4462. Public aid recipients, persons entitled to maintain action--Generally

Public housing applicant challenging site selection process for housing project that excluded site in nonracially impacted area sufficiently asserted direct injury as result of discriminatory county policy barring consideration of alternative site to have standing to maintain civil rights claims under §§ 1982 and 1983. Jackson v. Okaloosa County, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1994, 21 F.3d 1531. Civil Rights 1333(3)

Individual recipients of Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC) have standing to bring private action against state under § 1983 to enforce their right to prompt disbursement of their child support entitlements under the Social Security Act. Albiston v. Maine Com'r of Human Services, C.A.1 (Me.) 1993, 7 F.3d 258. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Applicants eligible for expedited issuance of food stamps as residents of desperately poor households, if not vested with a private right of action under Food Stamp Act, were vested with standing under civil rights statute to seek declaratory and injunctive relief against alleged failure of program administrator to allow and encourage all prospective applicants to apply for benefits when they first entered a food stamp office and to effectuate rights of applicants to expedited issuance. Harley v. Lyng, E.D.Pa.1986, 653 F.Supp. 266. Declaratory Judgment 292

4463. ---- Medicaid or Medicare, public aid recipients, persons entitled to maintain action

Medicaid beneficiaries had a cause of action under § 1983 to enforce quality and access provisions of Medicaid statute; however, Medicaid providers had no such right of enforcement, given that economy, efficiency, quality, and equal access provisions did not evince an intent to benefit providers. Clayworth v. Bonta, E.D.Cal.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Medicaid beneficiaries had a cause of action under § 1983 to enforce quality and access provisions of Medicaid statute; however, Medicaid providers had no such right of enforcement, given that economy, efficiency, quality, and equal access provisions did not evince an intent to benefit providers. Clayworth v. Bonta, E.D.Cal.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1330(6)

Individual plaintiffs had standing to bring § 1983 action alleging that hospital's reduction of obstetric and pediatric services discriminated against Medicaid patients and on basis of race; plaintiffs claimed that lowered level or elimination of service will lessen health resources available to them, which resources were likely to be needed by plaintiffs in the near future. Mussington v. St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hosp. Center, S.D.N.Y.1993, 824 F.Supp. 427, motion to amend denied 1993 WL 319454, affirmed 18 F.3d 1033. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Class of patients eligible for Medicaid assistance could not maintain cause of action under civil rights statute, § 1983, against city officials responsible for alleged deficiencies in standard of care afforded at municipal hospital which was an accredited health care provider under state's approved Medicaid plan; patients could not seek relief in terms of "necessary, adequate and timely" health care where no statute or regulation used such phrase and it was used by patients to synthesize the requirements of various federal and state standards for Medicaid care, and none of the specific statutes invoked unambiguously conferred rights as against the municipal defendants. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1993, 819 F.Supp. 183. Civil Rights 1052

4464. Publishers, persons entitled to maintain action

For purposes of section 1983 liability, municipal policy may be inferred from the informal acts or omissions of supervisory municipal officials; where a municipality has notice of a pattern of constitutionally offensive acts by its employees, but fails to take any remedial steps in response, the municipality may be held liable for similar subsequent acts, if the inaction is determined to have been the result of "deliberate indifference" or "tacit authorization" of the offensive acts--in effect, an unlawful municipal policy of ratification of unconstitutional

conduct. Brewster v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1352(1); Civil Rights 1401

Although ban of sale of internationally distributed magazine was not initiated directly against magazine publisher as removal of magazine from airport newsstands was due to contract between city and concessionaire of airport newsstands, where magazine publisher, nonetheless, experienced some palpable injury as the result of removal of magazine from newsstands, publisher had requisite "locus standi" to proceed with action seeking to enjoin enforcement of concession agreement between city and concessionaire. Penthouse Intern. LTD. v. Putka, N.D.Ohio 1977, 436 F.Supp. 1220. Injunction 114(2)

4465. School officials, persons entitled to maintain action

Where defendant college officials claimed that representative plaintiffs were not disciplined by the college and, hence, lacked standing to bring suit under this section complaining of alleged due process violations in disciplinary proceedings but plaintiffs controverted such and claimed that the named plaintiffs were either placed on probation or reprimanded, such sufficiently stated distinct and palpable injury so as to confer standing. Jackson v. Hayakawa, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 605 F.2d 1121, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1601, 445 U.S. 952, 63 L.Ed.2d 787. Civil Rights 1331(2)

Dean of school which offered graduate programs in science with creationist and Christian interpretation and student at school had standing to bring civil rights action against state agencies after school was notified that it was not authorized, in that alleged deprivation of constitutional rights under color of state law could have directly damaged dean and student in their ability to teach and learn free from religious interference. ICR Graduate School v. Honig, S.D.Cal.1991, 758 F.Supp. 1350. Civil Rights 1331(3)

4466. School organizations, persons entitled to maintain action

Court of appeals reversed district court's finding of lack of standing for honor society to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare [now Department of Education] in light of University's admission that but for Department's actions, society would not have been excluded from campus activities. Iron Arrow Honor Soc. v. Califano, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1979, 597 F.2d 590, on remand 499 F.Supp. 496. Civil Rights 1331(2); Colleges And Universities 10; Federal Civil Procedure 131; Federal Civil Procedure 147

Interests that organization dedicated to eliminating homophobia and intolerance in schools sought to protect, which included students' safety, and ending taunting, humiliation and discrimination by students, teachers, counselors and administrators within school district, was germane to the organization's purpose of fighting intolerance, homophobia, and discrimination against gay and lesbian students, as required to confer associational standing to bring claims under § 1983, the California Education Code, and the California Unruh Civil Rights Act. Gay-Straight Alliance Network v. Visalia Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2001, 262 F.Supp.2d 1088. Associations 20(1)

4467. Schools and universities, persons entitled to maintain action

Higher Education Act was intended to benefit students, not private vocational school, so school could not state proper § 1983 claim against officials of state student aid commission who discontinued students' access to loans under particular loan program by revoking school's eligibility to participate in the program, in alleged violation of the Act. Dumas v. Kipp, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 90 F.3d 386. Civil Rights 1070 civil rights statute and Fourteenth Amendment. U.S. v. State of Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1986, 791 F.2d 1450, rehearing denied 796 F.2d 1478, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1287, 479 U.S. 1085, 94 L.Ed.2d 144. Civil Rights 1331(2)

School district was not an "other person" who could sue agency of its creating state under § 1983; § 1983 was enacted as civil remedy for all individual citizens and people whose constitutional rights have been deprived under color of state law and allowing state or one of its political subdivisions to bring suit under § 1983 effectively turns the statute on its head. Barbara Z. v. Obradovich, N.D.Ill.1996, 937 F.Supp. 710. Civil Rights 1332(2)

University of Denver, which is a private educational institution of higher learning and which is operated by a corporation chartered pursuant to an Act of the Colorado Territorial Legislature, is a "citizen or other person" entitled to bring an action under this section and, hence, was entitled to bring a suit under this section against college athletic association; likewise, the defendant, which is a voluntary, unincorporated association of colleges and universities and which was created to maintain intercollegiate athletics as an integral part of the educational program, was a "person" subject to suit under this section. Colorado Seminary (University of Denver) v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, D.C.Colo.1976, 417 F.Supp. 885, affirmed 570 F.2d 320. Civil Rights 1331(2); Civil Rights 1337

4468. States, persons entitled to maintain action

State had constitutional standing to appeal district court's continuation of injunctive relief, in § 1983 class action alleging that overcrowding at county jail resulted in cruel and unusual punishment, which included requiring state to remove transferable prisoners from jail within certain time period, because state had personal stake in outcome that amounted to injury in fact, and both causation and redressability requirements of standing were satisfied because injunctions precipitated state law violations, while termination of injunctions would end them. Castillo v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 238 F.3d 339. Federal Courts 544

Agency designated by state to provide protection and advocacy services to disabled and mentally ill individuals had standing to bring § 1983 action to enforce its rights under Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act (PAMII) against commissioner of state corrections department, despite contention that it was illogical for state agency to sue another state member; agency had representative function, and thus was entrusted with protecting civil rights of individuals with mental illness. Protection & Advocacy For Persons With Disabilities v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 303, 191 A.L.R. Fed. 661. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania had standing to bring civil rights suit against policeman and borough officials alleging repeated civil rights violations in order to protect constitutional rights of Commonwealth's citizens. Com. of Pa. v. Porter, W.D.Pa.1979, 480 F.Supp. 686, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 659 F.2d 306, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 3509, 458 U.S. 1121, 73 L.Ed.2d 1383. Civil Rights 1331(1)

State is not a "citizen" or "person" within meaning of this section or § 1985 of this title. Buda v. Saxbe, E.D.Tenn.1974, 406 F.Supp. 399.

4469. Students, persons entitled to maintain action

Plaintiff, a former high school student, lacked standing to seek injunctive relief on his § 1983 claim alleging that dog sniff of students at public high school violated Fourth Amendment, since plaintiff was no longer a student at high school or at any other school in defendant school district, he had not been a student at high school since time of dog sniff incident, and he had no plans to return to school anywhere in the district. B.C. v. Plumas Unified School Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 192 F.3d 1260. Civil Rights 1331(2)

Gay Student Services v. Texas A & M University, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 612 F.2d 160, rehearing denied 620 F.2d 300, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 608, 449 U.S. 1034, 66 L.Ed.2d 495. Declaratory Judgment 300

Illegal alien who had not yet applied for admission at two Virginia post-secondary educational institutions had standing to challenge as unconstitutional their policy of denying admission to illegal aliens or persons they believed to have an "illegal," "unlawful," or "undocumented" immigration status, where alien had concrete plans to apply for admission to both those institutions in less than a year's time. Equal Access Educ. v. Merten, E.D.Va.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 585. Constitutional Law 42.1(4)

In order for applicant to law school to have standing to challenge minority admissions program, he would be required to show either that he possessed the qualifications to have been admitted if there were only a single admissions program or that he was prohibited from competing for any of the minority program seats simply because of his race. Doherty v. Rutgers School of Law-Newark, D.C.N.J.1980, 487 F.Supp. 1291, affirmed 651 F.2d 893. Civil Rights 1402

Negro plaintiffs, who were refused admission to barber school on basis of their race, and who brought suit seeking injunctive relief with respect to such refusal, also had standing to challenge refusal of school to accept black patrons as customers of practical skills department. Grier v. Specialized Skills, Inc., W.D.N.C.1971, 326 F.Supp. 856. Action 53(1); Constitutional Law 42.3(1)

State university students who paid out-of-state tuition had standing to bring action against university system and commissioner of higher education challenging schools' state residency policies under §§ 1983, where system and commissioner had duty to create and enforce residency presumptions in accordance with constitutional requirements and participation in creating residency requirements created causal connection to students' alleged injuries. Young v. Crofts, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2006, 162 Fed.Appx. 712, 2006 WL 44452, Unreported. Civil Rights 1333(2)

Civil rights plaintiffs, who were state university students who paid out-of-state tuition but who claimed that they would have qualified for in-state status, were not deprived of standing by fact that they failed to make a formal application for residency status; although those students' constitutional rights were not violated by the act of the university defendants rejecting their applications, the defendants might still be liable if, for example, they instituted an unconstitutional policy, or if they knew that their subordinates were acting unconstitutionally and failed to prevent their acts, and that policy or those acts led reasonable students to conclude that application for residency status would be denied. Young v. Crofts, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2003, 64 Fed.Appx. 24, 2003 WL 1875504, Unreported. Colleges And Universities 9.20(2)

4470. Taxpayers, persons entitled to maintain action

Taxpayers did not have standing, under § 1983, to raise Free Exercise challenge to state's use of public funds to provide abortions to low-income women, despite contention that taxpayers sought to enforce Medicaid statute as amended by Hyde Amendment; taxpayers were not intended beneficiaries of amendment, in that they did not seek Medicaid reimbursement or medical services, and, even if taxpayers were beneficiaries of Hyde Amendment, amendment concerned only expenditure of federal funds and not state funds at issue in claim. Tarsney v. O'Keefe, C.A.8 (Minn.) 2000, 225 F.3d 929, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1364, 532 U.S. 924, 149 L.Ed.2d 292. Constitutional Law 42.3(2)

White taxpayer of territory was not entitled to injunction against disposal of public moneys, appropriated for care of dependent children, their mothers, and certain aged residents of territory and relief of destitution, on ground of unconstitutional discrimination against Indians and Eskimos, excepted by the law providing for expenditure of such appropriations; plaintiff not being injured as taxpayer. Demmert v. Smith, C.C.A.9 (Alaska) 1936, 82 F.2d 950. Territories 29

Municipal taxpayers and residents, who failed to allege that they sustained actual injury as result of city's sale of school to religious organization for one dollar, lacked standing to challenge the sale on ground that city's alleged subsidization of one religious group resulted in differential treatment of that religious group vis-a-vis all other persons within the city. Annunziato v. New Haven Bd. of Aldermen, D.C.Conn.1982, 555 F.Supp. 427. Federal Civil Procedure 103.7; Municipal Corporations 990

Negro citizen taxpayer with domicile in parish school district, who was suing on her own behalf and others similarly situated without alleging that she had any children attending the public or private schools, that she had any connection with the schools or that she had suffered financial damage of any kind, did not have sufficient standing to bring suit to enjoin parish school board from lending free public school textbooks to children attending private schools; leasing publicly owned buildings to private schools; and providing free bus transportation for students attending private schools. Brown v. Lutz, E.D.La.1970, 316 F.Supp. 1096. Schools 111

4471. Teachers, persons entitled to maintain action

Claims contesting directly motives and procedures surrounding local school board's decision not to rehire two teachers were properly litigated not by the students, whose injury was highly attenuated, but by the teachers who suffered the harm. Zykan v. Warsaw Community School Corp., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1980, 631 F.2d 1300. Schools 147.31

A public school teacher who was discharged or denied tenure because of the exercise of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 rights may maintain an action under this section. Manchester v. Lewis, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1974, 507 F.2d 289. Civil Rights 1244

Black teachers were entitled to seek relief from allegedly racially motivated nonrenewals of their teaching contracts. Sparks v. Griffin, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1972, 460 F.2d 433.

Teacher did not, based upon her approval of student's project to publish independent newspaper, have independent or third-party standing to assert First Amendment claim relating to shutting down of newspaper and alleged retaliatory conduct. Moody v. Jefferson Parish School Bd., E.D.La.1992, 803 F.Supp. 1158, affirmed 2 F.3d 604. Civil Rights 1332(2); Civil Rights 1332(5)

4472. Tenants, persons entitled to maintain action

Tenant had standing to challenge adults-only rental policy of apartment under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 on ground that it violated his right to raise family and discriminated against families with children. Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1982, 672 F.2d 1305. Civil Rights 1331(3)

Persons, who asserted they had been displaced and represented four classes of low-income Negroes and Puerto Ricans who also had been subject to discrimination in connection with city urban renewal project which allegedly displaced persons within area without making adequate provision for low income housing elsewhere, had clear standing to sue since the stake in outcome of case of individual plaintiffs was immediate and personal. Norwalk CORE v. Norwalk Redevelopment Agency, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1968, 395 F.2d 920. Federal Civil Procedure 147

White tenants who operated nightclub had standing to bring civil rights action against landlords based on landlords' alleged racially discriminatory actions which drove away black patrons of nightclub, hampered tenants' efforts to conduct their business, and caused tenants economic loss. Yesteryears, Inc. v. Waldorf Restaurant, Inc., D.Md.1989, 730 F.Supp. 1341. Civil Rights 1331(3)

4473. Unincorporated associations, persons entitled to maintain action

Unincorporated association, though possessed of a capacity to sue and be sued under law of Virginia, lacked standing to maintain civil rights action on its own behalf and on behalf of class it purported to represent, where complaint, though alleging that members of association had been injured, failed to allege that association itself had suffered either an injury in fact or a deprivation of any constitutionally protected right. Richmond Black Police Officers Ass'n v. City of Richmond, E.D.Va.1974, 386 F.Supp. 151. Federal Civil Procedure 165

4474. Unions, persons entitled to maintain action

If union members were subject to unlawful arrest and intimidation for engaging in union organizational activity protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, union's capacity to communicate was unlawfully impeded and union in such case had standing to complain of arrests and intimidation and to bring action under this section. Allee v. Medrano, U.S.Tex.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2191, 416 U.S. 802, 40 L.Ed.2d 566. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Individual fire fighters' union members lacked standing to argue that disputed provision of labor agreement violated their free speech rights as individual fire fighters; provision by its plain terms applied only to union and not to its individual members and, even if individual members made showing that provision might chill their freedom of expression when they speak as union representatives, they made no showing that provision inhibited their freedom to speak as individuals. Leonard v. Clark, C.A.9 (Or.) 1993, 12 F.3d 885, as amended. Labor And Employment 1323

Only those police officers who personally engaged in any union-related activity stated claim under § 1983 for retaliation for participation in union activity. Bradshaw v. Township of Middletown, D.N.J.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 526, affirmed 145 Fed.Appx. 763, 2005 WL 2077137. Civil Rights 1244

Police collective bargaining representative had standing to pursue in civil rights action claims that exercise of its own First Amendment rights had been chilled by harassment and retaliation against its primary advocate, its president. 4476. Voters, persons entitled to maintain action

Petitioners who do not claim to be newly arrived residents of state and did not claim that they had moved from one county to another or even that they had changed their residence at all within relevant period could not represent class to which they did not belong and lacked standing to assert that New York voter registration requirement established durational residence requirement which was unconstitutional and violated right to travel. Rosario v. Rockefeller, U.S.N.Y.1973, 93 S.Ct. 1245, 410 U.S. 752, 36 L.Ed.2d 1, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 1920, 411 U.S. 959, 36 L.Ed.2d 419. Constitutional Law 42.3(1)

Residents of certain counties in the state, allegedly qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly representing counties in which they resided, suing on their own behalf and on behalf of all qualified voters of their respective counties and in behalf of all voters of the state similarly situated, had standing to maintain a suit in federal court for a declaration that a state statute effected an apportionment that deprived plaintiffs of equal protection. Baker v. Carr, U.S.Tenn.1962, 82 S.Ct. 691, 369 U.S. 186, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, on remand 206 F.Supp. 341 . Constitutional Law 42.1(1)

Negro against whom county election officials discriminated, acting under color of 26 Okl.St.Ann. § 74, which inherently operated discriminatorily against negroes, would be entitled to sue under this section notwithstanding that negro asserted that said § 74 was unconstitutional as against contention that on assumption of invalidity of that section there was no statute under which negro could register, and hence that no right to registration had been denied. Lane v. Wilson, U.S.Okla.1939, 59 S.Ct. 872, 307 U.S. 268, 83 L.Ed. 1281.

Plaintiffs who filed complaint in 1966 on basis of 1960 census data showing that Chicago residents constituted 69.22% of population of Cook County, and who alleged that their votes for members of Cook County Board of Commissioners were being unconstitutionally debased and diluted in violation of the "one-man, one-vote" principle, lacked standing to seek vindication of rights they asserted, where plaintiffs lived in Chicago and where 1970 census data, available prior to disposition of appeal from dismissal of complaint, showed that only 61.23% of population of Cook County then resided in Chicago whose voters elected 66.67% of membership of the County Board. Skolnick v. Board of Com'rs of Cook County, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1970, 435 F.2d 361. Constitutional Law 42(2)

Voters' association had standing to bring § 1983 suit challenging state statutory requirement, that no vote cast in forthcoming gubernatorial recall election be counted for any candidate unless the voter also voted on the recall question itself, as a violation of free speech, due process, and equal protection rights. Partnoy v. Shelley, S.D.Cal.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 1064, as modified on reconsideration. Associations 20(1)

(PRC), and also lacked standing to appeal dismissal of that action, which related to disposition of grievance against attorney, since the only person who stands to suffer direct injury in disciplinary proceeding is lawyer involved. Doyle v. Oklahoma Bar Ass'n, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1993, 998 F.2d 1559. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Two plaintiffs had standing to challenge city's parking regulations though they had already paid their fines, where entire thrust of complaint was that the parking regulations were unconstitutional on their face and plaintiffs were seeking damages as well as injunctive and declaratory relief. Friedman v. Beame, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 558 F.2d 1107. Municipal Corporations 122

Litigant's allegations that state officials fabricated evidence on which to base unauthorized practice of law complaint against non-attorney who purportedly assisted her in § 1983 suit, and then initiated subpoena against litigant without any objective basis to do so, were sufficient to confer standing on litigant to bring § 1983 suit against state officials based on alleged interference with her First Amendment association rights. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 1156. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Allegation by litigant's husband that assistant state attorney general threatened his wife not to obtain help from him on her § 1983 suit was sufficient to confer standing on husband to bring suit against official for violation of his First Amendment right to associate with his wife, even though threat was not told to him directly. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, Kansas, D.Kan.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 1156. Constitutional Law 42.2(1)

Beneficiaries of public land trust under Hawaii's Admissions Act have standing to bring § 1983 action against trustees of that trust for breach of trust. Arakaki v. Cayetano, D.Hawai'i 2002, 299 F.Supp.2d 1090, reconsideration denied 299 F.Supp.2d 1107, affirmed on other grounds 423 F.3d 954, vacated 2006 WL 295202, certiorari denied 2006 WL 558422, reconsideration denied 299 F.Supp.2d 1114, reconsideration denied 299 F.Supp.2d 1129. Civil Rights 1331(3)

Shopkeeper whose store was located near site of public festival which was cancelled by police due to its size lacked standing to bring federal civil rights action alleging that actions of police in using rubber bullets, batons, and nightsticks to disperse crowd violated liberty interests of persons attending festival; shopkeeper did not allege that he or his employees were dispersed from festival, and persons who may have been subjected to police conduct had ability to file suit to protect their own interests. Cevallos v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1996, 914 F.Supp. 379. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Virginia Department of Corrections (VDOC) is not person amenable to § 1983 suit. Staples v. Virginia Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Va.1995, 904 F.Supp. 487. Civil Rights 1348

Both director and associate director of Rhode Island Department of Elderly Affairs were "persons" under § 1983 potentially liable for monetary damages. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 55. Civil Rights 1360

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not bar homeowners' § 1983 action alleging that city building code inspectors violated their constitutional rights by entering their house, removing them and their cats, and ordering them to vacate house pending cleanup, despite state court judgment finding that homeowners violated an animal control ordinance and requiring them to reimburse city for expense of removing and destroying cats, where damages sought by owners were not for cats' removal, but for acts unrelated to ordinance violation, including their seizure and civil commitment. Bielenberg v. Griffiths, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 61 Fed.Appx. 293, 2003 WL 1342989, Unreported, rehearing denied. Courts 509

Purported property owner's sister-in-law, who stopped and got out of her car when she saw another person on the property, had standing to bring civil rights action against various law enforcement officials who allegedly refused to protect her from the person after he allegedly yelled and swore at her. 4501. Parties generally

There is no longer a need to bring official-capacity actions against local government officials, because under Monell, local government officials can be sued directly under § 1983 for damages and injunctive or declaratory relief. Kentucky v. Graham, U.S.Ky.1985, 105 S.Ct. 3099, 473 U.S. 159, 87 L.Ed.2d 114, on remand 791 F.2d 932 . Civil Rights 1386

Denial of plaintiff prison inmate's motion to proceed under pseudonym, in § 1983 action alleging that defendant corrections official had denied inmate funds for transportation and medical expenses for abortion services, was not abuse of discretion, where district court adequately weighed inmate's claimed right to privacy against public interest, and inmate's identity was already known to defendant, state corrections agency, and staff. M.M. v. Zavaras, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1998, 139 F.3d 798. Federal Civil Procedure 101

Government bodies are persons who can be sued directly under section 1983. Terry Properties, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. (Ind.), C.A.11 (Ala.) 1986, 799 F.2d 1523. Civil Rights 1343

Former police officer's wrongful termination claim under § 1983 against borough's manager and former police chief, in their official capacities, would not be dismissed as redundant on ground that such claims were functionally same as claim against borough, where dismissal of official capacity claims would serve no laudable purpose given that officials were also sued in their individual capacities. Capresecco v. Jenkintown Borough, E.D.Pa.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 319. Federal Civil Procedure 675.1

4502. Amicus curiae, parties generally

In civil rights action brought by a corporate educational association and four of its member-teachers challenging constitutionality of statute forfeiting salary increases of teachers who participated in certain types of activity, it would not be proper to allow the association to participate as a party plaintiff where there was no claim that the association itself suffered injury or that the members' rights sought to be protected were such that they would be compromised if the members themselves sought to protect those rights; rather, the association's participation would be considered as that of an amicus curiae. Alabama Ed. Ass'n v. Wallace, M.D.Ala.1973, 362 F.Supp. 682. Civil Rights 1390

4503. Guardians ad litem, parties generally

Father, who was also conditionally appointed as guardian ad litem, could not bring federal civil rights action on minor son's behalf without retaining lawyer; it was not in minor's best interests to be represented by non-attorney, and father, as non-attorney, lacked authority to appear as attorney for others than himself. Johns v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 114 F.3d 874. Attorney And Client 11(2.1)

In view of the possibility that the interests of parents, bringing action under this section on behalf of their children confined in state home for mentally retarded, might conflict with those of their children residing at the home, discreet course would be to appoint a guardian ad litem who would not displace the parents as representatives of the plaintiff children but would be alert to recognize potential and actual differences in positions. Horacek v. Exon, D.C.Neb.1973, 357 F.Supp. 71. Infants 78(1)

4504. Counterclaims, parties generally

Missouri Department of Corrections was not proper party to counterclaim for abuse of process against inmate who filed § 1983 action allegedly for purposes of escape and to harass prison officials; state agency could not counterclaim as party when state employees were sued in their official capacity. Nitcher v. Does, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 956 F.2d 796, rehearing denied. States 192

4505. Appropriate parties, parties generally

Mississippi chancery judges and clerks were not the appropriate defendants in class civil rights action challenging constitutionality of Mississippi's procedures for involuntary commitment of adults to state mental institutions, since such judicial officers, unlike officials with executive responsibility for defending the challenged civil commitment procedures, did not have sufficiently personal stake in the outcome of the controversy to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues on which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions. Chancery Clerk of Chickasaw County, Miss. v. Wallace, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1981, 646 F.2d 151. Federal Civil Procedure 139 investigating child abuse allegations despite not identifying any persons, groups of persons, or official offices responsible for alleged unconstitutional policy; plaintiffs could name appropriate city officials at later stage of litigation after discovery. Miller v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1997, 954 F.Supp. 1056, affirmed 174 F.3d 368. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4506. Indispensable parties, parties generally

State was not an indispensable party to civil rights action challenging constitutionality of operation of state institution. Welsch v. Likins, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1977, 550 F.2d 1122. Civil Rights 1391

United States was indispensable party in action against state Governor and Director of Office of Economic Opportunity wherein VISTA volunteers removed by Governor sought back pay. Zapata v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1971, 437 F.2d 1024. United States 135

Candidates for county legislature were not indispensable parties in voters' §§ 1983 action alleging that county elections board's refusal to tally their absentee ballots violated their federal constitutional rights, and thus dismissal of action was not warranted due to fact that candidates were barred by res judicata from contesting board's actions; court could order ballots to be counted without joining candidates, and voters' suit did not impede candidates' ability to seek relief from United States Supreme Court. Hoblock v. Albany County Bd. of Elections, N.D.N.Y.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 169, remanded 422 F.3d 77, on remand 233 F.R.D. 95. Federal Civil Procedure 211; Federal Civil Procedure 1748

Consortium of municipalities was indispensable party in § 1983 action against municipality and mayor brought by former local director of consortium, where employee sought reinstatement, which could be addressed only by consortium. Gonzalez-Caratini v. Garcia-Padilla, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 189. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Nine South Dakota Indian tribes were not indispensable parties to civil rights action brought by Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) recipients whose children had absent parents residing on Indian reservations within South Dakota, claiming that they have been denied child support collection services secured them under the Social Security Act, and thus, failure to join tribes did not warrant dismissal of suit. Howe v. Ellenbecker, D.S.D.1991, 774 F.Supp. 1224, affirmed 8 F.3d 1258, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1373, 511 U.S. 1005, 128 L.Ed.2d 49. Federal Civil Procedure 331

In view of fact that federal regulations affecting Reserve Army Officer Training Corps programs clearly established that the commandant of such a unit is responsible to the authorities of the host institution for conducting the program in accordance with institutional rules and that the head of the institution exercises the same control over the department of military science as over other departments of the institution, commander of such a unit at state university was not an indispensable party to civil rights action to redress alleged sex discrimination. Zentgraf v. Texas A & M University, S.D.Tex.1980, 492 F.Supp. 265. Civil Rights 1387

All 98 pilots who brought wage action against airline would be indispensable parties to action seeking injunctive relief against the pilots resorting to use of 32 L.P.R.A. § 3133 in their action for wages; absent request for class certification to include all the pilots, requested injunction could not be issued even if the pilots were found amenable to an action under this subchapter. operation of state institution but their presence was not necessary where state's interest appeared to be adequately represented by state officers who were made defendants. Welsch v. Likins, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1977, 550 F.2d 1122. Civil Rights 1391

Illinois Racing Board as an agency of state cannot be made a party defendant in a federal civil rights action under this section. Edelberg v. Illinois Racing Bd., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 540 F.2d 279. Civil Rights 1391

Where state Attorney General had no connection with enforcement of state two-year durational residency requirement for divorce, Attorney General could not be party to civil rights action challenging constitutionality of requirement. Mendez v. Heller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 530 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1391

County district attorney's office in New York State was not suable entity and thus not proper party to §§ 1983 action alleging unconstitutional bias on part of prosecutors in prosecuting rape case. Michels v. Greenwood Lake Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1389

Complaint in which it was alleged that Negro plaintiffs were charged excessive and discriminatory prices for their homes, that discriminatory policies practiced by federal agencies enabled vendors to extract excessive prices from plaintiffs and in which it was asked that mortgages and installment contracts be reformed or voided, would not be dismissed as against Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, which, as purported successor-in-interest of defunct defendant-lender savings and loan associations held such mortgages and owned homes subject to installment contracts, inasmuch as Corporation may have been necessary party for giving of complete relief. Baker v. F & F Inv. Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 489 F.2d 829. Federal Civil Procedure 1750

Warden who reduced prisoner's grade, resulting in lengthening of the time before prisoner would have earned a hearing before parole board, was not a "necessary party" to action brought by prisoner seeking declaratory relief and injunction to resolve dispute as to whether he was eligible for hearing before parole board. U. S. ex rel. Campbell v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1968, 401 F.2d 55. Declaratory Judgment 294

Under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), state prison inmate's identification in his administrative grievance of some, but not all, state physicians involved in alleged mistreatment of his diabetes did not automatically preclude naming previously unnamed physicians as defendants in inmate's §§ 1983 Eighth Amendment action that followed grievance; state regulations governing grievance procedure called for specific description of problem and action requested, as well as names of persons contacted by inmate, but did not impose absolute requirement that inmate identify every individual by name. Boomer v. DePerio, W.D.N.Y.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 259. Prisons 13(6)

Judge was not necessary party in attorney's §§ 1983 action alleging that state commission on judicial conduct violated his constitutional rights by refusing to permit him to withdraw from representing judge in disciplinary proceedings, where judge had proceeded with another attorney, had not indicated any desire to reemploy attorney, and was capable of representing himself pro se. Kunz v. New York State Com'n on Judicial Conduct, N.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 188. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Fact that other members of landlord investment association that previously sued borough, besides landlord currently alleging that citation issued to it by borough building inspector was in retaliation for association's prior suits, had not brought any retaliation claims against borough or its officials did not preclude First Amendment retaliation claim. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497 . Constitutional Law 91; Health 392

United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) was not necessary party to § 1983 action by holders of rental assistance vouchers under federal housing program challenging city housing authority's refusal to extend vouchers. Chesir v. Housing Authority of City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1992, 801 F.Supp. 244. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Action challenging censorship of student newspaper was not subject to dismissal for failure to join authors of articles in question, since there was no reason why authors of articles were necessary to give plaintiffs their requested declaratory or equitable relief, and there was no substantial risk of defendants incurring multiple or inconsistent obligations with respect to students' claims. Kuhlmeier v. Hazelwood School Dist., E.D.Mo.1984, 578 F.Supp. 1286. Federal Civil Procedure 1748

Police officers who received promotions following examinations were "necessary parties" to civil rights action brought by police officers who alleged that village and various bodies and officials falsified and rigged results of the competitive examinations and unlawfully manipulated criteria for determining numerical rank of each candidate on statutorily mandated promotional eligibility roster; however, failure to join the promoted officers did not require dismissal of the complaint for reason that they were easily joinable. Hermes v. Hein, N.D.Ill.1979, 479 F.Supp. 820. Federal Civil Procedure 219; Federal Civil Procedure 1748

Airline lessees of New York Port Authority were necessary parties defendant in action by religious organization questioning constitutionality of regulations concerning dissemination of religious literature and solicitation of contributions where airlines' rights under their lease agreements would be substantially affected if court should decide that Authority, and not airlines, had power to make regulations regarding licensing of activities under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 in lease areas of airports. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. New York Port Authority, S.D.N.Y.1977, 425 F.Supp. 681. Federal Civil Procedure 225

Although Secretary of State is the chief state election officer in Florida, in view of fact that Florida Governor must certify electors of successful presidential candidate, Governor was not an unnecessary party in civil rights action by independent presidential candidate who sought place on Florida ballot. McCarthy v. Askew, S.D.Fla.1976, 420 F.Supp. 775, affirmed 540 F.2d 1254. Elections 179

District judges of Tarrant County, Texas, were necessary parties defendant to action brought by former employees of Adult Probation Office alleging that their dismissal denied their civil rights. Shore v. Howard, N.D.Tex.1976, 414 F.Supp. 379. Civil Rights 1390

Kentucky state court judges were not necessary and indispensable parties in action alleging that disposition of juveniles pursuant to state law violated the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, as it was fair to presume that state judges would comply with federal district court's interpretation of the mandates of federal law. James v. Jones, W.D.Ky.1993, 148 F.R.D. 196. Federal Civil Procedure 219

4509. Real parties in interest, parties generally

Where action is in essence one for recovery of money from state, state is real, substantial party in interest and is entitled to invoke its sovereign immunity from suit pursuant to U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11. Matter of Kahr Bros., Inc., Bkrtcy.D.N.J.1980, 5 B.R. 765. Federal Courts 268.1

4510. Addition of parties, parties generally--Generally

Eleven-month delay in § 1983 plaintiff's filing of amended complaint to add city as a defendant, after district court had initially granted plaintiff's request for leave to amend his complaint, would not have prejudiced city, and therefore, district court erred in subsequently denying plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint to add city as a defendant; city had notice from court's initial order granting leave to amend as well as from plaintiff's initial complaint against the police department, the claims set forth in the second amended complaint were typical of those alleged in § 1983 actions, and city already had most of the necessary evidence in its possession. Roberson v.

Hayti Police Dept., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2001, 241 F.3d 992. Federal Civil Procedure 392

City and police officer whom plaintiff mistakenly listed as defendant in § 1983 false arrest action had sufficient identity of interest with arresting officers that notice of action's filing could be imputed to arresting officers, who could thus be added as defendants after expiration of limitations period; city attorney answered original complaint on behalf of city and mistakenly-named officer and, to do so, presumably investigated allegations, so that arresting officers knew or should have known that, but for arrestee's mistaken belief as to arresting officer's identity, action would have been brought against them. Jacobsen v. Osborne, C.A.5 (La.) 1998, 133 F.3d 315. Limitation Of Actions 124

County commissioners were on notice that county jail inmate was not only seeking damages against county in his civil rights action, but was also seeking damages against them in their individual capacities, where inmate amended complaint by listing individual names of county commissioners as additional defendants and magistrate judge entered order construing lists filed by inmate to be motion to add defendants; thus, county commissioners were properly joined in their individual capacities. Moore v. Morgan, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1553. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Failure of plaintiff in § 1983 action for unreasonable use of force brought initially against John Doe defendant to identify to her attorney the police officer who allegedly injured her until after deadline to add parties had passed was not good cause warranting late amendment of complaint to name officer, where plaintiff learned officer's identity before deadline passed. Smith v. Barber, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 992. Federal Civil Procedure 392

College board of regents and individual regents would be permitted to join in codefendants' motion for summary judgment in civil rights action under § 1983 that was based on statute of limitations, even though board of regents and regents sought to join in the summary judgment motion two days after expiration deadline for filing pretrial motions; board and regents had asserted defense of statute of limitations in pretrial order filed with court, so plaintiff employee had been on notice that board and regents asserted statute of limitations barred the employee's action. Bates v. Board of Regents of Northern New Mexico Community College, D.N.M.1988, 699 F.Supp. 1489. Federal Civil Procedure 2531

Where original civil rights complaint is drawn without benefit of counsel, plaintiff should not be penalized because he seeks to add a defendant who would have been a proper party at the outset. Keaton v. Kennedy, E.D.N.Y.1973, 60 F.R.D. 690. Civil Rights 1386

Amended complaint adding corrections employee as new defendant in prisoner's § 1983 complaint outside applicable limitations period "related back" to timely filed complaint where claim against official arose out of the same conduct referred to in the original complaint, employee, whose counsel was on notice to prepare a defense for an unnamed but easily identifiable defendant mentioned in original complaint, had "constructive notice," and prisoner's failure to name employee as a defendant until the filing of the amended complaint was due to a mistake. Muhammad v. Pico, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21792158, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 124

In suit under this section for alleged retaliation by town and certain officers for plaintiff's exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 by refusing to give fair consideration to plaintiff's application for appointment to regular police force, allegation that presence of police chief as defendant was reasonably necessary to effectuate appropriate relief to plaintiff was insufficient to sustain motion to add police chief as party defendant. Valcourt v. Hyland, D.C.Mass.1980, 503 F.Supp. 630. Civil Rights 1390 of McKinney's N.Y. Mental Hygiene Law §§ 9.13, 9.27, and 9.39 would be granted request to add as a party defendant a hospital director so as to assure plaintiffs complete relief should they prevail on the merits in action. Project Release v. Prevost, E.D.N.Y.1978, 463 F.Supp. 1033. Federal Civil Procedure 286

Registered voter did not have standing to intervene in action brought by candidate, who sought injunction directing Illinois county board of election commissioners to place candidate's name on primary ballot for seat on county board despite candidate's failure to paginate petition, as voter did not have an "interest" that might be impaired or impeded by the judgment. Moy v. Cowen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 958 F.2d 168. Federal Civil Procedure 331

Denial of motion by prison guards' union to intervene in proceeding by inmates against officials for injunctive relief was not error where union did not present motion until three weeks after preliminary relief was granted albeit that it was aware of litigation and knew that relief sought by inmates might impinge on interest it sought to assert. Preston v. Thompson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1978, 589 F.2d 300. Federal Civil Procedure 320

In view of extensive changes made in posture of school desegregation case by court of appeals, previous denial of intervention to teachers association would be vacated and court below directed to reconsider that motion. Ross v. Houston Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 559 F.2d 937, on remand 457 F.Supp. 18. Federal Courts 946

Though district court should have exercised its discretion on merits of petition to intervene as amicus curiae in private damage action under this subchapter before court dismissed complaint, denial of request to intervene would be affirmed where it clearly would have been within discretion of court to have denied intervention. Ammlung v. City of Chester, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 494 F.2d 811. Federal Courts 817

Negro teacher who intervened in pending class action to desegregate school to compel board of public instruction to transfer her to position in business education in a white school had to take pending case in posture in which she found it, and as issue of faculty desegregation was already in pending case, but was held in abeyance until after case in the court of appeals, which resulted in holding requiring specifically that any school district desegregate its faculties, was decided, it was not error for trial court to deny individual injunctive relief sought by teacher. Knowles v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 405 F.2d 1206. Injunction 189

Where bonding company admitted that prison guard sued in federal court for deprivation of civil rights of prisoner had demanded payment of judgment and bonding company still delayed more than four months before attempting to intervene in such suit, trial court did not abuse discretion in rejecting application of bonding company as untimely. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co. v. Rhodes, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1968, 403 F.2d 2, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 1319, 394 U.S. 965, 22 L.Ed.2d 567. Federal Civil Procedure 320

Voters who had challenged eligibility of recently registered voters would be allowed to intervene, in §§ 1983 suit brought by representatives of recently registered voters against state election officials, claiming their rights under National Voter Registration Act and Due Process Clause were violated when they were not given notice of hearing scheduled regarding political party's challenge to their eligibility; intervention motion was filed day after suit was commenced, state law claimants had interest which could be impaired by outcome of suit, and claimants' interest in avoiding dilution of their votes was different from interest of state election officials scheduling hearing, who were seeking efficient and accurate election process, reducing likelihood that officials could adequately represent interest of intervenors. Miller v. Blackwell, S.D.Ohio 2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 916, stay denied 388 F.3d 546. Federal Civil Procedure 331 timely even though not brought after filing of original complaint, but nearly three and one-half years later, when amended complaint was filed; motion was filed after tenants learned that landlords intended to file amended complaint, only two weeks after case was taken off suspense docket, landlords' amended complaint contained new claims, and there was no showing that prejudice would result if intervention was allowed. Miller v. Silbermann, S.D.N.Y.1993, 832 F.Supp. 663. Federal Civil Procedure 320

Motion by right to life association to intervene in action by abortion clinic operator challenging denial of certificate of occupancy for abortion clinic was denied where court was confronted with the motion at in-chambers conference held immediately before trial, plaintiffs strenuously argued that it would incur substantial prejudice if trial was delayed for the requested 30-day period in which to file formal petition of intervention and counsel for intervenors could offer no suitable explanation for delay in seeking intervention nor crystalize any actual harm that might occur to intervenors if motion were denied. Bossier City Medical Suite, Inc. v. City of Bossier City, W.D.La.1980, 483 F.Supp. 633. Federal Civil Procedure 320

4513. Retention of parties, parties generally

Where individual members of village board of trustees would be required to implement any orders of district court which were made in connection with action by village police chief in which he contended that he had been wrongfully deprived of his position without due process pre-termination hearing, trustees would be retained as parties defendant despite their contentions that they were immune from action for damages by virtue of their elected positions. Jenner v. Board of Trustees of Village of East Troy, E.D.Wis.1974, 389 F.Supp. 430. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Even though vice-president of medical center might not have offered direct participation in complained of actions leading to plaintiff's unwilling departure from student ranks of state medical school, his controlling position dictated his retention as a defendant. Depperman v. University of Kentucky, E.D.Ky.1974, 371 F.Supp. 73. Colleges And Universities 10

4514. Severance of parties, parties generally

Action to end racial segregation of hospital patients did not arise from same circumstances, within rule 20, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, governing permissive joinder of parties, as action to end racial segregation in other city institutions and severance was ordered. Wood v. Hogan, W.D.Va.1963, 215 F.Supp. 53. Federal Civil Procedure 242

4515. Substitution of parties, parties generally

Because former court referee's employment discrimination action against administrative judge of an Ohio domestic relations court was effectively a claim against the office of administrative judge, the claim, if otherwise valid, survived particular judge's departure from the bench; thus, substitution of successor in former judge's stead did not render plaintiff's claim moot. Mumford v. Basinski, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 105 F.3d 264, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 298, 522 U.S. 914, 139 L.Ed.2d 229. Federal Courts 13.10

Mother of decedent patient, who died after altercation while he was under involuntary commitment order at state hospital, could be substituted as plaintiff in capacity of administrator of simplified estate of decedent in § 1983 action against hospital employees; although prior district court order appointing mother as special administrator only authorized her to bring legal action against hospital and not its employees, mother's delay in motion for substitution did not prejudice employees' ability to defend action, and delay resulted from mistake as to scope of legal authority of prior order. Unzueta v. Steele, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1230. Federal Civil Procedure 364

Although three named plaintiffs' claims in § 1983 class action by inmates alleging violations of their right of access to courts stemming from operation prison law library were rendered moot by their deportation, transfer or release, plaintiffs would be allowed to substitute new named plaintiffs who had valid claims in their place. Gomez v. Vernon, D.Idaho 1997, 962 F.Supp. 1296. Federal Civil Procedure 352.1

In action by Negro citizen against members of personnel board of county and director of board for redress for deprivation of civil rights guaranteed by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 because they refused to permit Negro citizen to take examination for position of police patrolman of city solely because of his race and color, new board member, who became member of the board after the action was brought, could not be substituted as a defendant in place of member who resigned, in absence of showing that new member had adopted or continued or threatened to adopt or continue the action of his predecessor. Johnson v. Yeilding, N.D.Ala.1958, 165 F.Supp. 76. Federal Civil Procedure 365

Fact that former wife of deceased prison employee had not been involved in prisoner's §§ 1983 claim against her husband did not preclude her substitution as a defendant; wife had been married to employee until his death, and had been involved in litigation since being named a candidate for substitution. Graham v. Henderson, N.D.N.Y.2004, 224 F.R.D. 59. Federal Civil Procedure 362

With respect to this section's survivability as governed by West Virginia law, where defendant did not suggest plaintiff's death, motion for substitution of party plaintiff was timely filed more than one year after death of plaintiff. Roberts v. Rowe, S.D.W.Va.1981, 89 F.R.D. 398. Federal Civil Procedure 363.1

Non-party would not be substituted as plaintiff in arrestee's action under § 1983 based on city's seizure and retention of his automobile following arrest, based upon arrestee's purported assignment to him of title to automobile, where non-party's motion for substitution provided no basis for determining whether arrestee intended to assign either his automobile or claims, whether non-party had title to automobile under New York law, and whether non-party would have standing to assert arrestee's claims. Wifeman v. Property Clerk, New York Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22251315, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 359

In light of former inmate's pro se status, 90-day period for substituting proper party following death of prison official sued in his individual capacity would run from the date of the present opinion, which was the first notice to the inmate of the procedural consequences of the official's death. Labounty v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21692766, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 363.1

4516. Dismissal of parties, parties generally--Generally

Where it appeared that no purpose would be served by allowing more than one plaintiff to pursue legal action on nonfrivolous conditions of prison confinement claims, and there was every reason to believe that one plaintiff could move forward adequately on jointly alleged claims, other plaintiffs would be dismissed. Griffin v. Smith, W.D.N.Y.1980, 493 F.Supp. 129. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

4517. ---- Allegations of complaint, dismissal of parties, parties generally

Where certain defendants were not specifically named in text of pleadings in civil rights action, they were entitled to be dismissed from suit, though broad allegations were made, without specifying capacities of such defendants, that all of defendants were vested with power and duties encompassing maintenance supervision at state prison and, as such, had "direct responsibility for the Petitioners proper care and custody." Hopkins v. Hall, E.D.Okla.1974, 372 F.Supp. 182. Civil Rights 1389

Where complaint under this section and § 1985 of this title failed to allege facts which indicated that anyone other than named policeman participated in alleged beating of plaintiff and the unnamed "others" were never served with process, complaint would be dismissed as to the unnamed "others". Nugent v. Sheppard, N.D.Ind.1970, 318 F.Supp. 314. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Civil rights action filed by state prisoners would be dismissed as to defendants who were not mentioned in any portion of body of complaint, since no specific acts on the parts of such defendants were alleged. Linebarger v. Williams, E.D.Okla.1977, 77 F.R.D. 682. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

District court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing § 1983 complaint against three defendants because they were not identified or summoned over more than three year period; plaintiffs did not point to any evidence explaining inaction or to support claim that their efforts to obtain discovery relating to unidentified defendants was thwarted and plaintiff's failed to follow court's orders as to the named defendant. Carreras-Rosa v. Alves-Cruz, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2000, 215 F.3d 1311, Unreported, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1356, 532 U.S. 920, 149 L.Ed.2d 286. Federal Civil Procedure 1758.1

City was properly dismissed as party defendant from widow's action under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 alleging that city police officers' negligent failure to take into custody city fireman with history of mental illness after being informed that he was behaving dangerously and before he shot and killed plaintiff's husband deprived victim of life without due process of law, since city is not "person" within meaning of provision of this section. Jamison v. McCurrie, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1977, 565 F.2d 483. Civil Rights 1349

City police chief was dismissed as defendant in federal civil rights action where chief was sued only in his official capacity and city, which was public entity he was alleged to represent, had been joined as defendant. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1389

In action against city and its police department arising from alleged denial of civil rights by police officers, city was not only the real, but the only, party in interest, and police department would be dismissed as party to the action. Edmonds v. Dillin, N.D.Ohio 1980, 485 F.Supp. 722. Federal Civil Procedure 1750

To extent that count alleging employment discrimination against plaintiff teacher on account of sex under this section and § 1985 of this title sought compensatory and punitive damages, and not declaratory or injunctive relief, complaint was subject to being dismissed as against city, school committee, and individual defendants in their official capacities, considering that a municipal corporation is not a person within meaning of said sections, whether money damages or equitable relief was sought, that finances and affairs of school committee were so intimately connected with those of city that committee could not be considered to constitute a "person" independent of city, and that any recovery against individual defendants would be taken from municipal treasury. Curran v. Portland Superintending School Committee, City of Portland, Me., D.C.Me.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1376(10); Conspiracy 17

Even though plaintiffs in civil rights action sought an accounting, restitution and injunctive and declaratory relief, rather than damages, district court did not have jurisdiction to hear action insofar as it was brought against city, and the court would, sua sponte, dismiss city as a party. Muzquiz v. City of San Antonio, W.D.Tex.1974, 378 F.Supp. 949. Federal Civil Procedure 388; Federal Courts 222

Private defendants were properly dismissed from plaintiff's claim under this section which alleged that the state's attorney acted through a conspiracy with private defendants to discriminatorily enforce zoning ordinances, that the state's attorney and his assistant sought to conceal the conspiracy of the private parties, and that he had been deprived of his civil rights by all the defendants acting jointly and severally, separately and conspiratorially and conspiring with each other, in that contents of complaint were essentially conclusory allegations, unsupported by specific facts, plaintiff had filed two amended complaints, without alleging any factual basis suggesting the meeting of minds necessary to establish his claim, and plaintiff had given no reason to believe that he could prove any facts in support of his claim. Tarkowski v. Robert Bartlett Realty Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 644 F.2d 1204. Federal Civil Procedure 388

Discrimination plaintiff's § 1983 claim would be stricken, where she brought claim against private company and private individual. Whitehead v. AM Intern., Inc., N.D.Ill.1994, 860 F.Supp. 1280. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private developers would not be dropped as defendants in action challenging implementation of urban renewal project, even though private developers did not exercise government authority and could not suppress speech unconstitutionally nor condemn land, where if proprietors of business engaged in the selling and exhibiting of sexually-explicit books, films and performances were able to state cause of action against government defendants under First Amendment and statute governing deprivation of civil rights, proprietors might also be able to demonstrate that all defendants, including private developers, acted in concert under color of state law to deny them their constitutional rights through development of urban renewal project. G. & A. Books, Inc. v. Stern, S.D.N.Y.1985, 604 F.Supp. 898, affirmed 770 F.2d 288, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1195, 475 U.S. 1015, 89 L.Ed.2d 310. Civil Rights 1388

4520. ---- States, dismissal of parties, parties generally

District court order continuing injunctive relief that required county and state officials to take actions directed to reduction of jail population, and that set caps on jail population, in detainees' § 1983 action alleging that jail overcrowding resulted in cruel and unusual punishment, were "prisoner release orders," within meaning of standing provision of the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), and state thus had standing to oppose continuation of such relief and to seek termination of such relief, even though state had been dismissed from action. Castillo v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 238 F.3d 339. Civil Rights 1331(5)

Dismissal of the state of New Mexico as a defendant in civil rights action was required inasmuch as a state could not be sued in federal court under this section. Glaros v. Perse, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 628 F.2d 679. Federal Courts 264.1

Attorney General of Virginia should have been dismissed as a defendant with respect to claim of North Carolina prisoner that he had been denied parole because of improper consideration of prior invalid Virginia convictions since the Attorney General had no interest in the outcome of that litigation and since the Commonwealth of Virginia was not a "person" within meaning of this subchapter. Strader v. Troy, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1978, 571 F.2d 1263 . Habeas Corpus 662.1

4521. ---- Miscellaneous parties dismissed, dismissal of parties, parties generally

Where, after indictment was issued against officer, police chief suspended officer with pay pending completion of investigation, chief signed and delivered officer's letter of termination only after being ordered twice to do so by mayor and only after informing mayor of his belief that proposed termination was unlawful, chief requested city police and fire commission to uphold discharge immediately after delivery of termination letter, and chief believed that he was required by law to obey mayor's orders, district court properly dismissed police chief from officer's action arising out of unlawful termination. Busche v. Burkee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1981, 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212. Municipal Corporations 185(3)

Official capacity § 1983 claims against individual school district employees were redundant to claims being brought against district itself, and so would be dismissed. Booker v. Board of Educ., Baldwinsville Central School

When both a local government officer and the government entity are named in action under § 1983 or action for conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of rights, and officer is named in official capacity only, officer is a redundant defendant and may be dismissed. Luke v. Abbott, C.D.Cal.1997, 954 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1354

Where federal prosecutor did not prosecute cases against plaintiff and was not shown to have had any other involvement in decision regarding disposition of disputed money that was seized from plaintiff, the prosecutor was dismissed as a party defendant to suit wherein plaintiff, an inmate of a federal penitentiary, sought return of property and cash allegedly seized from his person and residence and thereafter turned over to a bank, assertedly in violation of plaintiff's due process rights. Totaro v. Lyons, D.C.Md.1980, 498 F.Supp. 621. Federal Civil Procedure 388

Indian organization and its members were dismissed as defendants in suit under this section where the only contact between the organization and its members and the government defendants occurred when the organization met with the city and where this contact was a purely private action and was not even the subject of plaintiffs' claim that the government-related defendants had engaged in discrimination in withdrawing police and fire protection from Indian reservation. Thompson v. State of N. Y., N.D.N.Y.1979, 487 F.Supp. 212. Federal Civil Procedure 1750

Because none of the defendant park commissioners had personally committed acts violative of the plaintiffs' constitutional rights in enforcing county ordinances, those defendants would be dismissed from civil rights action, though they would remain in the case for purposes of declaratory and injunctive relief. Milwaukee Mobilization for Survival v. Milwaukee County Park Commission, E.D.Wis.1979, 477 F.Supp. 1210. Federal Civil Procedure 1750

Claim by allegedly illegally discharged town policeman for reinstatement would be dismissed as to police commissioner and mayor in their individual capacities since, as individuals, rather than as members of board of commissioners, mayor and commissioner were powerless to order reinstatement. O'Brien v. Galloway, D.C.Del.1973, 362 F.Supp. 901. Federal Civil Procedure 1750

Under law of the case doctrine, parole board chairman should be dismissed from state inmate's § 1983 action, challenging timing of his parole hearings, since chairman had already been dismissed from inmates' earlier case based on finding that he had no involvement in very same parole hearings that were raised in instant case. Faison v. Travis, N.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31640541, Unreported. Courts 99(6)

4522. ---- Miscellaneous parties not dismissed, dismissal of parties, parties generally

Although student athletes who had participated on private university hockey team but who had graduated might not be entitled to injunctive relief they were not required to be dismissed from suit challenging athletic association's imposition of sanctions against university, which initially failed to declare several of its hockey players ineligible for participation in intercollegiate hockey, since the players also sought damages for having been forced off the hockey team at the insistence of the association. Colorado Seminary (University of Denver) v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, D.C.Colo.1976, 417 F.Supp. 885, affirmed 570 F.2d 320. Civil Rights 1387

4551. Proper parties generally

District court could determine whether plaintiff's allegations were sufficient to trigger liability under this section, even though the proper defendants remained unnamed. Dunkin v. Lamb, D.C.Nev.1980, 500 F.Supp. 184. Civil Rights 1391

As long as officials being sued are both responsible for a constitutional deprivation and able to implement, in their official capacity, equitable relief requested, they are proper parties under this section and court may hear a claim against them for back pay as part of a remedy of reinstatement. D'Iorio v. Delaware County, E.D.Pa.1978, 447 F.Supp. 229, reversed on other grounds 592 F.2d 681. Civil Rights 1390

4552. Attorneys general, proper parties

Civil rights action to challenge statutes which provided exceptions from prosecution for those who fail to provide adequate care for children because they treat physical or mental illness or defects in children by spiritual means only did not allege any action or threat of action by defendant Attorney General, and therefore Ex parte Young exception to Eleventh Amendment immunity of state officials did not apply; also, plaintiffs did not seek to enjoin enforcement of allegedly unconstitutional statute as was required for immunity exception. Children's Healthcare is a Legal Duty, Inc. v. Deters, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 92 F.3d 1412, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1082, 519 U.S. 1149, 137 L.Ed.2d 217. Relations Law § 237 which empowered trial court to order husband to pay wife's fees in regard to divorce suit, but failed to provide for husband making application for such fees in proper circumstances. Gras v. Stevens, S.D.N.Y.1976, 415 F.Supp. 1148. Civil Rights 1391

4553. Civil service commissions, proper parties

Where members of civil service commission were appointed by mayor and paid by city, and where practices of police department were directly in issue, city officials were proper parties defendant in suit alleging discriminatory practices against members of black patrolmen's league. Robinson v. Conlisk, N.D.Ill.1974, 385 F.Supp. 529. Civil Rights 1390

City was proper defendant in section 1983 action brought by alleged owners of barge for deprivation of property without due process based upon burning of barge by superintendent of public works and two city employees; city commissioners approved superintendent's act, and city policy left final decision as to whether barge should be destroyed to superintendent's discretion. Messick v. Leavins, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1987, 811 F.2d 1439, rehearing denied 817 F.2d 761. Civil Rights 1347

City was not proper party to former high school vice principal's action, alleging age discrimination, violations of § 1983, and breach of contract, given that during relevant period, State of Connecticut transferred all authority for management of school district to State Board of Trustees, such that city had no ability to influence events within school system, either positively or negatively, and ceased to be an employer. Lee v. City of Hartford/Hartford Public Schools, D.Conn.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 25, opinion adhered to on reconsideration. Civil Rights 1390; Civil Rights 1531; Schools 147.51

Local governing bodies can be sued directly under § 1983 for monetary, declaratory, or injunctive relief where action that is alleged to be unconstitutional implements or executes policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers. Thornton v. City of St. Helens, D.Or.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1019. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Section 1983 claim is properly pled against a municipality either by naming the municipality itself or by naming a municipal official in her official capacity; naming either is sufficient, but naming both is redundant. Davoll v. Webb, D.Colo.1996, 943 F.Supp. 1289, affirmed 194 F.3d 1116. Civil Rights 1394

City of Yonkers was proper party to Civil Rights Act suit charging racial segregation of the state created school system functioning in the city where although Yonkers board of education was a separate state created entity from the city, the city was legally responsible for allocating funds to the school district, for appointing school board members and for retaining legal title to property designated for educational use; city could significantly affect racial composition by virtue of its subsidized housing policies and city could be called on to respond to school desegregation decrees issued by a federal court. U.S. v. Yonkers Bd. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.1985, 624 F.Supp. 1276, affirmed 837 F.2d 1181, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 2821, 486 U.S. 1055, 100 L.Ed.2d 922. Schools 13(18.1)

Municipalities are proper parties in actions brought under this section. United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC v. Dalton, E.D.Va.1982, 544 F.Supp. 282. Civil Rights 1386

Action wherein plaintiff tavern owners alleged that refusal of defendant city to renew their liquor licenses on basis of entertainment provided by them in their establishments constituted a denial of their rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 as incorporated in U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1 was within jurisdiction of federal district court and city was a proper party defendant considering that plaintiff sought only equitable relief. Bruno v. City of Kenosha, E.D.Wis.1971, 333 F.Supp. 726, probable jurisdiction noted 93 S.Ct. 909, 409 U.S. 1105, 34 L.Ed.2d 685.

Federal Courts 224; Intoxicating Liquors 102

4555. Commissioners or directors, proper parties

In federal civil rights action brought by plaintiff inmates alleging numerous unconstitutional conditions and practices at Massachusetts county jail and house of correction, Commissioner of Correction was proper party defendant in view of his own statutory duty and his subsequent claimed failure to act with consequent constitutional injuries. Dimarzo v. Cahill, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1978, 575 F.2d 15, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 312, 439 U.S. 927, 58 L.Ed.2d 320. Civil Rights 1389

In action under this section challenging constitutionality of city public chauffeur's licensing ordinance, only the Commissioner of the Public Vehicle License Commission was a proper party defendant. Freitag v. Carter, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 489 F.2d 1377. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1391

Correction commissioner was not liable in inmate's civil rights action in connection with hearing officer's denial of inmate's due process right to assistant at disciplinary hearing; fact that inmate appealed hearing officer's decision to commissioner did not establish commissioner's personal involvement, and inmate's limited communication with Office of the Commissioner, without more, could not establish constitutional violation. Lee v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1995, 902 F.Supp. 424, reconsideration granted 914 F.Supp. 1004, on reconsideration 26 F.Supp.2d 615. Civil Rights 1358

Although members of board of county commissioners alleged that they had no authority to hire or fire motor vehicle department personnel, board was involved in motor vehicle department employee's termination and was in a position to prevent any injury, assuming such injury existed; therefore, they would not be dismissed from employee's civil rights action arising out of allegedly wrongful termination of employment. Laughlin v. Board of County Com'rs of Johnson County, Kan., D.Kan.1984, 647 F.Supp. 937. Civil Rights 1390

In suit brought against federal and state officials allegedly responsible for disseminating to law enforcement agencies a telex message that erroneously accused plaintiffs of devising a plan to kill police officers, the Commissioner of the Connecticut State Police was an improper defendant on a defamation claim, since the facts demonstrated that he was in no way responsible for the contents of the telex or its dissemination to persons outside the Connecticut State Police. Gonzalez v. Leonard, D.C.Conn.1980, 497 F.Supp. 1058. Libel And Slander 77

Commissioner of Department of Corrections and Secretary of the Justice Cabinet were proper defendants in action alleging that state was violating provisions of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act. James v. Jones, W.D.Ky.1993, 148 F.R.D. 196. Injunction 114(3)

4556. Comptrollers, proper parties

Inasmuch as in his capacity as comptroller of county, defendant's signature appeared on emergency checks received by Aid to Families with Dependent Children applicant, some of responsibility for issuing checks within required time period necessarily devolved upon his office and he was, therefore, a proper party to suit by Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients seeking injunction against state practices which allegedly denied federal rights to such benefits. Rodriguez v. Swank, N.D.Ill.1970, 318 F.Supp. 289, affirmed 91 S.Ct. 2202, 403 U.S. 901, 29 L.Ed.2d 677. Civil Rights 1391; Injunction 114(3)

4557. County officials, proper parties

County was not properly served and was not proper codefendant in civil rights action by operators of detention home who had sued former probate court administrator who prepared assessment for juvenile's placement and incorrectly labelled him nonviolent where, at time complaint was filed, administrator no longer worked for county and complaint did not name county itself or proper county official in his official capacity. Bush v. Rauch, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 38 F.3d 842. Civil Rights 1389

In civil rights action in which plaintiff alleged that county, its board of health and its board of social services, and several individuals wrongfully caused her sterilization after informing her that she had sickle cell trait, county was a proper and necessary party to resolve plaintiff's claim against the boards, where neither board of health nor board of social services is a legal entity separate and apart from county, and boards are created by, and are extensions of, county. Avery v. Burke County, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 660 F.2d 111. Civil Rights 1391

Under Kansas law, county, rather than State of Kansas, was liable under § 1983 for actions of county sheriff who allegedly denied promotions to two employees who made statements they claimed were protected by First Amendment to outside law enforcement agencies regarding sheriff department activities, even though county sheriff's position was created by state legislation and he did not answer to any other branch of county government; county was corporate being that could only act through its officers, sheriff's department was branch of county government, and attributing sheriff's actions to state would subject state to liability for actions of all county officers while negating Supreme Court precedent holding that local government could be held accountable under § 1983. Blume v. Meneley, D.Kan.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 1171. Civil Rights 1349

Section 1983 action was brought against government officials in their respective official capacities, regardless of the manner in which damages were pled, where caption of the amended complaint and jury demand, like that of the initial complaint, named government officials as defendants in their capacities as mayor of the city and county, chief of city police department, and manager of safety for city and county. Davoll v. Webb, D.Colo.1996, 943 F.Supp. 1289, affirmed 194 F.3d 1116. Civil Rights 1359

Absent indication that county sheriff's department had enjoyed separate legal existence under Texas law, it was not proper party in civil rights suit arising out of alleged planting of drugs on plaintiff. Jacobs v. Port Neches Police Dept., E.D.Tex.1996, 915 F.Supp. 842. Sheriffs And Constables 99

County employees were proper defendants in action brought for deprivation of a constitutional right under color of state law because this section was designed to remedy deprivations of constitutional rights by officials who abuse their governmental positions. Savina v. Gebhart, D.C.Md.1980, 497 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1391

4558. County agencies, proper parties

County Department of Corrections was not a proper defendant in § 1983 action; Department of Corrections was an agency of the county and the county, as opposed to agency of the county, was a proper defendant in § 1983 action. Vance v. County of Santa Clara, N.D.Cal.1996, 928 F.Supp. 993. Civil Rights 1389

Claim brought by public assistance recipient pro se in § 1983 action, that county failed to schedule expedited fair hearing in connection with denial of emergency assistance and that, as result, he suffered violation of his constitutional right to due process, was dismissed without prejudice subject to renewal, since state department of social service was party against whom claim should have been made, and leave to amend pleading was to be freely given when justice required. Hart v. Westchester County Dept. of Social Services, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22595396, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1744.1; Federal Civil Procedure 1838

In view of district attorney's relationship to handling of civilian complaints against police misconduct, he was properly retained as party to civil rights actions based on alleged widespread violations of constitutional rights of minority citizens by police. Council of Organization on Philadelphia Police Accountability and Responsibility v.

4560. Educational officials, proper parties

School superintendent is not ordinarily responsible for individual acts of discrimination committed by teachers or employees, but is a proper party when it is alleged that schools which he heads are guilty of discriminatory policies. Floyd v. Trice, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1974, 490 F.2d 1154. Civil Rights 1356; Civil Rights 1387

Board of education, rather than any individual board member, was the real party in interest in public school teacher's § 1983 action challenging school's response to her wearing a tee shirt in the classroom with the words "Jesus 2000," and therefore, teacher could not state cognizable claim against individual board members; board members were sued only in their official capacities, and teacher did not allege that any individual board members were personally involved in the alleged conduct. Downing v. West Haven Board of Ed., D.Conn.2001, 162 F.Supp.2d 19. Civil Rights 1390

Those trustees of community college and those administrative officials who did not participate in alleged constitutional violation, i.e., discharge of tenured professor without prior notice and opportunity for hearing, could not be held individually liable for monetary damages; however, they were nonetheless proper parties to suit under this section in their official capacities. West v. Williamsport Area Community College, M.D.Pa.1980, 492 F.Supp. 90. Civil Rights 1359; Civil Rights 1390

Where professor at state university brought action against state university, its board of governors and president, and individual faculty members alleging that professor had been wrongfully denied tenure and seeking damages and back pay pursuant to this section and § 1985 of this title and where complaint contained no allegations that president of university personally deprived professor of any right secured by the Constitution and where only time president's name was mentioned in complaint was where it was alleged that president had granted tenure to professor, president of university was not a proper party to action. Bennun v. Board of Governors of Rutgers, State University of New Jersey, D.C.N.J.1976, 413 F.Supp. 1274. Civil Rights 1390; Conspiracy 17

Individual regents of University of California were proper parties to action for equitable relief under this section. League of Academic Women v. Regents of University of Cal., N.D.Cal.1972, 343 F.Supp. 636.

State governor was improper party defendant to sex discrimination suit brought under this section by employee of school of design where, although employee alleged that governor contributed to harm she complained of by failing to implement recommendations of State Human Rights Commission resulting from complaint filed by her, she failed to demonstrate necessary financial dependence of school on state funds which governor could have withdrawn, and thus failed to show that alleged discrimination was consequence of governor's actions. Melanson v. Rantoul, D.C.R.I.1976, 421 F.Supp. 492, affirmed 561 F.2d 409. Civil Rights 1390

Governor's general duty to enforce state laws was not sufficient to make him proper party defendant in civil rights action attacking constitutionality of McKinney's N.Y. Domestic Relations Law § 237 governing matrimonial actions. Gras v. Stevens, S.D.N.Y.1976, 415 F.Supp. 1148. Civil Rights 1391

4562. Judges, proper parties

Because Code Va.1950, § 54-48 gave Virginia Supreme Court independent authority on its own to initiate proceedings against attorneys, Court and its members were proper defendants in suit for declaratory and injunctive relief to bar enforcement of advertising ban in Virginia Code of Professional Responsibility. Supreme Court of

For jurisdictional purposes, judge of district court of Puerto Rico was proper party defendant in civil rights suit challenging constitutionality of provisions of Puerto Rico Rule of Criminal Procedure closing preliminary hearings in felony cases; as enforcer or administrator of those provisions, judge had interest adverse to those seeking access to preliminary hearings conducted before him. Rivera-Puig v. Garcia-Rosario, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 983 F.2d 311. Civil Rights 1389

Where wife who sought to challenge state durational residency requirements for divorce had made no attempt to secure divorce, but brought civil rights action based on hypothetical assumption that her divorce complaint would be rejected pro forma, state court justice was not a proper party defendant, despite contention that justice was sued only in his capacity as administrative superior of court clerk who would assertedly reject wife's complaint on initial screening. Mendez v. Heller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 530 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1391

Generally, only state circuit court judge who was actually present at meetings of judges in which recommendation to fill vacancy in position of friend of court was postponed and then readvertised could be charged with act of discrimination against plaintiff, who was not selected, and only judge who was at meeting at which plaintiff was passed over in favor of a male could properly be included as defendant for that act of discrimination. Cronovich v. Dunn, E.D.Mich.1983, 573 F.Supp. 1330. Civil Rights 1359

4563. Medical associations, proper parties

Former members of Illinois Medical Disciplinary Board who revoked physician's license to practice medicine were not proper parties with regard to physician's claim for injunctive relief, seeking restoration of his license, where former members were no longer in office and were in no position to afford physician restoration remedy. McCabe v. Caleel, N.D.Ill.1990, 739 F.Supp. 387, affirmed 931 F.2d 895, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1391

District court's dismissal of suit by former federal detainee at county jail against county jail officials and nurses for alleged deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs, for nonfeasibility of joining the United States Marshals Service (USMS) as an indispensable party, was an abuse of discretion where the district court failed to explain why the suit was not allowed to proceed under Bivens against USMS marshals against whom the applicable limitations period had not expired at the time detainee moved for joinder and against whom he had stated a viable Bivens claim, and failed to explain why detainee could not pursue his medical claims related to the treatment of his amputated leg against only the nonfederal defendants if necessary. Webb v. Pennington County Bd. of Com'rs, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2003, 92 Fed.Appx. 364, 2003 WL 22998109, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1748

For purposes of section 1983 liability, municipal policy may be inferred from the informal acts or omissions of supervisory municipal officials; where a municipality has notice of a pattern of constitutionally offensive acts by its employees, but fails to take any remedial steps in response, the municipality may be held liable for similar subsequent acts, if the inaction is determined to have been the result of "deliberate indifference" or "tacit authorization" of the offensive acts--in effect, an unlawful municipal policy of ratification of unconstitutional conduct. Brewster v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1352(1); Civil Rights 1401

Naming a municipal department as a defendant is not appropriate means of pleading § 1983 action against municipality since term "persons," as used in § 1983, does not encompass municipal departments. Vance v. County of Santa Clara, N.D.Cal.1996, 928 F.Supp. 993. Civil Rights 1394

4565. Police personnel, proper parties

Allegations, in a §§ 1983 action, that plaintiff was arrested on basis of an already-executed warrant despite showing officers facially authentic documentary evidence that the warrant was no longer effective, were sufficient to state a claim for false arrest and false imprisonment, in violation of the Fourth Amendment, against an officer even though he was mentioned by name in complaint only once; allegations were properly attributable to each of the officers on the scene. Pena-Borrero v. Estremeda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 365 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police dog who bit arrestee as he was attempting to flee from police was not a "person" subject to liability under § 1983. Dye v. Wargo, C.A.7 (Ind.) 2001, 253 F.3d 296. Civil Rights 1339

City of Chicago and Superintendent of Police and other known and unknown police officers were proper parties to action by news photographers who covered 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago and attendant street activities for permanent injunction preventing police from interfering with photographers' constitutional right to gather and report news and to photograph news events. Schnell v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1969, 407 F.2d 1084 . Federal Civil Procedure 139

Police officers could be sued in their personal capacities under § 1983 for actions taken in their official capacities. Wilkerson v. Thrift, W.D.N.C.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 322. Civil Rights 1358

Student expelled for possession of handgun on school property failed to state § 1983 due process claim against police officer who conducted search of vehicle which disclosed gun, based on allegations that student was not given proper notice nor allowed to confront alleged informant, and that school district guidelines were not followed, where it was uncontroverted that officer had no involvement in decision to suspend and expel student. James By and Through James v. Unified School Dist. No. 512, D.Kan.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1407. Civil Rights 1062

City police department was not proper party defendant in action alleging that plaintiff's arrest was without probable cause and violated her constitutional rights, where department was integral part of city government and was merely vehicle through which city government fulfilled its policing functions. Shelby v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1984, 578 F.Supp. 1368. Civil Rights 1389

County sheriff department and city police department were proper parties to civil rights action, arising under this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law, in which plaintiff sought damages for false arrest and use of excessive force. Reese v. Milwaukee County Sheriff Dept., E.D.Wis.1980, 505 F.Supp. 88. Civil Rights 1389

Police chief, mayor, vice squad chief and acting corporation counsel were proper defendants in action under this section challenging constitutionality of Chicago ordinance prohibiting certain categories of persons from congregating in public places or in places where intoxicating liquors are sold. Farber v. Rochford, N.D.Ill.1975, 407 F.Supp. 529. Civil Rights 1391

New York City police department was not suable entity, for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 claims. Nance v. New York City Police Dept. ex rel. McKay Chung, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1955164, Unreported. Civil Rights 1348

4566. Political parties, proper parties

Republican organization of county and Republican county central committee were not proper parties defendant in action wherein Democrats, who had been discharged as investigators in Illinois Secretary of State's office, alleged, inter alia, that discharge for purpose of permitting appointment of Republicans denied equal protection, freedom of association and speech and due process where, though such organizations were alleged to be beneficiaries of Secretary and Under Secretary's employment practices, organizations were not alleged to have played any part in discharge of plaintiffs or hiring of their successors. Janda v. State, N.D.Ill.1972, 348 F.Supp. 568. Civil Rights 1390

4567. Prison personnel, proper parties

New Mexico inmate who was imprisoned in California pursuant to Interstate Corrections Compact (ICC) was required to bring civil rights suit against California custodians, rather than New Mexico prison officials, to challenge constitutionality of his classification and conditions of confinement in California, as relief he sought could only be granted against and implemented by California officials. Garcia v. Lemaster, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 439 F.3d 1215. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner's § 1983 action failed to state cause of action that guards' beating of him violated his Eighth Amendment rights because he failed to name guards responsible for beating in complaint and he did not allege any personal involvement of warden and director of corrections. Mitchell v. Maynard, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 80 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Individual who was warden of Illinois prison when prisoner sought relief under this section on theory that he had been attacked, beaten, placed in isolation for 15 days and in segregation for 15 months, and deprived of good time solely on religious grounds was a proper party although the alleged deprivation of good time occurred before individual became a warden and prisoner had appealed to the nonparty Illinois prison merit board and director of public safety. Weaver v. Pate, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1968, 390 F.2d 145. Federal Civil Procedure 258

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether chairpersons of state parole board had actual knowledge or acquiesced to parole board policies that allegedly violated Ex Post Facto Clause precluded summary judgment in inmate's action seeking to hold chairpersons personally liable under §§ 1983. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prison chaplain was appropriate defendant in civil rights suit filed by inmate alleging violation of free exercise clause of First Amendment on basis of prison policy prohibiting Nation of Islam from holding services at prison without outside Islam, even though chaplain was not alleged to have instituted allegedly unconstitutional policy, where chaplain was responsible for enforcement of policy and failed to assert any affirmative defenses to claims made by plaintiff. Hobbs v. Pennell, D.Del.1991, 754 F.Supp. 1040. Civil Rights 1389

Superintendent of Wisconsin correctional institution was not proper party defendant in civil rights action brought by inmate who alleged that his access to Wisconsin courts was infringed by his transfer to Minnesota prison pursuant to prisoner exchange agreement between the two states absent some greater involvement in transfer decision other than superintendent's mere supervision over institution from which inmate was transferred. Hudson v. Israel, E.D.Wis.1984, 594 F.Supp. 664. Civil Rights 1389

Two prison officials who were served with inmate's § 1983 complaint but who were not named in the caption of the complaint were not proper defendants, in action arising from inmate's placement in administrative segregation after he led large group of inmates in unauthorized gathering after the group was told it could not use the chapel until two weeks later due to scheduling conflict, where one official was nowhere mentioned in the body of the complaint and the other was mentioned twice, but only to explain that he was the chaplain who initially gave the inmate permission to meet in the chapel and that he was the inmate's religious sponsor, there were no allegations that he committed any violations, and there was no claim for relief against him. Derrick v. Ward, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 57, 2004 WL 38545, Unreported. Civil Rights 1389; Civil Rights 1395(7)

4568. School districts, proper parties

Teacher made allegations sufficient to make distinct claims against school district and school board as defendants in civil rights suit by alleging that former authorized superintendent to harass certain teachers and latter had unwritten policy of cutting services to special education students and intimidating teachers who advocated for them. Montanye v. Wissahickon School Dist., E.D.Pa.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 510. Civil Rights 1395(8)

In class action to establish entitlement of handicapped children, under equal protection guarantee, to specialized education at public expense, joint school district was an improper party to action under this section, and motion to dismiss portions of complaint which purported to state a cause of action against it was granted. Panitch v. State of Wis., E.D.Wis.1974, 390 F.Supp. 611. Civil Rights 1387; Federal Civil Procedure 1750

4568A. School officials

Terminated high school teacher could bring §§ 1983 suit against principal, seeking monetary damages for violation of teacher's federal constitutional rights arising from alleged wrongful termination. Maizner v. Hawaii, Dept. of Educ., D.Hawai'i 2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 1225. Civil Rights 1133

4569. Secretary of Health and Human Services, proper parties

Where § 602 of this title under which California enacted regulations which permit summary termination of welfare benefits prior to a hearing was not challenged under § 2282 of Title 28, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare [now Secretary of Health and Human Services] would be dismissed as improper party defendant. Yee-Litt v. Richardson, N.D.Cal.1973, 353 F.Supp. 996, affirmed 93 S.Ct. 2753, 412 U.S. 924, 37 L.Ed.2d 152. Federal Civil Procedure 388

4570. Social workers, proper parties

In action wherein plaintiff alleged deprivation of her right to custody of her children under color of state law, case-worker for county department of public welfare who filed petitions which resulted in removal of plaintiff's children was a proper defendant in action. McGhee v. Moyer, W.D.Va.1973, 60 F.R.D. 578. Civil Rights 1391

4571. Spouses, proper parties

Wife, who sought court order directing husband to pay costs of defending against husband's divorce suit, was not proper party in husband's civil rights action challenging McKinney's N.Y. Domestic Relations Law § 237 authorizing state courts to issue such orders, since wife was not acting "under color of state law." Gras v. Stevens, S.D.N.Y.1976, 415 F.Supp. 1148. Civil Rights 1326(9)

4572. States, proper parties

State's violation of its own laws and procedural rules, creating rights beyond those guaranteed by the Constitution, cannot support a federal due process claim and is of no consequence in civil rights action under § 1983. Hodge v. Jones, C.A.4 (Md.) 1994, 31 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1027; Constitutional Law 253(1)

State was not proper party to suit against state officials under this section. Seltzer v. Ashcroft, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1982, 675 F.2d 184, on remand 555 F.Supp. 1381. Civil Rights 1391

State of Missouri was not a proper party to action brought under this section in which plaintiff sought relief and damages from a state court probate judgment that she could not inherit under her father's will. Aubuchon v. State of Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 631 F.2d 581, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1358, 450 U.S. 915, 67 L.Ed.2d 341. Civil Rights 1391

No reason existed to disturb conclusions of district court in pro se civil rights action brought by Minnesota prison inmate that state and certain individual defendants were not proper defendants because there was no allegation that named individuals were personally involved in the alleged deprivation of rights or that any violations resulted from official prison policy or custom, that there was no violation of procedural due process requirements in prison disciplinary proceeding, and that legal materials which prison inmate claimed were denied him were not relevant to the disciplinary hearings at issue. Kelsey v. State of Minn., C.A.8 (Minn.) 1980, 622 F.2d 961. Federal Courts 858

State was not a proper party defendant in state prisoner's civil rights action. Neal v. State of Ga., C.A.5 (Ga.) 1972, 469 F.2d 446. Civil Rights 1389

An action under this section was not state insofar as plaintiff intended the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to be named a party in action on complaint alleging civil rights violations by state correctional officials. Billings v. Com. of Mass., D.C.Mass.1980, 498 F.Supp. 883. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State of Ohio was not proper party defendant in action brought under this subchapter to declare invalid, as vague and overbroad, R.C. § 2923.04 prohibiting any person from furnishing legal services to criminal syndicate with purpose of establishing or maintaining syndicate or facilitating its activities. Amusement Devices Ass'n v. State of Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1977, 443 F.Supp. 1040, 10 O.O.3d 235. Civil Rights 1391

Although State was protected from section 1983 action brought by registered voter for deprivation of right to vote for candidates for newly created county judicial position, motion to add state as defendant for sole purpose of assessing against it attorney fees and costs for the action would be allowed. Madden v. Cleland, N.D.Ga.1985, 105 F.R.D. 520. Civil Rights 1391

4573. Town boards, proper parties

Town board member who had authority to direct enforcement of town ordinances and town building inspector who issued citations to enforce such ordinances was proper party in civil rights action seeking declaration that certain town ordinances were unconstitutional. Martin v. Wray, E.D.Wis.1979, 473 F.Supp. 1131. Civil Rights 1391

4574. Foreign officials, proper parties

Paraguayan Consul General, in bringing suit to set aside Paraguayan national's conviction and sentence based on state authorities' violation of consular notification provision of the Vienna Convention, was acting only in his official capacity, for the benefit of Paraguay, and had no greater ability to proceed under federal civil rights statute than did the country he represented. Breard v. Greene, U.S.Va.1998, 118 S.Ct. 1352, 523 U.S. 371, 140 L.Ed.2d 529. Civil Rights 1331(4)

4575. Miscellaneous parties, proper parties

Members of groups of Mexican-Americans, women, young people between ages of 18 and 28, and poor people with income below "poverty level," were, at preliminary stage of litigation, proper parties to bring civil actions seeking to establish that grand juries convened in two Texas counties were composed in contravention of Constitution's requirements because those groups had allegedly been excluded from consideration. Ciudadanos Unidos De San Juan v. Hidalgo County Grand Jury Com'rs, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 622 F.2d 807, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1479, 450 U.S. 964, 67 L.Ed.2d 613. Constitutional Law 42.3(1) department was engaged in certain surveillance tactics which were designed to and which did have effect of chilling plaintiffs in exercise of their rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 could maintain suit as a class action turned on factual situation more complex than presented in the usual case, and under the circumstances the class action determination was left for judge to whom matter was assigned following ruling that complaint stated a claim upon which relief could be granted. Handschu v. Special Services Division, S.D.N.Y.1972, 349 F.Supp. 766. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4603. Discretion of court, class actions

A district court in a civil right action has broad discretion in deciding whether to allow maintenance of a class action. Pearson v. Townsend, D.C.S.C.1973, 362 F.Supp. 207. Federal Civil Procedure 162

4604. Considerations governing, class actions--Generally

Official paucity of support for plaintiff's proposed class of inmates was not determinative of question whether class should be certified, for in class actions under this section the trial court bears a substantial management responsibility over the conduct of the litigation, which arises the moment the class is requested. Jones v. Diamond, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1090. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4605. ---- Intervention as alternative, considerations governing, class actions

City fire department members, who brought action under this section, for injunctive relief and declaratory judgment with respect to such members' suspension for ten days without pay and threatened further serious disciplinary action for violation by such members of fire commissioner's memorandum regulating length and manner of grooming of sideburns, chin whiskers, and mustaches, would not be entitled to maintain such action as class action where intervention, liberally allowed, would sufficiently protect all persons affected by such memorandum. Elko v. McCarey, E.D.Pa.1970, 315 F.Supp. 886. Federal Civil Procedure 184.5

4606. ---- Persons benefitted, considerations governing, class actions

In civil rights suit wherein racial discrimination on part of city officials was established, decree would necessarily run to benefit not only of named plaintiffs but also for all persons similarly situated, and there was no prejudice by denial of class action treatment. United Farmworkers of Florida Housing Project, Inc. v. City of Delray Beach, Florida, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1974, 493 F.2d 799. Federal Courts 893

Negroes suing to enjoin enforcement of state and municipal segregation laws affecting common carriers and to enjoin maintenance of racial segregation were entitled to decree running not only to benefit of Negro plaintiffs but also for all persons similarly situated, regardless whether action was properly brought as class action under rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28. Bailey v. Patterson, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1963, 323 F.2d 201, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 666, 376 U.S. 910, 11 L.Ed.2d 609. Civil Rights 1451; Injunction 189

It was unnecessary to determine whether class action treatment should be accorded suit charging members of planning commission with racial discrimination in connection with denial of application by black church for special exception to operate day-care center in residential area since the decree to which the plaintiffs were entitled, i.e., injunction, was the same whether the purported class was certified; nature of relief awarded required that the decree run to the benefit of not only the named plaintiffs but to all persons similarly situated. Church of God of Louisiana, Inc. v. Monroe- Ouachita Regional Planning Commission, W.D.La.1975, 404 F.Supp. 175. Federal Civil Procedure 186.15

Action for injunctive and declaratory relief to permit distribution of issue of state prison newspaper and its continued publication without interference or censorship by state could not be maintained as class action on behalf of outside subscribers in that relief applicable to individual outside subscriber, who, contrary to defendants' motion, would not be dropped as a plaintiff, would be applicable to entire class of subscribers. The Luparar v. Stoneman, D.C.Vt.1974, 382 F.Supp. 495. Declaratory Judgment 305; Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4607. Effect on individual claims, class actions

Since plaintiff in civil rights case was member of class and would be bound by decision in class action challenging adequacy of all Pennsylvania prison law libraries, district court in federal civil rights action properly refused to consider merits of inmate's challenge to adequacy of law library. Bryan v. Werner, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 233 . Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4608. Typicality of claims or defenses, class actions

Owners who presented innocent owner defense to forfeiture of property and alleged unconstitutionally lengthy delay in bringing forfeiture proceedings under Illinois Drug Asset Forfeiture Procedure Act could not show "typicality" required to be entitled to bring class action; reasons for delay in forfeiture proceedings were necessarily too fact specific to allow for class certification as violation of due process would require showing of length of delay, reason for delay, assertion of right, and prejudice to defendant. Jones v. Takaki, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 38 F.3d 321, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Civil Procedure 181

In action brought by Vermont public assistance applicants challenging alleged delays in processing applications for three public assistance programs, determination that applicants did not suffer delays with regard to one of the programs did not preclude class action certification for lack of typicality with regard to the other two programs. Robidoux v. Celani, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1993, 987 F.2d 931, on remand 876 F.Supp. 575. Federal Civil Procedure 189

Typicality requirement for class certification was satisfied in county jail detainees' §§1983 action alleging that sheriff's department had required them to sleep on cell floors while detained; class members' alleged injuries were identical, arose from same course of conduct, i.e. sheriff's department's alleged policy, and raised same legal theory, i.e. that policy violated their constitutional rights. Thomas v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 231 F.R.D. 397. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

In action against state employees association, members of Hawaii Public Employment Relations Board and others alleging that certification and collection of collective bargaining service fee from state employees constituted denial of constitutional rights under color of law, state employee and retired state employee failed to show that their claims or defenses were typical of those of the class or that they would fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class, and thus class certification was denied. Jordan v. Hawaii Government Employees' Ass'n, Local 152, AFSCME, AFL-CIO, D.C.Hawai'i 1979, 472 F.Supp. 1123. Federal Civil Procedure 184.5

Plaintiff's unconditional release from confinement under state statutes respecting treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics did not make his claim under this subchapter dissimilar to that of class of persons consisting of those who "have been" committed. Rakes v. Coleman, E.D.Va.1970, 318 F.Supp. 181. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Typicality requirement of class action rule was satisfied by proposed class in § 1983 action of all persons strip searched at county jail during specified time who were arrested for misdemeanor or ordinance offenses unrelated to weapons or illegal drugs with respect to claims against county, and against county sheriff and county jail captain in their official capacities; named plaintiff arrestees were forced to remove their clothing and submit to visual inspection, plaintiffs alleged strip searches were pursuant to policy calling for indiscriminate searches, and there was sufficient indication of such a policy to support class certification, notwithstanding defendants' denials of such uniform policy. Blihovde v. St. Croix County, Wis., W.D.Wis.2003, 219 F.R.D. 607, subsequent determination

2003 WL 23200374. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Claim of owner of vehicles seized by police when driver was arrested for second offense of operating motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol (OMVI) pursuant to Ohio statute permitting police to seize and immobilize vehicles of persons who have been arrested for second OMVI offense who alleged she was an innocent owner of the vehicle was typical of that of other nondriver owners of vehicles seized under statute, as required for class certification. Putnam v. Davies, S.D.Ohio 1996, 169 F.R.D. 89. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4609. Fair and adequate representation, class actions--Generally

Motion of plaintiff, in action against insurer alleging that insurer refused to sell disability insurance to women containing the same terms and conditions available to men solely on the basis of sex, for confirmation of class would be denied where it was probable that plaintiff would encounter considerable difficulty in adequately representing a class which had potentially millions of members. Stern v. Massachusetts Indem. & Life Ins. Co., E.D.Pa.1973, 365 F.Supp. 433. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4610. ---- Antagonistic interests, fair and adequate representation, class actions

Interests of plaintiff black teacher were not antagonistic to other members of class, as to subject matter of suit on account of alleged racial discrimination in school salaries, so as to prevent her from acting as plaintiff in class action, although she alleged that she had received lower wages than white teachers as well as several negro teachers. Arkansas Ed. Ass'n v. Board of Ed. of Portland, Ark. School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1971, 446 F.2d 763. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

4611. ---- Injury, fair and adequate representation, class actions

In action brought under this subchapter governing civil actions for deprivation of rights by welfare recipients on behalf of themselves and other welfare recipients against county welfare department to recover damages arising from department's practice of retaining court-ordered child support payments as reimbursements for amounts already paid to welfare recipients as Aid to Families with Dependent Children, welfare department failed to establish that damages suffered by plaintiff recipients were not recoverable, and thus denial of class certification on ground that plaintiffs had suffered no harm and were therefore not representative of purported class was improper. Mackey v. Stanton, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1978, 586 F.2d 1126, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 172, 444 U.S. 882, 62 L.Ed.2d 112. Federal Civil Procedure 189

Where allegations in civil rights complaint established no more than that plaintiffs shared some attributes common to persons who may have been subjects of illegal discrimination, but did not establish any injury to plaintiffs, plaintiffs were no more than concerned bystanders, and could not proceed as representatives of injured class. Urban Contractors Alliance of St. Louis v. Bi-State Development Agency, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 531 F.2d 877. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Where inmate of state institution did not allege that brutality or other misconduct had been practiced on him, but in effect alleged that he was part of institutional population which must live from day to day under constant threat of brutality and misconduct, plaintiff was "injured," was a member of a class which was "injured" and was thus competent to maintain class action for himself and others similarly situated under this section against officials of institution to require that it be administered in such a manner as not to violate inmate's rights. Hayes v. Secretary of Dept. of Public Safety, C.A.4 (Md.) 1972, 455 F.2d 798. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

As regarded civil rights action challenging the constitutional validity of forfeiture of plaintiff prisoner's accumulated earnings from work performed at an honor camp, class certification was properly denied since plaintiff was not incarcerated at the time the action was filed, as were the persons whom he sought to represent, and his averments did not show that he was a member of the class he sought to represent at any pertinent time during the course of the proceedings. Johnson v. Duffy, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1978, 588 F.2d 740. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Student organization's representation of purported class composed of other organizations similarly situated in suit to have declared unconstitutional S.H.A. ch. 122, § 30-17 dealing with revocation of scholarship aid for misconduct was not precluded on ground that student organization lacked standing because it was not a member of class which it sought to represent. Undergraduate Student Ass'n v. Peltason, N.D.Ill.1973, 359 F.Supp. 320. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Deceased plaintiff whose only recovery would be for retroactive benefits could not represent class in action seeking to enjoin enforcement of F.S.A. §§ 409.205(2), 409.225(3), denying old-age assistance benefits and disability benefits to noncitizen resident aliens. Zarate v. State Dept. of Health and Rehabilitative Services, S.D.Fla.1971, 347 F.Supp. 1004, affirmed 92 S.Ct. 2462, 407 U.S. 918, 32 L.Ed.2d 803, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 107, 409 U.S. 903, 34 L.Ed.2d 166. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Where action under this section to require state director of Department of Public Health and Welfare to hold administrative hearing on plaintiff's eligibility for Aid to Dependent Children benefits had not been declared a class action by court and plaintiff had been granted relief which she sought individually so that she was no longer in position of proposed class of persons facing prospect of future delay in hearings as to Aid to Dependent Children benefits, plaintiff was not entitled to maintain action as a class action. Callier v. Hill, W.D.Mo.1970, 326 F.Supp. 669. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4613. ---- Moot claims, fair and adequate representation, class actions

Tenant, whose individual plans against landlord in civil rights action were either moot or without merit, was not an adequate representative of proposed class of other tenants similarly situated. Pernas v. Parkview Towers Management Corp., D.C.N.J.1980, 502 F.Supp. 1099. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4614. ---- Pro se plaintiffs, fair and adequate representation, class actions

Federal prisoners who brought action attacking various conditions in city jail in which they were formerly confined did not present a case for class certification, where the prisoners were acting pro se, and had been transferred to facilities other than the city jail. Fore v. Godwin, E.D.Va.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1145. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Action challenging New York Department of Correctional Services' refusal to permit prisoners to participate in interprison exchange of legal materials and assistance between prisoners in different states could not be maintained as class action where plaintiff was prisoner who was proceeding pro se. Shaffery v. Winters, S.D.N.Y.1976, 72 F.R.D. 191. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Pro se prisoner could not bring class action challenging parole revocation proceedings of the Board of Prison Terms; prisoner was not an adequate class representative able to fairly represent and adequately protect the interests of the class. Reed v. Board of Prison Terms, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21982471, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Named plaintiffs had standing to bring class action under § 1983 alleging that county violated the Fourth Amendment by failing to provide prompt judicial determinations of probable cause to persons arrested without a warrant, where, at time complaint was filed, plaintiffs had been arrested without warrants and were being held in custody without having received a probable cause determination, prompt or otherwise, as injury was, at that moment, capable of being redressed through injunctive relief. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, U.S.Cal.1991, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 500 U.S. 44, 114 L.Ed.2d 49, on remand 943 F.2d 36. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Plaintiff, as a black who alleged injury in fact by virtue of city officials' discriminatory policies with respect to hiring for positions in fire department, had standing to bring action based on alleged racial discrimination in the recruiting, testing and hiring of applicants for position of fire fighter and such standing, along with a showing of general prerequisites to maintenance of class action as well as the opposing parties' refusal to act on grounds generally applicable to class, assured that the litigation could proceed as a class action. Com. of Pa. v. Glickman, W.D.Pa.1974, 370 F.Supp. 724. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

White plaintiffs would have standing to maintain civil rights action challenging alleged school segregation and named plaintiffs could maintain class action although they were not designated as black or white. Husbands v. Com. of Pa., E.D.Pa.1973, 359 F.Supp. 925. Civil Rights 1331(2); Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

4616. ---- Miscellaneous representation adequate, fair and adequate representation, class actions

Named class representatives adequately represented class of patients institutionalized for mental illness in mental health facilities operated by state in action under § 1983; representatives' claims were typical of claims of rest of class. K.L. v. Edgar, N.D.Ill.1996, 948 F.Supp. 44. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Former prison inmate could serve as representative party in class action brought against sheriff and county board relating to conditions in jail, even though representative had been released day after suit was filed; sufficient guarantees that suit would be properly prosecuted were provided by representative seeking monetary damages and from experience and competency of his trial counsel. McKenzie v. Crotty, D.S.D.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1287. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Suit under this section to redress alleged arbitrary exclusion of inmates from parole because of reliance on unconstitutional discipline records could properly be maintained as class suit on behalf of inmates who were "set off" for parole consideration or who were reclassified or denied consideration for work release or educational and vocational opportunities in reliance on challenged records; fact that named class representative might not be currently eligible for work release was not solely dispositive of his ability to adequately represent members of the class who were denied consideration for work release. Leonard v. Mississippi State Probation and Parole Bd., N.D.Miss.1974, 373 F.Supp. 699, reversed 509 F.2d 820, rehearing denied 515 F.2d 510, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 428, 423 U.S. 998, 46 L.Ed.2d 373. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4617. ---- Miscellaneous representation inadequate, fair and adequate representation, class actions

President of association of minority prisoners would not fairly and adequately protect interests of class, and therefore his motion to certify class of association members in suit under this section against superintendents and staff of prison would be denied. Ethnic Awareness Organization v. Gagnon, E.D.Wis.1983, 568 F.Supp. 1186. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Prisoners who proceeded pro se seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to remedy prison conditions, were not entitled to class certification, where, if they prevailed on nonfrivolous claims, relief provided might sufficiently nullify any need to go forward as legal class and they did not demonstrate sufficiently that they would be able to represent all class members fairly and adequately. Griffin v. Smith, W.D.N.Y.1980, 493 F.Supp. 129. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Black high school student, whose mother had consented to initial infliction of corporal punishment and who was threatened with a second administration of such punishment, could not represent all other black students of her junior high school for purpose of class action challenging infliction of corporal punishment as racially motivated. Sims v. Waln, S.D.Ohio 1974, 388 F.Supp. 543, affirmed 536 F.2d 686, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1693, 431 U.S. 903, 52 L.Ed.2d 386. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Plaintiff, who had been readmitted to school, was not a proper class representative to bring an action attacking school authorities' practices with respect to suspension. Boyd v. Smith, N.D.Ind.1973, 353 F.Supp. 844. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Eight named inmates, formerly incarcerated in county jails and now imprisoned in Mississippi State Penitentiary, who had only individual claims for monetary damages, and four other named plaintiffs, awaiting transfer from county jails to state penitentiary, who were subject to like disqualification from injunctive and declaratory relief concerning allegedly unconstitutional conditions existing in the county jails, could not assure, as required by rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, governing class actions, that inmates confined presently or in the future in county jails would have their dominant interest in eliminating unconstitutional jail conditions and practices pressed with same vigor as claims of representative plaintiffs for large damages were likely to be. Stewart v. Winter, N.D.Miss.1980, 87 F.R.D. 760, affirmed 669 F.2d 328. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4618. Common questions of law and fact, class actions--Generally

Action by certain plaintiffs challenging numerous state criminal laws and municipal ordinances for alleged vagueness and overbreadth and for invalidity as applied to named plaintiffs and others similarly situated was not, in absence of a showing of common questions of law and fact, properly maintainable as a class action. Brooks v. Briley, M.D.Tenn.1967, 274 F.Supp. 538, affirmed 88 S.Ct. 1671, 391 U.S. 361, 20 L.Ed.2d 647. Federal Civil Procedure 181

It is not necessary that all members of class wish to seek relief from defendants' alleged unconstitutional actions or that all members take an interest in the maintenance of the suit, for purposes of determining whether test of commonality in civil rights case has been met, nor is it necessary that all members of proposed class be identically situated or that all be aggrieved by defendants' conduct or policies. Glover v. Johnson, E.D.Mich.1977, 85 F.R.D. 1 . Federal Civil Procedure 165

4619. ---- Acting or refusing to act on common grounds, common questions of law and fact, class actions

Termination policies of public utility applied to all of proposed class members in class action alleging deprivation of constitutional right under color of law; thus utility board members opposing class action had acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, making final declaratory and injunctive relief with respect to entire class both appropriate and necessary. Bradford v. Edelstein, S.D.Tex.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1361. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Where pregnant teachers' primary claim against school board involved equitable relief, with damages in the form of back pay being but a part of the equitable relief needed to obviate the alleged past discrimination, class action was maintainable pursuant to rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, pertaining to cases in which the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or declaratory relief rather than as a class action in which adjudications with respect to individual members of the class would be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the adjudications. Paxman v. Wilkerson, E.D.Va.1975, 390 F.Supp. 442. Federal Civil Procedure 184.15

It was no bar to maintenance of class action challenging practice of state officials, acting under various state statutes, of confining alcoholics for treatment and rehabilitation that certain defenses might be available to defendants against certain other class members' claims. Rakes v. Coleman, E.D.Va.1970, 318 F.Supp. 181. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Proposed class in § 1983 action of all persons strip searched at county jail during specified time who were arrested for misdemeanor or ordinance offenses unrelated to weapons or illegal drugs was sufficiently cohesive to satisfy requirement that common questions of law or fact predominate and support class action certification as to liability determination, although staying decision on whether to certify issue of damages for class resolution, where class was only certified as to defendants in their official capacities; challenge was to allegedly uniform policy, damages issue could be separately determined after ruling on general liability issue, and damages for each claimant were likely to be small. Blihovde v. St. Croix County, Wis., W.D.Wis.2003, 219 F.R.D. 607, subsequent determination 2003 WL 23200374. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4621. ---- Individual relief, common questions of law and fact, class actions

Class action seeking injunctive relief for alleged constitutional conditions and practices in Georgia prison system did not bar inmates from bringing action seeking both injunctive relief and monetary damages for alleged violations of their right to due process in prison disciplinary proceedings. Fortner v. Thomas, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1993, 983 F.2d 1024. Federal Civil Procedure 180

Predominance and superiority requirements for maintaining class action were met in county jail detainees' §§1983 action alleging that sheriff's department had required them to sleep on cell floors while detained, regardless of necessity for individualized damages determinations; central issues for every class member were fact question of whether they had been required to sleep on floor and legal question of whether that fact permitted recovery under § §1983, while individualized questions were peripheral, and individual members had low interest in controlling individual prosecutions and low potential for recovery relative to cost of prosecuting action. Thomas v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 231 F.R.D. 397.

Propriety of alleged delays in bringing state detainees to trial could best be determined by allowing civil rights action to be maintained as a class action, even though specific relief such as release on bail or dismissal of an indictment might depend on facts in an individual case. Wallace v. McDonald, E.D.N.Y.1973, 369 F.Supp. 180. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Inasmuch as racial discrimination charged against governing body of sanitary district by district employees constituted class discrimination, action under this subchapter and for injunctive relief under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 was properly brought as class action even though individual rights were involved. Bennett v. Gravelle, D.C.Md.1971, 323 F.Supp. 203, affirmed 451 F.2d 1011, certiorari dismissed 92 S.Ct. 2451, 407 U.S. 917, 32 L.Ed.2d 692. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

4622. ---- Miscellaneous questions common, common questions of law and fact, class actions

Individual plaintiffs who were displacees from urban renewal project could properly bring a class action on behalf of themselves and other displacees on a complaint alleging that Negroes and Puerto Ricans were being discriminated against in connection with relocation and allegations clearly raised questions of fact common to class. Norwalk CORE v. Norwalk Redevelopment Agency, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1968, 395 F.2d 920. Federal Civil Procedure 147; Federal Civil Procedure 181

Commonality requirement for class certification was met, in county jail detainees' §§1983 action alleging that sheriff's department had required them to sleep on cell floors while detained; allegation presented common fact question, and all class members also shared legal claim that department policy or custom was behind alleged practice, and that practice amounted to deprivation of their federally protected rights. Thomas v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 231 F.R.D. 397. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Proposed class action brought under this section to challenge constitutionality of 25 Del.C. § 3901 authorizing the sale of motor vehicles to satisfy a repairman's lien met requirement for maintenance of a class action that the suit present common questions of law and fact. Swiggett v. Watson, D.C.Del.1977, 441 F.Supp. 254. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Proposed class of nondriver vehicle owners whose vehicles were seized by police under Ohio statute requiring police to seize and immobilize vehicles of persons who have been arrested for second offense of operating motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol (OMVI) met commonality requirement necessary for class certification; action challenged routine and uniformly applied procedure when driver was arrested for repeat offense of drunk driving, and question of statute's constitutionality would not vary among class members. Putnam v. Davies, S.D.Ohio 1996, 169 F.R.D. 89. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4623. ---- Miscellaneous questions not common, common questions of law and fact, class actions

Class action was properly denied in connection with civil rights suit against sheriff for latter's action in confining prisoner is solitary confinement in "strip cell," where there were no allegations or evidence proffered suggesting that other prisoners were accorded treatment given to plaintiff. McMahon v. Beard, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 583 F.2d 172. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Issues respecting postarrest detention of state prisoners were not cognizable in civil rights class action, where indictments of different persons would present different facts as to continuing detention after arrest. Carter v. Kilbane, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1975, 519 F.2d 1370. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Where plaintiff contended that test served to discriminate in 20 job categories, it would be unreasonable to require employer in a single lawsuit to show that test accurately predicted performance in each and factual issues were too diverse to warrant class treatment. Cooper v. Allen, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1972, 467 F.2d 836, on remand. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

Where Negro voter had been struck from list of registrations under LSA-R.S. 18:132, 18:133, respecting challenges to allegedly illegal registrations and during the same period many other Negroes in parish had also been struck from list of registered voters by allegedly unconstitutional and illegal actions of parish registrar of voters in mailing out more challenges than could be handled by her office within the short period required to answer, right of each voter depended upon actions taken with respect to his own case, class action could not be maintained. Reddix v. Lucky, C.A.5 (La.) 1958, 252 F.2d 930. Federal Civil Procedure 186.15

Civil rights proceeding instituted by state inmates was not a proper class action, in that every inmate presented a different problem with regard to treatment necessary, proper and required for him as an individual. Gray v. Creamer, W.D.Pa.1974, 376 F.Supp. 675. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4624. Difficulties in management of action, class actions

Civil rights action contesting confinement of prisoners in "segregation unit" was not maintainable as class action where record was not so developed that court would be assured it would not encounter unforeseen and substantial difficulties in management of class action. Carter v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.1970, 320 F.Supp. 1092. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Class of persons whose applications for public assistance had allegedly been delayed unlawfully by the Vermont Department of Social Welfare satisfied numerosity requirement for class action certification; plaintiffs presented documentary evidence of delays in 22 to 133 cases per month; potential class members were distributed over entire state, and were economically disadvantaged, making individual suits difficult to pursue. Robidoux v. Celani, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1993, 987 F.2d 931, on remand 876 F.Supp. 575. Federal Civil Procedure 189

Numerosity requirement of rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, must be read liberally in the context of civil rights suits; this is especially true when the class action falls under alternative requirement that party opposing class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole. Jones v. Diamond, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 519 F.2d 1090. Federal Civil Procedure 163

Class of twenty black teachers in school district was sufficiently large to permit class action on ground of salary discrimination where some teachers were no longer in district, those in district could have natural fear or reluctance to sue on individual basis, and district had filed nondiscriminatory salary schedule reducing potential members of class and lessening chance of individual actions. Arkansas Ed. Ass'n v. Board of Ed. of Portland, Ark. School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1971, 446 F.2d 763. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Determination of whether requisites for class certification had been met in civil rights action based on alleged discrimination in hiring of firefighters would be delayed until plaintiffs had opportunity to discover actual numbers and names of potential class members from city defendants, as court did not have clear basis on which to determine size of alleged class and whether members desired employment with city. Caldwell v. Rowland, E.D.Tenn.1996, 932 F.Supp. 1018. Federal Civil Procedure 175

In civil rights action brought against city police officers to enjoin defendants from future surveillance or harassment of individuals thought to be gay, district court would not certify class composed of owners of gay bars within city, since plaintiff alleged only four gay bars in their complaint, and thus the alleged class fell for lack of numerosity. Cyr v. Walls, N.D.Tex.1977, 439 F.Supp. 697. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Class composed of 38 juveniles civilly committed to state camps after being adjudged delinquent or in need of supervision was so numerous as to make joinder impractical, for purposes of determining whether civil rights action by two juveniles challenging constitutionality of certain practices at camps was appropriate for class action treatment. King v. Carey, W.D.N.Y.1975, 405 F.Supp. 41. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Where no other resident of communal farm had been denied employment by county board of education and no other resident desired to apply for position with the board and there was no showing that the number of residents who possessed qualifications to teach and who might desire to teach in the public schools was so great that the joinder would be impracticable, teacher was not entitled to maintain as a class action her civil rights lawsuit against board of education to obtain injunctive and monetary relief as result of board's alleged denial of employment on basis of teacher's residence at communal farm. Doherty v. Wilson, M.D.Ga.1973, 356 F.Supp. 35. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

In view of the thousands of qualified voters and of voluntary unpaid registrars whose interests were the same as the named plaintiffs, plaintiffs were entitled to maintain as a class action their civil rights suit attacking state statutes which closed registration during month of September preceding general election and which provided that only enrolled members of the two major parties could act as registrars. Bishop v. Lomenzo, E.D.N.Y.1972, 350 F.Supp. 576. Federal Civil Procedure 181

High school student's action under this section against enforcement of portion of dress code was properly brought as class action in light of evidence as to how many students were or potentially might be affected. Karr v. Schmidt, W.D.Tex.1970, 320 F.Supp. 728, reversed on other grounds 460 F.2d 609, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 307, 409 U.S.

989, 34 L.Ed.2d 256. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Class of nondriver vehicle owners whose vehicles were seized pursuant to Ohio statute requiring police to seize and immobilize vehicles of persons who have been arrested for second offense of operating motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol (OMVI) met numerosity requirement for class action certification; class of potential plaintiffs numbered in the thousands and would be always changing, and nature of claims made individual challenges to constitutionality of statute impractical and unlikely. Putnam v. Davies, S.D.Ohio 1996, 169 F.R.D. 89 . Federal Civil Procedure 181

4626. Membership in class, class actions

For purposes of relief directed at police misconduct generally rather than to any particular state statute, named plaintiffs intimidated by misconduct may represent all others in class of those similarly abused, without regard to asserted state statutory basis for police actions. Allee v. Medrano, U.S.Tex.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2191, 416 U.S. 802, 40 L.Ed.2d 566. Federal Civil Procedure 181

In civil rights action brought against city police officers to require destruction of lists of automobile license numbers allegedly recorded by defendants during meeting of state gay conference, district court would certify the class of all persons whose numbers were taken by police officers. Cyr v. Walls, N.D.Tex.1977, 439 F.Supp. 697. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Plaintiffs challenging constitutionality of McKinney's N.Y. Correction Law § 213 and practices of the New York Parole Board for class would be allowed to maintain action as a class action on behalf of all individuals under the control and jurisdiction of the New York State Department of Correctional Services who had been either denied parole or who will soon become eligible for parole consideration and a subclass would be allowed composed of all black and Spanish surnamed individuals under control of and jurisdiction of the Department of Correctional Services who had either been denied parole or who will soon become eligible for parole consideration. Cicero v. Olgiati, S.D.N.Y.1976, 410 F.Supp. 1080, motion denied 426 F.Supp. 1210, motion denied 426 F.Supp. 1213. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Class represented in civil rights action which was brought by two juveniles civilly committed to state camps upon being adjudicated delinquent or in need of supervision and which challenged the constitutionality of certain camp practices included all minors who were civilly committed to such camps and who were required to participate in programs similar to those complained of by class representatives. King v. Carey, W.D.N.Y.1975, 405 F.Supp. 41. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

In interests of justice, defendant class in civil rights action against school boards would be amended, sua sponte, to include the "members" of all such school boards which maintained allegedly discriminatory policies with regard to maternity leave for pregnant teachers. Paxman v. Wilkerson, E.D.Va.1975, 390 F.Supp. 442. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Civil rights action by individual plaintiffs for declaratory and injunctive relief against alleged discriminatory employment practices in police department was maintainable, upon fulfillment of numerosity and commonality requirements, on behalf of all present black employees of police department and all future employees and applicants for employment with department, but was not maintainable on behalf of all black persons residing in the city entitled to police protection and all past black employees and applicants for employment with police department. Richmond Black Police Officers Ass'n v. City of Richmond, E.D.Va.1974, 386 F.Supp. 151. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

It was not too difficult to ascertain identity of members to certify proposed class in § 1983 action of all persons strip searched at county jail during specified time who were arrested for misdemeanor or ordinance offenses unrelated to weapons or illegal drugs on theory meaning of strip search was broad and subjective and inquiry into merits of case would be necessary to determine whether class member was strip searched, but class definition would be amended by court to clarify meaning of strip search; Seventh Circuit had defined strip search as visual inspection of naked person without intrusion into body cavities, policy of county sheriff's department that led to suit was similar, and subjective purpose of officers involved was not relevant to whether strip search had occurred. Blihovde v. St. Croix County, Wis., W.D.Wis.2003, 219 F.R.D. 607, subsequent determination 2003 WL 23200374 . Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Alleged subclasses consisting of litigants of moderate or modest means represented by unincorporated association of attorneys and all persons of advanced age or in minority and underprivileged groups, in civil rights action alleging violation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 6 and 14 in failure of state to provide adequate court facilities, in addition to lacking identity of interests, were set out in terms too vague to define the class. Ad Hoc Committee on Judicial Administration v. Com. of Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1973, 488 F.2d 1241, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2389, 416 U.S. 986, 40 L.Ed.2d 763. Federal Civil Procedure 181

In context of motion for class certification in action under state and federal law challenging manner in which city administered and scored detectives' promotional exam, subclasses would have to be certified if blacks and hispanics as well as whites were part of proposed plaintiff class and if proposed class consisted of both officers who did advance to oral portion of exam and those who did not; complaint in part alleged that scores were weighted in favor of blacks and hispanics, and there could be antagonism if those races were in single class with white officers, and arguments of officers who did or did not proceed to oral portion could diverge. Majeske v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1990, 740 F.Supp. 1350. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

Subclass of alleged discriminatees which would be allowed to come forward on claim for alleged employment discrimination brought against city fire department under this section could not include persons whose individual claims had become barred, as of date action was filed in district court, by applicable California statute of limitations applying to actions for liability upon a statute. League of United Latin American Citizens v. City of Salinas Fire Dept., N.D.Cal.1980, 88 F.R.D. 533. Federal Civil Procedure 176

In class action, brought under this section challenging constitutionality of state statute which requires certain residents to obtain court permission before they can marry, brought against defendant class of county clerks, all of whom were required by W.S.A. 245.10(1, 4, 5), to refuse to issue marriage licenses to members of class of plaintiffs without court order, no prejudgment notice to members of either class was required by either rule 23, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure, Title 28, or due process; however, notice of judgment would be provided to members of defendant class. Redhail v. Zablocki, E.D.Wis.1976, 418 F.Supp. 1061, probable jurisdiction noted 97 S.Ct. 1096, 429 U.S. 1089, 51 L.Ed.2d 534, affirmed 98 S.Ct. 673, 434 U.S. 374, 54 L.Ed.2d 618. Constitutional Law 309(1.5); Federal Civil Procedure 177.1

An action brought for injunctive and ancillary relief from discrimination in employment is properly maintainable as a class action under class action provision relating to actions for injunctive relief and does not require notice of opportunity to opt out of the class. Oburn v. Shapp, E.D.Pa.1975, 393 F.Supp. 561, affirmed 521 F.2d 142. Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

In civil rights action against defendants who had allegedly refused to rent to Negroes and who thereby denied to Caucasian residents opportunity to live in integrated housing, initial and primary issues central to both class claims was whether defendants violated this section in which event equitable relief would be forthcoming, and issue of money damages would be determined if such initial violations were established; notice to class would also be dispensed with until after adjudication on question of liability. Harris v. Dumont Co., Inc., E.D.Pa.1973, 61 F.R.D. 423. Civil Rights 1453; Civil Rights 1462; Federal Civil Procedure 186.15

4629. Conditional certification, class actions

Civil rights action challenging various aspects of procedures by which housing authority and its officials were instituting summary process actions for eviction of tenants for nonpayment of rent would be conditionally certified as a class action on behalf of class consisting of all of the authority's tenants against whom summary process actions were filed with specified return date. New Haven Tenants' Representative Council, Inc. v. Housing Authority of City of New Haven, D.C.Conn.1975, 390 F.Supp. 831. Federal Civil Procedure 181

4630. Decertification, class actions

That factual determinations pertaining to individual class members would be necessary did not preclude court from aiding class to obtain its just restitution, and where it would be necessary for court in each case to determine only whether student was Pennsylvania resident at time of paying nonresident tuition and, if so, amount of restitution due, class was not unmanageable on restitution issue and, at least without investigation into possible use of subclasses, decertification of class was error. Samuel v. University of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 538 F.2d 991. Federal Civil Procedure 187.5

Where original, individual plaintiff in inmates' civil rights class action was a proper representative of the class at time of certification, intervenor plaintiff's subsequent escape from correctional center did not require the decertification of class action. Doe v. Lally, D.C.Md.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1339. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4631. Relation back of certification, class actions

Where six days after welfare recipient and welfare rights organization filed class action suit challenging Pennsylvania emergency assistance regulations plaintiff recipient received a payment which solved her exigent needs, and thereafter four other individuals filed motion to intervene as plaintiffs, and although "sum" of claims of intervenors had been remedied the issue presented was capable of repetition, yet evading review, certification of class related back to the time of the complaint and class had standing to sue. Williams v. Wohlgemuth, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 540 F.2d 163. Federal Civil Procedure 189

4632. Particular actions maintainable, class actions

County jail detainees' §§1983 action, alleging that sheriff's department had required them to sleep on cell floors while detained, was maintainable as class action on basis that department had "acted ... on grounds generally applicable to the class"; department was alleged to have floor-sleeping policy that was generally applicable to all detainees, and class comprised present and future detainees as well as former ones, so that injunctive relief was appropriate. Thomas v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 231 F.R.D. 397. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Class certification was appropriate in civil rights action challenging constitutionality of Nevada procedural rule for use in death penalty cases brought by defendant charged with death penalty offense on behalf of all individuals who were or would be directly subjected to rule; class consisted of infinite and uncertain amount of members, questions of law or fact common to class existed, typicality existed, representation was adequate, prosecution of separate actions would create risk of inconsistent adjudications or substantially impair ability of subsequent plaintiff to protect his interests, and party opposing class acted on grounds applicable to all criminal defendants facing rule. Riley v. Nevada Supreme Court, D.Nev.1991, 763 F.Supp. 446. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

For purposes of certification as class action, pleadings and stipulations in action by utility customer against members of utility board alleging deprivation of constitutional right under color of law were sufficient to establish that joinder of all members of proposed class was impractical, that there were questions of law or fact common to the class, that representative customer would fairly and adequately protect interest of class and that claims of representative customer were typical of those of the entire class. Bradford v. Edelstein, S.D.Tex.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1361. Federal Civil Procedure 219

Rock concert patrons satisfied prerequisite for bringing class action challenging constitutionality of warrantless searches of patrons of rock concerts at public auditorium on behalf of that class of persons who have and will attend rock concerts at auditorium and who have been and will be subject to searches. Stroeber v. Commission Veteran's Auditorium, S.D.Iowa 1977, 453 F.Supp. 926. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Action brought against state official alleging unconstitutionality of statute requiring law enforcement officers to seize and immobilize vehicles of persons who have been arrested for second offense of operating motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol (OMVI) was maintainable as class action under rule permitting class action to be maintained when defendants have acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to class. Putnam v. Davies, S.D.Ohio 1996, 169 F.R.D. 89. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Class would be certified in lawsuit challenging state's policy of placing minors over 12 years of age on waiting list between time state court signed order committing minor to Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation (DMH/MR) and time minor was taken into physical custody in state institution to include "all minors over the age of 12 years old who have been or will be ordered committed to the custody of the Alabama Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation and who are or will be placed on a waiting list for admission to a DMH/MR facility." D.W. by M.J. on Behalf of D.W. v. Poundstone, M.D.Ala.1996, 165 F.R.D. 661, affirmed 113 F.3d 1214 . Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Class certification, in action challenging municipal judge's general order authorizing impoundment of vehicles for certain nonmoving violations and impoundment of plaintiff's vehicle, was not appropriate, where plaintiff provided no detailed guidance how class was to be defined or identified, plaintiff did not establish commonality and typicality requirements in light of wide range of infractions which triggered impoundment, and plaintiff did not support claim of numerousness with reliable standards or estimates. Coleman v. Watt, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 40 F.3d 255. Federal Civil Procedure 181

District court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion for class certification by motorists challenging constitutionality of Hawaii statute providing for administrative revocation of driver's licenses for driving while intoxicated; any possible plaintiffs either would have license revocation proceedings pending in state court, in which case Younger abstention would apply, or would be collaterally attacking final state judgments, in which case Rooker-Feldman doctrine would apply. Aiona v. Judiciary of State of Hawaii, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1994, 17 F.3d 1244 . Federal Civil Procedure 181

Class certification was denied to suit under this section brought by pro se Virginia state prisoner seeking to sue on behalf of all persons confined in all of the Virginia prisons. Hummer v. Dalton, C.A.4 (Va.) 1981, 657 F.2d 621. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Where there was no evidence of intentional discrimination on part of city, plaintiff's complaint had to be that implementation of test did in fact disqualify more blacks than whites from job and should be banned regardless of presence or absence of intent to disqualify a disproportionate number of blacks and to meet the challenge city had to show with respect to each job category at issue that test was substantially related to one's performance in position sought, and class treatment for all 20 job classifications under attack was inappropriate. Cooper v. Allen,

C.A.5 (Ga.) 1972, 467 F.2d 836, on remand. Civil Rights 1405; Federal Civil Procedure 184.10

Certification of class of plaintiffs harmed by inclusion of race in profile used to support probable cause affidavit to justify search warrant was inappropriate in individual plaintiff's § 1983 action, in light of individuality of probable cause determinations; suspect could not establish numerosity, typicality or commonality. Simmons v. Baker, E.D.Va.1994, 842 F.Supp. 883, reversed in part 47 F.3d 1370. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Civil rights action filed by patients who had been involuntarily committed involved fact-specific inquiry into whether patients were dangerous to themselves or others and, therefore, action was not appropriate for certification as class action. Rubenstein v. Benedictine Hosp., N.D.N.Y.1992, 790 F.Supp. 396. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Proposed class of taxpayers for industrial, commercial or residential real estate who filed specific objections challenging taxes, paid the challenged taxes and obtained a refund of the challenged taxes would not be certified as a class because it would have included not only those taxpayers who received a refund after their claims were tried to judgment but also those who received a refund pursuant to settlement, and because latter group could not be included in the class since the court would have to examine the facts of each settled case to determine whether state violated this section in connection with the assessment. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Cook County, N.D.Ill.1982, 531 F.Supp. 1003. Federal Civil Procedure 181

Class treatment of challenge to routine strip and cavity searches of inmates before and after court appearances and visitations was inappropriate, in light of fact that constitutionality of individual searches was fact-specific inquiry that depended upon why each inmate was searched and security risks presented, and the issue of damages would necessitate particularized and fact-specific inquiries. Klein v. DuPage County, N.D.Ill.1988, 119 F.R.D. 29. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

4634. Settlements

Allocation of cumulative sum certain for distribution to all class members who submitted claims was fair method of distribution in settlement of §§ 1983 action against District of Columbia Department of Corrections challenging Department's strip-search policy, even though class members would not know size of their individual awards until all claims had been processed; allocation method permitted Department to be certain of its liability. Bynum v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 73. Compromise And Settlement 61

Preliminary approval of proposed settlement was warranted in §§1983 action against District of Columbia Department of Corrections challenging Department's policy of conducting suspicionless strip searches of inmates declared releasable after court appearances, and challenging alleged over-detentions; terms of proposed agreement served best interests of class members as well as applicable civil procedure rule and due process, including payment of $12 million to members and their attorneys and for costs of injunctive relief that included plan to henceforth divert inmates ordered released to secure location outside jail's open population where they would not be subject to suspicionless strip searches. Bynum v. Government of Dist. of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 384 F.Supp.2d 342, subsequent determination 412 F.Supp.2d 73. Constitutional Law 309(1.5)

4661. Duty of court, complaint

When examining suit brought under § 1983 it is duty of court to examine whether plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts which, if proved, would comprise actionable deprivation of federal right. Waldron v. Rotzler, N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 763. Civil Rights 1394

Even though complaint in civil rights action frames the action in terms of civil conspiracy, the court examines other possible theories of recovery, including statutory action for deprivation of rights under this section, in accordance with its duty to examine complaint to determine if there were grounds for relief on any possible theory. Huey v. Barloga, N.D.Ill.1967, 277 F.Supp. 864. Federal Civil Procedure 1829

Though state prisoner complaining that custody in Maryland House of Correction violated U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, that U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 protected right to demonstrate or protest in manner involved, and that he was deprived of constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities had not selected statute under which relief could be granted, district court had duty to frame his allegations in terms of appropriate statute. Roberts v. Pepersack, D.C.Md.1966, 256 F.Supp. 415, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 175, 389 U.S. 877, 19 L.Ed.2d 165. Habeas Corpus 670(1)

4662. Prior court approval, complaint

Numerous questionable actions filed by inmate, along with his failure to prosecute those actions diligently, showed abuse of process, warranting requirement that inmate obtain prior court approval before filing future actions under this section. Ferguson v. Dier-Zimmel, E.D.Wis.1992, 809 F.Supp. 668. Injunction 26(3)

4663. Construction of pleadings, complaint--Generally

Terminated firefighter's complaint stated § 1983 claim against Arizona fire district for violation of due process, where liberal reading of firefighter's complaint showed an inference that district, as final policy maker on hiring, acted under color of state law to terminate his employment in violation of his federal rights. Greenawalt v. Sun City West Fire Dist., D.Ariz.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 1200. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Arrestee did not state civil rights claim for violation of his Fourth Amendment rights to be free from use of excessive force and from unreasonable searches by merely alleging violation of those rights, without pleading facts giving rise to alleged violations. Garcia Rodriguez v. Andreu Garcia, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Developer whose complaint asserted § 1983 claim against city for alleged equal protection violation when city failed to approve his redevelopment proposal could not, in response to city's summary judgment motion, assert that his complaint might also contain basis for a First Amendment retaliation claim, where his complaint failed to set forth a short and plain statement of a First Amendment retaliation claim that would give the city fair notice of what his claim was and the grounds upon which it rested, and failed to establish the retaliation claim as a separate count. Klauber v. City of Sarasota, M.D.Fla.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 1263, affirmed 350 F.3d 1301. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Plaintiff's § 1983 Fourth Amendment cause of action for warrantless search and seizure of her former premises could be liberally construed to state claim for use of excessive force in enforcing the writ of possession and as such, that claim did not run afoul of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, providing that federal district courts lack jurisdiction to review state court judgments or to hear constitutional claims that are inextricably intertwined with state court's decision; plaintiff pleaded that, during eviction, deputy sheriff had gun drawn and she was "grabbed" by another deputy, but plaintiff did not allege that she was physically harmed or injured by deputies. Busch v. Torres, C.D.Cal.1995, 905 F.Supp. 766. Courts 509; Federal Courts 221; Federal Courts 244

Employment discrimination complaint mistakenly filed by federal employee under § 1983 would not be construed as complaint under Title VII, though defendants had suffered no prejudice from employee's error. Murray v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, E.D.N.Y.1993, 821 F.Supp. 94, affirmed 14 F.3d 591. Civil Rights 1502

Civil rights complaints are to be liberally construed. Buckey v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 957 F.2d 652, amended on other grounds and superseded on denial of rehearing 968 F.2d 791, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 599, 600, 121 L.Ed.2d 536. Stevens v. Dutchess County, N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1977, 445 F.Supp. 89.

4664. ---- Pro se complaints, construction of pleadings

Prisoner's pro se civil rights complaint, however inartfully pleaded, is held to less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers. Hughes v. Rowe, U.S.Ill.1980, 101 S.Ct. 173, 449 U.S. 5, 66 L.Ed.2d 163.

Handwritten pro se civil rights complaint of prisoner was to be liberally construed and must be held to less stringent standards than formal pleadings by lawyer, and complaint could be dismissed for failure to state a claim only if it appeared beyond doubt that plaintiff could prove no set of facts in support of claim which would entitle him to relief. Estelle v. Gamble, U.S.Tex.1976, 97 S.Ct. 285, 429 U.S. 97, 50 L.Ed.2d 251, rehearing denied 97 S.Ct. 798, 429 U.S. 1066, 50 L.Ed.2d 785, on remand 554 F.2d 653. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(3); Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Where prison inmate who filed civil rights complaint was proceeding pro se, court had to construe complaint with particular generosity in deciding whether it could properly be dismissed as failing to state claim. Davis v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 320 F.3d 346. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(3)

Inmate's pleading in civil rights action would be interpreted liberally, as he filed complaint pro se and continued pro se on appeal. Swoboda v. Dubach, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 992 F.2d 286, on remand 1995 WL 530601. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate's pro se claim for retaliation against prison employees under §§1983 satisfied rule requiring a complaint to contain a short and plain statement of the claim; inmate alleged several attacks and threats on his life as specific factual instances of retaliation against him because he had filed grievances, including attempted bodily injury and threats on his life. Hernandez v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 537. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Where inmate represents himself pro se in § 1983 action, court holds his pleadings to less stringent standard than that applied to lawyers. Barber v. Grow, E.D.Pa.1996, 929 F.Supp. 820. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(1)

Allegations did not support § 1983 claim against prison officials for alleged retaliation when in addition to alleging that officials punished his disciplinary infractions unduly harshly to retaliate for his filing of petition for writ of habeas corpus and prison grievances, state inmate attached to complaint documents which dispelled any reasonable inference that officials punished inmate for exercising constitutionally protected right by showing that nature of inmate's disciplinary offenses, pending conduct reports, and inmate's poor behavior justified punishments imposed. Sanders v. Bertrand, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 442, 2003 WL 21490953, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7) proceedings was appropriate, where it was patently obvious plaintiff could not prevail on facts alleged, as his conclusory allegations merely reflected his frustration and reiterated his grievances, and plaintiff's litigation history indicated that allowing him to amend his complaint would have been futile. Collins v. Johnson County, KS, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2002, 56 Fed.Appx. 852, 2003 WL 42164, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(2); Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6; Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Court would sanction county employee under Rule 11, and permit county to recover attorney fees from employee, for employee's filing of frivolous § 1983 action premised on claim that employee was fired after running for public office, in alleged violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendment, where employee did not allege that the county engaged in viewpoint discrimination as a matter of policy. Nisenbaum v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 333 F.3d 804. Federal Civil Procedure 2771(5); Federal Civil Procedure 2814

Section 1983 action by county employee against county executive for allegedly having a role in the abolition of his job based on his running for office was frivolous, warranting Rule 11 sanctions; executive's only role was transmitting budget from employer to county board, after which board eliminated employee's position, and though caselaw held that officials could not be held liable under § 1983 for introducing legislation, employee ignored the subject and claimed that executive should remain party to suit "on the off-chance" that he knew of department director's supposed antipathy to employee's running for office, without distinguishing precedent. Nisenbaum v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 333 F.3d 804. Federal Civil Procedure 2771(5)

County employee's § 1983 action against his department director's deputy, department's human resources manager, and his supervisor was frivolous, warranting imposition of Rule 11 sanctions; employee claimed that the abolition of his job position was in retaliation for running for office, but conceded that the individuals in question did not know of his intent to run for office, that his job position was replaced by another position prior to his running for office, and that defendants could not have hired him for replacement position since he had not applied for job. Nisenbaum v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 333 F.3d 804. Federal Civil Procedure 2771(5)

Civil rights complaint, filed in forma pauperis, may be dismissed as frivolous if it lacks arguable basis in law or fact. Siglar v. Hightower, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 112 F.3d 191. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prisoner's § 1983 complaint alleging only negligence in connection with his fall in bathroom, and no violation of Constitution or federal law, lacked an arguable basis in law and was properly dismissed as frivolous. Walker v. Reed, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 104 F.3d 156. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

When screening prisoners' civil rights actions to determine whether action is frivolous or malicious, fails to state claim upon which relief may be granted, or seeks monetary relief against defendant who is immune from such relief, district courts apply same standard as when addressing motion to dismiss complaint for failure to state claim. Baltoski v. Pretorius, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 807. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pro se litigant's § 1983 action against Georgia trial and appellate judges and opposing party's attorney, arising from litigant's unsuccessful state-court action challenging Florida foreclosure judgment, was patently frivolous and warranted dismissal with prejudice, where litigant alleged that because he had proceeded in state-court action only as trustee of property at issue, state's trial and appellate courts lacked personal jurisdiction over him individually, and therefore judges and attorney were required to pay him $1,500,000 in damages for treating him as individual in those proceedings. Johnson v. Barnes, S.D.Ga.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 1297. Civil Rights 1056

State inmate's appeal was not taken in good faith, and thus inmate could not proceed in forma pauperis on appeal of district court order dismissing his §§ 1983 action as frivolous, where inmate's final complaint consisted solely of conclusory allegations and failed to present any legal theory or specific fact that could conceivably amount to

State prisoner's § 1983 action against prison officials was frivolous, so that dismissal was warranted under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); complaint did not allege with particularity how or when any of the 20 named defendants engaged in the allegedly unconstitutional acts. Gadlin v. Watkins, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 93 Fed.Appx. 204, 2004 WL 474010, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pro se state prisoner's action against assistant state district attorney and unnamed employee of United States Attorney's Office pursuant to § 1983 and Bivens, respectively, alleging that they failed to turn over certain pieces of physical evidence in state criminal prosecution in violation of due process, was frivolous, warranting dismissal under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); prisoner's right to review physical evidence that may have been exculpatory, material to his defense, or used by prosecution in its case in chief, was scrupulously protected at his criminal trial. Pitera v. Mintz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 733, 2003 WL 174623, Unreported, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1327722. Civil Rights 1395(7); United States 50.20

Section 1983 complaint against state court arising from plaintiff's dissatisfaction with state court proceedings and the distribution of property following his mother's death was frivolous, warranting its dismissal. Sidles v. Nebraska Court of Appeals, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2000, 221 F.3d 1343, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Arrestee's conviction for offense for which he was arrested was complete defense in his subsequent § 1983 action against arresting officers asserting that his arrest and detention were without probable cause. Bell v. McCord, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 221 F.3d 1341, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(4)

4666. Conclusory allegations, complaint

Allegations, in action under §§§§ 1983 and 1988, that police officers conspired to violate arrestee's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, were wholly conclusory and therefore were inadequate to state a claim; arrestee's counsel admitted that claim was thinly developed. Pena-Borrero v. Estremeda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 365 F.3d 7. Conspiracy 18

Conclusory statement in complaint brought against county school board by student who had been sexually assaulted by teacher that she was suing county by and through county board of education was insufficient to state claim under federal civil rights statute; student failed to articulate or plead any policy which was attributable to county itself. Doe v. Claiborne County, Tenn. By and Through Claiborne County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 495. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Minimal and conclusory allegations were insufficient to state § 1983 claim for alleged First Amendment free speech violation. Dumas v. Kipp, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 90 F.3d 386. Civil Rights 1394

District court's failure to order civil rights plaintiffs to file either statement of facts or reply to defendant's assertion of qualified immunity, where plaintiffs' initial complaint pleaded only conclusions, was clear error; remand to allow plaintiffs opportunity to amend their pleadings was not required, however, as circumstances indicated that plaintiffs had pleaded their best case. Morin v. Caire, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 77 F.3d 116, 144 A.L.R. Fed. 719. Civil Rights 1398; Federal Courts 946

Section 1983 complaint based on suicide of individual in jail cell failed to state claim upon which relief could be granted, even under liberal standard for notice pleading, as it was entirely conclusory, and gave no idea what acts individual defendants were accused of that could result in liability; claims were apparently asserted against more than 20 defendants, including municipalities, police officers, jail officials, mayors and city council members, with no indication of their involvement. Frey v. City of Herculaneum, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 44 F.3d 667. Civil Rights

Mere conclusory allegations of deprivation of civil rights are insufficient to withstand motion to dismiss. Dillard v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 961 F.2d 1148, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1046, 506 U.S. 1079, 122 L.Ed.2d 355. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Prisoner's conclusory allegations of intent with respect to destruction of religious items confiscated from him were insufficient to state civil rights claim based on intentional destruction of his property in violation of due process. Hall v. Bellmon, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 935 F.2d 1106. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Arrestee who was subsequently discovered to have suffered stroke failed to state Fourth Amendment claim against county arising from arrest for driving while intoxicated based on conclusory allegations that county failed to train and monitor its officers and acquiesced in their civil rights violation. Aguilera v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 320. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Unsupported and conclusory allegation that the chief of a fire district instructed the district's auditor and moderator regarding the conduct of the district's annual meeting and approved all of his actions was an insufficient basis on which to hold the chief liable for the moderator's actions at the meeting, which firefighters claimed violated their First Amendment rights; both the chief and the moderator testified at their depositions that, although they knew each other, they did not speak about the conduct of the meeting. Carlow v. Mruk, D.R.I.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 225. Municipal Corporations 196

Conclusory allegations by pro se state prisoner that an independent laboratory could find that the water at the prison was contaminated and that the food at the prison was nutritionally inadequate or unsanitary were insufficient to avoid grant of summary judgment in favor of prison officials, in prisoner's §§ 1983 conditions of confinement claim, absent any evidence that water was contaminated, that anyone became ill from drinking the water or eating the food, or that food was lacking in nutritional value. MacLeod v. Kern, D.Mass.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 103. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Conclusory allegations, that counsel for opponent in state lawsuit acted "in concert with the state court Minute Clerk," that the Minute Clerk "participated with and assisted" counsel, and that their "actions were materially and affirmatively aided" by her, were inadequate to state claim in lawsuit under §§ 1983 for conspiracy with state actors to deprive plaintiffs of their right of due process. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend 14; Guimbellot v. Rowell, E.D.La.2004, 356 F.Supp.2d 644. Conspiracy 18

Police officers, who alleged First Amendment retaliation claims against policymakers for engaging in protected speech or union activities, failed to state claim against township under § 1983 based on failure to train theory where complaint was entirely conclusory and did not allege that the need for more or different training was so obvious and so likely to lead to the violation of constitutional rights that the township's failure to respond amounted to deliberate indifference. Bradshaw v. Township of Middletown, D.N.J.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 526, affirmed 145 Fed.Appx. 763, 2005 WL 2077137. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Conclusory allegations that state university employees failed to take preventative action in response to repeated reports of sexual harassment by soccer coach were sufficient to state claim against them for supervisory liability under § 1983. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 1395(2)

District Attorney and County Detective were not liable to teacher under § 1983 for alleged defamatory statements related to letter sent by County Detective to school principal which addressed investigation of teacher's alleged sexual misconduct with student; teacher's complaint did not allege more than state law causes of action, teacher did not say that he was fired from his job as teacher as result of County Detective's letter to principal, nor did he articulate any facts in complaint that he suffered specific adverse employment action, but rather merely alleged in conclusory fashion that he "ha [d] sustained and [would] continue to sustain loss of income, loss of earning capacity." Manion v. Sarcione, E.D.Pa.2001, 192 F.Supp.2d 353. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1395(5)

Conclusory allegation that university president's decision to go against recommendation of faculty grievance committee and terminate contract of nontenured instructor was result of bias against instructor was insufficient to state claim under § 1983 for due process violation. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Single, conclusory allegations of conspiracy advanced by personal representative of decedent's estate in civil rights claims against attorney for estate claimant and District of Columbia superior court judge, which asserted that attorney and judge conspired in underlying estate action to deprive her of constitutional rights, without alleging facts in support of conspiracy, and which suggested that personal representative lacked direct knowledge of conspiracy, were too vague to meet minimal pleading requirements and heightened pleading standard for governmental conspiracy claims. Burt v. Barry, D.D.C.1997, 962 F.Supp. 185, appeal dismissed 1997 WL 573477 . Conspiracy 18

Even pro se § 1983 complaint must be dismissed if it contains only conclusory, vague, or general allegations of conspiracy to deprive person of constitutional rights. Jemzura v. Public Service Com'n, N.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 406. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(2)

Pro se claimant could not maintain actionable § 1983 claim based on alleged conspiracy to deprive claimant of his constitutional right to fair trial where he failed to provide more than conclusory allegations. Molina v. Kaye, E.D.N.Y.1996, 956 F.Supp. 261. Conspiracy 18

Even if defendant's claim based on alleged constitutional violations in state court convictions was not dismissed on ground that habeas corpus was sole possible federal relief, defendant did not establish actionable § 1983 claim where he made only conclusory statements and offered no factual support for his claim of conspiracy by former governor and state to build more prisons and segregate minorities that resulted in his unconstitutional conviction. Molina v. State of N.Y., E.D.N.Y.1995, 956 F.Supp. 257. Conspiracy 18

Plaintiff in § 1983 action must state with factual detail and particularity basis for claim which necessarily includes why defendant-official cannot successfully maintain defense of qualified immunity; plaintiff must plead specific facts, not merely conclusory allegations. Baker v. Putnal, S.D.Tex.1994, 865 F.Supp. 389, affirmed in part, reversed in part 75 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1398

Delinquent taxpayers' conclusory allegations, that county sheriff and justice of the peace had conspired with tax sale purchasers to deprive taxpayers of their home, were not sufficiently specific and factually based to state claim under federal civil rights statute. Hirsch v. Copenhaver, D.Wyo.1993, 839 F.Supp. 1524, affirmed 46 F.3d 1151. Conspiracy 18

Conclusory claims that fire investigators conspired to abridge homeowners' Fourth Amendment rights were insufficient to withstand judgment on the pleadings. Stanley v. City of Norton, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 305, 2005 WL 65522, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint against university, whose employees allegedly carried out medical experiments in racially discriminatory manner, failed to state § 1983 claim absent nonconclusory allegation such discrimination was carried out pursuant to university policy, custom or practice. Johnson ex rel. Johnson v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22743675, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(2)

State inmate's civil rights conspiracy claims could not be dismissed under statute requiring district court to screen civil actions by prisoners seeking redress from government entities or employees on grounds that allegations were too vague or conclusory, in that complaint was required only to state claim, and not to plead facts which, if true, would establish claim's validity. McMillian v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 438, 2003 WL 21489717, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

Unspecific, conclusory, and unsupported allegations were insufficient to support § 1983 conspiracy claim. Silverman v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 64 Fed.Appx. 799, 2003 WL 1970472, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

Allegations that police chief and officer combined together in form of orchestrated conspiracy and entered into plan to punish plaintiff, another officer, and to threaten, intimidate and coerce plaintiff into relinquishing constitutional rights granted to him, and that conduct was combination entered into for unlawful purpose and employed unlawful means in attempting to procure same, were conclusory and, as such, insufficient to support § 1983 civil conspiracy action against chief and officer. Rosenfeld v. Egy, D.Mass.2003, 2003 WL 222119, Unreported, affirmed 346 F.3d 11. Conspiracy 18

Arrestee's § 1983 complaint asserting a bare claim for injunctive relief against a prosecutor who gave advice to a police officer setting bail lacked any allegations that showed the arrestee's standing to seek such relief, e.g., that he remained in custody pursuant to the officer's bail determination, or that there was a real or immediate threat that he would be wronged again by the prosecutor improperly ordering or advising an officer in connection with setting bail for the arrestee. Sanchez v. Doyle, D.Conn.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 266. Civil Rights 1331(4)

4668. Motive, complaint

Former school director for adult education program stated § 1983 claim against Department of Education of Puerto Rico and its officials for political discrimination, in particular the motivation element of such claim, by alleging that her education contract was not renewed "because of her administrative identification" to past New Progressive Party (NPP) Administration. Hatfield Bermudez v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 383. Civil Rights 1395(8)

4669. Color of law, complaint

Card dealer failed to state cause of action under § 1983 in complaint against National Indian Gaming Commission (NGIC) and its chairman, arising from suspension of her gaming license without hearing and tribe's failure to adopt certain gaming ordinance, where complaint alleged only actions taken under color of federal law. Hartman v. Kickapoo Tribe Gaming Com'n, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 319 F.3d 1230. Civil Rights 1327

Account holder's claim against bank and bank's chief executive officer (CEO) for violation of account holder's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, based upon defendants' alleged failure to return original cancelled checks to account holder, was barred, absent allegations that defendants violated a civil rights statute, and that they were government actors or acting under state or federal law when alleged violations were committed. Smartt v. First Union National Bank, M.D.Fla.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 1229. Civil Rights 1041; Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(4)

4670. Pending state proceedings, complaint

If criminal charges against state prisoner resulting from defendants' allegedly unlawful conduct were no longer pending against prisoner, he failed to state cause of action in complaint under § 1983, where he failed to allege that such charges were terminated in his favor. Peralta v. Leavitt, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 56 Fed.Appx. 534, 2003 WL 151262, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

State prisoner sufficiently alleged prior to pre-trial evidentiary hearing in §§ 1983 action that he was denied his blood-pressure medication for the nine days he spent in isolation, and, thus, district court abused its discretion in disallowing testimony at the evidentiary hearing as to such a claim; prisoner's original complaint and its attachments indicated that corrections officers denied him prescribed "treatment," and a supporting brief filed the same day as the original complaint and an amended complaint alleged that prisoner had requested treatment from the corrections officers because he was experiencing high-blood-pressure symptoms, the nurse needed to check his blood pressure, and he may have needed to take some of his blood-pressure medication. Munn v. Toney, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 433 F.3d 1087. Civil Rights 1397

For purpose of determining applicability of the state-created or enhanced danger doctrine in § 1983 action against deputy sheriffs by students wounded in high school library shooting, for alleged substantive due process violation based on alleged improper responses to armed attack on the school by other students and lack of rescue efforts, plaintiff students did not sufficiently allege that the deputies acted recklessly in conscious disregard of the known and obvious danger that the armed students would attack the persons in the library; there were no allegations supporting inference that the deputies harbored intent to harm the library students, and in light of the rapidly developing and unpredictable crisis, the deputies' decisions could not be viewed as unreasonable. Schnurr v. Board of County Com'rs of Jefferson County, D.Colo.2001, 189 F.Supp.2d 1105. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1)

4672. Prayer for relief, complaint

Welfare applicant's failure to ask for eligibility determination hearing under Medicaid Catastrophic Care Act (MCCA) was not fatal to her §§ 1983 claim challenging revised Medicaid eligibility rules of Colorado Department of Health Care Policy and Financing, which permitted consideration of self-funded retirement accounts. Houghton ex rel. Houghton v. Reinertson, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 382 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1321

Pro se prisoner's prayer for "such other relief as it may appear plaintiff is entitled" would be viewed as prayer for nominal damages in §§ 1983 action alleging Eighth Amendment violations; prisoner's brief on appeal made clear he was seeking nominal damages. Calhoun v. DeTella, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 319 F.3d 936, on remand 2003 WL 1964248. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4673. Specificity of allegations, complaint--Generally

Private health care provider who contracted with county to provide medical care to county jail inmates was not entitled to assert a qualified immunity defense, in § 1983 action brought by executor of estate of county jail inmate who died of acute renal failure while incarcerated, as provider was non-governmental entity; thus, executor was not required to satisfy the heightened pleading requirements for the § 1983 action. Swann v. Southern Health Partners, Inc., C.A.11 (Ala.) 2004, 388 F.3d 834. Civil Rights 1373; Civil Rights 1398

Individual who was involuntarily committed failed to include in her complaint any language or facts from which an inference could be drawn that hospital in which she was committed had a policy or custom of illegal involuntary commitments, as required to state claim under §§ 1983 against hospital. Crumpley-Patterson v. Trinity Lutheran Hosp., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 388 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Heightened pleading requirement exists for complaints charging violations of federal civil rights statute, and the complaint must state specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations. Colle v. Brazos County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 237. Civil Rights 1394

Section 1983 plaintiff must comply with heightened pleading requirements and state with factual detail and particularity the basis of its claim; mere conclusory allegations and bold assertions are insufficient to meet this heightened standard. Streetman v. Jordan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 918 F.2d 555, rehearing denied 923 F.2d 851. Civil Rights 1394

That individual plaintiff failed to specifically allege a claim under this section covering deprivation of civil rights did not operate to preclude him from recovering on that claim in event allegations showed and proof supported claim. Greene v. City of Memphis, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1976, 535 F.2d 976. Federal Civil Procedure 674

Section 1983 only provides method for vindicating federal rights elsewhere conferred; it does not create any substantive rights, and thus one cannot go into court and claim a violation of §§ 1983, for §§ 1983 by itself does not protect anyone against anything. Alberti v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 151. Civil Rights 1305

Owners, employees, and customers of Latino-owned business who brought §§ 1983 action against city and police officers, stemming from execution of search warrant at premises, failed to match their claims to specific officers, and thus officers would be properly dismissed from action; complaint was overbroad in stating that all officers were engaged in certain violations, and personnel from county and federal agencies also participated in raid. Panaderia La Diana, Inc. v. Salt Lake City Corp., D.Utah 2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 1013. Civil Rights 1395(6)

State employee who had worked as chief legal counsel for Wisconsin Department of Revenue alleged sufficient facts to suggest that Department Secretary violated his procedural due process rights in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment by demoting him to position of attorney without pre-deprivation hearing; even though complaint did not contain sufficient facts to allow determination of whether Secretary's conduct was predictable and consequently preventable by pre-deprivation procedures, complaint was not required to contain all the elements of procedural due process claim. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2003, 304 F.Supp.2d 1100. Civil Rights 1395(8)

A § 1983 complaint need not allege all that a plaintiff must eventually prove. Jones v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 61. Civil Rights 1397

Employees stated a claim for gender discrimination under § 1983 against the District of Columbia Department of Corrections related to their termination of employment by alleging that the department had a long standing policy of favoring male employees and not favoring female employees in hiring, working conditions, promotions, and firing. Jones v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 61. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Although plaintiff has considerable leeway in framing complaint, § 1983 plaintiff must allege with some specificity facts which make out his claim; some factual detail in pleadings is necessary to adjudication of § 1983 claims, particularly in cases involving qualified immunity, where court must determine whether defendant's actions violated clearly established right. Connor v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center, M.D.Fla.2001, 135 F.Supp.2d 1198, affirmed 45 Fed.Appx. 878, 2002 WL 1423597, for text, see 2002 WL 32290997. Civil Rights 1394; Civil Rights 1398

Complaints based on civil rights statutes must include specific allegations of facts showing violation of rights "instead of a litany of general conclusions that shock but have no meaning." X-Men Sec., Inc. v. Pataki, E.D.N.Y.1997, 983 F.Supp. 101, on reconsideration, reversed 196 F.3d 56. Civil Rights 1394

Heightened pleading standard is applied to suits seeking § 1983 damages against government officials; pleading must contain enough specificity to give defendant notice of nature of claim, so he or she can respond and move for judgment on basis of qualified immunity if applicable. Coller v. State of Mo., Dept. of Economic Development, W.D.Mo.1997, 965 F.Supp. 1270. Civil Rights 1398

Unsupported allegations which fail to specify in detail factual basis necessary to enable defendants intelligently to prepare their defense will not suffice to sustain claim of governmental conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of their constitutional rights. Burt v. Barry, D.D.C.1997, 962 F.Supp. 185, appeal dismissed 1997 WL 573477. Conspiracy 18

Civil rights complaint containing conclusory, vague, and general allegations of conspiracy will be dismissed as insufficient. Searcy v. Singletary, M.D.Fla.1995, 894 F.Supp. 1565, affirmed 87 F.3d 1329. Conspiracy 18

Dismissal is not appropriate if pro se litigant's pleadings, when liberally construed, would support existence of cause of action under § 1983, even if litigant does not specifically assert § 1983 violation. Hunter v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.1994, 867 F.Supp. 496. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(2)

Complaints based on civil rights statutes must include specific allegations of facts showing a violation of rights instead of a litany of general conclusions that shock but have no meaning. Velaire v. City of Schenectady, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1394

Complaints based on civil rights statutes must include specific allegations of facts showing violation of rights instead of litany of general conclusions that "shock" but have no meaning. Waldron v. Rotzler, N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 763. Civil Rights 1394

There are principally two reasons underlying requirement that § 1983 plaintiff must allege with specificity facts giving rise to his complaint: to protect state (or local) officials from deluge of frivolous claims and to allow state (or local) officials sufficient notice of nature of claims against them to enable them to respond. Rogers v. Mount Union Borough by Zook, M.D.Pa.1993, 816 F.Supp. 308. Civil Rights 1394

Plaintiffs in § 1983 actions must plead all facts with particularity and demonstrate specifically how their federal rights have been violated by each defendant. Maxwell v. Henry, S.D.Tex.1993, 815 F.Supp. 213. Civil Rights 1394

General standard for motions to dismiss for failure to state claim upon which relief can be granted is modified in case of civil rights claims brought under § 1983 by adding requirement that complaint contain modicum of factual specificity, identifying particular conduct of defendants that is alleged to have harmed plaintiff. Gilbert v. Feld, E.D.Pa.1992, 788 F.Supp. 854. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

There is added pleading requirement in civil rights cases that complaint contain a modicum of actual specificity, identifying particular conduct of defendant that is alleged to have harmed plaintiff. DeFerro v. Coco, E.D.Pa.1989, 709 F.Supp. 643. Civil Rights 1394

Complaint, which did not contain any allegations or even identify the defendants, failed to state any type of claim, at least in the traditional sense, much less a claim which showed that indigent prisoner was entitled to relief, even though prisoner appeared to be attempting to bring pro se §§ 1983 action seeking replacement of all religious monuments which had been removed from courthouses. Awala v. People Who Want To Restrict Our First Amendment Rights, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 164 Fed.Appx. 215, 2005 WL 3313140, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4674. ---- Heightened standard, specificity of allegations, complaint

Federal court may not apply "heightened pleading standard," more stringent than usual pleading requirements of civil rule, in civil rights cases alleging municipal liability under this section. Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, U.S.Tex.1993, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 507 U.S. 163, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, on remand 993 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1394

Heightened pleading requirements did not apply to state prisoner's pro se civil rights complaint, in which he alleged denial of access to the courts in violation of the due process clause, infliction of cruel and unusual punishment by denying essential medical treatment, and retaliation for seeking to use the legal process to petition for redress of grievances. Thomson v. Washington, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 362 F.3d 969. Civil Rights 1395(7); Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(3)

Plaintiffs asserting § 1983 claims against municipality need only comply with conventional standards of notice pleading and are not required to meet any heightened pleading standard; nevertheless, boilerplate allegations of a municipal policy entirely lacking in factual support are insufficient to state claim. Bills by Bills v. Homer Consol. School Dist. No. 33-C, N.D.Ill.1997, 967 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1394

Heightened pleading standard does not apply to § 1983 claims alleging local government liability. Denno v. School Bd. of Volusia County, M.D.Fla.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1481, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 182 F.3d 780, rehearing granted and vacated 193 F.3d 1178, reversed in part on rehearing 218 F.3d 1267, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 235 F.3d 1347, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 382, 531 U.S. 958, 148 L.Ed.2d 295. Civil Rights 1394

Section 1983 claim may not be held to heightened pleading standard, but must contain more than merely broad based, conclusory statements. Davidson v. Garry, E.D.N.Y.1996, 956 F.Supp. 265, affirmed 112 F.3d 503. Civil Rights 1394

Courts may not apply heightened pleading standard in § 1983 civil rights cases. Mann by Parent v. Meachem, N.D.N.Y.1996, 929 F.Supp. 622. Civil Rights 1394

Federal courts are prohibited from applying "heightened pleadings standard" to § 1983 civil rights cases. Garg v. Albany Indus. Development Agency, N.D.N.Y.1995, 899 F.Supp. 961, affirmed 104 F.3d 351.

Vague and unspecific allegations did not satisfy heightened pleading requirement for federal civil rights claims against government officials. Argon Financial Group v. Marro, D.D.C.1995, 897 F.Supp. 568. Civil Rights 1394

There is no requirement that facts supporting § 1983 claim be pleaded with heightened degree of particularity. Frazier v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1994, 868 F.Supp. 757. Civil Rights 1394

Survivors of person shot by police officer were not required to satisfy heightened pleading standard with regard to their § 1983 suit against city, but were required to meet heightened pleading standard with respect to action against individual defendants. Baker v. Putnal, S.D.Tex.1994, 865 F.Supp. 389, affirmed in part, reversed in part 75 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Federal courts are prohibited from applying heightened pleadings standard to § 1983 cases. Waldron v. Rotzler, N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 763. Civil Rights 1394

Pleadings in § 1983 civil rights suits must set forth more particularized allegations than those normally required by liberal pleading rules in federal civil cases. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1394

4675. ---- Color of law, specificity of allegations, complaint

Allegations that county officials were acting under color of state law when they intercepted and re-directed private parties' electronic communications to other elected officials, and that such conduct was intended to discourage them from exercising their rights to free speech and to petition the government, stated claim under §§ 1983 against county and county officials for violation of private parties' First Amendment rights to freedom of speech and to petition the government for a redress of grievances, even if the communications at issue did not present a public concern. Ferrone v. Onorato, W.D.Pa.2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 442. Counties 146

Allegations by driver involved in collision with vehicle driven by off-duty city police officer, that such officer was at all times material to the complaint acting under color of state law, were sufficient to state §§ 1983 claim. McDorman v. Smith, N.D.Ill.2006, 437 F.Supp.2d 768. Civil Rights 1396

Conclusory allegation, that counsel for opponent in state lawsuit "acted in a capacity normally undertaken by law enforcement personnel" in obtaining what amounted to court order to conduct discovery in the form of testing building for mold, was inadequate to state due process claim in lawsuit under §§ 1983 that counsel acted under color of state law in performing what was traditionally exclusive public function. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend 14; Guimbellot v. Rowell, E.D.La.2004, 356 F.Supp.2d 644. Civil Rights 1396

Developer who alleged that defendants withheld police protection from construction area and withheld zoning decisions with intent to reduce value of his property because of his use of black subcontractors stated a cause of action under § 1983, considering that developer specifically pleaded names of certain persons who allegedly deprived him of his constitutional rights, and clearly pleaded that such persons acted in their official capacities under color of state law. de Furgalski v. Siegel, N.D.Ill.1985, 618 F.Supp. 295. Civil Rights 1395(3)

African-American and Hispanic residents of impoverished and largely minority neighborhood stated a claim of intentional discrimination under Title VI and Equal Protection Clause against New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection (NJDEP) defendants based on their granting application for air permits to operate a proposed cement grinding facility in the neighborhood; residents alleged facts which, if proven true, would show not only that the operation of the cement grinding facility would have a disparate impact upon the predominantly minority community, but also that NJDEP was well-aware of the potential disproportionate and discriminatory burden placed upon that community and failed to take measures to assuage that burden. South Camden Citizens in Action v. New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, D.N.J.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 486. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Employee of state correctional institution failed to plead claim of racial discrimination and conspiracy, when he alluded to specified federal and state statutes in general allegations, but failed to specify which statutes were being relied upon when citing specific instances of discrimination. Clark v. Maryland Dept. of Public Safety and Correctional Services, D.Md.2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 773. Civil Rights 1395(8); Civil Rights 1532; Civil Rights 1740; Conspiracy 18

Allegation that 90% of all persons arrested for shoplifting at department store were African-American or Hispanic was insufficient, without more, to raise inference of discrimination, as required to create prima facie case under §§ 1982 against department store whose shoplifting charges against African-American shopper had been dismissed. Wilson v. McRae's, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 413 F.3d 692. Civil Rights 1406

Former school employee's amended §§ 1983 complaint adequately stated claim for racially discriminatory discharge, insofar as it sufficiently alleged discriminatory motive to overcome school official's motion to dismiss on basis of qualified immunity; complaint alleged that actions of school district's director of human resources violated employee's statutory rights under §§ 1981. Dockery v. Unified School Dist. No. 231, D.Kan.2006, 406 F.Supp.2d 1219. Civil Rights 1398

Owners of school bus service business sufficiently alleged, under liberal notice pleading standards, claims for damages under § 1983 for violations of their federal constitutional rights against state trooper, who allegedly discriminated against them in violation of state and federal law by deliberately making it difficult for them to operate business because of their hiring of employees of Russian heritage; owners alleged that state trooper's actions were performed willfully and were motivated by his prejudice against Russian immigrants, that his conduct resulted in loss of at least one bus contract with school district, and that they suffered economic and other damages and were denied the Constitutional right to employ persons regardless of race or national origin. Lecrenski Bros. Inc. v. Johnson, D.Mass.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Male middle school student, who alleged that he was forced to wear a pink sign which posed the question "will you go with me?," did not plead facts sufficient to support his allegation that his treatment was based on his sex, and therefore failed to state claim under §§ 1983 against teacher or principal. Cockerham ex rel. Cockerham v. Stokes County Bd. of Educ., M.D.N.C.2004, 302 F.Supp.2d 490. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Transferred employee of Puerto Rico's Right to Work Administration (RWA) failed to state cause of action in complaint for supervisory liability under § 1983, in connection with complaint of political discrimination in violation of her free speech and association rights, where she failed to make averment that causally or logically linked supervisors' actions to transfer. Torres Ocasio v. Melendez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Allegation that scientists, conducting psychiatric study of juvenile offenders' younger brothers during which study participants were given a drug that allegedly caused plaintiff participant severe physical and emotional harm, limited study to African American and Hispanic-American subjects was sufficient to assert discriminatory motivation element of equal protection claim. Johnson ex rel. Johnson v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22743675, Unreported. Constitutional Law 215.2; Health 706

State prison inmate's § 1983 complaint, which lacked allegations that inmate was treated differently than similarly situated inmates, failed to sufficiently allege equal protection claim. Sterling/Sayyed v. Banks, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 504, 2003 WL 21802122, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4676A. ---- Class, specificity of allegations, complaint

Allegations by driver involved in collision with vehicle driven by off-duty city police officer, defining a class for equal protection purposes based on her status as a victim of alleged tortious conduct by the officer and other officers who responded to the scene, were insufficient to state that she was a member of a protected class, as required to establish equal protection claim under §§ 1983. McDorman v. Smith, N.D.Ill.2006, 437 F.Supp.2d 768 . Municipal Corporations 747(3)

4677. ---- Pattern of conduct, specificity of allegations, complaint

Inmate stated §§ 1983 claim against county and city related to assault he received in county jail by alleging that assault was consistent with county and city's policies and customs. Sulik v. Taney County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 393 F.3d 765. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Allegation in § 1983 complaint that city and police department maintained "code of silence," that disciplinary complaints against police officers almost never resulted in official censure, and that that practice hurt arrestee who had been shot by police during execution of search warrant sufficiently stated civil rights claim on which relief could be granted. Sledd v. Lindsay, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 102 F.3d 282. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Pleadings of administrator of estate of state prison inmate who was killed by fellow inmates failed to allege facts with sufficient specificity to support § 1983 claim against state prison officials, where complaint averred that inmate's death was result of pattern of conduct by prison guards and inmates and that state prison officials knew of the misconduct, malfeasance, acts and/or omissions, and did nothing to stop it, or condoned it; pleading cited no conduct or specific omissions that would have causally linked defendants to the death, and, at best, alleged negligence action. Jacquez v. Procunier, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 801 F.2d 789.

Allegations of former county police officer, that city had policy of indifference toward claims of retaliation for exercise of First Amendment protected speech, satisfied minimum pleading requirements and thus were sufficient to sustain §§ 1983 claim of municipal liability for supervisors' failure to properly investigate claims that he was subjected to adverse employment action in retaliation for his criticism of department. Wallace v. Suffolk County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Arrestee's allegations that District of Columbia "tolerated and permitted a pattern of police harassment, false arrest, and malicious prosecution," that through its police department it "permitted and tolerated a pattern and practice of unjustified, unreasonable, and unlawful harassment and deprivation of liberty and property without due process of law," and that its "policies and customs" encouraged police misconduct met the pleading standards necessary to state false arrest and due process claims under § 1983. Amons v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 109. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee's allegations that District of Columbia "tolerated and permitted a pattern of police harassment, false arrest, and malicious prosecution," that through its police department it "permitted and tolerated a pattern and practice of unjustified, unreasonable, and unlawful harassment and deprivation of liberty and property without due process of law," and that its "policies and customs" encouraged police misconduct met the pleading standards necessary to state false arrest and due process claims under § 1983. Amons v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 109. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Plaintiff, in his § 1983 action alleging assault by unnamed sheriff's deputies, failed to allege facts sufficient to show a pattern or practice of abuse by parish deputies; plaintiff did not allege any other instances of physical abuse by the deputies. Yates v. Unidentified Parties, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 73 Fed.Appx. 19, 2003 WL 21744384, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1081, 540 U.S. 1123, 157 L.Ed.2d 920. Civil Rights 1395(5)

4678. ---- Custom or usage, specificity of allegations, complaint

Complaint sufficiently alleged failure to train police officers in use of force for purposes of § 1983 action against District of Columbia; allegation that officer shot plaintiff in broad daylight on city street quickly after ordering him to "freeze" stated facts that may reasonably have suggested misconduct sufficiently serious and obvious to justify allegation of improper training in use of force despite fact that complaint only alleged one instance of unconstitutional conduct. Atchinson v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1996, 73 F.3d 418, 315 U.S.App.D.C. 318. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Failure of jail inmates to plead specific facts, in connection with § 1983 action brought against county for alleged civil rights violations by county sheriff's department, that would tend to prove county policy or custom was proximate cause of alleged deprivation of their constitutional rights did not warrant dismissal of inmates' complaint; under notice pleading system set up by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, § 1983 complaint against municipality need only include short plain statement of claim showing that pleader is entitled to relief. Ashe v. Corley, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 992 F.2d 540. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Section 1983 complaint against municipality failed to allege municipal custom or policy with requisite specificity where it stated no facts to support assertions that city's policies, or its failure to implement policies, in any way violated shooting victim's constitutional rights or contributed to his unfortunate death. Fraire v. City of Arlington, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 957 F.2d 1268, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 462, 506 U.S. 973, 121 L.Ed.2d 371. Civil Rights 1395(5)

city, absent any evidence pertaining directly to policies or customs of city. Birdsall v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 163. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Proof of a single incident of unconstitutional activity is not sufficient to impose §§ 1983 liability against a municipality, unless proof of the incident includes proof that it was caused by an existing, unconstitutional municipal policy, which policy can be attributed to a municipal policymaker. Claudio v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 170. Civil Rights 1351(1)

In asserting that municipality and its officials violated the employees' rights under § 1983 by terminating them or not renewing their employment based on political affiliation, municipal employees were not required to specifically allege that any policy or custom attributable to the municipality or any of its officials was the moving force behind their injuries; municipality's liability arose directly from the official policy actions of its mayor. Hernandez Carrasquillo v. Rivera Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 329. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Mere assertion that municipality has custom or policy condoning constitutional violation is insufficient to establish municipal liability in § 1983 action. Richardson v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2003, 277 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1417

Complaint alleging that high school student was injured by teacher's excessive force in consequence of the conduct and policies of school defendants including inadequate recruitment, hiring, training, retention, supervision, discipline, and security was sufficient to state claims under § 1983 against individual supervisory defendants. Tsotesi v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 336. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Suggestion that city should adopt specific policy requiring presence of female officers during execution of search warrants in certain circumstances was not sufficient to meet pleading requirements for § 1983 claim against city under vicarious liability theory, which required pleading of existence of unconstitutional practice, custom or policy by city as it related to facts of case, involving execution of search warrant for house in the middle of the night and affecting lightly-clad female residents. Laise v. City of Utica, E.D.Mich.1997, 970 F.Supp. 605. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Student who had been interrogated by city police officer who was investigating fire at school failed to sufficiently allege policy or custom on part of city which resulted in violation of student's Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights, as required to state § 1983 claim against officer in his official capacity; allegations that policies and customs included deliberate indifference in the training of, and customs of, officers who interrogate students, and that students were seized and interrogated without legal cause and in violation of their Miranda rights, did not contain specific facts suggesting that other students were treated in same manner, and contained nothing more than boilerplate allegations of municipal policy. Bills by Bills v. Homer Consol. School Dist. No. 33-C, N.D.Ill.1997, 967 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Section 1983 claim against municipality and municipal officials, alleging failure to train police officers, failed to allege municipal policy of insufficient training with requisite specificity; bald allegations were not enough to survive motion for summary judgment. Morgan v. Barry, D.D.C.1992, 785 F.Supp. 187. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Civil rights plaintiffs' allegation that deputy sheriffs acted "pursuant to the policies, procedures, directives, instructions and practices of [county]" failed to establish basis for finding official policy. Shoop v. Dauphin County, M.D.Pa.1990, 766 F.Supp. 1323. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Mere boilerplate assertions of authority or official tolerance of employee misconduct are not sufficient for pleading municipal liability under § 1983. Hickombottom v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1173. Civil Rights

Civil rights plaintiffs' failure to specifically allege that discriminatory acts were caused by municipal policy or custom did not warrant dismissal of claims against municipality, to the extent that existence of municipal policy or custom could be inferred from fact that discriminatory acts were allegedly performed by police chief and other supervisory personnel. Baltzer v. City of Sun Prairie/Police Dept., W.D.Wis.1989, 725 F.Supp. 1008. Civil Rights 1401

Complaint that alleged that defendants' actions deprived arrestees of their rights "to be secure in their persons and home, to be free from excessive use of force, to due process, and not to be subject to cruel and unusual punishment" met notice pleading requirements in § 1983 action against city for excessive force, false arrest, and malicious prosecution. Briley v. City of Trenton, D.N.J.1995, 164 F.R.D. 26. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegation, that city's release of juvenile offender information to scientists conducting psychiatric study of such offenders' younger brothers violated privacy rights of study subject, was insufficient to state § 1983 claim against city, absent allegation of facts to support conclusory assertion that release was pursuant to city custom, policy or practice. Johnson ex rel. Johnson v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22743675, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(5)

For inmate to state § 1983 excessive force claim against city based on custom or usage, inmate would have to allege that incident complained of occurred as result of city's failure to respond to repeated charges of misconduct by prison guards similar to that alleged by him. David v. Santiago, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1345216, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Dismissal of § 1983 action in which inmate sued county jail and fellow inmate who had allegedly raped her while she was being held in county jail, on basis that inmate had failed to allege that constitutional deprivation she suffered was due to a county custom or policy, or that fellow inmate was jointly engaged with a state actor, would be modified to a dismissal without prejudice, so that inmate could refile and name any individual jail employees who may have failed to protect her from the rape. Hutchinson v. Jefferson Cty. Jail, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 242 F.3d 375, Unreported. Federal Courts 931

University employees' complaint, alleging that they were subjected to adverse employment actions in response to protected associations or expressions documented in "suspicious" files university maintained about their activities, was insufficient to state claim for violation of their First Amendment free speech rights; complaint failed to identify the associations or expressions about which the university gathered information, and failed to identify any particular adverse employment actions. Aponte-Torres v. University Of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 445 F.3d 50. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where specific constitutional provision prohibits government action, plaintiffs seeking redress for that prohibited conduct in §§ 1983 suit cannot make reference to broad notion of substantive due process. Velez v. Levy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 401 F.3d 75. Civil Rights 1028

Allegations by property owner that building inspector and other city officials engaged in unreasonable search and seizure, denied him notice and an opportunity to be heard, and attempted to take his property for private use when they entered his land, demolished his dog house, and ripped up his flower bed only 27 days after giving him notice to do so on his own stated § 1983 claim against city officials for violation of property owner's constitutional rights; although complaint did not contain all of the facts that would be necessary to prevail, it adequately notified the officials of the principal events. Hoskins v. Poelstra, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 320 F.3d 761. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegations in prison inmate's pro se complaint, concerning hostile and disparaging comments allegedly directed at him by officials in medium-security prison to which he was transferred after filing prison grievance, regarding officials' alleged misconduct in denying him a high fiber diet and in having him wait for medical appointment, and as to fact that, when he complained to officials, they allegedly responded that they had "heard all about [him]," did not sufficiently allege either adverse action or requisite causal connection between such action and his earlier protected activity in filing grievance, and were insufficient to state First Amendment retaliation claim; however, district court should not have dismissed with prejudice, without allowing inmate to amend his complaint. Davis v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 320 F.3d 346.

Arrestee who brought § 1983 action against county and county coroner for allegedly falsifying autopsy report, leading to arrestee's false arrest and prosecution on murder charges, was not required to plead with particularity the coroner's alleged falsifications which led prosecutor to charge arrestee with murder, specific allegations that coroner knew that statements in report were false, or how the falsifications caused the charging decision, to establish coroner's improper motive, but only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that arrestee was entitled to relief; overruling Branch v. Tunnell, 937 F.2d 1382, Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, and Housley v. United States, 35 F.3d 400. Galbraith v. County of Santa Clara, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2002, 307 F.3d 1119. Civil Rights 1395(5); Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegations that in ordering school custodial employees to remove asbestos-containing materials under carpeting, public school officials caused injuries to custodial employees in willful, wanton, malicious, and reckless disregard for employees' health and safety, in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, stated claim under § 1983. Upsher v. Grosse Pointe Public School System, C.A.6 (Mich.) 2002, 285 F.3d 448, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 88, 537 U.S. 880, 154 L.Ed.2d 135. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Pro se prisoner alleged sufficiently serious condition of confinement to state § 1983 claim for violation of his Eighth Amendment rights in allegedly forcing him to live in feces-covered cell for three days, in light of his objections to report and recommendation for dismissal of claim, which clarified that cleaning supplies in his unit were not made available to prisoners to clean individual cells. McBride v. Deer, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2001, 240 F.3d 1287. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Police chief was not required to allege what statements he would have made but for gag order prohibiting him from speaking to media about investigation into his alleged misconduct in order to state cause of action under § 1983 for free speech violation; because gag order was directed at him personally, it could reasonably be inferred that he would have spoken about investigation but for gag order. Jackson v. City of Columbus, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1999, 194 F.3d 737, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Arrestee's boilerplate allegations regarding police department's and police chief's involvement in his false imprisonment following false arrest sufficiently stated § 1983 false imprisonment claim against police department and police chief so as to survive motion for judgment on pleadings. Ortega v. Christian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 1521. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Amended complaint failed to conform to heightened pleading standard governing § 1983 actions; it failed to indicate precise content and form of complaints and challenges which allegedly led to retaliation, context in which they were made, and when and to whom they were made; moreover, with exception of one defendant, complaint did not allege wrongdoing by any particular defendant. Veney v. Hogan, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 70 F.3d 917, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(8)

By arguing that he was arrested for exercising his freedom of speech and setting forth a particularized, fact-specific complaint, demonstrator stated claim for constitutional violation on First and Fourth Amendment grounds. Johnston v. City of Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 14 F.3d 1056. Civil Rights 1395(6)

A civil rights plaintiff cannot defeat an official's claim of qualified immunity simply by alleging violation of extremely abstract rights; there must be a "particularized" showing that a reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right. Givens v. Jones, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 900 F.2d 1229. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Employee of state correctional institution failed to plead claim of wrongful discharge, when allegations seemed to embrace both theories of discrimination and retaliation. Clark v. Maryland Dept. of Public Safety and Correctional Services, D.Md.2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 773.

Foster child's complaint satisfied heightened pleading requirements applicable to § 1983 claims, in action against Florida Department of Children and Families (DCAF) employees for allegedly inappropriate foster care placement and adoption by an abusive parent, in violation of his Fourteenth Amendment liberty interest in a physically safe environment, despite employees' claims that only general violation of constitutional rights was alleged and that conclusory allegations made it impossible to conduct fact-sensitive examination of controlling case law required for qualified immunity, or to assess how immunity applied to each employee. Omar ex rel. Cannon v. Lindsey, M.D.Fla.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 1339, affirmed 334 F.3d 1246. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1398

Foster child's complaint, which repeatedly alleged that Florida Department of Children and Families (DCAF) employees knew of his egregious abuse by foster parent and did nothing to rescue him, adequately pleaded that abuse was proximately caused by deliberate indifference of employees such as to warrant possible employee liability in § 1983 action for violation of child's liberty interest. Omar ex rel. Cannon v. Lindsey, M.D.Fla.2003, 243 F.Supp.2d 1339, affirmed 334 F.3d 1246. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Detainee's complaint sufficiently pled both that he was denied minimal civilized measure of life's necessity, and that county jail correctional officer had a culpable state of mind, as required for Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual punishment claim; complaint alleged that detainee was purposefully subjected to dehumanizing conditions when he was denied access to facilities both to go to the restroom and to clean himself up during five hour period in which he sat in his feces, and that officer displayed hostility towards him during his denial, using insulting and offensive language and expressions. Mitchell v. Newryder, D.Me.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 200. Sentencing And Punishment 1539; Sentencing And Punishment 1554

Even assuming that parent of special education students adequately alleged retaliation by school district superintendent for parent's advocacy on behalf of her children, parent failed to state §§ 1983 claim for violations of her rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments since she did not adequately allege or offer evidence of a policy of retaliation by the school district against parent or others similarly situated; parent's allegations fell short of establishing that superintendent's failure to supervise the district administrators, who allegedly authorized letter defaming parent, reflected deliberate indifference to parent's First Amendment rights. Hesling v. Avon Grove School Dist., E.D.Pa.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 262. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Detainee's allegations against individual police officers, alleging that police officers struck, kicked, and used taser guns to restrain her and to transport her to medical center, identified alleged violations of the Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure and a Fourteenth Amendment right to due process of law, as required to state a claim pursuant to §§ 1983. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Former employee's allegations that his claims were brought "pursuant to §§ 1983" were insufficient to state a claim under §§ 1983, where the only tangential reference to any state action in the amended complaint was employee's allegation that the employer was a corporation formed by the State University of New York to operate the laboratory. Schiappa, Sr. v. Brookhaven Science Associates, LLC, E.D.N.Y.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 230. Civil Rights 1396 prisoner alleged that he was falsely charged with possessing illegal substances after several failed retaliation attempts from officers against him, a suggestive temporal proximity between the filing of his original compliant against other prison officials and the first instance less than one month later when those officers subjected him to false accusations, and sufficient facts to indicate that officers' motivations were suspect. Kounelis v. Sherrer, D.N.J.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 525. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prison inmate's proposed amended §§ 1983 complaint against corporate administrator of prison was insufficiently specific to meet the requirements of the exhaustion of administrative remedies provision of the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), where the proposed complaint alleged that the inmate filed a grievance in the form of an incident report after he was assaulted and battered by prison guard, and that the guard was subsequently terminated from employment at the prison, but the complaint provided no written documentation, did not state what relief, if any, the inmate sought by filing the report and did not describe any kind of proceeding that took place as a result of his complaints. Torres v. Corrections Corp. of America, N.D.Okla.2005, 372 F.Supp.2d 1258. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegations by former employees of Puerto Rico Department of Education, that their contracts were not renewed because of political motives, and that said discriminatory policy was established and implemented by Department officials, were sufficient to state §§ 1983 claim against those officials in their individual capacities; while complaint may not have served as a model pleading, it stated enough facts to survive dismissal. Rivera-Torres v. Rey-Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 352 F.Supp.2d 152. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Poor articulation of §§1983 claim, and fact that complaint read like vague political harangue with no specific factual allegations supporting its claims, did not compel dismissal for failure to state claim, since rules required only "short and plain statement" of claim and supporting grounds. Batista Rivera v. Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 266. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Allegations by family members of two men, that an FBI agent and a police officer framed the men for murder or other offenses, failed to state claims, pursuant to Bivens and §§ 1983, for intentional interference with their family relationships; conduct was not directly aimed at severing or affecting those relationships. Limone v. U.S., D.Mass.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 18. Civil Rights 1088(1); United States 50.10(3)

Claims raised in complaint filed by pro se hotel guest who sought compensatory and punitive damages pursuant to § 1983 in which he asserted that hotel and its employees violated the ADA and Title VII and attempted to murder him after he became ill from a hamburger he ate at hotel bar and was discharged prematurely from hotel, could not possibly secure relief even when read liberally; claims did not set forth any elements for actionable claims under either federal statutes referenced by guest or any other conceivably relevant federal statutes. Williams v. Holiday Inn Washington, DC on the Hill, D.D.C.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 27. Civil Rights 1395(1); Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(2)

Pro se prisoner complied with judge's directive to amend his complaint to plead facts sufficient to meet "atypical and significant hardship" requirement for due process claim, and dismissal of his § 1983 claim thus was not warranted, where judge directed that amended complaint would be reviewed for substantive sufficiency before being assigned to another district judge, and such assignment occurred, indicating that prisoner managed to plead enough facts to satisfy first judge, acting in his function as gatekeeper. McKenzie v. O'Gara, S.D.N.Y.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 389. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

Inmate failed to make specific allegation that a particular grievance was disregarded or destroyed by prison officials, as required to support § 1983 claim alleging that his civil rights were violated by the denial of his First Amendment right to petition government for redress of grievances; officials provided 14 different grievances filed by inmate over 10-month period over matters such as denial of phone access to have his wife charged and arrested, missed meals when he went to court, and contesting a ticket for fainting, officer stated that inmate was encouraged to write grievances so he would remain quiet, and officials showed that most of inmate's grievances went through entire appellate process. Govan v. Campbell, N.D.N.Y.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 289. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Municipal employees sufficiently alleged that municipality dismissed them or did not renew their employment because of their active participation in political activities, that municipality's reason of precarious financial situation was a pretext for political discrimination, and gave examples of how they were harassed by municipality, as required to create inference of intentional discrimination to support claim that municipality engaged in political discrimination in violation of the First Amendment; employees alleged that municipality knew of their affiliation to political party, replaced employees with members of political party to which mayor and other municipality staff belonged, and engaged in campaign aimed at making employees relinquish their positions. Hernandez Carrasquillo v. Rivera Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 329. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Fifth Amendment, which applied to the District of Columbia, could support employee's allegations of disparate treatment against the District of Columbia Department of Corrections under § 1983 for gender discrimination. Jones v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 61. Constitutional Law 254(3); Constitutional Law 278.4(3)

Prisoner failed to state § 1983 cruel and unusual punishment claim against prison officials, arising from alleged confinement for 365 days in "keeplock," absent specific allegations of serious deprivation, rather than general allegations of "emotional and psychological trauma," that prison officials had wanton state of mind when engaging in alleged misconduct, and that Prison Litigation Reform Act's (PLRA) exhaustion requirements had been fulfilled. Knight v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.2002, 247 F.Supp.2d 379. Sentencing And Punishment 1553

Complaint failed to allege sufficient facts to establish that warrantless search of food distribution business was result of custom or policy of police department, as required to state a § 1983 claim against department; complaint alleged no incidents other than search in question. Chin v. City of Baltimore, D.Md.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 546. Civil Rights 1395(6)

State prison inmate's claim in § 1983 action, that unnamed defendants interfered with her First Amendment right of access to the courts by refusing to allow her son to take a picture to document injury allegedly caused by a fellow inmate, would be dismissed for lack of specificity where complaint did not indicate who actually prevented the pictures from being taken. Figalora v. Smith, D.Del.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 658. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Father failed to provide specific facts showing how former wife's private attorney, private medical facilities, and a number of employees of those private medical facilities colluded with a state official to deprive him of his constitutional rights in child custody matters, as required to establish § 1983 claim based upon alleged conspiracy with government officials to violate his civil rights. Nielson v. Legacy Health Systems, D.Or.2001, 230 F.Supp.2d 1206. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

Complaint, in nontenured university instructor's action against university officials under § 1983, which alleged that instructor's due process rights were violated by officials' failure to provide impartial decisionmaker with respect to decision not to renew her contract, was sufficiently detailed to put defendants on notice that instructor alleged property interest in her continued employment based on faculty handbook. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Inmate failed to state claim with requisite specificity against prison officials for retaliation for pursuing grievances; inmate identified neither the officer to whom he made alleged complaint nor the basis of alleged complaint, and inmate merely described officials' actions as "retaliatory conduct." Sullivan v. Schweikhard, S.D.N.Y.1997, 968 F.Supp. 910. Civil Rights 1395(7) protection clause failed to satisfy heightened pleading requirement as to some of those members, where he made no more than general accusations against those individuals without any evidentiary support. Reynolds v. Glynn County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ga.1996, 968 F.Supp. 696, affirmed 119 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Inmate who was allegedly beaten in prison by correctional officers failed to plead § 1983 cause of action against warden and former commissioner of city department of corrections, where inmate merely included defendants' names in complaint, but did nothing more. Taylor v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 953 F.Supp. 95. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Complaint by representative of estate of patient who died after employee of state mental hospital dispensed wrong medication alleged enough facts indicating that patient was being held involuntarily to avoid dismissal of claim against hospital physician to recover damages under federal civil rights statute for deprivation of patient's substantive due process right to receive adequate medical care, even though admission form stated that patient was admitted voluntarily. Bushey v. Derboven, D.Me.1996, 946 F.Supp. 96. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Allegations by property management company, which provided housing to low income minorities, and its sole shareholder that town officials refused to process permit applications for property in which company sought to locate its offices, that town and town officials closed company's offices without prior notice and without threat to public health or safety, that town and town officials singled out minority-occupied properties managed by company for inspections, that town councilman caused social service applications filed by company's minority clients to be delayed and that town officials issued false press release regarding company were of sufficient particularity to state § 1983 claims against town and town officials for violation of constitutional rights. Pisello v. Town of Brookhaven, E.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Plaintiffs' complaint alleging discrimination under § 1983 against all defendants was ambiguous and, as such, violated federal rule requiring that each averment of a pleading be simple, concise, and direct; although plaintiffs named 15 individual defendants in their complaint, complaint failed to spell any factual allegations as to specific incidents of deprivation chargeable to any of the individual defendants. Vance v. County of Santa Clara, N.D.Cal.1996, 928 F.Supp. 993. Civil Rights 1394

Arrestee's allegations that clerk of circuit court and county sheriff knew, as result of prior lawsuits, that computer systems listing outstanding arrest warrants were deficient for their failure to process quashed and recalled orders and that clerk and sheriff were persons responsible for setting polices and mandating procedures in their respective offices were sufficient to state § 1983 claim against clerk and sheriff in their individual capacities for violation of arrestee's constitutional rights in connection with his unlawful arrest pursuant to invalid warrant. McMurry v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1082. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Prisoner in Florida state correctional institution who brought civil rights action against correction officials failed to state claim based on conspiracy allegations where prisoner did not allege any factual support to show that the officials communicated about or reached understanding to deny prisoner his rights. Searcy v. Singletary, M.D.Fla.1995, 894 F.Supp. 1565, affirmed 87 F.3d 1329. Conspiracy 18

Civil rights complaint under § 1983 failed to allege with sufficient particularity violations of constitutional rights by individual defendant who was employee of county department of human resources, and failed to state claim even under notice proceeding where, from complaint, court had no idea what the basis of liability was as to such employee, though it appeared that plaintiffs might be attempting to hold him directly liable for alleged acts of subordinate who allegedly directed sheriff's officers to violate plaintiffs' rights. Ross v. State of Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 893 F.Supp. 1545. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Prisoner failed to state claim under § 1983 against probation officers who allegedly provided false information to sentencing court; prisoner did not identify any specific false information which was provided to sentencing court or relied on by sentencing court and which prisoner was not given chance to rebut. Bieros v. Nicola, E.D.Pa.1994, 860 F.Supp. 223. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate's allegations revealing prison supervisors' knowledge of direct interference with inmate's right of access to law library by chief librarian and supervisors' inaction in face of such knowledge were sufficient to meet heightened pleading requirement for § 1983 action; allegations were specific and disclosed several meetings and written communications with supervisors regarding inmate's treatment at law library. Martin v. Ezeagu, D.D.C.1993, 816 F.Supp. 20. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pro se amended complaint filed by prisoner under §§ 1983 was defective under pleading rule governing complaints and would be dismissed with leave to amend, where complaint listed thirty individual defendants in its caption, but only made averments concerning twenty-one of them, it contained numerous paragraphs that made no reference to actions taken by any of the defendants, and plaintiff's paragraphs, or "Legal Points," contained more than one factual allegation. Washington v. Reilly, E.D.N.Y.2005, 226 F.R.D. 170, subsequent determination 2005 WL 2464694. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(3); Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Arrestee's complaint against police officers alleging that officers acted with deliberate indifference to his medical needs in violation of the Eighth Amendment, asserting that officers ignored his repeated requests for medical attention for injuries he sustained during a fight and delayed the medical treatment that he ultimately received, conformed to the notice-pleading standard for pro se civil rights complaints, and thus district court's sua sponte dismissal was abuse of discretion. Askew v. Jones, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 140, 2005 WL 3409617, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1824

Parents' unsupported allegations in §§ 1983 action arising from investigation of alleged physical abuse of one minor child, indicating that second minor child was "ordered to stay with" her maternal grandmother in an "unsafe environment," did not state claim against county child services agency or its employees. Brown v. Daniels, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 910, 2005 WL 943525, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Inmate's allegations that prison employees retaliated against inmate by verbally harassing inmate and by filing two false disciplinary reports against inmate after inmate filed a grievance was sufficient to state a claim for retaliation. Perez v. Sullivan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 100 Fed.Appx. 564, 2004 WL 1245299, Unreported. Prisons 13(7.1)

Plaintiff's failure to delineate, clearly and succinctly, the exact reason or reasons she was suing each defendant, and persistence in attempting to sue the Department of Corrections (DOC) after having been informed that the DOC was protected by Eleventh Amendment immunity, warranted dismissal of plaintiff's claims brought pursuant to § 1983 alleging that she received inadequate medical care and that she was denied participation in the institutional grievance procedures. Romo v. Department of Corrections (Women's Facility), C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 85 Fed.Appx. 184, 2004 WL 49844, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

Complaint against city officials, who provided juvenile offender information to scientists conducting psychiatric study of juvenile offenders' younger brothers, failed to state equal protection claim, though study was allegedly limited to African American and Hispanic-American subjects, absent allegation that officials based collection or dissemination of information on race. Johnson ex rel. Johnson v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22743675, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Indigent state inmate's allegations that he suffered from discrimination, harassment and retaliation, conspiracy and on-going violations of his constitutional rights were insufficient to state claim for relief under § 1983, where inmate's assertions consisted of jumble of rambling, incoherent rants presented in undifferentiated and conclusory fashion, unsupported by specific factual averments or legal authority. Rainey v. Bruce, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 74 Fed.Appx. 8, 2003 WL 21907609, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

State prison inmate's § 1983 complaint, which alleged that inmate was denied a subscription to the newspaper of his choice, sufficiently alleged a First Amendment violation even though complaint itself did not allege who denied him the newspaper or who was responsible for the policy limiting him to a particular newspaper; attachments to complaint named two defendants involved in implementing and enforcing the policy. Sterling/Sayyed v. Banks, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 504, 2003 WL 21802122, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State inmate pleaded himself out of court on § 1983 conspiracy claim when he alleged conspiracy by state officials to violate his First, Ninth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights, but then alleged specific actions contradicting that claim by asserting that former governor had pursued policy restricting prisoner access to pornography for political reasons, successfully lobbied state legislature to change existing policy, and then had state's corrections department carry out new policy; such allegations did not support existence of agreement to deprive inmate of his constitutional rights, or suggest that state officials' acts deprived him of a constitutional right. McMillian v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 438, 2003 WL 21489717, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

When plaintiff sues public official for civil rights violation, district court must insist on heightened pleading by plaintiff, demanding that plaintiff file short and plain statement of complaint that rests on more than conclusions alone; court may, in its own discretion, insist that plaintiff file reply tailored to answer which pleads defense of qualified immunity, but court's discretion not to order such reply is very narrow when greater detail might assist. Morin v. Caire, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 77 F.3d 116, 144 A.L.R. Fed. 719. Civil Rights 1398; Civil Rights 1394

The dismissal of a civil rights complaint with prejudice for failure to state a sufficiently definite claim exceeded trial court's discretion, where the pro se plaintiff's more definite statement had been served but not filed, and thus pro se plaintiff would be afforded another opportunity to comply with order, absent showing of a clear record of delay or contumacious conduct by pro se plaintiff. Pardee v. Moses, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1979, 605 F.2d 865. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Allegations of plaintiffs in civil rights suit that defendants, including both public officials and private citizens, acted jointly and severally, separately and conspiratorily and that they did conspire with each other with respect to activities that allegedly deprived plaintiffs of constitutional rights were sufficient to defeat motion of private citizens to dismiss, absent any effort to obtain a more definite statement as to that matter. Gillibeau v. City of Richmond, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1969, 417 F.2d 426. Federal Civil Procedure 1789

While it was doubtful that alleged interference by defendant state officials with right of plaintiff to work as a superintendent in a boys' school stated any valid constitutional violation, it was not impossible that a violation of a right of privacy occurred, and preferable remedy was, thus, to encourage defendants to move for a more definite statement of constitutional rights alleged to have been violated. Holladay v. State of Mont., D.C.Mont.1981, 506 F.Supp. 1317. Federal Civil Procedure 1018.1

County prison guard's complaint, under this subchapter, for wrongful discharge from employment at county prison was not so vague or ambiguous that a party could not reasonably be required to frame responsive pleading and the guard would not be required to file a more definite statement. Bond v. Delaware County, E.D.Pa.1973, 368 F.Supp. 618. Federal Civil Procedure 988.1

Where assistant university professor, in his action under this section that it was impossible for him personally to allege all incidents with certainty because defendants had remained silent as to any reason for termination of his employment and that he would amend his complaint to conform to proof when all facts were elicited from defendants through discovery, motion for more definite statement was denied. Wolfe v. O'Neill, D.C.Alaska 1972, 336 F.Supp. 1255. Federal Civil Procedure 971

4681. Answer, complaint

Police officer did not make binding admission that he acted under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983, in allegedly raping plaintiff, when officer answered complaint by stating that he admitted allegations of paragraph stating that his conduct described in complaint was taken under color of state law; in light of officer's denial of central factual components of plaintiff's case, the most he could justly be said to have admitted was that when he did not rape plaintiff he was acting under color of state law. Almand v. DeKalb County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1997, 103 F.3d 1510, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 114 F.3d 1204, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 411, 522 U.S. 966, 139 L.Ed.2d 314. Federal Civil Procedure 744.1

Where state prisoners' pro se civil rights complaint had been referred to a magistrate and the magistrate had ordered that defendants submit an administrative report to the court, unverified administrative report that was thereafter submitted by defendants should have been treated at most as an answer to the inmates' complaint, thus setting the stage for further pretrial proceedings in which, once the issues had been delineated, it could be determined whether any factual issues remained to be litigated in a bench trial or, if either party demanded it, in a trial by jury. Mitchell v. Beaubouef, C.A.5 (La.) 1978, 581 F.2d 412, rehearing denied 586 F.2d 842, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 2416, 441 U.S. 966, 60 L.Ed.2d 1072. Federal Civil Procedure 731; Federal Civil Procedure 1927

In the interest of justice, board of education and school principal sued in civil rights action by discharged teacher seeking injunctive relief would be permitted to amend answer to include defense of applicable statute of limitations. Lombard v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1976, 407 F.Supp. 1166. Federal Civil Procedure 844.1

Because of existence of substantial jurisdictional issue as to whether private security guards in employ of city-owned college could be deemed to be acting under color of state law, defendant security guard who was in default would be granted additional time in which to answer, move, or otherwise plead in civil rights action. Huggins v. White, S.D.N.Y.1970, 321 F.Supp. 732. Federal Civil Procedure 735

4682. Amendment of answer, complaint

County correctional facility could amend answer to inmate's § 1983 complaint, alleging physical mistreatment, to assert affirmative defense of failure to exhaust administrative remedies, when Supreme Court issued decision requiring assertion of exhaustion as affirmative defense after original answer was filed. Abney v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2002, 237 F.Supp.2d 278. Federal Civil Procedure 846

4683. Docketing or filing, complaint

District court should allow suit by prison inmate to be docketed without prepayment of costs and then, if appropriate, dismiss it instead of refusing to allow case to be docketed, even though at that stage it is judicially determined that complaint does not state a claim on which relief could be granted. Taylor v. Gibson, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1976, 529 F.2d 709. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

It was error for district court to refuse to file petition, in which state prisoner sought damages from prison officials because of an alleged conspiracy to murder him, because the court deemed petition frivolous on its face; the complaint should have been filed and, if the district court was still satisfied that it was frivolous or failed to state a claim for federal relief, district court should enter an appropriate judgment. Finney v. Arkansas Bd. of Correction, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1974, 505 F.2d 194, on remand 410 F.Supp. 251. Federal Civil Procedure 664

State prison inmate who brought § 1983 action containing mixture of administratively exhausted and unexhausted claims against corrections officials should have been permitted to file amended petition containing only exhausted claims, as inmate requested in motion to amend accompanying his objections to Magistrate Judge's recommendation for dismissal, rather than having entire action dismissed. Kozohorsky v. Harmon, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1141. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Leave to amend prisoner's mental and emotional injury complaint to include statement of physical injuries he suffered as result of deprivation of food, drink, and sleep for four days he was placed in filthy cell was warranted, for purpose of meeting physical injury requirement of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), as physical injuries could have resulted from deprivations alleged. Mitchell v. Horn, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 523, on remand 2005 WL 1060658. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Since district court, following dismissal of prisoner's pro se civil rights complaint, was willing to accept prisoner's subsequent letters as pleadings, such letters should have been construed as an amendment to the complaint or as an addition in nature of an amendment. Woodall v. Foti, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 648 F.2d 268. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Prisoners' additional documents, one denominated "complaint," and the other "brief in support of plaintiffs," such documents having been filed by prisoners in response to motion to dismiss their complaints of denial of due process in disciplinary proceedings, were properly treated by court as amendments to original complaint. Winfrey v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 570 F.2d 761. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Allegations by woman who had been sexually assaulted by police officer and who participated in sting operation aimed at officer which was set up by internal affairs department that internal affairs officers had allowed officer to remove her clothing and make sexual contact before attempting to arrest officer were insufficient to state violation of her due process right to bodily integrity, as neither of internal affairs officer had physical contact with woman or had "legal control" over assaulting officer; however, woman would be allowed to amend complaint, as pleadings did not allow determination of whether right was violated or whether officer was entitled to qualified immunity. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1395(5); Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Plaintiff was not entitled to amend his civil rights complaint as of right because some defendants had not filed responsive pleadings in that plaintiff had already amended his complaint once. Glaros v. Perse, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 628 F.2d 679. Federal Civil Procedure 827

Where defendant prison officials did not file an answer to original pleading of prisoners, suing for damages, but rather asserted a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment, the motion did not constitute a responsive pleading so that prisoners had a right to amend plea without leave and the allegations of amended complaint superseded those of the original complaint filed in case; court erred in failing to consider such amended complaint. La Batt v. Twomey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 513 F.2d 641. Federal Civil Procedure 852.1

Prisoner showed good cause for leave to amend his complaint beyond deadline in scheduling order in civil rights action under §§ 1983 against correctional officers, where his counsel had been having difficulty contacting prisoner because prisoner had been moved more than once to different facilities. Murphy v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 261. Federal Civil Procedure 1938.1

4686. ---- Discretion of court, amendment, complaint

Denying plaintiff leave to amend her §§1983 complaint a fourth time after dismissing her third amended complaint based on her failure to delineate defendants and identify their respective acts or omissions was not abuse of discretion; plaintiff's delay in delineating defendants and complying with discovery schedule had directly prejudiced defendants' ability to mount effective qualified immunity defense, and granting leave to amend would have only prejudiced defendants further. Doe v. Cassel, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 403 F.3d 986. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

District judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to allow § 1983 plaintiff to amend his complaint third time to include illegal seizure claim against police officer who allegedly positioned squad car in path of plaintiff's motorcycle; proposed third amendment came nearly four years after collision and less than one month prior to trial, and, contrary to plaintiff's claim, plaintiff and his counsel were aware that he could have asserted illegal seizure claim against officer prior to taking of officer's deposition. Thompson v. Boggs, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 33 F.3d 847, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1692, 514 U.S. 1063, 131 L.Ed.2d 556. Federal Civil Procedure 840

Permission to amend complaint after dismissal of action rests in sound discretion of court, but amendment to correct deficiency in pleading should be freely given when justice so requires, particularly where action arises under this subchapter. Gaffney v. Silk, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1973, 488 F.2d 1248. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Inmate would be granted leave to file an amended complaint, in his § 1983 action alleging deliberate indifference to his medical needs, as to grievances he was allegedly prevented from filing, where district court was unable to determine from inmate's motion papers whether a reasonable attempt to comply with administrative exhaustion requirements under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) occurred. Woodrich v. Greiner, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22339264, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Though pro se civil rights complaint, based on two occasions on which prison official had allegedly opened inmate's legal mail outside of his presence, was insufficient to state claim for violation of inmate's free speech rights or right of access to courts, district court should have dismissed complaint without prejudice to allow inmate to amend pleading to allege requisite injury, especially where inmate alleged that prison official opened his outgoing legal mail, which was entitled to greater protection. Davis v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 320 F.3d 346. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Incarcerated, pro se § 1983 plaintiff who failed to name individual officials of sheriff's department as defendants in his complaint, instead naming department itself, was entitled to amend complaint to name individual defendants, even though they were not named in caption of his motions to amend complaint; it was sufficient that his proposed amended complaint listed individual defendants, describing officers by shift. Donald v. Cook County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 95 F.3d 548. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Former temporary county jail inmate, who was no longer imprisoned at county jail, who did not seek damages for deprivation of his rights while he was at county facility, and who prayed only for injunctive and declaratory relief to improve conditions for those inmates still imprisoned at facility, might not have standing to bring civil rights suit but inmate, who was proceeding pro se, should be given opportunity to amend complaint to attempt to allege requisite "personal stake" in the suit. Weaver v. Wilcox, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1981, 650 F.2d 22. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

State prisoner was entitled to an opportunity to amend his pro se civil rights complaint so as to attempt to allege facts sufficient to support an action for deliberate indifference to his medical needs; while it was a close question as to whether his complaint was frivolous, dismissal of his complaint was inappropriate. Broughton v. Cutter Laboratories, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1980, 622 F.2d 458. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1; Federal Civil Procedure 1788.10

A pro se plaintiff, particularly one bringing a civil rights action, should be afforded an opportunity fairly freely to amend his complaint. Holmes v. Goldin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 615 F.2d 83, on remand 566 F.Supp. 863. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

In state prisoner's action to recover damages for loss of watch allegedly stolen during shake down search, trial court erred in denying pro se plaintiff leave to amend his complaint, notwithstanding fact that plaintiff did not state in his motion for leave how he would cure the deficiencies in his pleading. Gordon v. Leeke, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 574 F.2d 1147, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 464, 439 U.S. 970, 58 L.Ed.2d 431. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Complaints under this section must be specifically pleaded to avoid a motion to dismiss, but this rule does not subvert the liberal policy favoring amendment of complaint, and such rule must be balanced against the equally important policies that pro se litigants not be denied opportunity to state a civil rights claim because of technicalities and that litigation should be decided on merits, where possible. Kauffman v. Moss, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1970, 420 F.2d 1270, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 93, 400 U.S. 846, 27 L.Ed.2d 84. Civil Rights 1394

Arrestee proceeding in forma pauperis was entitled after dismissal to leave to amend pro se complaint liberally construed as a civil rights action under §§ 1983, alleging that police officers injured him during arrest, where there may be discernible assault claim buried in arrestee's vague and conclusory allegations. Velez v. Hayes, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 557. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Given pro se status of female employee of city transit authority, district court would deem employee's Title VII complaint against supervisors as amended to include gender discrimination and retaliation claims against supervisors under § 1983. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Federal Civil Procedure 657.5(2)

Inmate's pro se, in forma pauperis habeas complaint seeking declaratory and injunctive relief for alleged denial of due process during parole proceedings was properly construed as complaint under § 1983, and thus, it was subject to "three strikes" provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); even though it was court, and not inmate, who determined that his action was civil action, relief sought could not be obtained in habeas petition, and inmate could not avoid effects of PLRA by mislabeling pleadings. Ayers v. Norris, E.D.Ark.1999, 43 F.Supp.2d 1039. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Amendment of inmate's pro se complaint which alleged claims against prison officials under § 1983 and state law, to substitute complaint drafted by counsel which dropped state law claims, was proper, even though inmate's § 1983 claims had previously been dismissed and proposed amendments to complaint would thus result in dismissal of entire action; denying motion to amend would have had potential to harm defendants, in that they would then be compelled to litigate state law claims inmate no longer wished to bring. Cespedes v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 454, on reconsideration 969 F.Supp. 254. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Request by pro se plaintiff, whose federal civil rights action based on alleged violation of liberty interests of other persons was dismissed based on plaintiff's lack of standing to assert due process rights of others, for leave to amend complaint to add additional plaintiffs to establish standing was denied; as layperson, plaintiff could not adequately represent interests of other class plaintiffs sought to be added. Cevallos v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1996, 914 F.Supp. 379. Federal Civil Procedure 164; Federal Civil Procedure 392

Residents, whose dwelling constructed on lands owned by state of Hawaii was destroyed on grounds that they were trespassing, were entitled to amend pro se complaint against state officials to assert claim in officials' individual capacities; although complaint requested injunctive relief, plaintiffs did cite § 1983 as jurisdictional ground, officials had addressed possibility of § 1983 claim against them, and officials asserted that they had anticipated that residents might seek to amend complaint to seek damages against officials in their individual capacity, and claimed only that proposed amendment would prolong litigation. Grace v. Drake, D.Hawai'i 1991, 832 F.Supp. 1399,

Court would deem inmate's pro se § 1983 complaint to be amended to include allegations that conditions under which he was transported to hospital amounted to cruel and unusual punishment and that he was denied vitamin treatment and necessary special diet pass, rather than dismissing those allegations, which were raised in opposition to summary judgment, as beyond scope of lawsuit. Charles v. Kelly, D.D.C.1992, 790 F.Supp. 344, appeal dismissed. Federal Civil Procedure 841

Considering his pro se status, public preacher effectively supplemented his § 1983 complaint to assert claim based on notice of violation issued after he filed his complaint, such that constitutionality of provision of New York City Administrative Code generally prohibiting "unnecessary noise" was at issue, where, consistent with district court's direction, preacher filed "Supplement for Plaintiff's Draft Pretrial Order," alleging that police continued to violate his constitutional rights, referring to attached copies of several summonses he received, including notice of violation at issue. Dae Woo Kim v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1991, 774 F.Supp. 164. Federal Civil Procedure 866

District court did not abuse its discretion in denying pro se pretrial detainee's motion to amend his complaint a second time in § 1983 action against county jail officials alleging deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs in violation of Eighth Amendment, since detainee did not allege that his second amended complaint would have been materially different from his first. Sandifer v. Green, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 57 Fed.Appx. 857, 2003 WL 297562, Unreported, on remand 2004 WL 784934. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Leave to amend complaint alleging ERISA preemption of state tax laws to state claim under § 1983 for state tax refunds was properly denied as futile; state and state officials acting in their official capacities were not "persons" within meaning of § 1983, and claim for tax refunds was claim for damages from which state and its officials were immune under Eleventh Amendment. Thiokol Corp. v. Department of Treasury, State of Mich., Revenue Div., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1993, 987 F.2d 376, rehearing denied, on remand 858 F.Supp. 674. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Where proposed amendment would have added nothing new to complaint, which alleged in essence that state police officer had violated inmate's right under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4 and 14 § 1 to be free from unreasonable search and seizure and also alleged violation of his civil rights, district court properly exercised its discretion in denying leave to amend to state that officer's conduct violated inmate's rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 4 and 5. Bouse v. Bussey, C.A.9 (Or.) 1977, 573 F.2d 548. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Federal court which had determined that constitutional claims asserted by riparian landowners had already been decided adversely to them in South Dakota trial court and South Dakota Supreme Court would not permit the landowners to amend their complaint to allege deprivation of civil rights under this section. Smiley v. State of S. D., C.A.8 (S.D.) 1977, 551 F.2d 774. Federal Civil Procedure 841

Family court litigant, bringing §§ 1983 action against family court judge and court officials, would not be allowed to amend complaint to add claims under federal conspiracy statutes; as statutes did not allow for private causes of action, amendment would be futile. Hom v. Brennan, E.D.N.Y.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 374. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Permitting inmate to amend, after dismissal, his § 1983 complaint against city warden arising from warden's alleged failure to complete inmate's transfer to state custody within 10 to 14 days of sentencing would not cure deficiencies in original complaint even if inmate had opposed warden's motion to dismiss, given that complaint was devoid of allegations suggesting inmate had protected liberty interest in transfer within 10 to 14 days, that complaint pointed to no city or state policy giving rise to such liberty interest, that complaint did not allow for inference that delay in transfer constituted atypical and significant hardship, that complaint alleged nothing more than negligence, and that complaint failed to allege personal involvement on part of warden. Wallace v. Conroy, S.D.N.Y.1996, 945 F.Supp. 628. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Plaintiff's lack of standing to sue under Social Security Act did not render amendment to complaint to add § 1983 constitutional claims futile; addition of § 1983 count would provide court with jurisdictional basis to hear plaintiff's constitutional claims. Nutritional Support Services, L.P. v. Miller, N.D.Ga.1992, 806 F.Supp. 977. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Inmate would be denied leave to amend his § 1983 complaint insofar as complaint related to five inmate grievance complaint forms; amendment would be futile inasmuch as forms were not timely filed and therefore failed to satisfy administrative exhaustion requirement under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). Woodrich v. Greiner, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22339264, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Pro se inmate's lack of knowledge regarding identities of deputy sheriffs was not a mistake concerning the identity of the proper party, and thus, inmate's amendment to § 1983 complaint arising from beating by fellow inmates, to replace "John Doe" deputy sheriffs with specifically-named defendants, did not relate back to original complaint, so as to avoid limitations bar. Wayne v. Jarvis, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1999, 197 F.3d 1098, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1974, 529 U.S. 1115, 146 L.Ed.2d 804. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

Amendment to arrestee's § 1983 complaint, adding individual arresting officers as defendants, would relate back to original complaint so long as officers would not be prejudiced in maintaining defense on the merits; claim against officers arose out of conduct, transaction or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in original pleading, and initial decision to name police department only and not the individual officers was not a matter of litigation strategy. Urrutia v. Harrisburg County Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 91 F.3d 451. Limitation Of Actions 124

Amendment to New York State Division for Youth employee's civil rights complaint adding claims against employee's co-workers and supervisors did not relate back to date of filing of original complaint, for limitations purposes, absent any claim by employee that she would have named co-workers and supervisors as defendants in her original complaint but for mistake concerning identity; plainly, employee knew identities of co-workers and supervisors who she contended had harassed and discriminated against her. Cornwell v. Robinson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 23 F.3d 694. Limitation Of Actions 124

Prison officials and correction officers' knowledge of § 1983 action being brought against them in their personal capacities could not be imputed from service of process on attorney general in original habeas corpus proceeding in which action was brought against them in their official capacities, for purposes of determining whether amendment to add new defendant would relate back to original complaint. Moore v. State of Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 999 F.2d 1125. Limitation Of Actions 124

Police officer did not receive notice that plaintiff in § 1983 action was suing officer in his individual capacity until several months after 120-day period allowed for service of summons and complaint had passed, and, thus, amendment to pleading did not relate back to date of original pleading for limitations purposes; original complaint clearly stated plaintiff's intent to hold state responsible for officer's actions so that officer had no reason to believe he would be held personally liable. Lovelace v. O'Hara, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 985 F.2d 847. Limitation Of Actions 124

Amended § 1983 complaint naming deputy court clerk as additional defendant did not relate back to filing against court clerk, and thus was untimely, where deputy clerk received no notice of action until filing of amended complaint. Moore v. Long, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 924 F.2d 586. Limitation Of Actions 124

Although supervisory personnel were aware of employee's race discrimination suit, their participation in that suit on behalf of employer was not proper notice that they could be sued as individuals, for purposes of determining whether a § 1983 claim amended to include supervisory personnel as new defendants would relate back to the filing of the original complaint. Keller v. Prince George's County, C.A.4 (Md.) 1991, 923 F.2d 30. Limitation Of Actions 124

Amended complaint, which named sheriff individually an in his official capacity as defendant in suit brought under this section, related back to time of filing of original complaint, which improperly named Parish and sheriff's office as defendants and therefore action was not barred even if one-year prescriptive period of LSA-R.S. 33:1442 for wrongful death actions applied to suit against sheriff for failure to afford decedent prompt ambulance service. Kirk v. Cronvich, C.A.5 (La.) 1980, 629 F.2d 404. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

Because teacher's amended pleading arose out of the same conduct set forth in the original pleading and provided school district, superintendent of the district, and the board members of school district with fair notice of the occurrences called into question, namely the circumstances surrounding teacher's discharge, teacher's amended pleading setting forth §§ 1983 claim related back to the original complaint's date and, thus, was not barred by Idaho's two-year statute of limitations which was applicable to §§1983 actions; teacher's §§1983 claim did not introduce new facts of which school district, superintendent of the district, and the board members of school district were unaware. Martin v. School Dist. No. 394, D.Idaho 2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1028.

Arrestee who brought § 1983 action against county, stemming from his lengthy detention prior to initial court appearance, established that amendments to original complaint, adding claims against sheriff and jail administrator in their official and individual capacities, related back to date original complaint was filed; allegations against sheriff and administrator arose out of same events outlined in original complaint, sheriff and administrator received notice that arrestee had filed suit, sheriff and administrator knew or should have known that action would have been brought against them if arrestee had legal background or legal representation, and county filed answer to original complaint within one month of being served. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Limitation Of Actions 127(3)

Section 1983 claims in third amended complaint against county related back to initial complaint, for purposes of determining whether claims were time-barred, where the complaints set forth virtually identical facts, first amended complaint named several county employees in their official capacities, such that county had notice of plaintiffs' claim, and, although such notice occurred 11 days after prescribed notice period, delay was not caused by plaintiffs' lack of diligence, county was not prejudiced by delay, and plaintiffs were proceeding pro se. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Limitation Of Actions 127(3)

African-American arrestees' claims that police officials and city attorney conspired to violate their civil rights by covering up use of excessive force by perjuring themselves in state court proceedings were not apparent from arrestees' original § 1983 complaint alleging conspiracy to deprive them of their rights to due process and fair trial, and thus did not relate back in time; element of racial animus was not alleged initially, and could not be inferred by fact that all defendants were white. Wilkerson v. Thrift, W.D.N.C.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 322. Limitation Of Actions 127(12)

Claims under § 1983 against deputy sheriff in his individual capacity, which claimants sought to add to amended complaint two years after underlying incidents took place, related back to filing of original complaint and, therefore, were not barred by two-year statute of limitations; original complaint named another deputy sheriff in his official capacity, and therefore, deputy sheriff who would be added was already part of case from its initiation and had notice of suit. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980

F.Supp. 955. Limitation Of Actions 124

In determining whether inmate's amended civil rights complaint against corrections officer, filed after statute of limitations expired, related back to filing of inmate's original complaint, identifying officer as "John Doe" defendant, inmate's inability to discover officer's name before running of statute of limitations was "mistake," where inmate made series of efforts to obtain officer's identity without prompting before end of limitations period, and defense counsel failed to disclose officer's identity until after limitations period had run. Byrd v. Abate, S.D.N.Y.1997, 964 F.Supp. 140. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

To extent that second amended complaint alleged discrimination in hiring and promotion practices and disparate impact on present opportunities for promotion of women in city police department, claims related back to original complaint for limitations purposes where original complaint alleged additional and historical discrimination against women in hiring police officers, but counts alleging disparate treatment based on sex, sexual harassment, and existence of hostile work environment did not relate back to original complaint. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Limitation Of Actions 127(3); Limitation Of Actions 127(12)

Letter advising police officers that they might be "named as a defendant" in a civil rights action which was accompanied by amended complaint against "John Doe" defendant provided actual notice for purposes of relating amendment back to date of original complaint. Felix v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1992, 811 F.Supp. 124. Limitation Of Actions 124

City police chief was not given sufficient notice that he would be sued in his individual capacity as plaintiff sought to do by third amended complaint in civil rights suit, and that complaint accordingly did not relate back to earlier filing for limitations purposes; although third amended complaint related to same occurrence set forth in prior complaints, earlier complaints did not give chief notice that he would be held liable in his individual capacity when the majority of case against city relied on incidents which occurred before police chief became chief. Saviour v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.Kan.1992, 793 F.Supp. 293. Limitation Of Actions 124

Inmate's amended § 1983 complaint, naming specific prison employees, related back to timely original complaint, which named Connecticut Department of Correction, correction officer and unnamed correction officers, where named defendants shared identity of interests such that they should have known of the suit. Younger v. Chernovetz, D.Conn.1992, 792 F.Supp. 173. Limitation Of Actions 124

In moving to amend complaint to add town board members as named defendants in place of "John Doe" and "Jane Doe" defendants, real estate developers did not seek to correct misnomer or misidentification in complaint, in that developers never made mistake concerning board members' identities, but rather did not know identities when complaint initially was filed, and therefore amendment to add individual board members did not relate back to filing of original complaint and was barred on statute of limitations grounds. Hampton Bays Connections, Inc. v. Duffy, E.D.N.Y.2003, 212 F.R.D. 119. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

4690. ---- Capacity of parties, amendment, complaint

District court did not abuse its discretion in denying civil rights plaintiff leave to amend his complaint to sue police officer in his individual capacity in addition to suing officer in his official capacity where plaintiff did not move to amend complaint until nearly two years after filing complaint, on eve of trial, when discovery was complete, and officer was prejudiced in that had he known he could be personally liable for damages, he could have chosen to retain private counsel, discovery propounded by and against officer would most likely have differed from that which occurred, and strategy and nature of officer's defense probably would have been altered. Atchinson v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1996, 73 F.3d 418, 315 U.S.App.D.C. 318. Federal Civil Procedure 840; Federal Civil Procedure 842

Employee of sheriff's department should have been allowed by district court to amend her complaint under § 1983 against county commissioners in their official capacities, arising from alleged pay differential between male and female employee, instead of dismissing complaint with prejudice, since more carefully drafted complaint might have stated claim upon which relief could be granted; sheriff could have been exercising county's authority under Alabama law in setting employee's salary, and county commission could be liable for those acts of sheriff as ultimate repository of county authority. Welch v. Laney, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1995, 57 F.3d 1004. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Party who is unclear in argument as to capacity in which defendant can be pursued in civil rights action should not lightly be deemed to have withdrawn claim that was expressly stated; when party's defense of her stated claim bespeaks doctrinal confusion, court should not presume that there has been abandonment, but should instead give party opportunity either to abandon claim or to pursue it with corrected understanding as to what proof will be required to establish it. Frank v. Relin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 1 F.3d 1317, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 604, 510 U.S. 1012, 126 L.Ed.2d 569, on remand 851 F.Supp. 87. Federal Civil Procedure 111

Plaintiffs, who filed suit in 1978 seeking injunctive relief and a declaration that certain North Carolina rules regarding admission to the practice of law are unconstitutional, were properly denied leave to amend their complaint in 1978 to seek damages from the members of the Board of Law Examiners in their individual capacities, since plaintiffs expressly chose not to seek monetary damages in their original complaint, since, during the three-year pendency of the case, they did nothing to indicate that their conscious choice to eschew monetary relief was anything but unequivocal, and since the amendment would inject for the first time the element of individual liability on the part of Board members. Nestler v. Board of Law Examiners of State of N. C., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1380. Declaratory Judgment 324

Where discharged teacher had evidently attempted to sue members of school board and the board itself under this section, but where action against the board and the school district failed because neither was a person within meaning of this section, teacher would be allowed, on remand, to amend her complaint to allege other possible bases of jurisdiction against the board, qua board. Burt v. Board of Trustees of Edgefield County School Dist., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 521 F.2d 1201. Federal Courts 952

Leave to amend complaint for action under § 1983 to add another deputy sheriff in his official and individual capacity would not cause undue prejudice; claims against deputy in his individual capacity were based on his personal participation in promulgating official policy or custom and such issue already existed with respect to another deputy named in action, and only claimants, not deputy, would need any additional investigation into deputy's conduct. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980 F.Supp. 955. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Plaintiff was permitted to amend § 1983 complaint in order to emphasize that defendants were being sued in their individual capacities, where amendment only made explicit what was already evident from original complaint, amendment involved no substantive change, and defendants were not prejudiced by amendment. Pieve-Marin v. Combas-Sancho, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 967 F.Supp. 667. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Civil rights plaintiffs were not entitled to amend complaint to name director of state mental health institute as a defendant in his individual capacity as well as his official capacity following defendant's motion for summary judgment and after close of discovery; clear language of complaint described acts of defendant in his supervisory capacity and nothing had prevented plaintiff from originally naming official in individual capacity in both complaint and notice of claim and describing acts committed in that capacity. Lindsay v. Northern Virginia Mental Health Institute, E.D.Va.1990, 736 F.Supp. 1392. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Though school board is not a "person" giving rise to cause of action under this subchapter, action against board under this subchapter by teacher whose employment as a "temporary professional employee" for one year was terminated prior to expiration of such term would not be dismissed without giving teacher leave to amend to name individual members of board as parties defendant. English v. North East Bd. of Ed., W.D.Pa.1974, 385 F.Supp. 1174. Federal Civil Procedure 1746

Proper party to be substituted upon death of defendant, in civil rights action brought against police officer in his individual capacity, was legal representative of officer's estate. Palmer v. Stewart, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21279440, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 362

4691. ---- Adding or dropping parties, amendment, complaint

Pretrial detainee's failure to name individual officers as defendants within limitations period for § 1983 action arising from attack by other detainees was mistake concerning identity of proper parties, which thus supported relation back of amendment to complaint; any officers aware of lawsuit should have known that they, rather than correctional facility named in original complaint, were subject to liability for attack in absence of allegations of any custom or policy of inadequate protection of detainees. Soto v. Brooklyn Correctional Facility, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 80 F.3d 34. Limitation Of Actions 124

Amendment to complaint adding employees of university and university police force as defendants in civil rights action arising from allegedly unlawful search satisfied requirement for relation back to date of original complaint that newly named defendants "should have known" that, but for mistake concerning identity of proper party, action would have been brought against them, as every state's sovereign immunity, and all state employees' personal exposure to, § 1983 liability for constitutional torts was clearly established when lawsuit was filed, and such knowledge was imputed to defendants. Woods v. Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 996 F.2d 880. Limitation Of Actions 124

Although complaint in action under this section against city was devoid of any allegations that alleged deprivations of civil rights were caused by city employees carrying out municipal policy or customs, plaintiffs would be allowed leave to amend where decision in Monell v. Department of Social Services of New York, 436 U.S. 658, intervened between dismissal of complaint for failure to state claim and decision on appeal. Marrero v. City of Hialeah, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 625 F.2d 499, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1353, 450 U.S. 913, 67 L.Ed.2d 337. Federal Civil Procedure 839.1

Prisoner was entitled to leave to supplement his complaint to add First Amendment retaliation claims against previously unnamed corrections officers who allegedly took retaliatory actions against him for initiating original action against other prison officials; as newly asserted defendants, corrections officers would not suffer any prejudice nor would previously named defendants as no new claims were asserted against them, and there were no dilatory tactics or bad faith on the part of prisoner. Kounelis v. Sherrer, D.N.J.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 525. Federal Civil Procedure 864.1

Justice would not be served by granting state university professor's motion to amend complaint to add dean and chancellor as defendants, purportedly to remedy procedural deficiency or pleading defect in §§ 1983 claim; amendment was proposed solely to circumvent university's motion to dismiss on ground that as agent of state, it was not "person" subject to suit under §§ 1983, allowing amendment each time complaint was challenged would wreak havoc on judicial system by adding substantial delay and undermining Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and university, as well as the newly-named defendants, would be prejudiced by further amendment. Googerdy v. North Carolina Agr. and Technical State University, M.D.N.C.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 618. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Substituting for or adding to official capacity claims with individual capacity claims in § 1983 action may relate back to original complaint, even when original complaint contained only official capacity claims and misnamed government entity. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980

F.Supp. 955. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

Pro se inmate was permitted to amend § 1983 civil rights complaint alleging improper medical care to name county rather than detention center as defendant; no prejudice would result in that county had actual notice of suit and commonality of representation existed with corrections officer who was also defendant. Guidry v. Jefferson County Detention Center, E.D.Tex.1994, 868 F.Supp. 189. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Amendment to complaint to add additional parties in Bivens action would be denied where amendment would have been futile, given plaintiff's inability to comply with heightened pleading standard applicable to individuals asserting qualified immunity. Todd v. Hawk, N.D.Tex.1994, 861 F.Supp. 35, reversed 66 F.3d 320, published in full at 72 F.3d 443. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Inmate in civil rights action arising from a near-fatal assault by fellow inmates in maximum security prison was entitled to amend his complaint to add as a defendant the penal guard who witnessed the assault despite the running of limitations where, aside from fact that guard presumably had notice of original action against his immediate superiors and colleagues, guard knew or should have know that, but for mistake concerning identity of proper party, action would have been brought against him and, in any event, was charged with constructive notice by reason of knowledge on part of attorneys representing parties originally sued. Ayala Serrano v. Collazo Torres, D.Puerto Rico 1986, 650 F.Supp. 722, on subsequent appeal 909 F.2d 8. Limitation Of Actions 124

Jail inmate bringing conditions of confinement claim would not be allowed to amend complaint, to add county; there was no evidence that alleged exclusion of inmate from library was based on any county policy or custom, as required for municipal entity liability under § 1983. Avent v. Solfaro, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21361730, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 392

Plaintiffs were not denied opportunity, in their § 1983 action alleging false arrest, malicious prosecution, and illegal search, to amend their complaint so as to add additional unknown officers allegedly involved; court merely observed that naming unknown officers as defendants was not appropriate, and plaintiffs did not file a motion to amend the complaint or add additional parties. Price v. Cochran, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 781, 2003 WL 21054706, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 392

State prisoner, alleging that guard had filed false report resulting in lock-down, would be allowed to amend § 1983 complaint so as to add guard's superiors, who allegedly maintained lock-down even after learning that report was false. Bryant v. Hernandez, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 133233, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 392

County employee's §§ 1983 complaint would not be dismissed on ground that her allegations against another employee for which she allegedly suffered retaliation were not constitutionally protected speech where Supreme Court's Garcetti decision came down after complaint was filed, and employee would be given 20 days in which to file new complaint containing factual allegations that would satisfy §§ 1983; it would be inappropriate for district court to determine, as matter of law and based solely on defendants' allegations, that employee's claim necessarily fell within parameters of Garcetti decision. Winters v. Meyer, S.D.N.Y.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 82. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Magistrate Judge did not clearly err in denying arrestee leave to amend §§ 1983 complaint to include claim under Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments that county sheriff violated her right to fair trial by fabricating evidence, based on Magistrate's rejection of arrestee's argument that her delay in seeking amendment was based on her reasonable belief that she had sufficiently alleged such claim, where complaint's references to allegedly misleading "funds schedule" were consistent with her malicious prosecution claims, complaint did not reference "right to fair trial" or "fabrication of evidence," and count that purportedly set forth fair trial claim was against all defendants, despite fact that arrestee sought to assert fair trial claim only against sheriff. Palmer v. Monroe County Sheriff, W.D.N.Y.2005, 378 F.Supp.2d 284. Federal Civil Procedure 840

Employee's amended employment-discrimination complaint that asserted Title VII claim against former employer but was outside Title VII 90-day limit did not relate back to timely original complaint, which had asserted only §§ 1983 claims against individual defendants; not only did original complaint not allege Title VII claim or name employer, but individual defendants were not served with original complaint, so that constructive notice to employer could not be inferred. Barna v. Morgan, N.D.N.Y.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 164. Civil Rights 1530; Limitation Of Actions 124

Former police officer could not amend § 1983 complaint to add search and seizure claim to original claim for denial of due process; amendment was not sought until two days after jury selection and one week before scheduled trial date, after considerable discovery had been conducted, and new claim was barred by three-year state statute of limitations. Moffitt v. Town of Brookfield, D.Conn.1991, 759 F.Supp. 94. Federal Civil Procedure 840; Federal Civil Procedure 851

Failure to provide any details regarding two alleged assaults precluded amendment of inmate's §§ 1983 complaint against prison officials, alleging insufficient medical care, to include assaults. Green v. Howard R. Young Correctional Institution, D.Del.2005, 229 F.R.D. 99. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Pro se inmate's additional allegations in objection to a United States Magistrate Judge's report and recommendation, combined with the allegations in his complaint, could support a section 1983 claim against a prison physician for deliberate indifference to the inmate's serious medical needs, and thus, the inmate would be granted an opportunity to file and serve an amendment to the complaint incorporating the additional allegations following dismissal. Perkins v. Obey, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 238036, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

4693. ---- New theory of liability, amendment, complaint

Even if a monetary remedy existed against municipality under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 for its alleged negligence in training and supervising police officers who were alleged to have acted negligently and wrongfully in refusing to incarcerate an individual who randomly shot and killed plaintiff's decedent, amendment of complaint to allow proof of failure to train and supervise was inappropriate, where basic nature of plaintiff's claim concerned an attack on alleged failure to arrest, plaintiff presented no evidence as to why she had taken over two years to develop a completely new slant to litigation, and defendants would be unduly prejudiced by imposition of a new round of discovery on a fundamentally new issue. Jamison v. McCurrie, N.D.Ill.1975, 388 F.Supp. 990. Federal Civil Procedure 840

4721. Necessary and requisite allegations generally

Officers sued in a civil action for damages under § 1983 have the same right to fair notice as do defendants charged with the criminal offense defined in statute making it a crime for a state official to act "willfully" and under color of law to deprive a person of rights protected by the Constitution. Hope v. Pelzer, U.S.2002, 122 S.Ct. 2508, 536 U.S. 730, 153 L.Ed.2d 666, on remand 304 F.3d 1331. Civil Rights 1376(2)

It is essentially true that habeas corpus petition or civil rights complaint need only set forth facts giving rise to cause of action. Bounds v. Smith, U.S.N.C.1977, 97 S.Ct. 1491, 430 U.S. 817, 52 L.Ed.2d 72.

To state § 1983 claim, plaintiff must allege facts which show deprivation of right, privilege or immunity secured by Constitution or federal law by person acting under color of state law. Lopez v. Department of Health Services, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 939 F.2d 881. Civil Rights 1394; Civil Rights 1396

A § 1983 complaint must state specific facts, not simply legal and constitutional conclusions. Fee v. Herndon, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 900 F.2d 804, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 279, 498 U.S. 908, 112 L.Ed.2d 233. Civil Rights 1394

Under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, plaintiff in civil rights action is only required to set forth specific illegal misconduct and resultant harm in a way which will permit informed ruling whether the wrong complained of is of federal cognizance. Durso v. Rowe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1978, 579 F.2d 1365, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1033, 439 U.S. 1121, 59 L.Ed.2d 82. Civil Rights 1394

Louisiana fire protection district employee's conclusory allegation that she "had a recognized property interest in her continued state employment" and was "deprived of that right" by defendants failed to state §§ 1983 claim for deprivation of due process; complaint did not allege that employee had been terminated from her job, or that she had otherwise lost her alleged property interest in her employment. Aucoin v. Kennedy, E.D.La.2004, 355

F.Supp.2d 830. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Allegations by female police officer with university that she repeatedly complained about male superior's sexual harassment to supervisors, that, despite her complaints, supervisors failed to take any remedial action against superior and instead interrogated officer about what she might have done to cause harassment, and that alleged harassment did not cease after officer complained to her supervisors were sufficient to state claim for supervisory liability, under §§ 1983, against supervisors, though complaint was thin on detail. Alston v. North Carolina A & T State University, M.D.N.C.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 774. Civil Rights 1395(8)

An inmate's pro se status in a § 1983 action does not, by itself, exempt the inmate from compliance with relevant procedural rules or relieve him from the application of governing substantive law. Johnson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 186. Attorney And Client 62

To state valid civil rights claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege facts showing that person acting under color of state law deprived plaintiff of right, privilege or immunity secured by United States Constitution or laws of United States. Interboro Institute, Inc. v. Maurer, N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 188. Civil Rights 1304

In order to state a valid civil rights claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege that he was deprived of a right, privilege or immunity guaranteed to him under the Constitution or federal statute by defendant acting under color of state law, and focus is not initially on whether a defendant violated some federal statute, but whether the statute at issue vests plaintiff with some enforceable right, privilege or immunity. Gundlach v. Reinstein, E.D.Pa.1996, 924 F.Supp. 684, affirmed 114 F.3d 1172. Civil Rights 1304

To allege valid § 1983 claim, plaintiff must allege denial of right, privilege or immunity secured by federal law. De Young v. State of Kan., D.Kan.1995, 890 F.Supp. 949, affirmed 69 F.3d 547, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1882, 517 U.S. 1236, 135 L.Ed.2d 177. Civil Rights 1394

Inmate failed to state §§ 1983 claim for deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs based on allegations that inmates were routinely denied bandages for openly bleeding cuts or scrapes, given inmate's failure to allege that any particular inmate was denied bandages or how policy affected him. Taggart v. MacDonald, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 544, 2005 WL 1127089, Unreported. Sentencing And Punishment 1546

4722. Bad faith, necessary and requisite allegations

African-American employee failed to state First Amendment retaliation claim against her governmental employer; employee, who alleged that she was fired after she spoke out about the employer's violation of open meetings law, failure to follow personnel procedures, and waste of public funds, failed to allege any official policy or custom by her employer that would subject it to §§ 1983 liability based on a First Amendment violation. Davis v. Durham Mental Health Developmental Disabilities Substance Abuse Area Authority, M.D.N.C.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 378. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Allegations that members of Kansas Adult Authority knew or should have known that assailant posed special danger to those individuals who might at any given time be present in university medical center emergency room, including plaintiffs' decedents, established sufficient showing of possibility of bad faith to state cause of action under this section, notwithstanding Adult Authority members' assertion of qualified immunity. Beck v. Kansas University Psychiatry Foundation, D.C.Kan.1984, 580 F.Supp. 527, reconsideration denied 671 F.Supp. 1552. Civil Rights 1395(1)

In action brought against court clerk based on clerk's performance of ministerial task, bad faith or maliciousness is essential allegation, as mere negligence or carelessness is insufficient to overcome court clerk's defense of qualified immunity. Kane v. Yung Won Han, E.D.N.Y.1982, 550 F.Supp. 120. Clerks Of Courts 72

A plaintiff in a civil rights action brought against a public official must allege and prove that the official acted in bad faith to state a valid cause of action. Morales v. Vega, D.C.Puerto Rico 1979, 483 F.Supp. 1057. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Plaintiff alleging cause of action against executive department officials under this section must plead as well as prove facts showing bad faith. Roslindale Co-op. Bank v. Greenwald, D.C.Mass.1979, 481 F.Supp. 749, affirmed 627 F.2d 1087, affirmed 638 F.2d 258, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 128, 454 U.S. 831, 70 L.Ed.2d 108.

Allegation of complaint that defendants, who were a Pennsylvania state administrator and five professional employees of Pennsylvania state mental hospitals, "knew or should have known that their actions violated the plaintiff's rights" was sufficient; it was not necessary to allege that defendants acted in bad faith or unreasonably. Eubanks v. Clarke, E.D.Pa.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1022. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint alleging that defendants, acting under color of their authority as state police officers, entered plaintiff's premises and removed and damaged certain photographs on ground that they were obscene was insufficient to assert a claim for relief under this section, in absence of allegations that defendants did not act in good faith and that their erroneous conclusion as to obscene nature of photographs was not result of honest mistake. Cox v. Shepherd, S.D.Cal.1961, 199 F.Supp. 140. Civil Rights 1395(6)

That officer applied for arrest warrant nine months after underlying search of arrestee's residence was insufficient, standing alone, to support inference of bad faith supporting arrestee's § 1983 claim for Fourth Amendment violation, given absence of evidence that arrestee's prosecution was barred by statute of limitations. DeFelice v. Ingrassia, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 240, 2003 WL 1970490, Unreported. Civil Rights 1404

4723. Constitutional deprivations, necessary and requisite allegations

Former plumber for the New Mexico State Fair failed to sufficiently allege facts that an adverse employment action was taken against plumber as a result of engaging in protected speech, as required for plumber's First Amendment retaliation action; the allegations showed only that plumber was unable to get the response to his complaints that he desired from his employer and his amended complaint was completely devoid of any supporting factual allegations as to what made his work environment or work conditions hostile. Moya v. Schollenbarger, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 465 F.3d 444. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Allegations by business owner that members of the township board of supervisors engaged in a campaign of harassment and intimidation in retaliation against owner for exercising his First Amendment rights, and that the retaliatory action has chilled owner's speech and discouraged him from seeking judicial redress, were adequate, when construed in owner's favor, to state First Amendment retaliation claim against board members under §§ 1983. Thomas v. Independence Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 463 F.3d 285. Civil Rights 1395(1)

State inmate was not required to establish or demonstrate in his complaint that original speech was truthful in order to state First Amendment retaliation claim against prison officials under §§ 1983, where complaint set out inmate's grievance clearly enough to put officials on notice. Simpson v. Nickel, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 450 F.3d 303. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Following Supreme Court's decision that Title II of the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA) validly abrogated state sovereign immunity insofar as it created a private cause of action for damages against the states for conduct that actually violated the Fourteenth Amendment, in action against state, state Department of Corrections, and state prison officials, on remand, paraplegic prisoner was required to specify (1) what specific conduct he alleged violated the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments and was actionable under §§ 1983, (2) to what extent the alleged conduct also violated Title II of the ADA, (3) what specific conduct, if any, allegedly violated Title II of the ADA but did not violate the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments, and (4) which defendants were sued under §§ 1983, Title II of the ADA, or both, and in what capacity each named defendant was sued. Goodman v. Ray, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 449 F.3d 1152.

University employees' complaint, alleging that they were subjected to adverse employment actions on basis of information documented in "suspicious" files university maintained about their activities, was insufficient to state claim for violation of equal protection; even assuming that employees sufficiently pled that other non-surveilled employees constituted a similarly situated group, they did not give specific account of the associations and expressions about which information supposedly was gathered, or provide specific instances of discriminatory conduct. Aponte-Torres v. University Of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 445 F.3d 50. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Former employee of state criminal bureau did not allege facts indicating that state attorney general personally directed her transfer to lesser position or allege facts suggesting that state attorney general had contemporaneous personal knowledge of transfer and acquiesced in it, and thus failed to state §§ 1983 retaliation claim against state attorney general in his individual capacity, given that complaint did not identify date on which transfer was ordered, who ordered it, date or means by which former employee was informed of transfer, who told her that she was being transferred, or where that communication was made, nor did complaint specify that any named "underling" of state attorney general orchestrated her transfer; complaint could not merely hypothesize that state attorney general was somehow involved in transfer due to his position. Evancho v. Fisher, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 423 F.3d 347. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Removed New York City community school board member failed to state claim for violation of substantive due process; defendants' purported actions would not, but for allegations of First Amendment violations or abandoned Equal Protection Clause violations, be sufficiently shocking, so claim was either subsumed in more particularized allegations or doomed to fail. Velez v. Levy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 401 F.3d 75. Constitutional Law 278.5(1); Schools 53(5)

Wife adequately stated a procedural due process claim based on police officers' refusal to enforce domestic abuse restraining order; wife alleged that, due to the city's policy and custom of failing to properly respond to complaints of restraining order violations, she was denied the process when police failed to follow process established by statute requiring consideration the merits of any request to enforce a restraining order and a determination of probable cause. Gonzales v. City of Castle Rock, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 366 F.3d 1093, certiorari granted 125 S.Ct. 417, 543 U.S. 955, 160 L.Ed.2d 316, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 945, 543 U.S. 1047, 160 L.Ed.2d 767, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 1413, 543 U.S. 1185, 161 L.Ed.2d 187, reversed 125 S.Ct. 2796, 162 L.Ed.2d 658, on remand 144 Fed.Appx. 746, 2005 WL 2438875. Civil Rights 1352(4); Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 740(1)

Police officer was entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action alleging that she violated physician's constitutional rights by over-medicating child; physician did not explain in his briefs or pleadings what right of his was violated, and, while physician's counsel did state at oral argument that officer's action violated due process pursuant 14th Amendment, that claim was nonspecific. Madiwale v. Savaiko, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1321. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Complaint of middle school student who was sexually abused by teacher did not adequately plead claim against school administrators for violation of substantive due process right to bodily integrity by reason of inclusion of catchall phrase in allegation that administrators violated student's constitutional rights "including but not limited to" rights to equal protection and privacy, particularly where trial court specifically denied amendment that would have added substantive due process claims. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former Puerto Rico housing department employees failed to allege when they were subjected to adverse employment actions, or that any specific actions were taken because of political animosity, as required to plead political discrimination claim in action under §§ 1983. Gutierrez v. Molina, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 168. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Allegations that county violated foster child's substantive due process rights in his personal security and well-being when it placed him in foster care while operating under policies or customs which negatively impacted the safety of foster children, resulting in child suffering injuries in accident while passenger in vehicle driven by his foster father, were sufficient under notice pleading standards to state §§ 1983 action against county. Harris ex rel. Litz v. Lehigh County Office of Children & Youth Services, E.D.Pa.2005, 418 F.Supp.2d 643. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Physical therapist's complaint, indicating that her complaints to school district generally pertained to district's alleged failure to provide disabled students with services as required by state and federal rules, regulations, and laws, adequately alleged that she engaged in constitutionally protected speech involving matters of public concern, as required to state cause of action under §§ 1983 for retaliation for engaging in speech. Ryan v. Shawnee Mission U.S.D. 512, D.Kan.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 1090. Schools 63(1)

Veterans failed to allege the violation of an actual constitutional right, namely, the right of access to the courts, and therefore Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) and the Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA) defendants were entitled to qualified immunity from veterans' claims for service-related death and disability veterans benefits resulting from exposure to radiation from United States atomic detonations between 1945 and 1962; none of the VA or DTRA defendants' alleged actions involved an affirmative misrepresentation to the veterans designed to prevent them from filing benefits claims based on alleged in-service exposure to ionizing radiation since the VA and the DTRA defendants only become involved with the VA claims process after it had been initiated by the individual claimant. Broudy v. Mather, D.D.C.2005, 366 F.Supp.2d 3. United States 50.10(5)

State prisoner's allegations, that prison captain refused to send letter whose contents were not gang-related and did not advocate violence or other disruptive behavior, and that captain disciplined him for sending letter, were sufficient to state claim for violation of his free speech rights. Koutnik v. Brown, W.D.Wis.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 871. Constitutional Law 90.1(1.3); Prisons 4(9)

Attorney, whose conviction of two counts of attempt to patronize prostitution was overturned on appeal, failed to sufficiently allege constitutional malicious prosecution claim; assuming that sheriff's department investigator was the person who "charged" attorney, she did so under the direction of district attorney after a review of the evidence, and therefore attorney was not prosecuted in the absence of probable cause. Cawood v. Haggard, E.D.Tenn.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 863, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 700, 2005 WL 773946. Civil Rights 1088(5)

County employee stated claim that his First Amendment rights were violated, by alleging several instances of harassment, and a demotion, after he publicly supported opposition party candidate for county executive position. Hodge v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.2003, 306 F.Supp.2d 288. Civil Rights 1395(8)

State employee who had worked as chief legal counsel for Wisconsin Department of Revenue sufficiently alleged that he was deprived of protected property interest when Department Secretary demoted him to position of attorney without pre-deprivation hearing; Wisconsin law provided that permanent status employee could be demoted only for just cause, chief legal counsel position was assumed to be permanent status position, and employee may have suffered loss of a property interest even if he remained employed by the state due to possibility of loss of immediate pay and status, and possibility of loss of future income and professional development potential. Evans v. Morgan, W.D.Wis.2003, 304 F.Supp.2d 1100. Constitutional Law 278.4(3); States 53

African-American female school district employee sufficiently alleged intent to disadvantage groups of which she was member, as required to state equal protection claim under § 1983; she alleged that board of education, superintendent and deputy superintendent discriminated against her on basis of her race, national origin and sex by harassing her and ultimately causing her constructive discharge. Grey v. City of Norwalk Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 314. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Restauranteurs failed to state claim that certain rules and procedures governing restaurant inspections, adopted by New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH), violated their substantive due process rights, since complaint did not allege facts demonstrating government action that was outrageously arbitrary, conscience shocking, or gross abuse of governmental authority. New York State Restaurant Association v. New York City Dept. of Health and Mental Hygiene, E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 265. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Those police officers who alleged First Amendment retaliation claims against policymakers for engaging in protected speech or union activities stated claims under § 1983 against governmental entities under policymaker theory. Bradshaw v. Township of Middletown, D.N.J.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 526, affirmed 145 Fed.Appx. 763, 2005 WL 2077137. Civil Rights 1395(8)

State prison inmate's complaint, which included allegations that prison officers used excessive and unnecessary force against him or failed to intervene to prevent the improper misuse of force, and that a prison sergeant told other prison officers to assault the inmate, was sufficient, when inmate was given the benefit of the inferences to which he was entitled at the pleadings stage, to state a claim for excessive use of force in violation of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1395(7)

To state claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege violation of rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and he must show person acting under color of law committed alleged deprivation. Baltoski v. Pretorius, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 807. Civil Rights 1304

Allegation that town's failure to train its police officers and its policy of allowing officers to serve as escorts in civil disputes led to police officer's conduct in escorting private individual into locked building to retrieve items from storekeeper's premises without notice, in deprivation of storekeeper's property rights under Due Process Clause, sufficiently pled claim for municipal liability under § 1983. Yeomans v. Wallace, D.Conn.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 70 . Civil Rights 1395(3); Civil Rights 1395(5)

Foster child's allegations that employees of Department of Children and Families (DCF) violated her due process right to be kept free from harm while in foster care, by leaving her in emergency shelter where they knew she was being abused, and keeping the fact of her abuse secret rather than removing her from this placement, stated a § 1983 claim, even under heightened pleading requirement for § 1983 actions. Danielle v. Adriazola, S.D.Fla.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1368. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Foster child's allegations that employees of Department of Children and Families (DCF) violated her due process right to be kept free from harm while in foster care, by leaving her in emergency shelter where they knew she was being abused, and keeping the fact of her abuse secret rather than removing her from this placement, stated a §§ 1983 claim, even under heightened pleading requirement for §§ 1983 actions. Danielle v. Adriazola, S.D.Fla.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1368. Civil Rights 1395(1)

When assessing a claim of qualified immunity, the court should first consider whether the allegations of the complaint make out a constitutional rights claim; if the answer to this inquiry is in the affirmative, the court must then determine, as a matter of law, whether the constitutional right in question was clearly established at the time of the alleged violation, and if so, whether a similarly situated official reasonably should have understood that his or her conduct violated that right. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Real estate developers sufficiently alleged that town planning board denied their applications for permits for construction of surgical center in retaliation for applying for construction of fast food restaurant to state First Amendment claim under § 1983; developers alleged that town planning administrator told them that restaurant application would hurt application for surgical center, that administrator told town planning board of additional requirements developers had to meet, that board then declared moratorium on issuance of zoning approvals, but applied it only to developers, refused to consider applications in timely manner, and later attempted to change zoning law to preclude development, and that as result developers lost opportunity to enter into $17 million lease for surgical center. Hampton Bays Connections, Inc. v. Duffy, E.D.N.Y.2001, 127 F.Supp.2d 364. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Driver sufficiently alleged violation of due process right to protect her liberty interest in her bodily integrity in order to bring § 1983 action against sheriff, for purposes of motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim; driver alleged she was in custody and told that she was going to detention center at time her rights were violated and that she was detained by deputy. Battista v. Cannon, M.D.Fla.1996, 934 F.Supp. 400. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Mayor, city manager and council members were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action in which former employee claimed that he was discharged in retaliation for speech protected by First Amendment; employee did not assert violation of constitutional right as he failed to plead facts connecting his speech and subsequent termination and conclusory allegations were insufficient. Ford v. City of Oakwood, Ga., N.D.Ga.1995, 905 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Section 1983 complaint filed by minor cancer patient and his parents, who were arrested for refusing to subject patient to chemotherapy, adequately alleged an affirmative link between alleged constitutional deprivation and either exercise of control or discretion by director of Utah's Division of Child and Family Services or his failure to supervise, as was required to hold him directly liable in his individual capacity, by alleging that director's office had intensive, day-to-day involvement in patient's case, which, in light of entire complaint, supported inference that director personally participated in, exercised control or discretion over, or failed to supervise his employees' actions in case. P.J. ex rel. Jensen v. Utah, D.Utah 2006, 2006 WL 1702585, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer's complaint against township and police chief failed to properly allege violation of his civil rights arising under First Amendment, and thus, officer's complaint failed to state any claim under §§ 1983; officer's complaint alleged that township's and police chief's conduct deprived him of rights guaranteed under First Amendment to freedom of association and right to engage in constitutionally protected activity and right to be free from retaliatory actions, but these conclusory allegations did not identify any constitutionally-protected associational ties or expressive activities that allegedly gave rise to retaliatory actions. Young v. New Sewickley Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 263, 2005 WL 3547341, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(8)

State prison inmate who failed to allege sufficient facts in his pro se §§ 1983 complaint to support his claim that state's application of amended parole reconsideration rule which changed the frequency of parole hearings from one year to eight years violated the Ex Post Facto clause was nonetheless entitled to opportunity to file a motion to amend his complaint and add more specific allegations on remand, where he raised on appeal more specific allegations that were sufficient for an individualized inquiry into his Ex Post Facto claim. Smith v. Georgia Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 160 Fed.Appx. 836, 2005 WL 3481338, Unreported. Federal Courts 952

Arrestee who brought § 1983 action against county officials, alleging civil rights violations, failed to raise any specific factual allegations showing constitutional violations, and thus claims against officials would be properly dismissed; arrestee's purportedly vulnerable position as resident and businessman was result of his criminal activity, officials were not prohibited from speaking with each other regarding arrestee, and indictment of arrestee was public information. Lee v. Alfonso, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22208020, Unreported. Civil Rights

Former employee's § 1983 claim against former employer, which failed to allege violation of federal rights other than those protected by Title VII, did not state cognizable claim; § 1983 only applied to violations of federal statutes or Constitution, and former employee had sufficient remedies under Title VII and state human rights law. Jones v. New York City Health and Hosp. Corp., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21262087, Unreported. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

4724. Capacity, necessary and requisite allegations

Prisoner's pleading in § 1983 action gave prison guards sufficient notice that they were being sued in their individual capacities where, in motion to bar Attorney General from representing guards, prisoner specifically stated that guards had acted outside scope of their employment and in bad faith when they cut his hair in connection with allegedly unprovoked assault. Pelfrey v. Chambers, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 43 F.3d 1034, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2269, 515 U.S. 1116, 132 L.Ed.2d 273. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Complaint in which tribes sought damages after prohibition of fishing for Spring Chinook Salmon during summer of 1991 in area of Salmon River traditionally fished by tribes did not name individual members of Idaho Fish and Game Commission and, thus, Eleventh Amendment barred claims against unnamed officials. Shoshone-Bannock Tribes v. Fish & Game Com'n, Idaho, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1994, 42 F.3d 1278. Federal Courts 269

Although arrestee failed to specify in his § 1983 civil rights action that he was suing state trooper in her individual capacity, it was clear from both pleadings and course of litigation that he was doing so, and so suit was not barred by Eleventh Amendment; arrestee sued for punitive damages, which are not available against state, trooper raised defense of qualified immunity, which indicated action was for individual capacity, and arrestee maintained his suit against individual trooper after she left employ of state, rather than amending to substitute current state officer. Pride v. Does, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 997 F.2d 712. Federal Courts 269

Arrestee failed to set forth "official capacity" in § 1983 civil rights claim against police captain who released expunged arrest record pursuant to subpoena since arrestee produced no evidence to establish: that captain was policymaker; captain did in fact establish some relevant policy; what policy might have been; or that policy was connected with release of purported protected information. Morton v. City of Little Rock, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 934 F.2d 180. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Inmates seeking damages under § 1983 were required to clearly set forth in their pleadings that they were suing state defendants in their individual capacities for damages, not simply in their capacities as state officials. Wells v. Brown, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1989, 891 F.2d 591, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Suing individual in his capacity as officer of government, although necessary to secure relief from government, is not indispensable to allegation of governmental action. Bishop v. Tice, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1980, 622 F.2d 349. Civil Rights 1386

Failure to allege official capacity of defendant in caption of civil rights complaint was merely a formal error and not a fatal defect; the allegations in the complaint would be examined to determine the nature of the cause of action. Parker v. Graves, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1973, 479 F.2d 335. Federal Civil Procedure 626

Hotel patron who was allegedly assaulted by hotel security personnel, and detained on suspicion of having shoplifted from coffee shop in hotel lobby, failed to allege that any state official acted in concert with the private security personnel to deprive him of his constitutional rights, as would support patron's claim under §§ 1983. Zuyus v. Hilton Riverside, E.D.La.2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Police officer's complaint did not adequately allege §§ 1983 claim for municipal liability against District of Columbia for violation of equal protection component of Fifth Amendment due process; one supervisor's decision to require officer to perform police duties without accommodating his medical condition, a susceptibility to seizures, and another supervisor's subsequent issuance of notice of proposed suspension of his motor vehicle permit had a reasonably conceivable rational basis, and thus did not give rise to a Fifth Amendment equal protection violation. Mitchell v. Yates, D.D.C.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 222. District Of Columbia 7

Arrestee failed to plead any facts supporting his allegation of the existence of an official policy or custom endorsing police officer's alleged misconduct, as was required to maintain §§ 1983 action against township. Walker v. North Wales Borough, E.D.Pa.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 219. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Police officer failed to state §§ 1983 claim against city or police chief in his official capacity, even though officer alleged that chief had policymaking authority, where officer made only conclusory allegations regarding purported policy that was implemented and/or created by chief without defining or describing what that policy was; chief's alleged actions in a specific case were not per se an official policy. Neveu v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1159. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Section 1983 claim upon which relief could be granted was not stated against mayor in her individual or official capacity by driver arrested for driving under the influence and held while city jail determined status of outstanding capias, where driver alleged only that mayor oversaw municipal offices and departments and was legally responsible for overall operation of city police department or division under her jurisdiction and alleged no personal action against mayor. Edwards v. Oberndorf, E.D.Va.2003, 309 F.Supp.2d 780, affirmed 63 Fed.Appx. 756, 2003 WL 21224212. Civil Rights 1358

The requirements for holding a municipality liable under § 1983 for unconstitutional acts by a municipal employee below the policymaking level apply not only in actions against local governments, but also in actions against individually-named municipal agents sued in their official capacities. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1354

District court would construe detainee's § 1983 complaint against state mental hospital and its physician as being brought against them in their official capacities only, where complaint was silent on the issue. Tinius v. Carroll County Sheriff Dept., N.D.Iowa 2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 971. Civil Rights 1360

Complaint alleging Fourth Amendment violations under § 1983, in connection with hostage-rescue training exercise at public high school conducted by city and county emergency response teams (ERTs), was insufficient to state claim against individual county ERT members; complaint did not unambiguously state that individual members were being sued in either their official or individual capacities, complaint failed to differentiate between county, city, or separately named county ERT members, and plaintiffs did not pursue a claim for punitive damages. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Reference by § 1983 plaintiffs to "individual capacity" of defendants, who were also public officials, in their response defendants' motion for summary judgment, was sufficient to permit court to assume, in deciding defendants' motion for summary judgment, that suit was brought against defendants in both their official and individual capacities. Matheny v. Boatright, S.D.Ga.1997, 970 F.Supp. 1039. Civil Rights 1360

District court looks to substance of plaintiff's claim, relief sought, and course of proceedings to determine nature of § 1983 suit when plaintiff fails to allege whether he is suing defendant in individual or official capacity. Pieve-Marin v. Combas-Sancho, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 967 F.Supp. 667. Civil Rights 1354

In the absence of allegations or evidence regarding identity of individuals who allegedly harassed inmate or stole his legal documents, inmate did not state claim for constitutional violation. Davie v. Wingard, S.D.Ohio 1997, 958

F.Supp. 1244, 166 A.L.R. Fed. 709. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Plaintiff failed to state federal civil rights claim against county defendants in their official capacity where he did not allege facts that implied existence of unconstitutional municipal policy or custom and did not allege which governmental entity officers represented in their official capacity. Robinson v. Howell, S.D.Ind.1995, 902 F.Supp. 836. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Pro se complaint alleging that prison's mail room supervisor selectively enforced prison regulations pertaining to erotic photographs on basis of race was sufficient to put supervisor on notice that he was being sued under § 1983 in his individual capacity; use of phrase "acts under color of law," did not mean that supervisor was being sued only in his official capacity. Johnson v. Daniels, E.D.Mich.1991, 769 F.Supp. 230, affirmed 70 F.3d 1272. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Civil rights complaint alleging that law enforcement officers searched family and its vehicle and fired handgun while family was on their own property for purpose of having picnic would not be dismissed to extent that officers were being sued in their personal capacities; however, family would have to amend complaint to express more clearly their intention to sue officers in their personal capacities and to rectify any deficiencies in pleading. Kjorlie v. Lundin, D.Kan.1991, 765 F.Supp. 671, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1395(6); Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Bar of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11 against obtaining money from state should not lightly be assumed from face of complaint; instead, where plaintiff has not specified whether defendants are sued in their official or personal capacities, allegations against state officials should be liberally construed in plaintiff's favor. Parrilla v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1978, 447 F.Supp. 363. Federal Courts 265

Arrestee stated claim against United States Marshals Service (USMS) agents in their individual capacities for violation of his Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights in arrest, although in form complaint pro se plaintiff arrestee checked box indicating that he was suing each defendant in official capacity; context of complaint and surrounding documents indicated that arrestee was also asserting claims against defendants in their individual capacities, arrestee indicated he was proceeding pursuant to §§ 1983 or Bivens in application to proceed in forma pauperis, and defendants were not prejudiced by failure to indicate they were sued in official capacities, as they specifically raised defenses of qualified immunity and quasi-judicial immunity. Trapp v. U.S. Marshals Service, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 139 Fed.Appx. 12, 2005 WL 1168439, Unreported, on remand 2005 WL 3179471. Civil Rights 1395(6)

4724A. Custom or practice, necessary and requisite allegation

Parent of junior high school student who died after falling ill on school band trip failed to state a §§ 1983 substantive due process claim against school district upon which relief could be granted, since complaint alleged no policy or custom of the district that caused an alleged constitutional violation. Lee v. Pine Bluff School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2007, 472 F.3d 1026. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Arrestee failed to state §§ 1983 claims against city and city police department when complaint contained only conclusory allegations regarding existence of formal or de facto policy on city's part respecting alleged violations of arrestee's constitutional rights, without alleging any facts tending to support inference that formal practice or custom endorsed by city actually existed. Williams v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 146. Civil Rights 1395(6) court need only determine that both "stigma" and "plus" are claimed to be sufficiently proximate; this requirement will be satisfied where (1) stigma and plus would to a reasonable observer appear connected, e.g., due to their order of occurrence, or their origin, and (2) actor imposing plus adopted, explicitly or implicitly, those statements in doing so; there is no rigid requirement that both "stigma" and "plus" issue from the same government actor or at the same time. Velez v. Levy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 401 F.3d 75. Constitutional Law 255(1)

Discharged public employee does not always successfully resist summary judgment motion, in § 1983 actions based on alleged discharge in violation of First Amendment, by asserting that certain protected speech caused termination from public employment. Barnard v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1218, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 17. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Professor failed to show any basis for holding city college system liable for alleged violation of civil rights in connection with system's failure to extend professor's paid sabbatical leave; professor alleged neither existence of municipal policy or custom, nor requisite causal connection between alleged policy and constitutional deprivations. Leahy v. Board of Trustees of Community College Dist. No. 508, County of Cook, State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 912 F.2d 917, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Allegations in inmate's pro se complaint that he directly informed state commissioner of corrections of his unconstitutional treatment and the commissioner neglected his responsibility to adequately address those complaints pled a causal connection between commissioner's alleged failure to act and inmate's alleged deprivation of civil rights while he was incarcerated, as required to state §§ 1983 claim. Niemic v. Maloney, D.Mass.2005, 409 F.Supp.2d 32. Civil Rights 1395(7)

In order for school district to be liable on §§ 1983 retaliatory discharge claim stemming from his termination after he exercised his First Amendment right to complain to district superintendent about racial bullying and harassment of his children, former school employee had to show that governmental entity's policies caused the constitutional violation. Dockery v. Unified School Dist. No. 231, D.Kan.2006, 406 F.Supp.2d 1219. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Complaint of residents who were arrested without a warrant in their home, alleging that, in light of number of city's police officers involved in number of alleged constitutional violations, city failed to train and supervise its police officers, was insufficient to state §§ 1983 claim against city for failing to train its police officers, absent allegation of, inter alia, any facts indicating that city's training procedures were constitutionally inadequate, that they did not comply with state-mandated training, or that city failed to supervise its officers, any facts showing that city's policymaker was deliberately indifferent, or any facts showing how inadequate training or supervision directly caused their injuries. Gast v. Singleton, S.D.Tex.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 794. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Parent sufficiently alleged causal connection between conduct of county youth services department and allegedly unlawful seizure of child, as required to maintain §§ 1983 action claiming seizure violated parent's federally protected rights; parent alleged that department employee falsely told judge issuing seizure order that parent violated voluntary safety plan requiring that she keep child away from father. Bowser v. Blair County Children and Youth Services, W.D.Pa.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 788. Civil Rights 1057

Parents and child stated claim against municipality, of intentional and invidious discrimination under equal protection clause, with respect to denial of playground privileges to home-schooled, autistic child, on allegations that conduct of school officials created and implemented different standards, conditions, and education of handicapped children when contrasted to non-handicapped children, even though the allegations were sometimes confusing. Fitzpatrick v. Town of Falmouth, D.Me.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 119, subsequent determination 324 F.Supp.2d 95, appeal after remand from federal court 879 A.2d 21. Civil Rights 1395(2) order to survive motion to dismiss for failure to state claim, but rather, consistent with notice pleading standard, complaint need only provide short and plain statement of claim showing that pleader is entitled to relief which must give defendant fair notice of what plaintiff's claim is and grounds upon which it rests. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Female employee of city transit authority failed to allege that "harassment" and resultant disparate treatment she received from supervisor was based upon her gender or was in retaliation for her exercise of her First Amendment free speech rights, as required to state § 1983 claims against supervisor. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1395(8)

City was not liable under § 1983 for acts of judge and hearing officer in conducting hearing to determine whether bail bondsman had outstanding bonds; bondsman's complaint failed to allege how city had caused constitutional tort, and judge and hearing officer were protected by mantle of judicial immunity. Jefferson v. City of Hazlehurst, S.D.Miss.1995, 936 F.Supp. 382. Civil Rights 1376(8); Civil Rights 1395(1)

School district was not liable under § 1983 for school bus driver's supervisor's nonrenewal of school bus driver's contract allegedly in violation of her First Amendment rights; supervisor did not have authority to terminate driver but only ability to make a recommendation to superior or to school board, there was no evidence that school board had delegated any policymaking authority to supervisor, and there was no evidence that even if school district retained its decisionmaking power, it acted with deliberate indifference to driver's First Amendment rights in approving her nonrenewal. Reidenbach v. U.S.D. No. 437, D.Kan.1996, 912 F.Supp. 1445. Civil Rights 1351(5)

To establish retaliation claim under § 1983, plaintiff must demonstrate that his conduct is deserving of First Amendment protection and that defendant's conduct was motivated by or substantially caused by his exercise of free speech. Cooper v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.1995, 888 F.Supp. 376. Civil Rights 1032

Civil rights plaintiff must allege that he has suffered some injury in fact, that the interests sought to be protected are arguably within zone of interest to be protected by the constitutional guarantee in question, and that there is a fairly traceable causal connection between alleged deprivation or injury and the alleged conduct of the defendants. Lesser v. Neosho County Community College, D.Kan.1990, 741 F.Supp. 854. Civil Rights 1394

To establish a claim under this section, plaintiff must allege and prove that defendants acted under color of state or local law, that plaintiff was deprived of specific articulable rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and that defendants' conduct was a cause in fact of plaintiff's deprivation, and in support of these allegations plaintiff must set forth highly specific facts and not merely conclusionary allegations. German v. Killeen, E.D.Mich.1980, 495 F.Supp. 822.

Inmate's allegations that prison officials personally failed to act on knowledge of the assault on inmate were insufficient to state an independent constitutional violation, for purposes of §§ 1983, absent causal relationship between alleged failures and assault. Dukes v. Deputy Supt. of Sec., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 153 Fed.Appx. 772, 2005 WL 2899781, Unreported. Civil Rights 1093

Workers' compensation claimant stated direct § 1983 claim against Pinnacol by alleging facts indicating that Pinnacol violated her constitutional rights through acts of its authorized agents who carried out Pinnacol's decision to terminate or refuse to pay her benefits. Roberson v. Pinnacol Assur., C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 98 Fed.Appx. 778, 2004 WL 1059799, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(6)

To the extent a developer asserted a § 1983 claim based on conduct unrelated to the revocation of a tax exemption, it was insufficiently elaborated in his brief to permit meaningful review and was therefore waived. Lugo Rodriguez v. Puerto Rico Institute of Culture, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 98 Fed.Appx. 15, 2004 WL 964272, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 416, 543 U.S. 958, 160 L.Ed.2d 321. Federal Courts 714; Federal Courts 915

Client's conclusory allegation, that law firm, which was private entity and which was retained in connection with proceeding before New York State Worker's Compensation Board, acted under color of state law by conspiring with "unknown" judge on Board to discriminate against him because of his race and national origin, was insufficient to demonstrate that firm acted in concert with judge, as required to state § 1983 claim against firm for violation of First and Fourteenth Amendments; pleadings did not identify with whom firm conspired, allegations described unilateral conduct by firm, and ruling by Board in client's favor undermined claim that one of its members participated in conspiracy. O'Diah v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22481029, Unreported. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

Complaint under this section seeking declaratory relief and injunction restraining defendants from prosecuting or threatening to prosecute plaintiffs for alleged violations of Louisiana Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law and Communist Propaganda Control Law, LSA-R.S. 14:358 et seq., alleged sufficient irreparable injury to justify equitable relief. Dombrowski v. Pfister, U.S.La.1965, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 380 U.S. 479, 14 L.Ed.2d 22. Civil Rights 1395(5); Courts 508(7)

Female magistrate could not establish prima facie case of retaliation under §§ 1983, Title VII, or Ohio Civil Rights Act (OCRA) based on presiding judge's "termination" of her during meeting after she complained about unequal pay, where he rescinded termination in his next breath and she continued to be employed as magistrate. Birch v. Cuyahoga County Probate Court, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 392 F.3d 151. Civil Rights 1249(2)

Allegations that police officer showed up at claimant's work while in uniform and on duty, placed his hand under her sweatshirt, fondled her breast and chest, and implied they should engage in further sexual contact, in larger context of his threatening adverse official action by way of speeding ticket and following her in his police car, stated substantive due process claim against officer and city under § 1983. Haberthur v. City of Raymore, Missouri, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 119 F.3d 720. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Civil rights complaint which requested recovery for "mental anguish and suffering and loss of companionship, contribution, society, affection, and comfort" adequately pled claim for damages for the victim's mother in her own right. Flores v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 92 F.3d 258, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Restrictions imposed upon inmates in protective custody to use of library were minor and incidental and thus, in order to prevail in his § 1983 action, inmate was required to plead prejudice; although prison banned inmate from its library, it permitted clerks to personally meet with inmate and to research on his behalf. Jenkins v. Lane, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 977 F.2d 266. Civil Rights 1098

Inmate's alleged losses including cost of underwear and shoes during eight months he was denied access to clothes and his property due to misdelivery of property by prison officials, cost of mailing misdelivered boxes from District of Columbia to Florida facility, and emotional distress did not establish actual injury to support § 1983 claim of denial of right of access to law libraries or legal assistance. Crawford-El v. Britton, C.A.D.C.1991, 951 F.2d 1314, 293 U.S.App.D.C. 47, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 62, 506 U.S. 818, 121 L.Ed.2d 29, on remand 844 F.Supp. 795. Civil Rights 1094

Pro se inmate bringing § 1983 action in connection with allegedly unconstitutional deprivation of food alleged "harm" by stating that he had suffered "substantial weight loss." Cooper v. Sheriff, Lubbock County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1078. Civil Rights 1395(7)

When subjected to illegal search and seizure, special damages need not be alleged in deprivation of civil rights under color of state law action because victim is harmed by invasion of his zone of privacy. Day v. Morgenthau, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 909 F.2d 75, amended on rehearing, on remand 769 F.Supp. 472. Civil Rights 1395(6)

A state prisoner's allegation that he was frightened and had suffered bad dreams as a result of the use of excessive force upon his apprehension following an escape when a deputy sheriff handcuffed him, placed a revolver in his mouth, threatened to blow his head off, and twice punched him in the stomach, did not sufficiently allege significant injury required to recover money damages under § 1983 for use of excessive force in an illegal arrest. Wisniewski v. Kennard, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 901 F.2d 1276, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 309, 498 U.S. 926, 112 L.Ed.2d 262. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Access-to-courts complaint, which alleged that prison rules prevented adequate legal research and counseling, stated sufficient allegation of prejudice to withstand motion to dismiss for failure to state claim upon which relief could be granted; when inmate complains of prison rules that substantially and continuously limit access to legal materials and counseling, complaint carries inherent allegation of prejudice, and prison officials had repeatedly admitted that rules created "problem of legal assistance" for inmates. DeMallory v. Cullen, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1988, 855 F.2d 442. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate's allegations regarding correctional officer's physical abuse when inmate initially refused to comply with order that he return to his cell did not state viable claim under § 1983, in absence of any claim that abuse caused severe injuries, was grossly disproportionate to need for action under circumstances, or was inspired by malice. Hines v. Boothe, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 841 F.2d 623. Civil Rights 1395(7)

No physical injury was required before civil rights claim could be stated against police officer who allegedly forced citizens to travel at high speeds in an attempt to flee the terrorizing police officer. Checki v. Webb, C.A.5 (La.) 1986, 785 F.2d 534. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Prisoner failed in his §§ 1983 complaint against prison official to allege any actual harm from interference with his legal mail and, therefore, he failed to state a First Amendment violation with respect to access to the courts. Strong v. Woodford, C.D.Cal.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 1082. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prison inmate's § 1983 Eighth Amendment claims against prison officers could not go forward without allegations of physical injury. Minifield v. Butikofer, N.D.Cal.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 900. Civil Rights 1463

Allegations that teacher seized the arm of high school student without cause or legitimate reason and twisted it behind her back, ultimately breaking the arm, were sufficient to state claim against school board defendants; parent was not obliged to plead evidence supporting his allegations of the existence of a custom or policy that allegedly caused the injury in question. Tsotesi v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 336. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Tenant in public housing project did not allege injury in fact and, thus, did not have standing to prosecute civil rights action by security guard service that challenged termination of its contract; tenant did not allege that she had been or would be crime victim as result of contract termination. X-Men Sec., Inc. v. Pataki, E.D.N.Y.1997, 983 F.Supp. 101, on reconsideration, reversed 196 F.3d 56. Civil Rights 1333(3)

Prisoner asserting claim of interference with his access to courts must plead and prove that he has been prejudiced with regard to specific litigation. Hall v. Conklin, W.D.Mich.1996, 966 F.Supp. 546. Civil Rights 1397

Plaintiffs' § 1983 substantive due process claim against city, arising from city's demolition of plaintiffs' fire-damaged building and intent to seek demolition costs from plaintiffs, was sufficient; plaintiffs claimed that city deprived plaintiffs of access to property during nuisance abatement period based on racial prejudice against plaintiffs. Homan v. City of Reading, E.D.Pa.1997, 963 F.Supp. 485. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Arrestee failed to state civil rights claim against police officer asserting violation of due process from showup identification procedure used by officer, absent any allegation that evidence derived from identification prejudiced arrestee's right to fair trial. Williams v. Hutchens, N.D.Ill.1994, 870 F.Supp. 857. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Inmate asserting § 1983 civil rights claim based on alleged use of excessive force in violation of Eighth Amendment must allege that some injury arose from incident, even if injury was insignificant. Guidry v. Jefferson County Detention Center, E.D.Tex.1994, 868 F.Supp. 189. Civil Rights 1093

Inmate failed to allege that any harm had befallen him as a result of alleged indifference shown by physician and prison official as to his asserted claustrophobia, as required to state Eighth Amendment claim. Lee v. Akture, E.D.Wis.1993, 827 F.Supp. 556. Sentencing And Punishment 1547; Prisons 17(2)

In § 1983 action by insurance companies against official of Illinois Department of Insurance, in which companies alleged that official had personal vendetta against companies' principal, companies failed to allege any direct harm arising from official's direct actions, thus requiring dismissal; only direct harm alleged by one company was cost of investigation initiated by Tennessee Insurance Department, and all acts leading up to any purported harm were done by officials from State of Tennessee, and principal did not even own other insurer during period of most of actions complained of and, with respect to time following his purchase of that company, that company failed to allege any specific injury to its business, either reputational or financial. Universal Sec. Ins. Co. v. Koefoed, N.D.Ill.1991, 775 F.Supp. 240. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Property owner's allegations that, as result of officer's allegedly unconstitutional conduct, she was forced to sell property and leave town, and that she suffered embarrassment and mental anguish, were sufficient to state elements of injury which were compensable in § 1983 action. Eyer v. City of Reynoldsburg, S.D.Ohio 1991, 756 F.Supp. 344. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Alleged conduct of prison officials in making incorrect entries in inmate's medical file caused inmate no harm or inconvenience and thus allegations did not state claim under § 1983 for violation of his Eighth Amendment rights. Smith v. Huffman, W.D.Va.1987, 670 F.Supp. 176. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Where each named plaintiff allegedly had suffered injury due to conditions at youth study center or conduct by youth study center personnel, and supervisory defendants were linked to such conditions and misconduct through their statutory duties and allegations that mistreatment was direct consequence of policies and practices authorized or acquiesced in by them, complaint in civil rights action challenging conditions of confinement and treatment at center demonstrated both injury to named plaintiffs and defendants' connection to those injuries. Santiago v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1977, 435 F.Supp. 136. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate was barred from seeking damages under § 1983 as result of his allegedly unconstitutional conviction, absent showing that his conviction or sentence had been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to do so, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Henry v. Purvis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 111 Fed.Appx. 622, 2004 WL 2190919, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

State prisoner failed to state § 1983 claim that his Sixth Amendment right to release and his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment had been violated; although prisoner alleged that department of corrections official created false sentence computation data form, he did not allege that lack of accurate sentence computation data form affected him in any way. Peterson v. Tomaselli, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22213125, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4727. Deliberate indifference, necessary and requisite allegations

Allegations that officers who detained person for emergency psychiatric evaluation used pepper spray and hand and leg restraints when taking him into custody and then placed him face down in the police car and in the emergency room, resulting in his death from sudden cardiac arrhythmia possibly caused by a combination of stimulant drug intoxication and physical restraint, fell short of alleging deliberate indifference, so as to support a claim of substantive due process violation; even if pepper spray is dangerous for a phencyclidine (PCP) user, the complaint alleged only that detainee was behaving strangely and that the autopsy revealed that he had PCP in his system, and there was no allegation that the officers knew or even suspected detainee was under the influence of PCP, and given detainee's erratic behavior and his struggle with the officers, the mere use of pepper spray could not be considered a due process violation. Young v. City of Mount Ranier, C.A.4 (Md.) 2001, 238 F.3d 567. Civil Rights 1395(6); Constitutional Law 255(5); Mental Health 51.20

Prisoner failed to produce evidence showing any knowledge on part of named prison officials of his physical condition or that he requested and was denied medical care for his injuries, and thus, because he failed to allege any deliberate indifference on part of officials, prisoner failed to state § 1983 claim that denial of medical treatment constituted violation of Eighth Amendment. Mitchell v. Maynard, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 80 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1420

Prisoner alleged requisite "deliberate indifference" to support Eighth Amendment claim by alleging that he was denied Rebetron Therapy by prison officials for 15 months, because he had tested positive for use of controlled substances, despite unanimous agreement by his treating physicians that Therapy was proper treatment for his Hepatitis C. Johnson v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 352. Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Allegation that Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services was "grossly negligent in supervising [his] subordinates," resulting in prisoner's failure to get Rebetron Therapy for his Hepatitis C, was sufficient to state claim for supervisory liability under § 1983 on Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim, despite contention that allegation was conclusory. Johnson v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 352. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pretrial detainee who sued private jail corporation, stemming from attack while incarcerated, properly stated §§ 1983 claim for failure to train and/or supervise employees regarding proper inmate segregation; complaint averred that such failure constituted deliberate indifference to detainee's constitutional rights, and that constitutional violations were proximate cause of his injuries. Stephens v. Correctional Services Corp., E.D.Tex.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 580. Civil Rights 1395(7)

California state prison inmate who could not recover in §§ 1983 action from prison's chief medical officer on theory his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual treatment was violated as he had not alleged deliberate indifference on part of medical officer would be granted leave to amend, as it was possible that inmate could cure deficiencies in his complaint by pleading additional facts showing medical officer knew of and consciously disregarded need for mental health treatment of inmate, who was follower of Islam and did not consume pork, but was allegedly misled into consuming unlabeled pork product. Lewis v. Mitchell, S.D.Cal.2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 935. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

While the theory of respondeat superior does not support liability under §§ 1983, a plaintiff can state a §§ 1983 claim for supervisory liability where he alleges with some foundation that the defendant's acts or omissions amounted to a reckless or callous indifference to the constitutional rights of others. Niemic v. Maloney, D.Mass.2005, 409 F.Supp.2d 32. Civil Rights 1355 indifferent to his serious medical need, that there was continuous pattern of his medical treatment being delayed for non-medical reasons, and that policy failed to address immediate needs of inmates with serious medical conditions, and suggesting absence of basic policies to insure that medical orders of treating physicians were reasonably followed and that medical orders of physicians were reasonably transmitted, stated cause of action under §§ 1983 for deliberate indifference to serious medical need. Jackson v. First Correctional Medical Services, D.Del.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 387. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Prisoner stated claim under §§ 1983 against corrections officer, as Interstate Compacts Administrator for District of Columbia, on allegations that officer acted with deliberate indifference toward prisoner's health and safety when she chose not to inform transferee prisons of existence of separation orders. Ashford v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 8. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prison inmate's § 1983 complaint, alleging that a doctor prescribed a pain reliever and muscle relaxer and physical therapy for his medical problems, but that a prison official canceled this treatment on ground the prison could not afford the cost, was sufficient under notice pleading standards to state a claim for deliberate indifference to the inmate's serious medical needs in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Former inmate failed to allege any constitutional violation by sheriff, sheriff's department, or medical department, or a constitutional harm related to his slip and fall in the shower while incarcerated, as required to state a claim under § 1983; allegation that a rubber mat was not provided in wet shower area did not trigger protections of Fourteenth Amendment. Jones v. Nassau County Sheriff Dept., E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 322. Constitutional Law 272(2); Prisons 17(1)

4728. Exhaustion of remedies, necessary and requisite allegations

Former pretrial detainee adequately alleged exhaustion of administrative remedies to satisfy Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), thus precluding dismissal of his §§ 1983 action alleging excessive force; detainee alleged that he filed grievance within time prescribed by corrections department's grievance policy, but that department never responded to original grievance or subsequently-filed grievances. Brengettcy v. Horton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 423 F.3d 674. Civil Rights 1319

While inmate's complaint did not specifically state that he had failed to exhaust grievance procedures available to him, he alleged sufficient facts to show that he used prison grievance system and that he might be able to prove that he exhausted grievance procedures, thus precluding dismissal of his § 1983 suit on that ground for failure to state claim; inmate alleged that he had filed three grievances, and that in response to third grievance, he received new hearing pursuant to which his disciplinary ticket was dismissed. Evans v. Allen, N.D.Ill.1997, 981 F.Supp. 1102. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Plaintiff did not state § 1983 procedural due process claim, where he failed to allege that any of defendants refused to make available procedural means to remedy any of alleged deprivations, he admitted that he availed himself of appellate rights available to him, and he admitted that he was ultimately awarded permits and approvals that he sought. Coletta v. City of North Bay Village, S.D.Fla.1997, 962 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Former director of dental services at state psychiatric facility failed to establish § 1983 claim premised on claim that he was forced to resign without pre or posttermination hearing, where he failed to allege that state law did not afford adequate pre or postdeprivation remedy for his constructive discharge. Koch v. Mirza, W.D.N.Y.1994, 869 F.Supp. 1031. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where claimant can genuinely assert that it was entitled to predeprivation hearing under Matthews balancing test, it need not allege unavailability of state remedies in order to state § 1983 procedural due process claim. Lanmar

Industrial revenue bond applicants, whose application was denied by town council despite satisfaction of all requirements and who claimed only random, unauthorized actions, were required to allege that they availed themselves of private right of action under Massachusetts conflict of interest laws or any other remedy provided by state law or to explain why Massachusetts remedies were inadequate in order to state section 1983 claim for violation of procedural due process. Fisichelli v. Town of Methuen, D.Mass.1987, 653 F.Supp. 1494, appeal dismissed 884 F.2d 17. Civil Rights 1321

Where state prisoner's petition did not allege that he had exhausted state remedies or that they were inadequate to afford him relief upon his complaint that he had been required to wait one hour before being permitted to go to prison hospital for treatment for backache, no federal claim was stated. Bailey v. Beto, S.D.Tex.1970, 313 F.Supp. 918. Federal Courts 244

School board administrative employee could not challenge his demotion under § 1983 as a violation of due process where complaint did not allege that employee exhausted all administrative and judicial remedies prior to filing suit. Gilliard v. School Bd. of Miami-Dade County, FL, S.D.Fla.2003, 2003 WL 251936, Unreported. Civil Rights 1312

4729. Immunity, necessary and requisite allegations

A civil rights complaint filed under §§ 1983 against a government official need only satisfy the notice pleading standard, regardless of the availability of a qualified immunity defense. Thomas v. Independence Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 463 F.3d 285. Civil Rights 1398

Plaintiff need not plead the absence of immunity, at least where such immunity is not absolute, in an action brought under statute authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law. McDaniel v. Rhodes, S.D.Ohio 1981, 512 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1398

Absence of factual allegations that state-court judges acted outside scope of their judicial capacity or lacked jurisdiction in matter precluded, on grounds of judicial immunity, litigant's claims against state-court judges, based upon judges' rulings or their in-court comments, alleging intentional tort, conspiracy, perjury, subornation of perjury, felony, fraud, breach of civil obligation, oppression, obstruction of justice, malice, harassment, defamation and slander, endangerment, civil rights violation, racial discrimination, intentional gross negligence, and abuse of judicial power. Haile v. Sawyer, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 1907661, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 129, 2003 WL 22145851. Civil Rights 1376(8); Judges 36

4730. Knowledge and intent, necessary and requisite allegations

Allegations in complaint, that it was highly likely, given circumstances at certain protest location during Presidential Inaugural Parade, that police officers would violate protestors' constitutional rights, failed to state cause of action under § 1983 for police supervisors' personal liability, through inaction or failure to supervise, for constitutional violations in connection with officers' alleged pepper spraying of protestors, absent allegation that supervisors had actual or constructive knowledge of past transgressions or were responsible or aware of clearly deficient training. International Action Center v. U.S., C.A.D.C.2004, 365 F.3d 20, 361 U.S.App.D.C. 108. Civil Rights 1358

Police officers failed to allege that police union acted with intent to deprive white officers of equal protection as would support § 1983 or federal conspiracy statute claim by alleging that city, with assistance of union, used race and national origin as motivating factor in excluding whites from promotion on police force. Majeske v. Fraternal Order of Police, Local Lodge No. 7, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 94 F.3d 307. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Allegation that agency official selectively enforced law maliciously and in bad faith, but without intent to injure group or punish exercise of constitutional right, was insufficient to state § 1983 claim against official of state environmental agency for violation of property owner's equal protection rights. Futernick v. Sumpter Tp., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 78 F.3d 1051, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 296, 519 U.S. 928, 136 L.Ed.2d 215. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Mother and sister's complaint in which they alleged that various officials and public bodies of both city and county violated their civil rights through wrongful death of their son and brother while he was incarcerated at county jail, by depriving mother and sister of their constitutional right of familial association failed to state claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 governing deprivation of civil rights, where complaint did not allege intent on part of defendants to deprive mother and sister of their protected relationship with their son and brother. Trujillo v. Board of County Com'rs of Santa Fe County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1985, 768 F.2d 1186. Civil Rights 1395(5)

In order to state a due process claim under this section, it is not necessary to allege a purpose on part of defendant to deprive plaintiff of any federal right. DeWitt v. Pail, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1966, 366 F.2d 682. Civil Rights 1394

Former supervisor could not be liable under §§ 1983 for alleged employment discrimination against former public employees, absent allegations, aside from conclusory generalizations, that reflected a political animus behind any action or inaction on the part of former supervisor. Gutierrez v. Molina, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 168. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Lessors of vendor kiosk located on city-owned property in public market stated claim that their political affiliation was motivating factor in mayor's refusal to permit enlargement of their kiosk, as required to support lessors' §§ 1983 political discrimination action against mayor and others, by alleging that lessor had publicly campaigned for mayor's opponent in recent election, that since election mayor had refused to discuss lessors' petition for enlargement, and that meanwhile mayor had enlarged several kiosks leased by members of mayor's party and had assigned larger spaces in public market to members of same party. Rodriguez Cruz v. Trujillo, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 240. Municipal Corporations 720

Conscious or intentional conduct supporting section 1983 claim for violation of First Amendment free exercise of religion rights was sufficiently alleged as to California state prison cook by inmate who was follower of Islam and who did not eat pork, and who claimed he asked cook three times to determine if turkey ham contained pork, was told by cook that he checked product and it did not contain pork, and was thereby misled into consuming pork. Lewis v. Mitchell, S.D.Cal.2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 935. Civil Rights 1395(7)

To state a claim under §§ 1983 for violation of Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, plaintiff must show that defendants acted with an intent or purpose to discriminate against the plaintiff based upon membership in a protected class. Neveu v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1159. Constitutional Law 211(1)

Allegations that officers through their collective or individual negligence or willful intent suppressed and destroyed or hid important exculpatory evidence which caused arrestee to be prosecuted for rape, robbery, and weapons law violations that he did not commit, stated §§ 1983 claim against officers for conspiracy. Nunez Gonzalez v. Vazquez Garced, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 214. Conspiracy 18

Veterinarian failed to state "class of one" equal protection claim against executive secretary of state racing commission and commission members when he alleged that he was treated differently from similarly situated individuals in being denied temporary license to treat racehorses and by directive prohibiting racehorses treated off racetrack premises by veterinarian ineligible for commission license from racing for 14 days, given absence of allegation that allegedly disparate treatment to which he was subjected was either intentional or irrational. VanHorn v. Nebraska State Racing Com'n, D.Neb.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 1151. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Female employee of city transit authority failed to allege that "harassment" and resultant disparate treatment she received from supervisor was based upon her gender or was in retaliation for her exercise of her First Amendment free speech rights, as required to state § 1983 claims against supervisor. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Low bidder who was not awarded local landfill contract did not establish § 1983 equal protection claim against county; bidder did not allege that county intentionally discriminated against it because of its membership in protected class, bidder did not offer proof of discriminatory intent, and allegation that county departed from normal procedures in rejecting low bid was insufficient to establish clear and intentional discrimination in light of broad discretion which county had in awarding contract. City-Wide Asphalt Paving, Inc. v. Alamance County, M.D.N.C.1997, 966 F.Supp. 395. Civil Rights 1041

Virginia state prisoner housed in Tennessee failed to state claim that incarceration in Tennessee constituted cruel and unusual punishment, even though prisoner asserted that he was assaulted and lived in fear of being beaten or forced to join gang, where prisoner failed to allege that defendants, the director of Virginia department of corrections and the director of the Virginia parole board, knew of and disregarded an excessive risk to his safety. Tucker v. Angelone, E.D.Va.1997, 954 F.Supp. 134, affirmed 116 F.3d 473. Sentencing And Punishment 1537

Plaintiff who contended that state defendants violated § 1983 because they knowingly continued to fund an agency that discriminated on basis of race stated a claim for which relief could be granted. Seeney v. Kavitski, E.D.Pa.1994, 866 F.Supp. 206, affirmed 107 F.3d 8. Civil Rights 1395(1)

In cause of action under this section for discrimination in employment, plaintiff must show purposeful discriminatory act; something more than discriminatory impact must be shown. Perham v. Ladd, N.D.Ill.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1101. Civil Rights 1405

To extent that racial segregation at youth study center was challenged under this section providing for liability for deprivation of rights under color of state law, intentional action had to be alleged in order to plead a constitutional deprivation, and, similarly, intentional conduct had to be shown in connection with alleged denial of adequate medical treatment by defendants. Santiago v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1977, 435 F.Supp. 136. Civil Rights 1395(7); Civil Rights 1406

In pro se § 1983 complaint, allegation by prisoner injured during softball game that prison superintendent knew of dangerous condition of recreation area was sufficient to satisfy subjective element required to state Eighth Amendment claim. Slacks v. Grenier, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22232942, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4731. Malice, necessary and requisite allegations

In teachers' civil rights action against board of education for the board allegedly causing and prolonging teachers' confinement for contempt by misrepresenting facts to state appeals court during habeas hearing, complaint failed to state claim upon which relief could be granted where it contained no allegation of malice. Lucsik v. Board of Ed. of Brunswick City School Dist., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1980, 621 F.2d 841. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Where actual malice on part of publisher was not alleged, allegations that newspaper publisher suppressed judicial scandals, failed to furnish reporter to cover plaintiff's trial on criminal charges and engaged in distorted coverage of trial were not sufficient to state claim upon which relief could be granted under this section. Page v. Sharpe, C.A.1 (Me.) 1973, 487 F.2d 567. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Plaintiff in § 1983 action failed to allege that defendants acted with malice or willfully and wantonly, as was prerequisite to recovery of punitive damages. San Filippo v. Bongiovanni, D.N.J.1990, 743 F.Supp. 327, reversed on other grounds 961 F.2d 1125, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 305, 506 U.S. 908, 121 L.Ed.2d 228. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Attorneys' civil rights complaint which alleged that acts of prison officials in restricting attorney's access to their client were malicious, intentional and deliberate was sufficient to state claim for punitive damages. Keker v. Procunier, E.D.Cal.1975, 398 F.Supp. 756. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4732. Overt acts, necessary and requisite allegations

A complaint brought under this section governing civil actions for deprivation of rights is insufficient if it fails to allege overt acts by the defendant, or that acts were done at defendant's direction, or that they were done with his knowledge and consent. Young v. Peoria Housing Authority, C.D.Ill.1979, 479 F.Supp. 1093. Civil Rights 1394

Complaint which alleged that Chicago electoral board had rendered a decision unfavorable to candidate and had previously rendered an inconsistent decision favoring a member of a different political party and that the difference resulted from arbitrary, capricious and discriminatory conduct did not state a claim of invidious discrimination necessary to support relief under this section where there were no allegations of overt acts committed by the board in the course of the alleged violations. Lizak v. Kusper, N.D.Ill.1974, 399 F.Supp. 1270, affirmed 506 F.2d 1405. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4733. Personal involvement, necessary and requisite allegations--Generally

Borough manager's allegations that he reported to the borough council consisting of six elected council members, which served as manager's supervisor, and, in respect to some subjects, to the elected mayor of the borough, was sufficient to allege that the mayor had the power to constructively discharge manager, even though only the borough council could fire the manager outright, as required for manager's claims against mayor that he was retaliated against in violation of the First Amendment. Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 225. Municipal Corporations 156

Dismissing plaintiff's third amended §§1983 complaint based on plaintiff's failure to delineate defendants and identify their respective acts or omissions, as ordered by district court, was not abuse of discretion; at time of dismissal, litigation had been pending for approximately 18 months, district court had recently admonished plaintiff for failure to comply with the discovery schedule, and plaintiff's failure to articulate specific factual allegations tied to specific defendants, well into discovery, denied defendants protection of qualified immunity. Doe v. Cassel, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 403 F.3d 986. Federal Civil Procedure 1741

Plainclothes officer who instructed uniformed officer to determine who plaintiff demonstrator was and what he was doing was entitled to qualified immunity from plaintiff's § 1983 claim; complaint failed to allege sufficient involvement by plainclothes officer to lay foundation for recovery under § 1983. Johnston v. City of Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 14 F.3d 1056. Civil Rights 1398

Inmate's allegations that prison superintendent ignored repeated malicious acts of corrections officer against inmate was sufficient to plead that superintendent was personally involved in alleged deprivation of inmate's constitutional rights, as required to state a claim under §§ 1983 against supervisory official. Locicero v. O'Connell, S.D.N.Y.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 521. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Claim was stated under §§ 1983, that director of human resources at university which owned nursing home facility violated federal rights of nurse, through allegations that director was involved in wrongful decision to terminate, and that he signed termination letter. Pinero v. Long Island State Veterans Home, E.D.N.Y.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d

162. Civil Rights 1395(8)

State prisoner's free speech complaint under §§ 1983, which did not allege any involvement on part of warden or secretary of state department of corrections in censorship of prisoner's outgoing mail, and did not allege facts from which inference could be drawn that warden or secretary knew of censorship at any time relevant to case, failed to state claim. Koutnik v. Brown, W.D.Wis.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 871. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Employee of Puerto Rico Department of the Family failed to plead cognizable claim of political discrimination against Department's Secretary and Assistant Secretary of Administration; employee failed to allege direct involvement at hand of those individuals and could not meet burden of establishing that her party affiliation was substantial or motivating factor for alleged adverse employment actions taken against her, let alone prove she suffered all those actions. Rosado De Velez v. Zayas, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 202. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Inmate adequately alleged personal involvement of supervisory prison official in alleged campaign of harassment in retaliation for exercising his First Amendment right to file grievances and pursue other related remedies to state § § 1983 claim against the official; inmate had filed previous grievances and litigations against the supervisor at another facility, and alleged that he was harassed and retaliated against by security staff once supervisor arrived at facility where he was confined. Hernandez v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 537. Civil Rights 1358

To state a § 1983 claim, a plaintiff must allege that defendant, while acting under color of state law, deprived plaintiff of his constitutional or statutory rights. Perkins v. Brown, E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 279. Civil Rights 1304

Arrestee could not maintain § 1983 claim for false arrest against unnamed officer where she had never deposed any member of police department in an effort to determine the identity of unnamed officer, and time for discovery had past. Colon v. Ludemann, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 747. Federal Civil Procedure 101

Child failed to state cause of action for supervisory liability under § 1983 in complaint, against directors of county department of family services and mental health center, absent allegations with respect to directors' role in decision to remove child, or allegation that directors had knowledge of decision to remove. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Inmate's failure to identify "John Doe" corrections officer who transported him between facilities and allegedly made some rude remarks to him, and failure to state alleged constitutional violations with more particularity, precluded inmate's § 1983 claim. Johnson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 186. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegation that a prison official responded to a inmate's letter was insufficient to establish his personal involvement in an alleged constitutional violation arising from asbestos particles purportedly present in the air in the prison's workroom, visiting room and common basement, thus precluding imposition of liability on prison official in inmate's § 1983 suit. Labounty v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21692766, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

State prisoner failed to allege that prison officials participated personally in alleged violation of his Eighth Amendment right to humane conditions of confinement, as required to state § 1983 claims against officials. Britt v. Department of Corrections, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1338684, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Former borough manager failed to state a claim for equal protection violations under the "class of one" theory absent allegations of the existence of similarly situated individuals, specifically, borough managers, who the mayor treated differently. Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 225. Civil Rights 1395(8)

4734. Ratification of private action, necessary and requisite allegations

Complaint alleging that two white residents of city with full knowledge and acquiescence of city councilmen erected and maintained fence across public street in such manner as to deny black residents of city public access to and from their homes for the sole purpose of denying black citizens the same rights to enjoy real property as is enjoyed by white citizens stated a cognizable claim against city and its councilmen under this section, and with respect to claim against private parties it was impossible to conclude that no evidence could exist which would bring into play concepts by which actions of private individuals become state action. Jennings v. Patterson, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1972, 460 F.2d 1021. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint alleging that arresting officers acted on police chief's instruction in arresting nude dancer and that their actions were subsequently ratified and approved by him and complaint alleging that there was past history of police harassment of theatrical endeavors at premises where arrest in question occurred stated claim against police chief for authorizing and approving police enforcement of obscenity ordinance at premises in question, which enforcement resulted, according to complaint, in violation of rights of production company that employed dancer under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Ziegman Productions Inc. v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1981, 511 F.Supp. 717 . Civil Rights 1395(6)

In action brought against law enforcement officers and sheriff alleging deprivation of civil rights arising out of arrest and detention of plaintiff, allegation that actions of the officers were committed at sheriff's direction or with his knowledge and consent, or were afterward approved and ratified by him, if proved, and assuming underlying conduct of the officers to have violated plaintiff's rights, was sufficient to impose liability on sheriff. Coyne v. Boeckmann, E.D.Wis.1981, 511 F.Supp. 667. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Complaint alleging that agents of defendant hospital and others had conspired to unlawfully remove plaintiff's staff privileges at hospital because of his opposition to a merger of hospital with a predominately white facility was not sufficient to state a cause of action under this section in absence of an allegation that state, either through neglect or purposeful failure to properly regulate defendant, sanctioned or gave tacit approval to defendant's conduct. Spencer v. Community Hospital of Evanston, N.D.Ill.1975, 393 F.Supp. 1072. Conspiracy 18

4735. State created danger, necessary and requisite allegations

For purpose of determining the applicability of the state-created or enhanced danger doctrine, in § 1983 action, by student who was wounded during attack on high school by two armed students, against school district security director for substantive due process violation based on alleged failure to protect, student sufficiently alleged that director acted recklessly in conscious disregard of the known and obvious danger from students who were allegedly known to be talking about blowing up the school. Ireland v. Jefferson County Sheriff's Dept., D.Colo.2002, 193 F.Supp.2d 1201. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 63(3)

4736. State of mind, necessary and requisite allegations

For purpose of showing prima facie case under § 1983, no state of mind requirement exists independent from required inquiry into whether plaintiff can establish that constitutional violation occurred, and thus negligent deprivation of constitutional right is actionable under § 1983; once § 1983 plaintiff establishes that defendant committed constitutional deprivation, plaintiff need not show that defendant acted with any particular state of mind. Edwards v. Cabrera, N.D.Ill.1994, 861 F.Supp. 664, reversed 58 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1031

4737. Conspiracy, necessary and requisite allegations

In order to state a section 1983 conspiracy claim, plaintiff must allege: (1) an agreement between two or more state actors or between a state actor and a private entity (2) to act in concert to inflict an unconstitutional injury; and (3) an overt act done in furtherance of that goal, and causing some harm. Brewster v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 540. Conspiracy 18

Allegations of police officer's complaint against member of town political committee, that political committee member disclosed information sent to town board member, who was state actor and political committee member's significant other, to police chief and police lieutenant, both state actors, and that political committee member, acting on behalf of board member, demanded that officer not be given position in police department's administration, were sufficiently specific to allege conspiracy to violate §§ 1983. Kelly v. Marchiano, S.D.N.Y.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 687. Conspiracy 18

Family court litigant failed to state §§ 1983 claim that county legal services attorney, who was private actor, conspired to violate his federally protected rights; allegations that status report prepared at request of family court judge contained errors, and that he bribed law department office employees with donuts to get advance look at court document, did not show any concerted action. Hom v. Brennan, E.D.N.Y.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 374. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Estate of high school student satisfied particularity requirements for stating § 1983 claim of conspiracy by school and police officials to violate First Amendment rights of student through detailed allegations of planning and execution of alleged concerted action involving school disciplinary proceedings against student, and police inaction on student's criminal complaint against teacher who assaulted him. Estate of Morris ex rel. Morris v. Dapolito, S.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 680. Conspiracy 18

Complaint, which alleged that labor union president and supervising police sergeant were friends, was insufficient to support conclusion that sergeant or union conspired with police department so as to deprive detective of his rights in order to state claim against union on § 1983 conspiracy theory; neither union nor its president were state actors, and complaint did not allege union or its president acted under color of state law or in conspiracy with state actors. Barton v. City of Bristol, D.Conn.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 184. Conspiracy 18

State prisoner failed to state claim against department of corrections official for conspiracy; although prisoner asserted that assistant district attorney "conspired with" official to have her generate and distribute false sentence computation data form, complaint did not allege deprivation of equal protection of laws or equal privileges or immunities under the law, it did not allege acts done in furtherance of conspiracy, it did not assert injury or deprivation of rights based on false documentation, and it made no contention that official acted with class-based discriminatory animus. Peterson v. Tomaselli, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22213125, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

Conclusory allegations regarding conspiracy between private defendants and public officials failed to state § 1983 conspiracy claim against private defendants, for alleged discrimination and harassment based on race, national origin, Christian values, and Republican party affiliation; no details of time and place were provided, and the factual basis necessary to enable the defendants to intelligently prepare their defense was not described. O'Diah v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 1941179, Unreported, reconsideration denied 2002 WL 31246508, reconsideration denied 2003 WL 223418. Conspiracy 18

Sufficiency of color-of-law allegation of § 1983 claim is tested under standard for failure to state claim, rather than for jurisdictional deficiency. Monsky v. Moraghan, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1997, 127 F.3d 243, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 66, 525 U.S. 823, 142 L.Ed.2d 52. Civil Rights 1396

To state viable claim under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must allege violation of federal right by person acting under color of state law. Circa Ltd. v. City of Miami, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 79 F.3d 1057. Civil Rights 1304

To state cause of action under § 1983, plaintiff must allege that some person, acting under state or territorial law, has deprived him of federal right. Cinel v. Connick, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1338, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 189, 513 U.S. 868, 130 L.Ed.2d 122. Civil Rights 1394

To state claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege both deprivation of federal right and that alleged action was taken under color of state law. Buckley Const., Inc. v. Shawnee Civic & Cultural Development Authority, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 933 F.2d 853. Civil Rights 1394; Civil Rights 1396

4762. Custom or usage, color of law allegations--Generally

Local government entity cannot be held liable under § 1983 unless plaintiff alleges that action inflicting injury flowed from either explicitly adopted or tacitly authorized governmental policy. Ortez v. Washington County, State of Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 88 F.3d 804. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Single incident of unconstitutional conduct, allegedly perpetrated pursuant to policy or custom of governmental entity, is inadequate to state a cause of action under this section; rather, plaintiff must plead, in addition to specific incident of misconduct in governmental policy or custom of perpetrating such wrongs upon persons, the existence of other, similar incidents and while it is not necessary to plead specific details of similar incidents of misconduct, such similar instances involving either plaintiff or other similarly situated persons must be pled. Mui v. Dietz, N.D.Ill.1983, 559 F.Supp. 485. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A complaint does not state a cause of action under this section in absence of allegations that the conduct alleged was in pursuance of a systematic policy of discrimination against a class or group of persons. Roberts v. Barbosa, S.D.Cal.1964, 227 F.Supp. 20.

4763. ---- Counties, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Even if mother alleged constitutional violation when, in asserting § 1983 claim against county and county social services agency, mother alleged that she was denied her constitutionally protected rights in companionship, care, custody, and management of her minor daughter by agency's failure to consult mental health professionals to whom daughter had described sexual abuse by her father during agency's investigation of abuse allegations, mother failed to assert prima facie claim under § 1983, given absence of allegation that policy or custom of agency or county led to such violation; assertions that county lacked policy requiring reasonable investigations, or that county had such a policy, but it was breached with respect to challenged investigation, were insufficient to state claim. Marran v. Marran, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 376 F.3d 143. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Arrestee failed to state claim against county under § 1983 arising from sheriff's deputy's alleged violation of her due process rights by detaining her on basis of misidentification of her as fugitive; arrestee alleged facts supporting her contention that she was arrested in violation of state law and her due process rights, but did not allege any facts to indicate that alleged violation was result of county policy or practice. Cannon v. Macon County, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1993, 1 F.3d 1558, modified on rehearing 15 F.3d 1022. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Widow of pretrial detainee stated civil rights claim against county by alleging that it had, through the sheriff, official policies of maintaining on-duty jail supervisory staff that did not include anyone with authority to transfer an inmate to a medical facility and of inadequate monitoring of pretrial detainees. Colle v. Brazos County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 237. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee alleged sufficient facts, amounting to county police "policy or custom," to state claims against arresting officer, officer who searched arrestee, and head of county police department in their official capacities; arrestee alleged that county police department failed to effectively train arresting officer not to unlawfully detain persons without probable cause to arrest. Farred v. Hicks, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 915 F.2d 1530. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegations asserting legal conclusions about municipal policy of inadequate training of deputy sheriffs failed to state § 1983 claim against sheriff in his official capacity and board of county commissioners to recover for off-duty deputy's alleged shooting of victim; allegations were not supported by facts to suggest any specific deficiencies in training for off-duty conduct; and allegations also failed to claim anything but aberrational act by individual officer. Revene v. Charles County Com'rs, C.A.4 (Md.) 1989, 882 F.2d 870. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Former county police officer sufficiently alleged that deliberate action attributable to county itself was moving force behind deprivation of his federal rights, and thus avoided dismissal of his §§ 1983 claim against county. Longo v. Suffolk County Police Dept. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.2006, 429 F.Supp.2d 553. Civil Rights 1395(8)

City and county could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for prosecuting and sentencing plaintiff as an adult while he was in fact still a juvenile, absent claim that alleged constitutional deprivations were caused by or occurred pursuant to an official custom or policy. Jordan v. New York, W.D.N.Y.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Inmate's allegations that county district attorney and county sheriff failed to prosecute corrections officers who had threatened him were insufficient to state §§1983 claim against county, absent allegation that any of the alleged constitutional deprivations were caused by or occurred pursuant to an official custom or policy of county. Lewis v. Gallivan, W.D.N.Y.2004, 315 F.Supp.2d 313. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Court would elect to treat civil rights claim improperly brought under § 1983 as Bivens claim against county officers acting under color of federal law, rather than dismissing for failure to state claim. North Carolina ex rel. Haywood v. Barrington, M.D.N.C.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 452. United States 50.20

Inmate in county jail could not maintain § 1983 action under Indiana law against county council or its members for injuries he allegedly sustained in county jail; actions of county sheriff could not be attributed to county council on respondent superior theory; moreover, inmate failed to allege policy or custom of council which caused the inmate injury. Markley v. Walters, N.D.Ind.1992, 790 F.Supp. 190. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1351(4)

Inmate's conclusory allegations that employees of county and sheriff's department routinely treated African pretrial detainees in abusive fashion was inadequate to raise inference that alleged abuse of inmate was part of official policy. Martin v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1191. Civil Rights 1404

County employee's allegations that her supervisor persistently harassed female employees, that she would have been promoted earlier but for his conditioning favorable recommendation to salary board on her acceptance of dinner invitation, and that county acquiesced in supervisor's behavior were sufficient to state cause of action for illegal employment discrimination under both Title VII and Section 1983, as well as claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Blessing v. Lancaster County, E.D.Pa.1985, 609 F.Supp. 485.

4764. ---- Corporations, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Even assuming private corporation acted under color of state law, it could not be held liable under § 1983 for actions of its employee in allegedly wrongfully detaining customer for shoplifting, where claimant did not plead that employer had policy or custom of false arrests or malicious prosecutions. Sanders v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., C.A.8 (N.D.) 1993, 984 F.2d 972, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1341

4765. ---- Educational institutions, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Parents' allegations that both they and their daughter attempted to complain and object to grades and racial bias and certain school policies at elementary school did not adequately plead policy or custom on part of the school corporation so as to support § 1983 claim against it. Baxter by Baxter v. Vigo County School Corp., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 26 F.3d 728. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Physical therapist's complaint, stating that school district, acting through supervisor, "had a policy or custom of bullying individuals into acquiescing to violations of state and federal statutes pertaining to special education requirements," adequately alleged that supervisor acted in conformity with official policy, custom, or practice of district, as required to state cause of action under §§ 1983 for retaliation for engaging in speech, notwithstanding that complaint also alleged that supervisor's actions were beyond scope of her authority. Ryan v. Shawnee Mission U.S.D. 512, D.Kan.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 1090. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Claims that town and school district violated statute prohibiting discrimination against handicapped by programs receiving federal financial assistance and thus violated federal civil rights statute could not succeed where plaintiffs failed to allege that any of defendants' violations were the result of official policy, training protocol, or custom. Penney v. Town of Middleton, D.N.H.1994, 888 F.Supp. 332. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Guardian of student failed to allege that a custom or policy of the school district caused student's alleged constitutional deprivation, as required to state a claim under § 1983 that school district, principal, and president of school board, in their official capacities, violated student's constitutional rights under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments by allowing police officers to interview student privately at school. Douglas v. Beaver County School Dist. Bd., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 82 Fed.Appx. 200, 2003 WL 22872699, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(2)

4766. ---- Hospitals, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Where there was no allegation that public hospital or its officials followed a practice of assigning performance of tubal ligations to doctors in such a way that hospital had effectively adopted a practice of refusing to perform ligations, patient who had been scheduled to have tubal ligation at same time that she had Caesarean section but who was required to return a second time for tubal ligation because the anesthesiologist assigned to the original operation refused to assist because of his religious beliefs was not entitled to recover against hospital or hospital officials for violation of her constitutional rights. Padin v. Fordham Hospital, S.D.N.Y.1975, 392 F.Supp. 447. Health 684

4767. ---- Juvenile supervisory agencies, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Childrens' allegations concerning conduct of supervisory officials while they were in foster care were sufficient to support inference that officials were deliberately indifferent to insuring childrens' security, and thus, were acting pursuant to "custom" or "policy," as required to state § 1983 civil rights claim; children alleged more than single incident in which they were placed in foster home where they were sexually abused. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Children who claimed they were physically and sexually abused during time they were committed to county home sufficiently alleged existence of official policy or custom that was moving force of their injuries to state civil rights claim against county and county social services agency; children alleged pattern and practice of grossly inadequate screening, care, treatment, training, and supervision. E.J. v. Hamilton County, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1989, 707 F.Supp. 314. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4768. ---- Municipalities, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Unconstitutional policy or custom, such as would support municipal liability under § 1983, can take three forms: (1) express policy that, when enforced, causes constitutional deprivation; (2) widespread practice that, although not authorized by written law or express municipal policy, is so permanent and well settled as to constitute "custom or usage" with force of law; or (3) allegation that constitutional injury was caused by person with final policymaking authority. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City prosecutor's failure to notify murder victim's mother of contemplated reduction of charge against perpetrator, allegedly in violation of Ohio victim impact law, did not give rise to municipal liability under § 1983 of civil rights laws; prosecutor did not possess final authority to establish municipal policy and mother did not allege that violation of victim impact law resulted from custom or policy. Pusey v. City of Youngstown, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 11 F.3d 652, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 2742, 512 U.S. 1237, 129 L.Ed.2d 862. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Complaint alleging that city knowingly failed to train police officers with respect to obligation to protect citizens engaged in First Amendment activity, but not alleging any facts other than officers' inaction in the face of beating of demonstrators in the instance complained of in the present case, failed to adequately plead custom or policy on the part of the city contributing to demonstrator's injuries, so as to state a claim against city or against officers in their official capacities under civil rights statute. Dwares v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 985 F.2d 94. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Pawn shop could not recover damages from city in § 1983 action based on police officer's seizure of rings which he thought were stolen and release of rings to their purported owner without judicial hearing, where pawn shop did not claim that alleged constitutional violations were caused by policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision, officially adopted and promulgated by city, that was itself unconstitutional. Surplus Store and Exchange, Inc. v. City of Delphi, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 928 F.2d 788. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Allegation that city within Indian reservation had custom or practice of using city police to detain and arrest white persons based on tribal orders was sufficient to state cause of action against city under § 1983. Evans v. McKay, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1989, 869 F.2d 1341. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegations by tow car company and its owner that city's denial of tow car medallions was irrational did not state section 1983 claim which could be heard in federal court where complaint contained no allegations that alleged unconstitutional actions were ever taken pursuant to policy, custom, or practice of city. Alfaro Motors, Inc. v. Ward, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1987, 814 F.2d 883. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Arrestee's allegations concerning off duty police officers' use of excessive force during arrest were insufficient to state civil rights claim against city; arrestee failed to allege that there were prior incidents which, if taken as true, would reveal existence of unconstitutional custom on part of city in training of its officers. Palmer v. City of San Antonio, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 810 F.2d 514, on remand 717 F.Supp. 1218. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Section 1983 complaint of parents of pretrial detainee who committed suicide, alleging that police department's custom of inadequate care for suicidal detainees was "familiar" to the city, was arguably insufficient to allege that the custom was so persistent, widespread, common, and well settled as to represent municipal policy as to justify holding city liable; however, parents would be granted leave to file amended complaint against city, since remand was necessary on other claims and facts alleged in complaint were sufficient to support allegation that the custom of inadequate care was persistent and widespread. Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers of City of Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 791 F.2d 1182. Civil Rights 1395(7); Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Criminal contemnor failed to state valid §§ 1983 claim against city absent any allegation of the existence of a specific municipal policy or practice and a causal connection between that policy or practice and the alleged deprivation of her constitutional rights. Qader v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 466. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Claim under §§ 1983 was not stated against town based on allegations that town was responsible for issuance of an all points bulletin for plaintiff's arrest, placement of plaintiff's name and the fact that he was "driving black" into the police computer system, with the result that the police surrounded plaintiff's house and frightened his children since there was no allegation that a policy or custom of the town caused plaintiff's constitutional injury. Collins v. West Hartford Police Dept., D.Conn.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 83. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Absence of evidence that city had policy or custom of considering contractor speech on matters of public concern or retaliating against them by failing to renew their contracts precluded city's liability under § 1983 to contractor, whose contract allegedly was terminated in retaliation for engaging in protected speech, on grounds that city had policy or custom of causing violations of constitutional rights. Bolden v. City of Topeka, D.Kan.2004, 318 F.Supp.2d 1076. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Female employee of city transit authority failed, even under relaxed pleading standards, to allege that supervisors' allegedly gender-based discriminatory conduct resulted from any municipal policy, practice, or custom, as required to state gender discrimination claim, under § 1983, against authority; employee did not allege pervasive and widespread pattern of discrimination or actions of official with final authority on policy matters. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1395(8)

In order to state a § 1983 claim against municipality for allegedly unconstitutional actions of its employees, plaintiff is required to plead official policy or custom that causes the plaintiff to be subjected to a denial of a constitutional right; municipal policy may however be inferred from the informal acts or omissions of supervisory municipal officials, but the mere assertion of such a policy is not sufficient in the absence of allegations of fact tending to support, at least circumstantially, such an inference. Massey v. Town of Windsor, D.Conn.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 160. Civil Rights 1394; Civil Rights 1401

To support a § 1983 claim against a municipality, the plaintiff may prove a municipal custom, policy or practice by showing that a municipal official with final policymaking authority directly committed or commanded the constitutional violation, showing that a policy maker indirectly caused the misconduct of a subordinate municipal employee by acquiescing in a longstanding practice or custom which may fairly be said to represent official policy, or showing that a municipal policymaker failed to adequately train their subordinates, if such failure amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights of the individuals who interact with the municipal employees. Jones v. Nassau County Sheriff Dept., E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 322. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

To establish municipal liability in an action under § 1983 for unconstitutional acts by a municipal employee below the policymaking level, a plaintiff must show that the violation of his constitutional rights resulted from a municipal policy or custom. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439 . Civil Rights 1351(1)

Where suit is brought against a municipality under § 1983, the municipality is only liable when the plaintiff can show that the municipality itself, by implementing a municipal policy, regulation, or decision either formally adopted or informally adopted through custom, actually caused the alleged constitutional transgression. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Vacating of final rule designating critical habitat for Alameda whipsnake, upon remand, was warranted in light of determination that designation violated Endangered Species Act (ESA) and Administrative Procedure Act (APA) on numerous grounds, even though existence of critical habitat designation did not impose significantly greater burdens on trade associations, state chamber of commerce, and private landowners than were imposed by listing of whipsnake as threatened under ESA, inasmuch as statutory protections afforded by designating critical habitat paralleled those afforded by listing, and therefore vacating rule would not expose whipsnake to significantly greater threats of extinction. Home Builders Ass'n of Northern California v. U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, E.D.Cal.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 1197. Environmental Law 528

Absent any evidence suggesting that official policy was cause of harm suffered by jail inmate when she was sexually assaulted by corrections officer, county had no municipal civil rights liability based on policy decisions. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To demonstrate a municipal custom or policy which gives rise deprivation of civil rights, plaintiff must at least allege a pattern of similar incidents in which citizens were injured or endangered by intentional or negligent policy misconduct or that serious incompetence or misbehavior was general or wide spread. Hickman v. U.G. Lively, S.D.Tex.1995, 897 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff whose civil rights were allegedly violated by security guard employed by company under contract to Chicago Housing Authority (CHA) identified official policy of CHA so as to state § 1983 claim against CHA; plaintiff alleged that CHA had policy and practice of deliberate indifference to the illegal and reckless conduct of company and its security guards and alleged 13 incidents of CHA indifference to guards' brutality. Lowe v. Brown, N.D.Ill.1995, 896 F.Supp. 793. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Federal civil rights claim against municipality or municipal subdivision such as school district must allege that municipal policymaker intentionally adopted policy, implemented training protocol, or allowed custom to develop, that the challenged policy, training protocol, or custom caused violation of federally protected rights, and that the policymaker acted with at least deliberate indifference to the strong likelihood that violation of federally protected rights would result from the implementation of the policy, training protocol, or custom. Penney v. Town of Middleton, D.N.H.1994, 888 F.Supp. 332. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Trial court would not dismiss count of employee's §§ 1981 and 1983 complaint against city, even thought employee did not allege express municipal custom or policy caused her injury, as employee alleged that she was victim of series of discriminatory actions taken by city library employees, rather than single event, and it was possible to infer that city was aware of misconduct and tacitly authorized or condoned it, where plaintiff sued city for racial discrimination following incident in which employee was assaulted by co-worker and subsequently was not promoted and was transferred to different branch of library, and library did not investigate assault incident as it indicated it would. Simmons v. Chicago Public Library, N.D.Ill.1994, 860 F.Supp. 490. Civil Rights 1395(8)

City employee who claimed that she was unlawfully discharged due to her national origin failed to plead § 1983 claim against city that had employed her; employee alleged only that alleged discriminatory conduct occurred in relation to her and not as custom or policy of city, and she offered no argument that city officially sanctioned or ordered alleged discriminatory conduct or that it was within city's custom or policy to discriminate against employees by way of layoff or to prevent their rehire. Underwood v. City of Fort Myers, M.D.Fla.1993, 836 F.Supp. 823. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Section 1983 claim based upon municipal policy or custom was sufficiently alleged by claims that police officers acted under color of city law in detaining plaintiff, that municipal customs, policies, or practices of systematically failing to properly train, supervise, investigate, review, and/or discipline police officers resulted in deprivation of Fourth Amendment rights and due process, and that policy or custom was intentional. Fluellen v. U.S. Dept. of Justice Drug Enforcement Admin., E.D.Mich.1993, 816 F.Supp. 1206. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Complaint against city which alleged existence of municipal policy implementation of which caused plaintiff's injuries and conduct of city's inspector general in establishing and implementing policy was sufficient to state claim against city under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Rae v. Klusak, N.D.Ill.1993, 810 F.Supp. 983. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint stated cause of action against city by alleging that there was de facto custom or policy of discrimination against racial minorities which allegedly resulted in officers not taking proper action in responding to emergency call concerning beaten, naked Asian boy whom they eventually returned to the custody of the person who then killed him. Estate of Sinthasomphone by Sinthasomphone v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1992, 785 F.Supp. 1343 . Civil Rights 1395(5)

Arrestee who was allegedly shot and beaten by police officers during raid of arrestee's home pursuant to search warrant allegedly obtained with false information failed to plead facts sufficient to show city policymaker was deliberately indifferent in failing to take adequate corrective measures when it allegedly knew of excessive force tendencies of many police officers, code of silence, and use of false charges in violation of § 1983, where arrestee's inclusion of statistics concerning complaints against police officers failed to identify specific factual patterns in complaints relevant to deprivation of his rights, arrestee offered no specific factual allegations showing pattern of misconduct by officers who arrested him or showing connection between officers' conduct and city policy or custom, and arrestee provided no facts showing that any specific individuals agreed to follow alleged code of silence. Sledd v. Lindsay, N.D.Ill.1991, 780 F.Supp. 554. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegation that police department official misapplied vacation policy in order to deprive police officer of unused vacation time was insufficient to demonstrate municipal liability, absent allegation that any policy or custom of city was proximate cause of deprivation; policy that officer sought to use to demonstrate municipal liability was the same policy he relied upon to establish property interest in vacation time. Saffold v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1991, 775 F.Supp. 1126. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Section 1983 complaint alleging that police officers acted pursuant to city custom or policy in arresting driver and charging him without probable cause insufficiently pleaded facts establishing unconstitutional custom or practice. Ford v. City of Rockford, N.D.Ill.1990, 770 F.Supp. 402. Civil Rights 1395(6)

City was not liable under federal civil rights statute to police officer who was arrested for perjury, absent evidence of city policy, practice, or custom of intentionally creating and using false evidence during course of investigations or of inadequate training or supervision of police officers evidencing deliberate indifference to rights of its citizens. Dees v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.1990, 747 F.Supp. 679. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Young black men who claimed they were subject to excessive force on part of police officers alleged sufficient facts to show that "code of silence" under which officers would not report disciplinary violations to superiors was widespread, that policy-making individuals knew of code, and that individuals failed to take steps to eliminate it which stated claim against city for violation of civil rights as part of city policy or custom. McLin By and Through Harvey v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1990, 742 F.Supp. 994. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Civil rights claimant who merely alleged that city officials failed to train police officers who had custody of decedent at the time that he committed suicide but who did not identify any facts indicating a lack of appropriate training or that the lack of training constituted a city policy did not state a claim against the city for violation of city rights. McDay on Behalf of McDay v. City of Atlanta, N.D.Ga.1990, 740 F.Supp. 852, affirmed 927 F.2d 614. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Exception to general rule that one needs to allege more than single event to establish municipal custom, for purposes of imposing § 1983 liability on municipality, may exist where other evidence of policy has been presented and single incident in question involves concerted action of large contingent of individual municipal employees such that the event itself provides some proof of existence of underlying policy or custom. Hudson, D.N.H.1990, 740 F.Supp. 88. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Civil rights plaintiffs could not prevail on civil rights claim against municipality arising out of their alleged false arrest by police officers, where plaintiffs failed to allege a municipal policy which caused their false arrest. McKenzie v. City of Milpitas, N.D.Cal.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1293, affirmed 953 F.2d 1387. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Plaintiff alleged facts which would establish policy that could subject city to municipal liability under § 1983; plaintiff offered facts such as internal memoranda and mayor's deposition, which alleged that mayor had final decision regarding certain policies which plaintiff alleged injured him. Biondolillo v. City of Sunrise, S.D.Fla.1990, 736 F.Supp. 258. Civil Rights 1398

Alleged violation of Fourth Amendment rights of owner and operator of adult entertainment business, arising when owner was allegedly not served with copy of warrant and search allegedly began prior to arrival of warrant, was not causally linked to city, absent any claim that city's actions or policies were moving force behind alleged injury, and thus allegations did not state civil rights claim against city. Ways v. City of Lincoln, D.Neb.2002, 2002 WL 1742664, Unreported, affirmed 331 F.3d 596. Civil Rights 1348

4769. ---- Police departments, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging that county prosecutor ordered police to keep prisoner in custody overnight until lineup could be arranged, and that such order led to prisoner's death from suicide, failed to state cause of action for violation of prisoner's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights under § 1983, absent any allegation that police were under duty to follow prosecutor's orders or suggestions, and absent any allegation that prosecutor's statements caused police to hold prisoner in unreasonable fashion. Anderson v. Simon, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2000, 217 F.3d 472, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 765, 531 U.S. 1073, 148 L.Ed.2d 666. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegation of police chief's complaint, that to his knowledge no other city official or citizen had ever been subjected to gag or banishment order, was insufficient to establish that he was treated differently from similarly situated non-minority employee, required for prima facie § 1983 case of race discrimination under equal protection clause. Jackson v. City of Columbus, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1999, 194 F.3d 737, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Driver failed to sufficiently allege claim that police officer stopped driver based on only driver's race and that custom and practice of officer's police department was to stop and detain people, without justification, if they were black, absent allegation that officer said something indicating racial motive or suggestion of fact, indicative of such pattern, that might be within driver's personal knowledge. Ford v. Wilson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 90 F.3d 245, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1110, 520 U.S. 1105, 137 L.Ed.2d 311. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Allegations of plaintiff's in forma pauperis, pro se civil rights complaint and in plaintiff's response to magistrate judge's questionnaire failed to allege policy, practice or custom of city causing allegedly improper search during valid traffic stop, as required to impose liability on city police department, where plaintiff identified policy causing his damages as prohibition against excessive force by state and federal law. Macias v. Raul A. (Unknown), Badge No. 153, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 23 F.3d 94, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 220, 513 U.S. 883, 130 L.Ed.2d 147. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Inmate's bald allegations that county district attorney and county sheriff failed to investigate and prosecute corrections officers who had threatened him were insufficient to state §§1983 claim for violation of equal protection, absent factual allegations that the defendants would have responded differently to another, similarly situated inmate. Lewis v. Gallivan, W.D.N.Y.2004, 315 F.Supp.2d 313. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Relatives of murder victims adequately pleaded in §§ 1983 lawsuit that municipality and police officers in their official capacities deprived them of constitutional rights and did so pursuant to custom that amounted to illegal policy of cover-up, on allegations that lead detective in murder investigation had conflict of interest, deliberately removed evidence from murder scene and automobile of victim, repeatedly misled relatives, and acted in concert with other police officers, and police chief allowed for custom of permitting his officers to make loan shark collections, fostered detective's conflict of interest, and allowed for detective to conduct the investigation as lead detective despite such conflict. Kammeyer v. City of Sharonville, S.D.Ohio 2003, 311 F.Supp.2d 653. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Municipal liability may only be had in § 1983 actions in limited circumstances, including where an officer's constitutional violation is part of an ongoing practice or custom of the municipality. Avalos v. City of Glenwood, S.D.Iowa 2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 1091, reversed 382 F.3d 792, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal defendants, which were members of multijurisdictional drug task force, could be subject to liability under § 1983 for failure to protect victim from shooting by father who was duped by police into believing that his daughter was facing a prison sentence because of victim based on task force policies and procedures; actions of police detective, who was employed by one municipal member of task force, could be attributed to the task force since policies and procedures of the task force did not compel the officers to seek any form of approval, or give any further thought to sending angry parents as confidential informants on a drug sting operation while their daughter waited in jail expecting to go to prison for the next eighty years. Avalos v. City of Glenwood, S.D.Iowa 2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 1091, reversed 382 F.3d 792, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In his suit under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff failed to allege that any official policies, customs, or practices of police department or city deprived him of his constitutional rights, and therefore plaintiff did not state claim against superintendent of police department in his official capacity. Cooper v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1996, 936 F.Supp. 515. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee who brought § 1983 civil rights action against municipal police department, alleging that officers had arrested him without cause, beaten him, and denied him medical treatment, failed as a matter of law to state claim against department by not alleging the officers' conduct resulted from an official policy or practice or including any facts to support existence of such a policy beyond the single event of which he complained. Clark v. New York City Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.1996, 927 F.Supp. 61. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police department employee sufficiently alleged sexual harassment claim against city where complaint charged custom or practice of discrimination at highest levels of police department policy making. Dirksen v. City of Springfield, C.D.Ill.1994, 842 F.Supp. 1117. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Plaintiff who alleged that police department did not notify him when it released his impounded car to towing company established, for purposes of § 1983 liability, that police department had a policy of failing to notify owners of vehicles when releasing them to third parties; in addition to plaintiff's uncontroverted allegation that police department did not notify him when it released his car, plaintiff also provided evidence of written policies of police department, which did not provide for notice to owner; moreover, policies were adopted by policymaker of city, its police chief. Johnson v. Bradshaw, D.Nev.1991, 772 F.Supp. 501, affirmed 5 F.3d 537. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Complaint alleging a "custom" among city police officers of violating rights of epileptics and charging police department policy or custom of failing to train police officers adequately to deal with epileptics stated cause of action under this section against city and its police department based on failure to properly treat plaintiff epileptic detainee, as plaintiff alleged a reckless disregard of his rights. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Complaint against county sheriff department and city police department, which alleged that plaintiff was falsely arrested on five different occasions, sufficiently pleaded a governmental policy or custom to state a claim under this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law. Reese v. Milwaukee County Sheriff Dept., E.D.Wis.1980, 505 F.Supp. 88. Civil Rights 1396

Minor plaintiff, who was shot and wounded while business visitor in shop during robbery, and who based her claim of inadequate police protection on allegation that police department had policy of not responding to calls for assistance unless and until crime had actually been committed and on alleged failure to provide adequate police protection in high crime area, did not state claim against city for any constitutional due process or equal protection violation, such as failure to provide her with police protection because of her race, color or creed. Reiff v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1979, 471 F.Supp. 1262. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Even if police officers lacked probable cause to arrest, arrestee's failure to specify any city policy or custom causing alleged constitutional violation precluded city's liability in arrestee's civil rights action. Manuel v. City of Columbus, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 86 Fed.Appx. 852, 2004 WL 103008, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

4770. ---- Prisons, custom or usage, color of law allegations

State prisoner who alleged that he had been abused by fellow inmates and that correctional officers were present but declined to intervene could not obtain injunctive relief against warden and Commissioner of Department of Correction, since prisoner did not suggest that incident of which he complained was anything other than isolated one or that it resulted from any administrative policy established or maintained by warden or Commissioner. Gordon v. Leeke, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 574 F.2d 1147, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 464, 439 U.S. 970, 58 L.Ed.2d 431. Prisons 4(2.1)

Pretrial detainee failed to state claim for official capacity liability under § 1983 in connection with conditions at county jail; detainee failed to allege that policy, custom or practice of defendant sheriff caused conditions at jail, design and funding of which was controlled by county board of commissioners, not sheriff's office. Stone-El v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1995, 914 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1395(6)

4771. ---- Villages, custom or usage, color of law allegations

Motorist stated § 1983 cause of action against village for maintaining policy of inadequate training or supervision of police officers in violation of his constitutional rights. Lanigan v. Village of East Hazel Crest, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 110 F.3d 467. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Allegations of actions by village implementing an official policy of harassment and encroachment upon free speech rights stated a claim for damages and injunctive relief against village. Heimbach v. Village of Lyons (Wayne County, N. Y.), C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1979, 597 F.2d 344. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Mere assertion that municipality has custom or policy is insufficient to hold municipality liable under § 1983, in absence of allegations of fact tending to support, at least circumstantially, such an inference. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1394

Complaint which alleged no facts to support allegation that township had official policy and custom of permitting or encouraging illegal arrest and use of excessive force did not state claim against township under federal civil rights statute even though he alleged that the township failed to discipline, prosecute, or in any manner deal with known incidents of excessive force, refused to investigate complaints or previous incidents of excessive force, and failed and refused to properly train its officers in limitations on using stun guns and nightsticks. Carroll v. Bristol

Plaintiff who claimed that arresting officers used excessive force and made false charges against him in connection with incident at restaurant stated a § 1983 claim against town; plaintiff alleged that town had a general policy of ignoring police misconduct and a particular policy, paid for with bribes, of siding with restaurant in law enforcement matters; moreover, although plaintiff made no references to any other incidents involving restaurant and police, only one incident was required when top policymakers were alleged to be involved. Hammond v. Town of Cicero, N.D.Ill.1993, 822 F.Supp. 512. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1395(5)

Terminated police officer could not maintain § 1983 civil rights action against police officers in their official capacities where his complaint failed to allege that constitutional deprivations emanated from execution of any policy or custom established by village. O'Donnell v. Village of Downers Grove, N.D.Ill.1987, 656 F.Supp. 562. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Civil rights complaint against chief of police and members of board of selectmen based upon injuries sustained by plaintiff in course of arrest failed to state claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 governing deprivation of civil rights, where plaintiff alleged no policy of town that caused him to be subjected to excessive force at hands of town's police officers, nor did he allege that failure to train rose to level of gross negligence or deliberate indifference. Scarpa v. Murphy, D.Mass.1985, 624 F.Supp. 33. Civil Rights 1395(6)

4772. ---- Miscellaneous custom or usage, color of law allegations

Civil rights complaint alleging that failure of parish police jury in Louisiana to provide adequate supervision and protection to its jail inmates resulted in inmate's being beaten by other inmates was insufficient to support claim against police jury, where inmate did not intimate that jail was in any respect physically inadequate, much less that police jury knew of its inadequacies, or that jail was underfunded, nor did inmate allege any official police jury custom or policy. O'Quinn v. Manuel, C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 773 F.2d 605. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Female former public employee's allegations that public employer had long engaged in a continuing course of conduct, policy, and custom whereby women had been treated differently than similarly situated men in terms and conditions of employment, including discipline and prosecution for wrongdoing, that described acts were a pattern and practice within operations of public employer and reflected policy and practice of employer and was a substantial factor forming basis of conduct of employer, adequately pled existence of local government policy or custom required to state a cause of action under § 1983 for a violation of former employee's constitutional rights. Orozco v. County of Monterey, N.D.Cal.1996, 941 F.Supp. 930. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Complaint which alleged that village employees acted under color of law in violating political activist's constitutional rights by interfering with his distribution of leaflets, that they interfered with his activities on the basis of his race, and that they violated his right to privacy, satisfied pleading requirements for § 1983 action; activist was not required to plead all elements of his claim or all of the facts necessary to support them. Chapman v. Stricker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 81 Fed.Appx. 77, 2003 WL 22717969, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

4773. Defendants clothed with authority of state, color of law allegations

In order to show that defendants were acting "under color of state law," thus giving rise to action under this section, it is not necessary to allege that the action taken was authorized by the state as long as facts are stated which show that defendants were clothed with the authority of the state and were purporting to act thereunder. Sykes v. State of Cal. (Dept. of Motor Vehicles), C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 497 F.2d 197. Civil Rights 1396

For purposes of action under this section, requirement that defendants act "under state law" is satisfied if complaint alleges that alleged constitutional deprivations resulted from a misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law. Coggins v. Carpenter, E.D.Pa.1979, 468 F.Supp. 270. Civil Rights 1396

In order that one may seek redress pursuant to this section, for deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by Constitution or laws of the United States, it is not necessary to allege that acts in question were authorized by state or its political subdivision; however facts must be stated showing that the defendants were clothed with authority of the state and were purporting to act thereunder. Penthouse Intern. LTD. v. Putka, N.D.Ohio 1977, 436 F.Supp. 1220. Civil Rights 1394

4774. Statutory language, color of law allegations

Though deprivation of rights must be under color of state law, custom, or usage, in order to give plaintiff cause of action under this section required factual situation may be described in complaint without the use of the particular words "under color of law." Geach v. Moynahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1953, 207 F.2d 714.

4775. Antipoverty organizations, color of law allegations

Allegation that plaintiff's employer, an antipoverty agency which was a private nonprofit corporation receiving federal funding with all funding requests approved by members of various local governments, showed a sufficient nexus between plaintiff's employer, which allegedly dismissed him for racial and religious reasons, and state to constitute action of employer state action within meaning of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1. Robinson v. Price, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 553 F.2d 918. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Complaint was sufficient to state claim that nonprofit corporation which was organized under state law as an antipoverty organization and its employees and directors deprived discharged employee of the corporation of his civil rights under color of state law and, therefore, federal court had jurisdiction over the case, even though complaint contained allegation that the corporation was federally financed and funded. Robison v. Wichita Falls & North Texas Community Action Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 507 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1396; Federal Courts 223

4776. Attorneys, color of law allegations--Generally

Former inmate did not plead sufficient facts that, if true, would render private attorneys that represented him in criminal prosecution amenable to suit under § 1983; there was no allegation of complicity between those attorneys and any other state actors allegedly involved in former inmate's arrest and prosecution. Pete v. Metcalfe, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 8 F.3d 214. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint, alleging that private attorney accompanied his client and police officers to plaintiff's apartment, consented to police officers' wrongful search thereof and their wrongful damaging and seizure of plaintiff's property, and that attorney failed to identify himself as private attorney when police identified themselves to apartment building superintendent, was sufficient to state claim under this section. Fine v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 529 F.2d 70, on remand 71 F.R.D. 374. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Former husband who was civilly arrested for failure to pay alimony as ordered by state court divorce decree failed to state § 1983 claim against former wife's attorney, who petitioned for arrest, because husband failed to sufficiently plead that attorney conspired with state officials in effecting civil arrest absent any facts tending to show existence of tainted agreement, such as "backroom" meeting between alleged coconspirators. MacFarlane v. Smith, D.N.H.1996, 947 F.Supp. 572, affirmed 129 F.3d 1252. Civil Rights 1396 conduct constituting action "under color of state law" and, thus, did not state a claim against attorney on which relief could be granted under this section in favor of permanent employee of school district, who was arrested for a series of thefts at school district offices and shortly thereafter terminated from his employment without any hearing. Goetz v. Windsor Cent. School Dist., N.D.N.Y.1984, 593 F.Supp. 526. Civil Rights 1396

Allegation that bank's attorney was able to abuse or usurp judicial power to violate plaintiffs' constitutional rights when bank obtained ex parte restraining order to prevent plaintiffs from selling business inventory did not meet minimum standard of particularity in detailing alleged conspiracy between bank, its officers and judges to deprive plaintiffs of their constitutional rights, and, therefore, did not satisfy "under color of state law" element of civil rights action. Dannhausen v. First Nat. Bank of Sturgeon Bay, E.D.Wis.1982, 538 F.Supp. 551. Conspiracy 18

Plaintiff failed to allege facts which, if proven, would state a cause of action under this section governing deprivation of constitutional rights under color of state law where he alleged that his constitutional rights were violated by the failure of his attorney in criminal action to perfect an appeal on his behalf, in that attorney, as a private citizen, could not be sued under this section for acts or omissions during representation of plaintiff. Anderson v. Byars, W.D.Okla.1980, 505 F.Supp. 32. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations that attorney was retained by plaintiff to represent her and accepted retainer therefor, but abandoned her on day of trial and then filed false sworn document with appellate division concerning matter were insufficient to support claim for relief against attorney under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights, where amended complaint contained no allegation that attorney was, at time of question, public official, and there was no suggestion that his alleged conduct was performed in concert with public officials. Gutierrez v. Vergari, S.D.N.Y.1980, 499 F.Supp. 1040. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4777. ---- Court-appointed attorneys, color of law allegations

Prisoner's civil rights complaint adequately stated claim against court-appointed attorney and against agents of Federal Bureau of Investigation, even though the attorney and the agents might not themselves have acted under color of state law, where the complaint alleged that the agents and the attorney were part of single conspiracy involving several other defendants who did act under color of state law. Williams v. Rhoden, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 629 F.2d 1099. Conspiracy 18

Plaintiff's complaint brought under this section against attorneys, judges, a prosecuting attorney and a local police officer, alleging that their violations of his civil rights led to his incarceration, failed to set forth facts which would enable him to recover money damages, in that conduct of plaintiff's court-appointed counsel in representing plaintiff did not constitute state action under color of state law, alleged improprieties of prosecuting attorney were done within his official capacity and were immune from suit under this section, any actions taken by judge presiding over plaintiff's case were not alleged to have been outside of his judicial capacity and were thus not a proper subject of the suit, and plaintiff failed to allege facts that would allow him to make out a cause of action against the police officer. Fast v. Wead, N.D.Ohio 1981, 509 F.Supp. 744. Civil Rights 1395(5)

4778. ---- District attorneys, color of law allegations

An arrestee stated a cognizable § 1983 claim against a county based on allegations that the county encouraged the district attorney to demand releases of civil rights claims against county and its employees arising from police misconduct before dismissing baseless criminal charges; district attorney did not follow a state dictate if he engaged in such practice and, thus, was not per se a state official for purposes of § 1983 and district attorney could have been acting as the county's agent for purposes of § 1983. Sassower v. City of White Plains, S.D.N.Y.1990, 742 F.Supp. 157. Civil Rights 1395(5)

4779. ---- Prosecutors, attorneys, color of law allegations

Complaint stated claim for relief under this subchapter for deprivation of rights under color of state law on theory that one defendant, as special prosecutor, undertook investigation and prosecution of plaintiff for purposes of extortion and thereby abused process, that second defendant was able to perform key role in scheme because he was clothed with power of district attorney's office and that third defendant, who allegedly made false statements providing basis for criminal process, had conspired with defendant public officials. Jennings v. Shuman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 567 F.2d 1213. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

4780. ---- Public defenders, attorneys, color of law allegations

Claim that public defender failed to file motion to correct sentence failed to state cause of action under this section, where complaint revealed that public defender informed plaintiff that she had been appointed to represent him solely in probation revocation proceeding and where, because of limited scope of public defender's authority to represent plaintiff, any action regarding correction of plaintiff's sentence, including failure to file motion, was outside scope of her authority and therefore not under color of state law. Singleton v. Hoester, E.D.Mo.1980, 505 F.Supp. 54. Civil Rights 1395(5)

4781. ---- Miscellaneous attorneys, color of law allegations

In pro se complaint filed by state prisoner, allegation that associate city circuit counsel offered to drop charges against plaintiff in 1969, did not appear to be within associate city counsel's duties and therefore was not under color of law and allegation did not state cause of action for deprivation of plaintiff's civil rights. Tyler v. Ryan, E.D.Mo.1976, 419 F.Supp. 905. Civil Rights 1396

4782. Banks, color of law allegations

Plaintiffs' allegations in § 1983 action that bank officer executed fraudulent affidavit in support of bank's position in replevin action, that petition in replevin contained numerous material false representations, that bank officer and bank fraudulently prepared, filed, prosecuted, and executed petition, and that bank and bank officer knew or should have known that order of delivery issued by circuit court together with writ in replevin and judgment was fraudulently procured by bank and bank officer were nothing more than allegations of private misuse of Missouri replevin statutes by bank officer and bank, and thus petitioner failed to state claim for relief under § 1983. Hassett v. Lemay Bank and Trust Co., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1988, 851 F.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1396

Civil rights plaintiff's contention that bank violated his right to privacy by releasing copies of his records, in form of cancelled checks, to police officer without subpoena or other legal process failed to state claim against bank under statute governing deprivation of civil rights, where plaintiff failed to allege that any actions of bank were taken under color of state law. Fullman v. Graddick, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1984, 739 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1396

There was sufficient allegation of action under color of state law so as to state a claim under this section in view of allegations that defendant bank and its counsel agreed to institute criminal proceedings against plaintiff to collect a civil debt owing the bank and that acting pursuant to such agreement defendants induced and persuaded a county district justice and law enforcement officer to prosecute plaintiff and to file necessary papers and, also, complaint met the specificity requirements of pleading civil rights cases. Arment v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, E.D.Pa.1981, 505 F.Supp. 911. Civil Rights 1396; Federal Civil Procedure 633.1

4783. Bar associations, color of law allegations

Class action by law student members of American Bar Association on behalf of themselves and others attending law schools not approved by Association alleging discriminatory amendment of bylaws depriving plaintiffs of rights as members of Association failed to state claim for relief on theory that United States government had become interdependent with Association and involved in its business to such extent as to make Association's amendment of bylaws an act of government, an unconstitutional act of discrimination, and a deprivation of property in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5, in absence of indication that the government had intruded into management and operation of the Association. Jackson v. American Bar Ass'n, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1976, 538 F.2d 829. Constitutional Law 278.5(1)

4784. Boards of education, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging violation of due process and other rights in issuance to professor of terminal contract rather than regular contract stated cause of action against Board of Regents under this section, since issuance of contract represented a matter of official action by the Board. Harris v. Arizona Bd. of Regents, D.C.Ariz.1981, 528 F.Supp. 987. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Complaint of nontenured college instructor whose employment was not renewed, which failed to allege that any of actions of defendant institutions or officials were undertaken in execution of a government's policy or custom, failed to state claim against city board of higher education under this section prohibiting conspiracies to deprive persons of civil rights. Jones v. Kneller, E.D.N.Y.1979, 482 F.Supp. 204, affirmed 633 F.2d 204, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 318, 449 U.S. 920, 66 L.Ed.2d 147. Conspiracy 18

4785. Boards of social services, color of law allegations

Complaint by recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children payments, alleging that payments were reduced because of the unconstitutional or illegal claim of credit by the state and local administrative agencies for outside income and other resources available to only one child in family group, was sufficient to state a cause of action cognizable under this section relating to persons deprived of rights secured by Constitution and laws and was within the jurisdiction of district court under § 1343 of Title 28 giving district courts original jurisdiction of civil action to redress deprivation of such rights under color of any state law, notwithstanding claim that the actions of state officials were under federal law. Gilliard v. Craig, W.D.N.C.1971, 331 F.Supp. 587, affirmed 93 S.Ct. 39, 409 U.S. 807, 34 L.Ed.2d 66, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 892, 409 U.S. 1119, 34 L.Ed.2d 704. Civil Rights 1327

4786. Building or construction companies, color of law allegations

Alleged facts that defendant construction companies received a portion of their income from projects financed in whole or in part by state governmental agencies and that defendant corporations were protected and promoted as "legal entities" by virtue of government statutes and regulation were insufficient to show "state action" for purposes of this subchapter, in connection with alleged discrimination against black carpenter, in absence of any alleged existence of connection between the government's funding and regulation of defendants and their alleged discriminatory conduct. Bethel v. Jendoco Const. Corp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 570 F.2d 1168. Civil Rights 1326(11)

In civil rights class action brought against builders and vendors of homes in metropolitan area by black purchasers who were allegedly discriminated against in respect to prices and terms, the lack of state action emasculated those portions of the complaint dealing with this subchapter creating a federal cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another; also, since U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1 requires some activity by the state or one acting under color of its law, there could be no valid claim made independently under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1. Clark v. Universal Builders, Inc., N.D.Ill.1976, 409 F.Supp. 1274. Civil Rights 1395(3)

4787. Child welfare personnel, color of law allegations

Allegations that defendant acted in concert with chief deputy juvenile officer and as agent of officer in transfer of custody, care, and control of child from his parents to defendant without court order or other legal authority and in violation of state law sufficiently alleged that she acted under color of state law. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Estate of prison inmate who was shot and killed by correctional officer during altercation between inmates at state prison failed to show that prison official responsible for articulating, copying, and distributing use of force policy acted with deliberate indifference to inmate's constitutional rights by authorizing policies and practices that were different from policy as written, as would support estate's deliberate indifference claim under § 1983 against official, where estate failed to allege that official knew of and disregarded substantial risk to inmate's safety while overseeing articulation of policy. Estate of Torres v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 32107989, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

4788. City councils, color of law allegations

Claim that city council denied due process and equal protection in awarding cable television contract alleged sufficient state action to state cause of action under this section. Three Rivers Cablevision, Inc. v. City of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1980, 502 F.Supp. 1118. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Inmate would be denied leave to amend his § 1983 complaint insofar as complaint related to five inmate grievance complaint forms; amendment would be futile inasmuch as forms were not timely filed and therefore failed to satisfy administrative exhaustion requirement under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). Woodrich v. Greiner, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22339264, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 851

4789. Conspiracy, color of law allegations

Allegations of police officer's complaint, that member of town political party committee, in "close cooperation" with defendant town officials, violated officer's constitutional rights, sufficiently alleged action under color of state law, as required to state cause of action under §§ 1983. Kelly v. Marchiano, S.D.N.Y.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 687. Civil Rights 1396

Apartment resident stated claim of conspiracy to violate federally protected rights, cognizable under § 1983, by alleging that other apartment residents and police officers, including one resident and one officer who were romantically involved, conspired to drive resident from apartment by making false charges against him and arresting him based on charges, regardless of whether the traditional pleading requirements for conspiracy claims or the arguably less stringent standards of Swierkiewicz applied. Bullard v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 292. Conspiracy 18

Agent of car dealership that employed motorist who was arrested while driving one of dealership's vehicles did not act under color of state law by conspiring with police officer to violate motorist's constitutional rights when he told officer that motorist did not have permission to drive vehicle and that he wanted to press charges, and thus neither agent nor car dealership were liable under § 1983. Smith v. City of Gretna Police Dept., E.D.La.2001, 175 F.Supp.2d 870. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(9)

A claim that a private party acted in concert with or conspired with state agents, as would allow it to be held liable under § 1983 for acting under color of state law, requires an allegation of facts showing particularly what defendants did to carry the conspiracy into effect, whether such acts fit within the framework of the conspiracy alleged, and whether such acts, in the ordinary course of events, would proximately cause injury to the plaintiff. Otani v. City and County of Haw., D.Hawai'i 1998, 126 F.Supp.2d 1299, affirmed 246 F.3d 675. Civil Rights

Neighbors did not conspire with state authorities to sufficient degree to render them "state actors" against whom plaintiff could bring § 1983 action for wrongful arrest due to fact that they furnished information to police that ultimately led to plaintiff's allegedly wrongful arrest. Torgerson v. Writsel, E.D.N.Y.2000, 109 F.Supp.2d 107, affirmed 121 Fed.Appx. 893, 2005 WL 195103. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Allegations by opponent of judge's election claiming that police officer threatened arrest in order to allow judge's spouse to remove flyers placed by opponent on car windshields and that spouse conspired with police asserted state action necessary for liability of spouse under § 1983. Chapman v. Village of Homewood, N.D.Ill.1997, 960 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Allegations of conspiracy between court-appointed attorney in postconviction case and public defender in underlying state trial did not satisfy state action requirement for § 1983 claim. Stubbs v. Hunter, D.S.C.1992, 806 F.Supp. 81. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Civil rights claims of conspiracy that are vague and provide no basis in fact must be dismissed. Conway v. Garvey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22510384, Unreported, affirmed 117 Fed.Appx. 792, 2004 WL 2786380. Conspiracy 18

4790. Court reporters, color of law allegations

Attorney stated claim for damages under § 1983 against court reporter for Connecticut superior court in her personal capacity for her alleged failure to file certain documents in connection with attorney's appeal from legal malpractice judgment so as to survive motion to dismiss; attorney adequately alleged that reporter, when she allegedly failed to file attorney's appeal certifications, was acting under color of state law and although thrust of attorney's argument revolved around reporter's alleged negligence, complaint alleged, in the alternative, that reporter's actions were willful. Presnick v. Santoro, D.Conn.1993, 832 F.Supp. 521. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

4791. Churches, color of law allegations

Absent an allegation of a deprivation of rights by one acting under color of state law, plaintiff failed to state a cause of action under this section by alleging conduct on part of defendant church and others in holding her in peonage and involuntary servitude. Turner v. Unification Church, D.C.R.I.1978, 473 F.Supp. 367, affirmed 602 F.2d 458. Civil Rights 1396

4792. Cities, color of law allegations

Allegations in civil rights complaint that defendant city, a municipality chartered in Ohio, established and operated city jail in which plaintiffs were allegedly injured as pretrial detainees, that jail was negligently constructed, equipped and maintained, and that defendant city in general acted under color of law was sufficient to comply with rules in Gomez and Monroe requiring civil rights plaintiffs to include allegations that each defendant acted under color of law. Watson v. McGee, S.D.Ohio 1981, 527 F.Supp. 234. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4793. Civic associations, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging that civic association and its members had conspired and acted to harass and delay Hasidic Jews who sought to establish a housing development on land they owned in New York and that such amounted to constitutional deprivations failed to state cause of action under this section inasmuch as complaint alleged no state or municipal activity and all defendants were private parties notwithstanding claim that active civic association had no purpose but to work in and through government and hence use of civic association as a vehicle for repression adequately satisfied color of state law requirement. Weiss v. Willow Tree Civic Ass'n, S.D.N.Y.1979, 467 F.Supp. 803. Civil Rights 1395(3)

4794. Contractors and subcontractors, color of law allegations

Owner of disadvantaged trucking business failed to state claim against private contractors and trucking subcontractors under sections 1981 and 1983 in connection with award of subcontracting work on freeway project; owner lumped all contractors and subcontractors together in single, broad allegation and did not allege basis of claim against each contractor and subcontractor, and owner failed to allege that contractors and subcontractors acted under color of state law. Gauvin v. Trombatore, N.D.Cal.1988, 682 F.Supp. 1067. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

Prisoner's allegations that private companies under contract to provide medical services to inmates negligently supervised physician employees were insufficient to support inmate's civil rights action, absent allegations that an official policy of the companies caused the violation. Bond v. Cullinan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 90 Fed.Appx. 164, 2004 WL 363349, Unreported. Civil Rights 1339

4795. Contractor associations, color of law allegations

Assuming the truth of allegations of complaint, brought under this section alleging racial discrimination on part of contractors' association and union, they were insufficient to establish that the acts complained of were committed under color of state law. Allen v. Pipefitters Local Union No. 208, of Denver, Colorado of United Ass'n of Journeymen and Apprentices of Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of U. S. and Canada (AFL-CIO), D.C.Colo.1972, 56 F.R.D. 473. Civil Rights 1396

4796. Corporations, color of law allegations

Plaintiffs did not state § 1983 claim because the conduct complained of was solely that of private individuals or corporations and was in no way taken under "color of law." Scarborough v. Brown Group, Inc., W.D.Tenn.1995, 935 F.Supp. 954. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Where complaint did not contain any clarification or specification as to how employment decisions of private corporations were "under color of law," civil rights complaint against the corporations did not state a claim for relief. Foreman v. General Motors Corp., E.D.Mich.1979, 473 F.Supp. 166. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint in which former supervisory employees of subsidiary corporation alleged that they had been discharged because of their membership in labor organization failed to state claims against subsidiary and parent corporations within jurisdiction of this section, absent allegation that corporations had acted jointly or willingly with the state or as agents of the state. Rodriguez v. Conagra, Inc., D.C.Puerto Rico 1974, 387 F.Supp. 951, affirmed 527 F.2d 540. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where plaintiff's complaint charging that he had been arrested pursuant to warrant charged out by defendant as president of corporation for feloniously removing television from its residence, though plaintiff had not in fact done so, did not aver that defendant was state official or was acting under color of state authority, the complaint did not state a cause of action under this section. Motley v. Virginia Hardware & Mfg. Co., W.D.Va.1968, 287 F.Supp. 790. Civil Rights 1396

Plaintiff did not state cause of action in civil rights suit on ground that rejection of his application by law school of defendant university was result of arbitrary selection process which violated plaintiff's rights to due process and equal protection of laws, in absence of plaintiff alleging any nexus whatsoever between any rule, regulation or conduct on part of Commonwealth and the university's admissions policy. Krohn v. Harvard Law School, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1977, 552 F.2d 21. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging that University of Louisville was municipal institution supported by public funds and that plaintiffs were dismissed from university by procedures which violated due process adequately alleged that defendants acted under color of state law within meaning of this section. Brown v. Strickler, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1970, 422 F.2d 1000. Civil Rights 1396

Former assistant professor stated First Amendment claim under § 1983 against dean and faculty members of state university school of architecture in their individual capacities, notwithstanding contention that professor failed to allege in § 1983 count of complaint that dean and faculty members were acting under color of state law; professor alleged elsewhere in complaint that faculty members were acting under color of state law, professor alleged that dean and faculty members denied him tenure was holding him to different standard of review and considering issues other than merit in tenure deliberations, and dean and faculty members could not have conspired to deny professor tenure unless they possessed some state authority over hiring decisions. Collin v. Rector and Bd. of Visitors of University of Virginia, W.D.Va.1995, 873 F.Supp. 1008. Civil Rights 1396

Former law student, who suffered from epilepsy, failed to state claim under § 1983 against private law school for discrimination on basis of disability and for retaliation for his complaints; although student alleged that law school was acting in compliance with specific laws and court rules, he did not allege that law school ever acted in any governmental capacity or in conjunction with any governmental agency. Rothman v. Emory University, N.D.Ill.1993, 828 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Mere allegation that private university received federal financial assistance was insufficient to establish requisite state action for purpose of suit under this section seeking plaintiff's readmission and other relief in connection with course grading. Rivera Carbana v. Cruz, D.C.Puerto Rico 1984, 588 F.Supp. 80, affirmed 767 F.2d 905. Civil Rights 1396

Although complaint alleging that university and union jointly and willfully discriminated against male professors on basis of sex by paying them lower salaries than those paid to female professors of less or equal educational qualifications and/or experience was deficient in alleging state action, university's activities satisfied requirement of state action under this section, since university was fully accredited institution of higher education, was a part of Commonwealth system of higher education and was initially organized and reorganized pursuant to 24 Pa.P.S. § 2510-1 et seq. Lyon v. Temple University of Com. System of Higher Ed., E.D.Pa.1981, 507 F.Supp. 471. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging that dismissal of plaintiff tenured teacher violated this section and Constitution was not subject to dismissal for failure to allege that defendant acted under color of state law, where in the complaint plaintiff described each defendant, all of whom were either officials of county school district or members of county school board, and his official position. Marshall v. Spangler, W.D.Va.1975, 397 F.Supp. 200. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

Complaint wherein plaintiff alleged that she was deprived of tenure in pay as an associate professor at institution because of her sex in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 did not state claim on which relief could be granted against institution under this section, in that, though it was alleged that institution co-operated with state and was dependent on its approval in many respects, "state action" was not alleged, in absence of allegation of state involvement of any of personnel practices complained of. Cohen v. Illinois Institute of Technology, N.D.Ill.1974, 384 F.Supp. 202, affirmed 524 F.2d 818, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1683, 425 U.S. 943, 48 L.Ed.2d 187. Civil

Former college professor's allegations that college against which she brought sex discrimination action operated by virtue of state's grant of permission by way of its licensing procedures and that the college received financial advantages from the state including exemptions from tax liability, although they lacked specificity, were sufficient to preclude dismissal of civil rights action on theory that there was no state action involved. Presseisen v. Swarthmore College, E.D.Pa.1976, 71 F.R.D. 34. Federal Civil Procedure 1788.6

4798. Employers, color of law allegations

Employee could not maintain action against employer under this section absent allegation that employer exercised direct control over activities of the general public and that, therefore, state action was involved. DeMatteis v. Eastman Kodak Co., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 511 F.2d 306, on rehearing 520 F.2d 409. Civil Rights 1396

A plaintiff can be said to have sufficiently pled a due process violation in a civil rights action under §§ 1983 when he or she alleges first that he or she had a property interest as defined by state law and, second, that the defendants, acting under color of state law, deprived him or her of that property interest without constitutionally adequate process. Gutierrez v. Molina, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 168. Civil Rights 1324

Employee did not establish § 1983 claim, absent allegation that employer was acting under color of state law in connection with any of the actions taken against employee. Marthel v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., M.D.Tenn.1996, 926 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Hispanic state employee's allegations that her supervisor's refusal to promote her and his harassing actions toward her were under color of state or local law and were in retaliation against her because of her advocacy of equal protection for members of the Hispanic race stated a claim under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] upon which relief could be granted. Saldivar v. Cadena, W.D.Wis.1985, 622 F.Supp. 949. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where plaintiff's allegations in complaint and in his reply to private accounting firm's motion to dismiss and exhibits annexed thereto, merely described general scenario, based on speculations and conjectures, which imputed to private accounting firm participation as party in alleged conspiracy solely for its having submitted audit report with conclusions adverse to civil rights plaintiff's interest, but plaintiff failed to allege that private accounting firm acted under color of state law, complaint failed to state cause of action under statutes prohibiting deprivation of civil rights and conspiracy to interfere with civil rights. Betances v. Quiros, D.C.Puerto Rico 1985, 603 F.Supp. 201. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

Employee's complaint under this section against former employer for discharging him for failing to accept his paychecks with tax withheld failed to state claim for relief where there was no allegation that employer was acting under color of state law in discharging employee. Jenkins v. Rockwell Intern. Corp., D.C.Nev.1984, 595 F.Supp. 399. Civil Rights 1396

Federal employee who alleged employment discrimination was not entitled to assert an action under this section, since employee made no claim that defendants were operating under color of state law. Munoz v. Orr, W.D.Tex.1983, 559 F.Supp. 1017. Civil Rights 1327

4799. Employees, color of law allegations

Terminated hotel security officer failed to state § 1983 claim against employees of hotel as a matter of law, where he did not allege that conduct of hotel employees was "under color of any statute * * * of any state." Jones v. Adam's Mark Hotel, S.D.Tex.1993, 840 F.Supp. 66. Civil Rights 1396

4800. Employment agencies, color of law allegations

Migratory workers who brought action under Wagner-Peyser Act, § 49 et seq. of Title 29, stated a claim for which relief could be granted either against employer, against county sanitarian, or against employees of Florida State Employment Service, where state action necessary under this section relating to civil action for deprivation of rights clearly existed as to all defendants. Gomez v. Florida State Employment Service, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 417 F.2d 569. Labor And Employment 2724

4801. Estate administrators, color of law allegations

There was no state action or color of law in the acts of administrator of an estate who was charged with the settlement of private individual's affairs, despite fiduciary obligations to creditors and the state, and certainly none on the part of purchasers of real estate in a sale by the administrator approved by state court, where complaint was only about administrator's alleged misuse of probate procedures and not an attack on the procedural scheme created by I.C. § 29-1-1 et seq. and thus widow of decedent could not maintain action under this section against administrator and a purchasers on theory that actions taken, allegedly without notice to her, constituted deprivation of due process. Loyd v. Loyd, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1984, 731 F.2d 393. Civil Rights 1326(9)

4802. Guardians, color of law allegations

Allegations that plaintiff's daughter and her husband through court proceedings and in deprivation of due process secured plaintiff's confinement in mental hospital did not allege conduct taken "under color of" state law, and thus did not state claim for relief under this section, despite contention that daughter initiated commitment proceedings in her official capacity as state-appointed guardian. Dahl v. Akin, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 630 F.2d 277, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1977, 451 U.S. 908, 68 L.Ed.2d 296. Civil Rights 1396

4803. Hospitals, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging that hospital was financed in part by federal funds and was the only one in the county and that lease of hospital land from governing body of county for nominal consideration required that board of directors contain at least one member from each magisterial district in county and that hospital foundation assume obligations made by county in securing federal funds and that lease made provisions with respect to maintenance and operation of hospital sufficiently alleged state action for purposes of action for deprivation of rights of doctor who alleged he was denied due process and equal protection when he was dismissed from staff. O'Neill v. Grayson County War Memorial Hospital, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1973, 472 F.2d 1140. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations that both physician who treated paralyzed patient and hospital at which patient was treated were licensed by state, and that hospital was extensively regulated, received funding from both state and federal sources, and had monopoly as a rehabilitation facility, were insufficient to establish "state action" necessary to state federal civil rights claim with respect to denial of patient's request to remove gastronomy tube; hospital was private nonprofit corporation and treating physician was a private individual who did not receive any public funds. Ross v. Hilltop Rehabilitation Hosp., D.Colo.1987, 676 F.Supp. 1528. Civil Rights 1396

Allegation that mental health center, its director and staff doctors negligently treated patient who subsequently shot and killed plaintiffs' decedents failed to state cause of action under this section, where defendants were employees of private concerns, there was no allegation that supposed "public function" which defendants performed was traditionally exclusive prerogative of state, and defendants, even if arguably acting under color of state law, were not responsible for release of patient from state custody. Beck v. Kansas University Psychiatry Foundation, D.C.Kan.1984, 580 F.Supp. 527, reconsideration denied 671 F.Supp. 1552. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

Plaintiff's allegation that university and its medical school received 40 percent of their funding from the state was sufficient to allege state action for purposes of plaintiff's claims brought under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section in which plaintiff charged medical school with engaging in discriminatory hiring and employment practices. Davidson v. Yeshiva University, S.D.N.Y.1982, 555 F.Supp. 75. Civil Rights 1396

Ophthalmologist, who alleged no facts to support claim that state regulated or in any way controlled personnel decisions of hospital, and who merely alleged at most that substantial portion of hospital's funding came from state and that state generally regulated hospital matters unrelated to hiring decisions, failed to demonstrate that hospital and its officers acted under color of state law when they allegedly discriminatorily denied his application for staff privileges as required to support claim under this section. Pao v. Holy Redeemer Hosp., E.D.Pa.1982, 547 F.Supp. 484. Civil Rights 1396

Plaintiffs' allegations of conspiracy with state judge who issued order removing plaintiffs' son from their custody and appointing guardian to consent to medical treatment and to administration of blood transfusions to child did not suffice to show that private hospital had acted in concert with state or its agents so as to meet state action requirement of this subchapter providing for liability for deprivation of rights under color of state law. Staelens v. Yake, N.D.Ill.1977, 432 F.Supp. 834. Conspiracy 18

In determining whether plaintiff, alleging that agents of defendant hospital conspired unlawfully to remove plaintiff's staff privileges at hospital, stated a cause of action for relief under this section, controlling consideration was whether there was a sufficient relationship between alleged private entity (hospital) and state to make private entity a de facto public body, activities of which constituted state action. Spencer v. Community Hospital of Evanston, N.D.Ill.1975, 393 F.Supp. 1072. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Employee of hospital under contract to city, terminated from position as nurse at city prison, failed to state § 1983 claim arising from termination against city corrections official and against hospital's human resources director, by alleging mere laundry list of constitutional amendments employee felt were violated by corrections department investigation and by termination, without including any facts to back up those claims. Pierce v. Marano, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 1858772, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(8)

4803A. Health care providers, color of law allegations

Social Security claimants who sued mental health care providers, alleging misappropriation of benefits payments while acting as representative payees, failed to aver that providers were acting under color of state law, as required to state claim under federal civil rights statute; complaint did not allege that providers' status as payees was necessarily contingent on their providing mental health services to claimants on behalf of District of Columbia. Bates v. Northwestern Human Services, Inc., D.D.C.2006, 2006 WL 3590049. Civil Rights 1396

4804. Indians, color of law allegations

Allegedly unconstitutional arrests, arising out of trial court orders, but executed by agents of Bureau of Indian Affairs empowered to provide law enforcement protection and enforce city ordinances, were under color of state law, as required to state § 1983 claim. Evans v. McKay, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1989, 869 F.2d 1341. Civil Rights 1327

Complaint filed by enrolled member of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians who sought a writ of mandamus against federal officials and declaratory and injunctive relief against the Tribal Council and its members and officials relative to her possessory rights in tribal lands did not state a claim under either this section governing civil actions for depriving persons of rights or privileges or § 1985 of this title governing deprivation of rights as granting of charter of incorporation to the tribe by the State of North Carolina did not make the Tribe an arm or agency of the state and since plaintiff and all of the Indian defendants were members of the tribe and were Indians, there could be no meritorious claim of invidious racial discrimination. Toineeta v. Andrus, W.D.N.C.1980, 503 F.Supp. 605. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Where nonmembers of Lac Courte Oreilles Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians who owned property on or around reservation brought action against Tribal Governing Board of Band challenging promulgation and enforcement of tribal conservation code and tribal court code insofar as codes infringed upon plaintiffs' hunting, fishing and riparian rights but where complaint did not allege that defendants acted under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any state or territory, complaint failed to state claim under this section. Citizens League For Civil Rights, Inc. v. Baker, W.D.Wis.1978, 464 F.Supp. 1389. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint, which sought declaratory and injunctive relief and monetary damages against named officials of the Seneca Nation of Indians and against a corporation negotiating with the Nation to locate a factory in an industrial park to be developed by the Nation on its reservation, stated no claim, on which relief could be granted, for violation of this section relating to deprivation of rights by an act under color of state law, since there was no allegation that the corporation was acting under color of state law, nor could it be said that the Nation was a state instrumentality or that the Indian defendants were acting under color of state law. Seneca Constitutional Rights Organization v. George, W.D.N.Y.1972, 348 F.Supp. 51. Civil Rights 1396

4805. Insurance companies, color of law allegations

Life policy beneficiary, charging credit investigator, state of Florida and six insurers with abridging his constitutional rights to privacy and freedom of speech, alleged the requisite state action necessary to a claim under this section as he charged all defendants with conspiring to deprive him of his civil rights. Fadjo v. Coon, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1981, 633 F.2d 1172. Conspiracy 18

Complaint which alleged that defendant insurer refused to sell disability insurance to women containing the same terms and conditions available to men solely on the basis of sex sufficiently set forth requirements of state action, under this section, in light of the regulatory scheme enacted by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relating to insurance companies. Stern v. Massachusetts Indem. & Life Ins. Co., E.D.Pa.1973, 365 F.Supp. 433. Civil Rights 1396

4806. Internal Revenue Service, color of law allegations

Taxpayer failed to state § 1983 cause of action arising from Internal Revenue Service's attempt to collect past due taxes; taxpayer did not allege any state action and all that could be ascertained was that the defendant United States was acting pursuant to federal law. Powers v. Karen, E.D.N.Y.1991, 768 F.Supp. 46, affirmed 963 F.2d 1522. Civil Rights 1396

4807. Judges, color of law allegations

Complaint in Negroes' class action to enjoin state from maintaining state training schools for juvenile boys on racially segregated basis alleging that juvenile judges had acted pursuant to "state law" incorporated by reference the statutes establishing the institutions. Board of Managers of Ark. Training School for Boys at Wrightsville v. George, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1967, 377 F.2d 228, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 105, 389 U.S. 845, 19 L.Ed.2d 114. Federal Civil Procedure 628

Complaint, which alleged that justice of peace was acting under color of law in issuing unlawful writs of garnishment before judgment, was insufficient to state a claim upon which injunctive relief, money damages, or a declaratory judgment could be rendered because of judicial immunity of justice of peace to suit for acts performed in his official capacity. Tate v. Arnold, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1955, 223 F.2d 782. Declaratory Judgment 319; Injunction 118(3); Justices Of The Peace 28(3)

Arrestee's § 1983 action against undercover and arresting officers for alleged violation of his Fourth Amendment rights when he was arrested and searched in undercover drug bust was barred by collateral estoppel where the same issue, the lawfulness of his arrest, was the subject of hearing on arrestee's suppression motion in state court drug prosecution arising from the arrest and search, at which hearing testimony was taken from what appeared to be one of the arresting officers and at which arrestee had the opportunity to call witnesses on his behalf and to cross-examine prosecution witnesses, and which resulted in determination that the arrest was lawful. Mitchell v. Hartnett, S.D.N.Y.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 153. Judgment 828.8

Prisoner bringing § 1983 action against judge did not make required allegations that judge was acting in clear absence of jurisdiction, as required in order to maintain action; claims by prisoner contested judge's exercise of jurisdiction, rather than absence. Cook v. DiNubile, E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 231, motion to amend denied 1994 WL 34254. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Complaint, which did not allege that police were part of conspiracy between plaintiff's parents and deprogramming foundation to deprive him of his constitutional rights and did not allege that police shared this goal, but, rather, only pleaded that police assisted in effectuation of a court order, and which did not allege that superior court judge was conspiring with parents and foundation or shared their intention to deprive plaintiff of his constitutional rights, failed to allege necessary "joint participation" so as to demonstrate required state action for purposes of plaintiff's claim under this section. Baer v. Baer, N.D.Cal.1978, 450 F.Supp. 481. Conspiracy 18

Police lieutenant was not precluded from bringing civil rights action against county court judge because of absence of showing that acts of judge were performed under color of state law. Harris v. Harvey, E.D.Wis.1976, 419 F.Supp. 30. Civil Rights 1326(2)

4808. Landlords, color of law allegations

Lessee failed to allege sufficient "state action" to support § 1983 claim against lessor and related parties, so that district court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over claim; there was no allegation that defendants were state actors, that they acted under color of state law, except for marginal possibility of institution of state court eviction proceedings by defendants, or that defendants abused state judicial process, lessee did not question constitutionality of eviction procedures, and alleged actions by city officials were perpetrated against nonparty. Eidson v. Arenas, M.D.Fla.1993, 837 F.Supp. 1158. Civil Rights 1396

Tenant who alleged that landlords engaged in conspiracy with attorney to force him to vacate his apartment while his lease was still in effect and that landlord-tenant action brought in state court was a sham complaint intended to harass him and to carry out illegal eviction but who did not allege that state was involved in supposed deprivation of his constitutional rights or that landlords conspired with state officials to violate his rights did not state cause of action under this section. Hohensee v. Dailey, M.D.Pa.1974, 383 F.Supp. 6. Conspiracy 18

Where serviceman failed to allege that defendants were acting under color of state law when defendant landlord caused serviceman's goods stored with defendant storage company to be sold at distress sale, complaint failed to state claim under this section, and district court lacked jurisdiction under § 1343 of Title 28 granting district courts original jurisdiction over civil actions under this section. Huftstetler v. Davies, N.D.Ga.1970, 309 F.Supp. 1372. Civil Rights 1396; Federal Courts 244

4809. Local officials, color of law allegations

Allegations that town commissioners utilized power conferred on them by state, statutes and town ordinances to take challenged actions satisfied "color of state law" element required for action under this section. Rodgers v. Tolson, C.A.4 (Md.) 1978, 582 F.2d 315. Civil Rights 1396

Attorney's complaint against town supervisor adequately alleged that town supervisor and town acted under color of state law, and stated § 1983 cause of action, where complaint alleged that as attorney attempted to leave meeting with town supervisor and other town officials concerning town's denial of general assistance to some of his clients, town supervisor approached him, grabbed him, and hit him from behind, causing injuries. Borek v. Town of McLeansboro, S.D.Ill.1985, 609 F.Supp. 807. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging in effect that individual defendants, as past or present members of city commission, misused their legislative authority under Ohio R.C. §§ 715.01-715.67 by failing to remedy known dangerous conditions at jail in which plaintiffs were housed as pretrial detainees was sufficient to satisfy the "under color of state law" requirement for a cause of action under this section. Watson v. McGee, S.D.Ohio 1981, 527 F.Supp. 234. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations of the complaint satisfied the "color of state law" requirement for a claim under this section against borough councilman and building inspector, since it was by virtue of those defendants' positions with the borough that they were able to act against plaintiff in the ways alleged. Di Maggio v. O'Brien, E.D.Pa.1980, 497 F.Supp. 870. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint stated claim for relief against county on theory that civil rights of plaintiff, a former city employee, had been violated under color of law by plaintiff's supervisor's recording of conversation of plaintiff without his consent and by such conduct being ratified by a county employee who was one whose edicts and acts might fairly be said to represent official policy of county. Halsworth v. Hatfield, D.C.Or.1980, 487 F.Supp. 751. Civil Rights 1396

4810. Mayors, color of law allegations

Allegations of plaintiffs against city mayor in action under § 1983 to compel access to intercom system giving outsiders their sole access to closed community satisfied both prongs of Lugar test for § 1983 liability; "state action" and "under color of state law" prongs collapsed into single inquiry, which was satisfied by allegation that mayor abused his authority under applicable law by delegating powers improperly and by failing to intervene with neighborhood association on plaintiffs' behalf. Figueroa v. Fernandez, D.Puerto Rico 1996, 921 F.Supp. 889. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging in effect that defendant deprived plaintiff of due process of law during time when defendant was mayor of a city by abuse of court processes was insufficient to state a cause of action under this section in view of lack of assertion that defendant acted on state authority as it was delegated or vested in him as mayor, or that he abused such delegated or vested authority, and in view of lack of assertion that anything defendant did was based on authority in defendant as mayor by virtue of state law. Sinchak v. Parente, W.D.Pa.1966, 262 F.Supp. 79. Civil Rights 1396

4811. Mortuaries, color of law allegations

Complaint which alleged that mortuary, which had contract with county to provide morgue services, and which was regulated by the State, refused, after having provided morgue service with respect to deceased Indians, to provide funeral services and to sell casket to deceased Indian's Indian relatives did not allege discrimination taken under color of state law. Scott v. Eversole Mortuary, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1975, 522 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1396

4812. Nursing homes, color of law allegations

Plaintiffs failed to allege that specific state actor insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with nursing home staff as required to support § 1983 claim against staff under nexus/joint action test; conclusory allegation that hospital had custom or practice of allowing and encouraging its employees to administer inappropriate and lethal doses of medication to elderly and infirm patients was insufficient to meet heightened pleading requirements for § 1983 claim. Connor v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center, M.D.Fla.2001, 135 F.Supp.2d 1198, affirmed 45 Fed.Appx. 878, 2002 WL 1423597, for text, see 2002 WL 32290997. Civil Rights 1396

Where complainant, who brought suit against nursing home and union alleging discrimination in termination of employment, failed to show that such termination was done "under color of state law," complainant failed to state cause of action under this section. Mills v. Fox, E.D.N.Y.1976, 421 F.Supp. 519. Civil Rights 1396

4813. Parent associations, color of law allegations

Absent any allegation that nonofficial parents' groups were in complicity with the state or its agents in actions which allegedly deprived candidate for school board election of equal opportunity to be elected, parents' groups could not be held liable under this subchapter. Buck v. Board of Elections of City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 536 F.2d 522. Civil Rights 1337

4814. Parents, color of law allegations

"Color of state law" requirement of § 1983 was satisfied by allegations that child's mother and her husband willfully accused grandparents falsely of child sexual abuse and that those false accusations became sole basis for recommendation to remove infant from grandparents' home and for state court proceeding which required grandparents to rebut prima facie case against them. Reynolds by Reynolds v. Strunk, S.D.N.Y.1988, 688 F.Supp. 950. Civil Rights 1396

4815. Pharmaceutical state boards, color of law allegations

Insurer, challenging validity of Alabama's Third Party Prescription Program Act, Ala.Code 1975, § 34-23-110 et seq., failed to state claim under this section governing deprivation of civil rights against Alabama Board of Pharmacy and its members where insurer did not allege any action by Board or its members, neither Board nor its members acted under color of state law and there were no actions attributable to state inasmuch as Board never tried to enforce Ala.Code 1975, § 34-23-110 et seq. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Alabama v. Peacock's Apothecary, Inc., N.D.Ala.1983, 567 F.Supp. 1258. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1396

4816. Physicians, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging that private psychiatrist whose evaluation allegedly played a role in placing a state employee on involuntary leave acted as an agent of state agency and acted in his official capacity sufficiently alleged that all acts of the psychiatrist were those of a state official, so as to satisfy the "under color of state law" requirement of civil rights statute as well as state action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment. Santiago v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, S.D.N.Y.1989, 725 F.Supp. 780, reargument denied 734 F.Supp. 653, reversed on other grounds 945 F.2d 25, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1168, 502 U.S. 1094, 117 L.Ed.2d 414. Civil Rights 1396

Where civil rights complaint alleged that physician employed by state of Virginia had refused to perform sexual sterilization requested by plaintiff because plaintiff's husband had not consented, and that such refusal was pursuant to policy of state-controlled hospital actions complained of were taken "under color of state law" so as to involve state action, and facts alleged were sufficient to state claim that physician and hospital officer had applied Code 1950, § 32-423 pertaining to sterilization in manner prejudicial to plaintiff's constitutional rights. Doe v. Temple, E.D.Va.1976, 409 F.Supp. 899. Civil Rights 1396

decedent who was killed when stolen car he had been driving at high speeds to elude pursuing police crashed into police roadblock, stated cause of action under Fourth Amendment on basis that seizure was unreasonable due to excessive force; complaint alleged that roadblock was placed in such manner as to be likely to kill decedent. Brower v. County of Inyo, U.S.Cal.1989, 109 S.Ct. 1378, 489 U.S. 593, 103 L.Ed.2d 628, on remand 884 F.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Arrestee stated § 1983 civil rights cause of action against police department and detective by alleging that during course of executing allegedly invalid search warrant for heroin, cash was intentionally taken from arrestee and his bedroom, that no receipt was given and no cash was returned, notwithstanding dismissal of drug charge for want of evidence, and that his Fourth Amendment right to be free of unreasonable searches and seizures and Fourteenth Amendment right not to be deprived of property without due process were thereby violated, and by alleging that officers were acting under color of state law when they allegedly deprived arrestee of constitutional rights. Hernandez v. Maxwell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 905 F.2d 94. Civil Rights 1395(6); Civil Rights 1396

Granting pro se plaintiff expansive reading of his complaint, allegations that police officers broke door lock and seized property was sufficient to state claim that plaintiff was subject to unlawful search and seizure conducted by state law enforcement officers acting under color of state law for purpose of section 1983 action. Byrd v. Stewart, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1987, 811 F.2d 554. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Pro se complaint by process servers, who alleged that sheriff and deputy sheriff were on duty when sheriff committed unprovoked assaults and batteries on them in presence of deputy after being served with summons, did not allege requisite action under color of state law necessary for recovery under this section where servers did not allege that underlying suit for which summons was issued was related to official duties of sheriff and deputy. Blomberg v. Schneiderheinz, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1980, 632 F.2d 698. Civil Rights 1395(1)

No cause of action was stated against police lieutenant under § 1983 where police officers' complaint did not allege that lieutenant violated their constitutional or federal statutory rights under color of law. Bradshaw v. Township of Middletown, D.N.J.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 526, affirmed 145 Fed.Appx. 763, 2005 WL 2077137. Civil Rights 1396

A § 1983 complaint alleging that an unnamed police officer drove wife's estranged husband to her home and ordered wife to admit husband, who subsequently assaulted wife, was not deficient in failing to detail defendant officer's specific role in her complaint, when the information related to that role was in the exclusive control of county and county police officer defendants. Pullium v. Ceresini, D.Md.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 600. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Allegations that at time police officers allegedly beat suspects officers waved identification badges, carried firearms, told suspects they were police officers, threatened suspects with criminal charges, and arrested, handcuffed, and jailed suspects, were sufficient to allege state action under § 1983. Adorno Colon v. Toledo Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2001, 137 F.Supp.2d 39. Civil Rights 1396

To succeed on § 1983 claim against judge's spouse, opponent of judge's election was required to show unconstitutional reasons for police officer to allow spouse to remove flyers placed on windshields by opponent; officer's own reasons for conduct allegedly violating the equal protection clause and right to free speech had to be unconstitutional and not simply imputed from judge's spouse. Chapman v. Village of Homewood, N.D.Ill.1997, 960 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1033(2)

Driver alleged facts that would be sufficient for jury to find that deputy was acting under color of state law at time driver alleged her constitutional rights were violated, for purposes of motion to dismiss § 1983 action for failure to state a claim; complaint alleged that deputy's misconduct occurred while he was on duty, wearing uniform, driving market patrol car, conducting official business and that deputy used authority given him by state in order to deprive driver of her constitutional rights. Battista v. Cannon, M.D.Fla.1996, 934 F.Supp. 400. Civil Rights 1396

Motorist's complaint under §§ 1981 and 1983 sufficiently alleged that police officer detained her because she was Hispanic and that officer violated motorist's right to equal protection; complaint alleged that officer told motorist that he "know[s] how Puerto Rican girls are" and that officer compared motorist to ex-wife, whom he described as also Hispanic. Antia v. Thurman, N.D.Ill.1996, 914 F.Supp. 256. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Civil rights complaint under § 1983 failed to allege deprivations of constitutional rights by employee of county department of human resources (DHR) with sufficient particularity in alleging that such employee instructed officers of sheriff's department to forcibly enter plaintiff's residence, threaten parent-plaintiffs and touch children-plaintiffs in offensive unlawful manner and improperly intrude into parent-child relationship in violation of First, Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments; complaint should go beyond conclusory allegation that employee "instructed" sheriff's officers to act, should state how employee acted in violation of each cited constitutional provision, should detail facts as to why defense or qualified immunity could not be sustained, and should allege facts stating employee's role in the lawsuit, where he was involved in investigation of reports of child abuse and complaint did not state his specific role. Ross v. State of Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 893 F.Supp. 1545. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Deputy sheriff stated civil rights cause of action by alleging that sheriff solicited letter under color of state law from state attorney which deprived deputy of ability to find meaningful employment, and that sheriff's action in doing so was unprecedented and constituted substantial departure from established custom and policy. Morris v. Crow, M.D.Fla.1993, 817 F.Supp. 102. Civil Rights 1126

Allegations in § 1983 complaint were sufficient to allege that officer, who allegedly arrested plaintiff without probable cause, was acting under color of state law; it was alleged that officer, who was in uniform and riding in police squad car, acted in her official capacity in affecting arrest and taking plaintiff to police station. Davis v. Kirby, N.D.Ill.1990, 755 F.Supp. 199. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations in complaint that minor plaintiff had been shot by township police officer without just cause or provocation, kicked by officer, refused company of friends while being taken to hospital, and refused permission to telephone parents sufficiently alleged that the acts had been done "under color of law" and sufficiently alleged deprivation of constitutional rights under this section. Roberts v. Trapnell, E.D.Pa.1962, 213 F.Supp. 49. Civil Rights 1396

4818. Prison officials, color of law allegations

Allegations that superintendent of state penitentiary was fully aware of numerous assaults as a result of insufficient guard supervision stated § 1983 claim to recover for injuries resulting from assault by fellow inmates. Pool v. Missouri Dept. of Corrections and Human Resources, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 883 F.2d 640. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Plaintiff who alleged violations of Fourth, Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments and facts sufficient to establish that New York correctional officers who arrested him following his release from Georgia imprisonment acted under color of state law adequately pleaded claim under federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights. Gordon v. Watley, S.D.N.Y.1985, 601 F.Supp. 1512, on reargument 624 F.Supp. 1138, affirmed 792 F.2d 136. Civil Rights 1395(6)

4819. Prisoners, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging that plaintiff as pretrial detainee suffered bodily pain and injuries, etc., as result of arson committed by co-detainee failed to show that such defendant co-detainee acted under color of state law and thus failed to state claim against such defendant under this section. Thibodeaux v. Bordelon, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 740

F.2d 329. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint by prisoner in state institution against a fellow prison inmate for injuries sustained when fellow inmate allegedly assaulted plaintiff by pouring a mixture of lye upon plaintiff's face and head while he was lying in bed failed to state a cause of action maintainable under this section, and was subject to being dismissed, but without prejudice to reassert any claims arising out of applicable facts in appropriate state court, where there was no express allegation in complaint, nor could it be fairly implied from facts set forth in complaint that fellow inmate was at any time acting under color of state law, either by ordinance, regulation, prison rule, customs or usage. Barnes v. Childs, N.D.Miss.1974, 63 F.R.D. 628. Civil Rights 1395(7); Federal Civil Procedure 1827.1

4820. Private parties, color of law allegations

Allegation that an official act of a state court judge was the product of a corrupt conspiracy involving bribery of the judge was sufficient to assert that the private parties who conspired with the judge were acting under color of state law for purposes of this section. Dennis v. Sparks, U.S.Tex.1980, 101 S.Ct. 183, 449 U.S. 24, 66 L.Ed.2d 185. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

Figure skating coach failed to state actionable § 1983 claims against private figure skating club where coach did not allege that club acted in concert with any state actors, or that conspiracy or agreement existed between club and defendant city or its employees, and coach did not allege that any policy under which club may have operated was exercise of power specifically authorized by state. Mertik v. Blalock, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 983 F.2d 1353, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations that competitor and his attorneys abused District of Columbia court system failed to allege that private parties acted "under color of law" within meaning of § 1983 when they litigated dispute over right to service station franchise. Hoai v. Vo, C.A.D.C.1991, 935 F.2d 308, 290 U.S.App.D.C. 142, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1578, 503 U.S. 967, 118 L.Ed.2d 220, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 2007, 504 U.S. 936, 118 L.Ed.2d 602. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

Although private parties jointly engaged with state or local officials in prohibited conduct can be said to act under color of state law, general allegations of cooperation between private individuals and unspecified government agencies do not make out a claim of action taken under color of state law. Glaros v. Perse, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 628 F.2d 679. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations against private individual, consisting of little more than that he "displayed a conduct of threats and reprisal against plaintiffs," without any further description of the individual's actions, were insufficient to depict a violation of a federally protected right or to state a claim under color of state law, and therefore stated no §§ 1983 claim, notwithstanding generalized statements that private individual and government officials acted in conspiracy. Chevere Rodriguez v. Pagan, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 59. Civil Rights 1396

Section 1983 claims of property owners against companies which allegedly conspired to acquire their real estate at lower than its true value by misrepresenting condemnation powers and concealing coal companies' involvement in right-of-way acquisition and construction of rail line did not sufficiently allege state action to state § 1983 claim; defendants were purely private parties and were not alleged to have commenced condemnation proceedings or any other formal action against landowners which would convert their conduct into state action. Anderson v. Consol-Pennsylvania Coal Co., W.D.Pa.1990, 740 F.Supp. 1126, affirmed 945 F.2d 394, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 975, 502 U.S. 1075, 117 L.Ed.2d 139, affirmed 945 F.2d 395, affirmed 945 F.2d 396. Civil Rights 1396

Private citizens did not act under color of state law so as to be subject to civil rights action in connection with arrest of plaintiff, absent allegations that county attorney acted in collusion or conspired with private citizens, in case in which warrant was issued against plaintiff based solely on complaint filed by one of the defendants, alleging assault. Kraemer v. Padgett, D.Kan.1987, 685 F.Supp. 1166. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(5)

Allegation of private misuse or abuse of state statute or procedure does not describe conduct that can be attributable to state for purposes of establishing claim for invasion of constitutional right of privacy. Miami Herald Pub. Co., Div. of Knight-Ridder Newspaper, Inc. v. Ferre, S.D.Fla.1985, 636 F.Supp. 970. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Complaint alleging that private citizen aided, abetted and conspired with police officers to violate plaintiff's civil rights stated claim against private citizen. Unger v. Hacker, E.D.Pa.1983, 578 F.Supp. 143. Civil Rights 1396

4821. Professional review boards, color of law allegations

Complaint by plaintiff alleging that action of State Board of Examiners in Psychology in denying him use of "Ph.D." designation in context of his psychology practice was an unconstitutional action under color of official right was sufficient to state a claim for relief under this section. Buxton v. Lovell, S.D.Ind.1983, 559 F.Supp. 979. Civil Rights 1072

4822. Prothonotaries, color of law allegations

Complaint alleging that county prothonotary and sheriff acted upon judgment which they knew or should have known to have been invalid and unenforceable and that defendants acted in concert with government officials to deprive plaintiff of her property through execution process under color of law, allegations were sufficient to meet pleading requirements of state action under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Demp v. Emerson Enterprises, E.D.Pa.1980, 504 F.Supp. 281. Civil Rights 1396

4823. Publications, color of law allegations

Complaint of inmate in federal medical center in Missouri alleging publication by defendant of magazine containing "libelous and harmful story" did not state claim under this section in absence of any allegation that defendant was acting under color of state law or of conspiracy to deny inmate any federal civil rights. White v. Fawcett Publications, W.D.Mo.1970, 324 F.Supp. 403. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4824. Racing associations, color of law allegations

In view of fact that field of training thoroughbred race horses was state controlled and required access to race tracks, where assistant race horse trainer alleged in civil rights complaint that defendants had deprived him of the opportunity to pursue his occupation by denying him access to certain race tracks, allegation was sufficient to state claim for deprivation of a constitutionally protected "liberty" and "property" right. Whetzler v. Krause, E.D.Pa.1976, 411 F.Supp. 523, affirmed 549 F.2d 797. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4825. Railroads, color of law allegations

State action could not be imputed to coal companies and railroad so as to establish a cause of action under this section governing deprivation of civil rights of ground that complaint alleged that they sought state court injunctions against labor organizations in bad faith and with improper purpose of infringing unions' rights under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1 in absence of an allegation that they invoked a state court remedy that they knew to be unconstitutional or that remedy was among those questionable prejudgment remedies used by private creditors. District 28, United Mine Workers of America, Inc. v. Wellmore Coal Corp., C.A.4 (Va.) 1979, 609 F.2d 1083. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Federal civil rights complaint against railroad and railroad police officers would not be dismissed against railroad for failure to adequately plead "state action" where, under New York law, the law enforcement authority of the state was granted to railroad police only through the efforts and for the benefit of their employer, whose decision to employ them involved a utilization for its benefit of state law enforcement authorities sufficient to satisfy "state action" requirement of federal civil rights law. Merola v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., S.D.N.Y.1988, 683 F.Supp. 935. Civil Rights 1326(8); Civil Rights 1396

Petition by black coach passenger against railroad alleging that conductor with aid of police officers threatened him with physical harm and imprisonment, placed him under arrest, physically evicted him from car restricted to white passengers and forced him into another restricted to colored persons, but failing to allege that railroad, agents or employees, acted or purported to act as state officials or possibly, in conspiracy with state officials did not state a cause of action under this section on theory that acts were committed under color of state laws. Moore v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., E.D.Pa.1951, 98 F.Supp. 375. Civil Rights 1396

4826. Security employees, color of law allegations

Customer who claimed to have been unlawfully detained by private store security officers failed to adequately allege that he was detained pursuant to a "pre-arranged association" with police, by which the police substituted the judgment of private parties for their own official authority, as required to establish a state action needed to support a civil rights claim; customer merely alleged that the security officers did not call police for almost an hour and a half. Vassallo v. Clover, Div. of Strawbridge & Clothier, E.D.Pa.1990, 767 F.Supp. 651. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 that plaintiff's detention under West Virginia's shoplifting statute [W.Va.Code, 61-3A-4] involved constitutionally protected speech and seizure failed to state a claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 because required element of action could not be proved; no joint action between defendant merchant and the state was asserted because only connection between them was the statute. Hurt v. G.C. Murphy Co., S.D.W.Va.1986, 624 F.Supp. 512, affirmed 800 F.2d 260. Civil Rights 1396

Insofar as customer's complaint under this section alleged that store and its employee intentionally or negligently failed to preserve and safeguard merchandise that the customer allegedly shoplifted and realleged an agreement between the store and the police, it did not allege facts sufficient to make the store's conduct "state action"; moreover, it failed to allege that the employee acted under color of state law. Newman v. Bloomingdale's, S.D.N.Y.1982, 543 F.Supp. 1029. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging that security employees of department store, acting on wrongful assumption that complainants' decedent was in act of shoplifting, detained and arrested decedent in violation of his rights, which resulted in his stroke and death, was insufficient to show that employees had acted "under color of state law," and thus failed to state claim under this section. Iodice's Estate v. Gimbels, Inc., E.D.N.Y.1976, 416 F.Supp. 1054. Civil Rights 1396

4827. Sports organizations, color of law allegations

Complaint failed to state claim for injunctive relief under this section on theory of sex discrimination arising out of refusal of federally chartered children's baseball league to permit local league to operate while allowing a girl to participate on team, in view of withdrawal of state action or participation in activity complained of. King v. Little League Baseball, Inc., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1974, 505 F.2d 264. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4828. Stores, color of law allegations

Complaint which alleged that patron of store was held at gunpoint, arrested without cause and beaten by a sales clerk and a security guard, who was also a county detective, did not allege that store was acting under color of state law or conspiring with a state official and thus did not state a claim under this subchapter. Fowler v. Nicholas, E.D.Pa.1981, 522 F.Supp. 655. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

Absent allegation that store acted in concert with police prior to their arrival, any illegal detention of plaintiff, who was suspected of shoplifting, by store alone was not action under color of state law and could not be asserted as a violation of this section. Jones v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., S.D.Ga.1980, 495 F.Supp. 319. Civil Rights 1326(1)

4829. Tow operators, color of law allegations

Allegations that private persons who towed away automobiles did so at direction of state police and only in response to and in reliance on authority of state police were sufficient to allege actions taken "under color of state law" for purposes of this section. Watters v. Parrish, W.D.Va.1975, 402 F.Supp. 696. Civil Rights 1396

4830. Unions, color of law allegations

Teacher failed to allege facts which, if true, would show that union, a private entity, was acting under color of state law when it refused to take his grievance against college to arbitration; thus, union was not liable to teacher under § 1983. Leahy v. Board of Trustees of Community College Dist. No. 508, County of Cook, State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 912 F.2d 917, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Complaint alleging that union and officials thereof brought meritless suits against members in federal and state courts to punish and reprimand them for their prior suits against union and its officials did not state a federal claim for civil rights violations under this section since it was not alleged that the deprivation of rights in question was under color of state law; fact that in the alleged deprivation resort was had to courts of the state did not supply the necessary "state action." Phillips v. International Ass'n of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, Local 118, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1977, 556 F.2d 939. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging that National Labor Relations Board field examiner who investigations unfair labor practice charges by employees against employers and union was a member of union and hence did not make an impartial investigation, and that general counsel knowing of such membership was induced to accept the field examiner's report was insufficient to state a claim for relief under this section creating right of action for deprivation of rights, in absence of allegation that employers and union acted under color of any state or territorial law, custom or usage. Schatte v. International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Emp. and Moving Picture Mach. Operators of U.S. and Canada, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1950, 182 F.2d 158, rehearing denied 183 F.2d 685, certiorari denied 71 S.Ct. 64, 340 U.S. 827, 95 L.Ed. 608, rehearing denied 71 S.Ct. 194, 340 U.S. 885, 95 L.Ed. 643. Civil Rights 1396

In action brought by black and Puerto Rican union members against union local and its business manager alleging that defendants intentionally discriminated against plaintiffs by failing to press grievances filed after a series of allegedly wrongful terminations by employers and also alleging that employment assignments by the union had been discriminatory, claim under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights failed since no state action had been alleged or demonstrated. U. T. B., United Third Bridge, Inc. v. Local No. 3, Intern. Broth. of Elec. Workers, New York State AFL-CIO, S.D.N.Y.1981, 512 F.Supp. 298. Civil Rights 1532

Complaint which did not allege that any action taken by international union or its officials with regard to merger of local union into another local union was taken under color of authority of a state did not state cause of action under this section. Local No. 1 (ACA), Broadcast Emp. of Intern. Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America v. International Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, E.D.Pa.1976, 419 F.Supp. 263. Civil Rights 1396

As against motion to dismiss, allegations in civil rights action based on claim that labor unions, contractors and others involved in building industry engaged in discriminatory employment practices were sufficient to establish that joint apprentice training committee acted under color of state law and engaged in conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of their rights. Byrd v. Local Union No. 24, Intern. Broth. of Elec. Workers, D.C.Md.1974, 375 F.Supp. 545. Civil Rights 1396; Conspiracy 18

4831. Utilities, color of law allegations--Generally

Customer's allegation that electric company deprived her of property without due process of law in holding her responsible for tampering, in billing her $100 for electricity consumed while meter was inoperable, and in requiring a $100 deposit before permitting resumed service, all without a hearing, would state a claim under this section over which federal court might entertain jurisdiction only if customer could allege and show that denial of a hearing was attributable to action or involvement on part of state, as distinguished from private action on part of electric company; answer depended on whether there was a sufficiently close nexus between the state and the challenged action of regulated entity so that action of the latter might be fairly stated as that of the state itself. Taylor v. Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, Inc., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 552 F.2d 39, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 147, 434 U.S. 845, 54 L.Ed.2d 111. Federal Courts 244

Plaintiff's allegations at most concerning employer's public service functions and failing to show or tend to show intrusion by state into matters of employer-utility's internal management did not show that utility in discharging plaintiff from its employment was acting under color of state authority within meaning of this section. Martin v. Pacific Northwest Bell Telephone Co., C.A.9 (Or.) 1971, 441 F.2d 1116, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 89, 404 U.S. 873, 30 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1395(8)

4832. ---- Commissions, utilities, color of law allegations

Amended complaint which alleged that chairman of Public Utility Commission pursuant to conspiracy caused damage to plaintiffs' property "under color of his high office," but which did not allege conduct under authority or color of any identifiable state statute, ordinance regulation, custom or usage, did not state claim under this section. Peoples Cab Co. v. Bloom, W.D.Pa.1971, 330 F.Supp. 1235, affirmed 472 F.2d 163. Conspiracy 18

4833. Zoning boards, color of law allegations

Complaint by residential property owners against borough, its zoning officer and the members of its council and zoning board, wherein it was alleged that defendants willfully refused to enforce restrictions on occupancy permit issued to paper mill owner, stated a valid cause of action, since the members of the zoning board were persons acting under color of state law and their action or inaction in the involvement of zoning ordinances could cause a deprivation of civil rights. Beaver v. Borough of Johnsonburg, W.D.Pa.1974, 375 F.Supp. 326. Civil Rights 1396

4834. Miscellaneous allegations, color of law allegations

Allegations that ordinary citizens were not permitted to bring their dogs into clerk of court's office, that state judge was known to, and deferred to by, personnel of office, and that judge was allowed to enter office with his dog, and remain there during alleged harassment of litigant, because he was a judge satisfied color-of-law element of litigant's § 1983 claim against judge. Monsky v. Moraghan, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1997, 127 F.3d 243, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 66, 525 U.S. 823, 142 L.Ed.2d 52. Civil Rights 1396

Absent allegation connecting intervenors in prior proceeding resulting in termination of natural father's parental rights with state action, complaint failed to allege facts satisfying "color of state law" requirement of this section, and thus complaint did not state claim upon which relief could be granted against the intervenors. Martin v. Aubuchon, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1980, 623 F.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1396

Former personnel director, hospital physician and dental student's complaints simply failed to allege any set of facts supporting conclusion or inference that defendants either acted as a state instrumentality, performed traditionally exclusive sovereign functions, or were compelled or even encouraged by state to make challenged dismissal, suspension and expulsion decisions and thus failed to demonstrate requisite state action to maintain civil rights suits. Musso v. Suriano, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1978, 586 F.2d 59, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1534, 440 U.S. 971, 59 L.Ed.2d 788. Civil Rights 1396

Complaint alleging that private citizens had filed false affidavits with district attorney resulting in a state charge against plaintiff stated no claim within the jurisdiction of the district court under this section which provides civil action for deprivation of rights, since no state action was involved, and likewise failed to state a claim under § 1985 of this title which provides for cause of action for depriving persons of rights or privileges. Howard v. Lemmons, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 547 F.2d 290. Federal Courts 244

Complaint which did not reveal deprivation, under color of state authority, of plaintiff's constitutional rights did not state cause of action under this section relating to deprivation of civil rights or under § 1985 of this title relating to conspiracy to interfere with civil rights. Ehrlich v. Van Epps, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1970, 428 F.2d 363. Civil Rights 1395(1); Conspiracy 18

Plaintiffs who did not allege that at least one of defendants acted under color of state law to injure them or deny them federally protected right did not state cause of action under this section. Rutherford v. American Medical Ass'n, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1967, 379 F.2d 641, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 787, 389 U.S. 1043, 19 L.Ed.2d 835, rehearing denied 88 S.Ct. 1027, 390 U.S. 975, 19 L.Ed.2d 1195. Civil Rights 1396

Eleventh Amendment did not bar § 1983 claims against Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI) officials, despite complaint's express usage of "official capacity" language; read in full, complaint was abundantly clear in alleging loss caused by their individual conduct and in seeking money damages, and complaint's use of "official capacity" language was best viewed as attempt merely to emphasize that defendants were acting under color of state law or as half-hearted attempt to state claims against them in both their official and personal capacities. Lumbreras v. Roberts, D.Or.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 156 Fed.Appx. 952, 2005 WL 3304174. Federal Courts 269

Private employers 4877
Prosecutors 4866
Public aid officials 4878
School officials 4871
Supervisory personnel 4864
Village officials 4879

4861. Personal participation allegations generally

A complaint that essentially regurgitates the relevant personal involvement standard for §§ 1983 claim against a supervisory official in his individual capacity, without offering any facts indicating that, or how, an individual defendant in a supervisory role was personally involved in a constitutional violation, cannot withstand dismissal. Murphy v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 261. Civil Rights 1394

An element of a §§ 1983 claim is that defendant must be personally and directly involved in causing the violation of the plaintiff's federally protected rights; element requires a showing of a causal connection between the specific defendant and plaintiff's federal rights deprivation, which may consist of direct acts by the defendant, certain acts performed at defendant's direction, or his knowledge and consent. Ramirez-De Leon v. Mujica-Cotto, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1335

The doctrine of respondeat superior is not available to establish liability under § 1983; rather, particularized allegations of personal direction or of actual knowledge and acquiescence are necessary to show personal involvement. Gerber v. Sweeney, E.D.Pa.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 700. Civil Rights 1336; Civil Rights 1394

A defendant may be personally involved in a constitutional deprivation within the meaning of Section 1983 if he directly participated in the infraction, or if he is a supervisory official, and he (1) failed to remedy the wrong after learning of the violation though a report or appeal; (2) created or continued a custom or policy under which unconstitutional practices occurred; or (3) was grossly negligent in managing subordinates who caused the unlawful condition or event. Jones v. Nassau County Sheriff Dept., E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 322. Civil Rights 1335; Civil Rights 1355

To state a claim for damages under § 1983, plaintiff must allege specific facts to demonstrate that defendants were personally or directly involved in the violation, that is, that there was personal participation by one who had knowledge of the facts that rendered the conduct illegal. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1335

Complaint asserting § 1983 claim is fatally defective on its face if it fails to allege that defendants were directly and personally responsible for purported unlawful conduct. Adams v. Galletta, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1394

To hold individual liable under § 1983, plaintiff must allege facts that demonstrate individual defendant's personal involvement in alleged deprivations; personal involvement may be based on allegations that defendant participated directly in alleged constitutional violation, that defendant failed to remedy the wrong after being informed of violation through report or appeal, that defendant created policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred or allowed continuance of such policy or custom, that defendant was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed wrongful acts, or that defendant exhibited deliberate indifference to rights of citizens by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1335; Civil Rights 1355

In order to meet minimum pleading standards and state claim under § 1983, complaint must allege personal involvement by named defendants. Lovanyak v. Cogdell, E.D.N.Y.1996, 955 F.Supp. 172. Civil Rights 1394

To succeed on claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege personal involvement by each defendant in alleged constitutional deprivation. Schmelzer v. Norfleet, S.D.N.Y.1995, 903 F.Supp. 632. Civil Rights 1394

Defendants' personal involvement in alleged constitutional violation is prerequisite to recover damages under § 1983 and plaintiff must allege that defendants were directly and personally responsible for purported unlawful conduct. Herrera v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1993, 815 F.Supp. 713. Civil Rights 1335

Plaintiff must establish personal involvement or knowledge of defendant before he can recover monetary damages in civil rights action brought pursuant to statute which creates federal cause of action against any person whose misconduct under color of state law violates constitutional rights of another. Owens v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1983, 561 F.Supp. 426. Civil Rights 1335

In Tenth Circuit, personal participation of defendants is essential allegation in complaint brought pursuant to this section. Rucker v. Grider, W.D.Okla.1980, 526 F.Supp. 617. Civil Rights 1394

Employees for state thruway authority were not personally involved in decision to terminate employment of former employee, as required to support former employee's claims that he was terminated in violation of due process and equal protection rights, where the decision to pursue disciplinary action was made by thruway authority's labor department independently on the basis of an evidentiary hearing and upon recommendation of an unbiased hearing officer. Dolson v. New York State Thruway Authority, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 80 Fed.Appx. 694, 2003 WL 22513581, Unreported. Civil Rights 1359

4862. Conspiracy with state actors, personal participation allegations

Plaintiff seeking to hold private party liable on § 1983 civil rights claim must allege, at the very least, that there was mutual understanding or meeting of the minds between private party and state actor. Mershon v. Beasley, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 994 F.2d 449, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1055, 510 U.S. 1111, 127 L.Ed.2d 376. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Section 1983 complaint alleging that police officers told "skinheads" that officers would permit the "skinheads" to assault demonstrators, that one of the "skinheads" informed reporter of verbal license given by the officers, that the "skinheads" did assault plaintiff in the presence of officers, and that officers present refrained from interfering sufficiently alleged a conspiracy. Dwares v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 985 F.2d 94. Conspiracy 18

Complaint alleging that special agents with National Investigative Service (NIS) and employees with sheriff's department "combined, confederated and conspired to falsely accuse" plaintiffs of murder and armed robbery and that subsequent goal of the conspiracy was to manufacture evidence was sufficient to state claim for conspiracy to violate plaintiffs' constitutional rights. Kunik v. Racine County, Wis., C.A.7 (Wis.) 1991, 946 F.2d 1574. Conspiracy 18

Allegations in civil rights complaint of a conspiracy between city and its water and sewer commission and a private firm of consulting engineers to fabricate a need to condemn landowners' property, and thus pressure them to settle lawsuit against city and commission, were sufficient to implicate firm of consulting engineers; alleged involvement of state officials in conspiracy plainly provided state action essential to show direct violation of landowners' constitutional rights. Harrison v. Springdale Water & Sewer Com'n, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 780 F.2d 1422. Conspiracy 18

Allegations of conspiratorial action by persons acting under color of law to carry out a purpose in which both state officials and private persons joined stated a claim under this section. Colaizzi v. Walker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 542 F.2d 969, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1610, 430 U.S. 960, 51 L.Ed.2d 811. Conspiracy 18

Detainee, who alleged that he was targeted by the police and abused by corrections officers, that the district attorney was aware of those misdeeds but did not drop the criminal case against him, and that legal aid society waived his rights and failed to represent him effectively, failed to state a section 1983 conspiracy claim against legal aid society, since detainee did not allege any facts indicating an agreement to act in concert to harm him. Brewster v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 540. Conspiracy 18

Civil rights complaint by security guard service did not allege "meeting of the minds" between private owners of housing project and public officials that would permit service to maintain civil rights conspiracy action against private owners after failure to renew guard service's contract; allegations that owners "set back" and "resisted" efforts and had to be "pressured" to terminate contract did not support claim that owners wilfully collaborated with any state actors. X-Men Sec., Inc. v. Pataki, E.D.N.Y.1997, 983 F.Supp. 101, on reconsideration, reversed 196 F.3d 56. Conspiracy 18

Without allegations that they acted in concert with county official, defendants, standing alone in positions of foster parents, did not act under color of state law in assuming custody of child. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Cable television operator alleged with sufficient particularity collaboration between cable television news programmer and city to deprive operator of its free speech, due process, and Cable Communications Policy Act rights so as to state counterclaims against programmer for conspiracy in violation of § 1983, in programmer's action against operator, arising from operator's decision not to carry programmer's news program on operator's cable channels in city; operator described numerous overt acts by programmer and city in execution of claimed conspiracy designed to coerce private entity to give up its rights because of desire of public officials to reward and ingratiate themselves with competitor, and those could not be characterized as "normal dealings" with state. Fox News Network, L.L.C. v. Time Warner Inc., E.D.N.Y.1997, 962 F.Supp. 339. Conspiracy 18

Arrestee failed to state claim against private citizen for false arrest and malicious prosecution under § 1983; only evidence offered by arrestee on his claim that citizen was involved in a preconceived plan or mutual understanding with government officials consisted of allegation that citizen and police officer who effected arrest appeared to know each other and that citizen and officer talked in back of citizen's restaurant during officer's investigation. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Failure to allege specific acts by conspirators in furtherance of conspiracy, or to plead overt acts indicating existence of conspiracy, will warrant dismissal of claim alleging conspiracy to violate civil rights. Federico v. Board of Educ. of Public Schools of Tarrytowns, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 194. Conspiracy 18

University professor failed to state claim against university donor, who was not a public actor, under § 1983, arising from allegations that donor showed letters from professor to university officials, resulting in deprivation of professor's property interest in his job; donor did not conspire with university officials to deprive professor of constitutional rights, in that no agreement existed between officials and donor to cause termination. Gressley v. Deutsch, D.Wyo.1994, 890 F.Supp. 1474. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Plaintiffs' claim that city officials engaged in cover up to deprive them of information vital to their state court suit, causing them to settle claim for far less than it was actually worth, was sufficient to state claim for violation of established constitutional right, for purposes of federal civil rights claim. Foster v. City of Lake Jackson, Tex., S.D.Tex.1993, 813 F.Supp. 1262, reversed 28 F.3d 425, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1056

To state claim against private actor under § 1983, complaint must allege facts demonstrating that private entity acted in concert with state actor to commit unconstitutional or unlawful act. Chan v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 803 F.Supp. 710, affirmed 1 F.3d 96, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 472, 510 U.S. 978, 126 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1396

Allegations that local government officials and private person conspired to conceal cause of individual's death stated § 1983 conspiracy claim. Stump v. Gates, D.Colo.1991, 777 F.Supp. 808, affirmed 986 F.2d 1429. Conspiracy 18

Workers' compensation claimant failed to state § 1983 claim that Pinnacol conspired with private actors to deprive her of medical benefits by terminating her benefits without reopening her case; allegation that medical evaluator scheduled appointment stated no facts indicating evaluator's agreement and concerted action, and claimant failed to state facts indicating that Pinnacol had plan to terminate her benefits without reopening award when it scheduled examinations or that doctors were aware of such a plan and conspired with Pinnacol to reach that end. Roberson v. Pinnacol Assur., C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 98 Fed.Appx. 778, 2004 WL 1059799, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

4863. Joint participation, personal participation allegations

District court should not have dismissed debtor's § 1983 claim against bank for failure to allege state action since debtor could prevail if he could show that private defendants willfully participated in joint action with state official. McCartney v. First City Bank, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 970 F.2d 45. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Allegations that attorneys who participated in state court case and state trial judge engaged in ex parte communication and that trial judge adopted findings and conclusion of law proposed by those attorneys in entering adverse ruling were insufficient to state claim against the attorneys under either conspiracy or "joint participation" theories, absent allegations tending to show that attorneys had understanding or agreed plan with the judge. Crabtree By and Through Crabtree v. Muchmore, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 904 F.2d 1475. Conspiracy 18

Allegations that private person acted jointly with state official are sufficient to allege that he acted under color of state law for purposes of federal civil rights claim. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1326(5)

For purposes of question whether hypnotist acted "under color of state law" for § 1983 civil rights purposes, arrestee sufficiently stated claim of state action under joint participation or conspiracy theory against hypnotist in arrestee's action arising from arrest and conviction for arson and second-degree murder for which arrestee was retried and acquitted, where arrestee alleged conspiracy among hypnotist, police officers, and other defendants to violate arrestee's rights by, among other things, bringing false criminal charges based on false recollection of fatal house fire by witness subjected to hypnotism. Dinicola v. DiPaolo, W.D.Pa.1996, 945 F.Supp. 848. Civil Rights 1396

To state claim under this section there must be allegation that defendant acted under color of state law, and private parties may only be liable where they are willful participants in joint activity with state or its agents. Davis v. Carson Pirie Scott & Co., N.D.Ill.1982, 530 F.Supp. 799.

4864. Supervisory personnel, personal participation allegations

Allegations, in a §§ 1983 action, that plaintiff was arrested on basis of an already-executed warrant despite showing officers facially authentic documentary evidence that the warrant was no longer effective, were sufficient to state a claim for false arrest and false imprisonment, in violation of the Fourth Amendment, against the supervising officer at the scene; supervisor presumably had authority to call off the arrest or check with the issuing precinct when presented with evidence casting doubt on the warrant's continuing validity. Pena-Borrero v. Estremeda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 365 F.3d 7. Civil Rights 1358

Allegation that director within state agency attended and actively participated in meeting to review female employee's salary to determine whether pay inequity existed was insufficient to show that director was personally involved in determining amount of pay raise that previously had been granted to employee, and therefore director was not liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of employee's equal protection rights arising from gender-based disparate pay raise she purportedly received. Hildebrandt v. Illinois Dept. of Natural Resources, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 1014. Civil Rights 1359

To recover damages under this section against federal officials who have a qualified immunity, plaintiff must allege the official's direct and personal responsibility for the purportedly unlawful conduct of its subordinates and the general doctrine of respondeat superior does not suffice. Black v. U. S., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 534 F.2d 524. Civil Rights 1394

Allegations of involvement by all individual defendants, including the Department of Corrections and various corrections officials, in initiating incidents of discrimination and retaliation, and encouraging subordinates to use racial slurs against African-American employee, sufficiently put each defendant on notice as to the individual conduct which led to the equal protection and due process claims against them and thus employee would not be required to file a more definite statement. Vaden v. Lantz, D.Conn.2006, 459 F.Supp.2d 149. Federal Civil Procedure 988.1

A supervisor is not liable under § 1983 unless an affirmative link exists between the constitutional deprivation and either the supervisor's personal participation, his exercise of control or direction, or his failure to supervise; a supervisor must have participated in or acquiesced in the constitutional violation of the prisoner to be held liable. Estate of Sisk v. Manzanares, D.Kan.2002, 262 F.Supp.2d 1162. Civil Rights 1355

A supervisor cannot be liable for damages under § 1983 solely by virtue of being a supervisor. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1355

A supervisory official can be liable under § 1983 if (1) the supervisor directly participated in the action, or (2) the supervisor, after learning of the violation through a report or appeal, failed to remedy the wrong, or (3) the supervisor created or allowed to continue a policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or (4) the supervisor was grossly negligent in managing the subordinates who caused the unlawful event. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1355

In prison inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging cruel and unusual punishment, based upon alleged denial of a noon meal and exercise periods during four days served in keeplock, as well as on two 21-day periods of keeplock confinement, officials who were involved only in alleged infringements of inmate's free exercise rights lacked personal involvement in the alleged cruel and unusual punishment, as required for liability under § 1983. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations that supervisors of undercover drug agents improperly selected and enlisted agents, selected agents with poor psychological profiles and inclinations towards violence, fostered and condoned violent traits among agents, and had knowledge of and failed to investigate past incidents of brutality, were sufficient to state claim of supervisory liability under § 1983 arising from alleged brutality by agents. Adorno Colon v. Toledo Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2001, 137 F.Supp.2d 39. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Former employee of state Department of Labor (DOL), who claimed that series of adverse employment actions had been taken against her because of her political affiliation and associations, made sufficient allegations of personal involvement on part of commissioner of DOL, as required to recover in § 1983 action based on alleged violation of her First and Fourteenth Amendment rights; complaint specifically alleged that commissioner, and other named defendants, were directly involved in certain employment actions, and also alleged that commissioner had authorized, sanctioned, encouraged, and perpetuated alleged conduct. Hayes v. Sweeney, W.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 467. Civil Rights 1395(8) hearing which resulted in inmate being confined in disciplinary segregation, as required to state federal civil rights claim based on his segregation and alleged assault by jail employees which occurred while he was in segregation. Marshall v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1997, 951 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Sheriff could be held liable for violation of plaintiff's Eighth Amendment rights by officers based on plaintiff's allegation that he implicitly authorized, approved, or knowingly acquiesced in officers' unconstitutional conduct, in civil rights action by plaintiff who allegedly suffered severe beatings by officers while being taken into custody after summary conviction for criminal contempt; plaintiff sufficiently alleged that sheriff was present or knew of impending incident, and that he had opportunity to intervene. Sharp v. Kelsey, W.D.Mich.1996, 918 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations that high school principal supported music teacher who chose explicitly Christian religious music for school choir's performances, met with choir class before graduation, took microphone away from student that called for singing of Christian religious music at graduation, and then sat down when singing continued after his request that it stop failed to show sufficient affirmative link of school principal with alleged tortious acts of music teacher so as to state claim under § 1983 for supervisory liability. Bauchman By and Through Bauchman v. West High School, D.Utah 1995, 900 F.Supp. 254, affirmed 132 F.3d 542, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2370, 524 U.S. 953, 141 L.Ed.2d 738. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Defendants were not liable under § 1983; plaintiff did not allege that defendants actually knew of and acquiesced in conduct causing violation of his civil rights and plaintiff failed to show that defendants directly participated in violating his civil rights. Harrington v. Lauer, D.N.J.1995, 893 F.Supp. 352. Civil Rights 1341

Claims relying on supervisory responsibility cannot form basis for § 1983 liability. Johnson v. Turner, W.D.Tenn.1994, 855 F.Supp. 228, affirmed 125 F.3d 324, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1355

Parents' allegation that their civil rights were violated when caseworkers removed their children from their home based on report of suspected child abuse was insufficient to state claim against supervisory official in his official capacity, absent allegation that official established policy under which alleged violation occurred. Chayo v. Kaladjian, S.D.N.Y.1994, 844 F.Supp. 163. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Plaintiff bringing action under this section prohibiting the deprivation of constitutional rights must allege personal involvement or knowledge on part of defendants to state a claim for monetary damages against supervisory personnel. Williams v. Franzen, N.D.Ill.1980, 499 F.Supp. 304. Civil Rights 1394

Where an individual is not charged under this section with having participated directly in complained of conduct, but rather is alleged to be liable for that conduct by virtue of his position as supervisor of those directly responsible, complaint nevertheless must aver personal involvement on part of supervisor, at least to extent that he knew of, and acquiesced in, unconstitutional conduct of his subordinates. Dawes v. Philadelphia Gas Commission, E.D.Pa.1976, 421 F.Supp. 806. Civil Rights 1394

4865. Attorneys general, personal participation allegations

Prisoner's complaint failed to state claim against Attorney General and Director of Federal Bureau of Prisons for failure to provide medically prescribed low-sodium diet, where complaint did not allege that Attorney General and Director participated in any decision or approve any policy relating to case. Cameron v. Thornburgh, C.A.D.C.1993, 983 F.2d 253, 299 U.S.App.D.C. 228. Prisons 17(3); United States 50.10(3)

Assistant state attorney general was not subject to liability in his individual capacity under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of publisher's constitutional rights as result of state transportation officials' decision to relocate publisher's newsracks at public rest areas along interstate highways, absent allegation that assistant attorney general personally moved any newsracks, instructed anyone else to do so, or had any authority regarding placement of newsracks. Jacobsen v. Department of Transp., N.D.Iowa 2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1217, affirmed 2006 WL 1312184. Civil Rights 1360

Failure of prisoner to allege that Attorney General of the United States, warden of correctional center, and Director of Bureau of Prisons were personally involved in defective condition of showers which resulted in injury to prisoner precluded maintaining action against such individuals in their individual capacity. Beshaw v. Fields, W.D.Wis.1980, 484 F.Supp. 1390. Attorney General 8; Prisons 10

4866. Prosecutors, personal participation allegations

Arrestee who alleged that county assistant district attorney deprived him of free speech and due process by advising arresting officer that arrestee's conduct, namely "flipping the bird" to officer, amounted to disorderly conduct under Kansas law did not state § 1983 free speech and due process claim against county; arrestee did not allege that assistant district attorney acted pursuant to government policy or custom or that attorney's advice or acts might fairly be said to represent official policy. Cook v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Wyandotte, D.Kan.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1049. Civil Rights 1088(4)

4867. Governors, personal participation allegations

Governor could not be held liable in his individual capacity under s 1983 based on state transportation officials' alleged interference with placement of newsracks at public rest areas along interstate highways, where there was no allegation that governor took prohibited action himself or failed to take any required action that caused publisher's alleged constitutional deprivation. Jacobsen v. Department of Transp., N.D.Iowa 2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1217, affirmed 2006 WL 1312184. Civil Rights 1360

Vehicle owner failed to state § 1983 claim against state governor absent any allegation of personal involvement by the governor in the suspension of owner's driver's license or the seizure and subsequent sale of owner's vehicle; the only mention of the governor's name was in the caption of the amended complaint. Iwachiw v. New York State Dept. of Motor Vehicles, E.D.N.Y.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 117, affirmed 396 F.3d 525. Civil Rights 1395(3)

Business partner failed to state § 1983 claims against governor and state Attorney General, in partner's action alleging denial of equal protection and procedural due process, arising from electric utility's refusal to provide electrical line extension, given cursory and conclusory allegations in complaint; partner pled legal theory of conspiracy without offering any proof of governor's and Attorney General's personal involvement in or connection to relevant matter, failed to state purpose of or any overt acts perpetrated by them which reasonably related to claimed conspiracy, and failed to allege violation of his federally protected rights. Jemzura v. Public Service Com'n, N.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 406. Conspiracy 18

Prisoner's complaint, alleging that State Governor, Commissioner of Department of Corrections and warden of penitentiary were liable for loss of property taken from prisoner's cell during penitentiary shakedown, did not state cause of action under this section on theory that defendants were responsible for ordering and carrying out all actions during the time in question since there was no allegation that defendants personally directed or had actual knowledge of alleged actions of the troopers or guards responsible for the loss of property. Parker v. Rockefeller, N.D.W.Va.1981, 521 F.Supp. 1013. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner stated claims under § 1983 for deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs against non-medical prison staff who had direct contact with him and whom he alleged interfered with his ability to get medical care; prisoner constantly complained about pain while he was incarcerated and the failure to get him adequate medical care caused further physical injuries, and therefore claims were not barred by provision of Prison Litigation

4868. Comptrollers, personal participation allegations

Allegation by junior college that state Comptroller, after being informed of wrongful conduct of Deputy Comptroller and former state Commissioner for Higher and Professional Education with respect to audits of college's certification of state Tuition Assistance Payment (TAP) funds conducted by them, failed to remedy wrongs alleged was sufficient to state cause of action against Comptroller under § 1983. Interboro Institute, Inc. v. Maurer, N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 188. Civil Rights 1395(2)

4869. Child welfare personnel, personal participation allegations

Utah police officer's amendment to §§ 1983 complaint against city, adding police chief as defendant, related back to date of original complaint's filing, and §§ 1983 claims against chief stemming from officer's removal from strike force more than four years before amendment thus were not time-barred; original complaint alleged relevant facts and charges, referred to §§ 1983, and put chief on notice about officer's charges because it mentioned chief by name. Sivulich-Boddy v. Clearfield City, D.Utah 2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1174. Limitation Of Actions 124

Commissioner of Department of Children and Families (DCF) did not have sufficient personal involvement in investigation of foster parent on child abuse charges to support § 1983 liability in action by foster parent; foster parent claimed he wrote to Commissioner to request an administrative hearing on the charges, but admitted that Commissioner was not personally involved in either the scheduling or conduct of the hearing, and claimed that he called Commissioner to complain generally about DCF, but did not indicate precise time of such calls or that he complained about anything unconstitutional. Carroll v. Ragaglia, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 324, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 109 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 2165397. Civil Rights 1360

Foster child's allegations that former secretary of Department of Children and Families (DCF) knew that foster child was being abused at emergency shelter, and personally intervened in foster child's case, were sufficient to state a claim of personal involvement in events constituting foster child's § 1983 claim, as opposed to respondeat superior claim based on actions of other DCF employees. Danielle v. Adriazola, S.D.Fla.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1368. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Foster child's allegations that former secretary of Department of Children and Families (DCF) knew that foster child was being abused at emergency shelter, and personally intervened in foster child's case, were sufficient to state a claim of personal involvement in events constituting foster child's §§ 1983 claim, as opposed to respondeat superior claim based on actions of other DCF employees. Danielle v. Adriazola, S.D.Fla.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1368. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Deprived child's complaint, which alleged that county commissioners had responsibility for providing for an funding necessary child welfare services, that had those services been provided his return to his mother would have been facilitated, that commissioners were aware, or should have been aware, that his continued restrictive placement deprived him of his rights, and that he was deprived of his rights pursuant to commissioners' official policy, alleged sufficient personal involvement by commissioners to entitle deprived child to adduce evidence in support of his claim under this section. Cameron v. Montgomery County Child Welfare Service, E.D.Pa.1979, 471 F.Supp. 761. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Absence of allegations that county employee's supervisor was involved in alleged violations of parents' constitutional rights precluded supervisor's liability to parents under §§ 1983, under which supervisor could not be held liable pursuant to respondeat superior theory. Brown v. Daniels, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 910, 2005 WL 943525, Unreported. Civil Rights 1360

4870. County officials, personal participation allegations

Pretrial detainee who was injured in county jail stated no § 1983 cause of action against county commissioners, who allegedly knew or should have known of conditions at jail; plaintiff alleged no personal involvement or sufficient causal connection to support § 1983 cause of action but, rather, his allegations were no more than attempt to hold commissioners liable under respondeat superior theory. Dean v. Barber, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1992, 951 F.2d 1210 . Civil Rights 1395(6)

In prisoner's pro se civil rights action against county, county board of supervisors, public defender and others for alleged inadequate representation by the public defender during robbery prosecution, complaint adequately stated civil rights claim against members of county board of supervisors and against county offender advocate where complaint alleged that the offender advocate was responsible for public defender's actions because he established rules and procedures for her to follow, and similar allegations were made as to involvement of county board of supervisors. Dodson v. Polk County, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1980, 628 F.2d 1104, certiorari granted 101 S.Ct. 1478, 450 U.S. 963, 67 L.Ed.2d 612, reversed on other grounds 102 S.Ct. 445, 454 U.S. 312, 70 L.Ed.2d 509. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Former county employee who brought action against county officials, alleging disclosure of her sexual harassment accusations and identity to news media, failed sufficiently to allege that defendants conspired to deprive her of constitutional rights, as required to state §§ 1983 conspiracy claim; complaint did not aver any facts supporting officials' participation in publication of former supervisor's sexual misconduct. Nassau County Employee "L" v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 293. Conspiracy 18

Employees of municipality failed to establish discrimination by the director of public works based on employees' political affiliation under § 1983 by failing to allege the director's personal involvement in the alleged deprivation of their rights; employees all testified during deposition that they did not know the director and that they had no reason to believe that he was aware of their political affiliation or involved in the decision to not renew their contracts. Garcia Sanchez v. Roman Abreu, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 255. Civil Rights 1359

Former inmate at county jail failed to allege personal involvement of director of county department of corrections in connection with alleged assault of inmate by jail employees, as required for recovery in federal civil rights action; inmate alleged only that director had sole responsibility for all actions by his staff, and did not allege that director even knew of events described in complaint. Marshall v. Fairman, N.D.Ill.1997, 951 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1395(7)

4871. Education and school officials, personal participation allegations

Since student failed to assert participation by individual trustees of university and any violation of his rights with respect to failing grades, he could not recover from the trustees for denial of civil rights. (Per Kunzig, J., with one Justice concurring specially.) Hill v. Trustees of Indiana University, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1976, 537 F.2d 248. Civil Rights 1356

Where student in his suit arising out of alleged suspension without due process did not claim that either of two school boards had acted in the suspension proceedings or that any member of such boards had recommended suspension, his claim for compensatory damages against such boards could not stand. Cameron v. Whirlwindhorse, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1974, 494 F.2d 110. Schools 177

Former paraprofessional at school failed to establish that principal was personally involved in the alleged violation of his due process rights by not referring his termination to paraprofessional's union, and thus principal could not be individually liable under § 1983; under collective bargaining agreement principal was only responsible for referring matter to human resources which was thereafter responsible for taking steps to notify paraprofessional of termination, and principal did refer matter to human resources. Sharif v. Buck, W.D.N.Y.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 435, affirmed 152 Fed.Appx. 43, 2005 WL 2650070. Civil Rights 1359

Vice president for student affairs and assistant director of student life could not be held liable under § 1983 for college president's actions in nullifying student government election and scheduling new one based on student newspaper's support for particular slate of candidates; although they may have advised president on how to proceed, her decision was intervening step between any actions on their part and resulting harm to plaintiffs, who were newspaper editors or staff, candidates on that slate, and student who voted in election. Husain v. Springer, E.D.N.Y.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 207. Civil Rights 1356

Former custodial employee of school district alleged sufficient personal involvement of school district superintendent and plant facilities director to state a § 1983 claim against them arising from his termination, where he alleged that superintendent was aware that he previously filed a complaint with the New York State Division of Human Rights (NYSDHR), that he informed director that he thought Hispanic employee was being singled out because of his accent, and as a result, director placed a written memorandum in his personnel file, and gave him the termination letter that was written by superintendent. Tekula v. Bayport-Blue Point School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 224. Civil Rights 1359

By sexually molesting child, police officer, who was acting under color of state law, violated child's substantive due process right to bodily integrity, and therefore could be held liable under Section 1983. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Constitutional Law 274(5); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Allegation that university president referred matter of seizure by campus police of sexually explicit videotape to faculty investigative committee was sufficient allegation of causation to survive president's motion to dismiss § 1983 action brought by owner of tape, under heightened pleading standard applicable to § 1983 claims involving government officials in their individual capacities; decision to refer matter to committee was tantamount to administrative delay, which could in and of itself constitute constitutional deprivation. Andre v. Castor, M.D.Fla.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1158, affirmed in part, reversed in part 144 F.3d 55. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Allegations by junior college that president of state Higher Education Services Corporation (HESC) adopted allegedly defective and ill-motivated audit of college's certification of state Tuition Assistance Payment (TAP) funds despite knowledge of college's objections thereto, that he denied college's request for hearing, and that he sought recoupment of disallowances in furtherance of bad faith motive to shut college down, were sufficient to state cause of action against president under § 1983. Interboro Institute, Inc. v. Maurer, N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 188. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Complaint alleging that voluntary nonprofit organization's regulation prohibiting interscholastic athletic competition between boys and girls violated female high school students' rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and that state superintendent of schools had final responsibility for administering laws and rules of state as they affected public schools failed to state claim on which relief could be granted against superintendent under this section, in view of failure to allege any action taken by superintendent to deprive plaintiffs of due process. Kelly v. Wisconsin Interscholastic Athletic Ass'n, E.D.Wis.1974, 367 F.Supp. 1388. Civil Rights 1395(2)

4872. Housing officials, personal participation allegations

Non-legislator municipal defendants were entitled to qualified immunity on claims arising out of enactment of ordinances which imposed occupancy limits on residential rental property in areas which were zoned for single family residences where plaintiff landlords and tenants failed to allege facts sufficient to establish that each individual defendant personally participated in the alleged violations of their constitutional rights. Jones v.

Wildgen, D.Kan.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1116, on reconsideration in part 349 F.Supp.2d 1358. Civil Rights 1398

Complaint alleging that negligence and carelessness of state officer who negligently lost court record, thus precluding timely transfer pursuant to court order, would be attributed to city housing authority and its chairman failed to state cause of action against chairman under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights inasmuch as he was in no way responsible for state officer's conduct and complaint alleged no acts or conduct by him. Seldon v. Goodman, S.D.N.Y.1980, 487 F.Supp. 30. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4873. Internal Revenue Service officials, personal participation allegations

Complaint of income tax preparer and clients under this subchapter for monetary damages against the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue Service because of alleged illegal activities of subordinates in the harassment of preparer's client was insufficient to state a claim where complaint failed to allege the direct and personal responsibility of the defendant officials for the purportedly unlawful conduct of subordinates. Black v. U. S., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 534 F.2d 524. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4874. Mental health officials, personal participation allegations

Mental patients asserting § 1983 claim against administrators of mental hospitals, alleging deprivation of due process liberty interest in having treatment which included community visitations when patients were confined to facilities, could not simply assert liability because administrators were "in charge" at time; respondeat superior liability was not allowed under § 1983. Barna v. Hogan, D.Conn.1997, 964 F.Supp. 52. Civil Rights 1350

Mentally retarded patients claiming deprivation of rights adequately pleaded that state Commissioners of Departments of Mental Health and Mental Retardation had sufficient knowledge of the creation of alleged constitutional deprivations affecting patients, or had shown acquiescence in or failed to correct alleged constitutional deprivations so as to be personally involved with patients as required for suit under § 1983. Mihalcik v. Lensink, D.Conn.1990, 732 F.Supp. 299. Civil Rights 1395(1)

4875. Police officials, personal participation allegations

Police chief could not be liable under §§ 1983 for any violation of the Fourth Amendment rights of tavern owner convicted for setting up illegal gaming machines, in connection with a search warrant for tavern premises, where another officer was responsible for signing the affidavit supporting the search warrant, judge signed the warrant, and there was no showing that police chief was involved in obtaining or executing the warrant. Kramer v. Village of North Fond du Lac, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 384 F.3d 856. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations that sheriff knew of wrongful detention, and continued detention in spite of that knowledge, were sufficient to state civil rights claim under § 1983 for sheriff's personal involvement in unconstitutional deprivation of due process. Sivard v. Pulaski County, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 959 F.2d 662, on remand 809 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Liberally construed, prisoner's allegations that sheriff was aware of and directly involved in his detention for 45 days without a probable cause hearing and knew that there was a statutory requirement regarding detention of an individual were sufficient to show the sheriff's knowledge of a prisoner's wrongful detention; thus, prisoner's claim against sheriff was not based on a respondeat superior theory and his allegations were sufficient to state a claim against sheriff under § 1983. Webster v. Gibson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1990, 913 F.2d 510. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Captain of Texas Rangers could not be liable under this section for alleged deprivation of property without due process by subordinates where claimant alleged in his pleadings only that captain was responsible for action of rangers as their superior officer, and was negligent in his failure to supervise them and made no allegations of personal involvement, collaboration, direction, or approval of rangers' acts by captain nor that policies instituted by captain were unconstitutional, illegal, or wrongful, and that it was following of these policies by subordinates which caused claimant's deprivation. Reimer v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 663 F.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1357; Civil Rights 1358

Former husband's allegations that police officer conspired with former wife to harass him by improperly stopping him for driving without automobile liability insurance failed to state claim against the officer for which relief could be granted where there was no claim that the officer participated in effecting unauthorized cancellation of former husband's automobile liability insurance, and former husband did not allege harm flowing from claimed verbal harassment and abuse. Cole v. Cole, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1980, 633 F.2d 1083. Municipal Corporations 742(4)

Allegations in complaint that officer was "among the officers who conducted the raid" of housing project, and that officer was "grossly negligent," without more, was not sufficient to state a §§ 1983 claim against officer, brought on behalf of individual who was shot and killed during police raid. Martinez-Rivera v. Sanchez Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 47. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Former county police officer sufficiently alleged chief's personal involvement in claimed constitutional violations to avoid dismissal of his §§ 1983 claim against former county police chief in his individual capacity. Longo v. Suffolk County Police Dept. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.2006, 429 F.Supp.2d 553. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Retired county police officer sufficiently alleged personal involvement of deputy commissioner in adverse employment actions undertaken in retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights, occurring during three-year statute of limitations period for §§ 1983 suits, to reject claim that suit was untimely, even though specific instances of improper conduct cited in complaint all occurred outside of limitations period. Wallace v. Suffolk County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Arrestee's allegations that police officer directly participated in tackling arrestee from behind, throwing him to the ground, holding him in custody for a significant period of time, and accusing arrestee of being drunk or intoxicated stated particular facts indicating that officer had personal involvement with arrestee's treatment, as was required to maintain §§ 1983 claims against officer in his personal capacity. Walker v. North Wales Borough, E.D.Pa.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 219. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Material issues of fact, in action under § 1983, as to whether police supervisor was involved in drafting of affidavit submitted in support of warrant for arrest of suspect for threatening, precluded summary judgment whether supervisor was liable for false arrest. Walczyk v. Rio, D.Conn.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 385. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Police chief was not vicariously liable for the actions of a subordinate police official who ordered the unlawful mass arrest of a group of people, including demonstrators, who were gathered at or near an intersection, and thus chief was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestees' §§ 1983 action; chief was not personally involved inasmuch as he was not on the scene of the arrests, and he could not be charged with supervisory liability based on any failure to supervise his subordinates. Barham v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 48, affirmed in part 434 F.3d 565, 369 U.S.App.D.C. 146. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1376(6)

Conclusory allegations of institutional involvement in purported unlawful use of trespass form by district attorney's office and village police officers to prosecute arrestee did not establish county custom or policy actionable under §§ 1983, precluding county's municipality liability on arrestee's §§ 1983 claims. Vineyard v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 364. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Sheriff was not liable to arrestee under §§ 1983 in his individual capacity for acts arising from invasion of arrestee's home by law enforcement personnel, where arrestee did not allege that sheriff was present during the incident or that he was in any way personally involved in the acts that allegedly violated his constitutional rights, and, although arrestee alleged in a conclusory fashion that sheriff condoned or adopted the actions of his subordinates, he offered no evidence to support that claim. Cea v. Ulster County, N.D.N.Y.2004, 309 F.Supp.2d 321. Civil Rights 1358

Alien's claims against county police department, in conjunction with § 1983 action that alien filed against village and various county departments and officers who allegedly violated his civil rights through his arrest and detention, failed to allege sufficient personal involvement of county police department to comply with rule requiring short and plain statement showing that pleader was entitled to relief; because complaint against county police department did not allege any facts against the department, it was unclear what, if any, claims were alleged. Carbajal v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 415. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Assertion, in complaint under § 1983, that three campus police officers "assisted" another officer in stopping public exhibition by managing editor of college publication of sexually explicit videotape and in seizing such videotape without warrant was sufficient, under heightened pleading standard applicable to § 1983 claims involving government officials in their individual capacities, to put officers on notice of nature of constitutional claims against them and permit them to frame arguments with regard to qualified immunity, and therefore was sufficient to survive officers' motions to dismiss. Andre v. Castor, M.D.Fla.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1158, affirmed in part, reversed in part 144 F.3d 55. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Allegations in § 1983 action that superintendent of police failed to implement existing disciplinary system intended to detect unconstitutional behavior, and that, had superintendent implemented that policy, police officer's shooting of plaintiffs' family member would have been avoided, were sufficient to withstand superintendent's motion to dismiss on qualified immunity grounds. Rivera v. Medina, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 963 F.Supp. 78. Civil Rights 1398

Student expelled for possession of handgun on school property failed to state claim under § 1983 against school district superintendent and chief of police on theory of respondeat superior where student made only conclusory allegations against those defendants and presented no specific allegations that either directed alleged violation or had actual knowledge of alleged violation by associate principal and police officer; allegation that such defendants had constructive knowledge was not sufficient. James By and Through James v. Unified School Dist. No. 512, D.Kan.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1407. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Arrestee failed to state claim under § 1983 against police chief and mayor in their individual capacities for use of excessive force; arrestee did not allege that chief or mayor had a direct involvement with his arrest, that they knew about his arrest, that it was brought to their attention, or that they were grossly negligent in any way. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1358

Plaintiff who was acquitted of criminal charges sufficiently stated claim against federal deputy marshals based on allegation that marshals violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights by conspiring to misrepresent plaintiff's role in incident involving exchange of gunfire with marshals and that such conduct led to plaintiff's subsequent illegal arrest, as complaint detailed formation of conspiracy, motivation behind its creation, and actions of participants in furthering its alleged ends. Harris v. Roderick, D.Idaho 1996, 933 F.Supp. 977, affirmed 126 F.3d 1189, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1051, 522 U.S. 1115, 140 L.Ed.2d 114. Conspiracy 18

Police officer stated cause of action in complaint against police chief for violations of § 1983 arising from his arrest, alleged denial of medical treatment, and discharge from employment following his suicide attempt; officer alleged that police chief was directly involved in investigation, incarceration, and termination, rather than alleging that police chief was liable through operation of respondeat superior. Houck v. City of Prairie Village, Kan., D.Kan.1996, 912 F.Supp. 1428, on reconsideration 942 F.Supp. 493, reconsideration denied 950 F.Supp. 312, affirmed 166 F.3d 347. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Arrestee who claimed that he was subjected to choke hold and thrown to floor by officer and that he was harassed by police because of prior complaints about police conduct stated claim for civil rights liability against town and police chief by alleging that they systematically whitewashed evidence of police brutality, conveyed to officers the notion that the type of mistreatment to which arrestee was subjected was within constitutional bounds, and failed to properly train officers. Illiano v. Clay Tp., E.D.Pa.1995, 892 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Plaintiff who alleged that she was falsely arrested by deputy failed to state § 1983 action against sheriff who was the only defendant named in complaint, absent allegation of nexus between actions of deputy and any custom, policy or personal involvement of sheriff. Lucas v. Cannon, M.D.Fla.1994, 848 F.Supp. 168. Civil Rights 1395(6)

In order to survive motion to dismiss, claimant alleging city's liability for failure to train police officer must state specific evidentiary facts which would raise inference that city officials knew or should have known that officer's training, or lack of training, posed substantial risk. Rosentreter v. Munding, N.D.Ill.1990, 736 F.Supp. 165. Municipal Corporations 742(4)

Arrestee's assertion that unnamed arresting officer dug his heel into arrestee's back and kicked him failed to establish liability of named officers, in arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force claim; even if arrestee did not see who committed those acts, arrestee stated that there were numerous witnesses, some of whom videotaped the arrest, and two of whom were deposed, but arrestee failed to present evidence of the identity of the alleged perpetrators. Blackmore v. City of Phoenix, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 2005, 126 Fed.Appx. 778, 2005 WL 270331, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

No cause of action existed against Attorney General under § 1983 for alleged beating administered by various police officers; plaintiff did not allege that Attorney General directly participated in the alleged beating or learned of the violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights and failed to remedy it, or created a policy or custom under which the violation occurred, or allowed a policy or custom to continue. Flemming v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31761532, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

4876. Prison officials, personal participation allegations

Prison officials who allegedly participated in denial of medical treatment for prisoner's hepatitis C virus, had responsibility for enforcing or allowing continuation of policies that resulted in denial of treatment, and rejected prisoner's administrative grievance were not entitled to qualified immunity from prisoner's claim for denial of adequate medical care in violation of the Eighth Amendment; officials had sufficient personal involvement in denial of medical treatment to justify liability under §§ 1983. McKenna v. Wright, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 386 F.3d 432. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1376(7)

State inmate could assert § 1983 claims against corrections officials in their individual capacities, even though his complaint did not specify that officials were being sued in their individual capacities, given that inmate complained specifically about alleged acts of officials, rather than any official custom or policy, and requested punitive damages, which reflected intent to sue officials in their individual capacities, and given that inmate was proceeding pro se. Wynn v. Southward, C.A.7 (Ind.) 2001, 251 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1397

It was reasonable construction of prisoner's pled facts, in § 1983 complaint against prison superintendent for denial of scribe materials necessary to conform pro se appeal of denial of postconviction relief to state procedural rules, that superintendent knew of denial of scribe materials, based on many letters sent by prisoner, and that continued denial of scribe materials was policy of superintendent's, at least to level of turning blind eye, thus entitling prisoner to proceed with suit against superintendent. Gentry v. Duckworth, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 65 F.3d 555, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate's claim against deputy prison superintendents for undue delay in commencement of disciplinary hearing was properly dismissed, where undisputed evidence established that it was responsibility of superintendent to appoint hearing officer and deputy superintendents were not personally involved in delay. Green v. Bauvi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 46 F.3d 189. Civil Rights 1420

Inmate sufficiently alleged that each prison official named as defendant in complaint, except for prison's chief administrative officer, was involved in beatings or other forms of harassment inflicted upon inmate to state cause of action for retaliation against them, and no defendant other than chief administrative officer should have been dismissed from suit after entry of default. Black v. Lane, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 22 F.3d 1395, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Former prisoner did not state cause of action under § 1983 against prison superintendent absent any allegation involving superintendent's participation in or direct responsibility for alleged constitutional deprivation. Moore v. State of Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 999 F.2d 1125. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Although prisoner's § 1983 complaint failed to specify which defendants participated in which actions, the in forma pauperis complaint was improperly dismissed as frivolous without allowing prisoner to conduct discovery; information that would enable prisoner to identify alleged attackers--duty rosters and personnel records--could be readily obtainable. Murphy v. Kellar, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 950 F.2d 290. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Inmate's claims against Texas Department of Corrections officials and employees, asserting they were negligent in their training and supervision of correctional officers and in their investigation of alleged assault against inmate, were properly dismissed; inmate failed to state claim against those defendants in their supervisory roles and did not allege defendants' personal involvement in assault, sufficient causal connection between their conduct and assault, or harm giving rise to constitutional claims independent of assault. Oliver v. Collins, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 904 F.2d 278. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegations by inmate that he had been kept in close confinement for 11 months without any review of his status as required by state prison regulations, which required several kinds of "writeups," after his acquittal on charges of stabbing fellow inmate, sufficiently alleged that members of the review team were involved in causing injury inmate suffered. McQueen v. Tabah, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1988, 839 F.2d 1525. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prisoner failed to allege personal involvement in alleged deprivations of his constitutional rights required to maintain action under §§ 1983 against commissioner of state correctional department and prison superintendent, where his allegations that beating inflicted on him by correctional officers was directed, tolerated, or encouraged by commissioner and superintendent's wrongful practices were so broad and conclusory that they did not provide fair notice of what prisoner's claim was and grounds upon which it rested, and his allegations that commissioner and superintendent had "direct and specific" prior notice of the assault were not supported by any facts. Murphy v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 261. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Complaint alleging that corrections officer was responsible for the initial determination that prisoner continue to be held in involuntary protective custody (IPC) sufficiently alleged officer's personal involvement in violation of prisoner's due process rights arising from her continued confinement and therefore officer could be subject to §§ 1983 liability. Smart v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1358

California state prison inmate could not recover in §§ 1983 action against California Department of Corrections (CDC) director or prison warden, where inmate alleged essentially that they were liable because of acts and omissions of their subordinates, prison food service manager and cooks, in misleading inmate who was follower of Islam and did not eat pork into consuming pork in violation of his First Amendment right to free exercise of religion, and did not allege any facts showing personal involvement of director or warden. Lewis v. Mitchell, S.D.Cal.2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 935. Civil Rights 1395(7)

New York Department of Correctional Services (DOCS), its Commissioner, correctional facility superintendent and medical director, and correctional officers were all sufficiently alleged to have been personally involved in deprivation of inmate's civil rights when he was injured while being transported back from outside medical appointment in allegedly unsafe van; one officer was allegedly passenger in vehicle in which inmate was injured and "wrapped (inmate) in a bear hug and placed him back in his wheelchair" following incident, and other defendants knew or should have known there was foreseeable risk of serious harm from alleged deficiencies in that other prisoners in custody of DOCS who required wheelchair for mobility had been injured while being transported back in the same manner. Allah v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 265.

For purposes of screening provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), prisoner failed to state §§ 1983 claim against major alleged to have participated in retaliation for his refusal to be a "snitch" by filing a false disciplinary case against him; filing of a single disciplinary case did not establish chronology of events from which retaliation could possibly be inferred, and mere fact that major was supervisor of the allegedly corrections officer who allegedly retaliated against prisoner did not establish major's personal involvement, a prerequisite for §§ 1983 liability. David v. Hill, S.D.Tex.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 749. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State prison inmate stated personal involvement element of his §§ 1983 Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment action against commissioner of state's department of corrections, which alleged department policy or custom of affirming constitutionally infirm disciplinary determinations and then reversing those affirmances if a prisoner filed a state-court proceeding; inmate asserted that commissioner and deputy had created policy, that commissioner knew of policy and was deliberately indifferent to prisoners' rights by failing to act on information that unconstitutional practices were occurring, and that he failed to provide adequate training and supervision to corrections employees who conducted disciplinary hearings. James v. Aidala, W.D.N.Y.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 451. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations that state prison inmate had written letters to correctional department employees complaining about threats to his safety, which they ignored, and that an employee retaliated against inmate by directing that inmate be handcuffed from behind whenever he was outside his cell did not establish personal involvement of employees, as would support a claim under §§ 1983 against employees in their individual capacities. Withrow v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 326. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate who slipped and fell on wet floor outside shower area failed to allege that county sheriff was directly involved in his injuries, or, to extent that sheriff was state actor in supervisory role, that he created or allowed any custom regarding wet floors to exist or acted in grossly negligent manner in managing officers he supervised, as required to establish that sheriff was personally involved in alleged constitutional deprivation, as element of § 1983 claim. Davis v. Reilly, E.D.N.Y.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner failed to plead sufficient personal involvement on the part of the Commissioner of New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) to impose supervisory liability for alleged constitutional violations arising from change in DOCS policy which limited inmates in the general population to one blanket, along with one laundered towel, two laundered sheets, and one laundered pillow case per week. Davidson v. Conway, W.D.N.Y.2004, 318 F.Supp.2d 60. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison superintendent and state corrections commissioner had insufficient personal involvement to be potentially liable in prison inmate's § 1983 Eighth Amendment action alleging corrections officers' assault on and retaliation against inmate; commissioner never saw inmate's letters containing allegations against officers, and superintendent received one letter alleging excessive force on part of officer involved in § 1983 action and forwarded it for investigation, resulting in finding that allegation was meritless, and did not receive notice of imminent assault by corrections officers or indications of substantial risk of serious harm from officers. Liner v. Goord,

W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 550. Civil Rights 1358

State prison officials had no supervisory responsibility under § 1983 for alleged violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights by allegedly failing to properly train or supervise their subordinates who allegedly used excessive force on inmate, where the inmate did not allege that the officials were personally involved in the excessive use of force. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1358

Superintendent and assistant superintendent of correctional facility could not be held personally liable under § 1983 for deprivation of inmate's constitutional rights that allegedly occurred when correctional officer sexually assaulted her in her cell; defendants were not personally involved in assault, nor did they have actual or constructive knowledge of constitutional violations, which would support holding them liable on basis that they failed to remedy the wrong, created a policy or custom of allowing such violations, were grossly negligent in supervising employees, and were deliberately indifferent to unconstitutional conduct. Morris v. Eversley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1358

Former inmate's § 1983 claims against corrections officer and prisoner's medical staff members had to be dismissed where former inmate failed to plead any facts suggesting that such defendants were personally aware of or involved in any of alleged constitutional violations, and certain defendants were not even mentioned in complaint. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Complaint asserting § 1983 claims against wardens based on their responsibility for overall operation of particular houses of detention was fatally defective on its face absent allegation that wardens were personally involved in alleged violations of pretrial detainee's civil rights concerning placement in maximum security. Adams v. Galletta, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegations that official ignored prisoner's letter are insufficient to establish § 1983 liability on part of official. Watson v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.1997, 964 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1098

Prisoners could not recover for cruel and unusual punishment, based on alleged denial of recreation, commissary privileges, telephone access, mail, showers, rehabilitative programs, fresh air, personal hygiene items and cleaning products, as they failed to allege personal action on part of defendants. Alley v. Angelone, E.D.Va.1997, 962 F.Supp. 827. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Personal involvement may be established against prison officials through allegations of actual knowledge and acquiescence, for purposes of prisoner's civil rights claim under § 1983. Saunders v. Horn, E.D.Pa.1997, 960 F.Supp. 893. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee failed to state excessive force claim under § 1983 against county jail superintendent and county sheriff in their individual capacities, where arrestee merely offered conclusory allegations that defendants were responsible for supervising officers involved in alleged mistreatment and that they were responsible for setting county policy. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Prison inmates who alleged that they were isolated and forced to stand naked in their cell in violation of tenets of their religion after other inmate was involved in altercation with police captain failed to allege personal involvement of warden or captain in claimed improper use of force and strip search, as required to recover in federal civil rights action; no allegation of personal involvement was made, Department of Corrections records did not indicate any personal involvement, and no allegation was made that captain and warden established impermissible policy or supervised subordinates in grossly negligent manner. Show v. Patterson, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 182. Civil Rights 1358

for injuries inmate sustained in beating by other inmates failed to state claim upon which relief could be granted, where inmate did not allege that corrections captain was personally involved in correction officer's alleged absence from his post. Wright v. Nunez, S.D.N.Y.1997, 950 F.Supp. 610. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging constitutional deprivation resulting from warden's failure to follow city's inmate transfer policy did not state claim against warden in his individual capacity where complaint was devoid of any suggestion that warden was personally involved in depriving inmate of any constitutional right. Wallace v. Conroy, S.D.N.Y.1996, 945 F.Supp. 628. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Where prisoner did not allege that prison official personally participated in alleged constitutional deprivations of medical treatment, although he alluded in complaint to existence of a history of widespread abuses at prison that would have put official on notice of need for improved training or supervision, and did not submit any evidence in support of that allegation or identify any official policy or informal practice promulgated by official which resulted in alleged deprivations, he could not recover from official on civil rights claim. Shiflet v. Cornell, M.D.Fla.1996, 933 F.Supp. 1549. Civil Rights 1358

Pretrial detainee failed to state claim against defendant officials for liability under § 1983 in their individual capacities in connection with conditions at county jail; detainee did not claim that officials personally caused conditions, officials were merely custodians at jail and could not limit number of pretrial detainees assigned there or appropriate funds to improve conditions, and it was not alleged that they intentionally withheld available resources that could have improved conditions at jail. Stone-El v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1995, 914 F.Supp. 202. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Inmates' allegations of chief prison official's knowledge for several years of presence of asbestos in prison air in violation of state health codes sufficiently demonstrated subjective culpability of prison officials to overcome motion to dismiss pro se § 1983 claim for violation of Eighth Amendment. Gonyer v. McDonald, D.Mass.1995, 874 F.Supp. 464. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate's allegations that Commissioner of Department of Correctional Services for New York State was responsible for overseeing correctional facilities and failed to properly train and adequately supervise various prison administrators and hearing officers did not allege personal involvement in constitutional violations needed to state § 1983 civil rights claim. Gaston v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1994, 861 F.Supp. 199, affirmed in part, vacated in part 249 F.3d 156. Civil Rights 1358

Prison supervisors were not liable in inmate's § 1983 action under respondeat superior theory for their subordinate's alleged retaliation against inmate; inmate did not claim that supervisors were directly involved, and did not allege that constitutional deprivation was caused by exercise of policy or custom for which supervisors were responsible. Dillon v. Murray, W.D.Va.1994, 853 F.Supp. 199. Civil Rights 1358

Correctional officer's civil rights complaint was subject to dismissal to extent that he sought relief under equal protection clause against defendant officials in their individual capacities, where complaint completely failed to allege facts indicating personal involvement of any defendant in denying correctional officer promotion to lieutenant; while correctional officer was not required to prove case at pleading stage, he was required to allege facts, not mere conclusions, indicating the defendants' personal involvement. Perez v. Lane, C.D.Ill.1992, 794 F.Supp. 286. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate failed to state § 1983 cause of action against prison superintendent, as agent of state correctional department responsible for supervising hearing officer, or as to correctional officer for failing to properly investigate an incident where complaint did not allege that either defendant was directly or indirectly involved in conduct at issue. Winston v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1992, 789 F.Supp. 118. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate's complaint which alleged that Commissioner of Corrections and his designee entertained appeal from disciplinary hearing at which due process rights were violated and affirmed the hearing sufficiently alleged personal involvement by the Commissioner to state a claim for violation of civil rights. Cepeda v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1992, 785 F.Supp. 385. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner failed to state § 1983 claim against commissioner of department of corrections and warden for failure to provide adequate medical treatment absent allegation that commissioner and warden were responsible for conduct of unnamed corrections officers or health service. Roman v. Koehler, S.D.N.Y.1991, 775 F.Supp. 695. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Allegations in inmate's civil rights complaint, regarding revocation of good-time credits when contraband was discovered in cell, were not sufficient to state claim against former director of state department of corrections or warden, absent any allegation that former director or warden were directly involved in alleged misconduct or recklessly indifferent to constitutional violations of which they had some knowledge. Hamilton v. Scott, N.D.Ill.1991, 762 F.Supp. 794, affirmed 976 F.2d 341, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate could not maintain § 1983 action against Commissioner of State Department of Correctional Services based on allegations that Commissioner ignored inmate's letter of protest and request for investigation of allegations that inmate was wrongfully confined in special housing unit, charged with disciplinary violations, and transferred to different facility; inmate did not allege that Commissioner was personally involved in preparation of misbehavior report or decision to confine inmate in special housing unit. Garrido v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1989, 716 F.Supp. 98. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Pretrial detainee's assertion that named county corrections officials encouraged, authorized, directed, ratified, or acquiesced in their subordinates' acts which violated detainee's constitutional rights was not sufficiently specific to support detainee's federal civil rights action under § 1983 against those officials for personal liability for detainee's treatment. Jackson v. Elrod, N.D.Ill.1987, 655 F.Supp. 1130. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Inmate failed to allege that any of three prison officials personally authorized, supervised or participated in the decisions regarding his medical care, as required to state a §§ 1983 claim for deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs, in violation of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. Horton v. Ward, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 368, 2005 WL 419814, Unreported. Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Absence of allegation that prison officials either personally participated in or knew of alleged deprivation of state inmate's constitutional rights precluded liability on part of officials under §§ 1983. Perry v. Kramer, C.A.9 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 191, 2005 WL 81176, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate could not maintain §§ 1983 action against supervisory officials at prison arising out of an assault on him by fellow inmates, where he failed to allege any of supervisors' personal involvement in inmate assault nor did complaint fall into any of narrowly tailored categories that allow for supervisory liability without supervisors' participation in alleged wrongdoing. Haywood v. Alcantara, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 443, 2004 WL 1539575, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate's §§ 1983 claim against warden alleging denial of reasonable medical care failed to state claim upon which relief could be based, where inmate alleged only that he had copied warden on correspondence outlining his complaints about his medical care, and failed to allege or demonstrate affirmative link between any constitutional deprivation and warden's personal participation or failure to supervise. Davis v. Arkansas Valley Correctional Facility, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 99 Fed.Appx. 838, 2004 WL 1119941, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate failed to prove that warden personally participated in depriving the inmate of medical treatment or that the warden was deliberately indifferent to the inmate's medical difficulties, thus precluding imposition of § 1983 liability on the warden; conclusory averments in the summary judgment affidavits offered by the inmate, to the effect that the warden and his deputy were "hands-on" managers to whom all departments of the facility reported directly, were insufficient. McDaniels v. McKinna, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 575, 2004 WL 887356, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358; Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Prisoner's allegations that "some or all" of defendant prison guards may have participated in alleged beating of prisoner were insufficient to give prison guards fair notice of the claim against them, as required to support prisoner's excessive force claim under § 1983. Bright v. Gillis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 89 Fed.Appx. 802, 2004 WL 363301, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 89, 543 U.S. 904, 160 L.Ed.2d 178. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Official at Inmate Grievance Program Central Office Review Committee (CORC), by either himself investigating or directing someone else to investigate state prisoner's claims arising from his inability to obtain proper medical treatment following denial by prison's health care provider of surgical referral, was sufficiently personally involved for prisoner to state §§ 1983 claim against him for deliberate indifference to prisoner's medical needs in violation of his Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Manley v. Mazzuca, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 253314, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

In pro se § 1983 complaint, contention by prisoner injured during softball game as result of dangerous condition of recreational area, that prison superintendent had personally visited recreational area and observed softball playing conditions, adequately alleged superintendent's personal involvement in Eighth Amendment violation. Slacks v. Grenier, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22232942, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prisoner's allegations stated § 1983 claim against prison supervisory official since prisoner sufficiently alleged personal involvement of official in the alleged constitutional violation resulting from failure to honor prisoner's medical passes and failure to follow the orders of outside specialists and prison doctors; official allegedly investigated prisoner's grievance against the members of security personnel and responded in their favor, and changed or tried to change the orders of prison doctor, the outside orthopedic specialists and several of the physical therapists. Williams v. Fisher, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22170610, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison inmate satisfied personal involvement requirement for stating § 1983 claim against certain prison personnel by alleging that one prison officer hit him in face and pushed him out of his wheelchair, causing injuries, that other named officers constantly harassed and threatened him, that doctor refused to treat his wounds after assault, that another doctor stopped providing acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) medication, and that third doctor supported the violations of other defendants and was deliberately indifferent to his needs. Hucks v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22019744, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to consider dismissal of prison inmate's separate claims against other corrections officers in connection with his appeal following dismissal of § 1983 action he had brought against prison nurse, where his notice of appeal did not list earlier dismissal order, and named only prison nurse as "defendant" in the caption. Beers v. Stockton, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2000, 242 F.3d 373, Unreported. Federal Courts 666

4877. Private employers, personal participation allegations

Allegations by former municipal employees in jobs funded through statutorily created employment opportunities development fund that, as municipality's personnel director, the director necessarily had something to do the non renewal of their employment contracts, were conclusory and failed to establish that personnel direct violated the employees' constitutional rights, for purposes of employees' §§ 1983 claim alleging that they were not rehired as the result of political discrimination. Cruz-Baez v. Negron-Irizarry, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 326. Civil Rights 1395(8); Civil Rights 1421

Where retail store customer alleged in civil rights complaint that his detention and subsequent arrest on suspicion of shoplifting were without probable cause and were "in accordance with a customary plan" between the corporate store owner and the city police department and where customer also alleged that the corporate employee and the police officer were operating in accordance with this preconceived plan in detaining customer, allegations of direct involvement on part of corporate owner were sufficient to state a claim for relief against the corporation. Classon v. Shopko Stores, Inc., E.D.Wis.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1186. Civil Rights 1395(6)

4878. Public aid officials, personal participation allegations

Physician's action against director of Illinois Department of Public Aid personally arising out of reimbursement which physician was paid for treating medicaid recipient must fail because the complaint failed to allege any personal involvement on part of the director. Shashoua v. Quern, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1979, 612 F.2d 282. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Recipient of public assistance failed to state § 1983 claim, that county violated his due process rights under Fourteenth Amendment by not scheduling timely or expedited fair hearing following denial of his request for emergency assistance, since allegation was made against county rather than state department of social services; fair hearing process was administered by state, and local social services agency merely was party to fair hearing, along with person for whom fair hearing was requested. Hart v. Westchester County Dept. of Social Services, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22595396, Unreported. Constitutional Law 278.7(3); Social Security And Public Welfare 8.5

4879. Village officials, personal participation allegations

Complaint filed by discharged village police chief sufficiently stated cause of action against village board of trustees for illegal discharge without prior hearing before decision maker and without supporting evidence; complaint alleged sufficient individual participation by trustees to permit award of damages against individual trustees. Starke v. Bergles, E.D.Wis.1978, 444 F.Supp. 469. Civil Rights 1395(8)

4880. Miscellaneous participants, personal participation allegations

Complaint, which sought to recover for violation of children's constitutional rights and for torts committed against children resulting from their separation and concealment from father in 1967 as result of their relocation for their protection after mother's husband testified against certain members of organized crime, but which, in asserting that state defendants "acted in concert with" federal defendants in releasing mother's husband, did not allege that any of these defendants participated in removal or concealment of children from father, did not state a claim against state defendants. Leonhard v. U. S., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 633 F.2d 599, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1975, 451 U.S. 908, 68 L.Ed.2d 295. Civil Rights 1395(1)

A federal claim was not stated against law partnership for alleged wrongdoing in handling a partition sale and in distributing proceeds of sale, where there were no allegations that partnership participated in any acts of wrongdoing on part of petition commissioners or was part of any conspiracy. Ashbrook v. Hoffman, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1980, 617 F.2d 474. Monopolies 28(6.2)

Puerto Rico Environmental Quality Board official, who neither made a decision or took any adverse personnel action against employee, lacked the personal involvement required to impose liability under §§ 1983 for alleged deprivation of employee's constitutional rights resulting from agency's postponement of decision to accept or reject employee's resignation pending an administrative investigation; official did not have the authority to accept or deny employee's resignation from employment nor could he approve the liquidation of accumulated vacation days for an employee, and official did not participate in the drafting of the letter requesting an investigation, nor did official recommend requesting an investigation. 174. Civil Rights 1359

Mayor was not vicariously liable for the actions of police officials who approved and ordered the unlawful mass arrest of a group of people, including demonstrators, who were gathered in a park, and thus mayor was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestees' §§ 1983 action; mayor was not on the scene before the arrests and was not consulted about and did not approve them in advance. Barham v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 48, affirmed in part 434 F.3d 565, 369 U.S.App.D.C. 146. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1376(4)

A merely conclusory allegation that private entity acted in concert with state actor does not suffice to state a §§ 1983 claim of conspiracy against private entity; rather, complaint must allege facts demonstrating that private entity acted in concert with state actor to commit unconstitutional act. Rivoli v. Gannett Co., Inc., W.D.N.Y.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 233. Conspiracy 18

Non-legislator municipal defendants were entitled to qualified immunity on claims arising out of enactment of ordinances which imposed occupancy limits on residential rental property in areas which were zoned for single family residences where plaintiff landlords and tenants failed to allege facts sufficient to establish that each individual defendant personally participated in the alleged violations of their constitutional rights. Jones v. Wildgen, D.Kan.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1116, on reconsideration in part 349 F.Supp.2d 1358. Civil Rights 1398

Former employee of the Puerto Rico Highway Authority (PRHA) who alleged that his termination constituted political discrimination failed to state claim against various officials of the PRHA, absent evidence they were personally and directly involved in alleged violation of his rights; claim against them was a general and unsubstantiated "conspiracy theory" that they all conspired with Executive Director of the PRHA to provoke employee into confrontations in order to justify his dismissal. Rivera v. Fagundo, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 103, affirmed 414 F.3d 124. Civil Rights 1359

Former employee of state's office of deputy comptroller for city sufficiently alleged state comptroller's personal involvement in her discharge, so as to state § 1983 claim against state comptroller in his individual capacity for discharge in violation of her constitutional rights, where former employee alleged that she was dismissed by all defendants, including state comptroller, that first deputy state comptroller had said he had informed state comptroller that former employee would not cause any trouble if fired and that first deputy state comptroller initially told former employee that she could speak with state comptroller to make her case against discharge. Fry v. McCall, S.D.N.Y.1996, 945 F.Supp. 655. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Pro se civil rights complaint which contained no specific factual averments which explained how corporation was personally involved in alleged deprivation of plaintiff's rights when defendants allegedly "confiscated his life's possessions," and which lacked any allegation supported by fact that any conduct of the corporation or its employees was undertaken in an official capacity or under color of state law did not state cause of action under federal civil rights statute. Signore v. City of McKeesport, Pa., W.D.Pa.1988, 680 F.Supp. 200, affirmed 877 F.2d 54. Civil Rights 1395(1); Civil Rights 1395(3); Civil Rights 1396

4901. Defenses generally

At least to some extent, the defenses allowed to state officers are available in suits under this section. Fidtler v. Rundle, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 497 F.2d 794. Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1366

Eleventh Amendment did not bar state inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging that prison system's sex offender treatment program violated her constitutional rights, where inmate sought prospective injunctive relief against state officials in their official capacities, and damages against officials in their individual capacities only. Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Dep't of Corrections, E.D.Pa.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 762. Federal Courts 269; Federal Courts 272

Under New York law, father was collaterally estopped from challenging state court's finding that father's failure to appear at hearing at which his parental rights were terminated was willful, and thus Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred father's subsequent § 1983 action alleging that city department of social services violated his due process rights by failing to notify him of hearing, where state court specifically considered issue of department's conduct in making its decision. King v. Commissioner and New York City Police Dept., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 60 Fed.Appx. 873, 2003 WL 1343011, Unreported. Courts 509; Infants 232

4902. Affirmative defenses

State-law based affirmative defenses, raised in anticipation of possibility that §§ 1983 plaintiff might amend complaint to include state law claims, were immaterial to the action and would be stricken. Quintana v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 233 F.R.D. 562. Federal Civil Procedure 1108.1

City waived its claim that developer's equal protection lawsuit was precluded by its failure to challenge city's decision via administrative writ, even though city listed preclusion as affirmative defense in its answer, where allegation in answer was conclusory and failed to provide clear notice of particular nature of preclusion argument currently advanced, city did not raise specific argument until one year after trial on issue of liability, and developer suffered undue prejudice as result of city's delay. North Pacifica, LLC. v. City of Pacifica, N.D.Cal.2005, 366 F.Supp.2d 927. Federal Civil Procedure 758

Failure of prison employees to plead inmate's failure to exhaust administrative remedies as an affirmative defense

in their original motion to dismiss, or in the alternative, motion for summary judgment, in inmate's § 1983 action for alleged violation of his Fifth and Eighth Amendment rights, did not amount to waiver of that defense, where defense was raised in response to inmate's amended complaint. Chase v. Peay, D.Md.2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 523, affirmed 98 Fed.Appx. 253, 2004 WL 1205695. Federal Civil Procedure 751

In action brought pursuant to § 1983, District Court may consider, sua sponte, affirmative defenses, including statute of limitations, that are apparent from face of complaint, and need not wait to see if such defenses will be asserted in defensive pleading. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Federal Civil Procedure 755

Defendants, in state inmate's § 1983 action for an alleged assault, were entitled to amend their pleadings to add affirmative defense that inmate failed to exhaust his administrative remedies under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), although defendants were presumably aware of the exhaustion requirement at the time they filed their answer, where it would have been futile for them to assert an exhaustion defense at that time, given the then-existing law that the exhaustion requirement did not apply to claims pertaining to isolated incidents affecting particular inmates. Livingston v. Piskor, W.D.N.Y.2003, 215 F.R.D. 84. Federal Civil Procedure 846

Prison employees being sued by inmate under § 1983 for alleged deliberate indifference to serious medical needs did not waive affirmative defense of failure to exhaust administrative remedies despite failure to plead the defense in their answer, and thus, on their summary judgment motion, district court would amend their answer to include the affirmative defense, absent any evidence that they acted with bad faith in failing to raise the defense before their summary judgment motion and absent any demonstration by inmate that he would suffer any actual prejudice. Boston v. Takos, W.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31663510, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 751; Federal Civil Procedure 846

Inmate's failure to exhaust his administrative remedies was affirmative defense in § 1983 suit against prison officials, and thus it was abuse of discretion for district court to sua sponte dismiss suit for failure to exhaust, where it was not clear on face of complaint that there had been failure to exhaust. Howe v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2002, 52 Fed.Appx. 859, 2002 WL 31804970, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(7); Civil Rights 1398

4903. Congressional foreclosure, defenses

Defendants bear burden of establishing congressional foreclosure of enforcement of right under § 1983 and must point to remedial scheme so comprehensive that allowing plaintiffs to sue under § 1983 would be inconsistent with Congress's carefully tailored scheme. Evelyn V. v. Kings County Hosp. Center, E.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 288. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1401

Section 1983 does not provide a remedy for statutory violations where Congress has foreclosed private enforcement of statute in the enactment itself and where statute did not create enforceable rights within meaning of § 1983. Backlund v. Hessen, D.Minn.1995, 904 F.Supp. 964, reversed 104 F.3d 1031, rehearing denied, on remand 176 F.R.D. 316. Civil Rights 1027

4904. Common law, defenses

Aside from the immunity from suit available to state officers acting within scope of their official discretion, other defenses, likewise derived from the common law, are also available in suits to recover for deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Anthony v. White, D.C.Del.1974, 376 F.Supp. 567. Civil Rights 1366

4905. Tort defenses

This section is to be read in harmony with general principles of tort immunities and defenses rather than in derogation of them. Imbler v. Pachtman, U.S.Cal.1976, 96 S.Ct. 984, 424 U.S. 409, 47 L.Ed.2d 128. Civil Rights 1366; Civil Rights 1373

As in conventional tort cases, defense of intervening or supervening cause involving another tort-feasor does not apply in actions under 1871 civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, where other tort-feasor's actions are of precisely the type the first tort-feasor has had reason to know would be encouraged by its own misconduct, such as its own failure to supervise or discipline like conduct in the past. Payne v. City of LaSalle, N.D.Ill.1985, 610 F.Supp. 606. Civil Rights 1333(1)

In action against police officers in the nature of common law tort actions of false arrest and false imprisonment, brought pursuant to this subchapter, defenses available at common law remained available under this subchapter. Pouncey v. Ryan, D.C.Conn.1975, 396 F.Supp. 126. Civil Rights 1369

This section must be read in manner consistent with background of common-law tort liability which allows only for recognized tort defenses. Jenkins v. Meyers, N.D.Ill.1972, 338 F.Supp. 383, affirmed 481 F.2d 1406. Civil Rights 1366

Motorist was not prejudiced by granting of town's motion to amend its answer in § 1983 action to add defense of legal justification, and district court thus did not abuse its discretion in granting motion, notwithstanding motorist's contention that he conducted discovery under assumption that legal justification would not be issue, where there was no indication he sought to reopen discovery, and he failed to identify any lines of inquiry he might have pursued if allowed further discovery. Best v. Town of Clarkstown, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 61 Fed.Appx. 760, 2003 WL 1785892, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 846

4906. Convictions, defenses

Village and police chief waived defense that Heck v. Humphrey, barring any civil rights action that would necessarily render a conviction or sentence invalid, applied to §§ 1983 selective prosecution and due process claims brought against them by tavern owner, convicted for setting up illegal gaming machines; village and police chief failed to raise such defense to those particular claims. Kramer v. Village of North Fond du Lac, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 384 F.3d 856. Civil Rights 1369; Federal Civil Procedure 751

Felony murder conviction barred § 1983 civil rights suit against police officers and assistant state's attorneys alleging malicious prosecution, even if claims implicated rights protected by Fourth Amendment; malicious prosecution claim requires showing that criminal proceeding had been terminated in plaintiff's favor. Simpson v. Rowan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 73 F.3d 134, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 104, 519 U.S. 833, 136 L.Ed.2d 58. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Where law enforcement officers have made arrest, resulting conviction is defense to section 1983 action asserting that arrest was made without probable cause. Cameron v. Fogarty, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1986, 806 F.2d 380, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1894, 481 U.S. 1016, 95 L.Ed.2d 501. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Initial conviction or finding of probable cause does not bar subsequent action by defendant challenging conviction under federal civil rights statute if conviction or sentence has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determination, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Haddock v. Christos, M.D.Pa.1994, 866 F.Supp. 170. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Plaintiff's conviction of weapons possession charges in state court barred his civil rights claim insofar as claim was based on allegation that he was unlawfully deprived of his liberty in that criminal proceedings were instituted against him based upon a coerced confession, since question of voluntariness of plaintiff's statements to the police was litigated at trial and jury was instructed it should disregard statements of defendant if it found them to have been involuntarily made. Camarano v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1984, 577 F.Supp. 18. Judgment 559

4907. Custom or usage, defenses

Municipality's court-ordered sexual harassment policy could not insulate municipality from § 1983 liability based on deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of female inmate who was forced to perform striptease in front of other inmates and female and male guards, even though guards' acts were against policy; policy was never posted, some guards did not recall receiving it, inmates never received it, there was no evidence of training that was supposed accompany policy, and municipality was indifferent to blatant violations of policy. Daskalea v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2000, 227 F.3d 433, 343 U.S.App.D.C. 261. Civil Rights 1352(4)

4908. Double jeopardy, defenses

Arrestee's filing civil rights action seeking punitive damages for alleged use of excessive force while arrestee was in holding cell at police station did not trigger double jeopardy clause, even if officer had already been punished in criminal proceeding. Stewart v. Roe, N.D.Ill.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1304. Double Jeopardy 23

4909. Equitable estoppel, defenses

Fixed-base operator at municipal airport's allegations that airport commission made misrepresentations about high levels of traffic at airport to induce operator to enter contract with airport and then later produced false documents purporting to show the fictitious levels of traffic after operator made inquiries about unexpected slow traffic levels triggered doctrine of equitable estoppel; commission's alleged use of false documents concealed evidence from operator that it needed in order to determine that it had a claim against commission. Barry Aviation Inc. v. Land O'Lakes Municipal Airport Com'n, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 377 F.3d 682, on remand 2004 WL 2778437. Limitation Of Actions 13

School superintendent's representation that teacher did not qualify for early retirement benefits did not equitably estop school district from asserting limitations as defense to teacher's subsequent federal civil rights claims, inasmuch as statement was not made with intent to mislead teacher into trap of time bar. Waterman v. Nashua-Plainfield Community School Dist., N.D.Iowa 2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1018. Limitation Of Actions 13

African-American employee alleging that he was constructively discharged in retaliation for asserting race discrimination claim was not judicially estopped from seeking back pay on his retaliation claims under Title VII and § 1983 by fact that he applied and was approved for disability benefits before ending his employment; there was no evidence that employee acted in bad faith, as employee turned down benefits in order to continue working, and uncontested evidence by employee's physician indicated that he was capable of working for four years after ending his employment. Price v. Delaware Dept. of Correction, D.Del.1999, 40 F.Supp.2d 544. Estoppel 68(2)

Developers were not estopped from challenging town's utility system impact fees and tap fees for water and sewer services, as violating the equal protection clause and state law, on ground that developers paid the fees in question and received the benefits of connecting to the town's water and sewer systems, where town accepted payment of the fees without reliance on such payment in determining its course of action, ordinance did not require payment of fees as a condition to forego construction of additional facilities that would have been beneficial to town, and developers were not allowed to develop their property in a manner not otherwise allowable except for payment of the fees. South Shell Inv. v. Town of Wrightsville Beach, N.C., E.D.N.C.1988, 703 F.Supp. 1192, affirmed 900 F.2d 255. Estoppel 63; Estoppel 92(1)

Subsequent payment of rent by evicted tenant cannot amount to a waiver of a civil rights claim arising out of eviction or an estoppel to assert claim. Carrasco v. Klein, E.D.N.Y.1974, 381 F.Supp. 782. Civil Rights 1368

Chapter 11 debtor-tenant was equitably estopped from pursuing previously undisclosed § 1983 claim asserted against creditor-landlord; claim was precipitated by purportedly unlawful preconfirmation conduct of creditor, that is, entry of confessed judgments for both possession and accelerated rent and issuance of execution thereon, debtor was admittedly aware of judgments, debtor failed to list even contingent or unliquidated claim or right of setoff in its bankruptcy schedules and statement of financial affairs, and debtor failed to include any specific reference to potential § 1983 claim anywhere in either plan or disclosure statement. In re Okan's Foods, Inc., Bkrtcy.E.D.Pa.1998, 217 B.R. 739. Bankruptcy 3568(2)

4910. Full faith and credit, defenses

Same policies which favor relaxed principle of res judicata in civil rights suits also militated against giving full faith and credit to the state judgment so as to bar civil rights suit alleging that city councilman candidate was unconstitutionally denied access to the ballot and in turn that voters were unconstitutionally denied right to vote for him. Williams v. Sclafani, S.D.N.Y.1978, 444 F.Supp. 906, affirmed 580 F.2d 1046. Judgment 828.21(1)

District court was required to give full faith and credit to state court's judgment of dismissal with prejudice in action against county board of commissioners and, therefore, plaintiff could not relitigate his claims against board in action under this section against various officials connected with county jail, including board. Schott v. Hepler, N.D.Ind.1984, 101 F.R.D. 99. Judgment 828.4(2)

4911. Laches, defenses

Laches was not available to bar contractor's legal claims for damages under § 1983 against city which were otherwise timely filed under § 1983's three-year limitations period, as borrowed from analogous state law; federal legislative decision to borrow state statute of limitations for § 1983 is legislative choice that separation of powers principles compels court to respect. Ivani Contracting Corp. v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 103 F.3d 257, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1695, 520 U.S. 1211, 137 L.Ed.2d 821. Civil Rights 1384

District court abused its discretion by granting laches dismissal of civil rights action against Illinois Department of Human Rights based on its failure to process employment discrimination claims; delay of 28 months in filing suit was not unreasonable given uncertain state of law created by pendency of United States Supreme Court decision, and delay could not have harmed Department. Bennett v. Tucker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 827 F.2d 63, on remand 127 F.R.D. 501, on remand 720 F.Supp. 1331. Civil Rights 1383

Pro se inmate's two-year delay in taking any action to prosecute his civil rights claims against prison officials warranted dismissal of his complaint, even though suit implicated important public policy concerns, and officials were not prejudiced by delay, where inmate provided no explanation for delay, and lesser sanctions were not likely to be effective. Wade v. Ratella, S.D.Cal.2005, 407 F.Supp.2d 1196. Federal Civil Procedure 1760

Civil rights action brought against prison guard by inmate who was nearly struck by gun shot fired by guard during prison disturbance was barred by laches; action was brought more than four years after incident, and unavailability of witnesses, destruction of records, and absence of contemporaneous evidence would have been prejudicial to guard. Jabbar-El v. Sullivan, E.D.Mich.1992, 811 F.Supp. 265. Civil Rights 1382

Laches is not, as a matter of law, a defense to a civil rights action under this section or under § 1985(3) of this title. DeLuca v. Sullivan, D.C.Mass.1977, 450 F.Supp. 736. Civil Rights 1379

Florida law in May, 1975, but waited until August, 1976 to file civil rights action to challenge as unconstitutional Florida statutory scheme which denies such independent candidate any means to obtain place on ballot, delay was not so unreasonable or prejudicial as to bar relief where plaintiffs might reasonably have assumed that issue would be addressed at spring 1976 session of Florida Legislature and where less than three months elapsed between date when legislative resolution of problem was foreclosed and date suit was filed. McCarthy v. Askew, S.D.Fla.1976, 420 F.Supp. 775, affirmed 540 F.2d 1254. Elections 179

Action brought by former city clerk against city and certain individual officials alleging his removal from employment without due process was not barred by laches where defendants failed to cite relevant authority for suggestion that action was tardy and where they failed to show any prejudice by timing of commencement of action. De Luca v. Starck, E.D.Wis.1976, 414 F.Supp. 18. Civil Rights 1383

Where prison authorities worked for one year and ten months to achieve compliance with consent decree regarding prison conditions before requesting court to issue order declaring them to be in compliance with consent decree, prisoners' motion seeking enforcement of consent decree, which was filed the day after the prison authority's motion, was timely and not barred by laches. Padgett v. Stein, M.D.Pa.1975, 406 F.Supp. 287. Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

Where a replacement drama coach was hired at same time plaintiff was fired as high school drama coach and as late as seven months after firing the board of directors of school district had promised to review determination, former drama coach, seeking reinstatement, could not be found guilty of laches in commencing civil rights action some six months after events complained of took place. Webb v. Lake Mills Community School Dist., N.D.Iowa 1972, 344 F.Supp. 791. Schools 147.47

Plaintiffs who had not inexcusably delayed in instituting action for declaratory and injunctive relief under this section were not barred by laches. Shakman v. Democratic Organization of Cook County, N.D.Ill.1969, 310 F.Supp. 1398, reversed 435 F.2d 267, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 1383, 402 U.S. 909, 28 L.Ed.2d 650, on remand 356 F.Supp. 1241. Declaratory Judgment 255; Injunction 113

Complaint by alien seeking damages for alleged rejection of application for civil service position because of rule requiring applicant to be citizen adequately stated claim under this section and was not tainted by laches. Kilaru v. Watts, E.D.Wis.1973, 59 F.R.D. 569. Action 6; Civil Rights 1395(8)

State prisoner failed to establish cause for his undue delay in bringing action under §§ 1983 challenging California's lethal injection method of execution, which he brought only eight days prior to his scheduled execution date. Cooper v. Rimmer, N.D.Cal.2004, 2004 WL 231325, Unreported, affirmed 379 F.3d 1029. Civil Rights 1382

Virtual absence of prosecution for five years, and flagrant disregard of court orders, warranted dismissal of arrestee's § 1983 action alleging violations of their civil rights arising from arrest for shoplifting. Alen-Guitierrez v. Acevedo-Miranda, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 226, 2003 WL 21355978, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1741; Federal Civil Procedure 1759

4912. Necessity, defenses

"Rule of necessity" did not bar terminated community college president from pursuing claims under § 1983 against board of trustees and its individual members based upon alleged bias of board in making termination decision and in conducting posttermination hearing, even though state statute and president's employment contract gave board nondelegable duty to make such employment determinations; since board did not admit that any of its individual members were biased, jury finding that quorum of board was in fact biased and should have recused itself from termination decision or participation in post-termination hearing would have been required in order to permit board to claim that it was required to make decisions regardless of bias, and posttermination hearing could have been delayed until after ill board member became well and new member was appointed to fill vacancy. Bakalis v. Board of Trustees of Community College Dist. No. 504, County of Cook, State of Ill. (Triton College), N.D.Ill.1996, 948 F.Supp. 729, affirmed 125 F.3d 576. Civil Rights 1133

4913. Notice of claim requirements, defenses

Former teacher's failure to serve timely notice of claim under Indiana Tort Claims Act within 180 days after alleged slander and defamation did not bar federal civil rights action based on allegedly defamatory remarks. Vukadinovich v. Board of School Trustees of Michigan City Area Schools, N.D.Ind.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1325, affirmed 978 F.2d 403, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 133, 510 U.S. 844, 126 L.Ed.2d 97. Schools 112

Former chief of police's failure to comply with town charter notice provisions did not bar action against town seeking reinstatement after termination in alleged violation of civil rights; plaintiff seeking to maintain claim under federal civil rights statute is not required to adhere to notice provisions provided under state law. Meding v. Hurd, D.C.Del.1985, 607 F.Supp. 1088. Civil Rights 1312

Alleged noncompliance with municipal notice of claim statute McKinney's N.Y. General Municipal Law § 50-i was not a defense to civil rights action for deprivation of rights brought against former police officers and city for fatal shooting of ten-year-old child, since notice of claim requirement is inapplicable to civil rights actions for deprivation of rights under color of state law. Glover v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1975, 401 F.Supp. 632. Civil Rights 1382

4914. Pleas, defenses

Plaintiff's guilty plea in state-court criminal proceeding to charge of manufacturing a controlled substance did not constitute a waiver of antecedent claims under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4; thus, plaintiff was not precluded from bringing subsequent civil rights action directly challenging legality of police conduct. Haring v. Prosise, U.S.Va.1983, 103 S.Ct. 2368, 462 U.S. 306, 76 L.Ed.2d 595. Civil Rights 1088(1); Criminal Law 273.4(2)

State prisoner's guilty plea to stealing provided complete defense to prisoner's civil rights claims that arrest was without probable cause. Bey v. Bridgeton Police Dept., E.D.Mo.1991, 775 F.Supp. 1255. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Plaintiff's plea of guilty to charges of disorderly conduct and harassment arising out of incident which was subject to civil rights litigation barred civil rights action based on claim of false arrest and false imprisonment. Griffen v. City of Mount Vernon, S.D.N.Y.1983, 553 F.Supp. 1047. False Imprisonment 7(5)

4915. Releases from lawsuit, defenses

Although in some cases, release-dismissal agreements whereby criminal defendant releases his right to file a civil rights action in return for a prosecutor's dismissal of pending criminal charges may infringe important interests of criminal defendant and of society as a whole, mere possibility of harm to such interests does not require a per se rule invalidating all such agreements. Town of Newton v. Rumery, U.S.N.H.1987, 107 S.Ct. 1187, 480 U.S. 386, 94 L.Ed.2d 405. Compromise And Settlement 7.1; Criminal Law 40; Release 20

Arrestee voluntarily entered release-dismissal agreement, in which criminal charges against arrestee were dropped and he waived all rights to sue city and police officers, for purposes of determining whether agreement barred arrestee's §§ 1983 action arising from arrest, even though arrestee signed release out of concern for others charged in events giving rise to his arrest; arrestee was a 34-year-old college graduate who was represented by counsel and was not incarcerated when he signed agreement, and there was no evidence arrestee did not have ample time to consider the agreement before signing it. MacBoyle v. City of Parma, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 383 F.3d 456. Release 15

Release of right to bring civil rights suit, given in exchange for dismissal of criminal charges, could not be upheld unless it withstood district court's scrutiny as to whether there was prosecutorial overreaching and whether release-dismissal agreement advanced public interest. Livingstone v. North Belle Vernon Borough, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 12 F.3d 1205. Release 19; Release 20

City and its police officers had to establish enforceability of release-dismissal agreement because they were asserting agreement as defense to arrestee's § 1983 claim and to do this, they had to show that agreement was voluntary, there was no evidence of prosecutorial overreaching and enforcement of agreement would not adversely affect relevant public interests. Hill v. City of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 12 F.3d 575. Release 55

Whether county prisoner's release of claims under this section based on beating with nightstick was voluntary was to be determined with reference to coerciveness of atmosphere during execution of release, including lack of counsel, prisoner's testimony that he felt refusal to sign waiver would cause him to be more harshly treated, fact that only minimal attempt was made to explain nature or extent of rights waived, fact that sentence was still pending at time release was executed and fact that following beating prisoner was placed in special segregation facility for 19 days before release was offered. Jones v. Taber, C.A.9 (Or.) 1981, 648 F.2d 1201. Release 18

Where arrestee who executed release of police officers and city for liability in exchange for dismissal of charges of disorderly conduct and resisting a police officer thought she would be put in jail because she would not be able to pay the fines, release was secured in such an inherently coercive context that arrestee did not effectively waive her civil rights action, and it was immaterial that arrestee's counsel commenced negotiations leading to the release. Boyd v. Adams, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 513 F.2d 83. Release 18

Evidence did not establish arrestee had voluntarily executed agreement to waive or release his right to sue city police officer and prosecutor under § 1983, which agreement was executed in connection with negotiated no-contest plea in abeyance to charges, in Utah state court, of interference with police officer and disorderly conduct; arrestee had not been advised at arraignment or at plea hearing of his right to counsel with respect to entry of plea, and did not receive such advisement before his obligation to sign a release became binding through expiration of 30-day period under Utah law to withdraw the plea. Jimenez v. Brunner, D.Utah 2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 1208, subsequent determination 2005 WL 1000246. Criminal Law 40; Release 15

Release signed by black university basketball coach, as part of contract renewal, precluded application in Title VII action of mixed motive analysis to subsequent adverse employment actions of state university, otherwise required in light of direct evidence of racial animus created by racist comment of athletic director made prior to date of release. Richardson v. Sugg, E.D.Ark.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 919, affirmed 448 F.3d 1046. Release 38

Even if release which arrestee signed was a release-dismissal agreement, whereby arrestee released her right to file a § 1983 action in return for prosecutor's dismissal of pending criminal charges, release was still enforceable, where agreement was freely and voluntarily entered into, and prior to release, prosecutor had dismissed the charges on the basis of lack of evidence. Eberle v. City of Newton, D.Kan.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1269, motion to amend denied 296 F.Supp.2d 1276. Criminal Law 40; Release 15; Release 20

Civil liability release contained in Connecticut's waiver of extradition form served no extradition-related public purpose, and was therefore void as against public policy, and did not shield town and police officers who used the form from § 1983 liability against detainee who signed the form. Cuba-Diaz v. Town of Windham, D.Conn.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 221. Release 20

Jury question precluding summary judgment remained on whether bar owner released his § 1983 civil rights claim against city by paying liquor license fee, accepting liquor license, and reopening business, where there was no evidence on owner's intent; there was no reference in correspondence between parties to "release of claims," "waiver of cause of action," or language of similar intent. Flesner v. City of Ely, D.Minn.1994, 863 F.Supp. 971. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Town's alleged breach of agreement that it would not raise police officer's voluntary departure as a defense to any workers compensation claim then pending did not invalidate officer's release of any and all claims arising out of his employment, including § 1983 claims, or his knowing and voluntary assent to it. Clorofilla v. Town of New Castle, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 90, 2004 WL 1800491, Unreported. Release 15

Arrestee's release, which discharged claims against chief of police and explicitly released chief of police from "all, and all manner of action, causes of action, controversies, ... claims and demands whatsoever in law or in equity, which against [him] he ever had, [or] now has ... especially in connection" with the arrest, could reasonably be read to release claims against chief of police in his individual capacity. Taylor v. Windsor Locks Police Dept., C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 71 Fed.Appx. 877, 2003 WL 21697441, Unreported. Release 27

4916. Ripeness, defenses

Pursuant to Heck, inmate did not yet have § 1983 claim against prison officials based on alleged due process violations in disciplinary proceedings resulting in loss of his good time credits when he did not have requisite ruling setting aside loss of credits, even though inmate only sought monetary damages. Dixon v. Chrans, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1228. Civil Rights 1092

Due process or equal protection cause of action against Puerto Rico Secretary of Health, which was brought by owners and operators of medical facilities under §§ 1983 for transfer of possession of hospital to another private group, was not ripe, since Secretary did not have any immediate intention to privatize facility. Centro Medico Del Turabo, Inc. v. Feliciano De Melecio, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 285, affirmed 406 F.3d 1. Constitutional Law 46(1)

State prison inmate's § 1983 claim that prison officials refused to process legal material presented to them in violation of his First Amendment right to petition for redress of grievances was premature absent any allegation that he was actually prevented from filing a civil action because the prison officials frustrated his attempts to file and pursue grievances. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Federal Courts 13.10

State prison inmate's Ex Post Facto claim for monetary damages under §§ 1983 against prison officials who allegedly conspired to extend his sentence was premature until the basis for his parole denial was rendered invalid. Jones v. Maher, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 813, 2005 WL 1155914, Unreported. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

4917. Settlements, defenses

Where counsel for school teacher, who had been discharged without hearing, informed her that she could pursue her rights against board of directors and executive director or could accept board's check in settlement of claims arising out of termination and teacher accepted check bearing notation that her position had been terminated and that two and one half months' salary was being paid in lieu of ample notice because of consolidation of job, acceptance of check constituted knowing waiver of any right to notice and hearing before board and constituted complete settlement of claim, founded on alleged violation of procedural due process, against educational center, its board of directors and executive director arising out of termination. Cochran v. Odell, N.D.Tex.1971, 334 F.Supp. 555. Compromise And Settlement 5(2)

4918. Statute of frauds, defenses

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Ohio statute of frauds, R.C.Ohio §§ 1335.04, 1335.05 is not defense to action to recover under this section. Newbern v. Lake Lorelei, Inc., S.D.Ohio 1968, 308 F.Supp. 407, 24 Ohio Misc. 201, 52 O.O.2d 189, 53 O.O.2d 290.

4919. Stipulations, defenses

Where officials of state agency negotiated stipulation with nursing home owners in state enforcement proceedings, a stipulation waived owners' right to judicial review, state officials were immune from suits for damages. Zapiler v. Robbins, D.C.Colo.1981, 507 F.Supp. 973. Civil Rights 1376(3)

4920. State immunity, defenses

Oklahoma Governmental Tort Claims Act did not immunize city, company under contract to manage city's pedestrian mall, and company's director from § 1983 liability arising out of defendants' denial of permit to use amplified sound on mall in alleged violation of First Amendment rights of religious evangelists. Tiemann v. Tul-Center, Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 18 F.3d 851. Civil Rights 1373; Civil Rights 1376(4)

Eleventh Amendment did not bar §§ 1983 suit by former motor pool director, against current Secretary of Administration for State of Kansas, in Secretary's official capacity, seeking prospective equitable relief in form of reinstatement, as remedy for allegedly wrongful termination by prior Secretary. Spiess v. Fricke, D.Kan.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1178. Federal Courts 272

4921. Failure to prosecute, defenses

Citizen, as pro se plaintiff, failed to establish facts to show in civil rights action that his circumstances were sufficiently extraordinary to vacate judgment entered against him for failure to prosecute, on allegations that he was in and out of hospital, suffering from mental condition, and in and out of prison, since citizen was able to file other documents with district court and Court of Appeals in spite of his cycle of ill health and incarceration, and yet he delayed five years in bringing motion to vacate. Broadway v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21209635, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2651.1

4922. Criminal defense, defenses

Limitation of entrapment doctrine to criminal cases precluded claimant, bringing §§ 1983 civil action for damages, following alleged false arrest on extortion charges, from arguing entrapment as refutation of claim he had taken money from police officer in return for influencing his girlfriend to drop rape charges against friend of officer. Dawkins v. Williams, N.D.N.Y.2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 161. Civil Rights 1088(4)

4923. Probable cause

Probable cause to arrest constitutes justification and is a complete defense to an action for false arrest, whether that action is brought under New York law or §§ 1983. Rizzo v. Edison, Inc., W.D.N.Y.2005, 419 F.Supp.2d 338. False Imprisonment 13

4941. Limitations generally

For limitations purposes, a simple, broad characterization of all section 1983 civil rights claims best fits the statute's remedial purpose. Wilson v. Garcia, U.S.N.M.1985, 105 S.Ct. 1938, 471 U.S. 261, 85 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1379

Discrete discriminatory acts, such as termination, failure to promote, denial of transfer, or refusal to hire, are not actionable under § 1983 if time barred, even when they are related to acts alleged in timely filed charges. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Issue of whether state prisoner's claims were barred by statute of limitations could not be resolved at motion to dismiss phase of civil rights action under §§ 1983 because of factual dispute as to when prisoner learned or reasonably could have learned of various county officials' alleged violation of his constitutional rights, by refusing to surrender blood and semen samples for DNA testing. Wade v. Brady, D.Mass.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 226. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Section 1983 does not contain a statute of limitations, but instead borrows the appropriate limitations period from state law. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Federal Courts 425

Section 1983 does not itself contain a specific statute of limitations and therefore, courts look to law of the state where injury occurred to determine the applicable statute of limitations. Horton v. Marovich, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 540. Federal Courts 425

4942. Constitutional challenges, limitations

Section 1983 action by owner of adult-oriented newsstand, seeking injunction on First Amendment grounds prohibiting enforcement of city ordinance regulating placement of adult-oriented establishments, raised a facial challenge to the ordinance, and therefore, no statute of limitations applied; owner argued that ordinance precluded any adult establishment from locating in the city. Frye v. City of Kannapolis, M.D.N.C.1999, 109 F.Supp.2d 436. Civil Rights 1384

4943. Personal injury nature of action, limitations

Claims under this section, are best characterized as personal injury actions, for limitations purposes. Wilson v. Garcia, U.S.N.M.1985, 105 S.Ct. 1938, 471 U.S. 261, 85 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1379

Bivens actions, like actions under §§ 1983, are considered as personal injury claims and are governed by the personal injury statute of limitations and tolling laws in the state where the alleged injury occurred. Molina-Acosta v. Martinez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 210. United States 50.20

All § 1983 claims are characterized as claims for personal injuries for statute of limitations purposes. Steiner v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1996, 920 F.Supp. 333. Civil Rights 1379

4944. Tort limitations statutes generally

Statute of limitations for § 1983 action challenging validity of municipal ordinance requiring permit before rental units could be converted into condominiums or cooperative apartments was Massachusetts three-year limitation for commencement of tort actions. Gilbert v. City of Cambridge, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 932 F.2d 51, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 192, 502 U.S. 866, 116 L.Ed.2d 153, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 922, 502 U.S. 1051, 116 L.Ed.2d 820. Civil Rights 1381

4945. Personal injury limitations statutes--Generally

Where rural county water association, in suing to enforce its alleged exclusive right to sell water to customers within its area of service while it was indebted to federal government on Farmers' Home Administration (FmHA) loan, had brought suit against municipality that allegedly infringed on its exclusive service rights under §§ 1983, water association was subject to same two-year limitations period applicable to personal injury claims under Oklahoma law, and could not pursue claim for sales activity which predated its suit by more than two years, before water association repurchased its FmHA debt and entered into second FmHA loan. Pittsburg County Rural Water

Dist. No. 7 v. City of McAlester, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 358 F.3d 694, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 44, 543 U.S. 810, 160 L.Ed.2d 13, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 54, 543 U.S. 811, 160 L.Ed.2d 13. Civil Rights 1384

Because §§ 1983 does not contain its own statute of limitations, a federal court must borrow the statute of limitations applicable to personal injury claims in the forum state. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Federal Courts 425

Section 1983 claims are governed by state statute of limitations for general personal injury actions. Feldman v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 528, affirmed 434 F.3d 177. Federal Courts 425

In New York, arrestee's § 1983 action against sheriff deputies was governed by three-year limitations period for personal injury actions, and not one-year period for suits against sheriff or sheriff's deputy. Houghton v. Cardone, W.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 268. Civil Rights 1382

State statutes of limitations applicable to general personal injury claims supply limitations periods for § 1983 claims. McCall v. Board of Com'rs of County of Shawnee, KS, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1216. Civil Rights 1379; Federal Courts 425

Inmate's allegations of various incidents occurring over a three-year period, including being issued a citations for misconduct for possession of barber shop tools and being in a restricted area without a pass, did not constitute a continuing pattern of discrimination or harassment directed toward inmate and the Muslim prison population, and thus inmate's claims relating to such incidents was barred by Oklahoma's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, absent evidence that the incidents were anything more than unrelated actions of misconduct on the part of the inmate. Roberts v. Champion, N.D.Okla.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 1272, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 108, 2004 WL 249617. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Pro se claimant's § 1983 claim based on alleged conspiracy to deprive claimant of his constitutional right to fair trial seven years earlier was barred by statute of limitations, which was three years based on state's personal injury statute; claim that he was entitled to have trial videotaped accrued no later than date of conviction as claimant knew or had reason to know of any injury stemming from failure to videotape trial at that time. Molina v. Kaye, E.D.N.Y.1996, 956 F.Supp. 261. Conspiracy 16

New York has a three-year statute of limitations for § 1983 actions which is derived from New York's general personal injury statute of limitations. Lee v. Donnaruma, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 39, 2003 WL 21105326, Unreported. Civil Rights 1379

4946. ---- Civil rights limitation statutes, personal injury limitations statutes

Inmate's §§ 1983 claims against police officers based on assault which occurred in county jail were governed by Missouri's five-year personal injury statute of limitations, and not three-year statute of limitations; overruling Sulik v. Taney County, Mo., 316 F.3d 813. Sulik v. Taney County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 393 F.3d 765. Civil Rights 1382

Three-year limitations period began to run on attorney's claim in Massachusetts under §§ 1983 against court officers when attorney allegedly was physically assaulted and sustained immediate injuries at hands of those officers. Keane v. Navarro, D.Mass.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 9. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Virginia's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions barred Virginia prisoner's § 1983 claims against prison officials alleging disability discrimination insofar as they were based on events that occurred more than two years before his complaint was filed, especially considering that he had filed similar claims more than two years before present complaint was filed. Garrett v. Angelone, W.D.Va.1996, 940 F.Supp. 933, affirmed 107 F.3d

865. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

In Illinois, the two-year personal injury statute of limitations applies to § 1983 actions and to actions under civil rights statute prohibiting persons from conspiring for the purpose of depriving any person of the equal protection of the laws. Horton v. Marovich, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1379; Conspiracy 16

Most analogous state statute of limitations, which district court had to borrow in assessing timeliness of § 1983 action, was Utah's residual statute of limitations for personal injury claims, rather than statute of limitations specifically enacted by Utah legislature to govern federal civil rights actions; Utah's statute of limitations for federal civil rights actions did not even purport to deal with similar state created or recognized causes of action. Sheets v. Lindsey, D.Utah 1991, 783 F.Supp. 577, affirmed 45 F.3d 1383, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 74, 516 U.S. 817, 133 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1379

Former school district employee's §§ 1983 claim, asserting that district racially discriminated against her in pay and benefits for the first four months of her employment, was subject to Georgia's two-year statute of limitations. Palmer v. Stewart County School Dist., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 178 Fed.Appx. 999, 2006 WL 1275850, Unreported. Civil Rights 1383

4947. ---- Intentional tort limitation statutes, personal injury limitations statutes

Section 1983 action in state with more than one statute of limitations is governed by residual or general personal injury statute of limitations, rather than statute of limitations for enumerated intentional torts. Owens v. Okure, U.S.N.Y.1989, 109 S.Ct. 573, 488 U.S. 235, 102 L.Ed.2d 594. Civil Rights 1379

4948. Commencement of period, limitations--Generally

Involuntary dismissal of §§1983 action, denominated "without prejudice" but expressly imposed as sanction for noncompliance with district court's discovery and related orders, did not cause limitations period to run anew from date of dismissal, as would normally be the case for non-prejudicial dismissal under applicable Puerto Rico limitations law; application of territorial restart rule would frustrate policy of repose, applicable in federal lawsuits. Lopez-Gonzalez v. Municipality of Comerio, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 404 F.3d 548. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

Although under continuing violation doctrine each day that county's allegedly unconstitutional waste-disposal ordinance was in effect started new limitations period for solid waste hauler's § 1983 cause of action against county, doctrine did not render statute of limitations irrelevant; hauler could still recover only damages caused by ordinance on or after date that preceded filing of action by length of state's limitations period for § 1983 actions. Seacoast Sanitation Ltd., Inc. v. Broward County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 1370. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Limitations period applicable to § 1983 claim against city and police commissioner, alleging that they had fostered policy pursuant to which perjury and falsification of documents were methods of securing indictments and convictions of innocent individuals, did not accrue for limitations purposes until date underlying criminal action against plaintiff was terminated in plaintiff's favor by decision of state appellate court. Crespo v. New York City Police Com'r, S.D.N.Y.1996, 930 F.Supp. 109. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Limitations period for bringing civil rights action based upon purported selective enforcement by members of state racing commission administrative penalty procedures began to run on date on which plaintiff and member of commission entered into confidential agreement. Cirasuola v. Westrin, E.D.Mich.1996, 915 F.Supp. 909, affirmed 124 F.3d 196. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

New York statute of limitations governing plaintiff's § 1983 and Bivens claims premised on alleged presentation of false and misleading statements in affidavits in support of warrant to search his residence began to run when warrant was presented and search executed, and was not delayed due to fact that warrant and supporting affidavits were sealed following presentation and execution; although plaintiff claimed that he had no way of knowing until documents were unsealed that warrant was illegal, he was clearly aware of search and seizure at time of execution and should have been aware at that time that there was possible violation of his rights. Triestman v. Probst, N.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 48. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Limitations periods for purposes of § 1983 action begin to run in response to discriminatory acts themselves and not in response to the continuing effects of past discriminatory acts. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4949. ---- Knowledge of injury, commencement of period, limitations

State prisoner's §§ 1983 claim seeking post-conviction access to physical evidence for the purpose of DNA testing accrued, for limitations purposes, on the date that the state court denied his request for DNA testing under state law; on that date, prisoner became aware of his alleged injury. Savory v. Lyons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 469 F.3d 667. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Property owner's §§ 1983 claim and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy claim against police officers and prosecutors, challenging the seizure of his automotive repair tools, trailers, and other equipment from his son-in-law's automotive shop, under the Fourth Amendment, accrued, for statute of limitations purposes, at the time of that the owner received constructive notice of the seizure, or at the latest, by the date that he filed a claim for return of his property, rather than on the date of the subsequent forfeiture proceeding; gravamen of the claim was that the defendants illegally seized his property, preventing him from using it. Kripp v. Luton, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 466 F.3d 1171. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Georgia's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, which applied to prisoners' §§ 1983 action against former and current members of Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles, began to run on date prisoners knew that they would have to serve more than one-third of their judicially imposed sentences and longer sentences than parole decision guidelines dictated, as a result of secret parole policy. Porter v. Ray, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 461 F.3d 1315. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

A §§ 1983 claim accrues, and the statute of limitations begins to run, on the date that the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the act which is the basis for the claim. Nieves-Vega v. Ortiz-Quinones, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 443 F.3d 134. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Fixed-base operator at municipal airport's cause of action against airport commission and municipal officials for fraudulent inducement to contract under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) and §§ 1983 accrued, and six and four year statutes of limitations began to run, when operator became aware gradually of the possibility of injury as business levels continued to fall short of anticipated goals. Barry Aviation Inc. v. Land O'Lakes Municipal Airport Com'n, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 377 F.3d 682, on remand 2004 WL 2778437. Limitation Of Actions 100(12)

Candidate's §§ 1983 claims against county clerk, alleging violations of candidate's rights under the Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments to an election free from fraud, stemming from clerk's tampering with ballots, accrued on the date of the election, rather than on the date the fraudulent ballots were seized from clerk; candidate had no reason to suspect that she had suffered constitutional injury until she was made aware of the inexplicable decision on the date of the election to commingle the fraudulent ballots with the untainted ones, irrevocably tainting the results of the election. Hileman v. Maze, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 367 F.3d 694, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Statute of limitations on prisoner's § 1983 action challenging retroactive application of a new Georgia parole policy began to run at time prisoner became aware that his parole reconsideration was being held outside the three-year maximum that was mandated by the Georgia Parole Board policy that was in place at the time he committed his crime; each time prisoner's parole reconsideration hearing was set, it did not amount to a distinct and separate injury warranting separate statute-of-limitations calculations, rather, inmate's injury, to the extent it ever existed, was when parole board applied its new policy, eliminating the requirement of parole review every three years for prisoner, retroactively. Brown v. Georgia Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1259. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

In most instances, date of accrual of limitations period for § 1983 action occurs when plaintiff knows, or has reason to know, of injury on which action is based. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

In wrongful discharge suits under § 1983, statute of limitations begins to run when plaintiff learns of decision to terminate his employment; to qualify as accrual date, it is only necessary that employee reliably knew he had lost his job, not the date when employer dotted particular "i" or crossed a particular "t." Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

One-year limitations period in which professor had to file § 1983 action against university and faculty members, alleging that he was discharged based on his political beliefs in violation of the First Amendment, accrued when employee learned that university would not renew his contract, not when dean met with professor and informed professor that he would not be re-hired or hired for any teaching position. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Equitable tolling of limitations period, in which professor had to file § 1983 action against university and faculty members after his contract was not renewed, allegedly due to political discrimination in violation of the First Amendment, was not warranted; applying limitations period would create no injustice to professor, who claimed that he knew all along that he was being discriminated against for his political beliefs. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Claims that city and state transportation department acted in racially discriminatory manner by allocating limited funds to erect sound barriers for highway construction project in predominantly Caucasian neighborhood, while not providing such barriers for similar project in predominantly African-American community, accrued when request by residents of African-American community for sound barriers was denied and residents knew or should have known that sound barriers were to be constructed around project in Caucasian neighborhood. Tolbert v. State of Ohio Dept. of Transp., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1999, 172 F.3d 934. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

In § 1983 action challenging allegedly unconstitutional medical or psychiatric confinement, action accrues, for limitations purposes, when plaintiff knows or has reason to know of injury which is basis of action; such knowledge depends on particular circumstances of case and does not necessarily accrue either at date of initial confinement or at date of plaintiff's release from custody. Ormiston v. Nelson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 117 F.3d 69. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Even if arrestee did not have actual knowledge of officer's allegedly improper conduct at lineup until he received transcript of Wade hearing, he had reason to know of those facts, for purposes of accrual of his civil rights claim, at the time of the Wade hearing, which his attorney attended. Veal v. Geraci, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 23 F.3d 722. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

City police officer's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim and his selective prosecution claim, based on city employer's filing of disciplinary charges against officer, allegedly for commenting on matters of public concern, accrued, for limitations purposes, on the date that officer was advised of the disciplinary charges brought against him, rather than on the date of effective service on officer of the disciplinary charges. Chittenden v. Connors, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 463. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Homeowners' equal protection claims under §§ 1983 and Massachusetts Civil Rights Act (MCRA) accrued on date when town issued an order of conditions affirmatively authorizing the purchasers to build a home on lot across from homeowners' lot; when the public order of conditions issued, homeowners knew or should reasonably have known of the facts necessary to assert their equal protection claim based on allegations that town officials intentionally and without a rational basis assured them that lot was unbuildable, but later authorized the purchasers to construct a home on the very same property, thus compromising homeowners' privacy and view. Sampson v. Town of Salisbury, D.Mass.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 271. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Genuine issue of material fact as to when former employee for not-for-profit corporation charged with administering federal workforce-training funds for municipalities learned that she would not be hired by replacement workforce development system precluded summary judgment on limitations grounds in employee's §§ 1983 action against municipalities. Krause v. Buffalo and Erie County Workforce Development Consortium, Inc., W.D.N.Y.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 352. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

The §§ 1983 cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations commences when the plaintiff possesses sufficient facts about the harm done to him that reasonable inquiry will reveal his cause of action. Guseh v. North Carolina Cent. University, M.D.N.C.2005, 423 F.Supp.2d 550. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

A §§ 1983 claim accrues when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the injury that is the basis of the claim. Wilson v. City of Fountain Valley, C.D.Cal.2004, 372 F.Supp.2d 1178. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Limitations period did not commence running on released prisoner's civil rights claims until she became of aware of alleged nondisclosure of exculpatory evidence and misleading statements made by prosecutor, firearms examiner, and lab analyst, although she was injured several years earlier when she pleaded guilty to second-degree murder without benefit of alleged exculpatory evidence. Bembenek v. Donohoo, E.D.Wis.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 942. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Legal duty to investigate and bring § 1983 action against employees of Florida Department of Children and Families (DCAF) in their individual capacities, for permitting child to live with abusive parent as foster child and adopted child between ages 2 and 6, would not be imputed, for purposes of commencing the limitations period, to guardian ad litem who had been appointed solely for purposes of child dependency proceeding with respect to adoptive parent. Omar ex rel. Cannon v. Lindsey, M.D.Fla.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 1287. Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

Housing developer's equal protection claims against city officials for selective enforcement of city codes against him accrued when he first knew or had reason to know of the injury that was the basis of each claim. Thompson v. City of Shasta Lake, E.D.Cal.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 1017. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Section 1983 action by parent against school board and school officials, arising from their failure to place her disabled son in special education classes, accrued, and two year limitations period began to run, when decision not to place student in special education classes was rendered; even though parent was not advised of her appeal rights following decision, she did learn of the basis of her claim when decision was rendered. Smith ex rel. Duck v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 370, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 402 F.3d 468. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Under New Jersey law, two-year statute of limitations on neighbors' civil rights claims against police officer, which arose when officer allegedly took neighbor's son to police station after the son had thrown rocks and dirt into officer's swimming pool, began to accrue on day of swimming pool incident, even if the neighbors were unaware of their legal rights, as they had knowledge on the day of the incident of what happened and the persons involved. Simone v. Narducci, D.N.J.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 381. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Prisoner's § 1983 due process claim, based on police officers' failure to comply in good faith with court order requiring them to run fingerprints found at murder scene through automated fingerprint identification system, did not accrue until when officer admitted, five years after initially reporting that the fingerprints were not found on system, that fingerprints from murder scene had matched those of certain individual; prisoner had no reason to know until that time that police department's original response to court order had been inaccurate. Newsome v. James, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1318. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations began to run on fraud claim under § 1983 when plaintiff became aware that he had suffered injury or had sufficient information to know that he had suffered injury. Porter v. Charter Medical Corp., N.D.Tex.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1427. Limitation Of Actions 100(1)

Section 1983 claim accrues when plaintiff knows or has reason to know of injury that forms basis of his or her cause of action. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

All actions brought under § 1983 are subject to one-year statute of limitations which begins to run when plaintiff knows, or reasonably should know of alleged injury. Santa Fe Springs Realty Corp. v. City of Westminster, C.D.Cal.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1341. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Claims accrued under federal civil rights provisions when plaintiff knew or had reason to know of injury which was basis for action and thus federal civil rights claims based on injuries which were such that plaintiff would have known or had to reason to know of injuries immediately and thus claims were time-barred under three-year limitations period for personal injury actions absent showing of grounds for tolling statute. Benyi v. Broome County, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1995, 887 F.Supp. 395, reconsideration denied. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights claimant's § 1983 cause of action against state investigators for concealment of, or tampering with, exculpatory evidence in underlying state murder trial accrued when Pennsylvania Supreme Court discharged claimant from state custody and barred retrial which finally terminated charges in claimant's favor, rather then on date of prior order reversing conviction and remanding for retrial due to evidentiary grounds unrelated to basis of § 1983 claim. Smith v. Holtz, M.D.Pa.1995, 879 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 87 F.3d 108, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1041, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights suit by arrestee alleging excessive force accrued, and New York's three-year statute of limitations for personal injury suits began to run, on date of shootout with police giving rise to suit. Perez v. Police Dept. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1994, 872 F.Supp. 49, affirmed 71 F.3d 405. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Issues of fact as to when former student's § 1983 action against school district, arising out of elementary school teacher's alleged sexual molestation of her and alleging that school promulgated policies allowing sexual abuse to flourish, accrued precluded summary judgment on limitations grounds, even though alleged molestation took place 13 years before action was filed; it was not clear when person in student situation would have realized that she was injured by district's allegedly unconstitutional conduct. Doe v. Paukstat, E.D.Wis.1994, 863 F.Supp. 884. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

For purposes of limitations period governing § 1983 claim, as a matter of law, former junior high school student knew or had reason to know of alleged sexual abuse by former teacher before he sought counseling, even though student claimed to have repressed memory of abuse until he underwent counseling; no reasonable finder of fact could believe that boy molested repeatedly between his 13th and 16th birthdays would not have known what was occurring, although case might be different if victim was younger or abuse more threatening. Ernstes v. Warner, S.D.Ind.1994, 860 F.Supp. 1338. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Under Federal law, civil rights action accrues when plaintiff knows or has reason to know of injury which is basis of action. Clay v. LaPorta, E.D.Va.1993, 815 F.Supp. 911, affirmed 36 F.3d 1091. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Statutory period for bringing § 1983 civil rights claim begins to run under New York law upon accrual of claim, i.e., when claimant knows or has reason to know of injury which underlies action. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights claim alleging improper documentation in parole file was time-barred when parolee knew of parole officer's alleged improper record-keeping for more than three years before filing suit. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights claims against supervising parole officer arising from imposition of curfew accrued when parolee obtained knowledge of officer's supervisory role over decision, and thus were time-barred when brought more than three years thereafter. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4950. ---- Ordinance enactments, commencement of period, limitations

In view of fact that state law provided no remedy for regulatory takings at time alleged taking occurred, § 1983 claim based on facial challenge to ordinance accrued when final version of ordinance was passed, notwithstanding property owner's contention that cause of action did not accrue until property values increased, and that statute of limitations was inapplicable to claim for declaratory judgment. Levald, Inc. v. City of Palm Desert, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 998 F.2d 680, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 924, 510 U.S. 1093, 127 L.Ed.2d 217. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Advertising company's allegation of unconstitutional taking resulting from city ordinance restricting off-premise outdoor advertising sign accrued for limitation purposes at time ordinance was enacted and not at time city's demanded that nonconforming signs be removed; it was clear when ordinance was approved that signs not located on federal highway system were subject to ordinance. National Advertising Co. v. City of Raleigh, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1158, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1997, 504 U.S. 931, 118 L.Ed.2d 593. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations on constitutional challenge to county's mobile home rent control ordinance brought by owners of mobile home parks began to run from date of ordinance's enactment, not from date county amended ordinance to remove sunset provision, and new cause of action did not accrue each time tenant sold mobile home to new tenant and owners were precluded by ordinance from raising rent. De Anza Properties X, Ltd. v. County of Santa Cruz, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 936 F.2d 1084. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Section 1983 action for temporary taking of landowner's property caused by ultimately invalidated city zoning ordinances did not accrue until final decision of state appellate court invalidating zoning ordinance and ordering city to accept landowner's site plan application; action did not accrue with passage of unlawful zoning ordinance or denial of landowner's site plans. Corn v. City of Lauderdale Lakes, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 904 F.2d 585. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Waste hauler's claim against county under § 1983 for adopting waste disposal ordinance that allegedly violated dormant commerce clause accrued when ordinance took effect, not when it was passed. Randy's Sanitation, Inc. v. Wright County, Minn., D.Minn.1999, 65 F.Supp.2d 1017. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Company's action challenging constitutionality of village sign code and ordinance granting company 12-year variance from that code accrued when company's billboard became subject to sign code and to ordinance, not when variance expired. Universal Outdoor, Inc. v. Elk Grove Village, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1125. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Viewed as facial challenge, apartment buildings covered by ordinance which prohibited owners of apartments subject to rent control from ceasing to rent them without removal permit, were burdened, if at all, upon mere enactment of ordinance; thus, statute of limitations on facial challenge to ordinance under § 1983 began to run upon enactment of ordinance. Gilbert v. City of Cambridge, D.Mass.1990, 745 F.Supp. 42, affirmed 932 F.2d 51, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 192, 502 U.S. 866, 116 L.Ed.2d 153, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 922, 502 U.S. 1051, 116 L.Ed.2d 820. City's decision to institute formal hearings against nightclub under city's public nuisance abatement ordinance, and its notice to nightclub owners of that decision, rather than actual beginning of the abatement hearing itself, was the "operative decision" that triggered the statute of limitations for nightclub owners' § 1983 claims against city for violation of their free expression, equal protection and due process rights; the hearing was simply the effect of that decision and was not a separately unconstitutional act. RK Ventures, Inc. v. City of Seattle, C.A.9 (Wash.) 2002, 307 F.3d 1045. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Newly-formed krewe's claim for damages under § 1983 arising from application of parish's allegedly unconstitutional ordinance requiring payment of security costs to obtain Mardi Gras parade permit accrued when payment was demanded. Toga Soc., Inc. v. Lee, E.D.La.2004, 323 F.Supp.2d 779. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Although under continuing violation doctrine each day that county's allegedly unconstitutional waste-disposal ordinance was in effect started new limitations period for solid waste hauler's § 1983 cause of action against county, doctrine did not render statute of limitations irrelevant; hauler could still recover only damages caused by ordinance on or after date that preceded filing of action by length of state's limitations period for § 1983 actions. Seacoast Sanitation Ltd., Inc. v. Broward County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 1370. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Under North Carolina law, there is no independent cause of action for civil conspiracy; claim can arise only where there is underlying claim for unlawful conduct. Byrd v. Hopson, W.D.N.C.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 594, affirmed 108 Fed.Appx. 749, 2004 WL 1770261. Conspiracy 1.1

4952. ---- Arrests, commencement of period, limitations

The two-year limitations period applicable to arrestee's Fourth Amendment claim for false arrest against city police officer who allegedly planted evidence to support his arrest commenced to run when charges against him were dismissed, not at the time of the arrest, if it were determined on remand that arrestee's attack on his arrest would challenge the only evidence supporting a potential conviction; if arrestee was arrested and prosecuted solely on the basis of drugs planted by arresting officers, then any attack on the arrest would necessarily challenge the legality of a prosecution premised on the planted drugs. Wiley v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 361 F.3d 994, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 61, 543 U.S. 819, 160 L.Ed.2d 28, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 68, 543 U.S. 819, 160 L.Ed.2d 28. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Arrestee's claim of false arrest under § 1983 did not accrue, and statute of limitations did not begin to run, until his state conviction for murdering his parents was reversed on direct appeal and state dropped charges against him, since conviction was based in large part on arrestee's post-arrest statements, which would have been inadmissible against him if he was falsely arrested. Gauger v. Hendle, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 349 F.3d 354, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Former criminal defendant's § 1983 claim for his alleged unlawful arrest accrued, for limitations purposes, at time of arrest, prior to vacation of defendant's conviction, as defendant's success on his § 1983 claim would not necessarily undermine validity of his conviction. Booker v. Ward, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 94 F.3d 1052, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 952, 519 U.S. 1113, 136 L.Ed.2d 840. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Claim under § 1983 for injuries sustained during arrest "accrued" for limitations purposes at time of arrest; accordingly, under California law, arrestee's disability, consisting of continuous custody from time of arrest until arrestee had served his prison sentence, existed at time claim accrued and tolled applicable limitations period. Elliott v. City of Union City, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 25 F.3d 800. Limitation Of Actions 75

Arrestee's civil rights claim against officer based on allegedly suggestive lineup accrued no later than date on which he was sentenced for crimes of which he was convicted with the aid of that identification. Veal v. Geraci, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 23 F.3d 722. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Iowa's two-year statute of limitations, applicable to arrestee's civil rights action against police officers who allegedly assaulted him during his arrest, commenced to run at time of arrest, rather than when criminal charges brought in connection with arrest were dismissed; although arrestee claimed he was unaware he had civil rights claim until charges were dismissed, he alleged that he had told officers that he would bring legal action against them for assaulting him at time of his arrest. Davis v. Ross, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 995 F.2d 137. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Latest date that arrestee could have been aware that his civil rights were violated for purposes of determining whether action was time barred under Idaho's limitations period for personal injury action, was when charges against him were dismissed. Hallstrom v. City of Garden City, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1993, 991 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 549, 510 U.S. 991, 126 L.Ed.2d 450. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights claims challenging alleged unlawful interrogations, searches and seizures, forcible entries and arrest by police accrued when the actions actually occurred and thus were time barred under applicable two-year statute of limitations, absent any showing as to why plaintiff did not know of injuries at time of police actions which allegedly caused injuries. Johnson v. Johnson County Com'n Bd., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1991, 925 F.2d 1299. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Undercover police officer's civil rights claim based on allegation that he was wrongfully arrested for participating in undercover investigation accrued at time of his arrest. McCune v. City of Grand Rapids, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1988, 842 F.2d 903. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Former employee's cause of action against his former employers for deprivation of civil rights arising from his conviction for retaining tools owned by his former employers after he quit his job during wage dispute arose when complaint was filed against him and his arrest occurred and not when his conviction was subsequently reversed, and thus former employee's claim was barred under I.C. § 5-218. Gowin v. Altmiller, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1981, 663 F.2d 820. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Cause of action for assault accrued, and three-year statute of limitations under New York law, applicable to claims under §§§§ 1983 and 1985, began to run, when arrestee was allegedly beaten, kicked, and punched during his arrest. Hussain v. Commissioner (John Doe) of Nassau County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.2005, 368 F.Supp.2d 216. Limitation Of Actions 55(4); Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Former one-year statute of limitations on false arrest and imprisonment claims did not begin to accrue as to civil rights plaintiff's false arrest civil rights claims until charges against him were dismissed by local prosecutor, and thus, where claims were not yet time-barred upon effective date of new two-year state limitations period for false arrest claims, plaintiff had two years from date of dismissal of criminal charges in which to file civil rights claims.

Thompson v. City of Shasta Lake, E.D.Cal.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 1017. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights claims for deprivation of parent's First Amendment rights, false arrest, and false imprisonment, arising from issuance of restraining order prohibiting parent's entrance into public schools and his subsequent arrest for violating order, accrued, at latest, upon parent's arrest, such that claims brought more than three years thereafter were time barred. Assegai v. Bloomfield Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 65, affirmed 165 Fed.Appx. 932, 2006 WL 304793. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

District of Columbia's residual three-year statute of limitations applied to § 1983 claims alleging use of excessive force, false arrest and imprisonment, malicious prosecution, and conspiracy. Parker v. Grand Hyatt Hotel, D.D.C.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 79. Conspiracy 16; Civil Rights 1382; Civil Rights 1384

Claim under § 1983 alleging false arrest accrues on date of plaintiff's arrest. Torres v. McLaughlin, E.D.Pa.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1353, reversed 163 F.3d 169, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 797, 528 U.S. 1079, 145 L.Ed.2d 672. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Section 1983 claim against police detectives for arrest without probable cause accrued, for purposes of limitations, when plaintiff was arrested. Booker v. Ward, N.D.Ill.1995, 888 F.Supp. 869. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

A § 1983 claim for false arrest and false imprisonment accrued, for purposes of Pennsylvania two-year personal injury statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 actions, when plaintiff knew or had reason to know of injury forming basis of action and that point was date on which plaintiff alleged she was improperly arrested. Hamidian v. Occulto, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 350. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Section 1983 action alleging false imprisonment accrued on date of arrest, and two-year Illinois statute of limitations began to run on date of arrest. Anderson v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1992, 803 F.Supp. 1327, reconsideration denied. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Plaintiff's claim of constitutional violations stemming from illegal search and seizure, unlawful arrest and imprisonment, and physical abuse accrued on date on which events occurred and were not affected by subsequent dismissal of criminal charges so that actions were untimely where they were filed more than two years after events occurred. Blackmon v. Perez, E.D.Va.1992, 791 F.Supp. 1086. Civil Rights 1382; Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations on plaintiff's civil rights claim against police officers for alleged improper failure to arrest husband for violating protective order began to run on dates that officers failed to act and not on date that plaintiff was physically injured by her husband due to officers' prior failures to act. Eagleston v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1992, 790 F.Supp. 416, affirmed 41 F.3d 865, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 18. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Puerto Rico's one-year limitations period applicable to civil rights action arising from police officer's alleged use of excessive force in dealing with arrestee commenced to run on date of arrest and expired 365 days later. Olivo Ayala v. Lopez Feliciano, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 729 F.Supp. 9. Time 4; Time 9(2)

Civil rights action under § 1983, seeking damages stemming from prosecutions under ordinance, which restricted placement of political signs on private property and which was later found to be unconstitutional, accrued at time of citizens' arrest or at their conviction, not when ordinance was definitively declared unconstitutional. Jordan v. Rocco, N.D.Ohio 1986, 648 F.Supp. 942. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Three-year statute of limitations for excessive force claim brought under § 1983, supplied by New York law, began to run on date that law enforcement officer punched homicide arrestee in stomach, as part of interrogation. Quiles

v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21961008, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Limitations period governing arrestee's § 1983 suit against state police department, its superintendent, and state troopers for alleged violations of his constitutional rights in the search of his person and vehicle, and in the alleged use of excessive force at the time of his arrest ran from the date of the injury, rather than being equitably tolled until the date he allegedly learned that he could file a legal action, or the date on which he received from the department documents related to the incident at issue; such documents were not necessary for him to acquire actual knowledge of the facts forming the basis for his action. Irizarry v. Whittel, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31760240, Unreported, on reconsideration 2003 WL 221736. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 104.5

4953. ---- Child welfare, commencement of period, limitations

Claim of grandmother of severely mentally retarded teenager that no fair hearing was held on teenager's school placement and that state officials failed to give grandmother notice of proceedings for foster care were barred by statue of limitations where they were not brought within two years of date of incident. Gardner by Gardner v. Parson, C.A.3 (Del.) 1989, 874 F.2d 131. Civil Rights 1380

4953A. ---- Adoption, commencement of period, limitations

Adopted child's § 1983 claim against employees of Florida Department of Children and Families (DCAF) in their individual capacities, for permitting him to be adopted by abusive parent, did not accrue, for limitations purposes, when child was removed from adoptive parent's custody at age six; a six-year-old child could not have been cognizant of his rights. Omar ex rel. Cannon v. Lindsey, M.D.Fla.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 1287. Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

4954. ---- Confiscation of property, commencement of period, limitations

Property owner's §§ 1983 claim and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy claim against prosecutors and others challenging the forfeiture of his seized property, on ground that the forfeiture process operated in violation of owner's due process rights by failing to give him fair notice of the proceeding, accrued, for limitations purposes, on the date of the forfeiture proceeding, rather than on the date of the seizure; the date of the forfeiture was the date that owner was permanently deprived of his property without notice. Kripp v. Luton, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 466 F.3d 1171. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Landowner's §§ 1983 takings claim against Puerto Rico officials accrued for purposes of Puerto Rico's one-year statute of limitations when landowner's property was sold to government of Puerto Rico with understanding that it would be used for expressway project, not 30 years later, when landowner learned that government had no intention of building the expressway at time the property was acquired; landowner should have been on notice that investigation was warranted when the property was abandoned and no other parcel was frozen in entire 30- mile stretch where expressway was to have been constructed. Vistamar, Inc. v. Fagundo-Fagundo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 430 F.3d 66. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Two-year statute of limitations on civil rights action arising out of forfeitures arose when state officials searched and seized the property, not when state court action challenging the seizure was concluded. Kaster v. State of Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1992, 975 F.2d 1381, rehearing denied. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations on arrestee's §§ 1983 action against North Carolina Department of Revenue Controlled Substance Tax Division enforcement officer for damages arising out of officer's garnishment of funds in arrestee's possession at time of his arrest on charges of sale of cocaine began to run when Division issued assessment against arrestee, rather than when charges were subsequently dismissed. Williams v. Starling, M.D.N.C.2005, 353

Taking occurred at the moment the property was adversely possessed by state and an easement by prescription was created, and state law claim accrued, for limitations purposes, at time record owner's predecessor was aware or should have been aware of the injury; thus, three year limitations period barred underlying state claim for just compensation, and consequently federal claim, which was filed twenty-six years after taking occurred but within three years of Rhode Island Supreme Court's final decision that state had acquired owner's property by adverse possession and easement by prescription, was similarly barred by the statute of limitations. Pascoag Reservoir & Dam, LLC v. Rhode Island, D.R.I.2002, 217 F.Supp.2d 206, affirmed 337 F.3d 87, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 962, 540 U.S. 1090, 157 L.Ed.2d 795. Limitation Of Actions 95(7)

Section 1983 claim arising from defendants' allegedly illegal seizure of plaintiffs' personal property pursuant to writ of seizure accrued no later than date upon which both plaintiffs became aware that seizure occurred and that process of obtaining writ may have been infirm, rather than upon subsequent date on which property was returned to plaintiffs when writ of seizure was vacated; "continuing violation" doctrine was inapplicable, as alleged deprivation of property involved single act, i.e., seizure of property pursuant to writ later adjudged invalid, and, although plaintiffs were deprived of their property until it was returned to them, that was continual ill effect of original act of seizure. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Inmate's Bivens action arising out of forfeiture of money accrued, for purposes of Georgia two-year statute of limitations applicable to §§ 1983 actions, in year that he claimed Drug Enforcement Agency agents knew his identity and other personal information and issued a declaration of forfeiture allegedly without notifying him. McKenzie v. U.S. Department of Justice, Drug Enforcement Agency, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 143 Fed.Appx. 165, 2005 WL 1669597, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4955. ---- Conspiracy, commencement of period, limitations

Civil rights plaintiffs' cause of action based on alleged conspiracy between judge and attorneys accrued when plaintiffs learned of conspiracy. Kimes v. Stone, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1121. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Accused's § 1983 and Bivens claims against state and federal law enforcement officers, for allegedly conspiring to violate accused's rights during criminal prosecution, accrued when accused first learned that state officers had in fact been promised compensation for their participation in criminal investigation, contrary to their sworn statements, rather than at completion of accused's habeas corpus proceeding when his conviction was reversed. Bagley v. CMC Real Estate Corp., C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 923 F.2d 758, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1161, 502 U.S. 1091, 117 L.Ed.2d 409. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Although civil rights plaintiff asserted claims for false arrest and false imprisonment as well as for malicious prosecution, all claims essentially related to alleged conspiracy to "frame" him for murder of police officer and statute of limitations did not accrue until conspiracy ran its course. Robinson v. Maruffi, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1990, 895 F.2d 649. Limitation Of Actions 55(1)

Accrual of civil rights causes of action arising out of conspirators' separate wrongs against plaintiff was not postponed until conspiracy was complete. Assegai v. Bloomfield Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 65, affirmed 165 Fed.Appx. 932, 2006 WL 304793. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Prisoner's § 1983 civil conspiracy claim against police officers based on their actions in maliciously prosecuting him for murder did not accrue until date charges against him were dropped. Newsome v. James, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1318. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Section 1983 claim against private citizen in connection with alleged conspiracy to conceal exculpatory evidence in state murder prosecution accrued on date of plaintiff's discharge from state custody, and action was thus timely when brought within two years of that date. Smith v. Wambaugh, M.D.Pa.1995, 887 F.Supp. 752, affirmed 87 F.3d 108, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1041, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights § 1983 claim by state court plaintiff for misconduct involving state court judge, state court defendant, his attorney, and witness who failed to appear under subpoena, with respect to which last specific instance of alleged misconduct cited was judge's having punished plaintiff for contempt in November 1982, was time barred under borrowed Connecticut three-year general tort statute; action was commenced in February 1986, plaintiff did not allege active concealment of conspiracy, and plaintiff could not simply postpone accrued suit claims indefinitely for discrete, patent wrongs on ground of connecting and ongoing conspiracy. Vitale v. Nuzzo, D.Conn.1986, 674 F.Supp. 402. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4956. ---- Education benefits, commencement of period, limitations

Disabled student's IDEA, ADA, Rehabilitation Act, and § 1983 claims, based on school system's refusal to continue providing sign language interpreter after initial school year, accrued, for limitations purposes, at beginning of second school year; under circumstances, it was reasonable for student's parents to wait until start of school year before concluding that system would not provide interpreter. Nieves-Marquez v. Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 353 F.3d 108. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Schools 155.5(2.1)

Statute of limitations on parents' claim under § 1983 for reimbursement for private school tuition began to run when their disabled child was removed from public school and placed in private school; parents knew that public school was not providing an intensive, systematic, phonics method of reading and that their child was "suffering terribly" in public school, and parents had received booklet two years before that time informing them of their rights, including their right to initiate due process hearing. James v. Upper Arlington School Dist., S.D.Ohio 1997, 987 F.Supp. 1017, affirmed and remanded 228 F.3d 764, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1655, 532 U.S. 995, 149 L.Ed.2d 637. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4957. ---- Employment, commencement of period, limitations

The rule in an employment discrimination case is that the limitations period begins to run when the plaintiff receives unambiguous and authoritative notice of the discriminatory act which is another way of saying that the period begins to run when the employee learns of the adverse employment action. Nieves-Vega v. Ortiz-Quinones, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 443 F.3d 134. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Limitations period for §§ 1983 action by director-level employee of Puerto Rico territorial agency against agency officials, alleging that employee's transfer and change of duties amounted to demotion that was motivated by political affiliation discrimination, commenced when employee wrote letter to agency's executive director objecting that transfer was politically motivated act that effectively relieved him of his directorship, not several months later when employee was removed from his original office space and lost his remaining perquisites of directorship, and new official took over employee's old duties. Villanueva-Mendez v. Nieves-Vazquez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 440 F.3d 11. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Statute of limitations on § 1983 action, alleging wrongful termination of employment due to race and politics, began to run on date that employer sent employee letter indicating that he was suspended indefinitely, rather than later date on which employee received another letter from employer indicating that two internal charges had been lodged against him and offering him an opportunity to defend himself. Morris v. Government Development Bank of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 27 F.3d 746. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Director of university sports complex's § 1983 claim, alleging demotion on basis of political affiliation during reorganization, accrued no later than on date on which director wrote letter acknowledging his duties under reorganization, which established that applicable personal injury statute of limitations under Puerto Rico law expired one year from date of letter and full month before director filed complaint. Muniz-Cabrero v. Ruiz, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 23 F.3d 607. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil service employee's § 1983 claim arising out of his termination accrued when he received his accumulated vacation pay. Rivera-Muriente v. Agosto-Alicea, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1992, 959 F.2d 349. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Assistant city manager's civil rights claim against city for discharging him without pretermination hearing accrued, for limitations purposes, on date that his employment was actually terminated, rather than on earlier date that he received notice that he would be discharged; to trigger statute of limitations on date before actual termination of employment, assistant city manager had to receive not only notice of discharge decision, but unequivocal notice that decision was final and that it would be followed by no further process. Hoesterey v. City of Cathedral City, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 945 F.2d 317, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1941, 504 U.S. 910, 118 L.Ed.2d 546. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

The three-year statute of limitations governing an employee's discrimination claims under Massachusetts law began running when the employee found out that his employer had decided to terminate his employment, not on the date the employee was formally notified that he was terminated. Ching v. Mitre Corp., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1990, 921 F.2d 11 . Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Teachers' civil rights cause of action began to accrue on day they received notice of school district's layoff decision, and not on date of actual termination, where teachers claimed they were unconstitutionally laid off, and illegal act giving rise to that claim was layoff decision. Kuemmerlein v. Board of Educ. of Madison Metropolitan School Dist., C.A.7 (Wis.) 1990, 894 F.2d 257. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

School district superintendent's refusal to reinstate coordinator of evaluation subsequent to coordinator's demotion was not separate act of discrimination, but rather a consequence of initial demotion, and limitation period for coordinator's § 1983 action commenced as of date coordinator received notice of demotion. De Leon Otero v. Rubero, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1987, 820 F.2d 18. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Cause of action brought under §§ 1983, based on public employee's demotion without a hearing, accrued, and one-year limitations period under Puerto Rico law began to run, when employee received letter that informed him he was being demoted on ground that he had been improperly promoted in the first place. Gutierrez v. Molina, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 168. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Three-year statute of limitations applicable to university professor's employment discrimination claims began to run upon alleged failure to promote professor more than three years before he filed suit. Guseh v. North Carolina Cent. University, M.D.N.C.2005, 423 F.Supp.2d 550. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Date on which official from Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority (PREPA) allegedly advised employee that PREPA should approve his retirement due to mental impairment and that his emotional condition was not work related, and on which employee was notified of charges against him for alleged illegal appropriation of electrical materials, was accrual date for his §§ 1983 political discrimination claim, inasmuch as discrimination alleged was not related only to his ADA claim. Rivera Sanchez v. Autoridad de Energia Electrica, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 302. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Demoted Puerto Rican agency employee's §§ 1983 claim, alleging that demotion was politically motivated, accrued, for limitations purposes, on date he received notice of demotion. Camacho-Cardona v. Lopez Pena,

D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 298. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Statute of limitations on former government employees' §§ 1983 claims was tolled from date they file petition for class certification until date class certification was denied. Rivera-Torres v. Rey-Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 352 F.Supp.2d 152. Limitation Of Actions 126.5

Former employee's § 1983 claims against former employer and its executive director accrued on the date that former employee was dismissed, given former employee's assertion, in charge filed with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), that last discriminatory act she experienced occurred on that date. Iravedra v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 570. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations for violation of physician's rights under § 1983 began to run on date physician received notice of termination from staff of county hospital, rather than earlier date when county board voted to terminate him; letter stated that termination was effective immediately, and made no reference to date of any earlier action. Draghi v. County of Cook, N.D.Ill.1997, 985 F.Supp. 747. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

For statute of limitations purposes, causes of action under § 1983 based on refusal to renew nontenured university instructor's contract accrued on date she received letter notifying her of nonrenewal of her contract, rather than from dates of events allegedly forming basis for non-renewal decision. Anderson-Free v. Steptoe, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 945. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations period for §§ 1983 and 1985 civil rights actions based on employment discrimination begins when complainant is first notified of original employment decision. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Public employee's § 1983 employment discrimination claim accrued no later than at time she had filed several grievances concerning incidents underlying her § 1983 claim. Gutierrez-Usera v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., D.Puerto Rico 1997, 967 F.Supp. 35. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Female teachers' alleged injuries from application of state teachers' retirement fund "break-in-service" rules occurred upon teachers' return to teaching and thus claims were time barred when § 1983 action was filed more than three years after their return. Shelford v. New York State Teachers Retirement System, E.D.N.Y.1994, 889 F.Supp. 89, affirmed 60 F.3d 811. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights claims arising from discharge from employment accrue when employee is notified of employer's decision, not on date decision becomes effective. Uhl v. Swanstrom, N.D.Iowa 1995, 876 F.Supp. 1545, affirmed 79 F.3d 751. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Police officer's § 1983 complaint against village arising from termination was not barred by six-month laches period; village failed to demonstrate prejudice in that it failed to identify individuals who were allegedly unavailable due to delay, and allegation that back pay exposure was increased by delay was insufficient to establish prejudice since suit was filed before expiration of two-year statute of limitations but after six-month laches period. Ericksen v. Village of Willow Springs, N.D.Ill.1995, 876 F.Supp. 951. Civil Rights 1383

Statute of limitations on § 1983 action arising from elementary school principal's termination began to run when principal learned that board voted not to renew her contract, regardless of fact that principal may have believed that defendants violated her alleged continued right to employment by so voting. Asllani v. Board of Educ. of City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1993, 845 F.Supp. 1209. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Three-year statute of limitation applicable to plaintiff's § 1983 race discrimination claim arising from alleged preselection based on race of African American to position of Deputy Director of Emergency Ambulance Bureau of District of Columbia Fire Department did not begin to run until plaintiff obtained through discovery document referring to preselection; until that time, plaintiff could not reasonably have known facts surrounding preselection, since person had been appointed "acting" Deputy Director and fire department solicited applications for post. Zervas v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 817 F.Supp. 148. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Police officer's § 1983 action against city arising out of her termination accrued, for purposes of Florida four-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, on date she received notice from police chief of imminent termination, even if notice was oral and not written. Farmer v. City of Fort Lauderdale, S.D.Fla.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1101. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Discharged city employee's § 1983 action alleging politically motivated discharge accrued on day he was notified of his dismissal, not on day his dismissal became effective. Conde v. Beltran Pena, D.Puerto Rico 1992, 793 F.Supp. 33. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Puerto Rico public employees's civil rights suit under § 1983, alleging discrimination because of political affiliation, accrued, for limitations purposes, no later than the date of his retirement. Reyes Coreano v. Puerto Rico Ports Authority, D.Puerto Rico 1992, 790 F.Supp. 36. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Discharged county airport authority employees' § 1983 claims for discharge without due process did not accrue when employees received notice of layoffs, but rather accrued when authority's executive director and board of trustees overturned decisions of grievance panels that employees had been wrongfully denied transfers to new positions in lieu of layoff, thereby causing termination to become official and true harm to occur. Clements v. Airport Authority of Washoe County, D.Nev.1991, 781 F.Supp. 1493. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Former assistant high school principal's § 1983 claim alleging that his termination for lapse of required state certification violated procedural due process accrued, for statute of limitations purposes, when principal was terminated, not when state department of education reinstated certification. Moiles v. Marple Newtown School Dist., E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1964393, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4958. ---- Fair trial denial, commencement of period, limitations

Section 1983 claims against author, investigators, and state attorney for damages resulting from unlawful conviction and confinement, based on alleged suppression of exculpatory evidence and contrived inculpatory evidence, did not accrue until state Supreme Court ordered murder charges against claimant dismissed, inasmuch as, until then, successful claim would necessarily have implied invalidity of conviction in claimant's pending criminal prosecution. Smith v. Holtz, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 87 F.3d 108, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1041, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Acquitted arson and murder defendant's § 1983 claim for denial of fair trial arising from withholding or conspiracy to withhold exculpatory evidence, or for malicious prosecution, accrued when charges against him were dismissed. Girdler v. Dale, D.Ariz.1994, 859 F.Supp. 1279. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Section 1983 plaintiff's causes of action for denial of fair trial, equal protection and due process accrued no later than date on which he knew that prosecution in criminal case against him had failed to turn over exculpatory evidence, rather than date of his discharge from incarceration, despite claim that defendants' actions constituted "continuing course of conduct"; concealment of exculpatory evidence did not continue through date of plaintiff's discharge, pendency of plaintiff's state appeal had no effect on running of limitations period, and Pennsylvania law did not toll running of statute during period of incarceration. Smith v. Holtz, M.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 227, on reconsideration 879 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 87 F.3d 108, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1041, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4959. ---- Labor relations, commencement of period, limitations

Nursing home operator's National Labor Relations Act-premised § 1983 claim, that union officials and state representatives improperly interfered with collective bargaining negotiations, accrued at time operator knew of his failure to pay wage parity pursuant to bargaining agreement, allegedly because of officials' and representatives' failure to perform on their representations, and, thus, claim was barred under New York's three-year limitations period. Local 144, Hotel, Hosp., Nursing Home and Allied Services Union, SEIU, AFL-CIO v. C.N.H. Management Associates, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1990, 741 F.Supp. 415. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4960. ---- Malicious prosecutions, commencement of period, limitations

Ex-convict's § 1983 claim based on prosecution's violation of Brady v. Maryland by withholding exculpatory evidence in state murder trial accrued, for statute of limitations purposes, when conviction was vacated in federal habeas corpus proceedings and case was remanded with instructions to either conduct new trial or order ex-convict's release from prison; as of that date, § 1983 suit would not have demonstrated invalidity of murder conviction, as it had been vacated, and retrial necessarily could not have implicated same constitutional violations. Smith v. Gonzales, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2000, 222 F.3d 1220. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights claims pursuant to § 1983 that arose from arrest of claimants pursuant to warrant predicated on false allegations by undercover officer and informant, and subsequent prosecutions, more closely resembled common law tort of malicious prosecution than false imprisonment, since arrest occurred incident to warrant, and so claims accrued when prosecutions ended in acquittals. Calero-Colon v. Betancourt-Lebron, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1995, 68 F.3d 1. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Accrual date of nursing home employee's §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment claim for false arrest/false imprisonment was date of her arrest, which followed investigation into alleged patient abuse, where evidence used against her in criminal trial was not gathered subsequent to arrest. Mitchell v. Home, S.D.N.Y.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 361. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Claims brought under §§ 1983 against state investigators and others by child of parents who were convicted of child rape and molestation, alleging that he was wrongfully removed from his aunt's home, placed in the custody of Child Protective Services (CPS), and coerced into making false allegations of sexual abuse against his parents, accrued when child was removed from his aunt's home, interrogated, and testified at his parents' trial. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1169. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Arrestees' §§1983 claims for deliberate fabrication of evidence, resulting in unlawful seizure and convictions, did not accrue until the charges against them were dismissed, rather than the date their criminal convictions were reversed. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1169. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Claim for malicious prosecution does not accrue until wrongful conviction is invalidated. Newsome v. James, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1318. Limitation Of Actions 55(1)

Claim under § 1983 alleging malicious prosecution does not accrue until favorable termination is obtained. Torres v. McLaughlin, E.D.Pa.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1353, reversed 163 F.3d 169, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 797, 528 U.S. 1079, 145 L.Ed.2d 672. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Connecticut's three-year limitations period, which was applicable to § 1983 action for malicious prosecution, accrued as of date of favorable termination of criminal proceedings so that suit filed less than one year after termination was timely. Brown v. Wargo, D.Conn.1992, 815 F.Supp. 59. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Malicious prosecution claim under § 1983 does not accrue until underlying criminal proceedings have been terminated in manner favorable to civil rights plaintiff. Blackmon v. Perez, E.D.Va.1992, 791 F.Supp. 1086. See, also, Brummett v. Camble, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 946 F.2d 1178, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 2323, 504 U.S. 965, 119 L.Ed.2d 241. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Limitations period applicable to subway passenger's state law and civil rights claims against his arresting officer and city transit authority were not tolled to extent those claims sounded in false arrest, where passenger had brought and settled state court action for false arrest and malicious prosecution against transit authority prior to commencing action, conclusively demonstrating knowledge of the false arrest. Yeadon v. New York City Transit Authority, S.D.N.Y.1989, 719 F.Supp. 204. Limitation Of Actions 95(4.1)

Date of acquittal of plaintiff for violation of alcoholic beverages law, not dates on which plaintiff was charged, threatened, or learned of indictment, was date her cause of action for violation of civil rights based upon malicious prosecution accrued. Rohena Encarnacion v. Department of Treasury, D.Puerto Rico 1987, 665 F.Supp. 102. Limitation Of Actions 55(1)

4961. ---- Medical benefits, commencement of period, limitations

New York three-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions began to run on § 1983 and Title VI action alleging that hospital's shifting of certain services to another location discriminated against Medicaid patients and on the basis of race when plan for reduction of services was approved. Mussington v. St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hosp. Center, S.D.N.Y.1993, 824 F.Supp. 427, motion to amend denied 1993 WL 319454, affirmed 18 F.3d 1033. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4962. ---- Records, commencement of period, limitations

Three-year statute of limitations for § 1983 civil rights action in Arkansas against city and policemen for alleged wrongful release of expunged arrest record accrued on date that record was released. Morton v. City of Little Rock, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 934 F.2d 180. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Nursing home employee's Sixth Amendment fair trial claim against special investigator (SI) from Medicaid Fraud Control Unit (MFCU) of office of New York's Attorney General, which arose from patient-abuse investigation, accrued when she was arrested, which is when she knew or should have known of alleged fabrication of evidence against her, and that she suffered injury as result. Mitchell v. Home, S.D.N.Y.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 361. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Section 1983 action by subject of alleged file of city police bureau on his political views and activities, against the city and city officials for maintaining the file in violation of state law and the First and Fourteenth Amendments accrued, at the very latest, when he filed a motion for an order to show cause in a state court case, stating that the city police bureau was currently maintaining non-criminal information on him and his association, even if he did not then know the full extent to which the police bureau was maintaining non-criminal information on him. Handelman v. City of Portland, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 136, 2004 WL 2625085, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4963. ---- Prisons and prisoners, commencement of period, limitations

Arrestee's §§ 1983 claims asserting use of excessive force at time of his arrest accrued on day of arrest, and not on date three months earlier when arrestee was allegedly subjected to excessive force during search of his home, as claims relating to the different incidents were distinct. Price v. Philpot, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 420 F.3d 1158. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Amended California statute reducing to two years the period during which statutes of limitations were tolled for prisoners incarcerated for less than life terms could be retroactively applied to former inmate's inadequate medical care claim without manifest injustice, given that former inmate had at least three years to file action, including reasonable time after statutory amendment became effective and two and half months following his actual release from prison. Fink v. Shedler, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 192 F.3d 911, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1979, 529 U.S. 1117, 146 L.Ed.2d 808. Limitation Of Actions 6(1)

State prisoner's § 1983 action for alleged violation of his due process rights in connection with disciplinary hearing accrued on date state court had reversed disciplinary ruling, rather than on date of disciplinary hearing, and therefore trial court erroneously denied prisoner leave to amend his complaint to add correction officer as party on ground action was time barred. Hynes v. Drake, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 111 F.3d 283. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 124

District court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing, as frivolous, inmate's in forma pauperis and pro se § 1983 action asserting deliberate exposure to asbestos in state prison, on basis that claim was time-barred on its face under Maryland's three-year limitations period running from time that inmate possessed sufficient knowledge of cause of action to place him on inquiry notice; inmate knew of his exposure, knew who was responsible for exposure, was aware others in prison had been injured by exposure, and was aware of nature of his own injuries, but did not file complaint until four years later after he read news reports of lawsuits asserting that similar injuries had been caused by asbestos. Nasim v. Warden, Maryland House of Correction, C.A.4 (Md.) 1995, 64 F.3d 951, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1273, 516 U.S. 1177, 134 L.Ed.2d 219, rehearing denied 116 S.Ct. 1561, 517 U.S. 1163, 134 L.Ed.2d 661. Federal Civil Procedure 2734; Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights action for damages against various government officials attributable to unconstitutional conviction and sentence accrued no earlier than date on which conviction was invalidated; thus, action would not be barred by one-year statute of limitation before district court determined whether conviction had been invalidated. Guzman-Rivera v. Rivera-Cruz, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 29 F.3d 3. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights claim of federal pretrial detainees under due process clause, that jail and county officials' deliberate indifference toward detainee's care and welfare caused detainee to become infected with head and body lice as result of providing him with dirty bed linen or mattresses, was barred by Pennsylvania two-year statute of limitations, as alleged infestation commenced before two years prior to filing of complaint. Kost v. Kozakiewicz, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 1 F.3d 176. Civil Rights 1382; Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Alleged injury in civil rights action brought by inmate against prison officials was not punishment imposed on inmate, but alleged failure of prison officials to abide by established disciplinary or grievance procedures in imposing punishment, and thus, injury occurred when procedures were disregarded or abused so as to begin running of statute of limitations for § 1983 action. Gartrell v. Gaylor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 254. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Where inmate's transfer, detention and segregation, and mail losses were all accomplished by March of 1982, his claims accrued by then and civil rights action brought more than five years thereafter was time barred. Street v. Vose, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 936 F.2d 38, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 948, 502 U.S. 1063, 117 L.Ed.2d 117. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

State inmates' § 1983 action against prison officials could not be dismissed on grounds that action was barred by Arizona statute of limitations applicable to inmates absent any evidence as to whether inmates knew or reasonably should have known of their right to bring civil rights action at least two years before they filed their complaints. Vaughan v. Grijalva, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 927 F.2d 476. Limitation Of Actions 180(7)

Territorial inmate's §§ 1983 cause of action, alleging that corrections officials unconstitutionally had extended her imprisonment by denying her proper amount of good-time and other credits, accrued, for statute of limitations purposes, on date of inmate's release from prison, not earlier when she had become aware of lack of proper good-time credits and had exhausted administrative actions; any §§ 1983 claim prior to release would have been premature since, if successful, it would have implied invalidity of sentence. Ayuso-Figueroa v. Rivera-Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 456 F.Supp.2d 309. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

State inmate's §§ 1983 claim against prison officials for deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs did not accrue until inmate's administrative appeals were exhausted at all levels, where inmate could neither know nor have reason to know of full extent of medical care he would be provided until completion of grievance procedure. Wade v. Ratella, S.D.Cal.2005, 407 F.Supp.2d 1196. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Federal prisoner's Eighth Amendment Bivens claim against prison medical staff, arising out of injuries he received as result of allegedly unnecessary surgery and from later surgery done to correct prior surgery, accrued, for limitations purposes, on dates of those surgery. Molina-Acosta v. Martinez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 210. Limitation Of Actions 55(1)

Inmate's § 1983 civil rights claim against corrections officer accrued for limitations purposes on date he was attacked and injured by another inmate in prison recreation room that officer was stationed to observe. Byrd v. Abate, S.D.N.Y.1997, 964 F.Supp. 140. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

State inmate's § 1983 claim against prison physician for deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs, based on failure to perform surgery on broken nose, accrued no later than seven to eight days after inmate was seen by another doctor, who had recommended surgery within that time frame. Hill v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 945. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Inmate knew or should have known that he was injured and by whom he was injured with respect to his claim of forcible shaving in violation of Eighth Amendment and due process violations in disciplinary hearings more than two years prior to filing of action so as to bar claims based upon expiration of statute of limitations. Abiff v. Slaton, N.D.Ga.1992, 806 F.Supp. 993, affirmed 3 F.3d 443. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Inmate's § 1983 claims against district attorneys accrued, for limitations purposes, when he learned of injuries caused by district attorneys' alleged misconduct, rather than when he understood that district attorneys' earlier acts were part of alleged ongoing conspiracy, where inmate failed to plead specific facts in support of his claim of conspiracy. Pinaud v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.1992, 798 F.Supp. 913, affirmed in part, remanded in part 52 F.3d 1139. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Puerto Rico's one-year statute of limitations for general personal injury suits began to run on arrestee's § 1983 suit from date of his alleged beating by prison guards, rather than from date he discovered names of guards; names of perpetrators of injury had no bearing on question of whether arrestee was able to either discover injury or discover what caused injury. Martinez Torrado v. Colon Montes, D.Puerto Rico 1991, 779 F.Supp. 668. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Inmate knew of his injury and its connection to jail officials at the time that the alleged assault took place, despite his lack of knowledge of the names of the individuals who allegedly assaulted him, and one-year state statute of limitations on his § 1983 action began to run at that time. Richmond v. McElyea, E.D.Tenn.1990, 130 F.R.D. 377. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Georgia's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions began to run on federal prisoner's §§ 1983 action to recover forfeited property he claimed was taken in violation of his constitutional rights from date of judgment against his forfeiture claim in state court in his attempt to recover his seized property. Berry v. Keller, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 157 Fed.Appx. 227, 2005 WL 3292476, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate's §§ 1983 claim that an adjustment review violated his Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment rights to due process because there were only two officials at the review, not three as required by an Oklahoma statute, accrued for limitations purposes on the date of the review, despite his claim that he only learned of the requirement of three officials years later. DeYonghe v. Ward, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 335, 2005 WL 165449, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

State prisoner's conditions of confinement claims under § 1983 accrued, for limitations purposes, on date that prisoner knew or had reason to know of the injuries upon which claims were based. Allah v. Artuz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 86 Fed.Appx. 455, 2004 WL 119365, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

State inmate's claim under § 1983 that state parole board ordered parole without statutory authority to retard his good-time release date accrued when state supreme court set aside his parole. Bollinger v. Oregon State Bd. of Parole & Post-Prison Supervision, C.A.9 (Or.) 2003, 86 Fed.Appx. 259, 2003 WL 23019018, Unreported, on remand 2005 WL 563742. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Mississippi's three-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions began to run on prisoner's § 1983 claim when he knew he had suffered injury; whether prisoner did not understand legal significance of defendants' alleged actions and omissions until he was later informed of his rights was irrelevant. Brown v. Pool, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2003, 79 Fed.Appx. 15, 2003 WL 22391532, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(14)

State prisoner's § 1983 claim against police detective, asserting that detective altered documents in order to bolster criminal charge against him, accrued, at the latest, on the date prisoner was released from jail, where prisoner alleged that he discovered the altered documents prior to his release. Rivera v. Baton Rouge City Police Dept., C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 75 Fed.Appx. 287, 2003 WL 22139578, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Limitations period for § 1983 action filed in Illinois by prisoner's estate, alleging deliberate indifference to serious medical needs in violation of Eighth Amendment, commenced by time that prisoner learned he had cancer and that earlier diagnoses had been incorrect. Garner v. Cullinan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 654, 2003 WL 21259754, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4963A. ---- Police activities, commencement of period, limitations

Arrestee's §§ 1983 claim against arresting officer for use of excessive force in violation of Fourth Amendment necessarily implied the invalidity of arrestee's underlying criminal conviction for violating Cleveland's resisting arrest ordinance, and thus, limitations period for excessive force claim did not begin to run until arrestee's conviction had been overturned on appeal, since ordinance provided that a lawful arrest was an essential element of a conviction for resisting arrest. Swiecicki v. Delgado, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 463 F.3d 489. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations on sexual assault victim's civil rights claim against police for allegedly violating her equal protection rights in conducting faulty investigation accrued no later than date on which suspect was arraigned on misdemeanor charge, if not on earlier date when police officer informed victim that only misdemeanor charge would be brought, allegedly refused to interview suspect, allegedly blamed victim for not timely reporting rape, and allegedly refused to interview victim's friends, as victim had reason to know of her injury by that date. Michels v. Greenwood Lake Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 361. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4963B. ---- Parole, commencement of period, limitations

Parolee's cause of action under §§ 1983 based on former governor's reversals of parole board's decision to grant parole accrued, and California's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions began to run, no later than date of parolee's eventual release from prison custody. Miller v. Davis, C.D.Cal.2006, 420 F.Supp.2d 1108.

4964. ---- Real property, commencement of period, limitations

Developer's civil rights action against county based on county's delay in acting on developer's preliminary plat application accrued when county made its final decision approving the application rather than when developer became aware that county had treated it differently from other applicants and would not act within times provided by statute. Norco Const., Inc. v. King County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1986, 801 F.2d 1143. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Limitations period governing homeowners' section 1983 lawsuit against city, alleging that various city officials fraudulently represented to owners that their land was not susceptible to flooding, commenced at time of first flood and not several years later when homeowners learned through newspaper article that city had been on notice of potential flooding problems before they purchased their home. Longoria v. City of Bay City, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 779 F.2d 1136. Limitation Of Actions 100(12)

Developers' §§ 1983 takings claim against town accrued on date state's highest court denied their motion for leave to appeal decision denying compensation for town's delay in approving their subdivision application, rather than on date town imposed administrative hold on application. W.J.F. Realty Corp. v. Town of Southampton, E.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 18. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights cause of action against New York municipality for maliciously violating property owners' rights by authorizing construction of electronically controlled gate accrued when permit and certificate of completion for gate were issued, as acts were only state action involved in suit, and thus suit was time-barred when not brought within three years thereafter. Bobrowsky v. Curran, S.D.N.Y.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 159. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Landowners were able to, and did, contemplate that village's finding of public purpose and authorization of land disposition agreement with developer covering use of eminent domain incidental to implementation of urban redevelopment project would expose their property to prospect of condemnation, and triggering of New York's general personal injury action statute of limitations applicable to §§ 1983 claims brought within New York state was accordingly not delayed until developer and principal allegedly attempted to exact cash buyout from them, when landowners alleged they first suffered injury. Didden v. Village of Port Chester, S.D.N.Y.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 385, affirmed 2006 WL 898093. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Two-year statute of limitations for personal injury commenced on date when city and building inspector issued stop work order prohibiting real estate developer from doing certain additions to building on his property, and not date of issuance of subsequent stop work order two years later, despite claim that earlier stop work order was part of continuous violation; developer had not alleged intervening acts sufficient to establish continuous pattern of wrongdoing. Carr v. Town of Dewey Beach, D.Del.1990, 730 F.Supp. 591. Limitation Of Actions 55(6)

4965. ---- Retirement benefits, commencement of period, limitations

Alleged impairment of firefighter's deferred compensation plan should have been apparent to him when he received notice of statutory amendment requiring plan participants to retire at end of five years, and thus contracts clause claim accrued at that time, rather than at time of his subsequent termination pursuant to the statutory amendment; constitutional injury, triggering statute of limitations for § 1983 claim, occurred when amendment became law, not when consequence of that constitutional injury manifested itself. Smith v. City of Enid By and Through Enid City Com'n, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1998, 149 F.3d 1151. Limitation Of Actions 95(15) with rejection of her application for early retirement benefits accrued under two-year limitations period under Iowa law for personal injury actions when teacher was informed by superintendent that she did not qualify for early retirement program because of her age. Waterman v. Nashua-Plainfield Community School Dist., N.D.Iowa 2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1018. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Former city employee's § 1983 action challenging denial of his pension application on due process grounds--application was automatically denied due to employee's failure to vest his rights prior to his dismissal--accrued on date employee was dismissed, which was date employee became ineligible to vest rights, and not on later date when application for benefits was denied or when arbitrator held that dismissal had been proper; employee knew or should have known at time of his dismissal that his pension rights were in jeopardy. Fleischman v. Grinker, S.D.N.Y.1991, 769 F.Supp. 147. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4966. ---- Wiretapping, commencement of period, limitations

Four-year limitations period applicable to civil rights action arising from alleged wiretapping at victim's residence did not accrue until victim discovered wiretapping and identity of perpetrators. Scutieri v. Estate of Revitz, S.D.Fla.1988, 683 F.Supp. 795. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4967. ---- Zoning, commencement of period, limitations

Church's § 1983 claim against village for allegedly discriminatory denial of special use zoning permit accrued when village board of trustees denied application at regularly scheduled meeting, and discovery rule did not apply to postpone limitations period for three days until church's agents received actual notice of vote, in light of public announcement at administrative meeting that special use zoning permit would be placed on agenda for next regular meeting, front page article in local newspaper on upcoming vote, and church's motivation to determine when action would be taken. Cathedral of Joy Baptist Church v. Village of Hazel Crest, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 22 F.3d 713, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 197, 513 U.S. 872, 130 L.Ed.2d 129. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Fact that landowner sold property after zoning and before state court upheld zoning did not mean that its claim for temporary regulatory taking accrued on the date of sale rather than on the date of the state court decision; state court allowed landowner's claims to proceed to final judgment, indicating that landowner had suffered injury-in-fact, and, while the injury may have ended when landowner sold the property, its claim could not accrue until state proceedings had concluded. New Port Largo, Inc. v. Monroe County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 985 F.2d 1488, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 439, 510 U.S. 964, 126 L.Ed.2d 373, on remand 856 F.Supp. 659, on remand 873 F.Supp. 633. Limitation Of Actions 55(5)

Property owner's § 1983 action against township, for allegedly depriving him of due process rights by refusing to hear curative amendment challenge to zoning ordinance, accrued on date that township cancelled hearing on challenge and refused to reschedule. de Botton v. Marple Tp., E.D.Pa.1988, 689 F.Supp. 477. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Real estate developers' § 1983 claim for alleged equal protection violation by town board members began to accrue when town board allegedly took improper vote to deny developers' petition for exemption from moratorium on zoning approvals. Hampton Bays Connections, Inc. v. Duffy, E.D.N.Y.2003, 212 F.R.D. 119. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4968. ---- Miscellaneous, commencement of period, limitations

One year statute of limitations for takings claim asserted by Puerto Rico dairy farmers against government officials accrued when regulatory agency issued its decision to cancel farmers' milk production quotas, as valuable right to sell given amount of milk, and revoke their license to sell milk, rather than when milk manufacturing plant actually discontinued picking up farmers' milk; actual economic harm did not have to be felt before takings claim accrued because farmers were simply waiting for decision to be enforced and agency always clearly denied that any compensation would be due for loss of value of quota. Gonzalez-Alvarez v. Rivero-Cubano, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 426 F.3d 422. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Involuntary dismissal of §§1983 action, denominated "without prejudice" but expressly imposed as sanction for noncompliance with district court's discovery and related orders, did not cause limitations period to run anew from date of dismissal, as would normally be the case for non-prejudicial dismissal under applicable Puerto Rico limitations law; application of territorial restart rule would frustrate policy of repose, applicable in federal lawsuits. Lopez-Gonzalez v. Municipality of Comerio, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 404 F.3d 548. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

Physician assistant's § 1983 claims arising from acts occurring during a disciplinary hearing process accrued when she received letter notifying her of medical board's proposal to deny her license reinstatement; letter was adequately final and represented the board's official position. Olsen v. Idaho State Bd. of Medicine, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2004, 363 F.3d 916. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

For purposes of determining when statute of limitations began to run, widespread publicity about medical tests conducted in 1945 using elementary school students was sufficient to charge alleged test subject with constructive knowledge of events underlying her § 1983 claim against government, university, and others involved in testing; press release issued by university, which conducted study, led to publication of front-page stories in leading newspapers of city in which alleged subject resided, and, one year later, same newspapers and major television network issued reports on nearly identical lawsuit filed by another purported test subject, and, although alleged subject claimed that she did not hear or read any such media reports, objective standard governed test for date of discovery of claim. Hughes v. Vanderbilt University, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 215 F.3d 543, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Civil rights claims asserting that defendants' misconduct in prior civil rights action deprived plaintiffs of their due process rights accrued, for statute of limitation purposes, when plaintiffs lost their prior cases in trial court and judgment was entered against them, and not upon their unsuccessful exhaustion of all appeals of that judgment. Morales v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2000, 214 F.3d 1151. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 106

Any §§ 1983 claims arising from movie's allegedly wrongful portrayal of Native Americans accrued when movie was released. Dontigney v. Paramount Pictures Corp., D.Conn.2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 89. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Truck driver's § 1983 claim arising out of alleged constitutional deprivations sustained as result of recipient's refusal to assist in unloading accrued at time truck was unloaded. Poucher v. Intercounty Appliance Corp., E.D.N.Y.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 251. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

California's one-year statute of limitations on Native American mother's § 1983 claim, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel in state court termination of parental rights proceeding, did not begin to run until date of counsel's last appearance as mother's representative. Doe v. Mann, N.D.Cal.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1229, affirmed 415 F.3d 1038, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1909, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1911. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Three-year statute of limitations on state university students' § 1983 and Title IX claims began to run on date of each alleged act of sexual harassment by soccer coach, except to extent it could be shown that acts were part of single hostile environment practice, in which case limitations period did not begin to run until last constituent act occurred. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Alleged § 1983 action against United States for actions of agent of Department of Transportation began to accrue less than three years before suit was filed. Warlick v. Wilson, M.D.N.C.1995, 902 F.Supp. 90. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

A plaintiff's cause of action against city of Philadelphia and police officers accrued and was vested on day he was shot by police officers in 1989, and not when his complaint was filed in 1991, and a 1990 ordinance repealing a 1971 ordinance that waived governmental immunity could not be applied retroactively to deprive plaintiff of cause of action. Strauss v. Springer, E.D.Pa.1992, 817 F.Supp. 1203. Municipal Corporations 120; Municipal Corporations 742(1)

Cause of action for alleged civil rights violation by being denied residency in state and forced to pay out-of-state tuition accrued, and limitations period began to run, when students were denied in-state residency status based on status as full-time students. Young v. Crofts, C.A.9 (Mont.) 2006, 162 Fed.Appx. 712, 2006 WL 44452, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Two-year statute of limitations on homeowners' §§ 1983 claim, alleging borough zoning hearing board improperly sustained "stop work" order for their home renovation project, accrued on the date they received "stop work" order. Soppick v. Borough of West Conshohocken, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 631, 2004 WL 2965384, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Section 1983 claims of county jail inmate, seeking to recover for injuries sustained when he tripped over a section of concrete pavement that was allegedly not level, accrued for limitations purposes at the time he tripped. Paramo v. Santa Clara County, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 262302, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Cause of action for Constitutional violations accrued, and one-year limitations period under § 1983 began to run, at time of delay allegedly caused by county and design review commission's discriminatory decision-making with respect to approving property owner's construction plans, even though owners did not know exact quantity until they learned amount of increased construction costs due to delay. Chang v. Sonoma County, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 223425, Unreported, affirmed 97 Fed.Appx. 116, 2004 WL 950230. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4969. Commencement of action, limitations

Under "mailbox rule" established by United States Supreme Court in Houston, prisoner's pro se complaint alleging § 1983 action against state prison officials would be deemed "filed" as of date he deposited it in prison mail system, not as of date it was received by district court clerk. Cooper v. Brookshire, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 70 F.3d 377, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 77 F.3d 481. Limitation Of Actions 118(2)

Inmate's pro se civil rights complaint was effectively "filed" when he delivered correspondence directed to district court to prison officials, in light of inherent disadvantage suffered by incarcerated pro se litigants in their inability to monitor course of litigation. Dory v. Ryan, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 999 F.2d 679, modified on rehearing 25 F.3d 81 . Limitation Of Actions 118(2)

For limitation purposes, civil complaint of incarcerated pro se litigant was "filed" within meaning of civil procedure rules pertaining to commencement of action and filing of pleadings when prisoner delivered complaint to prison authorities for mailing to clerk of the district court, and not when clerk of district court received complaint. Lewis v. Richmond City Police Dept., C.A.4 (Va.) 1991, 947 F.2d 733. Limitation Of Actions 118(2)

Prisoner's pro se civil rights complaint was timely filed, for purposes of statute of limitations, when it was lodged with the court even though it was technically deficient under local rules. Lyons v. Goodson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1986, 787 F.2d 411. Limitation Of Actions 118(2)

Prisoner's § 1983 complaint against city, detective, and prosecutor, which arose in connection with rape charges against prisoner that were later dismissed for lack of probable cause, was deemed filed, for limitations purposes, on date that prisoner delivered his paperwork to prison officials for mailing. Gibbs v. Deckers, D.Del.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 458. Limitation Of Actions 118(1)

Charge of discrimination is timely filed under § 1983 as to all discriminatory acts encompassed by the violation so long as charge is filed during the life of the violation. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 55. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Inmate's civil rights complaint would be deemed timely under judicially created "mailbox rule" for prisoners proceeding pro se, even though no evidence established precise date on which inmate mailed his complaint; complaint had entered prison mail system before governing statute of limitations expired, and "mailbox rule" extended no special privilege to inmate, but merely considered his inability to personally deliver his complaint or deposit it at United States Post Office. Higgenbottom v. McManus, W.D.Ky.1994, 840 F.Supp. 454. Limitation Of Actions 118(1); Time 3.5

Pro se complaint naming stenographers in charge of transcribing trial minutes provided stenographers with sufficient notice of pendency of § 1983 lawsuit against them; thus, suit was timely filed under applicable statute of limitations. Mathis v. Bess, S.D.N.Y.1991, 761 F.Supp. 1023, opinion modified on denial of reargument on other grounds 763 F.Supp. 58, reconsideration denied 767 F.Supp. 558. Limitation Of Actions 123

4970. Tolling of limitations period--Generally

Inmate's section 1983 action against State prison officials was time barred, as inmate did not file action until 23 months after amendment to Illinois tolling statute, which made that statute inapplicable to claims against past or present employees of Illinois Department of Corrections, which was not "reasonable time" after that amendment. Wilson v. Giesen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 956 F.2d 738. See, also, Farrell v. McDonough, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 966 F.2d 279, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1059, 506 U.S. 1084, 122 L.Ed.2d 364. Limitation Of Actions 6(1)

Equitable tolling did not allow landowner to maintain her §§§§ 1983 and 1985 claims, which were filed almost two years after expiration of the limitations period; she alleged no facts or circumstances that would support equitable tolling. Edwards v. Media Borough Council, E.D.Pa.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 445. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Continuing violation doctrine did not apply to toll limitations period for former mayor's claim that city's refusal to pay him accumulated vacations and sick leave was result of political discrimination, even though mayor continued to suffer adverse effects for non-payment, and city continued to ignore mayor's written requests, where city's actions arose from single action that had continuing consequences. Llantin-Ballester v. Negron-Irrizary, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 206. Limitation Of Actions 55(6)

Statute of limitations on § 1983 claim against state trooper was not tolled while claim was pending before executive officer, even though plaintiff was required by Massachusetts law to wait six months before filing suit while his claim was considered by that agency, and even though limitations period is tolled in federal actions; dual requirements of Massachusetts law, i.e., presentment to executive officer within two years and filing of civil action within three years of cause of action's accrual, were unambiguous, and analogous federal law did not control application of Massachusetts statutes of limitation. Ball v. Carroll, D.Mass.1996, 932 F.Supp. 388, affirmed 107

F.3d 1. Federal Courts 427; Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Federal equitable tolling doctrine did not toll running of statute of limitations governing former junior high school student's § 1983 claims in connection with alleged sexual abuse by former teacher, notwithstanding student's claim to have repressed memory of abuse; student waited 13 months after claiming to have discovered through counseling necessary facts, and such delay was unreasonable as a matter of law. Ernstes v. Warner, S.D.Ind.1994, 860 F.Supp. 1338. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Court clerk's mere receipt of civil rights complaint tolls statute of limitations for filing § 1983 action, even though actual filing order is not entered until later. Redd v. Gilless, W.D.Tenn.1994, 857 F.Supp. 601. Limitation Of Actions 118(1)

New York's tolling provision which applies to one-year statute of limitations for intentional tort claims does not apply to toll and extend three-year statute of limitations for § 1983 actions, which is borrowed from New York's statute for personal injury actions. Bezerra v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.1994, 846 F.Supp. 214. Federal Courts 427

Accrual of civil rights claims when parole officers imposed allegedly improper curfew on parolee was not tolled by fact that parolee did not know of officers' attribution to parolee of certain prostitution convictions that allegedly belonged to another person; reason why curfew was imposed was peripheral to true claim for loss of liberty caused by curfew. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4971. ---- Concealment of facts by defendant, tolling of limitations period

Statute of limitations for § 1983 employment discrimination action would not be equitably tolled; employee had not established that he was unaware of employer's discriminatory animus and presented no evidence that employer had mislead him to his detriment, in connection with his termination. Morris v. Government Development Bank of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 27 F.3d 746. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Arresting officers did not fraudulently conceal their identities from arrestee, such that statute of limitations applicable to arrestee's civil rights claims against officers would be equitably tolled, though arrestee stated that he was in too much pain to think clearly and seek names of officers immediately after his arrest, that prosecution avoided revealing names of arresting officers by offering arrestee very generous plea bargain before discovery process began, and that police department completely stonewalled arrestee's attempts to uncover officers' names; failure to name officers was due to arrestee's own lack of diligence in learning their identities. Worthington v. Wilson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 8 F.3d 1253. Limitation Of Actions 104(2)

Neither continuing nature of conspiracy nor allegations of concealment tolled Missouri's five-year statute of limitations applicable to civil rights lawsuit, where conspiratorial acts of which plaintiff complained all occurred prior to five-year period, and no evidence suggested that defendants prevented plaintiff from discovering his cause of action. Carr v. Aubuchon, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 969 F.2d 714. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 104(1)

Evidence indicating concealment of police officer's alleged sexual assault of plaintiff from the public did not support fraudulent concealment from her, given her detailed knowledge of the assault, the investigation, the lack of action to prosecute her assailant, and fact that the investigatory file was lost or destroyed, and therefore statute of limitations for civil rights claims based on excessive force, conspiracy to obstruct justice, negligent failure to prevent a conspiracy to obstruct justice, and deprivation of constitutional rights were not subject to equitable tolling based on fraudulent concealment; with due diligence plaintiff could have discovered the existence of investigatory file which would have provided additional facts to support her causes of action, and merely having been told by her prior attorney and the Mayor that there was no file was insufficient to support a claim of fraudulent concealment. Paige v. Police Dept. of City of Schenectady, N.D.N.Y.2000, 121 F.Supp.2d 723, affirmed 264 F.3d 197. Limitation Of Actions 104(2)

Plaintiff's claim that her constitutional rights were violated when she was sexually abused by public school teacher under circumstances created by school administrators did not accrue, as matter of law, at time of last alleged incident of sexual abuse against plaintiff while she was minor student, and, therefore, her civil rights claims were not barred by Illinois' two-year statute of limitations; plaintiff alleged that administrators took action to conceal or cover up teacher's sexual misconduct with other students, and, thus, it was not reasonable to expect minor student to have effectively discovered those efforts and to have reason to know that her constitutional rights had been violated. Doe v. Board of Educ. of Hononegah Community High School Dist. No. 207, N.D.Ill.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1366. Limitation Of Actions 95(15); Limitation Of Actions 104(1)

Plaintiff's allegations that defendants concealed preselection based on race of African American to position of Deputy Director of Emergency Ambulance Bureau of District of Columbia Fire Department through sham application process was sufficient to support tolling of three-year statute of limitations applicable to plaintiff's § 1983 race discrimination claim. Zervas v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 817 F.Supp. 148. Limitation Of Actions 179(2)

Two-year limitations period applicable to physician's action seeking reinstatement of his license to practice medicine after license was revoked by Illinois Medical Disciplinary Board was not tolled due to alleged fraudulent concealment of Board's allegedly illegal political composition; although physician claimed that he obtained the last certified documents pursuant to a request under the Illinois Freedom of Information Act only three months before filing suit, reasonable diligence in pursuing issues would have put physician into position to advance claim more than two years before he actually did so. McCabe v. Caleel, N.D.Ill.1990, 739 F.Supp. 387, affirmed 931 F.2d 895, rehearing denied. Limitation Of Actions 104(1)

Insurers had notice of their civil rights claims against insureds and county officials based on alleged conspiracy and arson no later than date on which federal court held in another case that plaintiff could sue county for its alleged involvement in racketeering activity, and alleged fraudulent concealment of claims by defendants did not preclude cause of action from accruing on that date. Continental Ins. Co. v. Pierce County, Wash., W.D.Wash.1987, 690 F.Supp. 930, affirmed 877 F.2d 64. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4972. ---- Continuing violations or torts, tolling of limitations period

Continuing violation doctrine did not operate to extend the limitations period for state prisoner's § 1983 complaint, which alleged that defendants violated his constitutional right against ex post facto laws by changing the frequency of his parole consideration under a newly enacted law; defendants' act, deciding not to consider prisoner for parole again until the specified year, was a one-time act with continued consequences. Lovett v. Ray, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 327 F.3d 1181. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

The state's failure to release physical evidence from state prisoner's trial for post-conviction DNA testing was not a continuing violation, and thus, the limitations period for prisoner's §§ 1983 claim seeking access to the physical evidence was not extended, under the continuing violation doctrine. Savory v. Lyons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 469 F.3d 667. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Continuing violation doctrine did not toll the two-year limitations period of New Jersey police officer's §§ 1983 claims that denial of promotion, failure to expunge disciplinary record, and transfer were in retaliation for his exercise of First Amendment rights by assisting with federal corruption investigation, since claims involved discrete acts and not a hostile environment. O'Connor v. City of Newark, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 440 F.3d 125. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Decision by county and county jail officials to file disciplinary charges against black corrections officers, on basis of their alleged involvement in scheme to provide inmates with drugs, was not tantamount to an ongoing policy of discrimination, as would toll limitations period, under continuing violation doctrine, for officers' race discrimination claims under §§ 1983 and statute requiring racial equality in contracting; rather, decision was a single act, discrete in its nature. Washington v. County of Rockland, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 373 F.3d 310. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Doctrine of continuing violation did not apply to landowner's § 1983 claim that the city violated landowner's constitutional rights by authorizing a competing developer to install pipes on landowner's land, for purposes of Illinois' two-year-statute of limitations on § 1983 actions; even though the alleged trespass was, by landowner's description, permanent, that did not convert the discrete act of installing pipes into one long continuing wrong. Clark v. City of Braidwood, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 318 F.3d 764. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

City's continued prosecution of public abatement nuisance proceeding against nightclub was not a separately actionable event, for statute of limitations purposes in nightclub owners' § 1983 action against the city, apart from the city's earlier initiation of the abatement proceeding; prosecution of the proceeding was the inevitable consequence of the initiation of the proceeding. RK Ventures, Inc. v. City of Seattle, C.A.9 (Wash.) 2002, 307 F.3d 1045. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Any deliberate refusal by city to remove "SLUM PROPERTY" signs it had placed on residential property was not fresh violation for purposes of statute of limitations on § 1983 claim, asserted by officers of landlords' association, that city placed such signs in retaliation for officers engaging in protected speech. Pitts v. City of Kankakee, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2001, 267 F.3d 592, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 2586, 536 U.S. 922, 153 L.Ed.2d 776. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Deprivation of trucking company's asserted liberty interest in right to intrastate travel created by county ordinance banning through truck traffic on county roads was continuing violation, so that statute of limitations applicable to trucking company's civil rights claim did not start to run until ordinance was overturned. Kuhnle Brothers, Inc. v. County of Geauga, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 103 F.3d 516. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Township's affirmative acts in allegedly improperly taxing plaintiff's property as commercial lot year after year did not constitute Fifth Amendment "taking," and thus, did not warrant finding that township was engaged in "continuing wrong" that would toll statute of limitations on landowner's inverse condemnation claim against township. 287 Corporate Center Associates v. Township of Bridgewater, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 101 F.3d 320. Eminent Domain 2.4; Limitation Of Actions 55(6)

Race discrimination claim against school district arises each day that child is assigned to school under racially discriminatory policy and, thus, § 1983 civil rights suit against school district alleging that closing junior high school located in predominantly black neighborhood three years before suit was commenced was timely, despite two-year Illinois statute of limitations; racial discrimination in operation of schools was a continuing violation. Palmer v. Board of Educ. of Community Unit School Dist. 201-U, Will County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 46 F.3d 682. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Against background of New York State Division for Youth's gender-discriminatory policies and hostile work environment created by female employee's male co-workers, acts of discrimination and harassment by employee's co-workers and supervisors constituted continuing wrong, delaying statute of limitations period applicable to employee's civil rights claims, that did not end until employee was finally driven from juvenile offender facility. Cornwell v. Robinson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 23 F.3d 694. Limitation Of Actions 58(1) violation theory; alleged incidents within limitations period were merely natural and foreseeable consequences of prior department reorganization outside limitations period, rather than independent new acts of discrimination on basis of director's political affiliation. Muniz-Cabrero v. Ruiz, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 23 F.3d 607. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Advertising company did not suffer continued violation as result of alleged unconstitutional taking of its property by means of city ordinance restricting off-premises billboard advertising where company was aware of ordinance from date of its enactment, participated in rule-making proceedings prior to adoption of ordinance, and was required by law to be aware of restrictions placed on its billboards once ordinance was enacted; for limitations purposes, company was in position to challenge ordinance once it was adopted. National Advertising Co. v. City of Raleigh, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1158, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1997, 504 U.S. 931, 118 L.Ed.2d 593. Limitation Of Actions 55(6)

School system employees' § 1983 action challenging exclusion from participation in school employees' retirement system did not fall under "continuing violation" doctrine so as to escape Ohio's two-year limitations period; once retirement system members were separated from nonmembers, it was not a civil rights violation to treat member employees differently. Dixon v. Anderson, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 928 F.2d 212, rehearing denied. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

"Continuing violation" theory applied to render § 1983 claims by nontenured black female teacher timely; teacher alleged discriminatory working conditions throughout term of her employment which were related to her discharge, and, prior to events surrounding her discharge, teacher was not warranted in filing race discrimination suit. Hull v. Cuyahoga Valley Joint Vocational School Dist. Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 926 F.2d 505, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2917, 501 U.S. 1261, 115 L.Ed.2d 1080. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Mere adherence of school officials to a discrete decision regarding high school student's academic standing in the fall of 1987 do not suffice to state a claim for continuing violation for purposes of state statute of limitations governing § 1983 action when student was denied 12th grade status in the fall of 1988. Vandiver v. Hardin County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1991, 925 F.2d 927. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Student who sought to bring civil rights action against state university based upon her expulsion from graduate program could not evade prescriptive period by contending that university's actions amounted to continuing tort; claims accrued when student was expelled and barred from campus and it was irrelevant for purposes of prescription that student remained expelled and barred at present. Davis v. Louisiana State University, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 876 F.2d 412, rehearing denied. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Sheriff's repeated garnishment of employee's wages created a continuing violation of employee's due process rights for purposes of civil rights provision limitations period. Jackson v. Galan, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 868 F.2d 165, rehearing granted. Limitation Of Actions 55(6)

Continuing violations exception applied to municipal employee's § 1983 claims against municipality, its mayor, and other officials, alleging political affiliation discrimination and retaliation; employee alleged ongoing discriminatory conduct by defendants, including that defendants waged harassment and persecutory campaign against employee, that they effectively demoted employee, and that defendants had guards following employee around his work area. Valentin Rodriguez v. Municipality of Barceloneta, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 189 . Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Alleged continuous police harassment of homeowner and his family did not, under continuous violation doctrine, save their otherwise time-barred claims against county police officer, seeking redress under §§ 1983 and claiming civil rights conspiracy, intentional infliction of emotional distress and loss of consortium, where there was no evidence that the officer engaged in an act of misconduct during the application limitations period. Kashaka v.

Baltimore County, Maryland, D.Md.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 610. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Corporate ferry service asserted a §§ 1983 challenge to town law that continued to prevent it from establishing vehicular or high-speed ferry service to and from the town even more than three years after passage of law, thus alleging a continuing violation for limitations purposes. Town of Southold v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 227. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

At an irreducible constitutional minimum, Article III standing requires that the plaintiff have suffered an injury in fact, an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Town of Southold v. Town of East Hampton, E.D.N.Y.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 227. Federal Civil Procedure 103.2

Allegations of hostile work environment are treated differently than allegations of discrete discriminatory acts for purposes of §§ 1983 statute of limitations challenges; hostile work environment claim is created by series of separate acts that collectively constitute one unlawful employment practice, whereas each discrete discriminatory act constitutes stand-alone actionable unlawful employment practice. Sanchez v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 393. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Discrete employment actions, including failure to promote, are not subject to continuing violations doctrine. Neveu v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 1159. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Agency employee, who allegedly was illegally suspended and terminated from his position due to his political affiliations, did not show ongoing violation of his rights in form of hostile work environment claim, or make allegations respecting ongoing policy of politically motivated suspensions or terminations, and thus lacked basis for invoking continuing violations doctrine to avoid statute of limitations bar on §§ 1983 claim challenging termination. Vega v. Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 31. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Employer committed alleged discrete violations of federally protected rights of employee, each with its own one-year statute of limitations period for bringing of §§ 1983 claim, and did not commit serial acts allowing for suit alleging all acts if one act occurred within limitations period, when employee alleged that employer had (1) suddenly transferred her to different work locations, (2) made unannounced changes in work schedules, (3) stripped her of duties and responsibilities, (4) made unfounded and repeated threats of disciplinary measures, (5) undertook unfounded disciplinary actions, and (6) denied requests for reasonable disability accommodation. Figueroa-Garay v. Municipality of Rio Grande, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 117. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Demoted Puerto Rican agency employee, asserting §§ 1983 claim based on allegation that demotion was politically motivated, failed to allege continuing violation, for limitations purposes, absent allegation that defendants committed any specifically discriminatory acts within limitations period. Camacho-Cardona v. Lopez Pena, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 298. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

There was no continuing violation, extending three year statute of limitations period governing §§ 1983 action brought by retired state court judge, challenging decision of administrative judges to deny him appointment as judicial hearing officer; denial was discrete action, accompanied by notice and opportunity to bring timely claim, and retired judge did not allege he was victim of any policy or practice. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Pursuant to continuing violation doctrine, Puerto Rico employee's §§ 1983 political discrimination claim was not time-barred, even though reduction of his functions occurred outside of limitations period, where officials subsequently brought disciplinary sanctions against him, submitted him to administrative proceeding, and placed written admonition letter in his permanent file. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Conduct of Puerto Rico Secretary of Health, in giving preference to medical schools in contract to manage public hospital, was discrete act that did not come within purview of serial violation branch of continuing violation doctrine, and as such, other claims of medical facilities' owners and operators, that were based upon Secretary's denial of certificates of necessity and convenience (CNC), which occurred more than one year prior to filing of suit, were not brought within one year statute of limitations by owners' assertion of timely preference claim, since plaintiffs believed many years previously that Secretary was discriminating against them at every turn and turned to Commonwealth courts in order to vindicate their rights and preference claim differed from other purported discrimination in that the law itself dictated that Secretary would not have to comply with formal bidding process. Centro Medico Del Turabo, Inc. v. Feliciano De Melecio, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 285, affirmed 406 F.3d 1. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Claims based on alleged discrete acts of discriminatory enforcement of city codes against housing developer that were not yet time-barred under old one-year limitations period when new two-year limitations period for residual claims became effective were timely when brought within two years of their accrual. Thompson v. City of Shasta Lake, E.D.Cal.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 1017. Limitation Of Actions 6(1)

Where municipal employee alleged discrete acts of political discrimination in § 1983 action against municipality, he could not, under continuing violation theory, use discrete acts that occurred within the statute of limitations to save discrete time-barred acts of discrimination, regardless of whether untimely acts were substantially related to the timely acts. Rivera Torres v. Ortiz Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 306 F.Supp.2d 76, appeal denied 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Continuing violations doctrine was inapplicable to Native American plaintiff's § 1983 claims arising out of his arrest following a prayer march, and therefore any such claims accruing more than four years before the filing of his complaint were barred by Nebraska statute of limitations. Poor Bear v. Nesbitt, D.Neb.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 904. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

The continuous violation doctrine was not applicable to § 1983 claims. Blume v. Meneley, D.Kan.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 1189. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Bus driver's allegation that school district's discrete acts of retaliation evidenced policy or custom of retaliation, in violation of § 1983, was sufficient to invoke continuing violations doctrine, for limitations purposes. Branch v. Guilderland Cent. School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 242. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Continuing violation theory in cases when employer has, for period of time, covertly followed practice of discrimination, did not operate to toll police officers' claims outside two-year statute of limitations period for his actions under §§ 1983 and 1985(3), where allegations in complaint indicated that officer was, or should have been, aware of alleged incident of punishment or retaliation directed toward him outside limitation period. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Inmate could maintain § 1983 claim that supervisors of correctional facility denied him medical care following assault by fellow inmates, even though claim was not filed until three years after injuries occurred; violation was ongoing, as record showed inmate made frequent complaints of pain without response from supervisors. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

With regard to state inmate's § 1983 claim against prison physician for deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs, based on failure to perform surgery on broken nose, physician's failure to perform surgery beyond

7-8 day period that had been recommended by another doctor did not constitute a continuing course of treatment that delayed running of statute of limitations. Hill v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 945. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Alleged discriminatory job assignments, elimination of position and refusals to hire which occurred outside two-year limitations period for city employee's § 1983 sex discrimination claims against supervisor were sporadic and isolated, rather than part of series of discriminatory acts involving supervisor's alleged failure to investigate city employee's sex discrimination and harassment complaints during limitations period, and therefore city employee's § 1983 claims arising from discriminatory job assignments, position elimination and refusals to hire were untimely and could not be revived by continuing violation theory. Houck v. City of Prairie Village, D.Kan.1996, 924 F.Supp. 120. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Before series of allegedly related acts demonstrates continuing violation, for purposes of determining timeliness of discrimination claim, court must find dogged pattern of discrimination as distinguished from isolated and sporadic outbreaks; three inquiries are relevant to finding such pattern: subject matter--whether violations constitute same type of discrimination, frequency, and permanence--whether nature of violations should trigger employee's awareness of need to assert his or her rights and whether consequences of act would continue even in absence of continuing intent to discriminate. Houck v. City of Prairie Village, D.Kan.1996, 924 F.Supp. 120. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Under continuing violation theory, plaintiff who shows continuing policy and practice of discrimination that operated within the statutory period has satisfied statute of limitations requirements for § 1983 action. Newsome v. County of Santa Fe, D.N.M.1996, 922 F.Supp. 519. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Former public employee's complaint against director and associate director of Rhode Island Department of Elderly Affairs alleged continuing violation of § 1983 such that each of the plaintiff's charges of discrimination was timely filed. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 55. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Black female deputy sheriff's § 1983 complaint alleged continuing violation extending into California personal injury action one-year limitations period and, thus, complaint against county, sheriff's department, supervisors, co-workers, and civilian jail employee was not time barred; deputy sheriff alleged acts of harassment and discrimination which were motivated by endemic racial and sexual animus and retaliation for particular forms of speech, and alleged acts were related by common motive, theme, target, and function in workplace. Anthony v. County of Sacramento, Sheriff's Dept., E.D.Cal.1994, 845 F.Supp. 1396. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights action challenging Virginia State Medicaid Plan Amendments was not barred by Virginia two-year statute of limitations for personal actions even though brought more than two years after the respective enactments; violations were continuing since state continued to apply payment limitations under the enactments and approval of the enactments by the Secretary of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) persisted. Rehabilitation Ass'n of Virginia, Inc. v. Kozlowski, E.D.Va.1993, 838 F.Supp. 243, affirmed 42 F.3d 1444, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 60, 516 U.S. 811, 133 L.Ed.2d 23. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Suspension of liquor license fell within "single act" category, and was not "continuing injury" under § 1983 for purposes of statute of limitations, where single act which was source of alleged violation of licensee's civil rights was decision by Alcoholic Beverage Control Board (ABCB) to suspend license and each day of suspension ordered by ABCB did not constitute separate act. Brossette v. City of Baton Rouge, M.D.La.1993, 837 F.Supp. 759, affirmed 29 F.3d 623, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 443, 513 U.S. 971, 130 L.Ed.2d 353. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

"Politically discriminatory action" in violation of § 1983 civil rights law, such as demotion followed by repeated refusals to reinstate plaintiff, does not constitute continuing violation which tolls statute of limitations. Cabrero v.

Ruiz, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 826 F.Supp. 591, affirmed 23 F.3d 607. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Fact that hospital, which was going to shift some services to another location, continued to receive federal funds and plan shift did not establish continuing violation of discrimination against Medicaid patients and on the basis of race and did not toll New York three-year personal injury statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 and Title VI action. Mussington v. St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hosp. Center, S.D.N.Y.1993, 824 F.Supp. 427, motion to amend denied 1993 WL 319454, affirmed 18 F.3d 1033. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Decision by town to pursue abatement action against owners of gravel and topsoil evacuation business, for activities related to business that were allegedly barred by local zoning ordinance, was not tantamount to an ongoing policy of discrimination, as would toll limitations period, under continuing violation doctrine, for §§ 1983 claims against town. Lee v. Town Bd. of Town of Ellicott, New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 151 Fed.Appx. 18, 2005 WL 2373887, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Even if continuing violation doctrine making claims accrue for limitations purposes at culmination of continuous injury applied to §§1983 actions, alleged denial of padded wheelchair for three days within applicable state law statute of limitations period to pre-trial detainee who was confined to wheelchair and recovering from decubitis ulcer was not sufficiently serious injury to warrant application of continuing violation doctrine to sustain detainee's action against county detention center's medical providers for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs in violation of due process clause. Burkley v. Correctional Healthcare Management Of Oklahoma, Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 141 Fed.Appx. 714, 2005 WL 1595699, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Assuming that state prisoner had not been transferred from more than three years prior to the filing of his section 1983 complaint alleging that a pattern and practice of religious discrimination against Shi'ite Muslims existed during the entire time of his incarceration at transferor facility, statute of limitations had not elapsed under a "continuing violation" theory. Cancel v. Mazzuca, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1702011, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Issue of whether prison medical officials' alleged failure to treat inmate's back condition constituted continuing violation presented fact questions that could not be resolved on motion to dismiss inmate's § 1983 deliberate indifference claims against officials on limitations grounds. Pratts v. Coombe, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 392, 2003 WL 1025095, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1831

Continuing violation doctrine did not apply to retired police officer's claims of retaliation in violation of his free speech rights, so as to make § 1983 action timely as to incidents outside limitations period, absent evidence demonstrating that his constitutionally protected speech was substantial motivating factor for actions and decisions taken after limitations period began. Crosland v. Safir, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 54 Fed.Appx. 504, 2002 WL 31867823, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Denials of former assistant high school principal's repeated requests for reinstatement following his termination did not constitute a continuing violation, for purposes of triggering statute of limitations on principal's § 1983 due process claim. Moiles v. Marple Newtown School Dist., E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 1964393, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4973. ---- Discovery delays, tolling of limitations period

Firefighter did not establish delay in accrual date of his impairment of contracts claim based on assessment of the law by former member of pension system's board of directors, with respect to impact of statutory amendment requiring deferred compensation plan participants to retire at end of five years; former member's statements were hearsay, he was not member of system board when statements were made and did not speak on behalf of board in representative capacity, and firefighter had notice of generally applicable statutory amendment, under which his employment would unquestionably end if applied to him. Smith v. City of Enid By and Through Enid City Com'n, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1998, 149 F.3d 1151. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Statute of limitations for § 1983 civil rights action arising out of death of black arrestee in county jail in 1960 was not tolled, as to city and its employees, by failure of arrestee's surviving family members to obtain autopsy report, which contradicted theory of death given at coroner's inquest by county employees, until 1984; failure to obtain the autopsy report earlier was not reasonable under all the circumstances, and climate of racial prejudice prevailing in the state during the early sixties could not excuse family members' failure to press their claims earlier. Williams v. Hartje, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1987, 827 F.2d 1203. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Equitable tolling of three-year New York statute of limitations on civil rights action against federal officials was justified by delay of other federal officials in providing discovery and in massive amount of documents eventually produced; prisoner's counsel had been sufficiently diligent in culling through massive amounts of documents to warrant equitable relief. Wahad v. F.B.I., S.D.N.Y.1990, 132 F.R.D. 17. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Federal prisoner was not entitled to any tolling of Georgia's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions for time he spent pursuing relief in state court; nothing in state or federal law required prisoner to exhaust his claims in state court before pursuing §§ 1983 action to recover forfeited property he claimed was taken in violation of his constitutional rights. Berry v. Keller, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 157 Fed.Appx. 227, 2005 WL 3292476, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

4974. ---- Equitable estoppel, tolling of limitations period

State prisoner was not entitled to equitable tolling of the statute of limitations for his §§ 1983 claim seeking post-conviction access to physical evidence for the purpose of DNA testing; although DNA testing was not available at the time of prisoner's conviction, and prisoner claimed actual innocence, his §§ 1983 claim did not accrue until after prisoner demonstrated that he was aware that DNA technology was available, and claim of actual innocence was insufficient to warrant equitable tolling. Savory v. Lyons, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 469 F.3d 667. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Prison mailbox rule was not implicated by late delivery of records request to pro se litigant as delay did not derive from problems uniquely associated with incarceration and was not attributable to prison officials or vagaries of mail, but solely to court clerk's delay in processing request, and thus mailbox rule did not apply to excuse late filing of civil rights complaint that concerned information in records, but which did not require filing of records. Walker v. Jastremski, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 430 F.3d 560, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1887. Time 3.5

Pro se prisoner was not entitled to equitable tolling of limitations period on federal civil rights claims based on his late receipt of court documents that had been requested shortly before expiration of limitations period on civil rights claims, where documents were not necessary to file legally sufficient complaint; facts supporting claims were already within prisoner's knowledge, and prisoner's faulty memory and his misplacement of his copy of documents were not grounds for equitable tolling. Walker v. Jastremski, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 430 F.3d 560, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1887. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Law school officials were not equitably estopped from asserting limitations defense to handicapped student's civil rights claims, that officials denied him due process by failing to inform him of his right to appeal their denial of his requests for specific accommodations, merely because officials offered alternate accommodations and allegedly induced student to think that additional accommodations would be forthcoming; student's failure to timely assert his rights was not result of any representations of law school officials, but of his own failure to act with reasonable diligence and learn of his right to appeal. McGregor v. Louisiana State University Bd. of Sup'rs, C.A.5 (La.) 1993, 3 F.3d 850, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1103, 510 U.S. 1131, 127 L.Ed.2d 415. Limitation Of Actions 13

Equitable estoppel doctrine applied to inmate's § 1983 claim against prosecuting attorney and police officer witness, arising from alleged extrajudicial conspiracy to deny him fair trial 11 years before inmate filed his claim and, thus, statute of limitations was extended until inmate could have reasonably found out about conspiracy. Dory v. Ryan, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 999 F.2d 679, modified on rehearing 25 F.3d 81. Limitation Of Actions 13

Under Nevada equitable tolling principles as predicted by federal district court, equitable tolling was appropriate in state prison inmate's second §§ 1983 action against corrections officials, for duration of inmate's previous pro se §§ 1983 action arising from same incident, which had been filed before resolution of administrative grievance and had been dismissed without prejudice for that reason, but which had remained pending beyond expiration of limitations period; inmate apparently had been diligent, timely filing both administrative grievance and first §§ 1983 suit, and officials would not be prejudiced by equitable tolling given first suit, which had same facts and same defendants. Wisenbaker v. Farwell, D.Nev.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 1160. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Equitable tolling did not apply to four-year limitations period applicable to former employee's claims of deprivation of liberty interests based upon written reprimands, poor performance evaluations, and memorandum regarding alleged criminal conduct, in § 1983 lawsuit under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, since employee was aware of facts that formed basis of his claims, notwithstanding any negligence or fraud by way of alleged concealment of employee's personnel files by county, as employer. Cotton v. Martin County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 1182, affirmed 125 Fed.Appx. 977, 2004 WL 2805781. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) had no jurisdiction over alleged violations of former employee's constitutional rights asserted in § 1983 claims, and therefore former employee's filing of charges for alleged Title VII violations with EEOC could not serve as "extrajudicial" claim capable of tolling limitations period for § 1983 claims under Puerto Rico law, even if § 1983 claims arose from same events giving rise to EEOC charges, and even if basis for § 1983 claims could be a Title VII claim. Iravedra v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 570. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Arrestee failed to establish that police officers induced him not to bring federal civil rights suit, and thus failed to establish that officers were equitably estopped from pleading New York statute of limitations defense to civil rights suit alleging excessive force; arrestee merely claimed that "liaison" between city police department and District Attorney's office existed, making arrestee appear as if he acted without justification. Perez v. Police Dept. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1994, 872 F.Supp. 49, affirmed 71 F.3d 405. Limitation Of Actions 13

Attorney's § 1983 claim and various state law claims alleging violations in connection with disciplinary proceedings were barred by applicable limitations period, as attorney had knowledge of basic facts necessary to make out his numerous causes of action at least 13 years prior to filing complaint; furthermore, there was no indication that defendants engaged in any misconduct causing attorney to delay institution of proceeding, so as to toll running of limitations period under New York law based on equitable estoppel. Babigian v. Association of the Bar of the City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1990, 744 F.Supp. 47, affirmed 912 F.2d 462, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 581, 498 U.S. 1012, 112 L.Ed.2d 586. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

4975. ---- Employment discrimination, tolling of limitations period

Under Puerto Rico law, former mayor's communication to state comptroller seeking assistance in collecting accumulated vacations and sick leave from city did not constitute extrajudicial claim sufficient to toll statutory period for bringing §§ 1983 suit against city; communication did not seek same relief that mayor sought in §§ 1983 suit, and communication was not addressed to city. Llantin-Ballester v. Negron-Irrizary, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 206. Limitation Of Actions 105(2) difficult to determine actual date of alleged discriminatory act, for equitable reasons similar to those underlying federal equitable tolling doctrine under which person injured by unlawful act need not sue until she knows, or through exercise of reasonable diligence would have known, not only that she has been injured but also that she has been injured by wrongful act of defendant. Lara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1278. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

State statute that suspended limitations periods for persons under legal disability, including prisoners, until one year after disability has been removed was consistent with s 1983's remedial purpose and thus, inmate's s 1983 action was not time barred though it had been filed after expiration of three-year statute of limitations period for personal injury actions. Hardin v. Straub, U.S.Mich.1989, 109 S.Ct. 1998, 490 U.S. 536, 104 L.Ed.2d 582, on remand 878 F.2d 382. Limitation Of Actions 75

Prison mailbox rule was not implicated by late delivery of records request to pro se litigant as delay did not derive from problems uniquely associated with incarceration and was not attributable to prison officials or vagaries of mail, but solely to court clerk's delay in processing request, and thus mailbox rule did not apply to excuse late filing of civil rights complaint that concerned information in records, but which did not require filing of records. Walker v. Jastremski, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 430 F.3d 560, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1887. Time 3.5

Inmate's alleged placement of §§ 1983 complaint in prison mail system did not satisfy prison mailbox rule, as would establish that complaint was filed on date of such placement rather than date complaint was received by court, absent either indication that inmate used system for legal mail or execution by inmate of notarized statement or sworn declaration setting forth date of deposit in regular mail system and stating that inmate included prepaid postage. Price v. Philpot, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 420 F.3d 1158. Limitation Of Actions 118(2)

Letter that inmate mailed to district court stating that motion to reconsider summary judgment had been mailed out, but stating no substantive grounds for relief, could not be construed as a motion to alter or amend judgment or a motion for relief from judgment, and thus did not toll running of 30-day period for filing notice of appeal from summary judgment. Searles v. Dechant, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2004, 393 F.3d 1126. Federal Courts 669

Prisoner "brought suit" when he mailed complaint to court in § 1983 action, for purposes of determining whether prisoner had exhausted administrative remedies before he brought suit, as required under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), even though complaint was not filed until it had been reviewed by district court, and filing fee was paid, or prisoner was permitted to proceed in forma pauperis. Ford v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 362 F.3d 395. Civil Rights 1311

Statute of limitations on former inmate's § 1983 claim against his daughter's guardian ad litem, based on guardian's failure to inform court of guardian's alleged knowledge that inmate's daughter had fabricated her sexual abuse charge against inmate, began to run, at very latest, as of September 1, 1987, when Texas deleted statute providing that imprisonment was disability that would toll limitations period. Pete v. Metcalfe, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 8 F.3d 214 . Limitation Of Actions 75

Article of Puerto Rico Code of Civil Procedure excluding time spent in prison from limitations period was implicitly repealed by Puerto Rico legislature when it removed from penal code remnants of civil law concept of interdiction, and thus, incarcerated plaintiff's § 1983 action was barred by Puerto Rico's one-year statute of limitations for tort actions. Sierra-Serpa v. Martinez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1993, 995 F.2d 325. Statutes 167(1)

Legislature's removal of imprisonment as a basis for tolling the statute of limitations was not inconsistent with federal policy, so that his imprisonment did not toll his federal civil rights claim. Street v. Vose, C.A.1 (Mass.)

1991, 936 F.2d 38, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 948, 502 U.S. 1063, 117 L.Ed.2d 117. Limitation Of Actions 6(11)

Civil rights plaintiff was not "imprisoned" at time of alleged unlawful arrest, within meaning of Michigan tolling provision applicable to those imprisoned when cause of action accrues; plaintiff's arrest and pretrial detention were not equivalent of "imprisonment," within meaning of Michigan statute. Jones v. City of Hamtramck, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1990, 905 F.2d 908, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 265, 498 U.S. 903, 112 L.Ed.2d 222. Limitation Of Actions 75

Period of limitations on civil rights action was not tolled under Michigan law by plaintiff's imprisonment; claim was based on conduct of police in arresting plaintiff and thus accrued before plaintiff was imprisoned. Perreault v. Hostetler, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1989, 884 F.2d 267. Limitation Of Actions 75

Kentucky tolling statute, that excluded time of confinement in penitentiary from limitations period, applied to inmate's § 1983 action against police department and police officer, alleged to have violated inmate's civil rights while acting under color of state law when he shot inmate three times during arrest. Bell v. Cooper, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1989, 881 F.2d 257. Federal Courts 427

Texas law would be interpreted to commence running of statute of limitations on arrestee's § 1983 civil rights action alleging excessive force by police officer during arrest on day arrestee escaped from custody, after being found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment; escapee would not be permitted to assert imprisonment disability for period of his fugitive status under Texas law. Glover v. Johnson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 831 F.2d 99. Limitation Of Actions 75

Arizona two-year statute of limitations applicable to prison inmate's civil rights action against a corrections officer was tolled during the inmate's period of confinement in prison, pursuant to the Arizona tolling statute. Marks v. Parra, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1986, 785 F.2d 1419. Limitation Of Actions 75

State inmate was not entitled to equitably toll statutory period for filing §§ 1983 action against prison officials for excessive force and deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs, even if prison officials did not demonstrate any specific prejudice as result of delay, where inmate's claims were premised on injuries he sustained during altercation with prison guards, and inmate provided no excuse or explanation for his two year delay in filing his first inmate appeal. Wade v. Ratella, S.D.Cal.2005, 407 F.Supp.2d 1196. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Limitations period for state inmate to file §§ 1983 action based on prison officials' actions in locking him in unventilated room was equitably tolled until inmate was represented by counsel, where inmate suffered severely debilitating heat stroke as result of officials' actions, preventing him from communicating effectively or from accessing relevant medical and correctional records. Moody v. Kearney, D.Del.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 393. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Applicable limitations period for state prisoner's pro se §§ 1983 action against correctional officers, prison supervisors, and prison medical personnel, alleging excessive force, retaliation, and denial of medical care, was tolled for period of six months after dismissal of prior lawsuit against same defendants, alleging same claims, pursuant to New York tolling statute, where prior lawsuit was dismissed without prejudice for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). Allaway v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 390. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

Under Nevada equitable tolling principles as predicted by federal district court, limitations period for state prison inmate's § 1983 action against corrections officials was equitably tolled during pendency of inmate's administrative grievance against officials, since administrative exhaustion of grievance was required under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). Wisenbaker v. Farwell, D.Nev.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 1160. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Under Louisiana law, prescriptive period for inmate to file § 1983 action challenging prison disciplinary action was tolled for 90 days after inmate filed administrative remedy request pursuant to inmate handbook, even though inmate received correspondence from prison official before expiration of 90-day period, where handbook stated that grievance was deemed denied if there was no response in 90 days, and it was unclear whether official was referring to instant grievance. Tilmon v. Prator, W.D.La.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 898, affirmed 368 F.3d 521. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Pro se prisoner's § 1983 complaint is deemed filed, for statute of limitations purposes, when it is delivered to prison officials. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Limitation Of Actions 118(2)

Limitations period for inmates' § 1983 action alleging violations of constitutional rights during disciplinary proceeding, which period was that of Nevada's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury claims, was tolled prior to when disciplinary committee member testified at criminal trial, which was when inmates said they learned of official's alleged orders to disciplinary committee to find inmates guilty of charges regardless of evidence presented. Reynolds v. Wolff, D.Nev.1996, 916 F.Supp. 1018. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Prisoner's section 1983 claims, which sought monetary damages as result of alleged violation of speedy trial provisions of Interstate Agreement on Detainers, were not time barred where prisoner remained incarcerated. Murray v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 826 F.Supp. 4, appeal dismissed 1993 WL 483949, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1556, 511 U.S. 1038, 128 L.Ed.2d 203. Limitation Of Actions 75

Ohio savings statute did not apply to inmate's § 1983 action alleging deprivation of medical care so as to render action timely, where inmate's original action was both filed and voluntarily withdrawn within two-year limitations period, rather than being timely filed and withdrawn after end of limitations period. Johnson v. University Hosp. of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2002, 46 Fed.Appx. 238, 2002 WL 2027251, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

4977. ---- Infant plaintiffs, tolling of limitations period

Under Washington law, three-year statute of limitations on claims brought under §§ 1983 against state investigators and others by child of parents who were convicted of child rape and molestation, alleging that he was wrongfully removed from his aunt's home, placed in the custody of Child Protective Services (CPS), and coerced into making false allegations of sexual abuse against his parents, were tolled until child reached the age of majority. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1169. Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

Statute of limitations on § 1983 action brought by administrator of minor student's estate, based on alleged constitutional violations accompanying minor's sexual abuse by school employee who was both a teacher and principal, was not tolled by West Virginia's savings statute, which prevented statute of limitations from running against persons under a disability until the disability is lifted, since administrator was a competent adult, even though claim was based on minor's injuries. Bell ex rel. Bell v. Board of Educ. of County of Fayette, S.D.W.Va.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 701. Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

Two year limitations period in which disabled student had to bring § 1983 action against school board and school officials, arising out of their decision not to place him in special education classes, was tolled, under Virginia law, during period of student's infancy. Smith ex rel. Duck v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 370, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 402 F.3d 468. Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

Fact that parent's child was minor at time of his meeting with county attorney, at which attorney allegedly threatened child, did not toll parent's § 1983 claim that attorney interfered and retaliated against her when she attempted to exercise her constitutionally protected right to custody of her child, where parent was not minor at time of meeting. Storck v. Suffolk County Dept. of Social Services, E.D.N.Y.2000, 122 F.Supp.2d 392.

Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

One-year statute of limitations governing civil rights action arising out of alleged rape of minor detainee by county jail deputy jailer stopped being tolled on account of detainee's minority at time of her first marriage ceremony, which took place before detainee's 18th birthday and without her parents' consent; first marriage ceremony removed disability of minority and was voidable rather than void from outset under state law, and detainee ratified first ceremony after her 18th birthday by engaging in sexual relations with her husband and participating in second ceremony. Holbert v. West, E.D.Ky.1990, 730 F.Supp. 50. Limitation Of Actions 72(5)

4978. ---- Mentally incompetent plaintiffs, tolling of limitations period

In order to survive motion to dismiss for failure to state claim, § 1983 plaintiff asserting deprivation of liberty arising from medical or psychiatric confinement, whose claim would be time-barred if it accrued at time of confinement, must plead facts indicating that plaintiff was not able to comprehend nature of his circumstances when he was taken into custody; where plaintiff so pleads, allegations of complaint must be taken as true, and ordinarily motion to dismiss will be denied. Ormiston v. Nelson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 117 F.3d 69. Limitation Of Actions 179(2)

Test for determining whether Georgia's statutory incompetency tolling provision tolled statute of limitations applicable to individual's federal civil rights action was whether individual, being of unsound mind, could not manage ordinary affairs of his life; individual was not required to establish that he had been declared "legally incompetent" or that he was "mentally retarded" or "mentally ill." Lawson v. Glover, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1987, 957 F.2d 801. Limitation Of Actions 74(1)

Patient who had been confined at state mental institution was not "insane" during period following his release such that two-year West Virginia statute of limitations applicable to his civil rights and malpractice claims was tolled, and claims were time barred; although legal aid attorney testified that former patient exhibited "bizarre" behavior, was incoherent, and appeared unable to assist in his legal situation, attorney also admitted that he did not believe that patient needed to be institutionalized, and that it was not necessary to have guardian or committee appointed, and patient had been able to effectuate his release from state institution by judicial writ on three occasions. Cobb v. Nizami, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1988, 851 F.2d 730, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1177, 489 U.S. 1046, 103 L.Ed.2d 244. Limitation Of Actions 74(1)

4979. ---- Pendency of other actions or proceedings, tolling of limitations period

Puerto Rico dairy farmers' prior challenges to agency's cancellation of their milk production quotas did not toll one year statute of limitations applicable to their subsequent civil rights takings claim against government officials which sought damages, since farmers previously had not sought damages and Puerto Rico law required remedies sought in both suits to be identical in order for tolling to occur. Gonzalez-Alvarez v. Rivero-Cubano, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 426 F.3d 422. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Medical laboratory acted reasonably and in good faith in filing § 1983 action against state controller, controller's employees, and state Department of Health Services (DHS) officials, arising from controller's impoundment of laboratory's Medicaid funds, supporting equitable tolling of limitations period in § 1983 action, under California law; prior state court order directed controller to release funds, laboratory had reason to believe that controller would comply with state court order, and only after controller, employees, and DHS officials acted in cooperation in repeatedly failing to comply with order did laboratory file § 1983 action. Azer v. Connell, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2002, 306 F.3d 930, on subsequent appeal 87 Fed.Appx. 684, 2004 WL 291187. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Civil rights claims of state employee were not tolled until he received "unequivocal" notice that State Personnel Board of Review (SPBR) decision was final and would be followed by no further process, as administrative code provided him with notice of process he would, and did, receive. Collyer v. Darling, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 98 F.3d 211, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2439, 520 U.S. 1267, 138 L.Ed.2d 199. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Fact that criminal charges had been stricken with leave to reinstate (SOL) did not preclude finding that civil rights action based on arrest for allegedly threatening school officials was time barred where it was filed more than five years after the arrest, despite claim that the status of the criminal prosecution was precluding plaintiffs from exercising their First Amendment right to criticize school officials because of fear that charges would be reinstated; likelihood of further prosecution was purely conjectural and neither real nor immediate, and prosecution had not done anything in the ensuing to cause plaintiffs to legitimately fear that their case would be reinstated. Mitchell v. Keenan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 50 F.3d 473, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 160, 516 U.S. 856, 133 L.Ed.2d 103. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Under Oklahoma law, plaintiff's § 1983 suit against school district, which was otherwise untimely, was saved by Oklahoma savings provision; suit was filed month after plaintiff dismissed previous action which named the school district. Brown v. Hartshorne Public School Dist. No. 1, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 926 F.2d 959. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

California's doctrine of equitable tolling did not operate to toll statute of limitations on civil rights claim during pendency of administrative proceedings where the claims raised in the administrative proceedings, resisting efforts of state agency to suspend plaintiff's teaching credential, were separate and distinct from claims raised in a civil rights action against school district and several of its officials for attempting to have the credential revoked. Del Percio v. Thornsley, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 877 F.2d 785. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Under California law, statute of limitations for plaintiff's civil rights action, against police officers and alleging excessive force, was not equitably tolled during pending of state court suit arising out of same acts, where federal suit was filed to avoid loss of cause of action, after state court threatened to dismiss action due to plaintiff's delay without good cause. Bacon v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 843 F.2d 372. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Former state prisoner's filing of civil rights suit against official of Mississippi Department of Corrections arising from failure to execute state court order vacating his judgment of conviction which had been entered on guilty plea and ordering him to local jail pending anticipated trial did not toll running of statute of limitations against county court and law enforcement officials against whom the former prisoner subsequently filed a § 1983 claim. Shelby v. McAdory, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1986, 781 F.2d 1053. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), the administrative claims filed by federal prisoner pursuant to the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) did not equitably toll the limitations period for filing an Eighth Amendment Bivens claim against corrections officers and prison medical staff, arising from injuries that prisoner allegedly received as result of unnecessary surgery and later surgeries to correct prior surgery; administrative FTCA claims were filed after the applicable limitations period had run, and the tort claims under the FTCA and the Bivens claim were not identical causes of action. Molina-Acosta v. Martinez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 210. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Filing of administrative complaint will not toll running of statute of limitations for tort actions or violations of constitutional rights, provided that administrative agency, such as Puerto Rico Police Department's Internal Affairs Office or Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), does not possess jurisdiction over such matters. Sanchez Ramos v. Puerto Rico Police Dept., D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 167. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Former employee's pending administrative challenge to his alleged illegal suspension from government agency was not discrete discriminatory act in ongoing series of violations of former employee's civil rights, but rather was ongoing effect of allegedly discriminatory act, and thus did not trigger continuing violations doctrine permitting former employee to assert otherwise time-barred claim that he was illegally terminated due to his political affiliations. Vega v. Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 31. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Claims by employee under §§ 1983, that she was suspended without pay in violation of her political rights, was timely when tolled by suit commenced within one year of dates of suspensions, even though suits were dismissed without prejudice before employer was served. Figueroa-Garay v. Municipality of Rio Grande, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 117. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

"Related" claim that was pending in state court did not provide basis to equitably toll three year statute of limitations that applied to attorney's §§ 1983 claim which alleged that court officers physically assaulted him, since attorney was immediately aware of his injuries, and state court proceeding would not have prevented attorney from also timely filing in federal court and requesting stay of proceedings. Keane v. Navarro, D.Mass.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 9. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

State suits against Puerto Rico Secretary of Health in her official capacity for judicial review of administrative decisions did not toll statute of limitations for §§ 1983 claim against Secretary in her individual capacity for compensatory and punitive damages for alleged constitutional violations under First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments of United States Constitution which were based on same facts; Secretary was not called upon to defend damages suit with different issues not applicable to administrative revision appeal, since most that state court could have done was strike Secretary's order, but it could not award damages. Centro Medico Del Turabo, Inc. v. Feliciano De Melecio, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 285, affirmed 406 F.3d 1. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Puerto Rico employee's filing of claim with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) or Anti-Discrimination Unit of Department of Labor did not toll limitations period for § 1983 claim; EEOC had no jurisdiction over § 1983 claims. Padilla Cintron v. Rossello Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 48. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Grievance procedures and collateral reviews of employment decisions do not toll running of limitations periods under § 1983, particularly when grievance procedure would not rectify the problem giving rise to the grievance. Wagner v. Texas A & M University, S.D.Tex.1996, 939 F.Supp. 1297. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Limitations period for filing § 1983 claim was not renewed upon conclusion of tolling period representing request for certification of class denial of request, such that putative class members would have two years from date of final disposition on appeal to file their claims; to apply tolling period in that manner would counter two objectives underlying limitations periods and would encourage plaintiffs to act in dilatory fashion. Nelson v. County of Allegheny, W.D.Pa.1994, 860 F.Supp. 1080, affirmed 60 F.3d 1010, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1266, 516 U.S. 1173, 134 L.Ed.2d 213. Limitation Of Actions 126.5

Limitations period applicable to § 1983 action arising out of arrest or conviction begins to run despite pendency of habeas corpus action in federal court or direct appeal in state court; such proceedings do not toll statute or defer start of limitations period. Smith v. Holtz, M.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 227, on reconsideration 879 F.Supp. 435, affirmed 87 F.3d 108, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1041, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Limitation Of Actions 105(1); Limitation Of Actions 106

Lessee's § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of state default judgment was not saved under New York tolling statute by lessee's petition in bankruptcy court to collaterally attack default judgment, where portion of bankruptcy action that was based on same transaction as § 1983 action had ended before six months tolling period for filing § 1983 action, even though entire bankruptcy proceeding was terminated within six-month tolling period.

California Tort Claims Act tolled statute of limitations in connection with § 1983 action based on police shooting; although relatives and estate of decedent could have disregarded Act and filed § 1983 action immediately, they were also entitled to wait until resolution of administrative proceedings in order to file state law claims and § 1983 claim together. Hood v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1992, 804 F.Supp. 65. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Georgia's two-year statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 claim alleging racially discriminatory denial of membership in national guard was not tolled during 28-year period between denial and filing of complaints with Army Board for the Correction of Military Records. Banks v. Commander of Detachment 1, First Battalion (M) of 121st Infantry of Georgia Army Nat. Guard, M.D.Ga.1992, 797 F.Supp. 984, affirmed 998 F.2d 1023. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Although statute of limitations may have been tolled during pendency of fair hearing procedure with respect to claim under civil rights statute that state officials miscalculated amount of recoupment from retroactive award of SSI benefits to compensate for interim benefits provided by state, claim as to unconstitutionality of postrecoupment, as opposed to prerecoupment, hearings was not tolled. Williams v. King, E.D.N.Y.1992, 796 F.Supp. 737. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Limitations period governing § 1983 action arising from arrest was not tolled while state criminal proceedings were pending against arrestee and equitable tolling was not warranted absent any showing of continuing harm or improper inducement. Hackenburg v. Zukowski, M.D.Pa.1991, 754 F.Supp. 409. Limitation Of Actions 104.5; Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

One-year statute of limitations governing terminated California fire department employee's federal civil rights claim was not equitably tolled during pendency of Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) proceeding; thus, civil rights complaint was untimely and could not serve as basis for pendent jurisdiction over state claims. Reese v. City of Emeryville Fire Dept., N.D.Cal.1990, 746 F.Supp. 987. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Deputy sheriffs' union grievances of their terminations did not toll statutory period for deputies to file § 1983 suit challenging their terminations. Chance v. Mahoning County, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 105 Fed.Appx. 644, 2004 WL 1491622, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Pursuant to the doctrine of equitable tolling, false arrest claims against individual police officers did not continue to run, for limitations purposes, during the pendency of the arrestee's appeal from a dismissal of his claims as time-barred; if the clock were to continue to run during the pendency of the appeal, the viability of the claims would have been directly tied to the speed in which the appeal was decided. Morris v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22533399, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

4980. ---- Pursuit of state remedies, tolling of limitations period

Statute of limitation applicable to taxpayers' § 1983 actions based upon claims that they were deprived of state tax abatement on tax increases resulting from real estate improvements without due process was not tolled during pendency of state litigation for declaratory judgment; federal complaint was not dismissed before final judgment in state court was reached on merits, and taxpayers could have filed § 1983 claims in state court along with declaratory complaint. Hondo, Inc. v. Sterling, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 21 F.3d 775. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Section 1983 cause of action based on revocation of liquor license accrued on date of revocation, and not on date on which bar actually was closed by city officials; city's decision not to enforce revocation until bar owners had exhausted their state appeals did not have any effect on accrual date of alleged due process violation. Kelly v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 4 F.3d 509, rehearing denied. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Under Louisiana law, arrestee's pursuit of state habeas remedies for prosecution's failure to disclose exculpatory evidence in police investigatory file in violation of Brady tolled prescriptive period applicable to arrestee's §§ 1983 and 1985 claims based on prosecution's action. Burge v. Parish of St. Tammany, C.A.5 (La.) 1993, 996 F.2d 786, rehearing denied 5 F.3d 1493. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Inmate had colorable claim that Texas common-law tolling rule which operated to toll running of statute of limitations in cases where state prisoner was required to exhaust state administrative remedies before proceeding with claim in federal court operated to toll limitations period on § 1983 claim against prison officials until prisoner had exhausted those procedures so as to preclude dismissal of complaint pursuant to in forma pauperis statute. Gartrell v. Gaylor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 254. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Texas statute of limitations applicable to pro se litigant's § 1983 action was equitably tolled from time that his initial § 1983 claim was dismissed, as being in effect habeas corpus action necessitating exhaustion of state remedies, until time that state trial court dismissed prosecution, following grant of federal habeas relief, considering litigant's diligence and persistence, and intervening change to Texas tolling statute eliminating incarceration as a basis for tolling. Rodriguez v. Holmes, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 963 F.2d 799. Limitation Of Actions 130(5)

Rule that federal courts must employ applicable state statute of limitations in federal civil rights deprivation cases requires federal courts to give civil rights plaintiff benefit of any toll effected by his compliance with state exhaustion of administrative remedies requirement. Lawson v. Glover, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1987, 957 F.2d 801. Federal Courts 427

Iowa statute allowing tolling when commencement of action is stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition did not apply to toll limitations period applicable to inmate's civil rights action against prison officials while inmate exhausted state remedies. Lown v. Brimeyer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1992, 956 F.2d 780, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 176, 506 U.S. 860, 121 L.Ed.2d 122. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Under New York law, limitations period applicable to civil rights action could not be tolled by dismissing action to permit exhaustion of state remedies. Jewell v. County of Nassau, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 917 F.2d 738. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

Former CETA employee's voluntary pursuit of federal administrative remedies against prime sponsor did not operate to toll running of statute of limitations in subsequent civil rights action, in light of clear congressional intent not to require exhaustion. Black v. Broward Employment and Training Admin., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1988, 846 F.2d 1311. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Plaintiffs' proposed amended answer in earlier state court action against defendants did not qualify as an "original pleading," and thus, plaintiffs' later complaint in civil rights action under § 1983 against defendants could not be timely under New York's three-year limitations period for personal injury actions on ground that it related back to proposed amended answer; plaintiffs were not permitted to file amended answer in state court action. Perez v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 386. Limitation Of Actions 130(6)

Limitations period applicable to federal civil rights claims of former municipal employee were not tolled by employee's pursuance of grievance and arbitration process under collective bargaining agreement. Campbell v. Van Osdale, W.D.Mich.1992, 810 F.Supp. 205. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Pursuit by former employee of administrative and state court remedies under Illinois law did not toll limitations period with respect to his § 1983 cause of action. Coleman v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1992, 803 F.Supp. 226, affirmed 19 F.3d 21. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Federal court would not be obligated to abstain from hearing insurance agent's §§ 1983 claims against state Insurance Department, alleging malicious prosecution and interference with right to do business and freely choose one's profession, during pendency of state proceedings on agent's appeal from revocation of his license, as would toll statute of limitations on agent's federal claims; state appeals process initiated by agent was remedial, not coercive, in nature. Wyatt v. Keating, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 130 Fed.Appx. 511, 2005 WL 834462, Unreported. Federal Courts 55

Three-year statute of limitations for bringing section 1983 claim was not tolled the during the period in which state prisoner pursued a remedy in the state courts; state remedy did not need not be first sought and refused before the federal one was invoked. Cancel v. Mazzuca, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1702011, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

4981. ---- Voluntary withdrawal of claim, tolling of limitations period

Notwithstanding Illinois' two-year statute of limitations for § 1983 actions, developers' civil rights action against city was timely, when removed to federal court by city after developers dismissed and refiled state court case on eve of trial after prosecuting it for five years, under statute which allowed developers one year following voluntary dismissal to start over, inasmuch as Illinois' tolling and extension rules under dismissal-and-refiling procedure did not undermine any federal interest. Gosnell v. City of Troy, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 59 F.3d 654. Federal Courts 427

Connecticut's Accidental Failure of Suit Act did not save from limitations bar a § 1983 action challenging termination of teaching contract; the Act provides that if an action originally commenced within the applicable limitations period is dismissed for specified reasons, including lack of jurisdiction, plaintiff may commence a new action within one year of the dismissal; although 1983 action was brought within one year of dismissal for want of jurisdiction of plaintiff's state court suit, the Act does not extend the limitations period for actions that have been voluntarily withdrawn, and plaintiff's § 1983 action alleged a violation of federal due process, a claim he voluntarily withdrew in state court. LaCroix v. Board of Educ. of City of Bridgeport, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1988, 844 F.2d 88. Limitation Of Actions 130(4)

4982. Waiver, limitations

Fact that county was required by statute to give notice to plaintiff as to how much time she had to file court action on claim against county did not preclude doctrines of waiver or estoppel from applying to bar county's assertion of statute of limitations as defense to plaintiff's § 1983 action, where county was not required to give warning which they gave stating that plaintiff had six months from date of receipt of warning to file cause of action and could have made more clear that warning only applied to state claims, rather than § 1983 claims. Halus v. San Diego County Assessment Appeals Bd., S.D.Cal.1992, 789 F.Supp. 327. Limitation Of Actions 13; Limitation Of Actions 175

Officers did not waive their right to assert statute of limitations as defense to § 1983 unlawful arrest claim, based on representations of city corporation counsel in agreed discovery plan; officers were not bound by any representations of corporation counsel not made specifically on their behalf, prior to filing of appearance of counsel on their behalf. Davis v. Frapolly, N.D.Ill.1990, 742 F.Supp. 971. Limitation Of Actions 175

4983. Miscellaneous claims time barred, limitations

Civil rights complaint filed by Georgia state prisoner, who filed his complaint more than two years after he knew or should have known all of the facts necessary to pursue a cause of action, was untimely. Lovett v. Ray, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 327 F.3d 1181. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Arrestee's claims against police officers for use of excessive force, conspiracy, and unreasonable search and seizure did not relate back to the filing of the original complaint, so as to avoid a limitations bar; the arrestee was aware of the names of many of the defendants prior to the conclusion of the limitations period because he had filed several other actions against them. Fernandez v. Alexander, D.Conn.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 128. Limitation Of Actions 124

Puerto Rico's one year limitations period for arrestee's §§ 1983 claim for false arrest began to run from the time he was arrested, and therefore, his §§ 1983 claim filed almost two years after his arrest was time-barred. Morales v. Fantauzzi, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 147. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Health clinic physician's §§ 1983 claims based on discrete acts involving her "involuntary discharge" from position of Bureau Chief and failure to inform her of salary enhancement program were untimely under applicable three-year residual statute of limitations for personal injury claims in District of Columbia. Turner v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 157. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Suit under §§ 1983, claiming federal unconstitutionality of state constitutional provision, mandating that judges retire at age 70, and statute setting forth circumstances under which retired judges could be hired as judicial hearing officers, was time barred when raised more than three years after claiming judge reached 70 and retired. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Tenant's §§ 1983 claims against New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal (DHCR) defendants were time-barred to extent that they were based on DHCR orders issued more than three years before complaint was filed. Dibbs v. Roldan, S.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 340. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Three year statute of limitations had expired in § 1983 action brought by owners of real estate against municipality and private developers, claiming that condemnation violated their due process rights, constituted taking without compensation, denied them equal protection, and involved illegal delegation of eminent domain powers, all in violation of federal constitution; suit was brought five years after initial agreement between municipality and developers, putting owners on notice their property might be condemned. Didden v. Village of Port Chester, S.D.N.Y.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 548. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Former special investigator's disparate treatment claims against executive director of Kansas Human Rights Commission (KHRC) under § 1981 and § 1983 were time-barred, where they either accrued more than two years beforehand or former investigator did not allege the date of the allegedly discriminatory acts. Delatorre v. Minner, D.Kan.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1280. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 178

Limitations period ran on § 1983 claim that inmate in correctional facility suffered from cold temperatures, delays in medical care for unspecified illnesses, and inadequate portions of food, during incarceration which ended five and one half years before suit. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Three year statute of limitations barred claim brought under § 1983 against state education officials, alleging violation of educational rights assured under federal law and Mississippi Constitution of 1868-1869; unlawful act was adoption of Mississippi Constitution of 1890, and plaintiffs could make no showing that they were not aware of harm inflicted by that Constitution more than three years prior to bringing of suit. A-1 By D-2 v. Molpus, S.D.Miss.1995, 906 F.Supp. 375. Civil Rights 1380; Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

professor of medicine, were barred by statute of limitations, as § 1983 provides exclusive remedy for securing redress of constitutional violations, and § 1983 claims were time barred. Yoonessi v. State University of New York, W.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 1005, leave to appeal denied 56 F.3d 10, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 779, 516 U.S. 1075, 133 L.Ed.2d 730. Action 35; Limitation Of Actions 170

Any civil rights claim for violation of teacher's due process property rights during time that teacher's name was improperly placed on invalid file list was time barred by applicable three-year statute of limitations. Lombard v. Board of Educ. of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1992, 784 F.Supp. 1029. Civil Rights 1383

Untimely civil rights claims for false arrest and illegal search were not made viable by frivolous allegations that false arrest had been part of conspiracy; merely alleging series of interlocking violative events is not enough to constitute conspiracy sufficient to postpone accrual of claims. Day v. Moscow, S.D.N.Y.1991, 769 F.Supp. 472, affirmed 955 F.2d 807, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 71, 506 U.S. 821, 121 L.Ed.2d 37. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Nursing home proprietor's § 1983 claim, which was asserted as affirmative defense to union local's action against him, arising out of proprietor's alleged failure to disburse money received from state for purpose of bringing employee wages up to industry-wide levels was time barred; proprietor's § 1983 claim did not derive from same transaction or series of transaction as union local's claim, in that proprietor's claim was claim against state officials for recoupment. Local 144 Hotel, Hosp., Nursing Home and Allied Services Union, SEIU, AFL-CIO v. C.N.H. Management Associates, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1990, 752 F.Supp. 1195. Limitation Of Actions 40(1)

Civil rights claims against city and city council members for alleged violation of plaintiffs' constitutional rights by refusing to pay ten-year-old judgments as moral obligations were barred by statute of limitations. Stengel v. City of Columbus, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1989, 737 F.Supp. 1460, affirmed 902 F.2d 35. Civil Rights 1384

Second amended complaint asserting §§ 1983 claims of false arrest and false imprisonment did not relate back to the filing date of the original complaint for limitations purposes, with regard to a defendant against whom claims in the original complaint were dismissed on the ground that there was no vicarious liability in §§ 1983 actions; the plaintiff alleged no new facts suggesting any direct or personal involvement by the defendant in the events relating to his arrest. Young-Flynn v. Kelly, S.D.N.Y.2006, 234 F.R.D. 70. Limitation Of Actions 124

Plaintiff's claims under § 1983 and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act would be dismissed for failure to state a claim without leave to amend, where they were brought outside their statutes of limitations, and thus any amendment was futile. Barry Aviation, Inc. v. Land O'Lakes Municipal Airport Com'n, W.D.Wis.2003, 219 F.R.D. 457, reversed and remanded 377 F.3d 682, on remand 2004 WL 2778437. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

There was sufficient evidence to support jury's finding that school nurse's §§ 1983 claims against school officials for failing to protect her from physically aggressive student did not fall within limitations period, even though student assaulted nurse once within limitations period, where nurse did not suffer any injury in that assault, and record contained evidence that nurse experienced serious symptoms before any incidents with student. Buchholz v. Midwestern Intermediate Unit IV, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 890, 2005 WL 899961, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 197(1)

Because virtually everything of which civil rights plaintiffs complained took place two years before plaintiffs filed their lawsuit, plaintiffs' civil rights claims were barred by Illinois' two year limitations period for civil rights claims, and plaintiffs' tort claims against municipality entity were barred by one-year limitations period, and thus, claims were subject to dismissal with prejudice. Callico v. City of Belleville, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 99 Fed.Appx. 746, 2004 WL 1178208, Unreported, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1114, 543 U.S. 1121, 160 L.Ed.2d 1069. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State prisoner's disability of imprisonment did not warrant equitable tolling of California's two-year limitations period, and thus, his pro se cause of action under § 1983, alleging that conditions of confinement violated his constitutional rights, was time-barred and would be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Galindo v. Smith, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22717775, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Arrestee did not show that mistake as to their identities caused his initial failure to bring § 1983 claims arising out of his arrest and detention against mayor, magistrate who presided at his criminal trial, assistant chief of police, and church leader, and therefore claims, which were untimely when filed, did not relate back to date of arrestee's original complaint. Murray v. Town of Mansura, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 547, 2003 WL 22135637, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

Statute of limitations barred former jail inmate's § 1983 action, alleging denial of medical and dental care while incarcerated, even if complaint was filed within one year of his transfer from the jail and despite contention that violations continued until his transfer; complaint was filed more than a year after action accrued. Skufca v. Ervin, C.A.6 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 366, 2003 WL 21920018, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

4984. Miscellaneous claims not time barred, limitations

Under Puerto Rico's tolling statute, municipal employee's timely filed suit in Puerto Rico court tolled one year limitations period for her later filed federal civil rights suit against municipality, its mayor and vice-mayor, alleging political affiliation discrimination and retaliation for exercising her free speech rights; employee sought same type of relief in each suit, and the causes of actions in each suit were substantively identical, albeit asserted via different procedural vehicles and described in different terms. Rodriguez-Garcia v. Municipality of Caguas, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2004, 354 F.3d 91. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Former assistant fire chief's § 1983 claim against director of county's public safety commission, challenging allegedly discriminatory decision to deny her fire chief position, did not rest on any alleged violation of Title VII, but on alleged violation of her equal protection rights, and thus § 1983 claim was not barred as unlawful attempt to bootstrap untimely Title VII claim. Arrington v. Cobb County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1998, 139 F.3d 865, as amended, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1502

Even if an inmate's §§ 1983 suit had been filed one day outside the governing limitations period under a local rule, the court would have exercised its discretion to allow the action to be treated as timely filed; the inmate employed an attorney who appeared to have filed electronically under a mistaken belief that he had a credit card authorization on file with the clerk's office that would pay any necessary filing fees, there was no statement in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that required a fee to be paid before a complaint could be considered filed, and counsel contacted the clerk and filed a copy of the complaint via facsimile, though it was unclear whether counsel received permission to do so. Cornett v. Weisenburger, W.D.Va.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 544.

Puerto Rico public employee's claim for demotion was sufficiently pled as component of hostile work environment claim, and claims for withheld vacation pay, written warnings, investigation of insubordination, and ethics grievance also would not have been independently actionable and could proceed as component of hostile work environment claim, for limitations purposes. Sanchez v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 393. Limitation Of Actions 178

Amendment of police officer's complaint against Utah city adding §§ 1983 as legal basis for relief related back to date of original complaint, and §§ 1983 claims related to officer's removal from strike force more than four years before amendment thus were not subject to dismissal as untimely; original complaint referred to §§ 1981 but it was mistyped as §§ 1981, and reference to §§ 1983, written as §§ 1981, put city and its agents on notice that officer sought to vindicate violations of civil and constitutional rights. Sivulich-Boddy v. Clearfield City, D.Utah 2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1174. Limitation Of Actions 127(3)

Retired judge adequately claimed deprivation of constitutional right, as required to state §§ 1983 claim, within three year limitations period applicable in New York, by mentioning in complaint that judicial hearing officer selection committee rejected his judicial hearing officer application without affording him either an interview or hearing on application. Levine v. McCabe, E.D.N.Y.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 608. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Civil rights action by outdoor advertising company and its president, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in connection with ordinance that allegedly violated First Amendment with its regulation of billboards and other signs, was not barred by six-year statute of limitations on basis that company's president had objected to ordinance as overly restrictive and unconstitutional prior to its adoption more than six years before commencement of present action. Lavey v. City of Two Rivers, E.D.Wis.1998, 994 F.Supp. 1019, affirmed 171 F.3d 1110. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Inmate could maintain § 1983 action against supervisors of correctional facility, alleging denial of medical attention, even though suit was filed five days after limitations period expired; denial of care was ongoing violation. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Former student's action for malicious prosecution was not barred by the statute of limitations, even though he was initially arrested and prosecuted more than 19 years before he filed his malicious prosecution, where the action was filed within three years after nolle prosequi was filed; after being convicted of assault of police officer, student discovered photographs showing that he had not attacked officer. Emory v. Logan, D.Mass.1992, 801 F.Supp. 899 . Limitation Of Actions 55(1)

Oklahoma's savings statute applied to save from a limitations bar § 1983 plaintiff's claims against defendants who were also named in an earlier suit, which was dismissed otherwise than upon the merits; while the defendants were not included in the actual caption on the first page of the complaint in the earlier suit, presumably because of the limited space on the pre-printed form, it was clear from the second page and the allegations in the complaint that the plaintiff intended for them to be defendants. Williams v. City Of Guthrie, Oklahoma, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 109 Fed.Appx. 283, 2004 WL 1987294, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 130(11)

Arrestee's §§ 1983 claim, in an amended complaint, against a police officer who allegedly arrested her without probable cause related back to her original complaint against the Ohio Department of Public Safety, and thus, was not time-barred; naming of an immune governmental entity as the defendant was exactly the sort of mistake contemplated by the drafters of the applicable relation-back provision, and the officer showed, by his filings in the district court, that he actually knew, within 120 days of the original complaint, that the action would have been brought against him but for the arrestee's mistake concerning the identity of the proper party. Black-Hosang v. Ohio Dept. of Public Safety, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 372, 2004 WL 950066, Unreported, on remand 2005 WL 1514133. Limitation Of Actions 121(2)

5011. Moot questions generally

Actions, which are brought under this section, and which seek injunctive and/or declaratory relief, are moot when practices, procedures, or regulations challenged are no longer in use. Gross v. Pomerleau, D.C.Md.1979, 465 F.Supp. 1167. Action 6

5012. Change of policy or rules, moot questions

Abortion protesters' free speech, free assembly, due process, and equal protection claims seeking prospective injunctive and declaratory relief against city, arising from city ordinance, were mooted, although claims seeking nominal damages due to application of old ordinance was not mooted, where city passed new ordinance. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Indian tribe's request in civil rights case for prospective injunctive relief on equal protection grounds, regarding county property tax assessor's reclassification of land from agricultural to miscellaneous non-agricultural, was mooted by passage of statute by New Mexico legislature for tax years after effective date of statute, since statute resolved underlying state tax questions for the future in tribe's favor and effectively gave tribe all that it sought to achieve through its injunctive action. Jicarilla Apache Nation v. Rio Arriba County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 440 F.3d 1202. Civil Rights 1456

Issuance by state Department of Public Aid of rules amending earlier procedures did not render moot § 1983 claim brought by clients of Aid For Dependent Children alleging that the Department's policy regarding denial or termination of benefits for noncooperation with efforts to locate absent parent violated their federally protected due process rights. Doston v. Duffy, N.D.Ill.1988, 732 F.Supp. 857. Federal Courts 13.5

Pregnant teachers' civil rights actions against state and county school board officials for reinstatement and back pay in connection with allegedly discriminatory maternity leave policy were not made moot by the subsequent maternity leave policy changes adopted by the school boards. Paxman v. Wilkerson, E.D.Va.1975, 390 F.Supp. 442. Action 6

5013. Consent decrees, moot questions

Consent decree in separate litigation, under which Director of Illinois Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) agreed to provide "reasonable efforts" to maintain and reunify families, did not render moot appeal raising issue whether "reasonable efforts" clause of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act created rights enforceable by suit; separate action did not involve children living at home under protective order and thus involved more narrow class of plaintiffs, and consent decree did not address injunction that ordered Director to provide case worker within three days of when child would be first removed from his or her home. Suter v. Artist M., U.S.Ill.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1360, 503 U.S. 347, 118 L.Ed.2d 1, on remand 968 F.2d 1218. Federal Courts 724

Where it appeared from its terms that injunction was still in force and that, unless set aside, compliance would be required in the future, and where, in any event, mandated modification of consent decree continued its impact on parties in that, unless overturned, court rulings would remain in effect and would require city to obey modified consent decree and to disregard its seniority agreement in making future layoffs of employees, case was not moot as against contention that all white employees laid off as result of injunction had been restored to duty only one month after layoff and those who had been demoted had since been offered back their old positions. Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts, U.S.Tenn.1984, 104 S.Ct. 2576, 467 U.S. 561, 81 L.Ed.2d 483, on remand 762 F.2d 1011. Federal Courts 460.1

Tennessee state prisoner was not entitled, in his civil rights action, to damages from the Tennessee Secretary of State and various election commissioners on the ground that he had been deprived of his right to vote; his action was rendered moot by a consent decree and his constitutional right to vote in May 6, 1980 primary was not infringed, in that his original complaint referred only to the Nov. 1980 general election, and he made no effort to vote in the May 6th primary. Wright v. Crowell, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1982, 674 F.2d 521. Action 6

5014. Dismissals with prejudice, moot questions

Construction business operators' claim for equitable relief in action under this section seeking return of business documents which had allegedly been seized illegally was moot, in light of operators' representations that they no longer sought any equitable relief in federal court, as long as operators' equitable claims were dismissed with prejudice from federal action. Deakins v. Monaghan, U.S.N.J.1988, 108 S.Ct. 523, 484 U.S. 193, 98 L.Ed.2d 529. Federal Courts 452

5015. Settlements or agreements, moot questions

School administrator's cross-appeal challenging the district court's denial of his motion to enforce a settlement agreement concerning a discovery dispute was rendered moot by the Court of Appeals determination that superintendent and school board members were entitled to qualified immunity, in administrator's §§ 1983 action, alleging that his suspension and termination violated his due process rights. Kirkland v. St. Vrain Valley School Dist. No. Re-1J, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 464 F.3d 1182. Federal Courts 724

Where administrator of estate of individual who was shot and killed while allegedly fleeing scene of burglary brought civil rights action against police officer, where district court entered judgment in favor of administrator, where police officer's insurance carrier paid judgment and settled case with consent of police officer's counsel, and where police officer failed to claim any specific injury from finding of liability, court of appeals was without power to grant relief from order appealed from and case was moot, despite fact that settlement made it impossible for police officer to argue vindication of his good name to court of appeals on appeal of judgment against him. Phillips v. Cheltenham Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 575 F.2d 72. Federal Courts 543.1

City transit authority (TA) employee, who brought § 1983 claim alleging that TA director of labor relations' offer to place employee in exchange for waiver of civil rights claim violated First Amendment, had not already received all relief to which she would be entitled in prior arbitration proceeding, and thus, claim was not rendered moot by prior arbitration decision, where, in court, employee claimed TA's conduct warranted injunctive relief, compensatory damages and punitive damages and only remedial issue before arbitrator was back pay. Scott v. Goodman, E.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 424, affirmed 191 F.3d 82. Federal Courts 13.10

Section 1983 claim brought by prisoner alleging that state hospital in which he was confined had no library was rendered moot by Commonwealth's agreement to create law library at hospital; moreover, prisoner did not allege or demonstrate any damages, and was no longer confined in state hospital. Murray v. Didario, E.D.Pa.1991, 762 F.Supp. 109. Federal Courts 13.10

5016. Identity of remedies, moot questions

Finding that claim for equitable relief in action under this section was moot did not preclude consideration of propriety of district court's dismissal of related claims under state and federal law for monetary relief. Deakins v. Monaghan, U.S.N.J.1988, 108 S.Ct. 523, 484 U.S. 193, 98 L.Ed.2d 529. Federal Courts 452

5017. Declaratory judgments, moot questions

Action by state prisoner for injunctive relief and a declaration that his transfer from a medium security to a maximum security prison without being given a hearing was in violation of Constitution and laws of United States was rendered moot where before district court's ruling thereon prisoner had been transferred back to the medium security prison, no adverse action was taken against him since his retransfer and a notation was made in his file expressly stating that transfer should have no bearing on future determinations made by board of parole or time allowance committee. Preiser v. Newkirk, U.S.N.Y.1975, 95 S.Ct. 2330, 422 U.S. 395, 45 L.Ed.2d 272. Declaratory Judgment 204

Although primary election had been completed and allegedly disenfranchised petitioners would be eligible to vote in next scheduled New York primary election, their action for declaratory judgment was not moot because question which they raised was one capable of repetition, yet evading review. Rosario v. Rockefeller, U.S.N.Y.1973, 93 S.Ct. 1245, 410 U.S. 752, 36 L.Ed.2d 1, rehearing denied 93 S.Ct. 1920, 411 U.S. 959, 36 L.Ed.2d 419. Declaratory Judgment 212

church, arising out of trustee's recall from office based on his refusal to recite the Pledge of Allegiance at meetings of the town board of trustees, were rendered moot by former trustee's testimony that he was no longer a trustee on the board and that he was probably not going to run for reelection in the next four-year term. Habecker v. Town of Estes Park, Colorado, D.Colo.2006, 452 F.Supp.2d 1113. Declaratory Judgment 212

Action under §§1983 by former member of Puerto Rico Senate against former Secretary of Justice, for declaratory judgment invalidating Puerto Rico's Riot Act, was moot; Riot Act charges against former senator had been dismissed, she was no longer in office, administration that prosecuted her was no longer in power, and other leaders of former senator's political party who were prosecuted under Riot Act had been acquitted by jury in highly publicized trial, making it unlikely that Department of Justice would again expose itself to public embarrassment by selectively prosecuting officials under Riot Act for voicing differences with government. Ramirez v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 143, affirmed 438 F.3d 92. Declaratory Judgment 124.1

Procedural due process claim of students and their parents, that they were denied hearing after school district denied admission because they were nonresidents, was within capable of repetition yet evading review exception to mootness doctrine, since there was reasonable probability that plaintiffs would seek resident admission to school district, that district would deny them admission, and that plaintiffs would again request due process hearing. D.L. v. Unified School Dist. # 497, D.Kan.2002, 270 F.Supp.2d 1217, amended 2002 WL 31296445, modified on reconsideration 2002 WL 31253740, vacated 392 F.3d 1223, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 2305, 544 U.S. 1050, 161 L.Ed.2d 1090. Constitutional Law 46(1)

Although applicant's loss of his interest in property for which he sought special use permit mooted claim for injunctive relief, claim for declaratory relief remained viable, since applicant's damages claim was contingent upon finding of deprivation of constitutional rights. Marks v. City Council of City of Chesapeake, Va., E.D.Va.1988, 723 F.Supp. 1155, affirmed 883 F.2d 308. Declaratory Judgment 209

5018. Incomplete resolution of issues, moot questions

Suit by personal injury law firm, against state bar, claiming violation of its First Amendment right to advertise that three members were named in book purporting to list best lawyers in country, would not be dismissed for mootness, even though advisory opinion had been issued allowing for mention of listing; there were unresolved questions as to whether firm could comment further upon listing, and if so, what could be said. Allen, Allen, Allen & Allen v. Williams, E.D.Va.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 614. Constitutional Law 46(1)

5019. Injunctions, moot questions

Case for injunctive relief against use of chokeholds by police was not moot where moratorium by chief of police was, by its terms, not permanent. City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, U.S.Cal.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1660, 461 U.S. 95, 75 L.Ed.2d 675. Federal Courts 13.15

Passage of statute by state legislature, that effectively gave Indian tribe, as taxpayer, all prospective real estate tax relief that it sought to achieve through its injunctive action, did not moot civil rights claims brought by tribe under equal protection clause for retrospective relief in form of damages, declaratory relief, and injunctive relief in connection with tax assessments for years before effective date of statute. Jicarilla Apache Nation v. Rio Arriba County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 440 F.3d 1202. Federal Courts 13.10

Faculty member's and student's §§ 1983 action against municipal university alleging Establishment Clause violation from temporary campus display of sculpture allegedly hostile to Roman Catholic Church, to extent that it sought declaratory and injunctive relief, was mooted by scheduled end to display; university's ceasing of challenged activity was done in normal course of events rather than to evade judicial review, and there was no evidence that sculpture in question, as opposed to some hypothetical future religiously themed exhibit, would return to campus. O'Connor v. Washburn University, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 416 F.3d 1216, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1469, 164 L.Ed.2d 247. Declaratory Judgment 210

Otherwise moot controversy over facial constitutionality of original sign ordinance was not kept alive after its amendment by claim that challenger incurred damages under pre-amendment version of ordinance or by challenger's potential receipt of attorney fees were it to be a prevailing party. Lamar Advertising of Penn, LLC v. Town of Orchard Park, New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 356 F.3d 365. Zoning And Planning 570

Injunctive relief sought by students, to prevent public college from taking any further disciplinary action against them, or any other student, for peaceful acts in violation of speakers ban enforced at college, had become moot, in § 1983 lawsuit under First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments, since each named student graduated from college without suffering any further disciplinary action, and there was no allegation that any other student still attending college was at risk of disciplinary action arising out of particular event. Ford v. Reynolds, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 351, on remand 326 F.Supp.2d 392. Federal Courts 13.10

Prisoners' request for injunctive relief in their action under federal civil rights statutes alleging violation of federal constitutional rights was moot, where the requested injunctive relief had already been granted in related civil action brought by prisoners in state court. Layne v. Fair, D.Mass.1987, 671 F.Supp. 98. Injunction 22

Inmate's claim for injunctive relief against prison officials to prevent future construction work at prison on windows during winter was moot; at time of trial, where inmate had been transferred to a different correctional center. Smith v. Cooper, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 837, 2003 WL 23095527, Unreported. Injunction 22

5020. Parties to proceedings, moot questions

Federal district court decision from different district, that state statute criminalizing employer's execution of contracts with day or temporary labor service agencies to provide replacement workers for employer's regular employees during strike was preempted by NLRA, did not moot §§ 1983 action in which employer sought declaratory judgment that statute was preempted by NLRA; defendant state officials had not acquiesced in federal-court decision, and were not bound by it, leaving intact credible threat of criminal prosecution. 520 Michigan Ave. Associates, Ltd. v. Devine, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 433 F.3d 961. Declaratory Judgment 126

Where plaintiff failed to state claim against judge upon which relief could be granted, motion to substitute successor to judge as defendant in action alleging violation of civil rights was moot. Careaga v. James, E.D.Mo.1979, 474 F.Supp. 464, affirmed 616 F.2d 1062, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 140, 449 U.S. 851, 66 L.Ed.2d 62. Civil Rights 1391

5021. Class actions, moot questions

Although claims of named plaintiffs in class action alleging that county violated the Fourth Amendment by failing to provide prompt judicial determination of probable cause for warrantless arrests were rendered moot when plaintiffs either received probable cause determinations or were released, plaintiffs preserved merits of controversy for review by the Supreme Court by obtaining class certification, as termination of class representative's claim does not moot claims of unnamed members of class; moreover, fact that class was not certified until after named plaintiffs' claims had become moot did not deprive Supreme Court of jurisdiction, since claims were so inherently transitory that "relation back" doctrine was applicable to preserve merits of case for judicial resolution. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, U.S.Cal.1991, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 500 U.S. 44, 114 L.Ed.2d 49, on remand 943 F.2d 36. Federal Courts 452 obtaining court permission since individual claim of plaintiff, whose Illinois marriage was void under Wisconsin statutory provisions, was unaffected and since dispute over statute's constitutionality remained live with respect to other class members. Zablocki v. Redhail, U.S.Wis.1978, 98 S.Ct. 673, 434 U.S. 374, 54 L.Ed.2d 618. Federal Courts 13

Conviction of the named plaintiffs, who brought class action under this section challenging constitutionality of Florida procedures whereby a person arrested without a warrant and charged by information could be jailed without an opportunity for probable cause determination, did not moot the claims of the unnamed class members since the case fell within exception to general rule, in that such claim was distinctly capable of repetition yet evading review, there was a continuing class of persons suffering such deprivation and the representative plaintiffs' attorney had other clients with a continuing live interest in the case. Gerstein v. Pugh, U.S.Fla.1975, 95 S.Ct. 854, 420 U.S. 103, 43 L.Ed.2d 54, on remand 511 F.2d 528. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Remand was required, in § 1983 class action by tenants of foreclosed apartment buildings against sheriff and county for alleged due process violations regarding eviction procedures, to determine if changed procedures used by sheriff in light of amended foreclosure statute rendered action moot; if sheriff continued to evict tenant's only generically named in order of possession, then action was not moot. Rembert v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 62 F.3d 937. Federal Courts 937.1

Civil rights class action against Secretary of Louisiana Department of Corrections for injunctive and declaratory relief alleging that failure of prison to provide toilet and hand-washing facilities in the field for inmates caused harm to inmates was moot for limited purpose of challenging denial of class certification where class representative's claim had been rendered moot before denial of motion for class certification and case did not fall within exception for claim capable of repetition, yet evading review, since there were other inmates who were capable of bringing action. Rocky v. King, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 900 F.2d 864. Federal Courts 13.10

In plaintiff's class action civil rights suit on claim of incarceration on a warrantless arrest without a probable cause hearing within a reasonable time, release of named plaintiff did not render his claim moot and did not moot the claim of the class. McGill v. Parsons, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1976, 532 F.2d 484. Action 6

Mootness of deaf inmate's personal constitutional claims for failure to accommodate her hearing impairment did not require dismissal of class action; other hearing-impaired inmates had sought to intervene, indicating strong likelihood that some other named plaintiff existed who would be able to represent putative class adequately. Clarkson v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1992, 783 F.Supp. 789. Federal Civil Procedure 1742(2)

The escape from custody of one of named plaintiffs in inmates' civil rights class action did not moot inmates' claims for money damages and injunctive relief; inmate's essential right to relief pursuant to civil rights claims should not depend on his remaining within institution where deprivation occurred. Doe v. Lally, D.C.Md.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1339. Action 6; Injunction 22

Although plaintiffs were no longer students in public schools within school district, certification of civil rights action as a class action precluded any viable claim of mootness. Hernandez v. Hanson, D.C.Neb.1977, 430 F.Supp. 1154. Action 6

Fact that issues related to prayer for injunctive and declaratory relief in civil rights action challenging physical conditions in wing of correctional center where pretrial detainees were housed while awaiting trial had become moot with respect to the plaintiffs who had been transferred from the center subsequent to filing of suit did not preclude certification of action as proper class action. LaReau v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1974, 383 F.Supp. 214. Federal Civil Procedure 186.10

Complaint by alien seeking damages for alleged rejection of application for civil service position because of rule requiring applicant to be citizen adequately stated claim under this section and was not rendered moot by alien subsequently acquiring citizenship. Kilaru v. Watts, E.D.Wis.1973, 59 F.R.D. 569. Action 6; Civil Rights 1395(8)

5023. Education, schools and students, moot questions--Generally

In civil rights action wherein it was alleged that children with specific learning disabilities were discriminated against by failure of defendants to provide instructions specially suited to such children's handicaps, fact that state board of education subsequently enacted regulations which, allegedly, provided plaintiffs with relief at least equal to any that court could grant as result of suit, did not render suit moot, notwithstanding emphasis placed on procedures for parent initiated due process hearings. Frederick L. v. Thomas, E.D.Pa.1976, 408 F.Supp. 832, affirmed 557 F.2d 373. Action 6

5024. ---- Graduation, education, schools and students, moot questions

Prayer for injunctive relief in civil rights action by law student alleging that his classification by university as an out-of-state student for tuition purposes violated equal protection clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and his right to travel would be considered moot, in light of fact that law student had graduated from law school. Hooban v. Boling, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1974, 503 F.2d 648, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1585, 421 U.S. 920, 43 L.Ed.2d 788. Civil Rights 1452

Claim for personal liability against individual defendants under this section was not mooted by plaintiff's graduation from university before certification of suit as a class action, nor was plaintiff's claim for attorney's fees under § 1988 of this title, but plaintiff's individual claim under § 1681 of Title 20, and her individual claim for injunctive relief under this section were mooted. Zentgraf v. Texas A & M University, S.D.Tex.1981, 509 F.Supp. 183. Action 6

Action under this section for alleged unconstitutional refusal of defendant school officials to allow communal prayer meetings was not moot by reason of graduation of three plaintiffs where, besides the fact that remaining students clearly have a legally cognizable interest in outcome of action, pleadings indicated that action was commenced by plaintiffs, not only on their own behalf but as representatives of the organization "Students for Voluntary Prayer" and on behalf of all students similarly situated. Brandon v. Board of Ed. of Guilderland Central School Dist., N.D.N.Y.1980, 487 F.Supp. 1219, affirmed 635 F.2d 971, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 970, 454 U.S. 1123, 71 L.Ed.2d 109, rehearing denied 102 S.Ct. 1493, 455 U.S. 983, 71 L.Ed.2d 694. Civil Rights 1717

Issue of whether student plaintiffs would suffer irreparable harm if they were suspended or expelled after allegedly retaliatory disciplinary proceedings was moot where the student plaintiffs had all graduated, and hence no longer faced suspension or expulsion. Ford v. Reynolds, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 354636, Unreported. Colleges And Universities 10

5025. ---- Termination of student status, education, schools and students, moot questions

Class action wherein high school students, one of whom was suspended for period of school's chocolate drive for passing out leaflets opposed to such drive and other of whom was reprimanded and threatened with suspension if she again wore tag bearing slogan "Boycott Chocolates.", alleged infringement of rights of free speech and due process and sought expunging from school records of all mention of such disciplinary action was not rendered moot by fact that such students were no longer students at school, in that disciplinary measures remained unexpunged from school records. Hatter v. Los Angeles City High School Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1971, 452 F.2d 673. Civil Rights 1452; Injunction 22

5026. Employment, moot questions

Section 1983 claim by technicians of Property Registry of Puerto Rico, challenging disciplinary sanctions imposed on them allegedly for missing work to lobby in favor of salary increases, was rendered moot when Department lifted all existing and proposed sanctions, repaid any docked wages, and stated that no sanctions would be imposed against technicians who had been threatened with disciplinary action; circumstances of mass lobbying effort were peculiar and not likely to reoccur, and fact that discipline might occur in different circumstances was no argument against mootness. Mendez-Soto v. Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 448 F.3d 12. Federal Courts 13.10

Affidavit submitted by successor to state agency's former inspector general, stating that she sent no letters or newsletters to employees containing language that existed in directives issued by former inspector general that were determined to be prior restraint on employees' speech in violation of First Amendment, was adequate to establish that successor did not consider directives to continue in force under her tenure, as required to support finding that employees' claims against her for continuing violation of their federal rights were moot. Wernsing v. Thompson, C.D.Ill.2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 983, reversed and remanded 423 F.3d 732, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1476, 164 L.Ed.2d 249. Federal Courts 13

Rehiring of some of deputy clerk union's members did not moot union's § 1983 claims for relief since union sought damages as well as the reinstatement of its members who were not rehired by chief court administrator of the State of Connecticut and thus, union's § 1983 claims alleging that administrator terminated its members' employment without due process and discriminated against them on the basis of their union activities would not be dismissed as moot. Local 749, AFSCME, Council 4, AFL-CIO v. Ment, D.Conn.1996, 945 F.Supp. 30. Federal Civil Procedure 1741; Federal Courts 13.10

Where former public employee had appealed to the Civil Service Commission before filing his lawsuit and hearing was held on his appeal and he was reinstated with backpay, former public employee's action alleging denial of his federal and constitutional and statutory rights to substantive and procedural due process and to equal protection resulting from official policy and procedure of discharging employees of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare solely because of prior criminal record without regard to actual job performance was moot, notwithstanding claim that former public employee was entitled to punitive damages under this section. Vinson v. Freeman, E.D.Pa.1981, 524 F.Supp. 63. Federal Courts 13.10

5027. Forfeitures, moot questions

Civil rights action by owner whose vehicle was allegedly taken without prompt probable cause determination was moot, where owner prevailed in forfeiture trial and vehicle was returned. Jones v. Takaki, N.D.Ill.1993, 832 F.Supp. 1224, affirmed 38 F.3d 321, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Courts 13.10

5028. Licenses and permits, moot questions

Claims challenging constitutionality of Hawaii statute providing for administrative revocation of driver's licenses for driving while intoxicated were moot as to motorists whose revocations had been rescinded during administrative revocation proceedings or by state court during judicial review, despite claim that declaratory judgment would expunge damage to motorists' reputations, and that claims were capable of repetition yet evading review; motorists had already received declaration in state court that their revocations were improper, and conditions for review of claims capable of repetition yet evading review did not exist. Aiona v. Judiciary of State of Hawaii, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1994, 17 F.3d 1244. Federal Courts 13

Claim for money damages filed by applicants for parade permit did not become moot when seven-nation economic summit ended, even though the applicants were seeking a parade permit for the summit's opening day; if the applicants' rights were violated by denial of the permit, and if that refusal caused actual damages, the applicants stated a live claim under federal civil rights statute. Henschen v. City of Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 959 F.2d 584. Federal Courts 13.10

Owner did not have to apply for construction permit within three years from initial approval of planned-unit development plan, and thus owner's civil rights claims that were brought more than three years after initial approval under due process and equal protection clauses were not moot, where development standards proposed 10 to 12 year construction time and noted that development would proceed as "market conditions dictate." Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 432

Where motorist satisfied judgment which had led to suspension of driving and owners privileges which were then restored and where second motorist's licenses had been restored when state learned of illegal revocation, and official implemented administrative procedure to avoid such improper revocations in future, federal action on claim of deprivation of civil rights were moot. Leonhart v. McCormick, W.D.Pa.1975, 395 F.Supp. 1073. Action 6

5029. Mental patients, moot questions

Although plaintiff was no longer confined in state mental institution, her civil rights action for damages for physical intrusion on her person contrary to her religious beliefs was not moot; where state still retained photographs and fingerprints allegedly taken contrary to requirements of Constitution, action for their return was not moot. Winters v. Miller, E.D.N.Y.1969, 306 F.Supp. 1158, reversed on other grounds 446 F.2d 65, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 450, 404 U.S. 985, 30 L.Ed.2d 369. Action 6

5030. Minors, moot questions

On appeal, § 1983 action brought by minors and their parents to challenge constitutionality of city's juvenile curfew ordinance was not moot, where at least one of minors was not yet 18 years of age and her parent was also named plaintiff. Nunez by Nunez v. City of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 114 F.3d 935. Federal Courts 724

5031. Prisons and prisoners, moot questions--Generally

Section 1983 pro se action for injunctive relief brought by state prisoner and fiance against prison officials, alleging violation of due process resulting from officials' restriction of couples' visitation privileges and delay of marriage, was moot, where restriction was subsequently lifted and couple was allowed to marry. Martin v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 329 F.3d 919, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1454

Prisoner's claim for injunctive relief in action under § 1983, alleging that he was exposed to unreasonably high levels of secondhand smoke in violation of Eighth Amendment, was not moot despite transfer of prisoner to different housing block, and prison's implementation of restrictive smoking policy, since prisoner was housed in block without individual cell windows, in conditions similar to those he experienced prior to transfer, and prisoner asserted that prison's new smoking policy was not being enforced. Davis v. New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 316 F.3d 93. Federal Courts 13.10

Claim, in civil rights action brought by female prisoners, in which they alleged that their equal protection rights were violated due to unequal access to educational programs, was moot where, during pendency of appeal, prison abandoned programs completely for both male and female inmates. Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights were moot after he was transferred from the prison facility at which the violations allegedly occurred, absent any evidence that he was likely to be retransferred. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1454

Where action, which was brought pursuant to this section to challenge city police department's involuntary commitment procedures for admitting arrested individuals suspected of mental illness to psychiatric screening and evaluation unit at city hospital, sought monetary relief in addition to injunctive and declaratory relief, fact that injunctive and declaratory relief would be of no avail did not mean that case was moot. Gross v. Pomerleau, D.C.Md.1979, 465 F.Supp. 1167. Action 6

Former state inmate's § 1983 claims for injunctive relief against prison officials, arising out of conditions of his confinement, were moot, where inmate was released from incarceration in state. DeFoe v. Correction Officers Tucker, D.Del.2002, 2002 WL 31422864, Unreported. Federal Courts 13.10

5032. ---- Classification of prisoners, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

Prisoner's allegations in suit under this section challenging termination of his minimum custody status by California prison officials and asserting claim for damages for mental and emotional distress arising from failure to observe his procedural rights asserted claim which could be compensable, and regardless of actual damages, be could be entitled to nominal damages if he prevailed, and thus his action was not mooted by his return to minimum custody though he also requested injunctive relief. Lokey v. Richardson, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 600 F.2d 1265, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 238, 449 U.S. 884, 66 L.Ed.2d 110, on remand 534 F.Supp. 1015. Action 6; Civil Rights 1395(7)

5033. ---- Correction of disciplinary proceeding, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

Former state prisoner's federal habeas petition, challenging prison disciplinary proceedings which resulted in the forfeiture of gain time, was rendered moot by prisoner's release on expiration of his sentence, regardless of whether petitioner's release removed the bar to any civil cause of action he might have, under §§1983 or otherwise, for challenging revocation of his gain time. Doss v. Crosby, N.D.Fla.2005, 357 F.Supp.2d 1334. Habeas Corpus 231

Administrative reversal of administrative detention of prisoner after disciplinary hearing did not cure any wrongful deprivation of liberty and trust resulting from due process violation at disciplinary hearing, and, thus, prison officials were not entitled to summary judgment in prisoner's civil rights claim. Porter v. Novak, N.D.N.Y.1995, 898 F.Supp. 79. Civil Rights 1092

Claim, in civil rights proceeding, that state inmates' rights to procedural due process were violated by virtue of subjection to administrative segregation without being afforded a disciplinary hearing or notice of charges against them was moot, in that bureau of corrections' administrative directive, which required disciplinary hearing for inmates charged with major misconduct, had gone into effect. Gray v. Creamer, W.D.Pa.1974, 376 F.Supp. 675. Constitutional Law 46(1)

5034. ---- Disciplinary records, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

Where disciplinary infractions resulting from prison inmate's possession of newspaper entitled "Muhammad Speaks" had been deleted from inmate's prison records, inmate's civil rights complaint with regard to such infractions was moot. Northern v. Nelson, N.D.Cal.1970, 315 F.Supp. 687, affirmed 448 F.2d 1266. Prisons 13(3)

5035. ---- Freedom of religion, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where none of eight New York state prisoners who brought civil rights action to challenge prison policy which limited to 15 the number of inmates who could participate in certain religious instruction and Arabic classes was presently at the correctional facility demand for injunction against class size limitation was moot. Tawwab v. Metz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 554 F.2d 22. Injunction 22

State prisoner's civil rights action, based on claim that he had been prevented from attending congregate religious services, was not rendered moot by fact that at time of argument he could attend services, where he sought actual and punitive damages. U. S. ex rel. Jones v. Rundle, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1971, 453 F.2d 147. Action 6

Claims for injunctive relief, in §§ 1983 action alleging that enforcement against prison inmate of rules restricting certain inmates' ability to subscribe to newspaper, magazine, and newsletter publications violated his First Amendment rights, were moot, where inmate had been released from prison. Calia v. Werholtz, D.Kan.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1210. Civil Rights 1454

Section 1983 claim against county officials alleging that juvenile detention facility's policy of asking detainees about their religious preferences and practices violated First Amendment was mooted by combination of fact that plaintiffs had withdrawn their claim for monetary damages, leaving only claim for injunctive relief, and that officials had discontinued practice, rendering it impossible for court to grant any effectual relief. Smook v. Minnehaha County, D.S.D.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 1037, adhered to on reconsideration 353 F.Supp.2d 1059. Federal Courts 13.10

In state inmate's civil rights action for declaratory and injunctive relief against regulation of state department of corrections, allegation as to unequal allotment of religious budget was moot where inmate's affidavit stated that denial of budget allotment for Muslim faith had been overturned through institutional grievance procedures. Cochran v. Sielaff, S.D.Ill.1976, 405 F.Supp. 1126. Declaratory Judgment 204; Injunction 22

5036. ---- Parole, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

State prisoners' release on parole following filing of class action civil rights suit claiming denial of due process by Montana Board of Pardons in determining parole eligibility did not render action moot, where prisoners sought compensatory damages in addition to declaratory and injunctive relief. Board of Pardons v. Allen, U.S.Mont.1987, 107 S.Ct. 2415, 482 U.S. 369, 96 L.Ed.2d 303. Federal Courts 13.15

Section 1983 challenge to constitutionality of United States Parole Commission regulation effectively denying representation to District of Columbia prisoner at his parole hearing was not mooted by revision to regulation permitting all District of Columbia Code offenders to have representation at parole hearings; prisoner was still incarcerated, and sought injunctive relief in form of new parole hearing. Settles v. U.S. Parole Com'n, C.A.D.C.2005, 429 F.3d 1098, 368 U.S.App.D.C. 297. Constitutional Law 46(1)

State prisoners' § 1983 class action against State Board of Pardons and Paroles, challenging constitutionality of change in method for calculating tentative parole month of certain crime severity level of offenders under parole decision guidelines system, had become moot as to prisoners who had now been paroled and as to other prisoners who had served new minimum tentative parole month time period but had not been paroled, as class did not seek actual release on parole, but simply setting of tentative parole date under old rules. Jones v. Georgia State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 59 F.3d 1145. Federal Courts 13.10

Prisoner's civil rights action against state prison officials, alleging that Corrections Department's decision to deny him work release violated due process and that application to him of later regulation establishing more restrictive criteria for eligibility to participate in work release program violated ex post facto clause, was not mooted by fact that prisoner had been paroled, where prisoner had sought compensatory and punitive damages as well as declaratory and injunctive relief. Francis v. Fox, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1988, 838 F.2d 1147. Federal Courts 13.10

Former prison inmate's §§ 1983 claim against prison officials for alleged violation of his due process rights when they allegedly failed to provide timely preliminary and parole revocation hearings following his arrest, resulting in Parole Commission's failure to consider inmate for a discretionary early release program, was moot where the inmate was released from prison on the same day as he would have been had he received prompt hearings. Stewart v. Gaines, D.D.C.2005, 370 F.Supp.2d 293. Constitutional Law 46(1)

Claim by prisoner that he was denied due process by state parol board's failure to consider his application for exceptional progress in manner required by New Jersey law was rendered moot by board's decision to deny parole and to establish future eligibility date. Johnson v. Fauver, D.N.J.1992, 786 F.Supp. 442, affirmed 970 F.2d 899. Federal Courts 13.15

Inmate's civil rights action against prison officials for failure to accommodate hearing impairment was rendered moot by inmate's release on parole where inmate sought declaratory and injunctive relief, not damages or compensation. Clarkson v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1992, 783 F.Supp. 789. Declaratory Judgment 204

Although since commencement of prisoner's suit for alleged violations of his civil rights, by confinement in punitive segregation without adequate due process hearing and thereafter by his transfer to another institution in which he was segregated from general prison population without hearing, for which violations he sought declaratory judgment, damages, and expungement of all references to incident and punishment from his prison records, prisoner had been released on parole and his maximum release date had passed, since he sought monetary relief, matter was not moot; however, expungement issue was moot. Mack v. Johnson, E.D.Pa.1977, 430 F.Supp. 1139, affirmed 582 F.2d 1275, affirmed 582 F.2d 1276. Action 6

5037. ---- Releases, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

On appeal from dismissal of civil rights action brought by county jail inmates seeking relief from conditions in jail, claims for injunctive relief were moot where suit was neither filed nor certified as class action, and where, with exception of one inmate who was rearrested, all inmates who sought injunctive relief were released during pendency of appeal and were no longer subjected to alleged mistreatment. Inmates v. Owens, C.A.4 (Va.) 1977, 561 F.2d 560. Federal Courts 757

Appeals from summary dismissal of civil rights actions which challenged conditions of confinement at two state institutions, which were not class actions and which did not seek damages might properly be dismissed for mootness in light of concession that none of plaintiffs were presently incarcerated at such institutions. Carroll v. Brown, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1977, 560 F.2d 1177. Federal Courts 724

Since the two plaintiff state penitentiary inmates sought damages in civil rights action against prison officials claiming restrictions of right to practice religion in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, and the status of one of the plaintiffs remained the same, the release of one plaintiff from one prison did not render contentions moot. Kennedy v. Meacham, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1976, 540 F.2d 1057. Action 6

Recovery of damages for alleged violations of federal prisoner's constitutional rights by placing him in segregation did not turn on his continued presence in segregation; thus, release from segregation did not render damage claim moot. Chapman v. Kleindienst, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 507 F.2d 1246. Civil Rights 1092

Claim for money damages for violation of prisoner's civil rights was not rendered moot by prisoner's release from confinement. Cruz v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 497 F.2d 496. Action 6

Inmate's release from state prison rendered moot his ADA, §§ 1983, and Rehabilitation Act claims for injunctive relief concerning the provision of medical care or proper accommodation for his disabilities by the former Connecticut Commissioner of Correction or the Connecticut Department of Correction. Roque v. Armstrong,

D.Conn.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 382. Civil Rights 1454

Facts that prisoner had been released from medical separation unit and returned to general population mooted prisoner's claims for injunctive and declaratory relief in federal civil rights action in which he alleged that prison's placement of him in isolation because of his refusal to submit to tuberculosis (TB) screening test. Jones-Bey v. Wright, N.D.Ind.1996, 944 F.Supp. 723. Declaratory Judgment 84

Where plaintiff, a state prisoner, was challenging conditions of confinement, instead of fact or duration thereof, he was not required to exhaust state remedies as prerequisite to bringing action under this subchapter, and where he was seeking not only declaratory and injunctive relief but also money damages, his claims were not moot merely because he was no longer incarcerated in county jail. Carter v. Newburgh Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1980, 523 F.Supp. 16. Action 6; Civil Rights 1319

Prisoner's claim for declaratory and injunctive relief with respect to alleged violations under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 8 was moot where the prisoner was no longer incarcerated at the correctional facility at which the alleged violations occurred. Leon v. Harris, S.D.N.Y.1980, 489 F.Supp. 221. Declaratory Judgment 204

Where prison official's own affidavits revealed that prison inmate had history of psychiatric difficulties for which he was twice committed to mental institution and that he continued to need psychiatric care, prisoner's civil rights action, in which he contended that he had improperly been committed to mental institution without being given hearing, was not mooted by fact that he had thereafter been returned to penitentiary. Evans v. Paderick, E.D.Va.1977, 443 F.Supp. 583. Action 6

Any civil rights claim for injunctive relief based upon alleged illegality of confinement of state prisoner was moot, where state prisoner had been released from the particular conditions of confinement of which he complained. Tyrrell v. Taylor, E.D.Pa.1975, 394 F.Supp. 9, modified on other grounds 535 F.2d 823. Action 6

5038. ---- Transfers, prisons and prisoners, moot questions

Mentally ill state prisoner's due process challenge to his treatment with antipsychotic drugs against his will without judicial hearing was not rendered moot by virtue of fact that state had ceased administering antipsychotic drugs; prisoner was still diagnosed as suffering from schizophrenia, continued to serve his sentence in state prison system, and was subject to transfer to center for mentally ill prisoners, to which he had already been transferred twice, at any time. Washington v. Harper, U.S.Wash.1990, 110 S.Ct. 1028, 494 U.S. 210, 108 L.Ed.2d 178. Federal Courts 13.15

Prisoner's transfer from prison at which segregation unit was located rendered his claims for injunctive relief moot, despite his contention that actions of prison officials with regard to his placement in that unit were capable of repetition but avoiding review; prisoner's allegation that his return to prison in question was a virtual certainty did not amount to showing or demonstration of the likelihood of retransfer. Higgason v. Farley, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 83 F.3d 807. Civil Rights 1454

Prisoner's transfer mooted § 1983 civil rights claims for injunctive and declaratory relief for alleged cruel and unusual punishment resulting from overcrowding combined with unsanitary conditions; prisoner was unlikely to return to prison and prisoner requested transfer in order to facilitate family visitation rights. Williams v. Griffin, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1991, 952 F.2d 820. Federal Courts 13.10

Inmate's transfer to another prison rendered moot his claims for equitable relief in connection with allegedly unconstitutional deprivation of food at former prison. Cooper v. Sheriff, Lubbock County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1078. Federal Courts 13.10

Prisoner's transfer to Missouri State Penitentiary rendered moot his claim for injunctive relief arising out of alleged deprivation of constitutional rights in Iowa State Penitentiary; however, prisoner's claim for pecuniary damages was not rendered moot as a result of prisoner's transfer. Wycoff v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 572 F.2d 1260. Action 6; Injunction 22

Where prison inmate was no longer incarcerated at particular prison, his request for injunction restraining officials at such prison from violating his civil rights was moot, but his claim for money damages stemming from same allegedly unconstitutional actions survived. Mawhinney v. Henderson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 542 F.2d 1. Federal Courts 757

State prison inmate's civil rights complaint seeking declaration that prison's policies and practices concerning temporary lockup violated his due process rights and injunction preventing prison from punishing him without due process would be dismissed as moot where inmate had been transferred back to general population, was no longer suffering any deprivation ordered by disciplinary committee, and there was no indication that inmate ever lost any good-time credit as a result of disciplinary committee's recommendation. Franklin v. Israel, W.D.Wis.1982, 537 F.Supp. 1112. Federal Courts 13.15

Inmate's appeal of the dismissal of his §§ 1983 action against prison officials challenging the conditions of his confinement was moot; inmate was transferred to another correctional facility while appeal was pending, and thus inmate was no longer subject to conditions of which he complained. Goff v. Clements, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2005, 138 Fed.Appx. 851, 2005 WL 1162938, Unreported. Federal Courts 724

5039. Public assistance, moot questions

Where all complainants had received determinations of eligibility for Aid to Dependent Children and, under state law, no past benefits were lost because of any delay in action upon application, civil rights cause based on such delay in alleged deprivation of due process was moot. Craddock v. Hill, W.D.Mo.1970, 324 F.Supp. 183. Injunction 22

Fact that plaintiffs had received their unlawfully delayed benefits after lawsuit was commenced did not render moot their purported class action under § 1983 alleging that New York City failed to process public assistance grants pursuant to Aid for Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program in a timely fashion; action would be certified as class action, even if named plaintiffs were no longer suffering the harm alleged, since others similarly situated were. Brown v. Giuliani, E.D.N.Y.1994, 158 F.R.D. 251. Federal Courts 13.10

5040. Zoning, moot questions

Amendments to township zoning resolution, which limited retail space within particular development to 65,000 square feet, did not apply retroactively to application for zoning permit to build 220,000 square foot building that was made by owner of undeveloped property six months before enactment of amendment, and thus owner's civil rights claims under due process and equal protection clauses were not moot, since right to existing zoning classification under Ohio law vested upon submission of application. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Zoning And Planning 376

Apartment building owner's § 1983 claim against city was not rendered moot by expiration of challenged zoning ordinance prohibiting condominium time share plans; owner no longer owned subject property and did not seek to operate time share plan, but rather sought damages for injuries caused by city's allegedly wrongful deprivation of its constitutional rights. Jackson Court Condominiums, Inc. v. City of New Orleans, E.D.La.1987, 665 F.Supp. 1235, affirmed 874 F.2d 1070. Federal Courts 13.10

5061. Res judicata generally

Generally, state court decisions of federal constitutional claims are accorded res judicata effect in subsequent actions brought under this section. Fernandez v. Trias Monge, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1978, 586 F.2d 848. Judgment 828.21(1)

Issues actually litigated in state court proceeding are entitled to same preclusive effect in subsequent federal § 1983 suit as they enjoy in courts of state where judgment was rendered. Treister v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.1992, 893 F.Supp. 1057, affirmed 56 F.3d 1389.

Rules of res judicata and collateral estoppel apply to federal civil rights actions brought after state court judgment. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Judgment 828.21(1)

Federal court in federal civil rights action must give to a state court judgment the same preclusive effect as would be given that judgment under law of state in which judgment was rendered. Dennison v. County of Frederick, W.D.Va.1989, 726 F.Supp. 137, affirmed 921 F.2d 50, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2828, 501 U.S. 1218, 115 L.Ed.2d 998. Judgment 828.20(1)

Cases brought under this section are not exempt from normal principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel. Colvin v. Deaton, W.D.Va.1984, 577 F.Supp. 925.

Judgment in state civil action could have res judicata effect in federal civil rights action under this section proscribing the deprivation of rights. Omernick v. LaRocque, W.D.Wis.1976, 406 F.Supp. 1156, affirmed 539 F.2d 715. Judgment 828.1

Res judicata is applicable to suits brought under this section. Mertes v. Mertes, D.C.Del.1972, 350 F.Supp. 472, affirmed 93 S.Ct. 2141, 411 U.S. 961, 36 L.Ed.2d 681. See, also, Crowe v. Leeke, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1977, 550 F.2d 184; Spence v. Latting, C.A.10 (Okl.) 1975, 512 F.2d 93, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 198, 423 U.S. 896, 46 L.Ed.2d 129; 290 Madison Corp. v. Capone, D.C.N.J.1980, 485 F.Supp. 1348; Smith v. Sinclair, D.C.Okl.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1108. Judgment 550

Res judicata should be used sparingly in actions brought under this section and its application is only proper when there has been previous action between parties or their privies involving same subject matter terminating in final judgment on merits. Bricker v. Sceva Speare Memorial Hospital, D.C.N.H.1972, 339 F.Supp. 234. Judgment 644

5062. Personal liberty restraints, res judicata

That a civil rights action involves a restraint on personal liberty does not preclude application of principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel. Sylvander v. New England Home For Little Wanderers, D.C.Mass.1978, 444 F.Supp. 393, affirmed 584 F.2d 1103. Judgment 550; Judgment 644

5063. Time of judgments, res judicata

Where improper treatment by prison officials alleged by inmate in action under this section had occurred after trial of previous class action challenging conditions of confinement which resulted in ongoing injunctive decree, inmate's equitable claims were not barred by doctrine of res judicata, although his action was properly transferred to district court which had fashioned injunctive decree in previous class action, to assure consistency, evenhanded relief for inmates, and orderly administration of prison system. Johnson v. McKaskle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1984, 727 F.2d 498, on remand 591 F.Supp. 511. Federal Courts 113; Judgment 605

Civil rights suit against prison officials for injuries sustained by prisoner when he was stabbed by fellow inmate was not barred by res judicata where record in prior action challenging condition of confinement in prison was closed two months before stabbing injury. Bogard v. Cook, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1978, 586 F.2d 399, rehearing denied 591 F.2d 102, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 173, 444 U.S. 883, 62 L.Ed.2d 113. Judgment 590(4)

Civil rights action filed in federal court by prisoner against state prison officials could have been filed in state court or could have been concurrently filed in both courts and could have proceeded to judgment in either; whichever court first rendered an in personam judgment would have been entitled to have its judgment receive res judicata effect in the other court. Crawford v. Loving, E.D.Va.1979, 84 F.R.D. 80. Courts 489(1); Judgment 828.1; Judgment 829(1)

5064. Full and fair opportunity to present issues, res judicata--Generally

Although all three components of doctrine of res judicata were present with respect to prison inmate's § 1983 suit arising out of action taken by disciplinary committee at correctional facility and prior state court certiorari proceeding, inasmuch as neither the disciplinary committee nor the state court had jurisdiction to award damages, inmate did not have full and fair opportunity to pursue claim for damages and res judicata did not bar the § 1983 action. Bates v. Department of Corrections, E.D.Wis.1991, 774 F.Supp. 536. Judgment 828.16(1)

5065. ---- Assistance of counsel, full and fair opportunity to present issues, res judicata

Doctrine of res judicata did not bar natural mother's action under this section seeking relief from Texas district court's judgment permanently terminating her parental rights where mother, in the action under this section, claimed that entire state proceeding was constitutionally defective since she was not provided with counsel, mother was not attempting to relitigate any of substantive issues underlying Texas court's judgment, and it appeared, from record, that it would be manifestly unjust to refuse to hear mother's claim of right to counsel on basis that she should have raised it before the Texas court. Rhoades v. Penfold, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 694 F.2d 1043, rehearing denied 719 F.2d 404. Judgment 828.12

Civil rights litigant was not entitled to relief from issue preclusive effect of summary judgment in first civil rights suit by reason of fact that litigant was unrepresented in first civil rights suit or under claim that defendants in earlier suit committed fraud on court, without clear and convincing evidence that defendants deliberately defrauded the court. McNally v. Colorado State Patrol, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 122 Fed.Appx. 899, 2004 WL 2445576, Unreported. Judgment 660; Judgment 713(1)

5066. ---- Erroneous decisions, full and fair opportunity to present issues, res judicata

Where a party has been afforded full and fair hearing in state court, § 1983 does not allow relitigation of same issues in federal court simply because state court's decision may have been erroneous; due process is satisfied if party receives full and fair adjudication of its constitutional claims in state court. Peduto v. City of North Wildwood, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1989, 878 F.2d 725. Constitutional Law 315; Judgment 828.11(2)

5067. ---- Time for trial preparation, full and fair opportunity to present issues, res judicata

Under New York law, inmate lacked full and fair opportunity to litigate prior state negligence claim, precluding application of res judicata or collateral estoppel in subsequent federal civil rights action, where counsel had been appointed for inmate in federal matter, inmate had at best a single day's notice of state trial, appointed counsel in federal case was never notified of parallel state litigation, and inmate showed prejudice in availability of eyewitness who could have been called to testify in state action if inmate had more notice and had been more knowledgeable about court procedures. West v. Ruff, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 961 F.2d 1064. Judgment 828.16(1)

5068. ---- Miscellaneous opportunities full and fair, full and fair opportunity to present issues, res judicata

Under Massachusetts doctrines of claim and issue preclusion, state prosecution of driver under statute prohibiting refusal to stop when signaled by police officer barred § 1983 action alleging unconstitutionality of statute under Fourth Amendment, whether or not driver raised the constitutional challenge in the prosecution; the prosecution provided opportunity to present constitutional arguments. Willhauck v. Halpin, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 953 F.2d 689, rehearing denied. Judgment 828.8

Owners of residential property were precluded, under doctrine of res judicata, from challenging constitutionality of city ordinances concerning maintaining property in unsightly or unsanitary manner, where constitutional challenges were not raised in state court in enforcement actions, or were raised and adverse judgment was not appealed; procedures and avenues for relief available to owners in state court afforded them full and fair opportunity to litigate their constitutional defenses. Pliska v. City of Stevens Point, Wis., C.A.7 (Wis.) 1987, 823 F.2d 1168. Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.16(4)

Doctrine of res judicata barred ex-husband's claims under § 1983 that attorneys who represented his former wife during Minnesota state court proceedings that resulted in his marriage dissolution and in award of custody over his minor son to this ex-wife violated husband's rights under United States Constitution; attorneys were in privity with their law firm, which was named as defendant in husband's prior state court civil rights action, husband's current claims were no different from those he advanced, or that he could have advanced, in that state court civil rights action, and there was no evidence that his state court claims, as subsequently considered by three appellate courts--including United States Supreme Court--did not receive full and fair hearing. Nelson v. Butler, D.Minn.1996, 929 F.Supp. 1252, affirmed 108 F.3d 1382. Judgment 828.14(3)

Court in § 1983 action alleging racially discriminatory discharge would give preclusive effect to state Personnel Commission's factual findings that race was not determining factor in discharge decision or in decision not to have Affirmative Action Office prevent termination, inasmuch as Commission decision involved identical issues as employee's § 1983 claim, Commission was acting in judicial capacity, employee's claim was properly before it and employee had adequate opportunity to litigate his claim. Pugh v. State of Wis. Dept. of Natural Resources, E.D.Wis.1990, 749 F.Supp. 205. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Civil Rights 1711

Where child's natural mother had full and fair opportunity to litigate constitutionality of state's failure to serve her with notice prior to initial dependency hearing before North Carolina district and appellate courts, she was bound by state court decisions and thus claim under this section was barred by principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel. Yow v. Crater, M.D.N.C.1981, 526 F.Supp. 240. Judgment 828.20(1)

Where state prisoners who brought civil rights action against police officers had a full and fair opportunity, at state suppression hearing, to litigate claims with respect to searches, seizures and arrests, plaintiffs could not try those issues anew in federal civil rights action. Pyles v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1976, 418 F.Supp. 269. Judgment 828.8

Doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel barred §§ 1983 claims in which former adoptive parents of minor child challenged validity of second adoption of child by another couple, which was fully litigated in state court and decided against former parents. Campbell v. Schneller, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 109 Fed.Appx. 652, 2004 WL 1835999, Unreported, modified on denial of rehearing 109 Fed.Appx. 708, 2004 WL 2278492. Adoption 14

5069. ---- Miscellaneous opportunities not full and fair, full and fair opportunity to present issues, res judicata

Plaintiff was justified in believing that state suit for damages alleging illegal arrest would have no preclusive effect on later federal action brought under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, and plaintiff did not have full and fair opportunity to present his federal claim in earlier state action so as to bar subsequent federal action under principles of claim preclusion, where law in circuit, at time Pennsylvania action was brought, was that federal civil rights actions would not be barred by earlier state court litigation unless federal claim had actually been pressed in, and decided by, state court. Wade v. City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1985, 765 F.2d 405. Judgment 828.16(1)

5070. Merit determination, res judicata

Res judicata barred relitigation under Section 1983 of plaintiffs' claim that their church had been wrongfully dissolved, since Michigan circuit court's order dissolving the church was based on findings of fact following an extensive bench trial and was a judgment on the merits, as was the Michigan Court of Appeals' determination that the challenge to the dissolution order was "without merit," since plaintiffs' challenge to the dissolution order was the very issue resolved in the prior state case, and since each federal plaintiff was either a party to the first suit or privy to parties in that suit. Fellowship of Christ Church v. Thorburn, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 758 F.2d 1140. Judgment 828.9(3); Judgment 828.9(7); Judgment 828.12

When due process claim was not raised in first instance before New York civil service commission by dismissed New York City transit authority employee and the state courts on that basis alone perceived themselves as powerless under McKinney's N.Y. Civil Service Law, § 76, to hear dismissed employee's belated Article 78 due process claim, state courts' determination that employee's election to appeal to commission precluded his maintaining court action was a final determination on the "merits" which, under principle of res judicata, federal court should not disturb. Taylor v. New York City Transit Authority, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1970, 433 F.2d 665. Judgment 828.9(3)

Where State Commissioner of Health, following hearing, denied request to change sex designation on birth certificate and, on appeal to state court, plea in abatement was sustained on ground that petition was not filed within 30 days after mailing of notice of the final decision of the Commissioner, neither the Commissioner's decision nor the court's refusal to reverse the same was res judicata as to claim, asserted in action under this section that Commissioner's refusal to make the change violated plaintiff's rights under this section. Darnell v. Lloyd, D.C.Conn.1975, 395 F.Supp. 1210. Judgment 828.20(1)

State court order dismissing police officer's petition for reinstatement of his license to carry firearms based on mootness was not decision on the merits, so as to preclude officer's subsequent § 1983 claim regarding suspension of his license under doctrine of res judicata. Rosenfeld v. Egy, D.Mass.2003, 2003 WL 222119, Unreported, affirmed 346 F.3d 11. Judgment 828.9(5)

5071. Finality of prior judgment, res judicata--Generally

Civil rights activist who brought § 1983 action against city and police officers, stemming from his arrest while attempting to film traffic stop, declined to file second amended complaint for earlier claim based upon prior arrest incident, even though he received permission from court to do so, and thus activist's present action was not precluded under res judicata doctrine, since there was no final judgment on merits as to earlier claim. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 1292, amended 289 F.Supp.2d 1264, affirmed 130 Fed.Appx. 987, 2005 WL 1221632. Judgment 564(1)

Determination on appeal of Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) decision that Small Business Administration (SBA) employee had not been discriminated against because of his race when he was discharged had res judicata effect in employee's subsequent civil rights action against United States and SBA officials. Matthews v. U.S., E.D.Wis.1992, 805 F.Supp. 712, affirmed 28 F.3d 1216. Judgment 642

5072. ---- Affirmance of denial of certiorari, finality of prior judgment, res judicata

Under Wisconsin law of res judicata, state court proceedings in which denial of certiorari to review decision of municipal annuity and pension board denying duty disability benefits to police officer was affirmed would be given preclusive effect and, accordingly, federal court would do likewise in § 1983 action involving same parties and same operative facts; that is, decision by applicant to pursue his claim in the state courts to a final judgment on the merits precluded his maintaining the federal suit. Krison v. Nehls, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1985, 767 F.2d 344. Judgment 828.15(1)

5073. ---- Pendency of appeal, finality of prior judgment, res judicata

Pendency of appeal in inmate's federal habeas corpus proceeding did not deprive judgment of res judicata effect in inmate's separate civil rights action. Hawkins v. Risley, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1993, 984 F.2d 321. Habeas Corpus 901; Judgment 663

5074. ---- Failure to appeal, finality of prior judgment, res judicata

Where parties to parental rights termination proceeding in Iowa state courts and in federal court action brought under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights were identical in that parents resisted a termination of their parental rights in Iowa state courts and presently complained that their civil rights were violated by the termination, and where causes of action in each proceeding were the same in that parents argued in state court as they did in federal court that their parental rights were unjustly and unconstitutionally terminated, federal court action was based on same nucleus of operative facts before Iowa courts and failure of parents to raise issues before Iowa Supreme Court resulted in claim preclusion in federal court. Robbins v. District Court of Worth County, Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1979, 592 F.2d 1015, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 107, 444 U.S. 852, 62 L.Ed.2d 69. Judgment 828.16(3)

Where law clerk to state court judge sought relief from rule under which clerk could not remain in position as clerk unless he withdrew from candidacy for office of school director, where Supreme Court of Pennsylvania considered and rejected clerk's contention that rule was in derogation of clerk's federal constitutional rights, and where clerk failed to apply for writ of certiorari from Supreme Court of the United States, decision of Supreme Court of Pennsylvania was "res judicata" as to clerk's contentions of denial of federal constitutional rights, and clerk was precluded from challenging constitutionality of rule in civil rights action brought in federal district court. Silvestri v. Barbieri, W.D.Pa.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1200. Judgment 828.20(1)

5075. Dismissals, res judicata

District court's order dismissing Puerto Rico public employee's political discrimination claim against his supervisor on res judicata grounds was not plainly erroneous; dismissal of claim was not remotely a case of manifest injustice and thus did not satisfy fourth prong of plain error test. Diaz-Seijo v. Fajardo-Velez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 397 F.3d 53. Federal Courts 634

Sheriff's voluntary dismissal of one charge against deputy during state court proceedings did not prevent proceedings from resulting in final judgment on merits that was res judicata as to deputy's federal civil rights claim that sheriff's complaint before merit commission was in retaliation for deputy's statements to Department of Corrections employees about county jail system; allegation in federal complaint indicated that deputy considered retaliation claim as defense to all charges, so that dismissal of one charge did not release him from presenting claim as defense in prior proceeding. Lolling v. Patterson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 966 F.2d 230. Judgment 828.9(5)

Demoted city employee's civil rights action was barred by dismissal of his prior petition seeking relief under consent decree controlling city's use of political patronage in employment matters, under principles of res judicata; suits involved same cause of action in that they arose from single core of operative fact, and prior decision to dismiss on grounds of laches or statute of limitations was "on the merits." Smith v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 820 F.2d 916. Judgment 570(5); Judgment 585(2)

Suspended medical student's civil rights claim against medical school for violating his right to equal educational opportunity through discriminatory practices was barred under doctrine of res judicata by state court judgment dismissing his complaint for failure to state cause of action under New York law, which was dismissed on merits; student failed to allege any additional facts not considered by state court in support of his claim that suspension decision was motivated by racial bias. Garg v. Albert Einstein College of Medicine of Yeshiva University, S.D.N.Y.1990, 747 F.Supp. 231. Judgment 828.9(4)

Dismissal of prior lawsuit for failure to comply with notice of injury requirements was not on the merits and did not preclude subsequent civil rights action. Johnson v. Panizzo, N.D.Ill.1987, 664 F.Supp. 336. Judgment 654

An action under this section would be dismissed on ground of res judicata where subsequent action in state court based on same underlying facts had been dismissed on merits. Cairo v. Skow, E.D.Wis.1982, 544 F.Supp. 158. Federal Civil Procedure 1755

State court's jurisdictional ruling, in false arrest suit, dismissing defendant police officers because of plaintiff's failure to comply with jurisdictional prerequisite of providing notice was not binding upon federal court as res judicata and did not preclude federal court from reaching merits of plaintiff's civil rights action based upon federal question jurisdiction under this section and §§ 1331 and 1343 of Title 28, so long as plaintiff satisfied federal requisites for jurisdiction. Luker v. Nelson, N.D.Ill.1972, 341 F.Supp. 111. Judgment 828.9(5)

Where many of issues in action in federal district court for alleged violation of civil rights of plaintiff had been raised in earlier action, which was dismissed, and United States court of appeals affirmed dismissal without opinion and thereafter denied rehearing, doctrine of res judicata applied as to those issues. Arnold v. McGuiness, N.D.Cal.1968, 289 F.Supp. 210, affirmed 400 F.2d 392, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 1190, 394 U.S. 918, 22 L.Ed.2d 451. Judgment 720

Dismissal of plaintiff's prior §§ 1983 action against officers in their official capacities did not bar, on res judicata grounds, plaintiff's subsequent §§ 1983 action, even though both suits involved same set of facts against some of same defendants, where prior action was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, not on merits. Cook v. Gibbons, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 124 Fed.Appx. 475, 2005 WL 465588, Unreported, on remand 2005 WL 2260689. Judgment 570(9)

5076. Summary judgment, res judicata

Summary judgment in state court based on immunity granted by Pennsylvania Political Subdivision Tort Claims Act was not a resolution on the merits, and thus it had no preclusive effect on plaintiff's federal civil rights claim under section 1983 arising out of same occurrence. Ligas v. Allen, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1985, 765 F.2d 53. Judgment 828.9(1)

Civil rights action against police detective for malicious prosecution for issuing bad check was barred under res judicata by summary judgment granted in state court proceeding holding that the detective was entitled to quasi-judicial immunity. Conway v. Village of Mount Kisco, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 750 F.2d 205, appeal decided 758 F.2d 46, certiorari granted in part 106 S.Ct. 878, 474 U.S. 1100, 88 L.Ed.2d 915, certiorari dismissed 107 S.Ct. 390, 479 U.S. 84, 93 L.Ed.2d 325. Judgment 828.9(1)

5077. Directed verdicts, res judicata

Parents' civil rights claims against city and police officers and city officials in their official capacities were barred by res judicata where directed verdict had been entered in favor of city and officer in son's civil rights action against city and city police arising out of same cause of action and parents' allegations were analogous to claims for loss of consortium for purposes of res judicata. Willard v. City of Myrtle Beach, SC, D.S.C.1989, 728 F.Supp. 397 . Judgment 713(2)

5078. Consent judgments or decrees, res judicata

Under Illinois law, res judicata barred farmers' civil rights suit against bank which repossessed their livestock; prior state court consent judgment between parties having identical basis in fact, state court's jurisdiction, Appellate Court affirmance of judgment and declination of review by United States Supreme Court demonstrated finality of prior judgment. Hunziker v. German-American State Bank, N.D.Ill.1988, 697 F.Supp. 1007, affirmed 908 F.2d 975, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 798, 498 U.S. 1073, 112 L.Ed.2d 859, rehearing denied 111 S.Ct. 1433, 499 U.S. 955, 113 L.Ed.2d 485. Judgment 828.9(6)

Consent decree entered in action challenging use of governmental patronage to coerce support of political party and its candidates was not res judicata or collateral estoppel for separate actions brought under statute prohibiting deprivation of civil rights and alleging violation of principle that unless public office is one for which party affiliation is appropriate requirement for effective performance, officer may not be discharged for political reasons. Auriemma v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1984, 601 F.Supp. 1080. Judgment 567

Civil rights action could not be used to obtain federal court review of the underpinnings of valid consent decrees entered by Pennsylvania state court in enforcing the police power of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as set forth in the Clean Streams Law, 35 P.S.Pa. §§ 691.1 et seq., 691.401. Environmental Aid, Inc. v. Goddard, D.C.Pa.1977, 433 F.Supp. 906. Civil Rights 1321

5079. Settlements, res judicata

Grievance settlement between employer and union requiring employee to submit to drug testing before returning to work, to which employee did not consent, did not preclude employee's federal civil rights claim arising from discharge following refusal to submit to testing, under the doctrines of res judicata or collateral estoppel. Bolden v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 953 F.2d 807, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 2281, 504 U.S. 943, 119 L.Ed.2d 206, on remand 820 F.Supp. 949. Labor And Employment 1599

Prisoner's settlement of state lawsuit concerning right to use and possession of word processor barred his subsequent civil rights claim that his right of access to courts was impaired in that litigation, given his inability to allege harm to that litigation caused by civil rights defendants; prisoner was able to and did seek contempt order in state action, and decision on question of contempt was not barred by defendants' interference with prisoner's getting word processor, but instead by prisoner's decision to settle state action. Spruytte v. Govorchin, W.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1094. Compromise And Settlement 17(1)

Where there was no factual support or evidence, other than arrestee's own conclusory statements, that agreement to settlement of civil rights action was made by mistake, fraud, duress, undue influence, or any other factor, settlement agreement to which arrestee assented in settlement conference was binding despite his later refusal to sign agreement. Mattingly v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1995, 897 F.Supp. 375. Compromise And Settlement 5(1); Compromise And Settlement 8(1)

Grievance settlement between union and public employer did not cut off public employee's § 1983 claim based on unconstitutional drug test leading to employee's discharge, since union's authority to settle his wrongful discharge claim was limited to work-related matters, including drug testing and other conditions of reemployment. Bolden v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1993, 820 F.Supp. 949, affirmed 21 F.3d 29. Civil Rights 1312

Res judicata based on prior state court mandamus action to enforce settlement agreement did not bar present suit for violation of civil rights based upon breach of settlement agreement; Ohio Court of Appeals' implicit determination that plaintiff possessed adequate remedy at law for certain claims prevented plaintiff from offering certain arguments in mandamus, and thus, there was no identity of causes of action. Dwyer v. City of Middletown, S.D.Ohio 1989, 733 F.Supp. 264. Judgment 828.15(1)

Settlement of state court wrongful death action arising out of shooting death of victim at hands of police did not bar subsequent civil rights suit against police where plaintiffs alleged fraud, concealment and broad-based cover-up on part of police and district attorney. Bell v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1981, 514 F.Supp. 1363. Judgment 828.11(1)

Where plaintiff in prisoner's civil rights action first requested federal court to approve the res, i.e., the settlement of the action, before seeking approval of settlement from state court, it was the federal court which was empowered to proceed to judgment so that settlement approval obtained from the state court was not res judicata with respect to the federal court's approval or disapproval of the settlement. Crawford v. Loving, E.D.Va.1979, 84 F.R.D. 80. Judgment 828.10(1)

5080. Stipulations, res judicata

Stipulation regarding amount due guardian ad litem appointed in state juvenile proceeding was not res judicata of claim against guardian for violation of this section during guardianship. Roe v. Borup, E.D.Wis.1980, 500 F.Supp. 127. Judgment 828.15(1)

5081. Necessity of determination, res judicata

Neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel precluded § 1983 claims of previously jailed juveniles concerning alleged violations of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, where there was no evidence that issues in question were actually litigated or necessarily decided in any previous juvenile court proceedings. Hendrickson v. Griggs, N.D.Iowa 1987, 672 F.Supp. 1126, appeal dismissed 856 F.2d 1041.

Although finding of probable cause to arrest was not necessary to sustain plaintiff's prior New York conviction for possessing a stolen automobile, the conviction, sustained on appeal, necessarily included, under New York law, a finding that there was probable cause to arrest and thereby barred a subsequent § 1983 action against the arresting officers challenging existence of probable cause for the arrest. Cameron v. Fogarty, E.D.N.Y.1985, 649 F.Supp. 3, affirmed 806 F.2d 380, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1894, 481 U.S. 1016, 95 L.Ed.2d 501. Judgment 828.8

5082. Issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata--Generally

Rule that state court judgment must be given same res judicata effect in federal civil rights action that it would be given in courts of rendering state applies to issues actually litigated and those which could have been but were not litigated in state court proceedings. Vandenplas v. City of Muskego, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1985, 753 F.2d 555, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3481, 472 U.S. 1018, 87 L.Ed.2d 616. Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.16(3)

Issues actually litigated in a state-court proceeding are entitled to the same preclusive effect in a subsequent federal §§ 1983 suit as they enjoy in the courts of the state where the judgment was rendered. Willhite v. Collins, D.Minn.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 926. Federal Courts 420

In civil rights actions, doctrine of res judicata precludes party from relitigating in federal court those issues actually pressed before, and decided by, state tribunal. Korup v. Flaherty, E.D.Pa.1981, 524 F.Supp. 1160. Judgment 828.21(1)

Doctrine of res judicata, even as narrowly defined in the context of civil rights actions under this section, normally operates to preclude a federal court from adjudicating a claim that has been subject of a prior adjudication in state court, except where claim was not actually litigated and determined in the state court suit. Halprin v. New York City Conciliation and Appeals Bd., S.D.N.Y.1981, 521 F.Supp. 529, affirmed 661 F.2d 909, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 393, 454 U.S. 895, 70 L.Ed.2d 210. Judgment 828.16(4)

Principles of res judicata are fully applicable to actions brought under this section, and thus, where a cause of action which encompasses a claim under this section reaches judgment in one court, the judgment of that court will be given the same preclusive effect by a second court as would any other judgment of that first court. Bennun v. Board of Governors of Rutgers, State University of New Jersey, D.C.N.J.1976, 413 F.Supp. 1274. Judgment 550

Doctrine of res judicata extends not only to matters previously litigated but also to matters which, although not litigated, were properly subject to litigation in former action. Chambers v. Colonial Pipeline Co., E.D.Tenn.1968, 296 F.Supp. 555, appeal dismissed 408 F.2d 678, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 590, 396 U.S. 1020, 24 L.Ed.2d 512, rehearing denied 90 S.Ct. 937, 397 U.S. 929, 25 L.Ed.2d 112. Judgment 713(2)

5083. ---- Constitutional claims generally, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Under Puerto Rico law, Commonwealth employee's territorial-court, territorial-law action alleging political discrimination and seeking injunction only, once finalized, was preclusive, under doctrine of res judicata, as to employee's federal-court §§ 1983 action for damages against same defendant officials and arising from same facts; although officials did not object to voluntary dismissal of territorial-court action in territorial court, officials had already lodged, in federal court, express objection to splitting of claims between state and federal courts, employee could have asserted §§ 1983 claim in territorial court, and employee requested voluntary dismissal with prejudice. Barreto-Rosa v. Varona-Mendez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 470 F.3d 42. Judgment 828.9(5)

Judgment which had been entered in state court in favor of state Department of Corrections (DOC) in action brought by prisoner alleging that DOC had deprived him of personal belongings when he was transferred to more secure facility without adequate justification or due process barred under doctrine of res judicata subsequent federal civil rights action to extent that prisoner sought to assert equal protection and due process claims arising from alleged deprivation of property. Klein v. Zavaras, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 80 F.3d 432, rehearing denied. Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.16(3)

State family court was not "court of competent jurisdiction" to determine constitutionality of city's system-wide policy of resolving any ambiguity in child abuse investigation in favor of finding that abuse had occurred, and thus court's judgments in child protective proceedings did not bar on res judicata grounds § 1983 action by parents and legal guardians of children who had been removed pursuant to policy, even though court was able to consider federal constitutional claims, where court could not award money damages or grant full breadth of injunctive and declaratory relief available under § 1983. People United for Children, Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2000, 108 F.Supp.2d 275. Judgment 828.7

Doctrine of res judicata did not apply to bar federal civil rights action against a city and related parties on basis of a prior state court proceeding, even though enumerated issues remaining to be litigated involved incidents which were subject of prior state proceeding, where, in the prior state proceeding, the issues were limited to those which could be raised on appeal with no new discovery or evidence presented to the appellate court, and plaintiffs could not have raised their constitutional concerns. Benline v. City of Deland, M.D.Fla.1989, 731 F.Supp. 464, affirmed

Civil rights suit by former member of New York City Police Department was not barred by res judicata by reason of final judgment that had been entered in previous New York state court proceeding arising out of the officer's dismissal where, even though the same facts were alleged in the state and federal proceedings, the former officer did not raise explicit federal constitutional claims in the state court action. Williams v. Codd, S.D.N.Y.1978, 459 F.Supp. 804. Judgment 828.16(4)

Doctrine of res judicata did not bar property owner's federal civil rights action against county, even though owner previously had sought review in Florida circuit court of county's denial of owner's applications to use his property for commercial "borrow pit," where there had not been final judgment on merits with regard to petitions, since owner voluntarily dismissed the first two petitions for review, and court denied third petition, which was for writ of certiorari, and where constitutional claims could not have been presented in petition for certiorari, which would have been limited to record of commission hearing on permit request. Daugherty v. Sarasota County, Fla., M.D.Fla.1994, 157 F.R.D. 542. Judgment 828.7

5084. ---- Constitutional claims not mentioned in court opinion, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

State court judgments rejecting plaintiff's claim that she had life estate in real property were res judicata and precluded her from relitigating in federal § 1983 action the constitutional claims that she unsuccessfully raised in state courts; that state courts' opinions failed to mention constitutional claims did not prevent application of res judicata. Clark v. Clark, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1993, 984 F.2d 272, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 93, 510 U.S. 828, 126 L.Ed.2d 60. Judgment 828.16(1)

Former police officer's civil rights action alleging that city violated his equal protection rights by requiring him to take polygraph test as basis for his fitness to continue his employment was barred by res judicata where officer raised constitutional issues in state court, even though state court in denying relief failed to specifically rule on claims. Sturgeon v. City of Bloomington, S.D.Ind.1982, 532 F.Supp. 89. Judgment 828.17(1)

Judgment of Court of Common Pleas, on appeal by tenured teacher from termination of his contract, holding that termination was not illegal, arbitrary or an abuse of discretion, was a conclusive adjudication of entire cause of action and barred federal civil rights action where teacher had asserted constitutional claims in brief filed in Court of Common Pleas, even though that court failed to give explicit attention or recognition to the constitutional claims. Kaufman v. Somers Bd. of Ed., D.C.Conn.1973, 368 F.Supp. 28. Judgment 828.20(1)

Under Arkansas law, res judicata did not bar construction company's § 1983 action against city and city officials for damages arising from their violation of its constitutional rights, despite company's prior appeal of city council's decision to state court, where company could not have raised damages claim in state court, and state court assumed that company could have brought separate damages action. Forrest Const., Inc. v. City of Greenwood, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 77 Fed.Appx. 386, 2003 WL 22295908, Unreported. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.16(4)

5085. ---- Due process, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Wrecking yard owners' unsuccessful state-court declaratory judgment action against city alleging that city lacked authority to withhold approval of application for state wrecking license renewal was preclusive of owners' subsequent §§ 1983 due process action against city challenging ordinance that conditioned license renewal upon compliance with local land-use regulations; issue of city's power under state law to require compliance with local regulations lay at heart of both actions, regardless of fact ordinance was not directly involved in first action. Thornton v. City of St. Helens, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 425 F.3d 1158. Judgment 828.20(1)

Employee's § 1983 claims against city were part of same claim that he asserted in prior state court action against city and thus, res judicata prevented employee from bringing federal claims; employee's § 1983 claim alleged that city violated his right to be free from unreasonable searches by administering drug test without reasonable suspicion, and his right to due process by failing to provide adequate procedures in connection with his termination for testing positive for marijuana, but in state action employee argued unsuccessfully that city lacked good cause for termination. Strickland v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1997, 130 F.3d 1408. Judgment 828.15(1)

To extent that landowner claimed that city's demand that environmental impact report be prepared before owner could erect multiple dwelling on property earlier rezoned for such use was a denial of his due process rights, landowner was precluded on res judicata grounds from raising point due to failure to include argument in an earlier mandamus action brought in state court. Jama Const. v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 938 F.2d 1045, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1293, 503 U.S. 919, 117 L.Ed.2d 516. Judgment 828.16(3)

Record did not establish that plaintiff had presented to state court his claim that his rights to due process and equal protection had been violated by state statute requiring that claims of members of board of education retirement system for accident disability retirement be made within two years of date of accident; thus res judicata principles did not bar plaintiff's actions under this section for deprivation of such constitutional rights. Ornstein v. Regan, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 574 F.2d 115. Judgment 828.22

Under Tennessee law, prior state court judgment dismissing landowner's state and federal claims challenging zoning board's revocation of zoning variance had preclusive res judicata effect on landowner's § 1983 action in federal court asserting substantive and procedural due process claims and inverse condemnation or takings claim based on same revocation, even though state court erroneously applied law. Rainey Bros. Const. Co., Inc. v. Memphis and Shelby County Bd. of Adjustment, W.D.Tenn.1997, 967 F.Supp. 998, affirmed 178 F.3d 1295, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 172, 528 U.S. 871, 145 L.Ed.2d 145, rehearing denied 120 S.Ct. 569, 528 U.S. 1040, 145 L.Ed.2d 444. Judgment 828.11(2)

Assuming the existence of a due process claim, plaintiff, a former city police officer who alleged that his dismissal from the police department was in violation of his civil rights, submitted the federal claims he was not attempting to assert in his prior Article 78 proceeding brought in state court, and having thus had his day in court, the matters he now raised could not be relitigated as claimed constitutional violations. Bergersen v. Codd, E.D.N.Y.1979, 482 F.Supp. 223, affirmed 628 F.2d 1344. Judgment 828.20(1)

Plaintiffs, whose claim that they were deprived of procedural due process when medicare and medicaid benefits were terminated by state and federal defendants without a prior administrative hearing was previously rejected on ground that plaintiffs' property interest would be sufficiently vindicated by means of a post-termination hearing, were estopped, whether under doctrine of collateral estoppel or res judicata, from subsequently asserting that same conduct formed a basis for a claim under this section because it deprived plaintiffs of their property without due process. Schwartzberg v. Califano, S.D.N.Y.1979, 480 F.Supp. 569. Judgment 713(2)

Pennsylvania court's findings that township, in disapproving landowners' development plans, acted in violation of its own ordinances and a court order, were not essential to its final judgment that landowners' plan was deemed approved under Pennsylvania law, and therefore were not entitled to preclusive effect in landowners' § 1983 action alleging that the disapproval of their plans violated their due process rights. Lindquist v. Buckingham Tp., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 768, 2004 WL 1598735, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1072, 543 U.S. 1121, 160 L.Ed.2d 1069. Zoning And Planning 727

Res judicata barred civil rights claims against parole officers attacking imposition of curfews on parolee on due process grounds, where curfews were attacked in earlier civil rights suit brought against same officers. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Judgment 585(2)

5086. ---- Cruel and unusual punishment, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Determination in state habeas corpus proceeding that state prisoner had not been mistreated while incarcerated in county jail did not, under theory of res judicata, preclude federal district court, in suit under this subchapter from determining whether prisoner's solitary confinement constituted cruel and unusual punishment since even if res judicata applies in civil rights suits the federal court did not lose jurisdiction of civil rights claim when it severed the habeas corpus claim for state exhaustion and was exercising its original jurisdiction in deciding the claim of cruel and unusual punishment, which claim had not been presented to the state court. Campise v. Hamilton, S.D.Tex.1974, 382 F.Supp. 172, appeal dismissed 541 F.2d 279, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1127, 429 U.S. 1102, 51 L.Ed.2d 552. Habeas Corpus 901

5087. ---- Equal protection, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Res judicata did not bar New Mexico State Highway and Transportation Department (NMSHTD) employee from going forward with equal protection claim for purpose of recovering full range of damages available under § 1983, notwithstanding state district court decision affirming State Personnel Board (SBP) reinstatement order, although order in state proceeding was binding with regard to terms of reinstatement and calculation of back pay. Nichols v. Danley, D.N.M.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 1310. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.16(4)

Where osteopath either raised or could have raised his claims under civil rights statute in state court proceedings during appeal of revocation of license, osteopath's federal court action under this section alleging that he was denied equal protection and due process of law during license revocation proceedings was barred by res judicata. Vance v. Bowen, D.C.Utah 1984, 596 F.Supp. 1101. Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.16(3)

Determination which was adverse to plaintiff on his Article 78 petition in state court was res judicata and, hence, operated to preclude plaintiff from obtaining legal and equitable relief on his civil rights complaint in federal district court, where assertions made by plaintiff in federal action as to alleged violations of his constitutional rights to due process and equal protection by reason of his termination by defendants from his position as a member of environmental quality control commission of town were identical to those which were considered and rejected on their merits in state proceeding. Hammer v. Town of Greenburgh, S.D.N.Y.1977, 440 F.Supp. 27, affirmed 578 F.2d 1368. Judgment 828.16(1)

5088. ---- Freedom of speech, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

School board's discharge determination, which was unreviewed by state courts, did not bar, under doctrine of res judicata or collateral estoppel, teacher's § 1983 action alleging that her dismissal violated First Amendment; teacher did not argue before board that she was being discharged in violation of First Amendment and, thus, board did not resolve any disputed issues of fact regarding First Amendment claim which parties had adequate opportunity to litigate. Hall v. Marion School Dist. No. 2, D.S.C.1993, 860 F.Supp. 278, affirmed 31 F.3d 183. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Schools 147.31

Teacher's action claiming that termination violated her rights to free speech and procedural due process was barred, pursuant to doctrine of res judicata, by South Carolina state court judgment upholding board of education's decision not to renew her contract, with respect to which teacher could have raised constitutional claims, but failed to do so; named defendants in present case were, at least, in privity with parties to state court proceedings, claims in present action were identical to subject matter involved in state court proceedings, and state court rendered final determination on merits. Briggs v. Newberry County School Dist., D.S.C.1992, 838 F.Supp. 232, affirmed 989 F.2d 491. Judgment 828.16(3)

Former city police officer raised his constitutional claims against city arising from his termination in state court so as to bar relitigation of claims on basis of res judicata in federal district court, where officer alleged in his notice of appeal to Ohio Court of Common Pleas that appointing authority had no right to restrict him from commenting on matter of public concern in which he himself was being vilified, and officer cited to trial judge First Amendment authority in support of his position, and trial judge found in his findings of fact and conclusions of law that defendants did not infringe upon officer's right to free speech. Krauss v. City of Reading, S.D.Ohio 1992, 810 F.Supp. 212. Judgment 828.7

Where discharged state college official raised for the first time in his federal civil rights action the contention that the actions of defendants were motivated by desire to interfere with the exercise by official of his constitutional right to freely express himself, prior adverse action by state court in discharged official's mandamus action relating to the termination of employment was not res judicata with respect to claimed violation of constitutionally protected freedom of speech. deMarrais v. Community College of Allegheny County, W.D.Pa.1976, 407 F.Supp. 79. Judgment 828.16(4)

5089. ---- Privacy, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Even if common-law privacy claim differed from constitutional privacy claim which had been adjudicated against plaintiff, claim currently asserted by the plaintiff was barred by res judicata, since it was clear that plaintiff had already pressed such claim in earlier proceedings. McLaughlin v. Bradlee, D.C.D.C.1984, 599 F.Supp. 839, affirmed 803 F.2d 1197, 256 U.S.App.D.C. 119. Judgment 720

5090. ---- Attorneys, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

After the Illinois Supreme Court rejected attorney's constitutional challenges to assessment of annual fee by the Illinois Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission, attorney was barred, under the doctrine of res judicata, from bringing § 1983 action to challenge the fee assessment; under applicable Illinois law, final decision is preclusive not only on claims and defenses actually presented but also on those that could have been presented. Greening v. Moran, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 953 F.2d 301, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 77, 506 U.S. 824, 121 L.Ed.2d 42. Judgment 828.16(3)

Where constitutional claims concerning suspension of plaintiff from membership in Puerto Rican bar were presented to and considered by Puerto Rico Supreme Court, any particular claims that were not presented would be barred by doctrine of res judicata, and thus plaintiff's subsequent complaint in district court alleging that members of Puerto Rico Supreme Court violated his constitutional rights in suspending him from membership in Puerto Rican bar was barred by res judicata. Martinez Rivera v. Trias Monge, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1978, 587 F.2d 539. Judgment 828.16(3)

Attorneys' claim for damages in § 1983 action for alleged civil rights violations in course of disciplinary proceedings against them would not be precluded by res judicata based on state appellate court's dismissal of their motion to dismiss disciplinary proceedings, which alleged the same civil rights violations, since attorneys were not able to seek damages in their motion to dismiss or in their appeal. Thaler v. Casella, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 691. Judgment 828.16(4)

Judgment of Supreme Court of South Carolina disbarring attorney from practice of law was res judicata bar to attorney's federal civil rights action challenging disciplinary rule providing that disbarred person can never be readmitted to practice in South Carolina, where attorney failed to file exceptions to Executive Committee report recommending disbarment and failed to present any constitutional challenges in state disciplinary proceeding. Czura v. Supreme Court of South Carolina As Committee On Rules of Admission To Practice of Law In South Carolina by Ness, D.S.C.1986, 632 F.Supp. 267, affirmed 813 F.2d 644. Judgment 828.8

5091. ---- Condemnation, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Res judicata barred condemned warehouse lessee's § 1983 action arising out of condemnor's computation of relocation expenses, where all claims raised in lessee's action were or could have been litigated both in course of lessee's efforts to resist eviction and in prior action in state court, notwithstanding that hearing had not actually been granted by the state courts. Bartel Dental Books Co., Inc. v. Schultz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1986, 786 F.2d 486, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 3298, 478 U.S. 1006, 92 L.Ed.2d 713. Eminent Domain 243(2)

Where city's right to condemn property had been litigated between city and plaintiff's assignor, and determined adversely to plaintiff's assignor after full discovery and hearing, plaintiff's civil rights claim, resting upon relitigation of city's right to condemn, was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel principles. Chasteen v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1975, 520 F.2d 714. Judgment 828.16(1)

Claimant who had been found in previous state court action to have no interest in property could not maintain § 1983 claim that condemnation of that property had denied him his civil rights. Smith v. Metropolitan Development Housing Agency By and Through Nicely, M.D.Tenn.1994, 857 F.Supp. 597. Judgment 828.16(1)

5092. ---- Employment, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Res judicata did not preclude municipal employee's claim of political discrimination to extent it was premised on new conduct occurring after employee's return to work following settlement in earlier litigation; employee alleged that, after his return, municipality and mayor failed to assign him to any meaningful duties or responsibilities, and that he was harassed and excluded from participation despite his appointment to career position. Gonzalez-Pina v. Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 407 F.3d 425. Judgment 585(5)

Prison warden's grievance hearing was not sufficiently like a judicial proceeding for finding of no retaliation by Director of state Department of Corrections to be given preclusive effect in warden's § 1983 action for First Amendment retaliation, where Director had been personally involved in underlying events and was unavailable as witness, warden was unable to subpoena witnesses, witnesses were not sworn, hearing lasted only two hours, and Director's decision letter did not make detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Campbell v. Arkansas Dept. of Correction, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1998, 155 F.3d 950, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Prisons 7

Former police officer's civil rights action against town's board of selectmen for its alleged selective enforcement against him of residency requirement was barred, pursuant to doctrine of res judicata, as result of police officer's failure to raise selective enforcement claim in action in Massachusetts state court, wherein he sought declaration that bylaw establishing requirement was invalid because it conflicted with state law and injunction barring enforcement of bylaw. Mulrain v. Board of Selectmen of Town of Leicester, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 944 F.2d 23. Judgment 828.16(3)

Allegedly new claims presented by suspended jockey in civil rights action had actually been litigated in prior New York state court proceeding challenging suspension, barring jockey from relitigating such claims. Vasquez v. Van Lindt, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1983, 724 F.2d 321. Judgment 828.16(1)

Discharged police officer who had previously sued in state court attacking the sufficiency of the evidence to support findings of rules violations was barred, by res judicata, from subsequently maintaining federal civil rights action challenging the termination of his employment; federal civil rights claims could and should have been raised in the state court proceedings. Brown v. St. Louis Police Dept. of City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1982, 691 F.2d 393, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 1882, 461 U.S. 908, 76 L.Ed.2d 812. Judgment 828.16(3)

Where discharged teacher's employment discrimination claim against school board had already been adjudicated on merits in state court action, doctrines of res judicata or collateral estoppel barred teacher's subsequent suit in federal court asserting same claim against school district under this section. Jennings v. Caddo Parish School Bd.,

C.A.5 (La.) 1976, 531 F.2d 1331, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 260, 429 U.S. 897, 50 L.Ed.2d 180. Judgment 828.12

Decisions of Oklahoma Supreme Court holding that 11 Okl.St.Ann. § 541s requiring a specified "Board of Review" in dismissal proceedings involving police officers was not applicable in action by discharged officer so as to require a board hearing when pension and retirement rights were not involved were res judicata in subsequent civil rights action wherein police officer sought reinstatement and money damages for alleged denial of procedural due process, where officer was suing same city officials or their successors on same facts, and core of his claim, i.e., dismissal from employment without a due process hearing, remained the same. Spence v. Latting, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1975, 512 F.2d 93, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 198, 423 U.S. 896, 46 L.Ed.2d 129. Judgment 828.12

Due process claims arising from police officer's termination were not barred by officer's successful proceeding in New York state court challenging termination under Article 78. Clow v. Deily, N.D.N.Y.1997, 953 F.Supp. 446. Judgment 828.16(1); Municipal Corporations 185(12)

Registered nurse anesthetist's civil rights claim under § 1983 and her request for declaratory judgment against termination of privileges at hospital could have been brought in Mississippi Chancery Court, and thus, nurse was precluded from bringing them in federal court, even though § 1983 claim was constitutionally based. Wicker v. Union County General Hosp., N.D.Miss.1987, 673 F.Supp. 177. Judgment 828.16(3)

Under principles of res judicata, State Superior Court judgment which upheld state employee's demotion on both substantive and procedural grounds precluded employee's subsequent federal action under this section challenging his demotion on due process and equal protection grounds, and fact that employee added new claims not previously litigated did not change such result, where employee either expressly waived them below or did so implicitly by failing to assert them at either administrative or state judicial levels. Howkins v. Caldwell, N.D.Ga.1983, 587 F.Supp. 98, affirmed 749 F.2d 731, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2361, 471 U.S. 1117, 86 L.Ed.2d 261. Judgment 828.21(1)

Where examination of record of discharged city employee's state proceedings revealed nothing from which it could be inferred that federal constitutional issues were either raised or decided in such proceedings, res judicata did not bar consideration of the constitutional claims in subsequent federal civil rights action. Ohland v. City of Montpelier, D.C.Vt.1979, 467 F.Supp. 324. Judgment 828.16(4)

5093. ---- Environment, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

City's section 1983 action claiming that State Environmental Protection Agency was unconstitutionally enforcing state fluoridation law was barred by res judicata; city could have raised that issue in initial state court litigation which involved identical overall issue as to enforceability of fluoridation legislation, and which had essentially identical parties, with mere addition of two private plaintiffs in federal action. City of Canton, Ohio v. Maynard, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1985, 766 F.2d 236. Judgment 828.16(3)

5094. ---- Tax assessments, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Under Colorado claim preclusion principles, property owner that pursued state administrative and judicial review of its property tax assessment could have raised federal civil rights claim in state court and, therefore, state court judgment had res judicata effect in subsequent civil rights action in federal court. Crocog Co. v. Reeves, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 992 F.2d 267, rehearing denied. Judgment 828.16(3)

Where landowner failed in her state court action to have conveyance of her home by city, which had acquired title by sale of property for failure of owners to pay installment due under bonded improvement assessment levied by city, set aside on grounds that she did not have notice of delinquency, sale or rights under state law to redeem property, owner was barred by doctrine of res judicata from bringing separate action in federal district court under this section in which she sought to regain title to land under contentions that her civil rights were violated by sale of her property without notice. Scoggin v. Schrunk, C.A.9 (Or.) 1975, 522 F.2d 436, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 807, 423 U.S. 1066, 46 L.Ed.2d 657. Judgment 828.21(1)

Since school board and county which sought to assess additional taxes against electric company could have argued in state court action to assess taxes that denial of those taxes while the electric company was constructing its power plant denied equal protection in the tax exempt charities did not receive exemption while their facilities were being constructed, equal protection argument did not arise only when state supreme court denied allocatur in the action so that the state court judgment barred, under res judicata doctrine, federal court's civil rights action to recover the taxes. Lancaster County v. Philadelphia Elec. Co., E.D.Pa.1975, 386 F.Supp. 934. Judgment 828.16(3)

5095. ---- Miscellaneous issues, issues litigated or subject to litigation, res judicata

Debtor could have raised his claims that judgment debt was fraudulently obtained by invoking bankruptcy jurisdiction of district court when it heard his § 1983 claim alleging that he was deprived of his right to fair trial in state court suit, and thus adverse district court judgment was res judicata barring subsequent fraud claim. Browning v. Navarro, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 887 F.2d 553, rehearing denied 894 F.2d 99. Judgment 713(2)

Where tenants, in their amended answer to unlawful detainer complaint filed by landlord in state court, raised constitutional question of whether issues other than right to possession must be allowed to be presented in an unlawful detainer action, so that issue was preserved for appeal through state courts, plaintiffs were precluded by principles of res judicata from subsequently raising same constitutional issue in a separate action in federal court involving same parties, even though it was brought as a civil rights action, after an adverse determination by state court. Hutcherson v. Lehtin, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 485 F.2d 567. Judgment 828.20(1)

Harness race horse driver could not have brought his § 1983 claim for the first time when he moved to reargue before New York's Supreme Court, Appellate Division, or when he moved for leave to appeal to New York's Court of Appeals and therefore, driver was not barred from bringing his § 1983 claim before federal district court by New York's doctrine of res judicata; substance of reargument and claims on appeal were limited to those claims which had been squarely before court in original Article 78 proceeding. Parker v. Corbisiero, S.D.N.Y.1993, 825 F.Supp. 49. Judgment 828.16(4)

Under New Jersey law, physician's § 1983 claim could have been brought in his prior state court action, and thus, § 1983 claim was barred by doctrine of claim preclusion as result of state court's entry of summary judgment for defendants on all of physician's state law claims. Untracht v. West Jersey Health System, D.N.J.1992, 803 F.Supp. 978, affirmed 998 F.2d 1006. Judgment 828.16(3)

Res judicata barred alleged victim of phone harassment and stalking from making claims against city and its officials in current civil rights action, for failure to include defendants as parties in previous litigation; although trial court denied victim's motion to amend to add those parties to prior action, victim litigated that denial. Khan v. Mecham, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 80 Fed.Appx. 50, 2003 WL 22436237, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 302, 543 U.S. 825, 160 L.Ed.2d 37. Judgment 574; Judgment 632

Prior dismissal of mental patient's § 1983 suit challenging his continued confinement as sexual predator on ground that it was frivolous precluded, on res judicata grounds, patient's subsequent § 1983 suit asserting claims previously found to have been frivolous. Von Flowers v. Wisconsin Dep't of Health & Family Servs., C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 58 Fed.Appx. 649, 2003 WL 352039, Unreported. Judgment 570(5)

Parolee's prior civil rights claims arising out of parole officers' allegedly erroneous use of rap sheets in imposition special conditions upon parole did not present res judicata bar to claim that officers' systematic concealment of third-party rap sheets was arbitrary and capricious, as later claim required affirmative act by parole officers, which was not raised or litigated in prior actions. Pena v. Travis, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31886175, Unreported. Judgment 585(3)

5096. Identity of claims, res judicata--Generally

When a civil rights action is brought in federal court which presents same issue as was decided in a prior state civil action, that prior state judgment may have a collateral estoppel, or res judicata, effect upon federal suit, and this result may be reached without regard to highly technical notions of mutuality. Mastracchio v. Ricci, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1257, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 828, 420 U.S. 909, 42 L.Ed.2d 838. Judgment 828.21(1)

Prior state court adjudication of federal constitutional right bars subsequent federal action seeking vindication of same right. Brown v. DeLayo, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1173. Judgment 828.20(1)

Fact that former prisoner did not receive damages in his prior state court action for mandamus and habeas corpus which resulted in his release from prison did not preclude application of res judicata to his § 1983 action which was based on same facts as state court action; under Illinois law, former prisoner was entitled to recover both damages and costs as prevailing plaintiff in state court mandamus action, and former prisoner could have joined claim for damages in prior action under § 1983. Rooding v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1995, 876 F.Supp. 946, reversed 92 F.3d 578, on remand 173 F.R.D. 511. Judgment 828.16(3)

The principle of res judicata applies to actions under this section and operates as bar to relitigation of constitutional issues actually raised as well as to constitutional issues that could have been raised in a prior lawsuit if the second lawsuit concerned the same operative nucleus of fact. Vorbeck v. Whaley, E.D.Mo.1979, 478 F.Supp. 1117, affirmed 620 F.2d 191. Judgment 713(2); Judgment 720

5097. ---- Employment generally, identity of claims, res judicata

Decision and Order issued by university's Civil Service Merit Board did not decide issue identical to that decided in subsequent §§ 1983 race discrimination action, and collateral estoppel thus did not apply pursuant to Illinois law, inasmuch as Decision and Order did not incorporate hearing officer's findings of fact, and merely held that proceeding had been conducted in compliance with Illinois law, that Board had jurisdiction, that transcript and hearing record did not support and sustain charges of employer, and that employer failed to establish just cause for demotion. Goodwin v. Board of Trustees of University of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 442 F.3d 611. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

Race horse trainer's § 1983 claims against track which excluded him from racing in 1981 arose out of same "transaction or series of transactions," for res judicata purposes, as previously litigated § 1983 claims against same track based on his exclusion from racing in 1985 and 1986; in both instances, trainer had been excluded based on same allegations that he was running ringers. Catrone v. Ogden Suffolk Downs, Inc., D.Mass.1988, 683 F.Supp. 302. Judgment 609

Res judicata did not preclude current civil rights lawsuit against city brought by Latino and African-American police officers claiming discrimination, although police officer previously brought case against city alleging that policy which required police officers to obtain permission before testifying or speaking publicly on police department matters was unconstitutional; some events at issue in current case antedated filing of prior suit, but evidence needed to support prior action did not include sort of discrimination claimed in current suit, and facts essential to proof of current case were not present in prior case. Latino Officers Ass', Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21437057, Unreported. Judgment 585(3)

5098. ---- Discharge or dismissal, identity of claims, res judicata

Federal full faith and credit statute did not apply to determination of preclusive effect, in teacher's § 1983 action alleging that school district's termination of her employment violated First Amendment, of school board's factual findings, but, rather, federal common-law rules of issue preclusion applied; teacher did not appeal termination in state court and, thus, federal court was presented with unreviewed state administrative decision. Hall v. Marion School Dist. No. 2, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1994, 31 F.3d 183. Federal Courts 433

Former city employee's § 1983 suit claiming that his discharge violated his due process and freedom of speech rights was barred by res judicata where it concerned same claim involving constitutionality of city work rule under which employee was discharged and which had been subject of employee's unsuccessful state court action. Medvick v. City of University City, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 995 F.2d 857, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 468, 510 U.S. 976, 126 L.Ed.2d 419. Judgment 828.15(1)

Claim in § 1983 civil rights action, that former county employee was dismissed without due process, was barred by res judicata under Ohio law and full faith and credit clause where employee's due process cause of action was previously advanced in a state court suit based on same necessary facts. Osborn v. Ashland County Bd. of Alcohol, Drug Addiction and Mental Health Services, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 979 F.2d 1131. Judgment 828.4(2); Judgment 828.15(1)

School teacher's civil rights action against school district challenging her dismissal was barred by a prior unsuccessful litigation in California state court; any procedural disadvantages which might have accrued to teacher had she attempted first to litigate her section 1983 claims in a federal forum were insufficient to justify an exception to the traditional doctrines of preclusion. Takahashi v. Board of Trustees of Livingston Union School Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1986, 783 F.2d 848, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 2916, 476 U.S. 1182, 91 L.Ed.2d 545. Judgment 828.8

Police officer, who had brought state court action alleging that his dismissal was result of race discrimination, was barred on res judicata grounds from maintaining subsequent civil rights suit in federal court based on claim that his discharge was discriminatory. Lee v. City of Peoria, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1982, 685 F.2d 196. Judgment 828.15(1)

Under Maine law, state criminal court's determination, in prosecution that ended with acquittal, that police had probable cause to arrest was not preclusive in acquittee's subsequent § 1983 action against police officers alleging that arrest lacked probable cause, since acquittee never had opportunity to appeal adverse probable cause ruling. Wilson v. Lyons, D.Me.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 73. Judgment 828.8

Discharged employee's § 1983 claim was not precluded by doctrine of res judicata due to state agency decision reinstating employee with back pay; administrative decision-making process, subject only to limited judicial review, was distinguishable from § 1983 action involving full trial with right to have factual issues resolved by jury. Helms v. Rafter, W.D.N.C.1994, 853 F.Supp. 897. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Officers And Public Employees 72.33(1)

Former deputy sheriff's § 1983 action against county challenging his discharge was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel because deputy had already litigated issue of his alleged wrongful termination through civil service commission and state court, and former deputy had opportunity to raise any and all arguments underlying his claim for wrongful termination through state court proceedings. Roberts v. Wood County Com'n, S.D.W.Va.1992, 782 F.Supp. 45, affirmed 993 F.2d 1538. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.16(1)

State court decision, which found that county employee had not established elements of constructive discharge or involuntary resignation, and thus that his resignation was not grievable under employee manual, acted as res judicata to preclude county employee from bringing civil rights action in federal court against county, which alleged that his resignation was involuntary discharge in violation of his First and Fourteenth Amendment rights; review of briefs filed by parties in state court proceeding showed that the elements of involuntary resignation of deliberate intent of employer and intolerability of working conditions were squarely before state court and argued by counsel. Dennison v. County of Frederick, W.D.Va.1989, 726 F.Supp. 137, affirmed 921 F.2d 50, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2828, 501 U.S. 1218, 115 L.Ed.2d 998. Judgment 828.20(1)

There was no identity of causes of action between state court proceeding in which former township police chief challenged dismissal and his action in federal court alleging that his dismissal violated his constitutional rights where Police Tenure Act, 2 Pa.C.S.A. § 754 et seq., which governed the former police chief's state court challenge to his dismissal, did not provide for making of claim for damages for violations of constitutional or statutory rights, state courts reviewing the discharge, although able to reinstate successful party with back pay, were directed entirely to affirming or modifying decision of local agency, and former police chief sought damages in his federal court action, and thus doctrine of res judicata did not bar the former police chief's federal court action. Kelly v. Warminster Tp. Bd. of Sup'rs, E.D.Pa.1981, 512 F.Supp. 658, affirmed 681 F.2d 806, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 76, 459 U.S. 834, 74 L.Ed.2d 74. Judgment 828.15(1)

Res judicata barred federal action alleging that plaintiff had been discharged in retaliation for exercise of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 and had been denied due process in that special discharge meeting had been illegal under state law, where same issues had been ruled upon by state court and differences between the two proceedings were merely technical. Tomsick v. Jones, D.C.Colo.1979, 464 F.Supp. 371. Judgment 828.12

Where discharged college official had argued in his brief in unsuccessful mandamus action in state court that he had been denied procedural due process with respect to the termination of his employment, action of state court was res judicata with respect to causes of action founded on denial of procedural due process in federal civil rights action. deMarrais v. Community College of Allegheny County, W.D.Pa.1976, 407 F.Supp. 79. Judgment 828.16(1)

Former policeman who, upon his discharge and at every stage of Article 78 proceeding, raised constitutional issue of deprivation of due process by reason of claimed administrative finding of "suspicion" of involvement in homicide without being charged of homicide, could not, under doctrine of res judicata, relitigate same constitutional issue by asserting a claim under this section. Hanzimanolis v. Codd, S.D.N.Y.1975, 404 F.Supp. 719, affirmed 538 F.2d 309. Judgment 828.16(1)

Res judicata did not bar Latino and African-American police officers in current civil rights lawsuit against city from claiming discrimination in discipline and retaliation, although minority officer brought prior action challenging police department's refusal to recognize minority police officer association in alleged violation of its associational and other constitutional rights; claims in former action did not have anything in common with claims in current action, and city could not be in better position with respect to individual officers than it enjoyed with respect to association. Latino Officers Ass', Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21437057, Unreported. Judgment 585(3)

5099. ---- Promotion, identity of claims, res judicata

Claim by former employee of department of children and family services (DCFS) that she was denied promotion on basis of her sex in violation of § 1983 and Title VII involved different cause of action than did state challenge to propriety of her subsequent dismissal, and thus, state court's affirmance of decision that dismissal was not improper did not bar on res judicata grounds federal claims for denial of promotion; denial of promotion would have been of marginal, if any, relevance to defense of charges against employee in state proceedings, and vast majority of events giving rise to dismissal occurred after alleged denial of promotion. Welch v. Johnson, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 907 F.2d 714.

Action under this section alleging that metropolitan district commission violated patrolmen's due process and equal protection rights as result of failure to follow promotional hiring procedures was barred by res judicata where patrolmen raised substantially same claims in state and federal court actions and sought same relief, even though patrolmen claimed that they did not raise federal civil rights claims in state court. Casagrande v. Agoritsas, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1984, 748 F.2d 47. Judgment 828.15(1)

5100. ---- Reinstatement, identity of claims, res judicata

Portion of plaintiff's federal civil rights complaint alleging deprivation of constitutional rights in connection with defendants' failure to comply with decision of civil service board was barred, under doctrine of res judicata, by prior California State court action in which plaintiff sought writ of mandamus compelling museum to comply with civil service board's order of reinstatement, since decision of civil service board relied on in federal action was very matter which was subject of state court litigation. Gallagher v. Frye, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1980, 631 F.2d 127. Judgment 828.21(1)

Judgment, in prior Article 78 proceeding which was brought in state court by county public employer relations board to enforce order directing professor's reinstatement with back pay and in which professor participated, that evidence was insufficient to prove professor's claim that her contract was not renewed because of her union activities was res judicata in subsequent civil rights action brought in federal court by professor for reinstatement and damages on issue of whether professor's contract was no renewed because of her union activities. Roode v. Michaelian, S.D.N.Y.1974, 373 F.Supp. 53. Judgment 828.14(8)

5101. ---- Landlord and tenant, identity of claims, res judicata

Tenant's §§ 1983 claims against housing officials and landlord's architect were precluded by the doctrine of res judicata where claims based on the same factual predicate, and similar allegations were previously dismissed based on statute of limitations grounds. Dibbs v. Roldan, S.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 340. Judgment 570(5); Judgment 585(2)

Doctrine of res judicata precluded recovery in civil rights action brought by landlords alleging that city officials arbitrarily, capriciously and unlawfully regulated the rents they were permitted to charge their tenants in one apartment building since allegations of complaint were essentially the same as those in prior unsuccessful inverse condemnation action asserted in state court. 290 Madison Corp. v. Capone, D.C.N.J.1980, 485 F.Supp. 1348. Judgment 828.12

5102. ---- Licenses and permits, identity of claims, res judicata

Where question of constitutionality of local park rule against pamphleteering without a license was at issue and determined against the plaintiffs in a state court trial for violating the rule, res judicata barred the plaintiffs from again litigating the issue in a civil rights suit in federal court. Thistlethwaite v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 497 F.2d 339, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 686, 419 U.S. 1093, 42 L.Ed.2d 686. Judgment 828.11(3)

Under either "same evidence" test or "transactional" test, § 1983 claim of owners of day care center against Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) official for allegedly sending letter to parents of children enrolled in day care center informing them of licensing violations and recommending they find alternative day care arrangements in retaliation for owners' request for administrative hearing on license revocation was same cause of action as claim previously brought in Illinois state court against DCFS challenging revocation of license, where same proof would have been used to establish § 1983 claim against official as would have been used to show that DCFS improperly revoked license, and both actions arose out of same group of operative facts. Cooper v. Suter, C.D.Ill.1993, 834 F.Supp. 282. Judgment 828.15(1)

Physician's civil rights action arising from state's revocation of his license to practice medicine was precluded by prior state court decision, which rejected physician's appeal from revocation order, and prior federal court action, in which district court held that revocation of medical license did not create federal civil rights claim; physician's due process claim had already been litigated twice. Damino v. Barrell, E.D.N.Y.1988, 702 F.Supp. 954, affirmed 875 F.2d 307, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 69, 493 U.S. 817, 107 L.Ed.2d 36. Judgment 715(2); Judgment 828.7

Where motor vehicle parts business which was originally refused necessary permits and licenses to move business to different location had thereafter brought successful state court action vindicating business' entitlement to permits and licenses, parts business had not been deprived of any substantive due process right under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14, and could not, in form of action under this section against city and city council, relitigate in federal court issue of propriety of city council's decision. Minneapolis Auto Parts Co., Inc. v. City of Minneapolis, D.C.Minn.1983, 572 F.Supp. 389. Civil Rights 1072

5103. ---- Prisons and prisoners, identity of claims, res judicata

Jury verdict, in transsexual inmate's § 1983 action against subordinate prison officials, which found those officials not liable for the inmate's injuries in an assault by another inmate, did not preclude liability on the part of the warden, in the transsexual inmate's action alleging deliberate indifference to a risk of harm to her, in violation of the Eighth Amendment; issues of whether warden was aware of a substantial risk to the transsexual inmate's safety, and whether he failed to take reasonable steps to guard against that risk, were not litigated in the prior case. Greene v. Bowles, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 361 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1358

State inmate's claim in §§ 1983 action that prison officials deprived him of his right to access law library in connection with his federal habeas proceeding was barred under doctrine of res judicata, where inmate had raised issue in his prior §§ 1983 suit based on same underlying facts, court granted officials summary judgment in prior suit, and warden and prison librarian were named in both suits. Brooks v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1179. Judgment 627

Previous action brought by state prisoner in New York Court of Claims, seeking damages from state and state officials in their official capacities for failure to protect him from asbestos exposure, was not res judicata bar to prisoner's subsequent §§ 1983 action against officials in their individual capacities, alleging that same conduct violated his constitutional rights; Court of Claims had lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate current claim. Pack v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 63. Judgment 828.7

Section 1983 claim brought by condemned prisoner against state Department of Corrections, alleging civil rights violations through manner of pending execution, was not barred by res judicata, notwithstanding summary judgment against prisoner in prior state proceeding, where Amended Execution Protocol that was basis of prisoner's present challenge was not made available to prisoner in prior proceeding. Oken v. Sizer, D.Md.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 658, stay vacated 124 S.Ct. 2868, 542 U.S. 916, 159 L.Ed.2d 290. Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.16(4)

Circumstance that in each of two civil rights actions prisoner charged conspiracy against him by prison officials did not cause earlier action to be res judicata on issues pleaded in the later action where the later action involved alleged deprivation of rights during a later time period and at different penal institution than were involved in the earlier action. Wells v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.1972, 344 F.Supp. 594. Judgment 585(3)

Issue preclusion barred litigation of civil rights false imprisonment claim based on post-conviction confinement, as claim was merely variant of claim for malicious prosecution, and previous litigation had determined that officers and prosecutor had probable cause to arrest and prosecute civil rights plaintiff on criminal charges. McNally v. Colorado State Patrol, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 122 Fed.Appx. 899, 2004 WL 2445576, Unreported. Judgment 715(2)

District court lacked subject matter jurisdiction under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine over prisoner's § 1983 action against sheriff's department alleging officials failed to provide him with legal research materials, where prisoner had previously litigated case against same defendants and raising same legal arguments in state court. Smith v. Lawrence County Sheriff's Department, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 562, 2003 WL 23095570, Unreported. Courts 509

Prior Illinois state court judgment, in which court had dismissed prison inmate's writ of mandamus action in which he demanded that Illinois prison officials ship 99 boxes of his property to California where he had been transferred, had the same preclusive effect in federal court as it would have in Illinois' courts; thus, res judicata precluded inmate's subsequent federal civil rights case involving the same parties and the same series of events that he litigated in prior mandamus action. Walker v. Page, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 896, 2003 WL 1120232, Unreported. Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.12

5104. ---- Real property, identity of claims, res judicata

Under Rooker-Feldman doctrine, district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to consider §§ 1983 claims arising from property line dispute which had been resolved in state courts; whether framed as state or federal claims, plaintiffs' facts and allegations were for all intents and purposes identical to those litigated in state court cases, and plaintiffs asked the federal court not only to legally recognize and enforce a survey which was precisely contrary to the boundary line established by state courts, but to direct county officials to act in a fashion contrary to the state courts' holdings. Willhite v. Collins, D.Minn.2005, 385 F.Supp.2d 926. Courts 509

Claim brought by landowner against town, municipal employees, and building inspector, stemming from town's demolition of dangerous structure on premises, arose from same factual grouping as landowner's earlier § 1983 action involving town's initial search of property, and thus res judicata barred claim as to all individual defendants except inspector; town became aware of structural problems during initial search, to which all individual defendants except inspector were party. Davis v. Town of Hempstead, E.D.N.Y.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 376, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 167 Fed.Appx. 235, 2006 WL 172216, on remand 2006 WL 656995 . Judgment 585(2); Judgment 707

State court judgment declaring deeds fraudulent and void was res judicata in federal civil rights action wherein plaintiff sought to assert ownership of real property conveyed by deeds. Hohensee v. Grier, M.D.Pa.1974, 373 F.Supp. 1358, affirmed 524 F.2d 1403, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 2659, 426 U.S. 940, 49 L.Ed.2d 392, rehearing denied 97 S.Ct. 196, 429 U.S. 874, 50 L.Ed.2d 158. Judgment 828.20(1)

Property owner's claim against county, stemming from demolition of dangerous structure on premises, was barred by res judicata, where claim arose from same factual grouping as landowner's earlier §§ 1983 action involving initial search of property and contained no new allegation that county was involved in demolition. Davis v. Town of Hempstead, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 235, 2006 WL 172216, Unreported. Judgment 585(2)

Property owner's § 1983 claims against town and town officials, based upon the demolition of building on his property were not precluded, under doctrine of res judicata, by owner's prior § 1983 action against same defendants, where building had not been demolished at time prior suit was filed. Davis v. Ferdico, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 43, 2003 WL 21309149, Unreported. Judgment 585(5)

5105. ---- Taking without compensation, identity of claims, res judicata

Federal takings claim, based on claim that airplane flights over property constituted taking, was essentially the same as that raised in Florida inverse condemnation action, and therefore doctrine of res judicata would bar subsequent federal takings action, even though, unlike under Florida law, federal takings law did not include requirement that property owner establish absolute decree in property value over time. Fields v. Sarasota Manatee

Airport Authority, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 953 F.2d 1299. Judgment 828.15(1)

Cause of action asserted in civil rights action claiming that public utility acting under color of state law of eminent domain deprived plaintiff of rights secured to him by U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5 and 14 § 1 was the same as that alleged in prior condemnation action, where violation of right to own and hold property free from unlawful interference was alleged in both actions; thus, theory posited for first time in the civil rights action that condemnor had acted beyond scope of its statutory authority could have been litigated in the condemnation suit and principle of res judicata prevented its being litigated in civil rights action. Brown v. Georgia Power Co., S.D.Ga.1973, 371 F.Supp. 543, affirmed 491 F.2d 117, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 66, 419 U.S. 838, 42 L.Ed.2d 65. Eminent Domain 243(2)

5106. ---- Tax assessments, identity of claims, res judicata

Prior Washington court judgment determining that county had written duty to proceed on sewer project and levy assessment without initiative election involved same subject matter, same "transactional nucleus of facts," and qualitatively identical parties as did subsequent § 1983 action in which landowners alleged that public officials conspired to deprive them of their civil rights by denying them their right to vote on project and by assessing them cost of project, and thus, res judicata barred § 1983 action, because rights established in state court action would be impaired by prosecution of federal action, because only change of parties was the addition of county assessor treasurer, in her official capacity, in civil rights action, and because allegations of conspiracy could have been raised by defense or counterclaim in state action. Sewer Alert Committee v. Pierce County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1986, 791 F.2d 796. Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.16(3)

5107. ---- Voting and elections, identity of claims, res judicata

Doctrine of res judicata barred candidates for county legislature from bringing §§ 1983 action alleging that county elections board's refusal to tally absentee ballots violated their federal constitutional rights, where candidates were parties to prior state court decisions invalidating absentee ballots used in election. Hoblock v. Albany County Bd. of Elections, N.D.N.Y.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 169, remanded 422 F.3d 77, on remand 233 F.R.D. 95. Judgment 828.14(1); Judgment 828.15(1)

Civil rights action challenging number of signatures required for recall of officials of particular water and sanitation district was barred by res judicata effect of prior state court action, even though in prior state court action, plaintiffs raised challenge based on state equal protection grounds while in federal action they asserted federal equal protection claims and their right to petition government for redress of grievance under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 1. Delve v. Three Lakes Water & Sanitation Dist., D.C.Colo.1983, 568 F.Supp. 662. Judgment 828.21(1)

Where city councilman candidate did not allege or argue denial of due process in the state courts but rather sole constitutional claim made by him in state courts was that McKinney's N.Y.Election Law § 153 would be unconstitutional unless there was a compelling state interest for interpreting it as the lower court had done and another candidate's "due process claim" was not adjudicated by the state courts, res judicata did not bar candidate and other plaintiffs from pursuing their federal civil rights claim that candidate, and hence voters, had been unconstitutionally denied access to the ballot on due process grounds. Williams v. Sclafani, S.D.N.Y.1978, 444 F.Supp. 906, affirmed 580 F.2d 1046. Judgment 828.15(1)

Where claim which disbarred attorney sought to litigate in federal district court in his civil rights action against state Supreme Court justices and other state officers and which alleged that Supreme Court's decision aborting his candidacy for office of justice violated his constitutional rights was same claim previously passed upon by state Supreme Court when it denied his placement on ballot for the office of justice, doctrine of res judicata was applicable to bar federal suit. Peterson v. Knutson, D.C.Minn.1973, 367 F.Supp. 515, affirmed 505 F.2d 736.

5108. ---- Zoning, identity of claims, res judicata

Restaurant's § 1983 action based on selective enforcement of zoning restriction was not barred by claim preclusion under New York law where prior state action against zoning board sought to reverse board's decision on restaurant's application to eliminate from its variance the restriction that cabaret hours were to start no earlier than ten p.m., harassment of restaurant alleged in discriminatory enforcement of laws did not arise from same set of facts as prior action, did not involve same actors, and new suit depended on allegations of summonses, violations, fines, arrest, and selective discriminatory treatment that were not involved in prior action. LaTrieste Restaurant and Cabaret Inc. v. Village of Port Chester, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 40 F.3d 587. Judgment 828.15(1)

Landowner's cause of action against city for temporary taking of his property through invalid zoning was not barred by res judicata on basis of earlier action against city, in which landowner had sought mandamus to compel approval of preliminary site plans and challenged validity of ordinances; none of issues presented by taking claim were actually litigated in earlier state proceedings; and determination, judicially or otherwise, that acts were proper under applicable ordinance would not have dictated finding that there was no taking. Corn v. City of Lauderdale Lakes, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 904 F.2d 585. Judgment 828.16(4)

Adult entertainment establishment's action seeking declaration that city ordinance, under which establishment's license was revoked, was unconstitutional, and seeking to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance, would be barred by res judicata; parties in instant action had been involved in state court appeal of revocation, state court and instant actions sought same relief, establishment had raised constitutional arguments in state court, state court had jurisdiction to decide both injunction and declaratory judgment issues, and actions were based on same factual predicate. Koziara v. City of Casselberry, M.D.Fla.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1245. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.15(1)

Landowner challenging zoning board's revocation of zoning variance under state law in state court had to also raise his federal takings claims challenging same revocation to avoid res judicata, even though federal claims were not ripe until state court ruled on state claims. Rainey Bros. Const. Co., Inc. v. Memphis and Shelby County Bd. of Adjustment, W.D.Tenn.1997, 967 F.Supp. 998, affirmed 178 F.3d 1295, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 172, 528 U.S. 871, 145 L.Ed.2d 145, rehearing denied 120 S.Ct. 569, 528 U.S. 1040, 145 L.Ed.2d 444. Judgment 828.16(3)

New Jersey claim preclusion or "entire controversy" doctrine barred litigation of claim under this section alleging that zoning ordinance was unconstitutional, where parties were identical to those in earlier state court action, facts underlying action were identical, and issues were identical. Tancrel v. Mayor and Council of Bloomfield Tp., D.C.N.J.1984, 583 F.Supp. 1548. Judgment 828.21(1)

Claims, which were grounded under this section and which were to effect that landowner's due process and equal protection rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 were violated by actions taken by village officials before and after denying rezoning, were, with one exception, barred by res judicata under Illinois law, in view of fact that a prior state court judgment, which determined that there had been no denial of due process or equal protection, had involved the same parties or privies and that the action under this section and state proceeding were rooted in same core of operative facts. Ossler v. Village of Norridge, N.D.Ill.1983, 557 F.Supp. 219. Judgment 828.16(1)

Federal constitutional questions which have been litigated in a state court cannot be relitigated in a federal court; this principle applies where the state court litigation was for a declaratory judgment that a zoning ordinance was unconstitutional and the later federal action was for damages under this section. Dells, Inc. v. Mundt, S.D.N.Y.1975, 400 F.Supp. 1293. Judgment 828.11(3)

5109. ---- Miscellaneous claims, identity of claims, res judicata

Determination in prior action challenging disciplinary proceedings conducted by college that due process was violated where decision to discipline was based solely on police report but did not show any evidence of misconduct on part of plaintiffs was entitled to res judicata effect in subsequent civil rights action challenging disciplinary proceeding on the same, as well as additional grounds. Jackson v. Hayakawa, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 605 F.2d 1121, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 1601, 445 U.S. 952, 63 L.Ed.2d 787. Judgment 715(1)

Mentally retarded individuals' § 1983 action, challenging city policy of allowing its officials to consent to elective surgical procedures on mentally retarded citizens, was not barred by res judicata; action was not same cause of action as prior litigation, which challenged city's treatment of mentally retarded individuals and resulted in consent judgment, some claims in pending action arose after consent judgment was entered in prior action, and city did not demonstrate that plaintiffs were parties to prior action. Does I through III v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 212. Judgment 567; Judgment 585(3); Judgment 955

Under Pennsylvania law, doctrine of res judicata applied to bar due process claim of construction company and its owner arising out of decision by borough council to preclude company, as non-responsible bidder, from bidding on future borough construction projects, inasmuch as §§ 1983 action in which company and owner asserted due process claim involved identical parties, arose out of same factual allegations, and sought compensation for same damages as prior state court action in which final judgment had been entered by trial court, and due process claim could have been raised in that prior action. Osiris Enterprises v. Borough of Whitehall, W.D.Pa.2005, 398 F.Supp.2d 400. Judgment 828.15(1)

Criminal contemnor's §§ 1983 action against city for alleged deprivation of her constitutional rights when she was fingerprinted and photographed, and when she was denied medical treatment, was precluded under the doctrine of res judicata where her two previous actions against the city and/or the city police department concerning the same event had already been dismissed on the ground that she failed to allege the existence of a municipal policy or practice, or that any of her alleged injuries were proximately caused by such a policy or practice. Qader v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 466. Judgment 570(11)

Claim preclusion barred former property owners who failed to pay taxes from raising constitutional and statutory civil rights claims relating to city's alleged auction of residence, where owners raised claims that alleged auction violated their constitutional and statutory civil rights in two previous actions and both actions were dismissed on the merits. Green v. City of Boston, D.Mass.1997, 966 F.Supp. 117, affirmed 132 F.3d 30, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 75, 525 U.S. 827, 142 L.Ed.2d 59, rehearing denied 119 S.Ct. 578, 525 U.S. 1034, 142 L.Ed.2d 482. Judgment 570(5)

District court's dismissal on the merits of ex-husband's claims in prior action stemming from child support modification proceedings had preclusive effect in ex-husband's § 1983 action raising the same or similar claims, despite ex-husband's claims of new evidence, since district court had rejected claims, even accepting truth of allegations which allegedly constituted the new evidence. McArthur v. Caputo, E.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 152. Judgment 570(5)

Civil rights action against city, state and federal officials who allegedly subjected pro se plaintiff to surveillance after he reported potential case of police corruption was barred by res judicata, where prior claims based on same transactions or occurrences had been dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Sadler v. Brown, S.D.N.Y.1992, 793 F.Supp. 87. Judgment 570(11)

Res judicata barred employee's second discrimination and retaliation action against her employer under Title VII and federal civil rights statutes, following dismissal with prejudice of her first action which had been filed pro se; dismissal was a final decision on the merits, the same statutes formed basis of claims for relief in both suits, and although employee did not have second right-to-sue letter when she initiated first lawsuit, at time she elected to dismiss her first lawsuit employee was aware of every allegation that she later raised in second Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) charge and could have submitted that charge before dismissing lawsuit. Sanders v. Tyco Electronics Corp., W.D.N.C.2006, 235 F.R.D. 315. Judgment 585(2)

Property owner's §§ 1983 claims against town, based upon the demolition of building on his property, were not precluded, under doctrine of res judicata, by owner's prior §§ 1983 action against town and its official, where building had not been demolished at time prior suit was filed. Davis v. Town of Hempstead, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 235, 2006 WL 172216, Unreported. Judgment 585(5)

Determination in prior civil rights suit that probable cause issue was barred by issue preclusion was itself final, preclusive determination, and as such, barred argument in second civil rights suit that earlier reversal of criminal convictions for ineffective assistance of counsel demonstrated that civil rights plaintiff was deprived of full and fair opportunity to litigate probable cause in criminal prosecution. McNally v. Colorado State Patrol, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 122 Fed.Appx. 899, 2004 WL 2445576, Unreported. Judgment 650; Judgment 720

Prior dismissal of proprietor's complaint against city and federal officials and others alleging violations of Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) in connection with her relocation in economic development zone barred, under doctrine of res judicata, proprietor's subsequent action against same officials alleging that denial of relocation funds violated Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act (URA), Title VI, and §§ 1983, where both actions were based upon same facts. Burton v. Cleveland Ohio Empowerment Zone, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 102 Fed.Appx. 461, 2004 WL 1367275, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 661, 543 U.S. 1024, 160 L.Ed.2d 502, rehearing denied, rehearing denied 125 S.Ct. 1108, 543 U.S. 1132, 160 L.Ed.2d 1089. Judgment 570(1); Judgment 585(2)

Prior order dismissing § 1983 action alleging that police department violated individual's constitutional rights by defaming him barred, under doctrine of res judicata, individual's subsequent suit alleging violations of § 1983 by city, where claim was adjudicated on merits, and employee's current claims could have been raised in previous action. Valle v. Bally Total Fitness, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22244552, Unreported. Judgment 570(4); Judgment 585(2)

Res judicata precluded retaliation and discrimination in discipline claims of Latino and African-American police officers against city in current civil rights action, up to date of complaint in prior action, since police officer litigated prior civil rights action against city on allegations that he was retaliated against, improperly disciplined, and subjected to hostile work environment as consequence of, inter alia, his filing of internal complaint regarding alleged discrimination against African American and Latino police officers. Latino Officers Ass', Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21437057, Unreported. Judgment 585(2)

5110. Identity of parties, res judicata--Generally

Plaintiff, suing police officers and police chiefs for deprivation of constitutional rights, had a separate cause of action against each defendant, and was not precluded on theory of res judicata from acting against one defendant by judgment against another. McClelland v. Facteau, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1979, 610 F.2d 693. Judgment 678(1)

5111. ---- Capacity, identity of parties, res judicata

That officials responsible for denial of former police officer's accident disability retirement benefits were sued only in their official capacities in officer's prior state suit did not prevent doctrine of claim preclusion from barring subsequent federal suit against same officials in their individual capacities. Lawrence v. McGuire, S.D.N.Y.1987, 651 F.Supp. 312. Judgment 828.14(6)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Individual town officers in their individual capacities were not entitled to benefits of claim preclusion by former chief of police's prior state court judgment arising from same alleged termination in violation of civil rights. Meding v. Hurd, D.C.Del.1985, 607 F.Supp. 1088. Judgment 828.14(11)

5112. ---- Privity, identity of parties, res judicata

Even though former college professor who brought civil rights action in federal court seeking reinstatement was not technically a party in prior Article 78 proceeding brought in state court by county public employment relations board to enforce its order directing college to reinstate professor with back pay, where board was acting solely on behalf of professor and representing her interests in bringing proceeding and professor filed brief amicus curiae in proceeding and had opportunity at hearing to present whatever evidence she had in support of her claim, there was sufficient identity of interests between board and professor to establish privity for purposes of res judicata. Roode v. Michaelian, S.D.N.Y.1974, 373 F.Supp. 53. Judgment 675(1); Judgment 677

Purported action under this subchapter against plaintiff's former employer and officers of union was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel arising from summary judgment against plaintiff in favor of the same defendants, or those in privity with them, in prior action based upon substantially similar allegations. Drusky v. Judges of Supreme Court, W.D.Pa.1971, 324 F.Supp. 332. Judgment 569; Judgment 653

State prisoner's § 1983 action against prison officials, alleging that officials unconstitutionally seized property from his cell, was barred, under doctrine of res judicata, by prior Illinois Court of Claims action, in which prisoner sued state for the value of the property that was seized; prior action reached final judgment on the merits, in that it held that prisoner was not entitled to compensation, and state and prison officials shared identity of interest in vindicating the seizure of the property, so that state and officials were in privity. Powell v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 650, 2003 WL 22977486, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Judgment 828.9(3); Judgment 828.13

5113. ---- Class actions, identity of parties, res judicata

Prison inmate's civil rights complaint against prison officials seeking damages for violations of the Eighth Amendment was not barred by res judicata due to class action litigation involving conditions at the prison where inmate was not notified that participation in the class action would bar subsequent individual damage action. Wright v. Collins, C.A.4 (Md.) 1985, 766 F.2d 841. Judgment 677

Decisions in previous class actions wherein a number of practices and conditions in Arkansas penal institutions were found to be unconstitutional and enjoined were binding on petitioner who was a member of class represented in previous actions and who sought in subsequent civil rights action to obtain injunctive and declaratory relief against alleged racial discrimination, inadequate food and overcrowding and punitive isolation cells, inadequate medical care and facilities, interference with mail, religious and racial discrimination, and brutality by prison employees. Cotton v. Hutto, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1978, 577 F.2d 453. Judgment 677

Under Tennessee law, res judicata barred federal civil rights action which challenged constitutionality of Tennessee statute which required parents to have bachelor's degree or statutory exemption to home school their children beyond eighth grade, as plaintiffs had been "virtually represented" in previous state lawsuit which decided same issue. Floyd v. Smith, E.D.Tenn.1993, 820 F.Supp. 350, vacated 23 F.3d 406. Judgment 828.14(8); Judgment 828.16(1)

Where judgment in prior school desegregation class action never described class, it was not given res judicata effect in subsequent school desegregation case; however such judgment was binding on named parties to action; evidence from period before judgment was relevant background to show patterns and practices continuing after date which indicated that race was factor in decision making of school authorities. Bell v. Board of Ed., Akron Public Schools, N.D.Ohio 1980, 491 F.Supp. 916, affirmed 683 F.2d 963. Judgment 668(1); Judgment 677; Judgment 956(2)

5114. ---- Intervenors, identity of parties, res judicata

Where although plaintiff was not party to original action on appeal from decision of personnel board plaintiff did file motion to intervene, was present at hearing in court with his interests protected by personnel board and findings of state courts addressed issues of notice, intervention and entitlement and did not find for plaintiff, and where his petition for allowance of appeal to Pennsylvania Supreme Court was denied, though without opinion, his claim under this section in federal district court was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel. Mack v. Municipality of Penn Hills, W.D.Pa.1982, 547 F.Supp. 863. Judgment 828.14(6)

5115. ---- College students and faculty, identity of parties, res judicata

After jury found for state university on former professor's Title VII claim, res judicata did not bar subsequent civil rights action against university employees who were involved in his termination, since privity was lacking as between university and its employees, where first suit was only against university for violation of Title VII, while subsequent action was brought under § 1983 against university employees in their individual capacities. De Llano v. Berglund, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1999, 183 F.3d 780, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, on remand 142 F.Supp.2d 1165. Judgment 670

Adverse judgment in state license revocation proceedings in which only college was a party and which did not involve free exercise and establishment of religious issues did not, on theory of res judicata, bar the college and churches, parents, students and faculty member of college from maintaining federal action for violation of this section involving the issues of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. New Jersey-Philadelphia Presbytery of the Bible Presbyterian Church v. New Jersey State Bd. of Higher Educ., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1981, 654 F.2d 868. Judgment 828.14(7); Judgment 828.16(1)

5116. ---- Plaintiffs or defendants, identity of parties, res judicata

Persons who had unsuccessfully asserted federal civil rights claims in state court action could not thereafter assert them in federal court action even though they had been defendants, rather than plaintiffs, in the state court action. Billingsley v. Seibels, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1977, 556 F.2d 276, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1499, 435 U.S. 929, 55 L.Ed.2d 524, rehearing denied 98 S.Ct. 2257, 436 U.S. 914, 56 L.Ed.2d 416. Judgment 828.12

5117. ---- Organizations and members, identity of parties, res judicata

Action by leader of civil rights organization was barred, under doctrine of res judicata, by prior action brought by organization on behalf of itself and its members and involving same set of operative facts, where organization had represented plaintiff's First Amendment right of association and plaintiff had participated extensively in earlier litigation. Diaz v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1984, 601 F.Supp. 1251. Judgment 677

5118. ---- Parents and children, identity of parties, res judicata

Fact that state court had found that there was no evidence to indicate that police officer's killing of minor was not justifiable or excusable homicide did not operate as either res judicata or collateral estoppel to bar civil rights action, predicated on Oklahoma wrongful death statutes, 12 Okl.St.Ann. §§ 1053, 1054, brought by minor's parents against police officer and the police chief as minor's parents were not parties in the state court action. Smith v. Wickline, W.D.Okla.1975, 396 F.Supp. 555. Judgment 828.8

5119. ---- State agencies and employees, identity of parties, res judicata

State employee's civil rights action against individual state officials challenging constitutionality of Florida statute governing termination of state employees who had permanent status in career service [F.S.1977, § 110.061], officials' failure to accord employee a pretermination hearing, and officials' refusal to reinstate employee in accordance with Career Service Commission reinstatement order was not barred under doctrine of res judicata by prior state court action against state agencies in which employee sought back pay only in view of lack of identity of parties, identity of cause of action, and identity of thing sued for. Casines v. Murchek, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1985, 766 F.2d 1494, rehearing denied 773 F.2d 1239. Judgment 828.12; Judgment 828.15(1)

5120. ---- Veniremember, identity of parties, res judicata

Identity of interests between veniremember excluded from jury in civil trial and plaintiffs in that civil trial, and adequacy of civil trial plaintiffs' representation of veniremembers' equal protection interests, were such that veniremember and plaintiffs were in privity, and thus judge's determination during prior trial that defendants in that trial had based peremptory challenge on neutral nondiscriminatory reasons was entitled to preclusive effect in veniremember's civil action alleging violation of equal protection rights. Shaw v. Hahn, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 56 F.3d 1128, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 418, 516 U.S. 964, 133 L.Ed.2d 336. Judgment 678(1)

5121. ---- Voters, identity of parties, res judicata

Neither the certiorari proceeding instituted by primary election candidate in Rhode Island Supreme Court, nor the motion to reargue filed by another candidate, barred, under principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel, federal civil rights action brought by voters who were not parties to those earlier proceedings. Griffin v. Burns, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1978, 570 F.2d 1065. Judgment 828.14(7)

Doctrine of res judicata did not bar voters from bringing §§ 1983 action alleging that county elections board's refusal to tally their absentee ballots violated their federal constitutional rights, even though candidates were parties to prior state court decisions invalidating absentee ballots used in special election for county legislature, where voters were not parties to state court actions, and never had full and fair opportunity to litigate federal constitutional issues. Hoblock v. Albany County Bd. of Elections, N.D.N.Y.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 169, remanded 422 F.3d 77, on remand 233 F.R.D. 95. Judgment 828.14(7)

5122. ---- Criminal proceedings, identity of parties, res judicata

Finding in favor of state's attorney in criminal prosecution arising out of alleged illegal police raid was no bar to subsequent suit under this section against attorney where none of plaintiffs in civil suit was a party to criminal judgment. Hampton v. City of Chicago, Cook County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 484 F.2d 602, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1413, 415 U.S. 917, 39 L.Ed.2d 471, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1414, 415 U.S. 917, 39 L.Ed.2d 471. Judgment 828.14(7)

Where issues concerning plaintiff's arrest and search had been presented to federal court in plaintiff's prosecution for bank robbery and directly determined by court adversely to plaintiff, doctrine of issue preclusion prevented relitigation of same issues in plaintiff's civil rights action brought against law enforcement officials, notwithstanding fact that defendant law enforcement officials were not parties to plaintiff's criminal proceedings. Smith v. Sinclair, W.D.Okla.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1108. Judgment 632

5123. ---- Zoning, identity of parties, res judicata

Findings of Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission (WUTC) in administrative hearing on medical waste collection company's failure to obtain state certificate had to be given preclusive effect in subsequent § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of certificate statute, in view of adjudicative nature of hearing on matter properly before WUTC, and in view of preclusive effect that findings would have been given in state court; parties were afforded notice, evidence was introduced, and counsel had opportunity to cross-examine witnesses. Kleenwell Biohazard Waste and General Ecology Consultants, Inc. v. Nelson, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1995, 48 F.3d 391, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2580, 515 U.S. 1143, 132 L.Ed.2d 830. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Carriers 18(1)

Louisiana res judicata rule, LSA-C.C. art. 2286, precluded relitigation of city's zoning decision in action under this section, where parties were identical in action under this section and prior state action, both actions dealt with city's refusal to rezone plaintiff's property and legal rights and liabilities which emanated from that refusal, and thing demanded in both actions was identical. Hernandez v. City of Lafayette, C.A.5 (La.) 1983, 699 F.2d 734. Judgment 828.15(1)

5124. Remedies, res judicata--Generally

Operative facts in suit under this section against city for deprivation of property without due process were same as in prior Maine Supreme Judicial Court suit affirming superior court judgment against plaintiff in action seeking to have a licensee's license to operate pool and billiard room declared void, and therefore principles of res judicata barred plaintiff's subsequent suit under this section against city, notwithstanding that remedy sought in civil rights suit, namely damages, was different from remedies sought in earlier case. Roy v. City of Augusta, Maine, C.A.1 (Me.) 1983, 712 F.2d 1517. Judgment 585(2)

Holder of leasehold interest in oil and gas was not barred by doctrines of res judicata or collateral estoppel from challenging reasonableness of city's regulations restricting oil and gas drilling in city limits pursuant to § 1983 takings claim due to leaseholder's previous challenge to reasonableness of regulations in state court requesting that regulations be set aside; counts that were dismissed by state court with prejudice were brought pursuant to Kansas statute providing mechanism to set aside unreasonable zoning ordinances and Kansas statute did not authorize award of money damages. Mid Gulf, Inc. v. Bishop, D.Kan.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1205, reconsideration granted in part. Judgment 828.15(1)

Doctrine of res judicata applied to bar plaintiffs' federal civil rights claims against a city and related parties by virtue of state court proceedings, even though remedies in the state action and the federal action differed, and even though shareholder of company was named in federal action but not state action, where plaintiffs could have demanded all remedies in state court proceedings which were sought in federal court action, city and code enforcement board were either named in both complaints or in privity with those originally named, and parties had same intent to adequately litigate against plaintiffs' claims and raise available defenses in both state court proceedings and federal court action. Benline v. City of Deland, M.D.Fla.1989, 731 F.Supp. 464, affirmed 897 F.2d 1127. Judgment 828.16(3)

5125. ---- Availability of remedies, res judicata

Res judicata did not bar foster parent's claims under § 1983 that his due process rights were violated when State of Alabama terminated long-term foster care contract and removed foster child from foster parent's care, where evidence concerning child's best interest with regard to custody only overlapped minimally with evidence concerning procedural sufficiency of removal proceedings, due process claims are neither affirmative defenses nor compulsory counterclaims to State's termination of foster parent's rights, and under Alabama law foster parent could not have raised those claims as part of state proceedings due to limited nature of common-law certiorari which was only avenue of appeal available to foster parent. Webb v. State of Ala., Dept. of Pensions and Sec., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1988, 850 F.2d 1518. Judgment 828.7

due to state officials' withholding of computation of sentencing credits precluded subsequent § 1983 civil rights action in federal court involving same parties and based on same wrong, where inmate could have sought monetary remedy in Massachusetts proceeding. Pasterczyk v. Fair, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1987, 819 F.2d 12. Judgment 828.16(3)

Prior Article 78 proceeding under New York law does not preclude subsequent federal civil rights action for damages, as damages for civil rights violations are not available in the Article 78 proceeding. Cepeda v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1992, 785 F.Supp. 385. Judgment 828.16(4)

Plaintiffs' federal civil rights action for damages arising out of city agencies' denial of demolition permit was not barred under principles of res judicata where state court, in previously reviewing agencies' action, could not consider damages claim. Weissman v. Fruchtman, S.D.N.Y.1987, 658 F.Supp. 547. Judgment 828.7

Having obtained injunctive relief in New York courts in an Article 78 proceeding in which he challenged denial of racing privileges, a jockey could not turn to federal court to obtain damages from same defendants for same series of transactions since, even if damages could not have been obtained in Article 78 proceeding, the New York court could have converted the damage claim into an action at law and awarded damages; thus, under broad transactional approach to res judicata utilized by New York courts, jockey's present claim for damages under civil rights statute was barred by conclusion of prior Article 78 proceeding even though claim was based upon a different theory and a different remedy was sought. Saumell v. New York Racing Ass'n, Inc., E.D.N.Y.1985, 600 F.Supp. 819. Judgment 828.16(3)

5126. Legal theory of recovery, res judicata

Where state court action was based on different legal theory of recovery under same set of factual allegations, but where there was no risk of double recovery since there was no recovery in first Texas state lawsuit, res judicata would not bar federal court action brought under this section by plaintiff who was allegedly injured by act or omission of state actor while plaintiff student was attending school and was participating in a class. Flores v. Edinburg Consol. Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1983, 554 F.Supp. 974. Judgment 828.15(1)

5127. Administrative proceedings, res judicata--Generally

Court of Appeals had to accord referee's finding in Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation Review Board proceeding the same preclusive effect as would Pennsylvania courts, in terminated employee's § 1983 action. Swineford v. Snyder County Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1258. Federal Courts 433

Under North Carolina law of res judicata, state court judgment upholding award in administrative proceeding alleging discharge without just cause from public employment did not preclude § 1983 claim alleging that discharge was politically motivated; proceedings alleged different wrongs, leading to different injuries, entitling to different remedies. Davenport v. North Carolina Dept. of Transp., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1993, 3 F.3d 89. Judgment 548

Prior state court affirmance of state administrative ruling was entitled to res judicata and collateral estoppel effect in a subsequent federal civil rights action under § 1983, notwithstanding that state court's review was limited to determination of whether there was "any evidence" in record sufficient to support factual findings of administrative tribunal. Gorin v. Osborne, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 756 F.2d 834. Judgment 828.7

Res judicata barred relitigating due process concerns raised before state chiropractic board in decision that revoked chiropractor's license, where board acted in judicial capacity, chiropractor had adequate opportunity to litigate and to raise any constitutional defenses before board, and board conducted evidentiary hearing. Mason v. Arizona,

D.Ariz.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 807. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Health 222(3)

Fairness requirements of Utah Construction permitting application of federal common law of preclusion to state administrative adjudication of legal and factual issues were met with respect to food stamp recipient's request for income deductions in calculating her 1995 benefits by hearing officer's decision on income deductions recipient requested with respect to calculation of her 1994 food stamp benefits; hearing officer acted in judicial capacity and made independent determinations of law, deductions and applications of regulations to plaintiff were properly before agency, and parties had opportunity to fully brief and argue their positions with respect to each deduction recipient requested. Kolander v. Weeks, D.Or.1996, 916 F.Supp. 1042. Agriculture 2.6(4); Federal Courts 433

Former state employee was not barred by res judicata from litigating in her federal civil rights action issue of whether adverse employment actions were taken against her to her political affiliation, notwithstanding contention that employee could have raised such issue in state administrative proceedings; general question of whether employee's rights under First Amendment were violated by job actions taken by employing agency fell outside scope of issues over which state personnel board had jurisdiction, and board could not award employee damages and attorney fees she sought. Lupo v. Voinovich, S.D.Ohio 1994, 858 F.Supp. 699. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; States 53

State court's entry of temporary injunction in favor of plaintiff challenging state practice of charging filing fee for initiation of protection orders, followed by court's issuance of permanent administrative order barring such charges, was res judicata barring plaintiff's subsequent § 1983 claim against county seeking damages. Hardin v. Harshbarger, N.D.Ill.1993, 814 F.Supp. 703. Judgment 828.8

Former school principal's claim in § 1983 action that superintendent, school board, and individual board members violated his due process rights during investigation of former school employee's claim of hostile work environment in violation of Title VII, and in terminating principal, was not barred by doctrine of res judicata under North Carolina law by state-court administrative review of termination; administrative claim involved violation of statutorily-protected rights, permitted only limited judicial review, and would only have entitled principal to reinstatement and back pay, while § 1983 claim alleged violations of constitutional rights, allowed full trial with right to jury, and available remedies included compensatory and punitive damages. Kirkcaldy v. Richmond County Bd. of Educ., M.D.N.C.2002, 212 F.R.D. 289. Judgment 828.7

5128. ---- Employee commissions, administrative proceedings, res judicata

University Civil Service Merit Board acted in judicial capacity, as required for its factual findings to be preclusive in foreman's race discrimination action under §§ 1983, inasmuch as Board was created by Illinois law, Board was subject to Illinois Administrative Review Law, hearing officer presided over administrative hearing, counsel questioned and cross-examined witnesses who were under oath, hearing officer issued findings of fact, and Board issued final decision and order thereafter. Goodwin v. Board of Trustees of University of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 442 F.3d 611. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

Under Alabama Law, even if county commission acted in judicial capacity when it passed on former commission employee's civil rights claim against county, commission's factual finding that employee's positions were not eliminated due to employee's acting as poll watcher for political adversary of another commission member was not entitled to preclusive effect in employee's subsequent civil rights suit; unlike situation in which commission takes administrative action on matters such as liquor licenses, where commission essentially has final authority, commission has no such final authority when passing on claim against county, and giving commission's findings preclusive effect would place potentially insurmountable obstacle in front of plaintiff who sought to sue county. Steadham v. Sanders, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1991, 941 F.2d 1534. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Civil Rights 1711

Under doctrine of administrative claim preclusion, District of Columbia Office of Employee Appeals (OEA) Administrative Judge's findings that former police Commander's position was equivalent to that of Deputy Chief and he had no right to appeal his demotion did not preclude litigation of his due process claims under §§ 1983; while OEA Judge was acting in judicial capacity, issue of whether Commander position was "at will" was not fully litigated in the administrative proceedings. Fonville v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 448 F.Supp.2d 21. District Of Columbia 7

District court was precluded, due to res judicata, from adjudicating employee's rights arising from his alleged improper conduct and termination, in §§ 1983 action, where employee voluntarily subjected his claims of political discrimination to hearing examiners at the administrative level, and, upon examiners reaching results, chose not to exercise his right to appeal before administrative appellate forum, allowed decision to become final and, only then, made a collateral attack on decision. Silva Rivera v. State Ins. Fund Corp., D.Puerto Rico 2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 218. Labor And Employment 846

Fact that employee of state's transportation department previously raised his race discrimination claims in department's grievance procedure did not preclude him from bringing separate lawsuit under Title VII, §§ 1981 and 1983 to redress the alleged discrimination. Smith v. State of Alabama, M.D.Ala.1998, 996 F.Supp. 1203. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Agency was not acting in judicial capacity in "Step 3" hearing on discharge of employee, for purposes of barring subsequent discrimination action on res judicata grounds, where hearing officer told employee that he "had to speak with his boss" before he issued a decision. Yohannan v. Patla, N.D.Ill.1997, 971 F.Supp. 323. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Officers And Public Employees 72.16(1)

5129. ---- Police merit boards, administrative proceedings, res judicata

County police merit board's finding that former police officer's discharge was proper was entitled to preclusive effect in officer's federal civil rights action alleging that county violated officer's constitutional rights during departmental investigation leading up to his discharge, even though merit board's decision was not judicially reviewed; board was acting in judicial capacity in reviewing officer's discharge after full evidentiary hearing with opportunity for state court review, board's decision would have been given preclusive effect by Kentucky courts, and board specifically ruled against officer on constitutional claim sought to raised in federal action. Nelson v. Jefferson County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1988, 863 F.2d 18, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 76, 493 U.S. 820, 107 L.Ed.2d 42. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Officers And Public Employees 72.33(1)

5130. Arbitration proceedings, res judicata

In an action under this section, a federal court should not afford res judicata or collateral estoppel effect to an unappealed arbitration proceeding brought pursuant to terms of a collective-bargaining agreement. McDonald v. City of West Branch, Mich., U.S.Mich.1984, 104 S.Ct. 1799, 466 U.S. 284, 80 L.Ed.2d 302. Judgment 828.1

5131. Criminal proceedings, res judicata--Generally

Where plaintiff had unsuccessfully brought actions in state court to have six state criminal convictions declared illegal and expunged from his records, doctrine of res judicata precluded relitigation of same issues in subsequent federal civil rights action. Wiggins v. Murphy, C.A.4 (Md.) 1978, 576 F.2d 572, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 874, 439 U.S. 1091, 59 L.Ed.2d 57. Judgment 828.8

A state criminal conviction precludes a subsequent § 1983 action only with respect to matters litigated and decided in previous trial, and not those which could have been raised. Lillios v. Justices of New Hampshire Dist. Court, D.N.H.1990, 735 F.Supp. 43. Judgment 559

Convictions of livery and taxicab operators in state misdemeanor court for violation of city ordinances barred, on basis of res judicata, operators' § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of ordinances where constitutionality could have been raised in state proceedings. Mustfov v. Superintendent of Chicago Police Dept., N.D.Ill.1990, 733 F.Supp. 283. Judgment 828.8

Preclusive effect is given in § 1983 action to issues previously decided in state court criminal proceedings as well as civil proceedings, provided that same effect is given in state court. Brown v. De Fillipis, S.D.N.Y.1989, 717 F.Supp. 172. Federal Courts 420; Judgment 828.8

Final judgments on the merits in two state cases, one of which embodied two criminal prosecutions, precluded relitigation of certain decided issues and certain claims, which were or could have been litigated, in federal civil rights action against various state officials under this section. Omernick v. LaRocque, W.D.Wis.1976, 406 F.Supp. 1156, affirmed 539 F.2d 715. Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.16(3)

Decisions attendant to state criminal proceeding are not automatically dispositive of claims presented in federal civil rights action arising from that prosecution, but multiple litigation of rejected claim is not favored. Hamilton v. Ford, E.D.Ky.1973, 362 F.Supp. 739. Judgment 828.8

5132. ---- Fraudulent convictions, criminal proceedings, res judicata

Common law did not bar convict in receiving stolen property case from bringing § 1983 action against police officers, claiming they had procured his conviction by altering transcript of tape recording, withholding exculpatory evidence, and suborning perjury; common law would not bar relitigation of issue of plaintiff's criminal guilt if prosecution had procured conviction by fraud. King v. Goldsmith, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1990, 897 F.2d 885, rehearing denied. Judgment 559

5133. ---- Pleas, criminal proceedings, res judicata

Where there apparently was no search or extrajudicial confession incident to or resulting from arrest of civil rights plaintiff, and no such arrest or fruits of search were offered in evidence, legality of arrest could not have been litigated in state criminal proceeding in which civil rights plaintiff had pled guilty to offenses of public profanity and resisting arrest; thus, state criminal judgment did not operate, by res judicata or collateral estoppel, to bar civil rights complaints as to arrest in respect to both offenses to which guilty pleas were entered or to offense of carrying concealed weapon which was dismissed. Brown v. Edwards, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1984, 721 F.2d 1442. Judgment 559

Arrestee, who had entered a plea of guilty in Colorado court to information charging unlawful possession of heroin, was precluded from relitigating issue of whether there was probable cause for issuance of search warrant in action by arrestee for money damages under this section against police officers who had performed search of premises where narcotics were found and where arrestee was arrested. Metros v. U. S. Dist. Court for Dist. of Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1970, 441 F.2d 313. Judgment 828.8

State trial court's independent finding of probable cause was not fatal to neurologist's §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim against officials of Utah's Medicaid Fraud Control Unit (MFCU), based on investigation and prosecution of neurologist for "upcoding," i.e., the practice of improperly billing Medicaid for a more expensive service than was actually provided to the patient. liability for conspiring to deprive inmate of his Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment as incarcerated inmate. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Judgment 🔑 648

Although livery and taxicab operators, by pleading guilty to violation of city ordinances, may have waived any claim for damages or declaratory relief in § 1983 action based on their convictions under allegedly unconstitutional ordinances, claim for damages resulting from activity of officers alleged to have violated Fourth Amendment and occurring prior to plea proceedings were not barred on basis of res judicata. Mustfov v. Superintendent of Chicago Police Dept., N.D.Ill.1990, 733 F.Supp. 283. Judgment 🔑 828.8

5134. ---- Arrests, criminal proceedings, res judicata

Arrestee's success on illegal seizure claim against officers who entered his home upon detecting odor of marijuana from front doorway would not necessarily imply invalidity of his state conviction for misdemeanor assault for struggling with officers upon their entry, and thus Heck v. Humphrey rule did not bar assertion of claim in federal civil rights suit, as lawfulness of arrest was not element of crime of conviction. Cummings v. City of Akron, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 418 F.3d 676, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 🔑 1088(4)

Under Kentucky res judicata law, arrestee was barred from bringing civil rights claim against police officers, on basis that officers arrested him without probable cause; in ruling on arrestees's motion to suppress evidence during state court criminal trial, trial court determined that officers had probable cause to believe arrestee had assaulted his mother, such that arrest was valid. Donovan v. Thames, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1997, 105 F.3d 291. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Preliminary probable cause hearing heard in state court did not preclude arrestee, who was bringing civil rights action based upon arrest, from disputing that arresting officer had probable cause for arrest, where probable cause determination was designed to evaluate sufficiency, but not integrity, of evidence against arrestee, arrestee sought to prove in his civil rights trial that arresting officer could not have reasonably believed that arrestee was committing disorderly conduct and that his arrest was therefore in bad faith, and arrestee was not allowed to present evidence, nor allowed to cross-examine state's witnesses at probable cause determination. Bailey v. Andrews, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1987, 811 F.2d 366. Judgment 🔑 648

5135. ---- Excessive force, criminal proceedings, res judicata

Former pretrial detainee's §§ 1983 claim alleging excessive force was not barred, under Heck v. Humphrey, by detainee's state conviction, resulting from same incident, for aggravated battery on a peace officer, since detainee's claim that defendant corrections officer used excessive force after detainee hit officer did not undermine the conviction or punishment for detainee's own acts of aggravated battery. Brengettcy v. Horton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 423 F.3d 674. Civil Rights 🔑 1088(4)

Under Kentucky res judicata law, arrestee's state court conviction for resisting arrest did not bar arrestee's excessive force civil rights claim against police officers; conviction for resisting arrest did not require finding that officers did not use excessive force in effecting arrest, and there was no evidence that issue of excessive force was actually litigated in state court, or that arrestee could have raised his excessive force claim as separate cause of action in state court. Donovan v. Thames, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1997, 105 F.3d 291. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Res judicata is applicable in context of this section, but cause of action in the two proceedings must be the same, and excessive use of force and subsequent coverup were two separate and distinct wrongs resting on different factual bases. Landrigan v. City of Warwick, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1980, 628 F.2d 736. Judgment 🔑 585(1); Judgment 🔑 585(3)

Res judicata applies only when claim is based on same cause of action as that which was previously litigated, and thus res judicata was inapplicable to bar relitigation, in civil rights action claiming use of excessive force, of issue involved in previous criminal prosecution for resisting arrest. Hernandez v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1980, 624 F.2d 935. Judgment 585(1); Judgment 648

Res judicata precluded civil rights action under § 1983 against police officer for alleged assault upon, and attempted murder of, plaintiff in light of prior state conviction of plaintiff for resisting arrest and attempted assault, in which defendant raised defense of justification pursuant to which jury was instructed that it could convict only if it found beyond reasonable doubt that plaintiff struck the police officer and was the initial aggressor. Orraca v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 148. Judgment 828.8

State court judgment that police officers did not use excessive force against arrestee under Michigan constitutional law did not collaterally estop relitigation of excessive force issue in § 1983 action; even though state court judge used federal law jury instruction, excessive force issues were not the same. White v. City of Taylor, E.D.Mich.1994, 849 F.Supp. 1186, affirmed in part, reversed in part, dismissed in part 65 F.3d 169, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1317, 517 U.S. 1103, 134 L.Ed.2d 470. Judgment 828.16(1)

Criminal prosecution of police officer for beating arrestee in holding cell did not bar, on grounds of res judicata, arrestee's civil rights action for alleged use of excessive force. Stewart v. Roe, N.D.Ill.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1304. Judgment 828.8

5136. Habeas corpus proceedings, res judicata

Under New York law, doctrine of res judicata did not bar § 1983 claim of indigent civil litigant against state corrections officials who allegedly failed to protect him from attacks by other inmates, even though litigant had previously petitioned state court for writ of habeas corpus to seek transfer to federal prison based on same alleged failure to protect him; since court presiding over habeas proceeding could not have awarded litigant full measure of relief, including compensatory and punitive damages, sought in § 1983 action, doctrine of res judicata did not apply, but questions remained as to whether doctrine of collateral estoppel barred relitigation of any issues. Burgos v. Hopkins, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 14 F.3d 787, on remand 1995 WL 151811. Habeas Corpus 901

State prisoner's prior state habeas corpus action did not present res judicata bar to instant § 1983 action; habeas petition and § 1983 action were premised on different wrongs and requested different relief, even though both actions arose from his being placed in administrative segregation. Rhodes v. Hannigan, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 12 F.3d 989. Habeas Corpus 901

Final judgment denying inmate's Missouri state court suit seeking habeas corpus relief to enforce preliminary parole release date and for monetary damages under § 1983 in event of nonrelease barred his subsequent federal § 1983 suit under doctrine of res judicata, despite inmate's contention that relief currently sought was different in that he previously sought release regardless of denial of his access to Missouri sexual offenders program upon which parole release date was based and he currently complained about denial of access to program. Jones v. Moore, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 996 F.2d 943, rehearing denied. Habeas Corpus 901; Judgment 828.15(1)

Fact that federal district court for Eastern District of New York, in dismissing state prisoner's complaint in habeas corpus, gave both substantive grounds and alternative procedural ground of failure to meet requirement of exhaustion of state remedies, did not rob substantive grounds of res judicata effect as to any subsequent decision on any identical claim contained in civil action for deprivation of rights previously filed by same prisoner in federal district court for Southern District of New York. Williams v. Ward, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 556 F.2d 1143, certiorari dismissed 98 S.Ct. 469, 434 U.S. 944, 54 L.Ed.2d 323. Habeas Corpus 901

Action wherein plaintiff challenged provisions of Delaware Code requiring a losing defendant in an action brought in a justice of the peace court to post a surety bond within 15 days of judgment in order to appeal for a trial de novo in superior court was not barred by res judicata, notwithstanding that plaintiff had raised his constitutional objection to appeal bond before a justice of the peace, where negative response of justice to request that plaintiff waive appeal bond because of its allegedly unconstitutional impact was neither a "judgment" nor the kind of judicial determination to which res judicata attached. Lecates v. Justice of Peace Court No. 4 of State of Del., D.C.Del.1976, 423 F.Supp. 1379. Judgment 828.9(1)

5138. Events occurring following judgment, res judicata

Doctrine of res judicata did not preclude college instructor from maintaining his § 1983 action with regard to events and conduct which occurred since the date of the prior state court judgment on the same claims where there was no definite statement of the facts in the state court judgment with which the reviewing court could compare the college's subsequent conduct or present conditions. Clark v. Yosemite Community College Dist., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1986, 785 F.2d 781. Judgment 828.16(4)

African-American orthopedic surgeon's 1996 race discrimination claim was barred by res judicata since it sprang from the same triable group of underlying facts as his previous state contract action; however, his claims based on rejections by same employers again in 1998 and 1999 could not be precluded by the prior action since those claims only accrued after the state court litigation. Carr v. Health Ins. Plan of Greater New York, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2000, 111 F.Supp.2d 403, reconsideration denied 2002 WL 1974131. Judgment 828.15(1); Judgment 828.16(4)

5161. Collateral estoppel generally

Collateral estoppel principles apply to § 1983 actions and will require federal district court to give binding effect to decision of state court in some circumstances. Nelson v. Howard, E.D.Pa.1992, 810 F.Supp. 161. Judgment 644; Judgment 828.21(1)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Doctrine of collateral estoppel applies to civil rights suits under § 1983, and preclusive effect must be given to state court judgment if the matter involved in the civil rights suit has already been litigated and the state's preclusion rules apply to bar the claim. Stokes v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1990, 744 F.Supp. 183. Judgment 828.8

State court judgments can have collateral estoppel effect in subsequent section 1983 proceedings. Anderson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1985, 611 F.Supp. 481. Judgment 828.21(1)

5162. State law, collateral estoppel

Former county employee's § 1983 action arising from interruption of his employment was not barred, under Wisconsin claim preclusion principles, by his prior action in Wisconsin court seeking certiorari review of county's termination decision, inasmuch as he was not required to bring present civil rights claims in connection with petition for certiorari. Wilhelm v. County of Milwaukee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 325 F.3d 843. Judgment 828.7

Doctrine of collateral estoppel could not bar detainee from relitigating in federal § 1983 suit any issue adjudicated in Louisiana forfeiture proceeding, due to fact that collateral estoppel did not exist in Louisiana at time suit was filed. Craig v. St. Martin Parish Sheriff, W.D.La.1994, 861 F.Supp. 1290. Federal Courts 420; Judgment 828.3

Finding of no probable cause in New York State Division of Human Rights (SDHR) proceeding did not collaterally estop black New York City Department of Correction (DOC) Officer from litigating issue of race discrimination under federal civil rights statutes and Fourteenth Amendment. James v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21991591, Unreported. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Civil Rights 1711

5163. Federal judgment as federal court action bar, collateral estoppel

Where civil rights claim under § 1983 was erroneously dismissed as barred by limitations though it was in fact timely filed, and where Title VII action was tried to the court and findings adverse to employee were reversed, application of doctrine of collateral estoppel to prevent trial of the § 1983 claim would result in abrogation of plaintiff's Seventh Amendment right to jury trial on her legal claim. Farber v. Massillon Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1990, 917 F.2d 1391, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 952, 498 U.S. 1082, 112 L.Ed.2d 1041, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2851, 501 U.S. 1230, 115 L.Ed.2d 1019.

Collateral estoppel did not bar relitigation of sex discrimination plaintiff's § 1983 claim even though Title VII claim based on same facts was decided adversely to plaintiff, considering that if district court had not committed legal error in dismissing § 1981 claim, plaintiff would have been entitled to jury's resolution of factual issues underlying § 1981 claim, and district court would have been bound by such findings in deciding whether to grant Title VII relief. Volk v. Coler, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 845 F.2d 1422. Judgment 731

Where it was plain from examination of both present complaint and prior complaint and district court's minute entry memoranda that at heart of each complaint was basic decisive charge of racial discrimination in discharge of nontenured black teacher, and where it was clear that judge in dismissing the earlier suit on its merits categorically rejected claim of discrimination, second suit if not barred by res judicata was barred by collateral estoppel. Burns v. East Baton Rouge Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1976, 530 F.2d 1201, rehearing denied 533 F.2d 1135, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 386, 429 U.S. 960, 50 L.Ed.2d 328. Judgment 588

5164. Time of state court judgment, collateral estoppel

Where federal suit under this section is commenced before final decision by state court in litigation arising out of same controversy, state court judgment forecloses litigant from raising grievances in federal courts only if such claims have been pressed before, and decided by, state tribunal. New Jersey Ed. Ass'n v. Burke, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1978, 579 F.2d 764, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 252, 439 U.S. 894, 58 L.Ed.2d 239. Courts 493(3)

5165. Final judgment on merits, collateral estoppel

Under Wisconsin law, prison disciplinary board's factual finding that inmate's accusations in prior suit were false and malicious, and thus that discipline imposed by prison officials did not violate inmate's First Amendment right to petition for redress of grievances, was not binding on reviewing court, and thus did not collaterally estop inmate from filing §§ 1983 action against officials. Simpson v. Nickel, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2006, 450 F.3d 303. Prisons 13(10)

Civil rights plaintiff's failure to appeal adverse rulings following guilty plea in underlying criminal prosecution resulted in final judgment sufficient for purposes of applying collateral estoppel in civil rights action based on alleged Fourth Amendment violation involved in underlying criminal prosecution. Ayers v. City of Richmond, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 895 F.2d 1267. Judgment 648

5166. Exhaustion of state remedies, collateral estoppel--Generally

Plaintiff was collaterally estopped from seeking damages from Connecticut Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, under this section, where criminal prosecution for driving with a suspended operator's license was not plaintiff's initial opportunity to challenge constitutional validity of suspension order; plaintiff, having elected to forego a challenge to suspension order and continue driving and thereby invite a likely state criminal prosecution, could not now avoid the preclusive effect of the adverse state court adjudication; even if his flouting of suspension order might not have precluded plaintiff from attacking its validity in state court this was a circumstance that would bar a second round of litigation in federal courts; collateral estoppel applied notwithstanding lack of identity between the parties in the instant suit and the state criminal case. Pueschel v. Leuba, D.C.Conn.1974, 383 F.Supp. 576. Judgment 828.21(1)

5167. ---- Appeals, exhaustion of state remedies, collateral estoppel

Condemnees who had not appealed from state court condemnation awards which did not make allowance for attorney fees, even though state courts allegedly provided full and adequate forum for presentation of claims, were collaterally estopped from bringing action in federal court against condemnor and others to recover amounts equal to attorney fees on theory that constitutional rights of the condemnees had been violated by condemnor's failure to make its initial offers in amounts equal to the fair market value of the homes as determined by condemnor's appraiser, thus forcing condemnees to hire attorneys to represent them in court proceedings in order to obtain fair market value. Rhodes v. City of Chicago for Use of Schools, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1373. Judgment 828.18

Claimant who failed to appeal state court order incarcerating him for failure to pay jail bill was collaterally estopped from claiming that incarceration violated § 1983; under applicable Missouri law, claimant waived any challenge to constitutionality of sentence by failing to raise issue on direct appeal. Burks v. County of Miller, Mo., W.D.Mo.1990, 750 F.Supp. 408. Judgment 828.8

5168. ---- Habeas corpus, exhaustion of state remedies, collateral estoppel

Where inmate had exhausted state postconviction remedies with respect to claim that discipline imposed by prison officials violated his constitutional rights, state proceedings had to be given collateral estoppel effect in subsequent § 1983 damage action based on same discipline, even though collateral estoppel would not apply in subsequent federal habeas corpus proceeding. Gross v. Heikien, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1992, 957 F.2d 531, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 233, 506 U.S. 881, 121 L.Ed.2d 168. Judgment 828.8

5169. Identity of issues, collateral estoppel

Under Pennsylvania law as predicted by Court of Appeals, Unemployment Compensation Review Board (UCRB) findings, that there was no evidence that terminated county commissioner's office clerk violated her employer's rules or that her actions were detrimental to employer's business, did not, under doctrine of issue preclusion, preclude employer and supervisors in clerk's subsequent § 1983 action from rebutting her allegation that they fired her because of her protected speech, as issues in proceedings were different; issue before UCBR was whether clerk was ineligible for unemployment compensation due to willful misconduct, and issue in § 1983 action was whether termination violated clerk's First Amendment rights. Swineford v. Snyder County Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1258.

Determination by Illinois Industrial Commission that former employee's discharge did not cause his subsequent stroke collaterally estopped him from relitigating that issue in his § 1983 political firing case, despite his claim that issue decided in worker's compensation case, whether his stroke "arose out of and in the course of his employment," differed from issue in political firing case of whether his "stroke was caused by his firing." Crot v. Byrne, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 957 F.2d 394. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Workers' Compensation 1793

Since negative answer of jury on constitutional issue of whether chief jailer had violated plaintiff's constitutional rights by deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of plaintiff meant either that jury found no deliberate indifference or that plaintiff's medical needs were not sufficiently serious to reach level of constitutional violation, doctrine of collateral estoppel did not require the setting aside of award of punitive damages in second trial in which jury found that conduct of chief jailer had been malicious, wanton and oppressive. Haywood v. Ball, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1980, 634 F.2d 740. Courts 99(7)

Since issues determined by plaintiff's state court guilty plea, aggravated assault and possession of instrument of crime, were not the issues addressed in his subsequent § 1983 case, namely whether officer used excessive force in shooting plaintiff, collateral estoppel did not bar plaintiff's civil suit. DiJoseph v. Vuotto, E.D.Pa.1997, 968 F.Supp. 244. Judgment 828.8

Inmate's state court conviction for attempted assault in connection with an altercation with corrections officers did not collaterally estop him from asserting an excessive-force claim in a § 1983 suit against the officers; conviction established only that he attempted to assault a peace officer while in a correctional facility, which did not preclude him from offering evidence that the officers employed excessive force either before or after he attempted to cause injury to the officer. McCrory v. Belden, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22271192, Unreported. Judgment 828.8

5170. Identity of parties, collateral estoppel--Generally

A plaintiff who has a constitutional claim decided against him in state court is foreclosed under doctrine of collateral estoppel from asserting the same claim in federal district court, even if federal court action involves a different defendant, and it does not matter whether plaintiff had a choice of forum in the prior litigation. Hammer v. Town of Greenburgh, S.D.N.Y.1977, 440 F.Supp. 27, affirmed 578 F.2d 1368. Judgment 828.12

5171. ---- Privity, identity of parties, collateral estoppel

Where defendants in civil rights damage action were city police officers not directly employed by state and had no measure of control whatsoever over criminal proceeding against plaintiff and no direct individual personal interest in its outcome, there was no privity sufficient to invoke doctrine of collateral estoppel as to issues of consent to officers' entry into plaintiff's hotel room and of probable cause for his arrest resolved in plaintiff's favor in state criminal proceedings, and district court did not fail to give full faith and credit to state determination by submitting the questions to jury in civil rights damage action. Davis v. Eide, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1971, 439 F.2d 1077, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 139, 404 U.S. 843, 30 L.Ed.2d 78. Judgment 828.12

After discharged teacher brought first action against school board in Connecticut state court relating to his discharge, doctrine of claim preclusion barred second action against town, superintendent of schools, and board of education members in their official capacities, but not in their individual capacities; additional parties named in second action were in privity with board of education, as party in first action, based on agent-principal or master-servant relationship. Meehan v. Town of East Lyme, D.Conn.1996, 919 F.Supp. 80, affirmed 104 F.3d 352, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1336, 520 U.S. 1156, 137 L.Ed.2d 495. Judgment 828.14(6)

There was not privity between corporate owner of fireworks and its manager at suppression hearing in criminal prosecution against the manager, and result of that hearing would not be given collateral estoppel effect in subsequent civil rights action brought by the owner of the fireworks. East Coast Novelty Co., Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 781 F.Supp. 999, reargument denied 141 F.R.D. 245. Judgment 828.8

Arresting officer was not in privity with state, though he testified in prosecution of defendant charged with resisting arrest, and thus officer was not collaterally estopped from litigating issue of reasonable suspicion in acquitted defendant's subsequent § 1983 action alleging false arrest. Schwab v. Wood, D.Del.1991, 767 F.Supp. 574. Judgment 648

5172. ---- Class members, identity of parties, collateral estoppel

Where all of issues concerning conditions at District of Columbia jail had been fully litigated and resolved in recent substantial identical case, defendants had had every opportunity to contest the facts involved and those facts could no longer be open to any dispute, application of collateral estoppel was appropriate, even though plaintiff class in prior case consisted of persons not yet convicted and in the later case all class members had been convicted. Inmates, D. C. Jail v. Jackson, D.C.D.C.1976, 416 F.Supp. 119. Judgment 677

5173. ---- Partners and partnerships, identity of parties, collateral estoppel

Partners of nursing home were collaterally estopped from litigating in federal district court, under this section, action for injunction restraining enforcement of grand jury subpoena duces tecum for records of one partner on theory that criminal procedure law, McKinney's N.Y. CPL 190.40, granting immunity to grand jury witnesses unless evidence was required to be produced by subpoenas duces tecum and witness did not possess privilege against self-incrimination with respect to such evidence, left partners in doubt with respect to their privilege where partnership was party to previous action in state court which held that very same records did not enjoy protection of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5. Notey v. Hynes, E.D.N.Y.1976, 418 F.Supp. 1320. Judgment 828.8

5174. ---- Police officers, identity of parties, collateral estoppel

Mutuality requirement for collateral estoppel under Georgia law was not present in civil rights suit brought by arrestee against officers and head of county police department and, thus, prior state court denial of suppression motion did not bar arrestee from bringing civil rights suit against officers and head of department based on allegedly illegal search; neither officers nor head of county police department were parties to criminal case. Farred v. Hicks, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 915 F.2d 1530. Judgment 828.8

Plaintiff, who brought action against police officers seeking damages for beating allegedly received during course of his arrest and for allegedly illegal search of his home, could not invoke collateral estoppel offensively with regard to ruling in his criminal case concerning legality of search and seizure of evidence from his home since the present defendants were not parties to the prior state court proceedings. McCurry v. Allen, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1982, 688 F.2d 581. Judgment 648

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

White police officer was not collaterally estopped from presenting complaint that he was victim of unlawful racial discrimination when he was denied promotions granted to black officers with lower examination scores; although officer had a "strong community of interest" with party to previous suit which ended in consent decree establishing affirmative action program, plaintiff himself was not a party to prior suit. Puckett v. City of Louisville, W.D.Ky.1992, 819 F.Supp. 589, affirmed 991 F.2d 796. Judgment 707

Fact that arresting officer and United States did not participate in administrative trial of sergeant before police department's adverse act panel did not bar application of issue preclusion against arrestee in action for violation of § 1983, common-law torts, and violation of Federal Tort Claims Act. Stevens v. Stover, D.D.C.1990, 727 F.Supp. 668. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Municipal Corporations 185(11)

State troopers charged in action under this section with having unconstitutionally arrested plaintiff and searched his motor vehicle were not precluded from raising plea of collateral estoppel on basis of state court ruling in criminal action on theory that there was no mutuality of parties. Moran v. Mitchell, E.D.Va.1973, 354 F.Supp. 86. Judgment 828.8

5175. ---- Prisoners, identity of parties, collateral estoppel

Prison inmate was estopped from bringing § 1983 action against prison officials alleging that circumstances of his transfer and administrative segregation were unlawful; all inmate's basic contentions had been resolved by state court actions involving, in substance, same parties. Chappell v. Mills, D.Kan.1989, 726 F.Supp. 293. Judgment 828.20(1)

5176. ---- Foreclosure proceedings, identity of parties, collateral estoppel

Where issue of constitutionality of 12 V.S.A. § 4601 requiring a defendant in foreclosure to obtain leave of court to appeal was raised by mortgagor in state court proceedings incident to foreclosure and was summarily decided against mortgagor, the mortgagor was collaterally estopped from raising the issue anew in subsequent federal civil rights actions brought against the mortgagor bank as well as various state officials, notwithstanding that the latter officials were not parties to the original foreclosure proceeding. Dieffenbach v. Attorney General of Vermont, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1979, 604 F.2d 187. Judgment 828.14(6)

5177. Full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel-- Generally

In federal actions, including actions under this section, a state-court judgment will not be given collateral-estoppel effect where the party against whom an earlier court decision is asserted did not have a full and fair opportunity to litigate the claim or issue decided by the first court. Haring v. Prosise, U.S.Va.1983, 103 S.Ct. 2368, 462 U.S. 306, 76 L.Ed.2d 595. Judgment 828.14(1)

Collateral estoppel effect may be accorded state court judgments or decisions in federal court actions under this section; nothing in language or legislative history of this section shows congressional intent to deny binding effect to a state court determination where the state court, acting within its proper jurisdiction, be it civil or criminal, has given the parties a full and fair opportunity to litigate federal claims and thereby shown itself willing and able to protect federal rights and collateral estoppel is not precluded on theory that one asserting a federal right is entitled to one unencumbered opportunity to litigate such right in federal district court regardless of the legal posture in which the federal claim arises. Allen v. McCurry, U.S.Mo.1980, 101 S.Ct. 411, 449 U.S. 90, 66 L.Ed.2d 308, on remand 647 F.2d 167. Judgment 828.4(1)

Collateral estoppel barred state Highway and Transportation Commission (HTC) officials from litigating, in §§ 1983 suit by Ku Klux Klan (KKK) members to enjoin HTC officials from denying local KKK chapter's application to participate in HTC's adopt-a-highway program under revised regulation, the issue of whether HTC could deny KKK's application because of KKK's racial discrimination in membership, where Court of Appeals had ruled, in previous suit against HTC by another KKK member, that HTC unconstitutionally denied KKK's application under previous regulation based on KKK's racial superiority beliefs and advocacy, and in reaching that conclusion, rejected HTC's purported reasons for denying the application, one of which was the KKK's discriminatory membership criteria. Robb v. Hungerbeeler, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 370 F.3d 735, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 908, 543 U.S. 1054, 160 L.Ed.2d 776. Judgment 632; Judgment 702; Judgment 720

Findings of New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, that refusal by Department of Correctional Services and prison officials to permit Native American corrections officer to wear his hair longer than set forth in hair length regulation substantially encumbered officer's right to freely practice his chosen religion and that Department and officials showed no legitimate state interest that would be advanced by refusing to grant hair length exception were material to determination by district court of whether failure to grant exception violated federal and/or constitutional law such that officer could recover under § 1983 and, thus, Department and officials would be estopped from relitigating those issues in trial on officer's § 1983 claim unless they could show that they did not have full and fair opportunity to litigate issues in prior proceeding. Rourke v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, N.D.N.Y.1995, 915 F.Supp. 525. Judgment 828.20(1)

Federal civil rights statute does not operate as a device to collaterally attack adverse state court decisions and, as long as plaintiff was accorded a full and fair opportunity to litigate an issue in state court, doctrine of collateral estoppel applies to the civil rights claim. Esteves v. Ortiz Alvarez, D.Puerto Rico 1988, 678 F.Supp. 963. Judgment 828.5(1); Judgment 828.20(1)

A party who has had a full and fair opportunity to litigate constitutional issues before the highest state court cannot use this section as a substitute for a right of appeal or as a means of collateral attack on the final judgment of the state court. Sylvander v. New England Home For Little Wanderers, D.C.Mass.1978, 444 F.Supp. 393, affirmed 584 F.2d 1103. Judgment 828.21(1)

5178. ---- Assistance of counsel, full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel

Plaintiff, who received no response to his requests for legal assistance in maintenance of state court suit against state for negligently allowing assault upon him when he was transferred from one cellblock to another, was so ill-able to represent himself as to have lacked a full opportunity to present his claims; thus, plaintiff's subsequent action under this section against state agency and individual correction officers seeking to impose individual liability on basis of allegation that he was a victim of unnecessary force applied by certain correction officers while they were transferring him from one cellblock to another was not barred by collateral estoppel despite fact that state court based its dismissal of plaintiff's claims upon a finding that no excessive force had been used on plaintiff. Clark v. Department of Correctional Services, S.D.N.Y.1983, 564 F.Supp. 787. Judgment 828.1

Under Illinois law, convicted murder defendant had had full and fair opportunity to litigate his unreasonable search and seizure claim via motion to suppress evidence during his state criminal trial, and thus collateral estoppel precluded his subsequent assertion of §§1983 Fourth Amendment claim against police officers who had executed search, even though defendant had represented himself at murder trial with standby counsel; defendant's lack of skill in conducting his case pro se, purported history of psychological impairment, and attention-deficit disorder did not constitute lack of full and fair opportunity, since defendant himself had refused assistance of counsel and had acted to get criminal trial under way as quickly as possible. Simpson v. Rowan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 125 Fed.Appx. 720, 2005 WL 513483, Unreported. Judgment 828.8

5179. ---- Incentive to litigate issue, full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Prison officials did not have sufficiently strong incentive in civil rights action to litigate issue of whether prison disciplinary system violated due process, precluding application of offensive collateral estoppel to bar qualified immunity defense in inmate's subsequent civil rights action based on alleged due process violation occurring at disciplinary proceeding; only equitable relief was sought in prior action and relief granted did not require prison to undergo disruptive or revolutionary changes. McDuffie v. Estelle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 935 F.2d 682. Judgment 632

Prior Article 78 proceeding which found that prison disciplinary hearing officer's failure to call witnesses requested by inmate at disciplinary hearing was improper did not collaterally estop officer from relitigating the issue in inmate's § 1983 action, where officer had no incentive nor full opportunity to litigate federal claims during Article 78 proceeding. Ramirez v. Selsky, S.D.N.Y.1993, 817 F.Supp. 1090. Judgment 828.16(1)

Determination of state trial court, in criminal prosecution of police officer, that police officer injured his former spouse had collateral estoppel effect, pursuant to Illinois law, with respect to civil rights claims against officer, though only misdemeanor charges were raised in prosecution, considering that potential for imprisonment and adverse impact on officer's employment if found guilty provided objectively adequate incentive to fully defend case. Czajkowski v. City of Chicago, Ill., N.D.Ill.1992, 810 F.Supp. 1428. Judgment 828.8

5180. ---- Review procedures, full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel

State court judgment in favor of developers on their counterclaim to city's action to enjoin developers from digging lagoon in residential subdivision did not preclude developers from raising issues in federal civil rights litigation which had not been raised in counterclaim, where state appellate court had vacated dismissal of city's claims and remanded for further proceedings which were still pending. Gosnell v. City of Troy, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1995, 59 F.3d 654. Judgment 828.9(7); Judgment 828.10(2)

Under doctrine of issue preclusion, or collateral estoppel, police officer was precluded by prior administrative agency decisions from relitigating reason for his discharge in subsequent § 1983 action wherein he alleged that he was fired in retaliation for exercising his First Amendment rights; Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation Board of Review, affirmed by Commonwealth Court, found that officer was discharged for insubordination and neglect of duty, Civil Service Commission found that officer's speech concerning his suspension violated directive of police department manual, providing that officers should not publicly criticize department, and that directive was valid constitutional limitation on officer's right to free speech, and officer had full and fair opportunity to litigate issue since he appealed decision to Court of Common Pleas before abandoning claim. Edmundson v. Borough of Kennett Square, E.D.Pa.1992, 818 F.Supp. 798, affirmed in part, reversed in part 4 F.3d 186, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied.

Arrestee was not denied a full and fair opportunity to litigate menacing conviction, for purposes of determining whether facts therein decided had collateral estoppel effect in his subsequent civil rights action against officers, by fact that menacing conviction, because it resulted in only $100 fine, was not subject to direct appeal or by fact that there was some confusion in scope of review afforded by writ of certiorari under Delaware law; even though Delaware courts seemed unclear on scope of review afforded pursuant to writ of certiorari, arrestee could not raise issue where he did not attempt to obtain writ. Looney v. City of Wilmington, Del., D.Del.1989, 723 F.Supp. 1025. Judgment 828.8

Inmate was collaterally estopped by virtue of prior Oregon state court proceeding from bringing civil rights action alleging due process violations through placement in disciplinary segregation; under Oregon law, judicial affirmance of administrative determination could be given preclusive effect in subsequent proceeding, identical issues were raised in state court and necessarily determined in administrative review proceeding, and inmate received full and fair opportunity to litigate. McClure v. Santos, D.Or.1987, 669 F.Supp. 344, affirmed 878 F.2d 386. Judgment 828.20(1)

5181. ---- Preliminary hearings, full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel

Under Oklahoma law, arrestee who was ultimately acquitted of criminal charges for which she was arrested was collaterally estopped, in her subsequent civil rights action against police officers, from relitigating issue of probable cause to arrest because question of probable cause was determined conclusively at preliminary hearing, at which time arrestee had full and fair opportunity to litigate issue. Hubbert v. City of Moore, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 923 F.2d 769. Judgment 🔑 648

5182. ---- Suppression proceedings, full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel

State court's finding, in suppression hearing, that omissions in police officer's application for warrant to search home were deliberate and vitiated probable cause did not collaterally estop officer from claiming qualified immunity from homeowner's subsequent § 1983 claim in federal court; in ruling on suppression motion, state court had no opportunity to consider objective reasonableness of those omissions, in light of clearly established law. Lombardi v. City of El Cajon, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1117. Judgment 🔑 828.8

State court determination, following full and fair opportunity to defendant to litigate the issue, denying defendant's suppression motion collaterally estopped him from asserting Fourth Amendment violation in civil rights action against officers. Munz v. Parr, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1992, 972 F.2d 971. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Collateral estoppel barred Bivens claims for constitutional rights violation by federal officers, brought by driver against Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) task force agents who allegedly illegally seized cash from vehicle, where validity of search, seizure, or arrest at issue was previously upheld in state court suppression hearing. Pou v. U.S. Drug Enforcement Admin., S.D.N.Y.1996, 923 F.Supp. 573, affirmed 107 F.3d 3. Judgment 🔑 828.8

If state court determinations at suppression hearing prior to § 1983 plaintiff's trial for driving under influence were final, issue preclusion would prevent plaintiff from relitigating whether arresting officers used excessive force and whether hospital withdrew plaintiff's blood without his consent in violation of Fourth Amendment, where plaintiff had full and fair opportunity to litigate his civil rights contentions at suppression hearing, where issues of excessive force and consent to withdraw blood were distinctly put at issue in suppression hearing, where findings concerning probable cause and excessive force were essential to judgment denying suppression of blood alcohol test results, and where suppression motion could not have been denied without finding that drawing of plaintiff's blood was consistent with Fourth Amendment. Ashford v. Skiles, E.D.Pa.1993, 837 F.Supp. 108. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Plaintiff in civil rights action was not collaterally estopped from raising issues pertaining to search of his house and seizure of his property by denial of his motion to suppress by state court in a state criminal case where, in light of fact that the criminal charges had been dropped, he had not been afforded a full and fair opportunity to litigate issues raised in the suppression hearing. Glover v. Hunsicker, E.D.Pa.1985, 604 F.Supp. 665. Judgment 🔑 828.8

As to complaint, in action under this section, that officers seized items not named in search warrant and that seizure was not authorized by any exception to warrant requirement, plaintiff had been accorded full and fair opportunity to litigate such claim in state court by motion to suppress, and proper arguments having been asserted and correct body of case law having been applied, and there being no evidence that officer perjured himself in his testimony at suppression hearing, and in view of defendant's opportunity to litigate his claim in state court, doctrine of collateral estoppel precluded raising such issue. Lucien v. Roegner, N.D.Ill.1983, 574 F.Supp. 118. Judgment 🔑 648

resolved against prisoner in disciplinary proceeding, proceeding did not have preclusive effect on that issue in § 1983 proceeding, in light of evidence that proceeding did not occur under review by unbiased hearing officer, including evidence that hearing officer refused even to consider merits of prisoner's principal defense to charges against him. Colon v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 58 F.3d 865. Judgment 828.8

Findings of Texas State Board of Education that nonrenewal of teacher's contract was not discriminatorily motivated were not entitled to collateral estoppel effect in federal civil rights action under this section where the Board did not explain its reversal of credibility determinations made by hearing examiner and approved by State Commissioner of Education and the Board ex parte requested the district to prepare findings in advance of actual or nominal decision time and adopted those findings without affording teacher an opportunity to respond. Griffen v. Big Spring Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 706 F.2d 645, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 525, 464 U.S. 1008, 78 L.Ed.2d 709. Judgment 641

Under New York law, collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, did not bar primary election candidate's federal civil rights claims alleging that actions of members of local board of elections in rejecting his nominating petitions violated his federal due process and equal protection rights, where prior state court action, in which candidate secured place on ballot, litigated and necessarily decided only whether nominating petitions conformed to requirements of state law. Bodkin v. Garfinkle, E.D.N.Y.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 205. Judgment 828.16(4)

Under Pennsylvania law, doctrine of collateral estoppel did not apply to establish liability of borough, borough council members, and borough officials in §§ 1983 action by construction company and its owner for alleged due process violation by barring relitigation of issue of whether council's decision to preclude company, as non-responsible bidder, from bidding on future borough construction projects was arbitrary and capricious, based on prior state court decision enjoining borough from declaring company to be non-responsible bidder, given that issues presented in the two actions were not identical and that defendants did not have full and fair opportunity in state court to litigate defenses that they raised to §§ 1983 claim. Osiris Enterprises v. Borough of Whitehall, W.D.Pa.2005, 398 F.Supp.2d 400. Judgment 828.16(1)

North Carolina state university grievance committee's findings, in support of its denial of terminated employee's complaint of sex discrimination and retaliation, would not be given preclusive effect in employee's judicial action so as to warrant dismissal of her claims under §§ 1983 and Title IX; employee had alleged facts sufficient to undermine adequacy of opportunity afforded her to litigate her claims through university's grievance process by contending that university's administrative process was deficient in that, inter alia, she was not allowed to examine witnesses directly, testimony was not under oath, there was no discovery process, she was prohibited from asking certain questions, she was prevented from presenting certain evidence, and committee did not file findings of fact or conclusions supporting their decision to uphold her termination. Hooper v. North Carolina, M.D.N.C.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 804. Colleges And Universities 8.1(5)

Where a §§ 1983 action is brought by an unsuccessful Article 78 plaintiff, only collateral estoppel will trigger the Rooker-Feldman bar; New York's res judicata rule does not apply because a state court entertaining an Article 78 proceeding does not have the power to award the full measure of relief available in subsequent section 1983 litigation. Dibbs v. Roldan, S.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 340. Courts 509

In § 1983 action alleging that city maintained an unconstitutional policy of strip searching all pre-arraignment prisoners without reasonable suspicion, state court's decision in a prior case did not, under New York law, collaterally estop city's claims; court's decision to allow prior plaintiff to amend her complaint after both parties had finished presenting their cases prevented city from having a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue, and city was unable to conduct discovery related to issue or otherwise sufficiently prepare. Maneely v. City of Newburgh, S.D.N.Y.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 204. Judgment 828.16(1)

Under New York law, inmate did not have full and fair opportunity to litigate his claims in his prior related state court of claims action and, thus, collateral estoppel did not preclude inmate from litigating issues decided in that action in his present § 1983 civil rights action in federal court against corrections officers, alleging that he was beaten by officers in violation of his Eighth Amendment rights, given inmate's apparent mental confusion and his resulting inability to effectively represent himself after being denied appointed counsel in state court of claims action. Cruz v. Root, W.D.N.Y.1996, 932 F.Supp. 66. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.16(1)

Individual who was convicted of rape in state court but was later pardoned was not collaterally estopped, in § 1983 action against city and police officers, from raising issues that individual gave no confession, as asserted by police officers, and that police misconduct tainted victim's identification; those issues were not litigated in state courts, individual may not have had full and fair opportunity to litigate those issues in state courts, and it was unclear whether Virginia courts would apply collateral estoppel in civil action with respect to issues decided in prior criminal proceedings. Snyder v. City of Alexandria, E.D.Va.1994, 870 F.Supp. 672. Judgment 828.8

Defendants, in civil rights action against two members of city police department for allegedly directing and/or conducting unlawful search and seizure, were not collaterally estopped from raising issue of probable cause to make such search, even though such issue had been decided in favor of plaintiff in prior habeas corpus proceeding, where defendants had not had full and fair opportunity to litigate such issue in either state or federal court, state conceded in habeas corpus proceeding that search was conducted without probable cause while defendants denied such conclusion, and defendants were entitled to jury trial on some of the issues raised by plaintiff's complaint so that a different result was possible. Henderson v. Goeke, E.D.Pa.1971, 329 F.Supp. 1160, affirmed 491 F.2d 749. Habeas Corpus 901; Judgment 713(1)

Under Oklahoma law, state magistrate judge's preliminary-hearing determination that sufficient evidence warranted binding arrestee over for trial on the issue whether the arrestee had committed two counts of assault on an officer did not preclude the arrestee from pursuing a false-arrest claim in a §§ 1983 suit; the arrestee never had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue of probable cause, and there was evidence to show that the magistrate court's probable-cause ruling was erroneous. Gouskos v. Griffith, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 122 Fed.Appx. 965, 2005 WL 375858, Unreported. Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.11(2)

Inmate, in large part due to his pro se status, lacked a full and fair opportunity to litigate in a proceeding before a state court, and thus, that court's determination, that the force used by a corrections officer was reasonable and not excessive, did not, under New York law, present a collateral estoppel bar to redetermination of the appropriateness of the officer's conduct, and the Rooker-Feldman doctrine therefore did not preclude litigation of the issue in the inmate's instant § 1983 suit; the inmate was unaware of his ability to take discovery and to compel witnesses on his behalf, and thus, was woefully unprepared to present his case and to counter the State's evidence. Palmer v. Goss, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22519446, Unreported. Courts 509; Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.16(1)

5184. ---- Miscellaneous opportunities full and fair, full and fair opportunity to litigate issues, collateral estoppel

Municipal employee who returned to work following settlement of earlier litigation against employer was collaterally estopped from claiming that his current salary and position did not comply with terms of settlement agreement; employee had full and fair opportunity to litigate issues in contempt proceeding challenging employer's compliance with stipulations pertaining to his salary and appointment, and employee had opportunity to object to magistrate judge's finding in contempt proceeding prior to it becoming final order but did not, nor did he appeal once district court adopted magistrate's decision. Gonzalez-Pina v. Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 407 F.3d 425. Judgment 646; Judgment 650; Judgment 713(1)

Because inmate had full and fair opportunity to litigate constitutional challenges to prison disciplinary proceeding in prior state court action under New York's Article 78, collateral estoppel barred relitigation of those issues in subsequent civil rights action against state prison officials; issues presented were questions of law, and therefore limited review under Article 78, for substantial evidence on administrative record, did not disadvantage inmate.

Giakoumelos v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 88 F.3d 56. Judgment 828.8

State court judgment granting state Attorney General's motion to compel religious society and its head to comply with subpoenas issued in connection with administrative investigation to determine whether society was engaged in fraud barred, on grounds of collateral estoppel, action brought by religious society and its head alleging civil rights violations and civil rights conspiracy; state court adversely resolved issues central to constitutional claims when it denied cross motion of religious society and its head to quash subpoenas and granted state Attorney General's motion to enforce and religious society and its head had full and fair opportunity to litigate those issues in state court. Temple of Lost Sheep Inc. v. Abrams, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 930 F.2d 178, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 193, 502 U.S. 866, 116 L.Ed.2d 153. Judgment 828.8

Under New York law, collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, barred litigation in federal civil rights suit of propriety under state law of actions of members of local election board in rejecting primary candidate's nominating petition, where candidate had successfully challenged their actions in state court action that provided full and fair opportunity to litigate matter. Bodkin v. Garfinkle, E.D.N.Y.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 205. Judgment 828.16(1)

Prior proceeding before New York State Division of Human Rights (NYSDHR) afforded employee full and fair opportunity to litigate his racial discrimination claim against public employer, for purpose of employer's assertion of collateral estoppel in subsequent lawsuit brought by employee alleging racial discrimination under civil rights statutes; although NYSDHR made its determination based solely upon documentation submitted and did not conduct hearing, employee had been represented by competent counsel, employee had initiative to litigate issue, and employee did not explain how hearing or discovery would have altered outcome. Johnson v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 171. Civil Rights 1711

New York State Public Employment Relations Board's (PERB) determination, made after a hearing in which both parties were represented by counsel and had the opportunity to examine and cross-examine witnesses, that union's conduct was not arbitrary and outrageous in violation of state law, collaterally estopped municipal bus driver from litigating §§ 1981 claim alleging that the union violated her due process and equal protection rights on the basis of her race; PERB acted in a quasi-judicial capacity, and even though the constitutionality of union's conduct was not before PERB, a determination of union's motivation and intent was necessary and crucial to PERB's conclusion that the Act was not violated, and the same factual findings were central to driver's due process and equal protection claims. Perry v. Metropolitan Suburban Bus Authority, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 251. Labor And Employment 1834

Property owners' allegations that mortgage banking company and its president participated in conspiracy to deprive them of their property without due process of law were fully and fairly litigated, and necessarily determined and resolved adversely to property owners in prior state and federal actions and thus doctrine of collateral estoppel prevented owners from relitigating those issues by recasting their assertions as basis for § 1983 conspiracy claim. Green v. Kadilac Mortg. Bankers, Ltd., S.D.N.Y.1996, 936 F.Supp. 108. Judgment 713(1); Judgment 724; Judgment 828.16(1)

In considering whether defendant was afforded opportunity to litigate Fourth Amendment claim in state criminal hearing in order to apply collateral estoppel in federal civil rights action, fact that state court denied defendant's application to call co-defendants or obtain their grand jury testimony did not mean that he was deprived of a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue of the legality of the arrest, search and seizure in the state court suppression hearing. Wallace v. Roche, E.D.N.Y.1996, 921 F.Supp. 946. Judgment 559

Doctrine of collateral estoppel under North Carolina law precluded county employee from relitigating due process issues regarding his suspension and termination including lack of sufficient specificity in suspension notice through § 1983 action, failure to comply with procedural requirements during investigatory suspension and failure of director to afford employee unbiased predismissal conference; issues were identical, were raised, litigated, and actually determined in prior administrative proceeding, were necessary to resulting judgment and judgment was final decision on merits which employee had full and fair opportunity to litigate. Gray v. Laws, E.D.N.C.1994, 915 F.Supp. 747, on reconsideration in part 915 F.Supp. 762, affirmed in part, vacated in part 51 F.3d 426. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Counties 67

Arrestee charged with driving under influence of alcohol had full and fair opportunity to litigate issue of whether police officer had probable cause to arrest her during her Illinois state court proceeding to rescind statutory suspension of her driver's license, and thus arrestee was collaterally estopped from relitigating issue in action brought against officer under federal civil rights statute and under state law for false arrest, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution. Mosley v. La Mastus, N.D.Ill.1990, 741 F.Supp. 724. Judgment 713(1)

Claims by employee of city agency that she had been discriminated against because of race, sex and age were barred by collateral estoppel as result of an adverse determination in hearing conducted by State Division of Human Rights; at hearing employee had opportunity to litigate her claims through counsel, call witnesses and cross examine them. Nurse v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1990, 735 F.Supp. 69. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Civil Rights 1711

Indigent state prisoner's action challenging actions which allegedly occurred during state criminal trial, direct appeal and collateral attack upon conviction was barred by collateral estoppel where prisoner had previously attacked nearly every aspect of judicial process which resulted in adjudication of his guilt, since there had been three state postconviction proceedings, six federal habeas petitions and numerous civil rights suits, and it was inconceivable that there remained issue which had not yet been fully explored. Holsey v. Bass, D.C.Md.1981, 519 F.Supp. 395, affirmed 712 F.2d 70. Judgment 715(1)

Employee could seek damages for emotional suffering for acts taken by city, as employer, under New York State Human Rights Law, New York City Human Rights Law, Rehabilitation Act, and § 1983; although employee was estopped from seeking any back pay because Civil Service Commission gave employee full and fair hearing and denied his request for back pay, Commission did not have power to award money damages for emotional suffering. Varone v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21787475, Unreported. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Municipal Corporations 218(8)

5185. Issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel-- Generally

Where constitutional issue has been actually raised in state court, litigant has made his choice and may not relitigate that issue in federal court in civil rights action for deprivation of rights. Ornstein v. Regan, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 574 F.2d 115. Judgment 828.16(1)

The 1871 civil rights statute did not prevent state court judgment from having preclusive effect on constitutional issues raised in subsequent federal proceeding which either were raised or could have been raised in state court proceeding. Collard v. Incorporated Village of Flower Hill, E.D.N.Y.1984, 604 F.Supp. 1318, affirmed 759 F.2d 205, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 88, 474 U.S. 827, 88 L.Ed.2d 72. Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.16(3)

5186. ---- Reservation of federal claims, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata were properly applied by federal court in civil rights suit in view of similar state suit, notwithstanding that plaintiff had not submitted federal claims to state court for determination, as he did voluntarily submit for determination the issues underlying his federal claims which he fully litigated and were found by federal court to be identical with those raised in civil rights suit. Atchison v. State of Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1985, 763 F.2d 388. Judgment 828.16(1)

With respect to issue whether federal constitutional claim was actually litigated in juvenile court and was thus barred by collateral estoppel, express reservation of federal claim in juvenile court was not necessary where motion did not reasonably appear to raise such claim and no evidence indicated that the juvenile judge nonetheless actually proceeded to decide it. Fernandez v. Trias Monge, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1978, 586 F.2d 848. Judgment 828.16(1)

5187. ---- Cruel and unusual punishment, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Even if doctrine of collateral estoppel bars relitigation in a civil rights suit of questions determined in prior state habeas corpus proceedings, doctrine did not preclude federal district court, following state habeas corpus determination that state prisoner had not been mistreated during solitary confinement, from deciding issue whether conditions of confinement constituted cruel and unusual punishment since issues were not identical, in that state issue was whether mistreatment caused defendant to plead guilty, issue of cruel and unusual punishment was not actually litigated in state court, and any finding of no cruel and unusual punishment was not essential to determination that guilty plea was voluntary. Campise v. Hamilton, S.D.Tex.1974, 382 F.Supp. 172, appeal dismissed 541 F.2d 279, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1127, 429 U.S. 1102, 51 L.Ed.2d 552. Habeas Corpus 901

5188. ---- Due process, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review district court's order applying collateral estoppel to preclude relitigation of liability issues decided in § 1983 action by 20 former municipal employees alleging that massive layoff in aftermath of mayoral election violated their First Amendment and due process rights in three severed trials of claims by 62 additional employees; four cases began as single lawsuit, district court's order bound defendants as of date of its entry, and application of collateral estoppel in subsequent trials was beyond any speculation. Acevedo-Garcia v. Monroig, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 351 F.3d 547. Federal Courts 554.1

Collateral estoppel did not preclude foster parent from bringing § 1983 action asserting his due process rights were violated when long-term foster care agreement was terminated by state and foster child removed from foster parent's care, where state appeals consisted of legal determination that application of best interest of child standard was correct and factual determination that sufficient evidence supported decision to remove foster child from foster parent's care, and foster parent could not have raised due process claims in original administrative hearing because those claims arose as result of hearing itself. Webb v. State of Ala., Dept. of Pensions and Sec., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1988, 850 F.2d 1518. Judgment 828.7

Discharged teacher was barred from relitigating issue of due process against school superintendent and board of education members in their individual capacities, where he argued in his administrative appeal and before Connecticut state court that his termination violated his state and federal due process rights. Meehan v. Town of East Lyme, D.Conn.1996, 919 F.Supp. 80, affirmed 104 F.3d 352, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1336, 520 U.S. 1156, 137 L.Ed.2d 495. Judgment 828.7

5189. ---- Probable cause, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Former criminal defendant was not estopped from bringing civil rights action against police officer for wrongful search and seizure of property by failure to challenge underlying probable cause for search warrant at suppression hearing in prior criminal prosecution. B.C.R. Transport Co., Inc. v. Fontaine, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1984, 727 F.2d 7. Judgment 828.8

Arrestee's § 1983 claim for damages against police officers was precluded under Wisconsin principles of collateral estopppel, where state court had determined that arrest and search were supported by probable cause, state court made such determination after hearing in which arrestee cross-examined officers, testified himself, and called another witness, and arrestee could not have been convicted if police had been acting without probable cause.

5190. ---- Conspiracy, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Arrestee's §§1983 action against prosecutor and arresting officers, alleging that, following his arrest on drug charges, defendants had attempted to recruit informants to entangle him in a sting operation, was barred by collateral estoppel; issues of whether defendants had unfairly targeted arrestee had already been addressed in prior actions. Leventry v. Price, W.D.Pa.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 562. Judgment 715(2)

Plaintiff's allegation of conspiracy in course of his conviction for felony-murder was barred by collateral estoppel whereas plaintiff had raised those issues in state postconviction proceedings in which it was found that plaintiff failed to show improper inquest occurred, that false cause of death was put on victim's death certificate or that any misconduct by local officials occurred. O'Dell v. McSpadden, E.D.Mo.1991, 780 F.Supp. 639, affirmed 994 F.2d 843, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 260, 510 U.S. 895, 126 L.Ed.2d 212. Judgment 828.8

5191. ---- Employment, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

State court judgment that found former employee's dismissal had a rational basis did not collaterally estop former employee's federal court claim of wrongful termination under Title VII, claim of interference with his right to contract, § 1983 claim that he was deprived of constitutional rights under color of state law, conspiracy claim alleging he was deprived of equal protection or equal privileges or immunities, and claims under analogous provisions of the New York State Human Rights Law (NYSHRL) or the New York City Human Rights Law (NYCHRL); resolution of these claims hinged on whether race or some other impermissible characteristic was a motivating factor in the police department's decision to terminate him, and finding in state court that his termination was rational did not preclude the possibility that race or other impermissible factor formed the basis for former employee's termination. Latino Officers Ass'n v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 253 F.Supp.2d 771. Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.17(3)

City was barred in § 1983 action, under doctrine of collateral estoppel, from raising issue of whether police officer voluntarily relinquished her property interest in continued employment when district attorney delivered officer's letter of resignation to police commissioner, where such issue was clearly raised in officer's prior Article 78 proceeding in New York state court, and where city had full and fair opportunity to litigate that issue in such prior proceeding. Clow v. Deily, N.D.N.Y.1997, 953 F.Supp. 446. Judgment 828.16(1)

Discharged teacher's due process claim under § 1983 arose from same transaction or series of transactions as his earlier administrative appeal in state court, triggering claim preclusion bar, where comparison of his complaint with pleadings in administrative appeal and Superior Court judgment demonstrated that group of facts or transactions in both actions involved his termination and surrounding circumstances. Meehan v. Town of East Lyme, D.Conn.1996, 919 F.Supp. 80, affirmed 104 F.3d 352, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1336, 520 U.S. 1156, 137 L.Ed.2d 495. Judgment 828.7

Fact that terminated corrections officer's successful action to have Department of Correctional Service's hair length policy declared unconstitutional was brought as Article 78 proceeding in New York state courts did not foreclose application of collateral estoppel to preclude relitigation of certain issues in federal civil rights action even though such defenses as absolute or qualified immunity and certain remedies available in § 1983 action were not available in Article 78 proceeding; as officer was not precluded from asserting any claims, Department and prison officials were not foreclosed from asserting affirmative defenses to those claims, even though they would be precluded from relitigating certain issues, and officer could assert § 1983 claim and pursue all available remedies even though Article 78 proceeding did not provide full relief on issue of damages. Rourke v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, N.D.N.Y.1995, 915 F.Supp. 525. Judgment 828.8

For collateral estoppel purposes in former state employee's federal civil rights action, state personnel board's determination that employing agency did not act in bad faith in connection with job actions taken against employee did not involve same factual issue as question of whether employee was discharged due to her political affiliation; there was no indication in board's decision that employee advanced political affiliation argument, and single reference in administrative record to political affiliation was reference to employee's purported friendship with wife of former governor. Lupo v. Voinovich, S.D.Ohio 1994, 858 F.Supp. 699. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; States 53

Where discharged state employee was collaterally estopped, by virtue of state court order, from arguing that he was qualified for position on day he was terminated, he was precluded from recovering under § 1983 and Title VII. Payne v. State of Neb., Dept. of Correctional Services, D.Neb.1993, 854 F.Supp. 608, affirmed 45 F.3d 433. Civil Rights 1128

Civil rights action brought by former township police chief seeking damages for allegedly improper dismissal was barred, under doctrine of collateral estoppel, by previous state court proceeding in which the former police chief challenged his dismissal, even though the former police chief used word "conspiracy" for first time in federal action to describe investigatory process, where federal action amounted to no more than rephrasing of challenge made in state court action that there was denial of due process because body which fired former police chief was, administratively, investigator, prosecutor and judge, and record established that defendants in federal action were in privity with township, which was party defendant to state court action. Kelly v. Warminster Tp. Bd. of Sup'rs, E.D.Pa.1981, 512 F.Supp. 658, affirmed 681 F.2d 806, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 76, 459 U.S. 834, 74 L.Ed.2d 74 . Judgment 828.15(1)

Issue preclusion applied to bar employee from asserting employment discrimination claim against employer for refusing to sponsor him for apprenticeship program allegedly because of his Hispanic ethnicity, since issues raised were identical to those litigated in employee's prior action against employer; employee's current claim involved application of same civil rights law as that involved in prior litigation, there was substantial overlap between evidence and argument advanced in current case and that advanced in prior action, pretrial preparation and discovery related to matter presented in prior case could reasonably have been expected to embrace matter presented in current case, and current claim was closely related to employment discrimination claim in prior litigation. Reynaga v. Sun Studs, Inc., C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 97 Fed.Appx. 729, 2004 WL 1043099, Unreported. Judgment 715(2)

5192. ---- Licenses and permits, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Virginia resident who was denied taxicab license in Maryland was not collaterally estopped under Maryland law from asserting in federal civil rights action that consideration of residency in determining entitlement to license violated privileges and immunities and commerce clauses, although Virginia resident had raised issue before Maryland circuit court reviewing licensing decision, where Maryland court did not address that issue. O'Reilly v. County Bd. of Appeals for Montgomery County, Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1990, 900 F.2d 789, rehearing denied. Judgment 828.16(4)

5193. ---- Prisons and prisoners, issues actually raised in prior proceedings, collateral estoppel

Article 78 proceeding only addressed issue of whether prisoner's due process rights were violated by refusal to permit prisoner to question witness regarding whether reasonable grounds supported search of prisoner's cell, and so prisoner was not precluded from raising issue in § 1983 action of whether disciplinary proceedings were instituted against him on basis of retaliation for his two prior lawsuits. Colon v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 58 F.3d 865. Judgment 828.16(1) the question of whether prison officials could open mail from lawyers outside the inmate addressee's presence, judgment entered in the prior action, which was class action in which all prisoners were members of the class, upholding the prison's mail regulations did not bar, by collateral estoppel, prisoners who were members of the class in the first action from maintaining a second action to challenge specifically the actions of prison officials in opening mail from lawyers outside of the inmates' presence. Crowe v. Leeke, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1977, 550 F.2d 184. Judgment 715(3)

State inmate was collaterally estopped from raising claim against prison officials in §§ 1983 action for denying him access to law library, where inmate alleged in prior §§ 1983 suit that he was injured by having his petition for habeas corpus dismissed with prejudice and his certificate of appealability denied due to lack of opportunity to conduct adequate legal research, current action was based on same alleged injury, and parties to prior action were same or in privity with current parties. Brooks v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1179. Judgment 715(2)

Issues already decided by state court concerning fire in inmate's cell were barred by the doctrine of collateral estoppel from being reconsidered in inmate's federal civil rights action against prison employees. Hernandez v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 537. Judgment 828.16(1)

State prisoner asserting claims under § 1983 and Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) against prison officials was collaterally estopped from litigating factual issue of whether disability discrimination had been basis for denying him access to vocational rehabilitation program, where issue had been decided against him in his prior federal action raising equal protection claim and resolution of that action necessarily required litigation of that issue, notwithstanding that prior action was against different defendants. Garrett v. Angelone, W.D.Va.1996, 940 F.Supp. 933, affirmed 107 F.3d 865. Judgment 632; Judgment 724

Prison officials asserting collateral estoppel in prisoner's § 1983 action challenging his removal from work release program without predeprivation hearing failed to meet their burden of showing that prisoner's prior Article 78 proceeding actually and necessarily decided issue of whether prisoner's federal constitutional rights were violated through absence of constitutionally sufficient procedures. Roucchio v. Coughlin, E.D.N.Y.1996, 923 F.Supp. 360. Judgment 828.16(1)

Doctrine of claim preclusion barred prison inmate's civil rights suit against warden for failing to provide inmate, an effeminate homosexual or "drag queen," with adequate protection from physical abuse by other inmates, in light of prior suit against the same warden for failing to protect plaintiff-inmate from rape by cellmate, where prior action was dismissed on the merits and claim arose out of the same core of operative facts and, though inmate did not presently allege rape, his broad allegations that warden had not provided him with adequate protection were fully addressed in the prior suit. Jones v. Warden of Stateville Correctional Center, N.D.Ill.1995, 918 F.Supp. 1142. Judgment 570(5); Judgment 585(2)

5194. Issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel--Generally

State prisoner's failure to file formal grievance regarding cold temperatures in prison cell did not preclude claim that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to prisoner's right to constitutionally adequate conditions of confinement, since prisoner clearly complained via other channels. Dixon v. Godinez, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 114 F.3d 640. Civil Rights 1319

Where a constitutional issue has been actually raised and determined in state court and was necessary to the decision therein, such issue may not be litigated in an action under this section. Dieffenbach v. Attorney General of Vermont, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1979, 604 F.2d 187. Judgment 828.16(1)

litigated in prior state court Article 78 proceedings, and thus her § 1983 claims arising out of her termination were barred by collateral estoppel in subsequent federal proceeding. Wachtmeister v. Swiesz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 428, 2003 WL 1191164, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 166, 540 U.S. 860, 157 L.Ed.2d 110. Judgment 828.8; Judgment 828.16(1)

5195. ---- Necessity of determination, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Under rules of collateral estoppel applied by Virginia courts, judgment of conviction based upon plaintiff's guilty plea to charge of manufacturing a controlled substance did not bar, under section 1738 of title 28 which requires federal courts to give preclusive effect to state-court judgments whenever the courts of the state from which the judgments emerged would do so, subsequent action under this section challenging legality of the search which had produced inculpatory evidence for reasons that legality of search of plaintiff's apartment was not actually litigated in the criminal proceedings, that the criminal proceedings did not actually decide against plaintiff on an issue on which he was required to prevail in order to establish his claim and that none of the issues in the Section 1983 action could have been "necessarily" determined in criminal proceeding. Haring v. Prosise, U.S.Va.1983, 103 S.Ct. 2368, 462 U.S. 306, 76 L.Ed.2d 595. Judgment 828.8

5196. ---- Constitutional claims not mentioned in court opinion, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Where applicant for medicaid benefits in state proceeding challenging denial of medicaid benefits for services rendered by Christian Science nurse raised issue of constitutionality of New York medicaid statute if it denied coverage for Christian Science nursing and New York state court considered and expressly rejected claim that Christian Science nursing care was expense covered by state's medicaid program and entered decision upholding denial of medicaid benefits, state court, although its opinion did not allude to constitutional issue, necessarily resolved constitutional issue adverse to applicant so that its judgment collaterally estopped applicant from relitigating constitutional issue in subsequent federal civil rights action brought against same defendants. Winters v. Lavine, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 574 F.2d 46. Judgment 828.20(1)

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred restaurant patron's §§1983 action against restaurant's alleged insurers and others alleging denial of patron's right to fair trial in his previous state-court negligence action against restaurant and insurers, and asserting other constitutional claims and tort claims; crux of federal suit was alleged scheme to conceal identity of restaurant's insurer in connection with personal injuries suffered at restaurant, state court had already dismissed negligence-type claims on merits, and constitutional claims were inextricably intertwined with state-court judgment. Williams v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., C.A.5 (La.) 2005, 2005 WL 776170, Unreported. Courts 509

5197. ---- Due process, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Where state claims and federal civil rights claims depended on determination of question whether teacher was denied due process, judgment in prior state action operated as an estoppel as to those matters in issue or points controverted and determined. Brown v. DeLayo, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1173. Judgment 828.12

Judgment of state trial court, as affirmed by state Supreme Court, that medico-legal activities of physician had not played a substantial role in refusal of private hospital to reappoint him to its medical staff, that bylaws of hospital did not require that physician be given a written specification of charges against him, and that hospital's actions were neither arbitrary nor unreasonable operated to collaterally estop physician from asserting in action brought under this section that he had been deprived of due process through hospital's refusal to provide him with a requested specification of charges. Bricker v. Crane, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1972, 468 F.2d 1228, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 1368, 410 U.S. 930, 35 L.Ed.2d 592. Judgment 828.21(1)

Doctrine of collateral estoppel did not preclude state prisoner from bringing civil rights action under §§ 1983, seeking DNA testing of biological evidence used eight years before in his felony murder trial, where state court did not actually decide prisoner's due process claim when it denied his motions for DNA testing, reconsideration, and new trial, and state court never even acknowledged existence of constitutional principle on which prisoner's claim for DNA testing was based. Wade v. Brady, D.Mass.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 226. Judgment 828.20(1)

Prior state court ruling that corporate owner of buildings destroyed as unsafe received notice by certified mail of unsafe building proceedings estopped officer of owner and officer's father and brother from relitigating issue of conformity with New York City Administrative Code's notice provisions, and thus, officer and family could not complain that they were denied constructive notice which they were due, in subsequent civil rights action against city. Friedman v. New York City Dept. of Housing and Development Admin., S.D.N.Y.1988, 688 F.Supp. 896, affirmed 876 F.2d 890, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2570, 495 U.S. 961, 109 L.Ed.2d 752. Judgment 828.17(1)

Doctrine of collateral estoppel did not prevent former city police officer from litigating claim that various officials acted under color of state law to deprive him of his due process rights in connection with disciplinary proceedings where the due process issue was not necessary to decisions that were rendered in prior New York State proceedings arising out of the officer's dismissal and where the officer prevailed in the state courts. Williams v. Codd, S.D.N.Y.1978, 459 F.Supp. 804. Judgment 828.16(2)

Where state court determination that street registrants' signatures on designating petition were invalid was not relevant to instant question whether city board of elections' erroneous advice and ultra vires conduct led to denial of due process by unconstitutionally denying city councilman candidate, and hence voters, access to the ballot, and state courts neither expressly nor impliedly determined issue as to whether there was justifiable reliance by candidate and voters on board's advice, there was no collateral estoppel as to any plaintiffs on reliance issue. Williams v. Sclafani, S.D.N.Y.1978, 444 F.Supp. 906, affirmed 580 F.2d 1046. Judgment 828.12

High school teacher could not relitigate in federal court his claim that termination of his employment violated due process in that he had acquired tenure by estoppel under New York law where question of acquisition of tenure by estoppel had already been decided adversely to him in state court proceeding. LaBarr v. Board of Ed. of Union Free School Dist. No. 1, Town of Hempstead, Nassau County, N. Y., E.D.N.Y.1977, 425 F.Supp. 219. Judgment 828.20(1)

Prior decision by Pennsylvania Common Pleas Court that Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority (SEPTA) denied employee due process through its post-termination hearing procedure did not collaterally estop District Court's decision in employee's § 1983 claim that SEPTA did not violate employee's due process rights, where Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court had vacated decision of the Common Pleas Court. Krenzel v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 199, 2004 WL 188091, Unreported. Judgment 828.9(7)

5198. ---- Medical need of prisoners, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Doctrine of collateral estoppel was not applied to bar sheriff and chief jailor of county jail from relitigating issue as to whether prisoner had serious medical need while incarcerated at county jail, which issue had been decided in prisoner's favor in previous § 1983 action brought by prisoner against three deputy sheriffs involving the same incident, where federal district court had vague, disquieting feeling, admittedly unsupported by any evidence, that first jury's verdict may have been designed to offer prisoner solace by allowing him to prevail on issue of serious medical need, while having already decided that prisoner would lose on second issue of deputy sheriffs' deliberate indifference to that need. Fate v. Dixon, E.D.N.C.1986, 649 F.Supp. 551. Judgment 720

5199. ---- Retaliatory discharge, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Elementary school principal's suit under civil rights statute against school district superintendent and others for alleged violation of his rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 by preventing his reemployment as elementary school principal in retaliation for his opposition to certain candidates for school board was precluded on collateral estoppel grounds by earlier state court judgment entered following litigation of same issues presented in case at hand, which were necessary to support state court decree entered, despite fact that initial fact-finding was made by an administrative body. Holmes v. Jones, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1984, 738 F.2d 711. Judgment 828.12

Section 1983 claim by terminated employee of state agency, alleging that he was terminated in retaliation for his political party affiliation, in violation of First Amendment, was actually and necessarily decided in employee's prior New York article 78 proceeding in which he challenged his termination under state law, as required for collateral estoppel to apply under New York law; in state proceeding, employee's allegations included that reason which state provided for his termination was pretextual and that action taken by state against him resulted from his political enemies' discovery of his appointment with agency, state Appellate Division's finding on appeal that employee's termination was not arbitrary and capricious but was supported by substantial evidence subsumed question of whether it was made with discriminatory intent, and both state Supreme Court and Appellate Division expressly found employee's other claims to be without merit. Dolan v. Roth, N.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 122, affirmed in part, reversed in part 170 Fed.Appx. 743, 2006 WL 558578. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.16(1); Judgment 828.17(3)

5200. ---- Taking without compensation, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Store proprietor who had claimed low earnings on federal tax returns was not estopped from inconsistently claiming higher earnings in his §§1983 action against city and city's corporation counsel; credibility of proprietor's evidence of business profits, in light of inconsistency with his tax return, was for jury to assess. Kassim v. City of Schenectady, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 415 F.3d 246. Estoppel 68(2)

State court in inverse condemnation proceeding brought by landowner against transit authority addressed landowner's federal constitutional claims as well as state constitutional claims, and thus, state court determination collaterally estopped landowner from asserting federal constitutional claims in civil rights suit in federal court; state court instructions to jury explicitly mentioned both State and United States Constitutions with respect to "taking," and state court jury concluded that neither landowner's property nor property rights had been taken or damaged by transit authority without just compensation first being paid. Fountain v. Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1988, 849 F.2d 1412. Judgment 828.8

Where claim in civil rights action that zoning classification constituted the taking of property for public use without just compensation raised exactly the same constitutional issues litigated and decided in state court declaratory judgment action concerning validity of zoning classification established by prior resolution, although the claim was directed to the resolution which was adopted after the state court judgment, the doctrine of collateral estoppel prevented relitigation of the issue in civil rights action. Dells, Inc. v. Mundt, S.D.N.Y.1975, 400 F.Supp. 1293. Judgment 828.11(3)

5201. ---- Miscellaneous issues, issues determined in prior proceeding, collateral estoppel

Dairy farmer was collaterally estopped from bringing subsequent civil rights claim, which alleged that Puerto Rican government deprived him of his personal property without due process of law, since key issues of claim had been litigated previously, and decided against him, in Puerto Rico courts. Gonzalez-Alvarez v. Rivero-Cubano, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 426 F.3d 422. Judgment 828.20(1)

Decision in state habeas corpus proceeding that patient met statutory conditions for involuntary confinement for mental illness precluded, under New York doctrine of issue preclusion, patient's § 1983 claims challenging his involuntary confinement; matters actually litigated and determined in state court included whether patient suffered a mental illness and whether, due to illness, patient posed a substantial risk of harm to himself or others so that he was in need of further retention, and those questions were identical to issues asserted with respect to confinement claims in § 1983 action. Kulak v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 88 F.3d 63. Habeas Corpus 901

Issue preclusion aspect of res judicata did not bar prisoner's civil rights action even though prior favorable order in habeas corpus proceeding was vacated because prisoner had escaped, where district court had resolved competency of counsel issue in favor of prisoner, the court of appeals did not decide that issue on the merits, and there were issues in the civil rights action not precluded by the competency of counsel issue. Quarles v. Sager, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1982, 687 F.2d 344. Judgment 735; Habeas Corpus 901

Where issue of state constitutional ban on legislators' holding appointive positions was not litigated in civil rights action brought by college teacher, who was also a legislator, who contended that nonrenewal of his teaching contract and denial of tenure was a denial of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1 and 14 § 1 and where the teacher was perfectly aware of the issue and did not stress the point that it might affect his right to return to the college, doctrine of collateral estoppel did not preclude college, which had been ordered to reinstate the teacher with tenure, from asserting the constitutional ban on dual jobs when teacher sought to hold various state officials in contempt for failing to reinstate him and pay his salary. Stolberg v. Members of Bd. of Trustees for State Colleges of State of Conn., C.A.2 (Conn.) 1976, 541 F.2d 890, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 260, 429 U.S. 897, 50 L.Ed.2d 181 . Judgment 715(3)

Under doctrine of collateral estoppel, federal court was bound to accept as true finding of fact by state court that at time of appeal to civil service commission transit authority's employee was aware of conflict of interest of member of transit authority who voted to approve referee's report recommending employee's discharge, such finding being necessary to decision of state courts to dismiss action. Taylor v. New York City Transit Authority, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1970, 433 F.2d 665. Judgment 828.20(1)

Claim for lost profits asserted by property owner in § 1983 suit alleging that city officials violated due process when they denied owner a building permit was not barred by claim preclusion arising from prior mandamus proceeding in which owner successfully compelled issuance of permit; under Oregon law, plaintiff could not have pursued his claim for lost profits during the mandamus proceeding under any theory because those damages arose from conduct of city officials that gave rise to the mandamus proceeding rather than from a false return of the writ during the mandamus proceeding. Holman v. City of Warrenton, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 791. Judgment 552

State court tax evasion convictions, based on rejection of taxpayers' claim that state tax regulations were inconsistent with and thus preempted by federal statute, collaterally estopped taxpayers from asserting preemption issue in subsequent §§ 1983 action seeking declaratory judgment. Enyeart v. Minnesota, D.Minn.2006, 408 F.Supp.2d 797. Judgment 828.8

Employee stated defense of equitable estoppel to claim that complaint of racial discrimination in contracting under §§ 1981 must be dismissed due to failure of employee to sue within 300 days after discriminatory event occurred; employee alleged that presence of settlement agreement, resolving earlier discrimination complaint, delayed filing of claim in present instance. Tardd v. Brookhaven Nat. Laboratory, E.D.N.Y.2006, 407 F.Supp.2d 404. Limitation Of Actions 179(1)

Police chief's malicious prosecution claim asserted against arrestee who sued him under §§ 1983 was barred, under doctrine of collateral estoppel, by decision granting summary judgment dismissing prior lawsuit brought by police chief against another arrestee who filed §§ 1983 claim against him; both §§ 1983 claims relied on same evidence of supervisory liability, so that malicious prosecution claims were identical, and police chief had adequate opportunity to litigate the malicious prosecution claim in prior action. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 1173. Judgment 715(2)

Homeowner who sued police officers, alleging that they used excessive force in breaking up party at his home, was collaterally estopped from relitigating issue of whether there was loud noise on premises at time of arrest, for purposes of determining existence of probable cause, since homeowner had been found guilty in state court of violating town's noise ordinance. Raphael v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 127. Judgment 828.17(1)

Objective component of Eighth Amendment claim of excessive force requires that violation be sufficiently serious by objective standards, taking into account context and contemporary standards of decency. Jeanty v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 533. Sentencing And Punishment 1548

County jail inmate's conviction for assault on corrections officer did not preclude §§ 1983 action against officers claiming they violated his Eighth Amendment rights when they beat him to point of breaking his arm, after alleged assault had ceased and inmate was subdued. Jeanty v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 533. Civil Rights 1093

Earlier state court decision that city's farm animal ordinance was valid did not have collateral estoppel effect barring owners from arguing that ordinance was invalid, in action under §§ 1983 against city and its officials, alleging violation of their constitutional rights, where judge in earlier case did not actually reach issue of ordinance's validity, because judge held that owners would not have been entitled to exception for prior non-conforming use anyway given that their use was not substantial enough. Moran v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 507. Zoning And Planning 727

Doctrine of nonmutual collateral estoppel, on basis of prior Iowa judgment dismissing county's petition for disposition of allegedly neglected horses which had been removed from farm, did not apply in farmer's § 1983 action alleging that removal of the horses violated her federal and Iowa constitutional rights; issue decided by Iowa court was whether the horses had been neglected, whereas issue before federal court, which was not raised before Iowa court, was whether county's execution of search warrant violated farmer's constitutional rights. McClendon v. Story County Sheriff's Dept., S.D.Iowa 2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 1146, affirmed in part, reversed in part 403 F.3d 510. Judgment 828.13; Judgment 828.16(4)

Civil rights action in federal district court based on alleged due process violations by chief counsel and law clerk for grievance committee during investigation of possible attorney misconduct by plaintiffs would be barred on collateral estoppel grounds by previous decision of state appellate court denying motions to dismiss disciplinary proceedings, provided that plaintiffs were afforded a full and fair opportunity to litigate due process claim in state court. Thaler v. Casella, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 691. Judgment 828.16(1)

Arrestee was collaterally estopped from relitigating in his § 1983 action issue of correctional officer's alleged use of excessive force in connection with one incident inasmuch as issue of excessive force with respect to that incident was litigated and decided in arrestee's state criminal trial, which resulted in his conviction of menacing, and arrestee failed to establish that his sentence for that offense had been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, or declared invalid by authorized state tribunal. Robertson v. Johnson County, Ky., E.D.Ky.1995, 896 F.Supp. 673. Judgment 828.8

Excessive force claim brought by citizens against police officers as civil rights claim was precluded by principles of res judicata or collateral estoppel where federal action involves same parties as those in previously decided state court action, and pivotal issue of whether reasonable officer would have acted as defendant officers acted under same circumstances was clearly determined in state court, which found that amount of force used was not egregious but was reasonable in light of circumstances that officers were faced with. Franklin v. City of Pontiac, E.D.Mich.1995, 887 F.Supp. 978. Judgment 828.16(1) not be returned did not collaterally estop plaintiff from bringing civil rights action based on allegations that defendants violated plaintiff's civil rights by seizing alleged fireworks and destroying some of the fireworks without testing them to determine whether, in fact, they were fireworks, since court had no indication as to basis of court's denial of plaintiff's motion. Jones v. Logue, W.D.Pa.1985, 615 F.Supp. 442. Judgment 828.17(1)

Plaintiff who brought section 1983 action alleging violation of his civil rights when police used a photograph they illegally retained in contravention of expungement order to arrest him on criminal charges of which he was ultimately found not guilty was not collaterally estopped from relitigating question whether use of illegally retained photograph caused deprivation of his liberty, because question was not necessarily decided by state court which decided issue of admissibility of pretrial lineup and in-court identifications of defendant provided by two witnesses who saw the unlawfully retained photograph. Anderson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1985, 611 F.Supp. 481. Judgment 648

In view of judgments of state court appointing receiver for alleged vendor and enjoining alleged purchaser from exercising any rights consistent with ownership of property under deed, purchaser was collaterally estopped from asserting in federal civil rights action his ownership of property under deed or his controlling ownership of vendor corporation. Hohensee v. Grier, M.D.Pa.1974, 373 F.Supp. 1358, affirmed 524 F.2d 1403, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 2659, 426 U.S. 940, 49 L.Ed.2d 392, rehearing denied 97 S.Ct. 196, 429 U.S. 874, 50 L.Ed.2d 158. Judgment 828.20(1)

Where use made of telephones at plaintiffs' store was actually raised and adjudicated in prior criminal prosecution for gambling and consideration of that issue was necessary to finding of guilty therein, doctrine of collateral estoppel was applicable to action under this subchapter against telephone company and police officers seeking damages by reason of allegedly wrongful removal of telephones. Palma v. Powers, N.D.Ill.1969, 295 F.Supp. 924. Judgment 648

Ruling of Nebraska Court of Appeals, reversing arrestee's conviction for possession of crack cocaine because it found that pat-down search of arrestee was illegal, did not have collateral estoppel effect, in arrestee's subsequent § § 1983 action in federal court against city police officer alleging illegal search, as to whether officer was entitled to qualified immunity; Nebraska court did not address whether officer was entitled to qualified immunity, and officer was not in privity with state and did not have opportunity to litigate qualified immunity in the prior action. Coleman v. Rieck, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2005, 154 Fed.Appx. 546, 2005 WL 3068056, Unreported. Judgment 828.14(11)

5202. Administrative proceedings, collateral estoppel

Facts found at school administrator's disciplinary hearing, conducted under statute governing disciplinary hearings for disciplining tenured teachers and administrators in the New York state school system, had preclusive effective in administrator's §§ 1983 claim of retaliation; administrator's hearing properly adjudicated multiple charges of misconduct and determined that there was just cause for termination, administrator had an adequate, full, and fair opportunity to litigate the question of cause for her termination, including motion practice, bills of particulars, mandatory disclosure, discovery, subpoena power, right to counsel, cross-examination, testimony under oath, and a full record, and the hearing occupied a total of 14 days over a three-month period, and included the testimony of 20 witnesses, including five expert medical witnesses. Burkybile v. Bd. of Educ. of Hastings-On-Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 411 F.3d 306, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 801, 163 L.Ed.2d 628. Schools 63(1)

Under New York law, ALJ's finding at arrestee's parole revocation hearing that arresting officer struck arrestee after arrestee reached for something in his socks did not have collateral estoppel effect in arrestee's subsequent civil rights action against the officer based on officer's alleged use of excessive force; ALJ's statement that arrestee reached for his sock was not necessary to the outcome of the parole revocation hearing, since arrestee's parole could have been revoked because he struck the officer, whether or not he reached for his sock. Curry v. City of Syracuse, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 324. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Pardon And Parole 91

Under New York law, ALJ's finding at arrestee's parole revocation hearing that arresting officer struck arrestee after arrestee reached for something in his socks did not have collateral estoppel effect in arrestee's subsequent civil rights action against the officer based on officer's alleged use of excessive force; ALJ's statement that arrestee reached for his sock was not necessary to the outcome of the parole revocation hearing, since arrestee's parole could have been revoked because he struck the officer, whether or not he reached for his sock. Curry v. City of Syracuse, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 324. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Pardon And Parole 91

Student was barred by doctrine of issue preclusion from relitigating facts in federal court in connection with civil rights action, even though student requested damages in § 1983 action which were unavailable at State Board hearing, where Iowa law would give issues of fact preclusive effect because at State Board level, evidentiary hearing was conducted at which student raised and litigated due process claim, State Board rejected student's factual allegations that he suffered prejudice, which were clearly material to its disposition of the case, and both student's guilt and finding of no prejudice were necessary findings in State Board's affirmance of School Board's expulsion; had State Board found student suffered prejudice, it would have reversed School Board's decision. Plough By and Through Plough v. West Des Moines Community School Dist., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1995, 70 F.3d 512. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Schools 177

Issue preclusion could not be applied to Civil Service Commission's unreviewed finding that police officer's public criticism of his superior officer was not protected by First Amendment and, thus, did not bar officer's subsequent § 1983 action alleging that he was discharged in retaliation for his exercise of free speech; constitutional adjudication was not within Commission's competence so as to bar a federal court from reexamining that legal issue. Edmundson v. Borough of Kennett Square, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 4 F.3d 186, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Municipal Corporations 185(11)

Section 1983 does not extend the right to relitigate in federal court evidentiary questions arising in school disciplinary proceedings. Wagner ex rel. Wagner-Garay v. Fort Wayne Community Sch ools, N.D.Ind.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 915. Civil Rights 1062

Administrative proceedings before city planning commission and city council regarding developer's objections to condition of approval imposed on project did not have essential procedural characteristics of court, and thus their determinations were not entitled to preclusive effect in developer's subsequent §§ 1983 action, even though developer was given some time to present oral argument at city council hearing, and state court review of determinations was possible, where developer was not allowed to present evidence, to subpoena, call, or cross-examine witnesses under oath, or to subpoena documents in hands of city material to its constitutional equal protection claim, state court review was limited to administrative record, and developer did not initiate administrative proceedings. North Pacifica, LLC. v. City of Pacifica, N.D.Cal.2005, 366 F.Supp.2d 927. Zoning And Planning 363

Judicial discipline committee's order censuring state judge for engaging in sexually and racially harassing conduct towards female African-American secretary did not collaterally estop judge from litigating his liability in secretary's racial and sexual hostile work environment action under § 1983, § 1981, New York State Human Rights Law (NYCHRL), and New York City Human Rights Law (NYCHRL); judge lacked full and fair opportunity to litigate issues in disciplinary proceeding, and essential element of secretary's hostile work environment claim was not "necessarily decided" by committee. Bland v. New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 526. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Judges 11(8)

Under Mississippi law, teacher's prior state court action appealing nonrenewal of her contract barred, under collateral estoppel principles, her subsequent federal § 1983 action alleging that nonrenewal violated First Amendment, even though initial proceedings were conducted by administrative body; issue in both actions was alleged violation of First Amendment rights, all factual circumstances surrounding alleged constitutional violation were raised in chancery court and on appeal to Mississippi Supreme Court, issue was actually litigated, and essential determination of issue was necessary and critical parts of judgment in both courts. Gates v. Walker, S.D.Miss.1994, 865 F.Supp. 1222, affirmed 62 F.3d 394. Judgment 828.7; Judgment 828.16(1)

Judge was not collaterally estopped from litigating, in connection with terminated bailiff's § 1983 claim, factual issues that were decided in administrative proceeding before Department of Employment and Training Services, where judge was not party to prior proceeding and "just cause" issue presented in prior proceeding was not identical to issues presented in § 1983 action. Kelly v. Municipal Court of Marion County, S.D.Ind.1994, 852 F.Supp. 724, affirmed 97 F.3d 902. Administrative Law And Procedure 501

Federal court could look to Georgia law to determine if administrative law judge's (ALJ) finding that firefighter was not promoted to position of fire engineer was entitled to preclusive effect in § 1983 action, where ALJ was performing judicial function, firefighter was given adequate opportunity to litigate issue and issue was properly before ALJ; ALJ's finding was entitled to preclusive effect, under Georgia law, where "promotion" issue was actually litigated before ALJ, issue was necessary to ALJ's ultimate conclusions and issue was identical to issue before court in § 1983 action. Hunter v. City of Warner Robins, Ga., M.D.Ga.1994, 842 F.Supp. 1460. Federal Courts 433

Courts are allowed in § 1983 actions to afford collateral estoppel effect to state administrative proceedings. Farley v. North Bergen Tp. Bd. of Educ., D.N.J.1989, 705 F.Supp. 223. Administrative Law And Procedure 501

Former pretrial detainee who brought §§ 1983 action against county sheriff and correctional officers could not contradict deposition testimony that he did not appeal denial of his administrative grievances with his subsequent affidavits or errata sheets stating alternatively that he did not receive responses and that he appealed, upon defendants' motion for summary judgment based on detainee's failure to exhaust remedies in accord with requirements of the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), notwithstanding detainee's assertion that he was merely clarifying earlier deposition. Truly v. Sheahan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 135 Fed.Appx. 869, 2005 WL 1316961, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2539

5203. Arbitration proceedings, collateral estoppel

To determine if federal district court could give any preclusive effect to Illinois sheriff's merit board's decision that police officer was terminated for just cause, court had to determine whether board acted in judicial capacity, whether officer had adequate opportunity to litigate issues before board, and whether board's decision would be given preclusive effect by Illinois courts and if these three factors were met, court then had to determine whether this particular board decision should be given preclusive effect for purposes of officer's § 1983 action. Falk v. Cook County Sheriff's Office, N.D.Ill.1995, 904 F.Supp. 797. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Federal Courts 433; Municipal Corporations 185(11)

Limited scope of judicial review of arbitral awards under New York law prevented district court from applying collateral estoppel to Article 75 proceeding confirming Tripartite Arbitration Board determination in favor of employee; accordingly, Article 75 proceeding was not entitled to preclusive effect in either of employee's Title VII or § 1983 actions in federal court. Sewell v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.1992, 809 F.Supp. 208. Judgment 828.8

5204. Consent decrees, collateral estoppel

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Former administrative assistants of state's attorney's office were not foreclosed under collateral estoppel principles from bringing civil rights action raising issue that their termination was due to their political affiliation and thus violated U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 by prior litigation involving constitutional rights of voters and candidates to fair elections in which it was determined that their positions were politically affiliated where judgment in the prior litigation was obtained by consent decree and did not contain any findings or any agreement precluding relitigation of issue of political affiliation for positions and where it was unclear whether that issue was actually decided. Gannon v. Daley, N.D.Ill.1983, 561 F.Supp. 1377. Judgment 651; Judgment 720

Until such time as valid consent decree entered in Pennsylvania state court was vacated, that decree and stipulations contained therein remained in full force and effect and party to consent decree was collaterally estopped from contending in civil rights action in federal district court that the consent decree was illegally procured by agents of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Environmental Aid, Inc. v. Goddard, D.C.Pa.1977, 433 F.Supp. 906. Judgment 828.9(2)

5205. Criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel--Generally

Principle of collateral estoppel applies to §§ 1983 damages actions that necessarily require plaintiff to prove the unlawfulness of his conviction or confinement, just as it has always applied to actions for malicious prosecution; if judgment in plaintiff's favor would necessarily imply that his conviction is invalid, then §§ 1983 action is not cognizable unless conviction has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged, declared invalid, or otherwise called into question in habeas proceeding. Ballard v. Burton, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2006, 444 F.3d 391. Judgment 648

Collateral estoppel applies generally in actions for deprivation of civil rights when issues have been decided adversely in state criminal trial. Smith v. Marchewka, N.D.N.Y.1981, 519 F.Supp. 897. Judgment 828.8

While, in some situations, issues raised in state criminal prosecutions may not be relitigated in federal action brought under this section, if reasonable doubt as to applicability of estoppel exists, it must be resolved against precluding litigation of the issue. Clark v. Lutcher, M.D.Pa.1977, 436 F.Supp. 1266. Judgment 828.8

Collateral estoppel applies in a civil rights action where issue preclusion is based upon a prior state criminal judgment. Pyles v. Keane, S.D.N.Y.1976, 418 F.Supp. 269. Judgment 828.8

Supreme Court's Heck v. Humphrey decision, precluding collateral attacks on convictions or sentences, did not apply to § 1983 suit challenging parole revocation, made after claimant's sentence expired. Hernandez v. Wells, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22771982, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

5206. ---- Preliminary hearings, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Judge's finding at preliminary hearing that there was probable cause to bind an accused over to grand jury for indictment did not collaterally estop accused from subsequently suing arresting officer under this section for false arrest, because civil rights suit did not attack sufficiency of evidence to bind defendant over but, rather, charged that arresting officer's bad faith vitiated the finding, because accused's decision not to raise alibi defense at preliminary hearing did not amount to a waiver of the defense, and because judge at preliminary hearing had no occasion to consider accused's alibi or quality of arresting officer's investigations and reports. Whitley v. Seibel, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1982, 676 F.2d 245, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 254, 459 U.S. 942, 74 L.Ed.2d 198. Judgment 828.8

Section 1983 plaintiff was collaterally estopped from arguing that she was arrested without probable cause; at preliminary examination in underlying drug case, plaintiff contested issue of probable cause, plaintiff was represented by counsel who cross-examined witnesses produced by prosecution, and court found probable cause to believe that felony had been committed and that plaintiff committed it. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

5207. ---- Suppression hearings, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Under Illinois law, plaintiff was not collaterally estopped from relitigating in her §§ 1983 action whether her confession was Miranda-infirm or involuntary because state court had determined, at a suppression hearing in prior criminal action, that her confession was voluntary; it would be unfair to hold plaintiff to the unappealable judgment of a court that used unsound reasoning to resolve credibility. Sornberger v. City of Knoxville, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 434 F.3d 1006. Judgment 828.8

State court's finding, in suppression hearing, that police officer's false statement, in application for warrant to search home, that officer had met with informant, was not material, did not collaterally estop homeowner from claiming that false statement was material in § 1983 action against officer; prior ruling was not final and homeowner could not have obtained review of decision to suppress evidence from search. Lombardi v. City of El Cajon, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1117. Judgment 828.8

Under New York law, arrestee's cause of action against arresting officers under § 1983 for false arrest and malicious imprisonment was not precluded by doctrine of collateral estoppel, where arrestee was acquitted of charge on which he had been arrested, despite litigation of issue of probable cause for arrest in pretrial suppression hearing; before jury's verdict, any appeal of state court's ruling of probable cause would have been premature, issue was moot after final judgment was entered, and arrestee thus had no opportunity to appeal adverse finding of probable cause. Johnson v. Watkins, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 101 F.3d 792. Judgment 828.8

Collateral estoppel barred inmate's § 1983 excessive force claim against deputies, that issue having been tried at suppression hearing in state circuit court; subject of state hearing was whether defendant had been beaten, state trial judge, in denying motion to suppress, necessarily found that inmate's confession was not coerced, and West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals affirmed that ruling. Gray v. Farley, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1993, 13 F.3d 142. Judgment 828.8

Finding at suppression hearing that there was probable cause for arrest barred, under Illinois law on offensive use of collateral estoppel, litigation concerning legality of arrest that was being challenged in § 1983 action for unlawful arrest and malicious prosecution. Arnold v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1991, 776 F.Supp. 1259. Judgment 648

A decision rendered on a suppression motion, followed by conviction on the relevant criminal charges, is a "final judgment" for purposes of collateral estoppel. Rodriguez v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1976, 423 F.Supp. 906. Judgment 650

5208. ---- Admissibility of evidence, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Where issue whether defendant was denied constitutional rights during course of his criminal trial in state court by reason of admission of certain identification testimony was fully litigated in the course of criminal trial and subsequent appellate review and where state court judgment of conviction stood unreversed and unvacated, doctrine of collateral estoppel foreclosed subsequent civil rights action for damages and injunctive relief for alleged denial of constitutional rights during criminal trial arising out of admission of such evidence. Rimmer v. Fayetteville Police Dept., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1977, 567 F.2d 273. Judgment 828.8

Action of court in suppressing evidence relating to whether or not plaintiff had voluntarily submitted to a breathalyzer test following his arrest for driving under the influence of liquor was at most a matter of doubtful relevance to the issues presented in plaintiff's subsequent action against police officers under this section to recover damages for beatings allegedly administered to him by officers in station, and action of court in criminal action did not collaterally estop plaintiff from bringing subsequent action for damages. Collum v. Butler, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1970, 421 F.2d 1257. Judgment 🔑 648

Claimant's drunk driving conviction in state court collaterally estopped him from bringing § 1983 claim in federal court based on improper administration of breathalyzer test and on allegation that arresting officer had violated his constitutional rights by administering breath test; state court necessarily determined, in denying claimant's suppression motion, that claimant had voluntarily taken breath test. Grochowski v. Com. of Va., W.D.Va.1990, 741 F.Supp. 1230, affirmed 928 F.2d 399, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 176, 502 U.S. 859, 116 L.Ed.2d 139. Judgment 🔑 828.8

5209. ---- Confessions, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Previous state trial court's determination, during suppression hearing before state court murder trial, that defendant's confession had not been obtained by use of illegal force, would not collaterally estop defendant's civil rights suit against police officers involved in interrogation; defendant might have cause of action for excessive force under Fourth Amendment as result of his illegal arrest, and lower court's ruling merely determined there was no violation of defendant's Fifth Amendment rights. Thomas v. Riddle, N.D.Ill.1987, 673 F.Supp. 262. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Under Missouri law of collateral estoppel, ruling by state court in criminal prosecution of defendant that defendant's incriminating statements were not coerced by police violence and that victim's identification of defendant was not improperly induced by police officer's hypnosis of victim precluded defendant from maintaining § 1983 suit against two officers alleging false arrest and beatings incident to defendant's confession and against one officer alleging that officer improperly obtained victim's identification testimony; however, defendant was not estopped from maintaining § 1983 claim that two officers used excessive force at time of arrest. Conley v. Whitener, E.D.Mo.1985, 617 F.Supp. 86. Judgment 🔑 828.8

State court's determination in prior criminal action that inmate's confession was not product of coercion during interrogation was implicit rejection of inmate's allegation that detective intimidated him by displaying gun and by refusing to permit him to phone his wife, and therefore, inasmuch as state court also expressly found that inmate was never told that he would not need a lawyer, inmate's claims of violations of rights under this section arising from threats made during interrogation were barred by collateral estoppel. Langert v. Festa, E.D.N.Y.1983, 563 F.Supp. 692. Judgment 🔑 828.8

State prisoner's claims against city detective for alleged violation of constitutional rights in course of arrest and interrogation were precluded under the doctrine of collateral estoppel by decision in pretrial suppression hearing in which state court held that defendant's confessions were validly obtained. Rodriguez v. Beame, S.D.N.Y.1976, 423 F.Supp. 906. Judgment 🔑 648

Determination of administrative law judge, that arrestee had assaulted police officer in course of arrest, made during parole revocation hearing, did not have collateral estoppel effect in arrestee's § 1983 action against officers for deprivation of federally protected rights; at time of revocation hearing, arrestee and judge did not know that one of two testifying officers had previously falsified incident reports. Hernandez v. Wells, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22771982, Unreported. Pardon And Parole 🔑 91

5210. ---- Excessive force, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Though woman who had been shot by law enforcement officers after allegedly throwing knife at officer engaged in altercation with her brother was not collaterally estopped from bringing § 1983 action against officers, for their alleged unlawful use of excessive force, merely because she had previously been convicted of attempted murder based on this same incident, preclusive effect of criminal conviction operated to limit what facts could be found by jury for qualified immunity purposes, and barred woman from denying that she had thrown knife at officer, just before she was shot, in an attempt to kill him. Willingham v. Loughnan, C.A.11 (Fla.) 2001, 261 F.3d 1178, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 32 Fed.Appx. 536, 2002 WL 370031, vacated 123 S.Ct. 68, 537 U.S. 801, 154 L.Ed.2d 2, on remand 321 F.3d 1299. Judgment 648

Fact that arrestee was later convicted in state court did not have collateral estoppel affect on arrestee's § 1983 action against arresting officer for use of excessive force; while arrestee admittedly was wrong in resisting arrest she did not seek to recover for that wrong but instead sought to recover for use of excessive force. Kane v. Hargis, C.A.4 (Va.) 1993, 987 F.2d 1005. Judgment 828.8

House occupant's conviction for culpable negligence, arising out of gunfight with police which he started by firing six shots through closed front door as police approached, did not constitute collateral estoppel bar under Florida law to occupant's § 1983 action alleging excessive force by police; police's subsequent conduct in response to initial shots, which was issue in § 1983 action, was not critical element of judgment in earlier case, as jury in that case did not have to consider whether police response was excessive in order to find occupant culpably negligent. Vazquez v. Metropolitan Dade County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 968 F.2d 1101. Judgment 828.8

Arrestees were not collaterally estopped from suing arresting officers under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 based on alleged use of excessive force during arrest, even though Colorado court that conducted criminal trial arising from arrest ruled that officers had reasonable suspicion to stop and probable cause to arrest arrestees; whether officers had reasonable suspicion to stop arrestees was not in dispute, whether officers had probable cause to arrest arrestees would not preclude litigation of critical issue of unreasonable excessive force, and arrestees did not have full and fair opportunity in prior proceeding to litigate issue of probable cause to arrest. Dixon v. Richer, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1456, rehearing denied. Judgment 828.8

Where records of conviction of plaintiff for battery and resisting arrest were not authenticated by any proper person and police reports concerning defendants' conduct were unsupported by affidavits, it was error to rely on reports and records in applying doctrine of collateral estoppel to preclude plaintiff from raising in subsequent civil rights action against arresting officers issues of use of excessive force in effecting arrest, justification for attack on officer at station house and plaintiff's illegal detention. Williams v. Liberty, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 461 F.2d 325. Evidence 366(2); Evidence 366(3)

State court conviction of county jail inmate, for assaulting corrections officer, did not have collateral estoppel effect barring inmate's §§ 1983 suit alleging excessive force in violation of Eighth Amendment, arising out of same cell search incident; excessive force issue was neither relevant nor raised in criminal action. Jeanty v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2005, 379 F.Supp.2d 533. Judgment 828.20(1)

Fact that arrestee received criminal conviction in New York state court for resisting arrest meant that force used to apprehend him was presumptively valid, and thus, under New York law, he was collaterally estopped from pursuing federal § 1983 claim alleging that arresting officer used excessive force in effecting the arrest. Caridi v. Forte, S.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 97. Judgment 828.8

Section 1983 plaintiff who was convicted in underlying drug case was not collaterally estopped from claiming excessive force in arrest, where jurors in underlying case never made finding with respect to issue of excessive force; jurors could have disbelieved officers' denials of delivering blows to plaintiff in her vaginal area but still found that officers did not fabricate evidence and returned guilty verdict on drug charges. White v. Tamlyn, E.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1047. Judgment 828.16(4)

New York conviction for resisting arrest by kicking state trooper did not collaterally estop litigation of issues whether trooper used excessive force, assaulted arrestee, or was negligent toward him after he kicked trooper, even though trooper contended that events before and after the kick constituted a single occurrence. Pastre v. Weber,

S.D.N.Y.1988, 717 F.Supp. 987. Judgment 828.8

Arrestee's guilty plea to state law obstruction of justice charge did not collaterally estop him from contending in his §§ 1983 action against police officer who shot him during his arrest that he was not running toward officer at time he was shot. Few v. Cobb County, Georgia, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 69, 2005 WL 2030722, Unreported. Judgment 828.8

Inmate was collaterally estopped, in his § 1983 action, from relitigating issue of whether officers used unreasonable force in arresting him, even though inmate's conviction under California law for making false allegations against the defendants was reversed on ground that statute was unconstitutional; jury's finding in state criminal action, that inmate's claim of unreasonable force was false, remained presumptively conclusive. Sogbandi v. Markham, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31855299, Unreported. Judgment 828.8

5211. ---- Obscenity, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Petitioner who had been convicted in state court of obscenity with respect to certain exhibits was collaterally estopped, in federal court action under this section from litigating obscenity of exhibits. Pinkus v. Arnebergh, C.D.Cal.1966, 258 F.Supp. 996. Judgment 828.8

5212. ---- Perjury or false statements, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Civil rights plaintiff alleging that defendant police officers suborned perjury in state criminal proceedings against the present plaintiff was collaterally estopped from relitigating claims already decided on denial of motion to dismiss indictment in state court. Stokes v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1990, 744 F.Supp. 183. Judgment 828.8

Murder conviction collaterally estopped plaintiff from maintaining civil rights action in which he claimed that autopsy report had been falsified and that alleged victim died natural death; cause of death was necessarily decided by conviction. Green v. City of New York Medical Examiner's Office, S.D.N.Y.1989, 723 F.Supp. 973. Judgment 828.8

5213. ---- Pleas, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

State prisoner, who alleged that police officers used excessive force in effectuating his lawful arrest, stated valid cause of action under this section and fact that he pleaded guilty to offense charged did not estop him from raising such claim. Courtney v. Reeves, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 635 F.2d 326. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Prisoner's plea of guilty to selling heroin admitted element of making a "sale," as against prisoner's contention that he engaged in transaction in belief he was assisting state agents in their investigation of a supplier, and subsequent civil rights action for damages against district attorney and state agents based on allegations of police conduct akin to entrapment was barred by collateral estoppel, particularly in view of prisoner's option of removing bar imposed by the guilty plea through a habeas corpus petition. Brazzell v. Adams, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 493 F.2d 489. Judgment 559

Adverse ruling on merits in state postconviction proceedings of claim that prosecutors breached plea agreement presented collateral estoppel bar to relitigation of identical issue in federal civil rights suit. Buhrman v. Wilkinson, S.D.Ohio 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1110, supplemented 2004 WL 2044055, report and recommendation adopted 2004 WL 2044056. Judgment 648

County corrections officers who pleaded guilty to conspiring to deprive, and depriving, inmate of his right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment resulting in bodily injury and death were collaterally estopped from disputing their § 1983 liability for conspiracy to violate inmate's Eighth Amendment rights. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Judgment 🔑 648

Defendant's conviction pursuant to guilty plea to drug charges operated as complete defense to defendant's later § 1983 action alleging that arrest which led to charges was made without probable cause. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 890. Civil Rights 🔑 1088(4)

Defendant's conviction following guilty plea on drug charges relating to purported drug sale operated to bar defendant's § 1983 action against police officer based on allegedly improper arrest which gave rise to charges; in order to prevail on § 1983 claim, defendant would be required to prove unlawfulness of his conviction, which would be impermissible collateral attack on conviction due to defendant's failure to place any evidence before court that guilty plea to drug charge had been reversed or otherwise called into question. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 890. Civil Rights 🔑 1088(4)

Under Colorado law of collateral estoppel, civil rights plaintiff's prior state criminal proceeding in which he entered Alford plea did not bar his § 1983 Fourth Amendment based claims for unlawful arrest and illegal search and seizure; propriety of authorities' actions was never actually litigated in state criminal proceeding, issue of whether authorities' conduct violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights was not necessarily determined in criminal proceeding, and propriety of authorities' conduct was not essential to trial court's acceptance of plaintiff's plea. Cortese v. Black, D.Colo.1993, 838 F.Supp. 485. Judgment 🔑 828.8; Judgment 🔑 828.16(1)

Dismissal of escape charge pursuant to guilty plea "estopped" arrestee from claiming in subsequent civil rights action premised upon false arrest that police officer lacked probable cause. Jones v. Village of Villa Park, N.D.Ill.1993, 815 F.Supp. 249. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Under Ohio law, party's plea of guilty to underlying criminal charges did not estop him from asserting, in subsequent civil rights action, that arresting officer's conduct deprived him of constitutional rights; propriety of officer's actions was never "actually litigated" in criminal proceeding, and would not have been "necessarily determined" in such proceeding. Eyer v. City of Reynoldsburg, S.D.Ohio 1991, 756 F.Supp. 344. Judgment🔑 828.8

5214. ---- Searches and seizures, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Under Ohio law, prior suppression order in Ohio state court criminal proceeding against son of automobile owner, determining that search of the automobile violated the Fourth Amendment, did not bar, under doctrine of issue preclusion, subsequent consideration in federal court of issue of whether search of automobile violated automobile owner's Fourth Amendment rights, for purpose of owner's §§ 1983 action against law enforcement officers; a judgment in a criminal proceeding did not have collateral estoppel effect in civil action, and none of the parties in the prior state court criminal proceeding were parties to the subsequent §§ 1983 action. Knott v. Sullivan, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 418 F.3d 561. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Where questions concerning legality of plaintiff's arrest and subsequent search of his vehicle were never considered on their merits at plaintiff's criminal trial and, again, in a later, unsuccessful federal habeas corpus proceeding, plaintiff was not collaterally estopped from raising them in his subsequent civil rights action, though summary dismissal of arrest and automobile claims was proper, where photographic identification furnished probable cause for arrest, and seizure of articles, being in "plain view," was justified. Jackson v. Official Representatives and Emp. of Los Angeles Police Dept. In and For Los Angeles County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 487 F.2d 885. Judgment 🔑 648

Motorist's state court misdemeanor conviction for running stop sign did not bar, under Heck v. Humphrey, motorist's §§ 1983 action against police officers who made stop, where motorist's federal claims were predicated on unreasonable stop, unreasonable detention, and unreasonable search, motorist was no longer in custody when he filed suit, and misdemeanor conviction was not necessarily binding under state law in subsequent civil action. Cole v. Doe 1 thru 2 Officers of City of Emeryville Police Dept., N.D.Cal.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 1084. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Under Missouri law, doctrine of collateral estoppel did not preclude arrestee from challenging legality of search and seizure by bringing § 1983 action, even though arrestee had pleaded guilty in state court to offenses for which he was arrested; constitutionality of search and seizure was neither raised nor litigated in state proceeding, and there was no indication that arrestee had a full and fair opportunity to litigate issue in state court proceeding or that arrestee made any concession with respect to his constitutional claims. Rice v. Barnes, W.D.Mo.1997, 966 F.Supp. 877. Judgment 828.8

Finding of Fourth Amendment violation in criminal case could not be used to collaterally estop individual law enforcement officers from defending Bivens and § 1983 claims against them concerning their execution of in rem seizure warrant and subsequent search of property, absent privity between individual officers and assistant United States attorney who prosecuted criminal case, and absent identity of issues in both cases; officers had no control over how criminal case was handled and no ability to appeal decision, and homeowners had burden in civil case to prove violation of their Fourth Amendment rights and that officers were not entitled to qualified immunity. Trujillo v. Simer, D.Colo.1996, 934 F.Supp. 1217. Judgment 648

Under California law of collateral estoppel, state prisoner could not relitigate in § 1983 suit in federal court constitutional claim of unlawful search previously decided against him by California court in criminal proceeding; prisoner had motivation to fully litigate Fourth Amendment issue in his criminal trial because he was charged with four separate felony counts, prisoner received a full and fair trial, claim that police officers lacked probable cause to search motel room was identical to issue of legality of search raised in motion to suppress, and privity existed. Lato v. Sieverman, C.D.Cal.1996, 919 F.Supp. 336. Judgment 828.8

Defendant who pleaded guilty in state court to drug charge was collaterally estopped from challenging his arrest and subsequent search and seizure in civil rights action where defendant did not argue that his plea of guilty was unknowing or involuntary, court at pleading explained to defendant options as well as rights he waived by pleading guilty, defendant at pleading told court that he accepted prosecutor's story of crime and that he apologized for mistake he committed, and defendant at no time denied his guilt. Tenorio v. Murphy, E.D.N.Y.1994, 866 F.Supp. 92. Judgment 828.8

State court conviction for illegal weapons possession would collaterally estop claim for unlawful arrest by arrestee under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, the civil rights statute, if arrestee had been charged with illegal weapons possession at time of his arrest. Camarano v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1986, 624 F.Supp. 1144. Judgment 828.8

Where issue of unlawful search and seizure of nude photos from inmate's wife had been decided in state courts, there could be no action for deprivation of civil rights in federal court based on same issue. Smith v. Marchewka, N.D.N.Y.1981, 519 F.Supp. 897. Judgment 828.8

5215. ---- Self-incrimination, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Nursing home operators who were unsuccessful in attempting to have state court quash subpoena for nursing home records were collaterally estopped from relitigating issue of self-incrimination in connection with action brought in federal court to enjoin enforcement of subpoena because of alleged violation of civil rights. Sreter v. Hynes, E.D.N.Y.1976, 419 F.Supp. 546. Judgment 828.20(1)

5216. ---- Probable cause, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Under Vermont law, judge's inscription on information in prosecution for driving while intoxicated (DWI), stating finding of probable cause for arrest, did not have preclusive effect as to issue of existence of probable cause, and thus could not collaterally estop arrestee's subsequent § 1983 false arrest claim against arresting officer; finding was not final judgment but was open to challenge, arrestee ultimately pled to lesser charge of negligent operation rather than DWI, which did not require finding as to probable cause to arrest for DWI, and issue of probable cause to arrest for DWI was never litigated. Kent v. Katz, C.A.2 (Vt.) 2002, 312 F.3d 568. Judgment 🔑 648

Prisoner was not collaterally estopped from asserting a claim in a § 1983 action that he was deprived of his constitutional right to a prompt determination of probable cause even though he was convicted on the underlying charge since the issue was not actually litigated or decided during the state criminal proceeding. Webster v. Gibson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1990, 913 F.2d 510. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Finding by state judge at preliminary hearing that there was probable cause for arrestee's arrest did not bar, on collateral estoppel grounds, arrestee from pursuing his civil rights action against arresting officer, because a different more stringent standard of probable cause was applicable in criminal preliminary hearing than was applicable in civil rights action questioning resulting arrest and confinement. Whitley v. Seibel, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 613 F.2d 682. Judgment 🔑 648

State court determination, made in course of criminal prosecution, that there was probable cause to arrest was not collateral estoppel in subsequent action for damages against arresting officers under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4. Brubaker v. King, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1974, 505 F.2d 534. Judgment 🔑 828.16(1)

State criminal court's finding at conclusion of preliminary hearing, that probable cause existed to bind over defendants for trial for conspiracy to defraud, collaterally estopped defendants from litigating absence of probable cause in their subsequent §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim; issues were identical, issue was actually and necessarily litigated, finding became final when defendants' appeal of it was denied, and identity of parties/privity was satisfied even though one defendant's prosecution had been severed prior to preliminary hearing, since severed defendant conducted family business with other defendants and thus had commonality of interest as to probable cause determination. Ayala v. KC Environmental Health, E.D.Cal.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1070. Judgment🔑 828.12

State court's prior dismissal of loitering charge against suspect did not bar police officers and city, under doctrine of collateral estoppel, from asserting that officers had probable cause to arrest suspect for loitering, in suspect's § 1983 false arrest action against officers and city; although lack of probable cause was argued by suspect's counsel at motion to dismiss, judge failed to state the basis for dismissal, and criminal complaint did not contain all information known to officers at time of arrest. Hernandez v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 599. Judgment 🔑 828.8; Judgment 🔑 828.9(5)

Plaintiff was collaterally estopped from asserting § 1983 claim based on allegation that he was seized or arrested without probable cause, where trial judge in state proceedings altered earlier finding, cited by plaintiff, of improper arrest or seizure, defendant was convicted in those proceedings, and on appeal state court held that actions of officer were lawful and that officer had an articulable basis to stop and detain plaintiff based on his observations. Liner v. Ward, S.D.N.Y.1991, 754 F.Supp. 32. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Plaintiff's false arrest claim in his civil rights action was foreclosed by doctrine of issue preclusion on the basis of prior state court criminal proceedings in which he was convicted of illegal possession or transportation of alcohol and driving while intoxicated, in light of acknowledgment that state judge found his arrest was supported by probable cause, and this necessarily prevented assertion of any federal civil rights claim based on false arrest, including conspiracy, coverup and negligence in connection with that arrest. Spallone v. Village of Roselle, N.D.Ill.1984, 584 F.Supp. 1387. Judgment 🔑 828.8

Doctrine of issue preclusion, or collateral estoppel, was unavailable as a defense in civil rights action in the nature of common law tort actions of false arrest and false imprisonment where issue of probable cause which plaintiffs sought to litigate was not determined in, and was not necessary to the judgment in, the state criminal court proceeding, in which the present plaintiffs pleaded guilty. Pouncey v. Ryan, D.C.Conn.1975, 396 F.Supp. 126. Judgment 828.16(4)

5217. ---- Summary procedure, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Under Vermont law, initiation of summary procedure for civil suspension of driver's license of drunk driving arrestee did not have preclusive effect as to issue of existence of probable cause, and thus could not collaterally estop arrestee's subsequent § 1983 false arrest claim against arresting officer; proceeding was not criminal prosecution, and did not require officer to show probable cause. Kent v. Katz, C.A.2 (Vt.) 2002, 312 F.3d 568. Automobiles 144.2(1)

5218. ---- Conviction, criminal proceedings, collateral estoppel

Tavern owner's Fourth Amendment unreasonable search claim would not render his state court misdemeanor conviction for setting up illegal gaming machines invalid, and thus, his §§ 1983 Fourth Amendment claim against village and police chief, was not barred, under Heck v. Humphrey; although tavern owner's original felony commercial gambling conviction reversed on appeal, he pled guilty to the misdemeanor offense. Kramer v. Village of North Fond du Lac, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 384 F.3d 856. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Even when state prisoner does not seek damages under § 1983, his suit may be barred under Heck v. Humphrey if he must negate an element of the offense of which he has been convicted in order to prevail, or if he contends that the statute under which he was convicted is unconstitutional. Hughes v. Lott, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 350 F.3d 1157. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Plaintiff was collaterally estopped from relitigating facts undergirding his claims against parish sheriff, deputies and several insurers that his arrest, prosecution, conviction and detention were accomplished in violation of the Constitution so long as his state court conviction, based on the same facts, was still valid. Martin v. Delcambre, C.A.5 (La.) 1978, 578 F.2d 1164. Judgment 828.8

Mayor's federal criminal conviction for two counts of acting under color of law to deprive minor of constitutional right to be free from unwanted sexual abuse did not have collateral estoppel effect, in two minors' §§ 1983 action against mayor in his individual capacity, where jury had been instructed in criminal action that it could convict mayor if it found each element of the offense with respect to either of the two victims; jury did not necessarily find each element of the offense was established as to both victims or as to one victim. Doe v. City of Waterbury, D.Conn.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 537. Judgment 648

Favorable termination rule, under which state prisoner generally may not assert §§ 1983 claim that implicates constitutionality of conviction or sentence, did not preclude inmate's §§ 1983 claims alleged under First, Fifth, Eighth, and Thirteenth Amendments, where most of the alleged acts occurred well after the inmate's more recent conviction and went to constitutionality of circumstances surrounding inmate's civil commitment, not his criminal convictions. Yoder v. Ryan, N.D.Ill.2004, 318 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1088(5)

Court, in determining the applicability of a collateral bar on federal civil rights claim based on state criminal proceeding, must look beyond the mere presence of a conviction by verdict or guilty plea and assess whether there is identity of the issue that has necessarily been decided in the prior action; the operation of issue preclusion in federal civil rights actions is narrowly limited. Wallace v. Roche, E.D.N.Y.1996, 921 F.Supp. 946. Judgment 559; Judgment 725(1)

State court criminal conviction which by definition involved litigation and adverse resolution of any allegation in defendant's subsequent civil rights action that there was conspiracy to prosecute him in violation of his constitutional rights precluded him from raising the alleged constitutional deprivations in such civil rights suit. Von Lusch v. C & P Tel. Co., D.C.Md.1978, 457 F.Supp. 814. Judgment 828.8

A state criminal conviction will estop a defendant who is a subsequent plaintiff in a civil rights action from litigating in that action issues which were necessarily resolved against him in prior criminal proceeding. Zurek v. Woodbury, N.D.Ill.1978, 446 F.Supp. 1149. Judgment 828.8

So long as plaintiff's conviction was not vacated, corrected or amended, bar of collateral estoppel applied to any civil rights action brought by plaintiff against law enforcement officers based on allegations of violations of plaintiff's constitutional rights, which grounds had already been adjudicated adversely to plaintiff in criminal proceedings. Smith v. Sinclair, W.D.Okla.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1108. Judgment 648

Arrestee's guilty-plea conviction to a later-charged offense of being a felon in possession of a firearm was not a complete defense to his §§ 1983 action in which he sought damages for mental anguish and for alleged unlawful search, arrest on a federal probation revocation, and detention; defendant alleged he was arrested after officers had illegally entered his home, and he was not collaterally estopped from bringing action, as record did not reflect whether issues regarding arrest were actually litigated during criminal proceeding. Thurmond-Green v. Hodges, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 551, 2005 WL 775387, Unreported. Civil Rights 1369

State prisoner was precluded from litigating his claims of trial error that allegedly occurred during state murder prosecution, including insufficiency of the evidence to support conviction, in § 1983 due process action against prison corrections officers. Encarnacion v. Dann, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 80 Fed.Appx. 140, 2003 WL 22533188, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Suit attacking constitutionality of city ordinance under which owner and operator of adult entertainment establishment was convicted and fined was not improper collateral attack on conviction under Heck doctrine, which provides that damages may not recovered for allegedly unconstitutional conviction absent reversal of conviction or other indication of invalidity, as rule was inapplicable to persons who were not in custody and therefore could not invoke habeas corpus jurisdiction. Ways v. City of Lincoln, D.Neb.2002, 2002 WL 1742664, Unreported, affirmed 331 F.3d 596. Civil Rights 1088(5)

5219. Habeas corpus, collateral estoppel

The Stone v. Powell decision, i.e., preclusion of search and seizure issue on federal habeas petition where state court accorded petitioner a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue, did not furnish a logical doctrinal source for ruling that unavailability of federal habeas corpus prevented defendant police officers from raising state criminal courts' partial rejection of plaintiff's Fourth Amendment claim as a collateral estoppel defense to civil rights damage suit brought against the officers based on the same search and seizure. Allen v. McCurry, U.S.Mo.1980, 101 S.Ct. 411, 449 U.S. 90, 66 L.Ed.2d 308, on remand 647 F.2d 167. Courts 90(1)

Original ruling of district court on accused's habeas petition, that government's failure to disclose that state law enforcement officers had been compensated for their efforts in investigation was harmless error, did not collaterally estop accused from bringing civil rights action against state and federal officers for violating his civil rights, and thus did not excuse accused's failure to commence civil rights action in timely manner; if individual officers violated accused's constitutional rights under color of state or federal law, accused's civil rights claim would not be totally defeated even if their misconduct was harmless in his criminal trial, and, in any event, accused could have filed civil rights action within limitations period and then requested stay of action pending outcome of habeas petition. Bagley v. CMC Real Estate Corp., C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 923 F.2d 758, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1161, 502 U.S. 1091, 117 L.Ed.2d 409. Habeas Corpus 901

Where claim of prosecutorial misconduct was tried and rejected in state habeas corpus proceeding, doctrine of collateral estoppel precluded reconsideration of such issue in federal civil rights action even though federal habeas corpus relief was not available. Sperl v. Deukmejian, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1981, 642 F.2d 1154. Habeas Corpus 901

Decision denying inmate's petition for habeas corpus did not collaterally estop inmate from bringing § 1983 action against trooper with respect to issues relating to trooper's alleged no knock entry into inmate's apartment and the scope of the search because habeas judge did not make final decision regarding these issues. Rosario v. Brooks, D.Mass.1995, 877 F.Supp. 765. Habeas Corpus 901

5241. Discovery and inspection--Generally

Discovery regarding merits of civil rights case was required to be stayed pending resolution of police officers' appeal from denial of qualified immunity. Hegarty v. Somerset County, C.A.1 (Me.) 1994, 25 F.3d 17. Federal Civil Procedure 2553

In any civil rights case, it is essential that the plaintiff be given every reasonable opportunity to develop and fashion a remedy for any grievance he may legitimately harbor; on the other hand, it is also important to prevent the court's processes, especially expensive and burdensome discovery proceedings, from being employed to harass defendants for imaginary grievances. Edwards v. Columbia University, S.D.N.Y.1979, 479 F.Supp. 983. Civil Rights 1303

Only strong public policies should be permitted to prevent disclosure, particularly in civil rights cases, where enforcement of statute is placed solely in hands of individual citizens acting in capacity of private attorneys-general. Gaison v. Scott, D.C.Hawai'i 1973, 59 F.R.D. 347. Federal Civil Procedure 1600(1)

5242. ---- Custom or usage, discovery and inspection, evidence and witnesses

It is not appropriate to require civil rights plaintiffs before commencing suit to obtain detailed information regarding pattern or custom of inadequate supervision by government officials. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1352(1)

5243. ---- Immunity, discovery and inspection, evidence and witnesses

Qualified immunity means more than just immunity from liability in civil rights suit, but also immunity from burdens of defending suit, including burdens of pretrial discovery, and thus courts have obligation to carefully scrutinize plaintiff's claim before subjecting public officials to burdens of broad reaching discovery, and failure to do so is immediately appealable. Wicks v. Mississippi State Employment Services, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1995, 41 F.3d 991, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2555, 515 U.S. 1131, 132 L.Ed.2d 809. Civil Rights 1376(1); Federal Civil Procedure 1266; Federal Courts 579

When a plaintiff's pleadings in a § 1983 action assert facts which, if proven, would defeat a qualified immunity defense, limited discovery may be permitted tailored to issue of qualified immunity. Geter v. Fortenberry, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 849 F.2d 1550. Federal Civil Procedure 1825

Police officers' personnel files, documents regarding complaints against them, and information regarding training they received were not proper subjects for discovery from them once qualified immunity issue had been raised in arrestee's action for false arrest and excessive force; however, the information was discoverable with regard to §§ 1983 claim against police department, city and county, and since those defendants were more appropriate sources for the information, and institutional defendants were not entitled to stay of discovery, court would direct them to respond to requests as if they had been served directly. Rome v. Romero, D.Colo.2004, 225 F.R.D. 640. Federal Civil Procedure 1553

Documents in the possession of individual police officer defendants concerning the series of incidents described in arrestee's complaint for false arrest and excessive force were independently discoverable, notwithstanding their claim of qualified immunity, because the request related directly to the specific conduct underlying the claims and the defense of immunity; since the parties had offered differing versions of the underlying incident, limited discovery regarding the actual conduct was appropriate. Rome v. Romero, D.Colo.2004, 225 F.R.D. 640. Federal Civil Procedure 1553

5244. ---- State action, discovery and inspection, evidence and witnesses

Though allegations of complaint, even if accepted as true, were insufficient to establish that state had directly involved itself with alleged discriminatory acts or that there was a "symbiotic relationship" between state and employer, where plaintiff alleged in complaint that discovery would disclose other facets of intricate relationship between state and employer, plaintiff would be allowed a limited amount of time for discovery of other possible grounds for state action within this subchapter governing deprivation of civil rights. Milner v. National School of Health Technology, E.D.Pa.1976, 409 F.Supp. 1389. Federal Civil Procedure 1271

Deliberative process privilege did not protect pre-decisional deliberations of board of education to terminate employee who worked on board as HVAC supervisor; employee alleged that he was terminated in violation of § 1983 because he failed to participate in illegal bidding scheme for heating conversion project and because he attempted to unearth scheme, inquiry into board members' pre-decisional mental impressions and discussions was necessary to employee's challenge to board's purported reason for terminating him, and board's decision to terminate employee was routine operating decision rather than public policy. Scott v. Board of Educ. of City of East Orange, D.N.J.2004, 219 F.R.D. 333. Witnesses 216(1)

Where allegations in complaint were sufficient to preclude dismissal of civil rights action on theory that there was no state action, court would allow discovery to proceed on the state action issue and would then hold an evidentiary hearing. Presseisen v. Swarthmore College, E.D.Pa.1976, 71 F.R.D. 34.

5245. ---- Miscellaneous discovery and inspection, evidence and witnesses

Trial court's grant of summary judgment to correction officers without first allowing any discovery was not a grounds for vacatur in inmate's § 1983 action alleging that imposition and enforcement of deprivation order violated his Eighth Amendment rights, although it may have been preferable to allow limited discovery, where the inmate was afforded discovery, including deposition of the key defendants in a prior Article 78 state court proceeding, wherein inmate asserted that the corrections officers violated state law and federal constitutional law. Trammell v. Keane, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 338 F.3d 155. Federal Civil Procedure 2553

Nonmembers bringing § 1983 challenging union's calculation of "service fee" or "agency fee" charged to nonmembers for collective bargaining on their behalf were entitled to discover identification of people who had calculated fees and documents underlying calculations, notwithstanding that arbitrator decided in arbitration of same matter that fee was properly calculated. Bromley v. Michigan Educ. Association-NEA, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 82 F.3d 686, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 682, 519 U.S. 1055, 136 L.Ed.2d 607. Federal Civil Procedure 1275

Denial of prison inmate's discovery motions in suit alleging that inmate was forced to participate in mass tuberculosis experiment was not abuse of discretion given that inmate had not indicated what information he desired, did not state how he was deprived of information he needed, and defendants offered to produce documentation for inspection. Lee v. Armontrout, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 991 F.2d 487, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 209, 510 U.S. 875, 126 L.Ed.2d 166, rehearing denied 114 S.Ct. 462, 510 U.S. 973, 126 L.Ed.2d 394. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In former detainee's civil rights action against sheriff alleging failure to timely release from jail, sheriff's late disclosure of documents regarding jail's grievance procedure was justified, where detainee first raised issue of his complaints to jail personnel in opposition to sheriff's motion for summary judgment. Green v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 226 F.R.D. 624, clarified 2005 WL 283361. Federal Civil Procedure 1633

Citizen properly was required, in §§ 1983 lawsuit against police officers alleging violation of his constitutional rights during criminal investigation and prosecution of murder case, to answer contention interrogatory that requested all facts supporting his denial that police officers were not aware of any exculpatory evidence prior to citizen's murder conviction and that citizen reasonably should have been aware of exculpatory evidence prior to his conviction, since citizen was not required to disclose any privileged information, request was not asked early on in pretrial process, and citizen presumptively was in final stages of organizing and preparing his case for trial. Tennison v. City & County of San Francisco, N.D.Cal.2005, 226 F.R.D. 615. Federal Civil Procedure 1506

Magistrate judge's discovery order, which narrowed the arrestee's motion to compel defendants to answer interrogatories and to produce all documents concerning claims against defendants for overdetention in the last five years, and directed defendants to produce records and information concerning written claims, demands, and suits alleging overdetention, as well as back-up documentation supporting the overdetention statistics, was not vague, ambiguous or overbroad, in arrestee's § 1983 action against county sheriff, county, and others, alleging unlawful detention. Green v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2003, 219 F.R.D. 485. Federal Civil Procedure 1538; Federal Civil Procedure 1636.1

Fact that Evanston police department records were obtained by Chicago police officers after the close of discovery in arrestee's § 1983 action was not sufficient ground for excluding records which purportedly contained probative evidence of fact that injuries arrestee claimed to have suffered at hands of police officers were actually incurred during an earlier incident, particularly where material was provided to arrestee as soon as it was obtained and well in advance of the filing of a final pretrial order; it did not follow from fact that court had set date for close of discovery that all investigation into party's claims or defenses had to come to halt on that date. Charles v. Cotter, N.D.Ill.1994, 867 F.Supp. 648. Federal Civil Procedure 1551

Representative for estate of wife who was killed by husband following reported incidents of domestic violence was entitled to access, subject to appropriate protective order, to police records necessary to perform statistical study in support of his equal protection claim under § 1983, examining disparities in treatment of assault complaints based on gender of complainant and whether assault occurred in domestic context, because yearly summaries provided to representative by police did not contain information necessary to develop such statistical evidence. Cellini v. City of Sterling Heights, E.D.Mich.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1215. Federal Civil Procedure 1593

State act governing open public meetings did not protect from disclosure a city school board's pre-decisional deliberations that led to decision to terminate employee who served on board as HVAC supervisor and who brought § 1983 claims alleging that he was terminated in violation of his rights under First and Fourteenth Amendments for refusing to participate in allegedly illegal heating conversion bidding scheme; act enabled board as a public body to exclude the public from particular meetings, but had no effect on whether employee could access board's pre-decisional deliberations contributing to his termination. Scott v. Board of Educ. of City of East Orange, D.N.J.2004, 219 F.R.D. 333. Schools 57

Subject to prospective redaction and prospective protective order, arrestee bringing civil rights action against arresting officer, supervisors, and municipality was entitled to discovery of personnel files and internal affairs files of all police officers of the municipality, except that files of non-defendant officers containing no citizen complaint, internal investigation, or other record of disciplinary action need not be produced, where defendants merely made conclusory claims, unrelated to any particular piece or type of information, that discovery of personnel files would disseminate highly private information, threaten the safety of officers and their families, and harm investigative and citizen complaint candor. Floren v. Whittington, S.D.W.Va.2003, 217 F.R.D. 389. Federal Civil Procedure

Inmate alleging in § 1983 suit that prison officials interfered with his right to access courts and counsel was required, in response to interrogatory, to state which legal actions or proceedings, or potential proceedings, were affected by officials' alleged actions or inaction, how in fact officials' conduct adversely affected such legal matters, and status of such cases. Davidson v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2003, 215 F.R.D. 73, appeal denied 259 F.Supp.2d 238. Federal Civil Procedure 1502

Individual whose civil rights were allegedly violated by deputy sheriff was not entitled to discover deputy's personnel file to establish county's derivative liability in civil rights case until facts relevant to his allegations of direct wrongdoing were well enough developed to determine whether deputy was liable. Jackson v. County of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.1997, 175 F.R.D. 653. Federal Civil Procedure 1591

In former inmate's § 1983 excessive force action against prison officials, official was required to produce documents regarding his prior arrest for assault pursuant to inmate's discovery request, despite fact that assault charges were later dismissed due to official's good behavior for six months. Cox v. McClellan, W.D.N.Y.1997, 174 F.R.D. 32. Federal Civil Procedure 1581

For purposes of ruling on police officer's motion for summary judgment in arrestee's §§ 1983 action against officer alleging that officer used excessive force in shooting arrestee, arrestee's deposition testimony should not have been disregarded because it was inconsistent with his sworn statement to internal affairs officer who investigated shooting; arrestee offered an explanation for his prior inconsistent statement, creating an issue for factfinder as to truth of statement. Few v. Cobb County, Georgia, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2005, 147 Fed.Appx. 69, 2005 WL 2030722, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2541

Inmate was not entitled to more time to conduct discovery before court ruled on prison officials' summary judgment motion in § 1983 action, where he failed to demonstrate how more discovery would have helped him defeat motion for summary judgment, instead asserting generally that additional discovery was vital to presentation of his case. Green v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 103 Fed.Appx. 24, 2004 WL 1445831, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 927, 543 U.S. 1074, 160 L.Ed.2d 813. Federal Civil Procedure 2553

In § 1983 action alleging false arrest, malicious prosecution, and illegal search, denial of plaintiffs' motion for protective order, in their impending depositions, as to certain subjects, was not an abuse of discretion; subjects over which protection was sought included both the arrests and prosecutions that formed basis for plaintiffs' claims, and plaintiffs failed to establish that disclosure of the information would result in a clearly defined and very serious injury. Price v. Cochran, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 781, 2003 WL 21054706, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1361

In order for correction officers to preclude inmate from conducting discovery in § 1983 suit regarding complaints of excessive force made against officers by other inmates, officers had to agree not to dispute issue of intent, such that trial court would be justified in sustaining objection to any subsequent cross-examination or jury argument seeking to raise issue and in charging jury to resolve issue against officers. Sedney v. Hasse, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31108409, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 1272.1

Dismissal of inmate's § 1983 action for failure to comply with court's order to submit to deposition was not abuse of discretion, despite inmate's contentions that his medical condition prohibited him from sitting for lengthy deposition and that he was fearful of repercussions from answering questions, where inmate provided no medical support for his claim, inmate's public court filings contained allegations against corrections officials, and court warned inmate that failure to comply would result in dismissal. Torres v. Levesque, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2002, 52 Fed.Appx. 155, 2002 WL 31681879, Unreported, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 1941, 538 U.S. 1018, 155 L.Ed.2d 859. Federal Civil Procedure 1451

5246. Judicial notice, evidence and witnesses

In state prisoner's civil rights action, court could not take judicial notice of conditions of punitive segregation in state correctional institution. U.S. ex rel. Tyrrell v. Speaker, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1973, 471 F.2d 1197, on remand 394 F.Supp. 9. Evidence 23(1)

In action for damages under this section by former county jail inmate, based on jail policy prohibiting inmates from receiving books and magazines from outside jail, though it may have been improper to consider on motion to dismiss defendants' affidavit stating that such policy was predicated on state regulations, without giving plaintiff the opportunity to submit counteraffidavits, it was proper for the court to take judicial notice of such regulations. Christman v. Skinner, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1972, 468 F.2d 723. Evidence 47

5246A. In camera inspection

Declining to conduct in camera inspection of prisoners' parole files and statistics and documents from Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles, in §§ 1983 action, to determine whether Board applied de facto policy, requiring prisoners to serve a minimum of 90% of court-imposed term of incarceration before becoming eligible for an initial parole hearing, was not an abuse to discretion; prisoners' complete parole files were "confidential state secrets" under Georgia law, and prisoners failed to show how requested information would show that alleged policy was applied to them. Porter v. Ray, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 461 F.3d 1315. Witnesses 223

5247. Stipulations, evidence and witnesses

City police officers were not entitled to reformation of stipulation agreement upon which judgment order was based in judgment creditor's action under this section to include reference that judgment creditor agreed to proceed exclusively against the city under the police officers' indemnity statute, Ill.S.H.A. ch. 24, ¶1-4-5, and collect the judgment from the city's tort judgment fund where affidavits filed by police officers failed to establish that parties intended that exclusive means of collection would be through the judgment fund, and modification of stipulation was onerous on judgment creditor in that there was at least four-year deferral of collection against city's tort judgment fund, while interest accrued only at rate substantially below current market. Balark v. Curtin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 655 F.2d 798. Reformation Of Instruments 2

Under Kansas law, arrestee's pretrial diversion agreement barred his § 1983 action against law enforcement officers for unlawful seizure or arrest; through diversion agreement, arrestee in effect stipulated that officer had reason and cause to apprehend him. Swanson v. Fields, D.Kan.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1007, affirmed 13 F.3d 407. Civil Rights 1088(4)

5248. Inferences, evidence and witnesses--Generally

Fact that state officials were informed by defendants as to the time and place of plaintiff's arrival in the state or were given proof of his identity in order that they might arrest him pursuant to lawfully issued warrant was insufficient to raise inference of purposeful participation by members of sheriff's department to assist the defendants in enticing the plaintiff into the state so that he could be arrested and thus did not provide basis for claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Singer v. Bell, S.D.N.Y.1985, 613 F.Supp. 198. Civil Rights 1088(4)

5249. ---- Custom or usage, inferences, evidence and witnesses

Constructive knowledge of existence of custom justifying recovery against municipality under § 1983 may be inferred from widespread extent of municipality's practices, general knowledge of their existence, manifest opportunities and official duty of responsible policymakers to be informed, or combinations of these. Cox v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 821 F.Supp. 1, as amended, affirmed 40 F.3d 475, 309 U.S.App.D.C. 219.

Civil Rights 1401

In action against city under 1871 civil rights statute, policy or practice on the part of city could not be inferred from one incident, i.e., the incident in which plaintiff was involved. Arancibia v. Berry, S.D.N.Y.1985, 603 F.Supp. 931 . Civil Rights 1401

5250. ---- Deliberate indifference, inferences, evidence and witnesses

School district could be liable on student's §§ 1983 claim alleging that school district was deliberately indifferent to his physical and emotional integrity by repeatedly failing to take remedial action to prevent teacher's sexual molestation of young male students only if the evidence showed that the need to act was so obvious that the school district's failure to act could be said to amount to an official policy of inaction. Williams ex rel. Hart v. Paint Valley Local School Dist., C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 400 F.3d 360. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Evidence in § 1983 action for violation of rights of pretrial detainee who committed suicide in jail made question for jury whether city violated detainee's rights through deliberately indifferent failure to train officers responsible for intoxicated detainees in suicide detection and prevention and was sufficient for jury to infer that the failure to train actually caused detainee's injury. Simmons v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1042, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1671, 503 U.S. 985, 118 L.Ed.2d 391. Civil Rights 1404; Civil Rights 1429

In civil rights action by foster child against placement agency for failing to supervise placement adequately, deliberate indifference was not to be inferred from failure to act as readily as might have been done in prison context, since in foster care situation, there were obvious alternative explanations for family being given benefit of doubt and agency refusing to intervene. Doe v. New York City Dept. of Social Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 649 F.2d 134. Civil Rights 1406

5251. ---- Discrimination, inferences, evidence and witnesses

Proof that defendants engaged in racially discriminatory practices and policies prior to period of time for which relief is available under statute of limitations is relevant in civil action for deprivation of rights since it creates inference that discrimination continued, particularly when there has been little change in decision-making process. Williams v. Anderson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1081. Civil Rights 1409

For purposes of proving prima facie case of employment discrimination, tenured university professor who was Jewish failed to present evidence that nonminority faculty members were treated more leniently where the cited faculty member who was, like the professor, charged with sexual harassment-type misconduct was also member of protected class and had also received same discipline as the professor; thus, professor failed to raise inference of discrimination. Wexley v. Michigan State University, W.D.Mich.1993, 821 F.Supp. 479, affirmed 25 F.3d 1052. Civil Rights 1421

5252. ---- Knowledge, inferences, evidence and witnesses

Individuals and entities that owned parcel of land, as plaintiffs, knew or should have known of alleged equal protection violation and accompanying alleged conspiracy when local resident engineer for Virginia Department of Transportation (VDOT) testified at hearing in state court proceeding that he would require plaintiffs to obtain commercial entrance permit for their land, in §§1983 action against adjoining landowners and engineer. Shooting Point, L.L.C. v. Cumming, E.D.Va.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 729, motion to amend denied 243 F.Supp.2d 536, affirmed 368 F.3d 379. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Municipal liability under § 1983 can be based on municipal supervisors' knowing acquiescence in unconstitutional behavior of their subordinates; knowledge of supervisors may be inferred from persistent violation of statutory duty to inquire about unconstitutional behavior of their subordinates and failure to prevent unconstitutional acts. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Civil Rights 1352(1)

5253. ---- Statistics, inferences, evidence and witnesses

While civil rights action contemplates possibility of proving racial discrimination by numerical comparisons, inferences to be drawn from statistics must result from substantial discrepancies, either from comparing employment totals with population totals or by other statistically demonstrable unequal employment practices, such as promotions or dismissals. Roche v. Foulger, D.C.Utah 1975, 404 F.Supp. 705. Civil Rights 1405

5254. Presumptions, evidence and witnesses--Generally

Federal court in civil rights action must assume that state court, in performance of its duty, will afford a fair trial and equal protection to individual's legal rights under Constitutions and laws of both United States and the states. Temple v. Pergament, D.C.N.J.1964, 235 F.Supp. 242. See, also, Chaffee v. Johnson, D.C.Miss.1964, 229 F.Supp. 445, affirmed 352 F.2d 514, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 1582, 384 U.S. 956, 16 L.Ed.2d 553. Evidence 82

Documents in the possession of individual police officer defendants concerning the series of incidents described in arrestee's complaint for false arrest and excessive force were independently discoverable, notwithstanding their claim of qualified immunity, because the request related directly to the specific conduct underlying the claims and the defense of immunity; since the parties had offered differing versions of the underlying incident, limited discovery regarding the actual conduct was appropriate. Rome v. Romero, D.Colo.2004, 225 F.R.D. 640. Federal Civil Procedure 1553

5255. ---- Discriminatory purpose, presumptions, evidence and witnesses

Evidence in civil action for deprivation of rights established prima facie case of purposeful racial discrimination on part of school district in Arkansas with respect to assignment, salary, promotion and hiring of black faculty members for up to and including 1972-1973 school year; rebuttable presumption in favor of individual relief was therefore established. Williams v. Anderson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1081. Civil Rights 1545; Civil Rights 1544; Civil Rights 1547; Civil Rights 1548

Discriminatory action on part of mayor sued for actual and punitive damages for alleged violation of civil rights could not be presumed. Mosher v. Beirne, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1966, 357 F.2d 638. Civil Rights 1401

To create a presumption of discriminatory purpose, plaintiff must demonstrate that a government decision (a) made a racial classification on its face (b) was applied in discriminatory manner or (c) had a reasonably foreseeable discriminatory effect. Johnson v. City of Arcadia, Fla., M.D.Fla.1978, 450 F.Supp. 1363. Civil Rights 1401

5256. ---- Immunity, presumptions, evidence and witnesses

Filing of criminal complaint immunizes investigating officers from damages accruing thereafter, it being presumed that prosecutor filing complaint exercised independent judgment in determining that probable cause for arrest existed at such time, but such presumption may be rebutted, in which event immunity is removed. Smiddy v. Varney, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1981, 665 F.2d 261, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 65, 459 U.S. 829, 74 L.Ed.2d 66, on remand 574 F.Supp. 710. False Imprisonment 7(3)

5257. ---- Rebuttable presumptions, evidence and witnesses

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Probative value of evidence of sheriff's alleged other acts of over-detentions of other detainees at county jail outweighed danger of prejudice in former detainee's §§ 1983 action against sheriff alleging violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process right to be released from county jail within reasonable time after reason for confinement ended; other acts evidence was key evidence offered to prove that sheriff had an unconstitutional policy, custom, or practice. Green v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 226 F.R.D. 624, clarified 2005 WL 283361. Evidence 139

Lard wholesale distributor, who contended that application of certain price control regulation to him amounted to intentional and purposeful attempt to drive him out of business in retaliation for exercise of his rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1, had not adequately rebutted presumption of good faith that attached to official state action. Gual v. Denton, D.C.Puerto Rico 1979, 476 F.Supp. 804. Constitutional Law 48(4.1)

5258. Burden of proof, evidence and witnesses--Generally

Burden to demonstrate that Congress has expressly withdrawn remedy under this section for violation of particular federal right is on defendant. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1401

Plaintiff's burden in an action under § 1981 of this title or this section may differ in some respects from that of plaintiff in action brought under § 2000e et seq. of this title, but criteria set forth in Supreme Court's decision in McDonnell Douglas provide useful guide to plaintiff's burden. Tagupa v. Board of Directors, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1980, 633 F.2d 1309. Civil Rights 1532; Courts 96(7)

In civil actions for deprivation of rights, plaintiffs ordinarily retain burden of proof throughout trial. Clark v. Mann, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1977, 562 F.2d 1104. Civil Rights 1401

While public officials asserting defense of qualified immunity have burden of pleading the defense, plaintiff bears burden of demonstrating that conduct at issue violated a right that was clearly established when the conduct occurred. Abbott v. Village of Winthrop Harbor, N.D.Ill.1996, 953 F.Supp. 931. Civil Rights 1407

To state retaliation claim under § 1983, inmate bears burden of showing that he engaged in constitutionally protected conduct, and that such conduct was a substantial or motivating factor in decision of prison officials to discipline him. Justice v. Coughlin, N.D.N.Y.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1312. Civil Rights 1092

Plaintiff in § 1983 action bears burden of establishing critical issue that right allegedly violated was clearly established under stated standard. Roberts v. City of Forest Acres, D.S.C.1995, 902 F.Supp. 662. Civil Rights 1407

5259. ---- Shifting of burden, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

While McDonnell Douglas involved Title VII claim, its burden-shifting analysis applies equally to § 1983 claims of race discrimination in violation of the Equal Protection Clause. Burns v. Board of County Com'rs of Jackson County, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 330 F.3d 1275. Civil Rights 1405

If plaintiff who alleges retaliation by employer for exercise of his First Amendment free speech rights through denial of sought position meets burden of showing that protected conduct was substantial or motivating factor in defendant's action, burden then shifts to defendant to prove by preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff would not have attained position he sought even without protected speech considerations. Cromley v. Board of Educ. of Lockport Tp. High School Dist. 205, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 17 F.3d 1059, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 74, 513 U.S. 816, 130 L.Ed.2d 28. Civil Rights 1405 defendants' action in revoking occupational licenses under which bookstore had been operating, once plaintiff showed that government had restrained dissemination of materials presumed protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 and introduced evidence tending to show that the restraint was based on the content of the materials, then burden shifted to government officials to demonstrate that any restraint imposed comported with substantive and procedural requirements of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Bayou Landing, Ltd. v. Watts, C.A.5 (La.) 1977, 563 F.2d 1172, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 79, 439 U.S. 818, 58 L.Ed.2d 109. Civil Rights 1406

In analyzing whether conduct was unlawfully discriminatory for purposes of § 1983, the burden-shifting framework of Title VII claims applies. Padilla v. Harris, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 263. Civil Rights 1405

Once a § 1983 defendant pleads qualified immunity and shows that he is a governmental official whose position involves the exercise of discretion, the plaintiff bears the burden of rebutting this defense by establishing that the official's wrongful conduct violated clearly established law; "clearly established" means that the contours of the right must be sufficiently clear that a reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right. Herrera v. Medical Center Hosp., E.D.La.2002, 241 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1407

Once employer satisfies its burden under § 1983 of producing sufficient evidence to raise genuine issue of fact as to whether employer discriminated against employee, employee has burden of persuading court that profferred reason for employment decision at issue is pretext for discrimination; this burden may be satisfied either directly, by persuading court that discriminatory reason more than likely motivated employer, or indirectly, by persuading court that proffered reason is not worthy of belief. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1405

Proof by individual § 1983 plaintiff of immediate past history of racial discrimination by employer, without more, can be sufficient to shift to employer burden of justifying its employment decisions by clear and convincing evidence; once pattern and practice of discrimination is established, rebuttable presumption that plaintiff was unlawfully discriminated against and is entitled to recovery obtains, and may be overcome only with clear and convincing evidence that job decisions made at time discriminatory policy was in force were not made in pursuit of that policy. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1405

If prima facie case of employment discrimination case is established, burden then shifts to employer to rebut presumption by producing evidence that employer made employment decision for legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason. Thomas v. St. Luke's Health Systems, Inc., N.D.Iowa 1994, 869 F.Supp. 1413, affirmed 61 F.3d 908. Civil Rights 1536

If employer meets its burden of production with respect to legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for employment decision, legal presumption of discrimination that would justify judgment as matter of law based on discrimination plaintiff's prima facie case simply drops out of picture, and plaintiff bears burden of persuading finder of fact that proffered reasons are pretextual and that employment decision was result of discriminatory intent. Thomas v. St. Luke's Health Systems, Inc., N.D.Iowa 1994, 869 F.Supp. 1413, affirmed 61 F.3d 908. Civil Rights 1536

In employment discrimination cases based on circumstantial evidence, courts apply analytical framework of shifting burdens developed in McDonnell Douglas and its progeny, under which employment discrimination plaintiff has initial burden of establishing prima facie case of discrimination by producing evidence that would entitle him to prevail unless contradicted and overcome by evidence produced by defendant. Thomas v. St. Luke's Health Systems, Inc., N.D.Iowa 1994, 869 F.Supp. 1413, affirmed 61 F.3d 908. Civil Rights 1536

Statistics and other evidence of discrimination showing imbalance of men and women with tenure in department at university made out prima facie case of sex discrimination, imposing upon university the duty of going forward with rebutting evidence, in action brought under this section, wherein plaintiff sought preliminary injunction restraining her discharge pending determination of her action. Johnson v. University of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1973, 359 F.Supp. 1002. Civil Rights 1537; Civil Rights 1549

5260. ---- Clear and convincing evidence, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Decedent's father's contention that jury could have disbelieved police officer's account of fatal shooting of decedent was insufficient to survive city's and officer's motion for summary judgment in father's action under § 1983 and Illinois Wrongful Death Act alleging excessive force; father needed to provide specific evidence when attacking officer's credibility, such as contradictory eyewitness accounts or other impeachment evidence. Muhammed v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 316 F.3d 680. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Burden was on defendant board of education, charged with violating black teacher's civil rights by refusing to reemploy her because of her race, to establish by clear and convincing evidence its assertion that her nonretention was based on professional incompetency. Jones v. Pitt County Bd. of Ed., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1975, 528 F.2d 414. Civil Rights 1421

Where employment discrimination against class has been proved, and individual employee has brought himself within class and has shown deleterious economic consequences suffered, burden of proof shifts to employer to show by clear and convincing evidence that each would not have been hired, absent discrimination. Mims v. Wilson, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1975, 514 F.2d 106.

Phrase "clear and convincing," as used with respect to burden of school board to demonstrate by "clear and convincing" evidence that dismissal of black teacher was not due to racial considerations, demanded more than just a "preponderance of the evidence"; on the other hand, "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard was not appropriate because on balance the need for certainty was not as great as it is when accused faces possibility of criminal sanction. Alexander v. Warren, Ark., School Dist. No. 1 Bd., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1972, 464 F.2d 471. Civil Rights 1421

5261. ---- Preponderance of evidence, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

In suits alleging deprivation of civil rights under color of state law, burden is on defendant official claiming official immunity to come forward and to convince trier of fact by preponderance of evidence that official immunity should attach. Skehan v. Board of Trustees of Bloomsburg State College, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 538 F.2d 53, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 490, 429 U.S. 979, 50 L.Ed.2d 588, on remand 431 F.Supp. 1379. Civil Rights 1407

In § 1983 action in which party alleges deprivation of constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities by official's abuse of position, plaintiff must first carry initial burden of establishing prima facie case, which requires plaintiff to come forward with evidence that constitutionally protected conduct was substantial or motivating factor in discharge; if plaintiff succeeds in establishing prima facie case, burden shifts to defendant to show, by preponderance of evidence, that defendant would have reached same decision even in absence of constitutionally protected conduct of plaintiff. Olmeda v. Schneider, D.Virgin Islands 1995, 889 F.Supp. 228. Civil Rights 1405

When evaluating public employee's claim of retaliation for exercising right to free speech, court must first determine whether plaintiff has proved that she was engaged in protected activity, and must then determine whether plaintiff has shown that the protected activity was substantial and motivating factor behind the adverse employment decision, and if plaintiff proves these two elements, defendant must show by preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same employment decision even if plaintiff had not engaged in the protected activity. Mazurek v. Wolcott Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.1993, 815 F.Supp. 71. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

Civil rights plaintiffs alleging class-wide pattern-and-practice retaliation were required to prove by preponderance of evidence that retaliation for First-Amendment activities was police chief's and mayor's standard operating procedure. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Civil Rights 1421

5262. ---- Color of law, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Where institution accused of constitutional violation is a private institution, plaintiff in action under this section will bear heavier burden of showing that questioned conduct is really tantamount to that of state. Bailey v. McCann, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 550 F.2d 1016. Civil Rights 1401

Where plaintiff sought damages for alleged malicious false arrest and false imprisonment by defendants pursuant to alleged conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of his civil rights guaranteed by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, and plaintiff alleged that acting sheriff and deputy and president of race track conspired to deprive plaintiff of his civil rights and liberties by ejecting him from race track, burden was on plaintiff to prove that defendants in ejecting him from race track were acting under color of some statute of Arkansas and not merely as individuals as agents only of the track. Watkins v. Oaklawn Jockey Club, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1950, 183 F.2d 440. Conspiracy 19

Guardian ad litem of adopted child failed to meet burden of persuasion of showing that parents who sought to be released from obligations to adopted child did not state claim against guardian under § 1983; guardian did not show that guardians never acted under color of state law so that court was unable to determine whether guardian functioned as adversary to state. Kohl v. Murphy, N.D.Ill.1991, 767 F.Supp. 895. Civil Rights 1395(1)

5263. ---- Custom or usage, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

County employee was not required to prove that dismissal from employment due to his political affiliation resulted from custom or practice of county, in order to recover from county under § 1983 for violation of First Amendment rights, where ultimate decision-making authority of county itself committed unlawful act. Felton v. Board of Com'rs of County of Greene, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 5 F.3d 198. Civil Rights 1351(5)

In order to establish that civil rights of detainee who committed suicide in jail were violated as result of municipal policy or custom of deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of intoxicated and potentially suicidal detainees, plaintiff was required to show that responsible policymakers were aware of number of suicides in city lockups and of alternatives for preventing them, but either deliberately chose not to pursue those alternatives or acquiesced in longstanding policy or custom of inaction. Simmons v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1042, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1671, 503 U.S. 985, 118 L.Ed.2d 391. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To establish existence of governmental custom of failing to receive, investigate and act upon complaints of violation of constitutional rights, for purpose of holding governmental entity liable under § 1983, plaintiff must prove existence of continuing, widespread, persistent pattern of unconstitutional misconduct by governmental entity's employees, deliberate indifference to or tacit authorization of such conduct by governmental entity's policymaking officials after notice to officials of that misconduct, and that plaintiff was injured by acts pursuant to governmental entity's custom, i.e., that custom was moving force behind constitutional violation. Thelma D. By and Through Delores A. v. Board of Educ. of City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 934 F.2d 929. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Policy of condoning unreasonable searches of homes, necessary for municipal liability for unlawful search in § 1983 action, was not established through submission of state court records showing Fourth Amendment violations in searches of other homes. Carrasco v. City of Vallejo, E.D.Cal.2001, 2001 WL 34098655, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

5263A. ---- Exhaustion of administrative remedies, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Deputy sheriff claiming that county jail inmate bringing § 1983 action against the deputy failed to exhaust his administrative remedies before filing the action as required under Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) was required to present evidence of county jail system's administrative grievance procedures and requirements for exhaustion of remedies within that system. Mooring v. San Francisco Sheriff's Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1404

5264. ---- Damages, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Once plaintiff in § 1983 action has presented evidence of damages, defendant has burden of establishing failure to properly mitigate damages; to satisfy such burden, defendant must establish that substantially equivalent positions were available and that plaintiff failed to exercise reasonable care and diligence in seeking those positions. Meyers v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 14 F.3d 1115, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1471

Employee who seeks lost wages for period of discrimination has initial burden of establishing amount of damages, after which burden shifts to employer to prove, as affirmative defense, that employee failed to mitigate damages; in order to prove failure to mitigate, employer must show that employee failed to exercise reasonable diligence to mitigate damages, and that there was reasonable likelihood that employee might have found comparable work by exercising reasonable diligence. Fleming v. County of Kane, State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 898 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1405; Civil Rights 1471

When an inmate seeks damages against a defendant, as opposed to declaratory or injunctive relief, under § 1983, the inquiry into causation must be individualized and focus on the duties and responsibilities of each individual defendant whose acts or omissions are alleged to have caused a constitutional deprivation. Mooring v. San Francisco Sheriff's Dept., N.D.Cal.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1031; Civil Rights 1335

Former public employee fulfilled initial burden of establishing proper amount of postjudgment back pay in § 1983 action for termination in violation of due process clause; although former employee did not give in-depth assessment of his calculations, he indicated amount which be believed he would have earned had there been no wrongful termination, he reduced such amount by his various income offsets, and employer failed to rebut his calculations. Coleman v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1996, 949 F.Supp. 604. Civil Rights 1471

5265. ---- Discrimination, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Once plaintiff has met burden of proving prima facie case of racial discrimination, defendant must present evidence that raises a genuine issue of fact as to whether it discriminated against plaintiff and explanation provided must be legally sufficient to justify judgment for defendant; defendant need not persuade court that it was actually motivated by proffered reason, since burden of persuasion regarding discriminatory animus remains at all times with plaintiff. Taylor v. Jones, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 653 F.2d 1193. Civil Rights 1401

Normally, the burden of proving intent to discriminate rests with plaintiff in an action brought under this section, and intent has to be found by a sensitive inquiry into such circumstantial and direct evidence of intent as may be available. Thompson v. School Dist. of Omaha, in Douglas County, in State of Neb., C.A.8 (Neb.) 1980, 623 F.2d 46.

Entrepreneur failed to show under § 1983 that mayor, municipality, and its personnel violated entrepreneur's right to political affiliation without discrimination under First Amendment, for failure to show that defendants knew of his political affiliation, where entrepreneur did not provide any evidence, apart from his self-serving allegations, that he was affiliate of defendants' opponent or that defendants were aware of his alleged affiliation, and defendants proffered uncontested facts, admitted by entrepreneur, which established that he was not affiliate of opponent party. Colon Rodriguez v. Lopez Bonilla, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 333. Civil Rights 1422

Former paraprofessional in school failed to establish that he was performing job duties satisfactorily, as required to establish prima facie case of religious discriminatory discharge against principal; evaluations for two years preceding termination stated paraprofessional needed improvement, paraprofessional received a number of verbal and written warnings, and paraprofessional received two written reprimands for neglect of duty and insubordination. Sharif v. Buck, W.D.N.Y.2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 435, affirmed 152 Fed.Appx. 43, 2005 WL 2650070. Civil Rights 1157

Failure to provide any evidence of racial discrimination, other than claim that one defendant alleged bigotry on part of another defendant, precluded claim that county discriminated against employee by demoting him. Hodge v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.2003, 306 F.Supp.2d 288. Civil Rights 1421; Civil Rights 1548

Puerto Rico municipal employee failed to establish, in § 1983 action premised on First Amendment, a prima facie case of political discrimination, allegedly in retaliation for his support of mayor's political rival in primary campaign, through evidence that, despite having been appointed to career position, his supervisors failed to assign him any duties or responsibilities and merely asked for his help on certain discrete tasks or projects and unsupported allegations that he was restricted access to information and that mayor and others refused to speak with him; evidence consisted of employee's bare, uncorroborated allegations. Gonzalez Pina v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 195, affirmed 407 F.3d 425. Civil Rights 1421

Inmate challenging the constitutionality of the prison's policy of separating its Islamic prayer services into two separate groups, in § 1983 action, bore the burden of demonstrating that the prison's policy was invalid. Garcia v. Board Of County Com'rs of Lehigh County, E.D.Pa.2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1404

5266. ---- Searches, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Government's search of residence was so clearly in error that it had burden of establishing reasonableness of search, including establishing bona fides and credibility of confidential source whose information provided basis for warrant, in civil rights action seeking to recover damages caused by search; warrant described residence as possessing "grey front door with silver screen door," and residence searched had white metal screen door and black front door. Holland v. O'Bryant, D.D.C.1997, 958 F.Supp. 10. Civil Rights 1404

5267. ---- Good faith, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

In order to establish good-faith defense from personal liability in actions brought under this section, defendant official must show that he was acting within scope of his discretionary authority when allegedly wrongful acts occurred; once defendant establishes his good faith, burden shifts to plaintiff to show lack of good faith. Zeigler v. Jackson, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1983, 716 F.2d 847. Civil Rights 1407

Qualified immunity based on good faith performance of official duty is affirmative defense that defendant has burden of pleading. Evans v. Dillahunty, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 662 F.2d 522. See, also, Thomas v. Board of Trustees of Galveston Independent School Dist., D.C.Tex.1981, 515 F.Supp. 280. Civil Rights 1398

5268. ---- Isolated cases, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

In "isolated individual" case alleging unlawful gender discrimination in employment under § 1983, employer has burden of production, not of persuasion, and thus does not have to persuade court that it was actually motivated by reason advanced by it in making employment decision at issue. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1405

5269. ---- Immunity, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Burden is on the state official claiming immunity in the civil rights action to demonstrate his entitlement. Dennis v. Sparks, U.S.Tex.1980, 101 S.Ct. 183, 449 U.S. 24, 66 L.Ed.2d 185. Civil Rights 1407

Inmate bringing pro se § 1983 action alleging deprivation of food would have burden to show that jail officials violated clearly settled law of which reasonable person would know, if officials were acting within scope of their authority and in their official capacity. Cooper v. Sheriff, Lubbock County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 929 F.2d 1078. Civil Rights 1407

5270. ---- Absolute immunity, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

State actors who seek absolute immunity bear burden of showing that public policy requires exemption of that scope. Young v. Selsky, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 41 F.3d 47, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1837, 514 U.S. 1102, 131 L.Ed.2d 756. Officers And Public Employees 119

Burden is on government official claiming absolute immunity from § 1983 liability to show that exemption from personal liability is justified by public policy or by principles of common-law immunity in existence at time of enactment of § 1983. Union Pacific R. Co. v. Village of South Barrington, N.D.Ill.1997, 958 F.Supp. 1285. Civil Rights 1407

5271. ---- Qualified immunity, burden of proof, evidence and witnesses

Jury did not clearly err in finding that any disruption caused by probationary special education teacher's allegations of violations of law in school district's special education program was outweighed by teacher's interest in free expression, and teacher's core First Amendment rights were implicated, and thus school district officials were not entitled to qualified immunity in teacher's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation action arising from nonrenewal of her contract; district presented very little evidence of disruption or injury, and teacher made no public statements but rather communicated via internal channels. Settlegoode v. Portland Public Schools, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 371 F.3d 503, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 478, 543 U.S. 979, 160 L.Ed.2d 356. Civil Rights 1376(10); Civil Rights 1421

Where § 1983 defendant pleads qualified immunity and shows that defendant is governmental official whose position involves exercise of discretion, plaintiff then has burden to rebut this defense by establishing that official's allegedly wrongful conduct violated clearly established law; official is not required to demonstrate that he did not violate clearly established federal rights. Pierce v. Smith, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 117 F.3d 866. Civil Rights 1407

Plaintiff bringing § 1983 action against individual law enforcement officer bears burden of showing that right allegedly violated was clearly established at time of alleged misconduct. Perkins v. City of West Covina, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1004, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 1690, 523 U.S. 1105, 140 L.Ed.2d 812, reversed 119 S.Ct. 678, 525 U.S. 234, 142 L.Ed.2d 636, on remand 167 F.3d 1286. Civil Rights 1407

Burden of proof in § 1983 qualified immunity cases is placed on plaintiff only in regard to factual disputes where whether defendant actually committed acts that are alleged to be in violation of federal law is salient issue. McCloud v. Testa, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 97 F.3d 1536, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1407

Once state university president and dean of graduate studies presented facts indicating that they were acting within their discretionary authority, burden of proving that qualified immunity did not apply fell on plaintiff professor, for purposes of his civil rights claims alleging that president's and dean's handling of his tenure denial grievance violated his right to procedural due process and equal protection. Purisch v. Tennessee Technological University, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 76 F.3d 1414. Civil Rights 1407

Arrestee did not meet his burden of proof showing clearly established law in support of his claim that police officers' decision to arrest him was solely in retaliation for his refusal to give his name and address and, therefore, police officers were entitled to qualified immunity defense in § 1983 action, as arrestee had no clearly established right to ignore police requests at scene of investigation for his name and address. Pallottino v. City of Rio Rancho, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1994, 31 F.3d 1023. Civil Rights 1376(6)

In order to overcome police officers' qualified immunity from civil rights claims against officers in their individual capacities, as arising out of arrestee's suicide while in jail, arrestee's estate was required to establish that officers' conduct violated clearly established statutory or constitutional right of which reasonable person would have known, where officers' allegedly unconstitutional actions fell within their discretionary authority. Belcher v. City of Foley, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1390. Civil Rights 1376(7)

With respect to claim of qualified immunity, it is plaintiff's burden to show that when defendant acted, law established contours of right so clearly that reasonable official would have understood his acts were unlawful. Spivey v. Elliott, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1522, on reconsideration 41 F.3d 1497. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Prison officials who kept inmate in administrative segregation after he no longer qualified for segregation had burden of coming forward with facts showing that they were acting within their discretionary authority at time in question so as to have qualified immunity, with the ultimate burden of proof resting on inmate to show that officials were not entitled to qualified immunity. Mackey v. Dyke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1086. Civil Rights 1407

Plaintiff in § 1983 action bears burden of proving that right allegedly violated was clearly established at time of official's impermissible conduct, for purposes of determining whether official is entitled to qualified immunity. Camarillo v. McCarthy, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 998 F.2d 638. Civil Rights 1407

In a political discharge civil rights case in which defendants claim qualified immunity, plaintiff must initially allege the violation of some constitutional right, he must then attempt to show the right is clearly established by reference to analogous cases which would put defendants on notice that their acts were illegal, and finally that defendants must respond by proving that they could reasonably have believed that their acts were constitutionally permissible, either because the right was not clearly established or because political allegiance was a legitimate job requirement in the particular case. Pounds v. Griepenstroh, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 970 F.2d 338, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1256, 507 U.S. 910, 122 L.Ed.2d 654. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Plaintiff opposing dismissal on basis of qualified immunity must demonstrate that right in question was clearly established at time of defendant's conduct and cannot meet that burden merely by identifying clearly established right and then alleging that defendant violated it; plaintiff must come forward with necessary factual allegations. Sawyer v. County of Creek, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 908 F.2d 663. Civil Rights 1398

Qualified immunity is an affirmative defense for which the defendant carries the burden of proof. Vukelic v. Bartz, D.N.D.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 1068. Civil Rights 1398; Civil Rights 1407

After a defendant pleads qualified immunity to a claim in a § 1983 lawsuit, the plaintiff bears the burden of coming forward with sufficient facts to show that the defendant's actions violated a federal constitutional or statutory right and demonstrating that the right violated was clearly established at the time of the conduct at issue; in order to carry this burden, the plaintiff must do more than identify in the abstract a clearly established right and allege that the defendant has violated it, rather, the plaintiff must articulate the clearly established constitutional right and the defendant's conduct which violated the right with specificity. Schroeder v. Kochanowski, D.Kan.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 1241. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1407 capacity involves two-step analysis: government official first must demonstrate that he was acting within scope of his discretionary authority when allegedly wrongful acts occurred, and if defendant satisfies this burden, plaintiff must then show either that official lacked good faith or that official's actions violated clearly established constitutional law or federal statute at time of challenged action. Ferguson v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1997, 969 F.Supp. 674, affirmed 141 F.3d 1189. Civil Rights 1376(2)

For qualified immunity purposes, burden of establishing that constitutional right violated was clearly established rests on plaintiff suing public officer under § 1983. Smith v. Tolley, E.D.Va.1997, 960 F.Supp. 977. Civil Rights 1407

Initially, plaintiff bears burden of setting out claims sufficient to state cause of action under § 1983, and once defendant responds with assertion of qualified immunity, burden of proof shifts to defendant; once defendant has satisfied his burden of proof, burden shifts back to plaintiff who must then allege and prove that defendant violated clearly established right that any government official in defendant's position would have clearly understood that he was under affirmative duty to refrain from such conduct. McCrea v. Zieba, N.D.Ohio 1996, 955 F.Supp. 801. Civil Rights 1407

For purposes of determining whether qualified immunity bars claim, plaintiff who seeks damages for violation of constitution or statutory rights bears initial burden of proving that rights allegedly violated were clearly established at time of alleged misconduct, and court must examine universe of statutory or decisional law to determine whether right allegedly violated was clearly established; qualified immunity is thus protective rule which provides ample support to all but the most plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate law. Reed v. Iranon, D.Hawai'i 1996, 940 F.Supp. 1523. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1407

To defeat claim of qualified immunity, § 1983 plaintiff bears burden of establishing existence of clearly established right; that burden requires plaintiff to offer either closely analogous case or evidence that defendants' conduct is so patently violative of constitutional right that reasonable officials would know without guidance from courts. Van Loo v. Braun, E.D.Wis.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1390. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Burden is on plaintiff in § 1983 action to plead specific facts showing violation of clearly established law by defendant, or complaint is subject to dismissal. Swenson v. Culberson County, W.D.Tex.1996, 925 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1398

Test for whether governmental defendant is entitled to qualified immunity from liability in his or her individual capacity is as follows: defendant public official must first prove that he was acting within scope of his discretionary authority when allegedly wrongful acts occurred and once defendant satisfies his burden of moving forward with evidence, burden shifts to plaintiff to show lack of good faith on defendant's part and this burden is met by proof demonstrating that defendant public official's actions violated clearly established constitutional law or federal statute. Gorman v. Roberts, M.D.Ala.1995, 909 F.Supp. 1479. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1407

Burden of proof was on § 1983 plaintiff to show that defendants were not entitled to qualified immunity; defendants bore initial burden of coming forward with facts to suggest that they were acting within scope of their discretionary authority during incident in question, with burden then shifting to plaintiff to establish that any official in defendants' position would have clearly understood that they were under affirmative duty to refrain from such conduct. Robertson v. Johnson County, Ky., E.D.Ky.1995, 896 F.Supp. 673. Civil Rights 1407

After defendant government official has raised defense of qualified immunity by motion to dismiss, by affirmative defense, or by motion for summary judgment, burden of pleading facts which, if true, describe violation of clearly established statutory or constitutional right of which reasonable public official, under an objective standard, would have known, rests on plaintiff, and if plaintiff fails to meet burden of pleading sufficient facts to state a violation of clearly established law, government official pleading qualified immunity is entitled to dismissal before commencement of discovery. Gregory v. Hunt, W.D.Tenn.1991, 872 F.Supp. 476, clarified 1992 WL 695478, affirmed 24 F.3d 781. Civil Rights 1398; Federal Civil Procedure 1752.1

Once public official raises qualified immunity defense, plaintiff has burden of proving that official's conduct violated clearly established statutory or constitutional rights. Telfair v. Gilberg, S.D.Ga.1994, 868 F.Supp. 1396, affirmed 87 F.3d 1330. Civil Rights 1407

Where qualified immunity was raised as defense to civil rights suit, plaintiff had burden of identifying with particularity clearly established law and conduct by defendant which violated that law. Kaul v. Stephan, D.Kan.1994, 868 F.Supp. 1253, affirmed 83 F.3d 1208. Civil Rights 1407

Official seeking immunity from civil rights claim bears initial burden of showing that public policy requires such exemption; burden then shifts to plaintiff to show facts which, if true, defeat assertion of the doctrine. Schilling v. Swick, W.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1407

In determining whether official has qualified immunity from civil rights claim, plaintiff bears burden of proving that right was clearly established at time it was allegedly violated and official has burden to prove that disputed acts were objectively reasonable. Defore v. Premore, N.D.N.Y.1994, 863 F.Supp. 91, affirmed 86 F.3d 48. Civil Rights 1407

Once issue of qualified immunity is properly injected into civil rights case, plaintiff has burden of demonstrating that defendants violated some "clearly established" constitutional right, by showing the existence of a right sufficiently particularized to have put potential defendants on notice that their conduct was probably unlawful at time of alleged violation. Olzinski v. Maciona, E.D.Wis.1989, 714 F.Supp. 401. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1407

In order to properly raise defense of qualified immunity, defendants must assert that they were performing discretionary functions; plaintiff then has burden to convince court that law relied upon by plaintiff was clearly established at time defendants allegedly deprived plaintiff of his or her civil rights and if plaintiff fails to convince court, defendants are qualifiedly immune and court must enter judgment in favor of defendants who have pleaded defense; however, if plaintiff convinces court that law was clearly established, court must proceed to determine whether defendants have raised issue as to whether exceptional circumstances exist such that reasonable persons in their position would not have known of relevant legal standard. Burk v. Unified School Dist. No. 329, Wabaunsee County, Kan., D.Kan.1986, 646 F.Supp. 1557. Civil Rights 1376(2); Civil Rights 1407

5272. Admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses--Generally

Whether testimony of witness in suit, pursuant to this section, that mayor had made a public statement that he was not going to appoint any more Negroes to the school board reflected either newspaper account or television report of statement it was nonetheless hearsay. Mayor of City of Philadelphia v. Educational Equality League, U.S.Pa.1974, 94 S.Ct. 1323, 415 U.S. 605, 39 L.Ed.2d 630. Evidence 317(2)

Police officers' conduct of signing disciplinary records for violating firearms procedures and indicating that they accepted the recommended penalty was not an adoptive admission of allegations in the records, for purposes of determining whether the disciplinary records were admissible in §§ 1983 civil rights action brought by arrestee for excessive force, given that the officers declined to admit any wrongdoing and only accepted the penalty imposed, not the facts underlying it. Garcia-Martinez v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 392 F.3d 1187. Evidence 220(6) natural parents, district court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting evidence of one defendant's attitude toward minorities; statement, allegedly made by a co-worker in an interview with Kansas Human Rights Commission, did not comply with evidentiary procedure inasmuch as it was evidenced solely by an undated and unsigned loose typed sheet. Roe ex rel. Roe v. Keady, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 329 F.3d 1188. Evidence 373(1)

Graphic evidence of injuries from unrelated incidents of police dog bites and police dog training techniques, offered to show that police dog policy of police chief and city was unconstitutional, was excludable as premature in first stage of arrestee's bifurcated § 1983 trial in which only individual officers' use of police dog against arrestee was at issue; evidence could have unfairly prejudiced chief and city and confused jury as it considered individual officers' actions. Quintanilla v. City of Downey, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 353, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 972, 519 U.S. 1122, 136 L.Ed.2d 856. Civil Rights 1412; Evidence 146

In civil rights deprivation prosecution of police officer arising out of beating of motorist, officer's statement that he went to police station intending to report use of force was not barred from admission on grounds that actions were motivated by opinions; testimony about action was not inadmissible because action was motivated by opinions or beliefs. U.S. v. Koon, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 34 F.3d 1416, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 45 F.3d 1303, as amended, certiorari granted in part 116 S.Ct. 39, 515 U.S. 1190, 132 L.Ed.2d 920, affirmed in part, reversed in part 116 S.Ct. 2035, 518 U.S. 81, 135 L.Ed.2d 392, on remand 91 F.3d 1313. Criminal Law 448(2)

Admission of Spanish-language documents at trial without contemporaneous translation was warranted in § 1983 political discrimination action brought by Commonwealth of Puerto Rico employees against Commonwealth officials; employees possessed limited financial resources while cost of certified translations was high thus threatening employees' ability to fully present their case, there was no indication that admission affected parties' due process rights, and admission comported with long-standing local court rule. Torres Santa v. Rey Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 279 F.Supp.2d 124. Federal Courts 1024

Allowing presentation of videotaped testimony of witness was not an abuse of discretion, in §§ 1983 action against regional police officer alleging violations of plaintiff's First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights as well as his rights under Pennsylvania state law; both parties had reviewed the videotape and transcript to excise objectionable testimony before videotape was played for jury, plaintiff's objection, while videotape was being played for jury, to a section that had not been marked for redaction was untimely, and testimony in that section was not so prejudicial as to cause miscarriage of justice. Haeseker v. Reynolds, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 128 Fed.Appx. 857, 2005 WL 859284, Unreported. Witnesses 228

5273. ---- Relevancy, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

District court in Arkansas did not abuse its discretion by excluding Arkansas State Jail Standards from evidence in trial, in civil rights lawsuit brought by estate of pretrial detainee against jailers alleging deliberate indifference under Fourteenth Amendment, since jail standards did not represent minimum constitutional standards. Grayson v. Ross, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 454 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1412

In pretrial detainee's estate's §§1983 Eighth Amendment action against county contractor that provided medical and mental health services at jail, arising from detainee's suicide while in jail, evidence of alcohol-impaired nurse, intake backlogs, and claims of delayed or denied medical care to other inmates was relevant to contractor's knowledge and state of mind and therefore admissible; evidence was circumstantial proof of contractor's failure to act in face of known violations of its written policies other than policies governing treatment of suicidal detainees. Woodward v. Correctional Medical Services of Illinois, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 368 F.3d 917. Civil Rights 1412; Evidence 129(5)

Limitation of evidence regarding arrestee's medical examinations and treatments to those received immediately after arrest was reversible error in arrestee's § 1983 action against police officers for use of excessive force during arrest; subsequent examinations and treatments were relevant and essential to prove severity of injuries sustained and amount of force used, and to verify arrestee's credibility. Martin v. Heideman, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1997, 106 F.3d 1308, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1412; Federal Courts 901.1

Law enforcement association's model standards and policies concerning prohibition against off-duty officers engaging in traffic stops under circumstances where they are personally involved in infraction were excludable from excessive force suit involving high-speed chase and shooting death of suspect, as irrelevant to key issue of whether force used after suspect was collared was excessive under the circumstances. Soller v. Moore, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 84 F.3d 964. Civil Rights 1412

In inmate's § 1983 suit against guards for unreasonable use of force, evidence that one guard had allegedly filed false claim for worker's compensation and had been previously suspended for giving false information was relevant to issue of guard's credibility as a witness. Hynes v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 79 F.3d 285. Witnesses 344(5)

Police officers' testimony about facts known to them regarding vehicle passenger's criminal history was admissible in passenger's civil rights action against officers after they stopped car for traffic violation, directed him and other occupants to exit it and subdued him with batons when struggle ensued, as the testimony was relevant to objective reasonableness of officers' actions, and was not so unfairly prejudicial as to warrant exclusion. Ruvalcaba v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 64 F.3d 1323, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1841, 517 U.S. 1216, 134 L.Ed.2d 943. Civil Rights 1415; Evidence 146

Evidence concerning high school student's sexual relationships with men other than truant officer was relevant, in student's § 1983 action against truant officer based upon alleged nonconsensual sexual relationship, since truant officer was not responsible for any damages caused by student's sexual activities with other men. Berry v. Deloney, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 28 F.3d 604. Civil Rights 1410

Evidence of incident involving municipal police officer's alleged use of force while making arrest during domestic violence incident was properly excluded in arrestee's suit against municipality alleging civil rights violations committed by the officer while making arrest during domestic violence incident where evidence was from incident that occurred subsequent to incident involved in plaintiff's claim. Calusinski v. Kruger, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 24 F.3d 931. Evidence 129(2)

Evidence that arrestee's girlfriend had told police officers that arrestee was crack dealer and that she had seen him put piece of tin foil into his mouth was admissible in arrestee's civil rights action challenging amount of force used after arrest; arrestee had included statement in his complaint and evidence was relevant in determining reasonableness of officers' actions. Estwick v. City of Omaha, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1993, 9 F.3d 56. Civil Rights 1412

Evidence as to whether police officer had shot anyone previously should not have been admitted in civil rights action in that it was not relevant; intent was not an issue, but, rather, question to be resolved was whether the officer's use of force had been excessive. Gates v. Rivera, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 993 F.2d 697. Civil Rights 1412

Evidence that police officer had previously shot burglary suspect after suspect stabbed his police dog to death was relevant in action based on officer's alleged use of excessive force when effecting arrest arising when officer struck robbery suspect in the head after suspect kicked officer's dog. Kopf v. Skyrm, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 993 F.2d 374. Evidence 129(5)

Inmate conduct violation reports were admissible in inmate's § 1983 action alleging use of excessive force by correctional officers as being relevant, not just on question of subjective state of mind of officers in moving inmate, but on question as to what was reasonable force by any officer who knew inmate's reputation. McCrary-El v.

Shaw, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 992 F.2d 809. Civil Rights 1412

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing, in civil rights action against police officers arising out of shooting of fleeing arrestee, limited use of details of arrestee's pending charges and prior convictions; determination of reasonableness of actions of officers required evaluation of their conduct in light of what they knew at time of shooting. Geitz v. Lindsey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 893 F.2d 148. Evidence 106(5)

Parolee's §§ 1983 claim that he suffered seizures as a result of the alleged head trauma caused by parole officers' use of excessive force was not something that jurors could determine from their own knowledge or experience; thus, unless parolee's medical records demonstrated the causal connection between his seizures and the actions of the officers, parolee would be precluded from presenting lay testimony that explicitly tied the conduct of the officers to the seizures in terms of proximate cause. Turner v. White, E.D.N.Y.2005, 443 F.Supp.2d 288. Evidence 493

State agency investigatory file was properly before district court on public employer's motion to dismiss for failure to state claim, which was made on basis that agency's prior finding of "no probable cause" collaterally estopped employee from subsequently litigating his racial discrimination civil rights claim; although employee did not attach file for court to review and employer did not submit file until reply papers had been filed, employee was aware of and possessed file, he did not dispute its authenticity, and entire thrust of employee's opposition was that he did not have full and fair opportunity to litigate his claims before agency. Johnson v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2006, 411 F.Supp.2d 171. Federal Civil Procedure 1832

Plaintiff who brought § 1983 civil rights action against city and city police officer who shot him in the back allegedly because officer was in such poor physical condition that he was incapable of pursuing plaintiff on foot was entitled to production of officer's medical records in worker's compensation file, as they were directly relevant regarding officer's physical condition on the day of the shooting, and whether city fulfilled its duty both to train its officers and also to monitor their physical condition to assure their fitness for duty. Hutton v. City of Martinez, N.D.Cal.2003, 219 F.R.D. 164. Federal Civil Procedure 1598

Evidence of arrestee's convictions for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest were admissible in arrestee's § 1983 action against police officers alleging excessive force as being probative of reasonableness of police officers' conduct. Graack v. Borough of Nazareth, E.D.Pa.1994, 852 F.Supp. 370. Judgment 648

5274. ---- Rebuttal evidence, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

Plaintiffs in civil rights action challenging constitutionality of state's foster care program were not entitled to admission of documents in their possession relating to Louisiana child welfare system as whole as rebuttal evidence to help court understand why alleged violations by state occurred, where proof of violations did not require proof of causation. Del A. v. Roemer, E.D.La.1991, 777 F.Supp. 1297. Civil Rights 1414

5275. ---- Arbitration, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

An arbitrator's decision pursuant to arbitration under collective-bargaining agreement may be admitted as evidence in a Civil Rights Act suit. McDonald v. City of West Branch, Mich., U.S.Mich.1984, 104 S.Ct. 1799, 466 U.S. 284, 80 L.Ed.2d 302. Labor And Employment 1597

5276. ---- Statistics, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

Statistical proof may be used in actions under federal civil rights statute, and cases and regulations promulgated under Title VII furnish useful guides to the interpretation of the statute. Black v. City of Akron, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1987, 831 F.2d 131. Civil Rights 1413; Statutes 219(6.1)

5277. ---- Custom or usage, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

District Court's refusal to consider existence of county policy which allegedly authorized county officials to euthanize animals deemed to be sick or injured was warranted, for purpose of motion to alter or amend judgment by owner of dogs and cats that were euthanized, following summary judgment in favor of county officials, in owner's §§ 1983 procedural due process claim; owner's excuse for not submitting the county policy to the Court prior to consideration of the summary judgment motion was that her attorneys did not foresee that Court would rely on Parratt/Hudson doctrine, which barred relief under §§ 1983 for procedural due process claims if the officials' conduct was random and unauthorized. Bogart v. Chapell, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 396 F.3d 548. Federal Civil Procedure 2655

Excluding investigative report from evidence admitted in § 1983 action brought by pretrial detainee, who claimed that jailers and sheriff ignored his warnings that he was at risk of assault and denied him adequate medical treatment after he was attacked by other prisoners, was not abuse of discretion; although the investigative report tended to prove pattern of similar constitutional violations, its relevance was questionable because it substantially predated the detainee's incarceration and the sheriff's appointment. Johnson v. Busby, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 953 F.2d 349. Civil Rights 1412

Actions taken subsequent to event giving rise to civil rights claim are admissible if, and to the extent that, they provide reliable insight into the city's policy in force at the time of the incident complained of. Foley v. City of Lowell, Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 948 F.2d 10. Civil Rights 1409

Where evidence did not establish university police department ever communicated policy of confidentiality of accident reports to lieutenant, who was discharged allegedly for violating such policy, and such policy was vague because it was neither expressly formulated nor consistently applied, and, even if such policy existed, it was void as matter of public policy, district court was within its discretion in holding that evidence tending to establish such policy was irrelevant and immaterial as respects lieutenant's civil rights action for wrongful discharge. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 629 F.2d 993, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3063, 452 U.S. 926, 69 L.Ed.2d 428. Civil Rights 1413

Police department's internal affairs investigation files containing civilian complaints and police department's resultant investigations covering previous eight years were relevant and necessary to plaintiffs' burden of establishing requisite policy or custom in federal civil rights action alleging that city had failed to properly train its officers, and thus, order for disclosure of records would not be limited to two-year time period prior to complaint, even though city and individual defendants contended that two-year limitations period was applicable to civil rights claims asserted. Torres v. Kuzniasz, D.N.J.1996, 936 F.Supp. 1201. Federal Civil Procedure 1593

5277A. ---- Color of law, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

In minor child's §§ 1983 suit against District of Columbia seeking recovery for child abuse which allegedly occurred in foster care group homes operated by private, foster care contractors, child was entitled to obtain deposition testimony regarding the financial relationship between contractors and the District, including but not limited to any funding contractors by the District, profit sharing between the District and contractors, the District tax provisions relating to contractors, and contractors' ability to satisfy judgments from the District treasury; such information was relevant to child's claim that contractors were acting under color of state law. Doe v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 230 F.R.D. 47. Federal Civil Procedure 1403

5278. ---- Deliberate indifference, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

Absent showing that Brady violation was highly probable consequence of sheriff's record-keeping policies, or that such violation was inordinately difficult to discover, exonerated murder suspect could not rely on single Brady violation, which resulted in his wrongful conviction and imprisonment, to establish that sheriff was deliberately indifferent to suspect's right to fair trial, as required to impose liability on sheriff under § 1983. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1358

In civil rights action by foster child against placement agency for failing to supervise placement properly, district court should have admitted memorandum of assistant commissioner reminding city agencies of their duty to report all suspected cases of child abuse, since fact that agency failed to report incident with foster child in face of recent reminder that reporting must be done in all cases was relevant to issue of deliberate indifference. Doe v. New York City Dept. of Social Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 649 F.2d 134. Civil Rights 1414

5279. ---- Discrimination, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

Even if admissible, statement by one defendant's co-worker, which simply noted that defendant declined to call another worker to get the address and phone number of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) in Oklahoma, was insufficient to provide evidence as to the defendant's attitude toward minorities, for purposes of action alleging that state social workers failed to protect a minor Native American child from abuse by his natural parents. Roe ex rel. Roe v. Keady, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 329 F.3d 1188. Civil Rights 1422

Evidence of alleged discriminatory act which provided basis for prior lawsuits against city by female police officers was admissible in action by female police officers charging hostile work environment and sexual harassment, evidence could be admitted to support claims of discrimination in terms of employment even though plaintiffs in previous cases settled action. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Evidence 129(5)

5280. ---- Knowledge and intent, admissibility of evidence, evidence and witnesses

In political discrimination case under § 1983, error from blanket exclusion of testimony of deputy secretary for legal affairs and norms for Puerto Rican municipality, regarding his meeting with mayor for ostensible purpose of discussing ground rules for hiring of "Law 52" employees, was prejudicial; testimony went to linchpin of mayor's claim that his actions were objectively reasonable, and harmful effect of its exclusion was compounded by court's refusal to allow mayor to testify as to particular advice he received from that witness. Gomez v. Rivera Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 344 F.3d 103. Federal Courts 901.1

Evidence that defendant corrections officer twice visited plaintiff inmate in hospital after inmate allegedly was assaulted in his cell by other inmates, that officer brought two assailants on one such visit, and that officer discussed assault with plaintiff on that visit and threatened to kill him if plaintiff pressed charges, was admissible in § 1983 action alleging that officer either opened plaintiff's cell door for assailants or permitted someone else to do so; such evidence showed defendant's collaboration with attackers, and his acknowledgement of personal involvement. Fischl v. Armitage, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 128 F.3d 50. Civil Rights 1412

Reports of violent behavior involving arresting officer were admissible in arrestee's civil rights action to show that police chief and city had knowledge of officer's propensity for violence and failed to do anything to prevent rape of arrestee; previous assaults could not be pigeonholed as distinct and unrelated crimes, but rather, had to be viewed as related acts of violence. Parrish v. Luckie, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 963 F.2d 201. Evidence 137

Evidence of prison officials' beliefs with regard to allegedly invalid actions under § 1983 is required in civil rights action to show that beliefs are reasonable. Dawes v. Carpenter, N.D.N.Y.1995, 899 F.Supp. 892. Civil Rights 1376(7) upon prisoner was not admissible on the issue of whether prison guards acted with malice, in prisoner's Eighth Amendment excessive force action against prison guards under § 1983. Bright v. Gillis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 89 Fed.Appx. 802, 2004 WL 363301, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 89, 543 U.S. 904, 160 L.Ed.2d 178. Civil Rights 1412

5281. Subsequent wrongful acts, evidence and witnesses

Trial court presiding over civil rights action based on allegedly improper traffic stop abused its discretion in admitting evidence of one plaintiff's subsequent traffic stop and arrest, since evidence was within scope of discovery requests for documentation obtained from criminal databases but not disclosed until trial, and failure to disclose information was extremely prejudicial to plaintiffs' case. Ryan v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 96 F.3d 1076, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 1636.1

5282. Statistics, evidence and witnesses

Statistical evidence of disparate impact on women as result of physical capabilities selection examination established by city for purpose of hiring fire fighters did not alone establish prima facie case of discriminatory intent. Zamlen v. City of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1990, 906 F.2d 209, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1388, 499 U.S. 936, 113 L.Ed.2d 444. Civil Rights 1421

In a civil rights class action for racially discriminatory employment practices, the district court's judgment for defendant employer was supported by statistical evidence which indicated that the percentage of minorities working for defendant as a whole and within most departments was greater than the percentage of minority workers in the relevant work force, and by nonstatistical evidence which showed that an appreciable number of blacks preferred "dead-end jobs" in the housekeeping department to jobs in other departments, and that the distribution of workers among the several departments was largely the result of such factors as employee preferences, job qualifications, and economic conditions affecting job availability. Hilton v. Wyman-Gordon Co., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 624 F.2d 379. Civil Rights 1544

Black Democratic county voter registrars bringing § 1983 claim against state officials established prima facie case of disparate treatment in violation of equal protection clause with statistical evidence that after Republicans took office and fired Democrats, Blacks fell from 24.9% to 6% of county registrars. Jackson v. James, M.D.Ala.1996, 952 F.Supp. 737. Civil Rights 1421

5283. Circumstantial evidence, evidence and witnesses

Evidence, although circumstantial and not overwhelming, supported determination that state police officials retaliated against female officer for speaking out against discriminatory treatment of women at state police academy; there was evidence that official had been informed of officer's complaints before he ordered internal investigations of her conduct. Pontarelli v. Stone, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1991, 930 F.2d 104. Civil Rights 1421

Employment discrimination need not be proved by direct evidence, and doing so is often impossible, because there will seldom be eyewitness testimony to employer's mental processes. Thomas v. St. Luke's Health Systems, Inc., N.D.Iowa 1994, 869 F.Supp. 1413, affirmed 61 F.3d 908. Civil Rights 1544

When evaluating indirect evidence of discrimination in equal protection cases under § 1983, district court must consider entire context of allegedly discriminatory actions, and must consider whether defendants' actions impacted more heavily on one race than another, historical background of those actions, sequence of events which led up to challenged actions, any departures by defendants from normal procedures or disregard for factors normally considered important, and statements made by decision makers. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Chester Areas School Dist., E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1035, affirmed in part, reversed in part 52 F.3d 313. Constitutional Law 215

To establish prima facie case based on circumstantial evidence, plaintiff alleging civil rights violation from termination of employment must show by preponderance of evidence that he belongs to protected class, that he was qualified for his job, that he was constructively discharged despite qualifications without valid cause, and that defendants have replaced him or sought to replace him with person of comparable qualifications. Wexley v. Michigan State University, W.D.Mich.1993, 821 F.Supp. 479, affirmed 25 F.3d 1052. Civil Rights 1421

5284. Calling and production of witnesses, evidence and witnesses

Refusal to subpoena additional inmate witnesses requested by convict on his excessive force civil rights claims against correctional officers was not abuse of discretion, where prisoner did not establish what further testimony witnesses would have provided, some witnesses had no knowledge of incidents, and court had credited inmate's testimony and hospital records as to injuries he received during incidents. Guerra v. Drake, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 371 F.3d 404. Witnesses 4

Discharged black employee was entitled to present testimony of witness who claimed to have heard racial slurs, referring to employee, made by police department employees to demonstrate that black employee was subjected to atmosphere of racial harassment and discrimination while on job; evidence went directly to issue of racial harassment on job. Busby v. City of Orlando, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 931 F.2d 764.

In former detainee's §§ 1983 action against sheriff, in his official capacity, alleging violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process rights for failure to release him from county jail within reasonable time after reason for confinement ended, detainee could call sheriff to testify regarding jail release policies, where sheriff was final policymaker for county in setting and implementing jail release policies and sheriff did not assert that he had no knowledge of policies. Green v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 226 F.R.D. 624, clarified 2005 WL 283361. Witnesses 4

Attorney could not serve as counsel in citizen's § 1983 action against members of sheriff's department when citizen indicated intent to call attorney as witness to give impeachment testimony and attorney did not show applicability of any exception to professional rule barring attorney from acting as advocate before jury in such circumstances. Benas v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 21530209, Unreported, clarified 2003 WL 21692037. Attorney And Client 22

District court did not abuse its discretion by denying prison inmate's request for a second witness in § 1983 action after making determination that the witness's testimony would be cumulative. Thompson v. Linzy, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 208 F.3d 218, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2011

5285. Expert witnesses, evidence and witnesses

Defense expert's testimony, in civil rights action against police officer for excessive use of force, that officer suffered from post-traumatic stress syndrome following shooting of plaintiff's husband, for purposes of explaining officer's varying accounts of incident impermissibly bolstered officer's credibility, since reliability of officer's statements was credibility issue which should have been left in exclusive province of jury. Westcott v. Crinklaw, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1073, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Evidence 506; Witnesses 318

Purported expert improperly testified that city police department's failure to discipline officers for using improper deadly force amounted to "deliberate indifference" in civil rights action; "deliberate indifference" was legal term, and it was responsibility of court, not testifying witnesses, to define legal terms. Berry v. City of Detroit, C.A.6

(Mich.) 1994, 25 F.3d 1342, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 902, 513 U.S. 1111, 130 L.Ed.2d 786. Evidence 506

Trial court could allow expert in police training to testify, in § 1983 action against city arising from police officer's shooting of suspect, that, under accepted police practices, officer should have used options other than deadly force, notwithstanding city's contention that, as officer was under no legal duty to retreat when faced with deadly force, expert's testimony redefined law; expert agreed that officer reasonably perceived threat of deadly force only when asked to assume version of facts most favorable to officer, and expert did not testify that resort to other options was required by state law, but, rather, by generally accepted police practices. Zuchel v. City and County of Denver, Colo., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 997 F.2d 730, rehearing denied. Evidence 516

Excluding expert testimony on proper use of police dogs and slapjacks in effecting arrest was abuse of discretion in action arising when arrestee was seriously injured when bitten by police dog and struck in the head by slapjack while being arrested. Kopf v. Skyrm, C.A.4 (Md.) 1993, 993 F.2d 374. Evidence 512

Medical expert's report was not sufficient to establish that publicly-employed physicians violated medical standards in referring city correctional officer to psychiatric hospital, and physicians thus were not liable under §§ 1983 for due process violations in their individual capacities, in that report never articulated, in any legally cognizable way, what standards of medical community governed involuntary commitment, and expert simply expressed his personal disagreement with physicians' treatment decisions. Algarin v. New York City Dept. of Correction, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 469. Health 926

Board certified neurological surgeon who treated thousands of spinal cord injuries during his career and extensively reviewed arrestee's medical records, was imminently qualified to offer an expert opinion regarding cause of arrestee's broken neck in § 1983 action against police officers. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Evidence 544

Testimony from § 1983 plaintiff's expert that expert did not perceive any act of aggression on plaintiff's part when he watched videotape of incident involving correction officers was admissible in excessive force action, even though testimony by defendants concerning their subjective beliefs about incident had been excluded. Schultz v. Amick, N.D.Iowa 1997, 955 F.Supp. 1087. Evidence 510

Flat rate fee of $2000 for defendants' expert, nationally recognized in field of law enforcement, to give his deposition at his own office to plaintiffs in §§ 1983 action against sheriff and deputy for use of excessive force, was exorbitant and unreasonable, even if the expert blocked out an entire day for the deposition, absent any explanation why he blocked out an entire day for a deposition, even short ones, and where the issues on which he would render an opinion, police standards, were not complex, and the flat fee could amount to over $600 per hour. Massasoit v. Carter, M.D.N.C.2005, 227 F.R.D. 264. Federal Civil Procedure 1333

5286. Examination of witnesses, evidence and witnesses

Court's error in denying plaintiff the opportunity to cross-examine police officer concerning the charges officer had in mind when he first tried to arrest plaintiff was prejudicial to plaintiff's §§ 1983 excessive force claim; by wrongly removing the unconstitutional false arrest claim from the trial and rejecting plaintiff's attempts right after that to ask officer about the charges he had in mind, the jury may have incorrectly concluded that the court disbelieved plaintiff's version of the events. Davis v. Rodriguez, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 364 F.3d 424. Federal Courts 903

Trial judge's questioning of police officer during direct examination by defense counsel, in § 1983 suit against second police officer in which arrestee alleged that second officer assaulted arrestee, was within judge's discretion and did not indicate that judge was biased against defendant, where testifying officer was closest to arrestee when alleged assault occurred and judge questioned officer to clarify officer's statement about officer's lack of memory of assault. Deary v. City of Gloucester, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1993, 9 F.3d 191. Witnesses 246(2)

Martial arts instructor was qualified to offer a limited opinion regarding the types of bodily responses generally associated with pressurized neck restraints based on his experience in martial arts in § 1983 action brought by arrestee whose neck was broken in arrest. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Evidence 537

The fact that lay opinion witness may not have ever personally seen anyone's neck broken in the fashion she claimed arrestee's neck was broken did not automatically render her eyewitness account of the events in question inadmissible in arrestee's § 1983 action; witness could testify to what she observed. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Evidence 474(3)

Exclamation of witness, upon seeing police officer restrain arrestee, "they just broke his neck," was an excited utterance admissible as hearsay exception in arrestee's § 1983 action. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Evidence 121(1)

5287. Weight and sufficiency of evidence, evidence and witnesses

Female corrections officers, who were subjects of two inmate letters containing drawing and sexually explicit language and who showed that male supervisor failed to report the slanderous letter to a higher-ranking authority, failed to conduct any credible investigations about its authorship or circulation, and engaged in inappropriate conversations with supervisors and officers about the contents/targets of the defamatory letters, provided sufficient evidence to demonstrate intentional harassment by male co-workers and supervisor, based on sex, sufficiently extensive to render the work environment hostile in violation of equal protection. Dawson v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 176. Constitutional Law 224(3); Prisons 10

District court considering summary judgment motion of defendants in police detainee's § 1983 action against police officers, police chief, and city for alleged use of excessive force in violation of detainee's Fourth Amendment rights could properly consider evidence of over 70 excessive force complaints made against city police department in four years, as evidence that the city and the police department knew that citizens were accusing its officers of using excessive force in the course of their duties, and that the city acted with deliberate indifference, as required to support detainee's Monell claim. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Evidence 137; Federal Civil Procedure 2545

Discharged police officer did not establish § 1983 cause of action against town for alleged harassment; there was insufficient evidence to establish that the alleged harassment endured by officer and his wife at their home was so widespread that, although not authorized by written law or express municipal policy, it was so permanent and well settled as to constitute custom or usage with the force of law. Lightner v. Town of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1489. Civil Rights 1421

5288. Privileged information, evidence and witnesses

Information as to whether undercover police officers were present at demonstration was not protected from discovery in §§ 1983 action pursuant to law enforcement privilege. Kunstler v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 327. Witnesses 216(1)

Citizen expressly waived work product privilege to investigation that his criminal defense attorney conducted after citizen was convicted of murder, when he allowed his attorney to testify during hearing on his motion for new trial in state court about conversations with citizen regarding other person's involvement in murder, for purpose of §§ 1983 lawsuit against police officers alleging violation of his constitutional rights during criminal investigation and prosecution of murder case, although waiver was limited to fact work product, and not opinion work product, and to documents that reflected citizen's or his attorney's knowledge of evidence and testimony at issue in suit. Tennison v. City & County of San Francisco, N.D.Cal.2005, 226 F.R.D. 615. Federal Civil Procedure 1600(5)

Defendant in § 1983 civil rights action could not rely on right of privacy available explicitly under the California Constitution to withhold medical records from treating physician contained in worker's compensation file, as such could be abrogated where justified under federal law. Hutton v. City of Martinez, N.D.Cal.2003, 219 F.R.D. 164. Constitutional Law 82(7); Federal Civil Procedure 1598

5311. Definitional instructions

District court's failure to give proffered instruction defining policymakers for purposes of § 1983 civil rights action as review committee, task force director, and squad leader was not prejudicial error; instruction given adequately apprised jury of who could be policymaker, where it was clear from evidence that only review committee and task force director could make policy for task force. Maltby v. Winston, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 36 F.3d 548, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2576, 515 U.S. 1141, 132 L.Ed.2d 827, rehearing denied 116 S.Ct. 17, 515 U.S. 1178, 132 L.Ed.2d 901. Federal Courts 911

Error, if any, in failing to give definitional instructions in arrestee's civil rights action was not reversible; once jury determined that arrestee suffered no "injury" as result of alleged use of excessive force, jury never reached interrogatories that could have been affected by definitions on concepts of "color of law," "unreasonable force," "denial of medical attention," "conspiracy," "joint tort-feasors," and "municipal liability." Knight v. Caldwell, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 970 F.2d 1430, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1298, 507 U.S. 926, 122 L.Ed.2d 688. Federal Courts 911

5312. Curative or limiting instructions

Curative instructions by trial judge in § 1983 action by inmate with respect to improper testimony by government's witness as to inmate's prior incarceration in hospital for criminally insane did not render testimony harmless, where testimony related to sensitive issue of inmate's mental illness, testimony was elicited, apparently by prearrangement, by counsel representing public officials, testimony was given close to end of trial, testimony risked undermining inmate's credibility in close case where parties' conflicting testimony was virtually only evidence, and retrial would not take long. Davidson v. Smith, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 9 F.3d 4. Federal Courts 896.1

Testimony by motorist's fiancée, that motorist had smoked marijuana did not require mistrial of § 1983 civil rights action arising from administration of breathalyzer test and DUI charge following motorist's collision with police van since cautionary instruction to jury adequately cured any possible prejudicial effect caused by testimony. Donald v. Rast, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 927 F.2d 379, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 96, 502 U.S. 827, 116 L.Ed.2d 68, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 921, 502 U.S. 1051, 116 L.Ed.2d 820. Federal Civil Procedure 2011

In civil rights action by foster child against placement agency for failing to supervise placement adequately, fact that foster child had recently borne out-of-wedlock child was not relevant on theory offered by agency that child's having borne child showed that her capacity to perform and enjoy sex was not greatly harmed by her abuse in foster home, and, therefore, foster child was entitled to have cautionary instruction to jury that her having had out-of-wedlock child, or, for that matter, any sort of sexual conduct, should no be taken as bearing on credibility. Doe v. New York City Dept. of Social Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 649 F.2d 134. Civil Rights 1414; Federal Civil Procedure 2173

5313. Supplemental instructions

Giving jurors in civil rights action supplemental instructions and allowing them to redeliberate after jury announced its initial verdict and damages award which was apparently incomplete and reflected jury confusion or uncertainty was proper; by resubmitting verdict, judge did not coerce jurors but rather aided them by describing means of properly translating their previous findings of fact into legal outcome. Hafner v. Brown, C.A.4 (Md.) 1992, 983 F.2d 570. Federal Civil Procedure 1974.1; Federal Civil Procedure 1975

5314. Arrests, instructions--Generally

Jury instruction that arrestee could prevail under § 1983 against officer, who told fellow officers assembled for roll call that arrestee could be lawfully arrested for criminal trespass, only if officer arrested arrestee was incorrect because one who directs or assists unlawful arrest may be liable. Gordon v. Degelmann, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 29 F.3d 295, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1437

In action under this section to recover for injuries plaintiffs suffered, during and after their arrest, at hands of several deputies, judge's instructions and special verdict form adequately explained all claims and theories advanced by both parties. Keyes v. Lauga, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 635 F.2d 330. Federal Civil Procedure 2174

5315. ---- Deadly force, arrests, instructions

Instruction in civil rights action arising out of police shooting that jury had to determine whether police officer had reasonable belief that deadly force was necessary to prevent death or great bodily harm to him or another when he fired his weapon was proper, despite claim that court did not limit jury's consideration of alternative options or strategies which police officer might have followed. Palmquist v. Selvik, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 111 F.3d 1332, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1437

Evidence did not support deadly force instructions in arrestee's § 1983 action asserting that use of police dog during arrest constituted excessive force; arrestee suffered only nonlife-threatening injuries that did not require serious medical attention, dog was trained to release on command and did in fact release arrestee on command, and no admissible evidence indicated particular dog's capacity for harm. Quintanilla v. City of Downey, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 353, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 972, 519 U.S. 1122, 136 L.Ed.2d 856. Civil Rights 1437

5316. ---- Excessive force, arrests, instructions

Trial judge's instructions on §§ 1983 claim for excessive use of force against officer based on officer's failure to intervene in the beating of a juvenile by a fellow officer, specifically that the officer had to have a realistic opportunity to prevent the officer's actions from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, adequately took into account the question of whether the officer had enough time to intervene. Torres-Rivera v. O'Neill-Cancel, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 406 F.3d 43. Civil Rights 1437

Proffered instruction on suspect's right to use self-defense during attempted seizure, when officer has made deliberate effort to conceal his identity as police officer, was properly refused as confusing in excessive force suit involving high-speed chase and shooting death of suspect by off-duty officer, considering that officer made repeated attempts to identify himself as police officer and that correct instructions were given on law governing excessive force claims. Soller v. Moore, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 84 F.3d 964. Civil Rights 1437

"Heat of battle" instruction that standard for judging reasonableness of police officers' use of force in making arrests was not what was appropriate in quiet sanctity in court room but, rather, that standard appropriate to circumstances in which incident happened was proper in arrestees' § 1983 action against police officers for excessive use of force, in view of evidence that some of arrestees' injuries were suffered while police were restraining them and bringing them under control. Cox v. Treadway, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1996, 75 F.3d 230, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 78, 519 U.S. 821, 136 L.Ed.2d 37. Civil Rights 1437

Giving instruction that arrestee needed to establish that force grossly disproportionate to cause and inspired by malice had produced severe injury, while error, did not require reversal where arrestee did not state grounds for requesting one instruction rather than another; jury should have been instructed on objective reasonableness standard. Hebron v. Touhy, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 18 F.3d 421, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 631

Instruction that police officer is prohibited from using more force than reasonably necessary to effect the arrest and that whether the degree of force used in the case before the jury was excessive or unreasonable in a constitutional sense is to be determined in light of all the facts and circumstances was not unfairly repetitive of initial excessive force instruction which stated that the Fourth Amendment protects a person from the use of unreasonable force while being arrested by a law enforcement officer. Stachniak v. Hayes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 989 F.2d 914. Civil Rights 1437

District court in § 1983 suit alleging that officer used excessive force in obtaining blood sample from plaintiff arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol properly refused instruction which might have misled jury to believe that use of approved medical procedures was a complete defense to charge of unreasonable force asserted by plaintiff. Hammer v. Gross, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 932 F.2d 842, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 582, 502 U.S. 980, 116 L.Ed.2d 607, on remand 981 F.2d 1115. Civil Rights 1440

Instructions given in action under this section against city for fatal injury sustained by arrestee, which charged that jurors could find city maintained a custom of using excessive police force through its high-ranking officials whom were defined as the mayor, city council, police chief or some similarly ranked official whose acts may be fairly said to represent official policy did not comply with applicable standards; moreover, court further erred in allowing jury to consider whether "some similarly ranked official" maintained a custom of using excessive force that overrode city policy where the only "officials" involved in the case were the mayor and the city council and the police chief and a number of lesser officers and where there was no proof that any police officer subordinate to chief even possibly could have occupied the role of a city policymaker. Webster v. City of Houston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1984, 735 F.2d 838, on rehearing 739 F.2d 993. Civil Rights 1437

In §§ 1983 action brought by construction site protestor against state police officers, alleging false arrest and malicious prosecution, court's allegedly erroneous jury instructions on excessive force did not warrant new trial; applicable law did not clearly hold that any force exerted during course of unlawful arrest was excessive as matter of law, and it was therefore not fundamental error to include jury instruction to that effect. Zellner v. Summerlin,

E.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 154. Federal Civil Procedure 2336

Instruction, in § 1983 plaintiff's excessive force action, that defendants and plaintiff were involved in altercation wherein force was used thereby "creating a situation where the plaintiff, while in the physical control of the defendants, either fell or was dropped to the ground," did not improperly allow jury to find liability on basis of negligence; statement, though perhaps not faultless, adequately conveyed to jury that plaintiff ended up on ground as result of use of force by defendants, not by defendants' mere inadvertence or negligence. Schultz v. Amick, N.D.Iowa 1997, 955 F.Supp. 1087. Civil Rights 1437

5317. ---- Probable cause, arrests, instructions

Submission of erroneous jury instruction on emergency measures defense, as could allow jury to improperly find that arrestee's conduct of striking off-duty police officer with telephone receiver after telling officer to get off the phone because there was an emergency created by a stalled truck on the highway was justified, under New York law, as would support finding that officer lacked probable cause to arrest, warranted new trial in arrestee's § 1983 false arrest and malicious prosecution claims against arresting officer. Jocks v. Tavernier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 128. Federal Civil Procedure 2336

Trial court's instruction on probable cause properly directed jury to consider only whether police officer had probable cause for charging civil rights plaintiff with breach of peace rather than whether officer had probable cause for additional charge of threatening imposed after defendant was arrested; jury focus on breach of peace charge was substantial enough for it to request a copy of the actual statutory language, and no similar request was made for statute prohibiting threatening. Warren v. Dwyer, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1990, 906 F.2d 70, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 431, 498 U.S. 967, 112 L.Ed.2d 414. Civil Rights 1437

In § 1983 action brought by arrestee against police officers, stemming from his seizure and transportation to premises of search warrant, court properly declined to instruct jury on defense theories permitting brief detentions of individuals based on reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing, since probable cause was required to support level of intrusion upon arrestee, and thus officers' motions for judgment as matter of law and for new trial would be properly denied. Pappas v. New Haven Police Dept., D.Conn.2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Civil Procedure 2336

5318. Bail, instructions

If, on retrial, defendant Florida county judge, charged with violating plaintiff's civil rights in restraining him, conducting contempt proceedings against him and ordering him incarcerated, asserted defense of qualified immunity based on nonjudicial acts such as conservator of the peace, jury was to be charged with regard to statute dealing with bail and first appearance procedures as germane to question of good faith in its "objective" sense. Harper v. Merckle, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1981, 638 F.2d 848, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 93, 454 U.S. 816, 70 L.Ed.2d 85. Federal Courts 943.1

5319. Burden of proof, instructions

Erroneous jury instructions regarding civil rights plaintiff's burden of proof did not prejudice plaintiff's ability to obtain a fair trial regarding claim that second arrest was not supported by probable cause; evidence contained two dramatically conflicting versions of events regarding the second arrest, if jury believed arrestee's version confusing jury instructions would have no bearing on probable cause finding, and jury was explicitly instructed of constitutional requirement that officer ascertain reason for arrestee's accidental contact with officer. Tatro v. Kervin, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1994, 41 F.3d 9. Federal Courts 910 mayor for position of fire chief and, hence, was given more protection than he was legally entitled to when, in suit based on allegation of intentional discrimination, trial court gave instruction to effect that, should jury find that mayor considered impermissible factors in his promotional decision, burden of proof was on mayor to show that he would have selected candidate he chose irrespective of any political considerations. DiPiro v. Taft, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1978, 584 F.2d 1, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1229, 440 U.S. 914, 59 L.Ed.2d 463. Municipal Corporations 196

Where instruction allocating burden of proof on qualified official immunity defense to defendant officials was accepted without protest by both parties to civil rights suit, the parties were bound by it. Soto v. Chardon, D.C.Puerto Rico 1981, 514 F.Supp. 339, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 681 F.2d 42, certiorari granted 103 S.Ct. 339, 459 U.S. 987, 74 L.Ed.2d 382, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 343, 459 U.S. 989, 74 L.Ed.2d 384, affirmed 103 S.Ct. 2611, 462 U.S. 650, 77 L.Ed.2d 74. Federal Civil Procedure 2177.1

5319A. Sufficiency of evidence, instructions

District court's erroneous jury instruction, in corrections officers' Olech-based "class of one" equal protection claim, that certain findings made by arbitrator in prior employment arbitration proceedings were binding on jury as matter of law, was not harmless; instruction effectively precluded jury from weighing any evidence that Department of Corrections (DOC) submitted in support of their theory that rational basis existed for decision to discipline corrections officers, thereby causing prejudice to DOC. Cobb v. Pozzi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 363 F.3d 89. Federal Courts 909

Instruction in § 1983 action, stating that Caucasian librarians had to prove, by preponderance of evidence, that acts of race discrimination by members of board of trustees for public library system and director of system were proximate or legal cause of damages sustained by librarians adequately instructed jury not to find for librarians if they believed the librarians would have been transferred irrespective of race. Bogle v. McClure, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1347, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 77 Fed.Appx. 510, 2003 WL 21804722, certiorari dismissed 124 S.Ct. 1168, 540 U.S. 1158, 157 L.Ed.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1438

5320. Causation, instructions

Jury instruction on causality, in civil rights deprivation case arising out of a shooting by police, was proper even though it did not specifically state that "affirmative link" must be established between supervisors and activity of police officers in question in order for supervisors to be liable. Gutierrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 882 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1437

There was no error in giving the standard general proximate cause instruction in § 1983 suit arising out of suicide of pretrial detainee. Roberts v. City of Troy, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 773 F.2d 720. Civil Rights 1437

5321. Conspiracy, instructions

Instruction in § 1983 action which implied that mere acquiescence by one police officer in other officers' beating of plaintiff was sufficient to constitute civil conspiracy under § 1983 was proper; testimony of eyewitness that police officer watched others beat plaintiff combined with official relationship which officer shared with other police officers sufficed to demonstrate, indirectly, agreement between them. Hafner v. Brown, C.A.4 (Md.) 1992, 983 F.2d 570. Conspiracy 21

When considered in its entirety, instruction on conspiracy in connection with plaintiff's claim that district attorney had conspired with state police to deprive him of his civil rights by charging him with unlawful assembly was not erroneous on ground that it was too restrictive in requiring a showing of invidious discrimination. Valdez v. Black, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1971, 446 F.2d 1071, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1167, 405 U.S. 963, 31 L.Ed.2d 238. Trial 295(4); Federal Civil Procedure 2182.1

5322. Damages, instructions--Generally

Damages instructions in section 1983 suit based on alleged violations of the First and Fourteenth Amendments permitted jury to award damages based on abstract value of the constitutional rights and did not focus solely on plaintiff's injury where instructions were divided into three distinct segments of compensatory damages for harm to plaintiff, punitive damages, and additional compensatory damages for violations of constitutional rights. Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, U.S.Mich.1986, 106 S.Ct. 2537, 477 U.S. 299, 91 L.Ed.2d 249, on remand 803 F.2d 721. Civil Rights 1434

Absent basis for inferring that cause of public employee's reported stress was denial of due process rather than his termination, district court was not required to instruct jury that they could award damages for emotional suffering caused by denial of due process with respect to employee's discharge; employee's testimony of posttermination depression and stress did not distinguish between emotional suffering due to termination and suffering due to denial of due process, and employee offered no witness to corroborate his testimony as to his mental state. Koopman v. Water Dist. No. 1 of Johnson County, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1994, 41 F.3d 1417, on remand 1995 WL 646786, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 420, 516 U.S. 965, 133 L.Ed.2d 337. Damages 216(10)

In civil rights action brought by administrator of prisoner's estate arising from prisoner's death by cardiorespiratory arrest, trial court erroneously instructed jury to assess as damages pecuniary loss suffered by prisoner's children as result of his death, and such error required reversal, since action was brought on behalf of estate to recover for injuries suffered by prisoner. Bass by Lewis v. Wallenstein, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 769 F.2d 1173. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 909

In former inmate's action under this section against correctional officers arising from alleged beating, in which plaintiff's testimony at trial established that he suffered actual, compensable injury as a consequence of the beating, instruction telling the jury to consider as an element of damages the fact that the rights lost were constitutional rights was not improper as allowing monetary damages for constitutional deprivation in itself as opposed to injuries resulting from the deprivation. Freeman v. Franzen, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1982, 695 F.2d 485, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 3553, 463 U.S. 1214, 77 L.Ed.2d 1400. Civil Rights 1437

5323. ---- Mitigation, damages, instructions

Trial court's mitigation of damages charge was sufficient to apprise jury of plaintiff's duty to mitigate damages and, without evidence in the record showing that plaintiff made no attempt to find employment elsewhere, further charge on the particulars of the responsibility to mitigate was not necessary. Selzer v. Fleisher, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 629 F.2d 809, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 2046, 451 U.S. 970, 68 L.Ed.2d 348. Labor And Employment 874

5324. ---- Punitive, damages, instructions

In civil rights action, instruction on punitive damages was erroneous where it failed to inform jury that wrongful acts had to be done in reckless or callous disregard of plaintiff's rights and where it stated that there had to be an intentional and willful deprivation by defendant in order to award plaintiff punitive damages; proper instruction was that jury could award punitive damages if it found that defendant willfully and intentionally deprived plaintiff of his federally protected rights or if defendant engaged in conduct that exhibited a reckless or callous disregard of plaintiff's rights. Grimm v. Leinart, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1983, 705 F.2d 179, rehearing granted 710 F.2d 233, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 1415, 465 U.S. 1066, 79 L.Ed.2d 741. Civil Rights 1434

An instruction on punitive damages in a civil rights action is appropriate when facts are such that jury can find that action and conduct of defendants was willful and malicious apart from any showing of personal animosity between parties. Gill v. Manuel, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 488 F.2d 799. Civil Rights 1434

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Any error in instruction regarding assessment of punitive damages in § 1983 action brought by university employees found to have been discharged in retaliation for exercise of their constitutional free speech rights did not prejudice defendant university officials; jury was instructed that punitive damages were designed to punish wrongdoer who has purposely committed act of extraordinary, outrageous misconduct and has maliciously deprived another of his or her rights. Sanchez v. Sanchez, D.N.M.1991, 777 F.Supp. 906. Federal Courts 908.1

5325. ---- Nominal, damages, instructions

Instruction on nominal damages was warranted in § 1983 action premised on excessive force; plaintiffs failed to produce medical testimony regarding their physical injuries, with nearly all of their damages evidence consisting of their own testimony, and there was evidence from which jury could have disbelieved extent of plaintiffs' physical and emotional injuries. Briggs v. Marshall, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 93 F.3d 355. Civil Rights 1437

District court should have instructed jury that it was required to award nominal damages if it found that § 1983 plaintiff's Eighth Amendment rights were violated, and court should have provided corresponding special verdict form. Gibeau v. Nellis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 18 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Civil Procedure 2237.1

Police officers being sued for damages for use of excessive force were not entitled to an instruction on nominal damages where arrestee testified that officer kneed him in the groin and kicked him while he was lying on the stairwell, and that another officer punched him in the nose, choked him, threw him into a brick wall, and also kicked him when he was down, and where police officers contended that arrestee was injured when they were forced to respond to his violent efforts and there was no denial that arrestee suffered physical injuries during the incident. Stachniak v. Hayes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 989 F.2d 914. Civil Rights 1437

5326. Deliberate indifference, instructions

Court was not required to instruct jurors to find by preponderance of the evidence that county or some policy-making official made a conscious choice or was deliberately indifferent to establishing custom which caused deprivation of juvenile detainee's constitutional rights where it did instruct that inadequacy of detention officers' training could provide a basis for liability only where failure to train or supervise them amounted to deliberate indifference or the failure to train represented deliberate or conscious choice by the county. Flores v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 92 F.3d 258, rehearing denied. Federal Civil Procedure 2183

In suit against prison guards for violation of inmate's Eighth Amendment rights on ground that they witnessed inmate's beating by other inmates but refused to intervene, instruction that jurors could infer guards acted with deliberate indifference if they had actual knowledge of impending injury and that injury, or further injury was "readily preventable" was proper despite contention that court should have used the term "reasonably preventable"; guard's intent is not to be determined by reference to objective standards of reasonableness, and "readily preventable" language simply addressed guards' subjective intent and did not define the scope of their duties or obligations towards inmates. Gibbs v. Franklin, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 49 F.3d 1206, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 167, 516 U.S. 860, 133 L.Ed.2d 109. Civil Rights 1437

Erroneously instructing jury that "deliberate indifference" standard applied in evaluating police officer's conduct was not plain error in civil rights action arising when police officer fatally shot victim during traffic stop; error was invited by parties, and did not seriously affect fairness of trial, its integrity, and/or its public reputation. Turner v. White, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 980 F.2d 1180. Federal Courts 630.1

5327. Due care, instructions

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Instruction to jury that lack of due care was sufficient to create liability under § 1983 was erroneous, and instruction given prejudiced police officers in action arising out of shooting by police officer, so that in light of conflicting evidence presented as to whether police officer acted intentionally or negligently in shooting civil rights claimant, new trial was required. Rinker v. Napa County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 831 F.2d 829. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Civil Procedure 2336

5328. Due process, instructions

Once district court had ruled as matter of law that public employee had been denied pretermination and posttermination hearing, court was not required to instruct jury on procedural requirements of due process, despite employee's contention that jury could not answer whether employee was afforded constitutional due process without knowing what due process involved; as case was submitted, all jury needed to decide was whether employee's medical condition was sufficient reason for his termination and whether employer could have provided job opening suitable for him. Koopman v. Water Dist. No. 1 of Johnson County, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1994, 41 F.3d 1417, on remand 1995 WL 646786, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 420, 516 U.S. 965, 133 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1438

Under this section, action for damages on ground that summary disciplinary action taken against plaintiffs while they were being held in county jail violated their constitutional rights, plaintiffs' requested instructions defining due process and noting irrelevance of plaintiffs' guilt were, when district court's charge was read as a whole, not improperly refused as unnecessarily repetitive or improper statements of the law. Gardner v. Joyce, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1973, 482 F.2d 283, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 731, 414 U.S. 1096, 38 L.Ed.2d 555. Federal Civil Procedure 2176.3

5329. Employment, instructions--Generally

Submission to jury of instruction on Wyoming law on rights of continuing contract teachers, including procedure necessary for proper termination, was not prejudicial and confusing due to fact that teacher was not terminated formally, in teacher's civil rights suit alleging retaliation by principal for her exercise of First Amendment rights in sending letter to Wyoming Education Association asking that principal be investigated where teacher was suspended and principal had twice recommended to school board that teacher be fired. Wren v. Spurlock, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1986, 798 F.2d 1313, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1287, 479 U.S. 1085, 94 L.Ed.2d 145. Federal Courts 908.1

5330. ---- Academic freedom, employment, instructions

In civil rights action arising out of discharge of tenured public school teacher wherein school superintendent testified at length that the teacher's unsatisfactory evaluation was based on his inability to provide an "instruction-like atmosphere" conductive to learning and wherein both parties offered evidence concerning the teacher's philosophy of teaching and its effect on classroom discipline, district court did not abuse discretion by instructing the jury that under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, a public school teacher has some measure of academic freedom in the classroom itself and that a teacher cannot be discharged for using a particular teaching method or technique relevant to the proper teaching of the subject unless the school district establishes that the teacher had prior notice that he should not use such method or technique. Simineo v. School Dist. No. 16, Park County, Wyoming, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1979, 594 F.2d 1353. Civil Rights 1438

5331. ---- Custom or usage

Hispanic customer who had been arrested for shoplifting was not prejudiced by jury instruction and special interrogatory in civil rights action that addressed department store's liability as security guard's employer on whether employer had policy, custom, or usage to discriminate against Hispanic customers on account of race or national origin, rather than whether store had policy of discrimination against "minorities"; there was no direct evidence of discrimination against minority groups other than Hispanics, and instruction and special interrogatory made it clear that district court was referring to group that had been traditionally victimized by discrimination. Rojas v. Alexander's Dept. Store, Inc., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 924 F.2d 406, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 52, 502 U.S. 809, 116 L.Ed.2d 30, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 622, 502 U.S. 1000, 116 L.Ed.2d 644. Federal Courts 909

5332. ---- Freedom of speech, employment, instructions

Jury charge in employee's civil rights action against government employer based on constructive discharge allegedly in violation of First Amendment must instruct jury, if employee claims that adverse decision was based on protected speech and employer claims that decision was based on something else, what to do if jury concludes that employer had both motives. Gooden v. Neal, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 17 F.3d 925, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 73, 513 U.S. 816, 130 L.Ed.2d 28. Civil Rights 1438

Jury in § 1983 action was properly instructed as to protected nature of speech by university employees, who had circulated petition critical of university administration, particularly absent indication that university's interest in effective and efficient fulfillment of its responsibilities to public was threatened by petition. Sanchez v. Sanchez, D.N.M.1991, 777 F.Supp. 906. Civil Rights 1438

5333. ---- Political affiliation, employment, instructions

In action brought by public employees against public officials alleging that officials conspired together to bring about their resignations in violation of their rights to due process of law, that terminations were politically motivated and violated employees' rights to political association under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend 1 protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1, trial court failed to adequately instruct on issue of whether terminations were necessitated by financial crisis and were not due in any way to their political affiliation. Rosaly v. Ignacio, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1979, 593 F.2d 145. Conspiracy 21

Instruction to effect that, in event position of fire chief was a policymaking one, mayor was permitted to take political affiliation into consideration in choosing from top three candidates was not erroneous in action wherein plaintiff alleged that he was denied equal protection when mayor based his decision to appoint a person other than plaintiff to position of fire chief on political motive rather than merit. DiPiro v. Taft, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1978, 584 F.2d 1, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1229, 440 U.S. 914, 59 L.Ed.2d 463. Municipal Corporations 196

5334. ---- Scope of employment, instructions

Refusal to award prisoner punitive damages on excessive force civil rights claims against prison guards was not abuse of discretion, where inmate admittedly disobeyed orders and resisted officers, and prison had not developed policies governing use of "restraint" chair in which prisoner was left for prolonged periods. Guerra v. Drake, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2004, 371 F.3d 404. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Trial court's instruction, issued at close of discharged black employee's civil rights action, regarding dismissal of official-capacity defendants amounted to prejudicial error in suit against city, which was remaining defendant; court's characterization of individual defendants' actions as "legal actions" within scope of their employment could only have left jury with impression that judge had already determined that these individuals had done no wrong. Busby v. City of Orlando, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 931 F.2d 764. Civil Rights 1438; Federal Courts 908.1

5335. Good faith, instructions

Instructions, taken as whole, in excessive use of force action brought against police officers arising out of officers'

shooting of security guard, did not mislead jury, even though jury was erroneously instructed on officers' good faith belief and on affirmative defense of qualified immunity; court correctly instructed jury on established law of excessive use of force, instruction required jury to determine reasonableness of officers' conduct considering all facts and circumstances, jury found that officers did not violate guard's constitutional rights, and there was no evidence that jury found that officers were entitled to qualified immunity. Ansley v. Heinrich, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 925 F.2d 1339. Civil Rights 1437; Civil Rights 1440

In action against police officers, under this section, instructions that defendant who acts in good faith and with reasonable belief that his conduct is constitutional cannot be found liable under this section did not sharply etch "two-hurdle" requirement as well as might have been, but issues were nonetheless fairly put to jury, which must have concluded both that probable cause was lacking for arrest and that officers did not reasonably believe in good faith that probable cause existed. Smiddy v. Varney, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1981, 665 F.2d 261, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 65, 459 U.S. 829, 74 L.Ed.2d 66, on remand 574 F.Supp. 710. Civil Rights 1440

In civil rights action arising out of treatment given to juveniles at a Wisconsin juvenile correctional institution, content of requested instruction as to whether defendants acted in good faith was adequately reflected in the instruction given, that a defendant's belief that his acts were lawful were required to be reasonable in order to amount to good faith. Mary and Crystal v. Ramsden, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1980, 635 F.2d 590. Federal Civil Procedure 2176.3

Where it appeared in action under this section on theory of false imprisonment that defendant sheriff had continued to keep plaintiff imprisoned because of typographical error in grand jury report, and where sheriff timely requested instruction outlining requirements for reasonable, good-faith defense, such instruction should have been given. Bryan v. Jones, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 530 F.2d 1210, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 174, 429 U.S. 865, 50 L.Ed.2d 145. Civil Rights 1440

In civil rights suits against city and public officials for shooting deaths, good-faith immunity was affirmative defense, and thus jury instructions which did not require plaintiffs to prove unlawful killing but which did require defendants to prove good-faith defense were proper, and, in any case, because standards for determining "unlawfulness" and good-faith immunity were identical and because jury found against immunity jury would also have found unlawfulness, any error in failure of particular instructions to require proofs that killings were unlawful was harmless. Roman v. City of Richmond, N.D.Cal.1983, 570 F.Supp. 1544. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 912

5336. Immunity, instructions

A jury instruction on qualified immunity from liability in a civil rights action was not so inherently contradictory that it was confusing to the jury, where the essence of the charge to the jury was first to determine whether plaintiff's conduct was sufficient to justify a reasonable person in believing there was reasonable ground for arresting the plaintiff and, if not, the jury was to consider whether a reasonable police officer would have found that probable cause existed that the plaintiff had committed or was committing the criminal acts for which he was arrested. Warren v. Dwyer, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1990, 906 F.2d 70, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 431, 498 U.S. 967, 112 L.Ed.2d 414. Civil Rights 1440

In university police lieutenant's civil rights action for wrongful discharge, district court properly refused to instruct jury as to qualified immunity on part of chief of university police force and director of university's division of public safety, since jury could not have found that they acted in good faith in discharging the lieutenant, inasmuch as they attempted to rely on a nonexistent confidentiality policy, inconsistent with state law and never communicated to the lieutenant, discharge had resulted after they had engaged in wrongdoing, and circumstances of discharge evidenced malicious retaliation. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 629 F.2d 993, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3063, 452 U.S. 926, 69

L.Ed.2d 428. Civil Rights 1440

When the jury, in civil rights action brought against jail officials for cruel and unusual punishment, was instructed that, in order to find defendants liable, it had to find a "conscious purpose to inflict suffering" or "rampant deficiencies" due to a "callous indifference" to the deceased prisoner's medical needs, it was adequately apprised of the threshold conduct necessary to negate defendants' qualified immunity; accordingly, there was no error in failing to give separate charges with respect to liability and immunity, though this would have been the better practice. Fielder v. Bosshard, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1979, 590 F.2d 105. Civil Rights 1440

University officials alleged to have discharged employees in retaliation for employees exercising their free speech rights were not entitled to jury instruction addressing their qualified immunity defense. Sanchez v. Sanchez, D.N.M.1991, 777 F.Supp. 906. Civil Rights 1440

Prison officials were not entitled to qualified immunity instruction in action brought by inmate alleging that prison officials used excessive force against her while she was incarcerated in violation of Eighth Amendment; jury would be instructed that in order to recover under Eighth Amendment, plaintiff must show that defendant's conduct was obdurate or wanton, and if jury so found, it could not find at same time that reasonable correctional officer would not have known that defendant was violating clearly established law under circumstances of case. Valdez v. Farmon, E.D.Cal.1991, 766 F.Supp. 1529. Civil Rights 1440

5337. Inferences, instructions

Absent any evidence of bad faith, arrestee who filed civil rights claims arising out of false arrest was not entitled to an instruction allowing jury to draw adverse inference from destruction of powder in his possession at time of arrest; arrestee claimed powder was sugar substitute, not cocaine, and thus that arresting officer who tasted powder lacked probable cause for arrest. Berkovich v. Hicks, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1018. Federal Civil Procedure 2173.1(2)

During pretrial proceedings, district court could decide issue of whether state inmate was entitled, at trial on his § 1983 claims, to have adverse inference instruction given to jury based on prison superintendent's failure to preserve certain videotapes as required by stipulation entered in prior action, despite defendants' contention that inmate lacked viable claim and notwithstanding possibility that issue would be rendered moot as a result of defendants' success on proposed motion for summary judgment or because case would prove to be triable only to court. Rush v. Artuz, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1937203, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2173

5338. Injury, instructions

While "severe injury" may not have been element of constitutional tort, judgment against inmate would not be disturbed, where inmate himself proposed instruction informing jury that "severe injury" was an essential element. Williams v. Boles, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 841 F.2d 181. Federal Courts 774

5339. Knowledge and intent, instructions

Instruction indicating that jury must find that police officer acted "knowingly" in order to establish § 1983 liability for officer's actions in shooting youth properly stated the law and did not tend to confuse the issue by suggesting that jury must find that officer harbored subjective malicious intent to kill youth; instruction clarified word "knowingly" to mean that the officer acted voluntarily and did not discharge weapon by mistake, and taken as a whole, instruction properly directed jury to consider only whether officer's actions were objectively reasonable in light of the circumstances as they would have appeared to him at the time. Samples v. City of Atlanta, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 916 F.2d 1548. Civil Rights 1440

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Trial court's refusal to give instruction that arresting officers' lack of specific intent or purpose to deprive arrestee of civil rights would not absolve officers from liability, if they did in fact deprive arrestee of rights, required reversal in civil rights action, where trial court erroneously charged jury that officers would not be liable if they acted in good faith and with reasonable belief that conduct was constitutional. Holt v. Artis, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1988, 843 F.2d 242. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 908.1

5340. Malice, instructions

Jury instruction in § 1983 civil rights action by former prisoner alleging cruel and unusual punishment, directing jury to look to all surrounding circumstances when deciding whether defendants acted maliciously, was inadequate; instruction failed to provide jury with sufficient objective criteria with which it could infer maliciousness and how to use those factors to arrive at conclusion regarding defendants' state of mind. Romano v. Howarth, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 998 F.2d 101. Civil Rights 1437

5341. Medical treatment, instructions

Instructing jury that finding of medical malpractice precluded finding of deliberate indifference was reversible error in inmate's civil rights action against prison doctor. Hathaway v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 99 F.3d 550. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 908.1

Jury instruction defining "serious medical need" as "one that has been diagnosed by a physician as requiring treatment, or one that is so obvious that even a lay person would easily recognize the necessity for a doctor's attention," was proper, in § 1983 action brought by pretrial detainee who claimed that jailers and sheriff ignored his warnings that he was at risk of assault and denied him adequate medical treatment after he was attacked by other prisoners; jailers and sheriff could not act with deliberate indifference to medical problems that were not obvious or diagnosed. Johnson v. Busby, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 953 F.2d 349. Civil Rights 1437

5342. Negligence, instructions

There was no error in refusing to give a negligence based instruction in § 1983 suit arising out of suicide of pretrial detainee where there was no evidence of intentional conduct which met the "shocks the conscience" test, for Eighth Amendment liability and state law provided a damage remedy. Roberts v. City of Troy, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1985, 773 F.2d 720. Civil Rights 1437

5343. Prison rules and regulations, instructions

In action brought under this section by state prisoner against prison officials, the trial court, in defining the proper test for measuring the validity of prison rules and regulations governing the practice of the Muslim religion by plaintiff and other black inmates, correctly charged that the test was whether the rules and regulations were "unreasonable and unjustified with respect to the needs of prison restraints and discipline." Wilson v. Prasse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 463 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1437

5344. Right to counsel, instructions

Inmate bringing § 1983 action against prison officials was not entitled to instruction that inmates in Nevada state prison were entitled to hire attorneys to represent them in disciplinary proceedings; even if consent decree conferred on inmates charged with major disciplinary violations a liberty interest in retaining counsel, prison officials did not violate that right with respect to inmate in question, since inmate was not convicted of major violation with which he was initially charged. Smith v. Sumner, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1993, 994 F.2d 1401. Civil Rights 1437; Prisons 13(9)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

5345. Reckless disregard, instructions

Giving of jury instruction that police officer had to have acted with deliberate or reckless indifference was reversible error in arrestee's § 1983 action against police officer alleging use of excessive force and arrest without probable cause; appropriate inquiry on both claims was an objective one, and instruction given injected an element of subjective intent to arrestee's claims. Mosley v. Wilson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 102 F.3d 85. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 908.1

Jury instructions in § 1983 action allowing jury to find municipal liability for failure to train deputies concerning use of force only upon showing of "reckless disregard" or "deliberate indifference" were not inconsistent with "deliberate indifference" standard enunciated by Supreme Court; definition of "reckless disregard" was effectively the same as cited Supreme Court language. Davis v. Mason County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 927 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1437

5346. Search and seizure, instructions

Submission of unobjected-to jury instruction asking whether defendant police officer had probable cause to believe that plaintiff arrestees possessed cocaine was not plain error in arrestees' § 1983 action alleging false arrest, despite arrestees' claim that, because they did not dispute that officers found cocaine in arrestees' room, only issue was ownership of that cocaine, thus making probable cause question of law; district court properly instructed jury relative to applicable legal standards, and factual issue was presented by arrestees' claim that defendant officer planted drugs upon which probable cause determination was based. Simms v. Village of Albion, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1098. Federal Courts 907

Instructing jury to apply Illinois state law standards, precluding strip searches of misdemeanor arrestees for marijuana, was prejudicial error in arrestee's civil rights action against police officers based on alleged Fourth Amendment violation; instruction essentially required jury to conclude that if strip search was for marijuana, it was unreasonable. Doe v. Burnham, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 6 F.3d 476, on remand 1994 WL 330243. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Courts 908.1

In prisoner's civil rights action against warden and correctional officers arising from detention and strip search following prison uprising, district court's charge as whole, instructing jury to determine whether under Fourth Amendment defendants acted in "objectively reasonable manner" during detention and strip search, did not adequately inform jury of applicable law regarding invasion of privacy under Fourth Amendment. Cornwell v. Dahlberg, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 963 F.2d 912. Civil Rights 1440

5347. Vicarious liability, instructions

Instruction that Title VII standards for retaliation claims applied to former state trooper's claims against former supervisor under § 1983 was misleading in that jury could have erroneously concluded that former supervisor could be held vicariously liable for violations of § 1983 committed by subordinates. Gierlinger v. New York State Police, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 15 F.3d 32. Civil Rights 1438

In civil rights action for unlawful seizure, instruction which would have made seizing officer liable for acts of other officers even if he had not authorized them was properly refused because it failed to state correct law. Kaiser v. Lief, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1989, 874 F.2d 732. Civil Rights 1437

5348. Miscellaneous instructions

In §§ 1983 action brought by corrections officers alleging equal protection violations, jury instruction that certain findings made by arbitrator were binding on jury as matter of law improperly accorded collateral estoppel effect to arbitrator's findings in arbitration proceedings concerning employment charges against corrections officers; officers' burden in arbitration was less exacting than that shouldered in district court. Cobb v. Pozzi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 363 F.3d 89. Arbitration 82(1); Civil Rights 1438

Instruction that both juvenile board and chief juvenile probation officer were policymakers for county required reversal of judgment against county in civil rights action where only the board was shown to be an official policymaker. Flores v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 92 F.3d 258, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1437

Instruction in federal civil rights action brought by prisoner who had been attacked by fellow inmates against prison guards alleging violation of prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights which stated that guards could be found liable if they were aware or should have been aware of risk of harm to prisoner improperly stated law and required new trial following entry of judgment for prisoner; instruction allowed jury to find liability under objective standard of culpability, which has been rejected. Randle v. Parker, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 48 F.3d 301. Civil Rights 1437; Federal Civil Procedure 2336

Inmates in § 1983 action were not entitled to instruction concerning correctional officers' failure to provide protective clothing for cleaning up sewage of correctional center's hospital, where case hinged on officers' knowledge that inmates were being exposed to potentially infectious sewage contaminated by AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) patients housed in hospital. Burton v. Armontrout, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 975 F.2d 543, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2960, 508 U.S. 972, 125 L.Ed.2d 661. Civil Rights 1437

In civil rights action against state prison officials, instruction on claim of brutality, although perhaps open to criticism on ground that it did not expressly require finding that force used was shocking or violative of universal standards of decency, did not constitute clear miscarriage of justice, particularly in light of evidence that one prisoner suffered cracked jaw, which bled profusely, and required hospitalization and pain medication for several days. Furtado v. Bishop, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1979, 604 F.2d 80, on remand 84 F.R.D. 671, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 710, 444 U.S. 1035, 62 L.Ed.2d 672. Federal Civil Procedure 2015

Any error in giving of missing witness charges in a § 1983 action brought by former probationary corrections officer for county against county undersheriff and others was harmless where those missing witnesses were expected to testify regarding former probationary officer's various rules infractions but undersheriff did not rely on those violations as justification for termination of officer. Sagendorf-Teal v. County of Rensselaer, N.D.N.Y.1995, 904 F.Supp. 95, affirmed 100 F.3d 270. Federal Civil Procedure 2336

In prisoner's civil rights action against prison superintendents in connection with loss of prisoner's legal brief, trial court properly instructed jury that adequate state court remedy existed in state court of claims in connection with loss of ordinary property; charge could not have distracted jury from its ultimate task of finding whether losses of ordinary property without corrective action might provide basis to find that superintendents deliberately denied prisoner his legal materials, because sanctioned losses of ordinary property might inevitably create condition in which legal materials would be lost. Morello v. James, W.D.N.Y.1992, 797 F.Supp. 223. Civil Rights 1437

5371. Causation, questions for jury

Whether superintendent of facility that was combination prison and hospital had responsibilities that ran to medical care and treatment of prisoners and whether any act of failure by superintendent was proximate cause of death of asthmatic prisoner presented questions for jury in § 1983 action brought against superintendent by prisoner's widow. Howell v. Burden, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1994, 12 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1429

Evidence that various city officials who were named defendants in civil rights action may have affirmatively promoted a policy which sanctioned actions resulting in due process violations required that jury be permitted to determine whether official directives of policy and procedure pertaining to taking custody of children in emergencies without obtaining prompt judicial ratification were the proximate cause of constitutional deprivation suffered by plaintiffs. Duchesne v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 566 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1431

In father's suit against county police officer seeking recovery for alleged wrongful death of his son, who was shot and killed by officer, issues as to credibility, proximate cause and contributory negligence were for jury, which could reasonably have found that use by police officer of force beyond that necessary for effective subjugation, including use of deadly weapon aimed at the body, was not proximately caused by son's self-induced hallucinatory state. Haber v. Nassau County, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 557 F.2d 322. Counties 224

Jury question was presented as to whether teacher's alleged use of excessive force against high school student was result of creation and perpetuation of policies that reflected deliberate indifference to the rights of pupils so as to preclude qualified immunity defense raised by supervisory school defendants on individual capacity claims brought against them under § 1983. Tsotesi v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 336. Civil Rights 1427

5372. Credibility of witnesses, questions for jury

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Questions in regard to credibility of witnesses on issue of malice, and determination whether facts presented were sufficient for an award of punitive damages were issues reserved for determination by trier of fact in civil rights action arising from altercation between plaintiffs and defendant police officers. Gill v. Manuel, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 488 F.2d 799. Civil Rights 1424

5373. Cruel and unusual punishment, questions for jury

Whether conditions of confinement of prisoner, who had been placed in solitary confinement and who alleged that he was deprived of adequate and sanitary food, medical and psychiatric treatment and that he was subjected to beatings by prison officials constituted cruel and unusual punishment presented issue of fact for determination by the district court in proceeding by prisoner for relief from alleged cruel and unusual treatment. Courtney v. Bishop, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1969, 409 F.2d 1185, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 235, 396 U.S. 915, 24 L.Ed.2d 192. Civil Rights 1454

5374. Damages, questions for jury

In university police lieutenant's civil rights action for wrongful discharge, evidence of compensatory and punitive damages was for jury. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 629 F.2d 993, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3063, 452 U.S. 926, 69 L.Ed.2d 428. Civil Rights 1430

If on remand of discharged teacher's civil rights action against school board, plaintiff was able in good faith to allege actual damages exceeding $20 stemming from procedural defects in discharge, jury issue existed as to amount of actual damages attributable thereto. Burt v. Abel, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1978, 585 F.2d 613, on remand 466 F.Supp. 1234. Civil Rights 1430

Apart from special monetary damages it is for jury in a case involving alleged violation of civil rights to make a determination as to amount that plaintiff is entitled to be awarded for the deprivation, which should also include the subjective pain and suffering and humiliation. Rhoads v. Horvat, D.C.Colo.1967, 270 F.Supp. 307. Civil Rights 1464

5375. Due process, questions for jury

In civil rights suit by landowners against town, alleging that town, with knowledge of landowners' claim of title to strip of land and without taking action to determine or settle competing claims between town and landowners, knocked down landowners' fences, bulldozed strip and built street thereon, evidence that landowners were not afforded due process prior to taking was sufficient for jury. McCulloch v. Glasgow, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 620 F.2d 47. Civil Rights 1428

5376. Employment, questions for jury

Issue of whether school district would have decided not to renew probationary special education teacher's contract because of inadequacy of teacher's individualized education programs (IEPs), even absent teacher's criticisms of district's special education programs, was for jury, in teacher's § 1983 suit alleging First Amendment retaliation and violation of Rehabilitation Act; teacher presented substantial evidence that content of her speech was factor in nonrenewal, and evidence concerning IEPs was far from clear, featuring only one example of alteration of one of teacher's IEPs, and no evidence at all of other teachers being fired for drafting inadequate IEPs or any showing that it was unusual for new teachers to struggle with IEP writing. Settlegoode v. Portland Public Schools, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 371 F.3d 503, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 478, 543 U.S. 979, 160 L.Ed.2d 356. Civil Rights 1430; Civil Rights 1555

Record uncovered sufficient evidence for reasonable jury to conclude that former fire chief's speech in opposition to paramedic cuts and city's public safety officer (PSO) program was substantial factor leading to his termination; city manager's testimony that mayor demanded fire chief's termination because of fire chief's opposition to paramedic cuts and PSO program was direct evidence of discriminatory intent on part of mayor, testimony was corroborated by city manager's letter of resignation, and fire chief produced copious circumstantial evidence which, when viewed in light most favorable to fire chief, supported reasonable conclusion that his termination was retaliatory. Beckwith v. City of Daytona Beach Shores, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 58 F.3d 1554. Civil Rights 1421

Ordinarily, issue of whether public employee's protected speech played substantial role in his or her termination is issue of fact to be resolved by jury in § 1983 action based on alleged discharge in violation of First Amendment. Barnard v. Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 43 F.3d 1218, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 53, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 17. Civil Rights 1430

Conduct of supervisor toward deputy sheriff was sufficiently egregious to create question for jury to determine whether it met standards for punitive damages outlined by trial court, where supervisor made series of sexually inappropriate comments to deputy sheriff, in response to deputy's complaint about that conduct, supervisor said that she chose to work in field occupied primarily by men, and if she did not like it she could "just get out," and supervisor engaged in retaliation when she complained further. Beardsley v. Webb, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 30 F.3d 524 . Civil Rights 1474(1)

Whether deputies' protected conduct in declaring their candidacies for sheriff was substantial motivating factor in sheriff's decision to transfer them and whether sheriff transferred deputies due to personnel shortage presented questions for jury in deputies' First Amendment retaliation action against sheriff and county, given deputies' evidence that they were performing their jobs satisfactorily before transfer, that they were transferred around time second candidacy was announced, that there were significant transfers in other direction, and that sheriff threatened to discharge one of them after primary. Click v. Copeland, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 970 F.2d 106. Civil Rights 1430

In civil rights action brought against sheriff for discharge of deputy on asserted ground that plaintiff had not voted for sheriff, sheriff was entitled to have jury decide whether, under North Carolina law, plaintiff had been subject to be released at the will of sheriff because of the character of plaintiff's position, the nature of his responsibilities and his identification with the sheriff. McCollum v. Stahl, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1978, 579 F.2d 869, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1225, 440 U.S. 912, 59 L.Ed.2d 460. Sheriffs And Constables 21

It was for jury to decide whether questions asked of female applicant for position as police officer concerning whether she could handle physical situations with criminals and whether she would turn in male officer who took interest in her constituted harassment, even though interview questions did not show disparate treatment; applicant claimed that slightly built male candidates were not asked similar questions. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1555

University professors' claims that there was a mutually explicit understanding based on custom, policy, and oral assurances with respect to reappointment was a question for trier of fact. Colburn v. Trustees of Indiana University, S.D.Ind.1990, 739 F.Supp. 1268, affirmed 973 F.2d 581, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1430

5377. Freedom of speech and press, questions for jury

Evidence created jury questions whether female and male detectives and sergeant engaged in protected activities of free speech and association by speaking against gender discrimination concerning female detective, whether unit commander, inspector, and chief inspector knew of protected activity prior to approving transfers, whether police commissioner knew of actions of subordinates, and whether protected activities were motivating factor in transfers;

it was reasonable to infer that knowledge of activities of female detective's coworkers was passed along with information on detective's case. Keenan v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 983 F.2d 459, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1430

Whether mayor and alderman attempted to force alderwoman member to resign from council because of exercise of her First Amendment rights was question for jury in civil rights action brought by alderwoman. O'Brien v. City of Greers Ferry, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1989, 873 F.2d 1115, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1430

Question whether involvement of college faculty members in student boycott materially impaired operation of college or their working relationships there, and if not, whether president of college would not have withheld their equalization pay increases but for the exercise of rights under the free speech and press clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 was question for jury in suit by the two members, who were nonblack, alleging discrimination on the part of the administration of predominately black college with respect to compensation as was question whether administration assigned the preparation and administration of federal grant to members of faculty other than to two nonblack members, one white and one born in Korea of Asian extraction, for racial reasons. Kim v. Coppin State College, C.A.4 (Md.) 1981, 662 F.2d 1055. Civil Rights 1555

5378. Good faith, questions for jury

In action under this section brought by pretrial detainees who claimed that they had been subjected to cruel and unusual treatment by county sheriff and his deputies, issue of good faith of sheriff was question of fact for jury where jury could find that sheriff reacted to danger of successful escape by using reasonable force or that sheriff was acting maliciously or intended to punish pretrial detainee unlawfully. Putman v. Gerloff, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1981, 639 F.2d 415. Civil Rights 1432

Had a policy of confidentiality existed as respects university police accident reports and had chief of university police force and director of university's division of public safety relied on such policy in deciding to discharge police lieutenant, such evidence as to immunity defense would have existed sufficient to raise jury question as to good faith of the chief and the director. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 629 F.2d 993, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3063, 452 U.S. 926, 69 L.Ed.2d 428. Civil Rights 1432

Because good faith is dependent on motivation and conduct of the defendant as established at trial, the validity of the defense of good faith is ordinarily a question for the jury, in a civil rights action. Landrum v. Moats, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1978, 576 F.2d 1320, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 282, 439 U.S. 912, 58 L.Ed.2d 258. Civil Rights 1432

5379. Immunity, questions for jury

District court improperly found that officer was entitled to qualified immunity, after jury found that officer had violated suspect's constitutional rights by use of excessive force when officer shot and killed suspect, since those findings were dispositive of qualified immunity claim; right to be free from excessive use of force was well established, and jury findings resolved issue of whether it was objectively reasonable for officer to believe that use of deadly force was lawful. Acosta v. City and County of San Francisco, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 83 F.3d 1143, as amended, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 514, 519 U.S. 1009, 136 L.Ed.2d 403. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Whether police officer reasonably could have believed that identifying information supplied by custodial detainee was inadequate or that train fare infraction warranted detention so as to entitle officer to qualified immunity from liability on detainee's Fourth Amendment claim was question for jury, in detainee's § 1983 civil rights action arising from her detention for four hours for identification following citation for boarding train without proof of payment of fare. Pierce v. Multnomah County, Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 76 F.3d 1032, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 506, 519 U.S. 1006, 136 L.Ed.2d 397. Civil Rights 1432

When district judge determines that factual dispute exists which precludes summary judgment on the issue of qualified immunity or when defendant fails to move for summary judgment, trier of fact must determine the objective legal reasonableness of an officer's conduct by construing the facts in dispute. Melear v. Spears, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 862 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1432

Determination as to whether reasonable person in shoes of police officer would have known he was violating another's constitutional rights in obtaining and executing search and arrest warrants and therefore of whether police officer was qualifiedly immune from liability under this section was for jury. B.C.R. Transport Co., Inc. v. Fontaine, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1984, 727 F.2d 7. Civil Rights 1376(6)

As a general proposition, the question of qualified immunity of a state official is a matter for factual resolution, but the issue need not always be a jury question. Reese v. Nelson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 598 F.2d 822, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 463, 444 U.S. 970, 62 L.Ed.2d 384. Civil Rights 1432

Whether the actions of Internal Revenue Service agents in telling tax accountant's clients to cease doing business with him and in warning them that if they continued to patronize the accountant their income tax returns would be audited were taken palpably beyond the authority or whether the actions had more or less connection with general matters committed by law to their control or supervision so as to give the agents a qualified official immunity was question for the trier of fact in accountant's action under this section against the agents to recover damages for violation of constitutional rights. Mark v. Groff, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1975, 521 F.2d 1376. Civil Rights 1432

Whether to grant qualified immunity is normally a question of law for the court, but when this question turns upon what version of contested facts one accepts, the jury not the judge must determine liability under § 1983. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1432

In addressing issue of qualified immunity of public official, District Court must determine whether official established that he or she acted within scope of his or her discretionary authority when allegedly wrongful acts occurred, and whether plaintiff demonstrated that official's actions violated clearly established rights. Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, S.D.Fla.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1552, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 1155, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 83 F.3d 1346, affirmed in part, reversed in part 111 F.3d 1530, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 438, 522 U.S. 978, 139 L.Ed.2d 337, reversed 118 S.Ct. 2275, 524 U.S. 775, 157 A.L.R. Fed. 663, 141 L.Ed.2d 662, on remand 166 F.3d 1152. Officers And Public Employees 114

When a defendant accused in a § 1983 action of violating a plaintiff's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights raises the defense of "qualified immunity" at a trial where many factual issues material to the defense remain in dispute, the qualified immunity issue should be resolved by the jury, rather than the judge. Brisk v. City of Miami Beach, Fla., S.D.Fla.1989, 726 F.Supp. 1305. Civil Rights 1432

In civil rights action, public official's claim to immunity from damages, whether absolute or qualified, is not a claim that jurisdiction is absent; therefore, rule that permits judges to engage in fact-finding in jury cases on questions of subject-matter jurisdiction does not authorize judge to perform fact-finding necessary to decide whether immunity is present. Mason v. Melendez, W.D.Wis.1981, 525 F.Supp. 270. Federal Civil Procedure 2264.1

Arrestee bringing §§1983 false arrest/excessive force action against arresting police officer was not unduly prejudiced by federal district court's committing issue of qualified immunity to jury, which found qualified immunity, rather than making ultimate determination as to qualified immunity itself; jury found that officer's actions were consistent with his police training and that he believed them to be consistent, mandating finding that officer's actions were not clearly unlawful and in turn mandating finding of qualified immunity. Kent v. Katz, C.A.2 (Vt.) 2005, 125 Fed.Appx. 334, 2005 WL 387943, Unreported. Civil Rights 1432; Federal Courts

5380. Knowledge and intent, questions for jury

Question of whether mayor's decision not to rehire police officer after he resigned was racially motivated under Title VII and § 1983 was for jury. Richardson v. Leeds Police Dept., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1995, 71 F.3d 801, on remand 990 F.Supp. 1331. Civil Rights 1430; Civil Rights 1555

In employment discrimination case, ultimate inquiry is whether employer intentionally discriminated against plaintiff, but if defendant's proffered reasons for employment decision are rejected, trier of fact may infer ultimate fact of intentional discrimination. Thomas v. St. Luke's Health Systems, Inc., N.D.Iowa 1994, 869 F.Supp. 1413, affirmed 61 F.3d 908. Civil Rights 1137; Civil Rights 1535

Where at time defendants acted in violation of this subchapter the state of the law was not unclear, whether defendants acted with actual knowledge or reckless disregard so as to be liable for punitive damages became a matter for the trier of fact not a matter for disposition by summary judgment. Luria Bros. & Co., Inc. v. Allen, W.D.Pa.1979, 469 F.Supp. 575. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

5381. Joint liability, questions for jury

In civil rights action brought by pretrial detainees who claimed that they had been subjected to cruel and unusual treatment by county sheriff and his deputies, deputy could be held jointly liable with sheriff for failing to intervene when sheriff used excessive force on pretrial detainees and, therefore, issue of deputy's liability should have been submitted to jury for factual determination. Putman v. Gerloff, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1981, 639 F.2d 415. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1429

Whether conduct of superintendent of state penitentiary in confining racial protest demonstrators to cells containing inadequate hygienic facilities was foreseeable by city police chief prior to time he made arrangements for removal of demonstrators to state penitentiary after denying them their right under state law to be taken before a magistrate was question for jury in determining whether police chief was jointly and severally liable with superintendent under this subchapter for infliction of summary punishment without due process. Anderson v. Nosser, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1972, 456 F.2d 835, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 53, 409 U.S. 848, 34 L.Ed.2d 89. Civil Rights 1429

5382. Prisons and prisoners, questions for jury--Generally

Whether prison visitor was subjected to strip search before being permitted to visit her inmate father in retaliation for father's naming deputy and correctional officer as suppliers of cocaine on which he overdosed, rather than based upon any individualized suspicion whatsoever, presented question for jury, in prison visitor's civil rights action, considering absence of any evidence that prison visitor ever violated prison visitation rule or ever supplied father with drugs, and deputy's indefinite testimony as to reliability of his confidential informant. Cochrane v. Quattrocchi, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1991, 949 F.2d 11, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 2965, 504 U.S. 985, 119 L.Ed.2d 586. Civil Rights 1429

5383. ---- Assaults, prisons and prisoners, questions for jury

Whether incarcerated criminal contemnor suffered even minor compensable injury proximately caused by jail officer's use of excessive force, so as to mandate award of compensatory damages, was for jury in contemnor's § 1983 suit; prior to officer's use of force in striking contemnor in head three times with flashlight, contemnor had been involved in altercation with another officer, who struck contemnor in head, jury may have concluded that only last of flashlight blows was excessive, and that head contusion was caused by first blow, and contemnor never established that excessive force caused him pain, suffering, humiliation or fear. Gibeau v. Nellis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 18 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1429

Question of whether assault on inmate was committed or orchestrated by fellow prisoner who threatened inmate, so as to causally link inmate's injury to prison officials' alleged deliberate indifference, was for jury in inmate's § 1983 action alleging Eighth Amendment violation. Hendricks v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 942 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1429

Issues of whether prison officials conspired to cause attack to be made on inmate or failed to protect inmate from attack by fellow inmate, in violation of inmate's civil rights, were for jury. Mayberry v. Walters, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1988, 862 F.2d 1040. Conspiracy 48.1(2.1)

State prison guard was liable under § 1983 for failing to prevent beating of prisoner by other inmates; evidence was sufficient for jury to find that guard had adequate time to assess serious threat facing prisoner and opportunity to afford him protection at no risk to himself or security of prison, but nevertheless callously refused to permit prisoner to pass with guard to safety behind administration door. Stubbs v. Dudley, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 849 F.2d 83, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1095, 489 U.S. 1034, 103 L.Ed.2d 230. Civil Rights 1420

Absence of any record that corrections officials had responded to state prison inmate's grievance alleging excessive force by corrections officers, or had informed inmate of his right to appeal decision on grievance, as required by state's regulations, raised fact question as to what had occurred with respect to grievance, precluding summary judgment against inmate on grounds of failure to administratively exhaust under PLRA in inmate's § 1983 Eighth Amendment action against officers and officials. Liner v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 550. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

5384. ---- Medical care, prisons and prisoners, questions for jury

Evidence of actual practices of county contractor in providing medical and mental health services at jail presented questions for jury as to whether contractor had been deliberately indifferent to medical needs of pretrial detainee who committed suicide while in jail, and as to whether such indifference had caused suicide, in detainee's estate's §§ 1983 Eighth Amendment action against contractor; estate proffered evidence that contractor failed to adequately train its employees and condoned employees' not completing mental health intake forms and social worker's practice of challenging suicide watch referrals, and that employees knew detainee was suicidal but failed several times to place him on suicide watch, in violation of its own written procedures. Woodward v. Correctional Medical Services of Illinois, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 368 F.3d 917. Civil Rights 1429

Evidence in § 1983 action for violation of rights of detainee who committed suicide in jail made question for jury whether city was deliberately indifferent in failing to take steps to meet serious medical needs of intoxicated and suicidal detainees and was sufficient to support conclusion that city's deliberate indifference was the moving force behind violation of rights of detainee who hung himself while intoxicated and alone in cell block during interval between turnkey's periodic inspections. Simmons v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1042, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1671, 503 U.S. 985, 118 L.Ed.2d 391. Civil Rights 1420; Civil Rights 1429

5385. ---- Religious practices, prisons and prisoners, questions for jury

Given the history of the Black Muslim religion, the problems associated with the teachings of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, and superintendent's testimony at trial that there had been trouble in the past with the Black Muslims and that some of the literature sent into the prison for them was inflammatory, the requisite circumstances were present in action brought under this section by state prisoner against prison officials, to submit to the jury the issue of the reasonableness of the prison rules and regulations governing the practice of the Muslim religion by black inmates. Wilson v. Prasse, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1972, 463 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1429

5386. Police activities, questions for jury--Generally

Whether testimony from witnesses who saw plaintiff being struck and beaten was such as to establish liability of defendant deputy sheriff and defendant police officer under this section because defendant deputy sheriff did something more than enter an ongoing fray with intent of stopping it and defendant police officer did more than simply conduct a pat-down search was question of fact to be resolved by jury. Vetters v. Berry, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1978, 575 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1429

When material facts are undisputed, the question of whether a given proposition of law was clearly established at the time of a § 1983 defendant's action was a question of law, whereas the issue of what a reasonable officer would have believed was a mixed question of fact and law appropriate for determination by a jury if material facts remained in dispute at trial. Brisk v. City of Miami Beach, Fla., S.D.Fla.1989, 726 F.Supp. 1305. Civil Rights 1432

5387. ---- Arrests, police activities, questions for jury

To find that there was an unlawful arrest in violation of Fourth Amendment, jury in § 1983 action need only have found that under facts and circumstances within arresting officer's knowledge, a reasonable officer could not have believed that an offense had been or was being committed by person to be arrested. Mosley v. Wilson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 102 F.3d 85. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Evidence presented jury questions, as to whether vegetable matter on floor of driver's car appeared to be marijuana, as to whether police officers were entitled to qualified immunity from driver's civil rights claim, under § 1983, that police lacked reasonable suspicion for investigatory stop and as to whether police violated Fourth Amendment. Karnes v. Skrutski, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1995, 62 F.3d 485. Civil Rights 1429

Issue of probable cause, which was predominantly factual in nature, was properly presented to jury in civil rights action against police officer for unlawful arrest and malicious prosecution. Moore v. Comesanas, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 32 F.3d 670. Civil Rights 1429

In § 1983 actions, existence of probable cause to arrest is question for jury. De Anda v. City of Long Beach, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1993, 7 F.3d 1418, 143 A.L.R. Fed. 769. Civil Rights 1429

Whether police officer had probable cause to arrest driver for violation of city ordinance forbidding cutting across private property to avoid traffic regulation was for jury in action for civil rights violations and related state claims. Evans v. Detlefsen, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1988, 857 F.2d 330. Civil Rights 1429

In suit for false arrest and imprisonment under § 1983, jury question was presented as to reasonableness of 11 hours it took sheriff to process administrative release of arrestee after issue of whether he was individual named in outstanding warrant was first raised in court. Lewis v. O'Grady, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 853 F.2d 1366. Civil Rights 1429

In civil rights action brought against sheriff by black plaintiffs alleging that their constitutional rights were violated by illegal arrest, based on evidence that at time of arrest there was major disturbance in which at least 100 shots were fired, and that arrest occurred same evening as disturbance, whether sheriff had probable cause to arrest plaintiffs was question for jury. Wilson v. Attaway, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 757 F.2d 1227, rehearing denied 764 F.2d 1411. Civil Rights 1429

Evidence that jail commander knew that plaintiff motorist had been in custody for 11 1/2 hours after he had been picked up for public intoxication, that motorist was not released because commander concluded, on examination, that he was not in condition to be free and that when plaintiff was reexamined some 16 hours after arrest the commander decided to continue holding him on intoxication charge, was sufficient to make jury issue on whether commander had falsely imprisoned motorist, whose condition was not due to intoxication but to a massive stroke. Reeves v. City of Jackson, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1979, 608 F.2d 644. Civil Rights 1429

In civil rights action, evidence concerning whether arresting officer had probable cause to make warrantless arrest presented jury question, despite evidence that individual was arrested after driving wrong way down one-way street, that individual admitted having had two drinks, and that blood alcohol level at time of arrest was 0.085 to 0.09 percent, and that individual had barbiturates and alcohol in her blood five and one-half hours after arrest, in view of evidence that medical exam performed less than two hours after arrest revealed no medical signs of intoxication and in view of testimony of jail personnel that individual appeared sober during entire time she was in custody following her arrest. Patzig v. O'Neil, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 577 F.2d 841. Civil Rights 1429

In action brought under this section, should officers assert that their actions in dealing with plaintiff were taken under circumstances which lawfully justified degree of detention and custodial interrogation they contended was employed, they were entitled to have jury resolve that issue under proper instructions which defined rights of one in plaintiff's situation to be free of official detention and set out circumstances which would support a reasonable good faith belief by defendants that they had legal right or duty to deprive him of his freedom. Dowsey v. Wilkins, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1972, 467 F.2d 1022. Civil Rights 1440

Issue of whether motorist was seized within Fourth Amendment when police officer ordered her to move her immobilized vehicle off roadway or have it towed was for jury in federal civil rights suit. Lockhart-Bembery v. Town of Wayland Police Dept., D.Mass.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 11. Civil Rights 1429

Although issue of whether probable cause existed in effecting arrest is typically decided by jury in §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action, district court may conclude that probable cause did exist as matter of law if evidence, viewed most favorably to plaintiff, reasonably would not support contrary factual finding, and may enter summary judgment accordingly. Imbergamo v. Castaldi, M.D.Pa.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 686. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

5388. ---- Excessive force, police activities, questions for jury

Issue of causal connection between constitutional violation and city's inadequate training of police officers with respect to use of force while off-duty was for jury in motorist's § 1983 action against city arising from shooting by off-duty officer; officer testified that he was attempting to make what he believed was lawful arrest when he shot motorist, and, although jury found that officer was acting outside scope of his employment, that finding was related to Colorado indemnity statutes, not to § 1983 claim. Brown v. Gray, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2000, 227 F.3d 1278. Civil Rights 1429

To find that police officer used excessive force, jury was required in § 1983 action to determine whether officer used force that was objectively reasonable under the circumstances and facts confronting him at that time, without regard to his underlying motivation. Mosley v. Wilson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 102 F.3d 85. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Evidence that deputy sheriff grabbed child's arm during arrest of child's father, allegedly causing injuries to child's arm, was for jury in action alleging that deputy used excessive force against child, in violation of child's civil rights. Ikerd v. Blair, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 101 F.3d 430. Civil Rights 1429

Whether city knew about and acquiesced in custom tolerating tacit use of excessive force by its police officer, for purposes of holding city liable in civil rights action by victim of alleged police brutality, was question for jury; jury could have inferred from numerous similar written complaints that police department knew of officer's propensity for violence, reasonable jury could have found that investigatory procedures were structured to curtail disciplinary action and stifle investigations into credibility of officers in light of exclusion of witness testimony and failure to formally track complaints for individual officers, and expert testimony was not required to show deficiencies in procedures. Beck v. City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 89 F.3d 966, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1086, 519 U.S. 1151, 137 L.Ed.2d 219. Civil Rights 1429

Issue of whether seizure effected by use of deadly force by deputy sheriff who fatally shot in back of head individual on whom deputy was attempting to serve ex parte order of protection was reasonable under Fourth Amendment was for jury in federal civil rights action brought by individual's wife; evidence presented by wife, primarily through deputy's testimony, would have allowed reasonable jury to conclude that shooting was unreasonable and excessive use of force, even though wife did not produce testimony describing events at exact moment individual was shot. Gardner v. Buerger, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 82 F.3d 248, appeal after new trial 163 F.3d 602. Civil Rights 1429

Question of whether police officers reasonably believed that their use of force was not excessive, for purposes of determining whether they were entitled to qualified immunity from liability, was a jury issue in section 1983 action brought by arrestee. Posr v. Doherty, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 944 F.2d 91. Civil Rights 1432

Factual issues surrounding whether it was objectively reasonable for police officer to use deadly force were for jury in civil rights action brought by victim who was shot by officer in dark hallway of private residence at 2:45 a.m., after officer failed to indicate his identity. Yates v. City of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1991, 941 F.2d 444, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1432

In determining whether force used by arresting officer against DUI arrestee to obtain a blood sample was unreasonable, jury in § 1983 suit brought by arrestee was entitled to consider: fact that arrestee was actively resisting extraction of his blood; severity of the crime; whether arrestee posed an immediate threat to safety of officers or others; whether police refused to respect reasonable request to undergo a different form of testing; and degree of need for blood sample. (Per Canby, J., with three Judges concurring, two Judges concurring in part, and five Judges dissenting.). Hammer v. Gross, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 932 F.2d 842, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 582, 502 U.S. 980, 116 L.Ed.2d 607, on remand 981 F.2d 1115. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Whether police officer struck arrestee with his nightstick, thus depriving arrestee of his constitutional rights by unnecessary use of brutal force in effecting arrest, was question for jury in civil rights action brought by arrestee. McDowell v. Rogers, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1988, 863 F.2d 1302. Civil Rights 1429

On retrial of father's suit against county police officer seeking recovery for alleged wrongful death of son, who was shot and killed by officer while in self-induced hallucinatory state, whether officer's reckless disregard of son's safety and wanton use of excessive force made out case for liability or whether emergency negated wantonness and self-protection excused disregard of son's safety would be for jury. Haber v. Nassau County, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 557 F.2d 322. Counties 224

Where arrestee obviously suffered physical pain as result of injuries inflicted by police officer, and may well have suffered some mental anguish and humiliation, and where arrestee had small hospital and medical expenses and lost some time from work as result of incident, jury was justified in finding on conflicting evidence that police officer employed excessive that police officer dealings with arrestee, and in further finding that quality of police officer's conduct warranted award of punitive as well as actual damages. Linn v. Garcia, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1976, 531 F.2d 855. Assault And Battery 39

The reasonableness of the force used in making an arrest under all circumstances is a question for the jury, and the standard is the conduct of ordinary, prudent man under the existing circumstances. Hamilton v. Chaffin, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 506 F.2d 904. Arrest 68(2)

A question for the jury was presented in an action under this section against arresting police officers for denial of civil rights, as to whether force used in making the arrest was unnecessary, unreasonable or violent, where defendants admitted the arrest was made and that force was used. Morgan v. Labiak, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1966, 368 F.2d 338. Civil Rights 1429

Conflicting testimony as to events surrounding arrest proffered by arrestees and by arresting officers raised jury question as to use of excessive force, in arrestees' §§ 1983 action against officers. Diaz ex rel Lopez Claudio v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 301 F.Supp.2d 92. Civil Rights 1429

Evidence on whether police officer used excessive force in detaining suspect was sufficient for presentation to jury, in suspect's § 1983 action. Jarvis v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.Virgin Islands 1996, 919 F.Supp. 177. Civil Rights 1429

Whether sheriff's deputy used more than "necessary and reasonable force" when entering residence without consent to execute search warrant, as authorized by Florida statute, was fact question precluding summary judgment in § 1983 civil rights suit by resident who testified to being struck in stomach with flashlight by deputy. McClain v. Crowder, S.D.Fla.1994, 840 F.Supp. 897. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

5389. State of mind, questions for jury

Where there are disputed issues of material fact as to plaintiff's state of mind at time of confinement, in § 1983 action alleging unconstitutional medical or psychiatric confinement, resolution of these factual questions should be left to trier of fact. Ormiston v. Nelson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 117 F.3d 69. Civil Rights 1429

5390. Miscellaneous questions for jury

Once court determines as a matter of law that legal standard governing governmental action at issue was clearly established, there is no qualified immunity in civil rights action and factual question of whether defendant's conduct violated the established constitutional standard is then resolved by jury at trial. Warren v. City of Lincoln, Neb., C.A.8 (Neb.) 1987, 816 F.2d 1254, rehearing granted 825 F.2d 176, on rehearing 864 F.2d 1436, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 2431, 490 U.S. 1091, 104 L.Ed.2d 988. Civil Rights 1373; Civil Rights 1426

Given unrest in city on day of arrests, brief period for which civil rights plaintiffs were incarcerated, testimony permitting jury to conclude that no feasible alternatives to use of particular jail existed, and absence of recurring violation, whether exigent or emergency circumstances permitted use of jail without violating either constitutional rights of arrestees or consent decree entered in separate class action which permanently enjoined sheriff and commissioners of county from incarcerating any person in jail without first having complied with series of requirements, including maximum capacities, was question for jury. Wilson v. Attaway, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 757 F.2d 1227, rehearing denied 764 F.2d 1411. Civil Rights 1429

Whether plaintiff in position as deputy sheriff was deprived of a liberty interest because defendant sheriff, in connection with plaintiff's termination from employment, issued a press release in which plaintiff was associated with an attempted illegal entry, because remarks seriously damaged plaintiff's reputation in community, and because plaintiff was not involved in any wrongdoing and was not provided adequate notice or sufficient opportunity to clear her name was a question of fact for jury. Johnson v. Rogers, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1980, 621 F.2d 300. Civil Rights 1430

Whether information released to newspaper by county school board, superintendent, and board members was personally identifiable and, thus, in violation of Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act, was jury question in § 1983 civil rights suit by student. Doe v. Knox County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.1996, 918 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights

5411. Judicial remedies or relief generally

Propriety of actions brought under this section is not to be determined solely on basis of relief sought. Courtney v. Reeves, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 635 F.2d 326. Civil Rights 1394

Where legal rights have been invaded, and this section provides for general right to sue for such invasion, federal courts may use any available remedy to make good the wrong done. Donahue v. Staunton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 471 F.2d 475, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 1419, 410 U.S. 955, 35 L.Ed.2d 687. Civil Rights 1448

When federally secured rights are invaded, federal courts must adjust their remedies to grant the appropriate relief. Ute Indian Tribe of Uintah and Ouray Reservation v. Probst, C.A.10 (Utah) 1970, 428 F.2d 491, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 189, 400 U.S. 926, 27 L.Ed.2d 186, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 189, 400 U.S. 927, 27 L.Ed.2d 186. Federal Courts 371

By its terms, § 1983 creates no substantive rights; rather, it merely provides remedies for deprivations of rights established elsewhere. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1305

In determining appropriate remedies to be awarded to a prevailing employee in a civil rights action, district court should fashion remedies ensuring that victims are made whole. Sagendorf-Teal v. County of Rensselaer, N.D.N.Y.1995, 904 F.Supp. 95, affirmed 100 F.3d 270. Civil Rights 1448

Plaintiff who seeks enforcement of a federal right against a state should not be abandoned by federal court if any reasonable remedy can be fashioned. Robinson v. Pratt, D.C.Mass.1980, 497 F.Supp. 116. Federal Courts 264.1

5412. Power and duty of court, judicial remedies or relief generally

Courts have the power and duty to fashion affirmative relief so as to provide an effective federal remedy where this section is violated. Johnson v. Capitol City Lodge No. 74, Fraternal Order of Police, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1973, 477 F.2d 601. Civil Rights 1448

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

District court has wide power sitting as a court of equity to fashion relief enforcing the Congressional mandate of this section and the constitutional guarantees of the equal protection of the law and to eradicate the effects of past discriminations. Carter v. Gallagher, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1971, 452 F.2d 315, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing granted, on remand, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 2045, 406 U.S. 950, 32 L.Ed.2d 338. Civil Rights 1448; Injunction 189

District court has jurisdiction to entertain suits for equitable relief under §§ 1983. J.D. v. Manatee County School Bd., M.D.Fla.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 1316. Federal Courts 7

Court was not equipped to operate adult correctional institution but had duty to remedy massive and serious constitutional violations established by plaintiff prisoners. Jefferson v. Southworth, D.C.R.I.1978, 447 F.Supp. 179, affirmed 616 F.2d 598, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 115, 449 U.S. 839, 66 L.Ed.2d 45. Prisons 4(3)

5413. Discretion of court, judicial remedies or relief generally

In areas of prison administration, convict classification and prison security, much must be left to discretion of prison administrators, and federal courts should go no further in given case than constitutional necessities require, but have power and duty to protect constitutional rights of prisoners and, as courts of equity, have broad discretion in devising appropriate remedies. Kelly v. Kelly v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1975, 525 F.2d 394. Prisons 13(3); Prisons 13(6)

District court carries broad discretion in determining appropriate remedies in employment civil rights action, and where district court makes a specific finding that an awarded back pay was sufficient to make a plaintiff whole, no abuse of discretion can be found. Sagendorf-Teal v. County of Rensselaer, N.D.N.Y.1995, 904 F.Supp. 95, affirmed 100 F.3d 270. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1471

District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying inmate's motion for recusal based on alleged bias or hostility to inmate or inmate's claims for relief, which alleged his Eighth Amendment rights to be free from cruel and unusual punishment were violated under § 1983 by the demonstration of deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs; presiding judge's comments to inmate about his naming of certain persons as defendants, numerosity of inmate's claims, and inmate's access to health care derived from litigation itself and not an extrajudicial source. Baker v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 231, 2003 WL 21008830, Unreported. Judges 49(2)

Refusing to appoint counsel for state inmate in § 1983 action was not abuse of discretion, given that pertinent issues could be resolved on the transcript of underlying prison administrative hearing and did not require investigation, that legal issues were not complex, that inmate capably represented himself, and that case was resolved without any necessity for cross-examination. Yihnidabney v. Ricks, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 64 Fed.Appx. 253, 2003 WL 1867924, Unreported. Civil Rights 1445

5414. Creation of remedy, judicial remedies or relief generally

This section does not create a remedy, but merely complements other statutes that do create federal causes of action, furnishing suitable remedies through principles of state law when federal law is unsuited or insufficient. Donaldson v. Hovanec, E.D.Pa.1979, 473 F.Supp. 602. Civil Rights 1305

5415. Foreclosure of remedy by Congress, judicial remedies or relief generally

Availability of administrative mechanisms to protect plaintiff's interests is not necessarily sufficient to demonstrate that Congress intended to foreclose § 1983 remedy; rather, statutory framework must be such that allowing plaintiff to bring § 1983 action would be inconsistent with Congress' carefully tailored scheme to preclude § 1983

remedy for violation of federal right. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1308

In some instances, action may be maintained under this section when state or local officials violate rights created by federal statutes, and thus party may proceed under this section to remedy violation of federal statutory right unless Congress intended to foreclose private enforcement of this section or unless the statute does not create enforceable "right" under this section. Polchowski v. Gorris, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1983, 714 F.2d 749. Civil Rights 1027

Plaintiff may not bring § 1983 action for violation of statute if Congress foreclosed private enforcement of that statute in enactment itself or statute does not create enforceable rights in plaintiff. Behunin v. Jefferson County Dept. of Social Services, D.Colo.1990, 744 F.Supp. 255. Civil Rights 1027

5416. Supplementary nature of remedy, judicial remedies or relief generally

Relief under this section does not depend upon unavailability of state remedies, but is supplementary to them. Hall v. Tawney, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1980, 621 F.2d 607. See, also, Bonner v. Coughlin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 517 F.2d 1311, on rehearing 545 F.2d 565, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1507, 435 U.S. 932, 55 L.Ed.2d 529; Freeman v. Flake, C.A.10 (Utah) 1971, 448 F.2d 258, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1292, 405 U.S. 1032, 31 L.Ed.2d 489; Sostre v. McGinnis, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 442 F.2d 178, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 719, 404 U.S. 1049, 30 L.Ed.2d 740, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1190, 405 U.S. 978, 31 L.Ed.2d 254; Hussey v. Sullivan, D.C.Mass.1980, 498 F.Supp. 594, affirmed 651 F.2d 74; Atchison v. Nelson, D.C.Wyo.1978, 460 F.Supp. 1102. Civil Rights 1315

Remedy under this section is supplementary to that under state law and was designed to fill remedial void where state law even though adequate in theory was not enforced in practice for whatever reason. Popow v. City of Margate, D.C.N.J.1979, 476 F.Supp. 1237. Civil Rights 1315

5417. Concurrent remedy, judicial remedies or relief generally

Cause of action under this section and state pendent assault and battery claim did not merge into one claim, and, hence, jury's finding, in judging federal civil rights claim, that sheriff's deputy acted in good faith in using excessive force against inmate did not bar recovery on state pendent law claim of assault and battery, for which jury made no such good-faith finding. Williams v. Thomas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 692 F.2d 1032, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 3115, 462 U.S. 1133, 77 L.Ed.2d 1369. Civil Rights 1424

Federal and state rights may of course exist in parallel, and federal courts may not avoid obligation to define and vindicate federal constitutional rights merely because of coincidence of related rights and remedies in federal and state systems. Hall v. Tawney, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1980, 621 F.2d 607. Civil Rights 1027

Rights under this section and rights arising under the state common law, although similar are nonetheless distinct remedies; accordingly, although the same set of facts may give rise to violations of both this section and the state common law, the rights protected are not necessarily identical nor are the criteria essential to state a cause of action necessarily the same under both. Briley v. State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1977, 564 F.2d 849. Civil Rights 1304; Civil Rights 1394

5418. Election of remedies, judicial remedies or relief generally

Issue of whether unreviewed state administrative decision which found in favor of city employee on his substantive claim of illegal termination precluded his subsequent § 1983 claim alleging denial of procedural due process in course of that termination was not properly addressed as issue of election of remedies, but, rather, was issue of res judicata; employee's claim involved no legally or factually inconsistent remedies, and back pay and lost benefits award in administrative proceeding would reduce any damages that employee might recover in § 1983 action. Dionne v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, C.A.4 (Md.) 1994, 40 F.3d 677. Administrative Law And Procedure 501

When employee of state or local governmental entity presents claim for reinstatement to state administrative agency, that is not "election of remedies" which will preclude later pursuit of claims for violation of federal constitutional rights in federal court; overruling Punton, 805 F.2d 1378. Haphey v. Linn County, C.A.9 (Or.) 1992, 953 F.2d 549. Election Of Remedies 7(1)

Fact that teacher's racial discrimination claim might have been maintainable under Title VII did not preempt teacher's § 1983 claim that he was terminated on basis of race, since discrimination claim could be brought under either statute or both. Bradley v. Pittsburgh Bd. of Educ., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 913 F.2d 1064.

Although a state or local employee's preexisting remedies are not preempted by Title VII, employee may not maintain a § 1983 action in lieu of Title VII if the only alleged deprivation is of employee's rights created by Title VII. Johnson v. Ballard, N.D.Ga.1986, 644 F.Supp. 333.

When faced with pending or threatened prosecution for violation of state statute, litigant may elect to raise constitutional contentions in state trial and, if conviction is entered, pursue his challenge on appeal in state courts, but if litigant has so elected, principles of res judicata or collateral estoppel, to extent applicable, should limit subsequent relitigation of constitutional claim, or facts underlying it, in suit under this section; and litigant's only entry lines into federal court system would be on petition for writ of certiorari to Supreme Court or, if litigant is in custody, through federal habeas corpus. Thistlethwaite v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1973, 362 F.Supp. 88, affirmed 497 F.2d 339, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 686, 419 U.S. 1093, 42 L.Ed.2d 686. Judgment 828.11(3)

An aggrieved school student whose state administrative and judicial remedies are demonstrably adequate and available both in theory and in practice may not proceed in federal court under this section on basis that the remedy under this section is an electable alternative to state remedies. Egner v. Texas City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1972, 338 F.Supp. 931. Civil Rights 1317

5419. Conviction validity, judicial remedies or relief generally

State prisoner's claim for damages is not cognizable under § 1983 if a judgment in favor of prisoner would necessarily imply the invalidity of his conviction or sentence, unless the prisoner can demonstrate that the conviction or sentence has previously been invalidated. Edwards v. Balisok, U.S.Wash.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1584, 520 U.S. 641, 137 L.Ed.2d 906. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Inmate could not maintain § 1983 action, which sought, among other things, compensatory and punitive monetary damages, but which did not request injunctive relief, where damage claims challenged legality of conviction, but neither conviction nor sentence had been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determination, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Party who had been extradited from Georgia to New York to begin serving sentence on New York conviction could maintain § 1983 action against parties responsible for his extradition, for allegedly proceeding in absence of signed extradition warrant, waiver of his extradition rights or habeas hearing, without first invalidating underlying conviction or sentence for which he was extradited or demonstrating that he was not extraditable through proper procedures; thus, his civil rights action was not barred by rule of Heck, under which state prisoner may not maintain cause of action under § 1983 if direct or indirect effect of granting relief would be to invalidate state sentence that he is serving. Harden v. Pataki, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 320 F.3d 1289. Civil Rights 1088(5)

When civil rights plaintiff has pending appeal from his criminal conviction, district court must consider whether judgment in favor of plaintiff would necessarily imply invalidity of his conviction or sentence; if it would, complaint must be dismissed unless plaintiff can demonstrate that conviction or sentence has already been invalidated. Jackson v. Suffolk County Homicide Bureau, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 135 F.3d 254. Civil Rights 1088(5)

No cause of action will lie on § 1983 claim that depends on finding that criminal conviction or sentence was invalidly obtained, unless conviction or sentence that would be impugned has already been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, invalidated by state tribunal authorized to do so, or called into question by federal court's grant of writ of habeas corpus. Anderson v. County of Montgomery, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 111 F.3d 494, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 371, 522 U.S. 951, 139 L.Ed.2d 289. Civil Rights 1088(5)

That it may be difficult, or perhaps even impossible, to get conviction reversed or expunged due to lapse of time does not constitute reason for relieving civil rights claimant of burden of first obtaining relief from that conviction, prior to bringing civil rights claim which implicates validity of conviction. Anderson v. County of Montgomery, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 111 F.3d 494, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 371, 522 U.S. 951, 139 L.Ed.2d 289. Civil Rights 1088(5)

When prisoner files civil rights action that cannot be resolved without inquiring into validity of confinement, court should dismiss suit without prejudice; district court is not authorized to convert action into habeas corpus proceeding. Copus v. City of Edgerton, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 96 F.3d 1038, on remand 959 F.Supp. 1047. Civil Rights 1311

Detainee's in forma pauperis § 1983 claims against police officer and department alleging that conditions of confinement in city jail violated Constitution were unrelated to validity of detainee's subsequent convictions and sentences; thus, judgment finding that conditions were unconstitutional would not necessarily imply invalidity of convictions and sentences, and detainee did not have to prove that convictions or sentences were invalidated to state cognizable § 1983 claim. Hamilton v. Lyons, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 74 F.3d 99. Civil Rights 1098; Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Guardian ad litem's § 1983 suit against Mississippi state court officials, state Department of Public Welfare and its commissioner, state Attorney General, and county welfare department employees alleging violation of right of access to courts and due process seeking to have United States District Court set aside custody rulings of Chancellor and to award custody of minor to Department of Social Services, to require defendants to pay for comprehensive physical, psychological, and psychiatric evaluation of minor and seeking compensatory and punitive damages was inextricably intertwined with state court judgment awarding custody of minor to father and paternal grandmother and constituted impermissible attempt to collaterally attack validity of state court judgment, where guardian ad litem failed to explain how relief she sought in federal district court differed from that available if direct appeal had been taken in state court and why interested parties failed to seek such relief; Mississippi courts were well equipped to review violations of federal constitutional law. Chrissy F. by Medley v. Mississippi Dept. of Public Welfare, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1993, 995 F.2d 595, rehearing denied 3 F.3d 441, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1336, 510 U.S. 1214, 127 L.Ed.2d 684. Judgment 828.5(2)

Convict could not recover any damages under § 1983 when determination in his favor would undermine the validity of his conviction. Berthesi v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation, E.D.Pa.2003, 246 F.Supp.2d 434. Civil Rights 1088(5)

In order to recover damages for allegedly unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment, or for other harm caused by actions whose unlawfulness would render a conviction or sentence invalid, a § 1983 plaintiff must prove that the conviction or sentence has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by a state tribunal authorized to make such a determination, or called into question by a federal court's issuance of a writ of habeas corpus; a claim for damages bearing that relationship to a conviction or sentence that has not been so invalidated is not cognizable under § 1983. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1088(5)

In determining whether civil rights claim would either negate element of crime of which plaintiff was convicted or necessarily imply invalidity of conviction, court must consider whether judgment in favor of plaintiff would necessarily imply invalidity of his conviction and, if it would, plaintiff has no § 1983 claim unless he can prove that conviction has been previously invalidated; if court determines that plaintiff's action, even if successful, would not demonstrate invalidity of any outstanding criminal judgment, court should allow action to proceed. Crooms v. P.O. Mercado, No. 41, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Inmate's § 1983 action alleging that defense counsel and various state officials conspired to convict him would be dismissed pursuant to Heck v. Humphrey, since state court conviction had never been reversed or declared invalid, judgment in inmate's favor would necessarily imply invalidity of conviction, and, were inmate to succeed, result would be direct conflict between state court judgment of conviction and federal judgment that conviction was flawed. Stocker v. Hood, E.D.Pa.1996, 927 F.Supp. 871. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

In order to recover damages under civil rights statute for harm caused by allegedly unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment or for other actions that, if unlawful, would render conviction or sentence invalid, plaintiff must demonstrate that conviction or sentence has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by state tribunal authorized to make such determination, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Aleotti v. Baars, D.D.C.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 107 F.3d 922, 323 U.S.App.D.C. 289. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Regardless of whether plaintiff seeks monetary damages or injunctive relief in § 1983 claim, if plaintiff's claim necessarily involves determination of lawfulness of state conviction, sentence or imprisonment, then district court must make further determinations on whether claim is cognizable under § 1983 before proceeding. Hand v. Young, D.Nev.1994, 868 F.Supp. 289. Civil Rights 1311

General rule that, to recover damages for allegedly unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment, or for other harm caused by actions whose unlawfulness would render conviction or sentence invalid, civil rights plaintiff must prove that conviction has been invalidated, is not limited to incarcerated plaintiffs, but applies with equal force when plaintiff is no longer incarcerated and is seeking only money damages. Dees v. Vendel, D.Kan.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1531, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1088(5)

One convicted of crime is not entitled to make collateral attack on the conviction in civil action under this section; the only basis for collateral attack on federal conviction is by petition to vacate judgment and sentence. Lathon v. Jefferson Parish, E.D.La.1973, 358 F.Supp. 558. Judgment 518

State prisoner could not proceed in forma pauperis on claim that his parole revocation hearing and consequent incarceration were invalid due to alleged violation of his rights under Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Constitution, since he was not entitled to any relief, because parole board's decision had not been reversed, expunged, set aside, or otherwise called into question, and his claims would have impermissibly called into question revocation of his parole and his current confinement if successful. Jones v. Stevenson, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22533565, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097; Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Pro se prisoner's civil rights claim against various state and county officials alleging, inter alia, constitutional infirmities and conspiracy in connection with his criminal conviction and sentence in state court, was barred by Heck v. Humphrey doctrine, which requires civil rights plaintiffs to show that conviction been reversed, expunged, declared invalid, or called into question by issuance of writ of habeas corpus, in order for civil rights claim to be cognizable. Bloom v. Social Sec. Admin., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 733, 2003 WL 21513214, Unreported. Civil Rights 1098; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Former prisoner whose parole was revoked could not bring § 1983 action alleging perjury by government witness at revocation hearing, or false imprisonment as result of revocation, absent showing that revocation had been invalidated; both claims constituted collateral attack on revocation determination. Harris v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 554745, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

5420. Sentence validity, judicial remedies or relief generally

State prisoner's due process claims alleging that two correctional facility employees improperly deducted 59 hours' work time from his earned work time credits were not cognizable under § 1983; such claims challenged validity of prisoner's sentence. Barela v. Variz, S.D.Cal.1999, 36 F.Supp.2d 1254. Civil Rights 1092

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Transcripts, compensable items 5475
Waiver 5445

5441. Damages generally

Both Bivens and § 1983 allow a plaintiff to seek money damages from government officials who have violated his Fourth Amendment rights. Wilson v. Layne, U.S.Md.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1692, 526 U.S. 603, 143 L.Ed.2d 818. Civil Rights 1088(1); United States 50.10(1)

Text of § 1983 purports to create damages remedy against every state official for the violation of any person's federal constitutional or statutory rights; coverage of statute is thus broader than preexisting common law of torts. Kalina v. Fletcher, U.S.Wash.1997, 118 S.Ct. 502, 522 U.S. 118, 139 L.Ed.2d 471. Civil Rights 1304

In § 1983 action, both compensatory and punitive damages are available upon proper proof; principles governing propriety of such damages are derived from common law. Cunningham v. City of Overland, State of Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1986, 804 F.2d 1066. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1465(1)

Damages are available under this section for actions found to have been violative of constitutional rights and to have caused compensable injury. Endicott v. Huddleston, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 644 F.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1479

General principles of damages apply to civil rights actions. Zarcone v. Perry, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 572 F.2d 52. Civil Rights 1462

Damages are recoverable under this section both for misfeasance and for nonfeasance. Byrd v. Brishke, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 466 F.2d 6. Civil Rights 1039

The provision in this section that the offending person "shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law" connotes damages of some kind. Basista v. Weir, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1965, 340 F.2d 74. Civil Rights 1460

High school student could not recover monetary damages for any violation of Pennsylvania Constitution's prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures, inasmuch as student might have remedy under §§ 1983. Klump v. Nazareth Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 622. Civil Rights 1704

Outdoor advertising company was not entitled to damages in civil rights case, even if court concluded that sign ordinance was unconstitutionally applied to company, since company could not show any injury caused by any allegedly unconstitutional restriction in sign ordinance; company's permit applications would have been rejected anyway for failing to meet other constitutional requirements contained in sign ordinance, including height and area limitations as well as prohibition against animated signs. Granite State Outdoor Advertising, Inc. v. City of St. Pete Beach, FL, M.D.Fla.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 1335. Civil Rights 1462

As long as payment is not required from state coffers, a plaintiff can state a claim for money damages under § 1983 against a state officer in his individual capacity. Mercer v. Brunt, D.Conn.2002, 272 F.Supp.2d 181. Federal Courts 269

Section 1983 allows for award of consequential damages which trier of fact may reasonably find based on the evidence. Schaefer v. Tannian, E.D.Mich.1995, 895 F.Supp. 175. Civil Rights 1462

Damages are available under this section making violation of an individual's civil rights under color of state law actionable for actions found to have been violative of constitutional rights, which such actions are proved to have caused compensable injury. Pizzolato v. Perez, E.D.La.1981, 524 F.Supp. 914. Civil Rights 1462

5442. Purpose, damages generally

Basic purpose of § 1983 damages award should be to compensate persons for injuries caused by deprivation of constitutional rights. Farrar v. Hobby, U.S.Tex.1992, 113 S.Ct. 566, 506 U.S. 103, 121 L.Ed.2d 494. Civil Rights 1459

Basic purpose of damages award under this section should be to compensate person for injuries caused by the deprivation of constitutional rights, and thus such awards should be governed by the principle of compensation. Carey v. Piphus, U.S.Ill.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 435 U.S. 247, 55 L.Ed.2d 252. Civil Rights 1462

Focus of any award of damages under § 1983 is to compensate for actual injuries caused by particular constitutional deprivation; amount of damages to be awarded should be grounded in determination of plaintiff's actual losses. Gilmere v. City of Atlanta, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 864 F.2d 734, rehearing denied 871 F.2d 122, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 70, 493 U.S. 817, 107 L.Ed.2d 37. Civil Rights 1464

5443. Statutory exceptions, damages generally

Local talk show producer's § 1983 action against city public access television committee and city council, challenging decision to ban him from public access channel based on content of his show, arose from "regulation of cable service" within meaning of provision of Cable Communications Policy Act limiting remedies in actions against franchising authority or other governmental entity to injunctive and declaratory relief, and therefore producer could not recover monetary damages or attorney fees. Coplin v. Fairfield Public Access Television Committee, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 111 F.3d 1395. Civil Rights 1460; Civil Rights 1479

5444. Prerequisites to award, damages generally

Allegations of personal involvement by any defendant is a prerequisite to an award of damages against that defendant under § 1983. Marshall v. Switzer, N.D.N.Y.1995, 900 F.Supp. 604. Civil Rights 1335

Personal involvement of defendants in alleged constitutional deprivations is a prerequisite to award of damages under § 1983, although direct participation in violation need not be established if it is shown that defendant had actual or constructive notice of unconstitutional practices. Winston v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1992, 789 F.Supp. 118. Civil Rights 1336

5445. Waiver, damages generally

High school students bringing § 1983 action seeking damages arising out of alleged violation of establishment clause caused by student prayer at graduation ceremonies waived damages claims on appeal where their briefs offered no connection between damages and student prayer, offered no indication as to any of circumstances surrounding graduation prayer, failed to even allege that student prayer was delivered during graduation ceremony at high school, and omitted to enumerate specific relief sought. Adler v. Duval County School Bd., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 112 F.3d 1475, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 120 F.3d 276. Federal Courts 714

5446. Compensatory damages, damages generally

Plaintiff, who prevailed on his Fourth Amendment claim for unlawful seizure and his state-law claim for false imprisonment, was entitled to compensatory, not merely nominal, damages for his loss of liberty for the time spent in postsearch confinement without his consent; plaintiff's involuntary detention in the hospital for some period of time was a foreseeable consequence of officer's sending him there. Kerman v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 374 F.3d 93. Civil Rights 1462; False Imprisonment 33

Compensatory damages in § 1983 action may include not only out-of-pocket loss and other monetary harms, but also such injuries as impairment of reputation, personal humiliation and mental anguish and suffering. Coleman v. Rahija, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 114 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

Jewish operators of nursing home could maintain § 1983 action against surveyors from state Department of Public Health, claiming that surveyors' issuance of report claimed to contain "false, fabricated and meritless findings" of deficiencies violated their equal protection rights on the grounds that surveyors were anti-Semitic, even though operators arguably suffered no damage because Department withdrew findings, renewed license and recommended that federal authorities take no decertification action, and it was claimed that operators had not sustained damages of sufficient constitutional magnitude to sustain § 1983 suit; while claim that legal procedures had cured violation would bar suit based upon deprivation of due process rights, cure had affect only on quantum of damages in an equal protection claim. Sherwin Manor Nursing Center, Inc. v. McAuliffe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 37 F.3d 1216, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 172, 516 U.S. 862, 133 L.Ed.2d 113, on remand 1997 WL 367368. Civil Rights 1072

No compensatory damages may be awarded under § 1983 absent proof of actual injury. Jolivet v. Deland, C.A.10 (Utah) 1992, 966 F.2d 573. Civil Rights 1462

Compensatory damages may be awarded under certain circumstances in a case under this section although no out-of-pocket expenses are shown. Paton v. La Prade, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1975, 524 F.2d 862. Civil Rights 1462

Jury properly awarded compensatory damages in §§ 1983 action brought by construction site protestor against state police officers, alleging false arrest and malicious prosecution; court's purported error in instructing jury to enter separate awards against individual defendants was not so fundamental as to require new trial in light of defendants' failure to object, and award of $80,000 was not so high as to shock conscience in light of protestor's maltreatment after arrest. Zellner v. Summerlin, E.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 154. Federal Civil Procedure 2336

Compensatory damages for wrongful denial of parade permits sought by anti-abortion groups, in violation of First Amendment, could not be based upon estimates of lost freewill offering revenue, when offerings had not been solicited at earlier parades. Lippoldt v. Cole, D.Kan.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1462

Jury award of $125,000 for loss of income to agent for Special Investigations Bureau (S.I.B.) of Puerto Rico Department of Justice (D.O.J.), based on finding he was fired in retaliation for protected speech, had substantial basis in evidence and was not so grossly excessive as to mandate either new trial or remittitur; award was within $3,000 of amount agent would have received had his monthly salary remained constant over six-year period and did not reflect automatic salary increases and other benefits like vacation and sick leave or consider any future loss of income to which he would be entitled. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 18, affirmed 424 F.3d 97. Civil Rights 1473

Although former professional boxer and his corporation could rely upon the Fourteenth Amendment, through § 1983, to establish federal question jurisdiction, allowing amendment of complaint against Indian tribe, its casino, tribal officials, and off-reservation entity to add due process and equal protection claims would be futile; Fourteenth Amendment by its terms did not apply to Indian tribe, and there was no allegation that off-reservation entity was state actor. Frazier v. Turning Stone Casino, N.D.N.Y.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 295, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 2033483. Federal Civil Procedure 851

Compensatory damage awards of $75,000 and $115,800 in favor of inmates in § 1983 action arising from beating by guards were not excessive; guards took prisoners to cells and beat them with fists and nightsticks while inmates were wearing handcuffs, inmates required medical attention including medication for one inmate's injury to his mental health, and inmates were in fear of reprisals for 168 days they remained at prison. Grimm v. Lane, S.D.Ohio 1995, 895 F.Supp. 907. Civil Rights 1464

In order for public school employee to recover compensatory damages under § 1983 on her due process claim, in which she alleged procedural breach by school board in assigning another employee to alternative post created at time that plaintiff employee's position was abolished, employee was required to show that decision not to give her alternative post was improper on substantive grounds, absent evidence that employee suffered damages specifically caused by procedural infirmity, and assuming procedural breach did occur. Fairbairn v. Board of Educ. of South Country Cent. School Dist., E.D.N.Y.1995, 876 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1132

Jail inmate was not entitled to award of compensatory damages in amount greater than $50 for violation of his procedural due process rights occurring when he was not permitted to make statement to correctional officer prior to inmate's confinement in 24-hour keeplock where result would not have been any different if inmate had been given opportunity to talk to officer; in any event, there was no evidence of actual injury. McCann v. Phillips, S.D.N.Y.1994, 864 F.Supp. 330. Civil Rights 1464

Inmate was entitled to $500 in compensatory damages in his § 1983 alleging that staff member violated his Eighth Amendment rights by failing to use emergency beeper and intervene in assault by four other inmates; inmate demonstrated actual physical and emotional injury, but some of those injuries were caused by earlier assault which staff member did not see. Holloway v. Wittry, S.D.Iowa 1994, 842 F.Supp. 1193. Civil Rights 1464

In assessing damages for deprivation of right to procedural due process, court must determine whether civil rights plaintiff suffered any actual damages from deprivation. Rogers v. Kelly, E.D.Ark.1987, 674 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 866 F.2d 997, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1462

Having been deprived of her federally protected civil rights, plaintiff was entitled to damages for such constitutional violation; plaintiff was to be put in the same position, so far as money could do it, as she would have been in had there been no injury; that is, court was to compensate her for injury actually sustained. Krueger v. Miller, E.D.Tenn.1977, 489 F.Supp. 321, affirmed 617 F.2d 603. Civil Rights 1484

Prisoner, who established that prison officials violated his due process rights by removing money from his account without first providing him with notice and an opportunity to respond, was not entitled to compensatory damages since he did not show that he suffered any actual injury. Brown v. Brown, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2002, 46 Fed.Appx. 324, 2002 WL 31072072, Unreported. Civil Rights 1462

5447. General damages, damages generally

City fire fighter who was suspended in violation of his First Amendment right to make public statements expressing fire fighters' grievances over pay and working conditions could recover general damages even in absence of showing of actual damages. Walje v. City of Winchester, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1985, 773 F.2d 729. Civil Rights 1470

Where, although he was improperly denied tenure and reemployment by members of Utah State Board of Education and officials of junior college, associate professor at junior college found another position with state at comparable or better salary, professor was not entitled to award of general damages even though defendants' actions had infringed professor's civil rights. Smith v. Losee, C.A.10 (Utah) 1973, 485 F.2d 334, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2604, 417 U.S. 908, 41 L.Ed.2d 212. Civil Rights 1470

5448. Nominal damages, damages generally--Generally

State prisoner is entitled to recover at least nominal damages under § 1983 if he proves that procedures in hearing depriving him of good-time credits were wrong and violated due process, without also proving that the result of depriving him of good-times credits was wrong as a substantive matter. Edwards v. Balisok, U.S.Wash.1997, 117

City's denial of parade permits before district court ordered city to allow the parades did not entitle members of anti-abortion association to compensatory damages, and nominal damages of $1 were not clearly erroneous for violation of First Amendment; members were ultimately able to hold the parades as requested in their applications and merely speculated about the amount of damages based upon an alleged potential decrease in offerings received from the evening rallies. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 1462

When court finds constitutional violation in action seeking monetary relief under §§1983, court or jury must at least award nominal damages. People for Ethical Treatment of Animals, Inc. v. Gittens, C.A.D.C.2005, 396 F.3d 416, 364 U.S.App.D.C. 386, rehearing denied, on remand 2005 WL 3536193. Civil Rights 1461

Nominal damages award of one dollar was plain error in § 1983 action against city and police officer, alleging that officer used excessive force when he shot and killed suspect during attempted burglary; award could not be reconciled with jury's finding of excessive force and stipulation of some actual damages, and, although it was beyond question that if suspect would have been arrested, his personal and financial situation would suffer, there was evidence that suspect, who was twenty-five year old first-time offender, would probably have received probation and would not have lost his job. Westcott v. Crinklaw, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1998, 133 F.3d 658. Federal Courts 633

Award of nominal damages was warranted, in action for, among other things, § 1983 procedural due process violation, where jury expressly found that plaintiff's procedural due process rights were violated. Caban-Wheeler v. Elsea, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 71 F.3d 837. Civil Rights 1461

Nominal compensatory damages award to black inmates whose equal protection rights were violated by general policy of segregating two-person cells was not clearly erroneous in absence of evidence that inmates were confined without privileges when vacancies existed in two-person cells occupied by white inmates. Sockwell v. Phelps, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 20 F.3d 187. Civil Rights 1461

Nominal damages must be awarded in a § 1983 suit if plaintiff proves a violation of his constitutional rights. George v. City of Long Beach, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 973 F.2d 706, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1269, 507 U.S. 915, 122 L.Ed.2d 664. Civil Rights 1461

Abortion protester was entitled to nominal damages of $1.00, arising from city's violation of protester's right to free speech; in requiring protester to obtain permit before demonstrating outside abortion clinic, pursuant to unconstitutional ordinance, city denied protester his right to speak on matter of public interest. Trewhella v. City of Lake Geneva, Wis., E.D.Wis.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 1057. Civil Rights 1461

State prison inmate who was denied access to court, in violation of his First and Fourteenth Amendment rights, would be awarded nominal compensatory damages of one dollar in §§ 1983 action; inmate was not entitled to compensatory damages equal to estimated amount of legal fees that would have been incurred had he proceeded with lawsuit he would have undertaken if provided with adequate legal advice, as he would have been entitled to free counsel, he suffered no physical injury, and he was precluded from recovering for mental or emotional injury by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). White v. Kautzky, N.D.Iowa 2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1042, motion to amend denied 2006 WL 141854. Civil Rights 1462

Nominal damages of one dollar, and attorney fees, would be awarded to anti-abortion group and individuals, following denial of parade permits in violation of their First Amendment rights. Lippoldt v. Cole, D.Kan.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1461; Civil Rights 1482

Only nominal damages would be awarded to inmate for due process violation resulting from placement, without a hearing, of inmate, who was of alleged female gender but was anatomically situated as a male due to the presence of a penis, in segregated confinement for a period of 438 days, with concomitant severely limited privileges, solely because of the condition and status of ambiguous gender since inmate was unable to prove damages; even if inmate would have been able to participate in the housing decision meetings, she still would not have been housed with the general population, and therefore, court would not award damages upon the difference between her actual segregated confinement and the general population. DiMarco v. Wyoming Dept. of Corrections Div. of Prisons, Wyo. Women's Center, D.Wyo.2004, 300 F.Supp.2d 1183. Civil Rights 1461

Award of $37,000 in nominal damages in § 1983 action, representing $1 in damages for each class member, would be prohibitively substantial, and award of $1 to each class representative in their representative capacity would satisfy purpose of nominal damages. Cummings v. Connell, E.D.Cal.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 1187, reversed and remanded 402 F.3d 936, amended 2005 WL 1154321, on remand 2006 WL 1716160. Civil Rights 1464

African-American employees of state human services department could proceed under § 1983 against department and its principal officials in their official capacities, seeking injunctive relief for alleged employment discrimination, even though damages claims were barred. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Civil Rights 1359; Civil Rights 1455

With respect to public employee's due process pretermination hearing claim, only nominal damages can be obtained under § 1983 for procedural breach if decision itself was proper, unless plaintiff suffered damages specifically caused by a procedural infirmity, as opposed to loss of her job. Fairbairn v. Board of Educ. of South Country Cent. School Dist., E.D.N.Y.1995, 876 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1469

Motorist, who had been convicted of alcohol-related driving offense, was entitled to $1 in damages for county probation department's violation of establishment clause by requiring probationer to attend alcoholism recovery program, Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), meetings as condition of probation; alleged harm suffered from delay in getting driver's license back due to failure to attend enough AA meetings was unconvincing, given motorist's other contemporaneous alcohol-related driving offenses, and damage claim for freedom of conscience violation and waste of time were similarly unconvincing. Warner v. Orange County Dept. of Probation, S.D.N.Y.1994, 870 F.Supp. 69, remanded 115 F.3d 1068, on remand 968 F.Supp. 917. Civil Rights 1461

Nominal damages of $1 may be recovered for constitutional violation in § 1983 cases and will carry with them reasonable legal fees. Harrison v. Sobol, S.D.N.Y.1988, 705 F.Supp. 870. Civil Rights 1461; Civil Rights 1479

Citizens' constitutional rights are of such a value that nominal damages are presumed to flow from the deprivation of such rights. Bell v. Gayle, N.D.Tex.1974, 384 F.Supp. 1022. Civil Rights 1461

Proof of a wrong done in violation of this section is taken as sufficient proof of nominal damages. Berry v. Macon County Bd. of Ed., M.D.Ala.1971, 380 F.Supp. 1244. Civil Rights 1461

In action under this section, nominal damages have been proved once an invasion or deprivation of a right to which plaintiff was entitled has been shown. Magnett v. Pelletier, D.C.Mass.1973, 360 F.Supp. 902, remanded on other grounds 488 F.2d 33. Civil Rights 1461

Jury finding that police officer's sending patient to hospital had not caused the patient any damage did not preclude judgment for the arrestee in his § 1983 suit alleging claims of unlawful seizure and false imprisonment; § 1983 actions based on Fourth Amendment violations were actionable for nominal damages without proof of actual injury. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

5449. ---- Actual injury, nominal damages, damages generally

Nominal, as opposed to compensatory, damages must be awarded whenever civil rights plaintiff establishes violation of his due process rights, but is unable to prove actual injury. Farrar v. Hobby, U.S.Tex.1992, 113 S.Ct. 566, 506 U.S. 103, 121 L.Ed.2d 494. Civil Rights 1461

Denial of procedural due process should be actionable for nominal damages without proof of actual injury. Carey v. Piphus, U.S.Ill.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 435 U.S. 247, 55 L.Ed.2d 252. Civil Rights 1461

Non-students were not entitled to nominal damages in their § 1983 action against state university officials, even though district court granted them declaratory relief, ruling that paved area between university building and public sidewalk was public forum so university could not impose outright ban on non-students handing out leaflets in that area; since court also found that non-students were impeding visitors to building while handing out leaflets and that campus police were justified in asking them to move, it was not university's treatment of plaintiffs, but, rather, university's leafleting ban that court found to be unconstitutional. Brister v. Faulkner, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2000, 214 F.3d 675, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 442, 531 U.S. 985, 148 L.Ed.2d 447. Civil Rights 1461

Nominal damages are available in civil rights action if plaintiff can show he was denied due process, even without proof of actual injury. Bradley v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1982, 671 F.2d 686. Civil Rights 1461

Nominal damages of $100 for each corporate plaintiff, non-minority engineering firms, was appropriate for violation of their constitutional rights resulting from county's unconstitutional minority and women business enterprise (MWBE) programs, which established "participation goals" for minority and women business enterprises in awarding county architectural and engineering (A & E) contracts where plaintiffs did not present sufficient evidence, lay or expert, to substantiate their lost profits or "lost opportunity cost" theories. Hershell Gill Consulting Engineers, Inc. v. Miami-Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1305. Civil Rights 1461; Civil Rights 1464

Class of prison's general population inmates and class of prison's segregation and orientation inmates were each entitled to award of $1 in nominal damages, rather than actual or compensatory damages, for prison officials' complete and systematic denial of their constitutional right of access to courts, where there was no evidence that any inmates had missed an appeal deadline or lost their case because of their inability to get into or have adequate assistance in law library, and there was no evidence that inmates suffered emotional distress as result of violation of their right to court access. Klinger v. Nebraska Dept. of Correctional Services, D.Neb.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1036, reversed 107 F.3d 609. Civil Rights 1461

Where there is no proof of actual injury to plaintiff who establishes deprivation of his civil rights, recovery is limited to nominal damages not to exceed one dollar. Pierce v. Stinson, E.D.Tenn.1979, 493 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1461

Under this section governing deprivation of rights, court may award nominal damages not to exceed one dollar without proof of actual injury for denial of procedural due process. Rheuark v. Shaw, D.C.Tex.1979, 477 F.Supp. 897, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 628 F.2d 297, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1392, 450 U.S. 931, 67 L.Ed.2d 365. Civil Rights 1461

5450. Back pay, damages generally--Generally

Where the constitutional violation complained of by a public employee is the denial of procedural due process, not the discharge from public employment, damages must be limited to those caused by the due process violation, and may include a full award of back pay only when there is a finding that the discharge would not have occurred if the employee's procedural due process rights had been observed. Brewer v. Chauvin, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 938 F.2d 860

Although, ordinarily, back pay is not awarded in civil rights actions except as part of an equitable decree of reinstatement, an award of back pay alone is within the sound discretion of the district court. Burt v. Board of Trustees of Edgefield County School Dist., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 521 F.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1471

Once it is determined that plaintiff or complaining class has sustained economic loss from discriminatory employment practice, back pay should normally be awarded unless special circumstances are present, and this principle is fully applicable not only to employees who have been denied promotion and equal opportunity after hire but also to applicants who have not been hired, solely because of their race. Mims v. Wilson, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1975, 514 F.2d 106. Civil Rights 1571

Eleventh Amendment barred state employees' claims against state for back pay based on their politically motivated terminations, where individual defendants were protected from money damages under §§ 1983 by qualified immunity. Sueiro Vazquez v. Torregrosa de la Rosa, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 124. Federal Courts 265

Issue of back pay in a §§ 1983 case should be submitted to the jury. Gansert v. Colorado, D.Colo.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1215. Civil Rights 1430

African-American former community college instructor could not receive back pay and lost benefits from president of community college in his official capacity after community college made racially discriminatory decision not to renew instructor's contract. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1471

5451. ---- Good faith, back pay, damages generally

Award of back pay is an element of equitable relief, and such relief is not precluded by a good-faith defense; schoolteacher whose contract had not been renewed because of exercise of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 rights was entitled to recover back pay from school district and school board members in their official capacities, notwithstanding their claim of good faith. Bertot v. School Dist. No. 1, Albany County, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1979, 613 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1471

In action brought by two public school teachers challenging allegedly unconstitutional maternity leave policies enforced by school boards, monetary relief in the form of back pay could not be awarded from school boards' treasury by suing individual school board members in their official capacities since members acted in good faith without knowledge that acts they took would violate constitutional rights and members did not act with malicious intent. Paxman v. Campbell, C.A.4 (Va.) 1980, 612 F.2d 848, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 951, 449 U.S. 1129, 67 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1471

5452. ---- Period for fixing award, back pay, damages generally

Claimant who brought successful § 1983 action claiming wrongful termination would be entitled to recover back pay for those quarterly periods during which income she would have earned on job from which she was terminated exceeded income earned in alternate employment, even though her earnings from alternate job were higher than earnings would have been had she remained on original job, when measured from termination until she was reoffered original job. Kendrick v. Jefferson County Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 13 F.3d 1510. Civil Rights 1471

High school history teacher whose constitutional rights were violated when her contract was not renewed because of activity protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 was entitled to back pay from the time of her termination until effective reinstatement, subject to principles of mitigation. Kingsville Independent School Dist. v. Cooper, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1109. Civil Rights 1471

Remedy for plaintiff, who was improperly demoted by junior college from his position as registrar to the position of teacher for the 1977-78 academic year, included back pay for the period between his demotion and his postdeprivation hearing, which was held prior to the expiration of the 1977-78 academic year; but the award of back pay could not extend beyond the time of the postdeprivation hearing, since plaintiff had no reasonable expectation of continued employment as registrar beyond the 1977-78 academic year, and defendants cured the deprivation of procedural due process by holding March 1978 hearing before the next consecutive year in which plaintiff could have been employed as registrar. Johnson v. San Jacinto Jr. College, S.D.Tex.1980, 498 F.Supp. 555. Colleges And Universities 8.1(7)

5453. ---- Reductions, back pay, damages generally

Public employee's interim earnings following dismissal had to be set off against any back pay award to employee in § 1983 action. Figueroa-Rodriguez v. Aquino, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1988, 863 F.2d 1037. Civil Rights 1471

Front- and back-pay award in terminated school district employee's §§1983 First Amendment retaliation action against district was not offsetable by employee's retirement benefits received from state teacher's retirement fund, where there was evidence of employee's contributions to fund, but no evidence of any contributions by district toward state's share of contributions toward fund. Salge v. Edna Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 542. Civil Rights 1471

Jury awards in § 1983 action for past lost wages and lost pensions would be remitted by amount awards exceeded expert testimony, absent evidence to support larger awards. Denton v. Morgan, N.D.Tex.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1015, affirmed 136 F.3d 1038, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1473

Back pay relief to which plaintiff, who was improperly demoted by junior college from registrar to teacher, was entitled for denial of procedural due process consisted of lost wages including the value of any employment benefits lost as a result of the unlawful demotion, less any actual subsequent earnings of plaintiff in regular daytime employment during that period. Johnson v. San Jacinto Jr. College, S.D.Tex.1980, 498 F.Supp. 555. Colleges And Universities 8.1(7)

5454. Front pay, damages generally

District court did not abuse its discretion in awarding only two years of front pay, under § 1983, to state employee who was terminated and replaced by individual who contributed to governor's campaign; court heard extensive testimony of each side's expert witness, and balanced employee's positive work history and impressive credentials against potentially negative impact employee's discharge and subsequent bankruptcy might have on potential employers. Mason v. Oklahoma Turnpike Authority, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1442, appeal decided 124 F.3d 217, on remand 1998 WL 2018163. Civil Rights 1471

Jury's award of $500,000 in front pay to public housing employee, who was discharged from his position of director of internal audit department in violation of First Amendment, was supported by testimony of employee's actuarial expert as to employee's lost future income, using several sophisticated calculations that produced various figures, the lowest of which was $30,000 more than jury's verdict, and by lack of evidence controverting expert. Feldman v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 43 F.3d 823. Civil Rights 1473

If reinstatement is not feasible remedy for violation of public employee's free speech rights, court may grant front pay as alternative equitable remedy. Grantham v. Trickey, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 21 F.3d 289. Civil Rights 1471

Decision not to award front pay to teachers who had succeeded on § 1983 claim that nonrenewal of their contracts was motivated by activities protected by First Amendment was not an abuse of discretion; teachers were all probationary teachers with one-year contracts and jury award compensated them for three school years immediately following nonrenewal. Standley v. Chilhowee R-IV School Dist., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 5 F.3d 319, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1471

In a §§ 1983 case, an award of "front pay" is a matter for the court to decide. Gansert v. Colorado, D.Colo.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1215. Civil Rights 1430

Former employee who prevailed in § 1983 action against city and city police department arising out of her discharge was entitled to reinstatement rather than front pay, where defendants had stipulated at trial that if employee prevailed she would be offered reinstatement, employee did not request front pay before or during trial, and her trial evidence regarded back pay issues only. Murphy v. City of Elko, D.Nev.1997, 976 F.Supp. 1359. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1471

Professor who brought § 1983 action against his former employer was not entitled to recover damages for front and back pay or for research grants because professor obtained new employment at higher salary without any interim period of unemployment and any monetary loss from loss of research grants was loss suffered by university, not by professor. San Filippo v. Bongiovanni, D.N.J.1990, 743 F.Supp. 327, reversed 961 F.2d 1125, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 305, 506 U.S. 908, 121 L.Ed.2d 228. Civil Rights 1471

Where jury in civil rights action had already considered plaintiff's claims for money damages, court could not award additional damages as "equitable" relief under the rubric of "front pay." Swanson v. Martwick, N.D.Ill.1989, 726 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1471

5455. Compensable items, damages generally--Generally

City's conduct in discouraging church participation in anti-abortion rallies was irrelevant to determining whether parade organizer and anti-abortion association director demonstrated compensable injury from denial of parade permits in violation of First Amendment; organizer and director did not show that city's other conduct was a constitutional violation. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 1462

Lessee/proprietor who suffered procedural due process violation when city evicted him from leased premises with inadequate, same-day notice was not entitled in his §§1983 action against city to recover money damages as compensation for lack of predeprivation hearing, absent evidence of loss or practical harm that went beyond 30 days' lost profits and value of lost or damaged property, which damages award covered; there was no showing of harm or loss flowing directly from failure to provide hearing. Kassim v. City of Schenectady, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 415 F.3d 246. Civil Rights 1462

Compensatory damages in action under § 1983 may include not only out-of-pocket loss and other monetary harms, but also such injuries as impairment of reputation, personal humiliation, and mental anguish and suffering. Acevedo-Garcia v. Monroig, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 351 F.3d 547. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

Compensatory damages awarded § 1983 civil rights claims are governed by common-law tort principles. Sockwell v. Phelps, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 20 F.3d 187. Civil Rights 1462

Appropriate compensatory damages in civil rights death action would include medical and burial expenses, pain and suffering before death, loss of earnings based upon probable duration of victim's life had the injury not occurred, victim's loss of consortium, and other damages recognized in common-law tort actions. Berry v. City of Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 900 F.2d 1489. Civil Rights 1462

Organization that was improperly denied parade permit based on content of anticipated message was not entitled in § 1983 action to compensation for the fact of the constitutional violation itself. Nationalist Movement v. City of Boston, D.Mass.1998, 12 F.Supp.2d 182. Civil Rights 1462

5456. ---- Intrinsic value, compensable items, damages generally

Abstract value of the constitutional right may not form the basis for section 1983 damages; hence, damages could not be awarded school teacher solely for abstract value of his free speech and due process rights violated in his suspension; disapproving Herrera v. Valentine, 653 F.2d 1220 (CA8); Corriz v. Naranjo, 667 F.2d 892 (CA10); Bell v. Little Axe Independent School Dist. No. 70, 766 F.2d 1391 (CA10); Konczak v. Tyrrell, 603 F.2d 13 (CA7) . Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, U.S.Mich.1986, 106 S.Ct. 2537, 477 U.S. 299, 91 L.Ed.2d 249, on remand 803 F.2d 721. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1470

Jury could not compensate arrestee, asserting civil rights claims against officers, for intrinsic value of deprivation of his right not to be subjected to excessive force. Hay v. City of Irving, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 893 F.2d 796. Civil Rights 1462

Damages based on abstract value or importance of constitutional rights were not permissible element of compensatory damages in section 1983 case. Bailey v. Andrews, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1987, 811 F.2d 366. Civil Rights 1462

5457. ---- Aggravation of injuries, compensable items, damages generally

Motorist who was injured in automobile accident and then arrested by state trooper and taken to jail where deputy sheriff delayed taking him to hospital even though he was suffering from fractured ulna could recover damages for aggravation of his preexisting injuries or for pain and suffering proximately caused by unreasonable delay in taking him to the hospital but could not recover from sheriff, deputy sheriff, and state trooper for injuries received in the accident itself. Shannon v. Lester, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1975, 519 F.2d 76. Civil Rights 1462

5458. ---- Attorney fees, compensable items, damages generally

Teacher was entitled to attorney fees on appeal from favorable judgment in §§ 1983 suit against school district; teacher succeeded on appeal in obtaining a broader injunction and successfully defended the cross-appeal in which district challenged the district court's award of an injunction and damages, as well as attorney fees. Warnock v. Archer, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 397 F.3d 1024. Civil Rights 1492

Court of Appeals would defer to Utah district court's decision that hourly rate for attorney fees in § 1983 action should be $105, notwithstanding plaintiff's argument that court failed to take into account increases in attorney fee rates during five-year span of litigation, where plaintiff failed to provide any record evidence on issue of attorney fees. Youren v. Tintic School Dist., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 343 F.3d 1296. Federal Courts 714

Plaintiff who claimed that violation of her constitutional rights occurred when police searched her home for a missing child was not entitled to award of attorney fees, even though she was technically a "prevailing party" in her § 1983 action, where jury returned verdict for no compensatory damages and plaintiff obtained one dollar in nominal damages only after moving for them. Caruso v. Forslund, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1995, 47 F.3d 27. Civil Rights 1482

Suit against District of Columbia school district and its officials, alleging violations of Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) and resulting in injunctive relief in form of "stay-put" protection and reimbursement for expenses associated with maintaining their educational placements at school, was properly brought and decided under IDEA rather than §§ 1983, for purposes of determining amount of attorney fees to be awarded; court had ability to fashion appropriate equitable remedies under IDEA, including reimbursement. Spilsbury v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 1. Schools 155.5(5)

Attorney fee award of 33% of settlement fund of $12 million was reasonable, in §§ 1983 action against District of Columbia Department of Corrections challenging Department's strip-search policy and alleged over-detentions; counsel had engaged in protracted efforts over four years to obtain outstanding settlement in both monetary and injunctive terms, case was complex and involved novel issues, case carried serious risk of lack of success, and settlement met with high level of class satisfaction. Bynum v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 73 . Attorney And Client 155

Cable television provider that prevailed in its action against city under §§ 1983 to enforce provision of the Communications Act setting maximum franchise fee that city could collect was not entitled to award of attorney fees under the civil rights attorney fee statute. Time Warner Cable-Rochester v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 143. Civil Rights 1482

For prevailing plaintiff in § 1983 action to receive attorney's fee award, he must not only show that he is entitled to award, but must also document appropriate hours expended and hourly rates. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1482; Civil Rights 1490

A prevailing plaintiff under § 1983 is entitled to attorney fees . Jackson v. Austin, D.Kan.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1482

Secretary of Puerto Rico Department of Justice (DOJ) was not entitled to attorney fee award as prevailing defendant based on his ultimate dismissal from § 1983 action, alleging First Amendment retaliation, by discharged agent for Special Investigations Bureau (SIB); complaint against Secretary, who had signed agent's termination letter, was not completely meritless and unfounded at time of filing, claim survived motion to dismiss filed by Secretary and subsequent motions for summary judgment by all defendants, and not until presentation of evidence at trial was court left with no option other than to dismiss case against Secretary due to former agent's failure to establish that Secretary had any knowledge of protected expressions. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 156. Civil Rights 1484

Award of attorney fees to prevailing codefendant in § 1983 case would be inequitable, even assuming arguendo that claim against that defendant was frivolous; plaintiff's financial condition was weak and award of damages against other defendants was conservative in light of longevity of case and time elapsed between filing of complaint and final adjudication, which delay was caused in part by that codefendant's repeated attempts to avoid trial and filing of summary judgment motions even after court had stated it would not entertain any more such motions. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 156. Civil Rights 1484

Arrestee's spouse was prevailing party in §§ 1983 action against state police corporal brought on behalf of herself, daughter, and arrestee's estate, so as to be entitled to attorney fees and costs following court's award of nominal damages on multiple claims based on jury's determination that corporal had entered arrestee's home unlawfully but had not used excessive force; arrestee's spouse prevailed even though only a partial victory was won, and determination that spouse and her family acted rightly in defending Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights was significant when coupled with legal significance of unreasonable search and seizure and public purpose of deterring such behavior. Buss v. Quigg, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 91 Fed.Appx. 759, 2004 WL 234962, Unreported. Civil Rights 1476; Civil Rights 1482

Given that district court had already determined that insurer, as prevailing party in § 1983 action by policy holders, challenging constitutionality of insurer's conversion from mutual life insurance company to stock insurance company, was entitled to award of attorney fees and expense, magistrate court, in determining amount of fee award, was without authority to revisit issues, such as timeliness of insurer's fee application, that went to policy holders' liability and which policy holders already raised or could have raised before district court. Tancredi v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22299203, Unreported, report and recommendation adopted 2003 WL 22493855. United States Magistrates 20

Following appellate court's determination that district court did not have jurisdiction to conduct second trial of protesters' claim for damages against city and police officer under § 1983 for their arrest for violating residential antipicketing ordinance, and reinstatement of jury verdict of first trial in protesters' favor, protesters were entitled to attorney fees and costs, even though trial court had vacated award against officer following first trial; protesters were prevailing party in first jury trial and were entitled to attorney fees and costs under law of case, and all proceedings after first trial were null and void. Copper v. City of Fargo, ND, C.A.8 (N.D.) 2003, 68 Fed.Appx. 752, 2003 WL 21448423, Unreported. Civil Rights 1482; Courts 99(6)

5459. ---- Commuting expenses, compensable items, damages generally

Discriminatorily discharged school teachers, a husband and wife, were not entitled to consequential damages for living and commuting expenses incurred as the result of their work outside the vicinity of their permanent home. Jackson v. Wheatley School Dist. No. 28 of St. Francis County, Arkansas, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1973, 489 F.2d 608. Schools 147.54

Where teachers were unlawfully terminated from their employment for discriminatory reasons, and as result were required to find other employment and to incur commuting expenses which would not have been incurred had it not been for wrongful termination, teachers were entitled to recover such increased commuting expenses as damages from school district. Harkless v. Sweeny Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1978, 466 F.Supp. 457, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 608 F.2d 594. Schools 144(3)

5460. ---- Costs, compensable items, damages generally

Plaintiff proceeding in forma pauperis is not protected from taxation of costs to which prevailing defendant is entitled. Warren v. Guelker, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1386. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Awarding costs against state prisoner who presented unsuccessful civil rights claim was not abuse of discretion, even if prisoner was indigent; award of costs served valuable purpose of discouraging unmeritorious claims and treated unsuccessful litigants alike rather than having improper chilling effect on prisoners' civil rights litigation. McGill v. Faulkner, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 18 F.3d 456, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 233, 513 U.S. 889, 130 L.Ed.2d 157. Federal Civil Procedure 2731

Pro se litigant was entitled to recover actual costs reasonably incurred in prosecuting § 1983 civil rights action to extent that attorney could have received costs under § 1988 attorney's fees award, including: reasonable costs of paralegal and secretarial assistance, reasonable costs actually incurred for copying pleadings which otherwise would have been reimbursed through overhead implicit an attorney's hourly fee, statutory nonexpert witness fee, and any photo blow-up expenses which were reasonably necessary to assist the court. Burt v. Hennessey, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 929 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1476

For illegal exaction of tuition fees by universities, defendant state officials were liable along with university for plaintiffs' costs in bringing that litigation, and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11 did not bar award of costs against such state officials. Samuel v. University of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 538 F.2d 991. Federal Civil Procedure 2731; Federal Courts 268.1

College teacher whose contract was breached because of his testimony at obscenity trial and resulting publicity, although other pretexts were adopted, and who brought civil rights action could recover costs, on account of unreasonable and obdurate obstinacy throughout proceedings which culminated in injunction requiring reinstatement pending appeal, but was not entitled to costs as to subsequent proceedings which were no more than run of mill litigation in which defendants were not obstinate in defending his moot claim or claim for subsequent year which was added by amendment. Rainey v. Jackson State College, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1973, 481 F.2d 347. Civil Rights 1476

Defendants in dismissed action by former corrections officer, which had alleged that Department of Correction's sick leave policy violated the Equal Protection Clause as applied to him and others slated for permanent disability, were not entitled to bill of costs; action entailed substantial legal issues raising fair ground for litigation, officer had prosecuted his claims diligently and in good faith, imposing costs would unduly discourage effective enforcement of statutory and constitutional rights, and, because officer had refiled his action in state court, much of the costs for which defendants sought reimbursement would have been incurred in any event. Torres v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 317. Civil Rights 1476; Civil Rights 1484

Risk of prohibitive arbitration costs was too speculative to require invalidation of police chief's arbitration agreement with town which required him to pay arbitration-related expenses arising out of his Title VII and § 1983 actions against town, where police chief only provided anticipated arbitration costs, his financial situation would be factored into assessment of costs under hardship provision, and police chief provided no evidence of comparative expense of litigation. Boyd v. Town of Hayneville, AL, M.D.Ala.2001, 144 F.Supp.2d 1272. Arbitration 6.2

Inmate who filed successful civil rights action to obtain life-saving coronary surgery was not entitled to have federal government pay for discovery and contacting of medical advisors and expert witnesses where cause of action did not arise out of federal confinement, nor did it arise against federal officials. Catala-Fonfrias v. Izquierdo-Mora, D.Puerto Rico 1990, 741 F.Supp. 30, affirmed 971 F.2d 744. United States 147(11.1)

A district court has discretion to assess costs against losing party in an action under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights by state action even when that party is a prisoner proceeding pro se who received in forma pauperis status pursuant to section 1915 of Title 28; section 1915 of Title 28 does not waive payment of necessary fees and costs when the action is filed, but only postpones decision of whether to assess those fees and costs until a final determination of the case. Partee v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1981, 528 F.Supp. 1254. Civil Rights 1476

Expenses that prevailing party incurred in § 1983 action in printing documents prepared for appeal were not taxable as costs by District Court, even though party was successful on appeal; those costs should have been taxed to opponent by Court of Appeals. Kraebel v. New York City Dept. of Housing Preservation and Development, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 1846332, Unreported. Civil Rights 1492

5461. ---- Embarrassment and humiliation, compensable items, damages generally

Compensatory damages awarded by jury to terminated career employees in Puerto Rico municipal sanitation department, for mayor's violation of their First Amendment political affiliation rights, were rationally related to employees' economic loss as well as to their impairment of reputation, their mental anguish, and their suffering, which were standard components of compensatory damages in §§ 1983 action, where many employees were without their jobs and associated benefits for substantial period of time and employees testified that they were humiliated and stunned by loss of their "career" jobs. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1472

Property owners subjected to unlawful search in violation of their civil rights were entitled to damages for humiliation and personal indignity visited on each of them as result both of wrongful application for and improper execution of search warrant. Baskin v. Parker, C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 602 F.2d 1205. Civil Rights 1463 excessive detention prior to initial court appearance, established that he suffered personal and pecuniary injuries from deprivation of constitutional rights, and thus would be properly entitled to compensatory damages; arrestee's reputation in community was compromised as result of his confinement, arrestee suffered mental anguish, emotional distress and physical pain while incarcerated, and arrestee was financially injured when his home and property were left unattended for 38-day period. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

In civil rights cases, compensable injuries may include not only monetary losses such as out-of-pocket expenses, but also injuries such as personal humiliation and mental anguish. Dejesus v. Village of Pelham Manor, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

A plaintiff in an action under this section may recover damages for humiliation and mental distress. Sebastian v. Texas Dept. of Corrections, S.D.Tex.1983, 558 F.Supp. 507. Civil Rights 1463

5462. ---- Emotional and mental distress, compensable items, damages generally

Mental and emotional distress caused by denial of procedural due process itself is compensable under Civil Rights Act of 1871, but neither the likelihood of such injury nor the difficulty of proving it is so great as to justify awarding compensatory damages without proof that such injury actually was caused. Carey v. Piphus, U.S.Ill.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 435 U.S. 247, 55 L.Ed.2d 252. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1463

Fact that pretrial detainee's emotional distress was caused both by his reaction to his own criminal conduct and resulting incarceration, and by sexual assault committed against him by jail official, did not mandate finding that $250,000 compensatory damage award for detainee was excessive in his § 1983 action against official; court noted that award included finding that part of detainee's emotional distress was caused by circumstances for which he could not recover, i.e., his own criminal conduct and resulting incarceration. Mathie v. Fries, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 121 F.3d 808. Civil Rights 1464

Medical assistance benefits claimants who brought § 1983 class action challenging Indiana's provision for administrative appeals of administrative law judge (ALJ) decisions, following state's appeal of ALJ decisions in claimants' favor, could not receive money damages to compensate for anxiety or delay created by administrative appeals. Egan v. Davis, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 118 F.3d 1148. Civil Rights 1463

Evidence supported jury's determination that pretrial detainee did not suffer compensable harm, and was not entitled to compensatory damages, as result of corrections officer's conduct in intentionally provoking or inciting detainee into "rage attacks" by relentlessly taunting him, so that she could subsequently discipline him by imposing administrative lock down, where detainee put forward evidence of damages related to his mental and emotional suffering endured as result of officer's actions, but did not present any evidence of economic damages. O'Connor v. Huard, C.A.1 (Me.) 1997, 117 F.3d 12, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 691, 522 U.S. 1047, 139 L.Ed.2d 636. Civil Rights 1420

Mental and emotional distress, which include mental suffering and emotional anguish, constitute compensable injury under § 1983. Coleman v. Rahija, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 114 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1463

Arrestee presented sufficient evidence of harm to justify award of $8,500 in § 1983 suit against officer arising from illegal search and arrest; arrestee testified that search and arrest left him nervous, restless, and unable to sleep, arrestee testified that officer had handcuffed and roughly shoved arrestee, and doctor of chiropractic testified that he had treated arrestee 14 times for mild back injury. Chatman v. Slagle, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1997, 107 F.3d 380. Civil Rights 1464

Awards in civil rights action of compensatory damages of $40,800 each to husband and wife and $20,400 to son for mental distress and inconvenience and hardship suffered because home lacked running water, as a result of violation of substantive due process in denial of street excavation permit for connection of home to public water system, were not excessive in case in which home was without water for some three and one-half months as result of attempt of town's superintendent of highways to extort deed of part of the land in exchange for grant of permit. Walz v. Town of Smithtown, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 46 F.3d 162, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2557, 515 U.S. 1131, 132 L.Ed.2d 810. Civil Rights 1464

Plaintiff in federal civil rights action cannot recover for emotional distress unless he or she presents evidence of actual injury, as there is no right to damages other than nominal one for violation of a constitutional right unless actual injury is proven. Bolden v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 21 F.3d 29. Civil Rights 1463

Evidence of medical attention was not required to support claim of emotional distress in § 1983 action; while evidence of medical attention supports claim for emotional distress, it is not required nor necessarily probative. Miner v. City of Glens Falls, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 999 F.2d 655. Civil Rights 1463; Civil Rights 1472

Awarding inmate $250 in compensatory damages for emotional distress he suffered when prison employee copied love letters inmate had written to another inmate's ex-wife and showed copies to other inmate was not abuse of discretion in inmate's civil rights action. Jolivet v. Deland, C.A.10 (Utah) 1992, 966 F.2d 573. Civil Rights 1464

Police officer who had been wrongfully dismissed for exercising his free speech rights was not entitled to recover emotional distress damages, absent showing he actually experienced demonstrable emotional distress; it did not suffice just to point to circumstances of constitutional violation which might support inference of such injury. Biggs v. Village of Dupo, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 892 F.2d 1298. Damages 57.58

Assuming liability is found under this section for violation of an individual's constitutional rights through use of excessive force in completing an arrest, jury may assess compensatory damages based upon, inter alia, physical harm suffered, the emotional harm suffered even though no actual damages are proven, and violation of a plaintiff's substantive right to liberty; jury may award more than a nominal sum for deprivation of certain substantive constitutional rights including the due process and liberty interests in freedom from excessive force at hands of police officers, independent of any recovery for actual physical and emotional injury. Bauer v. Norris, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1983, 713 F.2d 408. Civil Rights 1461

In a civil rights suit brought under this section compensation for damage to reputation and emotional distress must not be denied simply because it is not easily quantified; conversely, such injuries cannot be presumed to flow from every deprivation of constitutional rights, but, instead, plaintiff must prove existence and magnitude of subjected injuries with competent evidence. Busche v. Burkee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1981, 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212. Damages 57.1

Where protestor's right to free expression was violated by police officers who tore up her protest sign, protestor could recover not only for out-of-pocket expenses but also for emotional and mental distress. Glasson v. City of Louisville, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1975, 518 F.2d 899, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 280, 423 U.S. 930, 46 L.Ed.2d 258. Civil Rights 1463

An organization cannot recover for humiliation or other emotional distress in a §§1983 action. Mason v. Wolf, D.Colo.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1463

Compensatory damages award of $1 million was excessive, in patient's §§ 1983 action alleging involuntary admission and confinement to mental hospital, and thus would be subjected to remittitur in amount of $450,000, where patient was kept in hospital for four days, he was not informed of precise reasons for his confinement, patient had been previously diagnosed with bipolar disorder, but that fact was not advertised prior to events in question, information used to pick-up and confine patient was uncorroborated hearsay that he had made threat days earlier, and patient was not subjected to physical abuse. Ruhlmann v. Smith, N.D.N.Y.2004, 323 F.Supp.2d 356. Civil Rights 1464

Civilian maintenance worker employed in state police barracks could recover compensatory damages from state police officer in suit alleging §§ 1983 and Pennsylvania state law civil battery claims for officer's holding worker in headlock while bringing loaded service revolver up near worker's head, where the incident scared and humiliated worker and continued to reduce his quality of life both at home and at work in that his anxiety interfered with his sleeping and he was not as happy as he used to be at work. Schall v. Vazquez, E.D.Pa.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 594. Assault And Battery 37; Civil Rights 1472

Although physical injury resulting from emotional distress buttresses the basis for damages for such a claim, shock, anxiety, fear and humiliation alone may be sufficient to establish compensatory damages in civil rights cases. Dejesus v. Village of Pelham Manor, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1463

Former inmate could not establish damages in constitutional challenge to prison drug treatment programs, since any claims for mental distress or emotional injury were barred by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), and his claim of delayed release was defeated by Wisconsin Parole Commission chairperson's unrebutted affidavit stating that inmate's failure to participate in and complete treatment programs did not deter chairperson from granting his parole. Kerr v. Puckett, E.D.Wis.1997, 967 F.Supp. 354, affirmed 138 F.3d 321. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1463

County employee was entitled to $4,500 in damages for mental distress in § 1983 action in which employee was terminated in violation of her procedural due process rights under Fourteenth Amendment but was not entitled to award for future medical expenses, where although psychologist testified that a year or two of therapy might be helpful, employee indicated that she would be too afraid to seek treatment. Smith v. Milwaukee County, E.D.Wis.1997, 954 F.Supp. 1314. Civil Rights 1470; Civil Rights 1472; Civil Rights 1473

Each member of the subclass consisting of women who were hired by city police department would be paid tort-like non-economic damages for personal injuries resulting from constitutional violations under § 1983, including impairment of reputation, embarrassment, and emotional distress, in the amount of $1,890.05 pursuant to consent judgment remedying discriminatory practices engaged in by department. Schaefer v. Tannian, E.D.Mich.1995, 902 F.Supp. 746. Federal Civil Procedure 2397.2

Damages which police officer could recover for retaliatory discrimination in violation of Title VII and § 1983 were $50 per month in pay for period of 18 months for additional pay police officer would have received if he had been granted his transfer to detective division and $15,000 for emotional distress and humiliation resulting from denial of transfer. McClam v. City of Norfolk Police Dept., E.D.Va.1995, 877 F.Supp. 277. Municipal Corporations 185(15)

Inmate was entitled to damages for severe emotional distress suffered during her confinement in segregation unit based upon her HIV positive status in violation of her due process rights; conditions of confinement of inmate in segregation unit with other inmates who were suicidal or demonstrated severe psychiatric problems constituted ample evidence of inmate's psychological trauma from confinement to support award of damages. Nolley v. County of Erie, W.D.N.Y.1992, 802 F.Supp. 898. Damages 57.34

Daughter who viewed police officer's use of excessive force in restraining her mother was entitled to award of $5,000 to compensate her for emotional distress and mental anguish proximately caused by deputy's conduct; daughter had recently been released from mental hospital, witnessing use of excessive force against mother aggravated her mental condition, and she subsequently attempted to commit suicide. Thomas v. Frederick,

W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540. Damages 140.5

Physician whose medical center was forcibly entered and unreasonably searched in violation of Fourth Amendment rights could not recover compensatory damages for emotional distress in federal civil rights suit under § 1983, under Ohio law on trespasses which governed recovery of damages, where earlier legal search of medical center pursuant to warrant had taken place, physician was subject of prosecution for medicaid fraud and obstruction of justice and suffered criminal trials and conviction on one count, as well as family problems, and physician did not produce evidence demonstrating what portion of complained of stress was directly attributable to the forcible entry and unreasonable search that violated his Fourth Amendment rights. Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1990, 745 F.Supp. 446, affirmed 947 F.2d 945. Civil Rights 1463

Compensatory damages for therapy and emotional distress are appropriate in action under federal civil rights statute, within the court's discretion. Jones v. Rivers, D.D.C.1990, 732 F.Supp. 176. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

5463. ---- Good-time credits, compensable items, damages generally

Loss of good-time credits by state prisoner may not be claimed as an element of damages in a suit under this section. Derrow v. Shields, W.D.Va.1980, 482 F.Supp. 1144. Civil Rights 1462

5464. ---- Funeral expenses, compensable items, damages generally

Plaintiff was entitled to recover for funeral and burial expenses, medical expenses, and decedent's conscious pain and suffering between time decedent was fatally shot through illegal force by defendant police officer and time of his death. Phillips v. Ward, E.D.Pa.1975, 415 F.Supp. 976. Death 82; Death 84

5465. ---- Future earnings, compensable items, damages generally

Whether contract of psychiatrist at state mental hospital would have been renewed but for his memoranda criticizing state of healthcare at the hospital, so as to support award of economic damages, was question of fact for jury in psychiatrist's §§ 1983 action arising when his contract was not renew in alleged retaliation for exercising his First Amendment free speech rights. Springer v. Henry, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 435 F.3d 268. Civil Rights 1431

State prisoner transferred to another facility in violation of his constitutional rights was entitled under § 1983 to compensatory damages for the loss of his position as a para-law library clerk at the transferor facility, measured by the difference between the salary he would have earned in that position and the salary he earned at the transferee facility. Castle v. Clymer, E.D.Pa.1998, 15 F.Supp.2d 640. Civil Rights 1462

Transit authority employees who were denied promotion as a result of due process violations in connection with drug-testing program were entitled to proportional recovery, based on the compensation the employee would have received if promoted multiplied by the employee's chances of having received the promotion had he passed the drug test. Burka v. New York City Transit Authority, S.D.N.Y.1990, 747 F.Supp. 214. Civil Rights 1473

Public school music teacher who was unjustly terminated in violation of his constitutional rights was not entitled to award of damages for commercial music income loss arising from discharge, in view of fact that amount of financial damage suffered by teacher was too speculative to permit an award, despite fact that teacher's net income from commercial music in years prior to discharge was proven with specificity through his wife's largely unchallenged testimony from the couple's federal income tax returns. Eckerd v. Indian River School Dist., D.C.Del.1979, 475 F.Supp. 1350. Schools 144(3)

An award for impairment to future earning capacity of plaintiff's decedent was entirely speculative and was, therefore, inappropriate where plaintiff's actuarial testimony was premised on assumption that decedent would have taken a full time job when, though appropriate jobs may have been available, evidence failed to establish that decedent would have accepted a job in that decedent, considering his past work history, his school record, and his involvement with criminal activity, lacked any desire to work and most likely would not have earned more than his personal maintenance expenses. Phillips v. Ward, E.D.Pa.1975, 415 F.Supp. 976. Death 95(2)

5466. ---- Interest, compensable items, damages generally

Civil rights plaintiff was presumptively entitled to prejudgment interest on verdict against city from the date of suit until the date of final judgment. Foley v. City of Lowell, Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 948 F.2d 10. Interest 47(1)

Jury's rejection of prejudgment interest did not preclude district court from awarding prejudgment interest on state recovery for false imprisonment, where it appeared that district court had instructed jury that its question on prejudgment interest was intended to relate only to federal civil rights finding on false arrest claim. Lewis v. Kendrick, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 944 F.2d 949. Interest 39(2.50)

County employee who prevailed on procedural due process challenge to his discharge could recover prejudgment interest on ascertainable wages he was denied after his discharge until he was given predischarge hearing or, if such was not afforded, until date of verdict in his favor. Winter v. Cerro Gordo County Conservation Bd., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1991, 925 F.2d 1069. Interest 39(2.40)

Award of prejudgment interest in § 1983 action is matter left to sound discretion of trial court, and is governed by considerations of fairness, making plaintiff whole or compensation, and balancing equities. Murphy v. City of Elko, D.Nev.1997, 976 F.Supp. 1359. Interest 39(2.45)

Prejudgment interest for former county employee was warranted after jury determined back-pay award, though she did not request prejudgment interest from jury, where she was deprived of money that she otherwise would have earned but for discriminatory acts of county employer. Frank v. Relin, W.D.N.Y.1994, 851 F.Supp. 87. Interest 39(2.45); Interest 66

Prejudgment interest is recoverable in civil rights cases, and it is ordinarily an abuse of discretion not to award prejudgment interest. Zicherman v. Korean Air Lines Co., Ltd., S.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 605, supplemented 1993 WL 118498, affirmed 43 F.3d 18, certiorari granted in part 115 S.Ct. 1689, 514 U.S. 1062, 131 L.Ed.2d 554, affirmed in part, reversed in part 116 S.Ct. 629, 516 U.S. 217, 133 L.Ed.2d 596, on remand 92 F.3d 126. Interest 39(2.45)

Equities favored granting applicant for renewal of taxicab franchise prejudgment interest on verdict in its favor in its § 1983 action alleging that city's conduct in interfering with applicant's labor dispute was preempted by National Labor Relations Act and violated its rights to due process and equal protection; prejudgment interest was necessary to compensate applicant for loss of use of money it otherwise would have had and to fulfill the purpose of § 1983 to compensate the victim. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.1991, 773 F.Supp. 204. Interest 39(2.45)

Transit authority employees who prevailed in civil rights action in establishing due process violations in connection with drug-testing program were not entitled to prejudgment interest, in that prejudgment interest was not necessary to meaningfully compensate the employees, unconstitutional treatment of employees did not enable transit authority to obtain financial benefits to which employees would have equitable claim of entitlement, authority was a public corporation providing a basic necessity to the community, and prejudgment interest would have no deterrent value as there was no evidence that authority was acting in bad faith. Burka v. New York City Transit Authority, S.D.N.Y.1990, 747 F.Supp. 214. Interest 39(2.45)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In measuring damages recoverable by teachers who had been unlawfully terminated by school district, prejudgment interest would be awarded on expenses of suit. Harkless v. Sweeny Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1978, 466 F.Supp. 457, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 608 F.2d 594. Interest 39(2.20)

5467. ---- Loss of consortium, compensable items, damages generally

Loss of consortium damages were not recoverable in wife's § 1983 action alleging that police officer used excessive force when he shot and killed wife's husband during attempted burglary, as record did not support wife's characterization of her suit as wrongful death action; although wife's complaint sought damages on behalf of husband's estate and on "her own behalf," record made clear that wife sued as personal representative of husband's estate to recover damages for deprivation of husband's constitutional rights. Westcott v. Crinklaw, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1998, 133 F.3d 658. Civil Rights 1462

Children of motor vehicle passenger who was shot and killed by police officer, following a high-speed motor vehicle chase, had no cause of action under §§ 1983 for loss of consortium. Tallman v. Elizabeth Police Dept., W.D.Ky.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 992, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 459, 2006 WL 166610. Parent And Child 7.5

5467A. ---- Loss of companionship, compensable items, damages generally

Parents of pre-trial detainee who was murdered in county jail were entitled to assert Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process causes of action against county defendants to vindicate their constitutional rights for loss of companionship with their adult son. Rentz v. Spokane County, E.D.Wash.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 1252. Constitutional Law 262

5468. ---- Loss of life, compensable items, damages generally

Estate of arrestee who was shot and killed by police officer could recover loss of life damages in federal civil rights action, even though Wisconsin wrongful death statutes do not permit a victim's estate to recover damages for loss of life, and even though officer's shooting was not motivated by racial animus, officer was dead so that there was no need to deter any further conduct on his part, award of damages could not deter others who might act under an insane delusion, and damages would be ultimately paid by municipalities under the Wisconsin indemnity statute. Graham v. Sauk Prairie Police Com'n, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1990, 915 F.2d 1085. Civil Rights 1462

5468A. ---- Loss of profit, compensable items, damages generally

Transporter of solid waste failed to show that it would have received contract from department of sanitation (DOS) to transport and process city's waste, as required to support § 1983 claim for lost profits allegedly resulting from city's decision to release itself from lease of property on which transporter intended to operate waste collection facility and from county improvement authority's denial of transporter's application to participate in solid waste management plan (SWMP) as was required to obtain required permit; there was no evidence that transporter's contract with DOS was pending or even reasonably probable given that transporter was not included among top tier of proposals, and numerous variables in DOS's bidding process broke chain of causation necessary to support inference that conduct of city and county caused lost profits. American Marine Rail NJ, LLC v. City of Bayonne, D.N.J.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 569. Civil Rights 1462

5469. ---- Out of pocket expenses, compensable items, damages generally

A public school teacher may recover compensatory damages, under Civil Rights Act of 1871, for out-of-pocket expenses, mental and emotional distress, community humiliation, and loss of professional reputation caused by infringement of his constitutionally protected speech. Knapp v. Whitaker, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 757 F.2d 827, appeal dismissed, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 36, 474 U.S. 803, 88 L.Ed.2d 29. Civil Rights 1471; Civil Rights

If police officer, who struck plaintiff while the latter was photographing a group of officers engaged in apprehending a boy on street, was found liable under this section, plaintiff was entitled to recover compensatory damages including cost of his destroyed camera, and expense for medical treatment to remove the scar caused by the incident as well as award for pain and suffering. Shillingford v. Holmes, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 634 F.2d 263, on remand 512 F.Supp. 656. Civil Rights 1462

Volunteer for pro-life organization whose First Amendment free speech rights were violated when he was restricted from demonstrating in designated public forum area of state higher education center's campus, and who was arrested when he tried to relocate to the designated public forum area, was entitled to $2,000 compensatory damages under §§ 1983, where he lost sponsor who was providing him with a $100 monthly stipend, and was deprived of his right to address passersby on the date in question, but became paid director of the organization 20 months after the incident. Mason v. Wolf, D.Colo.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1464

Organization from which city improperly withheld a parade permit based on anticipated content of parade's message was entitled to compensatory damages for the extra expenses that organization's leader incurred in coming to city earlier and staying longer than he would have if permit had been issued without controversy. Nationalist Movement v. City of Boston, D.Mass.1998, 12 F.Supp.2d 182. Civil Rights 1462

Prisoner who was inadvertently improperly incarcerated for 31 days was not entitled to obtain compensatory damages against state Director of Inmate Classification and Movement; prisoner suffered no monetary harm and offered no evidence of mental or emotional suffering or distress or physical discomfort, and credit for excess time served was given against subsequent sentence. Satchell v. Clark, E.D.N.Y.1989, 725 F.Supp. 691. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

5470. ---- Pain and suffering, compensable items, damages generally

Awards of noneconomic compensatory damages for pain and suffering resulting from political harassment and pain and suffering resulting from dismissal, and punitive damages, to 20 former municipal employees in action under § 1983 alleging that massive layoff in aftermath of mayoral election violated their First Amendment and due process rights were not excessive; individualized nature of 20 verdicts reflected jury's careful attention to peculiar circumstances of each plaintiff, and evinced jury's desire to craft appropriate award for each claimant. Acevedo-Garcia v. Monroig, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 2003 WL 21982002, withdrawn and superseded on rehearing 351 F.3d 547. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Evidence of physical pain and suffering may support award of compensatory damages in § 1983 action in excess of any actual out-of-pocket medical expenses. Coleman v. Rahija, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 114 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1462

Evidence was sufficient to support finding that employee suffered actual injury, for which compensatory damages were recoverable from county prosecutor in § 1983 action; reasonable jury could credit employee's testimony as to personal anguish she suffered as result of being passed over for promotion. Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Civil Rights 1421

Inmate was entitled to damages for pain, suffering and humiliation, as a result of incident in which corrections officers pinned him against a shower wall with a plexiglass riot shield following his refusal to give them his coat. Burgin v. Iowa Dept. of Corrections, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1991, 923 F.2d 637. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

In a federal civil rights action based upon claimed false imprisonment, suffering caused by the very fact of incarceration is one element related to damages, in the absence of any issue concerning the condition of or reason for the incarceration. Bryan v. Jones, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 519 F.2d 44, on rehearing 530 F.2d 1210, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 174, 429 U.S. 865, 50 L.Ed.2d 145. Civil Rights 1462

Compensatory damage award of $100,000 in §§ 1983 action was not so excessive as to shock conscience, when guard allegedly dug knee in back of inmate, and used nerve compression technique on head to inflict great pain, while securing inmate in four point horizontal restraint, where he remained for over 22 hours. Ziemba v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 248. Civil Rights 1464

California's survivorship statute that precluded all recovery for pain and suffering was inconsistent with federal civil rights statute where victim's death was not a result of the constitutional violation; recovery of such damages was important in federal civil rights claims and California statute that cut off all recovery for pain and suffering had substantial effect on damages recoverable where victim dies before judgment is entered. Williams v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1996, 915 F.Supp. 1074. Civil Rights 1462

Evidence, in arrestee's federal civil rights action against police officers, police chief and city for injuries sustained when officers used excessive force and denied him medical attention after he resisted alcohol confiscation at public fireworks display, supported $200,000 compensatory damage award for permanent physical injuries, denial of medical treatment and pain and suffering; injuries included extended nerve damage and permanent loss of sensation in one hand, chronic lumbar strain, abdominal pain, vomiting and nausea, severe bruising, abrasions, lacerations, fear of police, fear of being arrested and put in similar situation, inability to sleep, nightmares, flashbacks and cold sweats. Hogan v. Franco, N.D.N.Y.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1313. Civil Rights 1464

Survivors of woman who was subjected to deputy sheriff's use of excessive force were entitled to recover past medical bills incurred by woman to treat her resulting back injury, as well as $150,000 for her past pain and suffering, mental anguish, emotional distress, embarrassment, and humiliation. Thomas v. Frederick, W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

Although no award in inmate civil rights action could be made for denials of constitutional rights of inmates in protective custody as such, inmates were entitled to damages for injuries that could be measured in monetary terms, including pain, suffering and mental anguish, and back pay for lost wages from failure of prison authorities to provide inmates in protective custody with opportunities to have jobs and to participate in educational or vocational programs, as well as for impairment of their earning capacities. Williams v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1986, 646 F.Supp. 1379, affirmed 851 F.2d 867, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 879, 488 U.S. 1047, 102 L.Ed.2d 1001. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

Where prison officer acted improperly in spraying "crop duster gas" on prison inmates while they were locked in their cells, where there was no clear evidence that inmates suffered any property damage or loss as a result of spraying, but where inmates' faces were burned and within a day or so after incident skin on their faces peeled off altogether, inmates, who brought civil rights action against prison officer, were entitled to damages awards of $500 each for pain and suffering caused by tear gas incident. McCargo v. Mister, D.C.Md.1978, 462 F.Supp. 813. Prisons 10

Where the full extent of prison inmate's injury was that he was "hurting all over" and felt "all messed up," damages in the amount of $250 fairly and adequately compensated him for pain and suffering. Vargas v. Correa, S.D.N.Y.1976, 416 F.Supp. 266. Civil Rights 1462

State prisoners who established violation of constitutional rights by state officers as through improper subjection to solitary confinement, would be awarded, respectively, $15,303, $3,605, and $2,357, for pain and suffering and loss of prison wages, but wages lost due to requiring prisoner to serve full sentence would not be awarded in view of lack of method by which court could ascertain such wages. Landman v. Royster, E.D.Va.1973, 354 F.Supp. 1302.

Civil Rights 1464

Damages awarded to plaintiff following bench trial on §§ 1983 claim were not duplicative, in that district court apparently awarded $25,000 for past and present personal injuries to compensate plaintiff for his disfigurement, awarded $30,000 for past and present pain and suffering and $55,000 for past and present emotional damages to compensate for plaintiff's pain and suffering and emotional injuries suffered during incident underlying claim, and awarded $165,000 for permanent injury and future pain, suffering, and emotional damage as collective award for future injury, medical expenses, pain and suffering, and emotional damages. Combs v. Holman, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2005, 134 Fed.Appx. 669, 2005 WL 1287051, Unreported. Civil Rights 1464

5471. ---- Pension benefits, compensable items, damages generally

Insofar as civil rights action brought against school board by teacher was one at law, teacher, who was found to have been discharged without being given procedural due process rights, was entitled to be compensated for loss of pension rights suffered as result of illegal discharge. Burt v. Board of Trustees of Edgefield County School Dist., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1975, 521 F.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1470

5472. ---- Reputation injury, compensable items, damages generally

Jury could award police officer $253,188 in suit against superior officer and city, claiming he had been wrongfully terminated and had suffered damage to his reputation following false accusation that he had falsified speeding ticket; officer had 15 honorable years in law enforcement, and amount awarded was less than that requested and estimated by his expert. Palmer v. City of Monticello, C.A.10 (Utah) 1994, 31 F.3d 1499. Civil Rights 1473

In § 1983 action for denial of name-clearing hearing, discharged public employee's damages for loss of opportunity to clear name of false and defamatory charges include any harm to reputation and career caused by charges made against him that he is able to prove. Rosenstein v. City of Dallas, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 876 F.2d 392, rehearing granted 884 F.2d 174, opinion reinstated in part 901 F.2d 61, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 153, 498 U.S. 855, 112 L.Ed.2d 119. Civil Rights 1470

In suit under this section arising out of wrongful discharge of police officer prior to hearing, injury to officer's reputation caused by truthful and foreseeable publicity of unlawful termination was properly considered by district court as an element of damages, as officer was entitled to fair compensation for injuries caused by deprivation of his constitutional right to due process of law. Busche v. Burkee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1981, 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212. Civil Rights 1470

Volunteer for pro-life organization whose First Amendment free speech rights were violated when he was restricted from demonstrating in designated public forum area of state higher education center's campus, and who was arrested when he tried to relocate to the designated public forum area, was not entitled to compensatory damages under §§ 1983 based on injury to his reputation and on his humiliation and embarrassment over being arrested, where events after the arrest indicated the arrest may have been more of a badge of honor than a humiliation for him, and the defendant found liable for the constitutional violation did not direct or necessarily cause the arrest. Mason v. Wolf, D.Colo.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1463

Public school teacher, claiming that school district policy prohibiting her from participating in religious group's meetings held on school property violated her First Amendment rights, was not entitled to monetary damages, absent evidence supporting her claim that she had suffered loss of reputation, embarrassment, or humiliation. Wigg v. Sioux Falls School Dist. 49-5, D.S.D.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 1084, affirmed in part, reversed in part 382 F.3d 807, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1470; Civil Rights 1472

5473. ---- Salary differential, compensable items, damages generally

Negro principal whose termination was racially discriminatory was entitled to damages in amount of difference between his salary as principal and his salary at new job and to nominal award for expenses in obtaining new employment. McBeth v. Board of Ed. of DeVall's Bluff School Dist. No. 1, Ark., E.D.Ark.1969, 300 F.Supp. 1270 . Schools 147.54

5474. ---- Taking of property, compensable items, damages generally

District court properly reduced its damages award following bench trial in § 1983 action, in which plaintiff sought to recover after photograph transparencies that had been seized from him were destroyed by state police evidence custodian, from $24,000 to $12,000, on basis that it had improperly applied Bigelow principle twice, where court initially concluded that peak publication rate was two prints per year, even though plaintiff had published no more than two prints over ten-year period, and after using that rate to arrive at figure of $12,000 in damages, court then doubled award on basis that destruction of transparencies may have hindered plaintiff's ability to prove damages. Raishevich v. Foster, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 247 F.3d 337. Civil Rights 1464

5475. ---- Transcripts, compensable items, damages generally

If trial transcript was taken from state prisoner's cell during shakedown search by prison guards, prisoner would be entitled to compensation regardless of the limited and uncertain monetary value of the transcript. Bonner v. Coughlin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 517 F.2d 1311, on rehearing 545 F.2d 565, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1507, 435 U.S. 932, 55 L.Ed.2d 529. Prisons 10

5476. ---- Medical expenses, compensable items, damages generally

Medical expenses may constitute element of damages in successful § 1983 excessive force action arising from force used by police officer. Rowland v. Perry, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 41 F.3d 167. Civil Rights 1462

Loss of spousal consortium claim cannot be brought in conjunction with claim under Title VII or statute affording to all contractual rights of white persons. Edsall v. Assumption College, D.Mass.2005, 367 F.Supp.2d 72. Husband And Wife 209(3); Husband And Wife 209(4)

5477. Amount of recovery, damages generally--Generally

When plaintiffs under this section seek damages for violations of constitutional rights, the level of damages is ordinarily determined according to the principles derived from the common law of torts. Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, U.S.Mich.1986, 106 S.Ct. 2537, 477 U.S. 299, 91 L.Ed.2d 249, on remand 803 F.2d 721. Civil Rights 1459

Damages recoverable on an unlawful arrest claim include damages suffered because of the use of force in effecting the arrest. Bashir v. Rockdale County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 445 F.3d 1323. False Imprisonment 34

Minor discrepancy in awards of compensatory economic damages to 20 former municipal employees in action under § 1983 alleging that massive layoff in aftermath of mayoral election violated their First Amendment and due process rights in excess of actual lost wages, ranging from $2,600 to $10,900, was sufficiently small to preclude finding that verdict was grossly excessive, inordinate, shocking to the conscience of the court, or so high that it would have been denial of justice to permit it to stand. Acevedo-Garcia v. Monroig, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 351 F.3d 547. Civil Rights 1473

Damages claim of false arrest in violation of Fourth Amendment under § 1983 cover time of detention up until issuance of process or arraignment, but not more. Gauger v. Hendle, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 349 F.3d 354, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Award of $500,000 in compensatory damages in § 1983 action per Caucasian librarian, who sustained emotional harm due to race discrimination by members of board of trustees for public library system, and director of system, was not abuse of discretion. Bogle v. McClure, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1347, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 77 Fed.Appx. 510, 2003 WL 21804722, certiorari dismissed 124 S.Ct. 1168, 540 U.S. 1158, 157 L.Ed.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1473

In § 1983 excessive force action, jury's award of $300,000 in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages, while generous, was not so grossly excessive or inordinate as to warrant setting it aside, given evidence of pain and suffering. Diaz ex rel Lopez Claudio v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 301 F.Supp.2d 92. Civil Rights 1464; Civil Rights 1465(1)

In §§ 1983 excessive force action, jury's award of $300,000 in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages, while generous, was not so grossly excessive or inordinate as to warrant setting it aside, given evidence of pain and suffering. Diaz ex rel Lopez Claudio v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 301 F.Supp.2d 92. Civil Rights 1464; Civil Rights 1465(1)

Damage award for injuries suffered by pre-trial detainee from beating and denial of medical treatment was not excessive, where plaintiff was unable to run, walked with limp, had total hip replacement, had broken wrist, had blurred vision, had significant hearing loss, and experienced significant psychological trauma. Pulliam v. Shelby County, Tenn., W.D.Tenn.1995, 902 F.Supp. 797. Civil Rights 1464

Level of damages awarded under § 1983 is ordinarily determined according to principles derived from common law of torts. Faison v. Parker, E.D.Pa.1993, 823 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1464

5478. ---- Objective standard, amount of recovery, damages generally

Fact that amount of damages for deprivation of an intangible constitutional right cannot be determined by reference to an objective standard, such as pecuniary loss, does not preclude an award of nonpunitive damages. Hostrop v. Board of Jr. College Dist. No. 515, Cook and Will Counties and State of Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 523 F.2d 569, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1748, 425 U.S. 963, 48 L.Ed.2d 208. Civil Rights 1462

The amount of compensatory damages to be awarded for deprivations of constitutional rights cannot be determined by reference to an objective standard. Hild v. Bruner, D.C.N.J.1980, 496 F.Supp. 93. Civil Rights 1462

Although amount of damages for compensable injuries under this section prohibiting deprivation of rights cannot be determined by reference to an objective standard, nonpunitive damages may be granted for deprivation of intangible rights for which no pecuniary loss can be shown. Bryant v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.1978, 463 F.Supp. 373 . Civil Rights 1462 implementing plan to charge newspaper publishers' profit-conscious rents for use of newsracks at airport, was amount that city was actually enjoined from collecting, with appropriate adjustments, not higher amount that city would have charged under revised plan; city had failed to put new plan at issue in publishers' §§ 1983 First Amendment action challenging original plan. Atlanta Journal and Constitution v. City of Atlanta Dept. of Aviation, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2006, 442 F.3d 1283. Injunction 260

Compensatory damages award of $4 million under §§ 1983 solely for police shooting victim's mental and physical pain and suffering was grossly disproportionate to the evidence of victim's injuries, and award of $2 million would sufficiently compensate victim for his pain and suffering; although some of victim's injuries were permanent, victim, who was shot twice in the back of the left leg and sustained a 48 percent impairment of his left lower extremity and a 19 percent impairment of his entire body, could walk normally and had ceased taking any pain medication. Whitfield v. Melendez-Rivera, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 431 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1464

Compensatory damages award of $198,960 was not excessive in former public employee's §§ 1983 political discrimination suit against her former supervisors, where award reflected compensation for lost earnings, which amount could be reached mathematically from evidence presented at trial. Lopez-Sanchez v. Vergara-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 78. Civil Rights 1473

Property management company that sued town, stemming from denial of certificate of occupancy for home built on previously undeveloped parcels, was entitled to damages of $57,750, plus simple interest, on its substantive due process claim brought under §§ 1983, representing 21 months of fair rental value for home while it was unoccupied. O'Mara v. Town of Wappinger, S.D.N.Y.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 634. Interest 60

As in all tort actions, amount of damages awarded pursuant to this section creating tort liability for deprivation of rights, privileges and immunities secured by the Constitution must be related to injuries suffered. Reyes v. Edmunds, D.C.Minn.1979, 472 F.Supp. 1218. Civil Rights 1462

5480. ---- Settlements, amount of recovery, damages generally

Damages recoverable by federal civil rights plaintiffs had to be reduced by amount of settlement received where some defendants settled with plaintiffs. Miller v. Apartments and Homes of New Jersey, Inc., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1981, 646 F.2d 101. Civil Rights 1464

5480A. ---- Class actions, amount of recovery

Final approval was warranted for settlement in §§ 1983 action against District of Columbia Department of Corrections challenging Department's policy of conducting suspicionless strip searches of inmates declared releasable after court appearances, and challenging alleged over-detentions; distribution fund of $12 million was very favorable especially in view of low number of opt-outs and objectors, there was no collusion between parties or their counsel, and settlement comported with rule governing class actions and with due process requirements. Bynum v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 73. Compromise And Settlement 61

5481. Mitigation, damages generally

Plaintiff has duty to mitigate damages in an action under this section. Meyers v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 14 F.3d 1115, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1462

While § 1983 plaintiff has a duty to mitigate damages, defendant has the burden of proving a failure to mitigate damages properly. Wolfe v. Village of Brice, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 1998, 997 F.Supp. 939. Civil Rights 1401

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In § 1983 action for termination in violation of due process clause, in which reinstatement has been ordered, former public employee is required to continue his or her efforts at mitigating postverdict but prereinstatement losses; where, however, former employee is genuinely unable to find work or is forced to "lower his or her sights" and accept inferior position, former employer will be responsible for the difference between what employee would have earned and what employee actually earned prior to reinstatement. Coleman v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1996, 949 F.Supp. 604. Civil Rights 1471

5482. Source of payment, damages generally

In "official capacity action" under § 1983, any award of damages is recovered against governmental entity, rather than personal assets of any specific officer. Pennington v. Hobson, S.D.Ind.1989, 719 F.Supp. 760. Civil Rights 1354

5483. Effect of failure to award, damages generally

Jury's failure to award compensatory damages to civil rights plaintiff on his claims of excessive force and arrest without probable cause did not preclude finding that plaintiff was injured by defendants' actions; failure to award compensatory damages was not dispositive of question whether plaintiff suffered deprivation of his constitutional rights. King v. Macri, S.D.N.Y.1992, 800 F.Supp. 1157. Civil Rights 1424

5484. Presumptions, damages generally

In a civil rights action, damages must be proved, rather than presumed. Williams v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 629 F.2d 993, rehearing denied 629 F.2d 1350, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3063, 452 U.S. 926, 69 L.Ed.2d 428. Civil Rights 1401

Violation of constitutional right of access to courts, even if violation is complete and systematic, is not type of injury where presumed damages may be used as substitute for actual or compensatory damages. Klinger v. Nebraska Dept. of Correctional Services, D.Neb.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1036, reversed 107 F.3d 609. Civil Rights 1462

Damages to one who establishes deprivation of his civil rights will not be presumed. Pierce v. Stinson, E.D.Tenn.1979, 493 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1401

5511. Punitive damages generally

Title VII cap on punitive damages awards for race discrimination was not determinative with respect to awards available for race discrimination in § 1983 action, as § 1983 did not contain a cap. Bogle v. McClure, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1347, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 77 Fed.Appx. 510, 2003 WL 21804722, certiorari dismissed 124 S.Ct. 1168, 540 U.S. 1158, 157 L.Ed.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Punitive damages are awarded in § 1983 action to punish defendant for his or her willful or malicious conduct and to deter others from similar behavior. Coleman v. Rahija, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 114 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1465(1)

In appropriate circumstances, punitive damages are recoverable in an action under this section. Bradshaw v. Zoological Soc. of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1978, 569 F.2d 1066. See, also, Stengel v. Belcher, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1975, 522 F.2d 438, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 1505, 425 U.S. 910, 47 L.Ed.2d 760, certiorari dismissed 97 S.Ct. 514, 429 U.S. 118, 50 L.Ed.2d 269; Stolberg v. No civil rights plaintiff has an entitlement to punitive damages, even upon the requisite showing. Hershell Gill Consulting Engineers, Inc. v. Miami-Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1305. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages could be awarded to redress a civil rights victim. Cook v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.1979, 464 F.Supp. 737. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Actual and punitive damages as well as attorney fees may be awarded in proper cases under this section. Smith v. Woodhollow Apartments, W.D.Okla.1978, 463 F.Supp. 16. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1465(1); Civil Rights 1478

Punitive or exemplary damages are recoverable in a civil rights action. Keker v. Procunier, E.D.Cal.1975, 398 F.Supp. 756. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages may and should be awarded under appropriate circumstances in private actions to recover for violations of federal civil rights statutes. Hughes v. Dyer, W.D.Mo.1974, 378 F.Supp. 1305. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5512. Deterrent function, punitive damages

Punitive damages may be awarded in appropriate circumstances in order to punish violations of constitutional rights. City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., U.S.R.I.1981, 101 S.Ct. 2748, 453 U.S. 247, 69 L.Ed.2d 616. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Purpose of punitive damages in § 1983 civil rights claim is to deter future egregious conduct in violation of constitutional rights. Sockwell v. Phelps, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 20 F.3d 187. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages are appropriate means of punishing discriminatory employment practices and deterring defendants from future racially discriminatory actions. Brown v. Freedman Baking Co., Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1987, 810 F.2d 6. Civil Rights 1575(1)

Despite its utility as a deterrent, punitive damage remedy must be reserved for cases in which defendant's conduct amounts to something more than a bare violation of civil rights justifying compensatory damages or injunctive relief. Cochetti v. Desmond, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 572 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Any award of punitive damages in civil rights action should not go beyond deterrence and become a windfall. Perez v. Cucci, D.N.J.1989, 725 F.Supp. 209, affirmed 898 F.2d 139, affirmed 898 F.2d 141, affirmed 898 F.2d 142. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Purpose of deterrence underlying this section would be subverted by slavish application of state survivorship rule denying punitive damages and thus survivors were entitled to seek punitive damages in connection with civil rights claim for shooting of original complainant by municipal police officer. Larson v. Wind, N.D.Ill.1982, 542 F.Supp. 25. Abatement And Revival 57

One function of punitive damages is its deterrent impact on defendant to curb future violations. U. S. ex rel. Motley v. Rundle, E.D.Pa.1972, 340 F.Supp. 807. Damages 87(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In § 1983 case, both compensatory and punitive damages are available upon proper proof; but unlike compensatory damages, which are mandatory and are awarded as matter of right once liability is found, punitive damages are awarded or rejected in particular case at discretion of fact finder once sufficiently serious misconduct by defendant is shown. Coleman v. Rahija, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 114 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages award totalling $4,000 in § 1983 civil rights claim by black prisoners alleging that general policy of segregating two-person cells violated equal protection was not abuse of discretion. Sockwell v. Phelps, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 20 F.3d 187. Civil Rights 1465(1)

In a civil rights suit brought under this section, award of punitive damages was within discretion of trial court. Busche v. Burkee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1981, 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212 . Civil Rights 1465(1)

Infliction of punitive damages and amount thereof are of necessity within discretion of trier of fact, but since punitive damages are assessed as an example and warning to others, they are not favored in law and are to be allowed only with caution and within narrow limits. Lee v. Southern Home Sites Corp., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1970, 429 F.2d 290.

Whether to award punitive damages against justice of the peace and notary, who deprived plaintiff of her immunity against unreasonable seizures by pretending to possess power of deputy sheriff and causing plaintiff to submit to his pretended official custody, was in discretion of trier of the facts. Krueger v. Miller, E.D.Tenn.1977, 489 F.Supp. 321, affirmed 617 F.2d 603. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages may be awarded in discretion of trier of facts in action under section governing deprivation of rights if trier of facts finds that plaintiff is entitled to receive compensatory damages and that the act which proximately caused the injury to the plaintiff was maliciously, wantonly, or oppressively done. Rheuark v. Shaw, D.C.Tex.1979, 477 F.Supp. 897, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 628 F.2d 297, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1392, 450 U.S. 931, 67 L.Ed.2d 365. Civil Rights 1465(1)

When a civil rights plaintiff has established liability for deprivation of civil rights, an award of compensatory or punitive damages, or both, is necessarily left to discretion of trier of fact in absence of out-of-pocket or other loss or injury. Manfredonia v. Barry, E.D.N.Y.1975, 401 F.Supp. 762. Civil Rights 1462; Civil Rights 1465(1)

5514. Necessity of compensatory damage award, punitive damages

Under circumstances of civil rights suit, punitive damage awards on excessive force and hostileness claims for which no compensatory awards were made were not vitiated by the absence of compensatory or nominal damage awards; jury was explicitly told, without objection, that it could make punitive award without any compensatory award, and jury was not instructed that award of nominal damages could be made. King v. Macri, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 993 F.2d 294. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of compensatory damages in favor of public employee was not required, in employee's §§ 1983 political affiliation discrimination action, although jury determined that public employer was liable for discrimination, and awarded $5000 in punitive damages. Acevedo Luis v. Zayas, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1470

5515. Absence of actual damages, punitive damages

Punitive damages may be awarded in a § 1983 action even without a showing of actual loss by plaintiff if the plaintiff's constitutional rights have been violated. Baltezore v. Concordia Parish Sheriff's Dept., C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 767 F.2d 202, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 817, 474 U.S. 1065, 88 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1465(1)

In proper case under this section, exemplary or punitive damages may be awarded with specific purpose of determining or punishing violations of constitutional rights, and these damages may be available even in absence of actual loss to plaintiff. Endicott v. Huddleston, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 644 F.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Even in absence of actual damages, failure to award punitive damages for violation of this section will not be lightly overturned. Stolberg v. Members of Bd. of Trustees for State Colleges of State of Conn., C.A.2 (Conn.) 1973, 474 F.2d 485.

Punitive damages may be awarded in a § 1983 action even without a showing of actual loss by the plaintiff if the plaintiff's constitutional rights have been violated. Bunyon v. Burke County, S.D.Ga.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1310. Civil Rights 1465(1)

District court would not give effect to jury's award of punitive damages in § 1983 action; jury did not reach issue of whether plaintiff had suffered compensatory damages, because it was instructed not to do so if it found that plaintiff had not established necessary elements of her claims, and jury's subsequent award of punitive damages, in absence of any finding of plaintiff's constitutional rights being violated, was mere surplusage. Peden v. Suwannee County School Bd., M.D.Fla.1993, 837 F.Supp. 1188, affirmed 51 F.3d 1049. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Homeless mother and her children were not entitled to punitive damages from school officials for exclusion from school on grounds of nonresidency, even though school officials knew or should have known that they were required under due process clause to provide adequate notice of their proposed action and opportunity for hearing to children prior to termination, where actual damages flowing from four or five day exclusion from school until dispute was resolved were trivial and willfulness as well as motive upon part of school officials for taking unconstitutional action were entirely lacking. Harrison v. Sobol, S.D.N.Y.1988, 705 F.Supp. 870. Civil Rights 1465(1)

To recover punitive damages in a suit under this section it is not necessary that actual damages be shown; if a claim of a violation of a constitutionally guaranteed right to sustained by sufficient proof, nominal damages may be presumed and, in appropriate circumstances, may support an award of exemplary damages. Campise v. Hamilton, S.D.Tex.1974, 382 F.Supp. 172, appeal dismissed 541 F.2d 279, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1127, 429 U.S. 1102, 51 L.Ed.2d 552. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5516. Considerations governing, punitive damages--Generally

Unlike her claim under Title VII, state employee's § 1983 claim that she received disparate pay raise based on gender, in violation of equal protection principles, could result in award of punitive damages. Hildebrandt v. Illinois Dept. of Natural Resources, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 1014. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Punitive damages may be awarded under § 1983 when defendant's conduct is shown to be motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights of others. Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Fact that defendant's actions were objectively unconstitutional is not considered when determining whether to award punitive damages in civil rights action; award of punitive damages requires assessment of defendant's subjective state of mind. Jolivet v. Deland, C.A.10 (Utah) 1992, 966 F.2d 573. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Where evidence shows no more than that an exasperated police officer, acting in the heat of the moment, made an objectively unreasonable mistake, punitive damages will not lie on a § 1983 claim for false arrest. Iacobucci v. Boulter, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1999, 193 F.3d 14. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages are recoverable in an action under this section proscribing the deprivation of rights provided aggravating circumstances are found. Silver v. Cormier, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1976, 529 F.2d 161. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Provided certain aggravating circumstances are shown, punitive damages are recoverable under federal law in action under this section. Spence v. Staras, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 507 F.2d 554. Damages 89(1)

Punitive damages were not available in state prisoner's action under §§ 1983 alleging that prison officials violated his right of access to courts, where prisoner did not allege that officials acted with evil motive or intent, or that officials acted recklessly or with callous indifference to his federally protected rights. Hayes v. Woodford, S.D.Cal.2006, 444 F.Supp.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Accused was not entitled to punitive damages in connection with claim for noncompliance with extradition procedures where accused failed to show existence of any "aggravating circumstances" justifying or warranting imposition of such damages. McBride v. Soos, N.D.Ind.1981, 512 F.Supp. 1207, affirmed 679 F.2d 1223. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages are recoverable in an action under this section, provided certain aggravating circumstances are shown. Newborn v. Morrison, S.D.Ill.1977, 440 F.Supp. 623. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5518. ---- Bad faith, considerations governing, punitive damages

Focus, in determining propriety of punitive damages in § 1983 action, is on intent of defendant, and whether defendant's conduct is of sort that calls for deterrence and punishment over and above that provided by compensatory awards. Coleman v. Rahija, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 114 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1465(1)

In civil rights action brought by members of town redevelopment authority against town and members of its board of selectmen alleging violation of their First Amendment rights in connection with their removal from office, punitive damage award against board of selectmen was supported by jury finding that defendants did not act in good faith in attempting to discharge members of redevelopment authority but rather acted by threat, intimidation or coercion to deprive them of their First Amendment rights. Miller v. Town of Hull, Mass., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1989, 878 F.2d 523, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 501, 493 U.S. 976, 107 L.Ed.2d 504. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Where chaplain's superiors at state mental hospital acted in bad faith in discharging chaplain because of his exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, award to chaplain of punitive damages was proper. Donahue v. Staunton, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1972, 471 F.2d 475, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 1419, 410 U.S. 955, 35 L.Ed.2d 687. States 79

Punitive damages were warranted, in action against police officers for deprivation of civil rights, where it was found that defendants did not act in good faith when they went to plaintiff's home, while one plaintiff remained in custody at police station, demanded admission, and conducted a search without a warrant. Caperci v. Huntoon, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1968, 397 F.2d 799, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 299, 393 U.S. 940, 21 L.Ed.2d 276. Civil Rights 1465(1) superintendent since it appeared that his misguided efforts had some relationship to his perception of problems that the school officials could face because of a parent's complaint against teacher and her nonrenewal was not result of any systematic practice, racial discrimination or other denial of constitutional rights. Morris v. Board of Ed. of Laurel School Dist., D.C.Del.1975, 401 F.Supp. 188. Civil Rights 1474(1)

There must be some showing of bad faith or some indication of deterrent impact to warrant punitive damages in civil rights action. Caplin v. Oak, S.D.N.Y.1973, 356 F.Supp. 1250. Civil Rights 1465(1)

To be entitled to a recovery of punitive damages there must be more than a mere mention of punitive damages in the prayers of a complaint; there must be an indication of bad faith by the defendant sufficient to justify such an award. 5519. ---- Callous indifference, considerations governing, punitive damages

Prison's deputy warden and mail room clerk were "callously indifferent" to inmate's First Amendment free exercise rights when they twice denied him materials mailed by Church of Jesus Christ Christian (CJCC), thus warranting $1000 punitive damage award in inmate's ensuing § 1983 action; when materials were first withheld, deputy warden knew that blanket ban on CJCC materials had been held unconstitutional in different case and that blanket ban remained in effect in his prison, yet he did nothing to correct situation, and in rejecting materials second time, clerk did not consult list naming CJCC materials as approved because she believed blanket ban remained in effect, despite her knowledge that it was unconstitutional. Williams v. Brimeyer, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 116 F.3d 351, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1465(1)

City's African-American mayor had acted with reckless and callous indifference to white police officer's due process and equal protection rights in ordering officer's termination regardless of what transpired at officer's pretermination hearing, despite having been advised on at least two occasions that such summary termination would violate officer's due process rights, and in attempting to justify such conduct by claiming that officer was hurting his popularity among black voters who had elected him, and therefore officer was entitled to recover punitive damages from mayor in § 1983 action. Wagner v. City of Memphis, W.D.Tenn.1997, 971 F.Supp. 308. Civil Rights 1474(1)

5520. ---- Intent or knowledge, considerations governing, punitive damages

Evidence supported award of punitive damages in Caucasian librarians' § 1983 action against members of board of trustees for public library system and director of system, alleging race discrimination; defendants knew at the time they transferred librarians that it violated federal law to transfer people on basis of race, defendants were warned by county attorney, personnel department, and director about legal problems with transfers, but defendants still transferred the librarians. Bogle v. McClure, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1347, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 77 Fed.Appx. 510, 2003 WL 21804722, certiorari dismissed 124 S.Ct. 1168, 540 U.S. 1158, 157 L.Ed.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Evidence of malicious or evil intent in correctional officer's beating restrained inmate about the head and face while inmate offered no resistance, and in taunting and threatening inmate the following day, supported punitive damage award of $5,000 against correctional officer, in inmate's § 1983 suit for correctional officer's use of excessive force. Estate of Davis by Ostenfeld v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1388. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Jury's findings that county prosecutor and/or his subordinates intentionally discriminated against employee on three occasions provided sufficient foundation to support jury award of punitive damages against county in § 1983 action alleging violations of New Jersey's Law Against Discrimination (LAD). Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Civil Rights 1474(2)

Test for determining whether punitive damages should be awarded for civil rights violations is whether defendant acted with actual knowledge that he was violating a federally protected right or with reckless disregard of whether he was doing so. Cochetti v. Desmond, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1978, 572 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of punitive damages to juvenile, who was found to have been knowingly shot and wounded by defendant officer while fleeing scene of a misdemeanor, was warranted. Palmer v. Hall, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1975, 517 F.2d 705, rehearing denied 521 F.2d 815. Civil Rights 1464

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to state mental health hospital's intent in taking adverse actions against nurse, precluding summary judgment as to whether she should be awarded punitive damages on her §§ 1983 claim that hospital retaliated against her for exercising her speech rights. Barclay v. Michalsky, D.Conn.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 386. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Massage therapist whose practitioner and massage establishment licenses were suspended due to alleged misconduct involving patient failed to establish that city officials were motivated by evil intent or reckless or callous indifference to therapist's procedural due process rights, as required to establish claim for punitive damages under §§ 1983; therapist merely averred that officials were careless and negligent. Jones v. City of Modesto, E.D.Cal.2005, 408 F.Supp.2d 935. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages against county commissioners were not warranted under §§ 1983 for county's unconstitutional minority and women business enterprise (MWBE) programs, which established "participation goals" for minority and women business enterprises in awarding county architectural and engineering (A & E) contracts; county commissioners did not vote to apply MWBE set-asides and goals in A & E contracts with evil motive or callous indifference to non-minority engineering firms' constitutional rights, and non-minority firms lumped all the commissioners together in their punitive damages analysis, no matter how different each commissioner's intent and reasons for continuing to apply the MWBE programs to A & E contracts. Hershell Gill Consulting Engineers, Inc. v. Miami-Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1305. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages may be awarded under § 1983 action when defendant's conduct is shown to be motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights of others. Veneklase v. City of Fargo, D.N.D.1995, 904 F.Supp. 1038, reversed in part, appeal dismissed in part 78 F.3d 1264, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 178, 519 U.S. 867, 136 L.Ed.2d 118. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, homeowner who was subjected to warrantless strip search by city clerk at direction of police officers executing warrant to search homeowner's home could not recover punitive damages against clerk as there was no evidence that would suggest either evil intent or reckless indifference to homeowner's constitutional rights against illegal searches and seizures. Munz v. Ryan, D.Kan.1990, 752 F.Supp. 1537. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Test for determining whether punitive damages should be awarded in a civil rights action is whether defendant acted with actual knowledge that he was violating a federally protected right or with reckless disregard of whether he was doing so. Hild v. Bruner, D.C.N.J.1980, 496 F.Supp. 93. Civil Rights 1465(1)

If successful in showing that the members of the town board passed ordinance restricting first trimester abortions with full knowledge of the unconstitutionality of the ordinance, abortion clinic could obtain punitive damages from the members of the town board. written record of hearing wherein inmates were deprived of rights protected by due process would not justify imposition of punitive damages. Bills v. Henderson, E.D.Tenn.1978, 446 F.Supp. 967, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 631 F.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1465(1)

In order to recover punitive damages for deprivation of his civil rights, a plaintiff must show more than a mere violation of the particular civil rights statute involved, although he need not show that defendant specifically intended to deprive him of a recognized federal right. Hughes v. Dyer, W.D.Mo.1974, 378 F.Supp. 1305. Civil Rights 1401

5521. ---- Malice, considerations governing, punitive damages

Jury may be permitted to assess punitive damages in an action under this section when a defendant's conduct is shown to be motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to federally-protected rights of others and such threshold applies even when the underlying standard of liability for compensatory damages is one of recklessness. Smith v. Wade, U.S.Mo.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1625, 461 U.S. 30, 75 L.Ed.2d 632. See, also, Davis v. Mason County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 927 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Determination that volunteer ambulance service was not entitled to punitive damages was premature in its action against town arising when town terminated its relationship with the service and seized ambulances and other equipment without notice, where trial had been limited to issue of whether service owned the ambulances and equipment, and parties had made no effort to present evidence as to whether the seizure was prompted by a motivation or state of mind on the part of town superintendent that could justify an award of punitive damages against him. New Windsor Volunteer Ambulance Corps, Inc. v. Meyers, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 442 F.3d 101. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Although police officer made an objectively unreasonable split-second decision when he arrested journalist, no evidence suggested that he harbored any malice or acted with reckless indifference to the journalist's constitutional rights, as required for an award of punitive damages on the journalist's § 1983 claim for false arrest; officer called a selectman to get a better sense of the Massachusetts Open Meeting Law, he made several attempts to defuse a contentious situation, and only after his attempted intercessions were rebuffed did he effect an arrest. Iacobucci v. Boulter, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1999, 193 F.3d 14. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Corrections officer's conduct in intentionally provoking or inciting pretrial detainee into "rage attacks" by relentlessly taunting him, so that she could subsequently discipline him by imposing administrative lock down, did not register such malicious intent, reckless disregard, or callous indifference to detainee's constitutional rights that jury was unreasonable in failing to award detainee punitive damages. O'Connor v. Huard, C.A.1 (Me.) 1997, 117 F.3d 12, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 691, 522 U.S. 1047, 139 L.Ed.2d 636. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Reprehensibility of police officer's conduct in filing false and subsequently nolled charges against arrestee and extent to which officer had notice of potential penalties for officer's wrongful conduct supported award of punitive damages in substantial multiple of nominal compensatory damages on arrestee's malicious prosecution claim. Lee v. Edwards, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1996, 101 F.3d 805. Malicious Prosecution 68

Sufficient evidence authorized jury's award of punitive damages in civil rights action brought by former county employee against various county departments and employees for race or national origin discrimination and violation of her due process rights in connection with her termination; she presented evidence from which reasonable jury could have concluded that defendants maliciously, wantonly, or oppressively quashed subpoenas at review hearing, and that portions of tape recordings from hearing were maliciously, wantonly or oppressively erased. Caban-Wheeler v. Elsea, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 71 F.3d 837. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Punitive damages are available in § 1983 actions; however, punitive damages are to be awarded only when defendant's conduct is shown to be motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights of others. Jolivet v. Deland, C.A.10 (Utah) 1992, 966 F.2d 573. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Failure to make any showing that state Department of Corrections acted maliciously when Department provided attorneys to inmates for limited purpose of advising and conferring regarding proposed lawsuits without allowing attorneys to conduct any legal research precluded award of punitive damages in §§ 1983 action following determination that limitation violated inmate's right to have access to courts. White v. Kautzky, N.D.Iowa 2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1042, motion to amend denied 2006 WL 141854. Civil Rights 1465(1)

High school student who was suspended for driving car containing knife, gun, and drug paraphernalia to school failed to plead facts sufficient to demonstrate that disciplinary actions taken by individual school board members maliciously, intentionally, or with callous indifference deprived student of substantive due process rights under Fourteenth Amendment, and thus student was not entitled to punitive damages against board members. Butler ex rel. Butler v. Rio Rancho Public School Bd. of Educ., D.N.M.2002, 245 F.Supp.2d 1188, reconsideration denied in part, reversed in part 341 F.3d 1197. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages may be awarded in § 1983 case when defendant's conduct is shown to be motivated by evil motive or intent or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to the federally protected rights of others. Annis v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.1996, 939 F.Supp. 1115, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 136 F.3d 239. Civil Rights 1465(1)

State representative sufficiently alleged claim for punitive damages in action under § 1983 by alleging that members of county board of elections acted maliciously in suspending representative's certification as winner in election due to fact that representative changed party affiliation. Barley v. Luzerne County Bd. of Elections, M.D.Pa.1995, 937 F.Supp. 362. Civil Rights 1395(1)

In § 1983 action in which police officers' warrantless search of residence for missing minor child was found to be unreasonable, resident was not entitled to punitive damages, where she failed to offer evidence that officers had requisite evil intent, or callous or reckless indifference to her rights. Caruso v. Forslund, D.Conn.1994, 842 F.Supp. 1497, affirmed 47 F.3d 27. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages are recoverable in civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 only upon proof by preponderance of the evidence that defendant acted with ill will or with reckless indifference to another's federally protected rights. Hopkins v. City of Wilmington, D.C.Del.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1455. Civil Rights 1417

Punitive damages are possible in an appropriate case under this section in situation where the defendants have acted with the malicious intention to deprive a person of his rights. O'Connor v. Several Unknown Correctional Officers, E.D.Va.1981, 523 F.Supp. 1345. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Act of defendant guard at county jail in intentionally maneuvering himself into becoming a member of search party for sole purpose of obtaining an unsigned letter that plaintiff had written accusing him of dealing in hard drugs was unjustified and motivated by a malicious and wanton infringement of plaintiff's U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4 right against an unreasonable search and seizure and, given plaintiff's reasonable expectation of privacy against such a deliberate and unwarranted intrusion, was such as to render defendant guard liable for nominal and punitive damages. Brooks v. Shipman, W.D.Pa.1980, 503 F.Supp. 40, affirmed 681 F.2d 804. Civil Rights 1465(1); Prisons 4(7)

In order to recover punitive damages in civil rights action based upon alleged wrongful arrest of plaintiffs, plaintiffs would have to show that defendants acted maliciously. Pierce v. Stinson, E.D.Tenn.1979, 493 F.Supp.

Oregon public school district was immune from punitive damages under §§ 1983. C.O. v. Portland Public Schools, D.Or.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1157. Civil Rights 1465(2)

State university, its president, vice president, and athletic director, acting in their official capacities as State officers, were immune from former track coach's §§ 1983 claim for punitive damages, but president, vice president, and athletic director were not immune from claims asserted against them as individuals. Wells v. Board of Trustees of California State University, N.D.Cal.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1474(1)

School district was a public entity, and thus, could not be sued for punitive damages under § 1983. Gay-Straight Alliance Network v. Visalia Unified School Dist., E.D.Cal.2001, 262 F.Supp.2d 1088. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Pretrial detainee could not recover punitive damages on his § 1983 claim that jail administrators and sheriff violated his right to access courts and make bail by denying him access to telephones and mail, as a result of placing detainee in disciplinary segregation, where claims against administrators and sheriff were official capacity claims only. Simpson v. Gallant, D.Me.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 341. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages may not be assessed under § 1983 against municipality or against individual defendants sued in their official capacities. Davis v. Olin, D.Kan.1995, 886 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1465(2)

5523. ---- Personal animosity, considerations governing, punitive damages

A showing of personal animosity or involvement between parties may present a stronger case for awarding of punitive damages in a civil rights action. Gill v. Manuel, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 488 F.2d 799. Civil Rights 1434; Civil Rights 1465(1)

5524. ---- Recklessness, considerations governing, punitive damages

In arrestees' §§ 1983 action against arresting police officers, alleging use of excessive force, evidence was sufficient to establish that officers acted in the face of a perceived and flatly unacceptable risk that their actions would compromise arrestees' Fourth Amendment rights, so as to support award of punitive damages; arrestee and his fiancee testified that officers attacked arrestees without any provocation and savagely beat them. Casillas-Diaz v. Palau, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 463 F.3d 77. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Jury's finding that county prosecutor engaged in two acts of intentional discrimination against employee, after having been put on notice of prior act of discrimination against same employee, was sufficient to support punitive damages award against prosecutor in his individual capacity under § 1983, since finding evinced requisite reckless or callous indifference to employee's federally protected rights. Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Civil Rights 1465(1)

motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights of others. Ricketts v. City of Hartford, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1996, 74 F.3d 1397, amended on rehearing in part, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 65, 519 U.S. 815, 136 L.Ed.2d 26. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages are available in § 1983 cases if defendants have acted with reckless or callous disregard of or indifference to rights and safety of others. Keenan v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 983 F.2d 459, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Submission of punitive damages issue and consequent award by jury were reasonable and proper in civil rights action against superintendent of county police by officers whose resignations were allegedly coerced by superintendent's subordinates; evidence before jury was sufficient to find that superintendent knew what was going on, participated and approved of activities, and acted with reckless and callous indifference to rights of officers. Angarita v. St. Louis County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 981 F.2d 1537. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Inmate could properly be awarded punitive damages on his civil rights claim arising out of prison guards dropping the inmate head first from the back of pickup truck while his hands were shackled behind his back, even though inmate was not awarded compensatory damages; evidence was presented that guards' actions were motivated by racial animus and desire to punish inmate for unsuccessful attempted escape. Davis v. Locke, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 936 F.2d 1208. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Arrest of plaintiff for grand theft without probable cause constituted reckless disregard for her right not to be arrested without probable cause, thereby justifying jury's award of punitive damages in civil rights action brought against arresting officers. Kennedy v. Los Angeles Police Dept., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 901 F.2d 702. Civil Rights 1465(1)

For plaintiff in action under civil rights statute to qualify for a punitive damages award, defendant's conduct must be, at a minimum, reckless or callous, and though punitive damages may also be allowed if conduct is intentional or motivated by evil motive, defendant's action need not necessarily meet this higher standard. Savarese v. Agriss, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 883 F.2d 1194, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Mayor, who acted under advice of city attorney, did not act with reckless or careless disregard of police officer's rights and, therefore, was not liable for punitive damages in § 1983 action. Angell v. Leslie, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1987, 832 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1474(1)

State inmate was not entitled to recover punitive damages in his §§ 1983 action alleging that prison warden violated his First Amendment free exercise rights by prohibiting him from wearing religious garb during transport outside of facility, despite inmate's contention that warden acted with reckless disregard for his rights, where inmate's filings at most asserted that prison staff took actions that could be construed as interfering with his religious rights, but did not support finding that warden himself acted with evil motive or callous disregard for inmate's rights. Boles v. Neet, D.Colo.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 1237. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether white city employee's supervisors demonstrated reckless indifference to her federally protected rights in connection with alleged racial harassment of employee, precluding summary judgment as to whether employee was entitled to punitive damages on her §§ 1983 and Title VII claims. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State police officer acted with reckless indifference toward civilian maintenance worker employed in state police barracks by intentionally placing worker in position where he was at risk of death or serious injury, and worker was accordingly entitled to punitive damages in §§ 1983 action against officer, who placed worker in headlock and brought loaded service revolver up near worker's head following lunchroom conversation; worker admitted that he should not have unholstered revolver, and doing so was reckless with regard to worker's safety and personal dignity. Schall v. Vazquez, E.D.Pa.2004, 322 F.Supp.2d 594. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Physician's claim for § 1983 punitive damages against individual hospital defendants in their individual capacity for revocation of staff privileges was appropriate for jury determination where defendants allegedly failed to follow extensive set of bylaws that governed termination of medical privileges and failed to provide even a basic pre-termination hearing; evidence sufficiently demonstrated that defendants may have acted with recklessness or callous indifference towards termination of physician's medical privileges. Medeiros v. Randolph County Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1469. Civil Rights 1431

Allegations that elementary school principal engaged in abusive, threatening, and intimidating daily interrogations of student over a period of five days alleged recklessness or evil motive sufficient to state claim for exemplary or punitive damages in § 1983 action based on alleged violation of Fourth Amendment rights. Bills by Bills v. Homer Consolidated School Dist. No. 33- C, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 507. Civil Rights 1395(2)

Punitive damages in civil rights suit under § 1983 are recoverable against public officials in their individual capacities only if individual's conduct involves reckless or callous indifference to plaintiff's federally protected rights or if the conduct was based on an evil motive or intent. Rojicek v. Community Consol. School Dist. 15, N.D.Ill.1996, 934 F.Supp. 280. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Under federal law, punitive damages are available in § 1983 action upon jury finding that defendants acted with reckless or callous disregard for plaintiff's rights or in intentional violation of federal law. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages may be recovered in § 1983 action based on showing of reckless or callous indifference to plaintiff's civil rights. Green v. Zendrian, D.Md.1996, 916 F.Supp. 493. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Former prison superintendents were not recklessly or callously indifferent to inmates' constitutional right to court access, and therefore general population and segregation and orientation inmates were not entitled to punitive damages award for superintendents' denial of such right, where plans were made to move law library as soon as it was apparent that library was overcrowded, one superintendent sought information on correspondence courses which could be offered to inmates to assist them in use of law library, and other superintendent was temporary superintendent who had little time to familiarize himself with problems at the prison during his five-month term. Klinger v. Nebraska Dept. of Correctional Services, D.Neb.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1036, reversed 107 F.3d 609. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages in § 1983 civil rights actions are appropriate where defendant's conduct is motivated by evil intent or involves callous or reckless indifference to federally protected rights. Fletcher v. State of Fla., M.D.Fla.1994, 858 F.Supp. 169. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Appropriateness of punitive damages in any case involving reckless or callous disregard for plaintiff's rights may be considered by jury in civil rights litigation. Logan v. Drew, N.D.Ill.1992, 790 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1426

Homeowners claiming civil rights violation arising out of police misidentification of their house as target for drug search warrant were not entitled to punitive damages; there was no evidence police conduct was motivated by evil motive or intent, or reflected reckless or callous indifference to their rights. Gonzalez v. Romanisko,

M.D.Pa.1990, 744 F.Supp. 95, affirmed 941 F.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Plaintiff could recover punitive damages under § 1983 against town officials sued in their individual capacity, but only if plaintiff prevailed on his claim and established that actions of officials involved reckless or callous indifference to his constitutionally protected rights. Bourque v. Town of Bow, D.N.H.1990, 736 F.Supp. 398. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5525. ---- Willfulness, considerations governing, punitive damages

Punitive damages were warranted in inmates' § 1983 action against prison guards where guards beat inmates and then deliberately refused medical assistance for pain caused by beating. Cooper v. Casey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 97 F.3d 914. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages may be imposed if defendant has acted willfully and in gross disregard for rights of complaining party. Lee v. Southern Home Sites Corp., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1970, 429 F.2d 290. Damages 91.5(1)

In seeking punitive damages under §§ 1983 on claim for First Amendment retaliation, teacher adequately alleged that school district superintendent, assistant superintendent, and district employee acted with requisite motivation, even though complaint did not use words "evil intent" or "reckless or callous indifference," given teacher's assertions that defendants were unlawfully motivated by desire to prevent public from learning how they had unlawfully kept information from students and parents regarding purportedly unsafe conditions at school district buildings, and that defendants demonstrated blatant disregard for teacher's rights and health. Smith v. Central Dauphin School Dist., M.D.Pa.2005, 419 F.Supp.2d 639. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Award of punitive damages for violations of those rights secured by this section is appropriate where the violation is willful and in gross disregard for the rights of the complaining party. Pizzolato v. Perez, E.D.La.1981, 524 F.Supp. 914.

Award of punitive damages against city mayor was appropriate in action arising out of city police officer's unlawful termination from employment with police department where mayor committed wilful violation of officer's statutory right to due process prior to termination of employment by ordering his termination without prior hearing. Busche v. Bosman, E.D.Wis.1979, 474 F.Supp. 484, affirmed 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Punitive damages against state in action brought by welfare recipients to force compliance with federal welfare regulations relating to early and periodic screening, diagnoses and treatment program for medicare recipients would not serve proper functions of deterrence and punishment and, since there was no showing of willfulness and malicious action by individual defendants so as to deprive recipients of their civil rights, punitive damages could not be awarded against individual defendants either. Bond v. Stanton, N.D.Ind.1974, 372 F.Supp. 872, affirmed 504 F.2d 1246, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1415, 420 U.S. 984, 43 L.Ed.2d 666. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages may be awarded, in action under this section, where defendants have acted willfully and in gross disregard for rights of complaining party, or where defendants have acted in bad faith or for an improper motive, even though behaving like gentlemen. Lykken v. Vavreck, D.C.Minn.1973, 366 F.Supp. 585. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5526. ---- Joinder of claims, considerations governing, punitive damages

Fact that claim under this section was joined with employment discrimination claim under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, § 2000e et seq. of this title, did not preclude award of punitive damages. Bradshaw v. Zoological Soc. of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1978, 569 F.2d 1066.

5527. ---- Pattern of behavior, considerations governing, punitive damages

Federal district court did not abuse its discretion by letting stand $1.5 punitive damages award in pretrial detainee's estate's §§1983 Eighth Amendment action against county contractor that provided medical and mental health services at jail, arising from detainee's suicide while in jail; estate proffered ample evidence permitting conclusion that contractor was deliberately indifferent to risk of suicide at jail, including management's condoning of employees' routine disregard for policies and procedures. Woodward v. Correctional Medical Services of Illinois, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 368 F.3d 917. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Public school teacher who was found to have been denied renewal of his contract in retaliation for his exercise of free speech rights was not entitled to award of punitive damages, since there was no classwide wrong, there was no systematic suppression, and no continuous course of harassment. Brown v. Bullard Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 640 F.2d 651, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 120, 454 U.S. 828, 70 L.Ed.2d 103. Schools 147.54

Punitive damages should not be awarded in action brought under this section unless there is showing that proscribed action has been constant pattern or practice of behavior of defendants and that such practice has been willful and in gross disregard for rights of plaintiff. Urbano v. McCorkle, D.C.N.J.1971, 334 F.Supp. 161, supplemented 346 F.Supp. 51, affirmed 481 F.2d 1400. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5528. ---- Recoverability under local law, considerations governing, punitive damages

Punitive damages may be awarded under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 even where they would not normally be recoverable under local law in state where violation occurred. Gordon v. Norman, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1986, 788 F.2d 1194. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5529. Amount of award, punitive damages--Generally

In arrestees' §§ 1983 action against arresting police officers, alleging use of excessive force, award of $1,000,000 in punitive damages did not exceed amount reasonably necessary to punish the officers and deter similar conduct; officers' misconduct in attacking arrestees without any provocation and savagely beating them was well outside the acceptable norms of police work, jury could reasonably have concluded that officers' filing of felony charges against arrestees that were later dropped demonstrated officers' improper motives and callous indifference to arrestees' rights, award was reasonable in proportion to compensatory damage awards totaling $300,000, and award was in line with punitive damages awards upheld in comparable cases. Casillas-Diaz v. Palau, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 463 F.3d 77.

Punitive damages award of $20,000 did not exceed maximum permissible amount in action brought by African-American former coworker against corrections officer for civil rights violations and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising from assault in which corrections officer and others sprayed former coworker with mace, covered him with shaving cream, and taunted him with racial slurs, inasmuch as assault was thoroughly reprehensible incident, particularly in light of its racial motivation, punitive damages represented relatively small fraction of $100,000 compensatory damages awarded on emotional distress claim, and corrections officer should have appreciated gravity of racially motivated assault on fellow officer and should have understood that such conduct could have adverse economic consequences. Patterson v. Balsamico, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 440 F.3d 104. Damages 94.10(1)

Punitive damages award, in § 1983 action, of approximately $2 million to each Caucasian librarian, who was discriminated against on basis of race by members of board of trustees for public library system and director of system, was reasonable and not excessive in violation of the due process clause; there was evidence that defendants knew their conduct was illegal, and concocted plan to hide their discriminatory motives, and punitive damages award was reasonable and proportionate to amount of harm to librarians and to general damages recovered. Bogle v. McClure, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1347, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 77 Fed.Appx. 510, 2003 WL 21804722, certiorari dismissed 124 S.Ct. 1168, 540 U.S. 1158, 157 L.Ed.2d 1059. Civil Rights 1474(1); Constitutional Law 303

Jury's $200,000 punitive damages award, on arrestee's malicious prosecution claim, against police officer who filed false and subsequently nolled charges against arrestee was excessive, and would be reduced to $75,000 if arrestee agreed to remittitur, in light of Gore factors and comparison of award with other punitive damages awards in similar cases involving police misconduct. Lee v. Edwards, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1996, 101 F.3d 805. Malicious Prosecution 69

Punitive damage award against prison guards who participated in beating of inmates and then deliberately refused medical treatment was not excessive even though it was 12 times award of compensatory damages; highest punitive damage award against any one of seven defendants was only $22,500. Cooper v. Casey, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 97 F.3d 914. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of $9,500 punitive damages against town's superintendent of highways, in civil rights action, as result of substantive due process violation in denial of street excavation permit for connection of home to public water system, in attempt to extort from homeowners a deed of land for widening street, was not excessive. Walz v. Town of Smithtown, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 46 F.3d 162, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2557, 515 U.S. 1131, 132 L.Ed.2d 810. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Jury's award of $175,000 in compensatory damages and $175,000 in punitive damages based on Puerto Rico treasury agent's use of unreasonable force in conducting warrantless administrative inspection of nightclub was not excessive and did not shock the judicial conscience, so as to warrant remittitur in nightclub owner's civil rights action. Alvarez Sepulveda v. Colon Matos, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 306 F.Supp.2d 100. Civil Rights 1464; Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of $50,000 in punitive damages was not excessive in arrestee's § 1983 action against police officer, in light of evidence that arrestee was innocent bystander, did nothing to provoke police except for fact that he was expressing concern about police misconduct against others, and was compliant with officers and submitted to arrest, officer gratuitously struck him in back of head, kneed him, and threw him to ground after he was handcuffed, and other officers made no attempt to identify officer despite witnesses' detailed description. Burbank v. Davis, D.Me.2003, 238 F.Supp.2d 317. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of $200,000 in punitive damages to detainee in § 1983 action against police officer who participated in coercing confession from detainee was so great as to shock the judicial conscience and to constitute a denial of justice and a windfall for detainee; officer never touched detainee, and police officer's conduct consisted primarily of failing to stop security officer's illegal behavior toward detainee. Niemann v. Whalen, S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 296, affirmed 107 F.3d 3. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of $100,000 in punitive damages against county sheriff in his personal capacity was not so large as to be impermissible in civil rights action arising when deputy allegedly beat arrestee; arrestee received traumatically caused cataract at hands of sheriff's department, testified he did nothing to encourage blows he received, no disciplinary investigation ensued, and arrestee was charged with resisting arrest with violence in same form deputy used to explain his use of force. Colvin v. Curtis, M.D.Fla.1993, 860 F.Supp. 1503, vacated 62 F.3d 1316. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages are imposed in civil rights actions primarily for their effect on defendant and to vindicate public interest in deterring malicious or wanton conduct by public officials, and, in arriving at appropriate amount to be awarded in punitive damages, court must take into consideration severity of constitutional violation and what is necessary to reasonably deter such conduct in the future. Aumiller v. University of Delaware, D.C.Del.1977, 434 F.Supp. 1273. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5530. ---- Financial status of defendant, amount of award, punitive damages

Punitive damages of $20,000 that were awarded against corrections officer in former coworker's action for civil rights violations and intentional infliction of emotional distress were excessive in light of personal finances of corrections officer, who earned annual salary of approximately $37,632, was married, and had two children, whereas award of no more than $10,000 would provide sufficient punishment and deter future conduct like the racially motivated assault on former coworker underlying award; thus, remand for new trial on punitive damages was warranted unless former coworker agreed to remit portion of punitive damages award that exceeded $10,000. Patterson v. Balsamico, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 440 F.3d 104. Damages 94.10(1)

Although defendant in civil rights action was aware of potential liability for punitive damages, since he did not choose to offer proof of his net worth he could not successfully complain that punitive damages were awarded without regard to his net worth. Zarcone v. Perry, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 572 F.2d 52. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Evidence of public official's wealth or ability to pay was not required to support punitive damages award of $5000, in §§ 1983 political affiliation discrimination action by employee of Puerto Rico Family Department; amount was sufficiently conservative for jury not to have to speculate about official's ability to pay. Acevedo Luis v. Zayas, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Award of $31,650 in punitive damages against prison official in civil rights action was excessive and would be reduced to $7,500; although official had annual salary of approximately $47,000 and assets in the amount of $6,722, she had liabilities totaling almost $85,000. Blissett v. Eisensmidt, N.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 449. Civil Rights 1465(1)

District court would consider evidence of defendant's earning capacity in addition to evidence of defendant's net worth in setting punitive damages in civil rights action for housing discrimination consisting of cross burning, notwithstanding Illinois case law suggesting that Illinois courts would not do so; Illinois state law did not govern § 1983 action, and court would not apply a doctrine that would reward defendant for having been a total idler and wastrel. Johnson v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1995, 890 F.Supp. 726, motion to amend denied. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Plaintiff who established that county discriminated against her based on her gender in refusing to hire her for weed superintendent position was entitled to award of $2,000 in punitive damages against one county commissioner and $1,000 as against other county commissioner, despite absence of evidence concerning financial status of defendants. Bruhn v. Foley, D.Neb.1993, 824 F.Supp. 1345. Civil Rights 1474(1)

5531. Governmental authority, punitive damages

Although punitive damages may lie against individuals in § 1983 action, such damages are not available against municipality. Scott-Harris v. City of Fall River, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1997, 134 F.3d 427, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 2430, 520 U.S. 1263, 138 L.Ed.2d 192, reversed 118 S.Ct. 966, 523 U.S. 44, 140 L.Ed.2d 79, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1184, 523 U.S. 1003, 140 L.Ed.2d 315. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages were not available against school district in student's §§ 1983 action, since school was public entity. Klump v. Nazareth Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 622. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Public entity cannot be sued under §§ 1983 for punitive damages. Neveu v. City of Fresno, E.D.Cal.2005, 392

F.Supp.2d 1159. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages could not be assessed against city in § 1983 action for improperly denying parade permit to organization based on the anticipated content of parade's message. Nationalist Movement v. City of Boston, D.Mass.1998, 12 F.Supp.2d 182. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Although municipalities may be directly liable for monetary, declaratory, and injunctive relief under § 1983, such liability does not extend to liability for punitive damages. Lewis v. Village of Minerva, N.D.Ohio 1996, 934 F.Supp. 268. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Municipality is immune from punitive damages under § 1983. Ferguson v. City of Phoenix, D.Ariz.1996, 931 F.Supp. 688, affirmed 157 F.3d 668, as amended, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 2049, 526 U.S. 1159, 144 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages are not available under § 1983 on theory of municipal liability. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages are not available against a municipality itself in federal civil rights action. Williams v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1996, 915 F.Supp. 1074. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages may not be awarded against governmental authority under § 1983, and officials sued in their official capacities are also immune to punitive damages under that statute; however, officials sued in their individual capacity in a 1983 suit may be liable for punitive damages to plaintiff if the official's conduct is shown to be motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights of others. Scheideman v. Shawnee County Bd. of County Com'rs, D.Kan.1995, 895 F.Supp. 279, motion denied 1996 WL 89367. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages are not available under § 1983 from governmental entity. Garrett v. Clarke County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ala.1994, 857 F.Supp. 949. Civil Rights 1465(2)

5532. Municipalities, punitive damages

Award of $3,000 per employee in punitive damages for mayor's termination of employees in Puerto Rico municipal sanitation department in violation of their First Amendment political affiliation rights did not exceed amount necessary to punish and deter alleged misconduct. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1474(1)

A municipality, including a municipal agency, is immune from punitive damages under §§ 1983. Farmer v. Wilson Housing Authority, E.D.N.C.2004, 393 F.Supp.2d 384. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Punitive damages are not available under §§ 1983 against a municipality. Hershell Gill Consulting Engineers, Inc. v. Miami-Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1305. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Municipality was immune from punitive damages under § 1983. Bunyon v. Burke County, S.D.Ga.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1310. Civil Rights 1465(2)

Municipality is immune from punitive damages under § 1983. Radloff v. City of Oelwein, N.D.Iowa 2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 1145, affirmed 380 F.3d 344, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 967, 543 U.S. 1090, 160 L.Ed.2d 900. Civil Rights 1465(2) compensatory damages arising out of violation of individual's constitutional rights. Myers v. Town of Landis, M.D.N.C.1996, 957 F.Supp. 762, affirmed in part, dismissed in part 107 F.3d 867. Civil Rights 1465(2)

5533. Duplicative awards, punitive damages

Punitive damage awards on both § 1983 and wrongful discharge claim are not duplicative per se. Mason v. Oklahoma Turnpike Authority, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1442, appeal decided 124 F.3d 217, on remand 1998 WL 2018163. Damages 15

5534. Miscellaneous awards, punitive damages

Evidence that psychiatrist at state mental hospital was the only independent contractor physician whose contract was non-renewed after he wrote memoranda criticizing state of healthcare there, received non-renewal notice only two days before proposal deadline, was not given extension that would have allowed him sufficient time to fill out requisite 30 page application form, and that state official that operated hospital was unhappy and unset with psychiatrist was sufficient to support of award of punitive damages in official's §§ 1983 action against the official. Springer v. Henry, C.A.3 (Del.) 2006, 435 F.3d 268. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of punitive damages against mayor and former supervisor, in terminated city employee's § 1983 action alleging race discrimination and violation of her speech and political association rights, was supported by sufficient evidence, including evidence that employee's efforts to bring questionable activities to light were met with contempt, hostility, and anger. Hardeman v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2004, 377 F.3d 1106. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Police officers were not liable for punitive damages on citizen's § 1983 claim under Fourth Amendment alleging illegal search and seizure and unreasonable force, since citizen did not offer any evidence that officers' conduct was driven by evil motive or intent or by reckless or callous indifference to citizen's rights. Ehrlich v. Town of Glastonbury, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 348 F.3d 48. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Evidence was sufficient to support award of punitive damages against school superintendent, in terminated female teacher's § 1983 action alleging, inter alia, that male teacher favored his polygamist family members and attempted to initiate sexual relationships with students; there was evidence that female teacher's efforts to bring questionable activities to light were met with contempt, and it was important to protect whistleblowers in public schools. Youren v. Tintic School Dist., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 343 F.3d 1296. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Awards of punitive damages to arrestee and against police officer of $625,000 for use of excessive force and $650,000 for abuse of process were excessive, requiring remittitur to $75,000 total, or new trial on issue of punitive damages; while officer engaged in highly reprehensible conduct and acted with malice in violently slamming arrestee against a wall, choking her to the point where she began to lose vision, and pushing her to the ground and striking her, awards exceeded those in comparable cases. DiSorbo v. Hoy, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 343 F.3d 172. Damages 94.10(1); Process 171

Finding that, under both § 1983 and Pennsylvania "whistleblowers" statute, public housing authority employee who was discharged in retaliation for filing audit reports critical of authority, was entitled to punitive damages against chairman of authority's board of commissioners as well as its executive director was supported by evidence that chairman and director worked together closely on authority matters and that employee report's implicated both chairman and director in mismanagement of authority, by director's testimony that before firing employee he spoke to chairman about matter and chairman concurred in decision and that he and chairman discussed one of pretextual reasons for firing employee. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Punitive damages award of $15,000 in corrections officer's §§ 1983 claim against co-workers, alleging he was assaulted during a practical joke gone awry, was not so excessive as to be in violation of the constitutional guarantee of due process, notwithstanding nominal compensatory award of one-dollar; although the conduct was an isolated event and was motivated by misguided camaraderie rather than malice, it did involve a degrading physical assault, including binding the officer with handcuffs and leg irons, pulling down his pants, taping his genitalia to his leg, and taking pictures of him. Givens v. O'Quinn, W.D.Va.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 593. Constitutional Law 303

Punitive damages award of $150,000 would be sustained, in §§ 1983 action brought by inmate claiming that guard used excess force while placing him in four point restraint; guard engaged in reprehensible conduct by hitting inmate after inmate was secured, punitive damages were only 50% higher than compensatory damages, and amount was reasonably in line with criminal penalty of one year imprisonment and $2,000 fine. Ziemba v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 248. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Award of $5000 in punitive damages in favor of employee of Puerto Rico Family Department was not excessive, in employee's §§ 1983 political affiliation discrimination action; jury could have found that an employee with 25-year record of exemplary service was transferred and given no job responsibilities, despite the fact that other positions that were comparable to employee's previously-held position were available. Acevedo Luis v. Zayas, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 115. Civil Rights 1474(1)

Jury's award of $5,500 in punitive damages in §§ 1983 action brought by construction site protestor against state police officers, alleging false arrest and malicious prosecution, was within reasonable range and did not constitute denial of justice; jury properly found that officers, lacking probable cause, arrested protestor and kept him in jail overnight, and that they maliciously initiated and permitted continuation of criminal proceedings against protestor until case was dismissed for failure to prosecute. Zellner v. Summerlin, E.D.N.Y.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 154. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Alien was not entitled to punitive damages from village police officer in his individual capacity or other detectives, police officers and medical doctors in their official and individual capacities for allegedly violating his civil rights by falsely arresting and detaining him, in absence of separate claim for punitive damages; however, he may have been entitled to punitive damages as part of damages on claims of false arrest, malicious prosecution, deliberate indifference to medical treatment, and conspiracy. Carbajal v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 415. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Punitive damages of $500,000 would be awarded in § 1983 action to inmate who was sexually abused by county correctional facility's director of security; director used his position as director to forcibly sodomize inmate under his total control in outrageous abuse of power and authority. Mathie v. Fries, E.D.N.Y.1996, 935 F.Supp. 1284, affirmed 121 F.3d 808. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Jury's award of punitive damages in detainee's § 1983 suit against police officer for coercing detainee's confession to a theft was supported by evidence that police officer and security officer held detainee for four hours, that security officer told her that she could not leave until she confessed, that security officer threatened to search her home in front of her children and to tell her husband's employer about investigation, and that police officer did nothing to prevent security officer from conducting interview in that manner. Niemann v. Whalen, S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 296, affirmed 107 F.3d 3. Civil Rights 1465(1)

Allegations of arrestee who claimed that he was subjected to choke hold and thrown to floor by officer, that he was harassed by police because of prior complaints about police conduct, and that chief systematically whitewashed evidence of police brutality and conveyed to officers the notion that the type of mistreatment to which arrestee was subjected was within constitutional bounds were sufficient to support award of punitive damages against officer and police chief. Illiano v. Clay Tp., E.D.Pa.1995, 892 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1465(1)

5561. Affirmative action, equitable relief generally--Generally

Where clearly established pattern and practice of racial discrimination in employment is found, it is proper to consider necessity and feasibility of directing affirmative recruitment efforts aimed at black population. Mims v. Wilson, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1975, 514 F.2d 106. Civil Rights 1562

Where pattern of past employment discrimination appears, recruitment procedures that might otherwise be classified as neutral will no longer be accepted as non-discriminatory; additional methods must then be devised to compensate for the effects of past discriminatory practices and to guard against their perpetuation or recurrence. Gresham v. Chambers, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 501 F.2d 687. Civil Rights 1121; Civil Rights 1140

On finding that private fraternal organization of police officers, which operated under color of state law, discriminated against black policemen in its membership policies, with system of exclusion being institutionalized in rule permitting five members to veto application of any prospective member, district court should not merely have ordered lodge to cease discriminatory membership policy but should have taken further affirmative action by ordering lodge to abandon five-man-veto rule entirely and to accept forthwith as members police officers currently in good standing on city police force. Johnson v. Capitol City Lodge No. 74, Fraternal Order of Police, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1973, 477 F.2d 601. Civil Rights 1448

In order to eradicate effects of past discrimination in hiring firemen, as result of which fire department employing 535 men in city with total minority population of 6.44 percent had no minority members, it would be proper for the district court to mandate that minority persons be hired on a one to two ratio until 20 qualified minority persons have been hired. Carter v. Gallagher, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1971, 452 F.2d 315, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing granted, on remand, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 2045, 406 U.S. 950, 32 L.Ed.2d 338. Civil Rights 1448; Injunction 189

District court sitting as a court of equity in suit challenging entrance level and promotion examinations in city police department, which were shown not to be job related, had wide power and discretion to fashion its decree not only to prohibit present discrimination against minorities but to eradicate effects of past discriminatory practices including the authority to construct an equitable remedy involving imposition of requirement of racial hiring to correct past discriminatory conduct and to avoid repetition of past conduct in the future. Officers for Justice v. Civil Service Com'n of City and County of San Francisco, N.D.Cal.1973, 371 F.Supp. 1328. Civil Rights 1562

Where parties claiming that union was guilty of discrimination against nonwhites did not show any specific instances of discrimination by trade association of employers which engaged in collective bargaining on behalf of its members and which had equal representation in running apprenticeship program, but there was showing of lack of nonwhite employment in industry generally, trade association would not be held liable for damages but would be required to take appropriate affirmative action to correct situation. U.S. v. Local 638 Enterprise Ass'n of Steam, Hot Water, Hydraulic Sprinkler, Pneumatic Tube, Compressed Air, Ice Machine, Air Conditioning and General Pipefitters, S.D.N.Y.1973, 360 F.Supp. 979, affirmed as modified and remanded 501 F.2d 622. Civil Rights 1567

5562. ---- Quotas, affirmative action, equitable relief generally

Where hiring test had been used for policemen which was not validated and which was not job related, judge did not abuse his discretion in imposing hiring quotas but, where there was no finding that promotion examination was not job related, imposition of quotas above rank of patrolman constituted an abuse of discretion and was clearly erroneous. Bridgeport Guardians, Inc. v. Members of Bridgeport Civil Service Commission, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1973, 482 F.2d 1333, on remand. Civil Rights 1562; Federal Courts 865

5563. Contribution or indemnification, equitable relief generally

Even if there is right to contribution generally under § 1983, district court in action challenging conditions in county jail could not grant county contribution against its state; there was no allegation that relief from unconstitutional jail conditions was impossible without enjoining state, and there was no evidence of unequivocal expression of congressional intent to subject states to claims for contribution from their own political subdivisions. Harris v. Angelina County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 31 F.3d 331, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Courts 265

Prison doctor's liability for damages to paralyzed prisoner whose civil rights were violated by doctor's deliberate indifference to prisoner's serious medical needs could not be apportioned, even though security personnel and other unnamed parties may have also been liable for damages; liability of other persons did not diminish doctor's liability. Weeks v. Chaboudy, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 984 F.2d 185, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

Under Pennsylvania law, debt financing exclusion in public officials liability insurance policy issued to insured county, barring coverage for any debt financing, including but not limited to bonds, notes, debentures and guarantees of debt, did not preclude coverage for § 1983 claim asserted by property owner against county and county officials, for county's alleged failure to satisfy the county's mortgage against his property and release its lien, in violation of property owner's due process rights; exclusion applied only when the county was the borrower, not the lender. Continental Casualty Co. v. County of Chester, E.D.Pa.2003, 244 F.Supp.2d 403. Insurance 2350(1)

Motorist's constitutional claims against employees of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, alleging that employees conspired to withhold from law enforcement officials and prosecutors involved in motorist's prosecution for driving under the influence information regarding lab technician's improper testing of motorist's blood sample for presence of alcohol, existed wholly apart and separate from lab technician's acts, and, thus, employees were not entitled to contribution or indemnification from lab technician, in motorist's civil rights action under §§ 1983. Katka v. Mills, N.D.Ga.2006, 422 F.Supp.2d 1304. Indemnity 64

City being sued under Title VII and § 1983 for using firefighter promotion examination that was allegedly racially biased could not assert contribution or indemnification claims against state department of civil service, though department created examination. M.O.C.H.A. Society, Inc. v. City of Buffalo, W.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 217. Contribution 5(6.1); Indemnity 64; Officers And Public Employees 11.7

State and county were not entitled to indemnity or contribution from inmate's attorneys in inmate's action under § 1983, and for false imprisonment under Oregon law, alleging that inmate was over-detained in prison as result of miscalculation of pretrial time served on burglary charge; attorneys never acted under color of state law, and never acted with intent to confine inmate. Biberdorf v. Oregon, D.Or.2002, 243 F.Supp.2d 1145. Contribution 5(6.1); Indemnity 65

No right to contribution or indemnification existed in federal civil rights action. TCI Cablevision, Inc. v. City of Jefferson, Mo., W.D.Mo.1984, 604 F.Supp. 845.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

No right of contribution exists under civil rights statutes. TCI Cablevision, Inc. v. City of Jefferson, Mo., W.D.Mo.1984, 604 F.Supp. 845. See, also, Valdez v. City of Farmington, D.C.N.M.1984, 580 F.Supp. 19. Contribution 5(6.1)

City and its police chief had no federal common-law right to seek contribution from union on employee's section 1981 or section 1983 claims. Gray v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.C.Kan.1985, 603 F.Supp. 872. Contribution 5(6.1)

Contribution is not available to a defendant found in violation of this subchapter. Anderson v. Local Union No. 3, Intern. Broth. of Elec. Workers, S.D.N.Y.1984, 582 F.Supp. 627, affirmed 751 F.2d 546.

Any claims for indemnification by city and city police chief against third-party defendants involved in manufacture, distribution, or sale of mattress which was placed in jail cell of arrestee based directly upon 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, the civil rights statute, were impermissible, in action under § 1983 for death of inmate after fire broke out in her cell; sale of allegedly defective mattress to governmental body was not an action taken "under color of state law" so as to permit § 1983 relief, and there was no indication that § 1983 provided for right of contribution or indemnity. Banks v. City of Emeryville, N.D.Cal.1985, 109 F.R.D. 535. Civil Rights 1326(1); Civil Rights 1326(8)

5564. Declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally--Generally

Though restoration to state prisoners of good-time improperly taken is foreclosed in action under civil rights statute since habeas corpus is the proper remedy, with the concomitant requirement of exhausting state remedies, declaratory judgment as a predicate to a damage award is not barred in a civil rights action. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Declaratory Judgment 203

Where federal civil rights jurisdiction had been established, separate remedy available through declaratory judgment could also proceed. Gay Student Services v. Texas A & M University, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 612 F.2d 160, rehearing denied 620 F.2d 300, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 608, 449 U.S. 1034, 66 L.Ed.2d 495. Declaratory Judgment 272

This section permitting bringing of civil action for deprivation of rights is expressly authorized exception to § 2283 of Title 28 and is appropriate vehicle for obtaining declaratory relief. Chertkof v. Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, D.C.Md.1980, 497 F.Supp. 1252. Courts 508(1); Declaratory Judgment 276

Declaratory relief based on this section creating civil action for deprivation of rights is available when appropriate pleadings are filed. Glancy v. Parole Bd. of Michigan Dept. of Corrections, W.D.Mich.1968, 287 F.Supp. 34. See, also, Shellburne, Inc. v. New Castle County, D.C.Del.1968, 293 F.Supp. 237; Davis v. Cook, D.C.Ga.1948, 80 F.Supp. 443. Declaratory Judgment 82

5565. ---- First Amendment actions, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

Parade participants' claim for declaratory relief that city violated First Amendment by denying applications for parade permits did not become moot after parades were held; participants challenged denial of compensatory damages, and deputy police chief and assistant city attorney challenged liability under §§ 1983. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Federal Courts 13

Declaratory and injunctive relief by federal court was not appropriate, in § 1983 action challenging state injunction restricting antiabortion protests in vicinity of abortion clinics as unconstitutional restriction on plaintiffs' right to free speech; relief sought was insult to state judicial and law enforcement officials, was interference with ongoing state court proceeding, and was an empty but potentially mischievous command to officials to avoid committing any errors in enforcement of its injunction. Hoover v. Wagner, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1995, 47 F.3d 845, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Courts 508(2.1); Declaratory Judgment 204

Even though ordinances attempting to regulate rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 had not been used in manner that would indicate deliberate attempt to suppress constitutional rights of civil rights demonstrators, demonstrators were entitled to declaratory judgment that defective ordinances were unconstitutional. Baker v. Bindner, W.D.Ky.1967, 274 F.Supp. 658. Declaratory Judgment 128

5566. ---- Racial discrimination actions, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

Negro citizens using public transportation of city of New Orleans were entitled to bring a declaratory judgment action to determine constitutionality of Louisiana statutes requiring segregation of races on buses, street cars, etc., without first being arrested for violation of such statutes. Morrison v. Davis, C.A.5 (La.) 1958, 252 F.2d 102, certiorari denied 78 S.Ct. 1008, 356 U.S. 968, 2 L.Ed.2d 1075, rehearing denied 78 S.Ct. 1383, 357 U.S. 944, 2 L.Ed.2d 1558. Declaratory Judgment 125

Where federal district court was convinced that school board had made a prompt and reasonable start toward doing away within segregation in public schools in independent school district and was proceeding in good faith compliance with decisions of the United States Supreme Court in school segregation cases, federal district court did not abuse its discretion in declining to enter a decree declaring the rights of the parties in class action brought by Negro children, or enjoining against discrimination. Avery v. Wichita Falls Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1957, 241 F.2d 230, certiorari denied 77 S.Ct. 816, 353 U.S. 938, 1 L.Ed.2d 761. Declaratory Judgment 274.1

Negro citizens and taxpayers were entitled to declaratory judgment that they were entitled to nonsegregated use of county owned and administered public recreational facility and to injunctive relief against continuance of segregation. Willie v. Harris County, Tex., S.D.Tex.1962, 202 F.Supp. 549. Civil Rights 1451; Declaratory Judgment 209; Injunction 94

5567. ---- Child custody, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

In action brought by prospective adoptive mother challenging constitutionality of actions taken by city department of public welfare and its employees while evaluating her suitability to adopt child, director of Virginia Department of Welfare who was not subject to liability in his official or individual capacities would be fully dismissed from action, and district court would decline to entertain an action for declaratory relief against director since declaratory judgment did not appear to be a necessary predicate for any future action to be undertaken by plaintiff, and it would serve little purpose to keep Director in the suit solely on the strength of plaintiff's prayer for declaratory relief. Wooldridge v. Com. of Va., E.D.Va.1978, 453 F.Supp. 1333. Declaratory Judgment 204

5568. ---- Employment, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

School teacher whose summary discharge violated procedural due process requirements was entitled to declaration that discharge was invalid, to reinstatement in same, similar, or comparable position, and to determination of damages for period between discharge and effective date of reinstatement, subject to normal rules of mitigation. Cooley v. Board of Ed. of Forrest City School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1972, 453 F.2d 282. Declaratory Judgment 385; Declaratory Judgment 386.1; Declaratory Judgment 388

Federal district court has duty to decide the appropriateness and merits of declaratory request by discharged municipal employee, asserting deprivation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 in that the city regulation under which he was discharged was overbroad and therefore unconstitutional, irrespective of its conclusion as to propriety of issuance of injunction. Moreno v. Henckel, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1970, 431 F.2d 1299. Declaratory Judgment 366

5569. ---- Medicare or medicaid, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

Although practice of denying to welfare recipients benefits accruing from informal procedure adjustment of nonsupport claims did constitute invidious discrimination against them, since the informal procedure had been abolished as to all nonsupport cases and was not likely to be reestablished, granting of injunctive relief to plaintiff welfare recipients aimed at preventing further denial of access to such procedure was inappropriate and, on consideration of the same equitable principles, declaratory relief was likewise inappropriate. Haley v. Troy, D.C.Mass.1972, 338 F.Supp. 794. Declaratory Judgment 209; Injunction 22

5570. ---- Prisons and prisoners, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

Prisoners allegedly confined in violation of their constitutional rights were not entitled to declaratory relief, where unconstitutional conditions at jail had been remedied before case came to trial, and prisoners failed to establish that there was any danger these conditions would recur. Pembroke v. Wood County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 981 F.2d 225, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2965, 508 U.S. 973, 125 L.Ed.2d 665. Declaratory Judgment 84

Because transfer of jailhouse lawyer from state farm to state prison violated rights of other farm inmates, jailhouse lawyer was entitled to declaratory and injunctive relief that his transfer was improper. Buise v. Hudkins, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1978, 584 F.2d 223, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1234, 440 U.S. 916, 59 L.Ed.2d 466. Civil Rights 1448

Because former inmate had been released on parole and was no longer incarcerated in any Wisconsin prison when he filed civil rights suit challenging prison drug programs, his claims for injunctive and declaratory relief did not present justiciable case or controversy; as remedy for alleged First Amendment and other constitutional violations, inmate sought systemic changes to Wisconsin Department of Corrections drug treatment programs. Kerr v. Puckett, E.D.Wis.1997, 967 F.Supp. 354, affirmed 138 F.3d 321. Federal Courts 13

Prisoner's pro se § 1983 complaint against prison officials who had placed him in punitive segregation was not barred merely because § 1983 suits may not seek money damages or retrospective relief against states or state officials acting in their official capacities; since § 1983 does not prohibit suits for injunctive or declaratory relief, court was required to address prisoner's claim that he was deprived of liberty without due process. Morgan v. Ellerthorpe, D.R.I.1992, 785 F.Supp. 295. Civil Rights 1395(7)

By depriving prison inmate of liberty without procedural due process of law prison officials violated this section, and inmate was thus entitled to declaratory relief. U. S. ex rel. Hoss v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1978, 452 F.Supp. 256. Civil Rights 1098

5571. ---- Zoning, declaratory judgment, equitable relief generally

County could properly be subjected to suit for declaratory and injunctive relief under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 for changing zoning of plaintiff's property from commercial to residential. Shellburne, Inc. v. New Castle County, D.C.Del.1968, 293 F.Supp. 237. Declaratory Judgment 129; Zoning And Planning 568

5572. Assistance of counsel, equitable relief generally

Claims for equitable relief based on ineffective assistance and state trial court deficiencies must be pursued initially in habeas corpus proceedings, rather than § 1983 claim. Johnson v. McElveen, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 101 F.3d 423. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 321

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

5573. Desegregation, equitable relief generally

Until such time as facts reveal in future that the authorities are not carrying out spirit and letter of court's detailed order for improvement in handling of juveniles and jail facilities which were required to be desegregated, court order was an acceptable disposition of suit by parents on behalf of juveniles for damages and declaratory relief with respect to facilities in county jail and practices of authorities in handling of juveniles. Patterson v. Hopkins, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1973, 481 F.2d 640. Civil Rights 1448

Any Negro child who claims that he is being denied constitutional rights through being required to attend particular school because of race or color can file complaint in appropriate federal court and, subject to establish equitable principles, such as that of exhaustion of administrative remedies before one is entitled to injunction, courts will consider various elements referred to in Supreme Court desegregation decision, including adequacy of any plans which school officials may choose to propose, and thereafter enter such order or decree as may be appropriate. Robinson v. Board of Ed. of St. Mary's County, D.C.Md.1956, 143 F.Supp. 481. Federal Courts 6

5574. Expungement of records, equitable relief generally--Generally

Patient, who was involuntarily confined at psychiatric center and who commenced § 1983 action against physician, could be entitled to remedy of expungement of psychiatric records, and New York Mental Hygiene law, providing New York Supreme Court may seal patient's mental health records, could neither limit remedies available in § 1983 action nor remedies available in federal court. DeMarco v. Sadiker, E.D.N.Y.1996, 952 F.Supp. 134. Civil Rights 1448; Federal Courts 433

Discharged county employee, who was successful in civil rights suit on claim that he was discharged in violation of First Amendment free speech rights, was not entitled to have his employment file purged; although jury found in employee's favor that his First Amendment exercise was a cause of his firing, that provided no justification for employee's conduct toward his boss and employee never asked for such equitable relief in his pleadings, in his final pretrial order, in his trial brief or at trial. Fleming v. Kane County, N.D.Ill.1988, 686 F.Supp. 1264, affirmed 898 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1455

Where demotion to probationary status of Texas schoolteachers who had passed probationary period and had been employed under three-year contracts was in retaliation for their political associations, judgment was entered directing school board members, in their official capacities, to expunge from the records all evidence that the teachers were returned to probationary status in year at issue or any time thereafter; also, injunction issued against further action conditioning teachers' employment on a restriction of their political beliefs or associations at least until their actions destroyed their effectiveness as teachers. Guerra v. Roma Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1977, 444 F.Supp. 812. Injunction 78; Schools 147.12

5575. ---- Prison records, expungement of records, equitable relief generally

Federal district court was without power to order expungement of state bad-check convictions on alleged ground that statute under which convictions had been obtained was unconstitutional. Carter v. Hardy, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 543 F.2d 555, rehearing denied 547 F.2d 573. Criminal Law 1226(3.1)

State writ of certiorari did not provide constitutionally adequate postdeprivation remedy for alleged failure of prison officials to afford prisoner adequate notice before disciplinary proceedings, so that prisoner could bring § 1983 action against prison officials despite fact that failure was result of random and unauthorized deviation of state employees from state statutes; prisoner could seek expungement of conduct report and recovery of his lost good-time credits under certiorari procedure, but he could not recover damages for eight days he spent in administrative segregation. Sturdevant v. Haferman, E.D.Wis.1992, 798 F.Supp. 536. Civil Rights 1319

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate was entitled to expungement from his prison records of conduct reports that were found to be processed as major offenses in violation of his due process rights or on which he was found guilty without adequate statement of reasons, as remedy in federal civil rights action; inmate's interest in avoiding undeserved adverse consequences outweighed prison officials' interest in maintaining adequate records and insuring prison security. Robinson v. Young, W.D.Wis.1987, 674 F.Supp. 1356. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1454

5576. Mandamus, equitable relief generally

Plaintiff challenging district court's order dismissing § 1983 claim on basis of judicial immunity was not entitled to relief in form of mandamus; plaintiff could pursue direct appeal after final judgment on remaining claims, delay in pursuing appeal would not damage or prejudice plaintiff, order was not clearly erroneous, subject matter was not oft-repeated error and did not manifest persistent disregard of federal rules, and dismissal did not raise new and important problem or issue of law of first impression. Branson v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 912 F.2d 334. Mandamus 4(4); Mandamus 43

Pro se civil rights complaint which sought an order requiring state court clerk to expunge certain state convictions from all official records within his custody, and for a declaratory judgment that such convictions were constitutionally invalid, as well as such other and further relief as might appear just and proper, did not seek improper mandamus relief against a state official but, rather, properly sought a mandatory injunction under this section. Carter v. Hardy, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 526 F.2d 314, rehearing denied 528 F.2d 928, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 108, 429 U.S. 838, 50 L.Ed.2d 105. Federal Courts 11

If allegations of complaint filed by black residents of Model Neighborhood Area alleging racial discrimination by city and its officials in changing administrative structure of Model Cities Program by consolidating that program with other federally funded programs were established by proof, court would have power and duty to effect remedy by use of mandamus. Dupree v. City of Chattanooga, Tenn., E.D.Tenn.1973, 362 F.Supp. 1136. Federal Courts 11; Federal Courts 182

Federal courts have no authority, even under this section to issue writs in nature of mandamus to direct state courts and their judicial officers in performance of their duties. Lamar v. 118th Judicial Dist. Court of Tex., N.D.Tex.1970, 318 F.Supp. 285, affirmed 440 F.2d 383. Federal Courts 11

Federal district court could not compel state officials to follow state law, and thus, federal district court properly dismissed citizen's civil rights claim for writ of mandamus in which citizen sought to compel state court to render decisions on citizen's post-conviction motions in citizen's littering conviction, and federal district court also properly dismissed citizen's claim for writ of prohibition in which citizen sought to enjoin the municipal court from proceeding in the dumping case against citizen. Cochran v. Municipal Court of City of Barberton, Summit County, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2003, 91 Fed.Appx. 365, 2003 WL 23095546, Unreported. Federal Courts 269; Federal Courts 272

5577. Prison conditions, equitable relief generally--Generally

In federal civil rights action brought by plaintiff inmates alleging numerous unconstitutional conditions and practices in Massachusetts county jail and house of corrections, district court did not exceed its equitable power by ordering the closing of facility if certain mandated corrections were not implemented, since remedy did not exceed constitutional violations and mandated changes were modest in nature, fair to inmates and not oppressive for correction authorities. Dimarzo v. Cahill, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1978, 575 F.2d 15, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 312, 439 U.S. 927, 58 L.Ed.2d 320. Civil Rights 1448

Where state prison did not provide basic emergency medical service, much less any assurance of more complete medical treatment when necessary, district court would be directed to hold additional hearings and to delineate, within specific terms and time limitations, not only an overall long-range plan for improvement of facilities at the prison but an immediate plan to update all medical equipment at the facilities, to ensure that every inmate in need of medical attention would be seen by qualified physician when necessary. Finney v. Arkansas Bd. of Correction, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1974, 505 F.2d 194, on remand 410 F.Supp. 251. Prisons 17(2)

Court may find that untrained or poorly trained prison employee has violated inmate's constitutional rights, and provide a remedy, and official's failure to act, in violation of duties imposed upon him by statute, may subject him to liability under the 1871 civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, but court will not require prisons to have adequate training programs because same is impermissible judicial involvement with minutiae of prison administration. Cook v. Housewright, D.C.Nev.1985, 611 F.Supp. 828. Civil Rights 1090; Prisons 13(3)

In action against county jail officials, court entered order for renovation and alteration of main cellblocks, for confinement of prisoners pending reconstruction and renovation of cells, for the institution and maintenance of recreational program, for maintenance of medical program, for house cleaning and laundering and for continuation of visitation program, all as directed by the court. Johnson v. O'Brien, E.D.Mo.1977, 445 F.Supp. 122. Civil Rights 1448

5578. ---- Good-time credits restoration, prison conditions, equitable relief generally

Actual restoration of good-time credits to prisoners in action under this section was foreclosed, but where damage claim was also properly before the court, the procedures for depriving prisoners of good-time credits could be considered in the civil rights action. Wolff v. McDonnell, U.S.Neb.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2963, 418 U.S. 539, 41 L.Ed.2d 935, 71 O.O.2d 336. Civil Rights 1448

Restoration of good and honor time of plaintiffs, who were inmates in state prison, was not an appropriate remedy for violation of inmates' due process rights in connection with transfer to administrative segregation. Bills v. Henderson, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1980, 631 F.2d 1287. Civil Rights 1448

Restoration of good time credits and eligibility for parole were not within scope of civil rights proceeding, but this jurisdictional limitation in no way affected availability of this subchapter to grant money damages and appropriate equitable relief for deprivation of in-prison procedural due process. Gregory v. Wyse, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1975, 512 F.2d 378. Civil Rights 1448

5579. ---- Visitation rights, prison conditions, equitable relief generally

Under circumstances of case, orderly increase in contacts between prison inmates and their visitors, attorneys and counselors, and among inmates themselves was feasible and safe interim remedy for constitutional violations including unjustified confinement in isolation. Jefferson v. Southworth, D.C.R.I.1978, 447 F.Supp. 179, affirmed 616 F.2d 598, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 115, 449 U.S. 839, 66 L.Ed.2d 45. Prisons 4(5); Prisons 4(6); Prisons 4(11)

5580. Prisoner release, equitable relief generally

This section did not entitle state prisoner to release from custody so that he might frequent law library of his choice. Bradenburg v. Beaman, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1980, 632 F.2d 120, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1522, 450 U.S. 984, 67 L.Ed.2d 820. Civil Rights 1094

Although district court, on finding that double celling of pretrial detainees at Brooklyn and Queens Houses of Detention violated detainees' constitutional rights, was in no position to order New York City to raise necessary funds to build additional facilities, the court could order release of persons held under conditions which deprived them of rights guaranteed by the Constitution unless such conditions were corrected within a reasonable time.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Detainees of Brooklyn House of Detention for Men v. Malcolm, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 520 F.2d 392, on remand 421 F.Supp. 832. Civil Rights 1448

Remedy of release from custody is not available under this section to prisoner who claimed that prison officials unjustifiably beat him. Wiltsie v. California Dept. of Corrections, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1968, 406 F.2d 515. Civil Rights 1448

A civil rights suit cannot be used to effect a release from incarceration. Scot v. Merola, S.D.N.Y.1983, 555 F.Supp. 230. Civil Rights 1090

Where unconstitutional overcrowding was found in state prison, counsel would be ordered to agree upon an appropriate plan for eliminating overcrowding which would then be submitted to court for consideration and approval and if no agreement could be reached as to measures to be adopted and time for their implementation, court would itself determine injunctive and declaratory relief to be entered, including, as a last resort, the drastic and unwanted measure of ordering the release of certain prisoners. Johnson v. Levine, D.C.Md.1978, 450 F.Supp. 648, judgment affirmed in part and remanded on other grounds 588 F.2d 1378. Prisons 17(1)

Release from incarceration is an improper remedy under a civil rights complaint brought by an inmate. Marks v. Calendine, N.D.W.Va.1978, 80 F.R.D. 24. Civil Rights 1448

5581. Prisoner transfers, equitable relief generally

Federal district court, which determined that quality of incarceration at jail used by county denied due process, had authority, for purposes of accomplishing single cell occupancy, to order Massachusetts Commissioner of Corrections, who had statewide transfer powers and authority to establish minimum standards for care and custody of county inmates, to transfer women confined in such jail and to transfer male detainees with state felony records, notwithstanding contention that Commissioner could not be ordered to make such transfers without showing of unconstitutional conduct on his part. Inmates of Suffolk County Jail v. Eisenstadt, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1974, 494 F.2d 1196, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 239, 419 U.S. 977, 42 L.Ed.2d 189. Prisons 13.5(3); Prisons 17(1)

5582. Receiverships, equitable relief generally

Where in over six years since Alabama prisons were ordered to correct conditions of confinement the Board of Corrections made little progress and although there was lack of adequate funding the board could have ameliorated conditions confronting it but, instead, contributed to gravity of the situation by its indifference and incompetence and appointment of monitors offered little, if any, hope of swift compliance, such extraordinary circumstances dictated that only alternative to noncompliance was appointment of the governor as receiver for the Alabama prisons. Newman v. State of Ala., M.D.Ala.1979, 466 F.Supp. 628. Prisons 4(3)

5583. Reinstatement, equitable relief generally--Generally

Absent a property interest in continued employment, reinstatement is not ordinarily an appropriate remedy for deprivation of a liberty interest. McGhee v. Draper, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1981, 639 F.2d 639. Civil Rights 1448

Like reinstatement, instatement is considered preferred remedy to compensate aggrieved party for loss of future earnings as result of illegal, adverse employment actions, including actions that violate §§ 1983; however, instatement may not be feasible in all cases, particularly those in which position is no longer available at time of judgment or relationship between parties has been so damaged by animosity that instatement is impracticable. Bullen v. Chaffinch, D.Del.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 357. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1564

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Full reinstatement is not the required remedy for failure to provide due process prior to a final determination of the renewal of an employment contract. Skehan v. Board of Trustees of Bloomsburg State College, M.D.Pa.1977, 436 F.Supp. 657, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 590 F.2d 470, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 61, 444 U.S. 832, 62 L.Ed.2d 41, on remand 501 F.Supp. 1360. Civil Rights 1448

5584. ---- Municipal employees, reinstatement, equitable relief generally

Guided by particular circumstances of case, district court has broad discretion in determining whether reinstatement is appropriate remedy for discharge that violates § 1983 and its determination is reviewed under abuse-of-discretion standard. Feldman v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 43 F.3d 823. Civil Rights 1448; Federal Courts 813

Municipal employees who were determined to be discharged in violation of First Amendment based upon their political affiliation could be denied reinstatement, in view of scant evidence supporting their First Amendment claims, amount of damages awarded, and fact that employees were hired illegally in violation of Puerto Rico's personnel laws. Velazquez v. Figueroa-Gomez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1993, 996 F.2d 425, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 553, 510 U.S. 993, 126 L.Ed.2d 454. Civil Rights 1448

Ordering reinstatement of municipal employees who were discharged because of their political affiliation was not abuse of discretion in their § 1983 action, even if the employees were ineligible for appointment under Puerto Rico law. Hiraldo-Cancel v. Aponte, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1991, 925 F.2d 10, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 637, 502 U.S. 1004, 116 L.Ed.2d 655. Civil Rights 1448

City employee who was discharged as result of racial discrimination and retaliation was entitled to reinstatement to his former position, despite district court's finding that general hostility remained impossibly high; most of those making complaint against employee were no longer employed by city in employee's division and, due to nature of employee's training and experience, comparable positions were not quickly or easily found. Jackson v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1989, 890 F.2d 225. Civil Rights 1563; Municipal Corporations 218(11)

Chief deputy appraiser of property tax appraisal district, who was denied promotion because of pregnancy in violation of state and federal civil rights laws, was entitled to recover from each board member of central appraisal district exemplary and punitive damages of $500 and $24,000 back pay from district from date of constructive discharge to date of judgment, and was entitled to reinstatement as chief appraiser as soon as reasonably possible. Herrin v. Newton Cent. Appraisal Dist., E.D.Tex.1987, 687 F.Supp. 1072. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1455; Civil Rights 1473; Civil Rights 1769

5585. ---- State employees, reinstatement, equitable relief generally

District court did not abuse its discretion in ordering reinstatement of career employees in Puerto Rico municipal sanitation department, for mayor's violation of First Amendment political affiliation rights of career employees, where employees presented strong evidence of First Amendment violation, many career employees had not found work in aftermath of their termination, any possibility of workplace antagonism and upheaval that would have been caused by finding jobs for terminated workers was foreseeable sequelae of mayor's wrongdoing, damage awards did not obviate need for reinstatement, and employees did not reapply for their jobs because they had every reason to believe they were unwelcome. Borges Colon v. Roman-Abreu, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 438 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1448

Balance of considerations favored reinstatement of former employee who brought § 1983 action against Puerto Rico Department of Justice and former co-employees, alleging wrongful discharge, and thus employee's motion for reinstatement would be properly granted; evidence presented at trial was sufficient to justify having jury determine that employee's First Amendment rights had been violated, employee had been unable to find comparable work since discharge, employee had property right in position he had held, and employee was still eligible for position. Tejada-Batista v. Fuentes-Agostini, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 321, reconsideration denied 267 F.Supp.2d 156. Civil Rights 1448

Even if former state employee were able to establish § 1983 claim that her discharge from employment, and state official's refusal to re-employ her while discharged, were in violation of employee's First Amendment rights, employee, who was reinstated to her old position and served in it until she voluntarily retired, would not be entitled, in addition to full monetary compensation for wrongdoing, to order compelling state to re-employ her in different position. Lupo v. Voinovich, S.D.Ohio 2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 782. Civil Rights 1455

5586. ---- Police officers, reinstatement, equitable relief generally

White Delaware state police officers were ordered instated to next available sergeant positions, with promotions made retroactive for purposes of benefits, pensions and seniority rights; officers' eligibility for promotion was not at issue in light of jury's finding they were denied promotions as result of illegal discrimination, and remaining facts and circumstances, such as lack of animosity between parties, favored instatement. Bullen v. Chaffinch, D.Del.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 357. Civil Rights 1448; Civil Rights 1564; Civil Rights 1565

City police officer who was demoted for supporting unsuccessful mayoral candidate was entitled to reinstatement at experience level that he would have occupied at time of his retirement, absent evidence that there was irreparable animosity between officer and those with whom he worked. Perez v. Cucci, D.N.J.1989, 725 F.Supp. 209, affirmed 898 F.2d 139, affirmed 898 F.2d 141, affirmed 898 F.2d 142. Civil Rights 1455

5587. ---- Sheriffs, reinstatement, equitable relief generally

Deputy sheriff was not entitled to reinstatement to his position upon prevailing in § 1983 action alleging that he was wrongfully terminated from his position, where new sheriff had been elected subsequent to the termination and applicable Florida statute authorized sheriff to name such deputies as he saw fit. Lucas v. O'Loughlin, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1987, 831 F.2d 232, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1595, 485 U.S. 1035, 99 L.Ed.2d 909. Civil Rights 1448

5588. ---- Teachers and school officials, reinstatement, equitable relief generally

Extraordinary circumstances justified denial of reinstatement following finding of § 1983 liability for nonrenewal of teaching contracts motivated by activities protected under First Amendment, where hostility between teachers and those with whom they would have had to work in tiny, rural school district would have made future cooperation impossible. Standley v. Chilhowee R-IV School Dist., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 5 F.3d 319, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1448

Reinstatement and back pay could be awarded against school board under this section. Moore v. Tangipahoa Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 489. Civil Rights 1448

Teachers who were dismissed in retaliation for lawful exercise of freedoms protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 were entitled to be reinstated. Greminger v. Seaborne, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1978, 584 F.2d 275. Schools 147.47

Extraordinary equitable remedy of reinstatement of discharged college teacher whose constitutional rights are violated is commonly imposed only in those cases involving racial discrimination and dismissals in reprisal for exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Decker v. North Idaho College, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1977, 552 F.2d 872. Colleges And Universities 8.1(7)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Plaintiff, who was unlawfully demoted by college from registrar to teacher, was not entitled to reinstatement as registrar because his protectible property interest in being registrar extended through only one academic year and his ineligibility for the position was reaffirmed in a due process hearing before the next academic year. Johnson v. San Jacinto Jr. College, S.D.Tex.1980, 498 F.Supp. 555. Colleges And Universities 8.1(7)

5589. Restitution, equitable relief generally

The "make whole" standard of relief has been adopted to restore the victim of employment discrimination as wholly as possible to the economic position in which he or she would have been in the absence of the employment discrimination. Gurmankin v. Costanzo, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 626 F.2d 1115, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1375, 450 U.S. 923, 67 L.Ed.2d 352. Civil Rights 1560

Appropriate remedy for county employees' union's failure to comply with requirements for withholding of fair-share fees from nonmembers was to order restitution of wrongfully withheld fees, not restitution of all fair-share fees. Laramie v. County of Santa Clara, N.D.Cal.1992, 784 F.Supp. 1492. Labor And Employment 1039(1)

U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11, as extended to cover suits against a state by citizens of that state, stood as a bar to any decree ordering "restitution" in the form of retroactive welfare payments wrongfully withheld, as such a decree would eventually necessitate an appropriation by the Virginia Assembly, and would in effect be an order to the state to take affirmative political action which it could not be said to have consented to take. Frye v. Lukehard, W.D.Va.1973, 364 F.Supp. 1379. Federal Courts 268.1

5590. Specific performance, equitable relief generally

Where lot had been sold to bona fide purchaser, specific action toward such lot arising out of alleged deprivation of right to buy lot in violation of this section could not be maintained. Newbern v. Lake Lorelei, Inc., S.D.Ohio 1968, 308 F.Supp. 407, 24 Ohio Misc. 201, 52 O.O.2d 189, 53 O.O.2d 290. Civil Rights 1071

5591. Tenure, equitable relief generally

District court was exercising its discretion in holding that tenure would not be an appropriate award under circumstances respecting unconstitutional policy of school district in preventing blind teachers from teaching sighted students. Gurmankin v. Costanzo, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 626 F.2d 1115, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1375, 450 U.S. 923, 67 L.Ed.2d 352. Civil Rights 1560

5621. Injunctive relief generally

Provision of Civil Rights Act authorizing a suit in equity to redress deprivation under color of state law or any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution is within "expressly authorized" exception of federal anti-injunction statute prohibiting a federal court from enjoining a state court proceeding except as expressly authorized by act of Congress. Mitchum v. Foster, U.S.Fla.1972, 92 S.Ct. 2151, 407 U.S. 225, 32 L.Ed.2d 705. Courts 508(2.1)

Prisoner who had knowledge of his pending execution date for over three months before filing §§ 1983 claim seeking stay of execution that was the "functional equivalent" of a second habeas petition 14 days before his scheduled execution, was not entitled to an equitable stay of his execution; prisoner's requested stay of execution was directly attributable to his own failure to bring his claims to court in a timely fashion, and there was no reasonable basis for prisoner's decision to wait ten months after the dismissal of his first habeas corpus petition to re-style his claim as a §§ 1983 action. Hutcherson v. Riley, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 468 F.3d 750. Habeas Corpus

Less rigorous fair-ground-for-litigation standard for preliminary injunction, which was inapplicable in cases involving injunctive relief sought to stay governmental action taken in the public interest pursuant to statutory scheme, did not apply in §§ 1983 action in which professionals subject to Kansas statute requiring doctors, teachers, and others to notify state government of suspected injury to minor resulting from sexual abuse challenged statute's constitutionality as applied to incidents involving consensual sexual activity between minors of similar ages. Aid for Women v. Foulston, C.A.10 2006, 441 F.3d 1101, on remand 427 F.Supp.2d 1093. Civil Rights 1457(7)

This section authorizing suit to redress deprivation under color of state law of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution constitutes a Congressionally carved out exception to § 2283 of Title 28. Boraas v. Village of Belle Terre, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1973, 476 F.2d 806, probable jurisdiction noted 94 S.Ct. 234, 414 U.S. 907, 38 L.Ed.2d 145, reversed on other grounds 94 S.Ct. 1536, 416 U.S. 1, 39 L.Ed.2d 797. See, also, Shaw v. Garrison, C.A.5 (La.) 1972, 467 F.2d 113, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 467, 409 U.S. 1024, 34 L.Ed.2d 317; Palaio v. McAuliffe, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1972, 466 F.2d 1230. Courts 508(1)

This section providing that every person who causes a citizen of United States to be deprived of his rights under federal Constitution and laws "shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress" authorizes issuance of federal injunctions, in highly unusual and limited circumstances, to protect exercise of civil rights. Honey v. Goodman, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1970, 432 F.2d 333. Civil Rights 1450

Entitlement to absolute immunity from a §§ 1983 claim for damages does not bar the granting of injunctive relief or of other equitable relief. Adibi v. California State Bd. of Pharmacy, N.D.Cal.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1448

Payday loan business did not show that it was likely that municipal ordinance, which stated that "[n]o payday loan business may be open between the hours of 9:00 p.m. and 6 a.m.," was unconstitutional due to vagueness, for purpose of its request for preliminary injunction in § 1983 lawsuit, on allegation that there was some question whether it could continue to offer other services, such as its currency exchange and notary service; language was obvious that payday loan business could not offer other services at night within its payday loan store without violating ordinance. Payday Loan Store of Wisconsin, Inc. v. City of Madison, W.D.Wis.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 1058. Civil Rights 1457(7)

African-American employees of state human services department could proceed under § 1983 against department and its principal officials in their official capacities, seeking injunctive relief for alleged employment discrimination, even though damages claims were barred. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Civil Rights 1359; Civil Rights 1455

For § 1983 plaintiff to be entitled to injunctive relief, he must show that he has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining some direct injury as result of challenged official conduct, and injury or threat of injury must be both real and immediate, not conjectural or hypothetical. Ryan v. Illinois Dept. of Children & Family Services, C.D.Ill.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1490, reversed 185 F.3d 751. Civil Rights 1450

Civil rights actions are exempt from usual prohibition on federal court injunctions of state court proceedings. Schroll v. Plunkett, D.Or.1991, 760 F.Supp. 1385, affirmed 932 F.2d 973. Courts 508(2.1)

Injunctive relief is available in action brought under this section. International Prisoners' Union v. Rizzo, E.D.Pa.1973, 356 F.Supp. 806.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Basic civil rights are within ambit of personal rights to be protected by injunction. Dreyer v. Jalet, S.D.Tex.1972, 349 F.Supp. 452, affirmed 479 F.2d 1044. Civil Rights 1450

Injunctive relief is appropriate under this section. Henson v. City of St. Francis, E.D.Wis.1970, 322 F.Supp. 1034.

Federal injunction dealing with state law enforcement is extraordinary remedy and it requires much to induce its use. Koen v. Long, E.D.Mo.1969, 302 F.Supp. 1383, affirmed 428 F.2d 876, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 877, 401 U.S. 923, 27 L.Ed.2d 827. Courts 508(7)

Inmate's request for order directing Bureau of Prisons (BOP) and employees of both the BOP and state penitentiary to, among other things, cease assaulting inmate, place inmate in protective custody, preserve videotape of an alleged assault on inmate, and provide inmate with administrative remedies, although designated as a motion for a temporary restraining order, requested relief only available by a preliminary injunction, and was thus reviewable by the Court of Appeals in connection with inmate's § 1983 action against defendants for alleged forcible interviews and corrupt administrative remedy system. Neal v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 543, 2003 WL 22120976, Unreported. Federal Courts 579

5622. Power of court, injunctive relief

In proceeding under this section the trial court has broad power to grant or deny equitable relief sought. Knowles v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, Fla., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1969, 405 F.2d 1206. Civil Rights 1448

A district court has power to grant injunctive relief where there has been deprivation of civil rights. Sewell v. Pegelow, C.A.4 (Va.) 1961, 291 F.2d 196. See, also, Schnell v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1969, 407 F.2d 1084; Dixon v. Duncan, D.C.Va.1963, 218 F.Supp. 157. Civil Rights 1450

5623. Duty of court, injunctive relief

When there is deprivation of constitutionally guaranteed right, duty of federal court to use injunctive power to interfere with conduct of state officers cannot be avoided. Woods v. Wright, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1964, 334 F.2d 369. Federal Courts 171

5624. Discretion of court, injunctive relief

It was within district court's discretion and scope of the injury to grant injunctive relief for insufficient supervision of open barracks prisons after court concluded that threat of harm to inmates from other prisoners violated Eighth Amendment, though there was one guard who remained in barracks hallway, where two inmates were violently stabbed while asleep in their beds, evidence indicated that violence, robbery, rape, gambling, and use of weapons by inmates were prevalent in open barracks, and guard in hallway could not enter barracks while in possession of keys even if altercation were in progress, so that no official was immediately available to stop any illegal activity; prison officials failed to use additional staff provided by legislature to fulfill their own promise to add security to open barracks. Smith v. Arkansas Dept. of Correction, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 103 F.3d 637. Injunction 105(1)

Question of whether an injunction should issue in a suit under this section or suit involving violation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1 is a question within the sound discretion of the district court. Brown v. Board of Ed. of City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1974, 386 F.Supp. 110. Civil Rights 1450

Federal district court has no discretion to deny injunctive relief to person who clearly establishes, after trial on merits, that he is being denied his constitutional rights; decree may also provide for retention of jurisdiction to insure that injunctive order is carried out in orderly fashion, or to allow for amendment of state rules to conform with decree, but injunction must issue. Sostre v. Rockefeller, S.D.N.Y.1970, 312 F.Supp. 863, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 442 F.2d 178, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 719, 404 U.S. 1049, 30 L.Ed.2d 740, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1190, 405 U.S. 978, 31 L.Ed.2d 254. Federal Courts 54

Remedy of injunction is discretionary. Thompson v. Housing Authority of City of Miami, Fla., S.D.Fla.1966, 251 F.Supp. 121. Injunction 1

To the extent that inmate alleged that no evidence was produced at his robbery trial to show that money seized by police officers came from robbery victim, inmate's § 1983 claim seeking return of seized money, on grounds that police officers violated his due process rights by failing to give him voucher and adequate notice of procedures for recovering seized money, was impermissible collateral attack on inmate's conviction, and therefore was precluded pursuant to Heck rule barring § 1983 claims that implicated validity of underlying convictions which had not yet been declared invalid. Erber v. Peterson, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22171899, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(3)

5625. State and local officials, injunctive relief

Recognition of need for proper balance between state and federal authority counsels restraint in issuance of injunctions against state officers engaged in administration of the states' criminal laws in absence of irreparable injury which is both great and immediate. City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, U.S.Cal.1983, 103 S.Ct. 1660, 461 U.S. 95, 75 L.Ed.2d 675. Courts 508(7)

Sensitivity to principles of equity, comity, and federalism dictate that federal courts should ordinarily refrain from enjoining ongoing state criminal prosecutions; in all but unusual cases, a pending state proceeding provides the federal plaintiff with the necessary vehicle for vindicating his constitutional rights, and, thus, restraining of an ongoing prosecution entails an unseemly failure to give effect to the principle that state courts have solemn responsibility, equally with federal courts, to protect federal constitutional rights. Steffel v. Thompson, U.S.Ga.1974, 94 S.Ct. 1209, 415 U.S. 452, 39 L.Ed.2d 505, conformed to 494 F.2d 691. Courts 508(7)

Although, at time of dismissal of village residents' civil rights action attacking constitutionality of zoning ordinances, no state criminal proceeding was "pending" against them raising same constitutional issues as defenses, where only action of federal district court as to residents at time state criminal proceedings were begun was a sua sponte dismissal of civil rights action for lack of jurisdiction, their federal request for declaratory and injunctive relief was properly denied in interest of comity so as not to interfere with state criminal proceedings. Giulini v. Blessing, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 654 F.2d 189. Civil Rights 1448

Claims under § 1983 are barred against state officers in their official capacity except to the extent that the plaintiff seeks prospective injunctive relief. Mercer v. Brunt, D.Conn.2002, 272 F.Supp.2d 181. Federal Courts 269; Federal Courts 272

Although Eleventh Amendment bars damage claims against state officials acting in their official capacity, federal courts can enjoin state officials acting in their official capacity, as long as injunction governs only the officer's future conduct and no retroactive remedy is provided; rule extends to declaratory judgments also. Ippolito v. Meisel, S.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 155. Declaratory Judgment 387; Federal Courts 269; Federal Courts 272; Injunction 189

Younger abstention was warranted, and federal district court would refuse to enjoin state proceedings before state insurance commission charging insurer with making untrue, deceptive or misleading statements in connection with advertisements or mailings; state proceedings were judicial in nature, state proceedings implicated important state interest in prohibiting unfair and deceptive practices in business of insurance; and insurer had adequate opportunity in state court to litigate constitutional issues surrounding its claim that proceedings had been undertaken to suppress its political speech and not to regulate trade practices. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Metcalf, D.Hawai'i 1995, 902 F.Supp. 1216. Federal Courts 54

Where in civil rights case it was simply alleged that, for variety of reasons, county jails had become overcrowded to point of violating Constitution, and was not alleged that bail, sentencing or calendar control practices in these counties were unconstitutional, comity considerations precluded granting injunctive relief against state court judges who were not themselves alleged to have directly and personally engaged in unconstitutional conduct. Inmates of Middlesex County v. Demos, D.C.N.J.1981, 519 F.Supp. 770. Courts 490

Federal district court had power to grant injunction relief with respect to operation of city jail in which federal prisoners were detained, but power would be exercised with restraint, especially where results to be anticipated had already been substantially achieved, albeit under pressure of litigation. Johnson v. Lark, E.D.Mo.1973, 365 F.Supp. 289. Prisons 4(2.1)

5626. Considerations governing, injunctive relief--Generally

To be entitled to preliminary injunctive relief, state employee alleging that the elimination of his position violated the ADA, § 1983, and Nevada law had to show either that he would suffer irreparable injury if injunction was not granted, he would probably prevail on the merits, state would not be harmed by injunction more than he was helped by it, and granting injunction was in public interest, or he must show either a combination of probable success on the merits and possibility of irreparable injury or that serious questions were raised and balance of hardships tipped sharply in his favor. Remlinger v. State of Nev., D.Nev.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1012. Civil Rights 1568

Factors to be considered on application for preliminary injunction, in case based on alleged violation of civil rights, are the relative importance of rights asserted, acts to be enjoined, hardship that would result from granting or refusing to grant the injunction, probability of ultimate success and the public interest. Moran v. School Dist. #7, Yellowstone County, D.C.Mont.1972, 350 F.Supp. 1180. Civil Rights 1457(1)

Provisions of this section cannot override elemental discretionary rule, which federal courts of equity must respect, that, in absence of irreparable injury, clear and imminent, injunctions must be denied by federal court as long as remedy sufficient to redress alleged injury lies through state's appellate procedure with right of petition to United States Supreme Court. DeVasto v. Hoyt, S.D.N.Y.1951, 101 F.Supp. 908. Federal Courts 6

5627. ---- Exceptional circumstances generally, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Parade participants lacked standing to seek a permanent injunction after district court issued temporary restraining order (TRO) and ordered city to allow the parades; they failed to allege a concrete, present plan to apply for another parade permit in the future. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Injunction 114(2)

Where transcript of grand jury hearing which was on file with Mississippi state court contained testimony obtained in bad faith and in violation of plaintiffs' rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 and where that transcript, by order of state court judge, could be made available to any state or federal officer or any subsequent grand jury and report of grand jury suggested that witnesses were suspected of some kind of wrongful conduct, circumstances were exceptional and necessitated federal relief and plaintiffs who sought expungement of unconstitutionally obtained testimony were not required to resort to Mississippi state court to redress abuse of grand jury process. Ealy v. Littlejohn, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1978, 569 F.2d 219. Courts 489(1)

Absent evidence presented which could be characterized as irreparable injury, bad faith, harassment, or other special circumstances, to defendant arising out of state court prosecution, which had valid basis independent of immunized federal grand jury testimony, defendant, as an intervenor plaintiff in action brought by United States

Attorney General for an injunction, could not prevail on his claim, even though intervenor's claim was asserted under provisions of this subchapter proscribing the deprivation of rights. U. S. v. Kuehn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1977, 562 F.2d 427. Courts 508(7)

Only manifest oppression justifies federal court's interference with state administrative officers acting under color of office in good faith effort to perform their duties, and there must be exceptional circumstances and clear showing of necessity for protection of constitutional rights by injunction. National Ass'n for Advancement of Colored People v. Gallion, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1961, 290 F.2d 337, vacated on other grounds 82 S.Ct. 4, 368 U.S. 16, 7 L.Ed.2d 85. See, also, Rhodes v. Houston, D.C.Neb.1962, 202 F.Supp. 624, affirmed 309 F.2d 959, certiorari denied 83 S.Ct. 724, 372 U.S. 909, 9 L.Ed.2d 719, certiorari denied 86 S.Ct. 1282, 383 U.S. 971, 16 L.Ed.2d 311, motion denied 258 F.Supp. 346, affirmed 418 F.2d 1309 certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1382, 397 U.S. 1049, 25 L.Ed.2d 662; Progress Development Corp. v. Mitchell, D.C.Ill.1960, 182 F.Supp. 681, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 286 F.2d 222; Chapman v. Trustees of Delaware State College, D.C.Del.1951, 101 F.Supp. 441. Injunction 75

Plaintiffs' § 1983 complaint failed to assert an "extraordinary circumstance" requiring injunctive relief against justices of the Puerto Rico Supreme Court and superior court judge's orders, and thus trial court properly granted motion to dismiss where complaint did not allege that the justices or judge acted outside their adjudicatory capacity in issuing orders and judgment in state court proceedings. Rullan v. Council of Co-Owners of McKinley Court Condominium, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 899 F.Supp. 857. Civil Rights 1395(1)

In absence of extraordinary circumstances, three-judge court would grant neither declaratory nor injunctive relief, notwithstanding that suit was in nature of civil rights action. Kister v. Ohio Bd. of Regents, S.D.Ohio 1973, 365 F.Supp. 27, affirmed 94 S.Ct. 855, 414 U.S. 1117, 38 L.Ed.2d 747.

5628. ---- Anticipated or future wrongs, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Parade participants lacked standing to seek a permanent injunction after district court issued temporary restraining order (TRO) and ordered city to allow the parades; they failed to allege a concrete, present plan to apply for another parade permit in the future. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Injunction 114(2)

In order to obtain prospective injunctive relief to compel state officials to furnish indigent accused with adequate legal representation, accused should not have been required to allege and prove "future inevitability of ineffective assistance" under existing state system in accordance with test for ineffective assistance established in Strickland v. Washington, but only likelihood of substantial and immediate irreparable injury and inadequacy of remedies at law. Luckey v. Harris, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1988, 860 F.2d 1012, rehearing denied 896 F.2d 479, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2562, 495 U.S. 957, 109 L.Ed.2d 744. Civil Rights 1454

No basis existed for grant of injunctive relief, which would permit state prisoner to maintain official capacity claims against correctional officers based on alleged past use of excessive force and cruel and unusual punishment, absent any credible evidence of a threat of future injury or of continuing adverse effects from any past injury. Thomas v. Walton, S.D.Ill.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 786. Federal Courts 272

Present and past employees of police department were entitled to injunction prohibiting mayor and police chief from retaliating against them for their participation in past litigation against the mayor and police chief, but court would not issue injunction as to cases which were not filed; mayor and chief had previously retaliated against officers involved in the litigation, but prediction could not be made as to future cases. Green v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1992, 792 F.Supp. 1238. Civil Rights 1455

Inmate's alleged injuries suffered at hands of sheriff during pretrial detention were not evidence of real and immediate danger of harm sufficient to warrant issuance of injunction. Martin v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1990, 738

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

F.Supp. 1191. Civil Rights 1454

Injunctive relief should not be granted, on inmates' Eighth Amendment claim, unless there is threat of future inhumane conditions of confinement and wanton infliction of pain. DeGidio v. Pung, D.Minn.1989, 704 F.Supp. 922, affirmed 920 F.2d 525. Civil Rights 1454

A person is entitled to injunction in civil rights action only where it is shown that others are taking some action against person in violation of his civil rights or have threatened to take any action in the future. Shelton v. McCarthy, W.D.N.Y.1988, 699 F.Supp. 412. Civil Rights 1456

5629. ---- Adequacy of remedy at law, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Where workers seeking to organize lawful union were intimidated by state authorities in that workers were placed in fear of exercising their constitutionally protected rights of free expression, assembly and association, remedy at law was shown to be inadequate, for purpose of seeking injunctive relief. Allee v. Medrano, U.S.Tex.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2191, 416 U.S. 802, 40 L.Ed.2d 566. Courts 508(7)

Injunctive relief was not warranted for payment of honoraria, in students § 1983 lawsuit against public college under First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments, since any harm suffered could have been remedied by monetary damages. Ford v. Reynolds, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 351, on remand 326 F.Supp.2d 392. Civil Rights 1452

Distributors of leaflets to voters were not entitled to injunction from United States Court of Appeals to stay state court injunction prohibiting distribution of leaflets, pending disposition of their appeal from federal district court's order refusing, on Younger abstention grounds, to interfere with state court injunction; fair and adequate state remedy was available when federal court intervention was sought, federal intervention would have unnecessarily disturbed state's administration of its own election process, which it had compelling interest in preserving, and federal intervention was not counseled by any bad faith or misconduct. Family Foundation, Inc. v. Brown, C.A.4 (Va.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1075. Injunction 33

Voters and incumbent candidate who ran for reelection for town supervisor sufficiently demonstrated that quo warranto was inadequate state remedy to correct alleged deprivation of right to vote, as required to support entitlement to preliminary injunctive relief under § 1983 based on claim that malfunctioning voting machines miscounted votes and improperly resulted in election of opponent despite evidence that incumbent was clear winner; state law provided that attorney general had discretion to bring quo warranto action after alleged usurper took office but did not provide for remedial measures when it was determined that machine malfunction did occur, process could take entire term of two years in which opponent held office, and there was no danger of protracted vacancy in office because parties agreed that incumbent would remain in office pending resolution of litigation. Shannon v. Jacobowitz, N.D.N.Y.2003, 301 F.Supp.2d 249. Quo Warranto 11

While neither state nor its officials acting in their official capacities are persons amenable to suit for monetary damages under § 1983, state officials, even when acting in their official capacities, may be subject to declaratory or injunctive relief pursuant to § 1983. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 55. Civil Rights 1450; Declaratory Judgment 204

Landowner adjacent to airport was not entitled to permanent injunction requiring city and airport commission to negotiate lease agreement to provide landowner with runway access, since jury's award of damages in landowner's § 1983 action, in which city and commission were found to have acted unconstitutionally in denying access to runway, constituted adequate legal remedy, more than ten years had passed since unconstitutional actions, such that no continuing or future injury was threatened, and landowner did not have property right to runway access. Jade Aircraft Sales, Inc. v. City of Bridgeport, D.Conn.1994, 849 F.Supp. 10. Civil Rights 1453

Injunctive relief was appropriate for property owners who alleged civil rights and antitrust causes of actions against developer, city, city officials, and city urban renewal authority arising out of urban renewal plan which allegedly misrepresented area to be redeveloped as blighted so as to bring about condemnation of property in that no adequate state remedy existed for defendants' alleged fraudulent actions. Oberndorf v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.1986, 653 F.Supp. 304. Civil Rights 1453; Monopolies 24(7.1)

Plaintiff who complained of delay in receiving AFDC benefits after her child was returned to her home following a period of foster care had adequate legal remedies through civil rights action under federal law or through state law procedures and thus did not have standing to seek injunction against future illegal conduct. Grant v. Cohen, E.D.Pa.1985, 630 F.Supp. 513. Civil Rights 1331(6)

5630. ---- Availability of other remedies, considerations governing, injunctive relief

No injunctive relief was available to state prison inmate, who succeeded on §§ 1983 claim that Department of Corrections violated his First and Fourteenth Amendment right to have access to court by providing him with attorney not permitted to do legal research, which would have shown inmate that he had unfounded concerns that reopening of his plea bargain would occur if he sued claiming that extradition violations invalidated his conviction; statute of limitations had run, barring attack on conviction due to extradition errors. White v. Kautzky, N.D.Iowa 2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1042, motion to amend denied 2006 WL 141854. Civil Rights 1454

Proper remedy for any deprivations suffered by prisoners that violated existing jail policies was individual § 1983 action, not continuance of system-wide injunction; any violations incurred in spite of policies, not because policies did not exist. Merriweather v. Sherwood, S.D.N.Y.2002, 235 F.Supp.2d 339. Injunction 211

District court could not properly entertain civil rights action for redress of constitutional rights, in which plaintiff sought to enjoin state court judge from enforcing his injunctive orders, where there existed several available state forums in which to raise same constitutional questions arising under federal law and where plaintiffs had not yet sought relief through the available state court forums. Blue v. Revels, M.D.Fla.1977, 441 F.Supp. 308. Courts 508(3)

Availability of legal remedies to plaintiff, a black police lieutenant complaining of actions of county judge who conducted John Doe proceedings inquiring into allegations of battery by police lieutenant, precluded equitable relief. Harris v. Harvey, E.D.Wis.1977, 436 F.Supp. 143. Civil Rights 1454

Section 1983 barred parent's claim for injunctive relief against state-court judge, given lack of showing that judge or related defendants violated declaratory decree or that declaratory relief was unavailable. Conway v. Garvey, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 117 Fed.Appx. 792, 2004 WL 2786380, Unreported. Civil Rights 1360

5631. ---- Bad faith, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Plaintiffs failed to establish that Georgia's prosecuting officer acted in bad faith in removing their prosecution from "dead docket" and reactivating it after plaintiffs initiated civil damages action against their arresting officers on grounds of alleged battery and illegal arrest; thus, plaintiffs were not entitled to federal injunctive protection from their continued prosecution. Wilson v. Thompson, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 638 F.2d 799. Civil Rights 1420

Federal court may not grant injunctive relief against a pending state criminal prosecution in an action under this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law, unless there is a showing of "bad faith" or "harassment" by the state in bringing the prosecution or when the state law is "flagrantly and patently violative of express constitutional provisions." Shirey v. Bensalem Tp., E.D.Pa.1980, 501 F.Supp. 1138. Courts 508(7)

Where county had intentionally continued to practice racial discrimination and had not seen fit to follow civil rights legislation and where county officials had acted with a deliberate intent to discriminate, general injunctive prohibition against discrimination by the county in its treatment of complaining employee, for so long as he continued to be a county employee, would be issued. Wells v. Hutchinson, E.D.Tex.1980, 499 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1455

A showing of bad faith and harassment on the part of state officials, while perhaps appropriate, is not a prerequisite to the granting of injunctive relief against state prosecution. Scoma v. Chicago Bd. of Ed., N.D.Ill.1974, 391 F.Supp. 452. Courts 508(7)

In proper case, where state statute in question is either patently unconstitutional on its face, or is being applied in bad faith attempt to discourage constitutionally protected activities, particularly where U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 rights are involved, federal court should be available to fully vindicate rights of citizens by injunction. Gardner v. Ceci, E.D.Wis.1970, 312 F.Supp. 516. Courts 508(1)

Special circumstances requiring injunctive relief may be present even absent bad faith enforcement of a constitutionally objectionable statute if U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 rights are at stake. Original Fayette County Civic & Welfare League, Inc. v. Ellington, W.D.Tenn.1970, 309 F.Supp. 89. Federal Courts 176

5632. ---- Balancing of equities, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Even if city board of elections had sought stay, pending appeal, of district court judgment in the first instance in the district court, stay of judgment directing board to place candidate's name on ballot would still not be granted; alleged irreparable injury suffered by board was product of board's own delay in seeking stay six days before election, candidate would have been substantially injured by having his name removed from ballot, and public's interest in having candidate as additional choice on ballot clearly outweighed any interest board may have had in removing candidate's name days before election. Hirschfeld v. Board of Elections in City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 984 F.2d 35. Federal Courts 686

Balance of hardships tipped decidedly in the favor of professor who was suspended without pay for refusing to undergo psychiatric examination, as required for professor to be entitled, on her class-of-one equal protection claim under §§ 1983 against university administrators, to preliminary injunction to prevent administrators from requiring her to undergo psychiatric examination in order to keep her position; professor was barred from teaching, had no access to university services, and was receiving no wages or benefits, including health insurance, while university had other options available to address its issues with professor's unprofessional conduct, short of requiring a psychiatric examination. Appel v. Spiridon, D.Conn.2006, 2006 WL 3479414.

Fact that prison inmate was facing death did not automatically ensure that balance of hardships favored issuance of temporary restraining order barring execution until inmate received further medical attention allegedly needed to ensure his full participation in clemency proceeding. Allen v. Hickman, N.D.Cal.2005, 407 F.Supp.2d 1098. Civil Rights 1457(5)

An asbestos manufacturer was not entitled to a preliminary injunction to prevent consolidated state court asbestos cases from going forward; the balance of hardships clearly weighed in favor of the state of Maryland, whose judicial system would be swamped by 9,000 pending asbestos cases, and the manufacturer was unlikely to succeed on the merits of its federal civil rights claim that its due process rights would be violated by the consolidation in light of established principles of federalism requiring a respect for state court judicial proceedings. Owens-Illinois, Inc. v. Levin, D.Md.1992, 792 F.Supp. 429. Courts 508(2.1)

Interests of female student, who wished to participate on boys' golf team, as to an opportunity to enhance her reputation and to instruction afforded by coaching staff outweighed state's interest in not allowing her to participate because of enforcement of rules unfettered by student attacks and financial savings so as to entitle the student to preliminary injunction enjoining interschool activities association and various school officials from prohibiting her from participating on the team. Reed v. Nebraska School Activities Ass'n, D.C.Neb.1972, 341 F.Supp. 258. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy which should be issued only upon a clear showing of probable success and possible irreparable injury to the moving party; however, burden of showing probable success is less where the balance of hardships weighs decidedly more heavily upon party requesting the temporary relief. Smoake v. Fritz, S.D.N.Y.1970, 320 F.Supp. 609. Injunction 132; Injunction 147

Prisoner was not entitled to injunctive relief against prison warden whom he claimed violated his Eighth Amendment right to be free from inhumane conditions of confinement by exposing him to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) after placing him in cell with inmate who allegedly smoked 20 cigarettes a day; there was no evidence that at time suit was filed warden had knowingly and unreasonably disregarded an intolerable risk of harm and would continue to do so, and prisoner's claim was moot because he was transferred to a different cell. Washington v. Davis, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 1873272, Unreported, affirmed 76 Fed.Appx. 147, 2003 WL 22170675. Civil Rights 1454; Injunction 22

Impermanent injury to community's appearance by alleged failure to remove political signs after election was less injurious than candidate's irreparable injury of not being allowed to utilize political signs prior to election, in context of application for temporary restraining order in § 1983 lawsuit brought by candidate for elective office alleging violation of his right to free speech. Lawless v. Lower Providence Township, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 31356304, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(7)

5633. ---- Conflicting judicial decisions, considerations governing, injunctive relief

In light of conflicting judicial decisions on the subject, without decisions by the sixth circuit or the Supreme Court, county jail inmates were not entitled to a preliminary injunction with regard to the establishment of a law library by jail authorities. Tate v. Kassulke, W.D.Ky.1975, 409 F.Supp. 651. Injunction 138.21

5634. ---- Continuing deprivation of rights, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Even in face of ongoing unconstitutional conduct on part of state law enforcement officers, injunction may not be issued to halt that conduct absent great and immediate threat that named plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury for which there would be inadequate remedy at law. Nava v. City of Dublin, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 121 F.3d 453. Civil Rights 1454

Inmate who filed civil rights action was not entitled to injunctive relief against prison officials who were allegedly continuing to retaliate against him for filing the action, absent any evidence in the record showing that inmate requested injunction on that basis, or that retaliation, abusive behavior or racially derogatory remarks were continuing. Green v. Johnson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 977 F.2d 1383. Civil Rights 1454

In the absence of ongoing constitutional violation of rights of Muslim inmates, there was no basis for entry of injunctive relief, especially for injunctive relief which transcended that which the court had erroneously found or which was statewide in nature. Al-Alamin v. Gramley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 926 F.2d 680. Injunction 11

In order to obtain injunctive or declaratory relief against public officials, there must be some indication that they intend to continue the unconstitutional practices alleged in the complaint. Tara Enterprises, Inc. v. Humble, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1980, 622 F.2d 400. Civil Rights 1450; Declaratory Judgment 201

State prisoner's request, in action brought under this section for injunctive relief could not be granted in absence of showing that he was presently suffering deprivation of any rights which he asserted. U.S. ex rel. Tyrrell v. Speaker, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1973, 471 F.2d 1197, on remand 394 F.Supp. 9. Prisons 13(3)

Although successors to state prison officials instituted new policies to ensure safety of inmates from other inmates, action for injunctive and declaratory relief by inmates was not moot, absent showing by officials that there was no reasonable expectation that successors would not continue to fail to protect inmates in violation of the Eighth Amendment. Skinner v. Uphoff, D.Wyo.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 1208. Declaratory Judgment 84

Prison inmate who brought §§ 1983 action against corrections officials, alleging that constant illumination in his cell in security housing unit (SHU) constituted cruel and unusual punishment, was not entitled to preliminary injunction against illumination; not only did inmate fail to establish objective component of deliberate indifference standard, i.e. that illumination gravely affected his sleep, but balance of harms was in favor of officials, since there was evidence establishing security purpose for illumination. Wills v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 1226. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Foster parent's failure to re-initiate administrative process for reviewing finding of Department of Children and Families (DCF) that foster parent abused foster child precluded court from considering foster parent's § 1983 claim for injunctive relief premised on alleged violations of his procedural due process rights; although foster parent claimed that he sought to appeal through administrative process and that DCF officials stayed the process pending criminal proceedings, foster parent had notice that he could reinstate process. Carroll v. Ragaglia, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 324, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 109 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 2165397. Civil Rights 1321

Virgin Islands property taxpayers did not have adequate remedy at law as required to support injunction to prohibit Tax Assessor from continuing to deprive them of their federal statutory right to have real property assessed at its actual value, since Assessor violated federal statute, remedy of money damages was not available in Section 1983 suit against Virgin Islands, no remedy at law would adequately redress the continuing cycle of litigation and/or continuing unlawful assessments, and plaintiffs would suffer continuing harm absent injunction, due to Assessor's refusal to acknowledge that present system of assessment did not produce credible and reliable appraisals of actual value of real property; appeal to Tax Review Board was a non-exclusive option available to aggrieved taxpayer, but it was a futile option that did not constitute an adequate remedy at law, since Tax Review Board had consistently demonstrated it was incapable of timely resolving tax appeals. Berne Corp. v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.Virgin Islands 2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 540, modified 276 F.Supp.2d 435, affirmed 105 Fed.Appx. 324, 2004 WL 1443889, opinion clarified 313 F.Supp.2d 522. Taxation 2712

Prisoner seeking permanent injunction requiring Michigan Department of Corrections to refrain from due process violations in deciding issues prior to hearings failed to state claim for relief, given failure to establish required constitutional deprivation in first instance. Spruytte v. Govorchin, W.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1094. Civil Rights 1454

There was no basis for federal district court's taking the extraordinary step of issuing an injunction to require Connecticut state court to hear attorney's appeal from legal malpractice judgment entered against him in state court since no continuing wrong existed; alleged violation of attorney's rights was a singular and arguably unique one, court reporter's alleged negligence in failing to file attorney's certifications with the court, nothing was alleged that would prevent attorney from appealing order dismissing his appeal by certification to Connecticut Supreme Court or, thereafter, to United States Supreme Court, nothing barred attorney from pursuing his tort claims against reporter in state court or under § 1983 in a federal forum and no potential plaintiffs would be deterred by failure of attorney's prayer for injunctive relief. Presnick v. Santoro, D.Conn.1993, 832 F.Supp. 521. Injunction 32

5635. ---- Federalism, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Principles of federalism may prevent injunction, by federal court, of state civil proceeding once begun. Rizzo v. Goode, U.S.Pa.1976, 96 S.Ct. 598, 423 U.S. 362, 46 L.Ed.2d 561. Courts 508(2.1)

Federal court could grant injunctive relief under Civil Rights Act to compel state court judges to comply with federal district court's declaratory judgment, which held that denial of appellate counsel to indigents who had pled guilty or nolo contendere was unconstitutional; such relief was available pursuant to civil rights statute once declaratory decree had been violated, and Declaratory Judgment Act also allowed federal court to grant further necessary or proper relief based on declaratory judgment against party whose rights had been determined by judgment. Tesmer v. Kowalski, E.D.Mich.2000, 114 F.Supp.2d 622, vacated 295 F.3d 536, rehearing granted, judgment withdrawn 307 F.3d 459, on rehearing 333 F.3d 683, certiorari granted 124 S.Ct. 1144, 540 U.S. 1148, 157 L.Ed.2d 1041, reversed and remanded 125 S.Ct. 564, 543 U.S. 125, 160 L.Ed.2d 519. Civil Rights 1454; Declaratory Judgment 274.1

When federal rights are asserted against state employees sued in their official capacities, Eleventh Amendment prohibits claims for retrospective monetary relief paid from state treasury, but not prospective equitable relief. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Federal Courts 269; Federal Courts 272

When injunction against state criminal proceeding is sought under § 1983, principles of equity, comity, and federalism must restrain federal court. Kelly v. Intermountain Planned Parenthood, Inc., D.Mont.1992, 828 F.Supp. 788. Courts 508(7)

The power of a federal court under this section to enjoin state proceedings is not to be used to upset federalism and centralize power. Fisher v. Federal Nat. Mortg. Ass'n, D.C.Md.1973, 360 F.Supp. 207. Courts 508(1)

5636. ---- Harassment, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Under "harassment" exception to general rule precluding federal court from issuing injunction restraining enforcement of challenged state statute while state criminal proceedings are pending under such statute against federal plaintiff, more than a mere allegation and more than a conclusory finding are required, and a finding of sufficient harassment must be supported by specific evidence from which it can be inferred that state officials had been enforcing the statute against the plaintiff in bad faith and for purposes of harassment. Grandco Corp. v. Rochford, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 536 F.2d 197. Courts 508(7)

Where simple battery prosecution was being maintained by state attorney in bad faith and for purposes of harassment, there was no legitimate state interest in reprosecution of accused, reprosecution would deter and suppress exercise of federal secured rights by Negroes in parish, and no statutory bar to injunctive relief appeared, accused was entitled to order restraining reprosecution. Duncan v. Perez, C.A.5 (La.) 1971, 445 F.2d 557, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 282, 404 U.S. 940, 30 L.Ed.2d 254. Courts 508(7)

Injunction issued in civil rights action enjoining defendants, who included sheriff and clerk of court, and all others acting in concert with them or under their instructions from trespassing on or destroying plaintiff's property, from harassing, disturbing and intimidating plaintiff and from encouraging others to do so, with injunction to remain in effect until legal ownership of property was determined in pending state court proceedings. Gaulter v. Capdeboscq, E.D.La.1975, 404 F.Supp. 900, injunction dissolved 423 F.Supp. 823, affirmed in part on other grounds 594 F.2d 127. Civil Rights 1454

5637. ---- Hardship on defendant, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Where it was apparent that police academy cadet class would suffer injury by grant of injunction, any claimed irreparable harm by allegedly discriminatory exclusion of the plaintiffs from the class did not require granting of temporary injunctive relief. Oburn v. Shapp, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 521 F.2d 142. Civil Rights 1568

Personal injury law firm was entitled to preliminary injunction precluding state bar from initiating disciplinary proceedings for use of specified advertisements stating that three members were named in book purporting to list best lawyers in country; hardship to firm if injunction were not granted was substantially greater than any harm to bar, firm was likely to succeed on merits of claim that advertisements were commercial speech protected by First Amendment, and injunction furthered public interest in being able to obtain accurate information about lawyers. Allen, Allen, Allen & Allen v. Williams, E.D.Va.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 614. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Prisoner was not entitled to interim injunctive relief in civil rights damages action based on mere speculation that defendants might hide or transfer assets during pendency of case. Osuch v. Gregory, D.Conn.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Issuance of permanent injunction requiring township to provide actual notice and opportunity for mobile home tenants to be heard at hearing on whether the mobile homes violated township zoning ordinance would not harm the township so as to bar issuance of the injunction; issuance of the injunction would not mean that the township could not enforce the ordinance or eventually collect fines from landlord. Ruiz v. New Garden Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 418, reversed 376 F.3d 203. Civil Rights 1453

Balance of hardship weighed in favor of territorial employees who were terminated by newly-elected governor after occupying highly visible positions in election campaign of governor's opponent, for purposes of determining whether employees were entitled to preliminary injunction in § 1983 action; governor failed to allege any hardship should employees be reinstated to their former positions, and employees testified as to their difficulty in finding steady employment and in making ends meet. Olmeda v. Schneider, D.Virgin Islands 1995, 889 F.Supp. 228. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Enforcement of police department rules which had been applied so as to require policeman to generally remain in his apartment while on sick leave would be preliminarily enjoined to the extent that, on 24 hours' advance notice, policeman would be allowed to visit his attorney and doctor when necessary and to visit his children during periods permitted by state court order, since the injunction order would impose no great hardship on the police department. Gissi v. Codd, E.D.N.Y.1974, 391 F.Supp. 1333. Injunction 138.69

5638. ---- Irreparable injury, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Though action was brought under this section, plaintiffs were required to show irreparable injury as prerequisite for obtaining injunctive relief. Allee v. Medrano, U.S.Tex.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2191, 416 U.S. 802, 40 L.Ed.2d 566. Civil Rights 1457(1)

Plaintiff who had been seized pursuant to search warrant that was based in part on inclusion of race component in rape suspect profile was not entitled to injunctive or declaratory relief under § 1983; since plaintiff had been released from custody and eventually eliminated from list of suspects, he could not show either continuing wrong or real or immediate threat that he would likely be irreparably injured by use of race component. Simmons v. Poe, C.A.4 (Va.) 1995, 47 F.3d 1370. Civil Rights 1454; Declaratory Judgment 84

Employer would suffer "irreparable harm" if police were not enjoined from relying on exception to West Virginia trespass statute to refuse to enforce statute against striking workers who, by forming picket line across company bridge, had virtually shut employer down; employer's ability to bring other judicial remedies against union did not diminish its showing of irreparable harm, especially given its inability to obtain damages from the state in action under civil rights statute. Rum Creek Coal Sales, Inc. v. Caperton, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1991, 926 F.2d 353, on remand. Injunction 138.48

High school student was being irreparably harmed by allegedly improper expulsion, for purpose of obtaining preliminary injunctive relief; student's loss of right to free public education was not accurately measurable or adequately compensable by money damages. Johnson v. Collins, D.N.H.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 241. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Medicaid beneficiaries, seeking preliminary injunction, preventing immediate termination of their Medicaid benefits to satisfy state budget cuts, pending trial on merits of § 1983 suit, would be irreparably harmed, absent injunction. Rabin v. Wilson-Coker, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 332, reversed 362 F.3d 190. Injunction 138.66

Death row inmate was not likely to suffer irreparable harm as result of any defects in state's lethal injection protocol, and thus inmate was not entitled to preliminary injunction pending resolution of his §§ 1983 action challenging protocol's constitutionality, where it was highly unlikely that inmate would be conscious and able to feel pain during administration of chemicals, inmate was dilatory in seeking relief, inmate was not likely to succeed on merits, and society's interest in retribution for criminal activity would erode rapidly if patently dilatory suits were permitted to derail administration of justice. Lenz v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 785. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Inmate who sued correctional officials and employees under §§ 1983 failed to demonstrate immediate and irreparable injury, as required to obtain preliminary injunctive relief from purported physical abuse by employee; although inmate alleged past injury in complaint, he neither alleged nor demonstrated that any serious injuries were imminent, and inmate and employee at issue were not be in proximity with each other. Lyons v. Wall, D.R.I.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 245. Civil Rights 1457(5)

District Court was not required, in civil rights suit under §§ 1983, to preliminarily enjoin criminal proceeding in Puerto Rico court against arrestee, to prevent an immediate irreparable injury, where only injury defendant had shown was the hardship of defending against pending criminal prosecution, and each alleged threat to arrestee's federally protected rights could be raised, and, if the claims were meritorious, eliminated by his defense of the pending criminal prosecution. Olson v. Fajardo-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 32. Courts 508(7)

Parents and high school student who was suspended for creating online parody profile of principal, who were seeking temporary restraining order (TRO) against further discipline, had not demonstrated that they would suffer irreparable harm if temporary restraining order (TRO) was not issued; court was unable to conclude that violations of plaintiffs' constitutional rights had occurred or were occurring, and while student's placement in Alternative Curriculum Education Program was not academically ideal, it was not so onerous that harm to student would truly be irreparable. Layshock ex rel. Layshock v. Hermitage School Dist., W.D.Pa.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 502. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Possibility of irreparable harm did not warrant granting of temporary restraining order (TRO) in action brought by prospective exhibitors against county agricultural society, stemming from ban of livestock at county fair following positive test for prohibited substance, since exhibitors did not substantially demonstrate constitutional violation from challenged action. Farmer v. Pike County Agr. Society, S.D.Ohio 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 838. Civil Rights 1457(7)

State prisoner and his attorney-friend demonstrated irreparable injury under alternative preliminary injunction test, in lawsuit under §§ 1983, where they alleged injury to their First Amendment and other constitutional rights from prison officials' blanket prohibition of all legal mail perceived by officials as not directly pertaining to prisoner's case; First Amendment rights of both writer and intended reader were impinged when correspondence was censored by prison officials. Evans v. Vare, D.Nev.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 1188. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Irreparable harm requirement for preliminary injunction was unmet in teachers' union's and school counselor's §§

1983 due process and equal protection action against school district, on behalf of themselves and district's female students, seeking to enjoin implementation of district's policy generally requiring parental notification of students' pregnancies; superintendent, the ultimate arbiter of whether to notify parents, testified that he would exercise his discretion as to whether to notify if made aware of abuse or other countervailing considerations, and there was possibility of irreparable harm to district if injunction was granted given district's potential liability if parents were not notified and injury to student occurred. Port Washington Teachers' Ass'n v. Board of Educ. of Port Washington Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2005, 361 F.Supp.2d 69. Civil Rights 1457(3); Civil Rights 1457(6)

State trooper was entitled to preliminary injunction prohibiting State Police supervisors from enforcing oral directives not to speak to press about matters of public concern in a manner inconsistent with the First Amendment; trooper suffered irreparable harm because his right to speak under the First Amendment had been chilled, and trooper was likely to succeed on the merits of his First Amendment claim. Lauretano v. Spada, D.Conn.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 391. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Owner of gasoline station's underground storage tanks did not satisfy requirements for preliminary injunction against proceedings by Puerto Rico Environmental Quality Board on order to show cause why owner should not be fined approximately $76,000,000 in connection with environmental contamination at station, even though it appeared substantially likely that owner would prevail on claim alleging procedural due process violations, given owner's inability to show irreparable harm in light of proceedings' ongoing status and availability of relief through state judicial review process, adverse impact that injunction would have for board in its role as administrative agency, and adverse impact that injunction could have on public interest in protecting environment and natural resources by depriving board of its power to remedy contamination at station. ESSO Standard Oil Co. (Puerto Rico) v. Mujica Cotto, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 110, affirmed 389 F.3d 212. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Entertainers' loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, constituted "irreparable injury," for purpose of motion by municipality in lawsuit under § 1983 to set aside preliminary and permanent injunction regarding entertainers' use of municipal theater to perform show, although show could have been produced at later date and entertainers did not demonstrate that they would have incurred any financial costs as result of cancellation. Producciones Gran Escenario, Inc. v. Ruiz, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 440. Civil Rights 1451; Civil Rights 1457(2)

Voters and incumbent candidate who ran for reelection to position of town supervisor sufficiently demonstrated that they would suffer irreparable harm to right to vote absent a preliminary injunction preventing elections board from certifying opponent as winner in town election, as required to support claim for preliminary injunctive relief under § 1983 based on claim that malfunctioning voting machines miscounted votes and improperly resulted in election of opponent; under state law the board of elections had no option but to certify opponent the winner despite evidence that incumbent was clear winner, opponent rather than incumbent would govern despite fact incumbent won election, and voters' governance by candidate they did not elect would violate fundamental right to vote for which there otherwise was no recourse. Shannon v. Jacobowitz, N.D.N.Y.2003, 301 F.Supp.2d 249. Injunction 138.51

State judges who were running for reelection to serve partial terms were entitled to temporary restraining order to enjoin state officials from placing their names on ballots in manner other than "yes or no" retention ballot, in § 1983 civil rights action in which judges alleged that failure to afford them such reelection ballots violated their rights to due process; fact that requirement that judges undergo judicial evaluation to warrant retention ballots only applied to judges seeking to serve full terms indicated that judges had strong likelihood of succeeding on merits, fact that judges would be denied constitutional guarantees established that irreparable harm would occur in absence of relief, and affording relief would further public policy of insulating judges from political activity. Lillard v. Burson, W.D.Tenn.1996, 933 F.Supp. 698. Civil Rights 1457(7)

University professor and an untenured lecturer did not show irreparable harm necessary for issuance of preliminary injunction in § 1983 action in which they claimed that university retaliated against them for exercising First Amendment rights by speaking out on alleged discrepancy in treatment of male and female students in sports programs as preliminary injunction would do nothing to abate chilling effect of alleged actions of university. Meadows v. State University of New York at Oswego, N.D.N.Y.1993, 832 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Employee who alleged that he was transferred from one job position to another in violation of his First Amendment rights was not entitled to a preliminary injunction returning him to his former position absent showing that any irreparable harm, including chilling of First Amendment rights, had occurred or would occur; threatened job transfer for exercise of right to free speech was not direct infringement on First Amendment right. Costello v. McEnery, S.D.N.Y.1991, 767 F.Supp. 72, affirmed 948 F.2d 1278, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 2957, 504 U.S. 980, 119 L.Ed.2d 579. Injunction 138.69

Inmate in segregation unit who sought preliminary injunction directing that he be allowed to have plastic rosary and extended visits with priest failed to establish possibility of irreparable injury due to prison prohibiting his possession of rosary or that balance of hardships tipped in his favor sufficient to warrant issuance of a preliminary injunction; rosary and extended visits with Catholic priest were not essential elements of religion and could be withheld from inmate in disciplinary segregation unit, even though provided to inmates in general population. McClaflin v. Pearce, D.Or.1990, 739 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1457(5); Prisons 4(14)

In order to obtain injunctive relief, inmate who alleged abuse by a sheriff during pretrial detention must show that he would suffer irreparable injury with no adequate remedy at law. Martin v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1191. Civil Rights 1454

Physician, bringing civil rights action against employer hospital, was entitled to preliminary injunction requiring hospital immediately to process physician's application to become attending physician in division of pulmonary medicine and restraining hospital from taking any further action to eliminate that position; physician demonstrated the threat of irreparable injury and established sufficient likelihood of success on the merits of claim that his application had not been processed and position was being eliminated as result of his exercising First Amendment rights by participating in protests over various hospital policies, notwithstanding hospital's claim that budgetary considerations provided independent permissible grounds for actions. Cohen v. Cook County, Ill., N.D.Ill.1988, 677 F.Supp. 547. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Where deprivations of First Amendment freedoms are involved, irreparable injury is presumed for purpose of determining appropriateness of injunctive relief under § 1983. Donrey Media Group v. Ikeda, D.Hawai'i 1996, 959 F.Supp. 1280. Civil Rights 1450

Federal court should not issue injunction unless there is both irreparable injury and lack of adequate remedy at law; if injury cannot be adequately remedied at law, because damages would be either inadequate or unascertainable, injury is generally held irreparable. International Ass'n of Firefighters, Local 2069 v. City of Sylacauga, N.D.Ala.1977, 436 F.Supp. 482. Injunction 14; Injunction 16; Injunction 17

Plaintiffs on motion for preliminary injunction must demonstrate likelihood of immediate, irreparable harm flowing from defendants' proposed conduct. Einhorn v. Maus, E.D.Pa.1969, 300 F.Supp. 1169. Injunction 147

Bureau of Prisons (BOP) and employees of both the BOP and state penitentiary to cease assaulting inmate, to avoid contact with inmate pending an investigation, to identify all prison staff involved in alleged assault on inmate, to place inmate in protective custody, to preserve videotape of alleged assault, and to provide inmate with access to administrative remedies, in § 1983 action for, among other things, alleged forcible interviews and corrupt administrative remedy system. Neal v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 76 Fed.Appx. 543, 2003 WL 22120976, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Possibility existed that ordinance restricting use of political signs would cause irreparable injury to candidate for elective office, in context of application for temporary restraining order in § 1983 lawsuit alleging violation of candidate's right to free speech, since inability to post signs bearing candidate's name could have impaired his ability to successfully compete in election. Lawless v. Lower Providence Township, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 31356304, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Loss of readership and patronage that billboard owner allegedly would suffer if denied preliminary injunction barring enforcement of town ordinance banning owner's billboards did not establish irreparable harm supporting preliminary injunctive relief, inasmuch as reasonable figure could be calculated to reflect any loss of revenue due to loss of billboards. Richards "Of Course", Inc. v. Town of DeWitt, N.D.N.Y.1985, 1985 WL 669278, Unreported. Injunction 138.48

5639. ---- Likelihood of repetition, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Class of juveniles who had been subjected to partial strip searches upon admission to juvenile detention facility lacked standing in §§ 1983 action to seek injunctive relief with respect to future searches, where allegations of complaint related entirely to past conduct, and there was no assertion that juveniles expected to commit additional minor offenses or were likely to be detained at facility. Smook v. Minnehaha County, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2006, 457 F.3d 806. Civil Rights 1331(4)

Inmate who prevailed in § 1983 suit claiming that his Eighth Amendment rights were violated by prison officials who permitted him to be homosexually raped by other inmates did not establish entitlement to injunctive relief, where inmate did not show substantial likelihood that unconstitutional practices he complained about at trial would recur or affect him in the future; injunctive relief which plaintiff requested would only benefit other inmates, particularly new inmates. Butler v. Dowd, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 979 F.2d 661, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2395, 508 U.S. 930, 124 L.Ed.2d 297. Civil Rights 1454; Injunction 22

Arrestee was not entitled to injunction barring further enforcement of North Carolina Department of Revenue Controlled Substance Tax Division's assessment of controlled substance tax, penalty, and interest following his arrest while in possession of crack cocaine and cash, where questionable constitutionality of drug tax assessments and fact that arrestee would be incarcerated for extended period of time made future enforcement of assessment extremely remote possibility. Williams v. Starling, M.D.N.C.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 607. Taxation 3712

State inmate's motion seeking injunctive relief based on alleged wrongful conduct at two correctional facilities would be dismissed as moot in inmate's § 1983 action; inmate had been transferred to at least two different correctional facilities since he filed motion and failed to show demonstrated probability that he was likely to be retransferred and subject to same alleged conduct. Klos v. Haskell, W.D.N.Y.1993, 835 F.Supp. 710, affirmed 48 F.3d 81. Federal Civil Procedure 1741

Prisoner who stated § 1983 claim for violation of civil rights based on denial of request to call witnesses at disciplinary hearing was potentially entitled to relief only to the extent that his "booking" and determination that he committed infraction charged be quashed and expunged; other injunctive and declaratory relief sought was inappropriate, since there were no allegations that deprivations were likely to recur. Morgan v. Ellerthorpe, D.R.I.1992, 785 F.Supp. 295. Civil Rights 1454; Declaratory Judgment 204

Juvenile who alleged that he was deprived of his constitutional rights while incarcerated in a county jail for alleged unauthorized use of motor vehicle was not entitled to injunctive relief against county from future conduct absent any likelihood of reincarceration; juvenile relied exclusively on past wrong to suggest threat of future harm and thus could not be granted standing. Grenier By and Through Grenier on Behalf of Grenier v. Kennebec County, Me., D.Me.1990, 748 F.Supp. 908. Civil Rights 1454

Prison officials' inadequate response to tuberculosis epidemic, as evidenced by instances of substandard care and lack of administrative organization, even if violative of inmates' Eighth Amendment rights, did not warrant injunctive relief in that, since initiation of litigation, officials had significantly remedied deficiencies to point where medical care and tuberculosis control were not inconsistent with contemporary standards of decency, and there was no evidence that past problems were likely to recur unless enjoined. DeGidio v. Pung, D.Minn.1989, 704 F.Supp. 922, affirmed 920 F.2d 525. Civil Rights 1455

Prison inmate who brought § 1983 action alleging a violation of his right of access to courts by officials at facility in which he was being held, but who was transferred to another facility by time his claim was heard, was not entitled to grant of injunctive relief. Brooks v. Terry, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 208 F.3d 217, Unreported. Civil Rights 1454

5640. ---- Likelihood of success, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Professionals subject to Kansas statute requiring doctors, teachers, and others to notify state government of suspected injury to minor resulting from sexual abuse did not establish substantial likelihood of success on the merits of §§ 1983 claim alleging that statute violated their minor patients' and clients' constitutional rights to informational privacy in seeking preliminary injunction against enforcement of statute in the context of voluntary sex between minors of similar ages, given that unchallenged state law criminalized all sexual conduct with minors, such that patients and clients likely had no privacy right in their sexual activity, and given professionals' failure to show, in light of state's interests in enforcing its criminal laws, protecting minors, and promoting public health, that balance between asserted privacy rights and state's interests was substantially likely to weigh in their favor. Aid for Women v. Foulston, C.A.10 2006, 441 F.3d 1101, on remand 427 F.Supp.2d 1093. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Parents of student suffering from attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), who sought preliminary injunction against school district requiring district to administer student's school time doses of Ritalin (methylphenidate hydrochloride), failed to establish likelihood of success on merits of their substantive claims against school district under § 1983; parents produced no evidence that their right to determine care of their child extended to district's administration of medication to him or that district violated this right or violated due process by refusing to administer his medication. Davis v. Francis Howell School Dist., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1997, 104 F.3d 204. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Child care worker who used marijuana during her pregnancy lacked standing to seek injunctive relief preventing Child Protective Services from taking any action against her or informing any federal, state, or local agency of her drug use, absent proof that agency intended to report her as child abuser to any federal, state, or local agency, that agency had actually done so, or that any federal, state, or local agency had any record on her other than original investigation. Kruse v. State of Hawai'i, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1995, 68 F.3d 331. Injunction 114(2)

State corrections officer was not entitled to preliminary injunction against enforcement of regulation requiring corrections officers to wear an American flag patch on their uniform; officer did not show reasonable likelihood of success on merits with respect to his compelled expression claim under the First Amendment, as he did not make necessary threshold showing that mere act of wearing a uniform with a flag patch on it constituted expressive or communicative "use" of the flag. Troster v. Pennsylvania State Dept. of Corrections, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1995, 65 F.3d 1086, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 708, 516 U.S. 1047, 133 L.Ed.2d 663. Injunction 138.69

Inmate bringing Eighth Amendment challenge to conditions of his confinement in strip cell failed to show that prison officials knowingly disregarded, were disregarding, and would continue to disregard objectively intolerable risk of harm to his health or safety, as required to prevail on claim for injunctive relief; while inmate did not have any clothing or bedding, he was given three meals per day, including milk, and was sheltered from elements. Williams v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 49 F.3d 442. Sentencing And Punishment 1553

Substantial likelihood of success on the merits was one of conditions that public housing tenants had to satisfy to justify preliminary injunction in tenants' class action against city housing authority and its executive director, requesting declaratory and injunctive relief and damages under § 1983, arising from continued tenancy requirement, in conversion of housing from central to individual electric metering, that tenants pay electric utility deposit and any prior nonpublic-housing utility arrearage. Crochet v. Housing Authority of City of Tampa, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1994, 37 F.3d 607. Injunction 138.31

Homeless persons failed to establish likelihood of prevailing on merits of claim that city had formal policy to expel them from city or deprive them of their constitutional rights and, thus, were not entitled to preliminary injunction preventing city, its agents, and its employees from implementing such a policy; city councilman may have made statements to media that homeless persons who did not work and contribute to community should be shown city limits, but there was no showing that councilman was city's principal policymaker or its final policymaker with respect to the homeless, existence of formal policy to remove homeless was belied by testimony of city police officer and homeless advocate, and although city may have removed homeless from under bridges and overpasses, the Constitution did not confer right to trespass on public lands. Church v. City of Huntsville, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1332. Civil Rights 1456

Texas Catastrophe Property Insurance Association (CATPOOL) established substantial likelihood of success on merits of its claim that Texas statute requiring it to be represented by Texas Attorney General violated its constitutional right to be represented by counsel of its choice in civil actions, warranting preliminary injunctive relief in CATPOOL's civil rights action challenging statute. Texas Catastrophe Property Ins. Ass'n v. Morales, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 975 F.2d 1178, rehearing denied 980 F.2d 1442, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1815, 507 U.S. 1018, 123 L.Ed.2d 446. Civil Rights 1457(7)

White-owned road construction company was entitled to preliminary injunction on equal protection grounds to prevent enforcement of minority-owned business set-aside requirement of a District of Columbia Minority Contracting Act in light of strong showing of likelihood of prevailing on merits, plaintiff would have little hope of obtaining adequate compensation or relief and would sustain irreparable injury if relief were not granted, and balance of hardships favored plaintiff since it sought forward-looking injunction only which would not upset contractual relations already in place. O'Donnell Const. Co. v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1992, 963 F.2d 420, 295 U.S.App.D.C. 317, on remand. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Village was properly preliminarily enjoined from enforcing ordinance that required fingerprinting of prospective door-to-door solicitors, given demonstrated likelihood of success on merits of claim that fingerprinting requirement unnecessarily impeded First Amendment freedom of speech and served little or no legitimate governmental purpose. National People's Action v. Village of Wilmette, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 914 F.2d 1008, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1311, 499 U.S. 921, 113 L.Ed.2d 245. Civil Rights 1457(7)

White foster parents whose black foster child was removed from their care solely on basis of race, were entitled to preliminary injunction requiring city to return child to their care; parents showed that they would probably succeed on their due process and equal protection claims, and expert testimony indicated that child was suffering from depression since he had been removed from parents' care and would be irreparably injured if relief requested was not granted. McLaughlin v. Pernsley, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 876 F.2d 308. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Prison inmates were entitled to preliminary injunction against implementation of changes in prison's legal assistance program on ground that inmates demonstrated likelihood of success on merits of claim that new plan did not provide reasonable alternative to old plan's provision for access to courts, that implementation of new plan would cause irreparable harm by offering inmates inadequate legal access and that in weighing all factors greater harm would accrue to inmates through implementation of plan. Valentine v. Beyer, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1988, 850 F.2d 951. Injunction 138.60

New Hampshire high school student whose expulsion was summarily reinstated upon alleged violation of readmission agreement was likely to prevail on due process deprivation claim, for purpose of obtaining preliminary injunctive relief; agreement contained no waiver of student's constitutional rights. Johnson v. Collins, D.N.H.2002, 233 F.Supp.2d 241. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Determination of whether public employee was likely to succeed on merits of his claim that he had been subjected to political discrimination depended on jury's weighing of parties' credibility, and thus issuance of preliminary injunction was not warranted in employee's §§ 1983 action. Lopez Quinonez v. Puerto Rico Nat. Guard, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 60. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Inmate in state correctional facility did not establish that he would likely prevail on his claims that corrections officials were deliberately indifferent to his medical needs in violation of Eighth Amendment, that he was improperly transferred to another facility in retaliation for his ongoing legal claims, and that he was denied access to legal materials, and thus he was not entitled to a preliminary injunction addressing these matters; evidence suggested that inmate had received adequate medical care, there was no evidence of deliberate indifference, documentation suggested that inmate was transferred for non-retaliatory reasons, and inmate presently had access to legal materials. Niemic v. Maloney, D.Mass.2006, 448 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Preliminary injunction staying state inmate's execution was warranted in §§ 1983 action challenging Ohio's lethal injection protocol on Eighth Amendment grounds, inasmuch as inmate intervened in action immediately after his cause of action accrued and thus did not delay in seeking relief, mounting evidence called into question Ohio's lethal injection protocol and same or similar protocols of other states and inmate, at the least, demonstrated stronger likelihood of success on the merits than plaintiffs who preceded him, there was unacceptable risk that inmate could suffer unnecessary and excruciating pain while being executed, harm from injunction to state's interests would be minimal in light of both state's ability to correct protocol's flaws and delay in case due to state's interlocutory appeal, and injunctive relief served public interests. Cooey v. Taft, S.D.Ohio 2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 702.

Parents and high school student who was suspended for creating online parody profile of principal, who were seeking temporary restraining order (TRO) against further discipline, had not demonstrated reasonable probability of success on the merits of their constitutional challenge; student's actions appeared to have substantially disrupted school operations and interfered with rights of others which, along with student's apparent violation of school rules, provided sufficient legal basis for defendants' actions. Layshock ex rel. Layshock v. Hermitage School Dist., W.D.Pa.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 502. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Prospective exhibitors who sued county agricultural society, stemming from ban of livestock at county fair following positive test for prohibited substance, failed to establish strong likelihood of success on claim that ban violated their substantive due process rights, as required to obtain temporary restraining order (TRO); agricultural society's action to protect integrity of livestock competitions via ban did not shock conscience. Farmer v. Pike County Agr. Society, S.D.Ohio 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 838. Civil Rights 1457(7)

State prison inmate, scheduled for execution, did not establish likelihood of succeeding on merits or serious questions going to merits of his claim that officials violated his Eighth Amendment right to be free of cruel and unusual punishment, as required for injunctive relief, when inmate alleged that officials declined to provide treatment for various medical conditions, allegedly needed to enable him to adequately assist in preparation of clemency petition, and to develop claim of organic brain damage as grounds for clemency. Allen v. Hickman, N.D.Cal.2005, 407 F.Supp.2d 1098. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Death row inmate had no likelihood of success on claim that use of a cut-down procedure to gain access to his veins for his execution would violate the Eighth Amendment, and thus, was not entitled to preliminary injunction against such a technique, where warden testified that a cut-down procedure had not ever been used, was not authorized, and would not be employed in the execution of the inmate or any other inmate. Boyd v. Beck, E.D.N.C.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 879. Civil Rights 1457(5)

User of public library who was barred from using library's computers failed to establish the likelihood of irreparable harm or likelihood or success on the merits, as required for preliminary injunction forcing library to expunge his electronic library record and allow him unfettered access to library's internet computers during his §§ 1983 lawsuit against library which alleged that the ban violated his right to procedural due process. Miller v. Northwest Region Library Bd., M.D.N.C.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 563. Civil Rights 1457(2)

Voters were likely to prevail on merits of their claim that county elections board's refusal to tally their absentee ballots in special county legislative election violated their Fourteenth Amendment rights, and thus were entitled to preliminary injunction barring board from tallying ballots and certifying winners of elections without including contested absentee ballots, even though voters did not file new absentee ballot applications, as required by state law, where board had improperly sent ballots to voters as result of its erroneous interpretation of court order, voters submitted ballots in good faith, there was no allegation of fraud, and there were no challenges to absentee ballots until after rest of votes were tallied. Hoblock v. Albany County Bd. of Elections, N.D.N.Y.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 169, remanded 422 F.3d 77, on remand 233 F.R.D. 95. Injunction 138.51

Payday loan business did not show that it was likely that municipal ordinance, which required nighttime closing of payday loan stores, did not have rational basis, for purpose of its request for preliminary injunction in § 1983 lawsuit under equal protection clause of Fourteenth Amendment; although municipality allowed nighttime operation of automatic teller machines (ATM) and retailers who provided cash back from purchases, municipality could have rationally believed that ordinance would have helped reduce crime, nighttime traffic, and noise. Payday Loan Store of Wisconsin, Inc. v. City of Madison, W.D.Wis.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 1058. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Student, who sought preliminary injunction preventing city defendants from taking any adverse action against him for engaging in a fight with another student in response to hate-based harassment or threats, failed to demonstrate a likelihood of success of the merits on his claim for false arrest; police officer acted in response to a fight in the hall-ways of the school, arresting both students involved and charging them with disorderly conduct, and student was unable to demonstrate that the arrest was employed to restrain student from engaging in constitutionally protected conduct. Doe v. Perry Community School Dist., S.D.Iowa 2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 809. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Pub owners, who brought action challenging municipal ordinance prohibiting sale of alcoholic beverages from midnight to seven in the morning in certain areas of municipality as violative of their equal protection and due process rights, were not entitled to preliminary injunction to enjoin enforcement of ordinance; owners could not show likelihood of success on the merits, alleged damages were in the form of economic loss, and grant of injunction could have deleterious effect on public interest, since crime rate reportedly declined after implementation of ordinance. Broadwell v. Municipality of San Juan, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 132. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Licensees were entitled to preliminary relief restraining enforcement of orders of Puerto Rico Insurance Commissioner revoking their agents' and broker's licenses without pre-deprivation hearing; licensees were likely to prevail on merits of their due process claims, licensees risked irreparable injury from damage to their reputations, state did not show necessity of immediate revocation, and public interest would not be adversely affected by issuance of injunction. Guillemard Gionorio v. Contreras Gomez, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 301 F.Supp.2d 122, appeal dismissed 161 Fed.Appx. 24, 2005 WL 3382638. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Prisoner was entitled to preliminary injunction reinstating his release under state intensive supervision program (ISP) pending determination of his claim that his reincarceration was in retaliation for his exercising his protected First Amendment right to advocate legalization of marijuana; prisoner demonstrated likelihood of success on merits, absence of relief would result in irreparable harm in form of loss of liberty, state defendants would not suffer any irreparable harm, protecting constitutional right was in public interest, and risk to public was minimal, where prisoner would be under supervision and had not broken any laws while on prior release. Forchion v. Intensive Supervised Parole, D.N.J.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Adult entertainment establishment was not likely to succeed on its due process claims arising from revocation of license, as required to support establishment's action to enjoin enforcement of city ordinance; revocation of license was based on criminal activity, rather than prior restraint of First Amendment expression, ordinance furthered city's interest in curbing illegal activities at adult entertainment establishments, and ordinance was least restrictive means of furthering interests. Koziara v. City of Casselberry, M.D.Fla.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1245. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Parties to proposed merger, who would likely prevail on their contention that unconstitutional conditions were demanded and requested by the Secretary of Justice in order to approve the transaction, were entitled to preliminary injunction prohibiting further deprivation of rights; without a preliminary injunction, acquiring corporation would suffer irreparable harm in both economic and non-economic form, strong public interests favored the status quo, and the harm caused to Secretary by the issuance of a preliminary injunction was less considerable than the harm to the parties. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 395, remanded 322 F.3d 747, vacated. Injunction 138.42

Scienter requirements in Wisconsin act criminalizing performance of "partial-birth abortion" rendered vagueness challenge to act unlikely to succeed on its merits and supported denial of request for preliminary injunction in § 1983 action; act required that physician cause "death of the partially delivered child with the intent to kill the child," and expressly required that physician "intentionally performs a partial-birth abortion." Planned Parenthood of Wisconsin v. Doyle, W.D.Wis.1998, 9 F.Supp.2d 1033, reversed 162 F.3d 463, on remand 44 F.Supp.2d 975. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Plain meaning of Wisconsin act imposing civil and criminal liability for performance of "partial-birth abortion" refers only to intact dilation and extraction (D&E) procedure in which intact fetus is partially delivered into vagina, despite doctors' claims that act could reach other types of abortion procedures, which thus rendered vagueness challenge to act unlikely to succeed on its merits and supported denial of request for preliminary injunction in § 1983 action. Planned Parenthood of Wisconsin v. Doyle, W.D.Wis.1998, 9 F.Supp.2d 1033, reversed 162 F.3d 463, on remand 44 F.Supp.2d 975. Abortion And Birth Control 1.21; Civil Rights 1457(7)

For purposes of determining whether to grant heavy metal rock music band and concert promoters preliminary injunction prohibiting New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority (NJSEA) from preventing concert including band at stadium, band and promoters established likelihood of success on the merits of their § 1983 claim that Authority's prevention of concert constituted First Amendment free speech violation, even assuming that stadium was nonpublic forum; Authority's motivation appeared to be content-based rather than viewpoint-neutral, Authority put forth no evidence that its proffered safety concerns were legitimate rather than pretextual, and it appeared that Authority's requirement that all performers sign contract allowing Authority to regulate morality of concert programs might be unreasonable restriction on access. Marilyn Manson, Inc. v. New Jersey Sports & Exposition Authority, D.N.J.1997, 971 F.Supp. 875. Civil Rights 1457(7) success on merits of their § 1983 claim, thus mandating denial of their motion, where, although police officer was present at scene and verbally intervened to prevent physical violence, he did not assist in effectuating the repossession, and, consequently, no state action was involved. Barrett v. Harwood, N.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 744, affirmed 189 F.3d 297, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2719, 530 U.S. 1262, 147 L.Ed.2d 984. Injunction 138.37

Individual plaintiffs were not entitled to preliminary injunction, prohibiting city and city clerk from holding election for city officers unless ballot would include referendum calling for citizens' police review board, in plaintiffs' § 1983 civil rights action arising from denial of referendum petition as untimely filed and lacking requisite number of signatures; regardless of whether city charter or state statutory requirements applied, plaintiffs failed to demonstrate substantial likelihood of success on the merits, as challenge to petition validation procedures was little more than conjecture, and there appeared no risk of irreparable injury to plaintiffs, according to whom drive for police civilian review board would continue. Lee v. Smith, E.D.Tex.1996, 927 F.Supp. 205. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Producer of cable public access program failed to show that cable company's alleged violation of First and Fourteenth Amendments by curtailing program's cable cast dates to two per month occurred under color of state law and, therefore, failed to show likelihood of success on merits of §§ 1981 and 1983 claims or that balance of hardships tipped decidedly in her favor, for purposes of motion for preliminary injunction; it was at best unclear whether cable company acted under state law, producer merely offered conclusory allegation that cable company's decision to reduce dates occurred under color of state law because it was compelled or significantly encouraged by state officials, and cable company submitted affidavit of director of government and public affairs for cable company that she made decision to reschedule public access cablecast dates and was under no pressure from any public officials. Glendora v. Hostetter, S.D.N.Y.1996, 916 F.Supp. 1339, affirmed 104 F.3d 353, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1708, 520 U.S. 1217, 137 L.Ed.2d 833. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Residential squatters occupying apartments in buildings owned by city did not demonstrate reasonable likelihood of success or fair basis for litigation as required for preliminary injunction, in their § 1983 civil rights action against city mayor and commissioner of housing preservation and development, contending that city's prior acquiescence in squatters' otherwise illegal occupation created interest sufficient to entitle them to due process before their forcible removal; squatters had come forward with little evidence of city's acquiescence and toleration as to squatters' possession of apartments, and anecdotal evidence on public record, if anything, reflected determined effort by city to avoid legitimizing illegal squatting throughout city. Walls v. Giuliani, E.D.N.Y.1996, 916 F.Supp. 214. Civil Rights 1457(4)

African-American sidewalk vendors failed to establish likelihood of prevailing on merits of claim that implementation of ordinance regulating sidewalk vending violated their equal protection rights by reducing number of African-American sidewalk vendors and, thus, vendors were not entitled to preliminary injunction; there was no city policy to treat African-American sidewalk vendors differently because of their race, and disproportionate reduction in African-American vendors was not an obvious result of restriction of vending locations nor of methods used by city to notify vendors of application procedure. Lindsay v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1994, 844 F.Supp. 224. Civil Rights 1457(7)

State inmate failed to show probability of prevailing on merits of civil rights claim that he was denied access to legal materials, and accordingly, inmate was not entitled to temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction directing superintendent of prison to return legal materials which had been confiscated; security needs of disciplinary segregation unit in which inmate was housed justified significant restrictions on program for access to legal materials of inmates in segregation unit, and inmate did not point out any specific instance or manner in which restrictions prejudiced him. McClaflin v. Pearce, D.Or.1990, 739 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1457(5)

seizing or relocating coin-operated news boxes in airline passenger concourse area violated publishers' First Amendment rights and that publishers would be irreparably injured as a result; therefore, publishers were entitled to preliminary injunction restraining city and airline from seizing or relocating news boxes. Chicago Tribune Co. v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 705 F.Supp. 1345. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Preliminary injunction would not be issued requiring state prison to transport inmate to facility where magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) test could be performed on hand, prior to resolution of §§ 1983 suit against prison employees claiming level of medical treatment violated his federal rights; inmate failed to show likelihood of prevailing on merits of his treatment claim, and inmate would not be irreparably harmed by denial of injunction. Green v. Howard R. Young Correctional Institution, D.Del.2005, 229 F.R.D. 99. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Standard by which to judge likelihood of success was whether Aid for Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) recipients made showing that probability of their prevailing was better than 50% as opposed to a heightened level of scrutiny, namely a substantial likelihood of success, for purposes of obtaining preliminary injunction in § 1983 action alleging that New York City failed to process public assistance grants pursuant to AFDC program in a timely fashion; preliminary relief would not be complete because injunction sought by recipients would end if their claims ultimately proved to be unsuccessful and recipients sought more in the way of ultimate relief than they sought preliminarily. Brown v. Giuliani, E.D.N.Y.1994, 158 F.R.D. 251. Injunction 138.66

Lack of evidence concerning burden, e.g. cost, imposed on theater operators from complying with city ordinance requiring that off-duty police officer be part of theater's security team precluded preliminary injunction against enforcement of ordinance pending resolution of operators' §§1983 First Amendment action against city; operators' probability of success under applicable intermediate-scrutiny standard's "narrowly tailored" component could not be determined. Terminello v. City of Passaic, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 118 Fed.Appx. 577, 2004 WL 2850114, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(7)

State prisoner failed to show likelihood of success on merits of his claim that California's lethal injection protocol was cruel and unusual on ground that it would subject him to unreasonable risk of unnecessary pain, as would support temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction to prevent his execution pursuant to California's lethal injection protocol, in light of ample legal authority that lethal injection comported with current societal norms regarding execution. Cooper v. Rimmer, N.D.Cal.2004, 2004 WL 231325, Unreported, affirmed 379 F.3d 1029. Civil Rights 1457(5)

State prisoners who brought § 1983 claim against state Department of Corrections (DOC) officials, alleging that officials provided them with ill-fitting wheelchairs, in deliberate indifference to their medical needs, in violation of the Eighth Amendment, could not show substantial likelihood of success on the merits, barring issuance of preliminary injunction to enjoin officials from providing them with wheelchairs; physical therapist measured prisoners for wheelchairs, purchase request forms from prison had different specifications for wheelchairs ordered, and new wheelchairs were adjusted to particular needs of each prisoner. Johnson v. Newport Lorillard, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 169797, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(5)

High school student who was suspended for creating online parody profile of principal had not demonstrated that public interest favored issuance of temporary restraining order (TRO) against further discipline by school district and its officials; despite court's reservations regarding appropriateness of student's punishment, public interest was best served by allowing school officials to administer their high school and discipline their students as they determined. Layshock ex rel. Layshock v. Hermitage School Dist., W.D.Pa.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 502. Civil Rights 1457(3)

Considerations of public interest did not warrant granting of temporary restraining order (TRO) in action brought by prospective exhibitors against county agricultural society, stemming from ban of livestock at county fair following positive test for prohibited substance, since such interest was best served by deferring to society's efforts to ensure integrity of its livestock competitions. Farmer v. Pike County Agr. Society, S.D.Ohio 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 838. Injunction 150

Possibility of irreparable harm did not warrant granting of temporary restraining order (TRO) in action brought by prospective exhibitors against county agricultural society, stemming from ban of livestock at county fair following positive test for prohibited substance, since exhibitors did not substantially demonstrate constitutional violation from challenged action. Farmer v. Pike County Agr. Society, S.D.Ohio 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 838. Civil Rights 1457(7)

Public interest would best be served, as factor weighing in favor of issuance of permanent injunction requiring township to provide actual notice and opportunity for mobile home tenants to be heard at hearing on whether the mobile homes violated township zoning ordinance, by providing the tenants with notice and an opportunity to be heard before the board, even though enforcement of zoning ordinances generally promotes the public interest. Ruiz v. New Garden Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 418, reversed 376 F.3d 203. Civil Rights 1453

Issuance of temporary restraining order, restricting application of township ordinance that restricted use of political signs before election, was in public's best interest, in § 1983 lawsuit brought by candidate for elective office alleging violation of his right to free speech, since public interest was best served by protecting unfettered dissemination of political ideas and thought, especially at time so close to election. Lawless v. Lower Providence Township, E.D.Pa.2002, 2002 WL 31356304, Unreported. Civil Rights 1457(7)

5642. ---- Serious question, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Professor established sufficiently serious questions going to merits of her class-of-one equal protection claim under §§ 1983 against university administrators, challenging her suspension for refusing to undergo psychiatric examination, to make them a fair ground for litigation, as required for professor to be entitled to preliminary injunction to prevent administrators from requiring her to undergo examination in order to keep her position; administrators testified no other faculty member had been subject to involuntary psychiatric examination as prerequisite to continued employment, and it was likely professor would establish that requirement of involuntary psychiatric evaluation before being given opportunity to modify the behavior deemed unacceptable was arbitrary and irrational. Appel v. Spiridon, D.Conn.2006, 2006 WL 3479414. Civil Rights 1457(6)

State prison inmate, scheduled for execution, did not establish likelihood of succeeding on merits or serious questions going to merits of his claim that officials violated his due process rights, or his right to counsel, as required for injunctive relief, when inmate alleged that officials declined to provide treatment for various medical conditions, allegedly needed to enable him to adequately assist in preparation of clemency petition, and to develop claim of organic brain damage as grounds for clemency. Allen v. Hickman, N.D.Cal.2005, 407 F.Supp.2d 1098. Civil Rights 1457(5)

State correctional officers failed to establish serious questions as to merits of their claim that disciplinary actions based on their association with motorcycle gang violated their equal protection rights, and thus were not entitled to preliminary injunction barring state from effecting disciplinary actions, absent showing that there existed anyone similarly situated to them. Piscottano v. Murphy, D.Conn.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 97. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Prisoners at women's prison who had brought federal civil rights action challenging constitutionality of proposed rules restricting visitation rights were not entitled to preliminary injunction against enforcement of rules; even assuming that prisoners had met burden with respect to factors of irreparable injury, balance of harms, and public interest, prisoners could not show that serious question existed as to merits of challenges to regulations. Bazzetta v. McGinnis, E.D.Mich.1995, 902 F.Supp. 765, affirmed 124 F.3d 774, supplemented 133 F.3d 382, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 2371, 524 U.S. 953, 141 L.Ed.2d 739. Civil Rights 1457(5)

5643. ---- Statutory provisions, considerations governing, injunctive relief

Issuance of successive preliminary injunctions in § 1983 class action to allow Muslim state prisoners to attend Muslim prayer service did not render nugatory provision of statute governing preliminary injunctive relief in prison condition cases and providing for automatic expiration of such injunctions after 90 days, even though prisoners relied on law of the case doctrine to justified continued relief; consistent with statute, which required periodic reconsideration of propriety of continued relief, prisoners bore burden of justifying successive injunction, and reliance on law of the case simply reflected that the record was unchanged and preliminary relief was thus still warranted. Mayweathers v. Terhune, E.D.Cal.2001, 136 F.Supp.2d 1152. Civil Rights 1457(5); Courts 99(4)

5644. Moot claims, injunctive relief

Parade participants' claim for compensatory damages from city's denial of parade permits was not rendered moot by the fact that parades were held after court issued temporary restraining order (TRO); the participants could still contest the district court's denial of compensatory damages. Lippoldt v. Cole, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 468 F.3d 1204. Federal Courts 13

Injunctive element of inmate's § 1983 civil rights action against court clerk and court reporter for failing for over 15 months to fulfill request for trial documents was dismissed, where inmate had received requested documents since filing action. Johnson v. Miller, E.D.Pa.1996, 925 F.Supp. 334. Federal Civil Procedure 1741

Inmate's application for injunctive relief from prison's "ink tube policy" was moot, as he was no longer incarcerated at that prison, and there was no evidence that he was likely to return there. Kirsch v. Smith, E.D.Wis.1995, 894 F.Supp. 1222, affirmed 92 F.3d 1187. Civil Rights 1454

5645. Miscellaneous requests, injunctive relief

Court could consider detainee's request for injunctive relief barring further interference with his rights by county jail correctional officer, in connection with his claim of cruel and unusual punishment as a result of being made to sit in his feces for five hours after his requests to use the restroom were denied by officer. Mitchell v. Newryder, D.Me.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 200. Civil Rights 1454

Plaintiff was not entitled to injunction in civil rights action to prevent judge from presiding over future cases by plaintiff, where he did not allege that a declaratory decree was violated or that declaratory relief was unavailable and the injunctive relief addressed the actions of judge in his judicial capacity. Azubuko v. Royal, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 443 F.3d 302. Injunction 27

Former faculty member who sought prospective injunctive relief only against state college board of trustees did not bring claim against "person" for purposes of federal civil rights statute. Gaby v. Board of Trustees of Community Technical Colleges, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 348 F.3d 62. Civil Rights 1349

Eleventh Amendment did not bar claims that school district and officials violated rights of gay high school student, under state Constitution, Education Code and Civil Rights Act, to extent that relief sought was prospective, rather than retrospective; claims seeking injunction prohibiting defendants from "discriminating and harassing plaintiffs on the basis of actual or perceived sexual orientation," "selectively enforcing disciplinary rules," engaging in "viewpoint based censorship," and "disclosing sexual orientation or other private information" sought prospective relief, and complaint alleged reasonable fear of future violations. C.N. v. Wolf, C.D.Cal.2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 894.

Federal Courts 272

Death row inmate was not entitled to preliminary injunctive relief concerning any invasive surgical procedure to obtain access to his veins; he could have challenged his method of execution much earlier than a few weeks before the scheduled execution, threat of defendants using an invasive surgical technique on the inmate to gain access to his veins that violated the Eighth Amendment was extremely remote, state had significant interest in meting out a sentence of death in a timely fashion, and public interest would be substantially harmed if the stay were granted. Boyd v. Beck, E.D.N.C.2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 879. Civil Rights 1457(5)

Based on district court's evaluation of factors outlined in Eighth Circuit's Dataphase decision, state university professor was not entitled to preliminary injunction in suit alleging that nonrenewal of his employment contract violated his free speech rights; suit was employment case in which money damages would be adequate remedy, professor made no showing of irreparable harm if injunction were not granted, harm that university defendants would incur if they were required to reemploy professor was greater in that forced reemployment would be disruptive to at least his department at university, professor was unlikely to succeed on merits of his First Amendment claim in that his speech did not address matter of public concern and Pickering balancing favored defendants, and public interest would not be served by forcing institution of higher education to unwillingly accept faculty member back for duration of litigation he was quite likely to ultimately lose. Keating v. University of South Dakota, D.S.D.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 1096. Civil Rights 1457(6)

Wheelchair-bound inmate was not entitled to injunctive relief requiring that he be provided with physical therapy in his § 1983 suit, despite his claim that he was being denied such therapy in retaliation for having filed a lawsuit against the correctional facility and its officers and doctors; the inmate made no specific claims of retaliation, and he was not likely to succeed on his underlying claim, particularly as a physician did provide some physical therapy treatment, i.e., the lifting of a can of beans, even if it was not what was ordered by a surgeon. Woods v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31296325, Unreported. Civil Rights 1454

Wheelchair-bound inmate was not entitled to injunctive relief requiring that he be sent to specialized hospitals in his § 1983 suit; he did not explain the harm he faced if treated at the correctional facility, where he had received extensive care for his rheumatoid arthritis, degenerative joint disease, and leukemia. Woods v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31296325, Unreported. Civil Rights 1454

Wheelchair-bound inmate was not entitled to injunctive relief requiring that he be granted a feed-in permit allowing him to have food brought to him in his cell in his § 1983 suit, despite his claim that a prior feed-in permit was revoked in retaliation for his having filed a lawsuit against the correctional facility and its officers and doctors; he was not singled out, but rather, the feed-in permits of a whole group of inmates was revoked on the ground that they could move about with the assistance of a wheelchair, and he was granted a feed-in permit for breakfast, when he was less mobile. Woods v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31296325, Unreported. Civil Rights 1454

5671. Habeas corpus generally

Both Civil Rights Act of 1871 and federal habeas corpus statute provide access to federal forum for claims of unconstitutional treatment at hands of state officials, but they differ in their scope and operation. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1307; Habeas Corpus 447

Both Civil Rights Act of 1871 and federal habeas corpus statute provide access to federal forum for claims of unconstitutional treatment at hands of state officials, but they differ in their scope and operation. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1307; Habeas Corpus 447

Petition for habeas corpus attacks fact or duration of prisoner's confinement and seeks remedy of immediate release or shortened period of confinement, whereas civil rights action for damages pursuant to § 1983 attacks conditions of prisoner's confinement and requests monetary compensation for such conditions. Rhodes v. Hannigan, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 12 F.3d 989. Civil Rights 1090; Habeas Corpus 207; Habeas Corpus 208

Although § 1983 is not available once the prisoner seeks release from or reduction of confinement, it is available when prisoner seeks to challenge conditions of his confinement or declaratory judgment as predicate to award of money damages or prospective injunctive relief. Richards v. Bellmon, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 941 F.2d 1015. Civil Rights 1090; Declaratory Judgment 84

State prisoner's suit challenging conditions of confinement is cognizable under this section, but challenge to the fact or duration of confinement must be brought as a habeas corpus action. Keenan v. Bennett, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 613 F.2d 127. Civil Rights 1090; Habeas Corpus 503.1; Civil Rights 1311

Habeas corpus is the exclusive remedy for a state prisoner who challenges the fact or duration of his confinement and seeks immediate or speedier release, even though such a claim may come within the literal terms of § 1983. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1311

To extent that plaintiff, in her pro se § 1983 action, sought release, such relief was only available through a petition for writ of habeas corpus. Figalora v. Smith, D.Del.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 658. Civil Rights 1311

When prisoner challenges fact or duration of his confinement and seeks immediate release, claim is within core of habeas corpus, which is thus exclusive remedy; such claim may not be litigated in federal court § 1983 action. Cornett v. Longois, E.D.Tex.1994, 871 F.Supp. 918. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 207

To determine whether action is properly considered § 1983 complaint or habeas petition, court must consider whether core of claim concerns length or duration of sentence and whether claim of damages is purely ancillary to independent or favorable resolution of length or duration of sentence. Locher v. Plageman, W.D.Va.1991, 765 F.Supp. 1260. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 666

Claims which are indirect attacks on plaintiff's confinement are better pressed in habeas corpus proceeding rather than § 1983 proceeding. Hickombottom v. McGuire, N.D.Ill.1991, 765 F.Supp. 950. Civil Rights 1311

State inmate's failure to file petition for common law writ of certiorari challenging prison disciplinary board's extension of his mandatory release date deprived state courts of opportunity to pass upon substance of his claims, and thus barred federal habeas review of his claim that board violated his constitutional rights, even though inmate filed § 1983 suit in state court, where state court dismissed that suit because inmate had not succeeded in overturning his disciplinary conviction before suing, and action was filed after expiration of limitations period for filing petition for certiorari. Harr v. Karlen, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 968, 2003 WL 21461731, Unreported, rehearing denied. Habeas Corpus 342

Defendant, who had been denied habeas corpus relief, was not entitled to seek injunctive relief as a means of obtaining relief from his conviction, since habeas corpus was the exclusive avenue for relief. Brown v. Rhode Island, C.A.1 (R.I.) 2000, 215 F.3d 1311, Unreported. Habeas Corpus 900.1

5672. Custody requirement, habeas corpus

Person who does not meet "in custody" requirement for habeas relief is not precluded from challenging constitutionality of his or her state court conviction in action under this section, although defendants may be able to invoke collateral estoppel or res judicata as an affirmative defense to extent that those concepts apply. Battieste v. City of Baton Rouge, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 732 F.2d 439. Civil Rights 1331(4); Judgment 648

This section relating to deprivation of federally protected rights was not intended to be a substitute for habeas corpus when there is no custody. Cavett v. Ellis, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 578 F.2d 567. Civil Rights 1311

If plaintiff, whose state sentence had expired, was still suffering from the type of collateral consequences which would qualify him as being "in custody" for habeas corpus purposes, he would be required to maintain habeas corpus action before federal court could consider his civil rights suit based on alleged unconstitutionality of his arrest; if he did not qualify as being in custody, he could maintain his action without having previously instituted an action for habeas corpus relief. Conner v. Pickett, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1977, 552 F.2d 585. Civil Rights 1311

Evidence established that the most plausible interpretation of state prisoner's complaint alleging that he was made to run the "gauntlet of arbitrary reachings at due process of law and access into the court" was that he was being held in custody in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States and, to extent that such a claim implied a demand for equitable relief by way of federal habeas corpus, prisoner could not proceed under this section. Gaito v. Ellenbogen, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1970, 425 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1420

Heck v. Humphrey rule is only bar to §§ 1983 claim if plaintiff is trying to assert claim while he or she is still in custody, in which case proper remedy for plaintiff is habeas action, not §§ 1983 action. Cole v. Doe 1 thru 2 Officers of City of Emeryville Police Dept., N.D.Cal.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 1084. Civil Rights 1311

Favorable termination rule of Heck v. Humphrey, under which civil rights plaintiff must show that conviction has been invalidated or called into question before challenging conduct whose unlawfulness would render conviction invalid, did not extend to released prisoner who was barred by custody requirement from bringing habeas petition challenging state conviction. Bembenek v. Donohoo, E.D.Wis.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 942. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Heck "favorable termination" rule applied to preclude civil rights suit that called prior conviction into question, even though litigant was not in custody and thus could not challenge conviction via federal or state habeas review. Leonard v. Juge, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 129, 2003 WL 21770848, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

5673. Exhaustion of habeas corpus remedy--Generally

Where factual allegations of a complaint can give rise either to habeas relief or to civil rights remedies, former must be first pursued to a conclusion and requirement of exhaustion cannot be abated by casting complaint in civil rights form; not only state habeas remedies, but federal ones as well must be exhausted before a civil rights action based upon them may proceed. Hernandez v. Spencer, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 780 F.2d 504. Civil Rights 1311

Prisoner's § 1983 suit against Commonwealth's Attorney, requesting access to and testing of biological evidence from his rape and sodomy trial in order to determine if it was exculpatory, was not, in effect, a petition for writ of habeas corpus subject to requirement of exhaustion of state remedies; prisoner did not seek immediate release from prison and disclaimed any challenge to his conviction at present time, conceding that the DNA tests may show his conviction was valid, and denial of access to possibly exculpatory evidence stated a claim of denial of due process and gave court jurisdiction under § 1983. Harvey v. Horan, E.D.Va.2000, 119 F.Supp.2d 581. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 666

Although § 1983 allows prisoner to recover damages for constitutional violation and has no requirement of exhausting state remedies, prisoner cannot bring claim that could justify habeas corpus relief unless prisoner has complied with procedural prerequisites for habeas case. Norton v. Garro, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1067. Civil Rights 1319

If § 1983 claim is necessarily dependent upon proving that plaintiff's conviction was constitutionally infirm, he may not make that showing for first time in his § 1983 action, rather, plaintiff must first have successfully attacked his conviction in prior proceeding by having secured writ of habeas corpus; however, if plaintiff's § 1983 claim challenges only the constitutionality of the procedures employed in securing his conviction, and if any such error would not be sufficient to undermine his conviction, then plaintiff will be allowed to proceed with his § 1983 claim. Richmond v. Duke, E.D.Ark.1995, 909 F.Supp. 626. Civil Rights 1088(5)

If claim purportedly brought under § 1983 itself goes to constitutionality of criminal conviction, then exclusive remedy is habeas corpus, subject to essential requirement of exhaustion of remedies. Jones v. State, E.D.Tex.1995, 893 F.Supp. 643. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 321

Since several of arrestee's § 1983 claims directly or indirectly challenged constitutionality of his state court conviction, arrestee was prevented from bringing these claims until he had exhausted his habeas remedies and thus, two-year Texas statute of limitations for personal injury actions, which was applicable to § 1983 actions, was tolled while arrestee completed the required exhaustion, however, statute of limitations was not suspended as to any claims that did not directly or indirectly challenge constitutionality of arrestee's conviction. Zuliani v. Boardman, W.D.Tex.1994, 865 F.Supp. 382. Civil Rights 1311; Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

Habeas corpus, with its attendant exhaustion requirement, is the exclusive initial cause of action where basis of a state prisoner's claim goes to the fact or duration of his confinement, whereas challenges to conditions of confinement may proceed under this section without any requirement of exhaustion of state judicial remedies; a federal court should be governed by such classifications irrespective of the relief sought or the label placed by the petitioner upon such action. Derrow v. Shields, W.D.Va.1980, 482 F.Supp. 1144. Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 321

Plaintiffs who had not resorted to habeas corpus remedies available to them were not entitled to injunctive relief and damages under this section for violation of their constitutional rights to due process and equal protection resulting from allegedly unconstitutional state court criminal proceedings. Greene v. State of N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1967, 281 F.Supp. 579. Civil Rights 1454; Injunction 7

5674. ---- Challenges to validity or duration of confinement, exhaustion of habeas corpus remedy

Civil rights suit pursuant to § 1983 was appropriate vehicle for state prisoner to challenge Alabama's proposed use of "cut-down" procedure to access his veins during lethal injection procedure, and thus, challenge was not properly dismissed as unauthorized second or successive habeas petition; prisoner's challenge was not to fact of his execution, but rather, to allegedly unnecessary cut-down procedure for gaining venous access. Nelson v. Campbell, U.S.2004, 124 S.Ct. 2117, 541 U.S. 637, 158 L.Ed.2d 924, on remand 377 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1088(5); Habeas Corpus 901

A suit seeking to enjoin a particular means of effectuating a sentence of death does not directly call into question the "fact" or "validity" of the sentence itself, such that the suit would properly be brought under the federal habeas corpus statute, and not pursuant to § 1983; by simply altering its method of execution, the state can go forward with the sentence. Nelson v. Campbell, U.S.2004, 124 S.Ct. 2117, 541 U.S. 637, 158 L.Ed.2d 924, on remand 377 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1088(5); Habeas Corpus 275.1

Preiser, which held that habeas corpus is exclusive remedy for state prisoner who challenges fact or duration of his confinement and seeks immediate or speedier release even though such claim may come within literal terms of § 1983, did not create exception to "no exhaustion" rule of § 1983; it merely held that certain claims by state prisoners are not cognizable under that provision and must be brought in habeas corpus proceedings, which do contain exhaustion requirement. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383 . Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 450.1

Arrestee's success on illegal entry claim, arising when officers allegedly entered his home without warrant, probable cause, or exigent circumstances, would not have necessarily implied invalidity of his state misdemeanor assault conviction for struggling with officers upon their entry, and thus Heck v. Humphrey rule did not bar assertion of illegal entry claim in federal civil rights suit, as illegality of entry under Fourth Amendment was not a defense to assault charge. Cummings v. City of Akron, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 418 F.3d 676, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1088(3)

New Jersey prisoner's challenge to being placed in prison's restricted activities program (RAP) was aimed at a condition of his confinement and was properly brought under § 1983, because prisoner could not have brought this claim as a habeas claim in that he did not and could not seek earlier release based on the adjudication of his constitutional claims; though there was a possibility that parole would be delayed if prisoner remained on RAP status, because of lack of access to therapy, prisoner, as a sex offender, did not earn credits to which he could claim entitlement if not on RAP status. Leamer v. Fauver, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2002, 288 F.3d 532. Civil Rights 1092; Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 231

Parolee's civil rights action against Texas Board of Pardon and Paroles, for allegedly failing to provide him with statement of its reasons for revoking his parole in alleged violation of his federal due process rights, was action which called into question the validity of parole revocation decision itself, and could not be pursued absent showing that Board's decision had been reversed, expunged, set aside or called into question. Littles v. Board of Pardons and Paroles Div., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 68 F.3d 122. Civil Rights 1097

Petitioner had no § 1983 cause of action for money damages based on alleged violation of his Fourth Amendment rights concerning police search of his automobile, until such time as petitioner succeeded in having his conviction for driving under influence (DUI) of drugs found in vehicle set aside. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Inmate's civil rights action seeking damages and restoration of good-time credits that he lost as result of disciplinary action would affect length of confinement and, thus, action was appropriately stayed pending exhaustion of state court remedies. Bressman v. Farrier, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1990, 900 F.2d 1305, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1090, 498 U.S. 1126, 112 L.Ed.2d 1194. Civil Rights 1319

Claims that plaintiff was falsely imprisoned, that he had been reindicted on charge that had been dismissed for speedy trial violation and that in his criminal trial the state had used perjured testimony against him challenged validity or length of plaintiff's confinement, and thus civil rights claim for damages was first subject to exhaustion of state remedies, because the challenge amounted to a habeas corpus proceeding. Johnson v. State of Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 878 F.2d 904, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 321

Federal prisoner's civil rights action for restoration of "good time" credits and parole eligibility, along with payment of damages for being wrongfully punished, due to alleged denial of prisoner's due process rights by being repeatedly subjected to disciplinary sanctions in retaliation for having rejected homosexual solicitations by guards and resisting improper searches having homosexual overtones, was in reality habeas corpus suit challenging duration of confinement, and thus prisoner was required to exhaust his administrative remedies before bringing suit. Greene v. Meese, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1989, 875 F.2d 639. Habeas Corpus 321; Habeas Corpus 277

Prisoner's civil rights complaint seeking declaration that Louisiana statute authorizing payment of parole supervision fees was unconstitutional as applied challenged validity of his current confinement; thus, allegations should have been pursued in habeas corpus proceedings, with concomitant exhaustion of state remedies; although prisoner did not seek release from prison, determination that fees were improper would necessarily undermine validity of his parole revocation proceeding. Sheppard v. State of La. Bd. of Parole, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 873 F.2d 761. Civil Rights 1311

An inmate's § 1983 action in federal court for damages or declaratory relief for unconstitutional deprivation of good time credits should be stayed until inmate has satisfied exhaustion requirement for habeas petition with respect to underlying constitutional issue, as inmate who wins such action thereby establishes an irrefutable claim for early or immediate release under habeas. Offet v. Solem, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1987, 823 F.2d 1256. See, also, Franklin v. Webb, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1981, 653 F.2d 362. Action 69(5); Action 69(6)

Where state prisoner's contention, under this section, was that he was neither given notice of his right to final hearing nor a final hearing by Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles, was in reality challenge to duration of confinement, exhaustion of prisoner's federal habeas corpus remedy was required before civil rights action could proceed. Jackson v. Torres, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 720 F.2d 877. Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner was required to bring claim as petition for habeas corpus to the extent that his civil rights action challenged fact or duration of his confinement by virtue of back-time ordered for state parole violation. Thomas v. Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 406. Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner who sought release from custody after revocation of his parole was required to do so only on a properly submitted petition seeking a writ of habeas corpus, not in a § 1983 action. Keyes v. Juul, E.D.N.Y.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 327. Civil Rights 1311

Judgment favorable to inmate in his § 1983 claim seeking money damages for alleged deprivations arising out of a prison disciplinary hearing would necessarily imply the invalidity of the punishment imposed, and thus inmate's § 1983 claim would be dismissed; inmate argued that the wrong result was reached in his disciplinary hearing, not just that improper procedures were employed. Roberts v. Champion, N.D.Okla.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 1272, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 108, 2004 WL 249617. Civil Rights 1092

To extent inmate was challenging duration of his sentence, in his § 1983 action alleging denial of parole violated his civil rights, claim would be dismissed pursuant to in forma pauperis statute; sole federal remedy was by way of writ of habeas corpus, and inmate's sentence had not been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by a state tribunal authorized to make such determination, or called into question by a federal court's issuance of a writ of habeas corpus. Ross v. Snyder, D.Del.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 397. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

Prisoner could use a § 1983 suit rather than habeas corpus to make a due process challenge to disciplinary hearings where he had not lost "good time" credits and was not otherwise challenging the fact or duration of his confinement. Jackson v. Johnson, S.D.N.Y.1998, 15 F.Supp.2d 341. Civil Rights 1311

Prisoner could use a § 1983 suit rather than habeas corpus to make a due process challenge to disciplinary hearings where he had not lost "good time" credits and was not otherwise challenging the fact or duration of his confinement. Jackson v. Johnson, S.D.N.Y.1998, 15 F.Supp.2d 341. Civil Rights 1311

Even state prisoner who has fully exhausted available state remedies has no cause of action under § 1983 arising out of allegedly unconstitutional conviction or imprisonment unless and until conviction or sentence is reversed, expunged, invalidated, or impugned by grant of writ of habeas corpus; however, if court determines that plaintiff's action, even if successful, would not demonstrate invalidity of any outstanding criminal judgment against plaintiff, action should be allowed to proceed, in absence of any other bar to suit. Cornett v. Longois, E.D.Tex.1994, 871 F.Supp. 918. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1090

Former inmate's § 1983 claims challenged validity of his state conviction, sentence, and fact or duration of state's custody and, thus, former inmate failed to state cognizable § 1983 claim to extent he sought monetary damages, absent allegation that conviction, sentence or fact or duration of his custody had previously been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by authorized state tribunal, or called into question by federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus. Hand v. Young, D.Nev.1994, 868 F.Supp. 289. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Section 1983 claims which call into question validity or duration of confinement, even if not seeking habeas relief, are subject to exhaustion requirement of habeas corpus statute. Tomey v. Gissy, N.D.W.Va.1993, 832 F.Supp. 172 . Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 319.1

Inmate could not maintain § 1983 suit seeking injunctive relief, as claim that state had not provided him with sufficient trial court records to ensure fair appellate review of his criminal convictions was at heart an attack on legality of his custody, for which habeas corpus, with its concomitant exhaustion-of-state-remedies requirement, was exclusive federal remedy. Jones v. Burris, N.D.Ill.1993, 825 F.Supp. 860. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 319.1

State prisoner could not maintain civil rights action, seeking damages based on alleged conspiracy to obtain his confession to murder, without first exhausting his state law remedies; prevailing in the civil rights action would amount to determination that his conviction and subsequent incarceration were unconstitutional, thereby resulting in attack on fact or duration of his confinement. Crane v. Gasparini, N.D.Ill.1989, 719 F.Supp. 746. Civil Rights 1311

Prisoner's § 1983 action which challenged single allegedly defective prison disciplinary hearing, which in essence was attack on fact and duration of his custody, rather than on procedures employed, required dismissal; § 1983 action had to be construed as petition for writ of habeas corpus, which was premature based upon prisoner's failure to exhaust state court remedies. Harper v. Gibson, N.D.Ind.1987, 666 F.Supp. 1252. Civil Rights 1092

plaintiff was entitled to damages on this issue would show that reduction in his sentence was required, plaintiff's initial and exclusive remedy lay in habeas corpus, with respect to any claims under this section arising out of his amended sentence structure, and therefore, those claims could not be heard. Barnes v. Wolff, D.C.Nev.1984, 586 F.Supp. 312. Civil Rights 1311

As general rule in civil rights actions, exhaustion of state remedies is not prerequisite, but when state prisoner is challenging very fact or duration of physical imprisonment, and relief he seeks is determination that he is entitled to immediate release or speedier release from imprisonment, his sole federal remedy is that of habeas corpus, and exhaustion requirement applies. Godbolt v. Commissioner of Dept. of Correctional Services, S.D.N.Y.1981, 524 F.Supp. 21. Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 321

To the extent Kansas state prisoner, who was bringing civil rights case against state officials, sought to challenge validity of his sentence based on new evidence which allegedly proved civil rights defendants conspired to mislead and defraud him about his return to Oklahoma to serve his sentences concurrently, such a claim should have been raised in a writ for habeas corpus, assuming prisoner first received permission from Court of Appeals to file successive habeas corpus petition. Brownfield v. Stovall, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 85 Fed.Appx. 123, 2003 WL 23033727, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

Inmate's claims seeking charges and civil suit against court-appointed attorney, prosecutor, and presiding judge from his criminal trial, on grounds that they denied him fair trial and helped secure his wrongful conviction, were not cognizable under § 1983 when inmate's conviction had not been invalidated. Jimenez v. Mittler, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22080758, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Success on inmate's claim that denial of his release on parole was unconstitutional would have resulted in his earlier release from prison, and thus, he had to bring his claim as a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, not in a civil rights complaint under § 1983. Driskel v. Davis, N.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 262234, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311

Prisoner, who alleged that his constitutional rights were violated when prison officials attempted to obtain a DNA sample from him, could not challenge the disciplinary proceeding resulting from his refusal to provide a DNA sample in an action under § 1983; when prisoner refused to allow a DNA sample to be taken from him by prison staff, he received a rule violation report and was assessed a 60-day credit forfeiture, and, to the extent prisoner wanted to challenge that decision in federal court, he had to do so by filing a petition for writ of habeas corpus because it called into question the duration of his confinement. Miller v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31898213, Unreported. Civil Rights 1092

5675. ---- Challenges to conditions of confinement, exhaustion of habeas corpus remedy

Constitutional claims that merely challenge the conditions of a prisoner's confinement, whether the inmate seeks monetary or injunctive relief, fall outside the "core" of habeas corpus and may be brought pursuant to § 1983 in the first instance. Nelson v. Campbell, U.S.2004, 124 S.Ct. 2117, 541 U.S. 637, 158 L.Ed.2d 924, on remand 377 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1090; Habeas Corpus 277

Prisoner's complaint alleging that prison's parole procedures violated equal protection was not disguised habeas corpus petition and thus, prisoner could proceed under § 1983 without first exhausting state remedies. Thomas v. Georgia State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 881 F.2d 1032, rehearing denied 893 F.2d 346. Civil Rights 1311

Injunctive relief which plaintiff inmate sought on ground that failure of defendant state prison officials to institute a work release program at particular institution was violative of equal protection sought only to alter conditions of plaintiff's confinement rather than to diminish length of his incarceration and, hence, did not sound chiefly in habeas corpus for which plaintiff was required to fulfill concommitant exhaustion requirements. Jamieson v. Robinson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1981, 641 F.2d 138. Civil Rights 1319

Where inmate obtained habeas corpus relief in state court based on claim of incorrect calculation of good-time work credits, it was not necessary for him to seek federal habeas relief in federal court before he could go forward in federal court with his civil rights claim for damages based on wrongful confinement because of the improper calculation of credits. Neal v. Hargrave, D.Nev.1991, 770 F.Supp. 553. Civil Rights 1311

Convicted defendant's § 1983 claim against arresting officers, based on alleged fabrication of evidence, was not barred by defendant's failure to bring habeas corpus action attacking validity of conviction; defendant was not attacking validity of his conviction, but rather was seeking monetary damages from officers for alleged misconduct. LaBoy v. Zuley, N.D.Ill.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1284, motion to vacate denied 749 F.Supp. 184. Civil Rights 1311

State inmate's civil rights complaint, although including allegations as to his innocence on charges for which he was confined, was not in fact petition for habeas corpus relief such that he had to exhaust available state remedies; despite surplusage as to innocence, crux of inmate's claim was that he could not be safely housed in local or state facilities because of official retaliation. Burgos v. Koehler, S.D.N.Y.1990, 727 F.Supp. 847. Habeas Corpus 666

5675A. ---- Parole, exhaustion of habeas corpus remedy

Former state prisoner's claims of seizure without probable cause and false imprisonment against police officer who had arrested him for parole violation, and his claim of false imprisonment against member of parole board that had revoked his parole, were not cognizable under §§ 1983, regardless of fact that federal habeas relief was no longer available; parole revocation decision had not been rendered invalid, and success on former prisoner's claims would necessarily invalidate revocation decision. Williams v. Consovoy, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 453 F.3d 173. Civil Rights 1097

Claim that state parole procedure, which required that inmate attend a drug program based on religion and belief in a higher power, violated First Amendment could be brought under §§ 1983 as success on claim would not necessarily have demonstrated the invalidity of his confinement or its duration, but would have established that parole board used improper factors in making its parole determination. Nelson v. Horn, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 138 Fed.Appx. 411, 2005 WL 1526454, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

5676. ---- Jurisdiction, exhaustion of habeas corpus remedy

Unless statutorily mandated, application of the exhaustion doctrine in § 1983 case is not a jurisdictional requirement, but within the discretion of the district court. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1307

District court lacked jurisdiction to consider § 1983 claims in which prisoner claimed that prison disciplinary actions taken against him violated his rights under Eighth Amendment and due process clause where prisoner did not first exhaust his avenues for appeal of adverse prison disciplinary finding in state court, as is required prior to bringing federal habeas corpus petition. Norton v. Garro, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1067. Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 342 not seek release, pleading could be read to plead causes of action under this section which prisoners were entitled to have heard without exhaustion of state remedies. Wilwording v. Swenson, U.S.Mo.1971, 92 S.Ct. 407, 404 U.S. 249, 30 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1319

5678. ---- Assistance of counsel, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Habeas petitioner who alleged that federal marshals and prison officials interfered with his Sixth Amendment right to self-representation at his escape trials in state and federal courts by denying him access to legal documents and materials collected by him and then losing materials stated challenge to duration and fact of confinement, rather than conditions of confinement so that habeas was proper avenue for relief, and thus, district court should have construed petition as habeas corpus petition challenging state escape conviction and habeas motion attacking federal escape conviction. Leacock v. Henman, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1069. Habeas Corpus 670(1)

Action brought by condemned prisoner against state Department of Corrections, alleging civil rights violations through manner of pending execution, was properly characterized as §§ 1983 claim, rather than successive habeas corpus claim, and thus was not precluded from adjudication without special leave of court; prisoner's challenge was to condition of his confinement, not to fact of his conviction. Oken v. Sizer, D.Md.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 658, stay vacated 124 S.Ct. 2868, 542 U.S. 916, 159 L.Ed.2d 290. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1098

Although habeas corpus petitioner was deprived of due process and effective assistance of counsel by his court-appointed counsel's failure to perfect appeal for six years, habeas petition would not be granted in that conviction had been confirmed on ultimately granted appeal, and thus petitioner's incarceration was lawful; petitioner's appropriate remedy was to bring action for damages under § 1983. Simmons v. Reynolds, E.D.N.Y.1989, 708 F.Supp. 505, affirmed 898 F.2d 865. Civil Rights 1493; Habeas Corpus 500.1

5679. ---- Classification of prisoners, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Claim by inmates that ex post facto clause precluded state from retroactively applying security classification system which made it more difficult for inmates to progress to less restrictive environments could be asserted in § 1983 civil rights action, and inmates were not limited solely to habeas corpus relief, where injunctive relief ordering that previous classification systems be applied would not intrude on or divest prison administration of its ultimate discretion to classify inmates, inmates did not ask for immediate release or shortening of sentences, and requested relief would not necessarily result in immediate release or shorter sentence. Faruq v. Herndon, D.Md.1993, 831 F.Supp. 1262, affirmed 56 F.3d 60. Civil Rights 1311

5680. ---- Delayed appeals, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

When extreme circumstances are not present, even if due process violation is found, writ of habeas corpus should not issue for violation of petitioner's speedy appeal rights; rather, petitioner's relief should be in suit for damages under § 1983. Douglas v. Hendricks, D.N.J.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 412. Habeas Corpus 500.1

Relief for prejudice suffered by habeas corpus petitioner as result of delay in bringing appeal was best obtained through suit under § 1983 for damages where, although delayed, conviction was appropriate. Yourdon v. Kelly, W.D.N.Y.1991, 769 F.Supp. 112, on reconsideration, affirmed 969 F.2d 1042. Civil Rights 1088(5)

5681. ---- Confiscation of prisoner property, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Despite fact that state prisoner, who did not challenge conviction or seek release from custody but only sought the return of personal property allegedly confiscated when he was placed in maximum security confinement or the cash equivalent of its value, labeled complaint as a petition for writ of habeas corpus, where prisoner in fact claimed access to the court on the basis of this section, prisoner was entitled to have action treated as a claim for relief under this section. Hansen v. May, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1974, 502 F.2d 728. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Appropriate remedy for inmate's challenge to the denial of good conduct credits was an action pursuant to §§ 1983, not a petition for writ of habeas corpus; even assuming, arguendo, that the disciplinary violation caused inmate to lose temporarily the ability to earn more good-time credits, at no point did inmate lose any already-earned good-time credits, nor did his reclassification extend the length of his sentence. Gaskins v. Johnson, E.D.Va.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 800. Habeas Corpus 515

5682. ---- Discipline of prisoners, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Inmate's civil rights action claiming that prison disciplined him in retaliation for exercising First Amendment rights would not be treated as habeas corpus petition and, thus, inmate was not required to exhaust state remedies, even though discipline included forfeiture of good-time credits, where imposition of sanctions had been suspended. Bressman v. Farrier, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1990, 900 F.2d 1305, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1090, 498 U.S. 1126, 112 L.Ed.2d 1194. Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 666

State inmate had to show good cause why his §§ 2254 habeas petition challenging disciplinary sentence should not be recharacterized as §§ 1983 action, where disciplinary sentence did not appear to impact overall length of inmate's confinement on his state court criminal conviction. Adams v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 246. Habeas Corpus 513

District Court would not recharacterize state pro se prisoner's habeas claim, challenging disciplinary sentence of placement for six months in the Special Housing Unit (SHU), as a §§ 1983 claim, without giving prisoner opportunity to show that disciplinary sanctions affected length of confinement, and to demonstrate exhaustion of administrative remedies. Adams v. McGinnis, W.D.N.Y.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 243, subsequent determination 2004 WL 2944115. Habeas Corpus 674.1

5683. ---- Furlough of prisoners, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Eligibility or lack of eligibility for temporary home furloughs in Pennsylvania is a "condition of confinement" which may be challenged directly in an action under this section without resort to habeas corpus and its attendant requirement for exhaustion of state remedies, notwithstanding that total number of days spent behind bars can technically be reduced by number of days of furlough; declining to follow decisions to the contrary. Wright v. Cuyler, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 624 F.2d 455, on remand 517 F.Supp. 637. Civil Rights 1319

Challenge to policy of Texas Board of Criminal Justice excluding convicted murderers from being considered for furlough was not a challenge to the "duration of confinement" and civil rights claim could be considered without exhaustion of state remedies. Morris v. McCotter, E.D.Tex.1991, 773 F.Supp. 969. Civil Rights 1319

5684. ---- Medical care of prisoners, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Proper avenue of relief for a former inmate based on prison officials' denial of his repeated requests for placement in a community treatment center was a civil rights action, rather than a habeas corpus action; inmate had been released on parole and no longer sought a transfer to the community treatment center. Badea v. Cox, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 931 F.2d 573. Habeas Corpus 231

Although habeas was not the proper form of action for federal prisoner's claims challenging adequacy of medical care, court would not dismiss prisoner's claims, but rather, would treat the habeas petition as if it were properly filed as a section 1983 or Bivens claim, without requiring prisoner to change his pleadings; added value, if any, of permitting amendment of pleadings and additional filings would not justify further delay, the primary dispositive task in the case involved analysis of facts already submitted, not resolution of intricacies in civil rights law, and the parties' arguments centered around two issues that would be essentially identical whether the case were treated as a habeas case or a civil rights case. Kane v. Winn, D.Mass.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1395(7); Habeas Corpus 672; United States 50.20

Proper remedy in case involving inadequate medical treatment to pretrial detainee is relief under § 1983, not writ of habeas corpus. Rodney v. Romano, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 311. Habeas Corpus 513

In action brought by quadriplegic inmate against Director of the Illinois Department of Corrections and warden of correctional center alleging deprivation of his civil rights due to inadequacy of his medical treatment and seeking transfer to a private institution "or some other medical facility other than those operated by the Illinois Department of Corrections," inmate's request did not necessarily involve release from state's custody but, rather, placement in any constitutionally sufficient facility, and thus his action was properly maintainable under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights and relief was not obtainable only by federal habeas corpus. Villa v. Franzen, N.D.Ill.1981, 511 F.Supp. 231. Civil Rights 1091

5685. ---- Parole, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Inmate's pro se complaint requesting "Declaratory and Injunctive Relief ordering the defendants to stop denying Plaintiff Parole Recommendations based on" erroneous information provided by parole investigator and "a new Parole Board Hearing" in which Board did not use the erroneous information was partially an attack on parole procedures and was thus cognizable under federal civil rights statute, although inmate could challenge in federal court the result of his parole hearing only by filing habeas petition after exhausting state remedies. Herrera v. Harkins, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1991, 949 F.2d 1096. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 279

Inmate's § 1983 claim seeking damages and declaratory judgment, effectively requesting prospective injunctive relief so that alleged consideration by parole board of his role in pursuing litigation against prison officers did not recur, was not petition for habeas corpus relief; inmate did not seek immediate release on parole, but wanted change in board's procedure for considering parole, so that he would receive fair parole decision in future. Clark v. State of Ga. Pardons and Paroles Bd., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 915 F.2d 636. Habeas Corpus 666

To extent inmate's equal protection claims challenging denial of parole sought earlier release or damage award for this denial, such claims required exhaustion of state remedies, but insofar as complaint requested change in parole board's procedure so that inmate would receive fair parole decision in the future, claim could be properly brought under § 1983, because declaration of unconstitutionality of such procedures would not automatically lead to his release. Gwin v. Snow, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 870 F.2d 616. Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 321

Since prisoner who claimed that parole board had improperly considered prior invalid convictions in determining his eligibility for parole did not assert that, if the four convictions were not considered, he would be entitled to parole immediately or at any time in the future, the claim for relief was required to be treated as suit under this section, rather than as petition for writ of habeas corpus. Strader v. Troy, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1978, 571 F.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1311

Civil rights action filed by prisoner alleging that he had been denied due process on grounds that he had not been given parole considerations was appropriately treated as civil rights action, and not as petition for writ of habeas corpus, and, therefore, prisoner was not required to exhaust state remedies before filing action. McCray v. Dietz, D.C.N.J.1980, 517 F.Supp. 787. Civil Rights 1319

5686. ---- Self-incrimination, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

self-incriminating statements from prisoner was not required to be brought as habeas corpus petition; prisoner's claims did not directly and solely relate to fact or duration of his confinement, and prisoner had waived his right to seek state or federal postconviction relief on grounds that he was unconstitutionally convicted on basis of coerced confession. Johnson v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 712 F.Supp. 1311. Civil Rights 1088(4)

5687. ---- Transfer of prisoners, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Prisoner's claim seeking transfer out of city jail system into state or federal prison system because of alleged brutality by prison guards and police officers was cognizable under § 1983, rather than habeas corpus which would have required exhaustion of state remedies, where prisoner was only seeking to change place of his confinement not fact or duration of confinement. Abdul-Hakeem v. Koehler, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 910 F.2d 66, on remand. Civil Rights 1095; Habeas Corpus 208

5688. ---- Release from confinement, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

Fact that habeas petitioner might be unable to pursue civil rights action for alleged improprieties in revocation of his parole, unless he could first establish invalidity of that revocation, was not sufficient to save from mootness, once he was released from prison, a habeas petition which he had filed challenging the revocation of his parole; it was far from certain that any such damages action was available to petitioner or that court's failure to address habeas petition would foreclose petitioner from pursuing such an action. Spencer v. Kemna, U.S.Mo.1998, 118 S.Ct. 978, 523 U.S. 1, 140 L.Ed.2d 43. Habeas Corpus 226

5689. ---- Miscellaneous actions, treatment of habeas corpus as civil rights action

District courts faced with a § 1983 suit brought under federal habeas corpus statute should, rather than reach the merits, dismiss without prejudice to the possibility of a future § 1983 action or at least give notice that the suit will be converted to one under § 1983 if the plaintiff declines to dismiss voluntarily. Hadley v. Holmes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 341 F.3d 661, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2398, 541 U.S. 1067, 158 L.Ed.2d 970. Habeas Corpus 691.1

The sole federal remedy for state prisoner who was convicted of rape and forcible sodomy, and who sought access to DNA evidence on ground that it might provide a basis for him to prove his innocence using technology that was unavailable at the time of his trial, was to petition for a writ of habeas corpus, rather than to bring a § 1983 action as a discovery device, as he was challenging the validity of his conviction even though he was not seeking immediate release. Harvey v. Horan, C.A.4 (Va.) 2002, 278 F.3d 370, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 285 F.3d 298. Civil Rights 1311

State prisoner's section 1983 action which sought monetary damages and a transcript, and which neither directly challenged fact of his confinement or sought a determination that he was entitled to immediate or speedier release was not the functional equivalent of a petition for writ of habeas corpus, and thus prisoner could pursue action under this section and its jurisdictional counterpart. Lumbert v. Finley, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 735 F.2d 239. Civil Rights 1311

Where state prisoner did not ask for any relief from his sentence nor ask that federal court order his release from confinement or modify confinement, and only possible effect that suit might have upon his confinement would be that, if he could obtain transcript and his state appeal was successful, he would escape confinement on state sentence, prisoner's suit for injunctive and monetary relief against state court clerk and court stenographer for their alleged failure to forward state trial court transcript to state appellate court was cognizable as civil rights suit rather than habeas corpus petition and should have been filed, served and tried as such. Rheuark v. Shaw, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1977, 547 F.2d 1257. Civil Rights 1311

Death row inmate was willing to concede to acceptable alternatives to protocol for lethal injection used by Texas, as would show that death row inmate's challenge in action under §§ 1983 to method of execution was not a challenge to fact of sentence itself, as would be properly brought on federal habeas petition; inmate presented two "lethal-injection alternatives that would not cause undue pain and suffering." Harris v. Johnson, S.D.Tex.2004, 323 F.Supp.2d 797, vacated 376 F.3d 414. Civil Rights 1088(5); Habeas Corpus 508

Habeas corpus petitioner must bring claim regarding conditions of his confinement on Tennessee's death row in § 1983 action rather than as part of writ of habeas corpus. Austin v. Bell, M.D.Tenn.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1058. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 513

State prisoner's complaint alleging that the resetting of his execution date 45 days after expiration of stay by federal court violated federal statute allowing petitions for writ of certiorari to be filed within 90 days after the judgment was properly brought as a civil rights action rather than as a petition for habeas corpus. James v. Edwards, E.D.La.1987, 683 F.Supp. 157. Habeas Corpus 275.1

Indigent state prisoner's complaint challenging actions which allegedly occurred during state criminal trial, direct appeal and collateral attack upon conviction would be treated as civil rights claim, rather than habeas corpus, where prisoner sought monetary damages, but did not seek either immediate release or reduction of his sentence. Holsey v. Bass, D.C.Md.1981, 519 F.Supp. 395, affirmed 712 F.2d 70. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Plaintiff's original complaint, which alleged that defendant court reporter deliberately altered portions of the transcript of plaintiff's criminal trial to "water down" the Allen charge given the jury, stated a cognizable claim for relief under this section and, therefore, should not have been converted, over plaintiff's objection, into a petition for writ of federal habeas corpus, for which no relief could be granted since plaintiff had not, as yet, exhausted his state remedies in connection with his criminal conviction. Odom v. Wilson, S.D.Ohio 1981, 517 F.Supp. 474. Civil Rights 1395(5); Habeas Corpus 666

Prisoner's action against county prosecutor, seeking ruling that his constitutional right to trial by jury was violated by application of state sentencing provision, was properly construed as civil rights complaint under §§ 1983 action rather than as habeas petition, warranting dismissal as improper challenge to allegedly unconstitutional sentence, even though prisoner specifically disavowed any intention of relying on §§ 1983 for relief and did not seek award of damages. Wooten v. Bates, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 101 Fed.Appx. 14, 2004 WL 950063, Unreported, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 207, 543 U.S. 906, 160 L.Ed.2d 181. Civil Rights 1395(7)

5690. Treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus--Generally

When an inmate seeks injunctive relief challenging the fact of his conviction or the duration of his sentence, § 1983 must yield to the more specific federal habeas statute, with its attendant procedural and exhaustion requirements; such claims fall within the "core" of habeas corpus and are thus not cognizable when brought pursuant to § 1983. Nelson v. Campbell, U.S.2004, 124 S.Ct. 2117, 541 U.S. 637, 158 L.Ed.2d 924, on remand 377 F.3d 1162. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 275.1; Habeas Corpus 278

If state prisoner's claim alleges violation of procedural due process rights, determination of whether challenge is properly brought under § 1983 must be based on whether nature of challenge to procedures is such as necessarily to imply invalidity of judgment; if challenge would necessarily imply invalidity of judgment or continuing confinement, then it must be brought as petition for writ of habeas corpus. Neal v. Shimoda, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1997, 131 F.3d 818. Civil Rights 1311

Section 1983 actions are treated as habeas petitions if relief requested under § 1983 would undermine conviction. Prather v. Norman, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 901 F.2d 915. Habeas Corpus 666

Merely because plaintiff is filing suit under § 1983 does not prevent district court from considering action as one for habeas relief, particularly when goal of plaintiff is to challenge validity of his incarceration. Pressly v. Gregory, C.A.4 (Va.) 1987, 831 F.2d 514. Habeas Corpus 666

Death row inmate who sought order requiring state Supreme Court to engage in proportionality review prior to execution failed to state § 1983 claim even though he alleged that he was not challenging fact or duration of physical confinement nor seeking immediate or speedy release; requested relief was proper subject for habeas corpus action, not civil rights action, as relief would impliedly invalidate state supreme court's decision which affirmed death sentence. Palmer v. Nebraska Supreme Court, D.Neb.1996, 927 F.Supp. 370. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 508

Former inmate's § 1983 claims challenged validity of his state conviction, sentence, and fact or duration of state's custody and, thus, former inmate's claim would be construed as petition for habeas corpus to extent he sought injunctive relief. Hand v. Young, D.Nev.1994, 868 F.Supp. 289. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 666

5691. ---- Dismissal or stay of proceedings, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Prisoner's §§ 1983 claim, seeking stay of execution and alleging that Alabama's failure to adopt American Bar Association's guidelines for counsel in death penalty cases as binding constituted a denial of his right to counsel and due process, constituted the "functional equivalent" of a second habeas petition, as it attacked the validity of his conviction and sentence, not the circumstances of his confinement. Hutcherson v. Riley, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 468 F.3d 750. Habeas Corpus 894.1

Action under § 1983, rather than habeas corpus proceeding, was appropriate vehicle for as-applied constitutional attack on implementation of state court ruling limiting amount of discretionary good-time credit that any inmate could receive, as ruling did not result in loss of good-time already awarded and did not inevitably affect duration of sentence. Hadley v. Holmes, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 341 F.3d 661, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 2398, 541 U.S. 1067, 158 L.Ed.2d 970. Habeas Corpus 342

When state prisoner seeks damages in § 1983 suit, district court must consider whether judgment in favor of prisoner would necessarily imply invalidity of his conviction or sentence; if it would, complaint must be dismissed unless prisoner can demonstrate that conviction or sentence has already been invalidated. Neal v. Shimoda, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1997, 131 F.3d 818. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Dismissal of § 1983 claim without prejudice did not deprive petitioner of federal forum for his claim of Fourth Amendment violation concerning search by arresting officers, in light of defendant's failure to overturn his conviction for driving under influence (DUI); unless and until conviction was set aside, petitioner simply lacked any legitimate § 1983 claim requiring adjudication. Schilling v. White, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 58 F.3d 1081. Civil Rights 1088(3)

In situations where inmate's civil rights complaints involving monetary claims are construed as petitions for habeas corpus, but claims were not exhausted in state courts and officials named as defendants timely raise this defense, district court must, prior to dismissing complaint, consider what effect dismissal will have in terms of inmate's ability to relitigate claims after state court exhaustion in light of applicable statute of limitations, and thus determine whether dismissal or stay of proceedings is appropriate. Prather v. Norman, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 901 F.2d 915. Habeas Corpus 431

5692. ---- Assistance of counsel, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Claim by state prisoner that his counsel's representation at trial violated his constitutional right to fair trial had to be pursued as petition for writ of habeas corpus rather than claim for damages under § 1983; prisoner was essentially challenging constitutionality of his conviction, and doctrine of comity mandated that prisoner first exhaust his state remedies prior to bringing suit under § 1983. Peterson v. Murante, W.D.N.Y.1987, 673 F.Supp. 669. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1319

Inmate's action charging that defendants wrongfully interfered with his attorney-client relationship so as to deprive him of his right to fair assistance of counsel was, in fact, a challenge to legality of his confinement and, thus, was in nature of a habeas corpus petition despite civil rights characterization of the claim. Flaherty v. Nadjari, E.D.N.Y.1982, 548 F.Supp. 1127. Habeas Corpus 666

5693. ---- Conspiracy, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Sole federal remedy of criminal defendant alleging, in civil rights suit against state judge who presided over criminal trial, district attorney, assistant district attorneys, narcotics agents who testified at trial, court reporter and state clerk of court, a conspiracy with regard to giving of perjured testimony by narcotics agents, was habeas corpus, not a civil rights suit, because if facts alleged in complaint were proved, they would factually undermine or conflict with state court conviction which resulted in his confinement. Clark v. Williams, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 693 F.2d 381. Civil Rights 1311

5694. ---- Contempt, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Contemnor challenging contempt judgment under which city sought to imprison her, rather than conditions of her prospective confinement, did not state valid claim for relief under § 1983; appropriate remedy was writ of habeas corpus. Kirsh v. Michetti, S.D.N.Y.1992, 787 F.Supp. 403. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 528.1

5695. ---- Good-time credits, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Complaint in which federal prisoner alleged that prison officials deprived him of good time credits in violation of due process was properly treated as a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Ross v. Mebane, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1976, 536 F.2d 1199. Habeas Corpus 666

Disciplinary sentence that resulted in loss of two years of existing good-time credit affected overall length of state prisoner's confinement, such that habeas corpus proceeding, not federal civil rights action, was sole federal remedy for claimed deprivations of due process in disciplinary proceedings. Griffin v. Selksy, W.D.N.Y.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 429. Civil Rights 1311

Habeas corpus, rather than a § 1983 action, is the appropriate remedy for a prisoner who has been deprived of good time credits or demoted in good time credit earning classification. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 515

Correcting any improper revocation of prisoner's good time is something that can be done only through habeas corpus proceedings, not through civil rights action. Rucker v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1989, 724 F.Supp. 568. Civil Rights 1311

Habeas corpus proceeding, rather than §§ 1983 action, was appropriate means for state prisoner to seek restoration of earned-time credits that he lost when he was classified as a sex offender allegedly in violation of due process. Fistell v. Neet, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2005, 125 Fed.Appx. 219, 2005 WL 408055, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 342

State prisoners' challenges to constitutionality of their parole-eligibility proceedings and parole-suitability proceedings were not collateral attacks on duration of their confinement required be raised in habeas corpus proceeding, rather than in action under §§ 1983 seeking declaratory and injunctive relief; although prisoners sought relief that would invalidate state procedures used to deny parole eligibility and parole suitability, neither sought an injunction ordering his immediate or speedier release into the community. Wilkinson v. Dotson, U.S.2005, 125 S.Ct. 1242, 544 U.S. 74, 161 L.Ed.2d 253, on remand 448 F.3d 936. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311

State inmate's claim that he was unconstitutionally denied placement in state's pre-parole conditional supervision (PPCS) program challenged fact or duration of inmate's confinement, rather than conditions of confinement, and therefore claim had to be pursued via petition for writ for habeas corpus, rather than under §§ 1983, notwithstanding inmate's characterization of claim as challenging whether his conditions of confinement should be those of medium security facility or PPCS program's minimal security provisions, inasmuch as PPCS placement secured type of release from physical custody that could not be viewed as slight variance in circumstances of confinement. Boutwell v. Keating, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 399 F.3d 1203. Civil Rights 1097; Civil Rights 1311

State prisoners' constitutional challenges to state's sex offender treatment program, pursuant to which they were labelled as sexual offenders and required to complete treatment as precondition of parole eligibility, did not undermine validity of their convictions or continuing confinement, and thus were properly brought under § 1983; only benefit of victory, in terms of confinement, was that prisoners would become eligible for parole consideration according to terms of their sentences. Neal v. Shimoda, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1997, 131 F.3d 818. Civil Rights 1097

Prisoner properly raised claim under federal civil rights statute, and thus was not required to instead pursue writ of habeas corpus, where his complaint alleged that reasons given for four parole denials were vague and ambiguous and thus did not comply with due process notice requirements, that numerous parole review procedures violated due process, and that application of new procedures violated ex post facto prohibition, as it appeared that favorable determination of these issues would not automatically entitle prisoner to accelerated release. Orellana v. Kyle, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 65 F.3d 29, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 736, 516 U.S. 1059, 133 L.Ed.2d 686. Civil Rights 1311

Where state prisoner's complaint against State Board of Pardons and Paroles and its chairman did not seek prisoner's release, but alleged that he was arbitrarily denied face-to-face interview before denial of application for parole, complaint was not properly construed as habeas corpus petition, subject to exhaustion requirements. Williams v. McCall, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1976, 531 F.2d 1247. Habeas Corpus 670(8)

Inmate who attacked his parole hearing as constitutionally defective was required to exhaust his state habeas corpus remedies before asserting claim for injunctive relief to prevent parole board from considering his allegedly "void" prior convictions in future parole hearings; although inmate contended that his pleadings constituted civil rights complaint under § 1983, inmate was challenging only a single defective hearing, and thus it was appropriate to treat challenge as petition for writ of habeas corpus. Cook v. Collins, W.D.Tex.1993, 830 F.Supp. 348. Civil Rights 1319; Habeas Corpus 364; Habeas Corpus 666

5697. ---- Prisoner discipline, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

State inmate's civil rights suit, claiming that prison discipline violated his due process rights and seeking damages, but not release from custody, should not have been ordered recast into habeas corpus petition. Moore v. Pemberton, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 110 F.3d 22. Habeas Corpus 208

State prisoner's contention that he was denied due process in prison disciplinary hearing was in reality a challenge to the duration of his confinement, and as such could not properly be urged in a civil rights suit. Johnson v. Hardy, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1979, 601 F.2d 172. Civil Rights 1092

5698. ---- Release from confinement, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Proper venue for inmate to pursue requests that his misconduct violation be expunged and revoked credits restored was in a petition for writ of habeas corpus, rather than an action under § 1983, given that the request constituted a challenge to the length or duration of his custody because the restoration of credits would result in a speedier release from imprisonment. Roberts v. Champion, N.D.Okla.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 1272, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 108, 2004 WL 249617. Civil Rights 1311

To extent that inmate sought release from confinement as remedy for alleged denial of access to courts, inmate was required to request release from incarceration pursuant to motion under habeas corpus statute, not § 1983 claim. Williams-El v. Dunning, E.D.Va.1993, 816 F.Supp. 418. Civil Rights 1094

To extent state prisoner was seeking his release from confinement based upon failure to provide him with timely parole revocation hearing, prisoner should have pursued petition for writ of habeas corpus, rather than action under § 1983. Camardo v. Walker, D.R.I.1992, 794 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1311

Inmate could not seek relief from his incarceration from state police in § 1983 action; action for habeas corpus was exclusive means by which he could do so. Study v. U.S., S.D.Ind.1991, 782 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 201

Former patient of state mental institution, who was merely challenging procedures by which his first trial visit was revoked, and was not seeking release from confinement, properly premised his lawsuit on 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, rather than bringing habeas corpus proceedings. Birl v. Wallis, M.D.Ala.1985, 619 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1311; Habeas Corpus 537.1

Habeas corpus was proper remedy for New York prison inmate, who sought a declaration of an earlier determination of his jail term and an earlier release from confinement, rather than action under this section. Thibadoux v. Jones, N.D.N.Y.1981, 505 F.Supp. 1107. Habeas Corpus 503.1

A state prisoner challenging the fact or duration of his custody and seeking immediate or speedier release therefrom must proceed under federal habeas statute, while a prisoner challenging the conditions of his custody must seek relief under §§ 1983. Jacobs v. Bertrand, E.D.Wis.2005, 228 F.R.D. 627, reconsideration denied 2005 WL 1719285. Habeas Corpus 207

Civil committee's §§ 1983 action, alleging confinement in violation of his constitutional rights, was barred by committee's failure to obtain invalidation of his commitment as a sexually violent predator, warranting dismissal of action without prejudice; proper means of seeking immediate or early release from confinement was through petition for writ of habeas corpus. Banda v. New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 134 Fed.Appx. 529, 2005 WL 1332613, Unreported, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 575, 163 L.Ed.2d 481. Habeas Corpus 537.1

Insofar as California prisoner sought to be released from state custody because of an invalid state court conviction or sentence, he was seeking habeas relief; accordingly, his § 1983 complaint would be dismissed without prejudice to his bringing his claims in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, after he had exhausted his state court remedies by presenting his claims to the Supreme Court of California. Robinson v. Santa Clara County Dist. Attorney's Office, N.D.Cal.2002, 2002 WL 31499002, Unreported. Civil Rights 1311 condition for parole in actuality involved a request for release or a shortening of the duration of his confinement, which was properly pursued through a petition for habeas corpus relief, rather than through a § 1983 action. Benke v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 230 F.3d 1362, Unreported. Civil Rights 1097

5699. ---- Miscellaneous actions, treatment of civil rights action as habeas corpus

Heck v. Humphrey rule, which precluded actions which would imply invalidity of conviction or sentence, did not preclude §§ 1983 action filed by state prisoner, seeking to compel state to release certain biological evidence that was used to convict him of kidnapping and sexual assault for DNA testing; prisoner's success in action would only yield access to evidence, results of further DNA testing may have no effect on validity of his confinement, and even if results of further testing did exonerate prisoner, a separate action, alleging a separate constitutional violation, would be required to overturn his conviction. Osborne v. District Attorney's Office for Third Judicial Dist., C.A.9 (Alaska) 2005, 423 F.3d 1050. Civil Rights 1088(5)

Inmate's § 1983 action challenging the method of administering the lethal injection of drugs at his execution as a constitutional violation of his right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment and seeking an injunction to postpone his execution was required to be treated as a second habeas action. In re Williams, C.A.6 2004, 359 F.3d 811, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1478, 540 U.S. 1206, 158 L.Ed.2d 129. Habeas Corpus 666; Habeas Corpus 894.1

Civil rights action filed by state prisoner, seeking to compel state officials to produce biological evidence for DNA testing on theory that, by refusing to release such evidence, officials violated his constitutional rights by preventing him from gaining access to exculpatory evidence excluding him as perpetrator, was, in effect, a challenge to validity of his capital murder conviction, and was properly denied as successive habeas petition. Kutzner v. Montgomery County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2002, 303 F.3d 339. Habeas Corpus 666; Habeas Corpus 894.1

Claims against state and federal officials for breach of plea agreements, implicating the terms of prisoner's conviction or sentence, had to be raised pursuant to a habeas petition, and thus did not state claim as § 1983 or Bivens action. Buhrman v. Wilkinson, S.D.Ohio 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 1110, supplemented 2004 WL 2044055, report and recommendation adopted 2004 WL 2044056. Civil Rights 1311; United States 50.10(3)

An application for a writ of mandamus, rather than a § 1983 action, was the proper vehicle with which to address federal habeas petitioner's claims that the district court unduly delayed the resolution of his habeas petition. D'Amato v. Rattoballi, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 359, 2003 WL 22955858, Unreported. Civil Rights 1313

Supreme Court review of state court decision 5723

5721. Review of administrative decision

Decision which was rendered in state administrative proceedings and was not reviewed by state courts had preclusive effect on racial discrimination claims of university employee asserted under reconstruction civil rights statutes and, thus, precluded trial de novo on those claims in federal district court. University of Tennessee v. Elliott, U.S.Tenn.1986, 106 S.Ct. 3220, 478 U.S. 788, 92 L.Ed.2d 635. Judgment 828.7

In § 1983 actions, federal courts must afford same preclusive effect to unreviewed state administrative agency fact-finding to which it would be entitled in state's courts, provided state agency was acting in judicial capacity, and resolved disputed issues of fact properly before it which parties had adequate opportunity to litigate. Thornquest v. King, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 82 F.3d 1001, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 111 F.3d 899. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Federal Courts 433

County's grievance procedure provided employees with adequate opportunity to litigate, despite fact that there was no opportunity for court review of adverse finding; therefore, since administrative panel was acting in judicial capacity in grievance procedure, resolving issues of fact properly before it which parties had adequate opportunity to litigate, district court was precluded from reviewing panel's findings of fact under Supreme Court decision in University of Tennessee v. Elliott which requires district court in a § 1983 action to give agency's fact-finding same preclusive effect to which it would be entitled in state's courts. Layne v. Campbell County Dept. of Social Services, C.A.4 (Va.) 1991, 939 F.2d 217. Administrative Law And Procedure 501; Officers And Public Employees 72.33(1)

District court did not conduct mandatory de novo review of findings by United States Magistrate Judge, who had recommended dismissal of prison inmate's § 1983 action, where evidentiary hearing transcript was not available, and the district court's order adopting Magistrate's report and recommendations indicated only that court had reviewed Magistrate's findings and recommendations and objections thereto, without any mention of a review of the evidentiary-hearing tapes. Lair v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 242 F.3d 375, Unreported. United States Magistrates 27

5722. District court review of state court decision

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction, under the collateral order doctrine, over appeal by police chief and members of village's board of police commissioners from order denying their motion for summary judgment based on defense of qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action, but Court was required to accept version of the disputed facts offered by former police officers who brought suit and could not examine the sufficiency-of-the-evidence determinations made by the district court. Skehan v. Village of Mamaroneck, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 96. Federal Courts 770

Proceedings that culminated in Illinois Supreme Court's decision to allow to stand state bar character and fitness committee's rejection of bar applicant's application were "judicial proceedings," and the Illinois Supreme Court decision was an "adjudication" in which applicant was able to litigate his constitutional challenges to the committee's decision, even though the Court decided applicant's petition for review on a paper record, and thus, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine and res judicata principles applied to preclude applicant's § 1983 action against the committee in federal court for same alleged violations of constitutional rights he asserted in his petition to the Illinois Supreme Court. Hale v. Committee on Character and Fitness for State of Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 335 F.3d 678. Courts 509; Judgment 552; Judgment 560; Judgment 720

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not apply to bar building owner's action alleging that city's zoning officials violated its due process rights by refusing to classify a sign on the wall of its building as a lawful non-conforming use, which concerned the city's the pre-litigation conduct rather than an injury caused by a judicial decision, though state court upheld a fine imposed on lessee of the wall for failure to remove the sign. General Auto Service Station LLC v. City of Chicago, Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 319 F.3d 902. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine precluded district court jurisdiction over junior mortgagee's civil rights action against village which was winning bidder at foreclosure sale, alleging that village had depressed price by commencing condemnation action in state court while foreclosure action was pending, where mortgagee was attacking state court's judgment confirming foreclosure sale and had no claim independent of the state court's adverse decision. GASH Associates v. Village of Rosemont, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 995 F.2d 726, rehearing denied. Courts 509

Landowners could not bring § 1983 action in federal district court, claiming that state court judgment of foreclosure, for failure to pay property tax, violated their due process rights; landowners were essentially asking for federal district court review of state court decision, prohibited under Rooker-Feldman doctrine. Ritter v. Ross, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1993, 992 F.2d 750, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 694, 510 U.S. 1046, 126 L.Ed.2d 661. Courts 509

Texas Supreme Court's denial of plaintiff's motion seeking recusal or disqualification on basis of due process clause could not be reviewed in federal district court in action claiming that Rule of Appellate Procedure on disqualification and recusal violated due process; plaintiff's constitutional challenge to rule and due process concerns were presented to and decided by Texas Supreme Court. Howell v. Supreme Court of Texas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 885 F.2d 308, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 3213, 496 U.S. 936, 110 L.Ed.2d 661. Federal Courts 1142

Federal courts do not review state court civil proceedings under the guise of this subchapter. Fortune v. Mulherrin, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1976, 533 F.2d 21, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 170, 429 U.S. 864, 50 L.Ed.2d 143. Courts 509

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not apply to bar suit brought by Medicaid claimant with chronic progressive multiple sclerosis and pulmonary dysfunction, alleging that state department of social and rehabilitative services' denial of claimant's request for vest airway clearance system violated ADA; no state court judgment had been reached. Sanders ex rel. Rayl v. Kansas Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, D.Kan.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 1233. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred federal district court from exercising jurisdiction over fraud, § 1983 and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) claims brought by former husband against former wife and against receiver appointed, pursuant to divorce proceeding, to sell couple's real property and divide proceeds; claims were brought primarily to attack receiver's authority to act as receiver and thus were inextricably intertwined with state-court judgment in divorce proceeding, regardless of federal statutes cited. Huszar v. Zeleny, E.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 98. Courts 509

A party may not escape the jurisdictional bar of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine by merely refashioning its attack on the state court judgment as a § 1983 claim. Rogers v. Swepston, S.D.W.Va.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 549. Courts 509

To extent that plaintiff sought vacation or reversal of state court judge's dismissal of plaintiff's suit, based either upon claims of bias or alleged refusal to allow plaintiff representation, action was collateral attack in federal court on state court judgment, barred by Rooker-Feldman doctrine. Davidson v. Garry, E.D.N.Y.1996, 956 F.Supp. 265, affirmed 112 F.3d 503. Courts 509

This section does not provide for any general procedure for review of judgments or decrees of state courts. O'Connor v. O'Connor, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1963, 315 F.2d 420. See, also, Greene v. State of N.Y., D.C.N.Y.1967, 281 F.Supp. 579. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred district court from exercising jurisdiction over a father's civil rights action against state and judges who presided over state court proceedings concerning his minor child's custody and granting visitation rights to the child's maternal grandparents, in which father sought a restraining order to prevent the state court from enforcing the prior court-ordered visitation. Thurgood v. Burton, D.Utah 2003, 248 F.Supp.2d 1090, affirmed 56 Fed.Appx. 460, 2003 WL 465555, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 82, 540 U.S. 817, 157 L.Ed.2d 34. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine precluded district court's assertion of jurisdiction over § 1983 suit brought by natural father of children against city child welfare services, seeking injunction compelling return of children surrendered for adoption and damages for violation of his federal due process rights; father could not relitigate state custody action in federal court. Alleyne v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 244 F.Supp.2d 214. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, precluding federal court review of state court decisions, deprived court of jurisdiction over § 1983 civil suit brought by claimant alleging violation of his federal rights in connection with his arrest and incarceration for failure to comply with several municipal court judgments imposing civil forfeitures; all federal claims involved impermissible consideration of whether state judgments were wrongful. Haas v. Wisconsin, E.D.Wis.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 922, affirmed 109 Fed.Appx. 107, 2004 WL 1799360, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 908, 543 U.S. 1053, 160 L.Ed.2d 776. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which prohibits federal courts from reviewing state court judgments, did not prohibit district court from entertaining § 1983 action against three judges of state resentencing panel who removed prisoner from intensive supervision program (ISP), where decision was not appealable under state system and panel was acting in many ways as administrative, rather than judicial body. Forchion v. Intensive Supervised Parole, D.N.J.2003, 240 F.Supp.2d 302. Courts 509

Federal district court lacked jurisdiction under Rooker-Feldman doctrine to entertain § 1983 claims of landowners, who alleged that commercial entrance permit required by engineer violated their equal protection and due process rights, even though plaintiffs did not directly challenge or attack associated state court judgment; state court determined that issuance of permit to landowners was impermissible because road did not meet statutory requirements and court impliedly determined that permit requirement was constitutional as applied to landowners. Shooting Point, L.L.C. v. Cumming, E.D.Va.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 729, motion to amend denied 243 F.Supp.2d 536, affirmed 368 F.3d 379. Courts 509

State court motions by corporate owner of rental properties to have condemnation of one building for code violations lifted did not preclude federal court, under Rooker-Feldman doctrine from hearing § 1983 claims by president of company, alleging that condemnation was in retaliation for constitutionally protected activity such as filing lawsuits; president was not a party to the state court proceeding. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Courts 509

Federal court did not lack subject matter jurisdiction under Rooker-Feldman doctrine over § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of city's system-wide policy of resolving any ambiguity in child abuse investigation in favor of finding that abuse had occurred, even if exercise of jurisdiction would result in reversal or modification of state family court judgments upholding removal of plaintiffs' children; action did not challenge finding of neglect or abuse in any particular case. People United for Children, Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2000, 108 F.Supp.2d 275. Courts 509

Under Rooker-Feldman doctrine, district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over parent's federal civil rights claim that he had been deprived of constitutional rights without due process by order issued in his state court child custody proceeding which prohibited him from having any contact with his child pending custody hearing, as such claim was inextricably intertwined with merits of the state court's order. Logan v. Lillie, E.D.Pa.1997, 965 F.Supp. 695, affirmed 142 F.3d 428. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine, under which federal district courts lack jurisdiction to review final state court decisions, barred § 1983 equal protection claim brought by former city police officers after Pennsylvania court upheld arbitrator's decision that officers were not entitled to compensation for accrued, unused vacation time; officers' § 1983 complaint was in essence a prohibited appeal of a final state court decision since officers were asking federal court effectively to overrule Pennsylvania court. Kirby v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1995, 905 F.Supp. 222. Courts 509

Puerto Rico superior court resolution which upheld attachment order against procedural due process challenge could not be reviewed by federal court by way of civil rights action against superior court judge and parties to the superior court action. Radiology Institute, Inc. v. Padilla Rodriguez, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 818 F.Supp. 477. Courts 509

Judge who brought action against Pennsylvania Judicial Inquiry and Review Board and Pennsylvania Supreme Court challenging his removal from office did not avoid requirements of rule prohibiting federal district courts from reviewing decision of state's highest court by requesting only declaratory relief, where judge sought to use declaration in offensive manner to prevent ongoing state proceeding. White v. Judicial Inquiry and Review Bd. of Pennsylvania, E.D.Pa.1990, 744 F.Supp. 658. Courts 509

Section 1983 is not means for litigating in federal forum whether state or local administrative decision was wrong or even whether it was arbitrary or capricious. Blake v. Ambach, S.D.N.Y.1988, 691 F.Supp. 651. Civil Rights 1027

Federal district court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction to review claims that state courts acted unconstitutionally in disposition of plaintiff's case; proper forum would be the Supreme Court. Rosquist v. Jarrat Const. Corp., D.C.N.J.1983, 570 F.Supp. 1206. Federal Courts 501; Federal Courts 973

Rooker-Feldman doctrine barred claims in § 1983 action alleging due process violations by state court judge who presided over quiet title action following tax seizure; district court lacked jurisdiction to determine propriety of state court's rulings. Searcy v. Clawson, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 70 Fed.Appx. 907, 2003 WL 21523644, Unreported. Courts 509

Both aspects of tenant's § 1983 claim against her landlord, which were that there were omissions from her eviction notice and that omitted Housing and Urban Development (HUD) regulations rendered her lease illegal, were germane to issue of possession and could have been raised in state court proceedings, and thus, Rooker-Feldman doctrine deprived federal district court of jurisdiction over tenant's subsequent § 1983 claim; although under Illinois law only claims or defenses that are germane to the right of possession may be raised in a forcible entry and detainer proceeding, one category of such issues includes claims challenging the validity or enforceability of agreement on which plaintiff bases right to possession. Chambers v. Habitat Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 68 Fed.Appx. 711, 2003 WL 21377492, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1064, 540 U.S. 1119, 157 L.Ed.2d 913. Courts 509

District court was not barred from deciding property owner's § 1983 claims against town and town officials, based upon the demolition of building on his property, under Rooker-Feldman doctrine, barring a lower federal court from exercising jurisdiction over a case if doing so would result in the reversal or modification of a state court judgment; although prior New York state court proceeding, in which owner petitioned for stay of town's planned demolition was dismissed, on statute of limitations grounds, § 1983 claims could not have been raised in prior state proceeding, as building had not been demolished at time state proceeding commenced. Davis v. Ferdico, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 43, 2003 WL 21309149, Unreported. Courts 509

Court of Appeals was precluded, on basis of Rooker-Feldman doctrine, from reviewing state court decisions which resulted in mother being stripped of her custody of her adult, developmentally disabled son and denied visitation privileges. Flejter v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 61 Fed.Appx. 257, 2003 WL 721724, Unreported. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not bar homeowners' § 1983 action alleging that demolition company violated their civil rights by conspiring with city to demolish their home and property, even though demolition of residence was done pursuant to state court order, where owners alleged that company went beyond scope of order and destroyed other items not included in order. Fredericksen v. L.A. Demolition, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 54 Fed.Appx. 858, 2002 WL 31856361, Unreported. Courts 509

Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not require district court to abstain from consideration of claims for prospective declaratory relief of custodial parents of minor children, who alleged that ex parte custody procedures followed by judge of county domestic relations court violated their due process rights, since some claims did not require reversal of specific decisions made by state court or substantive review of merits of decisions made by that court, and other claims may not have implicated merits of such decisions, depending upon how parents put on their proof. Butterfield v. Steiner, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31159304, Unreported. Courts 509

Interlocutory decision of Alabama Supreme Court, that Alabama Wrongful Death Act's allowance of only punitive damages governed recovery on federal civil rights claim when decedent's estate alleged that death resulted from deprivation of federal rights, and remanding cause for further proceedings on remaining state-law claims, did not finally decide federal issue, as required for certiorari review; resolution of state-law claims could effectively moot federal-law question, and issue could be reviewed on final judgement, even if Alabama Supreme Court adhered to its interlocutory ruling as "law of the case." Jefferson v. City of Tarrant, Ala., U.S.Ala.1997, 118 S.Ct. 481, 522 U.S. 75, 139 L.Ed.2d 433. Federal Courts 503

District court retained no further jurisdiction after it certified findings and conclusions following additional merits hearing ordered by Court of Appeals in prisoner's §§ 1983 action challenging lethal injection protocol. Taylor v. Crawford, C.A.8 2006, 457 F.3d 902. Federal Courts 951.1

Once a determination has been made by a state court relative to existence or nonexistence of a federal right, and any possible infringement of that right, the only avenue of review is to United States Supreme Court via 28 U.S.C.A. § 1257(3). Carbonell v. Louisiana Dept. of Health & Human Resources, C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 772 F.2d 185 . Federal Courts 504.1

5724. Court of appeals review of district court decision--Generally

Court of Appeals lacked appellate jurisdiction over child protection investigator's appeal of summary judgment denying qualified immunity, with respect to action brought by child-care provider alleging that investigator violated her due process rights by indicating her for child neglect or abuse despite knowing there was no evidence that she abused child in question; fact issues existed as to whether investigator indicated provider without any evidence of abuse or neglect. Via v. LaGrand, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 469 F.3d 618. Federal Courts 579

District court retained no further jurisdiction after it certified findings and conclusions following additional merits hearing ordered by Court of Appeals in prisoner's §§ 1983 action challenging lethal injection protocol. Taylor v. Crawford, C.A.8 2006, 457 F.3d 902. Federal Courts 951.1

District Court order granting partial summary judgment in §§ 1983 action in favor of former District of Columbia employees, and reinstating disability benefits to hundreds of employees, was "appealable injunction," and thus Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review order; the District Court ordered the relief sought by employees in their motion for preliminary injunction. Lightfoot v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2006, 448 F.3d 392, 371 U.S.App.D.C. 95. Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to review, on appeal from denial of summary judgment to police officers asserting defense of qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action, whether police were justified in using deadly force against passenger following stop of automobile, because district court's ruling was premised on genuineness of dispute about material facts, namely, whether passenger complied with officers' commands and whether he possessed a handgun. Holeman v. City of New London, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 425 F.3d 184. Federal Courts 766

Evidence that was not submitted to jury, in murder suspect's § 1983 action against sheriff, could not be considered for first time on appeal. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Federal Courts 752

Court of Appeals could not review jury verdict against citizen, who brought § 1983 action against county, sheriff, and deputy alleging unreasonable search and seizure, false arrest, and malicious prosecution, since she failed to challenge verdict at trial level by filing motion for judgment as matter of law or, in the alternative, for new trial, and district court's denial of her summary judgment motion could not be reviewed after full trial on the merits. Eaddy v. Yancey, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 317 F.3d 914. Federal Courts 642; Federal Courts 769

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction over police officer's appeal from district court's denial of officer's motion for leave to file renewed motion for summary judgment based on qualified immunity in § 1983 action by estate of suspect, alleging that officer used excessive force when he shot and killed suspect while investigating burglary; officer failed to appeal from district court's denial of summary judgment, officer waited nearly ten months to bring motion to renew, and collateral order doctrine did not apply, since officer did not present additional facts, and initial denial of qualified immunity rested on determination that there were questions of fact. Garvin v. Wheeler, C.A.7 (Ind.) 2002, 304 F.3d 628. Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals applies objective standard to determine whether defendant raising qualified immunity defense in § 1983 action violated clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. Pallottino v. City of Rio Rancho, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1994, 31 F.3d 1023. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Plaintiff in § 1983 action waived appellate review by failing to file specific objections to magistrate judge's report after receiving proper notice; magistrate judge advised plaintiff that failure to file timely, specific objections to his recommendation could waive appellate review of a district court order based upon the recommendation, and despite this warning, plaintiff filed only general objections about the magistrate judge's handling of the case, but did not state how the magistrate judge's actions prejudiced her. Tyler v. Wates, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 289, 2003 WL 22999380, Unreported. United States Magistrates 31

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction over district court's determination that former client's § 1983 claim against attorney was barred by Heck v. Humphrey, where district court did not certify partial final judgment when it dismissed claim. Parrillo v. Reilly, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 59 Fed.Appx. 129, 2003 WL 137575, Unreported. Federal Courts 660.5

State inmate's failure to identify any error in his appellate brief, or to furnish reviewing court with a trial transcript or a reason to prepare one at government expense, precluded review of adverse judgment in § 1983 action brought against warden and others. Sherrod v. Hopkins, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2000, 210 F.3d 379, Unreported. Federal Courts 915

5725. ---- Scope of review, court of appeals review of district court decision

Appellate court, reviewing judgment according public officials qualified immunity from damages suit charging violation of federal right, need not disregard relevant legal authority not presented to or considered by court of first instance; appellate review of qualified immunity dispositions is to be conducted in light of all relevant precedents, not simply those cited to or discovered by district court. Elder v. Holloway, U.S.Idaho 1994, 114 S.Ct. 1019, 510 U.S. 510, 127 L.Ed.2d 344, on remand 22 F.3d 897. Federal Courts 755

Although Court of Appeals reviewed question of law when it reviewed federal district court's finding that police officers did not enjoy qualified immunity in § 1983 due process action against them, review neither required nor authorized de novo appellate review of evidence; rather, Court initially decided whether, taken in light most favorable to plaintiff, facts alleged showed that officers' conduct violated constitutional right, and if so, any subsequent review of sufficiency of evidence would be deferential. Newsome v. McCabe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 319 F.3d 301, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2621, 539 U.S. 943, 156 L.Ed.2d 630. Federal Courts 776; Federal Courts 858

Order denying absolute immunity in § 1983 action is immediately appealable, and Court of Appeals reviews denial of absolute immunity de novo. Martin v. Hendren, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 127 F.3d 720, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Courts 579; Federal Courts 776

Court of Appeals' review of jury charge was plenary, where plaintiff claimed district court employed an incorrect legal standard in stating that plaintiff was required to prove deliberate indifference by police officer to succeed on § 1983 claims of use of excessive force and arrest without probable cause. Mosley v. Wilson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 102 F.3d 85. Federal Courts 755

In reviewing qualified immunity defense to § 1983 excessive force claim arising from shooting by police officers who had entered individual's house without knocking and announcing, Court of Appeals would limit scope of its inquiry to the moments preceding shooting, as opposed to considering totality of circumstances; violation of knock and announce rule was conceptually different from excessive force claim, and importance of segmenting the two issues was minimized since Court had concluded that officers were qualifiedly immune from knock and announce claim. Dickerson v. McClellan, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1151. Civil Rights 1376(6)

District court's denial of qualified immunity claim is reviewed de novo. Ward v. Dyke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 58 F.3d 271, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 524, 516 U.S. 991, 133 L.Ed.2d 431. Federal Courts 776

Court of Appeals reviews denial of qualified immunity in § 1983 action de novo. Brady v. Fort Bend County, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 58 F.3d 173, rehearing en banc granted, dismissed. Federal Courts 776

Court of Appeals reviews de novo district court's legal determination that no constitutional claim was presented in § 1983 action. Whitmore v. Gaines, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 24 F.3d 1032, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Courts 776

Court of Appeals reviews de novo district court's denial of defense of qualified immunity. Hemphill v. Kincheloe, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 987 F.2d 589, as amended. Federal Courts 776

Court of Appeals would review de novo district court's decision to dismiss, for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, civil rights action of attorney and attorney's nonlegal associate challenging state attorney disciplinary proceedings. Leaf v. Supreme Court of State of Wis., C.A.7 (Wis.) 1992, 979 F.2d 589, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2417, 508 U.S. 941, 124 L.Ed.2d 639. Federal Courts 776

Appellate review of district court's denial of summary judgment on immunity grounds was de novo, in § 1983 action brought against state officials, as Court of Appeals would resolve only a question of law: whether plaintiff's factual allegations, if proven, made out a violation of clearly established law. Johnson v. Odom, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1273, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1387, 499 U.S. 936, 113 L.Ed.2d 443. Federal Courts 776 propriety of eviction warrant issued by New York housing court, affirmance of that decision by the Appellate Term, and denial of leave to appeal to Appellate Division, and therefore, pursuant to Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which prohibited federal court review of claims inextricably intertwined with prior state court determinations, district court lacked jurisdiction to consider claims. Babalola v. B.Y. Equities, Inc., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 63 Fed.Appx. 534, 2003 WL 1868487, Unreported. Courts 509

5726. ---- Damage awards, court of appeals review of district court decision

In suit against county and county investigator by husband of murder victim for violation of constitutional right to privacy by disclosing to author of book about the murder excerpts from victim's diary containing information that was both intimate and personal to husband, award of $650,000 damages did not shock the conscience of the Court of Appeals, so that denial of remittitur would be upheld. Sheets v. Salt Lake County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 45 F.3d 1383, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 74, 516 U.S. 817, 133 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1464

Compensatory damages for § 1983 purposes are governed by common-law tort principles; amount of damages awarded by fact finder must be sustained, absent error of law, unless reviewing court finds amount is clearly erroneous or so gross or inadequate as to be contrary to right reason. Thompkins v. Belt, C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 828 F.2d 298. Civil Rights 1464; Federal Courts 877

Amount of damages necessary to compensate an individual for deprivation of constitutional rights is a question of fact and therefore not to be upset on appeal unless district court's determination is clearly erroneous; factual determination can be found to be clearly erroneous only if court, after reviewing entire record, is left with the definite and firm conviction that mistake has been committed. Busche v. Burkee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1981, 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212. Federal Courts 853; Federal Courts 877

5727. Moot claims, review

Close of city-sponsored art exhibit mooted city's appeal from district court's grant of preliminary injunction to animal-rights organization in its §§1983 action against city alleging that denial of organization's entry in exhibit infringed organization's free speech; dispute was not likely to recur given its highly fact-specific nature, turning on such things as what design criteria city actually had employed, and even if it did recur, it would not evade review since organization would bring §§1983 action seeking both injunctive relief and damages. People for Ethical Treatment of Animals, Inc. v. Gittens, C.A.D.C.2005, 396 F.3d 416, 364 U.S.App.D.C. 386, rehearing denied, on remand 2005 WL 3536193. Federal Courts 724

State university professor's claim that district court erred in dismissing his conspiracy claims against interim department chair on basis of intracorporate immunity doctrine was moot in light of jury's verdict that there was no underlying constitutional injury; professor had alleged conspiracy to deprive him of his constitutional rights to free speech and free association. Cook v. Tadros, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2002, 312 F.3d 386. Federal Courts 13.30

Appeal of denial of writ of sequestration to prevent prisoner from depleting his prison bank account before satisfaction of court order directing prisoner to pay costs to prison officials arising out of prisoner's § 1983 action against officials was moot where judgment of costs had been satisfied. Amar v. Whitley, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 100 F.3d 22. Federal Courts 724

5728. Attorney fees, review

District court had discretion to award attorney fees at rate of $180, rather than at $200 current market rate claimed by attorney in his affidavit, in civil rights action by employee against his employer; affidavit claiming $200 rate did not specify that rate was in effect at time attorney represented employee, and attorney had stated that 80-90% of his practice was billed through his law firm and that the most recent civil rights litigation he undertook was billed at a rate of $180, although that case was not in federal court or contingent in nature. Denius v. Dunlap, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 330 F.3d 919. Civil Rights 1488

District court's award of attorney fees to plaintiff in civil rights action was reviewable for abuse of discretion, and Court of Appeals would find underlying factual findings reversible only if they were clearly erroneous. Sheets v. Salt Lake County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 45 F.3d 1383, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 74, 516 U.S. 817, 133 L.Ed.2d 34 . Federal Courts 830; Federal Courts 878

5729. Immunity determinations, review

"Qualified immunity" is an immunity from suit rather than a mere defense to liability; thus, in the interest of judicial economy, Court of Appeals reviews qualified immunity questions on interlocutory appeal rather than forcing the parties to endure trial, which would be rendered futile if the defendants were found to have been immune from suit on direct appeal. Board v. Farnham, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 394 F.3d 469. Federal Courts 574

Court of Appeals would not exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction over appeal from district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of city and city police department in shooting victim's § 1983 claim, alleging failure to properly train police officer and unconstitutional practice regarding officer's use of firearms incidental to traffic stops, where Court of Appeals reviewed denial of officer's claim for qualified immunity arising from shooting, and factual issues involved in the municipal claims were separate and distinct from those involved in the qualified immunity defense. McCoy v. City of Monticello, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 342 F.3d 842. Federal Courts 768.1

On review of judgment entered for state prison officials in inmate's § 1983 action arising out of prison disciplinary proceeding, Court of Appeals was not required first to declare whether inmate stated claim for violation of constitutional right, before considering whether officials were entitled to qualified immunity, although this normally was "better" sequence of decisions, given that immunity issue was clear, there was no reason to believe that challenged prison regulation would repeatedly escape judicial review by reason of qualified immunity, and use of judicial resources to decide issue that would have no effect on result of litigation was unwarranted. Horne v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1999, 178 F.3d 603, amended 191 F.3d 244, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 594, 528 U.S. 1052, 145 L.Ed.2d 493. Federal Courts 753

District court's conclusory statements that right allegedly violated by city officials had been clearly established, thus denying qualified immunity to officials in § 1983 action, fell short of requisite fact-intensive inquiry; nowhere in its decision did district court analyze specific conduct of each official with respect to constitutional right at issue. Grant v. City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 98 F.3d 116, opinion after remand 225 F.3d 648, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 1354, 532 U.S. 919, 149 L.Ed.2d 284. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Court of Appeals did not have jurisdiction of county officials' appeal of district court order denying their claim of qualified immunity in former employee's §§ 1983 action alleging violation of his right to counsel under state law during his internal affairs interview, where district court's decision was based on fact dispute as to whether officials handled employee's interview in appreciably different manner due to his political affiliation. Carroll v. Rochford, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2005, 123 Fed.Appx. 456, 2005 WL 30311, Unreported. Federal Courts 579

5730. Punitive damages, review

Even where punitive damages award is not beyond outer constitutional limit marked out, however imprecisely, by Supreme Court's Gore decision, Court of Appeals retains appellate responsibility to review punitive awards for excessiveness in applying federal statutes such as § 1983; that task requires comparison with awards approved in similar cases to determine, as with compensatory awards, whether punitive award is so high as to shock judicial conscience and constitute denial of justice. Mathie v. Fries, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 121 F.3d 808. Federal Courts 763.1

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

5731. Summary judgment, review

The Court of Appeals would review the issue of whether court erred in granting employer's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the issue of emotional damages in employee's § 1983 action de novo. Denius v. Dunlap, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 330 F.3d 919. Federal Courts 776

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to hear appeal of department of motor vehicles investigator, in § 1983 lawsuit, even though district court denied investigator's motion for summary judgment on his qualified immunity defense; question of whether investigator was under clearly established constitutional obligation to notify prosecutor of newly received information establishing plaintiff's innocence could be adjudicated without reference to disputed facts. Kinzer v. Jackson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 139. Federal Courts 579

District court's determination that defendant correctional officers were not entitled to summary judgment based on defense of qualified immunity in § 1983 action was a purely legal determination over which Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review; defendants were not contesting sufficiency of employee's proof or district court's ruling that disputed issues of fact required denial of summary judgment motion but, rather, were arguing that even if employee's allegations were accepted as true, no clearly established constitutional right was violated. Jemmott v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 85 F.3d 61. Federal Courts 579

5732. Final orders, review

In a civil rights case, appellate jurisdiction based on the denial of qualified immunity does not extend to matters that are not final unless the two are inextricably intertwined; a district court's construction of a complaint to adequately allege a claim is not inextricably intertwined with a district court's ruling on qualified immunity. Wever v. Lincoln County, Nebraska, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2004, 388 F.3d 601. Federal Courts 579

Dismissal without prejudice of state prisoner's Eighth Amendment conditions of confinement claim against prison officials based upon prisoner's alleged failure to exhaust his available administrative remedies was final appealable decision, where time for filing administrative grievances for claim expired pursuant to prison regulations, so that prisoner's alleged failure to exhaust was not curable. Mitchell v. Horn, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 523, on remand 2005 WL 1060658. Federal Courts 589

5733. Interlocutory appeals, review--Generally

Interlocutory decision of Alabama Supreme Court, that Alabama Wrongful Death Act's allowance of only punitive damages governed recovery on federal civil rights claim when decedent's estate alleged that death resulted from deprivation of federal rights, was not final judgment, and was outside United States Supreme Court's jurisdiction to review on certiorari; Alabama Supreme Court decided federal-law issue on interlocutory certification from trial court, then remanded cause for further proceedings on remaining state-law claims. Jefferson v. City of Tarrant, Ala., U.S.Ala.1997, 118 S.Ct. 481, 522 U.S. 75, 139 L.Ed.2d 433. Federal Courts 503

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction over defendant town's and defendant police officer's interlocutory appeal from district court's decision that defendants were not entitled to summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in § 1983 excessive force action, to extent that appeal was based on either undisputed facts or version of facts presented by plaintiff. Cowan ex rel. Estate of Cooper v. Breen, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 352 F.3d 756. Federal Courts 579

The Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to review District Court's denial of private citizen's motion to dismiss § 1983 civil rights action against him, on grounds that private citizen did not act under color of state law, that complaint did not allege that private citizen himself caused any constitutional violation, or that action was time-barred, even though Court of Appeals reviewed, upon interlocutory appeal, the District Court's denial of qualified immunity, as other issues were not inextricably intertwined with the qualified immunity defense, nor were they otherwise necessary to ensure meaningful review of it. Toussie v. Powell, C.A.2 2003, 323 F.3d 178. Federal Courts 770

Under collateral order exception to final judgment rule, Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to review stay of civil rights action brought by federal prisoner seeking damages for deprivation of his constitutional rights in securing his conviction pending habeas review of those same allegations. Marchetti v. Bitterolf, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 968 F.2d 963. Federal Courts 579

District court order staying further consideration of civil rights action by prisoner, who had been prohibited from serving as jailhouse lawyer, pending exhaustion of state postconviction relief was an appealable "collateral order.". Munz v. Nix, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1990, 908 F.2d 267. Federal Courts 579

5734. ---- Qualified immunity, interlocutory appeals, review

County commission's assertion that sheriff was not county policymaker was a mere defense to liability, not an immunity from suit; thus any error in ruling on liability could be reviewed effectively on appeal from final judgment and order was not appealable under collateral order doctrine. Swint v. Chambers County Com'n, U.S.Ala.1995, 115 S.Ct. 1203, 514 U.S. 35, 131 L.Ed.2d 60, on remand 51 F.3d 988. Civil Rights 1376(6); Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals' limited jurisdiction to review interlocutory appeals from denial of qualified immunity in civil rights cases did not permit review of district court's crediting arrestee's version of facts or finding that arrestee was not collaterally estopped from bringing excessive force claim by his conviction for resisting arrest. Henderson v. Munn, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 439 F.3d 497. Federal Courts 579

District Court's decision to not rule on police officers' motion for summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in excessive force claim, and to instead grant arrestee an extension of time to respond to summary judgment motion was not a conclusive determination of issue of qualified immunity, and thus Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction over interlocutory appeal, where district court stayed further proceedings until qualified immunity issue was dealt with. Kimble v. Hoso, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 439 F.3d 331. Federal Courts 579

Denials of summary judgment motions of police officers and emergency medical technicians (EMTs) on section 1983 claims based on qualified immunity defense were subject to interlocutory review; however, officers' arguments that the district court erred in denying their defense of qualified immunity under New Jersey law, and claims raising evidentiary issues and issues of causation did not qualify for interlocutory review. Rivas v. City of Passaic, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2004, 365 F.3d 181. Federal Courts 579

The Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction, upon interlocutory appeal of denial of summary judgment, to consider police detectives' argument that factual issues concerning detainee's consent to the detention and interrogation were controverted, and so they were entitled to qualified immunity from liability in detainee's § 1983 Fourth Amendment claim; argument concerned the sufficiency of the evidence offered by detainee, and did not raise abstract legal issues that could be separated from fact disputes. Hatheway v. Thies, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1199. Federal Courts 579

Interlocutory appeal is available in § 1983 case to challenge trial judge's rejection of immunity defense where defendant contends that on stipulated facts, or on facts that plaintiff alleges are true, or on facts favorable to plaintiff that trial judge concluded jury might find, immunity defense is established as matter of law because those facts show either that he "didn't do it" or that it was objectively reasonable for him to believe that his action did not violate clearly established law. Tierney v. Davidson, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1998, 133 F.3d 189. Federal Courts 579

District court's denial of prison warden's and personnel officer's assertion of affirmative defense of qualified immunity to section 1983 claim was appealable on interlocutory basis, but review involved alternative inquiry of whether constitutional or statutory claim was stated and, if so, whether it was barred by doctrine of qualified immunity. Merritt v. Reed, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 120 F.3d 124. Federal Courts 579

Interlocutory appeal was available to determine whether, assuming plaintiff's version of facts was correct, police officers were entitled to qualified immunity in § 1983 action, even though district court denied officers' summary judgment motion on qualified immunity ground and stated that questions of fact prevented ruling that officers were entitled to qualified immunity, where district court never specified exactly what were those fact questions. Martinez v. City of Schenectady, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 115 F.3d 111. Federal Courts 579

City's interlocutory appeal of district court's order, finding city liable to antiabortion protestors who were arrested because it had been deliberately indifferent in failing to train its police force, was not inextricably intertwined with question whether defendant police officers were entitled to qualified immunity, and thus Court of Appeals lacked appellate jurisdiction to consider appeal of city. Veneklase v. City of Fargo, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1996, 78 F.3d 1264, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 178, 519 U.S. 867, 136 L.Ed.2d 118. Federal Courts 770

Although district court in § 1983 action phrased its denial of qualified immunity in terms of finding more than scintilla of evidence supporting constitutional violation by defendant, order was immediately reviewable, despite rule that defendant may not appeal summary judgment order insofar as order determines whether pretrial record sets forth genuine issue of fact for trial, because plaintiff's version of events, regardless of sufficiency of supporting evidence, did not state claim for such violation. Sanderfer v. Nichols, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 62 F.3d 151, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Federal Courts 579

Question of whether conditions of strip cell violated Eighth Amendment was closely related to question of whether prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity in inmate's action challenging conditions of his confinement and, thus, Court of Appeals, on appeal from denial of qualified immunity, had jurisdiction to decide whether summary judgment should have been granted on claim for injunctive relief. Williams v. Delo, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1995, 49 F.3d 442. Federal Courts 770

Public employee's allegations that he exercised First Amendment rights by appealing and protesting unjustified write-ups given him by supervisor, and that supervisor contributed to employee's failure to obtain promotion, did not negate supervisor's defense of qualified immunity to employee's First Amendment claims, and thus district court's allowance of discovery on issue of qualified immunity prior to ruling on supervisor's motion to dismiss was improper and immediately appealable as denial of benefits of qualified immunity defense; absent matter of public concern, gravamen of complaint was merely attempt to redress personal grievance. Wicks v. Mississippi State Employment Services, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1995, 41 F.3d 991, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2555, 515 U.S. 1131, 132 L.Ed.2d 809. Civil Rights 1398; Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals reviews § 1983 qualified immunity questions on interlocutory appeal to further goal of prompt resolution of claims against officials and because entitlement is immunity from suit which is effectively lost after trial. Rowland v. Perry, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 41 F.3d 167. Federal Courts 579

Defendant may appeal denial of claim of qualified immunity under collateral order doctrine in suit seeking both prospective relief and money damages; overruling Prisco, 851 F.2d 93. Acierno v. Cloutier, C.A.3 (Del.) 1994, 40 F.3d 597. Federal Courts 574

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction over appeal from denial of qualified immunity in § 1983 case, since determination by court that reasonable police officer could have believed that suspect fit description of fleeing felon against whom deadly force could legitimately be used would require resolution of fact questions regarding whether suspect's vehicle presented threat of serious physical harm and whether police officer unreasonably created encounter that ostensibly permitted officers to shoot and kill suspect. Estate of Starks v. Enyart, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 5 F.3d 230. Federal Courts 585.1

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction over officer's interlocutory appeal from denial of qualified immunity, even though appeal was from ruling on summary judgment motion filed after new trial was granted, as interests of qualified immunity would still be served in limited fashion; while officer had already been subjected to trial, his interests in avoidance of second trial and, ultimately, in avoiding liability, would still be served by successful assertion of defense. Spann v. Rainey, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1993, 987 F.2d 1110. Federal Courts 595

Government officials may file interlocutory appeal when trial court denies defense of qualified immunity from civil damages liability. Fortner v. Thomas, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1993, 983 F.2d 1024. Federal Courts 574

District court's order denying motion to dismiss on grounds of official immunity in civil rights action brought against county district attorney and city police officers was subject to appellate review under collateral order doctrine, although order did not resolve factual issues regarding defendants' conduct. Kulwicki v. Dawson, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 969 F.2d 1454. Federal Courts 574

While Court of Appeals may examine facts of controversy in determining whether it was "clearly established" at time that charged deeds of public official were forbidden, for purposes of defense of qualified immunity, it may not accept interlocutory appeal on issue of qualified immunity containing nothing but factual issue; public official's right to interlocutory appeal to vindicate right not to be tried does not encompass appeal to argue "we didn't do it." Elliott v. Thomas, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 937 F.2d 338, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 973, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L.Ed.2d 138, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1242, 502 U.S. 1121, 117 L.Ed.2d 475. Federal Courts 576.1

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction over interlocutory appeals of police officers sued in their individual capacities, based on defense of qualified immunity with respect to federal claims in civil rights action. Brown v. Grabowski, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1990, 922 F.2d 1097, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2827, 501 U.S. 1218, 115 L.Ed.2d 997. Federal Courts 579

State employees enjoyed immunity from suit, rather than immunity from liability, under Ohio law, and therefore district court's decision to exercise pendent jurisdiction over state-based wrongful death claim against corrections employees, effect of which was to subject employees to suit, was subject to immediate review under collateral order doctrine. Haynes v. Marshall, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1989, 887 F.2d 700. Federal Courts 583

Denial of plea of qualified immunity in civil rights action is generally appealable even though there is no final judgment on merits of case. Clark v. Link, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1988, 855 F.2d 156. Federal Courts 579

When defendant claims qualified and absolute immunity in civil rights action, Court of Appeals will not entertain interlocutory appeal on one of defenses while the other is reserved for later pretrial proceedings. Kaiter v. Town of Boxford, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1988, 836 F.2d 704. Federal Courts 579

Denial of claim of "qualified immunity" in § 1983 action was immediately appealable notwithstanding absence of final judgment. Whitt v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 832 F.2d 451. Federal Courts 579

In civil rights action, interlocutory appeal will lie from denial of summary judgment on claim of qualified immunity from damages, though petition for injunctive relief is pending; declining to follow Bever v. Gilbertson, 724 F.2d 1083 (4th Cir.). de Abadia v. Izquierdo Mora, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1986, 792 F.2d 1187. Federal Courts 579 claim, could appeal denial of motion as of right, same defendants were not entitled to interlocutory appeals on other claims as to which qualified immunity defense had not been asserted, nor could other defendants who had not asserted qualified immunity defense against any claims obtain interlocutory appeal. Small v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 401. Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals' limited jurisdiction over appeal from denial of police officers' motion for summary judgment, based on qualified immunity, in § 1983 action arising from warrantless search to which plaintiffs had allegedly consented, did not extend to evidentiary issue of whether plaintiffs' affidavits created a genuine issue of material fact for trial. Flannery v. Hyde, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 205 F.3d 1345, Unreported. Federal Courts 579

5735. ---- Sovereign immunity, interlocutory appeals, review

Whether § 1983 claims are barred by Eleventh Amendment immunity is issue that may be raised by interlocutory appeal under collateral order doctrine. Murphy v. State of Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1997, 127 F.3d 750. Federal Courts 574

5736. ---- Injunctions, interlocutory appeals, review

District court and appellate standards appropriate to granting or denying of preliminary injunction were inapplicable in § 1983 action even though district court's injunction was interlocutory in sense that it was entered not as part of final judgment and pending further court order; injunction represented court's final disposition of claims concerning jail conditions as they existed up to time of trial and was not preliminary injunction contemplating later disposition after trial. Harris v. Angelina County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1994, 31 F.3d 331, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1454; Civil Rights 1457(5)

Order granting medical school professor's motion for partial summary judgment on liability in suit challenging denial of tenure, and directing restoration of professor to her position until such time as she could be removed for cause, was immediately appealable as order granting injunction. Cohen v. Board of Trustees of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1989, 867 F.2d 1455. Federal Courts 573

Order which was entered in civil rights action and which denied plaintiff's motion to force city correctional department to give attorney-type visiting rights to three paraprofessionals assigned to action was procedural rather than substantive so that it was not appealable under § 1292 of Title 28, making decisions granting or denying injunctions appealable. Shakur v. Malcolm, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 525 F.2d 1144. Federal Courts 579

5737. ---- Summary judgment, interlocutory appeals, review

Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review an interlocutory appeal of a denial of a summary judgment motion based on qualified immunity if issues relate to whether actor actually committed act of which he is accused or other similar matters that the plaintiff must prove. Henderson v. Munn, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 439 F.3d 497. Federal Courts 574

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to hear interlocutory appeal of district court's grant of summary judgment for disabled New Mexico state employee on her breach of contract claim stemming from her termination; that claim was not necessarily related in any way to holding that due process was violated by lack of posttermination hearing but rather seemed to reflect finding that defendants breached implied employment contract by not properly performing procedures required by statute, and only issues inextricably intertwined with holding that defendants were not entitled to qualified immunity, such as §§ 1983 due process and equal protection claims, were subject to interlocutory appeals. Brown v. New Mexico State Personnel Office, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 399 F.3d 1248. Federal Courts 576.1

Denial of summary judgment motions based on qualified immunity in § 1983 action was not immediately appealable interlocutory order, given that denial was not based on any conclusion of law, but rather on existence of material factual issues rendering summary judgment inappropriate, and that the insufficiently developed record precluded assessment of qualified immunity claim. Naylor v. State of La., Dept. of Corrections, C.A.5 (La.) 1997, 123 F.3d 855. Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to consider appeal from denial of motion for summary judgment with respect to Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority (PREPA) executive director's entitlement to qualified immunity in § 1983 action against director and PREPA, alleging violation of right to freedom of association, where district court found there existed issues of material fact regarding PREPA's and director's conduct. Santiago-Mateo v. Cordero, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 109 F.3d 39. Federal Courts 595

Police officers' interlocutory appeal of denial of their motion for summary judgment in civil rights action alleging that officers used excessive force against arrestee was proper where appeal did not involve whether particular conduct occurred, but rather, whether uncontroverted conduct represented use of excessive force. Elliott v. Leavitt, C.A.4 (Md.) 1996, 99 F.3d 640, rehearing en banc denied 105 F.3d 174, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2512, 521 U.S. 1120, 138 L.Ed.2d 1015. Federal Courts 579

District court order, granting summary judgment to county sheriff in his official capacity in civil rights action in which other issues were left to be resolved at trial, did not fall within collateral order doctrine so as be appealable prior to the district court's final judgment, where that order would be reviewable on appeal from the district court court's final judgment, and where plaintiffs sought neither immediate entry of judgment nor certification of an interlocutory appeal. Myers v. Oklahoma County Bd. of County Com'rs, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 80 F.3d 421, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 383, 519 U.S. 963, 136 L.Ed.2d 301. Federal Courts 579

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to hear appeal by police officers of district court's denial of summary judgment on defense of qualified immunity, asserted in a civil rights action based on fatal shooting of man who allegedly pointed rifle at officers; district court did not conclude officers' actions were reasonable when, in denying plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, it stated that a jury could conclude officers had acted reasonably, and thus the issue in officers' appeal was not whether the constitutional right they allegedly violated was clearly established, so as to present an exception to rule against hearing interlocutory appeals of district court decisions. Myers v. Oklahoma County Bd. of County Com'rs, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 80 F.3d 421, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 383, 519 U.S. 963, 136 L.Ed.2d 301. Federal Courts 579

Whether there was verifying medical evidence that prisoner failed to receive the medical treatment he desired and, if he did not, whether there was verifying medical evidence that the failure to treat prisoner was sufficiently serious were questions beyond jurisdiction of appellate court in interlocutory appeal from denial of doctors' summary judgment motion based on qualified immunity in prisoner's § 1983 action. Miller v. Schoenen, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 75 F.3d 1305. Federal Courts 770

Absent certification to appeal decision, district court's ruling denying summary judgment to county and sheriff regarding training of chief criminal investigator for county in § 1983 action was merely interlocutory and was not appealable final decision over which court had jurisdiction. Haney v. City of Cumming, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 69 F.3d 1098, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1826, 517 U.S. 1209, 134 L.Ed.2d 931. Federal Courts 595

Where federal district court sitting in New York granted state prisoner's motion for summary judgment in default with respect to complaint alleging deprivation of civil rights based on claim that he had been denied due process by New York Parole Board in not being afforded copies of derogatory letters allegedly contained in his parole file, subsequent refusal to set aside default at time of entry of final judgment, despite court's statement that it had "accepted as valid" government counsel's excuses for delay which resulted in default, did not preclude review on merits by court of appeals where form of final judgment did not appear to be intended to preclude such review and where court of appeals could determine that government counsel had substantial meritorious defense. Williams v. Ward, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 556 F.2d 1143, certiorari dismissed 98 S.Ct. 469, 434 U.S. 944, 54 L.Ed.2d 323. Federal Courts 557

State inmate was not entitled to relief from prior judgment in §§ 1983 action denying his claim of denial of access to law library during his federal habeas proceedings, absent evidence that prison officials obtained summary judgment in their favor through fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct. Brooks v. Alameida, S.D.Cal.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 1179. Federal Civil Procedure 2654

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction on appeal from denial of summary judgment to determine whether arresting officers were entitled to qualified immunity from damages in civil rights suit on claim that arrest was made without probable cause, since there were material misstatements and omissions in affidavit, including potentially fabricated eyewitness identifications. Rivera v. Lopez, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 651, 2003 WL 21401292, Unreported. Federal Courts 579

5738. Pendent appellate jurisdiction, review

There is no reason not to examine a matter pendent to proper jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals when the jurisdictionally proper elements of the Court's decision have necessarily decided the pendent matter; thus, where a court grants summary judgment in §§ 1983 action to the individual defendants based on their qualified immunity on the grounds that the defendants did not violate the plaintiffs' constitutional rights, and that ruling necessarily forecloses a finding of municipal liability, the court may exercise its pendent appellate jurisdiction and reverse the denial of the municipality's summary judgment motion, as well. Skehan v. Village of Mamaroneck, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 96. Federal Courts 768.1

On state troopers' appeal of denial of their summary judgment motions based on qualified immunity with respect to continued roadside detention of plaintiff motorist and strip search of her, Court of Appeals lacked pendant appellate jurisdiction over motorist's cross-appeal, alleging that district court erred in denying summary judgment in her favor on legality of initial stop and arrest; determination of whether first trooper was entitled to qualified immunity for claims arising out of strip search would not necessarily determine whether he had sufficient reason to arrest motorist or whether second trooper had sufficient reason to stop her, nor was resolution of motorist's nonappealable claims essential for effective review of troopers' appealable claims. Foote v. Spiegel, C.A.10 (Utah) 1997, 118 F.3d 1416, on remand 995 F.Supp. 1347. Federal Courts 768.1

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction over appeal from trial court's denial of summary judgment for defendants in § 1983 civil rights action, based on trial court's finding that defendants did not have qualified immunity, since trial court's analysis of issues of whether defendant's failure to render medical aid and defendants' cover up of failure violated clearly established constitutional duty were pure issues of law that were not dependent upon resolution of any facts; issue of whether plaintiff's excessive force claim presented genuine issue of material fact was reviewable on Court of Appeals' option of exercising pendent appellate jurisdiction. Wilson v. Meeks, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1996, 98 F.3d 1247. Federal Courts 770

Court of Appeals had pendent appellate jurisdiction to consider issue of class certification on appeal from grant of temporary injunction which prohibited members of proposed class in action against manufacturers of asbestos-containing products from pursuing claims in any other court pending issuance of final order; issue of class certification directly controlled disposition of injunction, and there was no indication that district court might alter its class certification, as would militate against review. Georgine v. Amchem Products, Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 83 F.3d 610, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 379, 519 U.S. 957, 136 L.Ed.2d 297, affirmed 117 S.Ct. 2231, 521 U.S. 591, 138 L.Ed.2d 689. Federal Courts 770 immunity and, therefore, Court of Appeals could not exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction to review district court's refusal to grant summary judgment on county employee's First Amendment claim or employee's due process, equal protection, and federal conspiracy claims on which district court granted summary judgment for board of county commissioners and commissioners. Shinault v. Cleveland County Bd. of County Com'rs, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 82 F.3d 367, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 740, 519 U.S. 1078, 136 L.Ed.2d 678. Federal Courts 770

City's appeal of denial of summary judgment in former deputy chief of police's § 1983 and wrongful demotion action was inextricably intertwined with co-defendant chief of police's appeal, a properly reviewable claim, and, therefore, Court of Appeals would exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction over city's appeal; issues presented in city's appeal were no broader than those in chief of police's permissible collateral appeal and disposition of chief of police's appeal would fully dispose of claims against city. Moore v. City of Wynnewood, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1995, 57 F.3d 924. Federal Courts 770

5738A. Limitations, review

Prisoner forfeited any right to contest statute of limitations as ground for affirmance of grant of summary judgment in favor of state officials as to § 1983 claim, even though district court did not consider such issue, where officials renewed in Court of Appeals their argument that suit was untimely, prisoner's lawyer failed to address such issue in reply brief, and officials had preserved such issue in district court. Garner v. Cullinan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 654, 2003 WL 21259754, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Federal Courts 915

5739. Persons entitled to appeal, review

Assertions on cross-appeal, by family members of mentally retarded persons admitted to state human development centers (HDC), which family members had intervened in mentally retarded persons' §§ 1983 action challenging on procedural due process grounds post-admission review policies for HDCs, that district court's decision, which decision had been integrated into policy changes adopted by the HDCs, might limit the flexibility of decision-making for future patients and might set a precedent for future restrictions on guardian-ward relationship, were hypothetical, and thus, such assertions did not provide family members with Article III standing for their cross-appeal. Porter v. Knickrehm, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 457 F.3d 794. Federal Courts 544

Guardian ad litem, whose motion to intervene was denied in class action brought by children who had been in custody of Illinois Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, lacked standing to appeal district court's order entering consent decree or its denial of motion to expand distribution of notice, to compel discovery, or to request evidentiary hearing and continuance of fairness hearing. B.H. by Pierce v. Murphy, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 984 F.2d 196, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2930, 508 U.S. 960, 124 L.Ed.2d 680. Federal Courts 544

Where verdict, in civil rights action which arose out of alleged police brutality, was an assessment of plaintiff's total damages stemming from the incident in question and any finding of liability against either police commissioner or city would not extend the scope of the damages, plaintiff was not adversely affected by dismissal of city as a defendant and, therefore, even if plaintiff technically had standing to appeal issue of city's dismissal, plaintiff should not be allowed an in forma pauperis appeal on the issue in order to obtain an appellate decision on a point of law that would have no practical consequences. Smith v. Lees, E.D.Pa.1977, 431 F.Supp. 923. Federal Civil Procedure 2743.1

adjudication process denied to employees comported with constitutional requirements for due process, state of record did not allow reviewing court to determine substantive merits of employees' suspensions, and reasons for discharge concerned matters of state law that could be adequately addressed by state bodies. Sutton v. Cleveland Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1992, 958 F.2d 1339. Federal Courts 942

Proper remedy upon district court's finding of deprivation of procedural due process in the determination of a school board not to renew teacher's contract is remand to the school board for compliance with minimum due process. Harkless v. Sweeny Independent School Dist. of Sweeny, Texas, S.D.Tex.1975, 388 F.Supp. 738, affirmed in part, reversed in part 554 F.2d 1353, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 507, 434 U.S. 966, 54 L.Ed.2d 452, on remand 466 F.Supp. 457. 5741. Remand to state courts, review

Upon determining, on McNary comity grounds, that civil rights action challenging validity of state taxation scheme should not be adjudicated, district court was not required to dismiss case which had been removed from state court, but rather, could remand case to state court. Balazik v. County of Dauphin, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1995, 44 F.3d 209. Removal Of Cases 101.1; Removal Of Cases 108

To the extent that monetary relief was requested in suit brought by homeowners against state of New Jersey, Department of Community Affairs, Bureau of Construction Code Enforcement, claims had to be remanded to state court because federal court lacked jurisdiction to adjudge money damages against the state or its agencies by reason of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11 grant to states of immunity from suit in federal court. Matter of Kahr Bros., Inc., Bkrtcy.D.N.J.1980, 5 B.R. 765. Federal Courts 265

5742. Remand to district court, review--Generally

Remand was required where parties and district court had been afforded no opportunity to address issues respecting exceptions to applicability of this section and also because complaint alleging violation of Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975, section 1401 et seq. of Title 20 and Rehabilitation Act of 1973, section 701 et seq. of Title 29, did not unequivocally disclose whether damages were sought pursuant to this section. Miener v. State of Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1982, 673 F.2d 969, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 215, 459 U.S. 909, 74 L.Ed.2d 171, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 230, 459 U.S. 916, 74 L.Ed.2d 182, on remand 580 F.Supp. 562.

5743. ---- Amendment of complaint, remand to district court, review

Incarcerated, pro se plaintiff's § 1983 action that was dismissed due to his failure to timely name individual officials of sheriff's department as defendants in his complaint (department itself was only defendant named in original complaint) was required to be remanded for determination as to whether amended complaint related back to original complaint; on remand, district court should first permit reasonable discovery for identification of individual officers who might be responsible for alleged constitutional tort, and then determine whether and when any of these officers received such notice of plaintiff's suit against sheriff's department as would avoid prejudice to officers in maintaining suit. Donald v. Cook County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 95 F.3d 548. Federal Courts 938

Remand was required with respect to inmate's § 1983 claim that corrections officer's misdelivery of his legal papers was intentional interference with his constitutional right of access to courts in order to permit inmate to add, if he could, nonconclusory allegations that would show actual injury necessary to support his claim, particularly where inmate prevailed at district court and his pleadings were pro se. Crawford-El v. Britton, C.A.D.C.1991, 951 F.2d 1314, 293 U.S.App.D.C. 47, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 62, 506 U.S. 818, 121 L.Ed.2d 29, on remand 844 F.Supp. 795. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where it was not clear from the record of action in which parents sued city and school district for violations of their civil rights arising out of suicide of their son after being confronted by city police officer at school that parents could not plead facts supporting existence of an official governmental policy which deprived them of society of their child, and district court failed to address question because of erroneous ruling that parents had no constitutionally protected liberty interest in companionship and society of son, matter would be remanded in the interest of justice to give parents opportunity to amend their § 1983 claims against city and school district to comply with requirements for institutional liability under § 1983. Kelson v. City of Springfield, C.A.9 (Or.) 1985, 767 F.2d 651. Federal Courts 946

Where some, but not all, defendants were dismissed on finding of no tenable basis for jurisdiction under § 1343 of Title 28, but, after dismissal, discovery in the ongoing district court case allegedly revealed significant state action which might support claim for relief and jurisdiction, court of appeals would vacate order of dismissal and remand to district court for consideration of motion by plaintiffs to amend complaint. Holton v. Crozer-Chester Medical Center, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 560 F.2d 575. Federal Courts 940

While plaintiff, seeking compensatory and injunctive relief against school board for alleged unlawful termination of his employment as a school teacher asserted jurisdiction under § 1343 of title 28, where board of education, the only named defendant, was not a "person" subject to suit under this section, jurisdiction could not lie, and case, having reached the court of appeals by reason of a judgment in plaintiff's favor, would be remanded to district court with leave to plaintiff to amend jurisdictional allegations of complaint. Singleton v. Vance County Bd. of Ed., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1974, 501 F.2d 429. Federal Courts 222; Federal Courts 946

5744. ---- Amendment of judgment, remand to district court, review

Remand was necessary to amend civil rights judgment to reflect fact that prisoner's judgment against jailer and his assistant was in their individual capacities, rather than in their official capacities as indicated on special verdict form and judgment entered; jury instructions made it clear that individual defendants were being held personally liable for their individual violations of prisoner's rights, and rendering judgment against officials and in their official capacities, which was generally only another way of pleading of action against entity of which officer was agent, was impossible, where county could not be held liable for officers' deliberate indifference to prisoner's serious medical needs. Johnson v. Hardin County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1990, 908 F.2d 1280. Federal Courts 937.1

5745. ---- Clarification of opinion, remand to district court, review

No remand was necessary to require district court to make explicit statement of reasons for denying state troopers' defense of qualified immunity to § 1983 civil rights action arising from warrantless seizure of minor child, even though troopers' motion for summary judgment was summarily denied, since record plainly revealed existence of genuine issues of material fact. Hurlman v. Rice, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 927 F.2d 74. Federal Courts 922

In civil rights suit brought by former city public works department employee who alleged that she was discharged, in violation of her constitutional rights, "for no other reason than plaintiff being a transsexual," it could not be determined which, if any, of several theories presented by the parties formed the basis for district court's decision to grant summary judgment in favor of city defendants, and thus remand was appropriate to permit district court to articulate reasons for its decision. De Tore v. Local No. 245 of Jersey City Public Emp. Union, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1980, 615 F.2d 980, on remand 511 F.Supp. 171. Federal Courts 942

With respect to district court order requiring monthly medical examination of all food handlers at District of Columbia jail, record in suit by plaintiff pretrial detainees, asserting constitutional violations, was remanded for clarification as to its legal and factual foundation, since assuming that the jail regulation regarding medical examination of food handlers had force of law it was necessary to show violations or apparent violations of regulations as a predicate for injunctive relief. Campbell v. McGruder, C.A.D.C.1978, 580 F.2d 521, 188 U.S.App.D.C. 258, on remand 554 F.Supp. 562. Federal Courts 942

Judgment dismissing, on merits, complaint against municipality by discharged municipal employee seeking damages, reinstatement and declaratory relief under this section was required to be vacated and cause remanded for clarification where municipality appeared following service of complaint naming mayor as defendant and plaintiffs related that mayor, who did not appear, was to be sued in his individual capacity. Vargas v. Barcelo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1970, 435 F.2d 843, on remand 385 F.Supp. 879. Federal Courts 938

5746. ---- Development of record, remand to district court, review

Remand to district court was required for purpose of developing factual record as to conditions of prisoner's disciplinary confinement, in order to determine whether prisoner had protected liberty interest in not being transferred to disciplinary confinement from general prison population, where prisoner's due process claim was dismissed by district court sua sponte before any discovery, and prisoner's complaint was pro se. Mitchell v. Horn, C.A.3 2003, 318 F.3d 523, on remand 2005 WL 1060658. Federal Courts 947

Court of Appeals would decide § 1983 freedom of speech abridgment action brought by claimant denied admission to rally for presidential candidate until she concealed from view campaign button advocating election of opponent, even though there was nonconstitutional ground for remanding case, that it was not clear on present record that city had authorized political committee to exclude speech not supporting their candidate, creating doubt that state action requirement for bringing § 1983 action had been satisfied; remand when there was clearly framed constitutional question would be imprudent waste of time and judicial resources. Sistrunk v. City of Strongsville, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1996, 99 F.3d 194, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 2409, 520 U.S. 1251, 138 L.Ed.2d 175. Constitutional Law 46(1)

Insufficiency of record necessitated remand of civil rights action for determination of whether unsuccessful candidate for permanent job at state-run facility had standing to challenge earlier temporary award of job to political appointee on ground of patronage hiring practices. Tarpley v. Jeffers, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 96 F.3d 921. Federal Courts 942

Although prison policy of not providing special diet was justified in relation to legitimate governmental interest of simplifying food service, the absence of sufficient factual findings regarding other three Turner factors precluded Court of Appeals from determining whether denial of kosher diet to only Orthodox Jewish prisoner was reasonably related to prison's legitimate interest in streamlining food service; as result, remand of claim to district court was required for specific factual findings and careful balancing of all four Turner factors. Ward v. Walsh, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1993, 1 F.3d 873, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1297, 510 U.S. 1192, 127 L.Ed.2d 649. Federal Courts 941

District court's failure to follow proper procedure and to consider applicable factors in granting prison officials' motion to modify consent decree in inmates' § 1983 action to allow increased double-celling and inmate population warranted remand; court relied on unverified statements in record, unauthenticated materials, and oral argument to conclude that modification was necessary and failed to conduct complete hearing by not allowing any evidence or expert testimony at motion hearing, neither court nor officials identified change in circumstances warranting modification, court did not inquire into good faith of officials' settlement intentions or anticipation of changes in conditions which would make decree onerous and unworkable, and court failed to determine if proposed changes were tailored to changed circumstances. Heath v. DeCourcy, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 992 F.2d 630. Federal Civil Procedure 2397.4; Federal Courts 914

Civil rights action arising from inmate's alleged confinement for 23 hours a day in unlighted, windowless cell into which water and human waste was allegedly allowed to seep from broken fixtures and pipes would be remanded to magistrate for findings of fact concerning inmate's contentions. 1248. United States Magistrates 31

Where it could not be determined from record in civil rights action under this section whether county supervisor's actions in wrongfully destroying landowner's culverts were taken pursuant to policy or custom of county board, or whether supervisor was ultimate repository of county power with respect to decision on culverts, county could not be held liable to landowner for compensatory damages and attorney fees awarded against supervisor, and case was properly remanded for further factual findings. Hart v. Walker, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1983, 720 F.2d 1443. Civil Rights 1351(3)

In view of parole violator's unrefuted testimony as to his meeting with member of Pennsylvania Parole Board and the ambiguity of record surrounding question of precisely what Board relied upon in reaching its decision recommitting parolee as a parole violator, judgment for defendants in parolee's civil right action for damages for violation of due process must be reversed and matter remanded for further proceedings to produce more adequate record of what transpired at alleged hearing. Thompson v. Burke, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 556 F.2d 231, on remand 544 F.Supp. 173. Federal Courts 942

5747. ---- Immunity determinations, remand to district court, review

District court was required to identify the set of material facts and the legal reasoning the court used to determine whether to grant prison officials' summary judgment motion based upon claim of quasi-judicial absolute immunity, thus, remand was required for the district court to reconsider whether officials were entitled to quasi-judicial absolute immunity, in civil rights action brought by inmate alleging Eighth Amendment violations. Hamilton v. Leavy, C.A.3 (Del.) 2003, 322 F.3d 776, on remand 2004 WL 609334. Federal Courts 947

Remand was required to permit district court to consider whether upper-level Rural Housing Administration officials were qualifiedly immune from personal liability on employee's § 1983 claim alleging politically motivated constructive discharge. Balaguer-Santiago v. Torres-Gaztambide, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1991, 932 F.2d 1015. Federal Courts 939

Remand was necessary of civil rights action alleging sexual harassment in workplace, where court failed to address issue of qualified immunity with reference to undisputed facts in record produced by discovery, and court neglected to fully state basis for its conclusion that defendant supervisors may have violated state employee's clearly established rights and hence were not qualifiedly immune. Poe v. Haydon, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1988, 853 F.2d 418, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 788, 488 U.S. 1007, 102 L.Ed.2d 780. Federal Courts 939; Federal Courts 941

5748. ---- Moot claims, remand to district court, review

Remand was warranted for consideration of whether prison officials caused inmate's transfer to different prison, thereby rendering moot officials' appeal from injunctive order, entered in inmate's right of access suit, which mandated improvements to prison law library, or whether transfer occurred due to "happenstance," to determine whether injunctive order should be vacated. Dilley v. Gunn, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1995, 64 F.3d 1365. Federal Courts 922

Where, following inmate's release from segregation, Administrative Review Board expunged inmate's record, thus protecting inmate from future prejudice in obtaining parole, work assignments, and transfer to prison near his home, and where record also showed that prisoner was no longer inmate at prison where events occurred that led to filing of his civil rights complaint against prison official, district court on remand should address issue whether his request for declaratory relief was moot. Stringer v. Rowe, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 616 F.2d 993. Declaratory Judgment 395

Where during pendency of appeal in action under this section by three Illinois prison inmates against Illinois correction officials challenging certain prison regulations one of the inmates was granted parole and released to Wisconsin authorities for delivery to the Wisconsin prison, there was no longer any concrete controversy touching legal relationship between defendant prison officials and the released inmate since only relief sought in complaint was prospective; and that portion of order relating to such inmate would be vacated and his action remanded with instructions to dismiss as moot. Bach v. Coughlin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 508 F.2d 303. Federal Courts 924.1; Federal Courts 936

5749. ---- Pendent state claims, remand to district court, review

Where it was apparent that damages awarded resulted from district court's finding of liability under this section and not as result of pendent state law claims, and state law issues had not been reached, Court of Appeals on petition for rehearing after reversing, would remand case so that district court might decide whether to consider state law claims. Breath v. Cronvich, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 734 F.2d 225, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 332, 469 U.S. 934, 83 L.Ed.2d 268. Federal Courts 939

In civil rights suit under this section, court of appeals would remand and not pass on propriety of district court's conclusion that particular Supreme Court decision "would appear to support" the constitutionality of city personnel rule against "wantonly offensive language toward a fellow employee," which had been used as basis for suspension of police captain for his union newsletter publication, since factual development was insufficient, district court's asserted holding failed to articulate the rationale and in view of considerations of efficiency which dictated remand for disposition of pendent state claims anyway. Sims v. Young, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 556 F.2d 732. Federal Courts 942

5750. ---- Recent judicial decisions, remand to district court, review

In view of new Supreme Court ruling that federal declaratory relief is not precluded when prosecution based on assertedly unconstitutional state statute has been threatened but not pending, even if showing of bad faith enforcement or other special circumstances has not been made, and where Supreme Court could not determine with certainty whether there were pending prosecutions or even whether district court had intended to enjoin them if there were, remand for further findings and reconsideration in light of such new ruling was appropriate. Allee v. Medrano, U.S.Tex.1974, 94 S.Ct. 2191, 416 U.S. 802, 40 L.Ed.2d 566. Federal Courts 480

Supreme Court's Sandin opinion warranted remand in inmate's § 1983 action against corrections officials, which alleged unconstitutional denial of transfer from minimum security to community custody, as Sandin altered method of analyzing protectable liberty interests in prison context. Hake v. Clarke, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 91 F.3d 1129. Federal Courts 940

Upon remand of suit alleging wrongful seizure of number of items of personal property, mostly law books, on plaintiff prisoner's transfer from county jail to state penal system, district court was to consider whether claims fell within ambit of case holding that allegation of negligent loss of property by prison officials does not state claim under this section where adequate state remedy exists. Wright v. Dallas County Sheriff Dept., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1981, 660 F.2d 623. Civil Rights 1395(7)

In light of the Bakke decision, action challenging constitutionality of university regulation directing president of student body to appoint two black students and two women to the legislative body if an election failed to produce such result and regulation giving a student appearing before the judicial branch of student government the right to require that four of seven judges be members of his or her race was remanded to district court for taking of evidence and reconsideration, with university entitled to opportunity to justify its regulation under Bakke, i.e., whether classification was necessary to accomplish a constitutionally permissible purpose. Uzzell v. Friday, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1980, 625 F.2d 1117, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 2917, 446 U.S. 951, 64 L.Ed.2d 808, on remand 592

F.Supp. 1502. Federal Courts 940

On remand of civil rights suit, in which plaintiff alleged that compliance by police officers with their duty to look in on prisoners periodically would have prevented her husband's suicide in jail cell, liability of township should be reappraised in view of suggestion in Monell that a municipality was not liable under this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights on traditional respondeat superior theory; furthermore, consideration should be given to its implication for acts of police officers. Swietlowich v. Bucks County, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 610 F.2d 1157. Civil Rights 1348

Where, after state prisoner's civil rights action against Texas officials was dismissed, and pending prisoner's appeal, United States Supreme Court announced its opinion in Greenholtz v. Inmates of the Nebraska Penal and Correctional Complex, in which Court indicated that expectancy of release provided in Nebraska parole statute, R.R.S.Neb.1943, § 83-1-114(a), was entitled to measure of constitutional protection, remand of prisoner's action was necessary in order for trial court to determine effect, if any, of such Supreme Court decision. Williams v. Briscoe, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1979, 599 F.2d 620. Federal Courts 940

While leaving undisputed reinstatement directive and back pay award up to trial in school teacher's action against school district, school board, superintendent and elementary principal, issue of posttrial back pay against school district, which had not been found liable, would be remanded for reconsideration in light of the Supreme Court's recently decided Monell opinion, which foreclosed absolute immunity of local governing bodies in civil rights suits. Zoll v. Eastern Allamakee Community School Dist., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 588 F.2d 246. Federal Courts 922

In view of fact that district court did not have benefit of United States Supreme Court decision delineating circumstances under which local governing bodies are subject to suit under this section, district court's award of back pay to class members was remanded for further consideration in light of the Supreme Court's ruling. Thurston v. Dekle, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1978, 578 F.2d 1167. Federal Courts 925

5751. ---- Recent legislative action, remand to district court, review

Amendment to Florida regulations governing expressive conduct in state parks required remand in nudist society's action challenging regulations on First Amendment grounds to determine whether they were unconstitutional on their face. Naturist Soc., Inc. v. Fillyaw, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 958 F.2d 1515, on remand 858 F.Supp. 1559. Federal Courts 940

5752. ---- Remedies determinations, remand to district court, review

Following Court of Appeals' remand for additional merits hearing in prisoner's §§ 1983 action challenging lethal injection protocol, district court had authority to determine the constitutionality of the then existing execution procedures originally presented, to set forth in detail its reasons for such holding, and to grant the remedy of injunction or, in the alternative, to deny such relief, totally or conditionally. Taylor v. Crawford, C.A.8 2006, 457 F.3d 902. Federal Courts 951.1

Failure of district court, in awarding damages in civil rights action for county deputies' forceful entry into medical center in violation of physician-proprietor's rights under Fourth Amendment, to give adequate consideration or explanation for decision that proprietor's stress-related injuries could not be related to incident at issue and to mention proprietor's claims regarding business losses necessitated remand; inquiry demanded by law had to be conducted in full and fair manner, and factual basis for resolving appropriate amount of damages had to be sought until it was found or declared not to exist. Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1989, 882 F.2d 1101, on remand 745 F.Supp. 446. Federal Courts 941

Award of $800 to pretrial detainee who was detained for 16 days in "punishment" cell of county jail under conditions far out of proportion to legitimate objectives of pretrial detention was made with mistaken legal approach to quantum of compensable injury inflicted as punishment, with possible disregard of question of aggravation of detainee's hemorrhoidal condition as result of being compelled to sleep on cold concrete floor, and case would be remanded for reconsideration of damages award. Davis v. Smith, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1981, 638 F.2d 66. Federal Courts 944

Remand for further hearing was necessary prior to appellate determination as to propriety of trial court's approval of proposed plan for future use of county jail, which was used as a facility to house pretrial detainees, which was found to be overcrowded, lacking adequate food service and a fire hazard. Leeds v. Watson, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1980, 630 F.2d 674. Federal Courts 922

Before ordering that the inmate population of the El Paso county jail be limited to 500, district court should have conducted further hearings as to the overall conditions at the jail; on the record presented, it was impossible to determine whether the court's 500 inmate limitation was tailored to remedy a constitutional violation, rather than merely to bring the jail closer to compliance with state law; while a population limitation might be necessary, the district court could impose such limitation only if it should find, on remand, that the jail was overcrowded and that, considered with other conditions, incarceration therein is violative of prisoners' constitutional rights. Smith v. Sullivan, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1039. Prisons 4(3)

Where school teacher appealed from judgment which, although it awarded him damages, denied reinstatement, and reviewing court found that reinstatement was denied on impermissible basis, entire judgment would be vacated and case remanded for proper determination of remedy. Sterzing v. Fort Bend Independent School Dist., Fort Bend, Texas, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 496 F.2d 92. Federal Courts 943.1

5753. ---- Standards or tests erroneously applied, remand to district court, review

Remand was required where Court of Appeals did not consider inmate's civil rights claims under appropriate "deliberate indifference" standard, even though Court of Appeals stated that claims established negligence at best; it was conceivable that court would have reached different disposition under correct standard. Wilson v. Seiter, U.S.Ohio 1991, 111 S.Ct. 2321, 501 U.S. 294, 115 L.Ed.2d 271, on remand 940 F.2d 664. Federal Courts 462

Although prior district court order, denying defendant county official's motion for summary judgment in § 1983 case, was improperly relied upon as basis for issuing verdict as matter of law against defendant, Court of Appeals would not dismiss suit in its entirety, but, rather, would remand to district court to allow that court to determine in the first instance whether there remained genuine issues of material fact as to defendant's liability in his official capacity. DeCarlo v. Fry, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1998, 141 F.3d 56. Federal Courts 938

5754. ---- State law interpretation, remand to district court, review

Once it had been determined that Ohio judgment obtained by supervisor of elementary education in state court action for breach of contract and wrongful interference with contract of employment would have same claim preclusive effect in federal court in supervisor's subsequent federal civil rights action as it would have had in Ohio state courts, remanded was necessary in order to permit district court to interpret Ohio preclusion law and apply it. Migra v. Warren City School Dist. Bd. of Educ., U.S.Ohio 1984, 104 S.Ct. 892, 465 U.S. 75, 79 L.Ed.2d 56. Federal Courts 462

Remand of defendant's § 1983 counterclaim and cross-claim was warranted, since federal district court previously remanded supplemental state claims and those state claims predominated over federal § 1983 counterclaim and cross-claim. Redevelopment Agency of City of San Bernardino v. Alvarez, C.D.Cal.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 1112. Federal Courts 18; Removal Of Cases 101.1

5754A. ---- Additional evidence to consider, remand to district court, review

Proposal of revised protocol for use in the execution of death sentence warranted remand to the district court for consideration of the newly propounded protocol and all other issues framed by the parties' pleadings and notices of appeal in prisoner's §§ 1983 action challenging protocol for lethal injection. Taylor v. Crawford, C.A.8 2006, 457 F.3d 902. Federal Courts 947

5755. Remand to court of appeals, review

After Supreme Court determined that 'deliberate indifference' standard applied to detainee's claim that city failed to adequately train police officers in deciding whether detainees needed medical care, issue of whether detainee was entitled to have opportunity to prove her case under deliberate indifference rule was matter for Court of Appeals to deal with on remand. City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, U.S.Ohio 1989, 109 S.Ct. 1197, 489 U.S. 378, 103 L.Ed.2d 412. Federal Courts 462

Where civil rights action against State's Attorney alleged practice of wilful and malicious racial discrimination in the conduct of his office but charges were personal to the then incumbent, and where, following decision of the court of appeals that injunctive relief might be available, successor State's Attorney took office and was substituted as party but plaintiffs had never charged him with anything and did not presently seek to enjoin him from doing anything, it was necessary that case be remanded to the court of appeals for determination, in the first instance, of whether dispute was moot and whether plaintiffs would want to, and should be permitted to, amend their complaint to include claims for relief against the successor. Spomer v. Littleton, U.S.Ill.1974, 94 S.Ct. 685, 414 U.S. 514, 38 L.Ed.2d 694. Federal Courts 480

Decision of court of appeals in civil rights case based on a construction of this section that apparently was inconsistent with view subsequently taken by Supreme Court in another case was vacated and case was remanded for reconsideration. Egan v. City of Aurora, Ill., U.S.Ill.1961, 81 S.Ct. 684, 365 U.S. 514, 5 L.Ed.2d 741, on remand 291 F.2d 706. Federal Courts 462
