvement in classification decision with respect to inmate was sufficient to create liability for violating inmate's Fourteenth Amendment rights due to the failure to hold hearing prior to administrative segregation precluded summary judgment in favor of prison official in § 1983 action. Hardin v. Straub, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1193. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether named physician was personally involved with plaintiff's care or whether he was being sued on respondeat superior basis, precluding summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action. Brown v. Sheridan, N.D.N.Y.1993, 150 F.R.D. 462. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4164. ---- Child welfare, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether child welfare caseworker deliberately disregarded mother's religious beliefs by placing child with Catholic foster home against wishes of Jewish mother, and whether caseworker made a reasonable effort to find a Jewish home for child, precluding summary judgment for caseworker in § 1983 claim brought by mother alleging caseworker violated mother's free exercise right under the First Amendment. Bruker v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 539. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed, as to whether admitted neglect of duties by city worker supervising foster care placement of child proximately caused deprivation of child's constitutional liberty interest in not being sexually abused, and precluded summary judgment for worker; worker's neglect exposed child to high risk of repeat sexual abuse by child's brother, an event which did occur, and furthermore, child's expert's report and human services' manual both indicated that, as previous victim, child was at high risk for sexual abuse by others as well, an event which also occurred. Wendy H. By and Through Smith v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1994, 849 F.Supp. 367. Federal Civil Procedure 2515

Genuine issues of material fact, as to whether children who had been involuntarily placed in custody of Philadelphia Department of Human Services were being provided with adequate food, shelter, clothing, medical care, and reasonable safety, precluded summary judgment on their substantive due process claim alleging violation of their constitutional right to be free from harm while in foster care. Baby Neal v. Casey, E.D.Pa.1993, 821 F.Supp. 320, vacated in part, remanded 43 F.3d 48, reconsideration denied 1995 WL 728589. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4165. ---- Education, schools and students, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether state-university professor's use of nickname for female student based on her supposed physical resemblance to White House intern involved in widely-covered, scandalous affair with President of the United States, and comments to student based on same theme, were severe enough to transcend bounds of propriety and decency precluded summary judgment on student's claim under § 1983 alleging that professor violated her equal protection rights by engaging in sexual harassment. Hayut v. State University of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 733, 197 A.L.R. Fed. 659. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether school officials treated male student who was subject to harassment and harm by other students, due to his sexual orientation, differently than female students who suffered similar harassment precluded summary judgment on student's § 1983 claim against school officials alleging equal protection violation, in view of evidence that student was treated differently than other students, that different treatment was based on student's gender, and that officials acted with at least deliberate indifference. Nabozny v. Podlesny, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 92 F.3d 446. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether school board removed book on voodoo and hoodoo practices from all parish school libraries for constitutionally impermissible reasons, thereby precluding summary judgment in favor of parents who challenged decision; while circumstances surrounding book removal suggested unconstitutional motivation, single decisive motivation behind school board's removal decision could not be determined upon record where there was no undisputed statement by school board as single voting body as to reason for its action. Campbell v. St. Tammany Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 64 F.3d 184. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether high school principal violated student's Fourteenth Amendment rights when during "field" trip he broke through locked bathroom door in student's hotel room and knocked her against wall involved disputed fact questions, precluding summary judgment in student's § 1983 suit; alleged blows were not struck in school context where need for immediate disciplinary control is at its greatest, principal was "in loco parentis" to student during trip, and there was dispute as to whether blows were disciplinary in nature or were motivated by anger. Webb v. McCullough, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1987, 828 F.2d 1151. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether group home's placement of Jewish foster child in a Catholic school, rather than a public high school, was reasonable, and whether foster child encountered significant Catholic influence as a result of the placement, precluding summary judgment for group home in First Amendment claim brought by child's mother alleging group home failed to accommodate mother's religion in violation of the First Amendment's guarantee to free exercise. Bruker v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 539. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact as to whether student was denied free appropriate public education (FAPE) over approximately 12-month period in violation of Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) precluded summary judgment for school district on student's § 1983 claim. O.F. ex rel. N.S. v. Chester Upland School Dist., E.D.Pa.2002, 246 F.Supp.2d 409. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

There were issues of fact, precluding summary judgment, as to whether graduate student was retaliated against by faculty members for exercising free speech rights in accusing advisor of misappropriating his research, in light of evidence that student was barred from using laboratory and required to choose new dissertation topic. Qvyjt v. Lin, N.D.Ill.1997, 953 F.Supp. 244. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether students were provided minimal due process rights which should have taken place prior to their punishment precluded summary judgment for public school officials, in their individual capacities, on basis of qualified immunity with regard to students' procedural due process claims. Orange v. County of Grundy, E.D.Tenn.1996, 950 F.Supp. 1365. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether school district was a state actor which could be sued under § 1983 by workers' compensation claimants for denial of medical benefits under Pennsylvania workers' compensation law. Sullivan v. Barnett, E.D.Pa.1996, 913 F.Supp. 895. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Issue of material fact as to whether elementary school teacher violated student's substantive due process rights by striking student on head with grade book precluded summary judgment for teacher in student's § 1983 action; disputes existed as to whether teacher had disciplinary reason for administering punishment, extent of student's injury, and teacher's state of mind. Meyer by Wyrick v. Litwiller, W.D.Mo.1990, 749 F.Supp. 981. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether university intended to discriminate against women's intercollegiate athletic programs precluded summary judgment in action alleging unlawful discrimination, where university explicitly classified intercollegiate athletic teams on basis of gender. Haffer v. Temple University of the Com. System of Higher Educ., E.D.Pa.1987, 678 F.Supp. 517, on reconsideration.

4166. ---- Employment, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Whether public employer's search of hospital supervisor's office was reasonable, both in its inception and in its scope, presented factual question precluding summary judgment in supervisor's civil rights action, where employer characterized search as motivated by need to secure state property, but supervisor contended that search was investigatory search whose purpose was simply to discover evidence that would be of use in administrative proceedings. (Per Justice O'Connor, with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and one Justice concurring in judgment.) O'Connor v. Ortega, U.S.Cal.1987, 107 S.Ct. 1492, 480 U.S. 709, 94 L.Ed.2d 714, on remand 817 F.2d 1408. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

District court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing physician's supplemental state law claims for premium pay and wrongful termination from position with Department of Public Health, following grant of summary judgment to defendants on physician's § 1983 due process claim, the sole federal claim before it. Dyack v. Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands, C.A.9 (N. Mariana Islands)2003, 317 F.3d 1030. Federal Courts 18

District court could have entered summary judgment sua sponte in favor of city on police officer's § 1983 First Amendment claim, and district court's grant of summary judgment on that claim thus would be affirmed, despite fact that premature dismissal of § 1983 claim prevented officer from responding to summary judgment motion that specifically addressed First Amendment claim; no dispute of material fact existed, and issues relevant to First Amendment claim were fully argued in individual defendant's summary judgment motion and officer's response to that motion. David v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1344, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 157, 522 U.S. 858, 139 L.Ed.2d 102. Federal Courts 914

Genuine issue of material fact regarding whether proffered reasons for borough's denial of promotion to black police sergeant, that each of candidates were evaluated by same criteria and that chosen candidates had received highest evaluation scores, were pretext precluded summary judgment on black police sergeant's race discrimination claims, where member of reviewing committee stated that committee had minimized importance of recommendation the sergeant had received from his black supervisor, record did not indicate that race of any other evaluator was source of concern for reviewing committee, black police sergeant received lower score for education and self-improvement than chosen candidate who, unlike the sergeant, had not yet obtained college degree, and black police sergeant received lower score for length and merit of service than candidates with fewer years of service. Hampton v. Borough of Tinton Falls Police Dept., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 98 F.3d 107. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Assuming he had standing, unsuccessful candidate for power plant maintenance worker position at state-fun facility made sufficient allegations to raise genuine issue of material fact, precluding summary judgment against him, in claiming that his rights were infringed by unfair advantage temporary job inevitably bestowed on alleged political appointee in contest for permanent position. Tarpley v. Jeffers, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 96 F.3d 921. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Former village employee failed to create genuine issue of material fact regarding whether elimination of his full-time civil service position as building inspector for asserted economic and efficiency reasons was in fact undertaken in bad faith to avoid protections afforded to him by state civil service law as would preclude summary judgment on issue of damages in his § 1983 claim against village, village's board of trustees and individual board members for deprivation of alleged property interest without due process, where former village employee merely cited to village's decision to appoint another individual to part-time building inspector position, overall increase in village's budget in year following elimination of his position, village mayor's testimony that his motivation in abolishing position was to revamp building operations department, and village's creation of three positions which entailed functions previously performed by former village employee. Cifarelli v. Village of Babylon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 93 F.3d 47. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

As there was no evidence in record as to whether county property appraiser's office even implicated partisan concerns for purposes of determining whether appraiser's office employees could be discharged for their political affiliation, summary judgment for appraiser, in his official capacity, in former employees' action, alleging that appraiser violated their First Amendment rights by firing them because they supported appraiser's opponent in recent election, would be vacated. Parrish v. Nikolits, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 86 F.3d 1088, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1818, 520 U.S. 1228, 137 L.Ed.2d 1027. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1; Federal Courts 914

Former city police officer, who was allegedly discharged by biased police committee and city council and who was allegedly not given adequate time to speak in his posttermination hearing, failed to create genuine issue of material fact regarding whether he was denied procedural due process as would preclude summary judgment on his § 1983 claim against city, city's mayor and city's police chief, as evidence indicated that former police officer was in no way restricted from being represented by counsel or examining and cross-examining witnesses during his posttermination hearing, and administrative and judicial review available under state system provided adequate remedy to redress alleged wrongs. Bell v. City of Demopolis, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 86 F.3d 191. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether county employee's statements to co-workers and others accusing supervisor of mismanagement and possible criminal conduct involved matters of public concern so as to be protected by First Amendment, precluding summary judgment in § 1983 action brought by county employee alleging that she was discharged in violation of First Amendment because of statements she made about her supervisor. Johnson v. Multnomah County, Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 48 F.3d 420, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2616, 515 U.S. 1161, 132 L.Ed.2d 858. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact regarding whether legislative auditor's contacts with Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) played substantial role in legislature's decision to terminate him precluded summary judgment on his § 1983 First Amendment claim on lack of causation grounds. Barnard v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1218, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 17. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact existed regarding whether terminated public employee/deputy director of examinations had given legislative committee answers that were responsive and truthful, precluding summary judgment against her on her § 1983 action which alleged that she had been terminated in violation of her free speech rights. Piesco v. Koch, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 12 F.3d 332, on remand 1994 WL 67833. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact questions as to whether employees impliedly consented to vehicle searches as they left parking lot they had earlier entered with knowledge of posted signs authorizing search of their vehicles, or whether they were seized, whether any such seizure was unlawful and thus whether employees consented to search by cooperating with it, precluded summary judgment in employee's § 1983 class action arising out of the search. McGann v. Northeast Illinois Regional Commuter R.R. Corp., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 8 F.3d 1174, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material fact issues existed as to whether deputy's off-duty comments to fellow deputy about possible misconduct by superior and about likelihood that departmental investigation would reveal such misconduct interfered with proper functioning of department such that department's interest as employer in promoting effective and efficient public service outweighed deputy's First Amendment rights, precluding summary judgment for either deputy or county and sheriff in deputy's civil rights action. Glass v. Dachel, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1993, 2 F.3d 733. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact existed surrounding public employee's demotion, precluding summary judgment for state on employee's claim that he was discriminated against on basis of his political affiliation in violation of § 1983. Aponte-Santiago v. Lopez-Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 957 F.2d 40. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether interest of employee of medical examiner's office in responding to newspaper reporter's inquiry about racial discrimination charges brought against office outweighed county's interest in promoting efficiency in its operations and whether her response was substantial or motivating factor in decision to transfer or otherwise penalize her, precluding summary judgment on her claim that she was transferred in violation of the First Amendment. Boger v. Wayne County, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1991, 950 F.2d 316. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Allegations by employee that employer knew that he had to make financial sacrifices to take job with employer, including moving his household from another state and having his wife give up her old job and take less desirable job, were sufficient, under Alabama law, to raise genuine question of fact, precluding summary judgment, as to whether employee provided some substantial consideration for contract of "permanent" employment apart from services to be rendered. Green v. City of Hamilton, Housing Authority, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1991, 937 F.2d 1561, rehearing denied 949 F.2d 1164. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Evidence that was determined to be sufficient to create genuine issue of material fact as to intentional discrimination for purposes of Title VII and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act also served to create genuine issue of material fact for purposes of discrimination claim under § 1983. Sischo-Nownejad v. Merced Community College Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 934 F.2d 1104. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact existed, precluding summary judgment for employers, on question of whether employee's position as legal investigator with city's law department was policy-making or confidential position for which political affiliation would have been appropriate requirement. Matlock v. Barnes, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 932 F.2d 658, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 304, 502 U.S. 909, 116 L.Ed.2d 247. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Material issues of fact existed as to whether state employee's constitutional right to pretermination process was respected in connection with his removal, precluding summary judgment for employee's supervisor in employee's action under § 1983. Wheaton v. Webb-Petett, C.A.9 (Or.) 1991, 931 F.2d 613. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

No order or paper in case put former regional managers of Puerto Rico Automobile Accident Compensation Administration on notice that they had to bring forward all their evidence about nature of regional manager's job, so that district court should not have granted summary judgment sua sponte in respect to their entire complaint, including their request for reinstatement to their former jobs and for certain vacation and sick leave benefits that they claimed were unlawfully taken from them and should only have ruled on qualified immunity issue; former regional managers might have additional evidence about the responsibility of the job as it was actually practiced and to explain nature of their claims for vacation and other benefits. Bonilla v. Nazario, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1988, 843 F.2d 34. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Material issues of fact existed as to whether any city employee with final policymaking authority retaliated against city contractor by failing to renew contract based on contractor's speech allegedly addressing matter of public concern, precluding summary judgment for city on contractor's First Amendment retaliation claim under § 1983. employee's proposed transfer to Commonwealth department regardless of employee's political affiliation precluded summary judgment for defendants in employee's action alleging political discrimination in violation of the First Amendment. Rivera Torres v. Ortiz Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 306 F.Supp.2d 76, appeal denied 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether black director of curriculum and assessment for Connecticut public school district was in fact treated differently because of her race, precluded summary judgment on claim by superintendent and deputy superintendent that they were entitled to qualified immunity from liability to director under §§ 1983; director's equal protection right to be free from race discrimination was well-established at time of events giving rise to suit, and reasonable official would not have thought it acceptable to treat director differently because of her race. Grey v. City of Norwalk Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 314. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether county sheriff knew that employee was in an interracial marriage at the time he made decision not to place employee on the jail officer eligibility list, and at the time he terminated employee's part-time position with the county, precluded summary judgment, in employee's action against sheriff, under § 1981, § 1981, and Title VII. Jones v. Adams County, Wisconsin, W.D.Wis.2003, 297 F.Supp.2d 1132. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether working conditions and duties of employee's new position, following reclassification of her prior position as trust position and her transfer, were equal to or similar to those of her previous career position, as required by Puerto Rico law, and, if they were not, as to whether transfer was motivated by discriminatory animus, precluding summary judgment in political discrimination action under § 1983. Huertas Morales v. Agosto Alicea, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 164. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Material issues of fact, as to whether state department of human services took adverse action against African-American employees after they complained about improper recruitment of new department member and sought information about her hiring under state freedom of information statute, precluded summary judgment for department in § 1983 action claiming First Amendment violations. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact regarding whether former state employee was constructively discharged after exercising his free speech rights in press conference precluded summary judgment on his § 1983 claims against his former supervisors that he was constructively discharged in violation of First Amendment. Flood v. State of Ala. Dept. of Indus. Relations, M.D.Ala.1996, 948 F.Supp. 1535, affirmed 136 F.3d 1332. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Material issues of fact as to whether worker was terminated from his town park manager position or resigned and when that event finally concluded his employment precluded summary judgment for town on worker's § 1983 due process claim. Krennerich v. Inhabitants of Town of Bristol, D.Me.1996, 943 F.Supp. 1345. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether sexual harassment in police department was so widespread as to constitute constructive acquiescence of senior policymakers of police department and whether police department provided adequate training for its employees to prevent sexual harassment, precluding summary judgment on female police officer's sexual harassment in the workplace claim asserted under § 1983. Wise v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 355. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Issues of material fact existed as to whether police officials could reasonably have believed that their alleged acts of retaliation against female police officer who had filed discrimination complaints did not violate her clearly established rights, precluding summary judgment in female officer's § 1983 action; alleged acts implicated system-wide discrimination and thus involved matter of public concern. Domenech v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 927 F.Supp. 106. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact regarding whether physician employed by public transportation authority intentionally discriminated against female employee during physical examination precluded summary judgment on female employee's § 1983 claim against physician for sexual harassment, where female employee alleged that physician had made inappropriate physical contact during physical examination, that physician had complimented female employee on her tattoo during examination and that physician told female employee that she could call him "Louie," and physician merely presented letter of another physician stating that alleged incidents of physical contact were "likely" to have been inadvertent and incidental. Ascolese v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 925 F.Supp. 351. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Fact questions as to whether community college president was motivated to suspend tenured teacher because teacher exercised First Amendment right to free association precluded summary judgment in teacher's § 1983 civil rights action. Gardetto v. Mason, D.Wyo.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1520. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county human rights commission was liable for violating free speech rights of commission's executive director when it decided to terminate him precluded summary judgment in director's § 1983 action. Barrett v. Orange County Human Rights Com'n, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1699534, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

4167. ---- Housing, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Material issues of fact, precluding summary judgment on behalf of housing authority in civil rights action, existed as to whether authority had appropriately established amount of utility fees includable as reasonable utility allowance and subject to 30% of income overall rent limit, and what portion was excess and subject to surcharge; tenants had produced evidence that occurrence of surcharging was as high as 75%, authority conceded it had not adopted new allowances or formally readopted old ones after new federal regulations were imposed, and it had failed to provide documentation that old allowances were consistent with new federal guidelines. Dorsey v. Housing Authority of Baltimore City, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 984 F.2d 622. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4168. ---- Objective reasonableness, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether state police officers' activation of the special emergency response team (SERT) against suspect who had known psychological and medical conditions, arrival at suspect's residence with a helicopter, use of bright lights, breaking of windows, and tear gas use were objectively reasonable responses to situation that arose when neighbor lodged complaint against suspect and responding officers believed that suspect might be targeting them with a laser-sighted firearm, precluding summary judgment for officers in Fourth Amendment excessive force claim brought by survivors of suspect who suffered a fatal heart attack allegedly resulting from the incident. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 497, on remand 2004 WL 633276. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4169. ---- Police activities, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether police officers knew or should have known that arrestee was a current tenant of the residence into which he entered, and whether officers ignored substantial exculpatory evidence and relied solely on landlord's claim that arrestee was not a tenant, precluded summary judgment in favor of officers, on issue of whether officers had probable cause to support arrest for burglary of the residence or other criminal wrongdoing, under Ohio law, in arrestee's §§ 1983 wrongful arrest claim. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend.4; Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 395 F.3d 291. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed underlying determination as to whether police officers, who were informed that apartment resident was experiencing a seizure, used excessive force to quiet resident, who was flailing his arms due to his seizure, whose face was allegedly repeatedly pushed into the floor by officers, and who allegedly was struck in the head with a flashlight which had previously been jammed into his mouth, precluding summary judgment in favor of officers on section 1983 excessive force claim. Rivas v. City of Passaic, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 365 F.3d 181. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether emergency medical technicians (EMTs), who responded to an emergency in an apartment where resident was experiencing a seizure, deprived resident of his substantive due process right to be free from a state-created danger, precluding summary judgment in favor of EMTs on section 1983 claim; issues of material fact existed as to whether resident was a member of a "discrete class" of individuals subjected to a potential harm caused by EMTs' actions, whether EMTs consciously disregarded a great risk of serious harm to resident by falsely accusing resident of acting violently and then abandoning resident to the police, and whether EMTs created an opportunity for harm that would not have otherwise existed. Rivas v. City of Passaic, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 365 F.3d 181. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Allegation by homeowners, that one of 17 police officers who executed search warrant for home caused damage to their truck, was insufficient to raise factual dispute necessary to survive officers' motion for summary judgment in homeowners' § 1983 action; homeowners did not actually see any of the officers damage the truck, acknowledged that their sons had access to the garage where the truck was located, and relied solely on admission by officer that he was inside the truck at one point. Molina ex rel. Molina v. Cooper, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 325 F.3d 963. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether fatal heart attack suffered by suspect was a foreseeable consequence of state police officers' conduct of arriving at suspect's residence with a helicopter, using bright lights, breaking windows, and using tear gas, precluding summary judgment for officers in substantive due process claim under state-created danger doctrine brought by survivors of suspect. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 497, on remand 2004 WL 633276. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether officers' conduct both with regard to activating Special Emergency Response Team (SERT) and with regard to searching woods for suspect shocked the conscience, precluding summary judgment for officers in substantive due process claim under state-created danger doctrine brought by survivors of suspect, who allegedly suffered a fatal heart attack resulting from officers' conduct. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 497, on remand 2004 WL 633276. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether conduct of police officer, who sped against red light through intersection on major boulevard without slowing down or activating his siren while responding to nonemergency call, could be viewed as reckless and conscience-shocking, creating substantive due process violation, precluded summary judgment in federal civil rights action brought after officer struck and fatally injured motorist in intersection. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact, as would preclude summary judgment, was not created by minor discrepancy, in civil rights action, between officer's testimony that he shot from six inches away and medical evidence that victim suffered a contact wound. Reynolds v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1162. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether officer's sudden, unannounced, violent seizure and removal of customer's person from restaurant was objectively reasonable precluded summary judgment for officer in customer's § 1983 action alleging excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment. Alexis v. McDonald's Restaurants of Massachusetts, Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1995, 67 F.3d 341, on remand 1996 WL 463675. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether police office was aware of search of detainee by other officers conducting raid, and thus could be held liable for civil rights violation, was presented by fact of his presence in the small apartment where protracted search took place. Baker v. Monroe Tp., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 50 F.3d 1186, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied. Civil Rights 1429

Reasonableness of police officers' mistaken execution of valid search warrant on wrong premises involved questions of fact precluding summary judgment in § 1983 action alleging unlawful entry and arrest and excessive force. Dawkins v. Graham, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 50 F.3d 532. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

If officer who arrests plaintiff without probable cause can show that it was objectively reasonable to believe he had probable cause or that officers could disagree about existence of probable cause, officer is entitled to qualified immunity, regardless of his underlying motives for arresting plaintiff. Cook v. Sheldon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 41 F.3d 73. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Summary judgment for police officer on defense of qualified immunity from liability for civil rights claim was precluded by existence of genuine issues of material fact on whether police officer conducted roadblock with knowledge or reason to know that roadblock was likely to result in serious injury to approaching motorcyclist and passenger. Buckner v. Kilgore, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1994, 36 F.3d 536, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether arresting officer used excessive force and whether force used was objectively reasonable so as to render officer entitled to defense of qualified immunity, precluding summary judgment for officer in arrestee's § 1983 action. Harper v. Harris County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 21 F.3d 597, rehearing denied 29 F.3d 626. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether police officer executed warrant authorizing seizure of allegedly obscene videotapes in constitutionally sufficient fashion precluded summary judgment on video store owner's claim for declaratory relief in his civil rights action against the officer in his official capacity. Supreme Video, Inc. v. Schauz, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1435, on remand 927 F.Supp. 321. Federal Civil Procedure 2500.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed, as to whether city police officer and police chief committed intentional race discrimination by authorizing and participating in raids of nightclub owned and frequented by African Americans, and precluded summary judgment for officer and chief on equal protection claims of owners and patrons; officer allegedly stated that police intended to close down club because of race of owners and patrons. Swint v. City of Wadley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 11 F.3d 1030. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Testimony that witnesses had seen police officers beat arrestee, using their hands as well as flashlight or billy club, did not warrant judgment as matter of law in arrestee's civil rights action; conflicting evidence was for jury about whether officers reasonably suspected that arrestee had ingested crack cocaine, on whether officers used reasonable amount of force to investigate what was in arrestee's mouth, and on whether arrestee had resisted arrest and attempted to flee. Estwick v. City of Omaha, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1993, 9 F.3d 56. Civil Rights 1429

Fact question as to whether police seized property from pawnbroker for investigatory purposes, or to return property to person reporting it stolen in circumvention of required statutory procedure precluded summary judgment on pawnbroker's § 1983 claim. G & G Jewelry, Inc. v. City of Oakland, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 989 F.2d

1093. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of fact existed as to reasonableness of force used against arrestee to secure his arrest, precluding summary judgment for police officer in action for use of excessive force. Gainor v. Rogers, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1379, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Issue of material fact as to whether FBI agents utilized impoundment of arrestee's vehicle with attendant inventory search as pretext for conducting investigatory search in violation of arrestee's Fourth Amendment rights precluded summary judgment for agents in arrestee's pro se civil rights action; arrestee's version of events differed from that of agent, who had given contradictory accounts of events. Sammons v. Taylor, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1992, 967 F.2d 1533. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact precluded granting summary judgment in favor of police officer in civil rights action alleging excessive force brought on behalf of person who was shot nine times by the police officer; medical evidence in record undermined officer's version of events in numerous ways, and it could not be said as matter of law that the officer acted reasonably when he used deadly force against person a second time. Hopkins v. Andaya, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 958 F.2d 881, as amended. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed, precluding summary judgment in civil rights action by resident of premises searched pursuant to warrant, on whether officers exceeded scope of their authority under warrant when they invited private security guard to participate in search and look for items stolen from his employer that had not been mentioned in warrant; there was evidence indicating that police officers actively procured private security guard to tour residence with a camera for purposes utterly unconnected with search warrant that had already been executed. Bills v. Aseltine, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 958 F.2d 697. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Plaintiff, who was mistakenly identified and arrested by police officers who mistook him for escaped felon who had threatened to shoot any officer who tried to return him to prison, failed to raise triable issue of fact as to whether force used by arresting officers was excessive; plaintiff and felon were of similar physical appearance and plaintiff was arrested near apartment at which felon was believed to be staying and where he was later found, under circumstances known to officers, it would have been unreasonable not to effect intended arrest with adequate alacrity and sufficient force to subdue arrestee as quickly and surely as practicable without unnecessary harm to him or unnecessary risk to officers or innocent bystanders, facts that plaintiff offered no resistance and was taller than felon were not determinative, and plaintiff's injuries were minor. Dean v. City of Worcester, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 924 F.2d 364. Civil Rights 1429

Material issues of fact, precluding summary judgment, existed as to whether police officer's use of force while making an arrest of a traffic violation suspect in a business office was excessive in § 1983 case brought by a bystander; bystander incurred severe injury to groin and pinched nerve in leg while falling against a door trying to avoid officer, officer's action in bursting into office, yelling threats and expletives, drawing gun, waving it wildly at everyone in office, and pushing it against employee's throat was greatly disproportionate to need for action, and his repeated threat to "blow [all bystanders'] heads off" established malice. Mouille v. City of Live Oak, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 918 F.2d 548, rehearing denied 923 F.2d 851. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether pedestrian's flight from police officer after the officer detained the pedestrian at gunpoint and after the pedestrian dropped his handgun, presented an immediate threat of serious harm to the officer or others at the time the officer fired a shot that struck the fleeing pedestrian in the back, precluding summary judgment for the officer on pedestrian's § 1983 claim for use of excessive force under the Fourth Amendment. Pablo Hernandez v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.2004, 302 F.Supp.2d 1373, affirmed 124 Fed.Appx. 642, 2004 WL 3106626. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

vehicle, with drawn gun, precluded summary judgment that city was not liable for shooting of driver, in § 1983 action, for inadequate supervision and training. Parker v. Town of Swansea, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 92. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact, as to whether house occupant was lunging at police officer when he was shot to death, precluded summary judgment of nonliability on part of officer alleged to have used excessive force. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether police officer had probable cause to pursue arrest and prosecution of arrestee suspected of distributing drugs and if he did not, whether he was entitled to qualified immunity, precluded summary judgment in arrestee's civil rights action against officer; after arrestee was named as person who had handed drugs to undercover police officer, informant told officers he did not know anyone by that name and requested to see mug shots, and no photographs were shown to informant. Tyler v. State of N.Y., W.D.N.Y.1997, 953 F.Supp. 63. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether police officers were acting within their discretionary authority when they impounded § 1983 plaintiff's vehicle following arrest and when they assisted third party in removal of plaintiff's personal property from mobile home, precluding summary judgment on qualified immunity defense. Rose v. Town of Jackson's Gap, M.D.Ala.1996, 952 F.Supp. 757. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether actions of police officers toward pretrial detainee who committed suicide while in their custody were objectively reasonable in light of existing law, precluding summary judgment for officers based on qualified immunity in civil rights action brought in connection with suicide. Hare v. City of Corinth, Miss., N.D.Miss.1996, 949 F.Supp. 456, reversed 135 F.3d 320. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for police officer in § 1983 action by arrestee who was acquitted of drug charges for which officer arrested him, existed as to whether officer knew that contraband in question was not arrestee's, and that informant was trying to "set up" arrestee. Lewis v. Meloni, W.D.N.Y.1996, 949 F.Supp. 158. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Occupant of house that was allegedly intentionally burned by city police officers during search failed to create genuine issue of material fact regarding whether city had inadequately trained officers or whether such lack of adequate training reflected deliberate indifference on part of city as would preclude summary judgment on occupant's § 1983 claim against city for excessive use of force in violation of Fourth Amendment, where occupant merely alleged that officers were instructed in police department's rules and regulations over ten years ago and were not required to revisit those rules since then, and there was no evidence suggesting that such alleged inadequacy of training was obvious to city. Johnson v. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 944 F.Supp. 586. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether actions of police officer who had responded to call regarding dispute between mother and father regarding custody of child had constituted unreasonable seizure of mother in violation of Fourth Amendment, precluding summary judgment in federal civil rights action brought by mother, was presented by mother's testimony that officer had told her that in his opinion, divorce order entitled father to visitation, and that if she refused to give child to father she would be arrested, creating situation in which mother could not ignore threat of arrest. Bennett v. Town of Riverhead, E.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 481. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for police officer in § 1983 action by black arrestee who alleged that white police officer violated Equal Protection Clause by arresting him because of his race, existed as to whether officer's statement, "You people don't know what you want," combined with his conduct, evidenced racial or color-based animus. Humphrey v. Demitro, N.D.Ill.1996, 931 F.Supp. 571, reversed in part 148 F.3d 719, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact whether police officers and police chief acted with reckless or callous disregard for arrestee's rights or on intentional violation of federal law or with malice in using excessive force to effect arrest precluded summary judgment in favor of police officers and police chief on arrestee's claims under state and federal law for punitive damages. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to reasonableness of conduct of police officer who shot § 1983 plaintiff, and of officers who failed to intervene to prevent shooting, precluded summary judgment against plaintiff on ground that there was no excessive use of force; plaintiff was shot while preparing to throw metal bar at officer after announcing that he intended to kill officer by throwing bar at officer. McRae v. Tena, D.Ariz.1996, 914 F.Supp. 363, affirmed on other grounds 113 F.3d 1241. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed, as to what sheriff actually knew at time he made arrest without a warrant, and precluded summary judgment on arrestee's claim under § 1983 that he was arrested without warrant and without probable cause and that thereafter sheriff falsely reported to prosecuting authorities facts regarding probable cause. Johnson v. Schneiderheinz, D.Neb.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1353, reversed 102 F.3d 340, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether police officers who detained and conducted search of minors had used excessive force, precluding summary judgment in federal civil rights action brought by minors, was presented by statements of minors that they suffered bruises when officer kicked their feet apart for purposes of search and that personal property in their pockets was crushed by force of search, and by fact that statements of minors were not rebutted by any objective evidence from officers. Irvin v. Kaczmaryn, N.D.Ill.1996, 913 F.Supp. 1190. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence in arrestee's civil rights action against arresting officer raised genuine issue of material fact as to whether officer's arrest for obstructing legal process was objectively reasonable, precluding summary judgment in favor of officer on qualified immunity grounds; officer alleged that arrestee had to be told three times to assume search position, was uncooperative and belligerent, and shifted his feet during search, making officer's job more difficult, while arrestee and witness testified that arrestee was cooperative and compliant throughout his interaction with officer, except when officer took his wallet. Williams v. Weber, D.Kan.1995, 905 F.Supp. 1502, reconsideration overruled. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether § 1983 civil rights plaintiff was picketing solely in front of particular residence when arrested for violating residential antipicketing ordinance was fact question precluding summary judgment in suit against city for failure to train a police officer. Copper v. City of Fargo, D.N.D.1995, 905 F.Supp. 703. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

On remand of civil rights action against city and chief of police arising out of disciplinary action taken against city police officer, neither city nor police chief in his official capacity were entitled to summary judgment; although Court of Appeals reversed denial of summary judgment to police chief in his individual capacity on ground that, based on undisputed facts, it was objectively reasonable to discipline the officer, Court's opinion did not address denial of motion for summary judgment brought by city or by police chief in his official capacity. Morro v. City of Birmingham, N.D.Ala.1995, 897 F.Supp. 553. Federal Courts 951.1

Drivers in § 1983 action against police officer for issuing ticket for tinted car windows failed to create an issue of triable fact precluding summary judgment on the ground that the officer did not issue, or cause to be issued, a ticket to them after trial court ruling that statutory prohibition against tinted windows was unconstitutional as applied to them; the dismissal of a ticket prior to ticket by officer noted the failure of a trooper to appear, the most plausible reading of that dismissal was that the trial court did not decide the constitutional issue, a probationary officer issued the only ticket after the ruling on constitutionality, and although deposition testimony of officers referred to police officer's statement about invalidity of medical excuse, the depositions showed that the police officer arrived after the traffic stop and that the decision was made by probationary officer or that officer and his supervisor. Wiggins v. Gulley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 95 Fed.Appx. 833, 2004 WL 785289, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether arrestee resisted arrest by city police officers and attempted to grab one of the officer's weapons, and whether officers acted reasonably in applying minimal force necessary to subdue him, precluded summary judgment as to officers' alleged entitlement to qualified immunity under §§ 1983 from arrestee's claim that officers used excessive force in violation of his Fourth Amendment rights. Aczel v. Labonia, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 17, 2004 WL 287164, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

District court did not abuse its discretion, in § 1983 action alleging false arrest, malicious prosecution, and illegal search, in refusing to consider summary judgment affidavit of arrestee's wife, stating that she felt fearful of being arrested if she tried to leave while she was restricted from entering her home while a search warrant was being obtained; affidavit contradicted affiant's earlier statement that she did not want to leave her home, and affiant had not mentioned her alleged fear of arrest in her deposition testimony. Price v. Cochran, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 781, 2003 WL 21054706, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2539

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether police officers knew or should have been expected to know that witnesses would have been present at crime scene before they transported citizen there, or if there was some other important reason to go there, on question of whether police officers acted reasonably regarding crime scene identifications, precluding summary judgment, in citizen's § 1983 lawsuit alleging that police violated his constitutional rights by subjecting him to unduly suggestive identifications that resulted in his detention for nearly seven years until he was acquitted on retrial. Rojas v. Iannatto, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 169798, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether city intentionally delayed arrestee's arraignment, precluding summary judgment, in § 1983 lawsuit brought by arrestee alleging false imprisonment. Sorensen v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 169775, Unreported, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 413 F.3d 292. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4170. ---- Probable cause, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether prosecution of arrestee for possession of stolen property was supported by probable cause precluded summary judgment for defendants in arrestee's § 1983 action for malicious prosecution. Boyd v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 336 F.3d 72. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether police had probable cause to make arrest precluded summary judgment in arrestee's §§1983 action against city for arrest on drug possession charges after arrestee allegedly transferred a bag containing methadone and heroin to another individual outside of a methadone clinic. Giannullo v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 322 F.3d 139. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Although, generally, the question of probable cause in a § 1983 damage suit is one for the jury, a district court may conclude that probable cause did exist as a matter of law if the evidence, viewed most favorably to plaintiff, reasonably would not support a contrary factual finding, and may enter summary judgment accordingly. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 497, on remand 2004 WL 633276. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

To survive a defendant officer's motion for summary judgment on the issue of wrongful procurement of a search warrant, plaintiffs in civil rights action must (1) make an offer of proof supporting specific allegations of deliberate or reckless misrepresentation, (2) show that the alleged misrepresentations are legally relevant to the probable cause determination, and (3) show that there is a genuine issue of fact about whether the magistrate would have issued the warrant on the basis of corrected affidavits; summary judgment is inappropriate in doubtful cases, because the weight that a neutral magistrate would have given such information is a question for the finder of fact. Spafford v. Romanowsky, S.D.N.Y.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 40. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether officials of Utah's Medicaid Fraud Control Unit (MFCU) knowingly targeted neurologist for prosecution without sufficient basis to believe there was probable cause she committed a crime, precluding summary judgment for officials on neurologist's §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim, based on investigation and prosecution of her for "upcoding," i.e., the practice of improperly billing Medicaid for a more expensive service than was actually provided to the patient. Becker v. Kroll, D.Utah 2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 1230. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether there was probable cause to make arrest precluded summary judgment on § 1983 claim for false arrest. Taylor v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 68, clarified 2003 WL 21781941. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4171. ---- Prisons and prisoners, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county correctional officer adequately responded and investigated when county jail detainee pressed emergency call button, precluded summary judgment on basis of qualified immunity in favor of officer, in detainee's §§ 1983 deliberate indifference claim against officer, alleging that officer failed to protect him from an assault by another inmate. Velez v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 395 F.3d 732, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether prisoner with only two lower teeth had a serious medical need for dentures, precluding summary judgment in his § 1983 action against dentist for allegedly violating his Eighth Amendment rights in delaying for 15 months before providing him with dentures. Farrow v. West, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 320 F.3d 1235. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact and credibility precluded summary judgment either for prison officials on qualified immunity or for inmate on prison officials' liability for inmate's stabbing by another prisoner, where evidence conflicted as to whether prison officials were complying with court order requiring them to make regular security checks of open barracks, evidence indicated that correctional officer walked through barracks only minutes before stabbing and that guard was posted out in hall all night, and district court relied on its own factual findings that permitting inmates to have hobby craft tools in open barracks created pervasive risk of harm. Smith v. Arkansas Dept. of Correction, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 103 F.3d 637. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to date that sentence of confinement expired and terms and conditions of inmate's release precluded summary judgment against inmate on his claim under § 1983 that he was confined to prison beyond expiration of his sentence, even accepting that inmate refused parole. Homoki v. Northampton County, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 86 F.3d 324. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact as to whether city's practice of allowing single male jailer to guard female pretrial detainees was reasonably related to legitimate governmental goal precluded summary judgment for city and police chief in § 1983 action by pretrial detainee who was sexually assaulted by jailer, alleging inadequate staffing. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact concerning whether prison officials' body cavity search of inmate was reasonable under Fourth Amendment precluded summary judgment to prison officials in inmates' § 1983 action; inmate alleged that he was unnecessarily subjected to search in presence of over 100 people, including female secretaries and case managers from other buildings, prison official's explanation for search was not sworn and did not include affidavits based on personal knowledge, and explanation did not explain which female staff members were allowed to view search, what their functions were, and why those functions were important to search itself or to other prison functions. Hayes v. Marriott, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1144, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Corroborating affidavits by fellow prisoners created fact issue precluding summary judgment against prisoner on his federal civil rights claim alleging that correctional officer cited him for disciplinary violations because of his race and his prior litigation activities in violation of equal protection clause. Harris v. Ostrout, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 65 F.3d 912. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for city in former prisoner's civil rights action, existed as to whether prisoner suffered constitutional deprivations caused by city custom of inadequate selection or training of jail employees with regard to prisoners' psychiatric needs, where it could not be determined whether instruction provided to particular guards charged with prisoner's care was sufficient; evidence of details of city's training program was absent from record, and city did not submit any evidence concerning selection of jail employees. Young v. City of Augusta, Ga. Through DeVaney, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 59 F.3d 1160. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact issue as to whether prison officials had framed prisoner of contraband violations in retaliation for prisoner's two prior suits precluded summary judgment in prisoner's § 1983 action. Colon v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 58 F.3d 865. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Absence of evidence as to governmental interest and burden associated with provision of sweat lodge to facilitate exercise of prisoner's chosen religion, Native American shamanism, precluded summary judgment for prison officials in state prisoner's civil rights action alleging unconstitutional interference with prisoner's free exercise of religion. Werner v. McCotter, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1476, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2625, 515 U.S. 1166, 132 L.Ed.2d 866, rehearing denied 116 S.Ct. 31, 515 U.S. 1183, 132 L.Ed.2d 913. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether documents used in prison disciplinary proceeding with noncontemporaneous entries added after inmate's copies had been delivered had been forged or wrongfully altered was fact question precluding summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 suit alleging that use of altered documents violated due process. Grillo v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 31 F.3d 53. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether inmate was denied right to produce witnesses in his defense in disciplinary proceeding precluded summary judgment in favor of prison officials on inmate's § 1983 claim that disciplinary hearing violated his right to due process. Walker v. Sumner, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1994, 14 F.3d 1415. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact, as to whether corrections officer believed it was necessary to use force against pretrial detainee in order to restore order to county jail and as to relationship between amount of force used and amount of force necessary, precluded summary judgment on issue whether officer had violated detainee's Eighth Amendment rights, for purposes of detainee's § 1983 claim. Rankin v. Klevenhagen, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 5 F.3d 103. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

There were genuine issues of material fact, precluding summary judgment for prison officials, in civil rights action brought by prison who claimed he was assaulted by officials during prison disturbance as to whether disturbance was in progress at time of assault; if assault occurred during disturbance, guards were permitted to use greater force than normally necessary to control prisoner. Moore v. Holbrook, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 2 F.3d 697. Federal

Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of fact existed as to whether prison official knew of threat to inmate by fellow prisoners, yet disregarded it, despite availability of relatively effortless ways of addressing threat, and whether conduct amounted to conscious lack of concern or aloofness, precluding summary judgment, in civil rights suit brought by inmate against official following beating of inmate by fellow prisoners. Nelson v. Overberg, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 999 F.2d 162. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Inmate's assertion that she did not sign two voluntary commitment applications did not create a material fact issue precluding summary judgment for prison superintendent in inmate's § 1983 action arising out of her detention at state mental hospital; inmate did not assert that superintendent submitted falsified record or forced her to sign voluntary commitment applications and she did not support her assertion that superintendent did not have reasonable cause to believe that inmate was in need of care in mental hospital. Gay v. Turner, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 994 F.2d 425, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Former prisoner did not adequately respond to defendants' summary judgment motion on his civil rights claims arising from alleged conspiracy by prison officials to deny him due process and subject him to cruel and unusual punishment while he was imprisoned; although he filed response, former prisoner failed to support his allegations that conspiracy existed, that defendants were deliberately indifferent to his serious medical needs, that he was denied due process at disciplinary hearing, or that he was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment. Settle v. Ross, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 992 F.2d 162. Federal Civil Procedure 2547.1

Whether prison attack against inmate was caused by prosecutor's statements to media that inmate had agreed to testify in murder case against gang members involved questions of fact precluding summary judgment in inmate's action against prosecutor for violation of Eighth Amendment rights, even though inmate's name was on witness list and his willingness to cooperate was matter of public record of plea hearing. Latimore v. Widseth, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1993, 986 F.2d 292, rehearing granted, vacated 1993 WL 437746, on rehearing 7 F.3d 709, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1124, 510 U.S. 1140, 127 L.Ed.2d 433. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issue of fact as to whether female corrections officer subjected inmates to sexually harassing and physically intrusive pat-down searches precluded summary judgment for corrections officer in § 1983 suit. Watson v. Jones, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 980 F.2d 1165. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to ghastliness of inmate's prison conditions and state of mind of prison officials precluded summary judgment against inmate in § 1983 action against prison officials, where inmate's affidavit stated that he was forced to live with filth, rodents, inadequate heating, no toilet paper, and drinking water containing small black worms which turned into small black flies, and that officials visited his unit routinely, observed conditions described, but failed to take adequate corrective measures. Jackson v. Duckworth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 955 F.2d 21. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether unsanitary conditions combined with overcrowding rendered confinement unconstitutional was fact question which precluded summary judgment in prisoner's § 1983 civil rights action for money damages where verified complaint alleged that cell was overcrowded, cell toilet was constantly coated with urine, four showers were available for 96 inmates, floors leading to showers were constantly flooded with sewage, prisoner was deprived of blankets and coats, and that prison was infested with insects and vermin. Williams v. Griffin, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 952 F.2d 820. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Summary judgment was improper in prisoner's § 1983 action challenging application of restitution statute where there was insufficient evidence in record for court to determine what type of hearing prisoner received or what type of hearing he was entitled to under Louisiana statutes and regulations regarding order of restitution imposed as part of prison disciplinary process for value of state property damaged and for cost of medical attention required following prisoner's act of self-mutilation. Longmire v. Guste, C.A.5 (La.) 1991, 921 F.2d 620. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact affecting reasonableness of jail policy mandating strip searches with visual body cavity inspections after contact visits precluded summary judgment in favor of county in misdemeanor arrestee's civil rights suit. Wood v. Hancock County, D.Me.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 231. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of fact as to whether there was "custom" at jail to strip search misdemeanor arrestees without reasonable suspicion that arrestee harbored contraband or weapons, arising from dispute as to frequency with which admission to jail was accompanied by strip search and evidence suggesting that officers did not comply with recording requirements for strip searches, precluded summary judgment in county's favor in arrestee's civil rights suit. Wood v. Hancock County, D.Me.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 231. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether prison medical staff were deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs of prisoner, who had an inverted right foot, a clawing deformity of his right toes, and chronic pain, all resulting from a prior gunshot injury, and who needed help with chronic pain management and properly fitted orthopedic footwear, precluding summary judgment on prisoner's deliberate indifference claims. Lavender v. Lampert, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 821. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether prison medical care providers were reasonable in allegedly failing to respond to prisoner's frequent requests for effective pain treatment, allowing prisoner's pain medication prescriptions to lapse, and cancelling or reducing prisoner's pain medication while he was in segregated unit, precluding summary judgment on providers' qualified immunity defense to prisoner's §§ 1983 deliberate indifference to serious medical needs claim. Lavender v. Lampert, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 821. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether delays in providing prisoner, who had spastic partial paralysis causing right foot to flex and curl toes into claw and related chronic pain, with proper footwear, failure to provide prisoner with wheelchair to use during duration of footwear problem, and failure to reassign prisoner to housing complex that did not have hilly terrain that would exacerbate prisoner's orthopedic problems constituted appropriate medical attention, precluding summary judgment on inmate's deliberate indifference claims against prison medical care providers. Lavender v. Lampert, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 821. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether prison supervisor was responsible for determining whether inmate who claimed to be transsexual should have received medical treatment precluded summary judgment for supervisor on inmate's § 1983 claim on the ground that he was not personally involved in alleged violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights. Brooks v. Berg, N.D.N.Y.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 302, vacated in part 289 F.Supp.2d 286. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact in prisoner's civil rights damages suit against private medical contractor for prison system, as to whether its policies provided insufficient checks on its dentists to ensure treatment within reasonable period and whether it was chargeable with institutional awareness of prisoner's broken tooth because of prisoner's repeated complaints of pain to at least one nurse and two dentists, precluded summary judgment in contractor's favor on ground that it could not be held personally responsible on respondeat superior theory for any neglect by its employees. Goodnow v. Palm, D.Vt.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 125. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether private medical contractor's failure to treat prisoner's broken tooth within seven months constituted good faith reliance on policies calling for treatment within 24 hours when prisoner presents with significant pain and calling for placement on appointment list for other problems, precluded summary judgment in favor of contractor in civil rights damages suit. Goodnow v. Palm, D.Vt.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 125.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether legitimate penological concerns existed to justify denial of prison inmate's requests to attend religious services, precluding summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action alleging denial of his First Amendment free exercise rights. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Affidavit submitted by corrections officials, in inmate's § 1983 action alleging violations of his free exercise rights under First Amendment, warranted denial of his summary judgment motion as premature; officials had not had sufficient opportunity for pretrial discovery as to circumstances surrounding inmate's requests for permission to attend services, whether requests were timely and compliant with corrections policies, whether they were denied and, if so, whether the denial was related to legitimate penological concerns. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Federal Civil Procedure 2553

Genuine issues of material fact regarding whether county corrections officer's resignation, following harassment by coworkers, was voluntary precluded officer's § 1983 claim alleging constructive discharge in violation of the due process clause. Baron v. Hickey, D.Mass.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 66. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether correctional official beat inmate after inmate was restrained and posed no apparent disciplinary threat, and whether beating resulted in swelling and lumps to back of inmate's head, precluded summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 suit alleging violations of his Eighth Amendment rights. Bafford v. Nelson, D.Kan.2002, 241 F.Supp.2d 1192. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Material issues of fact existed as to whether county corrections center supervisor knew that inmate had serious medical needs as a result of being beaten by two corrections officers, notwithstanding screams, moans, and other noises emanating from inmate's cell, precluding summary judgment for inmate's widow on claim for deliberate indifference to inmate's serious medical needs under § 1983 and Eighth Amendment. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In light of strong preference for adjudicating cases on merits, summary judgment would not be granted in inmate's favor on federal civil rights claims based on prison officials' failure to respond to his request for admissions. Warren v. Irvin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 985 F.Supp. 350. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact precluded summary judgment in prisoner's § 1983 action on whether prisoner had shown that prison officials knew of and disregarded risk to prisoner's health arising out of his knee condition, officials' alleged refusal to allow prisoner to undergo regimen of physical therapy and their actions in taking away his knee brace. Hall v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.1997, 954 F.Supp. 90. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison officials failed to establish that inmate's maximum sentence would have expired before an established future parole eligibility date and, therefore, were not entitled to summary judgment in inmate's § 1983 action, alleging violation of due process liberty interest in receiving future parole eligibility date enumerated in statutory schedule when denied parole. Watson v. DiSabato, D.N.J.1996, 933 F.Supp. 390. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of fact as to whether correctional officer sexually abused pretrial detainee by grabbing his genitals precluded partial summary judgment in favor of either pretrial detainee or correctional officer in pretrial detainee's § 1983 action claiming violation of substantive due process. Banks v. Lackawanna County Com'rs, M.D.Pa.1996, 931 F.Supp. 359. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Existence of material issues of fact rendered premature prisoner's summary judgment motion in his § 1983 action against prison officials challenging his removal from work release program without predeprivation hearing. Roucchio v. Coughlin, E.D.N.Y.1996, 923 F.Supp. 360. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether it was objectively unreasonable for officer to refuse inmate's request to attend religious congregational services which conflicted with scheduled callout of inmate for appointment with mental health clinician precluded summary judgment for officer and another official in inmate's § 1983 action alleging violation of his First Amendment rights; inmate's right to attend services was clearly established, and mental health callout was not mandatory, such that there was no reason to deny inmate's request. Boomer v. Irvin, W.D.N.Y.1995, 919 F.Supp. 122. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prisoner failed to create genuine issue of material fact regarding whether hearing officer at his disciplinary hearing was biased as would preclude summary judgment on his § 1983 claim that he was deprived of due process protection of fair and impartial hearing officer, as claim was based on officer's failure to interview particular witness and failure to personally assess credibility of confidential informants, court previously determined that neither of these actions violated prisoner's due process rights, and hearing officer's findings were supported by some evidence in record. Campo v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 814. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Inmate who made federal civil rights claim failed to support factual allegations that police officer at jail violated inmate's constitutional rights by failing to protect him from attack by other inmates and failed to show that officer knew about assault when it occurred, and, thus, summary judgment determination was proper; video cameras viewed by officer provided segmented view of unit and inmate did not claim that officer saw assault on video screen and failed to respond. Abrams v. Hunter, M.D.Fla.1995, 910 F.Supp. 620, affirmed 100 F.3d 971. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Inmate who moved for summary judgment on claim that urinalysis testing violated his civil rights failed to comply with fundamental procedural rule requiring personal knowledge of facts asserted in affidavits, where he did not submit his own affidavit attesting to the number of urinalysis tests he underwent, but that of another individual who, lacking personal knowledge on this issue, could only attest that she overhead inmate say how many times he was tested. McDiffett v. Stotts, D.Kan.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1419. Federal Civil Procedure 2539

Evidence that inmate had lodged numerous complaints against correctional facility superintendent, that superintendent applied tuberculosis (TB) policy inconsistently, and that superintendent did not test inmate for TB with any alternative means precluded summary judgment for superintendent on inmate's § 1983 claim that superintendent retaliated against him for exercising his constitutional right to petition government for redress of grievances by confining him for nine months for refusing to take TB test. Pacheco v. Comisse, N.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 671. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Failure of pro se plaintiff, incarcerated felon, to interpose defense to prison officials' motion for summary judgment in § 1983 action and to respond to court's repeated attempts to contact him provided sufficient justification for granting of prison officials' motion by default. LaSalle v. Coughlin, E.D.N.Y.1995, 893 F.Supp. 185. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Whether former pretrial detainee satisfied initial burden under Religious Freedom Restoration Act, of demonstrating that regulations prohibiting wearing of head gear in common areas of county prison placed substantial burden on detainee's exercise of religion, was fact question precluding summary judgment in § 1983 civil rights suit in light of evidence that Muslim prayer cap is symbol of religion that teaches that men should cover their head during prayer, similar head wear is worn throughout Muslim culture, and wearing cap indicates Muslim's respect in deference to Allah. Muslim v. Frame, E.D.Pa.1995, 891 F.Supp. 226. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In inmate's claim under First Amendment and Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether prison officials provided inmate and other Muslim inmates with kosher diet during month of Ramadan and for Eid, and therefore summary judgment was inappropriate, where inmate submitted affidavits stating that, but for one instance, Muslim inmates were not served Kosher food during

Ramadan and for Eid. Tyson v. Ratelle, C.D.Cal.1996, 166 F.R.D. 442. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison officials' Martinez report addressing pro se inmate's § 1983 failure-to-protect claim, in which they stated that, if court did not dismiss case based on report, they "will file motion for summary judgment" did not adequately apprise inmate of possibility that district court would treat report as motion for summary judgment, and thus entry of summary judgment in favor of officials was reversible error. Dickey v. Merrick, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 90 Fed.Appx. 535, 2003 WL 22977649, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2533.1; Federal Courts 914

District court was not required to compel production of ambulance report before granting summary judgment for state corrections officers on inmate's § 1983 claims when hearing officer did not commit due process violation by refusing to admit ambulance report at inmate's administrative hearing, and therefore production of such document would not have allowed inmate to avoid summary judgment. Yihnidabney v. Ricks, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 64 Fed.Appx. 253, 2003 WL 1867924, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1593; Federal Civil Procedure 2553

Issue of material fact as to whether state prisoner had been prevented from filing grievances precluded summary judgment on prison's claim that prisoner's § 1983 suit was barred by his failure to first exhaust administrative remedies. Preslar v. Dr. Tan, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 553273, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4172. ---- Real property, summary judgment, practice and procedure generally

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether city officials denied property owner's right to procedural due process as the result of a city policy, practice, or custom when they revoked conditional use permit without a pre-deprivation hearing precluded summary judgment on owner's procedural due process claim against city. Holman v. City of Warrenton, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 791. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether town imposed temporary development moratoria in order to provide town with more time to gather funds necessary to acquire property and whether moratoria substantially advanced town's purported environmental concerns precluded summary judgment in developers' §§ 1983 action against town alleging that moratoria constituted illegal temporary takings. W.J.F. Realty Corp. v. Town of Southampton, E.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 18. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether town planning board's eight-year delay in approving developers' request for determination on their subdivision application was extraordinary precluded summary judgment on ripeness grounds in developers' §§ 1983 action against town alleging illegal temporary taking. W.J.F. Realty Corp. v. Town of Southampton, E.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 18. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether county violated landowners' First Amendment, Fourteenth Amendment due process, and Fourteenth Amendment equal protection rights in denying landowners' request to open a section line as a road, precluding summary judgment in § 1983 action. Fry v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Baca, D.Colo.1991, 837 F.Supp. 330, affirmed 7 F.3d 936, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether city's restrictions on drilling for oil and gas within city limits were reasonably necessary to protect the public health, safety and welfare and were actually designed to foreclose, indirectly, such drilling, despite ordinance which permitted such activity, precluded summary judgment in favor of city on inverse condemnation claim resulting from denial of conditional use permit. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether officers' conduct both with regard to activating Special Emergency Response Team (SERT) and with regard to searching woods for suspect shocked the conscience, precluding summary judgment for officers in substantive due process claim under state-created danger doctrine brought by survivors of suspect, who allegedly suffered a fatal heart attack resulting from officers' conduct. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 497, on remand 2004 WL 633276. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

To establish a violation of a right to substantive due process, a plaintiff asserting a §§ 1983 claim must demonstrate not only government action but also that the government action was so egregious, so outrageous, that it may fairly be said to shock the contemporary conscience. Matican v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 497. Constitutional Law 251.2

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether mayor and police commissioner had adopted regulations regarding the use of firearms by officers, whether officers were trained in the regulations, and whether the officers followed those regulations when they shot arrestee who was fleeing parking ramp where cars were burning, with object in his hand, precluded summary judgment on arrestee's § 1983 claim against officers, mayor and police commissioner. Whitfield v. Municipality of Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 279 F.Supp.2d 115. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4174. ---- Training

Genuine issues of material fact regarding whether county police department's training program on restraint techniques was inadequate with respect to teaching dangers of hog-tie restraint precluded summary judgment on § 1983 action against county, alleging that county officers' use of hog-tie restraint on arrestee, which caused his death, constituted excessive force in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Garrett v. Unified Government of Athens-Clarke County, M.D.Ga.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 1262, reversed in part 378 F.3d 1274. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether police officers were inadequately trained in dealing with the mentally ill and using impact projectiles, and whether such inadequate training was cause of death of mentally ill individual who was shot and killed by police officers after shooting of individual with bean bag pellets and using pepper spray did not subdue individual enough to take him into custody, precluded summary judgment for municipality and officers in their official capacities, in § 1983 action alleging violation of individual's civil rights. Herrera v. Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Dept., D.Nev.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 1043. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

4175. Law of case, practice and procedure generally

Law of the case doctrine did not preclude consideration of fire district board's later motion for summary judgment in firefighter's action under § 1983 against board; in prior appeal from grant of summary judgment, Court of Appeals did not explicitly or implicitly decide issue of whether firefighter could not prevail on his due process claims. Greenawalt v. Sun City West Fire Dist., D.Ariz.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 1200. Federal Courts 950

Law of case doctrine did not apply to prevent civil rights plaintiff from arguing that his false arrest claim under the Fourth Amendment did not accrue until his criminal convictions were reversed, where only references to whether claim was time-barred appeared in dicta and issue was never litigated in district court or Court of Appeals on prior appeals. Ienco v. Angarone, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 429 F.3d 680. Federal Courts 917

New evidence submitted by defendant corrections officer with his motion for summary judgment provided no compelling reason for transferee judge to overturn prior determination of transferor judge, who denied officer's motion to dismiss, that plaintiff, a former pretrial detainee, had exhausted his administrative remedies in accord with the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), and determination was thus binding, under law of the case doctrine, in detainee's §§ 1983 action alleging use of excessive force; detainee's original complaint alleged that he filed grievance within time prescribed by corrections department policy, and relevant facts had not changed at time officer presented his summary judgment motion. Brengettcy v. Horton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 423 F.3d 674. Courts 99(7)

4176. New trial, practice and procedure generally

New trial was not warranted in municipal employee's successful § 1983 sex discrimination action against city and city officials; outcome of case depended heavily on credibility of witnesses, jury chose to believe one party's witnesses over other party's, and verdict thus did not shock conscience. Rodriguez Sostre v. Municipio De Canovanas, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1055. Federal Civil Procedure 2340

Excerpt of corrections officer's testimony from officer's criminal trial and portions of warden's deposition testimony from another lawsuit constituted newly discovered evidence of facts which existed at the time of inmate's § 1983 action against city corrections department and corrections officers for alleged use of excessive force during institutional search, and thus supported inmate's motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence, given that inmate was unaware of such evidence before he contacted legal aid society post-trial and that corrections officer's trial, incidents addressed by corrections officer's testimony, and warden's deposition and incidents discussed therein all occurred prior to trial on inmate's claims. Berry v. Department of Corrections, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 287666, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2350.1

District court, on its own initiative, ordered a new trial of individual's § 1983 claims against a police officer, notwithstanding jury verdict finding that individual had not established liability with respect to any of the four police officer defendants; police officer never appeared at the trial and was not subject to cross-examination, and the officer did not inform his counsel of his whereabouts and remained out of range of counsel's attempts of communication. Revelle v. Trigg, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 22358488, Unreported, appeal dismissed 112 Fed.Appx. 808, 2004 WL 2165870. Federal Civil Procedure 2332; Federal Civil Procedure 2364

Evidence in § 1983 suit supported determination that patient suffered no actual damages as a result of police officer's decision to send him to a hospital for evaluation, thus precluding new trial on damages; hospital records showed that the patient was in no distress when he arrived at the hospital, it was physicians who were responsible for the patient being held overnight, and it was necessary to take him to the hospital on a gurney because the patient, a 270-300 pound man, passively resisted going. Kerman v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 328297, Unreported, reversed 374 F.3d 93. Federal Civil Procedure 2344

District court did not abuse its discretion in granting new trial in arrestee's § 1983 action against police officer, based upon jury returning note, along with verdict against officer, stating that jury defined "planting evidence on him," which "is not defined in the law," to mean assigning possession of marijuana, which had been found in vehicle in which arrestee had been passenger, to arrestee rather than driver; jury's adopted definition transcended arrestee's own theory of liability as well as evidence presented at trial, and demonstrated that jury misunderstood factual predicate of arrestee's claim. Olivas v. City of Hobbs, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2002, 50 Fed.Appx. 936, 2002 WL 31497308, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2338.1

4177. Question of law, practice and procedure generally--Generally

Question whether facts presented will support a claim under this section presents question of law to be determined after and not before court has assumed jurisdiction. Travers v. Paton, D.C.Conn.1966, 261 F.Supp. 110. Civil Rights 1424

4178. ---- Arrests, question of law, practice and procedure generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In absence of genuine dispute over material facts, issue of whether police officer had reasonable articulable suspicion to justify stopping automobile is question of law. Thompson v. Reuting, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1992, 968 F.2d 756. Civil Rights 1429

4179. ---- Conflicts of laws, question of law, practice and procedure generally

Because question whether university police department's policy of confidentiality of accident reports conflicted with other laws was a question of law, determination of such question was properly in province of district court. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 629 F.2d 993, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3063, 452 U.S. 926, 69 L.Ed.2d 428. Records 63

4180. ---- Immunity, question of law, practice and procedure generally

In a civil rights action in which the factual record is not in serious dispute, the court should decide the issue of qualified immunity as a matter of law, preferably on a pretrial motion for summary judgment when possible, or on a motion for directed verdict, and if there are unresolved factual issues which prevent an early disposition of the defense, the jury should decide those issues on special interrogatories, and ultimate legal determination of whether a reasonable police officer should have known he acted unlawfully is a question of law better left for court. Warren v. Dwyer, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1990, 906 F.2d 70, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 431, 498 U.S. 967, 112 L.Ed.2d 414. Civil Rights 1432; Federal Civil Procedure 2153.1; Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Question of qualified immunity is a question of law for the court, not for the jury. Alvarado v. Picur, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 859 F.2d 448, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1432

Qualified immunity is question of law for court to decide. Rallis v. Stone, E.D.Mich.1993, 821 F.Supp. 466. Civil Rights 1432

In making qualified immunity determination, question of whether reasonable officer could have believed that his conduct was proper under established law is one of law for the district court, which must also determine whether officers acted reasonably under settled law in the circumstances, not whether another reasonable or more reasonable interpretation of the events can be constructed years after the fact. Sinaloa Lake Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Stephenson, C.D.Cal.1992, 805 F.Supp. 824, affirmed 70 F.3d 1095. Civil Rights 1432

Qualified immunity is an issue of law rather than fact and, once the defense is raised, plaintiff must come forward with facts and allegations which convince the court that the defendant's alleged conduct violated the law and that the law was clearly established. Elam v. Williams, D.Kan.1990, 753 F.Supp. 1530, affirmed 953 F.2d 1391. Civil Rights 1432; Officers And Public Employees 114

4181. ---- Policy-making authority, question of law, practice and procedure generally

Whether an official is a final policymaker under state law, as required to subject municipality to section 1983 liability, is to be resolved by judge before case is submitted to jury; judge should consider whether government official is a final policymaker for local government in a particular area, or on the particular issue involved in action. Stein v. Janos, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 256. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1432

Under Endangered Species Act (ESA), Fish and Wildlife Service must make decision to list a species as endangered or threatened "solely on the basis of the best scientific and commercial data available," and thus cannot take into consideration the economic impacts of listing. a question of state law; it is not a question of federal law or a question of fact in the normal sense. Lightner v. Town of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1489. Civil Rights 1426; Federal Courts 411

Question of whether official possesses policy-making authority needed to impose liability on municipality for § 1983 civil rights violation is legal question to be answered by reference to state and local law. Jones v. City of Elizabeth City, N.C., E.D.N.C.1991, 840 F.Supp. 398, affirmed 2 F.3d 1149. Civil Rights 1426; Federal Courts 411

Question as to whether official has final policy-making authority for municipality, for purposes of determining whether municipality is liable under § 1983, is question of law to be resolved by trial court judge. Mizell v. Lee, M.D.Ga.1993, 829 F.Supp. 1338. Civil Rights 1426

4182. ---- Property interests, question of law, practice and procedure generally

Issues of whether city's repeated rejections of property owner's development proposals deprived owner of all economically viable use of land, and whether city's decision to reject development plan bore a reasonable relationship to its proffered justifications and thus substantially advanced legitimate public interests, were properly submitted to jury in owner's § 1983 action alleging that city's rejections of proposals effected a regulatory taking without providing just compensation, which was action at law to which Seventh Amendment was applicable. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., U.S.Cal.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1624, 526 U.S. 687, 143 L.Ed.2d 882 . Jury 14(1.5)

For purposes of § 1983, whether state law has created property interest is legal question for court to decide. Key West Harbour Development Corp. v. City of Key West, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 987 F.2d 723. Civil Rights 1426

District court should have decided legal issue of whether city charter would have permitted employee to have due process property interest in continued employment before submitting question of fact to jury about whether there was mutual understanding between city and employee that employee could be discharged only for cause; city's claim that its charter deprived employee of any property interest in employment should not have been submitted to jury as factual issue. Driggins v. City of Oklahoma City, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1511, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 129, 506 U.S. 843, 121 L.Ed.2d 84. Civil Rights 1430

4183. ---- Rules and regulations, question of law, practice and procedure generally

Pretrial detainee states cause of action under this section for deprivations of liberty interest under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 when, pursuant to a regulation or standard practice he has been subjected to punishment, but does not do so when the regulation or standard practice is merely regulatory in character; the proper characterization of such a regulation or standard practice turns on the intent of its adoption and is a legal issue for the court and not a factual question for the jury. Soto v. City of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.1983, 567 F.Supp. 662. Civil Rights 1090

4184. ---- Schools and students, question of law, practice and procedure generally

Question, arising in student's civil rights action against school officials, whether school officials have any settled undisputed obligations under the constitution to student under the circumstances presented by the case is so inextricably intertwined with legal analysis that it is an appropriate decision for the court rather than the jury. Picha v. Wielgos, N.D.Ill.1976, 410 F.Supp. 1214. Civil Rights 1427

4185. ---- State action, question of law, practice and procedure generally

It was within province of district court to decide merits of issue of existence of state action necessary to maintain suit under this section, and plaintiffs were not denied U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 7 right to jury trial by court's determining that requisite state action was lacking, especially since all parties had testified and little, if anything remained to be presented on the issue. Menchaca v. Chrysler Credit Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 613 F.2d 507, rehearing denied 622 F.2d 1043, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 358, 449 U.S. 953, 66 L.Ed.2d 217. Jury 31.2(1)

4186. ---- Miscellaneous questions of law, question of law, practice and procedure generally

In action under this section arising out of law officers' entry into plaintiffs' premises and exchange of gunfire, credibility choices and resolution of conflicting testimony were for judge, sitting without jury, subject only to "clearly erroneous" rule. Rodriguez v. Jones, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1973, 473 F.2d 599, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 3023, 412 U.S. 953, 37 L.Ed.2d 1007. Federal Courts 858

Whether public employer's interest qua employer outweighs individual's First Amendment right is question of law for district court to resolve. Dartland v. Metropolitan Dade County, S.D.Fla.1988, 681 F.Supp. 1539, reversed on other grounds 866 F.2d 1321, on remand 717 F.Supp. 1544, on remand 760 F.Supp. 196. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

4187. Mixed questions of law and fact, practice and procedure generally

In civil rights case, whether plaintiffs were to be deemed improperly "excluded" from public education was a mixed question of fact and law. Frederick L. v. Thomas, E.D.Pa.1976, 408 F.Supp. 832, affirmed 557 F.2d 373. Civil Rights 1427

4188. Transcripts, practice and procedure generally

See, also, Notes of Decisions under section 1343 of Title 28.

District court did not abuse its discretion in awarding police officer costs of deposition transcripts, even though depositions were not offered into evidence in civil rights action in which officer prevailed on arrestee's claims of excessive force. Soler v. Waite, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 989 F.2d 251, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2738

Federal district court, in civil rights action, had no power to compel Missouri Supreme Court to supply plaintiff with a transcript of his state conviction of burglary. Barnes v. Dorsey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1973, 480 F.2d 1057. Courts 494

Where indigent bringing action under this section to compel superintendent of state farm to supply all records concerning his conviction did not show need for transcript, there was no constitutional right to transcript, regardless of how easily and inexpensively state could furnish it. Jones v. Superintendent, Virginia State Farm, C.A.4 (Va.) 1972, 460 F.2d 150, adhered to on rehearing 465 F.2d 1091, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 1380, 410 U.S. 944, 35 L.Ed.2d 611. Civil Rights 1476

4189. Survival of action

Under West Virginia's survival statute, cause of action against school board and supervisors of school employee who worked as both a teacher and school principal, for alleged sexual abuse of student by employee, survived student's death, and thus cause of action under § 1983 likewise survived, where injury of sexual abuse was not alleged to have led to death. 4211. Jurisdictional nature of section, jurisdiction generally

While § 1983 provides plaintiffs with cause of action, it does not confer subject matter jurisdiction on federal district court. Ayala Serrano v. Lebron Gonzalez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 909 F.2d 8. Federal Courts 219.1

Civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] is not a jurisdictional statute and, therefore, does not give federal courts the power to decide claims that arise under it. Daigle v. Opelousas Health Care, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1344. Federal Courts 219.1

This section, which authorizes civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law is only remedial; it recognizes a cause of action but does not of itself bestow jurisdiction of the action on federal courts. Curtis v. Taylor, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 625 F.2d 645, rehearing denied and modified on other grounds 648 F.2d 946. Federal Courts 222

This section, which creates a federal cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another, is not a jurisdictional grant. Cervoni v. Secretary of Health, Ed. and Welfare, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1978, 581 F.2d 1010. Federal Courts 222

This section is not jurisdictional. Blue v. Craig, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1974, 505 F.2d 830.

This section creates cause of action but does not confer jurisdiction. Ybarra v. Town of Los Altos Hills, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 503 F.2d 250. Federal Courts 219.1

This section is not a jurisdictional statute and is significant only to extent that it creates a cause of action. Tyler v. Russel, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1969, 410 F.2d 490. Civil Rights 1003

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Federal statute providing subject matter jurisdiction over claims for civil rights violations and civil rights conspiracy could not vest court with jurisdiction over complaint that failed to state claims under either § 1983 or § 1985. Russo v. Glasser, D.Conn.2003, 279 F.Supp.2d 136. Federal Courts 244

Fact that prisoner sought injunctive relief as remedy for § 1983 claim that Ohio Parole Authority violated his due process rights was not ground for district court to refuse to exercise jurisdiction over claim, on ground that proper remedy was to file action "at law" in state court; relief sought was order compelling Parole Authority to conduct new hearing in compliance with due process, and action would have been no less one for injunctive relief in state court. Buhrman v. Wilkinson, S.D.Ohio 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1110, supplemented 2004 WL 2044055, report and recommendation adopted 2004 WL 2044056. Federal Courts 54

Federal civil rights statute does not create federal court jurisdiction. Polite v. Casella, N.D.N.Y.1995, 901 F.Supp. 90. Federal Courts 219.1

Section 1983, as a remedial statute, does not confer federal jurisdiction independently. Ernst & Young v. Depositors Economic Protection Corp., D.R.I.1994, 862 F.Supp. 709, affirmed 45 F.3d 530. Federal Courts 219.1

Federal civil rights statute § 1983 does not by itself create jurisdiction or establish any substantive right, but rather, only fulfills procedural or remedial role; thus, party seeking to assert § 1983 claim in federal court must point to separate jurisdiction-conferring statute. Envirotech Sanitary Systems, Inc. v. Shoener, M.D.Pa.1990, 745 F.Supp. 271. Civil Rights 1305

This section is not jurisdictional statute, but, rather, is enabling statute allowing individual to sue state officers. Anderson v. Luther, N.D.Ill.1981, 521 F.Supp. 91.

This section is not an Act of Congress providing for equal rights or for the protection of civil rights for purposes of exercise of civil rights jurisdiction by a federal court. Arko v. Broom, D.C.Colo.1981, 518 F.Supp. 669. Federal Courts 220

This section is not in itself jurisdictional; therefore, assertion of a claim under this section does not automatically invoke federal jurisdiction. Ruffin v. Beal, E.D.Pa.1978, 468 F.Supp. 482.

This section creating cause of action for deprivation of federally protected rights does not grant jurisdiction and thus could not provide federal district court with original jurisdiction over action. State ex rel. Bruce v. Larkin, E.D.Wis.1972, 346 F.Supp. 1065. Federal Courts 220

This section authorizing suit to redress deprivation under color of state law of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by constitution gives a cause of action for deprivation of federal civil rights, but does not grant jurisdiction to federal district courts. Griffin v. Abbott, E.D.Tenn.1975, 68 F.R.D. 241. Federal Courts 220

The Court of Federal Claims does not have jurisdiction over civil rights claims brought under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or other civil rights statutes. Osborn v. U.S., Fed.Cl.2000, 47 Fed.Cl. 224. Federal Courts 1073.1

Court of Federal Claims lacked subject matter jurisdiction over state prisoner's §§ 1983 complaint, which did not set forth any substantive law mandating compensation by the Federal Government. Alexander v. U.S., C.A.Fed.2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 275, 2005 WL 1060262, Unreported. Federal Courts 1073.1

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In determining whether claim otherwise cognizable under federal civil rights statute must be adjudicated in courts of Puerto Rico unless complainant establishes $10,000 jurisdictional amount, language of statute providing that district court shall have original jurisdiction of civil actions to redress deprivation under color of state law of any right, privilege or immunity secured by Constitution or by act of Congress providing for equal rights, purposes of Congress in enacting such statute, and circumstances under which words were employed had to be examined. Examining Bd. of Engineers, Architects and Surveyors v. Flores de Otero, U.S.Puerto Rico 1976, 96 S.Ct. 2264, 426 U.S. 572, 49 L.Ed.2d 65. Federal Courts 333

Former § 41(14) [now 1343] of Title 28 conferred federal jurisdiction of suits brought under this section in which right asserted was inherently incapable of pecuniary valuation. Hague v. Committee for Indus. Organization, U.S.N.J.1939, 59 S.Ct. 954, 307 U.S. 496, 83 L.Ed. 1423.

When a sheriff in his official capacity appeals the denial of summary judgment in a § 1983 action interlocutorily, asserting that he has Eleventh Amendment immunity, this presents a threshold immunity-from-suit issue over which Court of Appeals has jurisdiction. Manders v. Lee, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 338 F.3d 1304, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1061, 540 U.S. 1107, 157 L.Ed.2d 892. Federal Courts 579

Federal courts have jurisdiction to entertain complaints brought under this section providing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of law, in view of its jurisdictional counterpart. Zeller v. Donegal School Dist. Bd. of Ed., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 517 F.2d 600.

This section, and sections 1981 and 1984 of this title do not grant jurisdiction, but merely provide remedy in cases in which jurisdiction is present pursuant to section 1343 of Title 28. Giles v. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, E.D.Mo.1981, 520 F.Supp. 1198.

This section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights, while providing a substantive right of action, is not a jurisdictional provision; jurisdictional counterpart for this section is § 1343 of Title 28 which gives district court original jurisdiction of civil action commenced to redress deprivation, under color of state law, of constitutional right or to recover damages or to secure equitable or other relief under any Act of Congress providing for protection of civil rights. Johnson v. City of Arcadia, Fla., M.D.Fla.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1363. Federal Courts 220

This section creating federal causes of action for the deprivation under color of state law of the constitutional rights of citizens are not, by themselves, jurisdiction conferring; they are cognizable as actions in federal court only by virtue of § 1343 of Title 28 giving district courts original jurisdiction of action to redress deprivation of right secured by federal Constitution and statutes. Freeman and Bass, P.A. v. State of N. J. Commission of Investigation, D.C.N.J.1973, 359 F.Supp. 1053. Federal Courts 220

This section making persons who deprive others of rights or privileges secured by Constitution and laws liable to party injured, is an Act of Congress providing for the protection of civil rights within meaning of § 1343 of Title 28 giving federal court jurisdiction over actions to recover damages or other relief under congressional Act providing for protection of civil rights. McClellan v. University Heights, Inc., D.C.R.I.1972, 338 F.Supp. 374. Federal Courts 221

This section and § 1981 of this title governing respectively civil action for deprivation of rights and equal rights under the law do not grant jurisdiction; they merely afford remedy in cases to which jurisdiction is granted by § 1343 of Title 28 governing civil rights and elective franchise. Quarles v. State of Tex., S.D.Tex.1970, 312 F.Supp. 835. Federal Courts 226

Jurisdiction over action for deprivation of rights resides in district court by virtue of § 1343 of Title 28 pertaining thereto and is not dependent upon usual requisites of amount in controversy and diversity of citizenship. Whaley v.

4213. ---- Amount in controversy, statutory basis of jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

There is no required minimum amount in controversy in a federal civil rights suit. Holly v. Woolfolk, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 415 F.3d 678, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1166, 163 L.Ed.2d 1130. Federal Courts 333

Section 1343 of Title 28 relating to civil rights and elective franchise and its interplay with this section relating to civil action for deprivation of rights adequately supplied jurisdiction in suit by migratory workers under Wagner-Peyser Act, § 49 et seq. of Title 29, as against contention that requisite jurisdictional amount was not claimed. Gomez v. Florida State Employment Service, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 417 F.2d 569. Federal Courts 221

Section 1343 of Title 28, providing that district court shall have original jurisdiction of civil action, confers federal jurisdiction without regard to amount in controversy over claims arising under this section. Howard v. Higgins, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1967, 379 F.2d 227.

Suits brought under this section assert jurisdiction under section 1343 of Title 28 and need not fulfill jurisdictional amount requirement. Anderson v. Luther, N.D.Ill.1981, 521 F.Supp. 91.

Where action to enjoin enforcement of C.G.S.A. § 52-369 was brought under this section, there was no jurisdictional requirement that plaintiff prove a minimum amount in controversy and statutory prohibition on federal court injunctions against state court proceedings did not apply. Abbit v. Bernier, D.C.Conn.1974, 387 F.Supp. 57. Federal Courts 333

Action arising in part under this section could be brought in federal district court without regard to the amount in controversy. Forbush v. Wallace, M.D.Ala.1971, 341 F.Supp. 217, affirmed 92 S.Ct. 1197, 405 U.S. 970, 31 L.Ed.2d 246. See, also, Davis v. Caldwell, D.C.Ga.1971, 53 F.R.D. 373. Federal Courts 333

4214. ---- Diversity of citizenship, statutory basis of jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

District court would decline to exercise diversity jurisdiction over arrestee's state law claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, once her § 1983 claim was dismissed on officers' motion for summary judgment. Colon v. Ludemann, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 747. Federal Courts 18

Cause of action under this section requires neither diversity of citizenship nor amount in controversy. Woosley v. Hi-Plains Harvestore, Inc., W.D.Okla.1981, 550 F.Supp. 161. Federal Courts 219.1

Diversity of citizenship is not prerequisite to federal court jurisdiction under this section relating to deprivation of constitutional rights under color of state law. Hofferber v. First Nat. Bank of Guymon, Oklahoma, W.D.Okla.1977, 437 F.Supp. 788. Federal Courts 222

Diversity of citizenship is not a prerequisite to action under this section. Gaulter v. Capdeboscq, E.D.La.1975, 404 F.Supp. 900, injunction dissolved 423 F.Supp. 823, affirmed in part on other grounds 594 F.2d 127. Federal Courts 219.1

Diversity of citizenship is not necessary in a case brought under this section. Jaso v. Traczyk, N.D.Ind.1973, 367 F.Supp. 434.

Neither diversity of citizenship nor amount in controversy is prerequisite to federal court jurisdiction of cause of action asserted under this section. Mini Cinema 16 Inc. of Fort Dodge v. Habhab, N.D.Iowa 1970, 326 F.Supp. 1162. Federal Courts 219.1; Federal Courts 333

4215. ---- Federal question, statutory basis of jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to hear appeal of department of motor vehicles investigator, in § 1983 lawsuit, even though district court denied investigator's motion for summary judgment on his qualified immunity defense; question of whether investigator was under clearly established constitutional obligation to notify prosecutor of newly received information establishing plaintiff's innocence could be adjudicated without reference to disputed facts. Kinzer v. Jackson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 139. Federal Courts 579

Mother of junior high student who committed suicide at home after twice attempting it at school presented "substantial federal question" in her § 1983 action against school board, thus invoking district court's subject matter jurisdiction; mother alleging that third party informed school official of student's suicide attempt at school, that official stated that he would "take care" of situation, that third party would have made mother aware of suicide attempt but for official's assurances, and that school board thereby assumed duty of care. Wyke v. Polk County School Bd., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 129 F.3d 560, certified question withdrawn 137 F.3d 1292. Federal Courts 221

District court had subject matter jurisdiction over survivors' action arising from city police officers' alleged beating of individual which resulted in that individual's death, as survivors asserted that police department ratified pattern of excessive force by officers and that city failed to review or identify incidents involving excessive force, which would support claim under § 1983, and complaint specifically alleged deprivation of federal constitutional rights. Green v. Nevers, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1997, 111 F.3d 1295, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 559, 522 U.S. 996, 139 L.Ed.2d 400. Federal Courts 221

Defendants' allegations of §§ 1983 violations in their right to marry and travel did not provide basis for civil rights removal jurisdiction. In re Whatley, D.Mass.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 50. Removal Of Cases 70

Lawsuit brought by Indian tribes against state and municipal defendants, seeking declaration of ownership and right to possess approximately 12,000 acres of land in northern New York, and into which United States intervened, was civil action that arose under Constitution, laws, or treaties of United States, for purpose of federal district court's exercise of original subject matter jurisdiction over it under federal question statute, since, inter alia, Indian Commerce Clause and Treaty Clause under United States Constitution had broad impact on authority or jurisdiction of Congress, and federal courts, over Indian matters. U.S.C.A. Const.Art. 1, §§ 8, cl. 3; U.S.C.A. Const.Art. 2, §§ 2, cl. Canadian St. Regis Band of Mohawk Indians v. New York, N.D.N.Y.2005, 388 F.Supp.2d 25.

Court had subject matter jurisdiction over claim by black county employee working at animal shelter, that he was demoted because of race and nature of his political associations, in violation of First and Fourteenth Amendments. Hodge v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.2003, 306 F.Supp.2d 288. Federal Courts 176; Federal Courts 178.5; Federal Courts 182

Regardless of whether § 1983 suit could be maintained against Virginia Department of Education (VDOE) and its officials for violations of the IDEA, district court had subject matter jurisdiction over action, pursuant to statutory provisions granting it jurisdiction over actions raising federal questions or actions seeking to redress civil rights violations. Virginia Office of Protection and Advocacy v. Virginia, Dept. of Educ., E.D.Va.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 648. Federal Courts 221 of federal Medicaid monies created federal rights upon which unsuccessful bidder could maintain private cause of action under § 1983 to challenge state's award of contract for management of certain Medicaid behavioral health services to successful bidder. Value Behavioral Health, Inc. v. Ohio Dept. of Mental Health, S.D.Ohio 1997, 966 F.Supp. 557, vacated, appeal dismissed. Action 3

Parents' claim that due process right to direct upbringing and education of their children entitled them to have their daughter inspected by school doctor rather than school nurse before being readmitted to public school after showing symptoms of contagious disease was unreasonable and so devoid of merit as to fail to state a justiciable federal claim under § 1983, so that district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction, despite claims of violations of right to privacy and equal protection as well as due process. Kampfer v. Gokey, N.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 167, affirmed 175 F.3d 1008. Civil Rights 1070; Federal Courts 13.10; Federal Courts 221

Cigarette manufacturers' claim in action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief that state attorney general, who threatened action against manufacturers to recover certain expenses paid by state under its Medicaid program, acted with others to deprive manufacturers of their federal rights, in violation of § 1983, was sufficient to support federal question jurisdiction over manufacturers' action. Philip Morris Inc. v. Harshbarger, D.Mass.1996, 946 F.Supp. 1067. Federal Courts 228

Civil rights statute, creating cause of action against any person who, acting under color of state law, abridges rights created by Constitution and laws of United States, does not create federal court jurisdiction; it creates cause of action against those who violate federal law while acting under state government authority, and federal court jurisdiction exists under federal question jurisdiction statute. Greene v. Hawes, N.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 136. Federal Courts 219.1

Hotel owners' claim in civil rights action against city and city officials that due process protection extended to contractual right to benefits of owning and operating hotel was sufficiently substantial to support exercise of federal question jurisdiction. Hotel Syracuse, Inc. v. Young, N.D.N.Y.1992, 805 F.Supp. 1073. Federal Courts 244

Regardless of whether Springfield, Illinois, Board of Education is a "person" within meaning of this section, jurisdiction over the Board was proper where plaintiff alleged jurisdiction under § 1331 of Title 28 and sought recovery directed under the Constitution. Newborn v. Morrison, S.D.Ill.1977, 440 F.Supp. 623. Federal Courts 243

Federal question jurisdiction may be invoked in an action asserting constitutional rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 against municipalities immune from liability under this section making every person who deprives another person of any rights secured by law liable in an action at law; however, to give federal court jurisdiction under § 1331 of this title, federal question alleged must be substantial. McCarther v. Grady County, Okl., W.D.Okla.1977, 437 F.Supp. 828. Federal Courts 177; Federal Courts 242.1

Though district court did not have jurisdiction over municipality as a "person" under this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law, district court did have jurisdiction over municipality by virtue of § 1331 of Title 28 where plaintiff alleged requisite amount in controversy as well as federal questions respecting cancellation of his indefinite contract by defendants as a tenured teacher in school system. Mejia v. School City of Gary, N.D.Ind.1976, 415 F.Supp. 370. Federal Courts 13.30; Federal Courts 334

Doctor and hospital were not state actors as required to establish federal question jurisdiction over patient's §§ 1983 claim alleging medical malpractice related to patient's treatment after alleged exposure to a biological agent used by military scientists; although doctor and hospital may have received state funding for clinical research, receipt of state funds, without more, did not make a state actor, and patient did not allege that doctor or hospital formed a conspiracy with a state actor to violate his constitutional rights. Federal district court lacking federal question jurisdiction over lessors of house, in § 1983 action, could not dismiss claim with prejudice; only allowable disposition was dismissal without prejudice. Olsen v. Aebersold, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 71 Fed.Appx. 7, 2003 WL 21580577, Unreported. Federal Courts 30

Prisoner's allegations against the Governor of New Mexico, Secretary of Corrections, and Department of Corrections for violations of contractual provisions and state laws did not allege violations of federally protected rights under § 1983 as required for federal jurisdiction. Florez v. Johnson, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 432, 2003 WL 1605857, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098

4216. Exclusive jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

District of Columbia Administrative Procedure Act, D.C.Code 1981, § 1-1510, did not bar landlords' attempt to bring cause of action under this section in federal court alleging that District of Columbia agency responsible for administering local rent control laws intentionally deprived them of due process in carrying out adjudicatory functions and, therefore, District of Columbia courts did not have exclusive jurisdiction over landlords' case. District Properties Associates v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1984, 743 F.2d 21, 240 U.S.App.D.C. 21. Civil Rights 1318

New York Public Health Council (PHC) did not have jurisdiction over issues presented by § 1983 action in which physician alleged that hospital officials had violated his First Amendment free speech rights through conspiracy of retaliatory harassment, which included refusal to recommend renewal of hospital privileges, and thus, primary jurisdiction doctrine did not bar court from considering § 1983 action even though PHC had not yet considered denial of privilege renewal; while function of PHC is to determine whether there is any medical justification for withdrawal of privileges, maintenance of privileges was entirely unrelated to physician's § 1983 claims. Franzon v. Massena Memorial Hosp., N.D.N.Y.1997, 977 F.Supp. 160. Civil Rights 1321

While federal courts are given original jurisdiction over civil action for deprivation of rights, that jurisdiction is not exclusive. Tomsick v. Jones, D.C.Colo.1979, 464 F.Supp. 371. Courts 489(1)

4217. Concurrent jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

Although in enacting this section Congress altered the balance of judicial power between the state and federal courts, Congress did so by adding to the jurisdiction of the federal courts and not by subtracting from that of the state courts. Allen v. McCurry, U.S.Mo.1980, 101 S.Ct. 411, 449 U.S. 90, 66 L.Ed.2d 308, on remand 647 F.2d 167. Federal Courts 4

Maryland courts have concurrent jurisdiction over claims based on this section and the Federal Constitution. Kutzik v. Young, C.A.4 (Md.) 1984, 730 F.2d 149. Courts 489(1)

Although a § 1983 claim is a federal claim, state courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal courts to adjudicate claims arising under that statute. Redevelopment Agency of City of San Bernardino v. Alvarez, C.D.Cal.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 1112. Courts 489(1); Federal Courts 219.1

Claim under § 1983 may be brought in state court. Koziara v. City of Casselberry, M.D.Fla.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1245. Courts 489(1)

State district courts have concurrent jurisdiction to hear constitutional claims arising under § 1983. Charchenko v. City of Stillwater, D.Minn.1993, 821 F.Supp. 1284. Courts 489(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal courts over § 1983 actions. Coffman v. Wilson Police Dept., E.D.Pa.1990, 739 F.Supp. 257. Courts 489(1)

Fact that woman who claimed she was involuntarily and unjustifiably confined at state psychiatric center had also filed state court action against state, which federal court had dismissed as party defendant in federal court action, did not affect woman's right to proceed in federal court with her claim under the civil rights statute. Brandman v. North Shore Guidance Center, E.D.N.Y.1986, 636 F.Supp. 877. Civil Rights 1321

4218. Primary jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

Doctrine of primary jurisdiction did not preclude court from considering civil rights challenge to state's due process hearing procedures under the Education of the Handicapped Act and alleged violation of the Rehabilitation Act. Mrs. W. v. Tirozzi, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1987, 832 F.2d 748, on remand 706 F.Supp. 164.

Office of juvenile justice and delinquency prevention lacked authority to require state compliance with Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act and could only cut off funding; office thus did not have primary jurisdiction over juveniles' claim and doctrine of "primary jurisdiction" did not bar juveniles' 1983 claim seeking to enforce compliance with the Act. Hendrickson v. Griggs, N.D.Iowa 1987, 672 F.Supp. 1126, appeal dismissed 856 F.2d 1041. Civil Rights 1456; Infants 280

Notwithstanding existence of various state remedies for discrimination in employment, doctrine of primary jurisdiction did not preclude federal court from entertaining civil rights actions based on claim that labor unions, contractors and others involved in building industry engaged in discriminatory employment practices. Byrd v. Local Union No. 24, Intern. Broth. of Elec. Workers, D.C.Md.1974, 375 F.Supp. 545. Courts 489(9)

4219. In personam jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

Virginia corrections officials who received transferred New Mexico state prisoner and implemented New Mexico's classification and work authorization policies pursuant to the Interstate Corrections Compact (ICC) did not have the minimum contacts necessary with New Mexico for the New Mexico district court to assert personal jurisdiction over the Virginia officials in their official capacities in prisoner's §§ 1983 action claiming his constitutional rights were violated during his incarceration in Virginia; all relevant conduct by Virginia officials occurred in Virginia, without any indication that acts were aimed at or had effect in New Mexico. Trujillo v. Williams, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 465 F.3d 1210. Federal Courts 76.35

Nonresident county did not purposefully avail itself of forum state's law even though county sheriff allegedly conspired to have plaintiff wrongfully arrested in forum state and, thus, district court lacked jurisdiction over county in § 1983 action, where there was no evidence that county commissioners knew of, or took any action in connection with, plaintiff's arrest, nor evidence that sheriff who caused plaintiff's arrest acted pursuant to any county policy, custom, or ordinance. Ziegler v. Indian River County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 64 F.3d 470. Federal Courts 76.35

Federal district court in District of Columbia did not have personal jurisdiction under District of Columbia long-arm statute over Director of Virginia Department of Corrections (VDOC), Warden of state prison, and individuals or entities employed by VDOC, in §§ 1983 lawsuit brought by prisoner of District of Columbia who was subject to prisoner custody arrangement with Virginia and who alleged that he was subject to variety of constitutional deprivations, since Virginia defendants did not live in District of Columbia, they did not transact business in District, and all acts alleged by prisoner to connect defendants to forum related to actions taken in their official capacities. Alabama's procedural rules, to permit federal district court sitting in Alabama to assert personal jurisdiction over her in driver's § 1983 action, which was based on Department's referral to national drivers register of Ohio default judgment against driver, allegedly resulting in suspension of driver's Alabama driver's license; neither director nor her department acted or failed to act in Alabama with respect to driver, and director, who acted under Ohio law, had no other contacts with Alabama making it fair and reasonable to require her to defend action there. Bledsoe-Colvin v. Alexander, M.D.Ala.2001, 127 F.Supp.2d 1326. Federal Courts 76.5

Unknown physician who allegedly gave state inmate incorrect initial medical classification would be dismissed as party from inmate's § 1983 action even though district court had not yet acquired personal jurisdiction over physician; in view of fact that court had determined that inmate had no due process right in receiving particular classification, attempt to obtain jurisdiction over physician would serve no purpose. Treadwell v. Murray, E.D.Va.1995, 878 F.Supp. 49. Federal Civil Procedure 388

District court lacked personal jurisdiction over Washington officials in connection with inmate's § 1983 claim against them; inmate, incarcerated at District of Columbia facility, alleged no contacts between Washington officials and District which would bring them within reach of District's long-arm statute. Charles v. Kelly, D.D.C.1992, 790 F.Supp. 344, appeal dismissed. Federal Courts 1041

District court lacked personal jurisdiction over chief dental officer of District of Columbia's Department of Corrections sued in his official capacity by prisoner claiming he had been provided inadequate dental care, where prisoner did not assert that official policy was responsible for deprivation of his constitutional rights. Fields v. District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections, D.D.C.1992, 789 F.Supp. 20. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Serious questions existed as to whether Minnesota state judge was subject to personal jurisdiction in federal district court in Oregon, for purpose of determining whether trust beneficiaries were entitled to preliminary injunction in civil rights action claiming that they were deprived of access to the courts by Minnesota judge's injunction against further prosecution of Oregon action alleging trust mismanagement, where judge had taken no action in Oregon and had not enjoined Oregon action, but rather judge's order was directed only to parties who voluntarily submitted to jurisdiction of Minnesota courts. Schroll v. Plunkett, D.Or.1990, 760 F.Supp. 1378, affirmed 932 F.2d 973. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Nonresidents who allegedly participated in illegal surveillance that led to prisoner's conviction did not obtain any personal benefit that would justify exercise of personal jurisdiction over them in their individual capacities in civil rights action brought in New York; possible desire to increase stature in government or actions motivated by racism were not "personal benefits" sufficient to confer personal jurisdiction. Wahad v. F.B.I., S.D.N.Y.1990, 132 F.R.D. 17. Federal Courts 76.35

Pennsylvania hospital that treated inmate at Pennsylvania prison was not subject to personal jurisdiction under New York's long-arm statute in civil rights action brought by inmate who resided in New York following his release from prison; inmate failed to show either that any tortious act by hospital caused injury to a person "within" New York, or that hospital derived substantial revenue from services rendered "in" New York. Hartman v. Low Sec. Correctional Institution Allenwood, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 34514, Unreported. Federal Courts 76.35

4220. Comity, jurisdiction generally

Principle of comity barred state taxpayers' suit for damages brought in federal court under this subchapter to address allegedly unconstitutional administration of state tax system. Fair Assessment in Real Estate Ass'n, Inc. v. McNary, U.S.Mo.1981, 102 S.Ct. 177, 454 U.S. 100, 70 L.Ed.2d 271. Federal Courts 27

Federal district court lacked jurisdiction over purported § 1983 action; rather than mounting general constitutional challenge that was reviewable by district court, it was evident from face of complaint that civil rights plaintiff impermissibly sought to review merits of state court decision in "particular case." Branson v. Nott, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 62 F.3d 287, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 565, 516 U.S. 1009, 133 L.Ed.2d 491. Courts 509

Power to create special assessment districts to pay cost of street improvements is a legislative process grounded in taxing power of sovereign; therefore, taxpayer challenging assessment is barred by principles of comity from asserting Section 1983 actions in federal court against validity of that state tax system. Miller v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1985, 755 F.2d 1390, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 408, 474 U.S. 995, 88 L.Ed.2d 359. Federal Courts 27

Considerations of comity do not preclude federal district court from hearing civil rights claims of refusal on part of state district courts to docket and hear pro se motions, but complaints of such refusal did not state claim upon which equitable or monetary relief could be granted where plaintiffs had not been unrepresented by court-appointed counsel nor did complaint assert specific instances where courts' refusal to docket particular pro se motion had caused hardship to some particular criminal defendant but, rather, gravamen of complaint was that refusal to docket and hear pro se motions of criminal defendants who were already represented by counsel of itself deprived plaintiffs of constitutional right of access to courts. Tarter v. Hury, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 646 F.2d 1010. Civil Rights 1395(5); Courts 490

District court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over husband's § 1983 action seeking temporary restraining order and injunction prohibiting state court judge from proceeding with his divorce case; despite husband's denomination of case as civil rights action, husband was in essence seeking reversal of judge's decisions in state court case, and husband could not appeal decisions of state court judge under guise of civil rights action. Tufano v. Alpert, E.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 112. Courts 509

District court was barred based on principle of comity from entertaining subject matter jurisdiction over Shawnee tribe member's civil rights action against Kansas and county officials alleging that cigarette tax scheme utilized violated Constitution and several Indian treaties and that state was without jurisdiction to tax and regulate purchase and sale of cigarettes by Indian on Indian land, where remedies that Kansas provided met minimum procedural requirements. Oyler v. Finney, D.Kan.1994, 870 F.Supp. 1018, reconsideration denied, affirmed 52 F.3d 338. Courts 490

Taxpayer's state law remedies for county's allegedly unconstitutional procedures for considering property tax abatement petitions were adequate, so that taxpayer's § 1983 action for damages was barred by doctrine of comity, even though taxpayer might not have been permitted to raise its constitutional concerns on appeal of denial of petition to board of assessment appeals; taxpayer could have brought either state § 1983 action or action for declaratory relief. Home Life Ins. Co. v. Board of County Com'rs of Arapahoe County, Colo., D.Colo.1993, 832 F.Supp. 309. Courts 490

Principles of comity barred federal action alleging that Florida homestead tax exemption statute was unconstitutional where declaration that statute was facially invalid would have impact on state fisc and where taxpayers had choice of remedies under Florida law which were plain, adequate, and complete. Winicki v. Mallard, M.D.Fla.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1244, affirmed 783 F.2d 1567, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 70, 479 U.S. 815, 93 L.Ed.2d 27. Courts 490

4221. Waiver, jurisdiction generally

County waived any defense of lack of personal jurisdiction, in employee's sex discrimination action against county prosecutor in which judgment was entered against county, but county was not named as defendant; county was pervasively involved in litigation, and county counsel openly acknowledged that it was representing county's interests, which were indistinguishable from those of prosecutor's office. Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Federal Courts 95

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4222. Takings, jurisdiction generally

Federal court cannot entertain a takings claim in an action under § 1983 unless or until the complaining landowner has been denied an adequate postdeprivation remedy. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., U.S.Cal.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1624, 526 U.S. 687, 143 L.Ed.2d 882. Civil Rights 1310

4223. Political questions, jurisdiction generally

Elementary school student's § 1983 claim against New Jersey Department of Education and Commissioner of Education, alleging that defendants aided in local education officials' violation of student's First Amendment rights by failing to either exercise supervisory powers or implement policy to allow for expression of religious beliefs in classroom, was not nonjusticiable political question; claim for relief could be construed as demand for defendants to cease their wrongful behavior and adhere to constitutional principles, rather than simple request to adopt basic policies. C.H. v. Oliva, D.N.J.1997, 990 F.Supp. 341, affirmed 166 F.3d 1204, rehearing granted, opinion withdrawn, on rehearing 195 F.3d 167, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 197 F.3d 63, on rehearing 226 F.3d 198, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 2519, 533 U.S. 915, 150 L.Ed.2d 692. Constitutional Law 68(1)

4224. Supplemental jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

When plaintiff pleads violations of United States Constitution, over which district court has jurisdiction under §§ 1983, district court has supplemental jurisdiction to address additional state law claims related to the federal claims. Voyticky v. Village of Timberlake, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 412 F.3d 669. Federal Courts 15

District court could exercise supplemental jurisdiction over foster child's state law tort claims against his foster father in child's §§ 1983 action against various individuals and entities responsible for his foster placement, where the §§ 1983 claims arose out of the same incident as the tort claims. Harris ex rel. Litz v. Lehigh County Office of Children & Youth Services, E.D.Pa.2005, 418 F.Supp.2d 643. Federal Courts 15

Court did not have original or supplemental jurisdiction over former county employee's Article 78 claim under New York law challenging validity of his dismissal, as Article 78 proceeding was novel and special creation of New York state law, which vested exclusive jurisdiction in New York Supreme Court, and claim did not go to essence of employee's federal §§ 1983 claims so as to potentially be within court's residual jurisdictional authority under All Writs Act. Beckwith v. Erie County Water Authority, W.D.N.Y.2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 214. Federal Courts 14.1

District Court had supplemental jurisdiction over former public employee's state law breach of contract claim, alleging that defendants' retaliatory conduct breached parties' settlement agreement in earlier employment discrimination action, where it had original jurisdiction over employee's claims under §§§§ 1983 and 1985, and breach of contract claim was related to claims under §§§§ 1983 and 1985. Rivera v. State Ins. Fund Corp., D.Puerto Rico 2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 57. Federal Courts 18

Federal district court would decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over dog owner's state-law claims against county prosecuting attorney, county sheriff, and county deputy sheriff for assault and battery, witness intimidation, and failure to perform official duties, relating to failure to investigate alleged theft of plaintiff's dog by deputy sheriff's cousin and prosecuting attorney's alleged assault of plaintiff by shoving her in the back repeatedly when ordering her out of his office, where district court dismissed plaintiff's federal civil rights claims. Curry v. Weiford, N.D.W.Va.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 704, appeal dismissed 133 Fed.Appx. 50, 2005 WL 1220816. Federal Courts 18

District court would exercise supplemental jurisdiction over §§ 1983 plaintiffs' state law claim for negligence, even after §§ 1983 claims were dismissed on city's motion for summary judgment, where substantial judicial resources had been committed to the dispute and remanding the matter to state court would have caused a duplication of efforts. Johnson v. City of Seattle, W.D.Wash.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 1091. Removal Of Cases 101.1

District Court would, in exercise of its discretion, refuse to maintain supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims asserted by employee of Office of Legislative Auditor challenging office policy in §§ 1983 action; unlike with respect to §§ 1983 claims, Office could be sued directly on state law claims and held liable on state law claims on basis of respondeat superior, facts and legal principles on which state law claims were based were substantially different than federal claims, and there was definite possibility of juror confusion if trial of both state and federal claims were tried at same time. Levy v. Office of Legislative Auditor, M.D.La.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 729. Federal Courts 15

District court would not exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims of personal representative and surviving spouse of county jail inmate, who died after suicide attempt while in custody at the jail, against county, sheriff, and jail administrator, after grant of summary judgment for defendants on §§ 1983 claims for deliberate indifference to the inmate's known risk of suicide and deliberately indifferent failure to train. Harvey v. County of Ward, D.N.D.2005, 352 F.Supp.2d 1003. Federal Courts 18

Irrespective of whether employer sufficiently alleged supplemental jurisdiction in removal notice as to employee's state law claims, district court would exercise supplemental jurisdiction over them, given that federal subject matter jurisdiction existed on basis of employee's federal law claims; employee subjected himself to potential removal of action by asserting §§ 1983 claims alleging that employer, a state agency, violated his right to due process, both federal and state law claims arose out of common nucleus of operative fact regarding employee's loss of employment, and relationship between federal and state law claims permitted finding that entire action compromised but one constitutional case. McNerny v. Nebraska Public Power Dist., D.Neb.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 1109. Federal Courts 15

Dismissal of pro se arrestee's federal claims for malicious prosecution against county warranted refusal to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over arrestee's state-law claims against county for malicious prosecution; however, court's jurisdiction over arrestee's § 1983 claims against city for false arrest and unlawful imprisonment supported court's exercise of supplemental jurisdiction over state-law claim against city for malicious prosecution. Anderson v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 540. Federal Courts 18

Upon dismissing without prejudice county corrections officer's federal civil rights claims for failure to arbitrate claims under collective bargaining agreement (CBA), District Court would retain supplemental jurisdiction over officer's Pennsylvania Human Relations Act (PHRA) claims, where officer could file amended complaint reasserting civil rights claims after completion of arbitration proceedings if warranted. Fralin v. County of Bucks, E.D.Pa.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 609. Federal Courts 18

District Court would decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over outrage claim brought by administratrix of estate of former state employee, once administratrix's § 1983 claim and claims under the Kentucky Constitution and Kentucky Civil Rights Act (KCRA) were dismissed on employer's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Levinson v. Mucker, W.D.Ky.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 848. Federal Courts 18

District court would decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over registered voters' state law claims for violations of New York and city election law, once voters' civil rights claims and dilution claim under the Voting Rights Act were dismissed on city officials' motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim and for summary judgment. Baines v. Masiello, W.D.N.Y.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 376. Federal Courts 18

District court would decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over arrestee's state law claims for negligence, intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and assault and battery, once arrestee's § 1983 claims were dismissed on county's motion for summary judgment. Harrell v. Purcell,

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

M.D.N.C.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 526. Federal Courts 18

Inmate's claim of conversion was not sufficiently related to his claims under § 1983 to fall within court's supplemental jurisdiction; claim involved prison official not implicated by any of inmate's remaining § 1983 claims, and facts surrounding alleged conversion had nothing to do with substance of § 1983 claim, which related to his placement in general prison population, as opposed to protective custody. Bullock v. Barham, N.D.Ill.1997, 957 F.Supp. 154. Federal Courts 15

District court's exercise of supplemental jurisdiction over claims by patient in state hospital that psychiatrist and psychologist refused to permit patient to review his mental health records in violation of California law was not warranted following dismissal of patient's claims under § 1983 that such refusal violated patient's rights under federal constitution and laws. Collins v. Khoury, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 1941150, Unreported. Federal Courts 18

4225. Bankruptcy court, jurisdiction generally

Bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to dismiss debtors' § 1983 takings claim, which was based on actions by city, as creditor, in leasing property to third parties after property had been surrendered by debtors, even though debtors' state claims had been previously dismissed without prejudice and state court had not ruled whether debtors had been deprived of adequate compensation; there could have been no cognizable taking without just compensation since debtors had no valid right to possess or develop the property because court had previously ruled, and it had been sustained on appeal, that lease was rejected and surrender was valid. In re George, C.A.9 2003, 322 F.3d 586 . Bankruptcy 2162

4226. Tribal courts, jurisdiction generally

Tribal court does not have authority to entertain federal civil rights claims under § 1983. Nevada v. Hicks, U.S.2001, 121 S.Ct. 2304, 533 U.S. 353, 150 L.Ed.2d 398. Indians 32(7)

4227. Pendent jurisdiction, jurisdiction generally

The Court of Appeals would not exercise pendent jurisdiction over protesters' cross-appeal claims, in police officers' interlocutory appeal, challenging the denial of their motion for summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds, in protesters' §§ 1983 First Amendment and excessive force claims, arising out of officers' conduct in dispersing protesters' demonstration; the cross-appeal claims challenged the dismissal of protesters' First Amendment conspiracy, equal protection, false arrest, and imprisonment claims, the grants of summary judgment to county sheriff and state police superintendent, and the sua sponte rulings dismissing all claims against county, sheriff's department, and two police officers, each of which involved issues entirely separate and distinct from the qualified immunity analysis at issue in the interlocutory appeal. Jones v. Parmley, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 46. Federal Courts 770

4251. Abstention generally

Actions brought under this section are not exempt from the abstention doctrine. Anonymous J. v. Bar Ass'n of Erie County, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 515 F.2d 435, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 71, 423 U.S. 840, 46 L.Ed.2d 60. Federal Courts 48

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where fundamental civil rights are at issue, federal court should hesitate to abstain. Jones v. Metzger, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 456 F.2d 854, 62 O.O.2d 232. Federal Courts 48

Existence of a remedy under this section governing deprivation of civil rights does not require that federal courts entertain all suits in which unconstitutional deprivations are asserted. Freeman v. Flake, C.A.10 (Utah) 1971, 448 F.2d 258, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1292, 405 U.S. 1032, 31 L.Ed.2d 489. Federal Courts 220

Younger abstention doctrine warranted district court's abstention from fraud, § 1983 and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) claims brought by former husband against former wife and against receiver appointed, pursuant to divorce proceeding, to sell couple's property and divide proceeds; claims were brought primarily to attack receiver's authority to act as receiver, which was within state's important interest in resolution of divorce proceedings, receiver had not yet completed his duties, and former husband could have asserted federal civil rights claims in state court. Huszar v. Zeleny, E.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 98. Federal Courts 48

District of Columbia qualifies as state for purposes of Younger equitable restraint doctrine. Ford v. Tait, D.D.C.2001, 163 F.Supp.2d 57. Federal Courts 41

Younger doctrine did not provide basis for federal district court's abstention from § 1983 action brought by attorneys in connection with state disciplinary proceedings against them, where attorneys were not requesting that district court enjoin those proceedings. Thaler v. Casella, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 691. Federal Courts 48

The Younger doctrine, which states that federal district court must abstain from exercising jurisdiction in suit when state criminal proceeding is pending against plaintiff at same time, represents independent barrier to § 1983 suits that seek injunctive and declaratory relief. Tilton v. Smith, N.D.Tex.1993, 827 F.Supp. 404. Federal Courts 51; Federal Courts 54

Principles of federal-state relationships, abstention and comity must be given full deference, but it does not follow that, if there is federal jurisdiction and if defendants and others under their control are violating plaintiff's constitutional or other federal rights, court should not or would not act. Hickey v. District of Columbia Court of Appeals, D.C.D.C.1978, 457 F.Supp. 584. Federal Courts 42

"Abstention doctrine" provides that federal court should refrain from exercising its jurisdiction in order to avoid needless conflict with administration by a state of its own affairs. Silvestri v. Barbieri, W.D.Pa.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1200. Federal Courts 41

An exception to the abstention doctrine has not been established in a civil rights case. Bell v. Bell, W.D.Wash.1976, 411 F.Supp. 716. Federal Courts 48

There is no per se exception to the abstention doctrine for civil rights cases. Sea Ranch Ass'n v. California Coastal Zone Conservation Commission, D.C.Cal.1975, 396 F.Supp. 533, remanded on other grounds 537 F.2d 1058, on remand 527 F.Supp. 390. Federal Courts 48

Doctrine of abstention may be appropriate in civil rights actions. Surowitz v. New York City Emp. Retirement System, S.D.N.Y.1974, 376 F.Supp. 369. Federal Courts 48

4252. Disfavor of abstention

Use of abstention doctrine in cases involving civil rights is not to be encouraged. Devlin v. Sosbe, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1972, 465 F.2d 169. Federal Courts 48

Although abstention doctrine has not been entirely abnegated and instances may arise in which it is appropriate,

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

cases involving vital questions of civil rights are the least likely candidates for abstention. Wright v. McMann, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1967, 387 F.2d 519, on remand 321 F.Supp. 127. See, also, Canton v. Spokane School Dist. No. 81, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1974, 498 F.2d 840; Moreno v. Henckel, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1970, 431 F.2d 1299. Federal Courts 48

Abstention is particularly not favored in civil rights actions. Kohler v. Hirst, E.D.Va.1978, 460 F.Supp. 412. Federal Courts 48

Abstention is not generally favored in actions brought under this section. Bergman v. Stein, S.D.N.Y.1975, 404 F.Supp. 287. Federal Courts 48

Although abstention by federal courts is not foreclosed in civil rights cases, it is disfavored in such cases. Wall v. American Optometric Ass'n, Inc., N.D.Ga.1974, 379 F.Supp. 175, affirmed 95 S.Ct. 166, 419 U.S. 888, 42 L.Ed.2d 134, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 648, 419 U.S. 1061, 42 L.Ed.2d 659. Federal Courts 48

Because of delay caused by abstention doctrine, it is particularly disfavored in U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 or civil rights cases. Montalvo v. Colon, D.C.Puerto Rico 1974, 377 F.Supp. 1332. Federal Courts 53

Power of a federal court to abstain is narrowly circumscribed in actions brought under this section. Stern v. Massachusetts Indem. & Life Ins. Co., E.D.Pa.1973, 365 F.Supp. 433. Federal Courts 48

4253. Discretion of court, abstention

While exercise of abstention is discretionary, federal courts have a special duty to exercise jurisdiction in civil rights cases. Cochran v. Ensweiler, N.D.Ind.1974, 372 F.Supp. 471. Federal Courts 48

Invocation of doctrine of abstention rests within district court's discretionary exercise of its equitable powers. (Per Kerr, J., with one Judge concurring in result.) Alcala v. Wyoming State Bd. of Barber Examiners, D.C.Wyo.1973, 365 F.Supp. 560. Federal Courts 41

If other prerequisites are met, mere fact that a claim is brought under this section should not prevent application of abstention doctrine which gives federal district court the discretion to decline or postpone exercise of its jurisdiction in deference to a state court resolution of underlying issues of state law. Bascom v. Perry, N.D.Iowa 1973, 357 F.Supp. 431. Federal Courts 48

4254. Considerations governing, abstention--Generally

In determining whether federal court should abstain from civil rights suits, the following factors should be considered: the effect abstention will have on the rights to be protected; whether there are available state remedies; whether the challenged state law is unclear; whether the challenged state law is fairly susceptible of an interpretation that would avoid any federal constitutional question; and whether abstention will avoid unnecessary federal interference in state operations. George v. Parratt, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1979, 602 F.2d 818. Federal Courts 48

In general, three essential conditions for invocation of doctrine of abstention are that state statute be unclear or issue of state law uncertain, that resolution of federal issue depend upon interpretation to be given state law, and that state law be susceptible of interpretation that would avoid or modify federal constitutional issue. McRedmond v. Wilson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 533 F.2d 757. Federal Courts 46

Abdication of obligation to decide cases in civil rights action can be justified under judicial abstention doctrine only in exceptional circumstances where order to parties to repair to state court would clearly serve an important countervailing interest. Atchison v. Nelson, D.C.Wyo.1978, 460 F.Supp. 1102. Federal Courts 392

4255. ---- Availability of state remedy, considerations governing, abstention

Even if federal district court was required to abstain from deciding claims for money damages and attorney fees arising from allegedly illegal search of business by state officials, district court had no discretion to dismiss rather than to stay claims for monetary relief that could not be redressed in related state proceeding; sizeable portion of relief sought in federal complaint was intended to compensate for injuries allegedly sustained in violation of federal constitutional rights, and state criminal proceeding could provide only equitable relief, thereby requiring separate state action for damages. Deakins v. Monaghan, U.S.N.J.1988, 108 S.Ct. 523, 484 U.S. 193, 98 L.Ed.2d 529. Federal Courts 65

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred federal court of appeals from considering physician's claim that state's revocation of his medical license violated ADA, even though physician was not permitted to assert ADA claim in state court proceedings challenging revocation on the basis that they were not properly preserved for appeal, where physician sought the relief of judicial reinstatement of his medical license, which would require review of the state court decision affirming license revocation. Guttman v. Khalsa, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 401 F.3d 1170, vacated 126 S.Ct. 321, 163 L.Ed.2d 29, on remand 446 F.3d 1027. Courts 509

Indications of bias on part of territorial environmental agency that had proposed $76 million fine against owner of gasoline station's underground storage tanks were insufficient to trigger bias exception to Younger abstention doctrine, precluding district court from entertaining owner's motion to enjoin agency's ongoing hearings concerning fine, which owner had filed as part of §§1983 due process action against agency officials; territorial law did not bar owner from seeking interlocutory review of its due process claim in territorial courts, and thus owner fell short of irreparable-harm criterion for Younger bias exception. Esso Standard Oil Co. v. Cotto, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 389 F.3d 212. Federal Courts 48; Federal Courts 54

Younger abstention principles apply in a § 1983 action for damages in which the federal plaintiff brings a constitutional challenge to a state proceeding when that proceeding is ongoing, the state proceeding is of a judicial nature, implicating important state interests, and the federal plaintiff is not barred from litigating his federal constitutional issues in that proceeding. Gilbertson v. Albright, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 381 F.3d 965, on remand 2005 WL 2044006. Federal Courts 48

Land surveyor's § 1983 claims, that members of Oregon's State Board of Examiners for Engineering and Land Surveying violated his speech, due process, and equal protection rights in revoking his surveying license, could be litigated in state proceedings brought by surveyor, as required for Younger abstention, where state appellate courts had authority to develop full factual record, and, although state procedures were not adequate for purpose of seeking monetary relief, that obstacle would be obviated by federal court's staying, rather than dismissing, action. Gilbertson v. Albright, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 381 F.3d 965, on remand 2005 WL 2044006. Federal Courts 55; Federal Courts 65

Despite landowner's lack of good faith in fully advocating its takings, equal protection, and due process claims in state court, following Burford abstention in § 1983 action arising out of town's failure to extend sewer lines to landowner's property as required by annexation order, federal court jurisdiction existed following resulting state proceedings, in which landowner was determined not to have state law damages remedy and state court expressly refused to entertain landowner's federal claims as matter of comity, making continued abstention inappropriate. Front Royal and Warren County Indus. Park Corp. v. Town of Front Royal, Va., C.A.4 (Va.) 1998, 135 F.3d 275. Federal Courts 47.1; Federal Courts 48

District of Columbia's Office of Employee Appeals (OEA) proceedings, together with availability of judicial review in District of Columbia's courts, did not present adequate forum in which former government employee could fully and fairly pursue his § 1983 claim that his discharge violated his constitutional and statutory rights, and therefore Younger doctrine of equitable restraint did not require dismissal of former government employee's federal action, even assuming District of Columbia was state for purposes of Younger doctrine of equitable restraint, as former government employee sought millions of dollars in compensatory and punitive damages on his § 1983 claims, and OEA and District of Columbia's courts were authorized by statute to grant only reinstatement with back pay and some associated benefits, but not punitive and compensatory damages. Bridges v. Kelly, C.A.D.C.1996, 84 F.3d 470, 318 U.S.App.D.C. 30. Federal Courts 48

Persons challenging procedure for resolving parking ticket disputes in city had adequate remedy in state court forums to which they could have appealed from administrative officer's decision, so that federal court could abstain from considering the constitutional challenges. O'Neill v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 32 F.3d 785, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1355, 514 U.S. 1015, 131 L.Ed.2d 213. Federal Courts 47.1

Arkansas Motor Vehicle Commission was incompetent to decide issues before it, with regard to the propriety of its resolution of dispute between motorcycle company and dealer, based upon bias of commissioner, and thus federal district court could not abstain from motorcycle company's action to enjoin enforcement of commission's decision on Younger grounds, where commissioner had pecuniary interest, as dealer of competing motorcycles, in eradicating motorcycle company from state, and had prejudged the issues. Yamaha Motor Corp., U.S.A. v. Riney, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 21 F.3d 793, rehearing denied. Federal Courts 54

Pending state proceedings would provide adequate forum for litigating newspaper's First Amendment challenge to restrictive order entered by state court regarding extrajudicial statements by trial participants prior to commencement of sensational criminal trial, for purposes of Younger abstention analysis, though newspaper was not afforded expedited review by state appellate court and did not receive all relief desired, where expedited review procedure was inapplicable to order that did not exclude press or public from trial, newspaper did not ask for expedited review, newspaper's petition for review of restrictive order was pending before state appellate court at time newspaper filed its federal action, state appellate court ruled on restrictive order, and newspaper's motion for rehearing was pending when it moved for reconsideration in federal district court. The News-Journal Corp. v. Foxman, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 939 F.2d 1499. Federal Courts 53

Even if all three special circumstances warranting Pullman abstention were present, advantages of abstaining were significantly outweighed by disadvantages of abstaining in prisoner's civil rights action, which asserted that his constitutional rights were violated due to continued confinement in "capital sentence unit" after his death sentence was vacated by New Jersey Supreme Court; prisoner, who was again sentenced to death, might not be alive by the time that case would wind through state court system and return to federal district court, and availability of state forum to adjudicate issue of whether prison officials violated New Jersey statute was uncertain, as state court might conclude that order relating to construction of confinement statute might be akin to issuing advisory opinion. (Per Cowen, Circuit Judge, with one Circuit Judge concurring separately.) Biegenwald v. Fauver, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1989, 882 F.2d 748. Federal Courts 50

State court decided essential elements of discharged teacher's First Amendment claim arising from his discharge in retaliation for his alleged accusations against superintendent and other school personnel when it concluded that school board did not arbitrarily or capriciously discharge teacher, and teacher had fair opportunity to litigate claim in state court; therefore, Arkansas doctrine of claim preclusion foreclosed teachers's claim in civil rights action for violation of First Amendment rights. Gahr v. Trammel, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 796 F.2d 1063. Federal Courts 420; Judgment 828.17(1)

Abstention was appropriate in § 1983 suit seeking declaratory relief and money damages against county, attorney and county attorneys office and legal assistant therein based on alleged denial of plaintiff's Sixth Amendment right to counsel because of delay in appointing counsel due to difficulties in extraditing plaintiff from sister state; plaintiff could adequately litigate the constitutional claim in ongoing state criminal proceedings. Mann v. Jett, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1986, 781 F.2d 1448, on remand 628 F.Supp. 974. Federal Courts 48

Federal district court lacked jurisdiction over § 1983 action claiming that municipal landlord violated constitutional rights of tenants by offering building to neighborhood entrepreneur rather than making arrangement for management by tenants; constitutional claims could and should have been raised in Article 78 proceeding. Reyes v. Erickson, S.D.N.Y.2003, 238 F.Supp.2d 632. Civil Rights 1318

Availability of adequate post-deprivation remedies under state law for being suspended from public school, as alleged improper deprivation of property, did not foreclose high school students' due process civil rights claim against county school district and school officials, since officials acted pursuant to established procedure. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999. Schools 177

Even if landowners had a protectable property interest in obtaining plat approval for their commercial plaza, landowners had an adequate post-deprivation remedy under state law, defeating claim of denial of due process against planning commission; landowners obtained a speedy reversal of the planning commission's decision by certiorari review by county circuit court, as provided for under state law. Pennington v. Teufel, N.D.W.Va.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 715, affirmed 169 Fed.Appx. 161, 2006 WL 460921. Zoning And Planning 565

District court would not invoke Younger abstention to dismiss §§ 1983 action bought by licensed pharmacist and wholesaler of pharmaceuticals against California State Board of Pharmacy and its executive director, who sought to revoke or suspend pharmacist's pharmaceutical license and wholesaler's permit for exporting pharmaceuticals to foreign countries; Board's enforcement of matters in administrative proceeding implicated important state interests, and pharmacist and wholesaler would not have adequate opportunity to litigate alleged dormant commerce clause violation, as their license and permit were subject to revocation or suspension before they had opportunity to have constitutional claim considered. Adibi v. California State Bd. of Pharmacy, N.D.Cal.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 999. Federal Courts 48

Because prisoner could pursue claim in a state court action, there was no cognizable due process claim under §§ 1983 for loss of personal property when he was transferred to a higher security level in the prison. Nicholson v. Carroll, D.Del.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 429. Civil Rights 1319

Availability of malicious prosecution claim under state law barred federal civil rights claim based on alleged false arrest in violation of the Fourth Amendment; arrest occurred after arrestee was indicted by grand jury and arrest warrant was issued by a judge, so that claim sounded in malicious prosecution, rather than false arrest. Mutual Medical Plans, Inc. v. County of Peoria, C.D.Ill.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 1067. Civil Rights 1319

Employee's appeal of demotion before state Personnel Commission was not parallel to action he brought under §§ 1983 against Secretary of Wisconsin Department of Revenue in which he alleged that demotion from chief legal counsel to attorney without pre-deprivation hearing violated his right to procedural due process, so as to warrant abstention under Colorado River doctrine; post-deprivation hearing before Commission was not determinative of issue pending in §§ 1983 action as to whether employee should have received pre-deprivation hearing, and Commission proceedings did not provide money damages to employee in event he was successful. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2003, 304 F.Supp.2d 1100. Federal Courts 58

Younger abstention was not appropriate in case seeking to restrain enforcement of orders revoking insurance agents' and broker's licenses without pre-deprivation notice and hearing, as investigation by office of Insurance Commissioner had not been judicial in nature and licensees did not have opportunity to raise constitutional challenge before having their licenses revoked; investigation had concluded by time licensees sought judicial relief, and licensees sought protection of their rights while they pursued state remedies. Guillemard Gionorio v. Contreras Gomez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 122, appeal dismissed 161 Fed.Appx. 24, 2005 WL 3382638. Federal Courts 55

Justice would provide federal plaintiffs with an adequate opportunity to raise their constitutional challenge based on the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution, as would support application of Younger abstention doctrine in parties' civil rights action against Secretary, since Puerto Rico was subject to constraints of the Commerce Clause, and Secretary clearly represented to District Court that she did not intend to contest applicability of the Commerce Clause to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in her state lawsuit. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 200. Federal Courts 48

Attorney would have adequate opportunity to raise his § 1983 claims arising out attorney disciplinary proceeding with District of Columbia Court of Appeals, warranting equitable restraint under Younger doctrine; there was no barrier to District of Columbia Court of Appeals hearing attorney's constitutional claims and attorney was primarily seeking equitable relief under federal law, rather than damages. Ford v. Tait, D.D.C.2001, 163 F.Supp.2d 57. Federal Courts 48; Federal Courts 55

Dog owner's § 1983 claim alleging that city deprived him of right to judicial review of hearing officer's decision ordering euthanasia of dog by euthanizing dog before owner received notice of decision, and seeking monetary damages therefor, was not precluded by Younger abstention principles; owner likely could not have recovered money damages in state proceeding. Van Patten v. City of Binghamton, N.D.N.Y.2001, 137 F.Supp.2d 98. Federal Courts 56

State court proceedings held under New Jersey sex offender registration and notification statute ("Megan's Law") did not provide adequate opportunity for persons subject to statute's requirements to raise federal constitutional claims, and thus, Younger abstention doctrine did not prevent federal court from considering challenge to statute in § 1983 action; New Jersey Supreme Court's determination that statute was constitutional bound lower courts, and tier determination hearings held under statute were summary in nature and did not provide adequate forum to raise constitutional challenges. Alan A. v. Verniero, D.N.J.1997, 970 F.Supp. 1153, vacated 135 F.3d 763. Federal Courts 50

Hawai'i provided plain, adequate, and complete state remedies by which to challenge constitutionality of state excise tax, thus barring taxpayer's § 1983 claim as matter of comity, where taxpayer could either pay tax and appeal to district court of review or directly to Tax Appeal Court, taxpayer could alternatively pay tax under protest and then commence action in Tax Appeal Court within 30 days, taxpayer could raise any constitutional objections in the Tax Appeal Court, and if still aggrieved, taxpayer could appeal to the Hawaiian Supreme Court. Moore v. Kamikawa, D.Hawai'i 1995, 940 F.Supp. 260, affirmed 82 F.3d 423. Civil Rights 1321

Abstention was inappropriate in civil rights action against governor of Pennsylvania and Secretary of Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare on behalf of children in custody of Philadelphia Department of Human Services; claims asserted were beyond scope and jurisdiction of family court case review proceedings. Baby Neal v. Casey, E.D.Pa.1993, 821 F.Supp. 320, vacated in part, remanded 43 F.3d 48, reconsideration denied 1995 WL 728589. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention doctrine did not apply to childrens' claim that their constitutional rights were infringed by city foster care officials' refusal to allow them to associate and visit with one another; there was no allegation that claim could have been raised in pending family court proceeding, and claim was not dependent on any determination of claims involving relationship between mother and her children. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Federal Courts 48

Ongoing state administrative proceedings, in which town police officer was contesting the disciplinary charges imposed by town when it terminated his employment, did not afford the police officer with an adequate opportunity to raise his federal claims against town and its employees, as element for federal court's Younger abstention in police officer's §§ 1983 action alleging town employees manipulated civil service procedures to deprive him of his job without due process. Prevost v. Township of Hazlet, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 159 Fed.Appx. 396, 2005 WL

3449072, Unreported. Federal Courts 58

Under New York law, even if state failed to give property owner constitutionally adequate notice of foreclosure sale, an adequate state remedy existed, and thus principle of comity barred property owner's action under §§ 1983; because owner claimed that he did not receive adequate notice of the sale, the statute of limitations on owner's action would not have begun to run and owner could have maintained an action under New York law. MacNaughton v. Warren County, New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 425, 2005 WL 176532, Unreported. Civil Rights 1318

Civil rights defendants, including Illinois prison officials who allegedly violated inmate's constitutional rights by failing to ship over 2,800 pounds of property to a California prison after prisoner was transferred from Illinois to California prison, failed to prove that inmate did not exhaust his available administrative remedies in Illinois, as required by Prison Litigation Reform Act, where inmate had consistently maintained that he had no idea that his boxes would not be shipped until after he arrived in California from Illinois, and once in California, it was doubtful that he could avail himself of Illinois' administrative remedies. Walker v. Page, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 896, 2003 WL 1120232, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Former prisoner who alleged that he was wrongly charged for meals while he was housed at county jail had an adequate post-deprivation remedy in state court, and thus could not seek relief under § 1983. Butler v. Smith, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 208 F.3d 217, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

4256. ---- Avoidance of federal issue, considerations governing, abstention

Code Supp.1958, §§ 18-349.9 to 18-349.24, concerning rendering of financial assistance in litigation, activities relating to passage of racial legislation, advocacy of racial integration or segregation and raising and expenditure of funds in connection with racial litigation and with stirring up litigation, left reasonable room for construction for Virginia courts which might avoid in whole or in part necessity for federal constitutional adjudication or at least materially change nature of problem, and federal district court should have abstained from deciding merits of issues tendered to it in an action brought against Attorney General of Virginia and other officials for declaratory and injunctive relief with respect to such statutes so as to afford Virginia courts a reasonable opportunity to construe statutes in the first instance. Harrison v. National Ass'n for the Advancement of Colored People, U.S.Va.1959, 79 S.Ct. 1025, 360 U.S. 167, 3 L.Ed.2d 1152. Federal Courts 48

District court should have abstained from considering constitutional challenges to conditions of confinement at juvenile facility, where challenged conditions arguably violated West's Ann.Cal. Welfare S. Inst. Code, §§ 202 and 851, where those sections had not yet been interpreted with respect to claims made in the case, and where review by California courts of conditions under statutory standards could well have obviated need for constitutional adjudication. Manney v. Cabell, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1980, 654 F.2d 1280, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1630, 455 U.S. 1000, 71 L.Ed.2d 866. Federal Courts 43

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in declining to abstain in civil rights action seeking declaratory judgment that state civil commitment procedures violated due process rights, despite contention that state courts might find all or a part of the commitment scheme violative of the state constitution, where there appeared to be neither ambiguity in the challenged statutory provisions nor doubt about how they operated in practice, and there was no ongoing state proceeding challenging the statutes. Chancery Clerk of Chickasaw County, Miss. v. Wallace, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1981, 646 F.2d 151. Federal Courts 48

In action by employer claiming that New York State Labor Department's deregistration of employer's state apprenticeship training program violated its rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, abstention was not justified where all relevant state proceedings had terminated without interpretation of pertinent state statutes in a way that might render unnecessary the resolution of the constitutional issues raised by employer. Corp. v. Ross, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 644 F.2d 44. Federal Courts 43

District court properly abstained from deciding constitutional issue raised by applicant for medicaid benefits in civil rights action challenging denial of medicaid benefits for services rendered by Christian Science practitioner and asserting unconstitutionality of New York medicaid statute if so construed to deny coverage, where there was pending in New York state court a proceeding by applicant challenging denial of medicaid benefits for Christian Science practitioner care, interpretation of state law as to coverage was unclear and decision of state court might result in an avoidance of federal constitutional issue. Winters v. Lavine, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 574 F.2d 46. Federal Courts 47.1

Assuming that timely and adequate state-court review was available, pursuant to Burford abstention doctrine, district court would not decline to consider §§ 1983 action bought by licensed pharmacist and wholesaler of pharmaceuticals against California State Board of Pharmacy and its executive director, which sought declaratory and injunctive relief after Board sought to revoke or suspend pharmacist's pharmaceutical license and wholesaler's permit for exporting pharmaceuticals to foreign countries; alleged dormant commerce clause violation was easily separable from complicated state law issues and presented issue over which state courts did not have special competence. Adibi v. California State Bd. of Pharmacy, N.D.Cal.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 999. Federal Courts 54

Temporary restraining order (TRO) hearing in District Court was a contested matter, and together with District Court's grant of requested TRO, was a "proceeding of substance on the merits" that took place before defendant filed her state court action, and thus Younger abstention doctrine did not require federal abstention, where it had to consider merits of federal case in ruling on elements of test for TRO, especially plaintiffs' likelihood of success on the merits of their claim. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 200. Federal Courts 54

Federal district court should abstain from deciding eating clubs' claim that State Division of Civil Rights' exercise of jurisdiction over female university student's claim that eating clubs violated state law against discrimination by admitting only male students violated clubs' civil rights under Federal Constitution; it was unclear whether eating clubs were "distinctly private" institutions under state law so that state law against discrimination would apply, and determination that state discrimination law did not apply to eating clubs would obviate need to adjudicate federal constitutional issues. Tiger Inn v. Edwards, D.N.J.1986, 636 F.Supp. 787. Federal Courts 48

4257. ---- Bad faith, considerations governing, abstention

Exception to rule of abstention where district court finds that state court proceeding is motivated by desire to harass or is conducted in bad faith could not be utilized against state court justices who held plaintiffs in contempt for disobeying subpoenas to appear in supplemental proceedings brought by judgment debtors in attempt to collect judgments where there were neither allegations, proof, nor findings that justices were enforcing the contempt procedures in bad faith or motivated by a desire to harass. Juidice v. Vail, U.S.N.Y.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1211, 430 U.S. 327, 51 L.Ed.2d 376. Courts 508(3)

District court's determination that bad faith exception to Younger doctrine applied, in action brought by school district against teacher to enforce statutory prohibition of electioneering within 100 feet of polling place during school board election, was not clearly erroneous, even though bad faith exception has been deemed to be narrow, where district court found past history of conflict with teacher, and that action had imposed chilling effect on teacher's First Amendment rights. Cullen v. Fliegner, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 18 F.3d 96, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 480, 513 U.S. 985, 130 L.Ed.2d 393. Federal Courts 62; Federal Courts 855.1

Bad-faith exception to Younger abstention doctrine did not apply to allow federal court to consider driver's civil rights claims for injunctive and declaratory relief against city and municipal judge during pendency of state criminal proceedings against driver for violating city's overtime parking ordinance, even though driver had received 36 parking tickets for violation of challenged ordinance, absent showing that citations resulted from bad faith of city officials, as opposed to driver's own parking habits. Ballard v. Wilson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 856 F.2d 1568, rehearing denied 861 F.2d 1279. Federal Courts 56

Claim of civil rights plaintiffs, who were employees of adult bookstores and subject of multiple state prosecutions for possession with intent to disseminate obscenity, disseminating obscenity, and violating restrictions on adult establishments, of bad-faith enforcement of state obscenity statutes was not sufficient to invoke bad-faith exception to Younger abstention doctrine, where civil rights plaintiffs had not established that prosecutions had been brought without reasonable expectation of obtaining valid convictions. Suggs v. Brannon, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1986, 804 F.2d 274 . Federal Courts 48

Because of governmental interest of State of Washington in enforcing its Consumer Protection Act, RCWA 19.86.010 et seq., federal abstention was required and district court could not intervene to halt state proceedings in absence of finding that state's action in state court was brought in bad faith or for purpose of harassment or that challenged state statute was flagrantly and patently violative of express constitutional prohibitions in every clause, sentence and paragraph and in whatever manner and against whomever an effort might be made to apply it. Williams v. State of Wash., C.A.9 (Wash.) 1977, 554 F.2d 369. Courts 508(2.1)

Arrestee failed to show that his political affiliation was substantial or motivating factor for his prosecution for bribery in violation of Puerto Rico law, or even that Puerto Rico officials involved in his commonwealth criminal prosecution knew his political affiliation, and, thus, alleged political motivation was insufficient to show bad faith and harassing prosecution necessary to invoke exception to Younger abstention doctrine, as would allow District Court to preliminarily enjoin, in civil rights suit under §§ 1983, criminal proceeding in Puerto Rico court against arrestee. Olson v. Fajardo-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 32. Federal Courts 54

Arrestee failed to show in lawsuit under § 1983 that his ongoing prosecution by government of Puerto Rico was motivated by bad faith, and, consequently, exception to Younger abstention doctrine did not apply; although prosecution of arrestee may have been motivated by desire to retaliate against prominent supporters of particular political party, arrestee had not been subjected to multiple charges or prosecutions, and arrestee had opportunity to bring his allegations of selective prosecution to jury as affirmative defense to claim for which he was charged at Puerto Rico court proceeding. Rivera-Schatz v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 405. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention applied and precluded district court from presiding over civil rights action presenting challenges to state court's resolution of property issues in pending marriage dissolution proceedings, absent showing that opportunity to raise constitutional claims in dissolution action would be inadequate or of any bad faith, harassment, or other extraordinary circumstance that would make Younger abstention inappropriate. Steffens v. Steffens, D.Colo.1997, 955 F.Supp. 101. Federal Courts 48; Federal Courts 48

Exception to application of Younger abstention for bad faith initiation of state proceeding applied in liquor license applicants' § 1983 action against municipality for allegedly violating their constitution rights when municipality denied their liquor license applications, where applicants alleged that state municipality denied applications not for purpose of fairly and uniformly enforcing municipal liquor ordinance, but for sole purpose of exacting retaliation against applicants for successfully challenging municipality in prior legal proceeding. Esmail v. Macrane, N.D.Ill.1994, 862 F.Supp. 217, reversed 53 F.3d 176. Federal Courts 48

Video rental store operators established prima facie case of harassment by county and city prosecutors to cause operators to cease sale and distribution of sexually explicit videotapes by bringing criminal charges or suits under Ohio's civil nuisance abatement law, and thus, federal district court was not required, under Younger to abstain from exercising jurisdiction over civil rights suit by store operators against prosecutors seeking declaratory and injunctive relief; 12 suits were pending against operators in three counties and operators claimed that they had also been subjected to prior criminal prosecutions, two of which ended in mistrial, one of which resulted in acquittal, and two of which were terminated after juries were unable to reach verdict. Video Store, Inc. v. Holcomb, S.D.Ohio 1990, 729 F.Supp. 579. Federal Courts 53

Child abuse petition filed in family court against parents was not brought in bad faith or with purpose of harassing parents and, therefore, parents' civil rights action challenging placement of children in foster care did not fall within exception to Younger abstention. Donkor v. City of New York Human Resources Admin. Special Services for Children, S.D.N.Y.1987, 673 F.Supp. 1221. Federal Courts 48

4258. ---- Constitutional issues of significance, considerations governing, abstention

Under Younger and its progeny, federal courts may enjoin a pending state criminal proceeding where the challenged statute is flagrantly and patently violative of express constitutional prohibitions in every clause, sentence and paragraph, and in whatever manner and against whomever an effort might be made to apply it. Rivera-Schatz v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 405. Federal Courts 49

Abstention was not appropriate in federal civil rights action brought by parents of student subjected to strip search by high school disciplinarian, even though parents had previously filed parallel Louisiana state court action; action did not involve any res or property over which either court had taken control, federal forum was no more or less convenient than state forum, danger of piecemeal litigation was slight, and serious federal constitutional issues had been raised. Allen v. Koon, E.D.La.1989, 720 F.Supp. 570. Federal Courts 48

The abstention doctrine is less favored when the plaintiff has alleged the violation of a fundamental right. Frederick L. v. Thomas, E.D.Pa.1976, 408 F.Supp. 832, affirmed 557 F.2d 373. Federal Courts 41

4259. ---- State constitutional issues of significance, considerations governing, abstention

Application of Pullman abstention to due process civil rights claims of owner of undeveloped property was not warranted, with regard to township's denial of owner's application for permits to develop property, where owner's federal suit had been filed two years previously and related state action was still pending. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Federal Courts 56

Abstention doctrine precluded consideration of § 1983 damages claim, by physician whose license had been suspended pending administrative hearing, where claim was based entirely on assertion that state's scheme for disciplining doctors was unconstitutional. Moran v. Connecticut Dept. of Public Health and Addition Services, D.Conn.1997, 954 F.Supp. 484. Federal Courts 48

4260. ---- Defendant's willingness to proceed in federal court, considerations governing, abstention

Where plaintiff had right to choose federal forum for his constitutional claim brought under this section, federal district court cannot abstain simply because defendant would prefer to be in state court, nor can it require the plaintiff to exhaust state law remedies before bringing action under this section. Schwartz v. Judicial Retirement System of New Jersey, D.C.N.J.1984, 584 F.Supp. 711. Federal Courts 48

District court would decline to abstain in action brought against city and city officials by a city fireman who was discharged for his violation of city civil service rule and the city charter by becoming a candidate for county commissioner in a nearby county, considering the uncertainty of plaintiff's state remedies, the defendants' willingness to proceed in district court, and the relative clarity of the pendent state law claims. Stone v. City of Wichita Falls, N.D.Tex.1979, 477 F.Supp. 581, affirmed 646 F.2d 1085, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 637, 454 U.S. 1082, 70 L.Ed.2d 616. Federal Courts 48

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4261. ---- Delay in federal action, considerations governing, abstention

Defense motion, based on the abstention doctrine, to dismiss civil rights suit challenging the constitutionality of South Dakota statute, SDCL 37-27-1 et seq., regulating solicitation of charitable contributions was properly denied, since the state administrative agency charged with interpreting, influencing and applying the statute lacked the power to resolve the constitutional claims of plaintiffs, since, though an appeal from the pending administrative proceeding to the South Dakota court system might resolve the dispute, requiring such action would permit a considerable delay and the holding of an administrative hearing which the plaintiffs claimed the state had no right to hold, and since plaintiffs might not be able to assert their claims of constitutional invalidity at any stage of the administrative hearing or in any appeal that might follow. Walker v. Wegner, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1980, 624 F.2d 60. Federal Courts 47.1

If abstention in favor of a state court adjudication would be likely to cause delay in civil rights case, or if the evidentiary and ultimate facts on which claims depend are in dispute, federal court should exercise its discretion against abstaining on ground of avoiding premature decision of a federal constitutional issue. Conover v. Montemuro, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 477 F.2d 1073. Federal Courts 48

Delay which follows from application of abstention doctrine is not to be countenanced in cases involving such strong national interest as right to vote. Edwards v. Sammons, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1971, 437 F.2d 1240. Federal Courts 52

California Coastal Zone Act, West's Ann.Cal.Public Resources Code, §§ 27001, 27400 to 27404, 27403(c), 27650, regulating land use in coastal areas and controlling further development presented certain ambiguities including the provisions on vested rights which had not been definitively interpreted by California courts, so that the challenge to its provisions in federal court on federal constitutional grounds in suit under this section presented an appropriate case for abstention, notwithstanding possibility of delay which was outweighed by the inappropriateness of federal court interjecting itself into evolution of important state statutory schemes. Sea Ranch Ass'n v. California Coastal Zone Conservation Commission, D.C.Cal.1975, 396 F.Supp. 533, remanded on other grounds 537 F.2d 1058, on remand 527 F.Supp. 390. Federal Courts 56

Court would not abstain from deciding constitutional issues presented by plaintiff's complaint that denial of her appointment to position of policewoman was based entirely on her association with a man with a criminal record in violation of her U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 rights, where abstention could only serve to delay plaintiff without resolving her basic claim under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Brown v. Bronstein, S.D.N.Y.1975, 389 F.Supp. 1328. Federal Courts 58

4262. ---- Administrative review discretionary, considerations governing, abstention

District court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to abstain from entertaining gas consumers' suit for declaratory and injunctive relief against unreasonable termination procedures where review by Public Utilities Commission was discretionary and case was important civil rights case. Palmer v. Columbia Gas of Ohio, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1973, 479 F.2d 153, 72 O.O.2d 337. Federal Courts 48

4263. ---- Disruption of state regulatory scheme, considerations governing, abstention

Burford abstention was required in §§ 1983 challenge to Virginia's means for determining in-state tuition eligibility involving student's argument he was denied his rights, privileges, and immunities as Virginia citizen and right to travel by having his application for in-state tuition subjected to illegal wealth test and supplemental claims of entitlement to review on basis of the record as to whether University of Virginia's (UVA's) decision was arbitrary, capricious or otherwise contrary to law; state's legitimate or even important interest in charging preferential tuition rates, which required it to distinguish between bona fide residents and those who had come solely for educational purposes, allowed it to establish reasonable criteria for in-state status, and to that end, Virginia had adopted unified scheme of statutes and regulations that specified substantive standards and the administrative and appeals process governing in-state tuition eligibility determinations. Goodhart v. Board of Visitors of University of Virginia, W.D.Va.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 804. Federal Courts 62

Abstention under "Burford doctrine" was appropriate in § 1983 suit challenging decision of West Virginia Public Service Commission (PSC), requiring Ohio solid waste disposal service to obtain certificate of convenience and necessity, in accordance with state statute, in order to haul waste in state; West Virginia had established extensive and complex regulatory structure related to regulation of solid waste, it had provided adequate means of judicial review of constitutional claims associated with its procedure, and federal judicial decision on merits of challenge could conceivably disturb regulatory scheme. Harper v. Public Service Com'n of West Virginia, S.D.W.Va.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 443, reversed 396 F.3d 348, on remand 416 F.Supp.2d 456. Federal Courts 48

New Jersey's public school system was not complex regulatory scheme warranting application of Burford abstention doctrine to prevent district court from hearing elementary school student's § 1983 claim, alleging that State Department of Education and its Commissioner aided in local education officials' violation of student's First Amendment rights by failing to exercise supervisory powers or implement policy to allow for expression of religious beliefs in classroom; state public school system was not beyond understanding of federal court and did not require special or technical expertise or interpretations. C.H. v. Oliva, D.N.J.1997, 990 F.Supp. 341, affirmed 166 F.3d 1204, rehearing granted, opinion withdrawn, on rehearing 195 F.3d 167, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 197 F.3d 63, on rehearing 226 F.3d 198, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 2519, 533 U.S. 915, 150 L.Ed.2d 692. Federal Courts 62

In § 1983 action brought by plaintiff, who was charged with criminal offense under state law, federal district court would abstain, under Younger, from exercising its jurisdiction over plaintiff's claim that defendants denied him right to effective assistance of counsel; plaintiff did not show threat of irreparable injury sufficient to overcome general policy that federal courts should not unduly interfere with state's good faith efforts to enforce its own laws in its own courts. Roberts v. Childs, D.Kan.1997, 956 F.Supp. 923, reconsideration denied 1997 WL 83398, affirmed 125 F.3d 862. Federal Courts 48

Burford abstention was appropriate in reinsurance pool member's § 1983 action claiming that it owned funds transferred to New York Superintendent of Insurance by trustee after pool filed for bankruptcy and that funds were distributed to Superintendent in violation of retrocessionaire agreements; even though member sought to hold Superintendent, deputy, and general counsel personally liable, Superintendent could only have exercised control over disputed funds subject to approval of liquidation court and only in official capacity, and Superintendent's denial of claim could not transform actions into ultra vires act. Capitol Indem. Corp. v. Curiale, S.D.N.Y.1994, 871 F.Supp. 205. Federal Courts 48

Burford abstention was appropriate in landowners' § 1983 action claiming that county's rejection of permit for alternative discharging sewage system violated Virginia statutes and Constitution and Federal Constitution; system set out in Virginia statutes for regulating sewage disposal represented type of complex scheme held to warrant abstention and resolution of claims both state and federal required analysis of state sewage disposal law and local zoning policies. Graham v. County of Albemarle, W.D.Va.1993, 826 F.Supp. 167, affirmed as modified 19 F.3d 11 . Federal Courts 48

Federal court's abstention from jurisdiction was appropriate under Burford doctrine due to parallel proceedings before Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission where it appeared that Commission's efforts to establish coherent Wisconsin policy concerning fair share agreements in public school contracts would be disrupted if court were to exercise jurisdiction; Commission was specialized Wisconsin agency with discretion in area of labor law and number of cases challenging fair share agreements under relevant statute throughout state indicated that state policy in area was under attack. Courts 62

Burford abstention was inappropriate for purposes of civil rights suit arising out of state takeover of private water utility, in view of fact that ruling as to constitutionality of alleged taking and other related claims would not cause great disruption of state regulatory scheme. Highfield Water Co. v. Public Service Commission, D.C.Md.1980, 488 F.Supp. 1176. Federal Courts 48

In absence of pending state court proceeding or of ambiguities in statute for state court to resolve, individuals seeking relief under this section need not present their federal constitutional claims in state court before coming to federal forum and there is no doctrine requiring abstention merely because resolution of federal question may result in overturning of a state policy. Wiesenfeld v. State of N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1979, 474 F.Supp. 1141. Civil Rights 1315; Federal Courts 47.1

Federal district court would not abstain from deciding action charging city, county and various government officials with violating plaintiffs' constitutional rights by taking their property without just compensation, notwithstanding California's complex regulatory scheme of land use control since unique factual circumstances suggest that any decision would not likely have significant precedential value or upset any particular scheme of regulation. Barbaccia v. Santa Clara County, N.D.Cal.1978, 451 F.Supp. 260. Federal Courts 42

4264. ---- Domestic relations proceedings, considerations governing, abstention

Doctrine of abstention barred mother's equitable claims, including those for injunctive relief and unspecified damages under § 1983 for alleged tortious interference by state, city and school district with her parental rights after state courts had terminated her parental rights; redress for this alleged interference could not be granted without first disturbing state court adjudication terminating her parental rights, a matter of substantial public concern and court lacked authority to review state court's termination of mother's parental rights. Amerson v. State of Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1996, 94 F.3d 510, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 696, 519 U.S. 1061, 136 L.Ed.2d 618. Courts 509; Federal Courts 48; Federal Courts 54

Younger abstention was appropriate with regard to husband's claims for injunctive relief in civil rights action alleging that due process was violated by Ohio statute enabling domestic violence victims to receive ex parte civil protection order (CPO), and by Ohio civil rule allowing parties in divorce proceeding to obtain restraining orders without hearing, where underlying divorce case was pending at time that husband filed action, challenged provisions affected underlying divorce and involved important state interests, and there was no reason to question ability or willingness of Ohio courts to address husband's constitutional questions. Kelm v. Hyatt, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 44 F.3d 415. Federal Courts 54

Federal district court would abstain from § 1983 civil rights suit brought against state court judge alleging that judge presided over ex parte hearings which resulted in restriction of plaintiff's child visitation rights and thereby infringed plaintiff's due process rights with respect to claim for injunctive relief; there was a well-established policy that federal courts should abstain from exercising jurisdiction in domestic relations cases, plaintiff had not attacked constitutionality of rules or statutes governing family court's procedures, and claims against state judge were enmeshed in underlying domestic relations controversy. Holeman v. Elliott, S.D.Tex.1990, 732 F.Supp. 726, affirmed 927 F.2d 601, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 59, 502 U.S. 812, 116 L.Ed.2d 35. Federal Courts 48

Mother's civil rights action, attacking state court child custody decisions, which resulted in termination of her parental rights with respect to four of her children and the placement of her other two children in long-term foster care, was barred by Rooker-Feldman doctrine; action sought to overturn state court decisions and damages for matters that were found to be proper under state law, and to adjudicate mother's action would, of necessity, involve court in relitigating various child custody issues, and potentially second-guessing state court decisions. Atkinson-Bird v. Utah, Div. of Child and Family Services, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 645, 2004 WL

Federal courts lacked jurisdiction, in mother's three § 1983 actions alleging that psychiatric professionals, attorneys, and a state court judge illegally stripped her of custody of her adult, developmentally disabled son, and ended her visitation privileges; federal courts lacked jurisdiction to issue custody decrees. Flejter v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 61 Fed.Appx. 257, 2003 WL 721724, Unreported. Federal Courts 8

4265. ---- Economic considerations, considerations governing, abstention

In deference to economic considerations, it should be only for the most compelling reasons that federal courts accept the invitation to extend their writ into dense tangle of discord inevitably arising from local school administration. Egner v. Texas City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1972, 338 F.Supp. 931. Federal Courts 62

4266. ---- Exhaustion of state remedies, considerations governing, abstention

Fact that state Supreme Court had upheld constitutionality of discovery rules which were challenged in federal court did not preclude Younger abstention on the grounds that there was no adequate opportunity to present claims in state court. Dubinka v. Judges of Superior Court of State of Cal. for County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 23 F.3d 218. Federal Courts 47.1

Younger doctrine, under which federal court may not interfere with pending state criminal prosecution in absence of extraordinary circumstances, applies to situation where state appellate remedies have yet to be exhausted when § 1983 action is filed; as for § 1983 damages actions, it is appropriate to stay federal action pending conclusion of state criminal proceedings. Kyricopoulos v. Town of Orleans, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1992, 967 F.2d 14. Action 69(5)

Neither Younger nor Pullman abstention was required where, in lawyers' suit to enjoin state authorities from continuing criminal obscenity prosecution without affording hearing on their application to represent defendants pro hac vice, it appeared that lawyers could not raise their claim in the pending state proceedings and had in fact exhausted their state trial and appellate remedies prior to filing of federal suit. Flynt v. Leis, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1978, 574 F.2d 874, reversed on other grounds 99 S.Ct. 698, 439 U.S. 438, 58 L.Ed.2d 717, 11 O.O.3d 302, rehearing denied 99 S.Ct. 2185, 441 U.S. 956, 60 L.Ed.2d 1060. Courts 508(7)

Fact that junior high school students did not first seek pertinent state remedy prior to filing federal suit under this section challenging hair regulation as violating rights of free speech, free exercise of religion, equal protection and due process, did not require that federal court invoke doctrine of abstention, in light of passage of time and attendant need to resolve issues in dispute. New Rider v. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 1, Pawnee County, Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1973, 480 F.2d 693, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 733, 414 U.S. 1097, 38 L.Ed.2d 556, rehearing denied 94 S.Ct. 1456, 415 U.S. 939, 39 L.Ed.2d 497. Federal Courts 62

Former municipal employee's failure to pursue an available Article 78 proceeding under New York law following his termination barred him from succeeding on his §§ 1983 due process claim against his former supervisor. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 574. Civil Rights 1320

Younger abstention was not warranted in §§ 1983 suit against county police officers for Fourth Amendment violations after plaintiff was detained on suspicion of towing car in violation of county criminal ordinance, where no state prosecution was pending and plaintiff did not seek to enjoin such prosecution. Poole v. Pass, E.D.Va.2005, 351 F.Supp.2d 473. Federal Courts 48

A party may not escape the jurisdictional bar of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine by merely refashioning its attack on the state court judgment as a § 1983 claim. Rogers v. Swepston, S.D.W.Va.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 549. Courts

Younger abstention was not required in case in which reporter challenged state court order gagging parties from talking to press as violative of his First Amendment rights, even though party to state court litigation had taken appeal from order and reporter might have intervened in appeal and thus availed himself of opportunity for judicial review in state proceedings; although reporter's rights may have been derivative of party's First Amendment right to free speech, their interests and constitutional issues were not identical and reporter was not required to exhaust state court remedies. Brown v. Damiani, D.Conn.2001, 154 F.Supp.2d 317. Federal Courts 53

Although the district court was concerned that plaintiff who brought § 1983 action arising out of state trial court's interlocutory order of common-law marriage which required him to immediately pay a significant amount of attorneys' fees and temporary alimony to defendant might not have an ultimate remedy for return of payments if final judgment were later reversed on appeal, the court was required to abstain from deciding constitutional issues which had not been presented to state court. Winfield v. Renfro, S.D.Tex.1989, 718 F.Supp. 613. Federal Courts 48

Both aspects of tenant's § 1983 claim against her landlord, which were that there were omissions from her eviction notice and that omitted Housing and Urban Development (HUD) regulations rendered her lease illegal, were germane to issue of possession and could have been raised in state court proceedings, and thus, Rooker-Feldman doctrine deprived federal district court of jurisdiction over tenant's subsequent § 1983 claim; although under Illinois law only claims or defenses that are germane to the right of possession may be raised in a forcible entry and detainer proceeding, one category of such issues includes claims challenging the validity or enforceability of agreement on which plaintiff bases right to possession. Chambers v. Habitat Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 68 Fed.Appx. 711, 2003 WL 21377492, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1064, 540 U.S. 1119, 157 L.Ed.2d 913. 4266A. ---- Rooker-Feldman doctrine, considerations governing, abstention

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which recognized that federal district courts did not have subject matter jurisdiction to hear appeals from state court decisions, did not bar civil rights action brought by former state prisoner under Eighth Amendment claiming that he had been detained in jail longer than he should have been due to "deliberate indifference and delay" of corrections officials in granting him jail credit, although state courts had denied prisoner jail credit that he believed he had been owed; prisoner subsequently obtained credit through department of corrections and deliberate indifference claim had not been presented to state courts. Burke v. Johnston, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 452 F.3d 665. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which prevents federal district courts from reviewing state court judgments, did not bar physician's suit in same matter that was filed with federal district court while his petition for certiorari to state supreme court was pending, and thus district court had subject matter jurisdiction to hear case, since state suit was not final. Guttman v. Khalsa, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 446 F.3d 1027. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not preclude property owner from bringing suit in federal district court claiming numerous civil rights violations by city arising from destruction of his buildings, despite state court's prior denial of his request for injunctive relief, where state court judgment permitted city to demolish buildings, but did not require their demolition, owner did not ask district court to overturn state court judgment, and allegations underlying owner's federal claim would have been identical if there had been no state court proceeding. Bolden v. City of Topeka, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 441 F.3d 1129. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not insulate prior reclassification decision of county property tax assessment board from review by federal court in subsequent civil rights lawsuit under equal protection clause, although lawsuit in effect asked lower federal court to reverse result of state court decision because state supreme court ultimately held that assessor's reclassification complied with state law; Rooker-Feldman doctrine was not applicable because it did not apply to judicial review of state agency decisions and no state court had rendered decision in the case at time suit was filed in federal district court. Jicarilla Apache Nation v. Rio Arriba County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 440 F.3d 1202. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not bar federal district court's consideration of §§1983 takings clause action brought by distributor of video gaming machines challenging state statute prohibiting possession of such machines, since distributor had not been party to earlier state-court action asserting similar challenge. Holliday Amusement Co. of Charleston, Inc. v. State of South Carolina, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 401 F.3d 534, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 357, 163 L.Ed.2d 65. Courts 509

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not prevent exercise of federal jurisdiction over terminated New York City police officer's equal protection claim based on suspect classification, raised for the first time in federal § 1983 action and not in state court Article 78 proceeding in which officer claimed that ALJ's determination he used excessive force was not supported by substantial evidence. Vargas v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 377 F.3d 200. Courts 509

Procedural requirements of Rooker-Feldman doctrine were met as to due process claims brought by parents and child against city, foster care agency and foster parent, stemming from injuries allegedly suffered by child either during stay at city facility or placement in foster home; although additional factual questions remained as to whether termination of parental rights and adoption were appropriate, initial removal decision was fully assessed by state court and found to be proper. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman abstention doctrine was inapplicable in case, where individuals who were arrested and prosecuted on open burning charges, arising from their burning of a rainbow-colored flag at a gay pride parade, stated claims for declaratory and injunctive relief, and monetary damages, but did not seek to overturn the state court's previous decision finding them guilty of open burning charges. Daubenmire v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 794. Courts 509

Lessees' equal protection challenge to Puerto Rico fire code as it was applied in one particular instance against them, which was brought in federal court after fire escape access order had been fully considered and affirmed by Puerto Rico judiciary, did not fit within exception to Rooker-Feldman doctrine, that United States district courts always have subject matter jurisdiction over general constitutional challenges over state laws, whether or not lessees raised equal protection claim in Puerto Rico courts vel non, since lessees were not challenging constitutionality of fire code as a whole. Davison v. Puerto Rico Firefighters Corps, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 33. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not bar federal civil rights action of primary candidate, whose name was placed on party ballot for town council after successful state court litigation, and who subsequently won position in general election, as plaintiff did not complain of the state court judgment, and his suit against board of elections members did not invite review or rejection of state judgment. Bodkin v. Garfinkle, E.D.N.Y.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 205. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman did not bar detainee's civil access to court and counsel claims brought against county defendants since those claims were distinct from the issue that was litigated before judge in state court criminal proceedings, and detainee was not complaining of injuries caused by judge's order directing county jail to allow attorney/client contact between arrestee and his counsel and was not directly appealing the order. Glisson v. Sangamon County Sheriff's Dept., C.D.Ill.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 609. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred exercise of federal jurisdiction over §§ 1983 action against state court judge and state and county officials involved in state water court case allegedly brought in retaliation for plaintiff's criticism of the officials; plaintiff essentially sought to disrupt or undo the water court judgment, and relief requested, restoration of plaintiff's water plus damages for lost use of that water, was inextricably intertwined with the state water court case. Tatum v. Simpson, D.Colo.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1159. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, precluding lower federal court review of state court decision, precluded assertion of subject matter jurisdiction over claims that employees of Federal Home Loan Bank (FHLB) conspired with plaintiff in state court action, to enforce allegedly wrongly decided state court temporary restraining order against employee, in violation of Civil Rights Act guarantee of access to public accommodations, Fair Housing Act (FHA), Civil Rights Act racial discrimination and conspiracy provisions. Zhu v. Federal Housing Finance Bd., D.Kan.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 1253, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 2874996. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not preclude District Court from exercising jurisdiction over father's claims under §§ 1983 alleging that state family court officials violated his constitutional rights by refusing to process his ex parte petition for visitation, where those claims were not actually litigated in family court, and thus were not inextricably intertwined with family court's adjudication; no state court had decided those claims, and, if District Court should rule in father's favor on those claims, such a finding would have no effect on family court's orders regarding father's custody rights. McKnight v. Baker, E.D.Pa.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 422. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine precluded District Court from exercising jurisdiction over father's claims under §§ 1983 alleging he was deprived of his constitutionally protected parental rights, to extent he sought relief that would void or render ineffectual state family court's custody orders governing his visitation rights, where such claims were inextricably intertwined with family court's adjudication; father's ostensibly federal claims represented an indirect attack on custody determination already adjudicated in family court. McKnight v. Baker, E.D.Pa.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 422. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, precluding lower federal court review of state court decisions, barred grant of injunction barring justices of village court from participating in illegal scheme to ticket and collect fines from motorists, after police jurisdiction was ceded to county. Wood v. Incorporated Village of Patchogue of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 344. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which prevented federal courts from reconsidering matters finally decided by state courts, applied to preclude real property owner's claim before federal district court in civil rights lawsuit under Fourteenth Amendment, after state trial court determined that real property should be sold in private sale and Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed trial court's decision, where issues presented before district court were inextricably intertwined with state courts' judgments, parties were identical, and owner had reasonable opportunity to raise his federal claims in state court proceedings. Ransom v. State of Georgia, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 2006 WL 1313171, Unreported. Courts 509

Since nonprofit corporation's §§ 1983 action for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief against the state of Ohio, a state-court judge, and a court-appointed receiver unquestionably asserted that judge in state court action had improperly found that a receiver should be appointed to take control of corporation's nationwide assets, corporation's federal claim was inextricably intertwined with a state court decision, precluding the federal district court from exercising jurisdiction under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. ADSA, Inc. v. Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 176 Fed.Appx. 640, 2006 WL 1008319, Unreported. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, precluding lower federal court review of state court decisions, barred state prisoner's §§ 1983 claim against district attorney, sheriff, and others, challenging state court proceedings, which granted forfeiture petition against prisoner's commercial property. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former state court litigant's in forma pauperis §§ 1983 claim that his due process rights were violated in state court domestic relations case, primarily on ground that state courts disregarded evidence that he presented, could have been raised in state court, and was intertwined with and sought to undo his earlier state court decision, and thus, was barred under Rooker-Feldman doctrine. Donahou v. Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 153 Fed.Appx. 471, 2005 WL 2746766, Unreported. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred plaintiff's federal civil rights claims against his deceased mother's former guardian and judge, based on allegedly improper sale of his mother's home, where federal claims were merely an obvious attempt to sidestep the appeal process in the state courts. Daggett v. Key, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 721, 2005 WL 332452, Unreported. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, preventing federal court review of state court decisions, barred public housing tenant's § 1983 action against city housing authority and property manager for violation of the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act (QHWRA), the United States Housing Act, and the due process and equal protection clauses, where tenant sought relief from judgment of state court granting restitution of rental property to city housing authority. Flowers v. Columbus Metropolitan Housing Authority, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 90 Fed.Appx. 893, 2004 WL 237410, Unreported. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which provides that inferior federal courts have no subject matter jurisdiction over cases that effectively seek review of judgments of state courts and that federal review, if any, can occur only by way of a certiorari petition to the Supreme Court, barred action by disbarred attorney, under § 1983 and other civil rights statutes against court officials and his counsel, alleging racial discrimination in his disbarment, and seeking injunctive relief in the form of reinstatement to the practice of law or a hearing regarding the alleged violations; disbarred attorney was essentially challenging his disbarment. Brooks v. Ross, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 356, 2003 WL 21961174, Unreported. Courts 509; Federal Courts 1142

Under Rooker-Feldman doctrine, federal district court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over civil rights lawsuit brought by citizen in forma pauperis against county and ex-wife under due process clause challenging his original child support order on jurisdictional grounds, disputing his total child support arrearages, and alleging that county's garnishment order against his disability benefits payments was invalid, since citizen's claims were inextricably intertwined with ruling of state court. Rucker v. County of Santa Clara, State of California, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21440151, Unreported. Courts 509

4267. ---- Flagrantly unconstitutional state statutes, considerations governing, abstention

Provisions authorizing contempt proceedings against debtors who disobeyed subpoenas to appear in supplemental proceedings brought by judgment creditors in attempt to collect judgments in New York are not so patently or flagrantly unconstitutional as to invoke exception to rule of abstention from interfering in state proceedings. Juidice v. Vail, U.S.N.Y.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1211, 430 U.S. 327, 51 L.Ed.2d 376. Courts 508(3)

District court erred in holding that it should abstain from determining constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 14:358 et seq. pending authoritative interpretation of statutes in state courts, where complaint under this section attacked such statutes as being unconstitutional on their face as abridging free expression or as applied for purpose of discouraging protected activities. Dombrowski v. Pfister, U.S.La.1965, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 380 U.S. 479, 14 L.Ed.2d 22. Federal Courts 53

Even if plaintiff, who challenged constitutionality of A.R.S. § 13-991 subsec. 3 providing that a person who roams about from place to place without any lawful business shall be punished as a vagrant, was currently subject to a state criminal prosecution, federal abstention would not be warranted since A.R.S. § 13-991 subsec. 3 was patently unconstitutional on its face and was currently being used for the purpose of making arrests to permit investigation of other activities. Anderson v. Nemetz, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1973, 474 F.2d 814. Federal Courts 49

4268. ---- Intermingled state and federal claims, considerations governing, abstention

Exceptional circumstances which would support abstention or dismissal under Colorado River test were not present in wife's civil right action claiming that bank, under color of state law, had taken her property without due process when it seized property in which it had security interest after filing complaint which named only her husband as defendant where federal and state courts were not both determining rights in property, there was no inconvenience in the federal forum, wife had filed federal suit before being added as party to state court suit, federal law provided rule of decision in the federal claim, and Congress had expressly granted civil rights plaintiffs a federal forum. Forehand v. First Alabama Bank of Dothan, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1984, 727 F.2d 1033. Federal Courts 48

Since all of developers' state and federal claims necessarily depended upon construction of state land use law concerning scope of authority of local planning bodies and boards of supervisors, proper interpretation of state and local land use law and county zoning practices and procedure, court of appeals would abstain from considering appeal from judgment entered in favor of county, county board of supervisors, and county zoning administrator in action alleging that board's refusal to approve site plan for development of parcel of land violated state and local law, and various federal rights of developers. Caleb Stowe Associates, Ltd. v. Albemarle County, Va., C.A.4 (Va.) 1984, 724 F.2d 1079. Federal Courts 56

Constitutional claims against Illinois National Guard and officers thereof, alleging sexual harassment and retaliation including rape and sexual assault, illegal and discriminatory demotion, transfer, discharge, and denial of promotions, were barred under Bivens and § 1983; claims sought relief for incidents arising from plaintiffs' military status or status as federal technicians, a job inextricably entwining civilian and military functions. Bartley v. U.S. Dept. of Army, C.D.Ill.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 934. Civil Rights 1376(10); United States 50.10(5)

Issues raised by § 1983 action in which federal constitutional challenge to New Jersey sex offender registration and notification statute ("Megan's Law") was raised by offenders subject to statute were inextricably intertwined with merits of prior state court decision, so that Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not bar consideration of action by court; plaintiffs did not seek review of tier determination hearing under statute, but rather alleged that proceedings were unconstitutional, and plaintiffs were not parties in prior action in which New Jersey Supreme Court held statute to be constitutional. Alan A. v. Verniero, D.N.J.1997, 970 F.Supp. 1153, vacated 135 F.3d 763. Courts 509

Exceptional circumstances existed so as to make abstention appropriate with regard to § 1983 claims filed by widow of trainee who died as result of injuries he suffered in accident at Massachusetts police academy pending final resolution of matter in state courts, where piecemeal litigation would prove costly and troublesome to parties, state law provided rule of decision for twelve of fourteen counts in complaint, and six of fourteen counts had to be remanded under Eleventh Amendment to state court. Shepard v. Egan, D.Mass.1990, 767 F.Supp. 1158. Federal Courts 48

Parent's claim that her constitutional rights were violated as result of state court's refusal to permit journalist to participate in dependency and neglect proceeding was inextricably intertwined with prior state court judgment declaring journalist to be special respondent and barring her from being involved in proceedings, and thus Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred federal civil rights action by parent and journalist, even though they had not raised federal claims in state court. Shell v. Meconi, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 866, 2005 WL 256550, Unreported. Courts 509

Review of claim citizen brought against magistrate judge and clerk of state district court alleging his rights were violated under § 1983 when a transcript was not made of hearing in which a protective order was issued against citizen in favor of his former spouse was precluded by the Rooker-Feldman doctrine; complaint sought appellate review of protective order issued against citizen by magistrate judge, and constitutional violations allegedly committed by magistrate and clerk were inextricably intertwined with the state court protective order issued against citizen. Sherkat v. Vano, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 242, 2003 WL 22147622, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 822, 540 U.S. 1055, 157 L.Ed.2d 709. Courts 509

Father's § 1983 action against state Family Court judge, mother, and others, asserting constitutional claims relating to dispute involving child custody, visitation, and child support payments, was barred under Rooker-Feldman doctrine, precluding lower federal court jurisdiction over cases that effectively sought review of state court judgments, where action was inextricably intertwined with state court adjudications regarding custody, visitation, and child support, and claims could have been raised in state court. Formanek v. Pines, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 69 Fed.Appx. 504, 2003 WL 21697413, Unreported. Courts 509

4269. ---- Irreparable injury, considerations governing, abstention

Despite fact that state courts had not yet interpreted McKinney's N.Y. General Business Law § 136(a), relating to exhibition or display of the flag, federal district court properly refused to abstain from considering civil rights suit challenging constitutionality of that statute since, in the circumstances of the case, abstention could cause irreparable harm to plaintiffs and to others similarly situated and could effectively nullify their rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Long Island Vietnam Moratorium Committee v. Cahn, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1970, 437 F.2d 344, affirmed 94 S.Ct. 3197, 418 U.S. 906, 41 L.Ed.2d 1153. Federal Courts 53

Doctrine of equitable restraint did not preclude consideration of religious societies' claims of violation of right under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 to proselytize religious beliefs at state fair arising from enforcement of regulations prohibiting roving solicitation on state fairgrounds, where it was unequivocal intent of state fair officials to utilize any available means to prevent roving solicitation by members of societies and where such threat resulted in societies refraining from conducting such solicitations. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. Evans, S.D.Ohio 1977, 440 F.Supp. 414. Constitutional Law 84.5(16)

Real possibility that state law claim could be adjudicated without abstention, together with possible irreparable harm from further delay in decision of case, precluded application of abstention doctrine in civil rights case on claim that children with specific learning disabilities were discriminated against by failure of defendants to provide instructions specifically suited to such children's handicaps. Frederick L. v. Thomas, E.D.Pa.1976, 408 F.Supp. 832, affirmed 557 F.2d 373. Federal Courts 62

Where it appeared that bookstore operator might well succeed in his challenge to constitutionality of ordinances and that abstention by federal district court could well result in denial of any effective safeguard against loss of protected freedoms of expression, abstention was not appropriate. Amato v. Ruth, D.C.Wis.1970, 332 F.Supp. 326 . Federal Courts 53

Inasmuch as suit under this section for declaration that plaintiff's Kansas conviction and sentence were in violation of the Constitution and to enjoin state from enforcing same amounted to nothing more than a collateral attack on a state court conviction, action would be dismissed under doctrine of abstention in absence of showing of irreparable harm or any indication that state and state officials had proceeded in anything other than good faith. Davis v. State of Kan., D.C.Kan.1971, 327 F.Supp. 963. Federal Courts 48

4270. ---- Nature of state court relief sought, considerations governing, abstention

Pullman abstention was inappropriate in civil rights case in which former prisoner sought damages from three individuals who allegedly withheld exculpatory evidence where case posed no possibility that state statute allowing motions for DNA testing of evidence would be held unconstitutional unless narrowed. Bembenek v. Donohoo, E.D.Wis.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 942. Federal Courts 48

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Pending state court appeals of zoning dispute did not require that district court abstain from exercising its jurisdiction over § 1983 suit brought by landowners based on same facts as state case, where landowners had already obtained desired injunctive relief from state court, and § 1983 action sought additional relief in form of money damages and attorney fees for alleged violations of their constitutional rights. Koncelik v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.1991, 781 F.Supp. 152. Federal Courts 48

Federal district court would not abstain from preliminarily enjoining enforcement of city ordinance providing for revocation of license of business violating antipornography laws where, despite pendency of criminal matters in city court implicating constitutionality of such ordinance, injunctive relief against such prosecution was not sought, but relief was sought only against future enforcement of challenged ordinance and such relief was therefore entirely prospective in nature. Eagle Books, Inc. v. Ritchie, D.C.Utah 1978, 455 F.Supp. 73. Courts 508(2.1)

Where dancers who brought action against various state and city officials to preclude enforcement of regulations prohibiting them from mingling with customers in the lounges where they worked did not seek to enjoin any state proceedings and where the regulations were enforceable only against the owner of the lounge so that the dancers could not be subject to any proceedings, and where they sought declaratory relief and other relief necessary to insure future compliance with the declaration which they sought, federal court would not abstain from deciding the case. Olitsky v. O'Malley, D.C.Mass.1978, 453 F.Supp. 1052, affirmed 597 F.2d 295. Federal Courts 51

4271. ---- Peculiarly state issues, considerations governing, abstention

Although district court abstaining on Pullman grounds would ordinarily retain jurisdiction pending authoritative interpretation by state courts, retaining jurisdiction was not appropriate in § 1983 action alleging that Tennessee statutes made illegal the practice of collecting jail fees from persons convicted of driving under the influence (DUI), and that such illegal practice was unconstitutional; no authoritative determination could possibly leave grounds for further action by district court. Brown v. Tidwell, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1999, 169 F.3d 330. Federal Courts 65

City had significant and substantial interest in regulation of on-street parking and vindication of the system implemented to adjudicate violation of those regulations for Younger abstention purposes. O'Neill v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 32 F.3d 785, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1355, 514 U.S. 1015, 131 L.Ed.2d 213. Federal Courts 47.1

District court did not abuse its discretion in invoking Burford abstention doctrine in developer's civil rights action against county and county agencies and officials, in which argument boiled down to assertion that subdivision plan complied with zoning laws and that local authorities wrongfully disapproved of plan by misapplying the laws and abusing their authority and decision-making process, despite vague equal protection claim that plan received dissimilar treatment without rational legally sufficiently basis. Pomponio v. Fauquier County Bd. of Sup'rs, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 21 F.3d 1319, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 192, 513 U.S. 870, 130 L.Ed.2d 125. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention was proper with respect to attorneys' suit against Ohio Supreme Court and its justices as well as Ohio Bar Association and its committees seeking declaratory judgment, injunctive relief, money damages and costs with respect to state's disciplinary proceedings against attorneys; disciplinary proceedings were within constitutionally prescribed jurisdiction of Supreme Court of Ohio, were carried out by committees which were arms of Ohio Supreme Court, regulation of legal profession was of great importance to Ohio, and attorneys had opportunity to present their constitutional claims in their answer to complaint against them. Berger v. Cuyahoga County Bar Ass'n, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 983 F.2d 718, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2416, 508 U.S. 940, 124 L.Ed.2d 639. Federal Courts 51; Federal Courts 54

Federal district court correctly abstained in motorist's action against three Iowa Department of Transportation officials seeking damages, declaratory relief, and injunctions for violations of his constitutional rights and state law based upon suspension of his driver's license and motor vehicle registration based upon three speeding citations all with 60-day period; state's interest in safety of its roadways is considerable, motorist would have adequate opportunity to raise his constitutional claims in state proceeding, and several of constitutional challenges to state statutes and Department rule involved required interpretation of state provisions. Ronwin v. Dunham, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1987, 818 F.2d 675. Federal Courts 55

Exercise of pendent jurisdiction over state law claims in civil rights action was not warranted, where federal claims under §§ 1983 were dismissed on summary judgment, and only state law claims remained. Vega v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 160. Federal Courts 15

Employee's state law claims regarding his loss of employment did not substantially predominate over his federal law claim for damages under §§ 1983 against state employer, so as to warrant district court's dismissal of state law claims for resolution by state law tribunals; scope of issues presented, damages alleged, and evidence required to prove both types of claims were substantially the same. McNerny v. Nebraska Public Power Dist., D.Neb.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 1109. Federal Courts 18

Burford abstention was not appropriate in case challenging administrative revocation of insurance licenses on due process grounds, even assuming that licensees had adequate state court remedies, as case raised purely federal claims, rather than complex, policy-laden state law issues, and would not disrupt state efforts to establish coherent policy. Guillemard Gionorio v. Contreras Gomez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 122, appeal dismissed 161 Fed.Appx. 24, 2005 WL 3382638. Federal Courts 55

Abstention under "Younger abstention doctrine" was appropriate in § 1983 suit challenging decision of West Virginia Public Service Commission (PSC), requiring Ohio solid waste disposal service to obtain certificate of convenience and necessity, in accordance with state statute, in order to haul waste in state; proceedings before PSC with respect to issue were judicial in nature and ongoing, proceedings implicated important state interest in protecting health and welfare of its citizens, and there was adequate opportunity in state proceedings for owner and operator of service to raise constitutional challenges. Harper v. Public Service Com'n of West Virginia, S.D.W.Va.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 443, reversed 396 F.3d 348, on remand 416 F.Supp.2d 456. Federal Courts 48

Purported state interest in regulating sewage disposal did not rise to level of significant state interest justifying federal court's relinquishment of jurisdiction under Younger abstention doctrine in landowners' § 1983 suit alleging that county's denial of alternative discharging sewage system violated Virginia law and United States Constitution. Graham v. County of Albemarle, W.D.Va.1993, 826 F.Supp. 167, affirmed as modified on other grounds 19 F.3d 11. Federal Courts 48

Burford abstention was not required in § 1983 action against Pennsylvania Secretary of Banking, although administering state banking system had significant importance to Pennsylvania; state court did not have any special competence in determining whether Secretary's actions comported with due process. Kenworthy v. Hargrove, E.D.Pa.1993, 826 F.Supp. 138, affirmed 855 F.Supp. 101. Federal Courts 48

Federal court abstention from issuance of injunction prohibiting town from enforcing local law against firm engaged in solid waste processing was not required on Younger grounds, based upon existence of state court injunction barring processor from violating law; although state court had some interest in proceeding, interest was not vital to operation of state government. C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, S.D.N.Y.1991, 770 F.Supp. 848. Federal Courts 54

Serious questions existed as to whether Younger abstention was appropriate with respect to trust beneficiaries' claim in civil rights action that they were deprived of access to courts by Minnesota state judge's injunction against further prosecution of Oregon action alleging trust mismanagement, for purpose of determining whether beneficiaries were entitled to preliminary injunction against judge, since Minnesota had interest in proper administration of trusts under its jurisdiction, Minnesota had strong interest in reviewing constitutionality of judge's order, state proceedings implicated important state interest, and there was adequate opportunity in Minnesota actions to raise federal question. Schroll v. Plunkett, D.Or.1990, 760 F.Supp. 1378, affirmed 932 F.2d 973. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Younger doctrine justified abstention from action challenging state court custody and visitation rulings, where appeal of visitation order was still pending, state court had paramount if not exclusive interest in the case, and plaintiff mother had had more than sufficient opportunity to litigate federal issues in state courts. Neustein v. Orbach, E.D.N.Y.1990, 732 F.Supp. 333. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention was appropriate in civil rights action in which state inmate challenged conditions of confinement and alleged official retaliation; state habeas proceedings were ongoing and would afford inmate opportunity to raise constitutional claims; moreover, state had considerable interest in claim of official retaliation. Burgos v. Koehler, S.D.N.Y.1990, 727 F.Supp. 847. Federal Courts 50

District court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over §§ 1983 action in which father sought to attack state-court child custody judgment awarding custody of adopted son to state agency. Crawford v. Wilker, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2005, 153 Fed.Appx. 468, 2005 WL 2660501, Unreported. Courts 509

4272. ---- Pending state proceedings, considerations governing, abstention

If state criminal defendant brings federal civil rights lawsuit during pendency of his criminal trial, appeal, or state habeas action, abstention may be appropriate response to parallel state-court proceeding. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Federal Courts 48

Where there was no pending state court proceeding in which plaintiff could have challenged Wisconsin statute, W.S.A. 245.10, providing that certain residents could not marry within state or elsewhere without first obtaining court permission, there were no statutory ambiguities for the state courts to resolve, and case did not involve complex issues of state law, abstention was not required in class action challenging Wisconsin statute as violative of the equal protection and due process clauses. Zablocki v. Redhail, U.S.Wis.1978, 98 S.Ct. 673, 434 U.S. 374, 54 L.Ed.2d 618. Federal Courts 47.1

District court did not abuse its discretion in failing to abstain from deciding attorney's §§ 1983 First Amendment challenge against city ordinance limiting display of political signs to residential areas, where there was no state criminal, civil, or administrative proceedings underway, and there was no risk that a federal injunction would interfere with any pending state proceedings; any such proceedings ended when attorney removed her campaign sign from the front of her law office. Beaulieu v. City of Alabaster, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 454 F.3d 1219. Federal Courts 56

Pending state court action in which licensed psychiatrist who was subject to disciplinary proceedings sought declaration that statute requiring suspension of his license due to his failure to submit to ordered psychiatric examination was unconstitutional on its face and as applied, and to recover damages from various state officials, required federal court to abstain under Younger from exercising jurisdiction over § 1983 action in which psychiatrist sought identical relief; state proceeding was an ongoing action, and state court provided an adequate forum for constitutional claims. Weitzel v. Division of Occupational and Professional Licensing of Dept. of Commerce of State of Utah, C.A.10 (Utah) 2001, 240 F.3d 871. Federal Courts 55

In light of hotel owner's pending state court mandamus action challenging city Board of Permit Appeals' (BPA) decision that classified hotel as residential, thus subjecting it to city's amended Hotel Conversion Ordinance (HCO), Pullman abstention was appropriate in hotel owner's § 1983 action, alleging that ordinance constituted facial taking of property without just compensation because it was not sufficiently related to legitimate state interests; land use planning was sensitive area of social policy, landowner's entire case hinged on designation of his hotel as residential, which was precise issue raised in his state mandamus action, this claim raised numerous uncertain issues of state law, and state court reversal of BPA's ruling would moot owner's constitutional claim. San Remo Hotel v. City and County of San Francisco, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1998, 145 F.3d 1095. Federal Courts 56

Anti-abortion activist's § 1983 action seeking to strike down state court injunction that limited picketing at physician's home, OB/GYN office, and abortion clinic was not barred under Colorado River abstention doctrine, absent any ongoing state proceeding parallel to federal case. Gottfried v. Medical Planning Services, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1998, 142 F.3d 326, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 592, 525 U.S. 1041, 142 L.Ed.2d 534. Federal Courts 48

Even if transaction between Iowa Department of Health and nonprofit operator of family planning clinics regarding whether proposed clinic construction was subject to Iowa's certificate of need requirements could be characterized as ongoing proceedings, for purposes of Younger abstention doctrine, they were not judicial in nature, and thus did not mandate abstention from operator's related § 1983 action; no application was pending before Department, which conducted no investigation, held no hearings, received no evidence, kept no record, and enforced no liabilities. Planned Parenthood of Greater Iowa, Inc. v. Atchison, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 126 F.3d 1042. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention was not appropriate in § 1983 action seeking monetary relief for delay in instituting forfeiture proceeding against plaintiff's seized vehicle, even though state Supreme Court had recognized that forfeiture proceeding was quasi-criminal, and even though plaintiff sought both damages and return of her car in pending state tort action. Alexander v. Ieyoub, C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 62 F.3d 709. Federal Courts 48

Even though persons who received parking citations filed lawsuit in federal court in lieu of appealing hearing examiner's determination and raising their constitutional claims in the state forum, there was "pending" state proceeding for purposes of Younger abstention. O'Neill v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 32 F.3d 785, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1355, 514 U.S. 1015, 131 L.Ed.2d 213. Federal Courts 47.1

Alleged identity in restrictions imposed under predecessor interim county zoning ordinance regulating adult bookstores and successor permanent ordinance did not establish that owner had opportunity to raise constitutional issues in pending state action challenging predecessor ordinance such that Younger abstention was appropriate with respect to challenge to successor ordinance; successor ordinance was not even adopted until end of trial regarding predecessor ordinance, and two ordinances were dissimilar in form such that owner lacked incentive to raise constitutional challenge in suit involving interim ordinance. Wiener v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 23 F.3d 263. Federal Courts 56

District court properly abstained, on basis of Younger doctrine, from hearing claim for equitable relief brought by litigants complaining of manner in which Michigan circuit judge conducted divorce, custody and support hearings; all plaintiffs had domestic relations cases that were all apparently still pending in Michigan circuit court, state proceedings involved paramount state interest and plaintiffs had not shown that Michigan courts could not or would not provide adequate opportunity to raise their constitutional claims. Mann v. Conlin, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 22 F.3d 100, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 193, 513 U.S. 870, 130 L.Ed.2d 126. Federal Courts 51; Federal Courts 54

Claims by Catholic priest that state district attorney's office violated his state and federal constitutional rights to due process by breaching transactional immunity agreement and his rights to fair trial by releasing allegedly confidential materials to public were premature, where both criminal and civil proceedings were still pending in state court, and any damages would be purely speculative. Cinel v. Connick, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1338, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 189, 513 U.S. 868, 130 L.Ed.2d 122. Civil Rights 1384

Younger abstention doctrine did not permit abstention in newspaper reporter's civil rights action challenging constitutionality of provisions of Puerto Rico Rule of Criminal Procedure closing preliminary hearings in felony cases, as district court's grant of declaratory relief did not enjoin or interfere with any state proceeding pending against reporter or anyone whose interests were intertwined with his; criminal cases that reporter wished to attend were future preliminary hearings of third person criminal defendants. Rivera-Puig v. Garcia-Rosario, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 983 F.2d 311. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention doctrine applied so as to preclude federal court, in § 1983 action brought by real estate developer, from enjoining township board of supervisors from interfering with developer's lawful use of property, and from entering developer's property in violation of developer's constitutional rights, to extent that such injunction would nullify pending state court action seeking to prevent developer from cutting trees on property pending completion of state condemnation proceeding. Gwynedd Properties, Inc. v. Lower Gwynedd Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 970 F.2d 1195. Federal Courts 54

Younger abstention was appropriate in civil rights suit in which former client alleged conspiracy between law firm, judges and attorneys, city, and municipal court clerk, even though client contended that pending state court suit merely involved fee dispute between himself and law firm; client had filed counterclaim against firm after he had been unsuccessful in filing grievance with state bar, and basis of civil rights suit was manner in which firm's suit and client's counterclaim had been handled in state court. Nilsson v. Ruppert, Bronson & Chicarelli Co., L.P.A., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1989, 888 F.2d 452, rehearing denied. Federal Courts 48

Abstention was warranted under Younger v. Harris with respect to criminal defendant's § 1983 civil rights action alleging that Virginia police officers engaged in unconstitutional actions during course of their investigation of murder of defendant's ex-wife in view of fact that constitutional issues raised in § 1983 action were potentially subject to adjudication in pending reprosecution of defendant on murder charge in Maryland after defendant's murder conviction had been reversed by the Virginia Court of Appeals on ground that venue was not properly laid in Virginia; that criminal proceedings were pending in another state than that of officials whose conduct was subject of constitutional challenge in § 1983 action did not alter essential comity concerns warranting abstention, nor did fact that § 1983 suit sought not only injunctive and declaratory relief but money damages as well. Traverso v. Penn, C.A.4 (Va.) 1989, 874 F.2d 209. Federal Courts 48

Federal courts were required to abstain from hearing state appellate court justice's civil rights action seeking to enjoin state judicial disciplinary proceedings on grounds those proceedings violated his free speech rights, where state judicial inquiry board had determined to file complaint against the judge, and state disciplinary proceedings gave the justice an opportunity to raise his constitutional claim. Pincham v. Illinois Judicial Inquiry Bd., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1989, 872 F.2d 1341, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 497, 493 U.S. 975, 107 L.Ed.2d 501. Federal Courts 54

Abstention by district court due to pendency of state court appeal was not appropriate where pending litigation did not involve vital state interest and tenant's § 1983 and § 1985 claims for money damages could not be addressed in pending state proceedings; sole issue in state proceeding was whether tenant was entitled to stay of state trial court's decision in landlord's forcible detainer action pending appeal. Litteral v. Bach, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1989, 869 F.2d 297. Federal Courts 48

City police officer's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim, alleging that city and police commissioner commenced meritless lawsuit in state court seeking to disqualify officer's attorneys in the disciplinary action against officer, was not barred under Younger abstention doctrine, by the pending state court lawsuit challenging the ability of the attorneys to represent officer in the disciplinary proceeding; no state interest was implicated in the state court action, and nothing in the §§ 1983 lawsuit would address the merits of the disciplinary proceedings against officer. Chittenden v. Connors, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 463. Federal Courts 56

Application of the Younger doctrine of federal non-intrusion in the state criminal process, along with principle that constitutional issues relevant to disposition of pending state criminal charges could not be adjudicated in a federal civil rights damage action, precluded pretrial detainee from maintaining §§ 1983 action, in which he alleged he was subjected to search and seizure without probable cause and sought monetary damages and injunctive relief. Cade v. Newman, D.N.J.2006, 422 F.Supp.2d 463. Federal Courts 54

Younger abstention doctrine barred District Court from, in civil rights suit under §§ 1983, preliminarily enjoining criminal proceeding in Puerto Rico court against arrestee, where arrestee was currently being prosecuted for alleged offer of bribery in violation of Puerto Rico law, Puerto Rico had legitimate interest in enforcing its laws concerning alleged offers of bribery of its officers, and pending proceeding in Puerto Rico court afforded arrestee an adequate opportunity to raise his federal claims and issues. Olson v. Fajardo-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 32. Federal Courts 54

Colorado River abstention was not warranted in §§ 1983 action in which government contractor and its principals alleged that Puerto Rico Health Insurance Administration and its executive director and director of internal auditing engaged in scheme to hurt plaintiffs' reputation and business goodwill so as to justify cancellation of contracts by which contractor coordinated delivery of mental healthcare services to persons eligible for Medicare and Medicaid benefits, notwithstanding desirability of avoiding piecemeal litigation; given that action was predicated on alleged violations of federal constitutional rights, there was no reason to defer to state court's interpretation of legal issues involved, and plaintiffs had reasonable explanation for filing simultaneous state and federal actions, in that, due to sovereign immunity, certain retroactive compensatory damages could only be requested in local court. Behavioral Healthcare Partners, Inc. v. Gonzalez-Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 191. Federal Courts 1024

Former prisoner's civil rights action against three individuals who allegedly denied her access to exculpatory evidence was not parallel to state court proceeding in which prisoner was appealing denial of DNA testing of evidence in criminal case, and thus civil rights action would not be stayed on basis of Colorado River abstention. Bembenek v. Donohoo, E.D.Wis.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 942. Federal Courts 48

Abstention was not warranted in nursing home owners' action asserting § 1983 and Bivens claims against state and federal officials arising out of alleged misuse of regulatory powers that forced nursing home to close, where there were no pending state proceedings other than action under New York Article 78, which provided for action against governmental body or officer, and that action was not pursued after decision holding action should be transferred to appellate division. Beechwood Restorative Care Center v. Leeds, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 248, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 436 F.3d 147. Federal Courts 48

Court was required to abstain under Younger in lawsuit under § 1983 from considering whether prosecution of arrestee by Puerto Rico violated arrestee's rights under First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments, although arrestee had standing to challenge constitutionality of such prosecution and his claims were ripe for adjudication; arrestee's prosecution was ongoing, government had legitimate interest in enforcing its laws, and pending governmental proceeding afforded arrestee with opportunity to raise his constitutional challenge. Rivera-Schatz v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 405. Federal Courts 48

Federal proceedings could not interfere with "ongoing" state proceedings, as would support application of the Younger abstention doctrine, which precluded federal courts from exercising jurisdiction over suits aimed at restraining certain pending state actions, where at time federal complaint was filed, state proceeding was threatened, but state complaint had not yet been filed. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 200. Federal Courts 54

Ongoing state court proceedings challenging citations issued to corporate landlord for building code violations and condemnation of certain rental properties did not preclude federal court, under Younger abstention doctrine, from hearing § 1983 claims by corporate landlord and its president, alleging that citations and condemnations were in retaliation for constitutionally protected activity such as filing lawsuits; finding in plaintiffs' favor would not disrupt function of local government. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Federal Courts 48

Abstention by federal court based on Colorado River doctrine was not appropriate where issues in actions brought against city and county for personal injuries and death that resulted from decision to pursue suspect fleeing police at high speed were severable, and all defendants potentially involved in the § 1983 suit were included in the federal complaint, and so risk was negated that adjudicating the § 1983 claims and attendant state law claims against the municipal defendants would result in piecemeal or incomplete relief; plaintiffs had legitimate reasons to file in state court as well as in federal court and so suits were not repetitive, where filing of state lawsuits might have been made to protect plaintiffs' interests under state law provisions. Epps v. Lauderdale County, W.D.Tenn.2000, 139 F.Supp.2d 859. Federal Courts 47.1; Federal Courts 48; Federal Courts 56

Federal district court was not required, under Younger abstention doctrine, to abstain from considering claim that municipality was violating civil rights of bakery owner when using regulatory power to deny territorial expansion of building, in deference to appeals of zoning board decisions being considered in state court; there was lack of interference, as federal action was challenging use of zoning ordinances for improper purpose, rather than validity of ordinances or outcomes reached through their application. Pellegrino Food Products Co., Inc. v. City of Warren, W.D.Pa.2000, 136 F.Supp.2d 391. Federal Courts 56

District court would abstain under Colorado River from deciding § 1983 case arising from police officer's termination pending disposition of parallel state court action; although state court had not assumed jurisdiction over property federal forum was inconvenient to village, interpretation of federal constitutional law would be required, removal of state action was not available, and federal claim did not appear to be vexatious or contrived, state proceeding had progressed further than federal proceeding, concurrent jurisdiction existed over § 1983 action, state court action was adequate to protect officer's federal rights, and state action could preclude need for further proceedings in federal court. Ericksen v. Village of Willow Springs, N.D.Ill.1995, 876 F.Supp. 951. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention was warranted, in parents' § 1983 action alleging state social services agency's interference in their relationship with daughter; agency had filed petition in state court alleging parents' obstruction of investigation of inappropriate discipline charge, and parents' claims could be raised in that forum. Renn By and Through Renn v. Garrison, E.D.N.C.1994, 845 F.Supp. 1127. Federal Courts 48

Abstention was appropriate where condominium owner's taking and civil rights claims were pending in state court and state proceeding implicated important state interests and afforded owner adequate opportunity to raise his federal claims; therefore, in light of principles of comity and interests of judicial economy, owner's complaint against city manager would be dismissed and not remanded. Belair v. Lombardi, M.D.Fla.1993, 828 F.Supp. 50, clarified on other grounds 151 F.R.D. 698.

Younger abstention was appropriate in § 1983 suit brought by developer alleging violation of substantive due process and "takings" clause of Federal and State Constitutions, arising from decision of county prohibiting developer from building commercial building within setback area on his property; developer had separate action pending in state court, state proceedings implicated important state interests in land use planning, and developer would have adequate opportunity in state court to litigate constitutional issues. Rodrigues v. County of Hawaii, D.Hawai'i 1993, 823 F.Supp. 798. Federal Courts 47.1

Younger abstention was proper in § 1983 civil rights action by prisoner claiming that state law enforcement officials, attorneys, and judges conspired to systematically and deliberately deprive prisoner of constitutional rights in an attempt to induce prisoner to plead guilty in the state criminal proceeding; it was not role of federal district court to supervise state criminal prosecution. Kramer v. Metro-Dade Corrections and Rehabilitation Dept., S.D.Fla.1993, 822 F.Supp. 1572. Federal Courts 48

In mother's action against city foster care officials based on alleged sexual abuse of her children while in foster care, Younger abstention applied to mother's claim that officials violated her constitutional liberty interest in custody and visitation of her children after her parental rights were terminated and claim that officials violated childrens' constitutional liberty interests in maintaining relations with mother after her parental rights were terminated; adjudication of such claims would have required court to address questions pending before state family court. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Federal Courts 48

Dismissal of federal lawsuit brought by mobile home park owner challenging city mobile home rent control ordinance was warranted on Younger grounds; there was ongoing state lawsuit covering same question which had been commenced 16 months previously, while federal suit was only four and one-half months old, development of state regulatory scheme was an important state interest, and owner had adequate opportunity to raise federal claims in state proceeding. Mission Oaks Mobile Home Park v. City of Hollister, N.D.Cal.1992, 788 F.Supp. 1117, affirmed 989 F.2d 359, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1052, 510 U.S. 1110, 127 L.Ed.2d 373. Abatement And Revival 12

Younger abstention was appropriate with regard to claims for declaratory and injunctive relief asserted by plaintiffs who brought suit challenging denial of permits to operate adult entertainment establishment, considering that there was a pending criminal prosecution of plaintiffs in state court, the state proceeding implicated important state interest in controlling through zoning the negative effects of adult entertainment establishments, and the state proceedings afforded an adequate opportunity for plaintiffs to raise their federal claims. Lui v. Commission on Adult Entertainment Establishments of State of Delaware, D.Del.2003, 213 F.R.D. 166, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 369 F.3d 319, on remand 2004 WL 1635526. Federal Courts 51; Federal Courts 54

Younger abstention was warranted in physician's §§ 1983 actions against members of state disciplinary board and state agency alleging improper conspiracy to deprive him of his license, where state disciplinary proceeding was pending, proceeding was judicial in nature, proceeding implicated important state interest of assuring professional conduct of physicians, board's final decision was subject to review in state court, and there was no evidence of bad faith. Suster v. Jefferson-Moore, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 87, 2004 WL 2828948, Unreported. Federal Courts 55

Dismissal of pretrial detainee's pro se § 1983 action against various county officials, alleging violation of his constitutional rights in the course of his criminal prosecution, was warranted, pursuant to Younger abstention doctrine, where state criminal proceeding was pending against detainee, in which state had important interest, and during which detainee would have adequate opportunity to raise his constitutional claims. Peterson v. Contra Costa County Superior Court, N.D.Cal.2004, 2004 WL 443457, Unreported. Federal Courts 50

Proper forum for pretrial detainee's § 1983 claims involving restrictions on his telephone, mail, and visitation privileges was his state criminal case, rather than the federal district court; detainee was still an active litigant. Lee v. Bernard, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 62 Fed.Appx. 670, 2003 WL 1796012, Unreported, on remand 2004 WL 2973779. Courts 493(2)

If criminal charges resulting from defendants' allegedly unlawful conduct were still pending against state prisoner, he had no § 1983 claim against them, inasmuch as federal court could not intervene in ongoing criminal proceedings absent the most extraordinary circumstances and clear showing of great and immediate harm. Peralta v. Leavitt, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 56 Fed.Appx. 534, 2003 WL 151262, Unreported. Courts 508(7)

Younger abstention was warranted in attorney's § 1983 action against participants in on-going state disciplinary proceedings. Brooks v. New York State Supreme Court, Appellate Div. First Dept., E.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL

31528632, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 356, 2003 WL 21961174. Federal Courts 48

Younger abstention was warranted, in § 1983 lawsuit brought by custodial parents of minor children who sought prospective declaratory relief against judge of county domestic relations court, on allegations that ex parte custody procedures followed by judge violated their due process rights, since state court proceeding was pending, important state interest was involved, and constitutional claims asserted by parents could be raised both in state court and by way of appeal once final order was issued. Butterfield v. Steiner, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31159304, Unreported. Federal Courts 51

4273. ---- Unsettled state law, considerations governing, abstention

District court properly applied Pullman abstention doctrine when declining to consider claim that amendment to state employment discrimination statute to prohibit discrimination based on "affectional and sexual orientation," as applied, violated First Amendment rights of claimants asserting that their religion compelled opposition to homosexuality; state law as to whether claimants might have aider and abettor liability under statute was unclear, state courts could construe such liability so as not to conflict with activities claimed to be protected by First Amendment, substantially narrowing scope of federal constitutional claim, and if federal courts were to erroneously conclude that aider and abettor provisions violated claimants' First Amendment rights, decision might eviscerate aiding and abetting provision as it applied to other types of discrimination prohibitions, such as those involving race, gender and creed, thus disrupting important state antidiscrimination policies. Presbytery of New Jersey of the Orthodox Presbyterian Church v. Whitman, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 99 F.3d 101, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1334, 520 U.S. 1155, 137 L.Ed.2d 494. Federal Courts 53

Court of Appeals would not apply Pullman abstention to avoid considering ranchers' takings claim against Wyoming Game and Fish Commission concerning licensing limits on right to hunt surplus game on ranchers' land even though state had not addressed existence of property right to hunt, in light of constitutionality of licensing limits, reasonableness of property right to hunt, failure of state to argue for abstention, delay that would result form abstention, and Court's obligation to consider constitutional claims brought under § 1983. Clajon Production Corp. v. Petera, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1995, 70 F.3d 1566. Federal Courts 47.1

To warrant Pullman abstention, there must be a substantial uncertainty over the meaning of the state law at issue and reasonable possibility that state court's clarification of rule will obviate need for a federal constitutional ruling; when federal claim is entangled with complicated unresolved state law questions, abstention is inappropriate. Rivera-Puig v. Garcia-Rosario, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 983 F.2d 311. Federal Courts 46

Court of Appeals abstained from determining whether school district's refusal to mail various notices to father, who had joint legal custody of children with mother under separation agreement, violated father's due process right to control his children's upbringing, in that father, in effect, asked Court to relieve mother of duties which New York courts had continuing power to modify or enforce, New York law would be controlling on the issues, and claim involved emerging body of law insofar as it related to relationships among joint custodial divorced parents, their children, and children's educators. Fay v. South Colonie Cent. School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1986, 802 F.2d 21. Federal Courts 62

Where question of whether teacher had a substantive property interest in continued employment sufficient to trigger procedural protections of due process depended upon whether R.S.Supp.Neb.1976, § 79-1254 was to be given retroactive effect and where statute was subject to two interpretations and where there was pending in the state Supreme Court a case involving the same factual situation, federal court would abstain from resolving the teacher's claim until such time as the state Supreme Court decision became final. Easter v. Olson, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1977, 552 F.2d 252. Federal Courts 48

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Although, because complaint's due process allegations were not wholly insubstantial or frivolous, federal court had jurisdiction of local district attorney's civil rights suit seeking to enjoin state district judge, alleged to be prejudiced against the district attorney, from presiding at an inquiry into the district attorney's conduct of office, the case was an appropriate one for application of the abstention principle, since the case turned on an unsettled question of Texas law that was important because its solution might make any determination of the federal constitutional claim unnecessary and because it went directly to the state's interest in enforcing the integrity of its judicial process. Neal v. Brim, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 506 F.2d 6. Federal Courts 54

Federal court should abstain if decision concerning question of state law is necessary to disposition of case and answer to state question involves unclear state law or matter of paramount interest to state, but if such factors are not present in suit, it is not enough to justify abstention that state courts are as competent to decide federal questions as are federal-courts. Gere v. Stanley, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 453 F.2d 205. Federal Courts 43

Pullman abstention requires three essential conditions: that state statute be unclear, that resolution of federal issue depends upon interpretation to be given to state law, and that state law is susceptible of interpretation that would avoid or modify federal constitutional issue. Winters v. Meyer, S.D.N.Y.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 82. Federal Courts 46

Abstention was not warranted, pursuant to Pullman doctrine, as to action brought by employee pursuant to §§ 1983 against Secretary of Wisconsin Department of Revenue in which he alleged that demotion from chief legal counsel to attorney without pre-deprivation hearing violated his Fourteenth Amendment right to procedural due process; doctrine was not applicable because clarification of state law was not at issue, nor was a state court involved. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2003, 304 F.Supp.2d 1100. Federal Courts 58

Abstention under Pullman doctrine was not warranted, in § 1983 lawsuit brought by intravenous drug users under Fourth Amendment, who participated in state authorized needle exchange programs (NEPs), against city, police department, and police officers, alleging that police targeted NEP members for arrest, even though issue in case had not been considered by New York state courts; statutes and regulation governing issue were straightforward and mandated one reading, federal court did not have option of certifying to New York Court of Appeals, and since there was no related case pending in state courts, delay that would have resulted counseled against abstention. Roe v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 240. Federal Courts 48

Pullman abstention was appropriate in landowners' § 1983 action claiming that county's rejection of permit for alternative discharging sewage system violated Virginia and Federal Constitutions and Virginia statutes; issues raised required interpretation of unsettled state law and policy in area of sewage disposal and case could be disposed of by resolving state law questions without resort to adjudication of federal constitutional issues. Graham v. County of Albemarle, W.D.Va.1993, 826 F.Supp. 167, affirmed as modified on other grounds 19 F.3d 11. Federal Courts 48

Neither Pullman nor Burford abstention was appropriate in civil rights action brought by landowners challenging zoning change to allow construction of electric power substation where there were no uncertain issues of state law, no difficult questions of state law, and exercise of federal review would not disrupt state efforts to establish a coherent zoning policy because each county had its own zoning law. MacNamara v. County Council of Sussex County, D.Del.1990, 738 F.Supp. 134, affirmed 922 F.2d 832. Federal Courts 48

Abstention by federal district court was not warranted in action by school superintendents challenging on due process and equal protection grounds state legislation creating incentives for early retirement by certain state employees and excluding the superintendents from that class, where the statutes were clear and not fairly susceptible to any interpretation other than that asserted by plaintiffs, and retaining jurisdiction would have negligible impact on the operations of the state. Haley v. Hall, E.D.Ark.1990, 733 F.Supp. 1275. Federal Courts 62

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Federal district court had right, and perhaps obligation, to sua sponte consider whether abstention was proper in § 1983 action challenging validity of Connecticut Hunter Harassment Act, an issue which had not been litigated in Connecticut's state courts. Dorman v. Satti, D.Conn.1988, 678 F.Supp. 375, affirmed 862 F.2d 432, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 2450, 490 U.S. 1099, 104 L.Ed.2d 1005. Federal Courts 65

4274. Effect of abstention order

A party remitted to state court by an abstention order of a federal court has right to return to federal district court, for determination of his federal constitutional claims, after the authoritative state ruling has been obtained. Arrow v. Dow, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1980, 636 F.2d 287, on remand 544 F.Supp. 458. Federal Courts 65

If party files a suit under this section in federal court challenging constitutionality of a state statute and court abstains to permit state courts to initially interpret statute, litigant may return to federal forum to continue his attack after state ruling is made. Thistlethwaite v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1973, 362 F.Supp. 88, affirmed 497 F.2d 339, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 686, 419 U.S. 1093, 42 L.Ed.2d 686. Courts 491

4275. Lifting of abstention order

See, also, Notes of Decisions under section 1343 of Title 28.

District court would continue to abstain from exercising jurisdiction over federal civil rights challenge to Puerto Rican mayoral candidate's election; although passage of time was factor to be considered, fact that local action in election case was still pending after more than six months did not justify lifting abstention order. Granados Navedo v. Acevedo, D.Puerto Rico 1989, 717 F.Supp. 34. Federal Courts 52

City police chief could not be held individually liable under § 1983 for injuries arising from arresting officers' alleged use of excessive force, where chief did not personally participate in arrestee's arrest or prosecution, did not exercise any immediate supervision or control over arresting officers, and did not knowingly acquiesce in unlawful conduct on part of those, or any other, officers that served to violate arrestee's constitutional rights. Fitzpatrick v. Gates, C.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22385397, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

4301. Exhaustion of remedies generally

An action under this section is free of requirements of exhaustion of state judicial or administrative remedies. Ellis v. Dyson, U.S.Tex.1975, 95 S.Ct. 1691, 421 U.S. 426, 44 L.Ed.2d 274, on remand 518 F.2d 553. See, also, Katris v. City of Waukegan, N.D.Ill.1980, 498 F.Supp. 48; Ledet v. Fischer, M.D.La.1982, 548 F.Supp. 775. Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

There was no requirement that plaintiffs first exhaust state remedies before bringing federal claims under this section to federal court. Allee v. Medrano, U.S.Tex.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2191, 416 U.S. 802, 40 L.Ed.2d 566. See, also, Meyer v. Frank, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 550 F.2d 726, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 112, 434 U.S. 830, 54 L.Ed.2d 90; Redhail v. Zablocki, D.C.Wis.1976, 418 F.Supp. 1061, affirmed 98 S.Ct. 673, 434 U.S. 374, 54 L.Ed.2d 618; Pyles v. Keane, D.C.N.Y.1976, 418 F.Supp. 269; Roe v. Ray, D.C.Iowa 1976, 407 F.Supp. 351, affirmed 551 F.2d 241; Tonwal Realties, Inc. v. Beame, D.C.N.Y.1976, 406 F.Supp. 363; Watters v. Parrish, D.C.Va.1975, 402 F.Supp. 696; Lopez v. Williams, D.C.Ohio 1973, 372 F.Supp. 1279, affirmed 95 S.Ct. 729, 419 U.S. 565, 42 L.Ed.2d 725. Civil Rights 1315

A prisoner must exhaust his or her administrative remedies prior to filing a claim under § 1983. Richardson v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 347 F.3d 431. Civil Rights 1311

Rule that exhaustion of state administrative remedies is generally not required prior to bringing § 1983 action in federal court is subject to exception where Congress explicitly provides that state administrative remedies must be exhausted before bringing suit under particular federal law pursuant to § 1983 and where Congress implicitly requires exhaustion of state administrative remedies such that obligation to require exhaustion of administrative remedies may be fairly understood from congressional action. Talbot v. Lucy Corr Nursing Home, C.A.4 (Va.) 1997, 118 F.3d 215. Civil Rights 1316

Civil rights plaintiff is normally not required to exhaust his administrative or judicial remedies. Greene v. Meese, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1989, 875 F.2d 639. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1307; Civil Rights 1308

No exhaustion requirement exists before bringing lawsuit pursuant to § 1983 which prohibits deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Majette v. O'Connor, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1987, 811 F.2d 1416. Civil Rights 1315

Federal courts may not require exhaustion of state administrative or judicial remedies as a prerequisite to maintaining suit under this section to recover damages for deprivation of a constitutional right. Ehlers v. City of Decatur, Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 614 F.2d 54. Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

Doctrine of exhaustion of remedies is usually inapplicable in an action brought pursuant to this section governing deprivation of civil rights. Spence v. Latting, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1975, 512 F.2d 93, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 198, 423 U.S. 896, 46 L.Ed.2d 129. Civil Rights 1315

A plaintiff need not exhaust state administrative remedies before filing suit in federal court under § 1983. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. Civil Rights 1316

Plaintiffs ordinarily need not exhaust administrative remedies before filing suit under § 1983. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1308

A § 1983 plaintiff is not required to exhaust state administrative or legal remedies before proceeding to court. Middlebrooks v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 970 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

No exhaustion requirement exists with respect to claims arising under § 1983. Kelly v. Borough of Sayreville, D.N.J.1996, 927 F.Supp. 797, affirmed 107 F.3d 1073. Civil Rights 1307

There is no requirement of administrative or judicial exhaustion in § 1983 cases. Van Harken v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1182, affirmed as modified 103 F.3d 1346, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1846, 520 U.S. 1241, 137 L.Ed.2d 1049. Civil Rights 1308

Section 1983 generally allows plaintiffs with federal or constitutional claims the right to sue in federal court without first resorting to state judicial remedies or state administrative remedies. Marshall v. Switzer, N.D.N.Y.1995, 900 F.Supp. 604. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

Because substantive due process is violated at the moment harm occurs, the existence of postdeprivation state remedies does not bar a federal civil rights action based on violation of substantive due process under color of state law. Arroyo Vista Partners v. County of Santa Barbara, C.D.Cal.1990, 732 F.Supp. 1046. Civil Rights 1315

4302. Supplementary nature of section, exhaustion of remedies

Federal remedy provided under this section is intended to supplement state remedies so that the latter need not be exhausted before the former is invoked. Walker v. Wegner, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1980, 624 F.2d 60. Civil Rights 1315

As a supplemental federal remedy, this section prohibiting deprivation of civil rights under color of state law gives plaintiffs right to seek relief for violations of a constitutional right despite existence or nonexistence of a state remedy; general rule in such cases is that exhaustion of remedies is not required. Carder v. Michigan City School Corp., N.D.Ind.1982, 552 F.Supp. 869. Civil Rights 1315

A forum state's remedy for violation of a specific substantive constitutional guaranty does not deprive a plaintiff of a federal claim in that the federal remedy is supplementary to the state remedy where the claim concerns a right secured by the U.S.C.A.Const. or federal laws other than the due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 14. Holmes v. Wampler, E.D.Va.1982, 546 F.Supp. 500. Courts 489(1)

Although the federal remedy under this section is supplementary to the state remedy and the latter need not be first sought and refused before the federal one is invoked, a federal court is not prohibited from requiring such plaintiff to exhaust administrative remedies. Adams v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1980, 491 F.Supp. 1257. Civil Rights 1316

Federal remedy for vindication of civil rights deprivations is supplemental to any state remedies, and exhaustion of state administrative remedies is not prerequisite to exercise of federal jurisdiction under this section. Morales v. Vega, D.C.Puerto Rico 1978, 461 F.Supp. 656, affirmed 604 F.2d 730. Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

Federal remedy under this section is supplementary to state remedy and latter need not be first sought and refused before federal one is invoked. Ruffler v. Phelps Memorial Hospital, S.D.N.Y.1978, 453 F.Supp. 1062. Civil Rights 1315

General rule is that there is no need to exhaust possible state remedies before pursuing civil rights action in federal court; federal remedy is supplementary to state remedy, and latter need not be first sought and refused before federal one is invoked. Snyder v. Altman, C.D.Cal.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1269. Civil Rights 1315

Suits under this section are generally excepted from rule that litigant must exhaust available and adequate state administrative remedies before seeking relief in federal courts, since remedy afforded by this section is supplementary to state remedy. David Gonzalez v. Calero, D.C.Puerto Rico 1977, 440 F.Supp. 989. Civil Rights 1316

4303. Judicial remedies, exhaustion of remedies

Exhaustion of state judicial remedies is not a prerequisite to adjudication of claims under this section. Swan v. Stoneman, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1980, 635 F.2d 97.

There is no need for a plaintiff to present a claim to the state courts before raising the same claim in a civil action for deprivation of rights. Drexler v. Southwest Dubois School Corp., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1974, 504 F.2d 836. Civil Rights 1315

A plaintiff asserting a constitutional claim normally is not required to exhaust similar state judicial remedies before resorting to federal courts. Almenares v. Wyman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 453 F.2d 1075, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 962, 405 U.S. 944, 30 L.Ed.2d 815. Federal Courts 171

In civil rights action, plaintiff is not required to exhaust state judicial remedies. Bally Mfg. Corp. v. Casino Control Commission of New Jersey, D.C.N.J.1982, 534 F.Supp. 1213. Civil Rights 1315

Exhaustion of state judicial remedies is not required of plaintiff in action brought under this section, since Congress' intent was to provide such persons with alternate forum for vindication of their constitutional rights. Clark v. Lutcher, M.D.Pa.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1266. Civil Rights 1315

Federal court not only may but has the obligation, with certain exceptions, to adjudicate claimed violations of constitutional rights brought pursuant to this section without requiring plaintiff to initially exhaust state judicial remedies. Cicero v. Olgiati, S.D.N.Y.1976, 410 F.Supp. 1080, motion denied 426 F.Supp. 1210, motion denied 426 F.Supp. 1213. Civil Rights 1315

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4304. Administrative remedies, exhaustion of remedies

There is no general or automatic requirement of administrative exhaustion of remedies as prerequisite to filing of case under this section but there must be ripeness to the extent that there must be at least some definitive administrative or institutional determination before an action may arise; contrary decisions disapproved. Raper v. Lucey, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1973, 488 F.2d 748. Civil Rights 1316

Administrative remedies need not be sought if they are inadequate or are applied in such a manner as in effect deny a person his rights thereunder. McCoy v. Greensboro City Bd. of Ed., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1960, 283 F.2d 667. Administrative Law And Procedure 228.1

Inmate's § 1983 claim, that West Virginia Department of Corrections policy prohibiting inmates from receiving or possessing obscene material violated First and Fourteenth Amendments as applied in purge of prison library of materials containing allegedly sexually arousing passages, was dismissed; inmate failed to exhaust his administrative remedies for the claim. Cline v. Fox, N.D.W.Va.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 489, reconsideration granted in part 282 F.Supp.2d 490, on reconsideration in part 319 F.Supp.2d 685. Civil Rights 209

Administrative exhaustion, as required by IDEA, is necessary even where plaintiffs seek only monetary damages under § 1983. Frazier v. Fairhaven School Committee, D.Mass.2000, 122 F.Supp.2d 104, affirmed 276 F.3d 52. Schools 155.5(3)

Exhaustion of unreviewed administrative remedies is not required before bringing § 1983 claim. Merritt v. Brantley, S.D.Ga.1996, 936 F.Supp. 988. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1308

Section 1983 does not require filing with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). Regenbogen v. Mustille, N.D.N.Y.1995, 908 F.Supp. 1101. Civil Rights 1302

Administrative hearing before hearing officer would have been inadequate to remedy claims of mental health advocacy center concerning conditions at mental health facility as hearing officer lacked jurisdiction to hear advocacy organization's constitutional claims; as a result, organization was not required to exhaust administrative remedy before bringing federal civil rights action. Gonzalez v. Martinez, S.D.Fla.1991, 756 F.Supp. 1533.

Where an action brought under this section which provides a cause of action to any person who under color of state law is deprived of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution or federal law is brought for vindication of rights under federal provision which contains its own administrative remedies, exhaustion of those administrative remedies, if they are adequate, is required. Ryans v. New Jersey Com'n For The Blind and Visually Impaired, D.C.N.J.1982, 542 F.Supp. 841. Civil Rights 1308

Where constitutional claims are brought under this section, there is no general requirement of exhaustion of administrative remedies. Kinzli v. City of Santa Cruz, N.D.Cal.1982, 539 F.Supp. 887. Civil Rights 1316

In action under this section exhaustion of administrative remedies was not required. Lawson v. Brown, W.D.Va.1972, 349 F.Supp. 203. See, also, Thompson v. Southwest School Dist., W.D.Mo.1980, 483 F.Supp. 1170; McKenna v. Fargo, D.C.N.J.1978, 451 F.Supp. 1355, affirmed 601 F.2d 575; Turano v. Board of Ed. of Island Trees Union Free School Dist. No. 26, D.C.N.Y.1976, 411 F.Supp. 205; Gill v. Monroe County Dept. of Social Services, D.C.N.Y.1978, 79 F.R.D. 316, motion to decertify class denied 95 F.R.D. 518. Civil Rights 1316

Action may be brought under this section without exhaustion of administrative remedies. Craddock v. Hill, W.D.Mo.1970, 324 F.Supp. 183. See, also, McClelland v. Sigler, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1972, 456 F.2d 1266; Cook v. Edwards, D.C.N.H.1972, 341 F.Supp. 307; Sullivan v. Houston Independent School Dist., D.C.Tex.1969, 307

F.Supp. 1328, supplemented 353 F.Supp. 1149, vacated on other grounds 475 F.2d 1071, rehearing denied 475 F.2d 1404, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 461, 414 U.S. 1032, 38 L.Ed.2d 323.

State prison inmate sufficiently exhausted his administrative remedies before suing under § 1983 even though his prison complaint alleging retaliation by prison employee did not clearly allege that employee had locked him up in retaliation for filing a complaint, where the complaint alerted the prison to the nature of the wrong for which redress was sought by alleging that employee wrongly placed inmate in temporary lockup because another employee had read his earlier complaint; although inmate did not specifically allege employee's retaliatory motive, the complaint alerted the prison to the alleged wrongdoing. Charles v. Reichel, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 950, 2003 WL 21377500, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

City prison inmates were not required to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing § 1983 class action alleging that city department of correction (DOC), city board of education, and state department of education had not provided them with educational services to which they were entitled under federal and state law, where DOC did not have jurisdiction to address failure to provide educational services to city prison inmates. Handberry v. Thompson, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 194205, Unreported, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 436 F.3d 52, opinion amended on rehearing 446 F.3d 335. Civil Rights 1319

Pursuant to the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), inmate's failure to exhaust his administrative remedies deprived the court of subject matter jurisdiction over the inmate's § 1983 suit against officers at a county correctional facility, despite his claims that his stay at the facility was too short for him to have initiated any grievance procedure, that he was never advised by any staff member of any grievance program or procedure, and that the grievance procedure would have been futile. Paulino v. Amicucci, Warden Westchester County Jail, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 174303, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

4305. State administrative remedies, exhaustion of remedies

Availability of state administrative procedures ordinarily does not foreclose resort to § 1983. Wilder v. Virginia Hosp. Ass'n, U.S.Va.1990, 110 S.Ct. 2510, 496 U.S. 498, 110 L.Ed.2d 455. Civil Rights 1316

Exhaustion of state administrative remedies was not prerequisite to action under Civil Rights Act of 1871. Patsy v. Board of Regents of State of Fla., U.S.Fla.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2557, 457 U.S. 496, 73 L.Ed.2d 172, on remand 693 F.2d 558. Civil Rights 1316

In determining whether exhaustion of state administrative remedies is required, initial question should be answered by reference to congressional intent and courts should not defer exercise of jurisdiction under federal statute unless it is consistent with that intent. Patsy v. Board of Regents of State of Fla., U.S.Fla.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2557, 457 U.S. 496, 73 L.Ed.2d 172, on remand 693 F.2d 558. Civil Rights 1316

Administrative remedies remained "available" to state prisoner who claimed that prison guards violated his constitutional rights by beating him without provocation and then refusing to provide medical care for injuries they inflicted, even though prison's administrative review board took six months to decide prisoner's appeal from denial of his grievance despite aspirational prison regulation providing for decision within 60 days "whenever possible," and thus, under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prisoner could not bring suit under § 1983 until after board issued its decision. Ford v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 362 F.3d 395. Civil Rights 1319

Mere provision of state administrative remedies is not enough to demonstrate implicit Congressional intent to impose exhaustion requirement on plaintiff seeking to bring § 1983 action. Talbot v. Lucy Corr Nursing Home, C.A.4 (Va.) 1997, 118 F.3d 215. Civil Rights 1316

Exhaustion of state administrative remedies is not ordinarily a prerequisite to commencing a § 1983 action.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Virginia Hosp. Ass'n v. Baliles, C.A.4 (Va.) 1989, 868 F.2d 653, rehearing denied, certiorari granted in part 110 S.Ct. 49, 493 U.S. 808, 107 L.Ed.2d 18, affirmed 110 S.Ct. 2510, 496 U.S. 498, 110 L.Ed.2d 455. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1316

The plaintiff who brings action against state under this section for alleged deprivation, under color of state law, of right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution and laws is not required to exhaust available state administrative remedies before bringing federal lawsuit no matter what state administrative avenues for relief are open to him. Beale v. Blount, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1972, 461 F.2d 1133. Civil Rights 1316

Plaintiff with a claim for relief under this section is not required to exhaust state judicial remedies but must exhaust state administrative remedies. James v. Board of Ed. of Central Dist. No. 1 of Towns of Addison et al., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 461 F.2d 566, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 529, 409 U.S. 1042, 34 L.Ed.2d 491, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 1355, 410 U.S. 947, 35 L.Ed.2d 617, on remand 385 F.Supp. 209. Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

Section 1983 plaintiff is not required to exhaust state administrative remedies before bringing her claim. Winters v. Meyer, S.D.N.Y.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 82. Civil Rights 1316

In order for there to be a requirement that a plaintiff exhaust state administrative remedies before a federal court may entertain a civil rights suit, it must be first shown that certain minimum conditions have been met before resorting to state remedies can be made a prerequisite to proceeding under this section. Shinholster v. Graham, N.D.Fla.1981, 527 F.Supp. 1318. Civil Rights 1316

District court would entertain suit brought under this section despite plaintiff's failure to exhaust adequate state administrative remedies, in view of fact that defendants never raised issue of exhaustion and exhaustion of such remedies is nonjurisdictional. Dulany v. Board of School Com'rs of Mobile County, S.D.Ala.1981, 512 F.Supp. 685. Civil Rights 1316

4306. Discretion of court, exhaustion of remedies

A person who alleges a violation of civil rights under color of state law is not required to exhaust existing state remedies prior to prosecuting an action in federal court, but this does not mean that in every case a district court must exercise its jurisdiction prior to filing of a suit in a state of concurrent jurisdiction, especially where strands of local law are so woven into case as to require their untangling prior to exercise of federal jurisdiction. Cornist v. Highland Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1971, 448 F.2d 594. Civil Rights 1315

Unless statutorily mandated, application of exhaustion doctrine to § 1983 claims is not jurisdictional requirement, but within discretion of district court. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1307

4307. State remedies generally, exhaustion of remedies

In general, exhaustion of state remedies is not prerequisite to action under § 1983, even in action by state prisoner. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1319

Relief under this section may not be defeated because relief was not first sought under state law which provides a remedy. McNeese v. Board of Ed. for Community Unit School Dist. 187, Cahokia, Ill., U.S.Ill.1963, 83 S.Ct. 1433, 373 U.S. 668, 10 L.Ed.2d 622. See, also, Monroe v. Pape, Ill.1961, 81 S.Ct. 473, 365 U.S. 167, 5 L.Ed.2d 492; Friedlander v. Cimino, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 520 F.2d 318; Scott v. Vandiver, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1973, 476 F.2d 238; Lynch v. Snepp, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1973, 472 F.2d 769, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1576, 415 U.S. 983, 39 L.Ed.2d 880; Russo v. Central School Dist. No. 1, Towns of Rush, Et Al., Monroe County, State of N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.)

1972, 469 F.2d 623, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 1899, 411 U.S. 932, 36 L.Ed.2d 391; Toney v. Reagan, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1972, 467 F.2d 953, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 951, 409 U.S. 1130, 35 L.Ed.2d 263; Padilla v. Ackerman, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1972, 460 F.2d 477; Corby v. Conboy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 457 F.2d 251; Jones v. Metzger, 1972, 456 F.2d 854; Hayes v. Secretary of Dept. of Public Safety, C.A.4 (Md.) 1972, 455 F.2d 798. Civil Rights 1315

Section 1983 does not require that plaintiffs exhaust state remedies. Veterans Legal Defense Fund v. Schwartz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 330 F.3d 937. Civil Rights 1315

Retired state employee was not required to exhaust his state administrative remedies prior to bringing § 1983 suit against Oklahoma Public Employees Retirement System (OPERS), challenging state's forfeiture of most of his pension as result of his conviction for bribery; exhaustion was not required for suits under § 1983, and, in any event, Oklahoma's administrative exhaustion doctrine applied only when litigant sought "review of agency decisions," while employee was challenging constitutionality of pension forfeiture statute itself. Hopkins v. Oklahoma Public Employees Retirement System, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1998, 150 F.3d 1155. Civil Rights 1320

Medicare Act's explicit requirement that federal administrative remedies be exhausted before Medicare recipient may bring claim contesting determination of entitlement to benefits did not bar former nursing home resident's § 1983 action which sought damages for nursing home's alleged violation of statutory resident rights provisions even though resident failed to exhaust state administrative remedies. Talbot v. Lucy Corr Nursing Home, C.A.4 (Va.) 1997, 118 F.3d 215. Civil Rights 1321

Electric membership corporations failed to state § 1983 claims against Georgia Department of Corrections officials for procedural due process violations, arising from award of contracts to electric utility for provision of electric service to new prison, alleging that officials violated state law competitive bidding requirements and deprived corporations of property right; procedural due process claims were not ripe for review, as state had provided at least one vehicle for bringing action in state court for appropriate relief for bidding requirement violation, and corporations had not brought such state court actions. Flint Elec. Membership Corp. v. Whitworth, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1309, modified 77 F.3d 1321. Civil Rights 1318; Civil Rights 1321

Members of airport authority alleging that they had been improperly dismissed by city mayor were not entitled to relief in federal court based upon deprivation of their due process rights, even though they had established a property interest in their positions; due process of law was available to them to obtain remedy for alleged wrong through quo warranto proceeding in state court. Thornton v. Barnes, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1989, 890 F.2d 1380. Aviation 222; Constitutional Law 278.4(5)

Availability of state tort remedies for state officials' failure to follow established eviction procedures precluded § 1983 claims and satisfied requirements of procedural due process. Reese v. Kennedy, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1989, 865 F.2d 186. Civil Rights 1318

Availability of state remedy did not defeat teacher's claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 that failure to provide her with notice and opportunity to be heard concerning negative evaluation prior to school district's decision to bypass her and to remove her from eligibility list deprived her of procedural due process. Stana v. School Dist. of City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1985, 775 F.2d 122. Civil Rights 1320

In view of fact that there were available remedies under state law for recovery of damages for property improperly seized, even though intentionally seized by authorities, recovery could not be had in a claim under this section. Coney v. Smith, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1984, 738 F.2d 1199. Civil Rights 1319

When action is brought under this section raising federal constitutional claims, prior resort to state courts is not required even where there may be an available state remedy; there is no doctrine of exhaustion of state remedies applicable to the civil rights jurisdiction of the federal courts. Conover v. Montemuro, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 477 F.2d

1073. Civil Rights 1315

Section 1983 claim based on alleged taking without just compensation in violation of Fifth Amendment is not ripe for review if state offers cause of action such as inverse condemnation and plaintiff has not pursued such action. McCormack Sand Co. v. Town of North Hempstead Solid Waste Management Authority, E.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 589. Civil Rights 1318

Availability of remedy in courts of Kansas for failure to award state contract to lowest bidder as required by statute did not foreclose lowest bidder from bringing section 1983 action, inasmuch as there was no general exhaustion of state remedies requirement, at least when alternative state remedy was through court-ordered injunctive relief as opposed to being step in administrative process that denied plaintiff his property interest in first place. Andersen-Myers Co., Inc. v. Roach, D.Kan.1987, 660 F.Supp. 106. Civil Rights 1318; Civil Rights 1321

Police officer who was allegedly deprived of procedural due process when he was demoted without notice or hearing could not maintain civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 in view of available state postdeprivation remedies. Gresham v. Dell, N.D.Ga.1986, 630 F.Supp. 1135. Civil Rights 1320

Federal district court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over parent's § 1983 challenge to decision of state family court, directing plaintiff to attend counseling or lose his unsupervised visitation sessions with his child; to challenge constitutionality of such determination, parent was required to appeal it through state appellate courts before seeking federal review, not in federal district court, but in United States Supreme Court. Conway v. Garvey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22510384, Unreported, affirmed 117 Fed.Appx. 792, 2004 WL 2786380. Courts 509; Federal Courts 1142

4308. Adequacy of remedies, exhaustion of remedies

As relating to inmate's allegation that prison officer's intentional destruction of his property violated his due process rights, fact that he might not have been able to recover under available state remedies full amount which he might have received in a civil rights action under federal law was not determinative of adequacy of the state remedies. Hudson v. Palmer, U.S.Va.1984, 104 S.Ct. 3194, 468 U.S. 517, 82 L.Ed.2d 393, on remand 744 F.2d 22 . Civil Rights 1319

Landlords' failure to plead and prove inadequacy of their state and administrative court remedies to protest city's practices of holding them liable for their tenants' delinquent water bills barred their procedural due process claim under § 1983; city water division regulations provided landlords with right to hearing regarding their objections to water bills, landlords could appeal any decision resulting from those hearings to court of common pleas and in fact, record contained examples of disputes that had been settled in common pleas court, and landlords had several self-help remedies at their disposal, such as inquiring whether tenant had any delinquencies before releasing security deposit or evicting tenant. Mansfield Apartment Owners Ass'n v. City of Mansfield, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 988 F.2d 1469. Civil Rights 1318

When state remedies are adequate to protect individual's due process rights, federal deprivation of civil rights action alleging violation of those rights will not stand. Brogan v. San Mateo County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 901 F.2d 762. Civil Rights 1315

Demoted corrections department sergeant was barred from recovery under deprivation to civil rights statute for deprivation of property without due process, where employee failed to demonstrate that remedies provided to her under state law were inadequate to rectify any errors. Sewell v. Jefferson County Fiscal Court, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1988, 863 F.2d 461, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 75, 493 U.S. 820, 107 L.Ed.2d 42. Civil Rights 1320

Property owner who was arbitrarily denied building permit by city council after he had qualified for its issuance did not have a § 1983 cause of action against council members and city for unconstitutional taking of his property without just compensation for loss of fair market value of his property, where property owner had adequate state remedy under Montana's inverse condemnation case law. Bateson v. Geisse, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1988, 857 F.2d 1300. Civil Rights 1318

Exhaustion of state administrative remedies prior to adjudication of claim under this section in federal court is not required if adequate and speedy state remedies are not available, or if inadequacy of state administrative remedy is coextensive with merits of plaintiff's constitutional claim. Jose P. v. Ambach, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1982, 669 F.2d 865. Civil Rights 1316

Obligor, who alleged that city agency violated his due process rights by garnishing his wages in order to pay off child support arrears, had an adequate post-deprivation remedy available under New York law, and therefore could not sue agency under section 1983; upon an adverse determination by agency, a party could seek review in a CPLR article 78 proceeding. Vazquez Martinez v. New York City Support Collection Enforcement Unit, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 4. Civil Rights 1321

Since some of the declaratory and compensatory damage relief sought by parent was available under Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), she was required to exhaust her administrative remedies prior to bringing suit under §§ 1983 predicated on IDEA, Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Rehabilitation Act violations. Hesling v. Avon Grove School Dist., E.D.Pa.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 262. Schools 155.5(3)

Plaintiff bringing § 1983 action based on alleged due process violation is not required to exhaust administrative or state judicial remedies, but, at a minimum, must substantiate why such remedies would be inadequate were they pursued. Sears, Roebuck de Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Soto-Rios, D.Puerto Rico 1996, 920 F.Supp. 266. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1315; Civil Rights 1316

District court would not consider § 1983 action brought by state litigant against county prothonotary, seeking recovery of interest on amounts paid into court, even though there was United States Supreme Court case providing that withholding of such funds was an unconstitutional taking in violation of Fifth Amendment; there was an adequate state remedy, based upon statute limiting prothonotary from imposing any charge on deposited funds except poundage, which would preclude retention of interest in question. Rivkin v. County of Montgomery, E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1009. Federal Courts 48

Arrestees who brought § 1983 action alleging Fourteenth Amendment violation arising from alleged failure by police to return tools removed from arrestees' vehicle following arrest failed to show that state and administrative remedies available to them for recovering the property were inadequate or violated due process. Swanson v. Fields, D.Kan.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1007, affirmed 13 F.3d 407. Civil Rights 1319

Owners and operators of day-care center and certain of its employees were precluded from bringing procedural due process claims in connection with investigation into allegations of sexual abuse at center; no predeprivation safeguards would have been of any use in preventing the kind of deprivations alleged, and state procedural safeguards provided adequate postdeprivation remedies. Simmons v. Chemung County Dept. of Social Services, W.D.N.Y.1991, 770 F.Supp. 795, affirmed 948 F.2d 1276. Constitutional Law 287.2(1)

4309. Bad faith, exhaustion of remedies

Lessee of theater which state court had ordered closed under state nuisance statute, R.C. § 3767.01 et seq., was required to exhaust state appellate remedies before seeking relief in federal district court, unless he could show that state proceeding was conducted with an intent to harass or in bad faith or that the nuisance statute was flagrantly and patently unconstitutional. Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., U.S.Ohio 1975, 95 S.Ct. 1200, 420 U.S. 592, 43 L.Ed.2d

482, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 1969, 421 U.S. 971, 44 L.Ed.2d 463. Courts 508(2.1)

4310. Expertise of court, exhaustion of remedies

Claim under this section governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law, involving as it did right to housing without regard to race and right of an extended family to live together, involved a constitutional issue that was within expertise of courts rather than expertise of municipal board of adjustment and, hence, was not barred for failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Green v. Ten Eyck, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1978, 572 F.2d 1233. Civil Rights 1318

Where Army Board for Correction of Military Records was empowered to grant all relief sought by plaintiff in action alleging that State Adjutant General and various federal officials had wrongfully convicted him of cheating and forced him to resign his captain's commission in National Guard except monetary damages, attorney fees and costs, and only consequence of delay would be postponement of plaintiff's opportunity to obtain damages and fees, considerations of efficiency and agency expertise outweighed inconvenience to plaintiff caused by Board's inability to grant plaintiff full relief and thus plaintiff would be required to resort to Board before seeking judicial relief under this section. Sanders v. McCrady, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1976, 537 F.2d 1199. Civil Rights 1321

New York probationary teacher, who alleged that he was discharged for activity protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 and in a manner that deprived him of his right to procedural due process and who sought reinstatement, back pay and damages, was not required to exhaust administrative remedies before New York State Commissioner of Education before bringing suit under this section since not only was the administrative remedy not adequate, in that procedural nature thereof was not designed to effectively resolve the primarily factual issues at hand, but the constitutional issues raised particularly in the area of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 lay within the expertise of courts, and the Commissioner had no power to award damages for conspiracy to violate plaintiff's civil rights. Plano v. Baker, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 504 F.2d 595. Civil Rights 1320

4311. Flagrantly unconstitutional state statutes, exhaustion of remedies

When statute is being challenged as unconstitutional on its face, plaintiff is not required to exhaust his administrative remedies before bringing suit under this section. United Automobile, Aerospace, and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) v. State Farm Ins. Co., N.D.Ill.1972, 350 F.Supp. 522. Civil Rights 1316

4312. Futility of remedies, exhaustion of remedies

Where circumstances surrounding almost eight-year delay of federal habeas corpus petitioner's state appeal were such that there was little likelihood that his petitioning for writ of coram nobis in state courts would have been effective, petitioner was not required to exhaust state remedies before filing his federal petition. Brooks v. Jones, C.A.2 1989, 875 F.2d 30, on remand. Habeas Corpus 377

Where property owner had been in touch with planning board and Department of Public Works of Puerto Rico off and on for years without success, submitting planned development inconsistent with public classification of land would almost certainly have been futile, property owner's predecessor in interest had submitted such plan in 1968 only to have it rejected by planning board because property was reserved for public use, and action was brought under this section governing deprivation of civil rights, failure to exhaust administrative remedies was not bar to action. Urbanizadora Versalles, Inc. v. Rivera Rios, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1983, 701 F.2d 993. Civil Rights 1318

State prison inmate's belief that, based on his previous experience with filing an administrative grievance, his efforts to use the grievance process would be futile, did not excuse his failure to exhaust his administrative remedies under state's three-step review process for inmate grievances, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prior to bringing § 1983 action against prison official for use of excessive force in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Baker v. Krieger, W.D.N.Y.2003, 287 F.Supp.2d 207. Civil Rights 1319

University professor failed to show that her filing of appeal of grievance alleging inadequate compensation for "professional units" (PUs) of work performed and alleging entitlement to payment for travel expenses would be futile, as would excuse professor from exhausting administrative remedies before filing complaint under Title VII and § 1983; professor did not challenge award of payment she received for some of PUs and for additional research, nor did she contend that she timely submitted a request for payment of her travel expenses. Guerrero v. University of District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 32, withdrawn from bound volume, amended and superseded 251 F.Supp.2d 13.

Plaintiff in § 1983 action challenging local warehousing requirements of Wholesale Liquor Industry Storage Act as commerce clause violation was not required to first seek exemption from District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board; exhaustion of remedies was not normally required under § 1983, and such act would have been futile since Board could not have provided adequate relief. Milton S. Kronheim & Co., Inc. v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1995, 877 F.Supp. 21, reversed 91 F.3d 193, 319 U.S.App.D.C. 389, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1468, 520 U.S. 1186, 137 L.Ed.2d 681. Civil Rights 1321

4313. Irreparable injury, exhaustion of remedies

Suspended student would suffer irreparable harm by waiting nearly one month for administrative hearing and, therefore, was not required to exhaust administrative remedies in order to bring claim for violation of procedural due process under statute that prohibits deprivation of federal statutory or constitutional rights under color of state law. Doe v. Rockingham County School Bd., W.D.Va.1987, 658 F.Supp. 403. Civil Rights 1309

4314. Nature of relief sought, exhaustion of remedies

Under Ill.S.H.A. ch. 85, ¶¶ 1-101 et seq., 2-104, 2-206; ch. 110, ¶ 2-701, plaintiffs, allegedly deprived of property without procedural due process, could sue for declaratory relief but not damages, and since state procedure would not "make the complainant whole," suit in federal district court was not precluded. LaSalle Nat. Bank v. Lake County, N.D.Ill.1984, 579 F.Supp. 8.

Rule that federal litigant need not exhaust state remedies prior to maintaining civil rights action is applicable where the relief sought is damages or where the only available state remedy is also in equity. Kahn v. Shainswit, S.D.N.Y.1976, 414 F.Supp. 1064. Civil Rights 1315

Even if doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies were applicable to civil rights actions, such doctrine did not bar action based on alleged denial of minimally adequate education for mentally retarded children, where plaintiffs did not request a change in placement, but sought only damages on behalf of such children, one of whom was past school age, and where administrative procedure provided machinery for challenging placement but did not provide any compensation for past injuries. Fialkowski v. Shapp, E.D.Pa.1975, 405 F.Supp. 946. Civil Rights 1317

Federal forum is available, without prior exhaustion of state remedies, for civil rights actions in which prisoners seek money damages rather than equitable relief. Galloway v. Watts, D.C.Md.1975, 395 F.Supp. 729. Civil Rights 1319

Requirement of prior exhaustion of state remedies as a condition precedent to equitable actions under this section does not apply to suits for damages. Wilson v. Garnett, W.D.Mo.1970, 332 F.Supp. 888. Civil Rights 1316

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4315. Piecemeal litigation, exhaustion of remedies

Connecticut special deputy sheriffs who sued high sheriff and other sheriff's department officials, asserting state constitutional and common-law claims, based on allegations that defendants retaliated against plaintiffs for union organizing activities, discriminated against them, and required them to pay improper "dues" to county sheriff's association, were not required to first exhaust administrative remedies; no single Connecticut agency would have jurisdiction over all state constitutional and common-law claims, resulting in piecemeal proceedings before various state agencies, and no agency was empowered to award damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress, to award punitive damages, or to award full remedy (legal, injunctive, and declaratory) for violation of plaintiffs' constitutional rights. St. George v. Mak, D.Conn.1993, 842 F.Supp. 625. Labor And Employment 1996

4316. Prejudice or bias of tribunal, exhaustion of remedies

Terminated executive director of city housing authority was not required to exhaust state administrative or judicial remedies before bringing Section 1983 Civil Rights Act suit complaining of denial of impartial decisionmaker at termination hearing, which was in effect both a pretermination and posttermination hearing, complaint was not that procedures were insufficient in quantity but that although procedures were facially adequate they were so tainted by the bias of the tribunal as to be illusory and deficiencies in the crucial quality of impartiality was not compensated for by the limited review accorded under state law. Salisbury v. Housing Authority of City of Newport, E.D.Ky.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1433. Civil Rights 1320

4317. Class actions, exhaustion of remedies

Where class action was brought under this section by welfare recipient to challenge portion of state plan for aged, blind and disabled, court need not consider questions of abstention or exhaustion of administrative remedies. Owens v. Parham, N.D.Ga.1972, 350 F.Supp. 598. Civil Rights 1321; Federal Courts 59

4318. Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act, exhaustion of remedies

Court may require exhaustion of administrative remedies by inmate bringing civil rights action if Attorney General or court has determined that the administrative remedies provided by the state are in substantial compliance with minimum acceptable standards set forth in the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act. Maulick v. Central Classification Bd., E.D.Va.1986, 659 F.Supp. 24.

4319. Condemnation, exhaustion of remedies

The second prudential requirement for regulatory taking claim brought against state entity in federal court, i.e., that plaintiff has sought compensation through procedures the state has provided for doing so, stems from Fifth Amendment's proviso that only takings without just compensation infringe that Amendment. Suitum v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, U.S.Nev.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1659, 520 U.S. 725, 137 L.Ed.2d 980, on remand 123 F.3d 1322. Eminent Domain 277

Indiana's inverse condemnation procedure, while available, was nevertheless inadequate for challenging plan commission's vacation of restrictive covenants as to other lots in plaintiffs' plat, and thus takings suit under § 1983 was within the futility exception to ripeness requirement of exhaustion of state judicial remedies, because the manner in which the plan commission allegedly took the plaintiffs' property left them without a definable pecuniary loss, in that the plan commission had to, and did, find that the surrounding plat would suffer no injury to the value of lot owners' land. Daniels v. Area Plan Com'n of Allen County, C.A.7 (Ind.) 2002, 306 F.3d 445. Eminent Domain 277 which taking was without notice and wholly in violation of statutory requirements governing appropriation of property, would not be required to pursue any further remedies in state court to obtain compensation for taking which was concededly illegal and for which village admitted that landowners were due compensation, in light of village's steadfast refusal to compensate landowners. Kruse v. Village of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 74 F.3d 694, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 71, 519 U.S. 818, 136 L.Ed.2d 31. Eminent Domain 277

Landowners who claimed that their property had been damaged by state's actions in issuing permit for waste water treatment plant were required to exhaust state remedies in inverse condemnation proceeding before their due process claim could be considered in federal civil rights action. Hammond v. Baldwin, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1989, 866 F.2d 172, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1318

Takings claim asserted under Fifth Amendment by mine operators based on sale by town waste management authority of sand and other materials left behind at mine site after authority purchased site and operators' license was terminated was not ripe for review in § 1983 action where operators had not pursued inverse condemnation claim or any other remedy available under New York law. McCormack Sand Co. v. Town of North Hempstead Solid Waste Management Authority, E.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 589. Civil Rights 1318

Landowner had to pursue inverse condemnation proceedings at local and state level before pursing § 1983 action based on substantive due process claim in federal court. Front Royal and Warren County Indus. Park Corp. v. Town of Front Royal, Va., W.D.Va.1996, 922 F.Supp. 1131, reversed 135 F.3d 275. Civil Rights 1318

Property owners' failure to utilize available measures under Arkansas law for obtaining compensation for alleged temporary taking of their property by city historic district commission required dismissal of their § 1983 action to obtain compensation for such temporary taking. Roy v. City of Little Rock, E.D.Ark.1995, 902 F.Supp. 871. Civil Rights 1318

Landowner who brought § 1983 action against city for allegedly "taking" landowner's land without just compensation failed to exhaust his administrative remedies; Massachusetts law provides means by which plaintiff may seek redress for alleged deprivation of property, but landowner failed to invoke that statute. Marietta Realty, Inc. v. Springfield Redevelopment Authority, D.Mass.1995, 902 F.Supp. 310. Eminent Domain 277

Landowners were required to seek just compensation for alleged taking of land through inverse condemnation procedure, prior to commencing § 1983 action on basis that taking of land violated their constitutional rights; though landowners were not required to exhaust state remedies to bring § 1983 action, takings claim was not ripe where no government actor had reached final determination on compensation issue. Mercado v. Perez Vega, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 853 F.Supp. 42. Civil Rights 1318; Eminent Domain 277

Although exhaustion of state remedies is generally not prerequisite to § 1983 claim, exhaustion is required for inverse condemnation claim brought under § 1983. Cap'n Hook Auto Parts, Inc. v. Board of Tp. Trustees, Liverpool Tp., N.D.Ohio 1991, 773 F.Supp. 71. Civil Rights 1318; Eminent Domain 277

Putative landowner would have to pursue inverse condemnation remedy in Puerto Rico court before bringing § 1983 action for Fifth Amendment taking. Asociacion de Pescadores de Vieques, Inc. v. Santiago, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 747 F.Supp. 134. Eminent Domain 277

Property owner alleging taking without just compensation must utilize state procedures for obtaining compensation before bringing § 1983 action. Edelweiss Development Corp. v. County of Susquehanna, M.D.Pa.1988, 738 F.Supp. 879, affirmed 908 F.2d 962. Civil Rights 1318 substation were not required to pursue inverse condemnation proceeding in state court. MacNamara v. County Council of Sussex County, D.Del.1990, 738 F.Supp. 134, affirmed 922 F.2d 832. Civil Rights 1318

Mechanisms provided by State of Missouri, its subdivisions, and municipalities for compensating property owners whose property is either taken for public use or demolished for failure to conform to building code requirements precluded owner of vacant apartment building and lot from asserting a due process claim under section 1983 after building was condemned and demolished by city. Lewis v. City of St. Louis, E.D.Mo.1985, 607 F.Supp. 614, affirmed 786 F.2d 1169. Civil Rights 1318

Although courts in other circuits have held that there is no cause of action under this section where plaintiff alleges a "taking" of his property by the state without due process and does not first attempt to avail himself of adequate state procedures for compensation following the de facto appropriation, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has not required first resort to state courts; the remedy in federal court is deemed "supplementary to any remedy any state might provide." Stearns v. Smith, S.D.Tex.1982, 551 F.Supp. 32. Civil Rights 1318

Plaintiff property owners which claimed violation of civil rights under this section arising out of conspiracy or misuse of condemnation powers by state officials and private developer of urban renewal property in order to deprive plaintiffs of their properties without just compensation were not required to first exhaust state remedies. Archer Gardens, Ltd. v. Brooklyn Center Development Corp., S.D.N.Y.1979, 468 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1318

Where landowner had right to maintain collateral attack on condemnation proceeding in Texas, he could by establishing federal jurisdiction proceed in federal forum without exhaustion of state court remedy. Joiner v. City of Dallas, N.D.Tex.1974, 380 F.Supp. 754, affirmed 95 S.Ct. 614, 419 U.S. 1042, 42 L.Ed.2d 637, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 818, 419 U.S. 1132, 42 L.Ed.2d 831. Courts 489(12)

4320. Education, schools and students, exhaustion of remedies

Students' claims under §§ 504 of Rehabilitation Act and §§ 1983, both of which sought to ensure free appropriate public education (FAPE) that was also available under IDEA, were both subject to IDEA exhaustion requirement. J.S. ex rel. N.S. v. Attica Central Schools, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 386 F.3d 107, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1727, 544 U.S. 968, 161 L.Ed.2d 616, on remand 2006 WL 581187. Schools 155.5(3)

Retaliation claim under the Rehabilitation Act, as well as § 1983 claim intended "to enforce the anti-retaliation provision of IDEA," were subject to the IDEA requirement of exhaustion of administrative remedies as claims "seeking relief that is available under [IDEA]" where plaintiff parent had standing to bring her retaliation claim under IDEA. Weber v. Cranston School Committee, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2000, 212 F.3d 41. Schools 155.5(3)

High school student failed to exhaust her state remedies regarding appeal of her challenge to school district's decision that her tattoo was gang symbol and that she was required to get tattoo removed for purposes of student's claim that school denied her due process by failing to provide adequate appeals process regarding decision. Stephenson v. Davenport Community School Dist., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 110 F.3d 1303, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1317

Parents of handicapped children who alleged a statewide pattern and practice of systematic Education of the Handicapped Act violations unable to be addressed at the due process hearings provided in the state were not required to exhaust administrative remedies of the due process hearings before bringing civil rights action challenging the violations. Mrs. W. v. Tirozzi, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1987, 832 F.2d 748, on remand 706 F.Supp. 164.

Civil rights claim did not identify due process violation based on infringement of student's liberty interests; rather, plaintiffs argued that defendants violated this section by failing to obey commands of the Education for All

Handicapped Children Act, section 1401 et seq. of Title 20, and the Rehabilitation Act, section 794 of Title 29, and plaintiffs could not circumvent procedural requirements of section 1401 et seq. of Title 20 by going directly into federal court under this section. Austin v. Brown Local School Dist., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1984, 746 F.2d 1161, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2114, 471 U.S. 1054, 85 L.Ed.2d 479. Schools 155.5(3)

Student who did not, in complaint against professor who had given him failing grade because of determination that student had committed plagiarism, deny the charge and who was informed that he had a right to appeal the professor's penalties using the university's own internal procedures but never attempted to do so was precluded by failure to exhaust administrative remedies, from having court order that his grades be "corrected". (Per Kunzig, J., with one Justice concurring specially.) Hill v. Trustees of Indiana University, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1976, 537 F.2d 248. Colleges And Universities 9.35(2)

Where various school officials had already upheld regulation requiring student who refuses to salute flag to either stand silently or leave room, student who brought action under this section attacking such regulation was not required to exhaust administrative remedies even if such requirement existed in such cases. Goetz v. Ansell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1973, 477 F.2d 636. Civil Rights 1317

Middle school students and parents who sued school district, school board, and officials, stemming from students' expulsions due to BB gun shooting incident, properly exhausted their administrative remedies, as required to maintain procedural due process claims, where state court of appeals reversed school board's decision to expel students because their waivers to expulsion hearing were invalid. S.K. v. Anoka-Hennepin Independent School Dist. No. 11, D.Minn.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 963. Civil Rights 1317

Parents of home-schooled autistic child whose school playground privileges were withdrawn were required to exhaust administrative remedies available through the IDEA before pursuing claims under federal civil rights laws, notwithstanding fact that no IDEA claim was being pursued, given that the relief parents were seeking, including restoration of playground privileges and damages, was available under the IDEA, and state special education regulations provided due process hearing procedures that satisfied IDEA due process hearing requirement. Fitzpatrick v. Town of Falmouth, D.Me.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 95, appeal after remand from federal court 879 A.2d 21. Schools 155.5(3)

Unless exhaustion under the IDEA is excused because pursuit of administrative remedies would be futile or the child would be irreparably harmed, or because of one of the other narrow exceptions to the exhaustion requirement, parents must pursue the administrative remedies available to them under the IDEA, meaning, due process hearings and appeals to state agencies where provided by the state, before they may bring a civil action in state or federal court for violations of the IDEA or § 1983 claims repackaging the IDEA claims in different legal wrapping. Pardini v. Allegheny Intermediate Unit, W.D.Pa.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 447, reversed and remanded 420 F.3d 181, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1646, 164 L.Ed.2d 353. Schools 155.5(3)

Requirement that allegedly disabled student exhaust administrative remedies before suing for violations of IDEA, ADA, and Rehabilitation Act, was not excused, even though student had left school and was seeking only monetary damages via § 1983 action, where there had not yet been any administrative determination of whether student was disabled. Lindsley ex rel. Kolodziejczack v. Girard School Dist., W.D.Pa.2002, 213 F.Supp.2d 523. Schools 155.5(3)

Parents of learning disabled child had to first exhaust their administrative remedies under IDEA before bringing § 1983 claim based on IDEA and constitutional violations: mere fact that parents sought a remedy of damages in addition to their requested general relief was not dispositive of the exhaustion requirement; and by merely appending nominal claim for damages to § 1983 claim, aggrieved parties could avoid the mandate of both Congress and the Supreme Court that provision of free appropriate public education (FAPE) and related matters first should be dealt with on the local level between parents and school. F.Supp. 1092, dismissed 79 F.3d 1141. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1309; Schools 155.5(3)

Exhaustion requirement of Education for All Handicapped Children Act applied to parents' action under § 1983, alleging that parents should have been given opportunity to dispute whether part of or all of their major medical benefits were properly paid towards cost of mental health services for children and youth program as medical expenses, or whether part or all of such expenses were educational expenses for which school board was responsible. Laura V. v. Providence School Bd., D.R.I.1988, 680 F.Supp. 66.

Student was not required to exhaust administrative remedies available within school department before seeking to vindicate her rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 under this section to have published next to her picture in high school yearbook quotation which she had previously selected for inclusion. Stanton By and Through Stanton v. Brunswick School Dept., D.C.Me.1984, 577 F.Supp. 1560. Civil Rights 1317

As constitutional harm to student who was suspended from school for parent's failure to pay textbook fees had already occurred, no procedure provided by school could obviate that fact; therefore, student's failure to exhaust putative administrative remedies did not preclude right to bring action under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Carder v. Michigan City School Corp., N.D.Ind.1982, 552 F.Supp. 869. Civil Rights 1317

Student's failure to appeal his suspension in excess of one term to college's board of trustees did not bar him from proceeding with civil rights action arising out of the suspension. Turof v. Kibbee, E.D.N.Y.1981, 527 F.Supp. 880 . Civil Rights 1309

Failure of plaintiffs to present a written verified complaint to school officials within three months after accrual of their claim as required by McKinney's N.Y. Education Law § 3813 did not operate to preclude plaintiffs from bringing action under this section for declaratory and injunctive relief against alleged unconstitutional refusal of defendant school officials to allow use of a room in school for a communal prayer meeting immediately prior to beginning of school each day. Brandon v. Board of Ed. of Guilderland Central School Dist., N.D.N.Y.1980, 487 F.Supp. 1219, affirmed 635 F.2d 971, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 970, 454 U.S. 1123, 71 L.Ed.2d 109, rehearing denied 102 S.Ct. 1493, 455 U.S. 983, 71 L.Ed.2d 694. Civil Rights 1725

Administrative remedies within educational institution must first be exhausted before recourse may be had to federal courts for necessarily drastic relief from allegedly unconstitutional regulations. Romans v. Crenshaw, S.D.Tex.1971, 354 F.Supp. 868. Civil Rights 1317

Fact that pupil indefinitely suspended from school appealed from superintendent's decision to local school board did not require her to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing action under this section. Cook v. Edwards, D.C.N.H.1972, 341 F.Supp. 307. Civil Rights 1317

4321. Employment, exhaustion of remedies--Generally

Employee was not required to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing claim under § 1981. Aramburu v. Boeing Co., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1997, 112 F.3d 1398. Civil Rights 1312

Public servant may sue her employer for discrimination under § 1983 without having to satisfy Title VII's administrative preconditions to suit. Murray v. Kutzke, N.D.Ill.1997, 967 F.Supp. 337. Civil Rights 1312

While waiver of immunity can be limited to specified circumstances, exhaustion of state administrative judicial remedies has never been required where a claim under this section attacked the regular policies, procedures or employment methods generally ascribed to by the state. 4322. ---- Firefighters, employment, exhaustion of remedies

District court could not dismiss without prejudice employee's Title VII action against employer, in order to allow employee to pursue unexhausted administrative remedies, where employee lacked valid cause of action to begin with since alleged discrimination was based on "political ideas" rather than on any suspect classification covered by Title VII. Soler v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., D.Puerto Rico 2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 232. Federal Civil Procedure 1700

Fire department employee's failure to utilize Illinois procedure to seek review of village board of fire and police commissioners' decision not to promote him did not bar his § 1983 claim against fire chief alleging that denial of promotion was in retaliation for employee's protected speech to newspaper reporter; nothing suggested that any potential state administrative review of board's action would afford any remedy against fire chief individually. Sundstrom v. Village of Arlington Heights, N.D.Ill.1993, 826 F.Supp. 1143. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1320

Black female fire fighter with District of Columbia Fire Department was not required to exhaust her administrative remedies under District of Columbia Human Rights Act in order to bring federal civil rights action against fire department under federal civil rights statutes, so that three-year limitations period applicable to her civil rights action was not tolled while her claims were filed with District of Columbia Office of Human Rights. Deskins v. Barry, D.D.C.1989, 729 F.Supp. 1. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1320

4323. ---- Law enforcement officers, employment, exhaustion of remedies

Remedies under this section are supplementary to any pertinent state remedies and deputy sheriffs were not required to exhaust administrative remedies before suing to challenge validity of distinction between themselves and firemen and policemen. Gillette v. McNichols, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1975, 517 F.2d 888. Civil Rights 1320

District of Columbia system could not grant full relief to terminated police officer in connection with his federal civil rights claims, and officer was accordingly not required to file claim through District of Columbia's Office of Employee Appeals (OEA) to exhaust administrative remedies under the District of Columbia Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act (CMPA) before filing federal suit; officer requested compensatory and punitive damages that OEA was not authorized to grant, and OEA's administrative forum could not have provided full and fair opportunity to litigate federal claims. Crockett v. District of Columbia Metropolitan Police Dept., D.D.C.2003, 293 F.Supp.2d 63 . Civil Rights 1320

Resort to state Public Employment Relations Commission or any state administrative proceeding was not a prerequisite to police officers' seeking relief in federal court under civil rights statute with respect to claims that township resolution restricting outside employment of off-duty police officers violated their constitutional rights. Bowman v. Township of Pennsauken, D.N.J.1989, 709 F.Supp. 1329. Civil Rights 1320

Where police officer was discharged in accordance with city charter provision for refusing to waive his immunity from prosecution when he was called to testify before a grand jury, he was not required to seek relief in a state court before bringing an action for reinstatement under this section. Romer v. Leary, S.D.N.Y.1969, 305 F.Supp. 366, affirmed 425 F.2d 186. Civil Rights 1320

4324. ---- Professionals, employment, exhaustion of remedies

This section, also cited as a basis for lawsuit against defendant university and others for denial of admittance to psychiatric residency program because plaintiff suffered from multiple sclerosis, did not require plaintiff to exhaust administrative remedies by taking such remedial action as the Department of Health and Human Services deemed necessary to overcome the effects of unlawful discrimination. Pushkin v. Regents of University of Colorado, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1981, 658 F.2d 1372. Civil Rights 1309

Where applicant who was denied admission to the New York bar petitioned Appellate Division of New York Supreme Court for an order to admit him to the bar, Appellate Division denied petition and held that McKinney's N.Y. CPLR 9406, subd. 3, requiring a six months' actual residency for admission to bar required a permanent residency and that applicant's ten months' residency was temporary and applicant did not appeal such decision to the New York Court of Appeals on the merits or on the question of whether McKinney's N.Y. CPLR 9406, subd. 3, violated equal protection, federal district court lacked jurisdiction over applicant's subsequent action under this subchapter raising same constitutional issues. (Per Mulligan, Circuit Judge, with one Judge concurring in the result.) Tang v. Appellate Division of New York Supreme Court, First Dept., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1973, 487 F.2d 138, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1611, 416 U.S. 906, 40 L.Ed.2d 111. Courts 509

Plaintiff alleging in action under this section that action of State Board of Examiners in Psychology in denying him use of "Ph.D." designation in context of his psychology practice was an unconstitutional action under color of official right was not required to exhaust administrative appeal process, where through an agreed order plaintiff was not deprived of that usage pending court's determination of issue. Buxton v. Lovell, S.D.Ind.1983, 559 F.Supp. 979. Civil Rights 1321

4325. ---- Teachers, employment, exhaustion of remedies

Teacher was not required to exhaust state remedies with respect to her discharge before filing § 1983 claim, arising out of discharge, in federal court. Hall v. Marion School Dist. No. 2, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1994, 31 F.3d 183. Civil Rights 1320

Where nontenured teacher's civil rights action under this section charged defendants with retaliating against him by dismissing him for the exercise of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, he was not required to exhaust administrative remedies prior to commencing action in federal court. Hochman v. Board of Ed. of City of Newark, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1976, 534 F.2d 1094. Civil Rights 1320

Employees of school district asserting unconstitutionality of policy of terminating teachers under certain circumstances because they were married were not required to exhaust state court remedies before bringing action in federal court under this section. Keckeisen v. Independent School Dist. 612, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1975, 509 F.2d 1062, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 57, 423 U.S. 833, 46 L.Ed.2d 51. Civil Rights 1320

Public school teacher, who was discharged for wearing a black armband as a symbolic protest against the Vietnam War and who had an opportunity to litigate claim before New York Commissioner of Education, was not required to appeal the Commissioner's decision upholding discharge to the New York courts prior to bringing claim for relief under this section. James v. Board of Ed. of Central Dist. No. 1 of Towns of Addison et al., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 461 F.2d 566, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 529, 409 U.S. 1042, 34 L.Ed.2d 491, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 1355, 410 U.S. 947, 35 L.Ed.2d 617, on remand 385 F.Supp. 209. Civil Rights 1320

Maine tenured public school teacher, who failed to exhaust administrative remedies in accordance with 20 M.R.S.A. §§ 161, subd. 5, 473, subd. 4 by refusing to further participate in hearing before school committee after certain procedural objections were overruled, was not entitled to maintain an action under this section for deprivation of rights in connection with discharge. Beattie v. Roberts, C.A.1 (Me.) 1971, 436 F.2d 747. Civil Rights 1320

Failure of college teacher claiming that he was dismissed on constitutionally impermissible grounds to pursue administrative remedies did not preclude him from bringing action to enjoin alleged violation of civil rights.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Rainey v. Jackson State College, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1970, 435 F.2d 1031. Civil Rights 1455; Injunction 108

University professor was not required to appeal to District of Columbia Superior Court from university president's denial of professor's appeal from university's decision to terminate professor pursuant to reduction in force (RIF), in order to exhaust administrative remedies before filing discrimination complaint under Title VII and § 1983, where claims asserted in complaint were not based upon termination decision but upon university's failure to rehire professor and its alleged appointment of other persons to positions for which professor was allegedly better qualified, and university resolution as to RIF did not require professor to raise rehire issue with president. Guerrero v. University of District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 32, withdrawn from bound volume, amended and superseded 251 F.Supp.2d 13.

If new position of high school administrative assistant was "similar" to tenured teacher's former position of high school dean, school board's action in discharging teacher without allowing him to occupy new position was substantively defective under due process clause and existence of postdeprivation state law remedies thus did not bar teacher's civil rights action. DeSimone v. Board of Educ., South Huntington Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.1985, 604 F.Supp. 1180. Civil Rights 1320; Constitutional Law 278.5(3)

Even if teacher whose contract is nonrenewed has property interest in continued employment, where teacher's contract is nonrenewed allegedly in violation of Ark.Stats. § 80-1264.2, and for that reason only, and that teacher is afforded full state remedy including full procedural safeguards with opportunity for pretermination hearing by school board and right to appeal school board's decision to courts of state for judicial determination of whether said statute has been violated, then that teacher is precluded from bringing action under this section. Sutton v. Marianna School Dist. A, E.D.Ark.1983, 573 F.Supp. 159. Civil Rights 1133

4326. ---- Miscellaneous employees, employment, exhaustion of remedies

Where before state civil service employees commenced their action in district court under this section they had been charged by state Personnel Board with patent violations of 74 Okl.St.Ann. § 801 et seq., patterned on § 7324 of Title 5, and Board, on employees' application, had ordered its proceedings stayed pending adjudication of federal constitutional questions in district court, and district court when advised of Board's decision and in absence of any objections from enforcement officers proceeded, it was unnecessary to determine whether employees would have been required to proceed to hearing before Board prior to pursuing their civil rights action. Broadrick v. Oklahoma, U.S.Okla.1973, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 413 U.S. 601, 37 L.Ed.2d 830. Federal Courts 478

Retired public school employee failed to exhaust his state court remedies with respect to his claim that state illegally used public school employees' health insurance premiums to subsidize state employees' health insurance premiums, as required to bring action under §§ 1983 alleging that state officials violated the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments by taking his private property without just compensation. Carter v. Arkansas, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 392 F.3d 965. Civil Rights 1320

Since purpose of administrative remedy provided by statute and county merit system rule was to remedy, rather than forestall deprivation, employees in county assessor's office who were suspended and eventually fired after they did not comply with rule requiring male employees to wear their hair cut above the collar were not required to exhaust such remedy before bringing civil rights action. Jacobs v. Kunes, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1976, 541 F.2d 222, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1109, 429 U.S. 1094, 51 L.Ed.2d 541. Civil Rights 1320

Plaintiff, who had allegedly been discharged from employment because of his complaints regarding discriminatory employment practices based on race, had independent actions against employer under this section and Equal Employment Opportunity Act, § 2000e et seq. of this title; plaintiff was not required to exhaust administrative procedure before Equal Employment Opportunity Commission before maintaining action under this section.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Caldwell v. National Brewing Co., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1971, 443 F.2d 1044, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 931, 405 U.S. 916, 30 L.Ed.2d 785. Civil Rights 1312

Workforce Investment Act (WIA) did not expressly foreclose § 1983 claims against municipal consortium by employees who alleged political discrimination; even though provision governing political discrimination required that regulations adopt standards and procedures for enforcement, it did not state that administrative procedures were required to be exhausted or that procedures were exclusive remedy available. Delgado-Greo v. Trujillo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 189, appeal dismissed as improvidently granted 395 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1312

Exhaustion of state or territorial administrative remedies is not required prior to commencement of an action under this section and, thus, failure of terminated director of Utilities and Sanitation in Department of Public Works of the Virgin Islands to pursue whatever administrative remedies he might have had was no basis for dismissing complaint charging that dismissal was based solely on political affiliation and violated rights under U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 1 of association and belief. Moorhead v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.C.Virgin Islands 1982, 542 F.Supp. 213. Civil Rights 1320

Failure of former federal employee dismissed on basis of statements in which he articulated dislike of drug addicts and working for a woman, to exhaust his administrative remedies did not bar his suit under this section, because protection of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 was involved. Williams v. Trimble, S.D.N.Y.1981, 527 F.Supp. 910. Civil Rights 1320

State employee who claimed that his civil rights were being violated by order placing him in a collective bargaining unit would be required to exhaust administrative remedies by appealing the ruling to the Public Employment Relations Board. Jacobson v. Director, Bureau of Mediation Services, State of Minn., D.C.Minn.1981, 508 F.Supp. 715. Civil Rights 1320

Plaintiff who has failed to exhaust administrative prerequisites necessary to maintain action under the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, § 2000e et seq. of this title, may, nonetheless, maintain action for racial discrimination in employment under Civil Rights Acts of 1870, § 1981 of this title and 1871, this section. Gibson v. State of Wis. Dept. of Health, E.D.Wis.1980, 489 F.Supp. 1048. Civil Rights 1312

4327. First amendment, exhaustion of remedies

Owner of adult bookstore was not required to exhaust state remedies before bringing suit in federal court to enjoin enforcement of municipal ordinance prohibiting location of such places of business within 1,000 feet of each other on allegations that enforcement of such ordinance would chill right under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Shangri-La Enterprises, Ltd. v. Brennan, E.D.Wis.1980, 483 F.Supp. 281. Civil Rights 1318

4328. Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, exhaustion of remedies

Exhaustion of administrative remedies provided under IDEA was required before bringing a federal civil rights action for relief that was also available under IDEA. Association for Community Living in Colorado v. Romer, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 992 F.2d 1040. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Schools 155.5(3)

Congress expressly authorized § 1983 suits to vindicate violations of rights protected under the Individual with Disabilities in Education Act (IDEA). Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Schools 155.5(2.1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Terminated county transit authority bus driver could not complain about any alleged deficiencies in union grievance procedure, since he did not file any grievance prior to commencing action under this section in district court, nor did he show that his failure to file a grievance was result of any shortcomings in grievance provisions of collective bargaining agreement. Lewis v. Hillsborough Transit Authority, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1983, 726 F.2d 664, rehearing denied 726 F.2d 668, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 95, 469 U.S. 822, 83 L.Ed.2d 41. Civil Rights 1312

Failure by county corrections officer when administratively appealing excessive-force reprimand to go through last of four steps in collective bargaining agreement's grievance/arbitration procedure precluded, on exhaustion grounds, officer's §§1983 procedural due process action against county; only evidence of officer's contention that appeal process was inadequate was fact that warden had deleted arguably exculpatory statements from internal investigation file before deputy warden conducted step-one hearing, but warden himself at step two reduced discipline to written reprimand from five-day suspension imposed by deputy warden. Keim v. County of Bucks, E.D.Pa.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 587. Constitutional Law 46(1)

Former city employee's failure to utilize grievance procedures provided under collective bargaining agreement (CBA) did not preclude him from bringing § 1983 suit alleging that he was terminated because of his political affiliation in violation of the First Amendment. Hennessy v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 200. Civil Rights 1312

Assuming that employee of county sheriff's department was employed under collective bargaining agreement providing grievance procedure, failure to exhaust contractual grievance procedure did not preclude employee's civil rights claims asserted under § 1983 in connection with his termination. Scheideman v. Shawnee County Bd. of County Com'rs, D.Kan.1995, 895 F.Supp. 279, motion denied 1996 WL 89367. Civil Rights 1312

Federal district court would not exercise jurisdiction over claim seeking declaration that Connecticut statute excluding special deputy sheriffs from the class of state employees entitled to form labor unions applies retroactively where the issue had not been addressed by any state court, although state labor board had made such a ruling. Lajoie v. Connecticut State Bd. of Labor Relations, D.Conn.1993, 837 F.Supp. 34. Federal Courts 15; Federal Courts 47.1

Collective bargaining agreement expressly prohibiting discrimination as defined by federal law and providing for arbitration of any violation obligated employee to arbitrate § 1981 race discrimination claim against employer. Almonte v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of N.Y., Inc., D.Conn.1997, 959 F.Supp. 569. Labor And Employment 1549(17)

Consumer organization seeking injunction against enforcement of state court injunction against its picketing and leafleting activities was not required to exhaust available state remedies before bringing action under this section. Concerned Consumers League v. O'Neill, E.D.Wis.1974, 371 F.Supp. 644. Civil Rights 1321

4330. Licenses and permits, exhaustion of remedies

Licensee was not required to exhaust state remedies before challenging constitutionality of driver's license revocation procedures that clearly violated procedural due process. Smith v. Commissioner of Georgia Dept. of Public Safety, M.D.Ga.1987, 673 F.Supp. 446. Civil Rights 1321

Airport director's revocation of taxi cab operator's permit to operate at airport was not grounds for federal court action pursuant to 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 alleging that operator was deprived of property without due process of law, where both county law and state law [W.S.A. 68.01-68.16] provided right of appeal from director's decision. Tumneff v. Milwaukee County Dept. of Public Works, Airport Div., E.D.Wis.1986, 628 F.Supp. 745. Federal Courts 223

It was unnecessary for operators of sanitary landfill to exhaust available state remedies before commencing action alleging violation of their due process rights resulting from denial by state Environmental Protection Agency of operating permit for waste disposal trenches. Martell v. Mauzy, N.D.Ill.1981, 511 F.Supp. 729. Environmental Law 665

4331. Medical malpractice, exhaustion of remedies

Relatives of involuntarily committed patient at state hospital were not required to exhaust remedies of Virginia Medical Malpractice Act, Va.Code 1950, §§ 8.01-581.1 to 8.01-581.9, before bringing claim under this section and pendent wrongful death claims against treating physicians in federal court. Herer v. Burns, W.D.Va.1984, 577 F.Supp. 762. Civil Rights 1321

4332. Medicare or medicaid, exhaustion of remedies

District court correctly adjudicated merits of controversy as to constitutionality of state regulation denying aid to dependent children of mother who "cohabits" with able-bodied man without requiring exhaustion of state administrative remedies. King v. Smith, U.S.Ala.1968, 88 S.Ct. 2128, 392 U.S. 309, 20 L.Ed.2d 1118. Social Security And Public Welfare 194.21

Relief under this section could not be denied welfare claimants on ground that they had not first sought relief under state laws providing administrative remedies. Damico v. California, U.S.Cal.1967, 88 S.Ct. 526, 389 U.S. 416, 19 L.Ed.2d 647. Civil Rights 1321

Medicaid applicant was not required to exhaust state administrative remedies prior to bringing §§ 1983 action challenging state's denial of Medicaid benefits, and challenging questions posed on Medicaid application about details of loan made by applicant; although Medicaid Act required availability of state administrative hearing process, Act contained no explicit or implicit administrative exhaustion requirement. Roach v. Morse, C.A.2 (Vt.) 2006, 440 F.3d 53. Civil Rights 1321

Res judicata would not operate to defeat § 1983 claims of Medicaid recipients challenging Connecticut Department of Social Services' (DSS) decisions to deny their prior authorization requests for durable medical equipment (DME), even if unreviewed state administrative proceedings barred subsequent claims arising out of same transaction, inasmuch as recipients, under state law, could not have raised § 1983 claims in administrative proceedings. DeSario v. Thomas, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1998, 139 F.3d 80, vacated 119 S.Ct. 864, 525 U.S. 1098, 142 L.Ed.2d 767. Health 508

Former resident of nursing home was not required to exhaust state administrative remedies before bringing § 1983 action alleging that nursing home violated resident rights provisions of Medicare Act and its implementing regulations, as Congress neither expressly nor implicitly evidenced intent to require exhaustion of remedies under such circumstances, notwithstanding existence of state administrative review procedures. Talbot v. Lucy Corr Nursing Home, C.A.4 (Va.) 1997, 118 F.3d 215. Civil Rights 1321

Fact that Medicaid statute providing that state must make various assurances that are satisfactory to Secretary of Health and Human Services to obtain home care waiver required oversight by Secretary of Health and Human Services did not prevent applicant for home care waiver from bringing § 1983 action for alleged violations of Medicaid Act, as administrative oversight and private enforcement were not incompatible. Wood v. Tompkins, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 33 F.3d 600, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1052

Medicaid provider was not required to exhaust its Alabama judicial remedies before bringing action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 to challenge decision of Commissioner of Alabama medicaid agency which denied dual care provider contract application, even if provider could have been required to exhaust state administrative remedies.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Alacare, Inc.-North v. Baggiano, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1986, 785 F.2d 963, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 111, 479 U.S. 829, 93 L.Ed.2d 59. Health 509

Existence of state administrative review in challenge to state Medicaid reimbursements rates did not preclude a § 1983 action for declaratory and injunctive relief. Heartland Hosp. v. Stangler, W.D.Mo.1992, 792 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1321; Declaratory Judgment 41

Exhaustion of administrative remedies is not required in § 1983 action to enforce AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children) statute to assist children and their families in collecting child support. Behunin v. Jefferson County Dept. of Social Services, D.Colo.1990, 744 F.Supp. 255. Civil Rights 1313

Families who would lose medicaid eligibility because they were no longer eligible for AFDC benefits were not required to exhaust state judicial remedies before bringing federal civil rights action against state welfare official, where plaintiffs did not claim due process violation based on protected state property right, but rather claimed violation of federal law caused by defendant's procedures and policies. Reed v. Blinzinger, S.D.Ind.1986, 639 F.Supp. 130, adopted 816 F.2d 296. Civil Rights 1321

Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipient's action under this section challenging her disqualification for benefits under "lump sum" rule was excluded from exhaustion of administrative remedies rule. Walker v. Adams, W.D.Ky.1983, 578 F.Supp. 50, affirmed 741 F.2d 116. Civil Rights 1313

Action brought by medicaid providers against the Texas Department of Human Resources, its officials, and administrator of medicaid program in Texas alleging deprivation of civil rights and due process in defendants' recovering of overpayments would be dismissed for failure of the providers to exhaust administrative remedies. St. Joseph Hosp., a Div. of Sisters of Charity of The Incarnate Word v. Electronic Data Systems Corp., S.D.Tex.1983, 573 F.Supp. 443. Civil Rights 1313

4333. Minors and juveniles, exhaustion of remedies

Two allegedly delinquent juveniles who were in custody pursuant to challenged provisions of Pennsylvania juvenile pretrial detention statutes, 42 Pa.C.S.A. §§ 6325, 6335, 6341, were not required to exhaust state remedies before bringing civil rights action challenging constitutionality of the statutes. Coleman v. Stanziani, E.D.Pa.1983, 570 F.Supp. 679, appeal dismissed, mandamus denied 735 F.2d 118, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 515, 469 U.S. 1037, 83 L.Ed.2d 404. Civil Rights 1319

Exhaustion of administrative remedies by inmates of juvenile corrections system was not prerequisite to civil rights action attacking conditions of confinement. Inmates of Boys' Training School v. Affleck, D.C.R.I.1972, 346 F.Supp. 1354. Civil Rights 1319

4333A. Military matters

National Guard officer was not required to exhaust available intraservice remedies before bringing civil rights action under §§ 1983 against his superior officers, alleging claims for retaliation and invasion of his right to privacy under the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments. Culbreth v. Ingram, E.D.N.C.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 668. Militia 10

4334. Police activities, exhaustion of remedies

Habeas exhaustion requirement of Heck v. Humphrey did not apply to state prisoner's § 1983 suit against corrections officer seeking compensatory and punitive damages, based on allegation that officer charged him with threatening behavior and subjected him to mandatory prehearing lockup in retaliation for prior lawsuits and grievance proceedings against officer, as suit did not seek a judgment at odds with prisoner's conviction or with the state's calculation of time to be served in accordance with the underlying sentence. Muhammad v. Close, U.S.2004, 124 S.Ct. 1303, 540 U.S. 749, 158 L.Ed.2d 32, on remand 379 F.3d 413. Civil Rights 1092; Civil Rights 1319

Civil rights plaintiff who was convicted of being felon in possession of firearm could not maintain § 1983 action alleging that officers falsely arrested him for burglary where officers discovered firearm as result of plaintiff's arrest and firearm conviction had not been invalidated; if officers lacked probable cause to arrest plaintiff for burglary, firearm discovered in his possession would be subject to suppression as fruit of illegal arrest implying invalidity of firearm conviction. Hudson v. Hughes, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 98 F.3d 868. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Dog owner's claim under § 1983 against town, chief of police, and police officer, alleging that his Fifth Amendment rights were violated when officer shot and killed his pitbull dog and thereby deprived him of property without just compensation, was unripe for resolution; dog owner had not complied with compensation requirement by first seeking just compensation from the state prior to bringing civil action. Warboys v. Proulx, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 111. Eminent Domain 277

Criminal defendant alleging malicious prosecution by police officer was required to exhaust his state court remedies before proceeding with § 1983 claim in federal court. LaBoy v. Zuley, N.D.Ill.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1284, motion to vacate denied 749 F.Supp. 184. Civil Rights 1319

Claim could be maintained based on the Fourteenth Amendment for deprivation of liberty based on alleged negligent or intentional conduct of defendant police officer in shooting plaintiff, regardless of postdeprivation tort remedy under state law. Martin v. Afflerbach, D.C.Me.1985, 623 F.Supp. 565. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Fact that recourse to state tort remedies was available to person who was allegedly beaten by police who responded to domestic disturbance call did not preclude action under this section in federal court for deprivation of substantive due process, given the alleged liberty deprivation sufficiently serious to shock the conscience and officers' willful and deliberate abuse of state authority, in manner which could not be characterized as random. Frost v. City and County of Honolulu, D.C.Hawai'i 1984, 584 F.Supp. 356. Civil Rights 1319

Person deliberately and viciously assaulted by policy officer without cause is not precluded from bringing civil rights claim against officer merely because state remedies would permit state tort action for assault against the officer. Roman v. City of Richmond, N.D.Cal.1983, 570 F.Supp. 1554. Civil Rights 1319

Federal courts should not be called upon to determine whether state officials have properly exercised police authority or whether the federal rights of a citizen of the United States have been invaded by a state, until exhaustion of administrative remedies. Thomas v. Chamberlain, E.D.Tenn.1955, 143 F.Supp. 671, affirmed 236 F.2d 417. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1316

4335. Prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies--Generally

Exhaustion of administrative remedies, pursuant to Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), is required for all prisoner suits seeking redress for prison circumstances or occurrences, regardless of whether they involve general circumstances of incarceration or particular episodes, and whether they allege Eighth Amendment violation based on use of excessive force or some other wrong. Porter v. Nussle, U.S.2002, 122 S.Ct. 983, 534 U.S. 516, 152 L.Ed.2d 12. Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1319; Convicts 6

In general, exhaustion of state remedies is not prerequisiteto action under § 1983, even in action by State prisoner. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1319

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Pursuant to plain language of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), plaintiff who was not a prisoner confined in jail, prison, or other correctional facility at the time he brought §§ 1983 action challenging conditions of former confinement was not required to exhaust administrative remedies. Norton v. The City Of Marietta, OK, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 432 F.3d 1145. Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner's alleged blindness did not excuse him from the Prison Litigation Reform Act's (PLRA's) exhaustion requirement. Ferrington v. Louisiana Dept. of Corrections, C.A.5 (La.) 2002, 315 F.3d 529, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 206, 540 U.S. 883, 157 L.Ed.2d 150. Convicts 6

A prisoner must exhaust his or her administrative remedies prior to filing a claim under § 1983. Richardson v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 347 F.3d 431. Civil Rights 1311

Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) did not preclude, on basis of state inmate's failure to exhaust administrative remedies, inmate's § 1983 action against corrections officer, where inmate's action was pending when PLRA was signed into law; PLRA's compulsory exhaustion requirement could not be applied retroactively, and district court made no finding about the adequacy of available remedies. Scott v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 344 F.3d 282. Civil Rights 1006; Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner lacked available administrative remedies for his Eighth Amendment conditions of confinement claims, for purposes of meeting exhaustion requirement, under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), where prisoner was unable to file a grievance because prison officials refused to provide him with the necessary grievance forms. Mitchell v. Horn, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 523, on remand 2005 WL 1060658. Civil Rights 1311

Inmate's failure to exhaust administrative remedies before filing § 1983 suit, in violation of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), would not be excused on ground that he exhausted such remedies after filing suit, in order to deter premature filing by other potential litigants. Underwood v. Wilson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1998, 151 F.3d 292, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1809, 526 U.S. 1133, 143 L.Ed.2d 1012. Civil Rights 1311

Action brought under this section raising issues that go directly to constitutionality of state prisoner's conviction or confinement is not properly before federal court until state remedies have been exhausted. Edwards v. Joyner, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1978, 566 F.2d 960. Civil Rights 1319

State prisoner was not required to exhaust state judicial remedies before bringing action against correctional personnel comprising the prison classification board for damages under this section. Palmigiano v. Mullen, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1974, 491 F.2d 978. Civil Rights 1319

Civil rights action may be maintained by state prisoner without exhaustion of state remedies unless prisoner seeks collateral review of conviction or outright release from custody. Padilla v. Ackerman, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1972, 460 F.2d 477. Civil Rights 1319

Exhaustion of administrative remedies requirement of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) was not applicable to § § 1983 action brought by relatives of inmate, who died while incarcerated in a Puerto Rico state prison, since inmate, at the time the complaint was filed, was no longer "confined" for purposes of the PLRA. Rivera-Quinones v. Rivera-Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 334. Civil Rights 1319

State prison inmate's exhaustion of administrative remedies, on claim that authorities showed deliberate indifference to sudden blindness, did not satisfy exhaustion requirement in connection with claim that he was improperly required to take ani-tuberculosis medicine that produced severe side effects. Lee v. Carson, W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 532. Prisons 13(10) before bringing a civil action did not apply to general state tort claim procedures. Blackmon v. Crawford, D.Nev.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1174. Convicts 6

Heck favorable termination rule precluded assertion of claims against public defender in federal civil rights action that called into doubt validity of prisoner's conviction, absent showing that prisoner had challenged his conviction on direct appeal or in postconviction proceeding and had obtained a favorable result. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Formal grievance program of correctional facility which detained juvenile adjudicated as a delinquent was not the exclusive means available to juvenile to exhaust his administrative remedies before bringing claim against employees of Office of Children and Family Services under § 1983 as required by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); handbook juvenile received at orientation to facility stated concerns may be brought by filling out grievance form, but also listed other methods to make concerns known and no document indicated that formal program was only method. Lewis ex rel. Lewis v. Gagne, N.D.N.Y.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 429. Civil Rights 1321

Whether the plaintiff has exhausted his administrative remedies, as required under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prior to instituting § 1983 suit, is a question for the court to decide as a matter of law. Evans v. Jonathan, W.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 244

Where an inmate alleges that his attempts to comply with the exhaustion requirement of the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) were hampered by the defendants' conduct, dismissal of a § 1983 is not warranted. Sweet v. Wende Correctional Facility, W.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 194

Inmate was not required to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing § 1983 claim based on attack by other prisoners, notwithstanding contention that inmate was required exhaust grievance procedure to seek protective custody; grievance procedure could not have compensated inmate for his injuries once they occurred, as procedure did not offer such remedy, and whether inmate sought protective custody related to issue of officials' knowledge of risk of imminent serious harm to inmate, not to whether he could proceed with claim in federal court. Freeman v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1998, 996 F.Supp. 822. Civil Rights 1319

Administrative exhaustion requirement of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) was not jurisdictional prerequisite to prisoner's suit under Civil Rights Act of 1871; PLRA exhaustion requirement did not contain explicit bar to district court jurisdiction but indicated that only those actions shall be brought in which administrative remedies have been exhausted. Lacey v. C.S.P. Solano Medical Staff, E.D.Cal.1997, 990 F.Supp. 1199. Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner was not required to comply with notice-of-claim provisions in California Tort Claims Act (CTCA) in order to exhaust his administrative remedies and allege federal civil rights cause of action against prison officials. Barry v. Ratelle, S.D.Cal.1997, 985 F.Supp. 1235. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner was required to exhaust state court remedies for challenging conviction before bringing § 1983 civil rights action for damages against county sheriff and city police detectives alleging that prisoner was unconstitutionally convicted and imprisoned. Lee v. Purpero, E.D.Wis.1993, 816 F.Supp. 498. Civil Rights 1319

Section 1983 plaintiff's failure to avail himself of available postdeprivation remedies may, in some cases, defeat due process claim of deprivation of liberty interest. Loukas v. Hofbauer, E.D.Mich.1991, 784 F.Supp. 377. Constitutional Law 43(1)

A state prisoner may obtain injunctive relief against prison officials without first exhausting state administrative remedies. U. S. ex rel. Hoss v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1978, 452 F.Supp. 256. Civil Rights 1319

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate's alleged actions of sending a letter to the sheriff's department requesting a grievance form, having his attorney call to the sheriff's department, and filing a grievance with the sheriff's department did not constitute exhaustion of his administrative remedies, as required prior to filing claim under §§ 1983 against county sheriff's department and city police department alleging deliberate indifference to his safety, where the inmate rules and regulations for the county detention center specified that a grievance be directed to the county detention center. Watford v. Kankakee Police Dept., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 77, 2004 WL 2698955, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1841, 544 U.S. 980, 161 L.Ed.2d 734. Civil Rights 1319

State inmate failed to exhaust available administrative remedies, as required by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prior to bringing §§ 1983 action against correctional officers alleging officers violated his constitutional rights by deducting or withholding money from his prisoner's account to pay for certain expenses related to his incarceration. Schelin v. Haun, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 688, 2004 WL 363481, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

State inmate failed to satisfy administrative exhaustion requirement imposed by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) on prisoner claims challenging conditions of confinement when he did not exhaust available administrative remedies before filing his §§ 1983 action, warranting dismissal of action without prejudice. Waters v. Schneider, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 137416, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Under either a jurisdictional or affirmative defense interpretation of the Prison Litigation Reform Act's (PLRA) exhaustion requirement, inmate's § 1983 complaint had to be dismissed where the defense of failure to exhaust had been asserted, and the inmate's failure to exhaust appeared on the face of the pleadings. Delio v. Morgan, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21373168, Unreported. Civil Rights 1398

Inmate failed to exhaust his administrative remedies with respect to his § 1983 claim for injuries allegedly suffered from exposure to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS), and thus, the court lacked jurisdiction to consider the claim; inmate grievance records did not indicate any grievances filed by the inmate regarding ETS, and even if he had filed an "institutional grievance form" relating to his ETS claim, he had not alleged that he followed any of the administrative procedures for appellate review of his grievance. Flowers v. Grant, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1565940, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

4335A. ---- Prison conditions, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Exhaustion of administrative remedies with respect to prison conditions before bringing suit under §§ 1983 is mandatory, regardless of the relief offered through administrative procedures. Ornelas v. Giurbino, S.D.Cal.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 955. Civil Rights 1311

Exhaustion of administrative remedies is required for all actions brought with respect to prison conditions whether under § 1983 or any other federal law. Phillips v. Carrasquillo, D.Conn.2002, 268 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1311; Convicts 6

Former federal prison inmate failed to exhaust administrative remedies before filing Bivens suit in federal court alleging excessive force by corrections officer; even if inmate filed request for administrative remedy with institution and then appealed negative ruling with regional director, she did not seek relief from general counsel, as required by regulations governing prison condition claims. Phillips v. Carrasquillo, D.Conn.2002, 268 F.Supp.2d 127. United States 50.3

4335B. ---- Sentencing, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

To the extent Kansas state prisoner, who was bringing civil rights case against state officials, was seeking to challenge execution of his Kansas sentence, he first needed to proceed on petition for a writ of habeas corpus after first exhausting available state court remedies. Brownfield v. Stovall, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 85 Fed.Appx. 123, 2003 WL 23033727, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1319

4336. ---- Pro se complaints, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Pro se petitions by prisoners are not to be misused as devices to challenge authority and relationship but rather are to be considered and used only as bona fide grievances and claims to be resolved, and thus constitutional rights as well as other civil rights must be exercised by initial use of administrative channels, not to resolve constitutional issues nor to consider damages but to provide some fact-finding so that, when or if matter reaches trial court, it will have some starting place. Brice v. Day, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1979, 604 F.2d 664, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1045, 444 U.S. 1086, 62 L.Ed.2d 772. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Exhaustion of state remedies was not required before entertaining prison inmate's pro se complaint brought under this section. Blair v. Rockefeller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 469 F.2d 641. Civil Rights 1319

Inmate's allegations concerning prison officials' alleged loss of money order and his voice on audio tape submitted to copyright office was frivolous, precluding inmate from proceeding in forma pauperis on his civil rights claim against prison officials, absent showing that remedies provided inmate by state law were inadequate. Ferguson v. McCaughtry, E.D.Wis.1991, 774 F.Supp. 534. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Pro se inmate was required to exhaust his administrative remedies prior to seeking judicial relief as to §§ 1983 claims against correctional facility superintendent, police sergeant, and unidentified persons who allegedly assaulted him upon arrival at facility, and thus, complaint was properly recommended to be dismissed by magistrate judge under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) for failure to exhaust administrative remedies; magistrate found that inmate's argument that exhaustion requirement should be excused lacked merit, inmate made no objections to magistrate's report, and magistrate's determinations were supported by record and the law. Postelli v. Superintendent, Green Haven Corr. Fac., S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 51223, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

Pro se inmate's § 1983 complaint would be deemed filed on the date of the date stamp from a Pro Se Office. Rodney v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21108353, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 664

4337. ---- Access to courts, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

State prisoner alleging that prison authorities had violated this section by confiscating legal materials and seeking return of material would not be required to resort to state administrative remedies of appealing to deputy commissioner of correction and attorney general. Houghton v. Shafer, U.S.Pa.1968, 88 S.Ct. 2119, 392 U.S. 639, 20 L.Ed.2d 1319. Civil Rights 1319

Inmate did not detrimentally rely on prison officials who allegedly lost his grievance, and officials thus were not equitably estopped, in inmate's § 1983 action alleging denial of right of access to courts, from relying on defense of failure to exhaust administrative remedies as required by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), assuming equitable estoppel applied in such context, where inmate was told his grievance had been lost or misfiled and was given opportunity to cure. Jernigan v. Stuchell, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2002, 304 F.3d 1030. Estoppel 62.2(2)

Inmate asserting § 1983 claim, on ground that prison librarian's refusal to photocopy legal forms deprived him of procedural due process, failed to exhaust administrative remedies; inmate had filed requisite grievance, but had failed to appear for scheduled grievance interview. Oswald v. Graves, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 680. Administrative Law And Procedure 229; Civil Rights 1311; Constitutional Law 272(2)

Prison inmates claiming deprivation of constitutional right of access to courts were not required to exhaust state remedies prior to action under this section. Jordan v. Johnson, E.D.Mich.1974, 381 F.Supp. 600, affirmed 513

F.2d 631, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 96, 423 U.S. 851, 46 L.Ed.2d 75. Civil Rights 1319

4338. ---- Access to mail, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Where action under which state prisoner sought injunctive relief by requiring prison officials to forward his mail to state officials was brought pursuant to this section and § 1985 of this title authorizing civil actions for deprivation of rights and pertaining to conspiracy to interfere with civil rights, argument that prisoner had not exhausted state remedies was not applicable. LeVier v. Woodson, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1971, 443 F.2d 360. Civil Rights 1319; Injunction 108

4339. ---- Confiscation of property, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Although state prisoner is not required to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing § 1983 claim for constitutional claims other than alleged due process violation, redress for most prisoner actions, including alleged constitutional violations, is available under extensive process provided by Michigan law; in addition to those provided by Administrative Procedures Act, post-deprivation remedies include action for claim and deliver allowed by court rule, civil action to recover possession of or damages for goods and chattels unlawfully taken or detained, and procedure in court of claims to compensate for alleged unjustifiable acts of state officials. Copeland v. Machulis, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 57 F.3d 476. Civil Rights 1319

Arrestee, whose money was seized when he was arrested for possession with intent to distribute heroin, failed to state a due process claim against members of police department where he failed to properly petition for the return of his money. Dixon v. Baltimore City Police Department, D.Md.2003, 345 F.Supp.2d 512, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 610, 2004 WL 335167. Constitutional Law 319.5(1); Searches And Seizures 84

Wisconsin prison inmate was required to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing civil rights action complaining of deprivation of typewriter worth allegedly over $900, a pair of stereo head phones worth approximately $25 as well as confiscation of ball point pens and erasers and $34 damage to typewriter by prison guard. McKeever v. Israel, E.D.Wis.1979, 476 F.Supp. 1370. Civil Rights 1319

4340. ---- Disciplinary proceedings, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

District Court's decision to stay § 1983 action challenging disciplinary hearing procedures that resulted in loss of good-time credits, while prisoner sought restoration of his good-time credits and exhausted state remedies, was error as there was no exhaustion requirement. Edwards v. Balisok, U.S.Wash.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1584, 520 U.S. 641, 137 L.Ed.2d 906. Civil Rights 1319

Inmates were not required to exhaust state remedies before bringing federal civil rights action alleging that actions of state defendants throughout disciplinary process violated their due process and equal protection rights, even though the action involved revocation of good time; significant sanctions other than loss of good time credits were imposed, and relief sought from the federal court would not directly impact the sentences served. Sisk v. CSO Branch, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1992, 974 F.2d 116. Civil Rights 1319

Section 1983 claim of inmate seeking restoration of lost good will time as well as money damages on the basis that his due process rights were violated by disciplinary committee which found inmate guilty of drug abuse did not present issue on which unresolved question of fact or of state law might have important bearing such that court must insist on complete exhaustion of administrative remedies prior to considered merits of inmate's petition. Harrison v. Dahm, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1990, 911 F.2d 37, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1311 procedures used at a disciplinary hearing which resulted in the imposition of significant sanctions other than the revocation of good time, notwithstanding argument that exhaustion was required because judgment for inmates would act as collateral estoppel in later habeas corpus proceeding seeking restoration of good time credits which had been revoked as discipline. Viens v. Daniels, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1989, 871 F.2d 1328, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1319

Personal grievances of federal prison inmates concerning procedures before institution's disciplinary committee should have been presented, in the first instance, by administrative remedies available to prisoners within the Bureau of Prisons rather than by way of suit under his section seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. Rivera v. Toft, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1973, 477 F.2d 534. Declaratory Judgment 203

State prison inmate satisfied exhaustion of administrative remedies requirement for §§ 1983 suit against prison when he claimed, on administrative appeal of conviction for violating prison rule against spreading rumors, that he was retaliated against after his mother advertised on Internet for legal assistance in pursuing inmate's earlier grievance; appeals claim was sufficient to support allegations, in present case, that inmate (1) was denied access to courts and right to seek counsel, (2) was retaliated against, and (3) was subjected to punishment under prison rule that was unconstitutionally vague and overbroad. Cassels v. Stalder, M.D.La.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 555. Civil Rights 1319

Court in which § 1983 action is brought by prisoner who challenges disciplinary action can make no finding that would justify vacating or reversing disciplinary decision or punishment; in other words, if factual findings necessary for successful § 1983 claim would, if made by state court, vacate or reverse disciplinary decision or punishment, court may not hear § 1983 case. Norton v. Garro, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1067. Civil Rights 1319

Exhaustion of state administrative remedies was not prerequisite to inmate's § 1983 action premised on alleged violations of his due process rights in disciplinary proceedings. McConnell v. Selsky, S.D.N.Y.1994, 877 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies before filing § 1983 suit against prison guard for allegedly retaliating against him for filing grievance, even though guard was mentioned in underlying grievance, where prisoner did not mention guard's alleged retaliatory conduct in grievance or during administrative proceedings. Garrison v. Walters, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2001, 18 Fed.Appx. 329, 2001 WL 1006271, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

Inmate's failure to exhaust administrative challenges to disciplinary sanctions before bringing § 1983 action was not so plain from face of complaint as to warrant dismissal for frivolousness under screening statute. Jerricks v. Schomig, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 57, 2003 WL 1586485, Unreported, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1311

4341. ---- Good time credits, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Inmate serving life sentence was required to exhaust his state remedies before he could maintain civil rights action challenging loss of good time credit; possibility that sentence could be commuted to term of years was enough to invoke rule that federal court should not deprive state court system of first opportunity to address merits of constitutional issue and state courts provided method through which inmate could challenge loss of his good time credits, regardless of his life sentence. Blair-Bey v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1990, 919 F.2d 1338, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1319

Before Arkansas prisoner could seek relief under § 1983 and restoration of "good-time" credits on due process theories that disciplinary hearing took place outside applicable limitations period and that he was factually innocent of disciplinary charges against him, inmate had to first succeed in having his disciplinary conviction set aside, either in habeas corpus proceeding, or some other appropriate forum. Richmond v. Duke, E.D.Ark.1995, 909 F.Supp. 626. Civil Rights 1092

4342. ---- Grievance procedures, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

State prison inmate who alleged that corrections official had violated her right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment could not fulfill administrative exhaustion requirement for § 1983 Eighth Amendment action against official by voluntarily participating in corrections department's investigation that led to official's resignation, or by voluntarily providing additional information to department beyond that initially sought in its investigation; rather, inmate was obligated to comply with all stages of department's written grievance procedures, since those procedures provided prison officials with authority to provide some form of relief or take some form of action in response to inmate's complaint, and did not provide any alternative grievance mechanisms. Hock v. Thipedeau, D.Conn.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 451, reconsideration denied 2003 WL 21003431. Civil Rights 1319

Fact that state corrections official had resigned in response to corrections department's investigation of official's relationship with inmate, and that inmate's subsequent § 1983 Eighth Amendment action based on same facts sought only money damages, which were not available under corrections department's written grievance procedures, did not render grievance procedures "unavailable" to inmate, or moot statutory administrative exhaustion requirement for inmate's suit; deciding factor was that written procedures provided prison officials with authority to provide some form of relief or take some form of action in response to inmate's complaint, e.g. corrective action or changes in policies, regardless of whether there was specific provision for monetary relief. Hock v. Thipedeau, D.Conn.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 451, reconsideration denied 2003 WL 21003431. Civil Rights 1319

New evidence submitted by defendant corrections officer with his motion for summary judgment provided no compelling reason for transferee judge to overturn prior determination of transferor judge, who denied officer's motion to dismiss, that plaintiff, a former pretrial detainee, had exhausted his administrative remedies in accord with the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), and determination was thus binding, under law of the case doctrine, in detainee's §§ 1983 action alleging use of excessive force; detainee's original complaint alleged that he filed grievance within time prescribed by corrections department policy, and relevant facts had not changed at time officer presented his summary judgment motion. Brengettcy v. Horton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 423 F.3d 674. Courts 99(7)

State prison inmate bringing § 1983 action against corrections officials had not failed to exhaust administrative remedies under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) by failing to appear in person before prison review board that heard his grievance, where board had no rule requiring grievants to appear in person, and inmate allegedly was not informed that board wanted him to appear in person. Carroll v. Yates, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 362 F.3d 984. Civil Rights 1319

Court of Appeals would not exercise jurisdiction on basis of diversity where defendant had the burden to plead this basis in its notice of removal, and it did not. Ervast v. Flexible Products Co., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 346 F.3d 1007, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 88 Fed.Appx. 393, 2003 WL 22994329, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 30, 543 U.S. 808, 160 L.Ed.2d 10. Removal Of Cases 107(7)

State prison inmate's proposed amended §§ 1983 complaint against corporate administrator of prison was insufficient to plead exhaustion of administrative remedies as required under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), even though the proposed complaint alleged that the inmate completed incident report and verbally complained to staff members after he was assaulted and battered by prison guard, and that he exhausted all administrative remedies of which he was made aware, where he neither claimed to have filed a grievance as it was defined under the prison's administrative grievance procedure, nor that the grievance procedure was made unavailable to him. Torres v. Corrections Corp. of America, N.D.Okla.2005, 372 F.Supp.2d 1258. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison Litigation Reform Act's (PLRA) requirement that prisoner exhaust available administrative remedies before bringing civil action did not apply to general state tort-claim procedures, as opposed to institutional grievance procedures; thus, state inmate's failure to timely file administrative tort claim against corrections officials whose misconduct allegedly resulted in personal injury did not preclude his filing §§ 1983 action against officials following exhaustion of institutional grievance. Wisenbaker v. Farwell, D.Nev.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 1160. Civil Rights 1319

Receipt by state prisoner, of letter from inmate grievance review committee (IGRC) regarding another matter, stating that medical decisions were not grievable issues, did not excuse prisoner's failure to exhaust administrative remedies on claim against administrative nurse, that he was improperly forced to take anti-tuberculosis medication which had severe side effects in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights, to extent failure extended over three month period from onset of side effects until receipt of letter. Lee v. Carson, W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 532. Prisons 13(10)

State prison inmate who alleged that corrections officers had assaulted him satisfied PLRA's administrative exhaustion requirement prior to filing his pro se § 1983 Eighth Amendment action against officers, even though he may not have technically exhausted state regulations' prescribed procedures; inmate made both formal and informal attempts to register grievance, and did not receive formal response to his formal grievance until five months after it was filed, and wrote additional informal letters to officials during that time. Jenkins v. Raub, W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 502. Civil Rights 1319

The Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) did not require dismissal of a state prisoner's pro se § 1983 action against prison officials for violation of his Eighth Amendment rights when they allegedly failed to provide adequate medical treatment, on ground that he failed to totally exhaust available administrative remedies, where he met exhaustion requirement as to only one of his two claims; rather, the prisoner would be allowed 20 days in which to amend his complaint to remove the unexhausted claim. Blackmon v. Crawford, D.Nev.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1174. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10; Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Prison inmate failed to satisfy exhaustion of administrative remedies requirement, imposed by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) before § 1983 suit could be brought claiming that officials imperiled him by identifying him to prison population as gang member; inmate bypassed formal prison grievance procedures by communicating informally with higher level prison officials, after discussions with superintendent did not produce desired offer of protection. Labounty v. Johnson, W.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 496. Civil Rights 194

State inmate did not exhaust his administrative remedies, as required by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) with respect to his § 1983 claims against correction officers; although inmate filed grievance, he never took any further steps to prosecute or appeal his grievance after prison officials failed to respond. Santos v. Hauck, W.D.N.Y.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 257. Civil Rights 1319

State inmate exhausted her administrative remedies prior to filing § 1983 suit, despite her failure to follow proper procedures for initiating grievance against prison guard, where inmate forwarded several handwritten letters to prison officials complaining of guard's conduct, which resulted in department investigating guard and his voluntary resignation. Hock v. Thipedeau, D.Conn.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 446, vacated in part on reconsideration 245 F.Supp.2d 451, reconsideration denied 2003 WL 21003431. Civil Rights 1319

County correctional facility inmate exhausted his administrative remedies, as required under Prison Litigation Reform Act, before commencing § 1983 action claiming physical mistreatment, when he submitted written grievance to grievance coordinator, and county took no action. Abney v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2002, 237

F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1319

It was optional under rules governing Pennsylvania prison grievance system for inmate to request legal relief, and thus, inmate's failure to request monetary relief throughout Pennsylvania prison grievance process did not constitute failure to exhaust administrative remedies with respect to §§ 1983 claim for monetary relief. Williams v. Pennsylvania, Dept. of Corrections, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 146 Fed.Appx. 554, 2005 WL 1950801, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

State inmate in private prison facility was required to file grievance challenging his transfer on state grievance form, rather than on private facility's grievance form, and thus inmate did not exhaust his administrative remedies before filing federal civil rights suit by submitting private facility's form, where only state was involved in decision to transfer. Ziegler v. Watkins, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 684, 2004 WL 318720, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 41, 543 U.S. 824, 160 L.Ed.2d 35. Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1319

State prisoner failed to exhaust administrative remedies following prison officials alleged allowance of a co-prisoner to beat him up, as required to support prisoner's § 1983 claim against officers, where prisoner admitted he did not follow the grievance procedure in effect at the time of the alleged events. Smith v. Corrections Corp. of America, Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 649, 2004 WL 267772, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Requirement that pretrial detainee exhaust administrative remedies before bringing § 1983 action for use of excessive force during strip search was not excused, even though he was moved from county jail to county jail and kept in solitary confinement until deadline for filing grievance had passed, was never informed of grievance procedure, and monetary relief he was seeking was not available under applicable grievance policy; detainee was not actively prevented from filing grievance. Turrietta v. Barreras, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 640, 2004 WL 214451, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Second amended complaint of pro se state inmate who sought damages under § 1983 for two incidents in which two correctional officers allegedly used excessive force, in which alleged that he availed himself of grievance procedures pertaining to what happened in an incident, would be dismissed for failure to exhaust his administrative remedies, but without prejudice to inmate's filing of third amended complaint demonstrating exhaustion of his remedies as to both incidents and both officers; complaint failed to allege that grievances were filed with respect to both incidents alleged, and it was impossible to determine whether he had exhausted his remedies as to either. Richardson v. Lorenzo, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 66691, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319; Federal Civil Procedure 1838

State prisoner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies, as required prior to filing civil rights action under § 1983 against prison employees, seeking money damages for their alleged failure to protect him from an assault by fellow inmates, where he never appealed denial of his grievance, and he never grieved assault at issue. Wilson v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22132865, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner did not exhaust his administrative remedies prior to bringing civil rights case alleging that various employees of state correctional facility assaulted him; although prisoner alluded to scores of other grievances relating to other incidents from other times, he did not file any grievances or appeals relating to alleged assault. Sedney v. Hasse, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21939702, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

State prison inmate's obligation, under the Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995 (PLRA), to exhaust his available administrative remedies before bringing civil rights action against sheriff's deputies who apprehended him when he exited courtroom during sentencing proceeding was not met by fact that sheriff's department conducted internal affairs investigation into the matter after Department of Corrections employee who interviewed inmate and documented his injuries filed complaint with the sheriff's department; sheriff's department internal affairs investigations are separate and distinct from grievance procedures. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

21920922, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Pro se inmate's § 1983 complaint, alleging that he attempted to file a grievance to address his claims of retaliation, that he attempted to informally make his claim to various prison officials, and that he wrote a letter to the superintendent of the prison with respect to alleged retaliation, indicated, when liberally read, that he may have attempted to exhaust his administrative remedies, and thus sua sponte dismissal of complaint under Prison Litigation Reform Act for lack of exhaustion was unwarranted. Davidson v. Pearson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 71 Fed.Appx. 885, 2003 WL 21891187, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(3); Federal Civil Procedure 1824

State prisoner did not exhaust administrative remedies available to him, as required under the Prisoner Litigation Reform Act to bring civil rights suit under § 1983 alleging that he was subjected to several unconstitutional prison conditions, where he did not file written grievances, but rather, pursued his complaints by submitting a civil litigation. Dixon v. Laboriel, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21729834, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner's sending in an appeal to the highest level available in California prison administrative grievance system was not sufficient to establish exhaustion of his administrative remedies required to file a civil rights action; prisoner had to wait until he received a response from the highest level of review before filing federal complaint. Tolbert v. McGrath, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31898207, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

4343. ---- Loss of property, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Indigent prisoner, who alleged that prison guard took his property without due process of law, had adequate postdeprivation remedy in Mississippi despite fact Mississippi did not allow for in forma pauperis appeals and, thus, prisoner was not denied right to procedural due process; under Mississippi law, prisoner could have commenced civil conversion action in forma pauperis against prison guard. Nickens v. Melton, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1994, 38 F.3d 183, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 43 F.3d 672, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1376, 514 U.S. 1025, 131 L.Ed.2d 230. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 10

Prisoner could not bring action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for negligent loss of personal property by prison authorities, especially when he could have instituted action in state court which would have provided postdeprivation remedies sufficient to satisfy due process requirements. McIntyre v. Portee, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1986, 784 F.2d 566. Civil Rights 1098

Although prison officials could not be liable to prisoner under this section for negligent loss of prisoner's property when there was state tort remedy available to prisoner, mere existence of state tort remedy by which prisoner could be compensated for his loss did not preclude availability of claim under this section for intentional constitutional deprivations. Tunnell v. Office of Public Defender, E.D.Pa.1984, 583 F.Supp. 762. Civil Rights 1319

4344. ---- Medical care, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

State prisoner was required to exhaust his administrative remedies before filing suit under § 1983 for the Louisiana Department of Corrections' (LDOC's) alleged negligent and intentional violations of his Eighth Amendment right to medical treatment, even though the Louisiana Supreme Court had recently found the state's statutory prison grievance system to be unconstitutional in part; although the Louisiana Supreme Court's Pope decision held Louisiana's prison grievance system unconstitutional to the extent it purported to deprive state courts of original jurisdiction over prisoner cases, the prison grievance system remained in force, and, under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), all "available" remedies had to be exhausted, regardless of the nature of the relief offered. Ferrington v. Louisiana Dept. of Corrections, C.A.5 (La.) 2002, 315 F.3d 529, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 206, 540 U.S. 883, 157 L.Ed.2d 150. Civil Rights 1311

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

By deciding state prisoner's appeal from denial of grievance alleging that prison guards violated his constitutional rights by beating him without provocation and then refusing to provide medical care for injuries they inflicted, after prisoner refused to appear to explain what had happened, prison's administrative review board established that prisoner had exhausted his administrative remedies, as required under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) before prisoner could bring § 1983 action. Ford v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 362 F.3d 395. Civil Rights 1319

Failure of state prisoner, who alleged deliberate indifference by prison doctor to his serious medical condition, to have filed an offender complaint against the doctor was a lack of exhaustion of administrative remedies that precluded §§ 1983 action. Adsit v. Kaplan, W.D.Wis.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 776. Civil Rights 1319

State prison inmate failed to exhaust administrative remedies, precluding §§ 1983 claim that his medications were reduced by nurse practitioner in retaliation for inmate's negative comments about physician who was friend of nurse, when his administrative complaint emphasized medical unsoundness of reduction decision and mentioned retaliation only in closing paragraph; petition did not give authorities notice that retaliation was being claimed, so that they could consider claim and potentially resolve it prior to suit. Reimann v. Frank, W.D.Wis.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1319

New York prisoner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies as to any defendant besides prison nurse before suing under §§ 1983 where his grievance alleged nothing more than one discrete instance of maltreatment at the hands of nurse; nothing in prisoner's grievance would have alerted other prison authorities that he was making an allegation of failure to correct systemic problems with prison infirmary, nor would an official investigating prisoner's grievance reasonably be expected to have explored such matters. Turner v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2005, 376 F.Supp.2d 321. Civil Rights 1319

State prison inmate's failure to exhaust administrative remedies barred his suit against administrative nurse claiming deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs, in violation of Eighth Amendment, alleging inadequate response when he began to experience side effects from tuberculosis medication he was unnecessarily forced to take; failure to exhaust was not excused by nurse's assertion that side effects were just temporary reaction to medicine. Lee v. Carson, W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 532. Prisons 13(10)

State inmate was required to fully exhaust his administrative remedies before filing § 1983 suit alleging that prison's health services director violated his Eighth Amendment rights by establishing policy that no medical procedures that were not life-saving in nature were to be performed on inmates, thereby denying inmate adequate treatment for his hernia. Lawrence v. Virginia Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Va.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 709. Civil Rights 1319

State prison inmate did not exhaust his administrative remedies, as required under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), for his § 1983 claim that prison doctor failed to properly treat his hepatitis C condition in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights, where his administrative grievances did not mention hepatitis C and he filed the grievances before the alleged mistreatment of his hepatitis C began. Blackmon v. Crawford, D.Nev.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1319

State prisoner was not required to exhaust prison administrative remedies, under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), before suing under § 1983 on claims that prison officials showed deliberate indifference to his physical condition following two assaults, under exception to exhaustion requirement applicable when damage has been done and administrative action could provide no remedy. Ford v. Page, N.D.Ill.2001, 169 F.Supp.2d 831.

Prisoner seeking damages for lack of medical attention did not have to exhaust state tort claims procedures before filing civil rights action in federal court. Lacey v. C.S.P. Solano Medical Staff, E.D.Cal.1997, 990 F.Supp. 1199.

State prisoner's § 1983 claim for improper medical attention would not be dismissed even though § 1983 claim was asserted in petition also seeking habeas corpus relief based on violation of speedy trial rights as to which prisoner had not exhausted state remedies. Greer v. St. Tammany Parish Jail, E.D.La.1988, 693 F.Supp. 502. Civil Rights 1319

California state prisoner failed to exhaust administrative remedies, as required under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), by failing to obtain final decision from Director of the California Department of Corrections as to his § 1983 claims against prison officials for violation of Eighth Amendment, arising from his exposure to second-hand tobacco smoke and lack of medical attention for his ulcer and anxiety attacks. McElroy v. Lamarque, N.D.Cal.2004, 2004 WL 287365, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

State prisoner exhausted his administrative remedies prior to filing his §§ 1983 action against prison officials, in connection with officials' alleged failure to provide prisoner with appropriate medical treatment for hepatitis C; prisoner filed complaint with state Commission of Corrections Medical Review Board, filed a grievance complaint with the prison administrators, and appealed the denial of his grievance. McKenna v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 102752, Unreported, appeal dismissed 386 F.3d 432. Civil Rights 1319

Inmate's § 1983 claim for deliberate indifference to medical needs would not be dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), where all that was clear was that matters under investigation by the Office of Inspector General (OIG) were non-grievable, and that the inmate had lodged a complaint with the OIG; even the PLRA's rigid exhaustion requirements did not obligate the inmate to fill in the blanks left by an administrative grievance resolution directive. Pressley v. Green, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 97701, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

State prison inmate failed to exhaust administrative remedies, prior to commencing suit against prison claiming that he was denied medical treatment for glaucoma, in violation of Eighth Amendment, when only claim made administratively was application to be excused from academic program due to eye condition. Singleton v. Perilli, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 74238, Unreported. Civil Rights 1319

Former inmate asserting claims of inadequate medical care and nursing care failed to exhaust his administrative remedies before commencing his § 1983 suit, such that the action was barred by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), despite his claim that his extensive period of hospitalization prevented him from complying with the applicable grievance procedures in a timely manner; applicable regulations provided for consideration of belated grievances or appeals due to mitigating circumstances, and despite his hospitalization, there was no indication that he sought permission to file a late grievance, or that he took additional steps to seek administrative review after failing to receive a further response to his letters. Roa v. Fowler, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21383264, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

4345. ---- Parole, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

District of Columbia prisoner could bring §§ 1983 action challenging the procedures used by United States Parole Commission in determining whether he was eligible for reparole, and did not have to first petition for habeas relief, where successful prosecution of prisoner's claims would not necessarily imply, or automatically result, in speedier release from prison. Fletcher v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2004, 370 F.3d 1223, 361 U.S.App.D.C. 499, vacated on rehearing 391 F.3d 250, 364 U.S.App.D.C. 1, rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner's claim that statutory amendment increasing length of time between parole reconsideration hearings was unconstitutional ex post facto law did not assert that prisoner was entitled to parole and, thus, prisoner made cognizable § 1983 claim which did not require exhaustion of prisoner's state remedies. Roller v. Cavanaugh, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1993, 984 F.2d 120, certiorari granted 113 S.Ct. 2412, 508 U.S. 939, 124 L.Ed.2d 635, certiorari dismissed as improvidently granted 114 S.Ct. 593, 510 U.S. 42, 126 L.Ed.2d 409, on remand 932 F.Supp. 729. Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner dissatisfied with procedures used to consider his application for parole is not required to exhaust all remedies in state court before commencing federal litigation; because challenge to procedures that state uses in considering applications for parole does not draw into question basis of confinement, it need not be brought under § 2254 and exhaustion of state remedies is unnecessary. Clark v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 960 F.2d 663. Civil Rights 1319

Federal civil rights action alleging that state Prison Review Board violated due process and equal protection rights by arbitrarily and capriciously denying parole could be brought in federal court only after prisoner, who simultaneously brought habeas corpus petition, exhausted state remedies which would permit bringing of habeas corpus petition. Crump v. Lane, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1986, 807 F.2d 1394. Civil Rights 1319

Since exhaustion of state remedies is not required in actions under this section, state prisoner who claimed that parole board had improperly considered prior invalid convictions in determining his parole eligibility was not required to exhaust state remedies. Strader v. Troy, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1978, 571 F.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1319

Heck v. Humphrey's favorable termination rule did not bar parolee's constitutional claim against police officers where it was unclear either that parolee diligently pursued state remedies to challenge the decision revoking his parole, or that, even if parolee did so, he would have obtained a ruling from court before he had completed the sentence for the underlying parole violation. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1097

Inmate's challenge to prison regulation affecting his eligibility for parole fell under § 1983, and could be addressed without first filing petition for habeas corpus and exhausting state remedies; inmate did not allege that he was entitled to parole itself, and his lawsuit did not address actual fact or length of his confinement, but only regulation pursuant to which inmate's parole eligibility date could be extended if inmate was found guilty of assault. Lewis v. Driskell, M.D.Tenn.1994, 850 F.Supp. 678. Civil Rights 1311; Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 516.1

State prisoner could not prosecute his claim for monetary damages based on alleged miscalculation of his date for parole eligibility without exhausting state remedies. Ringenberg v. Cox, E.D.Va.1981, 524 F.Supp. 112. Civil Rights 1319

State prisoners bringing civil rights action challenging procedures of parole board were not required to exhaust state judicial remedies. La Bonte v. Gates, D.C.Conn.1976, 406 F.Supp. 1227. Civil Rights 1319

Inmate's allegations detailing toiletries and other items he was denied and describing the condition of his toilet while in segregation adequately identified and described shortcomings inmate was complaining about in grievance, and, thus, his administrative remedies on claim were exhausted, for purposes of bringing § 1983 action based on allegation that withholding of personal hygiene items and cleaning supplies violated his right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. James v. O'Sullivan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 62 Fed.Appx. 636, 2003 WL 1466486, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

4346. ---- Release, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Parolee's §§ 1983 retaliation claim based on search of his residence was not barred by Heck v. Humphrey's favorable termination rule since granting relief on that claim would not necessarily imply that parolee's parole revocation, which stemmed from the search was itself invalid. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1097

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Dismissal of inmate's § 1983 action against prison officials for failure to exhaust administrative remedies was not warranted where inmate had been released from prison and could not be ordered to exhaust remedies. Liner v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2000, 115 F.Supp.2d 432. Civil Rights 1311

Even if inmate's complaint, seeking to preliminarily enjoin warden of correctional facility from determining inmate's institutional status and eligibility for temporary release on basis of allegedly lapsed detainer issued by Texas authorities, was to be treated as stating civil rights claim under this section, it was appropriate to require initial exhaustion of state administrative remedies where there was no showing that such would be inadequate to secure relief sought; considerations of federal-state comity and judicial economy equally supported requiring inmate to seek adjudication of Texas charges as prerequisite to expungement. Jones v. Cummings, W.D.N.Y.1981, 528 F.Supp. 1078. Civil Rights 1319

Inasmuch as former inmate sought damages only in civil rights suit against parole board and prison board and their members and employees on basis that he was arbitrarily denied participation in work release and furlough programs, plaintiff was not required to exhaust state remedies in order to maintain the federal suit. Gahagan v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, E.D.Pa.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1326. Civil Rights 1319

4347. ---- Segregation or solitary confinement, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Existence of administrative procedures to obtain relief from segregated housing of prison inmates would not preclude action for relief in federal court under this section. McClelland v. Sigler, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1972, 456 F.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1319

Prison inmate who was no longer being housed in administrative segregation lacked standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that practice of randomly double-celling inmates in administrative segregation constituted deliberate indifference to his rights, absent showing that he was in substantial and immediate danger of being double-celled again. Kellensworth v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 221 F.3d 1342, Unreported. Civil Rights 1331(4)

4348. ---- Transfers, prisons and prisoners, exhaustion of remedies

Exhaustion of state remedies was not prerequisite to state prison inmates' civil rights action to enjoin their transfer from state mental hospital to general prison system without prior hearing. Cruz v. Ward, S.D.N.Y.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1277, reversed on other grounds 558 F.2d 658, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 740, 434 U.S. 1018, 54 L.Ed.2d 765. Civil Rights 1319

Action by state prisoner against state officials charging that his out-of-state transfer to federal penitentiary violated his right to due process and that the conditions or circumstances of continued incarceration in federal institution amounted to cruel and unusual punishment could be maintained under this section and prisoner was not required to exhaust state remedies prior to maintaining action. Tai v. Thompson, D.C.Hawai'i 1975, 387 F.Supp. 912. Civil Rights 1319

4349. Small businesses, exhaustion of remedies

Civil rights action brought by American Indian and construction company of which he allegedly owned 51 percent of the stock would not be held in abeyance due to plaintiffs' alleged failure to exhaust administrative remedies, because there is no requirement under this section that state remedies be exhausted, and defendants did not establish what federal remedies plaintiffs had failed to exhaust. Cornelius v. La Croix, E.D.Wis.1983, 575 F.Supp. 1392. Civil Rights 1321

4350. Utilities, exhaustion of remedies

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

This section did not require that home-owners, bringing class action challenging procedures by which electric power company terminates service to delinquent accounts, exhaust remedies before the state corporation commission. Cottrell v. Virginia Elec. & Power Co., E.D.Va.1973, 363 F.Supp. 692. Civil Rights 1321

4351. Voting and elections, exhaustion of remedies

Unintentional irregularities in primary election one day after judge order removal of candidate's name from ballot was not actionable under § 1983, if adequate and fair state-law remedy existed, even though several voters lacked even opportunity to vote, and even if board of elections made foolish decisions regarding delegation of power and used relay system of communication through several intermediaries to contact school custodians; the late-issued order and breakdown in communication system delayed arrival of voting machines, and technicians committed merely human error in herculean task of disabling levers and collecting ballots in all voting machines. Gold v. Feinberg, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 101 F.3d 796. Civil Rights 1321

Federal claim arising under this section was supplementary to any state remedies that might be available to plaintiffs in action challenging constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 42:39 and Code of Judicial Conduct, Canon 7, subd. A(3) requiring a judge to resign before becoming a candidate for nonjudicial elective office; there was no requirement that the plaintiffs, a Louisiana appellate judge and those who wished to support him in a possible mayoral campaign, exhaust state remedies in order for district court to assert jurisdiction over the civil rights claim. Morial v. Judiciary Commission of State of La., E.D.La.1977, 438 F.Supp. 599, reversed on other grounds 565 F.2d 295, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1887, 435 U.S. 1013, 56 L.Ed.2d 395. Civil Rights 1321

Even assuming arguendo that claim under § 2000d et seq. of this title was supportable by complaint of residents of Crown Heights area of Brooklyn, New York, seeking to have decision of New York City Board of Estimate to divide such area into two separate community planning districts declared null and void, such claim could not lie where plaintiffs had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies. Cave v. Beame, E.D.N.Y.1977, 433 F.Supp. 172. Civil Rights 1318

Action challenging validity of six-month residence requirement imposed by Connecticut on persons seeking to register to vote in town where they reside as violative of equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 would not be dismissed on ground that plaintiffs had failed to exhaust state administrative remedies since it would be wholly unrealistic to expect a board for admission of electors to rule squarely contrary to state's constitutional and statutory commands. Nicholls v. Schaffer, D.C.Conn.1972, 344 F.Supp. 238. Elections 112

Prospective candidate would not be required to exhaust administrative step by requesting executive committee of state political party to provide alternative to payment of qualifying fee before filing suit to enjoin enforcement of party resolution which required payment of fee to be party as prerequisite to becoming candidate in party primary. Harper v. Vance, N.D.Ala.1972, 342 F.Supp. 136. Injunction 80

Voters and incumbent candidate sufficiently demonstrated that quo warranto was inadequate state remedy to correct alleged deprivation of right to vote, in lawsuit under §§ 1983 based on claim that voting machines miscounted votes resulting in election of opponent; state law did not provide for remedial measures when it was determined that machine malfunction did occur, process could have taken entire term of two years in which opponent held office, and there was no danger of protracted vacancy in office because parties agreed that incumbent would remain in office pending resolution of litigation. Shannon v. Jacobowitz, N.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 180253, Unreported, reversed and remanded 394 F.3d 90. Civil Rights 1321; Quo Warranto 4

4352. Workers' compensation, exhaustion of remedies

A disappointed New York workmen's compensation claimant had right to sue under this section for money damages for alleged conspiracy to deprive him of his constitutional rights by means of unlawful and dilatory tactics designed to hinder processing of his claim, notwithstanding that he may have failed to exhaust administrative remedy. Powell v. Workmen's Compensation Bd. of State of N. Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1964, 327 F.2d 131. Civil Rights 1321; Conspiracy 1.1

4353. Zoning, exhaustion of remedies

Even if city's issuance of certificate of zoning noncompliance was "final decision," claim by landowner that certificate based on setback and side yard zoning requirements allegedly waived by city was violation of takings clause would still not be ripe for adjudication in federal civil rights action against city and mayor, because landowner failed to first seek compensation from city pursuant to Utah's inverse condemnation law. Bateman v. City of West Bountiful, C.A.10 (Utah) 1996, 89 F.3d 704. Federal Courts 13.25

Landowner who wished to build wood-chipping project on his property was not required to appeal city's temporary suspension of project's approval under local building code before filing federal civil rights action challenging the temporary suspension, where city's zoning decisions were not subject to review under code. A.A. Profiles, Inc. v. City of Ft. Lauderdale, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1988, 850 F.2d 1483, rehearing denied 861 F.2d 727, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1743, 490 U.S. 1020, 104 L.Ed.2d 180. Civil Rights 1318

Claim that city redevelopment ordinance violated due process and equal protection could be pursued in action under federal civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] without regard to adequacy of state remedies. Williams v. City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1986, 783 F.2d 114. Civil Rights 1318

Displaced business owner's claim under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] against city and certain public officials who were administering city's urban renewal program was not barred by failure to exhaust federal administrative remedies in view of fact that there did not exist any procedure designed to redress allegations that urban renewal program was being administered improperly. Pietroniro v. Borough of Oceanport, N.J., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1985, 764 F.2d 976, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 570, 474 U.S. 1020, 88 L.Ed.2d 554. Civil Rights 1310

Where state offers panoply of administrative and judicial remedies, litigants may not ordinarily obtain federal court review of local zoning and planning disputes by means of federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Raskiewicz v. Town of New Boston, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1985, 754 F.2d 38, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 135, 474 U.S. 845, 88 L.Ed.2d 111. Civil Rights 1073

Finality and exhaustion requirements did not apply to civil rights claim of owner of undeveloped property alleging that township violated its due process rights by arbitrarily, capriciously, and willfully ignoring owner's compliance with township's legitimate zoning standards to deny owner its requested zoning certificates. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 570

Developer of proposed subdivision was not required to exhaust its available state remedies prior to bringing action under §§ 1983 against town, its planning board, and several board members, alleging that defendants' actions in connection with its site plan application violated its constitutional rights. Ridgeview Partners, LLC v. Entwistle, S.D.N.Y.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 395. Civil Rights 1318

If village's deprivation of nursery school's due process right to notice of any hearing that might affect its property rights was random and unauthorized, there was no way that village could have prevented it, and school would be required to exhaust any adequate, postdeprivation remedies provided by state before seeking relief in civil rights action in federal court. Bennett-Beil v. Village of Hartland, E.D.Wis.1997, 958 F.Supp. 407. Civil Rights 1318

A developer would not be barred from maintaining a civil rights action for review of a local zoning dispute on basis that developer had allegedly failed to take advantage of adequate remedies under town ordinance; there was no administrative procedure by which the developer could have appealed the refusal to extend the site plan approval. Mays-Ott Co., Inc. v. Town of Nags Head, E.D.N.C.1990, 751 F.Supp. 82. Civil Rights 1318

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Landowners could be required to seek variance from terms of challenged ordinance before instituting § 1983 action attacking application of ordinance. Martinez v. Junta de Planificacion de Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 736 F.Supp. 413. Civil Rights 1318

Property owner's failure to seek compensation through available state inverse condemnation procedures for alleged "taking" arising from refusal to grant application for rezoning precluded his maintenance of § 1983 suit alleging violation of takings clause of Fifth Amendment. Calibre Spring Hill, Ltd. v. Cobb County, Ga., N.D.Ga.1989, 715 F.Supp. 1577. Civil Rights 1318

Civil rights plaintiff was not required to appeal denial of use and occupancy permit to zoning hearing board prior to bringing federal civil rights action contending that permit denial denied him his liberty or property without due process of law; plaintiff alleged that denial of permit was authorized act resulting from established governmental procedure. Forest v. Banko, E.D.Pa.1984, 662 F.Supp. 275. Civil Rights 1318

4354. Miscellaneous actions, exhaustion of remedies

Rule of United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, that state court proceedings evolving out of conflicting state and tribal rulings had to be exhausted before federal court could consider habeas petition raising same subject matter, would not be extended to bar district court jurisdiction over § 1983 action regarding membership of tribal council until state court proceeding concerning same issue had been exhausted. Bowen v. Doyle, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2000, 230 F.3d 525. Civil Rights 1321; Indians 27(3)

General rule that § 1983 permits plaintiffs with federal or constitutional claims to sue in federal court without first exhausting state judicial or administrative remedies did not apply so as to permit city contractor that failed to pursue state postdeprivation remedy for its alleged de facto debarment from city procurements without due process to bring § 1983 claim against city and city officials; requisite constitutional violation never occurred, given existence of adequate postdeprivation remedy. Hellenic American Neighborhood Action Committee v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 101 F.3d 877, certiorari dismissed 118 S.Ct. 15, 521 U.S. 1140, 138 L.Ed.2d 1048. Civil Rights 1321

Younger abstention was not warranted in attorney's §§ 1983 action challenging refusal of state commission on judicial conduct to permit him to withdraw from representing judge, even though state disciplinary proceedings against judge were ongoing, where attorney sought vindication of constitutional rights that were completely independent of judge's rights, and relief sought by attorney would not interfere with commission's proceedings. Kunz v. New York State Com'n on Judicial Conduct, N.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 188. Federal Courts 55

To the extent that it was required to exhaust administrative remedies prior to bringing enforcement action under § 1983 and Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act (PAMII), agency designated by state to provide protection and advocacy services to disabled and mentally ill individuals satisfied such requirement when it attempted to request pertinent records from state's corrections department and department declined to provide them. Protection & Advocacy For Persons With Disabilities v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 303, 191 A.L.R. Fed. 661. Civil Rights 1311

In bringing due process taking claim and related conspiracy claim, plaintiff did not have to exhaust all state administrative and judicial procedures before bringing § 1983 claim; however, plaintiff did have to satisfy "finality" requirement. Doty v. City of Tampa, M.D.Fla.1996, 947 F.Supp. 468. Federal Courts 13.25

Any person whose rights under FCC regulations have been denied by local government has cause of action under §

4381. Persons entitled to maintain action generally

This section is designed for redress through federal court action of a party or class of persons injured by subjection to deprivation of constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities, not for enforcement of abstract rights nor for redress for conduct whose only impact is injury to plaintiff in common with all members of the public. Manion v. Holzman, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1967, 379 F.2d 843, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 479, 389 U.S. 976, 19 L.Ed.2d 470.

Regulation does not create federal right, which is enforceable under § 1983, unless it defines or fleshes out content of enforceable right contained in governing statute. Rabin v. Wilson-Coker, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 332, reversed 362 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1027

Only the person toward whom the state action was directed, and not those incidentally affected, may maintain a §§ 1983 claim; a person may not sue or recover for the deprivation of the civil rights of another. Ramirez-De Leon v.

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Mujica-Cotto, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Provision of Medicaid statute, which created a duty of the state to furnish medical assistance in a reasonably prompt manner, did not create a federal right for claimant with pulmonary dysfunction to obtain a vest airway clearance system, precluding claimant's § 1983 action alleging that state department of social and rehabilitative services' denial of his request for system violated Medicaid Act. Sanders ex rel. Rayl v. Kansas Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, D.Kan.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 1233. Civil Rights 1052

Students endured actual, imminent, concrete, and particularized injury resulting from school district's nonresident admissions policy, and, thus, they had standing to pursue relief under procedural due process clause to extent that school denied hearing which students requested. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

A person may not sue or recover under Section 1983 for the deprivation of the civil rights of another. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1332(1)

In determining whether statute creates private right of action in favor of particular plaintiff, unless legislative intent can be inferred from statutory language, structure, or some other source, essential predicate for implication of private remedy simply does not exist. Hodgson v. Mississippi Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Wis.1997, 963 F.Supp. 776. Action 3

4382. Considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action-- Generally

A person has standing to assert claims under this section if that person was aggrieved or injured by conduct, even if that person was not object of conduct allegedly in violation of this section. Coggins v. Carpenter, E.D.Pa.1979, 468 F.Supp. 270. Civil Rights 1333(1)

To have standing to bring action in federal court, individual plaintiff must have sufficient personal interest to impart concrete adverseness required, and interest which plaintiff seeks to protect must be within zone of interests to be protected or regulated by statute or constitutional guarantee in question. Grier v. Specialized Skills, Inc., W.D.N.C.1971, 326 F.Supp. 856. Federal Civil Procedure 111

4383. ---- Exhaustion of remedies, considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action

Patients and former patients of state mental institutions did not lack standing to challenge constitutionality of Maryland involuntary commitment statutes, Code Md.1957, art. 59, §§ 1, 21; Supp. art. 59, §§ 14, 15, because they had not exhausted available state remedies. Anderson v. Solomon, D.C.Md.1970, 315 F.Supp. 1192. Civil Rights 1321

4384. ---- Injury, considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action

Where plaintiff challenges discrete governmental decision as being based on impermissible criterion and it is undisputed that government would have made same decision regardless, there is no cognizable injury warranting relief under § 1983. Texas v. Lesage, U.S.Tex.1999, 120 S.Ct. 467, 528 U.S. 18, 164 A.L.R. Fed. 785, 145 L.Ed.2d 347. Civil Rights 1031; Civil Rights 1333(1)

Parade participants as volunteers of unincorporated association had standing to seek compensatory damages for the denial of parade permits, even though permits were later issued in association's name; the participants suffered injury by the alleged abridgement of their First Amendment rights when the City denied the parade permits, and a favorable decision would redress their injury. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Advocates for gay and lesbian rights suffered "injury in fact," for purpose of having standing in civil rights lawsuit alleging violation of their federal constitutional rights, by amendment to state constitution, which limited state-recognized institution of marriage to heterosexual couples, since imposition of barrier resulted in denial of equal treatment. Citizens for Equal Protection v. Bruning, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2006, 455 F.3d 859. Civil Rights 1333(6)

Feelings of frustration experienced by signature collectors stemming from their disagreement with the Oregon Secretary of State's application of unwritten rules governing Oregon's initiative petition process were not sufficiently concrete to constitute the "injury-in-fact" required for Article III standing in their §§ 1983 action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. Gest v. Bradbury, C.A.9 (Or.) 2006, 443 F.3d 1177. Civil Rights 1333(6)

Faculty member and student at municipal university had standing to bring §§ 1983 action against university seeking nominal damages for alleged Establishment Clause violation arising from temporary campus display of sculpture allegedly hostile to Roman Catholic Church; sculpture was displayed at prominent location, and plaintiffs were frequently brought into direct and unwelcome contact with it, or forced to alter their behavior to avoid contact with it. O'Connor v. Washburn University, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 416 F.3d 1216, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1469, 164 L.Ed.2d 247. Civil Rights 1331(2)

Police officer's wife lacked standing to assert First Amendment claim against police department and city officials, based upon allegations that police presence at club where she was employed as exotic dancer negatively impacted her working conditions and forced her to quit her job, and that by discharging officer, defendants sought to chill wife's freedom of expression by removing income from her home; wife failed to present evidence of any actual or inhibitory effect on her freedom of speech, evidence of change in income was speculative, and any injury to her income was not fairly traceable to defendants' conduct. Eddings v. City of Hot Springs, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 323 F.3d 596. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

White male police officers lacked standing to challenge sergeants' promotional process based on city's failure to grant them a hearing regarding city's decision to alter number of candidates proceeding to oral examination after written examination was administered, since officers failed to show that they were injured by denial of any hearing to which they might be entitled; if officers had successfully challenged alleged affirmative action policies at a hearing, they still would not have been placed on sergeants' promotional list. Byers v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1998, 150 F.3d 1271. Civil Rights 1333(5)

Hearing officer at prison disciplinary hearing denied request for witnesses without any finding that testimony would be immaterial or redundant, and, thus, absent showing of good reason for denial of request, fact that prisoner was successful in administrative appeal process did not bar his claim for relief under § 1983. Walker v. Bates, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 23 F.3d 652, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2608, 515 U.S. 1157, 132 L.Ed.2d 852. Civil Rights 1092

Federally funded organization advocating for persons with developmental disabilities did not suffer injury in fact, and thus it lacked organizational standing to maintain suit under Fair Housing Act and federal civil rights statutes, where suit alleged that county injured developmentally disabled minor by moving him to temporary home, and that neighborhood association's obstruction of group home would inhibit future development of group homes for disabled individuals. Association for Retarded Citizens of Dallas v. Dallas County Mental Health & Mental Retardation Center Bd. of Trustees, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 19 F.3d 241, suggestion for rehearing denied 24 F.3d 241. injury in fact. Park View Heights Corp. v. City of Black Jack, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1972, 467 F.2d 1208. Federal Civil Procedure 111

Teacher asserting desire to address school board regarding denial of tenure lacked standing to assert § 1983 claims, absent allegation that she was likely to suffer any constitutional injury; there was no allegation that teacher had been or would be refused opportunity to speak at past or future public board meetings. Prestopnik v. Whelan, N.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 369, affirmed 83 Fed.Appx. 363, 2003 WL 22955861. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Owner of undeveloped property suffered actual injury by denial of his application for zoning permit to develop property for commercial use on basis of floating size cap, and, therefore, he had standing to make civil rights challenge to township zoning resolution and standards for particular development on basis that cap was unconstitutionally vague. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 571

Former elected town trustee, who was recalled by voters in a recall election after he refused to recite the Pledge of Allegiance at meetings of the town board of trustees, and nonprofit corporation promoting separation of church and state lacked standing to bring §§ 1983 and declaratory judgment claim challenging the Pledge of Allegiance itself, given that plaintiffs failed to establish an injury caused by the Pledge statute; since that statute does not compel recitation, it appeared that the alleged injury underlying the complaint, namely, the recall election, could not have been caused by Pledge on its face. Habecker v. Town of Estes Park, Colorado, D.Colo.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 1113. Declaratory Judgment 300

Plaintiffs who did not show that they were subject to provisions of state statute prohibiting registered sex offenders' residence within 1,000 feet of any school, i.e. could not show that they had been convicted of offense requiring registration, or that they lived within 1,000 feet of school, or that they had served term of imprisonment for sex offense after date certain or been adjudicated habitual sex offender, so as to require registration, lacked Article III standing to bring §§ 1983 challenge to statute's constitutionality, regardless of whether challenge was facial. Coston v. Petro, S.D.Ohio 2005, 398 F.Supp.2d 878. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Requirement that state prison inmate sustain injury, in order to have claim that inmate was denied constitutionally protected access to court, was satisfied when inmate was supplied with attorney allowed only to give "off the cuff" advice, without being able to do legal research; because of limitation inmate did not pursue his nonfrivolous claim that noncompliance with extradition procedures invalidated his conviction, out of concern that suit would reopen his plea bargain and subject him to further penalties, when legal research would have shown that claim could be brought under §§ 1983 without upsetting bargain. White v. Kautzky, N.D.Iowa 2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1042, motion to amend denied 2006 WL 141854. Prisons 4(11)

Nonunion city employees' declarations that they would have allocated their funds under flexible benefit plan for optional dental insurance plan in prior open enrollment period sufficiently alleged past injury to confer standing on employees to bring §§ 1983 action alleging that city and union unlawfully coerced them to join union by failing to provide them eligibility for enrollment in dental plan. Brannian v. City of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 1187. Civil Rights 1333(5)

Parents of student whose continued participation on school swim team was conditioned on receiving a negative drug test result lacked standing to assert federal civil rights claims against school defendants since parents, whose son remained on swim team after passing drug test, did not allege any injury relating to their federal claims. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4384A. ---- Criminal statutes exception to injury, considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action

State statute that prohibited registered sex offenders' residence within 1,000 feet of a school was not criminal statute, and thus persons not subject to its terms lacked standing to bring §§ 1983 facial challenge to it under criminal-statute exception to injury-in-fact criterion of Article III standing; statute imposed no criminal sanctions but rather granted right to bring civil action for injunctive relief against sex offender, had nonpunitive purpose of protecting public from sex offenders, and also lacked punitive effect since it did not impose traditional form of punishment, did not impose physical restraint, and had rational connection to its nonpunitive purpose. Coston v. Petro, S.D.Ohio 2005, 398 F.Supp.2d 878. Civil Rights 1333(2)

4385. ---- Redress for injuries, considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action

Former elected town trustee, who was recalled by voters in a recall election after he refused to recite the Pledge of Allegiance at meetings of the town board of trustees, and nonprofit corporation promoting separation of church and state did not have standing to bring §§ 1983 and declaratory judgment claim challenging board's alleged policy requiring recitation of the Pledge; the injury was caused not by a forced recitation of the Pledge or by penalties imposed for silence, neither of which happened, but by the reaction of, first, recall committee defendants, and then the voters, to trustee's actions in failing to recite the Pledge. Habecker v. Town of Estes Park, Colorado, D.Colo.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 1113. Declaratory Judgment 300

Operator of horse-drawn carriage business had standing to bring §§ 1983 action against competitor, alleging that competitor, in conjunction with city officials, deprived operator of his Equal Protection and Commerce Clause rights through practice of applying for and receiving renewals of permits that were not used, but nonetheless counted against cap of 46 allowable permits, precluding operator from expanding his business. Avalon Carriage Service Inc. v. City of St. Augustine, FL, M.D.Fla.2006, 417 F.Supp.2d 1279. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Nonprofit religious group that engaged in solicitations for donations, and member of group engaged in such solicitations, had standing to facially challenge city's solicitation ordinance as violative of First Amendment's free speech clause, even though neither group nor member ever had attempted to comply with ordinance; both were directly affected by it. United Youth Careers, Inc. v. City of Ames, IA, S.D.Iowa 2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 994. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Speakers at public college students' event had standing to sue college officials under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of their First Amendment rights, based on officials' refusal to pay them agreed-upon honoraria allegedly in retaliation for content of their speeches; speakers alleged that they suffered real rather than hypothetical injury, pecuniary injury was inflicted in retaliation for constitutionally protected conduct, it was traceable to officials' unlawful conduct, and it was redressable by money damages. Ford v. Reynolds, E.D.N.Y.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 392, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 354636. Civil Rights 1333(2)

Motorist issued citation in wake of collision had standing to bring § 1983 First Amendment action against state trooper alleging that trooper wrote citation to retaliate for motorist's husband's accusing trooper of mishandling accident investigation; husband's enjoyment of his free speech rights was inextricably bound up with motorist's interest in not receiving citation, and husband did not have standing to assert his own right since he had not suffered injury. Persaud v. McSorley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 490. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Declaratory judgment or preliminary injunction in favor of organization dedicated to eliminating homophobia and intolerance in schools could likely alleviate the alleged harassment and discrimination against gay and lesbian students, as well as those perceived to be gay or lesbian, and therefore, a favorable decision in organization's case was likely to redress its injury, as required for associational standing to bring claims under § 1983, the California Education Code, and the California Unruh Civil Rights Act. Gay-Straight Alliance Network v. Visalia Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2001, 262 F.Supp.2d 1088. Associations 20(1); Declaratory Judgment 300

Former state university students, claiming that they had been sexually harassed by soccer coach, lacked standing to seek equitable relief in § 1983 action against university employees in their official capacities; because former students were no longer on team, they had no stake in coach's removal, which was only equitable relief being sought. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 1331(2)

Employee who brought § 1983 action against county community service board, alleging retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights, had no equitable remedy available to her in event of success on merits, since she could not be reinstated to interim position which no longer existed, and thus employee could not maintain claim. Collier v. Clayton County Community Service Bd., N.D.Ga.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 1345, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 222, 2003 WL 22227530. Civil Rights 1448; Counties 67

Plaintiff had no standing to bring § 1983 claim alleging that he offered to serve as volunteer registrar and was denied opportunity to engage in this activity by board of registrars when board refused to deputize plaintiff; plaintiff failed to show that injury he suffered was likely to be redressed by favorable decision since plaintiff was not resident of city where he sought to become deputy registrar, and board could not deputize plaintiff because he was not resident. Morse v. Martineau, D.N.H.1988, 685 F.Supp. 860. Civil Rights 1331(6)

4386. ---- Third-party rights, considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action

Attorneys lacked third-party standing on behalf of hypothetical future clients to challenge constitutionality of a Michigan statute denying appellate counsel to criminal defendants who pleaded guilty or nolo contendere. Kowalski v. Tesmer, U.S.2004, 125 S.Ct. 564, 543 U.S. 125, 160 L.Ed.2d 519. Constitutional Law 42.1(3)

Terminated city council employee who had worked as aide to dissenting council member had third-party standing to assert § 1983 claim that council had fired him in retaliation for dissenting member's exercise of free speech and free association; termination constituted injury to employee, employee and dissenting member had very close professional and personal relationship that would allow employee to advocate for dissenting member's rights, there was testimony that employee had been warned that his job would be in jeopardy if dissenting member continued to oppose majority, and dissenting member could be hindered in vindicating his own rights. Camacho v. Brandon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 317 F.3d 153. Civil Rights 1332(5)

One may not sue for the deprivation of another's civil rights. Hall v. Wooten, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 506 F.2d 564. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Generally, litigant may only assert his own constitutional rights or immunities. O'Malley v. Brierley, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1973, 477 F.2d 785. Constitutional Law 42(1)

Owners of strawberry crop that was to have been harvested by farm and forest labor contractor whose license was suspended failed to satisfy prudential requirements for standing in § 1983 action against Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI) officials; crop owners' equal protection argument rested on allegations that BOLI's conduct in suspending license treated contractor, not them, differently from others similarly situated and record did not even show that officials were aware of relationship between crop owners and contractor, and crop owners' due process claims also did not allege deprivation of their own constitutional rights or interests. Lumbreras v. Roberts, D.Or.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 156 Fed.Appx. 952, 2005 WL 3304174. Civil Rights 1332(6); Civil Rights 1333(6)

A person is not entitled to bring a § 1983 claim arising from harm suffered by a corporation, but must allege a separate harm to himself/herself personally in order to have standing. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1333(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former senior aid to city council had third-party standing to bring § 1983 claim for deprivation of council member's First Amendment rights which allegedly resulted when other city council members conspired to fire aid because of their disapproval of council member's voting record; vindicating rights of council member was inextricably bound up with aid's own cause of action in that aid could only prevail if he proved that council member engaged in speech that was protected by First Amendment and proved there was a causal connection between that speech and his termination, and council member suffered no cognizable injury that would permit him to bring suit to protect constitutional right at stake. Camacho v. Brandon, S.D.N.Y.1999, 56 F.Supp.2d 370, on reconsideration in part 69 F.Supp.2d 546, appeal dismissed 236 F.3d 112. Civil Rights 1332(5)

Prudential limitation on third party standing prevented executive director of nonprofit organization, who was not party to contract between organization and Department of Corrections (DOC), from being proper party to § 1983 action arising from DOC's allegedly unlawful closure of youthful offender transition program run by organization; relationship between director and organization was not such that director would be as effective an advocate as organization, and organization's participation in litigation demonstrated lack of obstacle to organization asserting its constitutional rights for itself. North Florida Educational Development Corp. v. Woodham, N.D.Fla.1996, 942 F.Supp. 542. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Person may not sue, nor recover damages, under § 1983 for deprivation of another person's civil rights. Quiles ex rel. Project Head Start, Municipality of Utuado v. Hernandez Colon, D.Puerto Rico 1988, 682 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1332(1)

In action invoking this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, plaintiffs lacked standing to assert rights or legal interests of third persons who were not parties to the suit. Cowart v. City of Ocala, Fla., M.D.Fla.1979, 478 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1332(1)

One may not sue under this section for deprivation of another's constitutional rights. Javits v. Stevens, S.D.N.Y.1974, 382 F.Supp. 131. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Plaintiff lacked standing to bring § 1983 action against insurance company; plaintiff's alleged deprivation of his own rights depended entirely upon alleged violation of rights of his unnamed home attendant, which was not the sort of personal injury necessary to confer standing under § 1983. Schachter v. U.S. Life Ins. Co. in City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 77 Fed.Appx. 41, 2003 WL 22273044, Unreported. Civil Rights 1332(6)

4387. ---- Threat of injury, considerations governing, persons entitled to maintain action

Personal injury law firm had standing to sue state bar, for violating firm's First Amendment right to advertise that three firm members were named in book purporting to list best lawyers in country, even though no formal disciplinary action had taken on response to advertisement; there was considerable threat of action. Allen, Allen, Allen & Allen v. Williams, E.D.Va.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 614. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Injury-in-fact criterion for Article III standing was unmet in §§ 1983 challenge to state statute prohibiting registered sex offenders' residence within 1,000 feet of any school, which alleged that statute failed to give adequate notice to offenders of where they could live; possibility that plaintiff offenders, who did not currently live within regulated distance, might find themselves subject to expulsion if new school was constructed within 1,000 of their established residences, was speculative, not concrete. Coston v. Petro, S.D.Ohio 2005, 398 F.Supp.2d 878. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Public college students suffered no constitutional injury when college officials allegedly delayed student event because of aversion toward proposed speakers, and thus, they lacked standing to bring §§ 1983 action against college and officials, seeking money damages for alleged violations of their rights under the First Amendment; even if defendants' decisions with respect to event were unlawful, and in fact affected students' protected First Amendment interests, a delay of only a few hours was not a sufficient injury to invoke protections of Article III of the Constitution. Ford v. Reynolds, E.D.N.Y.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 392, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 354636. Civil Rights 1333(2)

4388. Abortions, persons entitled to maintain action

Doctor, who was prevented from operating an abortion clinic in city by unconstitutional zoning ordinances specifically aimed at him, had standing to not only challenge the ordinances in question but also to raise personal civil rights claim for monetary damages. Haskell v. Washington Tp., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1988, 864 F.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1331(3); Zoning And Planning 23.1

Where there was intimate relationship between family-planning organization and its patients and right of pregnant women to secure abortion was inextricably bound up with ability of such organization to provide one, family-planning organization had standing to assert patients' constitutional claims in its suit against city asserting that ordinance imposing moratorium on abortion facilities pending further study was unconstitutional. Planned Parenthood of Minnesota, Inc. v. Citizens for Community Action, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1977, 558 F.2d 861. Municipal Corporations 121

Plaintiff who brought suit for declaratory and injunctive relief against enforcement of policy of medical center of prohibiting abortions except those done for the purpose of saving the life of the mother retained standing even though subsequent to the district court's denial of relief she obtained an abortion outside the state. Doe v. Charleston Area Medical Center, Inc., C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1975, 529 F.2d 638. Declaratory Judgment 300

Unincorporated association of anti-abortion activists was "person" entitled to seek relief under § 1983, stemming from denial of parade permit, since association was not political subdivision of state, and labor unions, corporations, municipal corporations, non-profit organizations, and Indian tribes had all been recognized as "persons" for such purpose. Lippoldt v. City of Wichita, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 1228. Civil Rights 1331(6)

4389. Private clubs, persons entitled to maintain action

Where plaintiff, a Negro who because of his race had been denied food and beverage service as a guest of member of private club, had not applied for or been denied membership in the club, he had no standing to contest the club's membership practices, but he did have standing to litigate the constitutional validity of the club's policies relating to the service of guests of members. Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis, U.S.Pa.1972, 92 S.Ct. 1965, 407 U.S. 163, 32 L.Ed.2d 627. Constitutional Law 42.2(2)

Black and Jewish applicants for membership in defendant private yacht club, who claimed racial and religious discrimination, had standing in federal civil rights action to assail the admission policies of defendant club. Golden v. Biscayne Bay Yacht Club, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1975, 521 F.2d 344, on rehearing 530 F.2d 16, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 186, 429 U.S. 872, 50 L.Ed.2d 152. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Plaintiffs who alleged that private club's exclusion of public from property which club leased from state was illegal and that, if injunctive and declaratory relief were granted, plaintiffs would be entitled to obtain access to such public property without complying with private club's membership requirements had standing to assert claim of right of access to such property, whether or not they would ultimately prevail on merits of the claim. policy, and there was no showing that plaintiffs were likely to again suffer mace assault from police in future, plaintiffs did not have standing to obtain, in civil rights action, injunction against city to limit police officers' use of mace to certain specified conditions. Curtis v. City of New Haven, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1984, 726 F.2d 65. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Arrestee lacked standing to maintain his § 1983 claim that alleged city policy of not disciplining police officers who were found by civil jury to have used excessive force actually encouraged officers to use excessive force, in absence of any allegation that arrestee was likely to suffer future injury from officers using excessive force because they were not disciplined, or who believed they would not be disciplined if they did so. Posr v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1993, 835 F.Supp. 120, affirmed 22 F.3d 1091. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan who regularly attended Klan rallies in Connecticut and who alleged that he had been stopped and searched at such rallies on numerous occasions was directly affected by actions of state officials in stopping and searching persons in attendance at Klan rallies, was alleging specific and concrete injuries resulting from the challenged practice, and showed that a remedy was available, thus giving him standing to challenge the actions of state officials. Wilkinson v. Forst, D.C.Conn.1984, 591 F.Supp. 403. Civil Rights 1331(4)

4391. Segregation, persons entitled to maintain action

Negroes confined in various Alabama jails had standing to bring class action to challenge validity of Alabama statutes requiring segregation of races in prisons and jails. Lee v. Washington, U.S.Ala.1968, 88 S.Ct. 994, 390 U.S. 333, 19 L.Ed.2d 1212. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Party challenging alleged separation in operation of nonrecreational public facility lacks standing to challenge alleged discrimination unless he has been aggrieved and either he or class of which he is a member may be aggrieved by the use of the segregated facility. Palmer v. Thompson, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1967, 391 F.2d 324, on rehearing 419 F.2d 1222, certiorari granted 90 S.Ct. 1364, 397 U.S. 1035, 25 L.Ed.2d 646, affirmed 91 S.Ct. 1940, 403 U.S. 217, 29 L.Ed.2d 438. Constitutional Law 42(2)

Negroes as users of carriers' segregated facilities had standing to maintain suit to enjoin enforcement of Code 1942, §§ 2351, 2351.5, 2351.7, 7784 to 7785.5 affecting carriers and to enjoin maintenance of racial segregation. Bailey v. Patterson, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1963, 323 F.2d 201, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 666, 376 U.S. 910, 11 L.Ed.2d 609. Civil Rights 1331(6); Injunction 114(2)

Evidence disclosed that four Negro residents of city had been sufficiently aggrieved by segregation policies of city to have standing to bring class action to enjoin enforcement of segregation of races in certain public and private facilities in city and that demand had been made on defendants to put an end to the racially discriminatory practices. Anderson v. City of Albany, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1963, 321 F.2d 649. Federal Civil Procedure 186.15

Plaintiffs, even though white, had standing to bring action alleging unconstitutional racial segregation of school units in violation of this section. Husbands v. Com. of Pennsylvania, E.D.Pa.1975, 395 F.Supp. 1107. Civil Rights 1331(2)

4392. Parens patriae, persons entitled to maintain action

City does not enjoy the quasi-sovereign status of a state, and may not bring civil rights action in a parens patriae capacity on behalf of its citizens. The City of Safety Harbor v. Birchfield, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 529 F.2d 1251. Municipal Corporations 1017

New York state officials had standing to maintain parens patriae action challenging denial of building permits for adult care facility for homeless persons with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) since state had quasi-sovereign interest in health and well-being of its citizens and alleged injury was to substantial segment of population. Support Ministries For Persons With Aids, Inc. v. Village of Waterford, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1992, 799 F.Supp. 272. Zoning And Planning 571

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania did have standing to maintain action to enjoin city officials from allegedly engaging in unlawful racial discrimination in the recruiting, testing and hiring of applicants for position of fire fighter in city in Commonwealth under the doctrine of parens patriae. Com. of Pa. v. Glickman, W.D.Pa.1974, 370 F.Supp. 724. Civil Rights 1331(5)

4393. Administrators, persons entitled to maintain action

Wrongful death of decedent resulting from tort, which gave rise to cause of action for benefit of his heirs, was not equivalent to decedent's personal civil rights claim, and decedent's administratrix was therefore without standing in federal forum to commence action, pursuant to this section or section 1988 of this title, under either Ohio R.C. § 2125.05 or § 2305.21. Jaco v. Bloechle, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1984, 739 F.2d 239. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Administratrix of decedent was not entitled under this section to recover against municipal corporation and prosecuting officials of such corporation for alleged deprivation of decedent's civil rights. Wise v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1962, 308 F.2d 364, certiorari denied 83 S.Ct. 934, 372 U.S. 944, 9 L.Ed.2d 969. Civil Rights 1332(4)

4394. Adult bookstore or theater owners, persons entitled to maintain action

Adult theater owner and its employees showed requisite likelihood that future injury would occur, thus giving them standing to seek relief against city based on custodial arrest of theater dancers, based on content of their dancing, before judicial determination was made that dancers' expression was not constitutionally protected speech; city's alleged "pattern" of effecting only custodial arrests of dancers rendered plaintiff subject to threat of future interference of their rights to perform what they claimed was constitutionally protected expression, and there was threat of self-censorship stemming from plaintiffs' fear of arrest for performing constitutionally protected expression, just as they had suffered in past. Admiral Theatre v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1993, 832 F.Supp. 1195. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Because plaintiffs, the corporate proprietors of so-called "adult" book stores, showed that their business had been disrupted and was suffering due to defendant law enforcement officers' allegedly unconstitutional actions in the bad-faith enforcement of obscenity laws, plaintiffs had standing to pursue their lawsuit for injunctive relief; moreover, they had standing to assert the claim that defendants' conduct, allegedly aimed at discouraging the distribution of sexually explicit publications and films, would dilute their patrons' U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 right to purchase such materials. Black Jack Distributors, Inc. v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1977, 433 F.Supp. 1297. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Allegation that unconstitutional application of McKinney's NY CPL §§ 140.10, 690.05 et seq. to operators of adult bookstores disrupted their businesses and caused them monetary loss gave the bookstore owners requisite standing to bring action to enjoin application of the procedures against them. 227 Book Center, Inc. v. Codd, S.D.N.Y.1974, 381 F.Supp. 1111. Courts 508(7)

4395. Agents, persons entitled to maintain action

Builder, who did not own the property but alleged that she was the authorized agent and representative of the owners of the property and that she had the authority to build a house, lacked standing to maintain action under this section seeking to compel a city to issue a building permit for a single-family Geodesic dome home. Eaton v. City of Solon, N.D.Ohio 1984, 598 F.Supp. 1505. Civil Rights 1331(3)

Agent of principal does not have standing to assert claim pursuant to § 1983 on behalf of principal. Kshel Realty Corp. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21146650, Unreported. Civil Rights 1332(1)

4396. Aliens, persons entitled to maintain action

Illegal alien who intended to apply for admission at various Virginia post-secondary educational institutions had standing to challenge as unconstitutional their policy of denying admission to illegal aliens or persons they believed to have an "illegal," "unlawful," or "undocumented" immigration status; alleged admissions policies of those institutions would cause alien imminent injury, and injunction preventing the implementation of those policies would redress that injury. Equal Access Educ. v. Merten, E.D.Va.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 585. Constitutional Law 42.1(4)

Aliens may bring suit under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Jaffe v. Boyles, W.D.N.Y.1985, 616 F.Supp. 1371. Civil Rights 1009

Alien seeking to be licensed as engineer and alien seeking to be licensed as physical therapist had no standing to represent other professions in challenging requirements of McKinney's N.Y. Education Law §§ 6524(6), 6534(6), 6554(6), 6604(6), 6805(6), 7206.1(6), 7324.1(6), 7504.1(6), 7804(6), for citizenship for licensing. Kulkarni v. Nyquist, N.D.N.Y.1977, 446 F.Supp. 1269.

Plaintiffs, including alien resident plaintiff, each of whom alleged injury from violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 by defendant state agency officials because of allegedly racial discriminatory hiring and promoting practices come within the zone of interests protected by this section. Jackson v. Sargent, D.C.Mass.1975, 394 F.Supp. 162, affirmed 526 F.2d 64. Civil Rights 1333(5)

This section applies to aliens. Simon v. Lovgren, D.C.Virgin Islands 1973, 368 F.Supp. 265.

4397. Associations, persons entitled to maintain action

Association of adult school directors, teachers and support staff lacked standing to bring § 1983 suit on behalf of its members against Department of Education of Puerto Rico and its officials, alleging that director's contract was not renewed because of her political affiliation; relief requested would require individual members' participation in lawsuit insofar as neither complaint nor opposition specified what injuries they had allegedly suffered, and court was reluctant to assume that monetary damages requested were common to all members or that any award should be shared by all in equal degree. Hatfield Bermudez v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 383. Associations 20(1)

Unincorporated association is not a "person" within the meaning of §§ 1983 protecting citizens of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof, and, thus, the association is not entitled to bring a claim under §§ 1983; while the Dictionary Act of 1871 extended the meaning of "person" to include corporations and municipalities, it did not do the same for unincorporated associations. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 1329

Anti-abortion association and members that brought § 1983 action against city and officials, stemming from denial of parade permits, possessed standing to bring claims based upon application of city's parade ordinance, since some permits were requested by individual members, members alleged actual, concrete and particularized injury, and association had right to relief on behalf of allegedly injured members. Lippoldt v. City of Wichita, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 1228. Associations 20(1); Civil Rights 1333(6)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Organization dedicated to eliminating homophobia and intolerance in schools sought only declaratory and injunctive relief in action against school district under § 1983, the California Education Code, and the California Unruh Civil Rights Act, and therefore, its members were not required to participate directly in the litigation in order for organization to have associational standing. Gay-Straight Alliance Network v. Visalia Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2001, 262 F.Supp.2d 1088. Associations 20(1)

Association lacked associational standing to maintain allegations of excessive force and sexual assault committed against arrested antiabortion protestors, where it was not alleged that any of the individual plaintiffs were members of the organization and since allegations were fact intensive so that testimony of individual plaintiffs would be necessary to sustain the claims. Amnesty America v. County of Allegheny, W.D.Pa.1993, 822 F.Supp. 297. Associations 20(1)

Homeowners associations had standing to assert claims on behalf of their members in seeking injunctive relief in action challenging construction of stadium; participation of individual members was not required in assessing whether injunction was appropriate. Lake Lucerne Civic Ass'n, Inc. v. Dolphin Stadium Corp., S.D.Fla.1992, 801 F.Supp. 684. Associations 20(1)

4398. Attorneys, persons entitled to maintain action

Attorney, who had no client funds in accounts bearing interest that was to be paid to Lawyers Trust Fund of Illinois, lacked standing to challenge legality of rules requiring deposit of money in interest bearing accounts and payment of interest to Fund in order to provide legal services for the poor. Greening v. Moran, C.D.Ill.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1244, affirmed 953 F.2d 301, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 77, 506 U.S. 824, 121 L.Ed.2d 42.

Attorney had no standing to maintain cause of action under § 1983 against attorneys and judge, which was based upon their alleged conspiracy to "fix" lawsuit; attorney was not party to action and thus had no personal stake in proceeding. Lepley v. Dresser, W.D.Mich.1988, 681 F.Supp. 418. Conspiracy 17

4399. Attorneys-in-fact, persons entitled to maintain action

Attorney-in-fact for vehicle's owner did not, pursuant to general power of attorney, have right to assert owner's due process claim in federal civil rights action arising from incident in which vehicle was stopped, towed, and stored; constitutional claim was personal and could not be asserted vicariously, and attorney-in-fact, as non-attorney, could not appear as attorney for others. Johns v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 114 F.3d 874. Attorney And Client 11(2.1)

4400. Banks, persons entitled to maintain action

Operating subsidiary of national bank did not have right to bring § 1983 suit against Connecticut Banking Commissioner, claiming that its right to conduct mortgage lending activities was harmed; while Congress showed intent to confer right in passing statute restricting visitation of national banks to national bank inspectors, there was no showing of any similar Congressional intent to establish actionable right underlying regulation placing subsidiaries under federal regulatory control. Wachovia Bank, N.A. v. Burke, D.Conn.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 275, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 414 F.3d 305, petition for certiorari filed 2005 WL 2463529, miscellaneous rulings 126 S.Ct. 791, 163 L.Ed.2d 626. Action 3

Bank was entitled to maintain an action under this section, despite claim that it could not do so as a creature of the state. Roslindale Co-op. Bank v. Greenwald, D.C.Mass.1979, 481 F.Supp. 749, affirmed 627 F.2d 1087, affirmed 638 F.2d 258, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 128, 454 U.S. 831, 70 L.Ed.2d 108. Civil Rights 1329

4401. Bidders, persons entitled to maintain action

Unsuccessful bidder on contract to demolish abandoned school building had standing to seek declaratory judgment that board of education's minority business enterprise set aside requirements for construction contractors violated equal protection clause; unsuccessful bidder alleged that its bid was lowest submitted and there was no other cause for its rejection by board other than failure to meet allegedly unconstitutional set aside requirements, and bidder alleged that it suffered injury because of classifications. Main Line Paving Co., Inc. v. Board of Educ., School Dist. of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1989, 725 F.Supp. 1349. Declaratory Judgment 301

Disappointed bidder for legal services contract with state medicaid agency had standing to bring § 1983 action challenging agency's award of contract to another bidder, on ground that agency awarded contract without complying with procedures required in applicable federal regulations and Office of Management and Budget circular; bidder's claims were limited, however, by virtue of Eleventh Amendment to prospective injunctive relief only. Connecticut Legal Services, Inc. v. Heintz, D.Conn.1988, 689 F.Supp. 82. Civil Rights 1331(6); Federal Courts 272

4402. Bystanders, persons entitled to maintain action

Daughter who witnessed deputy sheriff's use of excessive force against her mother, who had protested her husband's arrest, was a bystander who could not recover under § 1983, although she struck deputy over the head with her fist, causing him to release her mother. Thomas v. Frederick, W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1332(4)

4403. Municipalities, persons entitled to maintain action

City of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, had no standing, on basis of injury to itself, to bring action charging the Attorney General with failing to enforce civil rights laws in suburban communities where city failed to allege the requisite injury in fact; averment that city expended considerable money in response to Attorney General's recommendations concerning city employment practices did not constitute an allegation that expenditures were result of asserted nonenforcement of the law in suburban communities and, furthermore, voluntary expenditures designed to comply with the law cannot fairly be characterized as a legal wrong or injury likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. City of Milwaukee v. Saxbe, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1976, 546 F.2d 693. Civil Rights 1331(5)

4404. City councils, persons entitled to maintain action

Since city council did not allege that it was involved in discriminatorily and invidiously compelling city and its inhabitants to assume cost of municipal services grossly disproportionate to that assumed by its contiguous towns with respect to state's method of financing public education, the city council members were not subject to liability under this section for the manner in which public education was financed and thus did not have standing to bring action to challenge method of financing public education in the state of Connecticut on theory that they might be subject to personal civil and criminal liability for action taken in violation of due process and equal protection. Athanson v. Grasso, D.C.Conn.1976, 411 F.Supp. 1153. Civil Rights 1070; Constitutional Law 42.3(3)

4405. Commissions, persons entitled to maintain action

City Human Relations Commission, which made no allegation of personal stake in outcome of action charging racial discrimination in city police force hiring procedures either for itself as a body or for its individual members and which merely sought to bring suit in its own name on behalf of its "black clientele," had no standing to bring suit. Erie Human Relations Commission v. Tullio, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 493 F.2d 371. Civil Rights 1522

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4406. Contractors, persons entitled to maintain action

Owner and president of accounting corporation that contracted with municipality did not have standing to bring §§ 1983 action against municipality and mayor based on termination of corporation's contract. Ramirez v. Arlequin, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 416, affirmed in part, reversed in part 447 F.3d 19. Corporations 202; Corporations 506

White-owned contractor had standing to assert claim of pattern or practice of discrimination against county, where contractor alleged that county's systematic award of contracts to minority or female business enterprises under its affirmative action program injured contractor in connection with county's award of project to minority owned business. Webster v. Fulton County, GA, N.D.Ga.1999, 44 F.Supp.2d 1359, affirmed in part, vacated in part 283 F.3d 1254, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 45 Fed.Appx. 881, 2002 WL 1424417, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 623, 537 U.S. 1046, 154 L.Ed.2d 519. Civil Rights 1333(6)

Contractors had standing to challenge state's highway department's minority enterprise program and the federal regulations on which the state program was based. Central Alabama Paving, Inc. v. James, M.D.Ala.1980, 499 F.Supp. 629.

4407. Corporations, persons entitled to maintain action--Generally Individual plaintiffs, but not corporate plaintiff, were authorized to maintain suit in equity to restrain infringement of rights of freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. Hague v. Committee for Indus. Organization, U.S.N.J.1939, 59 S.Ct. 954, 307 U.S. 496, 83 L.Ed. 1423. Constitutional Law 252

Telecommunications service provider could not maintain private right of action for violation of preemption provision of Telecommunications Act, proscribing local regulations which have effect of prohibiting any entity from providing telecommunications service, under §§ 1983; preemption provision of Act was not focused on benefits granted to providers, but on restricting type of telecommunications regulations that a local authority could enforce, and there was no clear manifestation of congressional intent to create a private right of action under that provision of the Act. Qwest Corp. v. City of Santa Fe, New Mexico, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 380 F.3d 1258. Civil Rights 1041; Action 3

Corporations are persons whose rights are protected by this section providing for liability for deprivation of rights secured by the Constitution and laws. Des Vergnes v. Seekonk Water Dist., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1979, 601 F.2d 9, on remand 498 F.Supp. 463. Civil Rights 1329

Corporation had standing to assert violations of U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14 § 1 under this subchapter. Advocates for Arts v. Thomson, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1976, 532 F.2d 792, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 254, 429 U.S. 894, 50 L.Ed.2d 177.

Corporate plaintiff can assert rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1 and suits under this section by corporate plaintiffs are also permissible. California Diversified Promotions, Inc. v. Musick, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 505 F.2d 278. Civil Rights 1329; Constitutional Law 252

Large out-of-state manufacturer stated equal protection claim under §§ 1983 against Commissioner of New York State Department of Environmental Conservation and Attorney General of State of New York, on allegations that New York Architectural and Industrial Maintenance Coatings regulations, which were designed to reduce ozone emissions as required under Clean Air Act (CAA), did not have rationally related government interest and that resulting classification of manufacturers based upon output of product was arbitrary and capricious; although regulations did not contain explicit classification of manufacturers by size, they contained small manufacturer's exemption, and no showing was made on undisputed facts that no classification existed. Sherwin-Williams Co. v.

Crotty, N.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 187. Constitutional Law 250.5; Environmental Law 287

Corporate landlord had standing to challenge, under § 1983, condemnation of two of its properties and multiple citations that were issued against it as retaliatory and in violation of its substantive due process rights; corporation owned the condemned properties, could not continue with its normal operations of those properties, and was required to remedy cited conditions despite its belief that changes were not required by law. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1331(3)

Private corporation did not show deprivation of constitutionally protected rights arising out of arrest of corporation's employee during police raid or causation required to show standing in § 1983 action, where alleged conduct was directed at employee rather than corporation and any injury to corporation was too abstract and speculative. Alvarez Sepulveda v. Puerto Rico, D. Puerto Rico 2002, 218 F.Supp.2d 170. Civil Rights 1332(4); Civil Rights 1333(4)

Corporation that operated electronics store, in addition to individual officer of corporation, could maintain § 1983 equal protection claim against county based on alleged religious discrimination in enforcement of consumer fraud law, where corporation as well as officer had been named in fraud complaints. Hassoun v. Cimmino, D.N.J.2000, 126 F.Supp.2d 353. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Corporation had standing to bring § 1983 claim for violation of its due process rights as corporation was "person" within meaning of due process clause. Auburn Medical Center, Inc. v. Peters, M.D.Ala.1996, 953 F.Supp. 1518. Civil Rights 1331(1); Constitutional Law 252

Private corporation which ran private school for boys adjudicated delinquent by the courts had standing to bring action against school district and township alleging discriminatory treatment on the basis of race in violation of Fourteenth Amendment; corporation did not assert any claims on behalf of students but sought redress for losses it claimed to have suffered because of its association with black and Latino students. Board of Managers of Glen Mills Schools v. West Chester Areas School Dist., E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1035, affirmed in part, reversed in part 52 F.3d 313. Civil Rights 1331(2)

4408. ---- Officers and directors, corporations, persons entitled to maintain action

President of corporate owner of rental properties had standing to challenge citations that were issued against him personally, including citation for failing to maintain rental property free from weeds and citation for allowing workers to enter condemned property, as retaliatory under § 1983; president alleged that he personally suffered cognizable injury, distinct from any suffered by corporation. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1333(3)

Directors of bank had standing to institute civil rights action in name of bank challenging a certification decision and claiming that such amounted to deprivation of constitutional rights. Roslindale Co-op. Bank v. Greenwald, D.C.Mass.1979, 481 F.Supp. 749, affirmed 627 F.2d 1087, affirmed 638 F.2d 258, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 128, 454 U.S. 831, 70 L.Ed.2d 108. Civil Rights 1332(6)

Officers and shareholders of sawmill products corporation who asserted personal standing to bring action under this section as result of alleged injury suffered by the corporation and who alleged no direct personal injury as result of alleged conduct of town, various public officials, and local residents, did not have standing to maintain action under this section. Sawmill Products, Inc. v. Town of Cicero, Cook County, Ill., N.D.Ill.1979, 477 F.Supp. 636. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Officer-shareholders of corporation had no standing to sue under this section and § 1985 of this title for damages suffered by corporation despite argument that they as officers suffered personal losses of anticipated salaries which would not be received through damages paid to corporation through lost profits. Marty's Adult World of New Britain, Inc. v. Guida, D.C.Conn.1978, 453 F.Supp. 810. Civil Rights 1333(6)

4409. ---- Shareholders, corporations, persons entitled to maintain action

Section 1983 affords no right of action to individual shareholders of corporation when corporation itself has sued, in the same complaint and on the same theories, for the same harm. Pagan v. Calderon, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 448 F.3d 16. Corporations 202

The principal owners and shareholders of corporation through which they owned former nightclub had standing to assert § 1983 civil rights claim against city arising from city's actions taken against the club under city's public nuisance abatement ordinance where, in addition to asking for compensation for injury to the corporation, they also alleged personal injury and sought damages for themselves, as individuals, for intentional infliction of emotional distress and for defamation, and alleged violations of their First and Fourteenth Amendment rights as individuals. RK Ventures, Inc. v. City of Seattle, C.A.9 (Wash.) 2002, 307 F.3d 1045. Civil Rights 1333(6)

Shareholders did not have standing to seek redress for emotional and reputational injuries that they sustained as result of bank's alleged wrongful ex parte seizure of premises of their corporation, including loss of business relationships with customers and suppliers; any such injuries were derivative of those sustained by corporation. Audio Odyssey, Ltd. v. Brenton First Nat. Bank, C.A.8 (Iowa) 2001, 245 F.3d 721, reconsideration granted, vacated en banc, opinion reinstated 286 F.3d 498, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 475, 537 U.S. 990, 154 L.Ed.2d 359, on remand 284 F.Supp.2d 1159. Corporations 202

Sole shareholder of corporate lessee lacked standing to bring § 1983 action against municipal port authority manager in connection with termination of leasing agreement under which lessee had exclusive right to solicit and lease office space to tenants in building owned by port authority, as shareholder did not allege that he personally suffered direct, nonderivative injury; although shareholder claimed that manager's threat to terminate lease if shareholder did not curtail his criticism of city mayor was directed at shareholder personally, and not to corporation, deprivation of such abstract free speech right was not justiciable unless legally protectable interest were at stake. Potthoff v. Morin, C.A.8 (Minn.) 2001, 245 F.3d 710. Civil Rights 1333(3); Federal Courts 13.10

Individual shareholders and debenture holders did not have standing to maintain § 1983 action for damages suffered by corporation; filing under § 1983 does not diminish requirement that shareholder suffer some individual, direct injury. Flynn v. Merrick, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1989, 881 F.2d 446. Corporations 202; Corporations 473

Individual shareholders of state chartered bank were not the proper parties to maintain suit under this section complaining of alleged injury to the bank; likewise, the bank, which had been taken over by state authorities, was also an improper party-plaintiff. Gregory v. Mitchell, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1981, 634 F.2d 199. Civil Rights 1391

Stockholder could not maintain action under this section for damages suffered by corporation. Erlich v. Glasner, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 418 F.2d 226. Civil Rights 1332(1)

A shareholder, even when he is the sole shareholder, does not have standing to bring an action under §§ 1983 on behalf of a corporation. Ramirez v. Arlequin, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 416, affirmed in part, reversed in part 447 F.3d 19. Corporations 202

Corporation operating ambulance service and its shareholders could not maintain § 1983 action against municipality, alleging that grant of ambulance permit to another service violated complaining service's procedural due process rights; Constitution did not protect corporation's ability to conduct business and expectancy of being able to do so profitably, and shareholders lacked standing to bring § 1983 claim for injury to corporation. Forest Ambulance Service, Inc. v. Mercy Ambulance of Richmond, Inc., E.D.Va.1997, 952 F.Supp. 296. Civil Rights 1331(6); Constitutional Law 287.3

Shareholder did not have individual standing to bring civil rights action against city for alleged legal injury suffered by corporation; shareholder's injuries as alleged were indirectly caused by harm to corporation, and, therefore, shareholder's injuries were not distinct from those of corporation. Caravella v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 79 Fed.Appx. 452, 2003 WL 22441790, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 253, 543 U.S. 840, 160 L.Ed.2d 63. Corporations 202

4410. Debtors, persons entitled to maintain action

Although judgment debtors' payment of contempt fine for disobeying subpoena to appear in supplemental proceeding brought by judgment creditors in attempt to collect judgment did not satisfy the judgment, the speculative prospect of further contempt orders against debtors did not give debtors the requisite constitutional standing to seek to enjoin the contempt processes as unconstitutional. Juidice v. Vail, U.S.N.Y.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1211, 430 U.S. 327, 51 L.Ed.2d 376. Injunction 114(2)

Violation of discharge injunction by state actor proceeding under color of state law will not support civil rights action under § 1983, for deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by Constitution and laws of the United States. In re Lesniewski, Bkrtcy.E.D.Pa.2000, 246 B.R. 202. Bankruptcy 2364; Civil Rights 1056

4411. Deceased persons, persons entitled to maintain action

A "deceased" is not "person" for purposes of this section or Ku Klux Klan Act, § 1985 of this title or constitutional rights which this section serves to protect. Guyton v. Phillips, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 606 F.2d 248, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1276, 445 U.S. 916, 63 L.Ed.2d 600.

Events occurring post obit could form no part of decedent's action under this section or § 1985 of this title, essence of claim under either section being deprivation of a person's constitutional rights; after death, one is no longer "person" within constitutional and statutory framework, and has no rights of which he may be deprived. Whitehurst v. Wright, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1979, 592 F.2d 834. Civil Rights 1333(1); Conspiracy 7.5(2)

After death, one is no longer a "person" within constitutional and statutory framework, and has no rights of which he may be deprived, for purposes of § 1983 analysis. Love v. Bolinger, S.D.Ind.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1131. Civil Rights 1329

Claims under this section for false arrest and imprisonment on part of defendant West Virginia officials and deliberate indifference to medical needs of plaintiff's decedent did not, save any possible wrongful death claim, survive death of plaintiff's decedent under most analogous West Virginia statute and laws. Jones v. George, S.D.W.Va.1982, 533 F.Supp. 1293. Death 10

4412. Developers, persons entitled to maintain action

Subdivision developer had standing to bring civil rights action alleging that conditions imposed by town planning board on development of subdivision were result of racial animus toward developer's purchasers, all of whom had Italian surnames, even though developer himself was apparently not of Italian origin. Cutting v. Muzzey, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1984, 724 F.2d 259. Civil Rights 1332(3)

Real estate developer, even though not a member of a minority, had standing to sue under this section for alleged deprivations of various constitutional rights by county and county council in denying him a building permit to construct low-income apartments where developer alleged that county council, in conspiracy with certain private landowners, acted with racially discriminatory intent when it directed withholding of building permit. Scott v. Greenville County, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1983, 716 F.2d 1409. Civil Rights 1332(3)

4413. Elected officials, persons entitled to maintain action

Where neither mayor nor citizens of city whom he purported to represent were parties to agreement between three cities with respect to areas in which each would provide services in surrounding unincorporated territory, complaint in action brought by the mayor and his city against certain legislators who had allegedly conspired to deprive them of civil rights by virtue of supporting bill which provided for annexation of a portion of the territory being served by the city in question into another city did not allege violation of rights of mayor or citizens and the mayor thus did not have standing to challenge the action of the legislators. City of Safety Harbor v. Birchfield, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 529 F.2d 1251. Conspiracy 18

4414. Employees, persons entitled to maintain action--Generally

To have standing to complain of racial discrimination in public employment a party must allege at a minimum a personal stake in the outcome of the action. Erie Human Relations Commission v. Tullio, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 493 F.2d 371. Civil Rights 1532

4415. ---- Firefighters, employees, persons entitled to maintain action

In suit for declaratory judgment brought under this section by city fire captain against city officials who had suspended him for a temporary period of 20 days, notwithstanding that fire captain had been reinstated, he carried a classic "personal stake" in outcome of litigation as a blot on his record and, even though such stake may not rise to level of a liberty interest, it was enough to satisfy the injury-in-fact requirement of standing. Sims v. Young, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 556 F.2d 732. Declaratory Judgment 300

Firefighters who ranked lower than 146 on promotional eligibility list lacked standing to maintain § 1983 action challenging out-of-rank promotions of black and Hispanic firefighters to captain position, where white firefighters would not have been promoted even if strict rank order had been followed. McNamara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 870, affirmed 138 F.3d 1219, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 444, 525 U.S. 981, 142 L.Ed.2d 398. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Firemen who had been discharged for failure to comply with hair-length regulation had standing to sue. Michini v. Rizzo, E.D.Pa.1974, 379 F.Supp. 837, affirmed 511 F.2d 1394. Civil Rights 1331(5)

4416. ---- Police officers, employees, persons entitled to maintain action

White police sergeant had standing to raise § 1983 claim that city denied him opportunity to compete for one promotion by not strictly following rank order in referral process and by promoting black officer who had more seniority but scored lower than police sergeant on test city used to rank job applicants in first round where police sergeant would have been considered for opening had rank order been strictly followed given his order on list rank of candidates. Donaghy v. City of Omaha, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1991, 933 F.2d 1448, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 938, 502 U.S. 1059, 117 L.Ed.2d 109. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Association composed of employed policemen lacked standing to challenge discrimination in hiring. Minority Police Officers Ass'n of South Bend v. City of South Bend, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1983, 721 F.2d 197. Civil Rights 1331(5)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

White police officers had standing to challenge city's allegedly discriminatory promotion requirements under §§ 1981, 1983, and Michigan's Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act, where officers showed that, but for requirements, they could have been promoted. Kresnak v. City of Muskegon Heights, W.D.Mich.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1327. Civil Rights 1331(5); Civil Rights 1736

4417. ---- Applicants, employees, persons entitled to maintain action

Unsuccessful white applicant for position as police officer lacked standing to assert claim for damages in § 1983 action alleging that city's affirmative action program for hiring police officers violated equal protection clause; applicant would not have been hired even under race-neutral hiring policy, since his name was too far down on list of eligible candidates. Donahue v. City of Boston, C.A.1 (Mass.) 2002, 304 F.3d 110, on remand 264 F.Supp.2d 74. Civil Rights 1331(5)

4418. ---- Miscellaneous employees, persons entitled to maintain action

White city employee had standing to sue city and individual defendants under § 1983 for retaliation based on his assistance of black person and exercise of free speech rights, where he was not suing on behalf of anyone else, but rather, asserted his own right to be free from retaliation, alleged injuries that were personal to him, and was only affected plaintiff who could bring suit. Maynard v. City of San Jose, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 37 F.3d 1396, as amended, on remand 1996 WL 101192. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Motorist, who was prosecuted for a traffic violation which occurred while driving her employer's vehicle, did not have standing to bring §§ 1983 claim on behalf of her employer, alleging that city and city attorneys conspired to intimidate her due to her association with her employer, absent an injury to her own personal constitutional rights. King v. Knoll, D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1169. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Employee of the Child Welfare Administration (CWA) of the City of New York who was suspended for violating City's executive order after she was interviewed by network news program in connection with report about child who allegedly died from physical abuse by her mother had standing to bring § 1983 First Amendment claim challenging constitutionality of executive orders which provide that all contacts with media regarding any policies or activities of child welfare agency must be submitted to media relations office prior to the communication being made and the media relations office will then determine appropriate manner in which to handle media contacts. Harman v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 945 F.Supp. 750, motion denied 1997 WL 76509, affirmed 140 F.3d 111. Constitutional Law 42.3(3)

Permanent city employees and noncity employee lacked standing to attack section of city's substance abuse policy applying to city employees holding "safety/sensitive positions" and restricted to those safety positions "whose activities are regulated by either the United States Department of Transportation's Guidelines or the Louisiana Department of Safety," absent allegation that any plaintiff was such an employee. Roe v. City of New Orleans, E.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 1443. Civil Rights 1331(5)

4419. Executors, persons entitled to maintain action

Plaintiff had standing and capacity as executor of decedent's estate to initiate lawsuit against defendants in their capacities as a police officer and police commissioner for alleged violation of this section as long as plaintiff was suing by virtue of his status as executor of decedent's estate and not in his own right. Baffa v. Black, E.D.Pa.1979, 481 F.Supp. 1083. Civil Rights 1332(4); Death 31(3.1)

Since, in action brought under this section by the executors of deceased New York attorney's estate, his widow, children, grandchildren and assignee for injunctive and declaratory relief vacating an order of the New York Appellate Division, which suspended the attorney from the practice of law for a period of three years, effective

Feb. 5, 1971, the relatives and assignee of decedent sought relief, in counts II and III, based solely on an alleged violation of decedent's constitutional rights, not their own, they lacked standing to sue under this section. Javits v. Stevens, S.D.N.Y.1974, 382 F.Supp. 131. Civil Rights 1332(6)

4420. Family members, persons entitled to maintain action--Generally

Mother and minor children of decedent allegedly killed as result of officer's use of excessive force lacked standing to assert survival action under § 1983 and Fourth Amendment, given that Nevada law required survival actions to be brought by official representatives of decedent's estate and neither mother nor children alleged that their claims were brought in representative capacity. Moreland v. Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Dept., C.A.9 (Nev.) 1998, 159 F.3d 365, as amended. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Son-in-law had no privacy interest in his mother-in-law's house and thus could not maintain civil rights action against police officers who searched the house to effect his arrest. Lee v. Gilstrap, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 661 F.2d 999, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1755, 456 U.S. 907, 72 L.Ed.2d 165. Civil Rights 1088(3); Constitutional Law 82(7)

Arrestee's family members did not have standing to bring §§ 1983 claims against officers and prosecutors involved in arrest and prosecution of arrestee for rape, robbery, and weapons law violations, absent any evidence that officers' or prosecutors' conduct was directed at the family relationship. Nunez Gonzalez v. Vazquez Garced, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 214. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Family members of alleged victim of excessive force lacked standing to assert § 1983 claim based on deprivation of the right to familial association, absent allegations or evidence of intent by law enforcement defendants to interfere with their relationship with victim. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Family members do not have an independent claim under § 1983 unless the constitutionally defective conduct or omission was directed at the family relationship. Rodriguez-Oquendo v. Toledo-Davila, D.Puerto Rico 1999, 39 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1332(4); Husband And Wife 209(4)

Family members do not have an independent claim under § 1983 unless the constitutionally defective conduct or omission was directed at the family relationship. Rodriguez-Oquendo v. Toledo-Davila, D.Puerto Rico 1999, 39 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Family members of adult victim of fatal shooting allegedly perpetrated by police officer could not state claim under § 1983 for liberty interest violation or due process violation based on victim's death. Rivera v. Medina, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 963 F.Supp. 78. Civil Rights 1332(4); Constitutional Law 253(1)

Members of decedent's immediate family may not bring § 1983 action to recover for deprivation of parent-child relationship in wrongful death context. Kelly v. Wehrum, S.D.Ohio 1997, 956 F.Supp. 1369. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Family members of person arrested, prosecuted, and eventually acquitted of criminal sexual conduct lacked standing to bring § 1983 civil rights actions, where they did not allege that their own constitutional rights had been violated, but that they had suffered injury to the extent of requiring medical treatment as a result of the arrest and prosecution of family member. Pierzynowski v. Police Dept. City of Detroit, E.D.Mich.1996, 941 F.Supp. 633. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Individual does not have cause of action under § 1983 for due process violation based on injury or death of family member. Soto v. Carrasquillo, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 878 F.Supp. 324, affirmed 103 F.3d 1056, certiorari denied

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

118 S.Ct. 71, 522 U.S. 819, 139 L.Ed.2d 32. Civil Rights 1332(1)

4421. ---- Children, family members, persons entitled to maintain action

When construed in light most favorable toward children whose father was killed in shootout, material allegations of complaint asserting claims under § 1983 adequately requested compensation for father's alleged constitutional injuries in children's representative capacities as co-administrators of his estate, and therefore claims could not be dismissed for lack of standing to initiate personal claims stemming from alleged violations of father's constitutional rights, even though certain allegations of complaint also appeared to aver that children suffered personal losses as result of alleged violations. Claybrook v. Birchwell, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 199 F.3d 350. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Deceased inmate's daughter could maintain action against prison officials based on her inheritance of inmate's right to bring civil rights action for pain and suffering while incarcerated at prison and during his gruesome death at hands of other inmates. Velazquez-Martinez v. Colon, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 961 F.Supp. 362. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Loss of companionship claim by children of parent who has suffered constitutional deprivation is not cognizable in § 1983 civil rights suit; any damage sustained by children is merely incidental, rather than independent constitutional deprivation. Broadnax v. Webb, E.D.Mich.1995, 892 F.Supp. 188. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Civil rights claims which were based on First Amendment violations and which alleged that town and various officials retaliated against children for things their parents did and said failed to state claims where children did not contend that their own First Amendment rights were chilled by defendants' conduct. Penney v. Town of Middleton, D.N.H.1994, 888 F.Supp. 332. Civil Rights 1395(1)

High school student had standing to assert his father's First Amendment rights in action challenging school's decision to deny student admission into National Honor Society in alleged retaliation for his father's prior criticisms of school administration; activity student wished to pursue and his father's right to voice his opinion on public matters were inextricably bound up if retaliation animated decision to reject student from National Honor Society, and father's monetary damages could not be easily calculated. Dangler on Behalf of Dangler v. Yorktown Cent. Schools, S.D.N.Y.1991, 771 F.Supp. 625. Civil Rights 1332(2)

Adoption Act created individual rights in foster children, enforceable under § 1983, to services to facilitate permanency plan; foster children were clearly intended beneficiaries of Act, since language of Act focused on needs of individual foster children, Act lacked enforcement mechanism, and Act was not too vague and amorphous to be enforced by judiciary. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1057

State prisoner appearing pro se in civil rights action under § 1983 could not pursue claims against city for its alleged violations of his mother's and grandmother's constitutional rights. Green v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31855312, Unreported. Attorney And Client 62; Civil Rights 1332(4)

4422. ---- Parents, family members, persons entitled to maintain action

Mother of detainee who died while in police custody lacked standing under Arkansas law to assert §§ 1983 wrongful death claim against police, as complaint named the mother individually and "on behalf of the heirs at law" of the deceased detainee; mother was not detainee's estate's personal representative at the time complaint was filed, Arkansas law required that wrongful death action be brought by all the heirs of the deceased when there was no personal representative, and mother was only plaintiff actually named. Williams v. Bradshaw, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 459 F.3d 846. Death 31(7)

Mother whose son was murdered by his wife had standing, as a parent, to assert a § 1983 claim for the wrongful death of her son in violation of his constitutional rights, where the spouse-murderer was precluded from recovery under state law and state wrongful death statute, under which the mother had standing to assert a claim, was incorporated into federal law under § 1988. Carringer v. Rodgers, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 331 F.3d 844. Civil Rights 1332(6)

Rule precluding parent or guardian from bringing action on behalf of minor child without retaining lawyer did not violate free exercise clause, notwithstanding father's claim that, by becoming guardian ad litem and hiring lawyer to represent minor son in federal civil rights action, he was abrogating his responsibility under Holy Bible to exercise duties of caring for, nurturing, and providing for son; free exercise clause was not violated by limiting legal representation of others to licensed attorneys authorized to practice before court. Johns v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 114 F.3d 874. Constitutional Law 84.5(1); Infants 71

Parents of African-American students lacked standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that school board discriminated against them during search to hire superintendent; parents had no constitutional right to have African-American considered for position, any constitutional violation by board was violation of rights of African-American applicants for position rather than of parents, parents were not best suited to bring suit regarding infringements on applicants' rights, parents did not allege unlawful expenditure of municipal funds so as to have standing as municipal taxpayers, and, even if parents had legally protected interest in facts of case, they failed to allege that they suffered harms distinct from those suffered by citizenry of city. Clay v. Fort Wayne Community Schools, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 76 F.3d 873. Civil Rights 1332(5); Schools 111

Parent failed to show injury-in-fact and, therefore, lacked standing to sue under § 1983 for damages resulting from school district's maintenance of Bible distribution policy, under which son had received Bible, where parent failed to demonstrate how maintenance of policy continued to injure, or even threatened to injure, parent or son. Schanou v. Lancaster County School Dist. No. 160, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1995, 62 F.3d 1040. Civil Rights 1333(2)

Father had standing to assert § 1983 claim based on injuries to and death of his son, who committed suicide in jail cell, either in his own name or as administrator of son's estate. Frey v. City of Herculaneum, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 44 F.3d 667. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Mother of pretrial detainee who committed suicide had standing under § 1983 to recover for her own injuries allegedly resulting from deprivation of detainee's constitutional rights; mother was within class of people entitled to recover under Texas law for wrongful death of a child, and § 1988 incorporated that wrongful death remedy into § 1983. Rhyne v. Henderson County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 973 F.2d 386, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Victim's parents had due process liberty interest in companionship and society of victim and, therefore, were proper plaintiffs in § 1983 action to recover for police officers' shooting of victim. Ward v. City of San Jose, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 967 F.2d 280, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1389

Parents of pupil who was paddled by teacher could not maintain cause of action under this section against teacher and school officials. Hall v. Tawney, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1980, 621 F.2d 607.

Although parents of pre-trial detainee who was murdered in county jail could not recover under Washington's general survival statute and wrongful death statutes because they were not financially dependent upon detainee, parents could seek recovery from county defendants under §§ 1988 for violations of detainee's constitutional rights; §§ 1988 permitted courts to "borrow" state wrongful death statutes to the extent they were consistent with §§ 1983, and allowing such recovery would further the goals of §§ 1983. Rentz v. Spokane County, E.D.Wash.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 1252. Federal Courts 411

Parent's Fourth Amendment unreasonable seizure and excessive force claims against county school district and school officials under §§ 1983 were not preempted by Title VI; although parent alleged discriminatory motive behind her arrests, parent could not bring Title VI claim. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999 . Civil Rights 1309

Parents of robbery suspect shot by police officer lacked standing, under California law, to bring action alleging, inter alia, use of excessive force, in violation of Fourth Amendment, and state law claims; parents were not financially dependent on suspect. Foster v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1140. Parent And Child 7(6)

Father of a defendant sentenced to death failed to show that the defendant was unable to litigate his own claim, and thus, lacked standing to proceed as the defendant's next friend in a §§ 1983 suit alleging that the defendant's federal civil rights were being violated by the State of Connecticut's lethal injection protocol; while the father alleged that the defendant suffered from substantial mental diseases and/or defects which affected his ability to manage his affairs and care for himself, the only evidence offered to support that assertion was that by waiving his right to further appeal his death sentence, the defendant was endangering his health by committing "state-assisted suicide." Ross ex rel. Ross v. Rell, D.Conn.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 224. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Parent of Asian-American elementary school student, who alleged that her individual interest in care, custody, and management of her child was violated by alleged deliberate indifference of school district and school officials to pupils' abuse of student, lacked standing to assert personal violation of her substantive due process and equal protection rights under § 1983; rights of parent and student were inextricably bound up with one another, and even if parent's individual claims were recognized, they were dependent on student's claims alleging violations of his constitutional rights for which officials were determined not to have acted with deliberate indifference. Yap v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 284. Civil Rights 1332(2)

Parents of motorist killed by police officer during traffic stop had standing to pursue § 1983 action against officers and city; although decedent was an adult and had fathered a child, he had never become part of another family unit than that of his parents, in that he had never married, child was not born until after decedent's death, and decedent lived in mother's home, worked only part-time, and did not provide financial support to any other person. Russ v. Watts, N.D.Ill.2002, 190 F.Supp.2d 1094. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Mother lacked standing to bring individual claims under § 1983 based upon a deprivation of her daughter's constitutional rights. Morgan v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2001, 166 F.Supp.2d 817. Civil Rights 1332(1)

State action that affects the parental relationship only incidentally, even though the deprivation may be permanent, as in the case of an unlawful death, is not sufficient to establish a violation of an identified liberty interest, so as to confer standing to assert due process claim under § 1983. Reyes Vargas v. Rosello Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2001, 135 F.Supp.2d 305. Civil Rights 1331(6); Constitutional Law 274(5)

Mother of elementary school student had standing, in her capacity as student's guardian ad litem, to proceed with § 1983 suit against Commissioner of New Jersey Department of Education, but she did not have standing to sue in her individual capacity, since right asserted against, and relief requested from, Commissioner, i.e., the adoption of policy to prevent future violations of students' constitutional rights, was not her own. C.H. v. Oliva, D.N.J.1997, 990 F.Supp. 341, affirmed 166 F.3d 1204, rehearing granted, opinion withdrawn, on rehearing 195 F.3d 167, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 197 F.3d 63, on rehearing 226 F.3d 198, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 2519, 533 U.S. 915, 150 L.Ed.2d 692. Civil Rights 1332(2)

Parent can challenge state's severance or termination of parent-child relationship, which is protected liberty interest, under § 1983. Palacios v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1997, 970 F.Supp. 732, affirmed 152 F.3d 928. Civil Rights 1057

Parent's personal claim for loss of companionship and loss of parent-child relationship concerning death of her child was not cognizable under § 1983; although child's constitutional rights might have been violated, any damage suffered by parent from loss of her child did not amount to independent constitutional deprivation of any of her constitutional rights. Gravely v. Madden, S.D.Ohio 1995, 964 F.Supp. 260. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Parents who were suspected of abusing infant lacked standing to raise § 1983 civil rights claims against city, challenging city's policy and practice for investigating child abuse reports, absent showing that city policy or practice violated United States Constitution. Dietz v. Damas, E.D.N.Y.1996, 932 F.Supp. 431, motion to vacate denied 948 F.Supp. 198. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Even if father had standing to assert § 1983 claims on behalf of son, son's status as fugitive from justice barred pursuit of such claims. Messa v. Rubin, E.D.Pa.1995, 897 F.Supp. 883. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Mother of decedent shot by deputy sheriff had standing to sue under § 1983 for loss of companionship, society and comfort; application of state law rule under which mother lacked standing would be inconsistent with § 1983 goals of compensation and deterrence when applied to mother's own injuries and would limit deterrent effect of § 1983 by allowing state actors to avoid compensating for full extent of injuries they cause. Reynolds v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.1994, 858 F.Supp. 1064, affirmed in part, remanded in part 84 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Parent could not pursue § 1983 claim for wrongful death damages based on her son's death; alleged actions of corrections officers were directed at son rather than parent, and only person toward whom action is directed, and not those incidentally affected, can maintain § 1983 claim. Natriello v. Flynn, D.Mass.1993, 837 F.Supp. 17. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Mother had standing to bring civil rights claim on behalf of her children against foster care contractors based on alleged sexual abuse of her children while in foster care, where mother had custody of children and had obligation to support them. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1332(6)

Decedent's mother could not maintain § 1983 civil rights action attempting to recover on her own behalf for alleged excessive force imposed upon her son by police officers; federally protected rights that are enforceable under § 1983 are personal to injured party. Rose v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1993, 814 F.Supp. 878. Civil Rights 1332(4)

4423. ---- Siblings, family members, persons entitled to maintain action

Victim's siblings lacked due process liberty interest in victim's companionship and, therefore, were not proper plaintiffs in § 1983 action to recover for police officers' shooting of victim. Ward v. City of San Jose, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 967 F.2d 280, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1389

Mother and sister had standing to assert their own claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 governing deprivation of civil rights based upon alleged wrongful death of their son and brother while incarcerated in county jail, where mother and daughter alleged that death deprived them of their constitutional right of familial association. Trujillo v. Board of County Com'rs of Santa Fe County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1985, 768 F.2d 1186. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Individual lacked standing to assert his deceased brother's civil rights claim, based on allegation that nonfeasance in supervising administration of state penitentiary resulted in murder of brother, then inmate of the prison by fellow inmates. Cunningham v. Ray, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1981, 648 F.2d 1185. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Siblings of pre-trial detainee who was murdered in county jail did not have a constitutionally protected liberty interest in the companionship of their brother, and therefore could not assert Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process causes of action against county defendants for loss of companionship with their brother. Rentz v. Spokane County, E.D.Wash.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 1252. Prisons 4(4)

Siblings of motorist killed by police officer during traffic stop did not have standing to pursue § 1983 action against officers and city based on loss of due process right to associate with their brother. Russ v. Watts, N.D.Ill.2002, 190 F.Supp.2d 1094. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Sister of arrestee who committed suicide following arrest could not recover under § 1983 for loss of society and companionship, thus, sister lacked standing to maintain claim against police officers. Pyka v. Village of Orland Park, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1196. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Parents and siblings of man shot by police had no cognizable liberty interest which was violated permitting them to maintain action against police under § 1983, where state action in question was clearly aimed solely at man who was shot. Carmona Pacheco v. Betancourt y Lebron, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 820 F.Supp. 45. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Arrestee lacked standing to bring claims of police harassment on behalf of his wife or her sister, in civil rights action under §§ 1983 against police department. James v. York County Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 126, 2005 WL 3313029, Unreported. Civil Rights 1332(4)

4424. ---- Spouses, family members, persons entitled to maintain action

Wife of husband and children who were purportedly beaten in their home alleged a personal intrusion into her rights under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments sufficient to support § 1983 action against police officers. Gora v. Costa, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 971 F.2d 1325. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Wife of man who was shot inside his trailer home by deputies after he had fired shots at them when they approached could not recover for violation of her civil rights where wife was with deputies when incident occurred; however, man's four-year-old daughter, who was in trailer at time of incident, could recover in light of evidence that shots were fired into trailer when deputies knew that persons other than the man were in the trailer. Coon v. Ledbetter, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1986, 780 F.2d 1158. Civil Rights 1088(2)

High school instructor lacked standing to bring §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim on basis of speech in his spouse's letter to school board about qualifications of instructor's supervisor, who was hired for position over instructor's spouse despite her alleged superior qualifications. Trujillo v. Board of Educ. of Albuquerque Public Schools, D.N.M.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 994. Constitutional Law 42.3(3)

Only wife, and not husband nor their conjugal partnership, could maintain suit under §§ 1983 claiming that employer violated wife's federally protected rights. Figueroa-Garay v. Municipality of Rio Grande, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1332(5); Husband And Wife 221

Puerto Rico employee's spouse could not sue under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of employee's constitutional rights. Ramirez-De Leon v. Mujica-Cotto, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1332(5)

Wife of victim of police beating and their conjugal partnership could not bring § 1983 action against police officers and superintendent of police department, where claims alleged by wife and partnership rested upon violation of victim's civil rights by police officers. Rodriguez-Oquendo v. Toledo-Davila, D.Puerto Rico 1999, 39 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1332(4); Husband And Wife 209(4)

Tenured university professor's allegations, in complaint against university officials under § 1983, that officials harmed his family income by electing not to renew his wife's teaching contract, that harm was inflicted in retaliation for professor's public criticism of university, that he and his family derived part of their support from wife's income, and that he was concretely injured by loss of that income, demonstrated causal connection between wrongs alleged and injury in fact, and that his alleged harms would be likely to be redressed by relief requested, and were therefore sufficient to convey standing to bring First Amendment free speech claim. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Constitutional Law 42.3(3)

Husband failed to demonstrate that incarcerated wife was unable to assert directly her §§ 1983 claims challenging validity of her arrest and prosecution, and therefore husband lacked standing to assert those claims himself. McDonald v. Van Houtte, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 673, 2005 WL 3307432, Unreported. Husband And Wife 221

Husband lacked standing to assert a § 1983 claim for the violation of his wife's rights. Juncewicz v. Patton, W.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31654957, Unreported, appeal dismissed 63 Fed.Appx. 44, 2003 WL 21105332. Civil Rights 1332(5)

4425. ---- Miscellaneous family members, persons entitled to maintain action

Where father-in-law of Indiana state probationer alleged in civil rights complaint that he was deprived of the right to associate with his granddaughter by the terms of probation imposed on his daughter-in-law, complaint sufficiently alleged an injury and such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to insure presentation of the dispute in an adversary context and, therefore, father-in-law had standing to invoke jurisdiction of federal court. Drollinger v. Milligan, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1977, 552 F.2d 1220. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Family members of victim could not maintain derivative Section 1983 claims on victim's behalf arising out of law enforcement officers' unlawful use of force; rather, estate of victim was the appropriate party to bring the derivative Section 1983 action. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1332(4); Civil Rights 1389

Family members of arrestee who had allegedly suffered injury at hands of police could not assert excessive force claim under § 1983 against city and police officers, as Fourth Amendment rights of arrestee which were allegedly violated were personal rights which could not be vicariously asserted. Palacios v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1997, 970 F.Supp. 732, affirmed 152 F.3d 928. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Boyfriend of children's mother lacked any First Amendment associational rights to be with children, precluding claims under § 1983 or statutory provision prohibiting conspiracy to violate civil rights, that state officials violated those rights in removing children from boyfriend's home. Wittman v. California Dept. of Social Services, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31398711, Unreported, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 108 Fed.Appx. 548, 2004 WL 1987357. Conspiracy 7.5(2); Constitutional Law 82(10); Infants 222

4426. Fetuses, persons entitled to maintain action

Fetus could not state civil rights claims under § 1983, although it was protected from criminal conduct under state law. Reed v. Gardner, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 986 F.2d 1122, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 389, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1329

Child could assert § 1983 cause of action based upon killing of his father by alleged police "death squad," notwithstanding that child was a fetus at time of father's death, since child's injury and cause of action for loss of familial companionship did not arise until his birth. Crumpton v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1418. Civil Rights 1332(6)

Infant plaintiff could not maintain civil rights action, alleging his rights were violated during his mother's alleged beating by police officers, where infant plaintiff had not yet been born on night of incident; infant had no constitutional rights until his birth. Ruiz Romero v. Gonzalez Caraballo, D.Puerto Rico 1988, 681 F.Supp. 123. Civil Rights 1331(4); Constitutional Law 82(1)

A fetus is not a "person" or "citizen" within contemplation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section. McGarvey v. Magee-Womens Hospital, W.D.Pa.1972, 340 F.Supp. 751, affirmed 474 F.2d 1339.

4427. Foreign nations, persons entitled to maintain action

Foreign nation was neither a "person" nor a person "within the jurisdiction" of the United States, and accordingly was not authorized to bring suit under federal civil rights statute. Breard v. Greene, U.S.Va.1998, 118 S.Ct. 1352, 523 U.S. 371, 140 L.Ed.2d 529. Civil Rights 1329

4428. Foster children, persons entitled to maintain action

Child involuntarily placed in a foster home is in a situation so analogous to a prisoner in a penal institution and a child confined in a mental health facility that the foster child may bring a § 1983 action for violation of Fourteenth Amendment rights. Rayburn ex rel. Rayburn v. Farnesi, N.D.Ga.1999, 70 F.Supp.2d 1334, vacated in part 241 F.3d 1341. Civil Rights 1057

Adoption Act created individual rights in foster children, enforceable under § 1983, to services to facilitate permanency plan; foster children were clearly intended beneficiaries of Act, since language of Act focused on needs of individual foster children, Act lacked enforcement mechanism, and Act was not too vague and amorphous to be enforced by judiciary. Kenny A. ex rel. Winn v. Perdue, N.D.Ga.2003, 218 F.R.D. 277. Civil Rights 1057

4429. Fugitives, persons entitled to maintain action

Under "fugitive from justice rule," courts strongly disfavor § 1983 claims brought by fugitives from justice, particularly when they are based on facts intimately associated with convictions that plaintiffs are fleeing. Messa v. Rubin, E.D.Pa.1995, 897 F.Supp. 883. Civil Rights 1088(5)

4430. Guarantors, persons entitled to maintain action

Guarantors of corporate debts, who were in no different position than other unsecured creditors of corporation who had extended credit with expectation of corporation's ability to repay its debt out of operating income, and who did not allege that city disposed of or in some way impaired value of collateral securing guaranteed debt, possessed no civil rights right of action separate and apart from any that corporation might possess. Odal Typographers, Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1983, 560 F.Supp. 558. Civil Rights 1332(6)

4431. Homebuyers, persons entitled to maintain action

Black resident of city had standing to maintain action challenging constitutional validity, and validity under Fair Housing Act, of city's programs designed to freeze existing racial composition of the city, which was 75% white and 25% black, by steering white home buyers to city's housing market and black home buyers away from the area, on ground that city's steering policies stigmatized the black resident as inferior member of community in which he lived, even though city's motive for the unequal treatment might have been benign. Smith v. City of Cleveland Heights, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 760 F.2d 720, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 795, 474 U.S. 1056, 88 L.Ed.2d 772.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4432. Indians, persons entitled to maintain action

Indian tribe was not "person" who could sue under § 1983 to vindicate sovereign rights allegedly violated by county's execution of otherwise valid search warrant in course of welfare fraud investigation; statute was designed to secure private rights against government encroachment, not to advance sovereign's prerogative to withhold evidence relevant to criminal investigation. Inyo County, Cal. v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony, U.S.2003, 123 S.Ct. 1887, 538 U.S. 701, 155 L.Ed.2d 933. Civil Rights 1331(4); Indians 27(1)

Indian tribe was not "person" who could sue under § 1983 to vindicate sovereign rights allegedly violated by state's claimed right to collect motor vehicle fuel taxes from tribally-operated businesses. Winnebago Tribe of Nebraska v. Kline, D.Kan.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 1291. Civil Rights 1331(6); Indians 27(1)

Lac Courte Oreilles Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians comprised class of citizens or "other persons" entitled to sue under § 1983 for purpose of determining whether subject matter jurisdiction existed to entertain band's § 1983 claim against state that would permit recovery of attorneys' fees under § 1988. Lac Courte Oreilles Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians v. State of Wis., W.D.Wis.1987, 663 F.Supp. 682, appeal dismissed 829 F.2d 601. Civil Rights 1009

Members and residents of Indian reservation were each a "person within the jurisdiction" of the United States and thus could bring suit under this section to redress alleged deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws. Thompson v. State of N. Y., N.D.N.Y.1979, 487 F.Supp. 212. Civil Rights 1329

4433. Indigents, persons entitled to maintain action

Indigent defendants did not have standing to enjoin city's policy of jailing indigents without counsel; city did not have control over municipal judge who failed to advise defendants of their rights to counsel, and whether plaintiffs would commit future crimes in city, be indigent, plead guilty, and be sentenced to jail was speculative. Eggar v. City of Livingston, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1994, 40 F.3d 312, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2566, 515 U.S. 1136, 132 L.Ed.2d 818. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Where civil rights action challenging constitutionality of the requirement of bond to appeal from conviction in municipal court to the circuit court was filed while plaintiff was still in jail, the prisoner had standing to present it and was a proper representative of class composed of indigent persons who were convicted in the municipal court or other municipal or recorder courts in the state from which they wished to appeal but were unable to do so because of financial inability to post bond. Tucker v. City of Montgomery Bd. of Com'rs, M.D.Ala.1976, 410 F.Supp. 494. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4434. Intervenors, persons entitled to maintain action

Legal aid society and prelaw association, for black members, could not intervene as of right in lawsuit brought by white law school applicants who claimed they were denied positions in entering class because of affirmative action program under which black students with lessor credentials were required to be admitted; even though black groups claimed that state would not represent its interests because it was required to balance those against interests of white population, there was no indication that state would not vigorously defend its own affirmative action program, and blacks could give state benefit of their perspective through serving as friends of court. Hopwood v. State of Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 21 F.3d 603. Federal Civil Procedure 331

An intervenor, in a school desegregation case, seeking relief under remedial provisions of final desegregation order that in part were fashioned by court to protect his rights, has standing to enforce such rights by applying for relief to district court presiding over school case, when jurisdiction to enforce remedial provisions of final decree has been retained. Lee v. Pike County Bd. of Ed., C.A.5 (Ala.) 1978, 578 F.2d 1159. Schools 13(18.1)

4435. Insurers and insured, persons entitled to maintain action

Absent any showing that insurers were injured by alleged illegal search and false arrest of third persons, the insurers, complaining that employees of state insurance department directed uniform police officers to position themselves on insurers' premises and search persons entering or leaving the building, had no standing to raise such issues in suit under this section. Safeguard Mut. Ins. Co. v. Miller, E.D.Pa.1979, 477 F.Supp. 299. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Even assuming that there had been adequate state involvement to support claim under this section against named private insurance companies for issuing discriminatory disability insurance policies, holder of policy issued by one insurance company did not have standing to bring civil rights claim against other insurance companies where, even though policyholder consulted independent sales agent before selecting her policy, other companies established that agent had no authority to represent them or represented that he had such authority. Reichardt v. Payne, D.C.Cal.1975, 396 F.Supp. 1010, affirmed in part and remanded 591 F.2d 499, on remand 485 F.Supp. 56. Civil Rights 1331(6)

4436. Job applicants, persons entitled to maintain action

Black resident of Boston, Massachusetts, had no standing to bring action against Governor and heads of 16 state agencies claiming racial discrimination in state's hiring practices where he had himself never applied for employment with any of such agencies. Jackson v. Dukakis, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1975, 526 F.2d 64. Civil Rights 1331(5)

White candidates for newly created positions of community service assistant in human services agencies throughout state of New York had no liberty or property interest in such position such as to give them standing to claim that lack of job-relatedness of examination given for such positions deprived them of substantive due process rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1. Jackson v. Nassau County Civil Service Commission, E.D.N.Y.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1162. Constitutional Law 254.1; Constitutional Law 277(2)

4437. Journalists, persons entitled to maintain action

Newspaper publisher and journalist had standing to bring civil rights action against Governor of Puerto Rico, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief with respect to enforcement of executive order issued by Governor restricting disclosure of public documents; publisher and journalist claimed that order was facially overbroad and that they were presently and would be prospectively subjected to order. El Dia, Inc. v. Hernandez Colon, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 783 F.Supp. 15, reversed on other grounds 963 F.2d 488. Civil Rights 1331(6); Declaratory Judgment 300

4438. Licensees and permittees, persons entitled to maintain action

Owner of entertainment business which had closed lacked standing to assert former patrons' rights in owners § 1983 claim, in which he asserted that conditional use permit disproportionately impacted racial minorities; award of § 1983 compensatory damages to owner could not redress any injury suffered by former patrons. Conti v. City of Fremont, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 919 F.2d 1385. Civil Rights 1332(3) requirement, even though owner never sought to comply with licensing procedures; by its terms, license requirement sought to regulate conduct commonly associated with expression (along with nonexpression-related conduct). Admiral Theatre v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1993, 832 F.Supp. 1195. Constitutional Law 42.1(6)

4439. Medicaid or Medicare providers, persons entitled to maintain action

Chain pharmacy, as Medicaid provider, was not intended beneficiary of Social Security Act's Medicaid equal access provision, and thus had no right of action under § 1983 to challenge state's alleged violation of provision consisting of tiered reimbursement of pharmacies for Medicaid-covered prescription drugs, regardless of pharmacy's contention that it challenged reimbursement system not as denial of equal access but as violation of provision's "efficiency, economy, and quality of care" clause. Walgreen Co. v. Hood, C.A.5 (La.) 2001, 275 F.3d 475, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 2645, 536 U.S. 951, 153 L.Ed.2d 823. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1330(6); Health 507

Provider of medical services to qualified Medicare beneficiaries (QMBs) had standing to challenge state's reimbursement rates, in § 1983 action, even though provider did not provide services directly but sold services to nursing homes which provided services to QMBs. Paramount Health Systems, Inc. v. Wright, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1998, 138 F.3d 706, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 335, 525 U.S. 929, 142 L.Ed.2d 276, on remand 2000 WL 28264. Civil Rights 1332(6)

Nonprofit organization composed of public and private health care providers had associational standing to bring § 1983 action challenging Virginia's procedures for reimbursing hospitals for cost of treating Medicaid patients. Virginia Hosp. Ass'n v. Baliles, C.A.4 (Va.) 1989, 868 F.2d 653, rehearing denied, certiorari granted in part 110 S.Ct. 49, 493 U.S. 808, 107 L.Ed.2d 18, affirmed 110 S.Ct. 2510, 496 U.S. 498, 110 L.Ed.2d 455. Associations 20(1)

Neither Medicaid beneficiaries nor providers had a claim under § 1983 to enforce the provisions in the Medicaid statute relating to managed care plans; those statutory provisions were addressed to the Secretary of Health and Human Services, were designed to reduce the State's costs, and did not unequivocally confer rights on either providers or beneficiaries. Clayworth v. Bonta, E.D.Cal.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1052

Neither Medicaid beneficiaries nor providers had a claim under § 1983 to enforce the provisions in the Medicaid statute relating to managed care plans; those statutory provisions were addressed to the Secretary of Health and Human Services, were designed to reduce the State's costs, and did not unequivocally confer rights on either providers or beneficiaries. Clayworth v. Bonta, E.D.Cal.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1052

Federal Medicaid statute requiring that providers, beneficiaries, and their representatives be given reasonable opportunity for review and comment on proposed reimbursement rates, methodologies, and justifications created right enforceable under § 1983 by beneficiaries and providers, in that statute reflected congressional intent to benefit beneficiaries and providers, unambiguously created binding obligation on participating state through its use of mandatory terms, and provided set of clear and understandable requirements that were within judicial competence to enforce. Long Term Care Pharmacy Alliance v. Ferguson, D.Mass.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 282, vacated 362 F.3d 50. Civil Rights 1052

Health care provider was intended beneficiary of equal access provision of Medicaid Act, so as to have standing to bring § 1983 claim based on that provision. Moody Emergency Medical Services, Inc. v. City of Millbrook, M.D.Ala.1997, 967 F.Supp. 488. Civil Rights 1331(6) for damages and injunctive relief. Hubbs v. Alamao, C.D.Cal.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 1073. Civil Rights 1037

Community Mental Health Center Act, §§ 2689 to 2689aa of this title, embodied Congressional commitment to principle of treatment or habilitation in least restrictive setting, and thus ultimate beneficiaries of §§ 2689 to 2689aa of this title were those persons, such as plaintiffs, mentally retarded children and young adults, who were afforded improved mental health services in their community with concomitantly reduced restraint on their liberty, and thus plaintiffs could state claim for alleged failure of state officials to comply with §§ 2689 to 2689aa of this title, pursuant to this subchapter governing civil action for deprivation of rights inasmuch as they were individuals most directly affected by administration of program. Medley v. Ginsberg, S.D.W.Va.1980, 492 F.Supp. 1294. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Although Code 1950, § 32-423 pertaining to surgical sexual sterilization operated as to physicians, potential recipient of medical treatment had standing to contest constitutionality of statute on ground that it denied equal protection to physicians. Doe v. Temple, E.D.Va.1976, 409 F.Supp. 899. Constitutional Law 42.2(2)

Although plaintiffs, who were patients at several mental institutions, did not have standing as potential employees to challenge employment practices of Alabama Mental Health Board, they did nevertheless, have standing to bring the action because of the secondary effect on plaintiffs as patients of the discrimination against staff personnel. Marable v. Alabama Mental Health Bd., M.D.Ala.1969, 297 F.Supp. 291. Civil Rights 1331(5)

4441. Military officers, persons entitled to maintain action

Air national guard officer was a "citizen of the United States" within meaning of this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights. Bollen v. National Guard Bureau, W.D.Pa.1978, 449 F.Supp. 343. Civil Rights 1329

4442. Minors, persons entitled to maintain action

Federal civil rights action was properly dismissed as to minor, who lacked capacity to sue on his own under California law. Johns v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 114 F.3d 874.

Minors and their parents had standing to challenge constitutionality of ordinance providing for a daily curfew which had been applied to and enforced against person under circumstances identical to those in which the plaintiffs found themselves at the time of bringing the action, even though none of the plaintiffs had been arrested or fined or threatened with arrest or a fine. Naprstek v. City of Norwich, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 545 F.2d 815. Municipal Corporations 121

Because child was the one who allegedly suffered a constitutional deprivation and her sexual abuse at the hands of police officer was a wrong directed against her person, rather than her family relationships, mother could only bring suit under Section 1983 on behalf of child and not on her own behalf. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Neglected and dependent children, through their next friends, may obtain injunctive and declaratory relief for violations of Titles IV and XX of the Social Security Act, sections 601 et seq. and 1397 et seq. of this title. maintain a civil rights action against police officer who went upon the premises to advise other occupants that they would be subject to arrest for criminal trespass if they remained on the land following the sale. Dieffenbach v. Buckley, D.C.N.H.1979, 464 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1331(4)

4444. Newspapers, persons entitled to maintain action

Two publishers of newspapers, which reported on proceedings of state government, and professional journalism society had standing to maintain class action against all district attorneys of the state of Alabama and other persons authorized to refuse or grant plaintiffs access to public places or public records, challenging constitutionality of that section of Alabama Ethic Statute requiring reporters who cover the state legislature or state government to file statements of economic interest and to enjoin enforcement of such section. Lewis v. Baxley, M.D.Ala.1973, 368 F.Supp. 768. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4445. Nonminorities, persons entitled to maintain action

Nonminority individual who was sole shareholder of property management company which provided low income housing to minorities had standing to maintain § 1983 claim against town and town officials for selective enforcement in violation of equal protection clause. Pisello v. Town of Brookhaven, E.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1332(3)

4446. Organizations, persons entitled to maintain action--Generally

It is not fatal to standing of an organization that its members might be in a position to litigate their own claims; so long as nature of the claim and of relief sought does not make individual participation of each injured party indispensable to proper resolution of the cause, the organization may vindicate its members' justiciable claims. International Woodworkers of America, AFL-CIO, CLC v. Chesapeake Bay Plywood Corp., C.A.4 (Md.) 1981, 659 F.2d 1259. Associations 20(1)

4447. ---- Civil rights organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

In view of fact that no state bar disciplinary proceeding could be brought against civil rights organization, organization had no independent standing to challenge disciplinary proceeding against attorney who performed legal services for the organization. American Civil Liberties Union v. Bozardt, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1976, 539 F.2d 340, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 639, 429 U.S. 1022, 50 L.Ed.2d 623. Attorney And Client 47.1

School district's alleged policies of transferring gay or lesbian students, and ignoring complaints regarding the safety, harassment, and discrimination against gay and lesbian students, and those perceived to be gay or lesbian, frustrated purpose of organization dedicated to eliminating homophobia and intolerance in schools, and thus, organization had direct standing to bring claims against school district and school officials under § 1983, the California Education Code, and the California Unruh Civil Rights Act. Gay-Straight Alliance Network v. Visalia Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2001, 262 F.Supp.2d 1088. Associations 20(1)

Civil rights organization which had as members many persons who were involved in marches in which the marchers were allegedly assaulted by police officers and by bystanders who were encouraged by the police officers had standing to maintain action against the police or city officials. Dunlap v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1295. Civil Rights 1331(4)

4448. ---- Nonprofit organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Nonprofit organization had associational standing to bring §§ 1983 action alleging that New York's system for nominating and electing Supreme Court judges violated political association rights, inasmuch as it was clearly likely that organization's members had suffered concrete injury to their First Amendment rights that was fairly traceable to State's conduct and could be remedied by court action, interests that suit sought to vindicate were germane to organization's purpose of making government more responsive and open to citizens, and neither claim asserted nor injunctive and declaratory relief requested required that organization's individual members participate in suit. Lopez Torres v. New York State Bd. of Elections, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 462 F.3d 161. Judges 3

Unincorporated not-for-profit organization providing advocacy on behalf of and assistance to day laborers lacked standing to pursue §§ 1983 action against New York village, mayor and police chief on its own behalf, as it had not demonstrated injury in fact caused by defendants' actions; injury complained of was to Latino day laborers by virtue of limitation on their ability to seek work in that village, organization's entire reason for being was to advocate on laborers' behalf, and it offered no evidence of some other type of work it did from which it was diverted by virtue of having to send representatives to that village. Doe v. Village of Mamaroneck, S.D.N.Y.2006, 462 F.Supp.2d 520. Civil Rights 1333(5)

Non-profit corporation which published issue advocacy relating to its stated goal of obtaining recognition and respect for sanctity of human life alleged intention to engage in conduct in apparent violation of Vermont campaign finance reform statutes, which regulated political advertising, and had curtailed or refrained from expressive activity in order to comply with statutes, and thus had standing to bring § 1983 action challenging statutes under First Amendment. Vermont Right to Life Committee, Inc. v. Sorrell, D.Vt.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 204, reversed 216 F.3d 264, withdrawn from bound volume, amended and superseded 221 F.3d 376, 192 A.L.R. Fed. 615. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Executive director of nonprofit organization, who was not party to contract between organization and Department of Corrections (DOC), did not suffer "injury in fact" sufficient to meet constitutional standing requirements for § 1983 action arising from DOC's allegedly unlawful closure of youthful offender transition program run by organization; most language in complaint alleged injury to organization rather than to director and to extent that complaint contained allegations that director herself suffered injuries, those injuries were premised on organization's claims. North Florida Educational Development Corp. v. Woodham, N.D.Fla.1996, 942 F.Supp. 542 . Civil Rights 1333(4)

Nonprofit corporation that entered into contract with New York State to provide protection and advocacy services to mentally disabled persons had standing to pursue civil rights action against private hospital and physician who initiated involuntary commitment proceedings against patients, even if nonprofit corporation did not personally suffer injury in fact; Protection Advocacy System for Mentally Ill Individuals Act gave corporation the right to pursue legal remedies on behalf of clients. Rubenstein v. Benedictine Hosp., N.D.N.Y.1992, 790 F.Supp. 396. Civil Rights 1332(6)

4449. ---- Political organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

League of Women Voters did not have standing under this section to assert rights of its members in challenging county's weighted voting system for its board of supervisors as unconstitutional. League of Women Voters of Nassau County v. Nassau County Bd. of Sup'rs, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 737 F.2d 155, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 783, 469 U.S. 1108, 83 L.Ed.2d 778. Constitutional Law 42.1(1)

Citizens that had sponsored citizen-initiated amendment to State Constitution, together with organizational sponsor, had standing to bring civil rights action against governor based on governor's alleged violation of First Amendment rights in taking steps to defeat amendment. Colorado Taxpayers Union, Inc. v. Romer, D.Colo.1990, 750 F.Supp. 1041, appeal dismissed 963 F.2d 1394, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1360, 507 U.S. 949, 122 L.Ed.2d 739. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4450. ---- Professional organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

Teachers' association had standing to bring class action on behalf of its black members against school district on account of racial discrimination in salaries, even though it was not an individual member of class it represented particularly since there was an alternative party plaintiff who was a member of class. Arkansas Ed. Ass'n v. Board of Ed. of Portland, Ark. School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1971, 446 F.2d 763. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Organization seeking standing as representative of its members to challenge layoffs of city police officers under the Constitution, sections 1981 and 1985(3) of this title, Title VI of Civil Rights Act of 1964, section 2000d et seq. of this title, this section, and state laws could obtain standing only if neither the claim asserted, nor relief requested, required participation of individual members in lawsuit. N.A.A.C.P., Detroit Branch v. Detroit Police Officers Ass'n (D.P.O.A.), E.D.Mich.1981, 525 F.Supp. 1215.

4451. ---- Religious organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

Evangelist and member of his campus ministry group lacked standing to bring free speech challenge to state university's policy governing solicitation permits, inasmuch as they never applied for permit, after-the-fact application by another member of organization could not confer standing on evangelist and first member, and policy did not unduly restrict First Amendment freedoms or deter third parties from engaging in protected expression. Gilles v. Davis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 427 F.3d 197. Constitutional Law 42.4

Religious organizations which oversaw broad community service program and sought to maintain presence of church in area and foster and perpetuate individual missions of parishes lacked standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that hospital's shifting of obstetric and pediatric services to another location discriminated against Medicaid patients and on the basis of race. Mussington v. St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hosp. Center, S.D.N.Y.1993, 824 F.Supp. 427, motion to amend denied 1993 WL 319454, affirmed 18 F.3d 1033. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Members of international religious organization who sought to proselytize and solicit donations in public places had standing to maintain action challenging constitutionality of county ordinance which required that persons who wanted to sell or distribute printed or written matter or to engage in any solicitation on county airport premises first secure written permission from the airport director; the members had standing to maintain such action whether or not their conduct could be proscribed by a properly drawn ordinance and whether of not they had ever applied for a permit. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. Wolke, E.D.Wis.1978, 453 F.Supp. 869. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

4452. ---- Voting organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

Association dedicated to increasing political power of the poor and unemployed, but having no members who were not registered to vote, did not have standing to litigate in federal court the question whether U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1 required state to permit local election officials to register voters in the state's public aid and unemployment compensation offices. People Organized for Welfare and Employment Rights (P.O.W.E.R.) v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 727 F.2d 167. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Voters' association had standing to bring § 1983 suit challenging state statutory requirement, that no vote cast in forthcoming gubernatorial recall election be counted for any candidate unless the voter also voted on the recall question itself, as a violation of free speech, due process, and equal protection rights. Partnoy v. Shelley, S.D.Cal.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 1064, as modified on reconsideration. Associations 20(1)

Nonprofit public interest groups did not have standing to join individual plaintiffs in challenge to state's ballot initiative scheme, absent allegations that groups or any of their individual members had been injured by scheme or that they had even been involved in particular initiatives at issue in challenge. Campbell v. Buckley, D.Colo.1998,

11 F.Supp.2d 1260, affirmed 203 F.3d 738, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 68, 531 U.S. 823, 148 L.Ed.2d 33. Declaratory Judgment 305

4453. ---- Miscellaneous organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

Operator of methadone clinic had standing as an individual plaintiff to assert action against township, alleging that state law and township zoning ordinance, prohibiting the establishment of methadone clinics within 500 feet of certain other facilities, and township's denial of operator's change of use permit violated the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), the Rehabilitation Act, its due process rights, and its equal protection rights; broad language of enforcement provisions of the ADA and the Rehabilitation Act evidenced Congressional intent to extend standing to the full limits permitted by Article III, and §§ 1983 gave operator standing to seek damages for constitutional violations on its own behalf, so that prudential limits for organizational standing did not apply. Addiction Specialists, Inc. v. Township of Hampton, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 411 F.3d 399. Civil Rights 1331(3)

Animal rights organization that had staged protests at junior high school lacked standing to bring § 1983 First Amendment facial challenge against state statute prohibiting disruption of higher education classes, under which organization's members had been mistakenly threatened with arrest, and lacked standing to bring claim for prospective relief against police officer and others based on mistaken application of statute; organization did not have good chance of being threatened again. PeTA, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals v. Rasmussen, C.A.10 (Utah) 2002, 298 F.3d 1198. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Citizen's advocacy group met "willingness of speaker" requirement for standing at pleadings stage of § 1983 action to challenge state judge's gag orders issued to parties involved in child custody case, where complaint alleged that foster parents were willing to talk about case at some point prior to gag orders, as evidenced by book they released regarding custody battle, and that judge threatened to remove child from foster parent's home if they discussed case publicly. FOCUS v. Allegheny County Court of Common Pleas, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 75 F.3d 834. Civil Rights 1331(6)

That organization plaintiffs would incur expenses in processing claims of police misconduct unless federal equity court intervened, assuming injury in fact, was not within zone of interests protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 so as to provide organization plaintiffs with a basis for standing to sue as representatives of their members. Calvin v. Conlisk, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 534 F.2d 1251. Constitutional Law 42.3(1)

Private organization created to maintain separation between church and state had standing to contest validity of federal law authorizing grants for library and instructional materials for use of pupils and teachers in public and private, including parochial, schools. Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. U. S., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1970, 435 F.2d 627, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 2277, 403 U.S. 955, 29 L.Ed.2d 865. Constitutional Law 42.1(4)

Organizations representing developmentally disabled individuals had standing to bring § 1983 action against state for violations of Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), Medicaid Act, and Nursing Home Reform Amendments (NHRA); one organization pled that it was a statewide organization comprised of persons with mental retardation, their parents and friends, and mental retardation professionals, other organization asserted that its funding was determined by Rehabilitation Services Administration (RSA) and that state had impeded organization's funding, and claims were appropriate for class-based adjudication. Rolland v. Cellucci, D.Mass.1999, 52 F.Supp.2d 231. Civil Rights 1332(6)

4454. Partnerships, persons entitled to maintain action

Where partnership which sought to develop low income racially integrated housing had interest in property which it sought to develop, partnership had standing, under this section which creates federal cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates constitutional rights of another, to challenge public officials action in denying building permits. Gordon v. City of Cartersville, Georgia, N.D.Ga.1981, 522 F.Supp. 753. Civil Rights 1331(3)

4455. Personal representatives, persons entitled to maintain action

Decedent's widow and mother lacked standing to assert violation of decedent's Fourth Amendment rights in § 1983 action, given failure to allege representative capacity in complaint or to introduce any evidence that they were decedent's successors in interest under California law. Byrd v. Guess, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1998, 137 F.3d 1126, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 405, 525 U.S. 963, 142 L.Ed.2d 329. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Decedent's brother had standing as personal representative of decedent's estate to bring § 1983 claims for alleged violation of decedent's constitutional rights. Sollars v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.1992, 794 F.Supp. 360. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Under this section, citizen's personal representative had standing to bring claim alleging that city police officer-county deputy sheriff wrongfully assaulted and battered and then wrongfully shot and killed citizen, even though officer-deputy asserted that in reality such claim was a wrongful death action which had to be brought by citizen's heirs. Sanchez v. Marquez, D.C.Colo.1978, 457 F.Supp. 359. Civil Rights 1332(4)

4456. Physicians, persons entitled to maintain action

Absent any direct injury to themselves, white doctors lack standing to assert discrimination against black physicians by operation of statutory appointments to Mississippi State Board of Health; white physicians were members of state medical association and did not assert any desire to resign and even requirement of membership in such association as prerequisite to nomination did not create any injury to them; also, that white physicians desired to join as pendent parties to state law claims did not suffice to give them standing as to federal claims. Finch v. Mississippi State Medical Ass'n, Inc., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1979, 594 F.2d 163.

Physicians who were willing to provide medical services to involuntarily sterilized persons and who allegedly were unable to provide adequate service due to alleged refusal to appropriately notify sterilized persons as to their medical status and alternatives lacked standing to bring civil rights action on behalf of those individuals involuntarily sterilized under then existing Virginia involuntary sterilization statute, Acts 1924, c. 394, but not notified of their status. Poe v. Lynchburg Training School and Hospital, W.D.Va.1981, 518 F.Supp. 789. Civil Rights 1331(6)

4457. Political candidates, persons entitled to maintain action

Candidates in primary elections for Illinois seats in United States Senate and House of Representatives had standing to bring § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of statute under which person circulating a nominating petition must be a voter registered in political subdivision for which candidate is seeking office, even though candidates had been able to obtain required number of signatures to be included on ballot; statute caused injury, in that candidates were deprived of solicitors of their choice and required to allocate additional resources to gather signatures, and ability to enjoin enforcement of statute made harm redressable. Krislov v. Rednour, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 226 F.3d 851, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1085, 531 U.S. 1147, 148 L.Ed.2d 960. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Former political candidate had standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that municipal ordinances regulating posting of political signs during her campaign violated her freedom of speech under First Amendment, even though candidate was permitted to post her signs, only one town took action to enforce sign ordinances, and candidate never applied for permit to post her signs, where candidate alleged that threat of enforcement and negative publicity it would have generated discouraged her from posting signs as early in campaign as she would have liked, and she was unable to post larger signs and was limited to posting signs at permitted locations only. Sugarman v. Village of Chester, S.D.N.Y.2002, 192 F.Supp.2d 282. Civil Rights 1333(6)

Denial of candidate's petition to be listed as a committeeman candidate in primary election constitutes sufficient aggrievement to grant the candidate standing to sue under this section. Lizak v. Kusper, N.D.Ill.1974, 399 F.Supp. 1270, affirmed 506 F.2d 1405. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Where prospective candidate for United States Senate lacked not only personal resources, but also lacked funds contributed by supporters, to pay fee to political party in order to become candidate at party primary, candidate had standing to challenge constitutionality of party resolution which required payment of fee to the party in order to become candidate at party primary. Harper v. Vance, N.D.Ala.1972, 342 F.Supp. 136. Constitutional Law 42.1(1)

4458. Political subdivisions, persons entitled to maintain action

General preclusion that one political subdivision lacks standing under § 1983 to sue another political subdivision of same state did not deprive county of standing to sue its former county manager, based on alleged conspiracy to deprive county of funds through series of self-dealing transactions, since county was not, in practice, countersuing itself. Naranjo v. County of Rio Arriba, State of N.M., D.N.M.1994, 862 F.Supp. 328. Civil Rights 1331(6)

4459. Prisoners, persons entitled to maintain action--Generally

Inmates of prison at time of uprising lacked standing to challenge actions of state correctional officials by which they influenced decision of state solicitor to oppose issuance of arrest warrants for prosecution of prison guards which prisoners contended had unnecessarily beaten them, where there was no guaranty that issuance of arrest warrant would remedy claimed past misconduct of guards or prevent future misconduct and prisoners had access to judicial procedures to redress any claims wronged. Leeke v. Timmerman, U.S.S.C.1981, 102 S.Ct. 69, 454 U.S. 83, 70 L.Ed.2d 65, rehearing denied 102 S.Ct. 1041, 454 U.S. 1165, 71 L.Ed.2d 322. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Inmate incarcerated at District of Columbia contract facility had standing to bring §§ 1983 equal protection action against United States Parole Commission challenging regulation that effectively denied him representation at his parole hearing while permitting prisoners at federal facilities to be represented, and seeking new hearing; inmate averred that he would have sought counsel if he had been permitted and believed he would have been successful, and, since injury alleged was denial of representation rather than denial of parole, inmate did not have to demonstrate that he would have obtained parole if he had had representation. Settles v. U.S. Parole Com'n, C.A.D.C.2005, 429 F.3d 1098, 368 U.S.App.D.C. 297. Civil Rights 1333(4)

Heck rule, which precluded §§ 1983 actions that would implicitly question the validity of conviction or duration of sentence, did not apply to inmate's challenge of incarceration in detention facility for probation violation in light of district court's order prescribing that he be confined in halfway house for violation, where complaint challenged only fact that he was confined to one facility rather than another and did not challenge fact or duration of confinement. Taylor v. U.S. Probation Office, C.A.D.C.2005, 409 F.3d 426, 366 U.S.App.D.C. 156. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1098

Prisoner seeking damages under § 1983 on claim that visual strip search of his body cavities violated his due process rights did not show that officials' conduct was maliciously and sadistically applied for purpose of causing harm, and thus could not defeat officials' claim of qualified immunity, where officials neither touched prisoner nor subjected him to possible injury. Thompson v. Souza, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 111 F.3d 694. Civil Rights 1376(7)

Inmate who brought civil rights action seeking relief against state prison officials on ground that prison's policy regulating smoking by inmates violated his constitutional rights failed to show that he had standing to sue, since he did not allege that he was a smoker. Beauchamp v. Sullivan, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 21 F.3d 789. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Prison inmate did not have standing to assert free speech rights of prison guards relative to prison policy prohibiting guards from communicating directly with parole board on behalf of prisoners; interests of prisoners and guards were not aligned, and no evidence was presented of guards' inability to protect their own rights. Harris v. Evans, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 20 F.3d 1118, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 641, 513 U.S. 1045, 130 L.Ed.2d 546. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Inmates lacked standing to bring denial of access claims on behalf of inmates in closed housing units, where complaint did not allege that inmates in closed units were prevented from receiving legal assistance or were unable to assert claims themselves. Hamm v. Groose, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 15 F.3d 110, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Inmates lacked standing to challenge prohibition against food service employment by inmates testing positive for human immunodeficiency virus (HIV); even if named inmate in class had been identified HIV-positive as early as pleading stage, no named inmate ever stated that he or she was interested in food service job, and no named inmate applied for one. Casey v. Lewis, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1993, 4 F.3d 1516. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Allegations that prison officials harassed inmate to prevent him from carrying out his duties as prison law clerk merely addressed conditions under which inmate performed his law clerk job and was not cognizable under § 1983; inmate could not assert jus tertii standing in view of fact that prison officials had permitted him to keep his job and could not state claim for relief based on retaliatory conduct since he had not been fired. Hamm v. Moore, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 984 F.2d 890, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1098; Civil Rights 1331(4)

Prisoner's civil rights claim alleging that arresting officer included false statements in his report and provided that false information to the prosecutor was not cognizable under §§ 1983 where prisoner had not shown that his conviction for robbery in the third degree has been invalidated. Nicholson v. Lenczewski, D.Conn.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 157. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

State inmate's claim that mandatory disclosure provision of prison system's sex offender treatment program violated her right against self-incrimination did not necessarily imply that she would serve shorter sentence, and thus claim was properly raised as §§ 1983 action, rather than as petition for habeas corpus, where inmate primarily sought prospective invalidation of certain policies and procedures of state department of corrections and parole board. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Civil Rights 1098; Habeas Corpus 513

Prisoner did not have standing to pursue claim that his incoming mail had been returned without notification without specifying prison employees whose actions were fairly traceable to actual injury that deprived him of right or privilege secured by Constitution or federal law. Oliver v. Powell, E.D.Va.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 593. Civil Rights 1333(4); Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner who had been convicted of sexually oriented offense prior to effective date of Ohio's sexual predator registration law, but who had not yet faced sexual predator adjudication hearing, which would be held at undetermined time in future, did not have standing to challenge constitutionality of law, as he could not allege harm to concrete personal interest and could not properly assert violation of constitutional rights personal to unnamed third parties. Miller v. Taft, N.D.Ohio 2001, 151 F.Supp.2d 922, affirmed 22 Fed.Appx. 605, 2001 WL 1631830. Constitutional Law 42.1(3)

Inmate whose four prior in forma pauperis complaints were dismissed as frivolous had standing to challenge constitutionality of "three strikes" provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), under which he was precluded from proceeding in forma pauperis in instant § 1983 action; inmate showed that fee requirements imposed by PLRA deprived him of access to court, as he did not have $150 necessary to file civil action. Ayers v. Norris, E.D.Ark.1999, 43 F.Supp.2d 1039. Constitutional Law 42.1(1)

Inmates at United States Disciplinary Barracks lacked standing in civil rights action against Department of Defense (DOD) to challenge conditions of confinement in special housing unit and death row housing, where they were not themselves subject to conditions of confinement in those areas. Amen-Ra v. Department of Defense, D.Kan.1997, 961 F.Supp. 256, affirmed 149 F.3d 1190. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Prison inmate lacked standing to bring civil rights action against sheriff and prison warden challenging prison's medical copayment policy, which required inmates to pay part of cost of their medical care, where inmate did not claim that he requested, was denied, or was charged for medical services under the policy. Hutchinson v. Belt, W.D.La.1996, 957 F.Supp. 97. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Inmate who alleged that he had been, or would be, required to use funds from outside sources to pay for prison services and that this violated his constitutional rights personally suffered some actual or threatened injury to his constitutionally and federally protected rights, such that he had standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that New Jersey regulation defining "indigent inmate" violated equal protection and due process clauses. Robinson v. Fauver, D.N.J.1996, 932 F.Supp. 639. Civil Rights 1333(4)

State inmate's success on §§ 1983 claims that police officers falsified police reports and provided false information at probable cause hearing would imply invalidity of his conviction for drug possession, and therefore Heck rule precluding recovery of damages for allegedly unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment, unless conviction or sentence had been reversed, expunged, declared invalid, or called into question, barred inmate's claims, even if inmate's time for filing state motion for postconviction relief had passed. Rogers v. Adams, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 63, 2004 WL 1496841, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Dismissal of state inmate's § 1983 action, based on inmate's ineligibility to proceed in forma pauperis due to restrictions imposed by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), did not bar inmate from bringing her claims in a paid complaint. Johnson v. Ashcroft, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22384762, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

4460. ---- Former prisoners, persons entitled to maintain action

Arrestee who was out on bond at time he was added to complaint did not have standing to file § 1983 suit challenging county justice center's policy of allowing prisoners to make only collect telephone calls; for arrestee to have been placed in detention again, he would have had to fail to appear for scheduled court date on his pending matters, violate conditions of his pretrial release in some other way, or commit some other conduct leading to his arrest. Lynch v. Leis, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 382 F.3d 642, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1709, 544 U.S. 949, 161 L.Ed.2d 526. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Former prisoner who was no longer in custody, and thus unable to obtain habeas relief, could not recover damages under § 1983 for his alleged unconstitutional confinement, in absence of showing that some authorized tribunal or executive body had overturned or otherwise invalidated his conviction. Randell v. Johnson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 227 F.3d 300, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1601, 532 U.S. 971, 149 L.Ed.2d 468. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1311

Citizen who had been convicted of various narcotics offenses could bring § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of his convictions, where citizen had been released from custody. Guerrero v. Gates, C.D.Cal.2000, 110 F.Supp.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1088(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

4461. Property owners, persons entitled to maintain action

Property owner had standing to assert § 1983 claim under Fourth Amendment against police officers arising from their allegedly unreasonable execution of search warrant at house on property, because officers "seized" her property within meaning of Fourth Amendment, despite owner's lack of reasonable expectation of privacy at house; alleged damage, which included broken doors, mutilated vinyl siding, cracked commode, holes in walls, broken dishes, and trampled personal belongings, rose to level of meaningful interference with owner's possessory interests. Bonds v. Cox, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1994, 20 F.3d 697. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Property owner had sustained a concrete and immediate injury, as basis for standing to bring §§ 1983 action alleging that city's ordinance requiring inspections of properties to determine if they have sump pumps or other devices making prohibited discharges into city's sanitary sewer system violated Fourth Amendment protection against warrantless searches, though owner's property had not been searched, where owned was being assessed a utility surcharge of $100 per month pursuant to the ordinance because he had failed to comply with ordinance's inspection requirement. Yanke v. City of Delano, D.Minn.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 874, affirmed 171 Fed.Appx. 532, 2006 WL 708915. Civil Rights 1333(3)

Inmate lacked standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that defense counsel and Pennsylvania officials conspired to cause forfeiture of property owned by his wife; inmate failed to allege that he owned forfeited property, and, although he claimed equitable interest in property because it belonged to his wife, such interest did not alone establish ownership under Pennsylvania law for purposes of forfeiture challenge. Stocker v. Hood, E.D.Pa.1996, 927 F.Supp. 871. Conspiracy 7

Plaintiff, who stated in amended complaint that he was equitable owner of property in respect to which defendants in civil rights action had allegedly blocked efforts to obtain a permit to build an indoor roller skating rink, and who had attached a copy of sales agreement to amended complaint with respect to his purchase of property, had standing to bring action over assertion that he was not actual owner of property and, hence, had not suffered any threatened or actual injury as a result of alleged illegal action. Riccobono v. Whitpain Tp., E.D.Pa.1980, 497 F.Supp. 1364. Civil Rights 1388

Where property owner had been charged with criminal acts under challenged municipal ordinances and threat of future similar charges remained, property owner sufficiently pleaded an "injury" so that he did have standing to seek redress for damages allegedly caused by defendant housing inspectors, policemen, and city, despite city's dismissal of criminal suit. Weisdorffer v. Tufaro, E.D.La.1980, 492 F.Supp. 261. Municipal Corporations 121

Ex-wife who, pursuant to divorce decree, was awarded car free and clear of any interest held by ex-husband, but who failed to take the necessary steps to transfer car's certificate of title from ex-husband's name to her name had a sufficient interest in the car to provide her with standing to sue under § 1983 for violation of her property rights as protected under the Fourteenth Amendment, stemming from sheriff department's allegedly wrongful towing of her car; although car was not titled in ex-wife's name, ex-wife was clearly the primary operator of the car and had enforceable ownership interest in the car. Petty v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Wyandotte, Kan., D.Kan.1996, 168 F.R.D. 46. Civil Rights 1331(4)

In action brought by landowner against county brought pursuant to §§ 1983 alleging county violated his substantive due process and equal protection rights by requiring, in bad faith, proof of legal access to his property prior to processing any land use applications, allegations that if the county had been successful in depriving landowner of access to his property, it would have reduced the value of the property, claimed injuries that were conjectural and hypothetical, and therefore insufficient to provide a basis for standing. Heath v. Board of County Comr's of Boulder County, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 92 Fed.Appx. 667, 2004 WL 304341, Unreported. Civil Rights 1333(3)
