42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Effective: October 19, 1996

United States Code Annotated Currentness
Title 42. The Public Health and Welfare
Chapter 21. Civil Rights (Refs & Annos)
Subchapter I. Generally

→§ 1983. Civil action for deprivation of rights

Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer's judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable. For the purposes of this section, any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia.

1. Constitutionality

The provisions of this section are sufficiently clear to meet tests by due process of law clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5, notwithstanding that word "willfully" is not used in referring to mind of the tort-feasor. Picking v. Pennsylvania R. Co., C.C.A.3 (Pa.) 1945, 151 F.2d 240, rehearing denied 152 F.2d 753.

2. Construction

Congress intended that § 1983 be construed in light of common-law principles that were well settled at time of its enactment. Kalina v. Fletcher, U.S.Wash.1997, 118 S.Ct. 502, 522 U.S. 118, 139 L.Ed.2d 471. Civil Rights 1004

Coverage of § 1983 must be broadly construed. Dennis v. Higgins, U.S.Neb.1991, 111 S.Ct. 865, 498 U.S. 439, 112 L.Ed.2d 969. Civil Rights 1004; Civil Rights 1027

This section should be construed so as to respect proper balance between the states and the federal government in law enforcement. Stefanelli v. Minard, U.S.N.J.1951, 72 S.Ct. 118, 342 U.S. 117, 96 L.Ed. 138. Civil Rights 1004

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Civil rights legislation should generally not be interpreted narrowly; this section was designed as comprehensively, remedial legislation for deprivation of federal constitutional and statutory rights; the contours of this section must necessarily remain flexible to accommodate changing circumstances and the exigencies of a given era. Green v. Dumke, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 480 F.2d 624. Civil Rights 1004

This section is not to be interpreted narrowly. Basista v. Weir, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1965, 340 F.2d 74. See, also, Dyer v. Kazuhisa Abe, D.C.Hawaii 1956, 138 F.Supp. 220.

Statute creates right that may be enforced under § 1983 if (1) Congress intended provision to benefit plaintiff, (2) asserted right is not so vague and amorphous as to be judicially unenforceable, and (3) statute unambiguously imposes binding obligation on states. Rabin v. Wilson-Coker, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 332, reversed 362 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1027

When there is no indication from the text and structure of a statute that Congress intended to create new individual rights, there is no basis for a private suit, whether under § 1983 or under an implied right of action. Lines v. Wargo, W.D.Pa.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 649. Action 3; Civil Rights 1027

Only Congress can create new rights enforceable under § 1983; agency regulations cannot give rise to a private cause of action where the authorizing statute does not confer such a right. Wright v. Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center, W.D.Wash.2002, 269 F.Supp.2d 1286, reconsideration denied. Civil Rights 1027

Congress can foreclose remedy under § 1983 either by forbidding it expressly in statute itself, or impliedly by creating comprehensive enforcement scheme that is incompatible with individual enforcement under § 1983. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1307

There is strong presumption that Congress intended to allow § 1983 actions without foreclosure by alternative enforcement scheme, and burden of establishing contrary rests on defendant. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1401

To determine whether Congress impliedly foreclosed recourse to § 1983, court must review legislative history and other traditional aids of statutory interpretation to determine congressional intent. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1027

To determine whether a statutory provision creates a right enforceable under § 1983, courts examine (1) whether Congress intended the statute to benefit plaintiffs, (2) whether the statute expresses a congressional preference or binding obligation, and (3) whether the right is too vague and amorphous, such that it is beyond the competence of the judiciary to enforce; if these factors are met, there is a rebuttable presumption that the right is enforceable under § 1983, which can be overcome only by demonstrating that Congress specifically foreclosed a remedy under § 1983. Long Term Care Pharmacy Alliance v. Ferguson, D.Mass.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 282, vacated 362 F.3d 50. Civil Rights 1027

Within this section providing redress for deprivation, under color of state law, of rights secured by Constitution "and laws," the quoted words added in 1875 enlarged scope of the section which should not be interpreted solely according to language of original statute passed in 1871. La Raza Unida of Southern Alameda County v. Volpe, N.D.Cal.1977, 440 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1027

This section should be interpreted with sufficient liberality to fulfill its purpose of providing federal remedy in federal court in protection of federal right. Birnbaum v. Trussell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 371 F.2d 672. See, also, Schorle v. City of Greenhills, D.C.Ohio 1981, 524 F.Supp. 821; Courtney v. School Dist. No. 1, Lincoln County, Wyoming, D.C.Wyo.1974, 371 F.Supp. 401; Nanez v. Ritger, E.D.Wis.1969, 304 F.Supp. 354.

3. Construction with constitutional provisions

Supremacy clause does not of its own force create federal rights enforceable under § 1983; the clause is not itself a source of federal rights, but secures federal rights by according them priority when they come in conflict with state law. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, U.S.Cal.1989, 110 S.Ct. 444, 493 U.S. 103, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, on remand 895 F.2d 1281. Civil Rights 1029

Although under color of state law requirement does not add anything not already included within state action requirement of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, this section is applicable to other constitutional provisions and statutory provisions that contain no state action requirement. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., U.S.Va.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 457 U.S. 922, 73 L.Ed.2d 482. Civil Rights 1325

Consent decree which arose out of voluntary settlement of prior jail-conditions lawsuit, and which was not based on a finding of, and not expressly intended to remedy, any violation of Constitution, could not create or expand constitutional rights, and county's violation of consent decree, in failing to provide second, nighttime jailer to staff jail during hours that pretrial detainee committed suicide, did not without more establish a violation of pretrial detainee's constitutional rights, of kind actionable under § 1983. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1088(4); Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

Supremacy Clause does not "secure" federal rights within meaning of § 1983. White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Williams, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1985, 810 F.2d 844.

Inasmuch as § 1983 does not provide remedy for claims resulting from violations of either commerce clause or supremacy clause, attorney fee claim under § 1988, based on § 1983 action involving alleged violation of those clauses, can have no merit. J & J Anderson, Inc. v. Town of Erie, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1985, 767 F.2d 1469. Civil Rights 1479

Use of this section and § 1981 of this title to maintain discrimination cases must be guided by principles announced by Supreme Court for application of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 to discrimination cases. Mescall v. Burrus, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1979, 603 F.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1033(1)

This section, granting suit for deprivation of rights under color of state law, cannot be engrafted on U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 11 by judicial construction. Krause v. Rhodes, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 471 F.2d 430, certiorari granted 93 S.Ct. 3056, 413 U.S. 919, 37 L.Ed.2d 1040, certiorari granted 93 S.Ct. 3065, 413 U.S. 919, 37 L.Ed.2d 1040, reversed 94 S.Ct. 1683, 416 U.S. 232, 40 L.Ed.2d 90, 71 O.O.2d 474. Federal Courts 265

Whether plaintiff is seeking to enforce a federal statutory right through a private cause of action implicit in the statute itself or through § 1983, there must first be a determination that Congress intended to create a federal right. Lines v. Wargo, W.D.Pa.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 649. Action 3; Civil Rights 1027

High school students' Fourth Amendment unreasonable seizure and excessive force claims against county school district and school officials under §§ 1983 were not preempted by Title VI; although students alleged discriminatory motive behind their arrests, Title VI was not intended to remedy instances of unreasonable seizures in violation of Fourth Amendment. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1309

Eleventh Amendment barred §§ 1983 suit against school district, seeking either equitable or damages relief, by high school student claiming her constitutional rights were violated when officials harassed her for being openly gay; school district was an arm of the state. C.N. v. Wolf, C.D.Cal.2005, 410 F.Supp.2d 894. Federal Courts 269

Large out-of-state manufacturer stated commerce clause claim under §§ 1983 against Commissioner of New York State Department of Environmental Conservation and Attorney General of State of New York, on allegations that creation and implementation of New York Architectural and Industrial Maintenance Coatings regulations, which were designed to reduce ozone emissions as required under Clean Air Act (CAA), placed unreasonable and excessive, and not incidental, burden on out-of-state manufacturers, in light of any local benefits that may have been received by State of New York. Sherwin-Williams Co. v. Crotty, N.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 187. Commerce 52.10; Environmental Law 287

Inmate's § 1983 complaint adequately pleaded claim for infringement of his First Amendment free exercise rights; complaint and exhibits alleged inmate was denied 12 submitted requests to attend services. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Eleventh Amendment barred state prisoner's pro se § 1983 action for damages against prison chaplain in his official capacity, alleging that chaplain violated prisoner's First Amendment right to freely exercise his religion by intentionally interfering with prisoner's ability to observe a religious holiday. Wares v. VanBebber, D.Kan.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1120. Federal Courts 269

Section 1983 supports commerce clause challenge. Poor Richard's Inc. v. Ramsey County, Minn., D.Minn.1996, 922 F.Supp. 1387.

Plaintiff, who failed to allege violation of federal civil rights statute, could not have independent cause of action arising under First and Fourteenth Amendment. Henderson v. Corrections Corp. of America, E.D.Tenn.1996, 918 F.Supp. 204. Civil Rights 1322

Section 1983 claim premised on violation of supremacy clause through preemption is not cognizable. Gustafson v. City of Lake Angelus, E.D.Mich.1993, 856 F.Supp. 320, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 778, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 81, 519 U.S. 823, 136 L.Ed.2d 39. Civil Rights 1029

Single claim asserted under both civil rights statute, § 1983, and the Fourteenth Amendment was duplicitous, since § 1983 was enacted to serve as means by which claims can be brought under due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment in place of asserting claim more generally under the Fourteenth Amendment. Verdon v. Consolidated Rail Corp., S.D.N.Y.1993, 828 F.Supp. 1129. Civil Rights 1322

Former employee and her alleged attorney failed to state cause of action against former employer, its attorneys, and state court judge who presided over former employee's wrongful discharge action based solely on an alleged violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process right; existence of remedy for former employee and alleged attorney under § 1983 obviated need to imply constitutional remedy. Hammond v. Creative Financial Planning Organization, Inc., E.D.Pa.1992, 800 F.Supp. 1244. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Prisoner alleging valid Eighth Amendment claim could not also bring separate, independent claim under § 1983 for same behavior based on substantive due process. Warren v. State of Mo., W.D.Mo.1990, 754 F.Supp. 150, affirmed 995 F.2d 130. Civil Rights 1090

Supremacy clause does not create property right protected by Fourteenth Amendment. Burris v. Mahaney, M.D.Tenn.1989, 716 F.Supp. 1051. Constitutional Law 277(1); States 18.1

Claim under Fourteenth Amendment was subsumed under § 1983 claim. Valerio v. Dahlberg, S.D.Ohio 1988,

716 F.Supp. 1031.

Sex discrimination plaintiff who had alternate avenues of relief under civil rights statutes was precluded from bringing suit directly under Constitution. Downum v. City of Wichita, Kan., D.Kan.1986, 675 F.Supp. 1566. Civil Rights 1322; Civil Rights 1502

Plaintiff cannot pursue claim based upon constitutional torts when he has remedy under this section, even though his action under this section is barred by statute of limitations. Matthewman v. Akahane, D.C.Hawai'i 1983, 574 F.Supp. 1510. Civil Rights 1322

Actions brought pursuant to this section are subject to same state action requirement as is applicable to actions involving allegations of violations under U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14 § 1. Rosquist v. Jarrat Const. Corp., D.C.N.J.1983, 570 F.Supp. 1206. Civil Rights 1325

Concepts of "state action" within meaning of U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14 and under color of state law," for purpose of this section, are analytically distinct and the latter focuses on whether the person who committed the deprivation acted or purported to act by authority conferred by the state regardless of whether the right deprived involved "state action," although the concepts merge when public officials are involved. Fuller v. Hurley, W.D.Va.1983, 559 F.Supp. 313. Civil Rights 1325; Constitutional Law 254(2)

There was no need to imply remedy under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 where all relief to which complainant would otherwise be entitled was available under this section. Three Rivers Cablevision, Inc. v. City of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1980, 502 F.Supp. 1118. Action 2

This section evinces Congressional intent to define standing as broadly as permitted by U.S.C.A.Const. Art. 3, § 2, cl. 1. Jackson v. Sargent, D.C.Mass.1975, 394 F.Supp. 162, affirmed 526 F.2d 64.

In enacting § 1983, Congress did not intend to abrogate the states' Eleventh Amendment immunity. Davis v. Bruce, D.Kan.2003, 215 F.R.D. 612, reconsideration denied 2004 WL 957854, affirmed in part 129 Fed.Appx. 406, 2005 WL 768778. Federal Courts 265

Police officer lacked standing to assert a First Amendment retaliation claim based on her mother's complaints made on her behalf. Martinez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 2006619, Unreported, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 253, 2003 WL 22879401. Constitutional Law 42.3(3)

Even if all of police officer's mother's complaints stemming from officer's transfer and officer's superior's alleged abusive behavior toward officer were characterized as protected speech, officer could not establish a causal connection between those complaints and her transfer sufficient to make out First Amendment retaliation claim against police department; complaints were made after officer was informed that she would be transferred. Martinez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 2006619, Unreported, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 253, 2003 WL 22879401. Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2); Municipal Corporations 185(1)

4. Construction with Federal Rules of Civil Procedure

Arrestee's § 1983 complaint against federal naval base police officers, who responded to complaint by federal employee about an allegedly disorderly person, failed to allege the officers were acting under color of state law, as required to support the § 1983 claim, even though citations they issued against arrestee concerned exclusively state offenses and were prepared on state form which listed state court as venue where the offenses would be heard, absent any allegation that the state cloaked the officers in any degree of state authority, or that there was a conspiracy between state officials and the officers to deprive arrestee of his civil rights. Case v. Milewski, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 327 F.3d 564. Civil Rights 1327

This section, which affords right to sue to any citizen of United States who has been deprived of any right, privilege or immunity, prevails over conflicting policy purportedly expressed in rule 17, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, stating that capacity of an individual to sue or to be sued should be determined by law of his domicile, in light of rationale of Code Va.1950, §§ 53-305 to 53-307, providing for appointment of a committee which may sue and be sued in respect to all claims or demands of any nature in favor of or against a person convicted of a felony. Almond v. Kent, C.A.4 (Va.) 1972, 459 F.2d 200. Civil Rights 1389

To state a civil rights claim pursuant to § 1983, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim; to the contrary, all the Rules require is a short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. New York State Federation of Taxi Drivers, Inc. v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 340. Civil Rights 1394

Two-year statute of limitations on plaintiff's § 1983 claim was extended for additional two days, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure concerning computation of time under rules, where bar date fell on Saturday. Arvia v. Black, D.Colo.1989, 722 F.Supp. 644. Time 10(4)

5. Purpose

Purpose of § 1983 is to deter state actors from using badge of their authority to deprive individuals of their federally guaranteed rights and to provide relief to victims if such deterrence fails. Wyatt v. Cole, U.S.Miss.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1827, 504 U.S. 158, 118 L.Ed.2d 504, on remand 994 F.2d 1113. Civil Rights 1004

Civil Rights Act of 1871 was passed for express purpose of enforcing provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., U.S.Va.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 457 U.S. 922, 73 L.Ed.2d 482. Civil Rights 1004

Deterrence of future abuses of power by persons acting under color of state law is an important purpose of this section. City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., U.S.R.I.1981, 101 S.Ct. 2748, 453 U.S. 247, 69 L.Ed.2d 616. Civil Rights 1004

Main goal of this section was to override the corrupting influence of the Ku Klux Klan and its sympathizers on the government and law enforcement agencies of the southern states and one strong motive behind its enactment was great Congressional concern that the state courts had been deficient in protecting federal rights. Allen v. McCurry, U.S.Mo.1980, 101 S.Ct. 411, 449 U.S. 90, 66 L.Ed.2d 308, on remand 647 F.2d 167. Civil Rights 1004

Purposes of this section were to override certain kinds of state laws, to provide a remedy where state law was inadequate, to provide a federal remedy where state remedy, though adequate in theory, was not available in practice, and to provide a remedy in federal courts supplementary to any remedy any state might have. McNeese v. Board of Ed. for Community Unit School Dist. 187, Cahokia, Ill., U.S.Ill.1963, 83 S.Ct. 1433, 373 U.S. 668, 10 L.Ed.2d 622. See, also, Madison v. Wood, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1969, 410 F.2d 564. Civil Rights 1004

Purpose of § 1983 is to deter state actors from using badge of their authority to deprive individuals of their federally guaranteed rights and to provide relief to victims if such deterrence fails. McKnight v. Rees, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 88 F.3d 417, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 504, 519 U.S. 1002, 136 L.Ed.2d 395, affirmed 117 S.Ct. 2100, 521 U.S. 399, 138 L.Ed.2d 540. Civil Rights 1004

Purpose of § 1983 is to provide a remedy to parties deprived of constitutional rights by a state official's abuse of his position while acting under color of state law. Haines v. Fisher, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1996, 82 F.3d 1503. Civil Rights 1004

Underlying purpose of Congressional scheme for protection of constitutional rights are to permit victims of constitutional violations to obtain redress, to provide for federal criminal prosecutions of serious constitutional violations when state criminal proceedings are ineffective for purpose of deterring violations, and to strike appropriate balance between protection of individual rights from state infringement and protection of state and local governments from unnecessary federal interference. U.S. v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 644 F.2d 187. Civil Rights 1004; Civil Rights 1804

Provision of this section which establishes a federal cause of action for damages against state and local officials who have caused individuals to suffer constitutional deprivation was designed to protect individuals against a misuse of power made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Duchesne v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 566 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1325

High school students' equal protection claim under §§ 1983, which alleged that county school district and school officials denied them same treatment as other students on account of their race, was preempted by Title VI, since such allegations fell squarely within conduct that Title VI was designed to remedy; although remedies available under Title VI were different than those that otherwise would have been available pursuant to §§ 1983, Congress enacted statutory scheme sufficiently comprehensive to remedy racial discrimination committed by entity receiving federal financial assistance. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1309

The essence of § 1983 is to authorize a court to grant relief when a party's federally protected rights have been violated by a state or local official or other person who acted under color of state law. Nabozny v. NCS Pearson, Inc., D.Nev.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1304

A plaintiff must assert a violation of a federal right to invoke a remedy provided by Section 1983. New York State Federation of Taxi Drivers, Inc. v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 340. Civil Rights 1027

Taxicab companies' claim that city parking authority's relocation of ordinance-created taxi stands without notice constituted taking of property without due process was not cognizable under § 1983; companies did not contend that alleged deprivation was effected pursuant to established state procedure, and state tort law was adequate to handle dispute. Fortuna's Cab Service, Inc. v. City of Camden, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 562. Civil Rights 1071; Civil Rights 1318

Deprivation of property is not cognizable under § 1983 when state post-deprivation remedies are adequate to protect plaintiff's due process rights, and conduct causing deprivation is random and unauthorized rather than effected pursuant to established state procedure. Fortuna's Cab Service, Inc. v. City of Camden, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 562. Civil Rights 1071; Civil Rights 1318

Provisions of the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLBA), requiring local educational agencies to notify parents of students enrolled in schools that were identified for "school improvement" "corrective action" or "restructuring" of such identification and students' rights to transfer to different schools, and to offer supplemental educational services (SES) to certain students, did not create individual rights that were enforceable under § 1983. Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. New York City Dept. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 338 . Civil Rights 127.1

Initial inquiry for deciding whether federal statute creates personal rights that may be enforced through § 1983 action is determination as to whether or not Congress intended to confer individual rights upon a class of beneficiaries; if Congress wishes to create new rights it must do so in clear and unambiguous terms. Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. New York City Dept. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 338. Civil Rights 1027 individual rights, there is no basis for a private suit, whether under § 1983 or under implied right of action. Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. New York City Dept. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 338. Action 3; Civil Rights 1027

Section 1983 claims, brought by derivative plaintiffs as parents and siblings of citizen who alleged he was deprived of his constitutional rights by false arrest and malicious prosecution, did not raise viable civil rights claims and warranted dismissal. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Section 1983 is not itself a source of substantive rights; instead, it provides a cause of action for the vindication of federal rights. Rinker v. Sipler, M.D.Pa.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 181. Civil Rights 1305

Section 1983 is not designed to rectify harassment or verbal abuse. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1036

One of principal purposes of § 1983 was to give remedy to parties deprived of constitutional rights, privileges and immunities by official's abuse of his or her position, that is, to provide remedy against individual officials who violate constitutional rights. Ascolese v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1996, 925 F.Supp. 351. Civil Rights 1004

Section 1983 was enacted to override certain kinds of state laws, to provide remedy where state law was inadequate, to provide federal remedy where state remedy, though adequate in theory, was not available in practice, and to provide remedy in federal court supplementary to any state remedy. Davis v. Hudgins, E.D.Va.1995, 896 F.Supp. 561, affirmed 87 F.3d 1308, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1440, 520 U.S. 1172, 137 L.Ed.2d 546. Civil Rights 1004

Section 1983 itself does not create any substantive rights; it simply provides remedy for vindicating rights established under Constitution or laws of the United States. Ward v. Temple University, E.D.Pa.2003, 2003 WL 21281768, Unreported. Civil Rights 1305

City's alleged failure to enforce City Code provisions regarding preservation of cemeteries did not give rise to liability under § 1983; statute provided civil claim for violations of rights protected by Constitution and laws of United States, not for violations arising solely out of state law. Tshaka v. Benepe, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21243017, Unreported. Civil Rights 1029

6. Retroactive effect of court decisions--Generally

The Supreme Court decision to the effect that prisoners' suits seeking restoration of good time were governed by section 2254 of Title 28, even though they came within broad language of this section would not be applied retroactively where state prisoners had commenced civil rights action prior to adoption of the decision and had relied on court decision indicating that suit attacking revocation of good time could be brought under this section. Nelson v. Schmidt, W.D.Wis.1973, 373 F.Supp. 705. Courts 100(1)

7. ---- Deadly force, retroactive effect of court decisions

Rule regarding use of deadly force by police officers to apprehend fleeing felon applied retroactively to § 1983 action by father of unarmed burglary suspect who was shot by officer; father's action was case in which fleeing felon rule was established, and Supreme Court made it clear in its opinion establishing rule that it was to be applied to parties before it. Garner v. Memphis Police Dept., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1993, 8 F.3d 358, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1219, 510 U.S. 1177, 127 L.Ed.2d 565. Courts 100(1)

Supreme Court's decision in Tennessee v. Garner holding that deadly force cannot be used to prevent escape of unarmed fleeing felon unless it is necessary to prevent escape and officer has probable cause to believe that suspect poses significant threat of death or serious physical injury would not be applied retroactively in civil rights action brought by unarmed suspect who was fleeing scene of burglary; Garner addressed novel question of law whose resolution was not clearly foreshadowed, common-law rule, embodied in Oklahoma statute, permitted using deadly force against fleeing felon, prior to decision in Garner, no circuit court had decided whether fleeing felon rule violated Fourth Amendment, retroactive application would not deter unconstitutional actions by police officers, and potentially severe financial strain on city resulting from retroactive application outweighed suspect's interest in compensation. Mitchell v. City of Sapulpa, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1988, 857 F.2d 713. Courts 100(1)

8. ---- Limitations, retroactive effect of court decisions

Even if mobile home park owner who failed to file federal civil rights complaint within three years of enactment of challenged vacancy control provision of rent control ordinance were allowed to pursue "direct" constitutional taking claim, that claim was also untimely; cause of action accrued when ordinance was enacted, and owner did not file complaint until more than three years after limitations period expired and more than one year after Wilson v. Garcia decision of United States Supreme Court. Azul-Pacifico, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 973 F.2d 704, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1049, 506 U.S. 1081, 122 L.Ed.2d 357. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Decision of United States Supreme Court in Owens v. Okure, that forum state's personal injury statute of limitations applies to actions, was given full retroactive effect to suit by university lecturer, even though longer statute of limitations had been held applicable when action accrued, given that new rule announced in Owens was applied to parties in that case. Lufkin v. McCallum, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1992, 956 F.2d 1104, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 326, 506 U.S. 917, 121 L.Ed.2d 246. Courts 100(1)

A United States Supreme Court decision, overruling Court of Appeals decision that applicable statute of limitations for § 1983 action was six years and substituting a two-year statute of limitations, did not have retroactive effect; the Supreme Court decision overruled the clear precedent established by Court of Appeals, and it would be inequitable to apply the holding as complainant could have relied on the Court of Appeals precedent in waiting over five years to file his complaint. McKissick v. Busby, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1991, 936 F.2d 520. Courts 100(1)

United States Supreme Court's Owens decision establishing two-year statute of limitations period in Alabama for § 1983 actions did not apply retroactively to § 1983 suit that had been filed when six-year statute of limitations was applicable. Kendrick v. Jefferson County Bd. of Educ., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1991, 932 F.2d 910. Courts 100(1)

Wilson decision of United States Supreme Court, that appropriate limitations period for federal civil rights actions was state's statute of limitations for personal injury cases, lengthened applicable limitations period and thus would be applied retroactively to Arizona inmate's cause of action arising two years before that decision. Krug v. Imbordino, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1990, 896 F.2d 395. Courts 100(1)

Court of Appeals decision making Kansas' two-year statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 actions could not be applied to § 1983 action, which accrued before but was filed after the decision; the decision was "clean break" with "past precedent," and the action was timely under the prior Court of Appeals decisions. Derstein v. Van Buren, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1987, 828 F.2d 653. Courts 100(1)

United States Supreme Court decision, which made § 1983 actions subject to state statute of limitations governing personal injury action, was not retroactive to require application of Iowa two-year statute of limitations to action arising out of former psychiatric patient's 1980 hospitalization; two-year statute of limitations had not run when Court of Appeals required application of Iowa catchall five-year limitations period in § 1983 actions; patient was entitled to rely on Court of Appeals' case; although uniformity and consistency suggested that Supreme Court case should be applied retroactively, factors evaluating patient's reliance and equity outweighed purpose factor; thus, five-year period was applicable. Dautremont v. Broadlawns Hosp., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1987, 827 F.2d 291. Courts 100(1)

Supreme Court decision in Wilson v. Garcia that statute of limitations for personal injury actions, not general statute of limitations, governs section 1983 actions would not be applied retroactively to bar claim of section 1983 plaintiff who justifiably relied on contrary precedent in effect at time of filing. Ridgway v. Wapello County, Iowa, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1986, 795 F.2d 646. See, also, Wegrzyn v. Illinois Dept. of Children and Family Services, C.D.Ill.1986, 627 F.Supp. 636; Fowler v. City of Louisville, W.D.Ky.1985, 625 F.Supp. 181, affirmed 803 F.2d 719, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 1375, 480 U.S. 919, 94 L.Ed.2d 690. Courts 100(1)

United States Supreme Court decision that all § 1983 claims accruing within state are to be governed by that state's personal injury statute of limitations could be applied retroactively to bar prisoner's § 1983 action, which was brought under Iowa law more than two years after alleged due process violations. Wycoff v. Menke, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1985, 773 F.2d 983, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 1230, 475 U.S. 1028, 89 L.Ed.2d 339. Courts 100(1)

County would not be permitted to amend its answer to fixed base operator's complaint alleging § 1983 violation caused by county's disparate treatment of it to add affirmative defense of one-year statute of limitations, as recent Supreme Court decision warranting application of one-year limitations period to fixed based operator's claim would not be applied retroactively. Jetstream Aero Services, Inc. v. New Hanover County, E.D.N.C.1987, 672 F.Supp. 879. Federal Civil Procedure 846

Supreme Court decision that federal courts were required to apply state statute of limitations for personal injury actions when attempting to determine timeliness of claim under § 1983 applied retroactively to bar arrestee's § 1983 action against city and individual police officer which was filed more than two years after cause of action accrued, even though five-year statute of limitations applied in Indiana to § 1983 claims against police officers prior to decision, where two-year statute of limitations applied prior to decision to § 1983 suits against governmental entities. Dinger v. City of New Albany, S.D.Ind.1987, 668 F.Supp. 1216. Courts 100(1)

A Supreme Court decision determining that the state statute of limitations applicable to personal injury actions was the statute to be applied in § 1983 actions would not be applied retroactively to an action that accrued before the decision but that was filed after it. Keller v. U.S., S.D.Cal.1987, 667 F.Supp. 1351, affirmed 930 F.2d 920. Courts 100(1)

Supreme Court decision holding that proper statute of limitations for section 1983 action is statute of limitations for personal injury action under state law would be applied retroactively to give plaintiffs in California full year after decision, where applicable statute of limitations under California law was one year. Thompson v. Weisenberger, N.D.Cal.1987, 660 F.Supp. 365. Courts 100(1)

Supreme Court decision holding that all § 1983 claims are to be governed by state statutes of limitations for personal injury actions did not apply retroactively to deny plaintiffs opportunity to file action on claim which had accrued and was still timely under former statute of limitations on day Supreme Court handed down its decision. Cabrales v. Los Angeles County, C.D.Cal.1986, 644 F.Supp. 1352. Courts 100(1)

United States Supreme Court decision holding that appropriate limitation period for § 1983 actions is state statute of limitations governing personal injury actions would not be applied retrospectively to bar developer's § 1983 claim based on allegations that defendants withheld police protection from construction area and withheld zoning decisions with intent to reduce value of property because of developer's use of black subcontractors, considering that Supreme Court decision established a new principle of law, that purposes of Supreme Court holding, to promote uniformity and minimize unnecessary litigation would not be hampered, and that retrospective application would impose an unjust result; moreover, case would not be retrospectively applied to bar developer's §§ 1981 and 1982 claims. de Furgalski v. Siegel, N.D.Ill.1985, 618 F.Supp. 295. Courts 100(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Rule of Wilson v. Garcia, making statute of limitations for all § 1983 civil rights claims to be forum state's statute of limitations for personal injury torts, did not apply retroactively to cause of action that arose prior to date of that decision but was not filed until after that case was decided, where effect of doing so would be to impose shortened statute of limitations that would serve to bar plaintiff's claim. Usher v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 828 F.2d 556. See, also, McDougal v. County of Imperial, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 942 F.2d 668; Anton v. Lehpamer, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1986, 787 F.2d 1141; Vargas v. Salvation Army, N.D.Ill.1986, 649 F.Supp. 763; Moore v. Floro, N.D.Ill.1985, 614 F.Supp. 328, affirmed 801 F.2d 1344.

9. ---- Nature of claims, retroactive effect of court decisions

United States Supreme Court precedent characterizing § 1983 actions as personal injury actions for limitations purposes would not be retroactively applied so as to bar cable company's action against city based on franchise agreement under two-year Pennsylvania limitations period; cable company could reasonably have relied upon clear past precedent characterizing claims as contractual and thus subject to six-year Pennsylvania limitations period in its effort to timely file action. Erie Telecommunications, Inc. v. City of Erie, W.D.Pa.1987, 659 F.Supp. 580, on subsequent appeal 853 F.2d 1084. Courts 100(1)

Although the United States Supreme Court's decision in Wilson v. Garcia, which characterizes claims under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 as personal injury actions for limitation purposes, would not be applied retroactively to foreclose prosecution of section 1983 suit against police, plaintiffs whose section 1983 cause of action accrued before date of the Supreme Court decision would be required to file suit within shorter period of either five years from date action accrued on basis of Indiana statute of limitations governing claims against police and sheriffs, IC 34-1-2-2(2) (1982 Ed.), or within two years after date of decision on basis of two-year limitation period for personal injury actions, IC 34-1-2-2(1) (1982 Ed.). Ross v. Summers, N.D.Ind.1986, 630 F.Supp. 1267. Civil Rights 1382

10. ---- Patronage hiring and discharge, retroactive effect of court decisions

United States Supreme Court decision that public employee cannot be discharged solely for reason that he is not affiliated with or sponsored by particular political party did not apply retroactively, and thus civil rights of public employee were not violated as result of his demotion, before such Supreme Court decision, because of his earlier service as source of information and recommendations relating to patronage hirings and promotions. Aufiero v. Clarke, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1981, 639 F.2d 49, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 3052, 452 U.S. 917, 69 L.Ed.2d 421. Courts 100(1)

11. ---- Prisoner proceedings, retroactive effect of court decisions

Supreme Court decision in Sandin, elaborating new test for determining whether inmate's liberty interests are implicated, applied retroactively to inmate's § 1983 action that was still open on direct appeal at time Supreme Court decision was rendered. Mackey v. Dyke, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1997, 111 F.3d 460, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 136, 522 U.S. 848, 139 L.Ed.2d 84. Courts 100(1)

Decision holding that prison disciplinary proceedings were constitutionally infirm should not be applied retroactively so as to require expungement of disciplinary records established prior to decision. Leonard v. Mississippi State Probation and Parole Bd., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1975, 509 F.2d 820, rehearing denied 515 F.2d 510, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 428, 423 U.S. 998, 46 L.Ed.2d 373. Courts 100(1)

The court of appeals decision, that a state prisoner is entitled to certain due process guarantees with respect to disciplinary proceedings which could result in increase in amount of time prisoner would be required to spend in prison or which could result in deprivation of certain liberties enjoyed by other inmates, was prospective only. Wheeler v. Procunier, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 508 F.2d 888. Courts 100(1)

Supreme Court's Sandin decision, reconfiguring circumstances under which inmates are afforded state-created liberty interest protected by Due Process Clause, applied retroactively to inmate's allegations of violations of his procedural due process rights in course of disciplinary hearing which resulted in one-year sentence to confinement in prison's Special Housing Unit (SHU) and recommended one-year loss of good time credit. Cespedes v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 454, on reconsideration 969 F.Supp. 254. Courts 100(1)

The Supreme Court decision to the effect that prisoners' suits seeking restoration of good time were governed by § 2254 of Title 28, even though they came within broad language of this section would not be applied retroactively where state prisoners had commenced civil rights action prior to adoption of the decision and had relied on court decision indicating that suit attacking revocation of good time could be brought under this section. Nelson v. Schmidt, W.D.Wis.1973, 373 F.Supp. 705. Courts 100(1)

Prison warden could not be held liable for damages under this section for following procedures, which pertained to placement of inmate in segregation cells, which may have fallen short of procedural due process standards set out in later cases but which, at time of acts complained of, were not in conflict with any binding decided cases. U. S. ex rel. Bracey v. Rundle, E.D.Pa.1973, 368 F.Supp. 1186. Civil Rights 1092

12. State regulation or control

Presumption of private right of action through §§ 1983 to enforce Medicaid provision that required states to make medical assistance available was not incompatible with provision for state administrative procedures, and thus presumption was not rebutted on basis of comprehensive remedial scheme, since recipients of home and community-based services, as alternative to Medicaid institutional nursing facility services, could appeal only their service level determination, not state's underlying decision to not serve individuals in certain levels. Watson v. Weeks, C.A.9 (Or.) 2006, 436 F.3d 1152. Civil Rights 1321

State statute making sheriff liable for misconduct of his deputy could not be applied to arrestee's § 1983 suit alleging that deputy made illegal arrest and used excessive force, and thus sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity from suit, where sheriff did not fail to adequately train, supervise, or control deputy. Palmer v. Sanderson, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1376(6)

Measure, scope and application of an asserted immunity under this section cannot be restricted or enlarged by state laws concerning official privilege or immunity. Bell v. Wolff, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1974, 496 F.2d 1252. States 18.37

This section does not preempt state laws in their proper role of vindicating what are essentially state-guaranteed rights. Dorsey v. National Ass'n for Advancement of Colored People, C.A.5 (La.) 1969, 408 F.2d 1022, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 58, 396 U.S. 847, 24 L.Ed.2d 97. See, also, Nationwide Amusements, Inc. v. Nattin, D.C.La.1971, 325 F.Supp. 95, remanded on other grounds 452 F.2d 651.

If a state statute purports to confer immunity upon an official of a state who has violated provisions of this section by depriving an individual of a federal right, the state has invaded the liberties of the individual which are protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Picking v. Pennsylvania R. Co., C.C.A.3 (Pa.) 1945, 151 F.2d 240, rehearing denied 152 F.2d 753. Civil Rights 1376(3); Constitutional Law 301(1)

Pennsylvania's interstate compact concerning parole manifested no congressional intent to create federal right or remedy enforceable by parolees, and therefore § 1983 did not supply viable cause of action for claims premised upon violation of compact. Lines v. Wargo, W.D.Pa.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 649. Civil Rights 1097

Former public utility executive's failure to comply with state notice-of-claim provisions in connection with § 1983 claims against district attorney and district attorney's office, which arose from criminal prosecution of executive, did not preclude executive's § 1983 claims. Smith v. Gribetz, S.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 145. States 197

Massachusetts Civil Rights Act and § 1983 are parallel statutes, coextensive with each other. Canney v. City of Chelsea, D.Mass.1996, 925 F.Supp. 58. Statutes 226

State statute allowing state to bring action to obtain reimbursement for prisoner's incarceration expenses, up to 90 percent of prisoner's assets, defined to include money judgments received by prisoner from state as result of civil action against state or its employees, was preempted by § 1983; state statute interfered with purpose of § 1983, which was to allow compensation for civil rights violations by state personnel. Hankins v. Finnel, W.D.Mo.1991, 759 F.Supp. 569, affirmed 964 F.2d 853, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 635, 506 U.S. 1013, 121 L.Ed.2d 566. Costs 285; States 18.63

This section occupies a special and preferred position in the jurisprudence and mere inquiry by a state into existence of discrimination within its borders can only be consistent with and supportive of principles embodied in the Constitution and national policy in general; given status which our nation accords civil rights, for a state to adopt the national purposes as its own purposes is not grounds for objection per se on preemption grounds. General Elec. Co. v. New York State Assembly Committee on Governmental Operations, N.D.N.Y.1975, 425 F.Supp. 909. Civil Rights 1703; States 18.23

Limited waiver of municipal immunity from suit for torts committed by its employees while engaging in governmental activities granted by Oklahoma Governmental Tort Liability Act, 11 Okl.St.Ann. § 1751 et seq., does not affect immunity of a city from suit under this section governing deprivation of civil rights. Casey v. Purser, W.D.Okla.1974, 385 F.Supp. 621. Civil Rights 1376(4)

State laws applicable to law clinic's action against state mental health agency for alleged constitutional violations arising from the assessment of full care and treatment charges against indigent patients of state medical facilities and the filing of counterclaims for the amount against patients who sued the state were not preempted by §§ 1983 or the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act. Mental Disability Law Clinic, Touro Law Center v. Carpinello, C.A.2 2006, 189 Fed.Appx. 5, 2006 WL 1527117, Unreported. States 18.15

13. Power of Congress

Congress has power to enforce U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 against those who carry badge of authority of a state and represent it in some capacity, whether they act in accordance with their authority or misuse it. Monroe v. Pape, U.S.Ill.1961, 81 S.Ct. 473, 365 U.S. 167, 5 L.Ed.2d 492. Civil Rights 1325

Congress has the power to redress the infringement of individual civil rights, such as the rights to assemble and petition the federal government for redress of grievances. Hardyman v. Collins, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1950, 183 F.2d 308, certiorari granted 71 S.Ct. 63, 340 U.S. 809, 95 L.Ed. 594, reversed on other grounds 71 S.Ct. 937, 341 U.S. 651, 95 L.Ed. 1253. Civil Rights 1005

Congress has the inherent power to fashion a tort remedy designed to protect participants in federal court actions against harm whether of public or private origin. Local No. 1 (ACA), Broadcast Emp. of Intern. Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America v. International Broth. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, E.D.Pa.1976, 419 F.Supp. 263. United States 22

Congress cannot create a federal cause of action in favor of persons injured by private individuals who abridge rights which are not federal constitutional rights. Whittington v. Johnston, M.D.Ala.1952, 102 F.Supp. 352, affirmed 201 F.2d 810, certiorari denied 74 S.Ct. 103, 346 U.S. 867, 98 L.Ed. 377. States 18.15

14. Nature of proceedings

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Section 1983 creates a species of tort liability, and statute is interpreted in light of the background of tort liability. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., U.S.Cal.1999, 119 S.Ct. 1624, 526 U.S. 687, 143 L.Ed.2d 882. Civil Rights 1304

Section 1983 is not itself a source of substantive rights, but merely provides a method for vindicating federal rights elsewhere conferred. Roe v. Office of Adult Probation, D.Conn.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1080, vacated 125 F.3d 47. Civil Rights 1305

Under § 1983, a person may seek redress for violations of a right guaranteed by the Constitution or federal law, but § 1983 is not itself a source of substantive rights. Backlund v. Hessen, D.Minn.1995, 904 F.Supp. 964, reversed 104 F.3d 1031, rehearing denied, on remand 176 F.R.D. 316. Civil Rights 1305

Claim under § 1983 generally describes substantive violation of rights secured by Constitution or law; section 1983 does not create any substantive rights. Davis v. Olin, D.Kan.1995, 886 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1305

Actions, based on this section, for money judgments, plus costs, were civil actions, and not criminal prosecutions, even though proceeding in Nebraska court, out of which actions were by plaintiff said to have arisen, was a proceeding upon an accusation of contempt of court. Rhodes v. Houston, D.C.Neb.1966, 258 F.Supp. 546, affirmed 418 F.2d 1309, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1382, 397 U.S. 1049, 25 L.Ed.2d 662. Action 18

15. Remedial nature of section

Section 1983 is not itself source of substantive rights, but merely provides method for vindicating federal rights elsewhere conferred. Albright v. Oliver, U.S.Ill.1994, 114 S.Ct. 807, 510 U.S. 266, 127 L.Ed.2d 114, rehearing denied 114 S.Ct. 1340, 510 U.S. 1215, 127 L.Ed.2d 688.

All civil suits authorized by this section establishing civil action for deprivation of rights are not based upon it but are rather based upon the right of the citizens; this section only gives the remedy. Chapman v. Houston Welfare Rights Organization, U.S.Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 1905, 441 U.S. 600, 60 L.Ed.2d 508, on remand 599 F.2d 111. Civil Rights 1305

No substantive rights are created by § 1983 itself; it provides only procedure for redress for deprivation of rights established elsewhere. Sykes v. James, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 13 F.3d 515, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 2749, 512 U.S. 1240, 129 L.Ed.2d 867. Civil Rights 1305

This section governing civil action for deprivation of rights is not itself a jurisdictional statute; it merely creates a cause of action. Hanson v. Town of Flower Mound, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 679 F.2d 497. Federal Courts 219.1

Section 1983 is not jurisdiction-conferring provision, and rather, because § 1983 is essentially remedial in nature and objective, plaintiffs must allege separate jurisdictional basis in order for federal jurisdiction to exist over their claims. McNally v. DeWitt, W.D.Ky.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1041. Federal Courts 219.1

Statute governing civil rights is not itself source of substantive rights but merely provides method for vindicating federal rights conferred elsewhere. Jones v. Moran, N.D.Cal.1995, 900 F.Supp. 1267. Civil Rights 1305

Section 1983 is remedial statute and not basis for jurisdiction. Cok v. Forte, D.R.I.1995, 877 F.Supp. 797, affirmed 69 F.3d 531. Federal Courts 219.1

Federal civil rights statute creates no substantive rights but, rather, only a remedy for violation of rights originating from other sources. Urban by Urban v. Jefferson County School Dist. R-1, D.Colo.1994, 870 F.Supp. 1558, affirmed 89 F.3d 720. Civil Rights 1305

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Consent decree cannot be enforced through § 1983 action. Kellensworth v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 221 F.3d 1342, Unreported. Civil Rights 1056; Federal Civil Procedure 2397.6

16. Exclusive nature of section

When § 1983 is relied on, that statute is the exclusive remedy for the alleged constitutional violations. Davis v. Kent State University, N.D.Ohio 1996, 928 F.Supp. 729. Civil Rights 1307

Where plaintiff alleged cause of action under § 1983, such statute was exclusive remedy for alleged constitutional violations, and plaintiff could not assert independent cause of action under various constitutional provisions. Wynn v. Morgan, E.D.Tenn.1994, 861 F.Supp. 622. Civil Rights 1322

17. Substitute for appeal

This section cannot be used as a substitute for the right of appeal. Reich v. City of Freeport, D.C.Ill.1974, 388 F.Supp. 953, affirmed 527 F.2d 666. See, also, Environmental Aid, Inc. v. Goddard, D.C.Pa.1977, 433 F.Supp. 906; Torres Irizarry v. Toro Goyco, D.C.Puerto Rico 1976, 425 F.Supp. 366.

18. Territorial application of section

Civil rights statutes, §§ 1981 and 1983, did not apply to government of Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. Temengil v. Trust Territory of Pacific Islands, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)1989, 881 F.2d 647, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 2617, 496 U.S. 925, 110 L.Ed.2d 638. Territories 8; Territories 18

Civil rights statute, § 1983, applies to the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands. Fleming v. Department of Public Safety, Com. of Northern Mariana Islands, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)1988, 837 F.2d 401, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 222, 488 U.S. 889, 102 L.Ed.2d 212.

19. Duty of court

Where exercise of authority by state officials is attacked, federal courts must be constantly mindful of special delicacy of adjustment to be preserved between federal equitable power and state administration of its own law. Rizzo v. Goode, U.S.Pa.1976, 96 S.Ct. 598, 423 U.S. 362, 46 L.Ed.2d 561. Injunction 75

20. Secured defined

The term "secured," as used in this section, may for practical purposes be regarded as equivalent to "protected" or even to "granted." Samuel v. Busnuck, D.C.Md.1976, 423 F.Supp. 99. Civil Rights 1027

41. Adoption Assistance Act, construction with other laws

Provision of Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act requiring that the amount each adopted family received in adoption assistance payments "shall take into consideration the circumstances of the adopting parents and the needs of the child being adopted...and be re readjusted periodically...if the circumstances of the parents or the needs of the child change" created a federal right to individualized adoption assistance payment determinations, enforceable through §§ 1983, for purposes of class action brought by parents of adopted children with special needs whose adoption assistance payments were uniformly reduced by the state of Oregon. ASW v. Oregon, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 424 F.3d 970, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1167416. Civil Rights 1057

Provisions of Adoption Assistance Act governing state foster care system plans, other than requirement that reasonable efforts be made to prevent need for removal of child and to make it possible for child to return home, created rights enforceable by foster care children under § 1983, in light of nature of foster care children as intended beneficiaries of Act, in light of Act's imposition of binding obligation on state to include specific features in state foster care plan in order to obtain federal funding, and absent vagueness rendering requirements unenforceable by judiciary. Jeanine B. by Blondis v. Thompson, E.D.Wis.1995, 877 F.Supp. 1268. Civil Rights 1057

42. Americans with Disabilities Act, construction with other laws

Remedies for retaliatory conduct, provided under Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), were not so extensive as to prevent special needs student and parents from asserting claims under § 1983, that school district's special education director retaliated against them in violation of ADA. P.N. v. Greco, D.N.J.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 221. Civil Rights 1309

There are no state exhaustion requirements for actions brought under the ADA or Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, or under § 1983 to enforce a federal constitutional claim. Hornstine v. Township of Moorestown, D.N.J.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 887. Civil Rights 1315

Where it appears that a plaintiff has cloaked a claim under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) as an ADA, Rehabilitation Act, or § 1983 action in an effort to avoid application of the IDEA's distinct exhaustion requirement, courts will require that plaintiff to exhaust the state administrative remedies mandated for IDEA claims. Hornstine v. Township of Moorestown, D.N.J.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 887. Schools 155.5(3)

Congress provided sufficiently comprehensive remedies in ADA, and in section of Rehabilitation Act requiring nondiscrimination under federal grants and programs, for violations of rights thereunder, that § 1983 action could not be based on such statutes. Bartlett v. New York State Bd. of Law Examiners, S.D.N.Y.1997, 970 F.Supp. 1094, reconsideration denied 2 F.Supp.2d 388, affirmed in part, vacated in part 156 F.3d 321, vacated 119 S.Ct. 2388, 527 U.S. 1031, 144 L.Ed.2d 790, on remand 226 F.3d 69. Civil Rights 1307; Civil Rights 1313

Sua sponte dismissal of disabled tenants' pro se in forma pauperis complaint against apartment complex's owner, manager, and other tenants regarding handicapped parking spaces was abuse of discretion, even though complaint did not state claim under §§ 1983 or 1985, where court failed to address tenants' arguable claims under ADA and Fair Housing Act. Phibbs ex rel. Phibbs v. American Property Management, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 60 Fed.Appx. 738, 2003 WL 1384040, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

43. Application of state law provisions, construction with other laws

Elements of false arrest and malicious prosecution under § 1983 are substantially the same as the elements under New York law. Boyd v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 336 F.3d 72. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1088(4)

Foster parent was not "state actor," liable under § 1983 action for alleged abuse of child in her care, by virtue of Massachusetts Tort Claims Act inclusion of foster parents as public employees, as Act excluded foster parents as employees when intentional conduct of sort alleged in present case was involved. Howard v. Malac, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 132. Infants 17; Infants 226

It was not the intent of Congress in enacting this section authorizing an action for deprivation of civil rights, to establish liability of a municipal corporation for respondeat superior damages; thus, § 1988 of this title authorizing local state law to be applied by federal courts in civil rights cases may not be used to establish such liability, even though state law permits such recovery. Underwood v. City of Pensacola, Fla., N.D.Fla.1972, 341 F.Supp. 1380. Federal Courts 411; Civil Rights 1345 of Federal Aviation Act; § 1983 claim was not based on any alleged violations of any substantive federal statute, but rather was predicated on violations of rights derived from constitution. Jetstream Aero Services, Inc. v. New Hanover County, E.D.N.C.1987, 672 F.Supp. 879.

44A. Boren Amendment, construction with other laws

Statute, requiring that state Medicaid plans provide that "assistance shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals," conferred on eligible individuals the right to receive Medicaid, which was enforceable under § 1983, where Congress did not explicitly foreclose private enforcement actions or implicitly supplant them by establishing comprehensive administrative enforcement scheme. Rabin v. Wilson-Coker, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 332, reversed 362 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1052; Health 467

45. Busing of school children provisions, construction with other laws

Section 2000c-6(a) of this title, prohibiting bussing to achieve racial balance, applies only to actions under § 2000c et seq. of this title, and had no application to school desegregation action under this section. Harvest v. Board of Public Instruction of Manatee County, Fla., M.D.Fla.1970, 312 F.Supp. 269.

Section 2000c-6 of this title withholding power from courts of United States to order transportation of pupils from one school to another for purpose of achieving ratio balance would not prohibit district court from issuing preliminary injunction which was designed to correct situation where city school board had actively contributed to the segregated conditions found to exist in the city's schools. Keyes v. School Dist. No. One, Denver, Colo., D.C.Colo.1969, 303 F.Supp. 289, reinstated 90 S.Ct. 12, 396 U.S. 1215, 24 L.Ed.2d 37. Schools 159.5(3)

46. Caretaker statute, construction with other laws

1968 amendment to the "caretaker statute" does not alter basic purpose of § 709 of Title 32 to assist the states in the care of federal property and does not establish that officers of state National Guard act under color of federal and not state law in interfering with civilian technicians' rights. Syrek v. Pennsylvania Air Nat. Guard, W.D.Pa.1974, 371 F.Supp. 1349. Civil Rights 1327

47. Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, construction with other laws

Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) expressly conditioned receipt of federal funding upon state's compliance with its requirements that states take immediate steps to protect children upon receipt of report and finding of abuse or neglect, and thus, CAPTA created rights enforceable by foster care children under § 1983, absent vagueness in statutory language so as to render conditions unenforceable by judiciary. Jeanine B. by Blondis v. Thompson, E.D.Wis.1995, 877 F.Supp. 1268. Civil Rights 1057

48. Civil Rights Act of 1866, construction with other laws

Causes of action under the Civil Rights Act of 1866, § 1981 of this title, this section, and Equal Employment Opportunity Act, § 2000e et seq. of this title, are distinct and independent and have different procedural, jurisdictional and remedial characteristics; also, different groups of persons are protected against discrimination under these various statutes. Scott v. University of Delaware, C.A.3 (Del.) 1979, 601 F.2d 76, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 275, 444 U.S. 931, 62 L.Ed.2d 189. Civil Rights 1304; Civil Rights 1511

Allegations by driver involved in collision with vehicle driven by off-duty city police officer that officer conspired with officers who responded to the incident to cover up his role in the collision and his intoxicated state were sufficient to state civil conspiracy claim under §§ 1983. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Conspiracy 18

Express cause of action for damages created by § 1983 constituted exclusive federal remedy for violation of rights guaranteed in § 1981 when alleged violator was school directors of school district, state actors. Bennett v. School Directors of Dist. 204, N.D.Ill.1996, 941 F.Supp. 763, supplemented 1996 WL 649907. Civil Rights 1312

When state employee seeks to hold his or her state agency employer liable in damages for violations of rights guaranteed by § 1981, the state employee must pursue such claims exclusively under § 1983. Ebrahimi v. City of Huntsville Bd. of Educ., N.D.Ala.1995, 905 F.Supp. 993, appeal dismissed 114 F.3d 162. Civil Rights 1312

There is a broader grant of available remedies under § 1981 of this title guaranteeing equal rights under the law and Constitution than under this section authorizing damage suit for violation of constitutional rights by every person acting under color of state law. Stewart v. Wappingers Central School Dist., S.D.N.Y.1977, 437 F.Supp. 250, amended 493 F.Supp. 791. Civil Rights 1307

Action attacking school district's mandatory maternity leave policy could not be maintained under § 1981 of this title dealing with equal rights under law but could be maintained under this section providing civil action for deprivation of rights. Williams v. San Francisco Unified School Dist., N.D.Cal.1972, 340 F.Supp. 438. Civil Rights 1176

Section 1983 action may not be brought to vindicate rights conferred only by statute that contains its own structure for private enforcement, such as Title VII. Patterson v. County of Oneida, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 375 F.3d 206. Civil Rights 1312

Section 1983 remains an available cause of action for bringing equal protection claims against municipal employers which allegedly have engaged in employment discrimination; Title VII is not the exclusive remedy for public sector employment discrimination. Thigpen v. Bibb County, Ga., Sheriff's Dept., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2000, 223 F.3d 1231. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Title VII did not preclude female correctional officers from asserting sexual harassment and sex discrimination claims under § 1983 and civil rights conspiracy statute against captain who was their alleged harasser and former director of state Department of Criminal Justice, even if such claims arose from same facts as officers' Title VII claims. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1502

Allegations of discriminatory treatment in connection with public employment that formed the basis of a Title VII claim could not also form the basis of a second, separate claim under § 1983 as well. Jackson v. City of Atlanta, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 73 F.3d 60, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 70, 519 U.S. 818, 136 L.Ed.2d 30. Civil Rights 1502

In cases alleging disparate treatment in which § 1983 is employed as remedy for the same conduct attacked under Title VII, elements of the two causes of action are the same. Richardson v. Leeds Police Dept., C.A.11 (Ala.) 1995, 71 F.3d 801, on remand 990 F.Supp. 1331. Civil Rights 1138

Employment discrimination plaintiff alleging violation of constitutional right may bring suit under § 1983 alone, and is not required to plead concurrently a violation of Title VII and to satisfy the procedural requirements of Title VII; Congress did not intend to make Title VII exclusive remedy for employment discrimination claims, at least not those claims cognizable under Constitution. Annis v. County of Westchester, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 36 F.3d 251, on remand 939 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1502

Elements of employment discrimination claim under § 1983 are the same as those under Title VII. Hicks v. St. Mary's Honor Center, Div. of Adult Institutions of Dept. of Corrections and Human Resources of State of Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 970 F.2d 487, rehearing denied, certiorari granted 113 S.Ct. 954, 506 U.S. 1042, 122 L.Ed.2d 111, reversed 113 S.Ct. 2742, 509 U.S. 502, 125 L.Ed.2d 407, on remand 2 F.3d 264, on remand 2 F.3d 265, suggestion for rehearing denied.

If plaintiff can show constitutional violation by someone acting under color of state law, then plaintiff has cause of action under § 1983, regardless of Title VII's concurrent application. Starrett v. Wadley, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1989, 876 F.2d 808.

Title VII does not preempt action under § 1983 for violation of Fourteenth Amendment. Roberts v. College of the Desert, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 870 F.2d 1411.

Although Title VII is exclusive remedy for violation of its own terms, injured public employee may pursue remedy under § 1983 as well as under Title VII when employer's conduct violates both Title VII and separate constitutional or statutory right. Johnston v. Harris County Flood Control Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 869 F.2d 1565, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 718, 493 U.S. 1019, 107 L.Ed.2d 738.

Title VII did not provide exclusive remedy for employment discrimination claims based on race against state employer and thus nonpromoted employee's § 1983 action for violation of the Fourteenth Amendment was not preempted by Title VII. Keller v. Prince George's County, C.A.4 (Md.) 1987, 827 F.2d 952.

Requirement that Title VII plaintiff file discrimination charge with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission within 180 days after alleged unlawful employment practice could not be circumvented by utilizing § 1983 as vehicle for asserting Title VII claim. Foster v. Wyrick, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 823 F.2d 218. Civil Rights 1505(2)

Where an employee establishes employer conduct which violates both section 2000e et seq. of this title and rights derived from another source, be it the Constitution or federal statute, which existed at time of section 2000e et seq. of this title, a claim based on the other source is independent and the plaintiff may seek remedies provided by this section in addition to those created by section 2000e et seq. of this title. Day v. Wayne County Bd. of Auditors, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1984, 749 F.2d 1199. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Insofar as this section is used as parallel remedy for transgression of rights under the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, § 2000e et seq. of this title, and § 1981 of this title guaranteeing equal rights under the law, this section providing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law requires same elements of proof as the other two provisions. Whiting v. Jackson State University, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 616 F.2d 116, rehearing denied 622 F.2d 1043. Civil Rights 1421

This section and § 1981 of this title provide no greater or lesser protection against employment discrimination practices than the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, § 2000e et seq. of this title. Carrion v. Yeshiva University, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 535 F.2d 722.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Act, 2000e et seq. of this title, does not preempt discrimination in employment field and thus did not preclude bringing of action based on sex discrimination under this section. Johnson v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1971, 450 F.2d 796, 62 O.O.2d 122.

Minority teachers did not have claim under Title VI for alleged disparate impact that licensing tests had on their certification, since there was no private right of action under Title VI and Title VI did not create right enforceable via § 1983. Gulino v. Board of Educ. of City School Dist. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 314, certification denied 234 F.Supp.2d 324, reversed in part 2002 WL 31887733.

Conclusory allegations were insufficient to state civil rights conspiracy claim against private law firm for allegedly colluding with judges and municipal officers to deprive property owner of liberty and property rights in violation of due process through allegedly bogus actions enforcing town housing code and holding owner in contempt for continuing violation; sweeping allegations required involvement of virtually all of state judiciary and lacked any claimed motive on part of conspirators. Marcello v. Maine, D.Me.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 55. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Claims against county school district and school officials under §§ 1983 that could have been brought under Title VI were preempted by Title VI; although Title VI did not explicitly purport to limit §§ 1983 relief and Title VI offered administrative enforcement scheme and implied private right of action and damages that were more restrictive than those available through §§ 1983, congressional intent to foreclose such remedy could be inferred from creation of comprehensive statutory scheme. Alexander v. Underhill, D.Nev.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1309

Federal employee could not bring discrimination claim under §§ 1983; Title VII was exclusive, preemptive administrative and judicial scheme for redress of federal employment discrimination. Roland v. Potter, S.D.Ga.2005, 366 F.Supp.2d 1233. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

A Title VII plaintiff is not precluded from bringing a concurrent §§ 1983 cause of action, such as a claim for denial of equal protection, so long as the §§ 1983 claim is based on a distinct violation of a constitutional right. Dawson v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 176. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Plaintiffs cannot use § 1983 to bring equal protection claims regarding violations of their rights under Title VII and thereby bypass the comprehensive remedies created by Title VII. Sheaffer v. County of Chatham, M.D.N.C.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 709. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Court should not dismiss a First Amendment claim on technical argument that it was not brought through §§ 1983, and should instead deem a plaintiff's complaint to allege the First Amendment claim as one brought through §§ 1983 rather than as a direct action under the First Amendment. Davis v. Durham Mental Health Developmental Disabilities Substance Abuse Area Authority, M.D.N.C.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 378. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Dismissal of former municipal employee's § 1981 claim against former employer, alleging wrongful termination on basis of race, was required, where employee also asserted § 1983 race discrimination claim against employer. Perry v. Metropolitan Suburban Bus Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 338. Civil Rights 1312

A claim for violation of § 1981 rights by a state actor must be pled as a § 1983 claim based on a violation of § 1981. Timmons v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 712. Civil Rights 1307; Civil Rights 1394

While plaintiffs are often precluded from pursuing § 1983 claims based on alleged violation of rights created by Title VII, there must be finding that right at issue existed exclusively as creation of Title VII. Hargrave v. County of Atlantic, D.N.J.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 393. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Virginia state college employee could simultaneously pursue claims under Title VII and § 1983 for racial discrimination and retaliatory discrimination in employment. Allen v. College of William & Mary, E.D.Va.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 777.

Section 1983 cause of action for damages was African-American teacher's exclusive remedy for alleged violations of § 1981 by school district. Bluitt v. Houston Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 703. Civil Rights 1312

Elements of causes of action under § 1983 and Title VII are the same, where § 1983 is used as parallel remedy for violation of Title VII; to establish state employer's violation of Equal Protection Clause, plaintiff must prove discriminatory motive or purpose, inferred in same manner as under Title VII. Shuford v. Alabama State Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1125; Civil Rights 1137

Section 1983 claim cannot be predicated on allegations of retaliation; Title VII provides exclusive remedy for such claims. Gamper v. State of Ala. Dept. of Corrections, M.D.Ala.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1483.

Employee can pursue remedy under § 1983 as well as under Title VII when employer's conduct violates both Title VII and separate constitutional or statutory right. Sharp v. City of Houston, S.D.Tex.1997, 960 F.Supp. 1164. Civil Rights 1502

Former assistant county attorney could bring sex discrimination claims against county and county officials under both Title VII and § 1983, where § 1983 claim stated distinct violation of former assistant county attorney's equal protection rights under Fourteenth Amendment. Lococo v. Barger, E.D.Ky.1997, 958 F.Supp. 290, affirmed in part, reversed in part 234 F.3d 1268. Civil Rights 1502

Employee may sue his or her public employer under both Title VII and § 1983 when § 1983 violation rests on claim of infringements of rights guaranteed by United States Constitution. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1502

City employee's failure to institute a Title VII cause of action for race and sex discrimination precluded employee from bringing action under § 1983 for violation of Fourteenth Amendment. Burtnick v. McLean, D.Md.1997, 953 F.Supp. 121. Civil Rights 1502

Concurrent causes of action for employment discrimination under Title VII and § 1983 are permitted. Madon v. Laconia School Dist., D.N.H.1996, 952 F.Supp. 44.

Title VII is not the exclusive remedy for intentional employment discrimination by municipal entity, inasmuch as § 1983 also provides remedy for employment discrimination as violation of Fourteenth Amendment's equal protection clause. Carpenter v. City of Northlake, N.D.Ill.1996, 948 F.Supp. 759. Civil Rights 1502

State employee's gender and race discrimination claims under §§ 1981 and 1983 could only be brought under Title VII and, therefore, were barred; state employee failed to identify any distinction between her §§ 1981 and 1983 discrimination claims and her Title VII claim. Messer v. Meno, W.D.Tex.1996, 936 F.Supp. 1280, affirmed in part, reversed in part 130 F.3d 130, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 149 F.3d 1181, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 794, 525 U.S. 1067, 142 L.Ed.2d 657. Civil Rights 1502

A plaintiff cannot use § 1983 to gain perceived advantages not available to a Title VII plaintiff, but a plaintiff can assert a claim under § 1983 if some law other than Title VII is the source of right alleged to have been denied. Cohen v. Litt, S.D.N.Y.1995, 906 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1502

Discharged employee could not maintain cause of action under § 1983 predicated on retaliation since Title VII provided exclusive remedy in this context. Lightner v. Town of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 902 F.Supp. 1489. Civil Rights 1502

Standards of proof which are employed in cases brought under Title VII also apply to employment actions brought under §§ 1981 and 1983. Stubblefield v. City of Jackson, Miss., S.D.Miss.1994, 871 F.Supp. 903. Civil Rights 1421

Plaintiff may demonstrate that sexual harassment occurred, for purposes of § 1983 cause of action for sexual harassment based on equal protection, by showing actionable harassment under Title VII. Faragher v. City of Boca

Raton, S.D.Fla.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1552, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 1155, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 83 F.3d 1346, affirmed in part, reversed in part 111 F.3d 1530, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 438, 522 U.S. 978, 139 L.Ed.2d 337, reversed 118 S.Ct. 2275, 524 U.S. 775, 157 A.L.R. Fed. 663, 141 L.Ed.2d 662, on remand 166 F.3d 1152. Constitutional Law 224(3); Civil Rights 1183

Remedial nature of Title VII did not preclude police department employee's additional, § 1983 claim alleging sexual harassment where employee could establish both that conditions of her employment were affected on account of her sex (Title VII) and that she was intentionally discriminated against (§ 1983); though elements and evidence used to prove claims were similar, the two causes of action were not mutually exclusive. Dirksen v. City of Springfield, C.D.Ill.1994, 842 F.Supp. 1117. Civil Rights 1502

Amendments to Title VII which allow compensatory damages and jury trials in employment discrimination cases did not provide exclusive remedy or preempt § 1983 civil rights action; § 1983 continued to provide additional relief by allowing state limitations to apply and disposing of administrative filing requirement. Beardsley v. Isom, E.D.Va.1993, 828 F.Supp. 397, affirmed 30 F.3d 524. Civil Rights 1502

Title VII precluded bringing of § 1983 action against supervisor, following earlier decision in which Title VII had been found to bar § 1983 suit involving other supervisors, even though earlier action did not have collateral estoppel effect due to absence of supervisor as party in first action; claim was frivolous in that newly sued supervisor was in same type of role as others. Marrero Rivera v. Department of Justice of Com. of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 821 F.Supp. 65. Civil Rights 1502

Title VII was not exclusive federal remedy for county employee seeking redress for employment discrimination, and employee could sue under § 1983 as well, where § 1983 claim alleged constitutional violations not created by Title VII and employee was not seeking to avoid administrative machinery of Title VII by also pleading § 1983. Brown v. Polk County, Iowa, S.D.Iowa 1992, 811 F.Supp. 432. Civil Rights 1502

Employee's § 1983 claim would be dismissed where claim arose from same factual allegations as her Title VII claim and employee failed to identify independent constitutional or federal statutory right that allegedly had been violated by employer. Smith v. Denver Public School Bd., D.Colo.1991, 758 F.Supp. 1421. Civil Rights 1502

Black county employee's pursuit of Title VII claim did not preclude employee from also bringing claim under § 1983. Maddox v. County of San Mateo, N.D.Cal.1990, 746 F.Supp. 947. Civil Rights 1502

Title VII did not preclude § 1983 sex discrimination claim of teacher whose contract was not renewed. Suber v. Bulloch County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ga.1989, 722 F.Supp. 736.

Although victims of sex discrimination must normally look to Title VII for relief, state employee could sue her state government employer for violations of Fourteenth Amendment through § 1983 and thus escape Title VII's comprehensive remedial scheme. Dunlop v. Colgan, N.D.Ill.1988, 687 F.Supp. 406.

Former female employees' claim that state agency engaged in sex discrimination in violation of Title VII did not preclude additional sex discrimination claim under § 1983. Wymer v. New York State Div. for Youth, W.D.N.Y.1987, 671 F.Supp. 210.

Co-workers cannot be sued under Title VII, and plaintiff cannot bring action under § 1983, based upon Title VII, against person who could not be sued directly under Title VII. Guy v. City of Phoenix, D.Ariz.1987, 668 F.Supp. 1342. Civil Rights 1527

Federal civil rights deprivation claim may be brought in tandem with Title VII employment discrimination claim based on same operative facts if deprivation claim is premised on independent constitutional basis. Young v.

Sedgwick County, Kan., D.Kan.1987, 660 F.Supp. 918. Civil Rights 1511

Individual could not bring action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 to redress any violations or rights under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and thereby avoid jurisdictional requirements of Title VII which she had not met since congressional intent to preclude recovery for Title VII violations under § 1983 could be presumed. Strama v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1985, 617 F.Supp. 422. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Section 2000e-16 of this title provides exclusive judicial remedy available to federal employee complaining about job-related discrimination; therefore, former employees of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation could not bring civil rights action under this section. Castro v. U.S., D.C.Puerto Rico 1984, 584 F.Supp. 252, affirmed 775 F.2d 399. See, also, Giles v. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, E.D.Mo.1981, 520 F.Supp. 1198.

District court that retained jurisdiction to resolve compliance issues following stipulated dismissal of § 1983 action by female correctional officers against sheriff's department, arising from policy of prohibiting cross-gender assignments of correctional officers in violation of equal protection, would not assume jurisdiction over matter before Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) as result of officers' charge that department's failure to assign certain shifts based upon seniority violated Title VII; statutory basis and issues were different. Sheriff's Silver Star Ass'n of Oswego County, Inc. v. County of Oswego, N.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21877850, Unreported. Federal Courts 25

50. Civil rights conspiracy provisions, construction with other laws

A complaint charging conspiracy, carried into effect, by state's attorney, two deputy sheriffs and sheriff to injure, threaten and intimidate plaintiff because of his plea of not guilty to indictment for murder, need not be treated by court as filed strictly under § 1985 of this title, authorizing action for conspiracy to interfere with civil rights, but may be treated as stating cause of action for deprivation of such rights in violation of this section, if plaintiff was deprived of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by Constitution and laws. Lewis v. Brautigam, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1955, 227 F.2d 124. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Public employee's claim against defendant township board of education and individual members, alleging that defendants knowingly neglected or refused to prevent wrongs which were conspired to be done to him, in violation of his federal civil rights, should have been brought under § 1986, governing actions for failure to prevent conspiracies to violate federal civil rights, rather than under § 1983. Harrington v. Lauer, D.N.J.1995, 888 F.Supp. 616, on reconsideration in part 893 F.Supp. 352. Civil Rights 1126

This section relating to civil actions for deprivation of rights applies only to conduct under color of state law whereas § 1985 of this title giving right of action to recover damages for conspiracy to deprive persons of rights and privileges applies to purely private conspiracy. Flores v. Yeska, E.D.Wis.1974, 372 F.Supp. 35. Civil Rights 1324; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Section 241 et seq. of Title 18 providing for punishment by fine or imprisonment for deprivation of certain federal rights, privilege or immunities have no application to a civil suit under this section. Shaffer v. Jennings, E.D.Pa.1970, 317 F.Supp. 446. See, also, Myers v. Couchara, D.C.Pa.1970, 313 F.Supp. 873. Civil Rights 1807

51. Civil Rights Jurisdiction Act, construction with other laws

The "rights, privileges and immunities" language in this section should be interpreted to have the same meaning as the identical words (in the singular) in § 1343 of Title 28. Eisen v. Eastman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1969, 421 F.2d 560, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 82, 400 U.S. 841, 27 L.Ed.2d 75. Civil Rights 1027; Federal Courts 220

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Where deprivations of rights under this section are alleged, the narrower words of § 1343 of Title 28 providing federal court jurisdiction for a civil action to redress the deprivation, under color of state law, of any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution or Act of Congress prevail over the broader language of this section. McClellan v. Shapiro, D.C.Conn.1970, 315 F.Supp. 484. Statutes 223.4

Remedies available to student attacking validity of regulation relating to length of students' hair were not supplanted by § 1343 of Title 28 conferring jurisdiction on federal courts in civil rights cases and were to be pursued in state rather than federal courts. Schwartz v. Galveston Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1970, 309 F.Supp. 1034. Courts 489(1)

52. Civil Rights Restoration Act, construction with other laws

Title IX preempted §§ 1983 claims against school officials which alleged that officials did not follow school district's sexual harassment policy, and they were deliberately indifferent toward plight of African American boys, as victims of sexual abuse by Caucasian teacher, since claims against officials essentially were identical to their claims against school district and Title IX provided sufficient statutory recourse for alleged discrimination. Doe v. Smith, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 470 F.3d 331. Civil Rights 1309

Title IX did not provide the exclusive federal law remedy for action brought by organization of parents and female high school athletes against state high school athletic association, alleging that association's scheduling of high school sports seasons discriminated against female athletes, and thus, organization was not barred from seeking additional remedies under §§ 1983 for violation of the equal protection clause; there was no evidence that Congress intended to supplant §§ 1983 constitutional claims, despite implied private right of action found in Title IX, as the only enforcement mechanism expressly authorized by Title IX was the withdrawal of federal funds for the educational institution. Communities for Equity v. Michigan High School Athletic Ass'n, C.A.6 2006, 459 F.3d 676. Civil Rights 1309

Remedies provided under Title IX did not foreclose former female student's claim against state-university professor under §§ 1983, alleging violation of equal protection resulting from sexual harassment, pursuant to Sea Clammers doctrine; only possible effect of applying doctrine would have been to immunize professor from liability for alleged federal constitutional tort, which could not have been intended by Congress when it enacted Title IX. Delgado v. Stegall, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 367 F.3d 668. Civil Rights 1309

Teacher's Title IX sex discrimination claim against public school preempted her § 1983 equal protection claims against school officials based on same alleged instance of discrimination. Waid v. Merrill Area Public Schools, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1996, 91 F.3d 857. Civil Rights 1312

Civil Rights Restoration Act does not strip state university of immunity for suits brought under § 1983, which does not specifically prohibit discrimination by recipients of federal financial assistance. Kaimowitz v. Board of Trustees of University of Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 951 F.2d 765. Civil Rights 1376(5)

Section 1983 suits against individuals in their individual capacities are not subsumed by Title IX. Jones v. Indiana Area School Dist., W.D.Pa.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 628. Civil Rights 1337

Right under Title IX to be free from discrimination on basis of sex and Fourteenth Amendment right to be free from violation of one's bodily integrity at hands of state actor are two distinct rights, even if same conduct is asserted to support claim on both grounds; thus, plaintiff who has asserted claim under Title IX is not necessarily precluded from also asserting claim under § 1983 for deprivation of constitutional right. Hackett v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1067(1); Civil Rights 1309; Constitutional Law 278.5(1)

Availability of relief under Title IX, precluding gender discrimination in federally financed programs, barred § 1983 action by high school student against school district, alleging that her substantive due process rights were violated when she was forced to remain in school under supervision of athletic coach who had allegedly raped her, while school had knowledge of specific act and of other sexual improprieties on part of coach. Canty v. Old Rochester Regional School Dist., D.Mass.1999, 54 F.Supp.2d 66. Civil Rights 1309

Claim under Title IX does not preempt suit under § 1983 if underlying set of facts not only violates Title IX but also violates independent constitutional rights; preemption doctrine as applied to actions under § 1983 does not stand for proposition that federal statutory scheme can preempt independently existing constitutional rights having contours distinct from statutory claim. Carroll K. v. Fayette County Bd. of Educ., S.D.W.Va.1998, 19 F.Supp.2d 618. Civil Rights 1309

In action by high school student against school district and administrators on theory that policy of indifference allowed plaintiff to be sexually abused by coach, § 1983 claim was subsumed within claim under Title IX, which establishes comprehensive enforcement scheme. Seneway v. Canon McMillan School Dist., W.D.Pa.1997, 969 F.Supp. 325, appeal quashed 118 F.3d 1577. Civil Rights 1309

Title IX, forbidding sex discrimination in education program receiving federal financial assistance, did not preclude student from bringing § 1983 action against principal in her individual capacity to enforce student's rights under Title IX. Nicole M. By and Through Jacqueline M. v. Martinez Unified School Dist., N.D.Cal.1997, 964 F.Supp. 1369. Civil Rights 1309

Student could not proceed with sexual harassment claim against state university and its employees in their official capacities under § 1983 given that suit could be brought under Title IX and that Title IX has comprehensive enforcement scheme; § 1983 claims against employees in their individual capacities could, however, proceed. Mann v. University of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 1994, 864 F.Supp. 44. Civil Rights 1309; Civil Rights 1356

53. Education for All Handicapped Children Act, construction with other laws

Education for All Handicapped Children Act, section 1401 et seq. of Title 20, which establishes detailed procedures for administrative and judicial review of state's proposals to educate handicapped children creates a comprehensive and exclusive remedial scheme which precludes reliance upon a cause of action under this section for denial of appropriate education; student cannot assert a cause of action under this section by relying on a claim that the right to equal protection has been violated. Department of Educ., State of Hawaii v. Katherine D. By and Through Kevin and Roberta D., C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1983, 727 F.2d 809, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2360, 471 U.S. 1117, 86 L.Ed.2d 260. See, also, Hymes v. Harnett County Bd. of Ed., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 664 F.2d 410; Silano v. Tirozzi, D.Conn.1987, 651 F.Supp. 1021; Gerasimou by Gerasimou v. Ambach, E.D.N.Y.1986, 636 F.Supp. 1504; M.R. v. Milwaukee Public Schools, E.D.Wis.1984, 584 F.Supp. 767; Rollison v. Biggs, D.C.Del.1983, 567 F.Supp. 964; Noe v. Amback, S.D.N.Y.1982, 542 F.Supp. 70. Schools 155.5(2.1)

54. Age Discrimination in Employment Act, construction with other laws

Claim of age discrimination under § 1983 is preempted by ADEA where facts alleged will not independently support a § 1983 claim. Lafleur v. Texas Dept. of Health, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 126 F.3d 758.

Age Discrimination in Employment Act's (ADEA) comprehensive statutory scheme precluded state employee from bringing age discrimination suit against state employers under §§ 1983. Cataldo v. Moses, D.N.J.2004, 361 F.Supp.2d 420. Civil Rights 1502

Claim of age discrimination under §§ 1983 is preempted by ADEA where facts alleged will not independently support §§ 1983 claim. Aucoin v. Kennedy, E.D.La.2004, 355 F.Supp.2d 830. Civil Rights 1312; Civil

A § 1983 claim asserting age discrimination is preempted by the ADEA as a matter of law. Nabozny v. NCS Pearson, Inc., D.Nev.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Defendant is not automatically entitled as matter of right to list of names and addresses of government's witnesses prior to trial. U.S. v. Washington, S.D.N.Y.1996, 947 F.Supp. 87. Criminal Law 629(5)

Former employee's § 1983 claims against city, mayor, council members and city manager for age discrimination in violation of equal protection clause was preempted by ADEA. Ford v. City of Oakwood, Ga., N.D.Ga.1995, 905 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights 1502

55. Fair Housing Act of 1968, construction with other laws

Where suits under this section were commenced two years before Fair Housing Act of 1968, § 3601 et seq. of this title, was passed, relief under this section would not have to await proceedings thereunder. Sullivan v. Little Hunting Park, Inc., U.S.Va.1969, 90 S.Ct. 400, 396 U.S. 229, 24 L.Ed.2d 386.

Sua sponte dismissal of disabled tenants' pro se in forma pauperis complaint against apartment complex's owner, manager, and other tenants regarding handicapped parking spaces was abuse of discretion, even though complaint did not state claim under §§ 1983 or 1985, where court failed to address tenants' arguable claims under ADA and Fair Housing Act. Phibbs ex rel. Phibbs v. American Property Management, C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 60 Fed.Appx. 738, 2003 WL 1384040, Unreported. Federal Civil Procedure 2734

56. Fair Labor Standards Act, construction with other laws

Recipient participating in Work Experience Program (WEP) as condition of continued receipt of New York State public assistance benefits could not use § 1983 to challenge state official's alleged FLSA violations, inasmuch as Congress evinced clear intent to preclude use of § 1983 for protection of rights secured by FLSA. Stone v. McGowan, N.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 79. Civil Rights 1052; Civil Rights 1136

Where cases cited by defendant in support of contention that sex discrimination complainant was obliged to exhaust her administrative remedies before bringing federal court suit arose under this section, cases were inapposite as regards action brought under the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, § 2000e et seq. of this title, and under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, § 201 et seq. of Title 29. Shudtz v. Dean Witter & Co., Inc., S.D.N.Y.1976, 418 F.Supp. 14, motion granted 423 F.Supp. 48.

57. Family and Medical Leave Act, construction with other laws

Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) does not foreclose § 1983 suits, and thus § 1983 action is available for violations of FMLA; FMLA's enforcement provisions are not so comprehensive as to imply exclusivity, and FMLA does not contain detailed administrative procedure. Knussman v. State of Md., D.Md.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 601. Civil Rights 1312

57A. HIPAA, construction with other laws

Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) did not preclude production of defendant's medical records and worker's compensation files in response to either a discovery request, subpoena or court order, where there was a protective order which adequately safeguarded the defendant's privacy. 58. Federal question statute, construction with other laws

Former § 41(1) [now 1331] of Title 28 and this section had to be read together and neither was to be interpreted as abolishing the other. Hague v. Committee for Indus. Organization, U.S.N.J.1939, 59 S.Ct. 954, 307 U.S. 496, 83 L.Ed. 1423.

The technical considerations concerning "persons" amenable to suit under this section are not applicable to lawsuits brought pursuant to § 1331 of Title 28. Croy v. Skinner, N.D.Ga.1976, 410 F.Supp. 117. Federal Civil Procedure 103

Mere fact that a government subdivision is not subject to suit under this section because it is not a "person" within meaning of this section does not shield it from liability under § 1331 of Title 28 vesting district courts with general federal question jurisdiction. Panzarella v. Boyle, D.C.R.I.1975, 406 F.Supp. 787. Federal Courts 232

59. Full faith and credit provisions, construction with other laws

Civil rights statute does not create exception to statutory full faith and credit provision. Bolling v. City & County of Denver, Colo. By and Through McNichols, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1986, 790 F.2d 67. Judgment 828.4(2)

60. Johnson Act, construction with other laws

Johnson Act deprived federal courts of subject matter jurisdiction over § 1983 action in which information provider who used services offered by telecommunications company raised challenges under First and Fourteenth Amendments to order of New York Public Service Commission (PSC), which allowed discontinuation of services that were used by information provider after company had absorbed cost of making its equipment Y2K compliant in order to provide services for five years; however, Johnson Act did not bar action to extent that claims could be viewed solely as a challenge to only so much of PSC order which allowed discontinuation of service. Evans v. New York State Public Service Com'n, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2002, 287 F.3d 43. Federal Courts 26.1

61. Labor-Management Relations Act, construction with other laws

Section 1983 claims of union representatives against public officials based primarily on violation of their federal rights of concerted action under NLRA were not precluded by NLRA enforcement scheme. Radcliffe v. Rainbow Const. Co., C.A.9 (Cal.) 2001, 254 F.3d 772, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 545, 534 U.S. 1020, 151 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1312

Since coverage of the relevant parts of this subchapter is no broader than the constitutional protection, the provisions of this subchapter are not equivalent to the Labor-Management Relations Act, § 151 et seq. of Title 29, in the field of public employment. Hanover Tp. Federation of Teachers, Local 1954 (AFL-CIO) v. Hanover Community School Corp., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1972, 457 F.2d 456.

NLRA did not preempt §§ 1983 claims by nurse employed by Missouri corporation that provided medical services at county correctional facility in New York that corporation acted under color of state law to violate her constitutional rights under First and Fourteenth Amendments; NLRA did not provide comprehensive scheme for vindication of constitutional rights. Lagoy v. Correctional Medical Services, N.D.N.Y.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 58. Civil Rights 1312; Labor And Employment 962; States 18.49

63. Prison Litigation Reform Act, construction with other laws

Congress enacted Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995 (PLRA) primarily to curtail prisoners' § 1983 civil rights claims and actions under Federal Torts Claims Act (FTCA), most of which concerned prison conditions and many of which were routinely dismissed as legally frivolous. Santana v. U.S., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 98 F.3d 752, as amended. Civil Rights 1090; United States 78(5.1)

Even if detainee suffered all of the psychological and emotional injuries that he alleged, Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) precluded recovery against correctional officials under section 1983 because detainee did not allege physical injury. Brewster v. Nassau County, E.D.N.Y.2004, 349 F.Supp.2d 540. Civil Rights 1463

Section 1983 claim for inadequate provision of educational programs would be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted where prisoner failed to comply with exhaustion requirement of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). A.N.R. ex rel. Reed v. Caldwell, M.D.Ala.2000, 111 F.Supp.2d 1294. Civil Rights 1311

Provision of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) barring federal action by prisoner for mental and emotional injury without prior showing of physical injury did not apply retroactively to inmate's pending § 1983 case; when inmate filed complaint, he was entitled to seek compensatory damages without suffering physical injury, and application of statute to pending cases would eliminate claims that were legally cognizable and attach new legal consequences to events completed before enactment of statute. Thomas v. Hill, N.D.Ind.1997, 963 F.Supp. 753. Civil Rights 1006

Inmate failed to exhaust a § 1983 claim of harassment against employees of the New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS), and thus, the claim was barred by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); the inmate did not allege that he ever appealed the outcome of an investigation of his harassment claims. Rodney v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21108353, Unreported. Civil Rights 209

Inmate failed to exhaust claim of excessive force against employees of the New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) prior to bringing a § 1983 suit against them, and thus, the claim was barred by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). Rodney v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21108353, Unreported. Civil Rights 209

Inmate failed to exhaust claim challenging prison discipline prior to commencing his § 1983 suit against employees of the New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS), and thus, the claim was barred by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); appeal of his Tier III hearing was not affirmed until 6 days after the § 1983 action was commenced. Rodney v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21108353, Unreported. Civil Rights 209

Inmate failed to exhaust claim of a false misbehavior report prior to commencing his § 1983 suit against employees of the New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS), and thus, the claim was barred by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA); the inmate never alleged that he grieved the filing of the allegedly false report. discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin, adherence to the administrative procedure provided by § 2000a et seq. of this title was not required. Service Emp. Intern. Union, AFL-CIO v. Butler County, Pa., W.D.Pa.1969, 306 F.Supp. 1080. Civil Rights 1312

65. Railway Labor Act, construction with other laws

District court had jurisdiction to hear discharged commuter railroad employee's constitutional challenge to blood and urine testing which gave rise to his discharge, even though discharge had been upheld in compulsory and binding arbitration pursuant to Railway Labor Act; rights guaranteed by Fourth Amendment and under § 1983 and public policy favoring arbitration underlying Railway Labor Act required that employee be allowed to pursue contractual remedy under the Act and a separate cause of action under § 1983 independently of one another. Coppinger v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 861 F.2d 33. Civil Rights 1312

Section 163 of Title 45 providing that Act providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration and all Acts in conflict with Railway Labor Act, § 151 et seq. of Title 45, are repealed does not specifically repeal this section, in that § 163 of Title 45 makes no specific mention of this section or any other statute not dealing directly with transportation questions, and differences between this section and § 163 were insufficient to support finding of explicit repeal; also, this section was not preempted or impliedly repealed by the Railway Labor Act, in that § 152 of Title 45, providing for duty of carriers and employees to settle disputes was not viewed by Congress as replacing any statute but instead as a supplement to existing legislation which was viewed as inadequate; § 152 of Title 45 does not provide any elaborate or complete mechanism for settlement of disputes where no union has yet been certified, and thus the Railway Labor Act was not an exclusive remedy for employees, who alleged that their termination from employment was motivated by their efforts to promote union organization among employees. Hodges v. Tomberlin, S.D.Ga.1980, 510 F.Supp. 1280.

66. Rehabilitation Act of 1973, construction with other laws

Federal civil rights statute provided private right of action under Individuals with Disability Education Act (IDEA) and Rehabilitation Act on behalf of student who alleged that he was denied services to which he was entitled. W.B. v. Matula, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 67 F.3d 484. Civil Rights 1330(2)

Former employees' claims that State agency violated employees' First Amendment right of free association could not have been brought in employees' Rehabilitation Act handicap discrimination suit and, therefore, employees were entitled to maintain First Amendment claims in civil rights action. Smith v. Barton, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1990, 914 F.2d 1330, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2825, 501 U.S. 1217, 115 L.Ed.2d 995. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Employee could base § 1983 action against state natural resources department, for alleged refusals to transfer employee due to disability, upon Rehabilitation Act; defendants failed to carry burden of demonstrating that Congress expressly withdrew § 1983 remedy. Bodiford v. State of Ala., M.D.Ala.1994, 854 F.Supp. 886. Civil Rights 1220

In the absence of congressional intent to contrary, Rehabilitation Act does not preclude action under § 1983 based on handicap discrimination. Rothschild v. Grottenthaler, S.D.N.Y.1989, 716 F.Supp. 796.

Rehabilitation Act was not exclusive remedy available to blind employment applicant who alleged she was denied employment because of a handicap; therefore, applicant could maintain § 1983 action and was not required to exhaust administrative remedies. Cordero-Martinez v. Aponte-Roque, D.Puerto Rico 1988, 685 F.Supp. 314. Civil Rights 1312; Civil Rights 1502

Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, § 1541 of Title 48, providing that no tort action shall be brought against the government of the Virgin Islands or against any officer or employee thereof in his official capacity without consent of the legislature did not bar action for damages in the Virgin Islands against three police officers under this section. Ocasio v. Bryan, C.A.3 (Virgin Islands) 1967, 374 F.2d 11. Territories 32

Fact that almost two years passed between Baltimore police officer's hiring and her termination, while perhaps not enough time to altogether remove inference of Fourth Circuit's Proud v. Stone decision, sufficiently weakened inference to prevent dismissal of her gender discrimination/equal protection claim on that basis alone. Campbell v. Town of Southern Pines, M.D.N.C.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 480. Civil Rights 1405

68. Rules of Decision Act, construction with other laws

The Rules of Decision Act, § 1652 of Title 28, does not mandate application of state law in actions brought under this section where the law to be applied is federal law albeit that state law is incorporated by reference. Jones v. Marshall, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1975, 528 F.2d 132. Federal Courts 411

69. Sherman Act, construction with other laws

This section does not prevent manufacturer from refusing to purchase equipment even if refusal is in violation of § 2 of Title 15. Raitport v. General Motors Corp., E.D.Pa.1973, 366 F.Supp. 328.

Scope of operations in civil rights field under this section, is at least as broad as that exercised by Congress in adoption of Sherman Act, §§ 1 to 7 of Title 15, or as in legislation affecting labor relations under National Labor Relations Act, § 151 et seq. of Title 29, and is broader than that exercised by Congress in its regulation of wages and hours of services under wage and hour laws. Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. U. S., N.D.Ga.1964, 231 F.Supp. 393, probable jurisdiction noted 85 S.Ct. 11, 379 U.S. 803, 13 L.Ed.2d 20, affirmed 85 S.Ct. 348, 379 U.S. 241, 13 L.Ed.2d 258. Civil Rights 1003

70. Social Security Act, construction with other laws

Requirement under state law that resident of homeless shelter contribute most of her Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits to the cost of her upkeep did not violate the "anti-attachment" or "anti-alienation" provisions of the Social Security Act, where resident voluntarily agreed to her placement in emergency housing under the terms and conditions as they were explained to her, and there was no evidence that her payment was not voluntary. Johnson v. Wing, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1999, 178 F.3d 611, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1177, 528 U.S. 1162, 145 L.Ed.2d 1085. Social Security And Public Welfare 139

Social Security Act did not confer on custodial parents individual right enforceable under §§ 1983 to have state disbursement unit distribute their child support payments within two business days; statutes did not contain the sort of "rights-creating" language essential to show the requisite congressional intent to create new rights and are focused on the entity regulated as opposed to the individuals allegedly protected. Walters v. Weiss, E.D.Ark.2003, 349 F.Supp.2d 1160, affirmed 392 F.3d 306. Civil Rights 1057

Section 1983 claim brought by class of social security disability claimants which alleged that state agency charged with making disability determinations violated claimants' right to equal protection was not barred by existence of statutory remedies in Social Security Act; although § 1983 and statutory remedies both provide remedy for allegedly wrongful conduct by state agency, each was intended to remedy violations of different rights and, thus, were capable of coexistence. 71. State Tax Injunction Act, construction with other laws

Civil rights suits filed under this section do not come within an exception to the State Tax Injunction Act, section 1341 of Title 28. Hawaiian Telephone Co. v. State Dept. of Labor and Indus. Relations, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1982, 691 F.2d 905. Courts 508(6)

Hawai'i provided plain, speedy, and efficient remedies by which taxpayer could challenge constitutionality of excise tax, and thus taxpayer's § 1983 claim was barred by Tax Injunction Act, where taxpayer could pay tax and then appeal to district board of review or directly to Tax Appeal Court, taxpayer could alternatively pay tax under protest and then commence action in Tax Appeal Court within 30 days, taxpayer could raise any constitutional objections in Tax Appeal Court, and if still aggrieved, taxpayer could appeal to the Hawai'i Supreme Court. Moore v. Kamikawa, D.Hawai'i 1995, 940 F.Supp. 260, affirmed 82 F.3d 423. Federal Courts 27

72. Telecommunication Act, construction with other laws

Rebuttable presumption arose that subsection of Telecommunications Act (TCA), that precluded state or local governments from having effect of prohibiting ability of any entity to provide any interstate or intrastate telecommunications service, created "federal right" enforceable under §§ 1983 by federally licensed provider of commercial mobile radio service, rather than just statutory right, since Congress intended TCA to benefit providers, albeit secondarily, enforcement of subsection did not strain judicial competence, and TCA unambiguously imposed binding obligation on municipalities because it stated definitive prohibition, not mere preference. Sprint Telephony PCS, L.P. v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 898, opinion clarified 2004 WL 859333. Civil Rights 1041

A plaintiff cannot rely on the Telecommunications Act to bring a claim under § 1983. E. Spire Communications, Inc. v. Baca, D.N.M.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 1310, affirmed 392 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 108.1

Telecommunications Act contains a remedial scheme that is sufficiently comprehensive to indicate that Congress impliedly foreclosed resort to § 1983 with respect to rights granted to wireless telecommunications providers pertaining to siting of wireless facilities. Primeco Personal Communications v. City of Mequon, E.D.Wis.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 567, affirmed 352 F.3d 1147. Civil Rights 1073; Civil Rights 1310

Although city, which denied wireless telecommunications provider's request to construct personal wireless communications tower, violated federal right, provider was not entitled to attorney fees under § 1983 for city's violation of Telecommunications Act (TCA), since TCA contained comprehensive enforcement scheme that implicitly supplanted § 1983 remedies; statute provided clear, detailed process that allowed quick and complete remedies, statute expressly allowed judicial review, statute provided private right of action, and § 1983 added no remedy except attorney fee award. National Telecommunication Advisors, Inc. v. City of Chicopee, D.Mass.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1479; Telecommunications 1055

73. Tort Claims Act, construction with other laws

Whether suit, wherein it was alleged that discriminatory practices followed by certain defendants enabled defendant real estate vendors to extract excessive prices from Negro purchasers, was properly based on this section, as it was, or on state tort of interference with contract rights, suit against federal defendants was not barred on theory that Federal Tort Claims Act, §§ 1346(b) and 2671 et seq. of Title 28, afforded only mode of suit against them. Baker v. F & F Inv. Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1973, 489 F.2d 829. Civil Rights 1310

Federal Tort Claims Act was exclusive remedy for damages suit against United States arising from alleged negligence by Veterans Administration employees in loan servicing where no constitutional or statutory violations were alleged. 74. Venue provisions, construction with other laws

This section and § 1985 of this title and §§ 241 and 242 of Title 18 creating civil claims or imposing criminal penalties for deprivation of constitutional rights are not laws providing for equal rights nor do they confer "color of authority" for exercise of those rights within § 1443 of Title 28. People of State of N. Y. v. Galamison, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1965, 342 F.2d 255, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 1342, 380 U.S. 977, 14 L.Ed.2d 272. Removal Of Cases 70

Section 1391 of Title 28 making it possible to bring actions against government officials and agencies in district courts outside District of Columbia does not expand scope of coverage under this subchapter. Norton v. McShane, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1964, 332 F.2d 855, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 1345, 380 U.S. 981, 14 L.Ed.2d 274. Civil Rights 1003

75. Miscellaneous laws, construction with other laws

Individual may not enforce, through §§ 1983 action, protections provided by Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA) against employment discrimination based on military service obligations; Congress did not mean for the comprehensive remedial scheme expressly authorized by USERRA to coexist with alternative remedy available in §§ 1983 action, and enforcement of USERRA through §§ 1983 would distort the litigation options and remedies created by USERRA. Morris-Hayes v. Board of Educ. of Chester Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 423 F.3d 153. Civil Rights 1312

National Bank Act (NBA) addresses the allocation of federal versus state regulatory power over national banks, and does not provide national banks with individual rights enforceable under §§ 1983. Wachovia Bank, N.A. v. Burke, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 414 F.3d 305, petition for certiorari filed 2005 WL 2463529, miscellaneous rulings 126 S.Ct. 791, 163 L.Ed.2d 626. Civil Rights 1041

Plaintiff cannot plead violations of § 1983 to avoid the Johnson Act, which proscribes federal injunctions against utility rates made by state agency. U S West, Inc. v. Tristani, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1999, 182 F.3d 1202, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 845, 528 U.S. 1106, 145 L.Ed.2d 713. Federal Courts 28

Congress did not manifest intent that administrative remedies provided for under Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) were exclusive recourse, barring § 1983 suit alleging that First Amendment rights of municipal consortium employees were violated when their contracts were not renewed in alleged retaliation for their support of losing candidates in election; there was no explicit grant of exclusivity, administrative procedures of JTPA were applicable to sections not relevant in present case, and there was no implication of intended exclusivity in legislative history. Torres v. Maldonado, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 477. Civil Rights 1312; United States 127(2)

Savings clause of Clean Air Act (CAA), which provided plaintiffs with opportunity to seek relief for violations of their statutory or common law rights, did not vest federal district court with subject matter jurisdiction under §§ 1983 over manufacturer's CAA claims against Commissioner of New York State Department of Environmental Conservation and Attorney General of State of New York, since CAA had comprehensive remedial scheme and private cause of action had to be derived from separate statute in order to utilize savings clause, not CAA's procedural provisions. Sherwin-Williams Co. v. Crotty, N.D.N.Y.2004, 334 F.Supp.2d 187. Civil Rights 1313

Administrative enforcement scheme of Workforce Investment Act (WIA) did not impliedly foreclose ability of transitory employees to bring action against mayors of municipalities under § 1983 for discrimination in employment because of employees' political affiliation; WIA prohibited employment discrimination because of political affiliation and provided for enforcement by Secretary of Labor by referral to Attorney General for institution of civil action, and Secretary's compliance regulations set forth procedures for processing discrimination complaints, but neither WIA nor regulations provided comprehensive enforcement of private remedy through which aggrieved persons could seek redress by obtaining judicial review. Borrero-Rodriguez v. Montalvo-Vazquez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1312

Because the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (ATSA) does not afford an applicant for employment individual rights, it cannot be a basis for a § 1983 claim. Nabozny v. NCS Pearson, Inc., D.Nev.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1121

When statute has sufficient "rights-creating" language, so as to be enforceable under § 1983, statute focuses on conferring benefit or entitlement on an individual or class of individuals and does not focus on entity or person that statute intends to regulate; statutes that focus on person regulated rather than individuals protected create no implication of intent to confer rights on particular class of persons. Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. New York City Dept. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 338. Civil Rights 1027

Fact that statute's provisions have only "aggregate focus" and are not concerned with whether needs of any particular person have been satisfied is indicative of Congress' intent not to create individual rights that are enforceable under § 1983. Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. New York City Dept. of Educ., S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 338. Civil Rights 1027

Gun-Free Schools Act provides no basis for private suit under § 1983 for violation of Act. Niziol v. Pasco County Dist. School Bd., M.D.Fla.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 1194.

Defendant in § 1983 civil rights action could not rely on right of privacy available explicitly under the California Constitution to withhold medical records from treating physician contained in worker's compensation file, as such could be abrogated where justified under federal law. Hutton v. City of Martinez, N.D.Cal.2003, 219 F.R.D. 164. Constitutional Law 82(7); Federal Civil Procedure 1598

By creating a comprehensive enforcement scheme within the Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Act for veterans working for the District of Columbia, Congress precluded any remedy under § 1983 for violation of retention rights under the Act in case of such veterans. Bridges v. Kelly, D.D.C.1997, 977 F.Supp. 503, affirmed 159 F.3d 635, 333 U.S.App.D.C. 45. Civil Rights 1126

Violation of Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act may be basis for civil rights claim under § 1983, even though FERPA does not provide private cause of action. Doe v. Knox County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.1996, 918 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1070

For purposes of motion to dismiss, prior arbitration award did not preclude employee's later civil rights and Title VII suit in federal court, since, taking employee's pleadings as true, arbitration related to employee's rights under collective bargaining agreement instead of to her civil rights claims, employee sought injunctive relief, attorney fees, and punitive fees in her federal court suit, and thus back pay and reinstatement awarded by prior arbitration award did not fully satisfy her claims, and, although arbitrator's award was confirmed by Rhode Island state court, state's court's review was procedural rather than on merits. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 69. Labor And Employment 1599

Section 1983 claims are not preempted by Title VII claims based on the same conduct. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 55.

Section 1983 was available as remedy for violation of Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), since language of FERPA revealed congressional intent to impose obligations directly on educational agencies or institutions, obligation on educational agencies or institutions was unambiguous, FERPA created enforceable federal right in favor of parent of educational disabled student and Congress had not foreclosed enforcement of the statute in the enactment itself. Belanger v. Nashua, New Hampshire, School Dist., D.N.H.1994, 856 F.Supp. 40. Civil Rights 1069; Civil Rights 1070

While § 3006A of Title 18, provides that attorneys may be appointed and compensated for their services when they represent state prisoners seeking relief by way of federal habeas corpus, there is no provision for appointment when prisoners present claims under this section, but there is no reason to ignore essential habeas corpus nature of such claims for purposes of § 3006A of Title 18; if statutes are to be construed broadly to protect rights of prisoners, a similar construction is appropriate to provide at least minimal compensation for those attorneys who endeavor to have those rights protected. McClain v. Manson, D.C.Conn.1972, 343 F.Supp. 382. Civil Rights 1485

Tax Injunction Act divested district court of jurisdiction over taxpayers' action to enjoin government officials from enforcing state tax laws by adding their names to a list of delinquent taxpayers or foreclosing on their real property, as New York courts provided a plain, speedy and efficient remedy for taxpayers' claims under §§ 1983 and the New York State Constitution. Schulz v. Williamson, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 145 Fed.Appx. 704, 2005 WL 1977803, Unreported, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1078995. Federal Courts 27

76. Workforce Investment Act, construction with other laws

Employees who brought § 1983 action against municipal consortium, municipalities and personnel, alleging political discrimination, were not expressly precluded from bringing constitutional claims by statutory scheme of Workforce Investment Act (WIA), since WIA did not specify any grievance procedures to be followed in like circumstances, nor did it state that administrative remedies must be exhausted prior to filing suit under § 1983. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1312

Employees who brought § 1983 action against municipal consortium, municipalities and personnel, alleging political discrimination, were not expressly precluded from bringing constitutional claims by regulatory scheme enacted under Workforce Investment Act (WIA), since consortium was not entity operating program or activity encompassed within WIA regulations, and mere availability of administrative mechanisms did not defeat employees' ability to invoke § 1983. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1312

Employees who brought § 1983 action against municipal consortium, municipalities and personnel, alleging political discrimination, were not impliedly foreclosed from bringing constitutional claims by statutory scheme of Workforce Investment Act (WIA), since remedial devices provided within WIA were not sufficiently comprehensive to demonstrate congressional intent to preclude remedy of suits under § 1983; legislative history of WIA was silent with regards to discrimination claims, exhaustion of grievance procedures, or preclusion of § 1983 claims. Caraballo Seda v. Javier Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 76. Civil Rights 1126; Civil Rights 1312

101. Law governing generally

Under this section pertaining to proceedings in vindication of civil rights, federal courts are instructed to refer to state statutes when federal law provides no rule of decision for actions brought under this section, and federal courts are authorized to disregard an otherwise applicable state rule of law only if the state law is "inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States". Board of Regents of University of State of N. Y. v. Tomanio, U.S.N.Y.1980, 100 S.Ct. 1790, 446 U.S. 478, 64 L.Ed.2d 440. Federal Courts 433

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

When it comes to suits for damages for abuse of power, federal officials are usually governed by local law. Wheeldin v. Wheeler, U.S.Cal.1963, 83 S.Ct. 1441, 373 U.S. 647, 10 L.Ed.2d 605. Federal Courts 431

State rule cannot be deemed inconsistent with federal law under § 1983 and disregarded simply because it extinguishes particular plaintiff's cause of action; it can be disregarded only if it is inconsistent with policies underlying § 1983--deterrence and compensation. Jund v. Town of Hempstead, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1991, 941 F.2d 1271 . Federal Courts 411

Federal court considering § 1983 action must give preclusive effect to state court judgment to same extent that court in that state would. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Judgment 828.4(1)

Where federal suit is commenced before final decision by state court, state court judgment forecloses § 1983 litigant from raising grievances in federal court only if such claims have been pressed before, and decided by, state tribunal. Waste Management of Pennsylvania, Inc. v. Shinn, D.N.J.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1243, amended 969 F.Supp. 906. Judgment 828.16(1)

Prerequisite for viable civil rights claim is that defendant directed, or knew of and acquiesced in, deprivation of plaintiff's constitutional rights. Turiano v. Schnarrs, M.D.Pa.1995, 904 F.Supp. 400. Civil Rights 1335

Federal court defining role of state official for purposes of determining liability under § 1983 must look to the state law. Cofield v. Randolph County Com'n, M.D.Ala.1994, 844 F.Supp. 1499. Federal Courts 411

102. Federal right, law governing

To state § 1983 claim, plaintiff must point to specific federal right. Whiting v. Traylor, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 581. Civil Rights 1027

If there is no violation of a federal right, there is no basis for a civil rights action under § 1983 and no answer to a plea by public officer of qualified immunity. Hodge v. Jones, C.A.4 (Md.) 1994, 31 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1376(1)

Federal civil rights statute was designed to deter state actors from using their authority to deprive individuals of their federally guaranteed rights and to provide relief to victims if deterrence failed. Bosley v. Kearney R-1 School Dist., W.D.Mo.1995, 904 F.Supp. 1006, affirmed 140 F.3d 776, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1004; Civil Rights 1324

103. State right, law governing

Violations of state laws do not, by themselves, permit claim under § 1983. Lilley v. State of Mo., E.D.Mo.1996, 920 F.Supp. 1035, affirmed 111 F.3d 135. Civil Rights 1027

Availability of adequate state remedies under Oregon Administrative Procedures Act precluded §§ 1983 suit for violation of procedural due process brought by nurse against members of the Oregon State Board of Nursing, following suspension of his registered nurse license and nurse practitioner certificate; Act permitted suspension of professional licenses without a pre-deprivation hearing and provided for judicial review of final agency orders. Corcoran v. Olson, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 102 Fed.Appx. 522, 2004 WL 957834, Unreported. Civil Rights 1321

104. Abatement or survival of action, law governing

Louisiana survivorship statute LSA-C.C.P. art. 428, which does not allow deceased's personal representative to be substituted as plaintiff in actions other than those for damage to property but allows action to survive only in favor of spouse, children, parents or siblings is not inconsistent with Constitution and laws of United States so that district court sitting in Louisiana was required to adopt as federal law Louisiana survivorship law which would have caused action under this section authorizing civil action for damages for deprivation of rights to abate upon death of plaintiff without leaving spouse, children, parents or siblings and district court was not free to create federal common law rule allowing action to survive. Robertson v. Wegmann, U.S.La.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1991, 436 U.S. 584, 56 L.Ed.2d 554, on remand 591 F.2d 1208. Federal Courts 401

Injuries alleged by plaintiff under this section in suit against police officers for violations of his constitutional rights during arrest, detention, pretrial proceedings and trial were not personal injuries within meaning of Indiana survival statute, IC 34-1-1-1, and therefore death of plaintiff of natural causes while incarcerated did not abate the cause of action. Blake v. Katter, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1982, 693 F.2d 677. Abatement And Revival 57

Since Congress did not provide rules of survivorship for actions under this section, district court acted properly in applying Alabama law to determine that decedent's right of action survived his death and that only party who could properly assert claim would be administratrix of his estate. Hess v. Eddy, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1982, 689 F.2d 977, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 3085, 462 U.S. 1118, 77 L.Ed.2d 1347. Federal Courts 401; Federal Courts 428

Cause of action under this section survives for the benefit of the estate, if the law of the forum state creates a right of survival. Davis v. Oregon State University, C.A.9 (Or.) 1978, 591 F.2d 493. Abatement And Revival 57

In order to determine whether civil rights action alleging that plaintiff was deprived of his personal freedom, of liberty to express his views and to practice his profession, and that he was embarrassed, humiliated, and put in fear of his life by actions of defendant municipal court judge survived death of plaintiff, resort had to be taken to state law. Dean v. Shirer, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1976, 547 F.2d 227. Federal Courts 401

In federal civil rights action, where person who has been deprived of his rights has died, action survives for benefit of estate if applicable state law creates such survival action. Spence v. Staras, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 507 F.2d 554. Abatement And Revival 57

Decedent's § 1983 claim for excessive force resulting in instant death was personal cause of action and could be pursued in name of decedent's personal representative, even though Indiana's survival statute barred survival actions in cases involving instantaneous death; under such circumstances, survival statute was hostile to Constitution and laws of United States. Tracy For and on Behalf of Estate of Tracy v. Bittles, N.D.Ind.1993, 820 F.Supp. 396. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Federal law only provides a remedy for actions which deprive persons of civil rights and, hence, is controlling of inconsistent Texas law on wrongful death and survival to extent Texas law would permit recovery for actions which do not rise to level of a constitutional deprivation. Clift by Clift v. Fincannon, E.D.Tex.1987, 657 F.Supp. 1535. Federal Courts 411

The remedies available under the West Virginia wrongful death law, Code, 55-7- 8a(a), as applied to the facts of the case, suffice to meet the "deterrence of official misconduct" policy of this section and, hence, abate the claims under this section that were most analogous to the West Virginia laws. Jones v. George, S.D.W.Va.1982, 533 F.Supp. 1293. Federal Courts 401

A claim for deprivation of civil rights which accrued before death survives decedent where there is a state law providing for survival. Guyton v. Phillips, N.D.Cal.1981, 532 F.Supp. 1154. Abatement And Revival 57

105. Appellate procedure, law governing

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Idaho appellate rule was not preempted by § 1983 to extent rule did not allow state officials to take interlocutory appeal from denial of qualified immunity; challenged rule was neutral state rule for administering state courts, application of rule primarily involved balancing of state interests, delaying appeal would not affect ultimate outcome of case, and right to immediate appeal in federal court was procedural right that did not apply in nonfederal forum. Johnson v. Fankell, U.S.Idaho 1997, 117 S.Ct. 1800, 520 U.S. 911, 138 L.Ed.2d 108. Courts 85(3); States 18.71

Police officers' actions during arrest of automobile passenger did not constitute conspiracy under § 1983, where passenger did not contend that officers communicated in any manner prior to alleged assault, and passenger alleged that only one officer performed false arrest and used excessive force. Veney v. Ojeda, E.D.Va.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 733. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

African-American employee of city failed to state § 1983 conspiracy claim against city and its officials; complaint did not refer to agreement between supervisor and others to deprive employee of his constitutional rights, and complaint did not provide details of time and place and alleged effect of conspiracy on employee. Jessamy v. City of New Rochelle, New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 498. Conspiracy 18

106. Arrest, law governing

Because arresting officer followed procedures Federal Constitution prescribes for making arrests, his failure to accord arrestee additional procedures established by Illinois law did not matter for purposes of arrestee's § 1983 Fourth Amendment claim against officer; in other words, failure to afford hearing required by Illinois law, but not by Fourth Amendment, violated only that state law for purposes of § 1983 claim. Gordon v. Degelmann, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 29 F.3d 295, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Police officer who had probable cause to make warrantless misdemeanor arrest under federal law could not be held liable in federal civil rights action on ground that the arrest violated state law because offense was not committed in officer's presence. Fields v. City of South Houston, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1991, 922 F.2d 1183, rehearing denied.

Detective was entitled to qualified immunity in arrestee's § 1983 action alleging that his arrest and detention on basis of false information violated his Fourth Amendment rights; a reasonable officer could have believed that probable cause supported the initial arrest, inasmuch as investigators had information that arrestee was the man recorded using an ATM machine at approximate time a murder victim's card had been used in that machine, and arrestee matched description of suspect seen fleeing scene of murder. Liser v. Smith, D.D.C.2003, 254 F.Supp.2d 89. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Primary issue of whether arrest was legal was a matter of Michigan state law in § 1983 action brought by arrestee against police department and police officers. Greenan v. Romeo Village Police Dept., E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 658. Federal Courts 404

107. Capacity to sue, law governing

A state disability statute will not affect a state prisoner's federal rights to sue in a civil rights case, despite the normal determination of capacity to sue by state law. Kaiser v. Cahn, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 510 F.2d 282. Federal Civil Procedure 101

108. Color of law, law governing

Whether certain conduct is "under color of state law" or "state action," for purposes of § 1983 and Fourteenth Amendment, is a question of federal, not state law. Gorenc v. Salt River Project Agr. Imp. and Power Dist., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1989, 869 F.2d 503, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 256, 493 U.S. 899, 107 L.Ed.2d 205. Federal Courts

State's determination that an association is a private association for purposes of state law does not limit federal courts in determining whether association has acted under color of state law and violated U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Robison v. Wichita Falls & North Texas Community Action Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 507 F.2d 245. Federal Courts 414

Rules of state law that private university operating state-supported New York State College of Ceramics under contract with the state cannot resist tort claims upon basis of state's sovereign immunity and that state is not liable for university's torts or breaches of contract do not determine whether state has so far involved itself in operation of such college that acts of its delegates constitute action "under color of" state law for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, which is a question of federal law. Powe v. Miles, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1968, 407 F.2d 73. Civil Rights 1326(7); Constitutional Law 213(4)

Whether there is "color" of state law and whether there is conduct which deprives plaintiff in damage case under this section, of constitutional right, are federal and not state questions. Marshall v. Sawyer, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1962, 301 F.2d 639. Federal Courts 411

For purposes of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, because question whether defendant other than state itself should be equated with state is entirely matter of state's governmental structure, relevant inquiry must be made under state rather than federal law. Santiago v. Daley, N.D.Ill.1990, 744 F.Supp. 845. Federal Courts 418

109. Contribution, law governing

Federal law governed question of whether contribution was available in section 1983 case brought by former and present public employees alleging they were fired or harassed because of their political or union affiliations. Fishman v. DeMeo, E.D.Pa.1985, 604 F.Supp. 873. Federal Courts 431

Federal common law, not NMSA 1978, 41-31-1 et seq., governed issue of whether defendants were entitled to contribution from third-party defendant in civil rights action. Valdez v. City of Farmington, D.C.N.M.1984, 580 F.Supp. 19. Federal Courts 374

110. Custom or usage, law governing

Whether particular official has "final policymaking authority" for § 1983 purposes is question of state law. McMillian v. Monroe County, Ala., U.S.Ala.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1734, 520 U.S. 781, 138 L.Ed.2d 1. Federal Courts 411

Authority to make municipal policy, required to support municipal liability under § 1983, may be granted directly by legislative enactment or may be delegated by official who possesses such authority; in examining state law to determine such authority, court reviews relevant legal materials, including state and local positive law, as well as custom or usage having force of law. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Whether government employee has final policymaking authority in specific area of government operations for purposes of imposing local government liability under § 1983 is question of state law. Jett v. Dallas Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 7 F.3d 1241, rehearing denied. Federal Courts 411

Courts must turn to state law to determine whether individual official has final authority to establish municipal policy, for purposes of determining municipal liability under federal civil rights statute. Krmencik v. Town of Plattekill, N.D.N.Y.1991, 758 F.Supp. 103, affirmed 946 F.2d 882. Federal Courts 411

111. Defenses, law governing--Generally

This section provides a federal remedy for the redress of wrongs done under the color of state law and, as such, state law or the prevailing common law view is not decisive as to the availability of defenses; rather, the prevailing common law must be considered in light of policies and purposes of the civil rights action to determine whether importation of a defense, or allowance of a defense where the common law provides none, is appropriate. Landrum v. Moats, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1978, 576 F.2d 1320, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 282, 439 U.S. 912, 58 L.Ed.2d 258.

Federal, not state, law applies and determines adequacy of defenses asserted in civil rights action against law enforcement officers. Qualls v. Parrish, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1976, 534 F.2d 690. Federal Courts 411

In an action under this section, claiming excessive force in effecting arrest, federal law determined adequacy of defenses asserted. Clark v. Ziedonis, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1975, 513 F.2d 79. Federal Courts 431

Federal courts may be guided, but are not bound, by the vagaries of state law with respect to the immunities and defenses available to state officers in civil rights suit for damages. Fidtler v. Rundle, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 497 F.2d 794. Federal Courts 418

Federal court may resort to state law of torts to supply elements of civil rights claim, and defenses recognized by state common law may be raised. Scott v. Vandiver, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1973, 476 F.2d 238. Federal Courts 431

Privileges are to be narrowly, not expansively, construed, especially in federal civil rights actions, where assertion of privilege must overcome the fundamental importance of a law meant to insure each citizen from unconstitutional state action. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1994, 869 F.Supp. 828.

In interpreting the scope of this section, courts are not bound by state law of torts or the defense of privilege that law provides. Ayler v. Hopper, M.D.Ala.1981, 532 F.Supp. 198. Federal Courts 433

Where same conduct underlay both claim against social worker for deprivation of plaintiffs' civil rights and claim under state tort law of malicious prosecution, social worker's defenses against the two claims could differ if state law of malicious prosecution diverged from the law of malicious prosecution prevailing generally since prevailing view of tort law in the country, rather than the law of the forum, determined what defenses were available as regards claim under this section. Anthony v. White, D.C.Del.1974, 376 F.Supp. 567. Civil Rights 1371

112. ---- Immunity, defenses, law governing

Pursuant to supremacy clause, California litigation immunity statute did not apply to shield from liability in federal civil rights action attorneys accused of conspiring with judge to deprive party of constitutional rights, inasmuch as existence of immunities in action was matter of federal law. Kimes v. Stone, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1121. Civil Rights 1375; States 18.23

Although federal, not state, law determines adequacy of defenses asserted in § 1983 action, a court may consider relevant state law in determining appropriate federal immunity standard to apply. Brown v. Griesenauer, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 970 F.2d 431. Federal Courts 411

Statutory immunity from personal liability afforded prison officials under South Dakota law was not preempted by § 1983, in action by prisoner seeking damages based upon officials' alleged negligent failure to protect him from sexual assaults committed by another prisoner; preemption extended only to intentional violations of personal civil rights, as § 1983 was inapplicable to negligence claims. Webb v. Lawrence County, D.S.D.1996, 950 F.Supp. 960, affirmed 144 F.3d 1131. Prisons 10; States 18.15

Members of county board of elections who were sued under § 1983 for violating successful candidate's constitutional rights were not entitled to dismissal on grounds of qualified immunity under state law; in addition to fact that state law cannot immunize person against federal civil rights action, immunity defense would best be considered after some discovery had been conducted, not on motion to dismiss. Barley v. Luzerne County Bd. of Elections, M.D.Pa.1995, 937 F.Supp. 362. Civil Rights 1376(4); Federal Civil Procedure 1752.1; Federal Civil Procedure 1828

Maine Civil Rights Act employs federal standard for qualified immunity. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1735

State law that immunizes government conduct otherwise subject to suit under § 1983 is preempted by the Supremacy Clause of the Federal Constitution. Silva v. University of New Hampshire, D.N.H.1994, 888 F.Supp. 293. Civil Rights 1376(1); States 18.23

Absolute immunity granted by the Alabama Constitution to state officials in their official capacities did not provide them absolute immunity from suit brought by plaintiff under § 1983 for deprivation of federally guaranteed rights. Williams v. Alabama State University, M.D.Ala.1994, 865 F.Supp. 789, reversed 102 F.3d 1179, on remand 979 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Question of whether governing body's actions are legislative, administrative, or quasi-judicial, for purposes of determining immunity, is an issue of state law. Fry v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Baca, D.Colo.1991, 837 F.Supp. 330, affirmed 7 F.3d 936, rehearing denied. Federal Courts 418

113. Duty to protect, law governing

Determination of whether parole officials had a constitutional duty to protect people from parolee attack for purposes of civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 is not to be determined on basis of state tort law. Nelson v. Missouri Osteopathic Foundation, W.D.Mo.1985, 626 F.Supp. 604. Federal Courts 411

114. Employment, law governing

Whether discharged school principal's employment contract entitled her to be discharged only for cause, or whether she was a probationary employee, terminable at will, was a question of state law which Court of Appeals, in § 1983 action, would leave to state courts. Coleman v. Reed, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1998, 147 F.3d 751, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1359

115. Evidence, law governing

Scope of evidentiary privilege in action under this section is question of federal law; state law may provide useful referent, but it is not controlling. Breed v. U. S. Dist. Court for Northern Dist. of California, C.A.9 1976, 542 F.2d 1114. Federal Courts 416

Mississippi and general tort law requirements respecting proof of causation were applicable to claim against police officers in action under this section, arising out of deaths and injuries from gunfire laid down by officers who were on college campus as result of student disorders. Burton v. Waller, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1974, 502 F.2d 1261, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1356, 420 U.S. 964, 43 L.Ed.2d 442, rehearing denied 95 S.Ct. 1668, 421 U.S. 939, 44 L.Ed.2d 95 . Civil Rights 1420

Admissibility of evidence in an action under this section had to be determined under federal law. Morgan v. Labiak, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1966, 368 F.2d 338. Federal Courts 416

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Federal court sitting in civil rights action had great latitude in choosing between federal common law and state rule in determining inadmissibility of evidence so as to choose rule which favors admissibility. Green v. Cauthen, D.C.S.C.1974, 379 F.Supp. 361. Federal Courts 416

Section 1983 action to recover for arrestee's death while in police custody impliedly waived Pennsylvania's privilege for arrestee's alcohol and drug abuse treatment records; possibility could not be ruled out during discovery that arrestee died as result of medical condition related to or brought about by history of alcohol problems. O'Boyle v. Jensen, M.D.Pa.1993, 150 F.R.D. 519.

Law of evidence governing actual trial in civil rights action as to privileged matters governed discovery examination under rule 26, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28, so that at trial court was not required to apply state law as to privilege unless it chose to do so. Garrity v. Thomson, D.C.N.H.1979, 81 F.R.D. 633. Federal Courts 416

116. Exhaustion of remedies, law governing

Metropolitan Transit Authority (MTA) employee failed to state free speech and due process conspiracy claims under §§ 1983 where alleged coconspirators were all employees of MTA, the institutional defendant in action. Anemone v. Metropolitan Transp. Authority, S.D.N.Y.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 255. Conspiracy 2

Arrestee was not entitled to award of attorney fees and costs as prevailing party, in police chief's malicious prosecution claim against him, arising out of arrestee's §§ 1983 claim against police chief, under Washington statute, providing for such award if defendant was entitled to immunity for claims based upon the communication to a government agency regarding any matter reasonably of concern to that agency, where arrestee did not prevail on defense of immunity. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 1173. Malicious Prosecution 77

Intracorporate conspiracy doctrine barred arrestee's § 1983 conspiracy claim against police officers arising from alleged false arrest and use of excessive force, where both officers were agents of same legal entity. Veney v. Ojeda, E.D.Va.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 733. Conspiracy 2

Workforce Investment Act (WIA) did not impliedly preclude § 1983 actions for political discrimination or require exhaustion of administrative remedies before employee of municipal consortium operating under the WIA could bring such action. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1312

In actions under this section, it is a federal law which determines whether exhaustion of state administrative remedies is required since such matter rather goes to access to be given to litigants to come into federal courts under this section. Vistamar, Inc. v. Vazquez, D.C.Puerto Rico 1971, 337 F.Supp. 375. Federal Courts 411

117. In loco parentis, law governing

This section may be deemed in conflict with any broader state law construction of in loco parentis authority, a conflict which state law must lose by virtue of the Supremacy clause, U.S.C.A.Const. Art, 6 cl. 2. Picha v. Wielgos, N.D.Ill.1976, 410 F.Supp. 1214. States 18.23

118. Malicious prosecution, law governing

Liability for the tort of malicious prosecution under New York law also gives rise to liability under § 1983. Savino v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 331 F.3d 63. Civil Rights 1037

Malicious abuse of criminal process under New York law supports liability under § 1983. Savino v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 331 F.3d 63. Civil Rights 1034; Civil Rights 1088(5)

Claim of malicious prosecution brought under § 1983 is governed by state law. Russell v. Smith, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 68 F.3d 33. Federal Courts 431

A state law claim for malicious prosecution, on its own, is insufficient to constitute a claim under § 1983; in order to transform the malicious prosecution claim to a cognizable § 1983 claim, a plaintiff must establish that the defendants acted under color of state law, and deprived the plaintiff of a constitutional right. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1037; Civil Rights 1324

A § 1983 claim based on malicious prosecution cannot be maintained under the rubric of procedural due process where local tort law affords an anodyne for malicious prosecution. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1321

To state claim for malicious prosecution under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must satisfy elements of state law malicious prosecution action. Cooper v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1996, 936 F.Supp. 515. Civil Rights 1037

To state claim for malicious prosecution as constitutional tort under § 1983, plaintiff must demonstrate that: requirements of state law cause of action for malicious prosecution have been met; malicious prosecution was committed by state actor; and plaintiff was deprived of liberty within meaning of Fourth Amendment. Treece v. Village of Naperville, N.D.Ill.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1251. Civil Rights 1037

A § 1983 claim based on malicious prosecution is governed by state law in the absence of federal rules of decision for adjudicating those claims. Goree v. Gunning, E.D.N.Y.1990, 738 F.Supp. 79. Federal Courts 431

119. Negligence, law governing

Liability of Mississippi convict farm supervisor for injuries to minor prisoner who was shot when gun being handled by trusty guard accidentally fired, based on claim that supervisor was negligent in failing to adequately train and supervise guard, rested upon Mississippi law applied by federal court under doctrine of pendent jurisdiction. Roberts v. Williams, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1971, 456 F.2d 819, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 83, 404 U.S. 866, 30 L.Ed.2d 110. Federal Courts 428

Under Pennsylvania law, indemnification clauses that placed emphasis on negligent conduct, and which contained no language referring to intentional conduct, did not apply to claim for indemnity in § 1983 action based on intentional conduct. Mahon v. City of Bethlehem, E.D.Pa.1995, 902 F.Supp. 76. Indemnity 30(1)

120. Notice of claim, law governing

Citizen was not required to provide notice of her § 1983 claims against police officers and chief pursuant to New York's notice of claims statute; statute did not apply to § 1983 claims. Ahern v. Neve, E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 317. Municipal Corporations 741.25

Citizen was not required to provide notice of her § 1983 claims against police officers and chief pursuant to New York's notice of claims statute; statute did not apply to § 1983 claims. Ahern v. Neve, E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 317. Municipal Corporations 741.25

Louisiana statute requiring that medical malpractice claim against health care provider arising from unintentional tort be presented to medical review panel did not apply to inmate's 1983 action asserting claim for intentional mistreatment arising from correctional officials' alleged failure to respond to his need for medical treatment. Thomas v. James, W.D.La.1993, 809 F.Supp. 448. Civil Rights 1319

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Illinois notice of claim requirements do not apply to federal civil rights actions. Johnson v. Panizzo, N.D.Ill.1987, 664 F.Supp. 336. Civil Rights 1316

Federal civil rights action brought under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 was not subject to provisions of New York state law [N.Y.McKinney's General Municipal Law §§ 50-e, 50-i] which require service of notice of claim within 90 days after claim arises as condition precedent to any tort action against municipality. Burroughs v. Holiday Inn, W.D.N.Y.1985, 621 F.Supp. 351. Municipal Corporations 741.25

Failure to comply with requirement of District of Columbia Code, D.C.C.E. § 12-309, that written notice be given within six months of an occurrence before a damage action may be maintained against the District was no bar to federal damage suit against the District for alleged infringement of plaintiff's constitutional rights in connection with his arrest and detention by District police. Lively v. Cullinane, D.C.D.C.1976, 451 F.Supp. 999. District Of Columbia 36

121. Parties, law governing

Although successful candidate is necessary party under New York law in suit to recover his position, federal law governed in procedural matters in action alleging that state officials, acting under color of state law, committed fraudulent acts in conduct of voter registration and subsequent general presidential election and that ballots cast by legitimate voters were debased and diluted by illegal votes. Donohue v. Board of Elections of State of N. Y., E.D.N.Y.1976, 435 F.Supp. 957. Federal Civil Procedure 211

Since complaint set forth causes of action under both this section and Nebraska tort law and since R.R.S.Neb.1943, § 25-321 authorizes suit against fictitious defendants, although there is no provision therefor in federal law, such state law provision would be applied to both the state and federal claims, especially since the latter were coupled with the state claims. Yellow Bird v. Barnes, D.C.Neb.1979, 82 F.R.D. 738. Civil Rights 1391

122. Persons entitled to maintain action, law governing

Nebraska law governed question whether mother of decedent had standing to bring civil rights action against city police officers to recover damages for the shooting death of her son as he fled from scene of burglary. Landrum v. Moats, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1978, 576 F.2d 1320, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 282, 439 U.S. 912, 58 L.Ed.2d 258. Federal Courts 431

State law controls whether plaintiff has sufficient interest in the property allegedly wrongfully deprived so as to have standing to sue under § 1983 for due process violation; if sufficient property interest is found, government cannot deprive plaintiff of that interest without due process. Petty v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Wyandotte, Kan., D.Kan.1996, 168 F.R.D. 46. Constitutional Law 278(1); Federal Courts 433

123. Persons liable, law governing

In § 1983 action, Court of Appeals would look to state law principles to determine whether employer was vicariously liable for actions of its independent contractor. Carroll v. Federal Exp. Corp., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 163, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 852, 522 U.S. 1076, 139 L.Ed.2d 753. Federal Courts 421

Whether particular official has final policy-making authority for § 1983 purposes is matter of state law; whether official acts on behalf of county or state is similarly question of state law. Owens v. Fulton County, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1989, 877 F.2d 947. Federal Courts 411

Whether doctrine of respondeat superior was available to hold warden, associate warden, and correctional officer liable for assault and battery upon prisoner by prison guard was a question of state law. Meredith v. State of Ariz.,

C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1975, 523 F.2d 481. Federal Courts 421

Question of a sheriff's vicarious liability under this section for acts of his deputy is controlled by state law. Tuley v. Heyd, C.A.5 (La.) 1973, 482 F.2d 590. Federal Courts 433

This section authorizes application, under appropriate circumstances, of state laws pertaining to vicarious liability and liability created by statute. Hesselgesser v. Reilly, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1971, 440 F.2d 901. Federal Courts 411

Section 1983 provides cause of action against state officials for violation of federal statutory rights if Congress's intent to permit private enforcement actions is clear and unmistakable. Rabin v. Wilson-Coker, D.Conn.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 332, reversed 362 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1027

State statutes providing that no person or political subdivision of state would be liable for failure to provide adequate prison or jail facilities were preempted in connection with § 1983 action brought by former jail inmate against sheriff and board of county commissioners. McKenzie v. Crotty, D.S.D.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1287. Prisons 10; States 18.15

Issue of whether civil rights defendant is state official entitled to Eleventh Amendment immunity must be determined with reference to state law; among relevant considerations are role of officer or entity in State Constitution, whether entity has existence independent of state, whether any damages would necessarily be paid out of state treasury, and whether defendant is policymaker for county. Bailey v. Wictzack, M.D.Fla.1990, 735 F.Supp. 1016. Federal Courts 418

Whether official has final policy-making authority, for purposes of determining whether municipality may be held liable under § 1983 for constitutional injuries caused by official custom or policy but based on single incident, is question of state law, which court must determine as matter of law. Woods v. City of Michigan City, Ind., N.D.Ind.1988, 685 F.Supp. 1457, affirmed 940 F.2d 275. Civil Rights 1426; Federal Courts 411

124. Privileges, law governing

For purposes of evidentiary rule requiring application of state privilege law when state law supplies rule of decision for claim or defense, a § 1983 claim is a federal claim as to which federal law, not state law, supplies the rule of decision. Crowe v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 740. Federal Courts 416

125. Property rights, law governing

In action by former prisoner of Department of Public Safety and Corrections against department officials for alleged denial of due process and equal protection in exclusion from prison's work release program, court would look to federal constitutional law to determine whether statute providing for work release program created legitimate claim or entitlement protected by due process clause. Welch v. Thompson, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 20 F.3d 636. Constitutional Law 272(2)

State law defines parameters of plaintiff's property interest for purposes of § 1983. Key West Harbour Development Corp. v. City of Key West, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 987 F.2d 723. Federal Courts 411

126. Public officials' role and status, law governing

Federal court defining role and status of public official for purposes of determining liability under § 1983 must look to state law. Free v. Granger, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1989, 887 F.2d 1552. Federal Courts 411

127. Remedies or relief, law governing--Generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In federal civil rights actions, characterization of the remedy, as well as the nature of the cause of action, is a matter of federal, and not state, law. Williams v. Walsh, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1977, 558 F.2d 667. Federal Courts 411

Congress can foreclose a remedy under § 1983 either by forbidding it expressly in the statute itself, or impliedly, by creating a comprehensive enforcement scheme that is incompatible with individual enforcement under § 1983. Torres Ramos v. Consorcio De La Montaña, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1027

In evaluating a federal civil rights claim that is deficient in providing suitable remedy and where the applicable state statute is inconsistent with federal claim, court should look to state statute in first instance, apply it where it is not inconsistent with federal law, and decline to apply those provisions that are incompatible. Williams v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1996, 915 F.Supp. 1074. Federal Courts 411

Suit by former patient of public psychiatric center, seeking injunctive relief in § 1983 action alleging that center subjected him to illegal strip search pursuant to center's general search policy, fell within Ex Parte Young exception to Eleventh Amendment; complaint alleged ongoing violation of federal law and sought prospective relief. Aiken v. Nixon, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 80 Fed.Appx. 146, 2003 WL 22595837, Unreported. Federal Courts 272

128. ---- Contribution or indemnification, remedies or relief, law governing

City housing authority had no right of contribution against city in malicious prosecution action for improper processing of arrestee while she was in city custody on ground that New York law governing contribution was incorporated into § 1983 pursuant to § 1988 of Civil Rights Act; even if city and housing authority did contribute to same injury, § 1983 precluded imposing liability on city for mere negligence of its employees so that liability under New York contribution statute could not be incorporated under § 1983 pursuant to § 1988. Rosado v. New York City Housing Authority, S.D.N.Y.1989, 827 F.Supp. 179. Contribution 5(6.1)

129. ---- Damages, remedies or relief, law governing

Compensatory damages for deprivation of federal right are governed by federal standards, which means that both federal and state rules on damages may be utilized, whichever better serves the policies expressed in the federal statutes. Sullivan v. Little Hunting Park, Inc., U.S.Va.1969, 90 S.Ct. 400, 396 U.S. 229, 24 L.Ed.2d 386. Civil Rights 1462

Although Illinois law would not permit recovery of punitive damages or damages for loss of prisoner's life in wrongful death action, federal common-law rules would apply in determining damages recoverable by administration of prisoner's estate in civil rights action arising from prisoner's death by cardiorespiratory arrest, and damages for loss of life, conscious pain and suffering experienced by prisoner prior to death, and punitive damages, upon showing of reckless or callous indifference, would be recoverable. Bass by Lewis v. Wallenstein, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 769 F.2d 1173. Civil Rights 1463; Civil Rights 1465(1); Federal Courts 374

Protection afforded by this section was not intended by Congress to differ from state to state, and thus determination of damages is governed by federal common law, which must be fashioned to promote purposes underlying enactment of statute. Busche v. Burkee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1981, 649 F.2d 509, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 396, 454 U.S. 897, 70 L.Ed.2d 212. Civil Rights 1459

Principles of common law torts govern recovery of damages in actions under this section. Keyes v. Lauga, C.A.5 (La.) 1981, 635 F.2d 330. Civil Rights 1459

In cases under this section the common law of a state may be used on issue of damages if it better serves policies expressed in the federal statutes. McDaniel v. Carroll, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1972, 457 F.2d 968, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct.

897, 409 U.S. 1106, 34 L.Ed.2d 687. Federal Courts 415

California survivorship statutes governed federal civil rights action where deceased plaintiff died of causes unrelated to incident, except insofar as state statute limited survivors' recovery of damages for pain and suffering, and, on a proper showing, administrator of plaintiff's estate could recover pain and suffering damages sustained by the decedent. Williams v. City of Oakland, N.D.Cal.1996, 915 F.Supp. 1074. Civil Rights 1462; Federal Courts 411

Alabama's statutory cap of $100,000 on damages recoverable against municipality was not applicable to suit against city and city council members under § 1983 and Title VII. Patrick v. City of Florala, M.D.Ala.1992, 793 F.Supp. 301. Civil Rights 1464; Civil Rights 1574; Municipal Corporations 743

North Carolina wrongful death statute was appropriate law for determining measure of damages in wrongful death action brought under civil rights statute, where there was no federal statutory law governing measure of damages in wrongful death actions brought pursuant to civil rights statute, and North Carolina statute was consistent with laws of United States. Bowling v. Oldham, M.D.N.C.1990, 753 F.Supp. 588. Federal Courts 411

Mother of arrestee allegedly shot in the head after his arrest, resulting in severe and permanent injury, stated civil rights claim against police officer for deprivation of constitutionally protected liberty interest in her son's continued society, even though forum state would not allow parent to recover for loss of society on basis of child's injuries. Hutson by Hutson v. Bell, N.D.Ill.1988, 702 F.Supp. 212. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Action by taxpayers seeking compensatory and punitive damages under this section for injuries allegedly caused by various county and state taxing officials in connection with overassessment of taxpayers' real property was not barred by Supreme Court decision providing that taxpayers must seek protection of their federal rights by state remedies, because interest and attorney fees are not recoverable in a state court refund procedure, so that the state court remedy was neither "adequate" nor "complete." North American Cold Storage Co. v. Cook County, N.D.Ill.1982, 531 F.Supp. 1003.

Determination of an award of damages for deprivation of constitutional right is guided by federal common law of damages. Manfredonia v. Barry, E.D.N.Y.1975, 401 F.Supp. 762. Civil Rights 1459

130. ---- Interest, remedies or relief, law governing

State law governed calculation of prejudgment interest in § 1983 claim. Pressey v. Patterson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 898 F.2d 1018, rehearing denied. Interest 56

Resort to state law on prejudgment issue is not required in federal civil rights case but, rather, since issue of prejudgment interest is closely allied with that of damages, federal rule should govern prejudgment interest in such cases. Furtado v. Bishop, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1979, 604 F.2d 80, on remand 84 F.R.D. 671, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 710, 444 U.S. 1035, 62 L.Ed.2d 672. Federal Courts 415; Interest 39(2.45)

131. ---- Set off, remedies or relief, law governing

Federal law should not be fashioned or created for purposes of determining if settlement obtained in civil rights action would be set off against compensatory damage award. Goad v. Macon County, Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1989, 730 F.Supp. 1425. Federal Courts 415

Connecticut law, rather than federal law, controlled issue of whether remaining defendants were entitled to setoff in § 1983 action, and, thus, remaining defendants were entitled to setoff to extent plaintiff failed to prove divisibility of his damages among several defendants and to extent court determined as matter of law that jury's award of damages was excessive in light of settlement proceeds previously paid by codefendants. Hoffman v. McNamara, D.Conn.1988, 688 F.Supp. 830. Civil Rights 1464; Federal Courts 411

132. Res judicata, law governing

Res judicata effect of state-court decisions in § 1983 actions is a matter of state law. Heck v. Humphrey, U.S.Ind.1994, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Federal Courts 420

Full faith and credit statute's mandate that federal court give state-court judgment same preclusive effect as it would have under law of state where judgment was rendered applies in §§ 1983 action. Thornton v. City of St. Helens, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 425 F.3d 1158. Judgment 828.4(2)

Federal law, not state law, governed finality of federal habeas corpus judgment that had been appealed, for purposes of determining whether judgment had res judicata effect in inmate's separate civil rights action. Hawkins v. Risley, C.A.9 (Mont.) 1993, 984 F.2d 321. Habeas Corpus 901; Federal Courts 420

While plaintiff, a racehorse trainer who brought civil rights action seeking a mandatory injunction compelling defendant to admit him to its racetrack, had voluntarily dismissed three prior state court actions, the question whether that constituted a previous state adjudication which should bar his federal claims was a matter of state law on which a state adjudication would be preferable. Catrone v. Massachusetts State Racing Commission, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1976, 535 F.2d 669. Federal Courts 48

Malicious prosecution claim brought under § 1983 was barred by Heck v. Humphrey; although plaintiff's conviction was expunged and an order of acquittal entered, expunction under Louisiana law did not render prior conviction invalid. DelCambre v. Whittington, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 39, 2003 WL 21554877, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(5)

133. Respondeat superior, law governing

Ohio R.C. § 311.05 providing for sheriff's responsibility for neglect of duty or misconduct in office of each of his deputies had no application to complainant's civil rights action against sheriff and deputy for allegedly unconstitutional strip-search of complainant by deputy, and thus did not control sheriff's liability, since there was federal case law concerning applicability of respondeat superior in actions pursuant to this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights and, if Ohio statute did apply, it would be clearly "inconsistent" with federal law concerning respondeat superior. Smith v. Jordan, S.D.Ohio 1981, 527 F.Supp. 167. Federal Courts 411

134. Retroactive effect of court decisions, law governing

State law did not apply when determining retroactive effect of United States Supreme Court decision that forum state's personal injury statute of limitations applies to § 1983 civil rights suit given that federal law provided rule for full retroactive effect of decision; state law could be "borrowed" when adjudicating civil rights claim only if federal law does not provide decisional principles. Lufkin v. McCallum, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1992, 956 F.2d 1104, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 326, 506 U.S. 917, 121 L.Ed.2d 246. Federal Courts 433

135. Search and seizure, law governing

Fact the Illinois by its Constitution and laws outlaws searches and seizures did not bar suit under this section by Illinois residents against police officers conducting an allegedly illegal search and seizure. Monroe v. Pape, U.S.Ill.1961, 81 S.Ct. 473, 365 U.S. 167, 5 L.Ed.2d 492.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

136. Waiver of cause of action, law governing

Application of the waiver provision of the Ohio Court of Claims Act, under which former state employee's suit in the Court of Claims against the state was regarded as waiver of causes of action, including federal causes of action, against state officers and employees, was not invalid under the supremacy clause of the United States Constitution on theory that it thwarted broad remedial purpose underlying Civil Rights Act when it was claimed that discharge violated the constitutional rights, where Ohio statute did not purport to deprive employee of right to maintain federal civil rights action unless she chose to pursue the remedy, not otherwise available, of proceeding against the state under the Act. Leaman v. Ohio Dept. of Mental Retardation & Development Disabilities, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1987, 825 F.2d 946, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 2844, 487 U.S. 1204, 101 L.Ed.2d 882. States 18.23

137. Wrongful death, law governing

Under Indiana law, wrongful death claim is substitute for cause of action lost upon death of decedent but is not same claim; accordingly, decedent's estate cannot bring § 1983 claim under auspices of wrongful death statute. Tracy For and on Behalf of Estate of Tracy v. Bittles, N.D.Ind.1993, 820 F.Supp. 396. Civil Rights 1304; Death 7

Pursuant to § 1988 of this title, providing that law of forum state shall apply where necessary to provide suitable remedy for enforcement of this subchapter, wrongful death statute of forum state applied in federal civil rights action for wrongful death of plaintiff's decedent. Bailey v. Harris, E.D.Tenn.1974, 377 F.Supp. 401. Federal Courts 428

138. Miscellaneous laws, law governing

Both state tort claims and federal § 1983 claim asserted by property owner against contractor for federal agency were governed by state prescription law. Drury v. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 359 F.3d 366, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 99 Fed.Appx. 565, 2004 WL 726918. Federal Courts 423; Federal Courts 425

In action under § 1983 for false arrest and malicious prosecution, Court of Appeals looks to New York law to determine what preclusive effect should be given to findings made at pretrial suppression hearing in criminal action when criminal action results in acquittal. Johnson v. Watkins, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 101 F.3d 792. Federal Courts 420

Federal law, and not state law, was source of rule governing whether tender back was required prior to initiation of § 1983 action based on claims purportedly released by release agreement and state rule of "tender back," assuming Oregon law required tender, would not be incorporated as the content of the federal rule; tender back requirement was neither indispensable to any scheme of justice nor indispensable prerequisite to litigation and rule announced in Hogue, that tender back is not required for suit under Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), was generalizable to suits under other federal compensatory statutes, and thus, federal law could not be deemed truly deficient. Botefur v. City of Eagle Point, Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1993, 7 F.3d 152. Federal Courts 411

Whether city dog control officer, charged with violating owner's civil rights in removing her to police station when she refused to sign citation charging her with misdemeanor of allowing dog to run at large, had authority to issue the citation, which contained a promise to appear before a justice of the peace, was to be determined by reference to state statute; trial court was to determine whether, based on all facts and circumstances, need for "acknowledgment" of receipt of copy of the citation was implicitly required to establish proof of issuance and delivery, as required in case of misdemeanor citations. Allred v. Svarczkopf, C.A.10 (Utah) 1978, 573 F.2d 1146. Federal Courts 433

City's assertion of lien against proceeds of settlement obtained by mother in § 1983 action based on city's administration for children's services's (ACS) wrongful removal of her children from her custody for payment of public assistance that mother received after her involvement with ACS was not inconsistent with purpose and objectives of § 1983, and thus state law imposing lien was not preempted by § 1983, where there had been no judgment of liability, and amount of lien was only 14% of mother's portion of settlement. Colondres v. Scoppetta, E.D.N.Y.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 376. Social Security And Public Welfare 11; States 18.79

Federal privilege law governed in civil rights action in which state law supplied rule of decision for plaintiffs' state-law defamation claim, but federal law provided rule of decision for § 1983 defamation-plus claim. Crowe v. County of San Diego, S.D.Cal.2003, 242 F.Supp.2d 740. Federal Courts 416

Federal common law governed assertion of official information privilege to protect police officer's home address from discovery in action brought pursuant to §§ 1983. Collens v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 222 F.R.D. 249. Federal Courts 416

Court of Appeals applies federal law to determine when limitations period for § 1983 action begins to accrue. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Federal Courts 427

Section 1983 claim may be timely even though based on unlawful act which occurred outside applicable limitations period. Whiting v. Traylor, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 581. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

The accrual period for a § 1983 action starts when the plaintiff knows, or has reason to know, of the injury on which the action is based. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Two-year statute of limitations for civil rights cases applies to claims arising under § 1985, as well as those arising under § 1983. Merrigan v. Affiliated Bankshares of Colorado, Inc., D.Colo.1991, 775 F.Supp. 1408, affirmed 956 F.2d 278, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 76, 506 U.S. 823, 121 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1379; Conspiracy 16

162. State control and regulation, limitations law governing--Generally

Federal courts borrow forum state's general personal injury limitations period for § 1983 civil rights action. Ali v. Higgs, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 892 F.2d 438. Civil Rights 1379

Federal courts look to applicable state limitations statute, including its tolling provisions, in determining timeliness of claims under civil rights provisions, but such adoption of state limitations period does not effect supplanting of federal rules governing procedure by which affirmative defenses, including defenses of limitations and laches, must be raised. Moore v. Tangipahoa Parish School Bd., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 489. Federal Civil Procedure

755; Federal Courts 422.1; Federal Courts 427

To determine the applicable statute of limitations for a § 1983 claim, the court adopts relevant provisions from an analogous statute of limitations of the forum state. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Federal Courts 425

Federal courts look to applicable state statute of limitations to determine timeliness of civil rights claim. Desert State Life Management Services v. Association of Retarded Citizens of Albuquerque, D.N.M.1996, 939 F.Supp. 835. Federal Courts 425

Applicable statute of limitations for § 1983 actions differs from state to state. Harris v. Muchnicki, N.D.Ohio 1996, 932 F.Supp. 192, affirmed 101 F.3d 702. Federal Courts 425

Under North Carolina law, most relevant limitation period for § 1983 actions is three year period applicable to all liability created by statute, either state or federal, unless some other time is mentioned in statute creating it. Warlick v. Wilson, M.D.N.C.1995, 902 F.Supp. 90. Civil Rights 1379

Appropriate statute of limitations for civil rights actions under § 1983, arising in Kansas, is two years. Gee v. Duncanson, D.Kan.1994, 869 F.Supp. 874. Civil Rights 1379

Statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 action in New York is three years. Hood v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1990, 739 F.Supp. 196. Civil Rights 1379

163. ---- Accrual of action, state control and regulation, limitations law governing

Although applicable state statute of limitations supplies length of limitations period in § 1983 action, time of accrual of cause of action is matter of federal law under which cause of action accrues when plaintiff possesses sufficient facts about harm done that reasonable inquiry will reveal cause of action. Brooks v. City of Winston-Salem, N.C., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1996, 85 F.3d 178. Federal Courts 425; Federal Courts 427; Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Although state law determines length of limitations period in federal civil rights action, determination of point at which period begins to run is governed solely by federal law. McCoy v. San Francisco, City & County, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 14 F.3d 28. Federal Courts 427

Even though state statute of limitations is to be applied in suit under this section, question when federal cause of action accrues is matter of federal, not state, law; trial court therefore erred in applying Louisiana law to determine when cause of action accrued in civil rights suit against law enforcement officials and physicians, nurses, and hospital staff. Lavellee v. Listi, C.A.5 (La.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1129. Federal Courts 427

While time limitation in a civil rights unit is borrowed from state law, the federal rule fixes the time of accrual of the right of action; the federal rule establishes as a time of accrual that point in time when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the injury which is the basis of his action. Bireline v. Seagondollar, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1977, 567 F.2d 260, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 83, 444 U.S. 842, 62 L.Ed.2d 54. Federal Courts 427; Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Limitations period for political discrimination action under §§ 1983 is governed by applicable state statute of limitations for personal injury actions; date of accrual, however, is federal law question. Camacho-Cardona v. Lopez Pena, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 298. Civil Rights 1379; Federal Courts 425

New York law began to run, when plaintiff, who was an infant at time of alleged constitutional violations, turned 18 years of age. Perez v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 386. Limitation Of Actions 72(2)

Federal law governs time of accrual of § 1983 claims, which accrue when plaintiff knows or should know that his or her constitutional rights have been violated. McCall v. Board of Com'rs of County of Shawnee, KS, D.Kan.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 1216. Federal Courts 427

Plaintiff must commence § 1983 claim arising in Florida within four years of allegedly unconstitutional or otherwise illegal act. Seacoast Sanitation Ltd., Inc. v. Broward County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 1370 . Civil Rights 1379

For purposes of determining when a claimant knew or had reason to know of the alleged injury so as to determine when a § 1983 claim accrued, courts look to the common law cause of action most closely analogous to the constitutional right at stake. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Citizen's claims alleging that he was arrested and detained by police officers without probable cause, and that officers exerted excessive force in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, accrued on date events occurred when he was unlawfully arrested and detained, and thus citizen's § 1983 claims were untimely under Puerto Rico's one-year statute of limitation applicable to personal injury actions. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

A claim of malicious prosecution under § 1983 does not accrue until the termination of the criminal proceedings. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Rule for when § 1983 action accrues depends on federal law. Gutierrez-Usera v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., D.Puerto Rico 1997, 967 F.Supp. 35. Federal Courts 427

Federal law determines when § 1983 claim accrues. Hill v. Godinez, N.D.Ill.1997, 955 F.Supp. 945. Federal Courts 411

Although it is state law that determines length of statutory period for bringing § 1983 claim, it is federal law that determines when claim accrues. Hili v. Sciarotta, E.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 177, affirmed 140 F.3d 210. Federal Courts 422.1; Federal Courts 427

Although applicable limitation period for former student's § 1983 action against city and public school officials was determined as matter of state law, accrual date of § 1983 action was determined as matter of federal law. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Federal Courts 427

Although state law determines applicable limitation period for claims under § 1983, federal law determines date of accrual of such claim. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Federal Courts 427

Accrual of black female teacher's § 1983 claims against city board of education, board superintendent, board district superintendent, and high school principal for racial and sexual harassment and discrimination was governed by federal law. Long v. Board of Educ. of City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1993, 812 F.Supp. 525, affirmed 8 F.3d 811. Federal Courts 427

While limitations period for § 1983 deprivation of civil rights action is determined by reference to state law, standard governing accrual of cause of action is determined by federal law. Burrell v. Newsome, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 883 F.2d 416. See, also, Leonhard v. U.S., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1980, 633 F.2d 599; Kaiser v. Cahn, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 510 F.2d 282; Lewis v. F.Supp. 431.

164. ---- Personal injury, state control and regulation, limitations law governing

New Mexico three-year limitations statute governing actions for an injury to the person was the appropriate statute governing timeliness of section 1983 action to recover for injuries which plaintiff assertedly sustained when he was allegedly unlawfully arrested and beaten by state police officer. Wilson v. Garcia, U.S.N.M.1985, 105 S.Ct. 1938, 471 U.S. 261, 85 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1382

In cases brought pursuant to § 1983, Court of Appeals applies forum state's statute of limitations period for personal injury actions, which in Puerto Rico is one year. Ruiz-Sulsona v. University of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 334 F.3d 157. Civil Rights 1379; Federal Courts 425

Limitations period for § 1983 action is governed by statute of limitations for personal injury actions in state in which claim accrues. Sanchez v. U.S., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1995, 49 F.3d 1329, rehearing denied. Federal Courts 425

Inmate's § 1983 complaint against prison official was governed by Illinois' two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions. Farrell v. McDonough, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 966 F.2d 279, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1059, 506 U.S. 1084, 122 L.Ed.2d 364. Civil Rights 1382

Civil rights suit brought by Puerto Rican employee claiming her transfer was on basis of political party affiliation was governed by limitations period for personal injury action in Puerto Rico, and also by tolling rules provided by Puerto Rican law. Rodriguez Narvaez v. Nazario, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 895 F.2d 38. Civil Rights 1383; Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Statute of limitations for any § 1983 claim is state statute which limits actions for personal injuries. Cito v. Bridgewater Tp. Police Dept., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1989, 892 F.2d 23, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1379

Virgin Islands' statute of limitations for personal injury actions applied to Virgin Islands territorial prisoner's civil rights action brought under Sections 1981, 1983 and 1985. Callwood v. Questel, C.A.3 (Virgin Islands) 1989, 883 F.2d 272. Conspiracy 16; Civil Rights 1382

Nebraska's four-year personal injury statute of limitations applied to arrestee's claim under § 1983, alleging he had been illegally interrogated and detained by various county officials. Bridgeman v. Nebraska State Pen, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1988, 849 F.2d 1076. Civil Rights 1382

Federal courts hearing claims under 1871 civil rights statute should borrow state limitations statute governing "personal injury" claims rather than "catchall" limitations period, limitations statute for damage to property or breach of contract, or limitations statute governing suits against public officials. Jones v. Preuit & Mauldin, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1985, 763 F.2d 1250, rehearing denied 772 F.2d 918, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 893, 474 U.S. 1105, 88 L.Ed.2d 926, on remand 634 F.Supp. 1520. Civil Rights 1379

Arrestee's §§ 1983 claims against State of Washington, State Patrol, and troopers, alleging false arrest and use of excessive force, were governed by Washington's three-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, rather than Washington's two-year statute of limitations for actions for assault, assault and battery, or false imprisonment. Manning v. Washington, W.D.Wash.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 1229. Civil Rights 1382

General limitations period of six years for civil actions under Maine law was applicable borrowed statute for determining timeliness of §§ 1983 civil rights claim alleging conspiracy to deprive property owner of his rights in housing code enforcement proceedings. Marcello v. Maine, D.Me.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 55. Conspiracy 16

Applicable statute of limitations for § 1983 civil rights action based on events occurring in Texas was the Texas two-year statute for personal injury claims. Wagner v. Texas A & M University, S.D.Tex.1996, 939 F.Supp. 1297. Civil Rights 1384

In § 1983 actions, federal courts apply statute of limitations governing state actions for personal injuries. Frazier v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1996, 927 F.Supp. 881. Federal Courts 425

In Illinois, the statute of limitations applied to § 1983 actions is the two-year personal injury statute of limitations which begins when plaintiff knows or should have known that his constitutional rights were violated. Horton v. Marovich, N.D.Ill.1996, 925 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1379; Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Personal injury action is most analogous to § 1983 claim in Rhode Island and, thus, Rhode Island three-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions applied to § 1983 action. Tang v. State of R.I., Dept. of Elderly Affairs, D.R.I.1995, 904 F.Supp. 55. Civil Rights 1384

Wisconsin's six-year statute of limitations for action to recover damages for injury to character or rights of another, not arising on contract applied to former student's § 1983 action against elementary school teacher and school district, arising out of teacher's alleged sexual molestation of student. Doe v. Paukstat, E.D.Wis.1994, 863 F.Supp. 884. Civil Rights 1380

Claims brought pursuant to § 1983 are governed by limitations period applicable to state personal injury claims. Hamidian v. Occulto, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 350. Civil Rights 1379

Claims brought under § 1983 are subject to state statute of limitations governing personal injury actions. Faison v. Sex Crimes Unit of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1994, 845 F.Supp. 1079. Civil Rights 1379; Federal Courts 425

Actions under federal civil rights statute are governed by personal injury statute of limitations in state where alleged injury occurred. Doe v. Board of Educ. of Hononegah Community High School Dist. No. 207, N.D.Ill.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1366. Civil Rights 1379

Civil rights claim under § 1983 was subject to Pennsylvania's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury claims. Hall v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1993, 828 F.Supp. 365. Civil Rights 1384

Statute of limitations for action arising in New York pursuant to § 1983 is borrowed from New York's general statute of limitations for personal injury actions. Blankman v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.1993, 819 F.Supp. 198, affirmed 14 F.3d 592. Civil Rights 1379

Statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 action is personal injury statute of limitations prescribed by state in which action arose. Farmer v. City of Fort Lauderdale, S.D.Fla.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1101. Civil Rights 1379

New York's three-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions applied to property owner's pro se civil rights claims. Darvoe v. Town of Trenton, N.D.N.Y.1992, 785 F.Supp. 305, affirmed 979 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1381

Appropriate statute of limitations for bringing of § 1983 tort action against municipal corporations was New York's general three-year personal injury statute, rather than one-year statute specifically applying to municipal tort actions. Meiselman v. Richardson, E.D.N.Y.1990, 743 F.Supp. 143. Civil Rights 1384

Two-year Illinois statute of limitations for personal injury claims, rather than five-year statute of limitations for destruction or conversion of property, applied to § 1983 action challenging repossession of truck. Malone v. Ryan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 47 Fed.Appx. 410, 2002 WL 31083879, Unreported. Civil Rights 1381

Pennsylvania's general two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, and not tolling provision of statute providing that action arising from childhood sexual abuse may be brought within 12 years after the alleged child victim attains 18 years of age, applied to action brought by former juvenile inmate at county adult correctional facility against the county, under §§ 1983 and statute authorizing cause of action for conspiracy to interfere with civil rights, for damages arising from his alleged sexual abuse by adult inmates at the facility, where the alleged injuries occurred before the effective date of the tolling provision, and where the alleged victim was more than 30 years old when he filed his complaint. Getchey v. County of Northumberland, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 120 Fed.Appx. 895, 2005 WL 22871, Unreported. Civil Rights 1382; Conspiracy 16; Limitation Of Actions 6(1)

Utah's four-year statute of limitations for general personal injury actions applied to employee's §§ 1983 and 1985 claims against employer. Buck v. Utah Labor Com'n., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 73 Fed.Appx. 345, 2003 WL 21916992, Unreported. Civil Rights 1383; Conspiracy 16

New York's three-year statute of limitations applicable to actions for personal injury governed prisoner's § 1983 due process claim. Muhammad v. Pico, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21792158, Unreported. Civil Rights 1382

Limitations period for § 1983 action commenced in Illinois was two years, which was Illinois' personal-injury period of most general application. Garner v. Cullinan, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 66 Fed.Appx. 654, 2003 WL 21259754, Unreported, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1379; Federal Courts 425

165. Federal statutory periods of limitations, limitations law governing

Federal Communications Act's two-year statute of limitations, section 415 of Title 47, applied to plaintiff's civil rights claims against telephone company which provided equipment to police department that allegedly conducted illegal wiretapping. Pavlak v. Church, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1984, 727 F.2d 1425. Federal Courts 425

Vehicle owner's § 1983 claim against municipal actors for violation of property interest and unreasonable seizure accrued on date her vehicle was seized, when she knew of her injuries, not subsequent date when she cleared title. Jonker v. Kelley, D.Mass.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 81. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Judges confronting § 1983 actions must consult federal law in order to fix point in time from which limitations period begins to run. Jonker v. Kelley, D.Mass.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 81. Federal Courts 427

Although the limitations period of a § 1983 claim is determined by state law, the date of accrual of a § 1983 claim is a federal law question. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Federal

Courts 425; Federal Courts 427

Where discriminatory practice is within both the Fair Housing Act of 1968, § 3601 et seq. of this title, and this chapter, the court should consider and apply the limitations of the specific act, the Fair Housing Act, § 3601 et seq. of this title, to the general act, this chapter. Warren v. Norman Realty Co., D.C.Neb.1974, 375 F.Supp. 478, affirmed 513 F.2d 730, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 105, 423 U.S. 855, 46 L.Ed.2d 81.

166. Power of courts, limitations law governing

Failure of Congress to enact general federal statute of limitations for civil rights actions reflects intent to have state limitation periods apply, but federal court may nevertheless fashion their own limitation periods whenever state statute of limitations threatens need of federal program for uniformity or discriminates against or overly burdens federal cause of action. Getz v. Bruch, E.D.Pa.1975, 400 F.Supp. 1033. Federal Courts 425

Federal district court had implied authority to create procedural limitations, or exceptions thereto, where, as with this section, no clear expression of Congressional intent exists as to limitations of actions. Taliaferro v. Dykstra, E.D.Va.1975, 388 F.Supp. 957. Limitation Of Actions 2(1)

167. Consistency with federal policies, limitations law governing

Utah's two-year limitations period for personal injury actions was inconsistent with policy of Civil Rights Act's broad remedial goals, and, thus, federal court would not borrow Utah law for limitations purposes in § 1983 suits and would instead apply four-year limitations period which governed other Utah injury actions. Adamson v. City of Provo, Utah, D.Utah 1993, 819 F.Supp. 934. Civil Rights 1384

Consideration of state law is appropriate in federal civil rights suit if there is no controlling federal law and the state law in question is not inconsistent with laws of United States and the Federal Constitution. Agresta v. Sambor, E.D.Pa.1988, 687 F.Supp. 162. Federal Courts 411

168. Characterization of claims, limitations law governing

Claims under this section are best characterized as personal injury actions, for limitations purposes. Wilson v. Garcia, U.S.N.M.1985, 105 S.Ct. 1938, 471 U.S. 261, 85 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1379

Utah's two-year statute of limitations enacted specifically for § 1983 actions would not be applied to § 1983 action; by enacting specific statute of limitations for § 1983 actions alone, Utah legislature usurped role of federal law in characterizing essence of such actions and eliminated assurance that neutral rules of decision will apply to § 1983 actions in Utah. Arnold v. Duchesne County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1994, 26 F.3d 982, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 721, 513 U.S. 1076, 130 L.Ed.2d 626. Civil Rights 1398; Civil Rights 1379; States 18.23

For statute of limitations purposes, § 1983 claims are best characterized as personal injury actions; therefore, state's personal injury statute of limitations, assuming that state has but one such statute, should be applied to all § 1983 claims. Lounsbury v. Jeffries, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 25 F.3d 131. Civil Rights 1379

169. Residual or multiple periods of limitations, limitations law governing

Action under this section in state with more than one statute of limitations is governed by residual or general personal injury statute of limitations, rather than statute of limitations for enumerated intentional torts. Owens v. Okure, U.S.N.Y.1989, 109 S.Ct. 573, 488 U.S. 235, 102 L.Ed.2d 594. Civil Rights 1379

enacted after the date of the enactment" of the limitations statute, did not apply to § 1983 action despite amendment of § 1983, after enactment of the limitations statute, to limit injunctive relief against judicial officers, as the amendment did not create a cause of action, and none of plaintiff's causes of action were based upon it in any way. Laurino v. Tate, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2000, 220 F.3d 1213. Civil Rights 1384

Connecticut statute of limitations covering personal injuries caused by negligent, reckless, or wanton conduct was not "residual" or "general" statute of limitations for § 1983 purposes, and Connecticut had but one such statute, which provided that action founded upon tort had to be brought within three years of date of act or omission; former statute contained no language suggesting that it applied to all actions not specifically provided for, including personal injury actions, and did not apply to all personal injury actions with certain specific exceptions; moreover, latter statute applied to every tort claim governed by statute of limitations unless there was explicit statutory provision. Lounsbury v. Jeffries, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1994, 25 F.3d 131. Civil Rights 1379

Federal courts adjudicating civil rights claims must borrow the state statute of limitations applicable to personal injury actions under the law of the forum state and, where state has more than one statute of limitations that applies to personal injury actions, federal court should borrow state's general or residual injury statute of limitations. Street v. Vose, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1991, 936 F.2d 38, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 948, 502 U.S. 1063, 117 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1379; Federal Courts 425

Appropriate statute of limitations for § 1983 actions arising in Ohio is Ohio statute of limitations which requires actions for bodily injury to be filed within two years after their accrual, rather than statute providing that actions for intentional torts be brought within one year of their accrual. Browning v. Pendleton, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1989, 869 F.2d 989. See, also, Valerio v. Dahlberg, S.D.Ohio 1988, 716 F.Supp. 1031. Civil Rights 1379

Utah's four-year residual statute of limitations applicable to actions "for relief not otherwise provided for by law" applied to § 1983 claims. Whitehat v. College of Eastern Utah, D.Utah 2000, 111 F.Supp.2d 1161. Civil Rights 1384

Kansas residual two-year statute of limitations is applicable to claim for denial of due process. Elam v. Williams, D.Kan.1990, 753 F.Supp. 1530, affirmed 953 F.2d 1391. Civil Rights 1379

Civil rights claims arising under § 1983 are subject to Colorado's two-year residual statute of limitations. Arvia v. Black, D.Colo.1989, 722 F.Supp. 644. Civil Rights 1379

Utah's four-year residual statutory limit controlled employee's state constitutional claims against employer, where the Utah Constitution did not specify any express limitation period. Buck v. Utah Labor Com'n., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 73 Fed.Appx. 345, 2003 WL 21916992, Unreported. Civil Rights 1732

New York's residual statute of limitations of three years for personal injury actions, not its one-year statute applicable to intentional torts, applies to federal civil rights action under § 1983. Lucas v. Novogratz, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31844913, Unreported. Civil Rights 1379

170. Notification of claims provisions, limitations law governing

Alabama statutes requiring claimant to notify city clerk of potential tort claim within six months and to file sworn description of incident did not apply in § 1983 and Title VII actions against city. Patrick v. City of Florala, M.D.Ala.1992, 793 F.Supp. 301. Municipal Corporations 741.25

Federal law determines the date on which a §§ 1983 claim accrues. Nieves-Vega v. Ortiz-Quinones, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 443 F.3d 134. Federal Courts 427

In determining when § 1983 claim accrues, as well as what elements must be pled, court must seek help from common-law tort which is most analogous to claim in case before it. Whiting v. Traylor, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 581. Civil Rights 1034; Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Federal law determines when a civil rights claim accrues. Thompson v. City of Shasta Lake, E.D.Cal.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 1017. Federal Courts 427

County sheriff's alleged infringement of sheriff's department employees' First Amendment free speech rights when he allegedly made defamatory statements about the employees in retaliation for statements they made to outside law enforcement agencies concerning department's activities did not implicate liberty interest necessary to support retaliation claim under § 1983. Where no discovery had been conducted with respect to Indian tribes' § 1983 claims against state raising land rights issues, striking of state's statute of limitations defense would be premature, as there was no way to determine when tribes had reason to know that cause of action accrued. Canadian St. Regis Band of Mohawk Indians ex rel. Francis v. New York, N.D.N.Y.2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 313. Federal Civil Procedure 1112

Even though state law supplies statute of limitations in action under § 1983, accrual of action is governed by federal law; accrual ordinarily occurs when plaintiff knows, or has reason to know, of injury on which action is based. Future Development of Puerto Rico v. Estado Libre Asociado De Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 276 F.Supp.2d 228. Federal Courts 425; Federal Courts 427; Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Failure-to-promote claim filed under § 1983 accrued when employer determined that employee would not be promoted and sent her letter to that effect. Lyon v. Jones, D.Conn.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 507, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 196, 2004 WL 628879. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Although state law governs the length of the statute of limitations period for § 1983 claims, federal law determines when a § 1983 cause of action accrues. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Federal Courts 425

A § 1983 claim accrues, for limitations purposes, when alleged conduct has caused claimant harm, and claimant knows or has reason to know of allegedly impermissible conduct and resulting harm. Duamutef v. Morris, S.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1112. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Three-year statute of limitations, on § 1983 claims against police officers, alleging that search of apartment violated Fourth Amendment, began to run on date that officers conducted search. Rueda v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21143084, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

The systemic pattern-or-practice method of continuing violation doctrine did not allow female steward to seek relief against California Horse Racing Board (CHRB) under §§ 1983 for alleged discriminatory events outside the applicable limitations period; while she argued that women were given unfavorable assignments over men for many years and cited deposition testimony of former steward and current CHRB director that women received "damaging" assignments in earlier year, she produced no evidence, statistical or otherwise, from which reasonable inference could be drawn that CHRB widely or routinely discriminated against females up to point in time that fell within limitations period. Actions 58(1)

High school teacher's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim against school district, arising from district's refusal to grant requested sabbatical, accrued when teacher learned of refusal, not later when teacher submitted renewed request which was also denied; district's second refusal, insisting on same conditions for granting request that were imposed originally, was not fresh retaliatory act. Schneck v. Saucon Valley School Dist., E.D.Pa.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 558. Limitation Of Actions 58(1); Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Employer's refusal to undo discriminatory decision is not fresh act of discrimination, for purposes of determining time of accrual of public employee's § 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim. Schneck v. Saucon Valley School Dist., E.D.Pa.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 558. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Continuing violation exception to limitations period for filing § 1983 sexual harassment action typically applies to situations where there are specific discriminatory policies or mechanisms, such as discriminatory seniority lists for employment tests. 173. Tolling or suspension of period, limitations law governing--Generally

Relevant state tolling statutes are applicable to prisoners' civil rights suits. Bianchi v. Bellingham Police Dept., C.A.9 (Wash.) 1990, 909 F.2d 1316. Federal Courts 427

While accrual period for federal civil rights action is governed by federal law, tolling is governed by state law. Torres v. Superintendent of Police of Puerto Rico, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 893 F.2d 404. Federal Courts 427

In actions under this section, courts must not only apply appropriate state statute of limitations, but also must apply applicable state rule for tolling that statute of limitations. Rubin v. O'Koren, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1981, 644 F.2d 1023. Federal Courts 425; Federal Courts 427

Time limitation for civil rights actions is borrowed from state law because Congress did not set tolling period for such actions, but state law concerning time of accrual is in no sense loaned to body of federal civil rights law along with tolling period, but time of accrual of civil rights action is question of federal law. Cox v. Stanton, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1975, 529 F.2d 47. See, also, United Klans of America v. McGovern, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 621 F.2d 152. Federal Courts 425

State law governs question whether an applicable state statute of limitations is tolled in an action brought under this section. Ammlung v. City of Chester, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 494 F.2d 811. Federal Courts 427

There was no equitable tolling of student's causes of action against state university and professor for assault, negligence and emotional distress and for violations of § 1983 and Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, based on alleged sexual harassment, despite the student's contention that she was misled by the university's internal investigatory panel into waiting for issuance of its final decision, where student did not demonstrate any disability, lack of information or other circumstances which prevented her from filing claim in timely manner. Monger v. Purdue University, S.D.Ind.1997, 953 F.Supp. 260. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

While state law determines limitations period in § 1983 action, federal law determines when cause of action accrues, but where state statute of limitations is borrowed, state's rules for tolling the statute are borrowed as well. Services v. Association of Retarded Citizens of Albuquerque, D.N.M.1996, 939 F.Supp. 835. Federal Courts 425

Massachusetts' principles for tolling three-year limitations period applicable to former student's § 1983 claim against public school officials and city applied such that if student's claim accrued when he was minor, commencement of three-year period would be deferred until he turned 18 years of age. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Limitation Of Actions 72(1)

In considering timeliness of prisoner's § 1983 civil rights action, federal courts apply not only forum state's general or residual statute of limitations for person injury actions, but also the forum state's tolling provisions unless those provisions are inconsistent with federal law, and if those provisions are inconsistent, federal courts may use equitable principles to fashion their own tolling provisions. Gartrell v. Gaylor, S.D.Tex.1994, 866 F.Supp. 325, affirmed 66 F.3d 322. Federal Courts 425; Federal Courts 427

In borrowing states' statutes of limitations for § 1983 civil rights actions, federal courts also borrow applicable tolling provisions. Thomas v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1993, 814 F.Supp. 1139. Federal Courts 427

Though state statute of limitations was applicable to federal civil rights claim, question of when action accrued was one of federal law, but questions of tolling and application of the limitations period were governed by state law. Ivey v. DeKalb County Dept. of Public Safety, N.D.Ga.1987, 668 F.Supp. 1579. Federal Courts 427

174. ---- Capacity, tolling or suspension of period, limitations law governing

Appointment of guardian did not end mentally retarded twins' "incapacity," within meaning of New Mexico statute tolling limitations periods with regard to incapacitated persons; accordingly, civil rights claims brought by twins' guardian were timely. Desert State Life Management Services v. Association of Retarded Citizens of Albuquerque, D.N.M.1996, 939 F.Supp. 835. Limitation Of Actions 74(2)

Former police officer was not entitled by reason of insanity to tolling of statute of limitations applicable to her § 1983 action against county police department and county alleging harassment and intentional infliction of severe emotional distress; during period officer contended she was insane, she participated in personal injury lawsuit in which she was deposed and which she ultimately settled, sought maternity leave and applied for social security benefits with advice of counsel, and filed two applications for pistol permits in which she signed sworn statements stating that she did not suffer from mental illness. Wenzel v. Nassau County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.1996, 914 F.Supp. 902. Limitation Of Actions 74(1)

175. ---- Consistency with federal policies, tolling or suspension of period, limitations law governing Body of state statute of limitations tolling law that lacks provision for equitable tolling is inconsistent with provision of complete federal remedy under § 1983 and, thus, is overridden by federal doctrine of equitable tolling when § 1983 plaintiff is required to exhaust state remedies because his claim is in part claim for habeas corpus. Heck v. Humphrey, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1993, 997 F.2d 355, certiorari granted 114 S.Ct. 751, 510 U.S. 1068, 127 L.Ed.2d 69, affirmed 114 S.Ct. 2364, 512 U.S. 477, 129 L.Ed.2d 383. Federal Courts 427

Once a federal court borrows a state statute of limitations, it should generally also borrow the related provisions pertaining to tolling and revival as interpreted under state law unless such an unmodified borrowing would be inconsistent with a strong federal policy under the federal cause of action. Williams v. Walsh, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1977, 558 F.2d 667. Federal Courts 427

In cases arising under Constitution or laws of the United States, a federal rule on tolling a state statute of limitations (when applicable) should be observed, if such rule clearly carries out intent of Congress or of the Section 1983 actions import not only their statute of limitations, but also any applicable tolling mechanisms, not inconsistent with statutory purpose, from state law. Kulpa on Behalf of Kulpa v. Glass, N.D.N.Y.1995, 903 F.Supp. 321. Federal Courts 425; Federal Courts 427

Because federal courts in § 1983 actions resort to state tolling rules only to the extent necessary to fill gaps that Congress leaves, district court will apply state law only when federal law neglects the topic and only so long as state tolling rule is not inconsistent with federal law. Ill v. Roland, N.D.Ill.1993, 812 F.Supp. 855. Federal Courts 427

State statutes of limitations govern suits in federal courts arising under federal civil rights statute, § 1983, and state law governs questions of tolling unless the state tolling rules are inconsistent with federal law, but accrual period for the cause of action is governed by federal law. Equitable tolling of three-year statute of limitations was not warranted for § 1983 action against municipal actors by owner of vehicle alleging illegal seizure of vehicle, absent evidence that she missed filing deadline due to defective pleading filed during statutory period, or due to inducement or trickery by defendants. Jonker v. Kelley, D.Mass.2003, 268 F.Supp.2d 81. Limitation Of Actions 104.5

Student's causes of action against state university and professor for assault, negligence, and emotional distress and for violations of § 1983 and Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, based on alleged sexual harassment, were not tolled on theory of fraudulent concealment under Indiana law on theory that university panel misled student by giving her impression that she should wait for their issuance of final decision on internal complaint, which student contended that she never received, where student knew of her injury right after it occurred, university did not conceal its investigative process from student's view, and student did not exercise reasonable care and due diligence to discover the panel's findings. Monger v. Purdue University, S.D.Ind.1997, 953 F.Supp. 260. Limitation Of Actions 104(2)

Even if the federal concealment doctrine tolled the limitation period as to civil rights action for conspiracy culminating in groundless prosecution and coercion of plaintiffs, once the facts were discovered, McKinney's N.Y. CPLR 203(f) requiring commencement of action within two years after discovery was applicable. Cestaro v. Mackell, E.D.N.Y.1977, 429 F.Supp. 465, affirmed 573 F.2d 1288. Limitation Of Actions 104(1)

177. ---- Retroactive application of laws, tolling or suspension of period, limitations law governing

Prisoner's delay in filing § 1983 action against prison officials was unreasonable, and thus, Illinois statute excluding actions against correctional officials from any relief from limitations period via tolling applied retroactively to bar all of inmate's claims; prisoner did not file claim until 23 months after effective date of statute in question. Knox v. Lane, N.D.Ill.1989, 726 F.Supp. 200. Limitation Of Actions 6(1)

178. ---- Particular provisions applicable, tolling or suspension of period, limitations law governing

State statute that suspended limitations periods for persons under legal disability, including prisoners, until one year after disability has been removed was consistent with § 1983's remedial purpose and thus, inmate's § 1983 action was not time barred though it had been filed after expiration of three-year statute of limitations period for personal injury actions. Hardin v. Straub, U.S.Mich.1989, 109 S.Ct. 1998, 490 U.S. 536, 104 L.Ed.2d 582, on remand 878 F.2d 382. Limitation Of Actions 75

California civil rights plaintiffs, whose claims arose prior to Wilson decision which shortened statute of limitations from three years to one year, had a limitations period of one-year remaining on the date the tolling of the limitations period was ended, rather than the pre-Wilson three-year period; because post-Wilson one-year period would expire first, that was proper period to apply. McDougal v. County of Imperial, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 942 F.2d 668. Civil Rights 1384

West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 351 tolling period of limitations while defendant is absent from state after cause of action against him accrues, regardless of whether defendant is amenable to service of process during his absence, was not inconsistent with policies embodied in this section and was applicable to toll period of limitations in civil rights suit. Maurer v. Individually and as Members of Los Angeles County Sheriff's Dept., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1982, 691 F.2d 434. Federal Courts 427

Where court of appeals did not find rule of Va.Code 1950, § 8.01-229 on tolling statute of limitations to be inconsistent with federal law, court would follow it in civil rights action asserting search and seizure claim under this section. Cramer v. Crutchfield, C.A.4 (Va.) 1981, 648 F.2d 943. Federal Courts 427

Massachusetts renewal statute permitting plaintiff to commence new action for same cause within one year after determination of original action is interrelated with length of applicable statute of limitations, and thus applies to §§ 1983 actions brought in federal court. Corliss v. City of Fall River, D.Mass.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 260. Federal Courts 427

Tolling of a statute of limitations under § 1983 is governed by state law. Iravedra v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 570. Federal Courts 427

179. ---- Particular provisions not applicable, tolling or suspension of period, limitations law governing

Michigan tolling statute respecting persons imprisoned when claim they are entitled to bring accrues, was inapplicable to prisoner's § 1983 action based on his transfer from one prison to another within Michigan system without due process hearing; application of lengthy tolling period was counterproductive to federal policy attempting to deal with § 1983 claims as promptly as practicable. Higley v. Michigan Dept. of Corrections, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1987, 835 F.2d 623. Federal Courts 427

Code Ga. § 3-801 which tolls the time for bringing an action while a person is imprisoned does not apply, as a matter of federal law to a civil rights action even though the Code Ga. § 3-1004 is applied to the civil rights action. Neel v. Rehberg, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1978, 577 F.2d 262. Federal Courts 427

Former librarian's timely filing of charge of employment discrimination and retaliation with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) did not toll statute of limitations on her § 1983, Title IX, and state-law negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and discriminatory employment practices claims; those claims were separate, distinct and independent from her Title VII claims, Title VII administrative proceedings were not prerequisite to filing of those claims, and former librarian failed to demonstrate that procedures and remedies of those claims were wholly integrated with Title VII procedures and remedies. Linville v. State of Hawai'i, D.Hawai'i 1994, 874 F.Supp. 1095. Limitation Of Actions 105(1)

California Tort Claims Act section prohibiting person charged with criminal offense from bringing civil action for damages against peace officer or employer based upon conduct of peace officer relating to charges while charges are pending did not apply to actions of arrestee detainee under federal civil rights statutes to which California limitations periods apply, and accordingly, the Tort Claims Act section's provision for tolling of limitations periods did not apply; the Tort Claims Act section was plainly inconsistent with important federal policies underlying federal civil rights causes of action. Mangels v. City of Orange, C.D.Cal.1988, 678 F.Supp. 1452. Federal Courts 427; Limitation Of Actions 105(2)

180. Burden of proof, limitations law governing

Burden is on § 1983 plaintiff to prove that statute of limitations on his claim was tolled. Porter v. Charter Medical Corp., N.D.Tex.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1427. Limitation Of Actions 195(3)

181. Transferred actions, limitations law governing

Statute of limitations in state of transferee court applied in § 1983 action rather than statute of state of transferor court; venue was, from initiation of action, improper in transferor court. Davis v. Louisiana State University, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 876 F.2d 412, rehearing denied. Federal Courts 145

182. Administrative actions, limitations law governing

Three-year look back period under §§ 1981, 1983, and Michigan's Elliott-Larson Act encompassed any Title VII claim for same allegedly wrongful act by employer, and thus, district court did not have to determine whether any claim or portion thereof was barred by Title VII's statute of limitations, where employees' administrative charges were filed less than one month prior to date case was filed. Kresnak v. City of Muskegon Heights, W.D.Mich.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1327. Civil Rights 1530

183. Arbitration, limitations law governing

Civil rights action brought by teachers seeking damages and equitable relief for violation of constitutional rights following arbitrator's determination of union's reduced service fees was governed by three-year statute of limitations applicable to personal injury actions, not the 21-day limitations period of the Michigan Uniform Arbitration Act or the three-month limitations period of the National Relations Act. Bromley v. Michigan Educ. Association-NEA, E.D.Mich.1993, 815 F.Supp. 220. Civil Rights 1383

184. Arrest, limitations law governing

Section 1983 action arising from alleged arrest without cause and beating was governed by New York's three-year residual statute of limitations for claims of personal injury not embraced by specific statutes, rather than the one year statute of limitations for intentional torts of assault, battery, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, libel, slander, false words, and violation of right of privacy. Owens v. Okure, U.S.N.Y.1989, 109 S.Ct. 573, 488 U.S. 235, 102 L.Ed.2d 594. Civil Rights 1382

Civil rights claim seeking damages for allegedly unconstitutional warrantless arrest generally accrues when plaintiff knows or should know of injury, except in limited circumstances in which plaintiff's success on § 1983 claim that warrantless arrest was not supported by probable cause necessarily would implicate validity of plaintiff's conviction or sentence. Brooks v. City of Winston-Salem, N.C., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1996, 85 F.3d 178. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Arrestee's § 1983 action arising from police officer's alleged violations of Fourth and Fifth Amendments accrued when arrestee's conviction was reversed, since arrestee's Fourth and Fifth Amendment claims necessarily implied that conviction was unlawful, and claims thus could not have been raised prior to reversal; conviction was reversed on ground that officer lacked reasonable suspicion on which to detain and question arrestee and thereafter search his vehicle. Woods v. Candela, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 47 F.3d 545, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 54, 516 U.S. 808, 133 L.Ed.2d 18, on remand 921 F.Supp. 1140. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Any claim for constitutional violation arising out of allegedly false arrest was subject to three-year Arkansas limitations statute for general personal injury, not by one-year state statute covering particular tort. Ketchum v. City of West Memphis, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 974 F.2d 81. Civil Rights 1382

Delaware's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury claims applied to § 1983 claims against city, detective, and prosecutor by arrestee, who was held on rape charges, which were later dismissed for lack of probable cause. Gibbs v. Deckers, D.Del.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 458. Civil Rights 1382

Civil rights claims for false arrest and imprisonment are governed by California's residual two-year statute of limitations period for personal injury actions, notwithstanding that state has more specific one-year limitations period for false arrest and imprisonment tort claims. Thompson v. City of Shasta Lake, E.D.Cal.2004, 314 F.Supp.2d 1017. Civil Rights 1382

Diversity action claiming federal civil rights violation arising out of arrest was subject to New Jersey's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions. Lodato v. Township of Evesham, D.N.J.1992, 782 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1382

Arrestee's claims under § 1983 arising out of her arrest were time barred by Pennsylvania's two-year personal injury limitation applicable to § 1983 claims; claims accrued on date of her arrest, or, at least, on date of her release from confinement approximately one month later. Young v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1990, 744 F.Supp. 673, affirmed 931 F.2d 53. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

New York law on tolling did not apply to arrestee's § 1983 suit against state police department, its superintendent, and state troopers for alleged violations of his constitutional rights in the search of his person and vehicle, and in the alleged use of excessive force at the time of his arrest where the arrestee was not an infant, was not disabled by insanity, and was not serving a life sentence. Irizarry v. Whittel, S.D.N.Y.2002, 2002 WL 31760240, Unreported, on reconsideration 2003 WL 221736. Limitation Of Actions 72(1); Limitation Of Actions 74(1); Limitation Of Actions 75

Three-year South Dakota statute of limitations applied to § 1983 actions in which plaintiff alleged that various state officials and entities had discriminated against and harassed him because of his race when he was arrested and subsequently convicted of various offenses. Denoyer v. Dobberpuhl, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2000, 208 F.3d 217, Unreported. Civil Rights 1382

185. Assault and battery, limitations law governing

Oklahoma's two-year statute of limitations for injury to rights of another, not arising out of contract was applicable to § 1983 action brought against sheriffs and other county officials for physical violence and denial of medical care, and emotional distress, not Oklahoma's one-year statute of limitations for actions brought for assault or battery. Meade v. Grubbs, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1988, 841 F.2d 1512. Civil Rights 1382

University student's causes of action against university and professor for assault, negligence and emotional distress under Indiana law, and for violations of § 1983 and Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 accrued on date of the alleged incident, as student's immediate discussion of incident with roommate indicated that she knew event occurred and she had not repressed the memory. Monger v. Purdue University, S.D.Ind.1997, 953 F.Supp. 260. Limitation Of Actions 95(15) attempt to stop what she maintained was an illegal abortion and which was filed nearly three years after final disciplinary decision. Collard v. Kentucky Bd. of Nursing, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1990, 896 F.2d 179. Civil Rights 1384

Six-year limitations period of Wisconsin's personal rights statute, rather than Wisconsin's three-year limitations period for personal injury actions, applied to county employee's civil rights action against her supervisors. Gray v. Lacke, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1989, 885 F.2d 399, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 1476, 494 U.S. 1029, 108 L.Ed.2d 613. Civil Rights 1383

Claims by physician, under § 1983, that county hospital took retaliatory action against him because of his "whistleblower" activities would be untimely, to extent that retaliatory action was physician's suspension, which occurred more than two years before suit was commenced, but would be timely to extent that retaliatory action was physician's termination, which occurred within two-year period. Draghi v. County of Cook, N.D.Ill.1997, 985 F.Supp. 747. Civil Rights 1383

187. ---- Discrimination, employment, limitations law governing

White police officer failed to establish that city's refusal to promote white officers constituted continuing violation based on overarching policy of discrimination, and thus, claims of discrimination occurring outside three-year limitations period provided in §§ 1981, 1983, and Michigan's Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act were barred, where there was no evidence city had overarching discriminatory policy and officers offered evidence of series of unrelated, individual, discrete acts of alleged discrimination. Kresnak v. City of Muskegon Heights, W.D.Mich.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1327. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Black female teacher's § 1983 claims against city board of education, board superintendent, board district superintendent, and high school principal for racial and sexual harassment and discrimination respecting incidents which occurred more than two years prior to filing of teacher's complaint were time barred under Pennsylvania two-year personal injury statute of limitations. Long v. Board of Educ. of City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1993, 812 F.Supp. 525, affirmed 8 F.3d 811. Civil Rights 1383

University employee's § 1983 and § 1981 employment discrimination actions were subject to three-year limitation period imposed by District of Columbia statute which applies to actions for which limitations period is not otherwise specifically provided. Holland v. Board of Trustees of University of District of Columbia, D.D.C.1992, 794 F.Supp. 420. Civil Rights 1383

188. Excessive force, limitations law governing

Six-year residual Mississippi statute of limitations applied to civil rights excessive force action, rather than one-year statute for intentional tort. Thomas v. City of New Albany, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1990, 901 F.2d 476. Civil Rights 1382

Federal district court in New York would apply New York's three-year statute of limitations governing personal injury actions in civil rights suit alleging excessive force during arrest. Perez v. Police Dept. of City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1994, 872 F.Supp. 49, affirmed 71 F.3d 405. Civil Rights 1382

189. Forfeiture, limitations law governing

Claim that civil forfeiture of vehicle violated owner's civil rights was more analogous to personal injury claim than to property claim and, thus, owner's § 1983 claim against state would be governed by state's one-year personal injury statute of limitations. Hill v. State of Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1994, 868 F.Supp. 221. Civil Rights 1381;

Civil Rights 1384

Owner's § 1983 claim challenging state's civil forfeiture of vehicle accrued on date on which owner received notice of state Supreme Court's denial of his request to appeal forfeiture, rather than on date of initial forfeiture decision, and thus filing of § 1983 claim within one year of notice from state Supreme Court rendered claim timely under applicable one-year limitations period for personal injury actions. Hill v. State of Tenn., M.D.Tenn.1994, 868 F.Supp. 221. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

190. Fraud, limitations law governing

Claims of accused that, during criminal proceedings against him, he was deprived of his constitutional rights to effective assistance of counsel and due process, that prejudicial evidence was improperly admitted, and that transcripts of criminal proceedings were fraudulently altered were not grounded in fraud and were not governed by six-year statute of limitations for fraud. Jacobs v. Coiro, S.D.N.Y.1991, 764 F.Supp. 321. Fraud 38

191. Inverse condemnation, limitations law governing

New Jersey's two-year personal injury statute of limitations governed inverse condemnation claim asserted under § 1983. 287 Corporate Center Associates v. Township of Bridgewater, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 101 F.3d 320. Eminent Domain 288(1)

If inverse condemnation claim asserted under Fifth Amendment were not subject to New Jersey's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, it would at most be subject to New Jersey's six-year statute of limitations for actions at law for trespass to real property, for any tortious injury to real or personal property, or for taking, detaining, or converting personal property, rather than New Jersey's 20-year statute of limitations for actions at law for real estate. 287 Corporate Center Associates v. Township of Bridgewater, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 101 F.3d 320. Eminent Domain 288(1)

192. Prisons and prisoners, limitations law governing--Generally

Pennsylvania two-year personal injury limitations period, rather than Pennsylvania four or six-year limitations period for contracts, governed federal pretrial detainees' civil rights claim alleging physical abuse and mistreatment of detainee housed at county jail pursuant to contract between United States Marshal's Service and county and, thus, claim was time barred, as all incidents alleged to support claim took place more than two years prior to filing of complaint. Kost v. Kozakiewicz, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 1 F.3d 176. Civil Rights 1382

Pennsylvania's two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions governed inmate's § 1983 suit alleging violation of his Eighth Amendment rights in denial of proper clothing and, thus, he could not recover for alleged deprivations occurring more than two years prior to date on which he filed suit. Young v. Berks County Prison, E.D.Pa.1996, 940 F.Supp. 121. Civil Rights 1382

193. ---- Disciplinary proceedings, prisons and prisoners, limitations law governing

Massachusetts' three-year statute of limitations for tort actions, rather than its 60-day limitation on certiorari action to remedy improprieties in prison disciplinary hearings, governed inmate's § 1983 claims arising from allegedly improper disciplinary proceedings. Duffy v. Massachusetts Dept. of Corrections, D.Mass.1990, 746 F.Supp. 232. Civil Rights 1382

The most appropriate state law statute of limitations for action brought pursuant to §§ 1981, 1983 and 1985(3), alleging denial of due process because of prison officials' failure to properly investigate incident in which prisoners were issued disciplinary tickets for failing to cooperate with facility procedures, was New York statute governing actions based on personal injury, providing for three-year limitation period. Salahuddin v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1986, 647 F.Supp. 49. Civil Rights 1382; Conspiracy 16

194. ---- Medical care, prisons and prisoners, limitations law governing

Section 1983 action arising from warden's alleged denial of medical treatment to inmate was governed by one-year prescriptive period applicable to Louisiana personal injury actions, and not by ten-year prescriptive period for nontort, personal actions. Elzy v. Roberson, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 868 F.2d 793. Civil Rights 1382

Virginia's two-year general statute of limitations for personal injury actions applied to § 1983 actions brought by prisoners in state of Virginia, rather than one-year statute of limitations governing personal injury actions by prisoners. Shelton v. Angelone, W.D.Va.2001, 148 F.Supp.2d 670, affirmed 49 Fed.Appx. 451, 2002 WL 31423846, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 1756, 538 U.S. 964, 155 L.Ed.2d 518. Civil Rights 1382

195. Search and seizure, limitations law governing

Rule that municipal liability under § 1983 requires proof of ratification or pattern and practice does not apply to Rehabilitation Act claims, which are governed by respondeat superior. Settlegoode v. Portland Public Schools, C.A.9 (Or.) 2004, 371 F.3d 503, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 478, 543 U.S. 979, 160 L.Ed.2d 356. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1528

Arrestee's § 1983 claim accrued on date of arrest to extent that claim charged warrantless arrest unsupported by probable cause; arrestee knew or should have known on day of his arrest both of injury resulting from his allegedly illegal seizure and who was responsible for any injury. Brooks v. City of Winston-Salem, N.C., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1996, 85 F.3d 178. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Under North Carolina law, plaintiff's § 1983 action arising out of deputy sheriff's alleged wrongful seizure and alleged use of excessive force was governed by three-year, not one-year, personal injury statute of limitations. Reagan v. Hampton, M.D.N.C.1988, 700 F.Supp. 850. Civil Rights 1382

Arrestee's civil rights claim based on warrantless search of his home and allegedly unlawful arrest on subsequent occasion was governed by Connecticut's three-year statute of limitations applicable to general personal injury actions. Mitchell v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.1986, 674 F.Supp. 60. Civil Rights 1382

196. Taxation, limitations law governing

New York three-year statute of limitations barred taxpayer's § 1983 action against United States based on conduct of Internal Revenue Service (IRS) revenue officer. Powers v. Karen, E.D.N.Y.1991, 768 F.Supp. 46, affirmed 963 F.2d 1522. Civil Rights 1384

New Jersey's two-year limitations period for injuries to person governed mortgagee's federal civil rights claim alleging that township's in rem tax foreclosure of subject property violated due process. Craig v. Ewing Township, D.N.J.1988, 678 F.Supp. 1106. Civil Rights 1384

197. Particular limitations cases, limitations law governing

Neighborhood association's civil rights action against county for alleged racial discrimination in the siting and permitting of solid waste landfill accrued at time county board of commissioners voted to select site as location for new landfill, not at time when county actually acquired ownership interest in landfill property; vote was the operative decision amounting to the alleged constitutional injury, public notice was given concerning meeting at which vote occurred, one plaintiff was present at meeting, and at least one plaintiff knew of county's earlier tabling of alternative site proposal allegedly affecting white residents. Rozar v. Mullis, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 85 F.3d 556. Limitation Of Actions 95(15)

Neighborhood association's civil rights action against Georgia Environmental Protection Division (EPD) for alleged racial discrimination in the siting and permitting of solid waste landfill did not accrue at time county board of commissioners voted to select site as location for new landfill, and was thus not time barred, where defendant only became significantly involved in case later, during permitting process; if defendant committed any violations, those wrongs were most likely inflicted through impliedly discriminatory site suitability determination or impliedly discriminatory decision to issue final permit. Rozar v. Mullis, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1996, 85 F.3d 556. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Claims under §§ 1983 arising in North Carolina have a three-year statute of limitations. Guseh v. North Carolina Cent. University, M.D.N.C.2005, 423 F.Supp.2d 550. Civil Rights 1379

Under North Carolina law, a § 1983 claim is subject to a three-year limitations period. Spencer v. Town of Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2003, 290 F.Supp.2d 655. Civil Rights 1379

One-year statute of limitations period applies to § 1983 claims arising in Puerto Rico. Iravedra v. Public Building Authority, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 570. Civil Rights 1379

Statute of limitations applicable to § 1983 claims, that county's allegedly false allegations of sexual abuse against stepfather resulted in mother and stepfather being separated from daughter, was Virginia's two-year statute of limitations for personal actions for injury to person or property, accruing from date alleged injury was sustained. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1384; Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Complaint alleging § 1983 claim that plaintiff's constitutional rights were violated by filing of inaccurate presentence report would not be dismissed on ground that applicable statute of limitations had run, as complaint did not specify when plaintiff received copy of presentence report and stated only that he requested report in 1995 but never received it, and thus did not allow ascertainment of when cause of action accrued; although plaintiff stated in his memorandum of law in opposition to motion to dismiss that he had opportunity to see report at time of sentencing on 1989, court could not consider extraneous fact. Hili v. Sciarotta, E.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 177, affirmed 140 F.3d 210. Federal Civil Procedure 1754; Federal Civil Procedure 1832; Limitation Of Actions 180(7)

Former county employee's § 1983 claim, in which former employee claimed deprivation of rights resulting from alleged lack of proper training given to him for his newly-assigned road patrol deputy position with sheriff's department, accrued at very latest on date former employee had been injured when struck by vehicle while conducting traffic at accident site. Yanacos v. Lake County, Ohio, N.D.Ohio 1996, 953 F.Supp. 187. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Three-year limitations period, applicable to plaintiff's § 1983 personal injury action against city, police department, and off-duty police officer, began to run when he was shot by off-duty police officer. Baker v. New York City, E.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 533. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Limitations period applicable to § 1983 action arising from alleged NEPA violations in connection with harbor tunnel project accrued for limitations purposes when project received final approval from relevant state and federal authorities, even if supplemental environmental impact statements were merely segments of one integrated impact statement; decision to go forward with project, and rejection of all other alternatives, was final at time of final approval. Zarrilli v. Weld, D.Mass.1995, 875 F.Supp. 68. Limitation Of Actions 58(1)

Under Utah law, four-year statute of limitations for relief not otherwise provided for by law applied to claims of disappointed applicant for license to operate a sexually oriented business brought against state court judge under § 1983 and civil rights conspiracy statute, arising out of applicant's appearance in the judge's courtroom. Womble v. Salt Lake City Corp., C.A.10 (Utah) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 18, 2003 WL 22925276, Unreported. Civil Rights 1384; Conspiracy 16

Applying enlarged statute of limitations for personal injury actions under California law to plaintiff's § 1983 claims would not retroactively revive stale claims, but rather would impact on pending claims, given that enlarged limitations period went into effect 24 days before claims would have been barred under one-year limitations period previously in effect, and therefore, under California law, enlarged, two-year period applied to claims and claims were not time-barred. Jordan v. Herrera, C.D.Cal.2003, 2003 WL 22668840, Unreported. Limitation Of Actions 6(1); Limitation Of Actions 6(9)

221. Persons within section generally

Section 1983 creates cause of action based on personal liability and predicated upon fault; thus, liability does not attach unless individual defendant caused or participated in constitutional deprivation. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1335

Liability under this section does not apply to "every person." Stift v. Lynch, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1959, 267 F.2d 237. Civil Rights 1335

Because child was the one who allegedly suffered a constitutional deprivation and her sexual abuse at the hands of police officer was a wrong directed against her person, rather than her family relationships, mother could only bring suit under Section 1983 on behalf of child and not on her own behalf. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Actions may be maintained against individuals in their individual capacities under § 1983, so long as challenged actions were performed by individuals within the scope of their official duties. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1354

Only "persons" may be sued under this section giving cause of action for deprivation of civil rights. Martin v. Davison, W.D.Pa.1971, 322 F.Supp. 318. Civil Rights 1335

222. Capacity, persons within section

Government official in role of personal-capacity defendant is "person" subject to suit for damages under § 1983 for

Term "person" in § 1983 does not include state or state officials acting in their official capacity. Jimenez v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 584. Civil Rights 1344; Civil Rights 1354

California State Board of Pharmacy's executive director, in her official capacity, was a "person" for purposes of §§ 1983 action brought by licensed pharmacist and wholesaler of pharmaceuticals, which did not seek any monetary damages, but only declaratory and injunctive relief to enjoin a violation of federal law allegedly arising from attempt revoke or suspend pharmacist's pharmaceutical license and wholesaler's permit. Adibi v. California State Bd. of Pharmacy, N.D.Cal.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1360

A municipal liability claim under § 1983 against individual government agents must be pursued against them in their official capacity, and generally represents only another way of pleading an action against an entity of which an officer is an agent. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1354

States, and state officers, if sued in their official capacities for retrospective relief, are not "persons" subject to suit under § 1983; however, state employees in their individual capacities may be liable for damages under § 1983, even when conduct in question is related to their official duties. Morris v. Eversley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1344; Civil Rights 1354

In order to determine whether a § 1983 defendant has been sued in defendant's individual or official capacity, a court looks to the complaint and to the course of the proceedings. Riebsame v. Prince, M.D.Fla.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 1225, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 656, 2004 WL 177567, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 166, 543 U.S. 888, 160 L.Ed.2d 149. Civil Rights 1354

250. ---- Comptroller's offices, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Customer stated cause of action in complaint against store officials for §§ 1983 conspiracy by alleging, inter alia, that he was detained after making purchase in violation of his constitutional rights, that store had policy of selecting minorities for increased scrutiny, and that security guard's actions were carried out at direction of store owner and/or pursuant to contracts between store owner and security officials. Bishop v. Toys "R" Us-NY LLC, S.D.N.Y.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 385. Conspiracy 18

Cause of action could not be stated under § 1983 against New York State Comptroller's Office of Unclaimed Funds; the agency was not a "person" within meaning of § 1983. Lieder v. New York State Comptroller's Office of Unclaimed Funds, E.D.N.Y.1993, 837 F.Supp. 512. Civil Rights 1350

251. ---- Corrections bureaus or departments, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Neither Arizona Department of Corrections (DOC) nor agency supervising its prison industries is an arm of the state, and thus neither entity is a "person" within meaning of § 1983. Hale v. State of Ariz., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1993, 993 F.2d 1387, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 386, 510 U.S. 946, 126 L.Ed.2d 335. Civil Rights 1348

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and Bureau of Corrections of that Commonwealth were not "persons" within use of that term in this section and hence were not subject to suit under its provisions. Curtis v. Everette, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1973, 489 F.2d 516, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2409, 416 U.S. 995, 40 L.Ed.2d 774. Civil Rights 1348

State prisoner's official capacity claims against correctional officers for damages arising from alleged use of excessive force and other cruel and unusual punishments were subject to dismissal under Eleventh Amendment as claims against Illinois Department of Corrections (IDOC), an arm of State, and under civil rights statute as claims against entity that did not qualify as §§ 1983 "person." Thomas v. Walton, S.D.Ill.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 786. Federal Courts 269

Eleventh Amendment immunity barred prisoner's § 1983 claims against state Department of Corrections and prison officials acting in their official capacities; neither state nor officials acting in official capacities were persons under § 1983. Damron v. North Dakota Com'r. of Corrections, D.N.D.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 970, affirmed 127 Fed.Appx. 909, 2005 WL 1076645. Federal Courts 269

Texas Department of Criminal Justice was part of state agency, and thus could not be held liable under § 1983. Hockaday v. Texas Dept. of Criminal Justice, Pardons and Paroles Div., S.D.Tex.1996, 914 F.Supp. 1439. Civil Rights 1348

New Jersey Department of Corrections was state agency, and thus was not "person" for purposes of § 1983 suit brought by correctional officers and inmates. Csizmadia v. Fauver, D.N.J.1990, 746 F.Supp. 483. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1349

252. ---- Departments of Labor, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Claimant could not maintain cause of action against Illinois Department of Labor for its decision to withhold from claimant state unemployment insurance benefits, because the Department is not a "person" for purposes of this section creating a cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another, and because while attorney fees may be awarded, payable by the state, when officials are sued in their official capacity, section 1988 of this title providing for such an award of fees does not provide an independent cause of action. Kostelic v. Bernardi, N.D.Ill.1982, 538 F.Supp. 620. Civil Rights 1350

Department of Labor as an arm of the executive, is the alter-ego of the government of Puerto Rico and, hence, the Department, is not a "person" within meaning of this section. Vazquez v. Ferre, D.C.N.J.1975, 404 F.Supp. 815, motion denied 410 F.Supp. 1385. Civil Rights 1364

253. ---- Environmental conservation or protection, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Mississippi Department of Wildlife, Fisheries, and Parks is not a "person" within the meaning of section 1983. Kinnison v. Mississippi Dept. of Wildlife, Fisheries, and Parks, S.D.Miss.1998, 990 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1344

State agencies, South Carolina Department of Wildlife and Marine Resources and South Carolina Department of Health and Environmental Control, were not "persons" within meaning of § 1983, even if they waived Eleventh Amendment immunity. Bellamy v. Borders, D.S.C.1989, 727 F.Supp. 247. Civil Rights 1350

254. ---- Health departments, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Illinois Department of Mental Health could not be sued as "person" under this section. Yarbrough v. Illinois Dept. of Mental Health, N.D.Ill.1982, 538 F.Supp. 414. Civil Rights 1350

255. ---- Housing authorities, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Fact that judgment against Housing and Development Administration of New York City would fall on New York City did not, in itself, preclude finding that authority was a "person" within meaning of this section. Heese v. DeMatteis Development Corp., S.D.N.Y.1976, 417 F.Supp. 864. Civil Rights 1347

256. ---- Interstate agencies, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Interstate agency created by Illinois and Missouri to coordinate regional planning and development was treated like county or municipality under laws of both states and, therefore, agency was not entitled to states' Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity and was "person" subject to suit under § 1983; agency engaged in proprietary functions in defined region with local governance and, most importantly, states were not liable for judgments against agency. Barket, Levy & Fine, Inc. v. St. Louis Thermal Energy Corp., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 948 F.2d 1084, on remand. Civil Rights 1347; Federal Courts 270

Bi-State Development Agency of Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan District was branch of state, rather than local or municipal agency, and was not person subject to suit under § 1983 given amount of control state wielded over composition of Bi-State Commission and plans developed by it. Walker v. Bi-State Development Agency of Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan Dist., E.D.Mo.1991, 763 F.Supp. 409. Civil Rights 1350

257. ---- Justice departments, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Former prosecutor for Puerto Rico Department of Justice (PRDOJ) stated §§ 1983 claim in connection with his termination; Puerto Rico was considered a state for §§ 1983 purposes and complaint alleged actions attributed to officers of PRDOJ, and that firing was due to prosecutor's political affiliation, in retaliation for his protest against continuous work shifts, and without due process. Calderon-Garnier v. Sanchez-Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 229. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Pennsylvania Department of Justice was not "person" within meaning of this section. Padgett v. Stein, M.D.Pa.1975, 406 F.Supp. 287. Civil Rights 1350

258. ---- Parks commissions, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

The Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission was a state agency and, hence, was not a "person" subject to being named as a defendant in action under this section and § 1985 of this title for injunctive or monetary relief against a course of conduct by defendants and their agents designed to prevent any development of property to which plaintiffs held title as trustees. Ligon v. State of Md., D.C.Md.1977, 448 F.Supp. 935. Civil Rights 1347; Conspiracy 13

259. ---- Port authorities, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Public corporation created by Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands to operate and manage its ports was arm of Commonwealth, and therefore neither corporation nor officer thereof, in his official capacity, was person within meaning of § 1983; corporation served central government function in establishing, developing, operating, and managing ports, and, if corporation were faced with money judgment it could not pay, Commonwealth would have been compelled pay judgment to protect its economy and provide its citizens with essential seaport and airport services. Aguon v. Commonwealth Ports Authority, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)2003, 316 F.3d 899. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1360

Delaware River Port Authority (DRPA) of Pennsylvania and New Jersey is a "person" subject to suit under federal civil rights statute. Peters v. Delaware River Port Authority of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 16 F.3d 1346, rehearing and rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 62, 513 U.S. 811, 130 L.Ed.2d 20, on remand 1995 WL 37614. Civil Rights 1343

Port authority formed under compact, approved by Congress, between Pennsylvania and New Jersey was not "arm or instrumentality" of either state and, thus, was "person" subject to suit under § 1983; port authority was financially self-sufficient and had no power to pledge credit or create state debt and it was not arm of the state under either state's law, even though it was not completely autonomous. Peters v. Delaware River Port Authority of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, E.D.Pa.1992, 785 F.Supp. 517. Civil Rights 1350

Political and labor organizations were prevailing parties in their §§ 1983 action to require state secretary of state to properly instruct county election boards on subject of provisional ballots required by Help America Vote Act (HAVA), and thus were entitled to attorney fee award, even though there was no specific evidence of particular voter who was benefited by injunction, where organizations prevailed on claim that HAVA provided right of action enforceable through §§ 1983 to compel secretary to satisfy civil right to cast provisional ballot under circumstances described in HAVA. Sandusky County Democratic Party v. Blackwell, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 191 Fed.Appx. 397, 2006 WL 2188703, Unreported. Civil Rights 1482

260. ---- Regional authorities, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Regional Transportation District (RTD) was a "person" under § 1983, since RTD was not an arm of the state for Eleventh Amendment purposes. Elam Const., Inc. v. Regional Transp. Dist., D.Colo.1997, 980 F.Supp. 1418, affirmed 129 F.3d 1343, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1363, 523 U.S. 1047, 140 L.Ed.2d 513. Civil Rights 1350

West Virginia Regional Jail Authority and Correctional Facility (RJACF) is in effect the "state" of West Virginia, and thus is not a "person" suable under § 1983; RJACF is created by state legislature to serve inmates and citizens of state, and was funded in large part by state and federal funds. Roach v. Burke, N.D.W.Va.1993, 825 F.Supp. 116. Civil Rights 1348

261. ---- Transportation authorities or departments, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Neither South Carolina Department of Highways and Public Transportation nor its officials acting in their official capacities were "persons" amenable to suit under § 1983. Manning v. South Carolina Dept. of Highway and Public Transp., C.A.4 (S.C.) 1990, 914 F.2d 44. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1360

Civil rights action against Illinois Department of Transportation, a state agency, failed for lack of federal court jurisdiction, since it was not a person for purposes of this section. Toledo, Peoria & Western R. Co. v. State of Ill., Dept. of Transp., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 744 F.2d 1296, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 1751, 470 U.S. 1051, 84 L.Ed.2d 815. Federal Courts 269

State transportation department was not "person" subject to suit under § 1983. Vickroy v. Wisconsin Department of Transportation, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 73 Fed.Appx. 172, 2003 WL 21782593, Unreported, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1061, 540 U.S. 1107, 157 L.Ed.2d 892. Civil Rights 1350

262. ---- Welfare or human services departments, state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs (IDCCA), as part of state of Illinois, was not "person" within meaning of federal civil rights statutes. Small v. Chao, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 894. Civil Rights 1350

Nursing home could not bring § 1983 action against state Department of Public Welfare and Board of Public Welfare challenging Medicaid reimbursement rates; personhood was an essential element of § 1983 claim. Lett v. Magnant, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 965 F.2d 251, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1350

Iowa Department of Human Services was agency of state of Iowa, and so was not "person" within meaning of § 1983. Rawlings v. Iowa Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Iowa 1993, 820 F.Supp. 423, on subsequent appeal 16 F.3d 1228. Civil Rights 1350

263. ---- Miscellaneous state agencies or instrumentalities, persons within section

Neither State of Kansas nor Kansas State Gaming Agency (KSGA) was "person" that could be held liable under § 1983. Hartman v. Kickapoo Tribe Gaming Com'n, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 319 F.3d 1230. Civil Rights 1344; Civil Rights 1350

California State Board of Pharmacy failed to offer any evidence that it was a State agency or arm of the State, as grounds for avoiding liability as a "person" under §§ 1983. Adibi v. California State Bd. of Pharmacy, N.D.Cal.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 999. Civil Rights 1350

Colorado Public Utilities Commission (PUC), which was an alter ego of the state for Eleventh Amendment purposes, was not a "person" under §§ 1983. East West Resort Transp., LLC. v. Sopkin, D.Colo.2005, 371 F.Supp.2d 1253. Civil Rights 1350

Office of Legislative Auditor was not "person," within meaning of §§ 1983, against which action could be maintained under §§ 1983 by employee challenging Office policy, requiring "wearing the hat of the office" at all times except when alone at home, on ground of violation of his First Amendment rights. Levy v. Office of Legislative Auditor, M.D.La.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 729. Civil Rights 1349

The parents of disabled student who was raped while enrolled in an alternative education plan could bring § 1983 civil rights action against the Connecticut Department of Education (CSDE) based upon alleged violations of IDEA, notwithstanding fact that the CSDE was a state agency, and a state agency is not a "person" within the meaning of § 1983; to disallow a § 1983 action for violations of the IDEA would be to deny parents any remedy under the Act. J.R. ex rel. R. v. Waterbury Bd. of Educ., D.Conn.2001, 272 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1346

Division of Family Services (DFS), guardian ad litem's office, and DFS employees acting in their official capacities were not "persons" under federal civil rights statute. Schaffrath on Behalf of R.J.J. v. Thomas, D.Utah 1998, 993 F.Supp. 842, affirmed 189 F.3d 478. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1360

Neither New York Public Service Commission (PSC), as state agency, nor its employees acting in their official capacities were "persons" within meaning of § 1983 as required for § 1983 violation. Jemzura v. Public Service Com'n, N.D.N.Y.1997, 971 F.Supp. 702. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1360

State education agency was not "person" subject to liability for damages under § 1983. Messer v. Meno, W.D.Tex.1996, 936 F.Supp. 1280, affirmed in part, reversed in part 130 F.3d 130, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 149 F.3d 1181, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 794, 525 U.S. 1067, 142 L.Ed.2d 657. Civil Rights 1346

New York State Education Department, as a state agency, is not a "person" subject to suit under § 1983. Berkowitz By Berkowitz v. New York City Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.Y.1996, 921 F.Supp. 963. Civil Rights 1346

Section 1983 action would not lie against Alabama Department of Industrial Relations (ADIR) since state was not "person" for § 1983 purposes and ADIR was executive and administrative department of state. Griswold v. Alabama Dept. of Indus. Relations, M.D.Ala.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1492. Civil Rights 1350

County redevelopment authority was not "person" within meaning of this section, and suit against it under such provision would therefore be dismissed. Covert v. Redevelopment Authority of Huntingdon County, M.D.Pa.1978, 447 F.Supp. 270. Civil Rights 1347

South Carolina State Budget and Control Board, South Carolina State Personnel Division, South Carolina Single Cooperative Interagency Merit System and South Carolina Merit System Council was not "persons" which can be charged with liability under either this section or § 1981 of this title. Gourdine v. Ellis, D.C.S.C.1977, 435 F.Supp. 882. Civil Rights 1344

Because municipal assistance corporations for the City of New York and the New York State Emergency Control Board were instrumentalities of the state with financial responsibilities toward the city of New York, it was probable that neither agency was a "person" for purposes of this section. Tron v. Condello, S.D.N.Y.1976, 427 F.Supp. 1175. Civil Rights 1350

New York State Insurance Fund was not "person," and thus was not subject to liability under § 1983. Perry v. State Ins. Fund, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 351, 2003 WL 22879312, Unreported. Civil Rights 1350

264. Local governments, persons within section--Generally

Code enforcement officer did not have final policymaking authority, as required to support business owners' § 1983 claim that citations and warnings were issued against them in retaliation for exercise of their First Amendment rights in speaking out against village's golf and waterworks bond proposals; officer did not set zoning policy, enact zoning ordinance or determine what area of town required her concentrated scrutiny, rather, she simply had authority to issue tickets and citations. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588.

Municipality or local governmental body may be held liable under § 1983 for constitutional violation caused by custom or policy of the local governmental body, or by action taken or policy made by official with final policy-making authority. Denno v. School Bd. of Volusia County, M.D.Fla.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1481, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 182 F.3d 780, rehearing granted and vacated 193 F.3d 1178, reversed in part on rehearing 218 F.3d 1267, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 235 F.3d 1347, certiorari denied 121 S.Ct. 382, 531 U.S. 958, 148 L.Ed.2d 295. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Local governing body can be sued directly under § 1983 for monetary, declaratory, or injunctive relief if alleged unconstitutional action implements or executes policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body. Wallace v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1996, 956 F.Supp. 965. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Local governmental unit is subject to suit under § 1983 because it is deemed a "person" within meaning of that provision. Boyer v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Johnson County, D.Kan.1996, 922 F.Supp. 476, affirmed 108 F.3d 1388. Civil Rights 1343

Under § 1983, local governments can be sued only where action alleged to be unconstitutional implements or executes policy statement, ordinance, regulation or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers. Pryor-El v. Kelly, D.D.C.1995, 892 F.Supp. 261. Civil Rights 1351(1)

265. ---- Municipalities, local governments, persons within section

Municipalities and other local government units are included among those "persons" to whom this section applies; overruling Monroe v. Pape, 81 S.Ct. 473, 365 U.S. 167, 5 L.Ed.2d 492. Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 436 U.S. 658, 56 L.Ed.2d 611.

While liability of municipalities under § 1983 does not turn on liability of individual officers, it is contingent on violation of constitutional rights. Sweaney v. Ada County, Idaho, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1997, 119 F.3d 1385. Civil Rights 1343

When private entity contracts with county to provide medical services to inmates, it performs function traditionally within exclusive prerogative of state, and in so doing, that entity becomes functional equivalent of municipality; thus, entity is liable under § 1983 for injury resulting from performance of that function only if injury resulted from entity's policy or custom. Buckner v. Toro, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1997, 116 F.3d 450, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 608, 522 U.S. 1018, 139 L.Ed.2d 495. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1339

Although municipalities are "persons" within meaning of § 1983, municipalities may only be held liable if constitutional harm suffered was result of official policy, custom, or pattern. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Local governmental unit or municipality may be sued as "person" under § 1983. Hervey v. Estes, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1995, 65 F.3d 784, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1343

For §§ 1983 purposes, municipalities are deemed to be "persons" susceptible to suit. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1343

Municipality may be liable under §§ 1983 when execution of its policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts the injury. Fedor v. Kudrak,

D.Conn.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 473. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipalities and their officers are "persons" amenable to suit under §§ 1983. Figueroa-Garay v. Municipality of Rio Grande, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 117. Civil Rights 1343; Civil Rights 1354

Municipalities are "persons" within the meaning of §§ 1983. Ashby v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2004, 354 F.Supp.2d 616. Civil Rights 1343

Municipal entities are deemed "persons" within the meaning of § 1983, and are therefore subject to liability for violations of such statute. Gonzalez-Caratini v. Garcia-Padilla, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1343

Private entity that contracted with county to provide jail inmates with medical services was functionally equivalent to municipality for purposes of inmate's § 1983 suit alleging inadequate medical care; thus, claim required showing that entity was responsible for unconstitutional municipal custom or policy that was moving force behind inadequate care. Wall v. Dion, D.Me.2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 316. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1351(4)

Plaintiff who pursues § 1983 claim against municipality must show more than just alleged civil rights violation; at issue in such claim is city's deliberate indifference, and conduct of one of its employees, without more, generally cannot create jury question on that point. Torres v. McLaughlin, E.D.Pa.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1353, reversed 163 F.3d 169, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 797, 528 U.S. 1079, 145 L.Ed.2d 672. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1426

To sue municipality under § 1983, plaintiff must assert that existence of municipal policy or custom was cause of his injuries. Torres v. Knapich, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1351(1)

When execution of municipal government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts and acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts injury, municipal government is responsible under § 1983. Torian v. City of Beckley, S.D.W.Va.1997, 963 F.Supp. 565. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality is liable under § 1983 where municipal policymaker ratifies subordinate's decisions or acts; test is whether there is municipal policy or custom. Soto v. Schembri, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 751. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality was not liable under § 1983 for decision by police officer to allow judicial candidate's spouse to remove flyers placed on car windshields by opponent of judge's election; although spouse allegedly removed flyers on several occasions, nothing indicated that police or village employees engaged in well-settled, widespread practice, and officer was not final policymaker on election pamphleteering. Chapman v. Village of Homewood, N.D.Ill.1997, 960 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To hold municipality liable under § 1983, plaintiff must show that violation of his constitutional rights resulted from municipal policy or custom. Pravda v. City of Albany, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 174. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A municipality may not be held liable under § 1983 for actions of its employees based on the theory of respondeat superior. Johnson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1345

Municipality can only be held liable under § 1983 for acts which municipality itself is responsible, that is, those it has officially sanctioned or ordered. Boyer v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Johnson County, D.Kan.1996, 922 F.Supp. 476, affirmed 108 F.3d 1388. Civil Rights 1343

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Municipalities are potentially liable in civil rights suit under § 1983 for policies and customs they consciously and purposefully adopt. Barney v. City of Greenville, Miss., N.D.Miss.1995, 898 F.Supp. 372. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality can be found liable under § 1983 only where municipality itself causes constitutional violation at issue. Bowen v. City of Manchester, D.N.H.1991, 894 F.Supp. 561, affirmed 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1343

266. ---- Boroughs, local governments, persons within section

Borough was not a "person" within meaning of this section and, therefore, was not a proper defendant in action by former police officer who sought preliminary and permanent injunctive relief in the form of reinstatement and back pay and a declaration that his termination was an unconstitutional denial of due process. Olson v. Borough of Homestead, W.D.Pa.1976, 417 F.Supp. 784, affirmed 568 F.2d 769. Civil Rights 1349

267. ---- Cities, local governments, persons within section

Village president did not have final policymaking authority with regard to zoning, as required to support business owners' § 1983 claim that citations and warnings were issued against them in retaliation for exercise of their First Amendment rights in speaking out against village's golf and waterworks bond proposals; policymaking authority was in board of trustees. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1351(3)

In order to succeed in § 1983 claim against city based on due process violation, plaintiff must show that city adhered to policy, practice or custom that caused him to be deprived of his constitutional rights. Perkins v. City of West Covina, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1004, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 1690, 523 U.S. 1105, 140 L.Ed.2d 812, reversed 119 S.Ct. 678, 525 U.S. 234, 142 L.Ed.2d 636, on remand 167 F.3d 1286. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City was not liable under § 1983 to prospective purchaser for public corporation's policy requiring prospective purchasers of corporation's property to seek endorsement of alderperson within whose ward property was located; corporation was an entity entirely separate from city, there was no evidence that city adopted corporation's policy for city's own benefit, city did not involve itself in corporation's decision to sell corporation's property, and single alderperson had no final policy-making authority regarding sale of city property. Solomon Temple M.B. Church v. City of St. Louis, E.D.Mo.1997, 980 F.Supp. 1064. Civil Rights 1351(3)

City's alleged systematic inadequacies in processing citizen complaints did not constitute deliberate indifference giving rise to § 1983 liability in arrestee's action alleging civil rights violations relating to arrest and subsequent charges against him, absent evidence that such inadequacies constituted policy made as result of deliberate choice between alternatives, that, if inadequacies could be deemed policies, such policies were inadequate, or that city's choice of policy was made deliberately or recklessly, ignoring its deficiencies. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City qualified as "person" to whom § 1983 applied. Santa Fe Springs Realty Corp. v. City of Westminster, C.D.Cal.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1341.

268. ---- Counties, local governments, persons within section

Minority-owned construction firm failed to state § 1981 claim against county for violating county bidding procedures and excluding firm on basis of race from obtaining construction contract on county project, as it failed to allege that its rights were violated as a result of county "policy or custom"; although it alleged that county failed to enforce state and county bidding requirements, it did not allege that this failure to enforce constituted official policy or custom of county. Federation of African American Contractors v. City of Oakland, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 96 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 1395(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Kentucky county could be considered a "person" for purposes of § 1983. Smallwood v. Jefferson County Government, W.D.Ky.1991, 753 F.Supp. 657. Civil Rights 1350

269. ---- Districts, local governments, persons within section

Statutory transportation district was local governmental entity, not arm of the state, and district was thus "person" for purpose of § 1983 action alleging that actions of district's board of directors violated plaintiffs' First Amendment rights. Elam Const., Inc. v. Regional Transp. Dist., C.A.10 (Colo.) 1997, 129 F.3d 1343, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1363, 523 U.S. 1047, 140 L.Ed.2d 513. Civil Rights 1350

270. ---- Towns, local governments, persons within section

Town was not liable, under § 1983, to 13-year-old girl and her family for violation of her Fourteenth Amendment liberty rights, occurring when police officer allegedly intimidated her into engaging in sexual activities with him; town could not be deemed to have foreseen obvious or actual danger that officer would attempt to capitalize on position of superiority over teenage girls arising from his status as law enforcement officer to extract sexual favors, and had no obligation to take measures to forestall that conduct. West By and Through Norris v. Waymire, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 114 F.3d 646, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 337, 522 U.S. 932, 139 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Civil rights action could be brought against both town and its mayor. McCulloch v. Glasgow, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 620 F.2d 47. Civil Rights 1391

Town was not a "person" within this section. Ybarra v. Town of Los Altos Hills, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 503 F.2d 250.

Town was subject to suit under this section. Martin v. Wray, E.D.Wis.1979, 473 F.Supp. 1131.

Complaint filed by corporation engaged in business of stone quarrying against township civic association and certain individual residents, alleging that defendants engaged in a concerted effort to terminate operation of plaintiff's business in violation of this section, had to be dismissed since township was not a "person" within meaning of provisions of this section. Miller & Son Paving, Inc. v. Wrightstown Tp. Civic Ass'n, E.D.Pa.1978, 443 F.Supp. 1268, affirmed 595 F.2d 1213, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 86, 444 U.S. 843, 62 L.Ed.2d 56. Federal Civil Procedure 1746

270A. Townships, persons within section

Township was "person," for purpose of civil rights claims of property owner against township alleging violation of its due process rights, since township had powers and duties of government. Wedgewood Ltd. Partnership I. v. Township of Liberty, Ohio, S.D.Ohio 2006, 456 F.Supp.2d 904. Civil Rights 1347

271. Municipal agencies, persons within section

Arrestee who brought §§ 1983 action while he was incarcerated, and who was thereafter awarded one dollar in nominal damages for use of excessive force prior to his arrest, was entitled to attorney fees as provided by Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), which limited attorney fee awards in prisoner suits to 150% of the money judgment. Robbins v. Chronister, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2006, 435 F.3d 1238. Civil Rights 1485

Term "persons" encompasses state and local officials sued in their individual capacities, private individuals and entities which acted under color of state law, and local governmental entities for purposes of § 1983 action; however, term "persons" does not encompass municipal departments. Vance v. County of Santa Clara,

N.D.Cal.1996, 928 F.Supp. 993. Civil Rights 1343

City housing authority was neither "department" or "agency" of city under Colorado law, and thus, city was not liable under § 1983 for authority's alleged discriminatory treatment of tenant of authority-owned apartment; city officials' limited authority to appoint commissioners for fixed terms and to remove them only for cause underscored independent nature of relationship between authority and city, tenant pointed to no evidence that city had any contact with him in matters pertaining to suit, and authority had power to choose legal counsel. Roe v. Housing Authority of City of Boulder, D.Colo.1995, 909 F.Supp. 814. Civil Rights 1347

Philadelphia Department of Public Health, a municipal agency, is a "person" amenable to suit under this section. Alexander v. Polk, E.D.Pa.1978, 459 F.Supp. 883.

272. County agencies, persons within section

County juvenile probation board was county agency rather than arm of the state, so that county could be held liable for civil rights violation based on policy of the board; state law tended to perceive the board as county agency, county, rather than state, was the major source of funding, board was primarily concerned with local, as opposed to statewide, problems, and board could set higher standards for operation of detention center than those set by state juvenile probation commission, which set minimum standards. Flores v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 92 F.3d 258, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

While county may be liable for the conduct of foster children under an in loco parentis theory under Ohio law, claim of licensed foster parents that county should be liable for harm inflicted on their natural children by foster children in their home was not cognizable under § 1983. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1057

County board of ethics was not entity separate from county that could be separately sued in § 1983 suit against county. Umhey v. County of Orange, N.Y., S.D.N.Y.1997, 957 F.Supp. 525. Civil Rights 1391; Counties 208

Failure of county welfare department to timely conduct, pursuant to Ohio R.C. § 2151.421, investigation of father's possible sexual abuse of his daughter did not result in termination by Domestic Relations Court of father's visitation rights, and thus county welfare department was not liable under § 1983 for deprivation of father's liberty interest in visitation, as domestic relations, which controls custody of minor children and awarding of visitation rights, is an entity separate and distinct from welfare department, having neither a direct nor indirect relationship with that department. Haag v. Cuyahoga County, N.D.Ohio 1985, 619 F.Supp. 262, affirmed 798 F.2d 1414. Civil Rights 1057

County agencies were subject to suit under this section. Gill v. Monroe County Dept. of Social Services, W.D.N.Y.1978, 79 F.R.D. 316, motion denied 95 F.R.D. 518.

273. Government officials generally, persons within section

Only direct acts or omissions of government officials, not acts of subordinates, will give rise to individual liability under § 1983. Coleman v. Houston Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 113 F.3d 528. Civil Rights 1355

Government officials who perform discretionary functions are not liable under § 1983 for civil damages to the extent that their conduct does not contravene clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which reasonable person would have known. McLenagan v. Karnes, C.A.4 (Va.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1002, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1376(2)

County police officer who was injured while working undercover when he was struck a police vehicle driven by another county officer who believed he was pursuing a robbery suspect failed to establish that county had a general custom of permitting the use of excessive force, so as to render it liable under §§ 1983 for his injury; plaintiff failed to provide any evidence that county should have been on notice that its officers were inadequately trained in the use of a vehicle as a weapon or were unlawfully using their vehicles as weapons. Perez v. Miami-Dade County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1343, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 168 Fed.Appx. 338, 2006 WL 372321. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To establish civil rights claim against public employee in his official capacity, plaintiff must show that unconstitutional policy or custom of employee caused alleged injury, and it is not sufficient that plaintiff demonstrate single unlawful act by nonpolicymaking employee. Jeffries v. Block, C.D.Cal.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1509 . Civil Rights 1351(1)

Government officials sued in their official capacity are "persons" under this section and may be sued for constitutional deprivations pursuant to governmental custom even though such a custom has not received formal approval through body's official decision-making channels. Woody v. City of West Miami, S.D.Fla.1979, 477 F.Supp. 1073. Civil Rights 1354

Action nominally filed against individual members of government agency in their official capacities cannot be maintained under this section providing action for deprivation of rights under color of state law where action seeks to utilize officials as conduit to treasury of agency itself and not as a "person" for purposes of jurisdiction under this section. Wade v. Mississippi Co-op. Extension Service, N.D.Miss.1976, 424 F.Supp. 1242. Civil Rights 1354

274. Supervisory officials, persons within section

Supervisory official may be held liable in federal civil rights action only if he was personally involved in constitutional deprivation, or if there was sufficient causal connection between official's wrongful conduct and constitutional violation. Jeffries v. Block, C.D.Cal.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1509. Civil Rights 1355

275. Federal officials, persons within section--Generally

Entitlement to relief under this section is available only against state actors, not against agents of the federal government. American Science & Engineering, Inc. v. Califano, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1978, 571 F.2d 58.

Actions of the federal government and its officials are beyond the purview of § 1983, which applies only to state actors acting under color of state law, but federal officials can be sued in their personal capacities under civil rights conspiracy statute. Benson v. U.S., N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1129. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1362; Conspiracy 13

Taxpayer could not maintain action under § 1983 of Civil Rights Act against Internal Revenue Service (IRS) officer as § 1983 only entitled plaintiffs to relief against state actors, not federal actors. Del Elmer; Zachay v. Metzger, S.D.Cal.1997, 967 F.Supp. 398. Civil Rights 1327

Section 1983 does not extend to constitutional torts of federal officers unless they act in concert with state or local officials. McNally v. DeWitt, W.D.Ky.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1041. Civil Rights 1362

Inmates could not recover under § 1983 for alleged civil rights violations committed by federal officials. Inmates of MDC Guaynabo v. Franco, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 896 F.Supp. 248. Civil Rights 1364

Bivens actions, (i.e., constitutional torts) by federal employees against their supervisors concerning alleged job-related constitutional violations are not allowed and this is particularly true where there is employment relationship which is governed by comprehensive procedural and substantive provisions giving meaningful remedies against the United States. Rallis v. Stone, E.D.Mich.1993, 821 F.Supp. 466. United States 50.10(4)

Bivens, action is federal counterpart of § 1983 civil rights action. Shannon v. General Elec. Co., N.D.N.Y.1993, 812 F.Supp. 308.

An action brought pursuant to this section cannot lie against federal officers. Chodos v. F.B.I., S.D.N.Y.1982, 559 F.Supp. 69, affirmed 697 F.2d 289, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 741, 459 U.S. 1111, 74 L.Ed.2d 962, rehearing denied 103 S.Ct. 1451, 460 U.S. 1048, 75 L.Ed.2d 805. Civil Rights 1362

This section does not provide for suits against federal officials; thus, district court had no jurisdiction over federal defendants in civil rights case brought by inmate in federal custody. Anderson v. Luther, N.D.Ill.1981, 521 F.Supp. 91.

No action under this section lies against federal officials acting pursuant to federal law. Osorio v. Veterans Administration, D.C.Puerto Rico 1981, 514 F.Supp. 94, affirmed 676 F.2d 681. Civil Rights 1327

276. ---- Central Intelligence Agency officials, federal officials, persons within section

Central Intelligence Agency and director of the Agency were not subject to suit under this section. LaRouche v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1974, 369 F.Supp. 565. Civil Rights 1364

277. ---- Environmental Protection Agency officials, federal officials, persons within section

Corporation and its officers and employees could not maintain § 1983 action against employees of Environmental Protection Agency in their individual capacities, in absence of allegations to support bald statement that employees were acting under color of laws of New Hampshire, where employees never asserted to be other than agents of United States. Behre v. Thomas, D.N.H.1987, 665 F.Supp. 89, affirmed 843 F.2d 1385. Civil Rights 1327

278. State or commonwealth officials, persons within section--Generally

State officers who violate defendants' federal constitutional and statutory rights may be made to respond in damages not only for violation of rights conferred by federal equal civil rights laws but for violation of other federal constitutional and statutory rights as well. City of Greenwood, Miss. v. Peacock, U.S.Miss.1966, 86 S.Ct. 1800, 384 U.S. 808, 16 L.Ed.2d 944. Civil Rights 1027; States 79

Governor is a state official who, when sued in his official capacity for injunctive relief, would be a "person" under § 1983. Haley v. Pataki, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 106 F.3d 478. Civil Rights 1354

Neither states nor state officials in their official capacities are "persons" within the meaning of §§ 1983. Thomas v. Walton, S.D.Ill.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 786. Civil Rights 1354

Neither state nor its officials acting in their official capacities are "persons" under §§ 1983, which provides cause of action only against persons who, under color of state law, deprive an individual of his constitutional rights. Ferguson v. Georgia Dept. of Corrections, M.D.Ga.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 1339. Civil Rights 1354

Neither state nor its officials acting in their official capacities are "persons" under §§ 1983. Googerdy v. North Carolina Agr. and Technical State University, M.D.N.C.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 618. Civil Rights 1354

State official in his or her official capacity, when sued for injunctive relief, is a "person" under §§ 1983;

official-capacity actions for prospective relief are not treated as actions against State. Boone v. Pennsylvania Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, M.D.Pa.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 484. Civil Rights 1354

Under the Eleventh Amendment, a state, its agencies, and agency officials acting in their official capacities are not "persons" for purposes of §§ 1983, and therefore are not subject to suit for money damages in the federal courts without the state's consent. Hudson v. Maloney, D.Mass.2004, 326 F.Supp.2d 206. Federal Courts 269

Puerto Rico officials, sued in their official capacity in employee's action alleging she was transferred from her position as Temporary Manager of Right to Work Administration (RWA) because of her political affiliation, were not "persons" subject to suit under § 1983. Torres Ocasio v. Melendez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 1359

Claim of racial discrimination in contracting may be brought, under § 1983, against state officials in their individual capacities. Bankhead v. Arkansas Dept. of Human Services, E.D.Ark.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 805, reversed 360 F.3d 839, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 57, 543 U.S. 818, 160 L.Ed.2d 26. Civil Rights 1360

Eleventh Amendment did not bar former employee's § 1983 claims against agents of county board of education for prospective relief in their official capacities, and for damages against the individuals in their personal capacities, based on alleged denial of employee's First Amendment rights. Lewis v. Board of Educ. of Talbot County, D.Md.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 608. Federal Courts 270; Federal Courts 272

When state officer violates federal constitutional mandates, even when carrying out state policy, he is stripped of his official or representative character and is subjected in his person to consequences of his individual conduct. Rumph v. State Workmen's Ins. Fund, E.D.Pa.1997, 964 F.Supp. 180. Civil Rights 1354

State officials acting in their official capacities are not "persons" within meaning of § 1983 in complaints for monetary damages and are not subject to suit in their official capacities under § 1983. Lowery v. Prince George's County, Md., D.Md.1997, 960 F.Supp. 952. Civil Rights 1354

State officials acting in their official capacities are not subject to suit under § 1983, as suit against state official in his or her official capacity is not suit against official, but rather, suit against official's office. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1354

State officials subject to "prospective injunctive relief" exception to Eleventh Amendment would be regarded as "persons" under § 1983, and thus § 1983 claims against them may be brought in federal or state court. Office of Hawai'ian Affairs v. Department of Educ., D.Hawai'i 1996, 951 F.Supp. 1484. Civil Rights 1354

Former Secretary of Education was not liable in § 1983 action alleging violation of due process clause or § 1985 action alleging a conspiracy to violate teacher's civil rights for her actions in suspending teacher after teacher repeatedly refused to accept her work assignment where Secretary notified teacher of her right to request informal hearing before suspension and cancellation of her teacher certificate, teacher was notified of informal hearing, hearing lasted for two days and teacher was apprised of charges against her. Reyes-Pagan v. Benitez, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 910 F.Supp. 38. Civil Rights 1133; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

State officer acting in his official capacity was a "person" under § 1983. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians v. State of Minn., D.Minn.1994, 853 F.Supp. 1118, affirmed 124 F.3d 904, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 2295, 524 U.S. 915, 141 L.Ed.2d 156, affirmed 119 S.Ct. 1187, 526 U.S. 172, 143 L.Ed.2d 270, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1333, 526 U.S. 1038, 143 L.Ed.2d 497, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 1376, 526 U.S. 1060, 143 L.Ed.2d 535. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

For court to impose § 1983 civil rights liability for state's policy, custom, or practice, underlying violative acts must have been committed by state officials. Elliott v. New Miami Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ohio 1992, 799 F.Supp. 818. Civil Rights 1351(1)

It is the nature of act performed by state official, not the status of state official as such, that is determinative of applicability of this section. Myers v. Bull, E.D.Mo.1978, 462 F.Supp. 107, affirmed 599 F.2d 863, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 213, 444 U.S. 901, 62 L.Ed.2d 138. Civil Rights 1326(2)

279. ---- Immigration and naturalization officials, state or commonwealth officials, persons within section

Acting Chief of Immigration and Naturalization Office for Government of Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) was "person" under § 1983 for purposes of suit against him in his individual capacity. DeNieva v. Reyes, C.A.9 (N.Mariana Islands)1992, 966 F.2d 480. Civil Rights 1364

280. ---- Secretaries of health and social services, state or commonwealth officials, persons within section

State Secretary of Health and Social Services and Director of Social Services were "persons" within meaning of this section, even though they were being sued in their official capacities. Rochester v. White, C.A.3 (Del.) 1974, 503 F.2d 263. Civil Rights 1360

281. ---- State's attorneys, state or commonwealth officials, persons within section

Under state law, state's attorney was state official and thus was not "person" suable in his official capacity under § 1983. Houston v. Cook County, N.D.Ill.1990, 758 F.Supp. 1225. Civil Rights 1358

State inmate pleaded himself out of court on § 1983 conspiracy claim when he alleged conspiracy by state officials to violate his First, Ninth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights, but then alleged specific actions contradicting that claim by asserting that former governor had pursued policy restricting prisoner access to pornography for political reasons, successfully lobbied state legislature to change existing policy, and then had state's corrections department carry out new policy; such allegations did not support existence of agreement to deprive inmate of his constitutional rights, or suggest that state officials' acts deprived him of a constitutional right. McMillian v. Litscher, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 72 Fed.Appx. 438, 2003 WL 21489717, Unreported. Conspiracy 18

282. District of Columbia officials, persons within section

This section does not apply to officers of the District of Columbia. Dellums v. Powell, C.A.D.C.1977, 566 F.2d 216, 184 U.S.App.D.C. 324, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 3147, 438 U.S. 916, 57 L.Ed.2d 1161, rehearing denied 99 S.Ct. 234, 439 U.S. 886, 58 L.Ed.2d 201. Civil Rights 1354

The District of Columbia and its officers were "persons" within meaning of § 1983, for purposes of automobile owner's action for declaratory relief and damages allegedly resulting from police department possession of her automobile as part of sting operation designed to combat motor vehicle theft. O'Callaghan v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1990, 741 F.Supp. 273. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

283. Territories, persons within section

Neither the Territory of Guam nor an officer of the Territory acting in his official capacity is a "person" within meaning of § 1983. Ngiraingas v. Sanchez, U.S.Guam 1990, 110 S.Ct. 1737, 495 U.S. 182, 109 L.Ed.2d 163. Civil Rights 1344; Civil Rights 1354

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Litigant was not entitled to injunctive relief under § 1983 to prevent Virgin Islands and its officials from allegedly further depriving him of his property without due process inasmuch as neither the territory of the Virgin Islands nor its officers acting in their official capacities were "persons" within the meaning of § 1983. Brow v. Farrelly, C.A.3 (Virgin Islands) 1993, 994 F.2d 1027, as amended. Civil Rights 1347; Civil Rights 1357

Neither the territory of Guam nor its employees acting in their official capacities are persons for purposes of federal civil rights statute. Bermudez v. Duenas, C.A.9 (Guam) 1991, 936 F.2d 1064. Civil Rights 1344; Civil Rights 1354

Territory is not "person" for purposes of § 1983, just as state is not "person." Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1344

Section 1983 does not apply to territories such as Virgin Islands. Lake v. V.I. Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1994, 875 F.Supp. 283. Civil Rights 1344

284. Territory officials, persons within section

Governor of Guam was "person," within meaning of § 1983, when sued in his official capacity for prospective relief. Guam Soc. of Obstetricians and Gynecologists v. Ada, C.A.9 (Guam) 1992, 962 F.2d 1366, as amended, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 633, 506 U.S. 1011, 121 L.Ed.2d 564. Civil Rights 1360

For purposes of § 1983, territorial officials sued in their official capacities are not "persons" with respect to suits for retrospective damages, but are "persons" with respect to suits for prospective injunctive relief. Everett v. Schneider, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 989 F.Supp. 720. Civil Rights 1354

Officers and employees of territory such as the Virgin Islands acting in their official capacities may not be made defendants in § 1983 action. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1354

285. Local government officials, persons within section

Local government officials sued in their official capacities are "persons" for purposes of this section in those cases in which a local government would be suable in its own name. Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 436 U.S. 658, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. Civil Rights 1354

The term "persons," for purposes of § 1983 section providing for liability of any person who subjects a citizen or other person to deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, includes local and state officers acting under color of state law. Carver v. Foerster, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1996, 102 F.3d 96. Civil Rights 1354

286. Municipal officials, persons within section

Municipal employee may partially or completely avoid liability for violations of civil rights by showing that he was acting within scope of his official duties; if he can show that his actions were pursuant to official policy, he can shift part of his liability to municipality. Dunton v. Suffolk County, State of N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 729 F.2d 903, amended on other grounds 748 F.2d 69. Civil Rights 1354

Like municipalities, municipal officials are liable for their own acts and for those of their agents; however, although municipal employees are agents of municipality, they are not necessarily agents of their superiors. Trotter

v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1983, 573 F.Supp. 1269. Municipal Corporations 170

287. City officials, persons within section

Officers in official capacity are legally indistinct from city itself, in civil rights suit. Cruz v. City of Wilmington, D.Del.1993, 814 F.Supp. 405. Civil Rights 1354

288. County officials, persons within section

Board of county commissioners was not liable in civil rights action for conduct of president of board in ruling a citizen out of order while citizen was addressing public meeting and then evicting him. Collinson v. Gott, C.A.4 (Md.) 1990, 895 F.2d 994. Civil Rights 1350

Claims against director of county social services department and its board of directors for violations of due process and equal protection in connection with administration of North Carolina's low-income home energy assistance program could only proceed under statute, which prohibits deprivation of federal constitutional rights under color of state law, where directors were local officials. Hunt v. Robeson County Dept. of Social Services, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1987, 816 F.2d 150.

289. Election officials, persons within section

Commissioners of election for county who were sued in their official capacities were "persons" within meaning of this section. Lytle v. Commissioners of Election of Union County, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1976, 541 F.2d 421, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 3122, 438 U.S. 904, 57 L.Ed.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1360

In action alleging that city councilman candidate was unconstitutionally denied access to the ballot and that voters in turn were unconstitutionally denied right to vote for him in which members of city board of elections were sued individually and as an entity, there was no problem as to whether plaintiffs had sued a "person" within meaning of this section and, similarly, whether intervenor state was immune was irrelevant since relief would run against city board of elections. Williams v. Sclafani, S.D.N.Y.1978, 444 F.Supp. 906, affirmed 580 F.2d 1046. Civil Rights 1350

289A. Employers

Fire protection district chairman and fire chief did not have to be employers to be potentially liable under §§ 1983 for acts of discrimination against district employee. Aucoin v. Kennedy, E.D.La.2004, 355 F.Supp.2d 830. Civil Rights 1359

290. Historical societies, persons within section

Since state historical society was a state educational institution and state agency, society was a "person" for purposes of this section, and, therefore, former curator of material culture for state historical society could maintain action based on allegedly wrongful dismissal against state historical society. Morrow v. Sudler, D.C.Colo.1980, 502 F.Supp. 1200. Civil Rights 1349

291. Hospitals, persons within section

County hospital was a "governmental entity" subject to liability under §§ 1983, where the hospital was created as a public trust pursuant to state law. Beedle v. Wilson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 422 F.3d 1059. Civil Rights 1326(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

State action prerequisite of § 1983 was satisfied in action against hospital where hospital was financed by Commonwealth, its by-laws were approved by Secretary of Health, and its "governing body" or final decider was Secretary or Secretary's Regional Director. Davila-Lopes v. Zapata, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 111 F.3d 192, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mental hospital created by statute and maintained by state was state agency, and, as such, was not "person" subject to liability for damages under federal civil rights statute. Bushey v. Derboven, D.Me.1996, 946 F.Supp. 96. Civil Rights 1350

Intensive treatment center, where unit of prisoners was working when alleged § 1983 violations occurred, was not "person" subject to § 1983 claim. Gardner v. Beale, E.D.Va.1991, 780 F.Supp. 1073, affirmed 998 F.2d 1008. Civil Rights 1348

Where hospital was maintained and controlled by state and had little or no independent existence, neither hospital nor individual defendants in their official capacities were "persons" within meaning of this section. Gann v. Delaware State Hosp., D.C.Del.1982, 543 F.Supp. 268. Civil Rights 1350

Although hospital district organized pursuant to California's Local Hospital District Law, West's Ann.Cas. Health & Safety Code, § 32000 et seq. and West's Ann.Cal.Gov.Code, § 23500 et seq., was not a "person" within meaning of this section, the hospital board members, who were sued in their official capacities for monetary and equitable relief and who were individually named in the complaint, were "persons" within meaning of this section. Heath v. Redbud Hospital Dist., N.D.Cal.1977, 436 F.Supp. 766. Civil Rights 1360

292. Hotels, persons within section

Where there was nothing to show that hotel in which plaintiff, suing for false arrest and imprisonment, was arrested by deputy sheriffs who were carrying out an assignment of roaming rooming areas in hotels because of high burglary rate, had employed deputies or was in any way connected with their activities, action against hotel could not be maintained. Schulz v. Lamb, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1974, 504 F.2d 1009, on remand 416 F.Supp. 723. False Imprisonment 15(1)

293. Insurance funds, persons within section

Oklahoma State Insurance Fund was not "person" within purview of this section or § 1985 of this title. Boling v. National Zinc Co., N.D.Okla.1976, 435 F.Supp. 18.

294. Joint tortfeasors, persons within section

There can be no joint tortfeasors under this section unless it can be shown that defendants participated in specific acts complained of. Dykes v. Camp, E.D.Mo.1971, 333 F.Supp. 923. Civil Rights 1335

295. Judges, persons within section

Defendants in criminal cases could not maintain § 1983 action against individual judges on state court of criminal appeals, alleging that their Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights were denied through slow processing of appeals, except to extent that defendants were suing for prospective injunctive relief; judge was not a "person" who could be sued under § 1983. Harris v. Champion, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1995, 51 F.3d 901. Civil Rights 1358

Superior court judge who issued illegal bond schedule was an official of the state, rather than of the city or county as required to impose liability under § 1983 on city or county for wrongful detention of arrestee. Woods v. City of Michigan City, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 940 F.2d 275. Civil Rights 1358

Judge of Indiana Circuit Court and chief probation officer of such circuit court were "persons" who could be defendants in a civil rights suit. Drollinger v. Milligan, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1977, 552 F.2d 1220. Civil Rights 1358

Civil rights claims against Probate Court judge in his official capacity were barred by the Eleventh Amendment, and because, in his official capacity, he was not a "person" within the scope of §§ 1983. Collins v. West Hartford Police Dept., D.Conn.2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 83. Federal Courts 269

Under California law, municipal court judges were "state officials" at time they allegedly forced commissioner of consolidated superior and municipal courts to retire in violation of his First Amendment rights, and thus county could not be held responsible for their conduct under § 1983; California law gave State, not counties, direction and control over municipal court judges, and it was State that had granted municipal court judges discretion to hire and fire court commissioners. Meek v. County of Riverside, C.D.Cal.1997, 982 F.Supp. 1410, affirmed in part, dismissed in part 183 F.3d 962, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 499, 528 U.S. 1005, 145 L.Ed.2d 386. Civil Rights 1349; Judges 36

Black attorney's claim that judge presiding over state court case brought by attorney referred to him "in vicious derogatory terms in regards to his race and color," refused to allow him representation, and improperly dismissed state court suit stated claim under § 1983. Davidson v. Garry, E.D.N.Y.1996, 956 F.Supp. 265, affirmed 112 F.3d 503. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Prisoner's motion for leave to amend his civil rights complaint to add as defendant the New York State Appellate Division, First Department, charging the court with failure to provide him with adequate counsel for his appeal would be denied, since the Appellate Division was not a "person" for purposes of § 1983 and its justices could not be sued in their individual capacity for money damages under § 1983. Mathis v. Clerk of First Dept., Appellate Div., S.D.N.Y.1986, 631 F.Supp. 232. Federal Civil Procedure 258

296. Judicial entities, persons within section

State judicial entities are not "persons" within meaning of § 1983 and therefore cannot be sued under § 1983. Pokrandt v. Shields, E.D.Pa.1991, 773 F.Supp. 758. Civil Rights 1344

297. Libraries, persons within section

Juvenile inmate class was not a "prevailing party" in class action against state alleging violations of due process under First and Fourteenth Amendments, and violations of IDEA, and thus was not entitled to recover attorney fees under § 1988; although a settlement agreement was approved by the district court and the court retained jurisdiction to enforce the agreement, the only remedies available would be a breach of contract action or reinstatement of the dismissed action, but not a contempt remedy. Christina A. ex rel. Jennifer A. v. Bloomberg, C.A.8 (S.D.) 2003, 315 F.3d 990, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1485; Schools 155.5(5)

District court had subject-matter jurisdiction of civil rights action by librarian against library board alleging violations of U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 5 and 14, inasmuch as library board was a "person" within meaning of this section. Layton v. Swapp, D.C.Utah 1979, 484 F.Supp. 958.

298. Military personnel, persons within section

Federal naval base police officers who continued to investigate incident involving alleged disorderly conduct incident at golf course on federal property by following the person off of the federally owned golf course and arresting him were still acting under color of federal law, rather than state law, for purposes of the arrestee's § 1983 action against the arresting officers, once they left the federally owned golf course. Case v. Milewski, C.A.7 (Ill.)

2003, 327 F.3d 564. Civil Rights 1327

Before passage of this section, there was no liability on part of military superiors for transgressions against rights of other military personnel, and by the passage of this section, Congress did not intend to create such rights. Martelon v. Temple, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1984, 747 F.2d 1348, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2675, 471 U.S. 1135, 86 L.Ed.2d 694. Armed Services 33

District court would not dismiss state employees' constitutional claims against Illinois National Guard and officers as barred under Bivens or § 1983 where it was unable to determine whether their employment was of civilian or military nature. Bartley v. U.S. Dept. of Army, C.D.Ill.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 934. Civil Rights 1376(10); United States 50.10(5)

Former service members' claims for injunctive relief against military superiors were nonjusticiable in § 1983 action alleging discharge from national guard on basis of race; allowing equitable relief against superiors would be disruptive to military service. Banks v. Commander of Detachment 1, First Battalion (M) of 121st Infantry of Georgia Army Nat. Guard, M.D.Ga.1992, 797 F.Supp. 984, affirmed 998 F.2d 1023. Militia 3

299. National Guard, persons within section

South Carolina National Guard was not a "person" within meaning of § 1983. Introini v. South Carolina Nat. Guard, D.S.C.1993, 828 F.Supp. 391. Civil Rights 1350

300. Newsmen or reporters, persons within section

In civil rights action brought by prisoners who alleged that newspaper article which reported statement of prison guards' union president deprived prisoners of equal protection of the laws and of other privileges and immunities under the Constitution, newspaper reporter and newspaper publisher could not be held liable for exercising their constitutionally protected rights as newsmen. Fitzpatrick v. Wert, W.D.N.Y.1977, 432 F.Supp. 601. Civil Rights 1374

301. Parole boards or officials, persons within section

Pennsylvania Board of Parole and Pardon could not be sued for damages by prisoner, bringing action under this section, since Board was not a "person" within meaning of this section. Thompson v. Burke, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 556 F.2d 231, on remand 544 F.Supp. 173. Civil Rights 1348

A state parole board is not a "person" within this section. Madden v. New Jersey State Parole Bd., C.A.3 (N.J.) 1971, 438 F.2d 1189. See, also, Paige v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Parole, D.C.Pa.1970, 311 F.Supp. 940; Williams v. Craven, D.C.Cal.1967, 273 F.Supp. 649, certiorari denied 89 S.Ct. 242, 393 U.S. 916, 21 L.Ed.2d 201.

New York State Parole Commission and New York State Department of Correctional Services are agencies of New York, created and established by New York law, and therefore, State of New York, New York State Parole Commission, and Department of Correctional Services could not be sued under this section. Provet v. State of N. Y., S.D.N.Y.1982, 546 F.Supp. 492. Civil Rights 1348

302. Partnerships, persons within section

Conjugal partnerships made up of former employers and their wives under Puerto Rico law were "persons" for purposes of § 1983 and could be sued in former employee's civil rights suit for his allegedly unconstitutional patronage dismissal. Mercado-Vega v. Martinez, D.Puerto Rico 1986, 666 F.Supp. 3. Civil Rights 1340

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

303. Peer review organizations, persons within section

Plaintiff could not assert action under this section against peer review organization established under Medicare Act, section 1395 et seq. of this title, since organization was a federal, not state, entity, inasmuch as it was created by federal statute, it performed critical federal function of monitoring costs of services provided under Medicare Act, federal government actively regulated, directed and encouraged organization's actions and final determinations of organization are subject only to review by federal agency and federal courts. Smith v. North Louisiana Medical Review Ass'n, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 735 F.2d 168.

304. Police commissioners, persons within section

Civil rights defendant was § 1983 "person" and lawsuit was not barred by the Eleventh Amendment where complaint expressly stated that defendant, head of state police, was being sued in his individual capacity. Kuhnert v. Fontenot, M.D.La.1996, 926 F.Supp. 79. Federal Courts 269

Retired ex-senior staff officers of New York City police department could not obtain monetary relief either from board of trustees of police pension fund or police commissioner, mayor and comptroller based on allegedly unconstitutional provisions of personnel order governing retroactive pay since neither the agency nor the officials were a "person" under this section, however, defendants were "persons" for purposes of declaratory relief. Wynne v. Codd, S.D.N.Y.1976, 435 F.Supp. 431. Civil Rights 1349; Declaratory Judgment 209

County police commissioner, county executive and county police officers who allegedly arrested plaintiff lecturer of birth control and plaintiff mother of 14-month-old child for endangering the welfare of the child by exposing the child to a lecture concerning birth control devices were "persons" suable for monetary damages within the meaning of this section because of alleged individual actions, under color of their respective positions in the county, engaging in acts in violation of civil rights and description in the complaint of the defendant's official positions did not transform the action into one against the county. Manfredonia v. Barry, E.D.N.Y.1971, 336 F.Supp. 765. Civil Rights 1358

305. Police departments, persons within section

Neither Guam nor Guam police department was "person" chargeable with violating territorial law under § 1983. Ngiraingas v. Sanchez, C.A.9 (Guam) 1988, 858 F.2d 1368, certiorari granted 110 S.Ct. 48, 493 U.S. 807, 107 L.Ed.2d 17, affirmed 110 S.Ct. 1737, 495 U.S. 182, 109 L.Ed.2d 163.

Because a municipal police department is not an independent legal entity, it is not subject to suit under §§ 1983. Nicholson v. Lenczewski, D.Conn.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 157. Civil Rights 1348

Pennsylvania State Police (PSP) was not a "person" for purposes of female state trooper's § 1983 claim. Zelinski v. Pennsylvania State Police, M.D.Pa.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 251, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 108 Fed.Appx. 700, 2004 WL 1799234. Civil Rights 1349

In § 1983 actions, police departments cannot be sued in conjunction with municipalities, because the police departments are merely administrative agencies of the municipalities--not separate judicial entities. Pahle v. Colebrookdale Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1348

Police departments cannot be sued in conjunction with municipality in § 1983 actions since police department is merely arm of local municipality. Irvin v. Borough of Darby, E.D.Pa.1996, 937 F.Supp. 446. Civil Rights 1348

Under Florida law, city police department was not "person," and thus was not subject to suit or liability under §

1983. Pierre v. Schlemmer, M.D.Fla.1996, 932 F.Supp. 278. Civil Rights 1348

City police department was not "person" within meaning of Civil Rights Act and, therefore, was not suable under that statute. Hoffman v. Hunt, W.D.N.C.1994, 845 F.Supp. 340. Civil Rights 1348

City police department was not liable to inmate under § 1983 for alleged unnecessary force when they arrested inmate, as inmate made no response to, and court did not identify any law that contradicted, department's contention that it had no legal or corporate existence apart from city, and that department accordingly was not "person" subject to liability under § 1983. Higgenbottom v. McManus, W.D.Ky.1994, 840 F.Supp. 454. Civil Rights 1348

Municipal police department was not "person," for purposes of § 1983 action. PBA Local No. 38 v. Woodbridge Police Dept., D.N.J.1993, 832 F.Supp. 808. Civil Rights 1348

Municipal police department was not legal entity separate from parent city, and, thus, naming department as separate defendant was redundant in § 1983 action against city and department. Damron v. Pfannes, E.D.Mich.1992, 785 F.Supp. 644. Civil Rights 1389

As agency of the city, New York City police department is not a suable entity, and neither is the property clerk. East Coast Novelty Co., Inc. v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 781 F.Supp. 999, reargument denied 141 F.R.D. 245. Municipal Corporations 1016

Neither municipal police department nor internal affairs division of police department was a suable entity, and thus neither was a proper party defendant in civil rights action against city and others. Curran v. City of Boston, D.Mass.1991, 777 F.Supp. 116. Municipal Corporations 1016

Neither city police department nor its building and zoning department were "persons" subject to liability for violating federal civil rights statute; rather, city itself was proper party. Post v. City of Fort Lauderdale, S.D.Fla.1990, 750 F.Supp. 1131. Civil Rights 1347; Civil Rights 1348

City police department is not a "person" within this section and thus was not a proper party to suit seeking declaration of unconstitutionality of ordinance prohibiting female employees of taverns from sitting with male patrons at the taverns. White v. Flemming, E.D.Wis.1974, 374 F.Supp. 267, affirmed 522 F.2d 730. Civil Rights 1350; Civil Rights 1391

Plaintiff who was allegedly assaulted by police officers was barred from asserting § 1983 claim against police precinct, as precinct was division of city police department, which lacked independent legal existence. Flemming v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 296921, Unreported. Civil Rights 1348

306. Police officers, persons within section

Law enforcement officers were not "persons" against whom § 1983 claims could be asserted, to extent they were being sued for monetary relief in their official capacities. Schwartz v. Pridy, E.D.Mo.1995, 874 F.Supp. 256, affirmed 94 F.3d 453. Civil Rights 1358

Superintendent of police force of New York Port Authority was "person" within meaning of this section and was proper party defendant in suit in which religious organization sought injunctive relief against enforcement of Authority's licensing regulations relating to dissemination of religious literature at airports controlled by Authority. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. New York Port Authority, S.D.N.Y.1977, 425 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1360; Civil Rights 1391

307. Prison boards, persons within section

Under terms of city charter, city department of correction was not suable entity for purposes of pro se § 1983 claim concerning alleged violations of civil rights from placement in maximum security during pretrial detention. Adams v. Galletta, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1389; Municipal Corporations 1016

County prison board was not a "person" within purview of this section; thus complaint filed by former inmate against board could not be maintained under this section. Gahagan v. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, E.D.Pa.1978, 444 F.Supp. 1326. Civil Rights 1348

308. Prison officials, persons within section

Where harm complained-of by pretrial detainee is particular act or omission of one or more officials, action is characterized as "episodic act or omission case." Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 51. Prisons 4(4)

Governor of West Virginia, Commissioner of Department of Corrections, and prison officials in their individual capacities were "persons" within meaning of § 1983. Goodmon v. Rockefeller, C.A.4 (W.Va.) 1991, 947 F.2d 1186. Civil Rights 1358

Claims against prison officials for injunctive relief in their official capacities and all claims against them in their individual capacities were not barred by Eleventh Amendment, and were claims against a "person" within meaning of federal civil rights statute. Davie v. Wingard, S.D.Ohio 1997, 958 F.Supp. 1244, 166 A.L.R. Fed. 709. Civil Rights 1358; Federal Courts 269

Allegation that prison warden ordered inmate into general population identified warden as active participant, not merely supervisor, and warden would therefore not be dismissed from inmate's § 1983 suit. Bullock v. Barham, N.D.Ill.1997, 957 F.Supp. 154. Civil Rights 1395(7)

When inmate seeks damages from prison official or state official in his individual capacity under § 1983, inmate must demonstrate that official, in acting or failing to act, caused alleged constitutional deprivation. Gardner v. Wilson, C.D.Cal.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1224. Civil Rights 1358

309. Prisons, persons within section

Cook County jail is not a "person" for purposes of federal civil rights statute. Powell v. Cook County Jail, N.D.Ill.1993, 814 F.Supp. 757. Civil Rights 1348

Degree of state involvement in administration of local jails in Virginia mandates that local jails be considered "arms of state" for Eleventh Amendment purposes and, thus, not "persons" under § 1983; part of cost of judgments against employees of local jails is born by state, local jails receive substantial state funding, members of sheriff's office who administer jails are state officers, and state regulations sharply curtail local autonomy to run jails. McCoy v. Chesapeake Correctional Center, E.D.Va.1992, 788 F.Supp. 890. Civil Rights 1348; Federal Courts 269

City jail was not "person" amenable to suit under § 1983. Brooks v. Pembroke City Jail, E.D.N.C.1989, 722 F.Supp. 1294. Civil Rights 1348

County farms prison is not a "person" subject to suit under this section. Mitchell v. Chester County Farms Prison, E.D.Pa.1976, 426 F.Supp. 271. Civil Rights 1348

County prosecutor's office was not an entity subject to suit under this subchapter. Hancock v. Washtenaw County Prosecutor's Office, E.D.Mich.1982, 548 F.Supp. 1255. Civil Rights 1348

311. Retirement boards or systems, persons within section--Generally

Virginia Retirement System (VRS) was arm of the State entitled to immunity under Eleventh Amendment, and thus was not "person" which could be sued in federal civil rights action brought by prison inmate who alleged that VRS had wrongfully denied him disability retirement benefits. Sculthorpe v. Virginia Retirement System, E.D.Va.1997, 952 F.Supp. 307. Civil Rights 1348; Federal Courts 269

A state Public Employees Retirement System was not a "person" for purposes of liability under § 1983. Reiger v. Kansas Public Employees Retirement System, D.Kan.1990, 755 F.Supp. 360. Civil Rights 1349

312. ---- Teachers' retirement boards, retirement boards or systems, persons within section

Because neither the City of New York nor the New York City Teachers' Retirement Board was a "person" for purposes of this section, retired teacher could not maintain action against City and Board under this section to challenge investment of New York City teachers' retirement funds in obligations of the municipal assistance corporation. Tron v. Condello, S.D.N.Y.1976, 427 F.Supp. 1175. Civil Rights 1349

313. School activities associations, persons within section

High school activities association and its members were "persons" within meaning of this section. Baltic Independent School Dist. No. 115 of Minnehaha County, South Dakota v. South Dakota High School Activities Ass'n, D.C.S.D.1973, 362 F.Supp. 780. Civil Rights 1346

314. School boards, persons within section

Finding that municipalities, including school boards, are "persons" within this section does not imply that the same level of immunity must apply to municipalities as to individual officeholders; different "persons" under this section require different levels of immunity and rationale for individual immunity need not carry over to entity immunity. Bertot v. School Dist. No. 1, Albany County, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1979, 613 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1376(4)

City school board and individual school board members were "persons" subject to suit under this section. O'Hern v. School Dist. of Springfield R-12, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1978, 578 F.2d 220. Civil Rights 1346

A school board is a "person" who may be held liable under section 1983. Myers v. Loudoun County School Bd., E.D.Va.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1262, affirmed 418 F.3d 395. Civil Rights 1346

School board, as municipal governmental entity, was "person" amenable to suit within meaning of § 1983. Cox v. McCraley, M.D.Fla.1998, 993 F.Supp. 1452. Civil Rights 1346

315. School committees, persons within section

Finances and affairs of defendant school committee were so intimately connected with those of city that school committee could not be considered to constitute a "person" independent of city against which a claim for compensatory and punitive damages could be asserted under this section and § 1985 of this title. Curran v. Portland Superintending School Committee, City of Portland, Me., D.C.Me.1977, 435 F.Supp. 1063. Civil Rights

1346; Conspiracy 13

Where action against school committee for alleged deprivation of minor plaintiff's right to procedural due process was premised on precisely same cause of action, albeit under § 1331 of Title 28 governing general federal question jurisdiction, as that against individual committee members under this section and § 1343 of Title 28, and only pertinent distinction between two claims was that school committee was not a "person" for purposes of this section, action was not premature because plaintiff had not exhausted administrative remedies available under Rhode Island General Laws. Panzarella v. Boyle, D.C.R.I.1975, 406 F.Supp. 787. Civil Rights 1317

316. School districts, persons within section

Neither school district nor school directors of school district, acting in their official capacities, were "persons" under § 1983. Bennett v. School Directors of Dist. 204, N.D.Ill.1996, 941 F.Supp. 763, supplemented 1996 WL 649907. Civil Rights 1346; Civil Rights 1356

School district is not "person" that can sue within meaning of federal civil rights statute and may not bring action under statute alleging violation of its constitutional rights. School Dist. of Philadelphia v. Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Bd., E.D.Pa.1995, 877 F.Supp. 245. Civil Rights 1331(2)

School district and school officials in their official capacities were "persons" for purposes of civil rights claim of racial discrimination. Kelly v. Richland School Dist. 2, D.C.S.C.1978, 463 F.Supp. 216. Civil Rights 1359

317. School officials, persons within section

School superintendent was a "person" amenable to suit under this section for compensatory and punitive damages and for declaratory and injunctive relief as to use of corporal punishment in school system. Ingraham v. Wright, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 525 F.2d 909, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 2200, 425 U.S. 990, 48 L.Ed.2d 815, affirmed 97 S.Ct. 1401, 430 U.S. 651, 51 L.Ed.2d 711. Civil Rights 1356

Trustees and administrators of state university, in their official capacities, were "person" against whom action could be brought under this section. Gay Students Organization of University of New Hampshire v. Bonner, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1974, 509 F.2d 652. Civil Rights 1356

School superintendent, sued as individual, is "person" within meaning of this section. Ingraham v. Wright, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1974, 498 F.2d 248, rehearing granted 504 F.2d 1379, on rehearing 525 F.2d 909, certiorari granted 96 S.Ct. 2200, 425 U.S. 990, 48 L.Ed.2d 815, affirmed 97 S.Ct. 1401, 430 U.S. 651, 51 L.Ed.2d 711. Civil Rights 1356

A municipal school superintendent was a "person" within meaning of this subchapter and federal district court had jurisdiction of action for injunctive relief founded upon this subchapter and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1. Akron Bd. of Ed. v. State Bd. of Ed. of Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1974, 490 F.2d 1285, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 2644, 417 U.S. 932, 41 L.Ed.2d 236.

Community college president in his official capacity could be named as defendant in § 1983 claim. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1359

University president and academic dean were "persons" under § 1983 to extent that plaintiff sought injunctive relief from their official acts. Fernandez v. Wolff, N.D.Ill.1996, 919 F.Supp. 1120. Civil Rights 1356

In civil rights suit alleging that junior college and officials thereof violated plaintiff's constitutional rights by their actions associated with changing his job classification from registrar to teacher, the individual defendants, each being sued individually and in his official capacity, were all "persons" within the meaning of this section in both their individual and official capacities. Johnson v. San Jacinto Jr. College, S.D.Tex.1980, 498 F.Supp. 555. Civil Rights 1359

Dean of university center for health sciences, against whom former professors of medicine brought civil rights and antitrust action to challenge their dismissals from their teaching and administrative posts, was a "person" under this section, but, in absence of sufficient allegations to charge him with personal liability, was subject to being dismissed from action with respect to claim under this section. Gross v. University of Tennessee, W.D.Tenn.1978, 448 F.Supp. 245, affirmed 620 F.2d 109. Civil Rights 1359; Civil Rights 1390

Officials at college of city university system were "persons" within meaning of this section, and former employee of college was not precluded from bringing civil action against such officials. Savage v. Kibbee, S.D.N.Y.1976, 426 F.Supp. 760.

Under this section and § 1985 of this title, board of governors of state university was not a "person" within meaning of such sections and therefore could not be sued by professor who had brought complaint naming board of governors as party defendant and alleging that he had been victim of discrimination because of his national origin. Bennun v. Board of Governors of Rutgers, State University of New Jersey, D.C.N.J.1976, 413 F.Supp. 1274.

317A. School teachers, persons within section

Former public school teacher was not state actor, and thus, he could not be liable in plaintiff school teacher's §§ 1983 action, alleging violation of his constitutional rights, absent showing that teacher conspired with state actors to violate plaintiff teacher's constitutional rights. Jerrytone v. Musto, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 295, 2006 WL 162656, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(6)

318. Sheriffs, persons within section

Section 1983 action brought to enjoin enforcement of allegedly unconstitutional state postjudgment garnishment procedures, which by statute were enforced only by county sheriffs, was properly brought against sheriffs in their official capacities. Chaloux v. Killeen, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 886 F.2d 247. Civil Rights 1348

County sheriff was not liable in his official capacity under § 1983 for alleged beating of pretrial detainee by jail inmate where sheriff did not have any interaction with detainee and there was no evidence that he had any interaction with any jail officials who dealt with detainee. Gulett v. Haines, S.D.Ohio 2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 806. Civil Rights 1358

County sheriff was "person" subject to suit under § 1983, despite sheriff's contention that sheriff was considered state rather than local official under North Carolina law; state legislation regulating sheriff's departments was not so rampant as to make these departments arms of the state, sheriffs were traditionally law enforcement providers for counties, filling gap between State Highway Patrol and municipal police officers, and sheriffs' salaries were paid by counties who also paid any liability claim against them. Carter v. Good, W.D.N.C.1996, 951 F.Supp. 1235, reversed 145 F.3d 1323, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 509, 525 U.S. 1000, 142 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1358

County sheriff could not be held liable in his individual capacity for prisoner's civil rights claims based on allegations that prisoner was detained without due process of law and that prisoner was beaten by fellow inmates due to inadequate guard supervision, in absence of any evidence that sheriff was personally involved in, or had knowledge of, prisoner's continued detention or alleged lack of supervision. Harrell v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1996, 937 F.Supp. 754. Civil Rights 1358

County sheriff was not municipality that any official-capacity liability of county defendants could be imputed to in federal civil rights claim. Robinson v. Howell, S.D.Ind.1995, 902 F.Supp. 836. Civil Rights 1358

Sheriff could not be held liable under civil rights statute for alleged Eighth Amendment violations in conditions of county jail where plaintiff inmate relied entirely on the supervisory capacity of sheriff as the basis for his claim. Prophete v. Gilless, W.D.Tenn.1994, 869 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1358

319. Sheriff's departments, persons within section

City could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for any unreasonable detention and seizure of plaintiff who allegedly was beaten and arrested for creating public disturbance when he was having epileptic seizure, based on theory of inadequate training or supervision of police officers, absent showing of municipal policy or custom establishing disregard for plaintiff's constitutional rights, or showing that any failure to train resulted in injury to plaintiff. Adams v. City of Camden, D.N.J.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 263. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County sheriff's department was not a "person" subject to an action under §§ 1983. Buchanan v. Williams, M.D.Tenn.2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 521. Civil Rights 1348

County sheriff's department was not entity that could be sued in civil rights suit. Davis v. Stanley, N.D.Ala.1987, 740 F.Supp. 815. Civil Rights 1348

320. Statutes, persons within section

County was not entitled to attorney fee award under federal civil rights attorney fee statute, in landowner's §§ 1983 action against county challenging denial of its rezoning application, on theory that, prior to stipulated dismissal of case, county had successfully moved to dismiss claims against individual defendants and against board of county commissioners and county planning commission; motions were peripheral, and entire suit was not frivolous. RHN Corp. v. Box Elder County, D.Utah 2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 1254. Civil Rights 1484

19 P.S.Pa. § 1180-1 et seq., which was challenged as unconstitutional, was not "person" within meaning of this section. Wilson v. Post Conviction Hearing Act of Com. of Pa., W.D.Pa.1971, 321 F.Supp. 1234.

321. Sureties, persons within section

Inasmuch as deputy sheriff was exempt from liability for damages under this section for executing 12-year-old California misdemeanor warrant, surety on his bond could not be held. Quinnette v. Garland, C.D.Cal.1967, 277 F.Supp. 999. Sheriffs And Constables 154

322. Tax officials, persons within section

Taxpayer could not maintain action under § 1983 of Civil Rights Act against taxpayer's debtor whose payments to taxpayer were seized by Internal Revenue Service (IRS), where debtor was not state actor. Del Elmer; Zachay v. Metzger, S.D.Cal.1997, 967 F.Supp. 398. Civil Rights 1326(1)

State or county tax official will be liable for damages under this section only if he violated plaintiff's clearly established constitutional rights intentionally or with reckless disregard of those rights; tax official must have personally acted with impermissible motivation or with such intentional and reckless disregard of plaintiff's clearly established constitutional rights that his action cannot be reasonably characterized as being in good faith. Bormann v. Tomlin, S.D.Ill.1978, 461 F.Supp. 193, affirmed 622 F.2d 592. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1376(3); Civil Rights 1376(4)

323. Unions, persons within section

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Teachers could not maintain § 1983 claim against teachers union, absent evidence to rebut union's assertion that it was a private, non-governmental entity. Murphy v. Board of Educ. of Rochester City School Dist., W.D.N.Y.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 292, affirmed 106 Fed.Appx. 746, 2004 WL 1682887. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Prison guards' union was not a "person" within meaning of this section and thus claim against union in civil rights action brought by prisoners was not cognizable. Fitzpatrick v. Wert, W.D.N.Y.1977, 432 F.Supp. 601.

324. Miscellaneous persons within section

District court had jurisdiction of suit brought under this section by members of the Socialist Workers Party who challenged the denial of permission to personally sell socialist newspapers in New York City subway stations, since, irrespective of the status of the transit authority as an agency, the named individual defendants, acting in their official capacity, were "persons" within the meaning of the section. Wright v. Chief of Transit Police, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1976, 527 F.2d 1262. Federal Courts 222

California Adult Authority was not "person" for purpose of this section. Olson v. California Adult Authority, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 423 F.2d 1326, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 1717, 398 U.S. 914, 26 L.Ed.2d 78. See, also, Fleming v. California Adult Authority, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 433 F.2d 991.

New York's state bar grievance committee, as part of judicial arm of state of New York, is not "person" amenable to suit under § 1983. Sassower v. Mangano, S.D.N.Y.1996, 927 F.Supp. 113, affirmed 122 F.3d 1057, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 170, 525 U.S. 872, 142 L.Ed.2d 139, rehearing denied 119 S.Ct. 582, 525 U.S. 1035, 142 L.Ed.2d 486. Civil Rights 1350

324A. Particular persons not within section

Appalachian ancestry is not recognized as protected status under §§ 1981 or §§ 1983. Higginbotham v. Ohio Dept. of Mental Health, S.D.Ohio 2005, 412 F.Supp.2d 806. Civil Rights 1009

351. Liability generally

To establish § 1983 claim, plaintiff must demonstrate that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under state law and that conduct deprived him of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution. Piecknick v. Com. of Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 36 F.3d 1250. Civil Rights 1304

Person may become state actor liable under § 1983 by conspiring with state official, engaging in joint activity with state officials, or becoming so closely related to State that person's actions can be said to be those of State itself. Price v. State of Hawaii, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1991, 939 F.2d 702, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1479, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1480, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Party against whom recovery is sought under this section must be "person" within meaning of this section and must not be cloaked with immunity. Fine v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 529 F.2d 70, on remand 71 F.R.D. 374. Civil Rights 1335

Res ipsa loquitur doctrine, typically applied in personal injury claims of ambiguous origin, could not serve as a basis for municipal liability under §§ 1983. Gast v. Singleton, S.D.Tex.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 794. Civil Rights 1401

A plaintiff seeking to bring suit pursuant to § 1983 must demonstrate that it suffered a deprivation of a federally protected right. E. Spire Communications, Inc. v. Baca, D.N.M.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 1310, affirmed 392 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 1027

To succeed under § 1983, plaintiffs must establish: (1) that defendants violated a right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States; (2) acted under color of state law in so doing; and (3) damages. Rinker v. Sipler, M.D.Pa.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 181. Civil Rights 1304

Two essential elements are required for claim under § 1983 or statute conferring jurisdiction over civil rights actions on district courts: that defendants' conduct deprived plaintiff of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by United States Constitution or federal law; and that their conduct occurred under color of law. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1304

Section 1983 action against public officer in his or her official capacity is simply another way of suing public entity that officer represents. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1354

In order to succeed on claim under § 1983, plaintiffs must establish two elements: that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law and that this conduct deprived them of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or federal laws. Wittmer v. Peters, C.D.Ill.1995, 904 F.Supp. 845, affirmed 87 F.3d 916, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 949, 519 U.S. 1111, 136 L.Ed.2d 837. Civil Rights 1304

Under § 1983, plaintiff must establish that actions complained of were done by person acting under color of state law and that those actions deprived plaintiff of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution or laws of United States. Davis v. Olin, D.Kan.1995, 886 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1304

To establish valid § 1983 claim of violation of federal constitutional rights, plaintiff must show that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under state law and that conduct deprived inmate of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution. Oldham v. Chandler-Halford, N.D.Iowa 1995, 877 F.Supp. 1340 . Civil Rights 1304

A party must be a "person" to be sued under this section. Holladay v. State of Mont., D.C.Mont.1981, 506 F.Supp. 1317.

In order to impose liability upon defendant in supervisory governmental position for violation of one's civil rights, it must be established that defendant committed the violation, directed it to be done, or acquiesced in its commission with knowledge. Jones v. Members of Bd. of Police Com'rs, E.D.Mo.1977, 435 F.Supp. 797. Civil Rights 1401

Under this section suits may be maintained only against a "person" who under color of state law deprives another of his civil rights. Frye v. Lukehard, W.D.Va.1973, 364 F.Supp. 1379.

352. Tortious nature of actions, liability generally

Claims brought under this section should be read against the background of tort liability that makes a person responsible for the natural consequences of his actions. Davis v. Knud-Hansen Memorial Hospital, C.A.3 (Virgin Islands) 1980, 635 F.2d 179. Civil Rights 1304

This section provides civil remedy and should be read against background of tort liability which makes a man responsible for natural consequences of his actions. Rodriguez v. Jones, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1973, 473 F.2d 599, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 3023, 412 U.S. 953, 37 L.Ed.2d 1007. Civil Rights 1304

Under this section providing civil action for deprivation of rights there must be some degree of culpability involved before an action can be maintained. Baxter v. Birkins, D.C.Colo.1970, 311 F.Supp. 222. Civil Rights 1031

353. Nature of relief sought, liability generally

"Official policy or custom" requirement generally applicable to § 1983 actions against municipal officials sued in their official capacities did not apply in action to enjoin enforcement of allegedly unconstitutional state laws, which by statute were enforced only by local officials; justification for limiting action for damages did not apply to suit seeking only prospective relief. Chaloux v. Killeen, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 886 F.2d 247. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Suspended attorney's § 1983 action against state legal ethics committee sought prospective rather than retroactive relief and thus action could be maintained against state officials; attorney alleged that he was disciplined pursuant to unconstitutional statute. Sexton v. Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct, W.D.Ark.1989, 725 F.Supp. 1051. Civil Rights 1360

Municipal and state officials, if sued in either their individual or official capacities for injunctive relief, are "persons" within meaning of this section. Cullen v. New York State Civil Service Commission, E.D.N.Y.1977, 435 F.Supp. 546, appeal dismissed 566 F.2d 846. Civil Rights 1354

State officials sued in their official capacities are "persons" for purposes of equitable relief under this section. Taliaferro v. Dykstra, E.D.Va.1975, 388 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1354

354. Considerations governing liability generally

To establish supervisory liability under civil rights statute, supervisor must have actual or constructive knowledge that his subordinate was engaged in conduct that posed pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury, supervisor's response to that knowledge was so inadequate as to show deliberate indifference or tacit authorization of alleged offensive practices, and affirmative causal link existed between supervisor's inaction and particular constitutional injury suffered. Shaw v. Stroud, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 13 F.3d 791, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 67, 513 U.S. 813, 130 L.Ed.2d 24, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 68, 513 U.S. 814, 130 L.Ed.2d 24. Civil Rights 1355

There is no respondeat superior liability under section § 1983. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1336

City was not liable under § 1983 for any constitutional violations resulting from participation of its emergency response team (ERT) in hostage-rescue training exercise at public high school, in which county ERT members allegedly seized staff members who were unaware of the exercise and used excessive force, absent any allegations that an unconstitutional city policy or custom caused plaintiffs injury or allegation that a city employee directly violated plaintiffs' constitutional rights. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Section 1983 action can involve two distinct legal tests: plaintiff who sues individual for injury allegedly caused by that individual must show that individual was acting under color of state law, but plaintiff who seeks recovery from municipality or other governmental entity for injury allegedly caused by individual must show that governmental entity in question had unconstitutional or illegal policy, practice, or custom. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1324; Civil Rights 1351(1)

To establish supervisory liability under § 1983, plaintiff must show that supervisor had actual or constructive knowledge that his subordinate was engaged in conduct that posed pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury to citizens like plaintiff, supervisor's response to that knowledge was so inadequate as to show deliberate indifference to or tacit authorization of alleged offensive practices, and there was affirmative causal link between supervisor's inaction and particular constitutional injury suffered by plaintiff. Simmons v. Baker, E.D.Va.1994, 842 F.Supp. 883, reversed in part 47 F.3d 1370. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory personnel cannot be held liable in federal civil rights action based only on their capacity as supervisors, and plaintiff must also show that defendants either personally participated in the alleged deprivation or caused deprivation to occur or that supervisors failed to properly train personnel and that the failure to train resulted in alleged deprivation. Harris v. Maloughney, D.Mont.1993, 827 F.Supp. 1488. Civil Rights 1355

In order to impose § 1983 liability against municipality, municipal policy must be identified, municipality responsible for promulgating policy must be established, execution of policy must be shown to have caused injury of which plaintiff has complained, and plaintiff must establish existence of policy by showing that municipality's decision maker with final authority regarding matter at hand and has issued proclamation, policy, or edict or that custom was established through course of conduct by practices of municipal officials which are so permanent and well-settled as to virtually constitute law. Barcume v. City of Flint, E.D.Mich.1993, 819 F.Supp. 631. Civil Rights 1351(1)

355. Causation, liability generally--Generally

Proper analysis requires separation of two different issues when claim under § 1983 is asserted against municipality: (1) whether plaintiff's harm was caused by constitutional violation, and (2) if so, whether city was responsible for that violation. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1343

Violation of federally secured right is remediable in damages only upon proof that violation proximately caused injury. Horn by Parks v. Madison County Fiscal Court, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1994, 22 F.3d 653, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 199, 513 U.S. 873, 130 L.Ed.2d 130. Civil Rights 1031

In order to establish violation of constitutional rights under § 1983, plaintiff must prove that defendant's unconstitutional action was the "cause in fact" of the plaintiff's injury; conduct is the cause in fact of a particular result if the result would not have occurred but for the conduct; similarly, if result would have occurred without the conduct complained of, such conduct cannot be the cause of fact of that particular result. Butler v. Dowd, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 979 F.2d 661, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2395, 508 U.S. 930, 124 L.Ed.2d 297. Civil Rights 1031

Supervisory liability under § 1983 may be shown by either supervisor's personal participation in acts that comprise constitutional violation or existence of causal connection linking supervisor's actions with violation. Lewis v. Smith, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1988, 855 F.2d 736. Civil Rights 1355

To succeed on cause of action under § 1983 plaintiffs must prove that defendant's actions were cause in fact and proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Graham v. Baughman, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1985, 772 F.2d 441. See, also, Kraft v. Jacka, D.Nev.1987, 669 F.Supp. 333, affirmed 872 F.2d 862.

As with any other tort claim, there must be a showing in a section 1983 action of "a direct causal link" between the municipal policy or custom and the alleged constitutional deprivation before municipality may be held liable. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff who shows that city policy was result of deliberate indifference to individual's constitutional rights must still show direct causal link between that policy and constitutional deprivation in order to recover in § 1983 action, and policy must be moving force behind constitutional violation in order to allow recovery. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1351(1)

There can be more than one legal cause of event giving rise to § 1983 action. Dugas v. Jefferson County, E.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 1315, affirmed 127 F.3d 33. Civil Rights 1031

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Where supervisor sets in motion a series of acts by others, or knowingly refuses to terminate those acts, which result in violation of civil rights, liability will lie. Harris v. Maloughney, D.Mont.1993, 827 F.Supp. 1488. Civil Rights 1355

Any officials who cause citizen to be deprived of constitutional rights can be held liable under § 1983; requisite causal connection is satisfied if official set in motion a series of events that he knew or should reasonably have known would cause others to deprive plaintiff of constitutional rights. Study v. U.S., S.D.Ind.1991, 782 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1031

Supervisor can be held liable for civil rights violations where his conduct is causally related to constitutional violation committed by his subordinate. Heller v. Plave, S.D.Fla.1990, 743 F.Supp. 1553. Civil Rights 1336

To be liable under § 1983, there must be proof of "affirmative link" between defendants' constitutional violation and injury sustained. Ward v. City of San Jose, N.D.Cal.1990, 737 F.Supp. 1502, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 967 F.2d 280, amended on denial of rehearing. Civil Rights 1031

356. ---- Necessity of causation, liability generally

A municipality may not be held liable under this section prohibiting the deprivation of civil rights by state action absent a causal connection between its action or inaction and constitutional deprivations visited on the plaintiff. Berry v. McLemore, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1982, 670 F.2d 30. Civil Rights 1343

A municipality can be found liable under § 1983 only where the municipality itself causes the constitutional violation at issue; respondeat superior or vicarious liability will not attach under § 1983. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1345

To hold public employer liable under § 1983, there must be causal connection between city's responsibility and plaintiff's purported injuries. Wallace v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1996, 956 F.Supp. 965. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Although personal participation is not specifically required for liability under federal civil rights statute, there must be some causal connection between defendant named and injury allegedly sustained. Schebel v. Charlotte County, M.D.Fla.1993, 833 F.Supp. 889. Civil Rights 1335

Sheriff may be held liable under § 1983 in individual capacity only if sheriff caused or participated in constitutional deprivation; causal connection or affirmative link between conduct and defendant must exist. Sivard v. Pulaski County, N.D.Ind.1992, 809 F.Supp. 631, affirmed 17 F.3d 185. Civil Rights 1358

Dismissal of prisoner's suit against all but one prison official was warranted in case brought under civil rights law challenging determination of length of sentence to be served prior to parole eligibility; civil rights law permitted suit only against parties causing harm, and since only Board of Pardons could cause harm complained of, suit was limited to members of Board. Houtz v. Deland, D.Utah 1989, 718 F.Supp. 1497. Civil Rights 1358

Mayor and city councilmen were not liable in their individual capacities for civil rights violations allegedly committed against church by police, city sanitation and electric company, as alleged result of antagonistic "atmosphere" created through enacted city policy, absent showing that mayor and councilmen directed, authorized or had prior knowledge of such actions or of any other causal connection between officials' actions and alleged violations. Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, S.D.Fla.1988, 688 F.Supp. 1522. Civil Rights 1358

357. ---- Acquiescence or inaction, causation, liability generally

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Establishing required causation for supervisory liability under civil rights statute requires establishing affirmative causal link between supervisor's inaction and harm suffered by plaintiff. Shaw v. Stroud, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 13 F.3d 791, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 67, 513 U.S. 813, 130 L.Ed.2d 24, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 68, 513 U.S. 814, 130 L.Ed.2d 24. Civil Rights 1355

Police superintendent's inactivity despite the notoriety of police officers' alleged activities in beating suspect would, if proved, permit inference that superintendent condoned or encouraged such conduct, which would meet the standard of affirmative causation for imposition of individual liability under civil rights statute. Wilson v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 707 F.Supp. 379. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1404

There must be affirmative link between incidents of misconduct and defendant to state claim under this section; defendants must expressly or otherwise acquiesce in constitutional deprivations of which complaint is made; this affirmative link requirement encompasses nonfeasance as well as misfeasance. Rivas v. State Bd. for Community Colleges and Occupational Ed., D.C.Colo.1981, 517 F.Supp. 467. Civil Rights 1394

358. ---- Custom or usage, causation, liability generally

Police sergeant's order that woman with Down Syndrome be seized and involuntarily hospitalized was not an "official municipal policy," as required to establish municipal liability, for purposes of woman's § 1983 claim against city and police officers in their official capacities alleging Fourth Amendment violations; although sergeant had discretion to determine how to handle the particular situation the woman presented, such discretion was insufficient to render the sergeant a final decision-maker. Anthony v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 339 F.3d 129. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To subject a county to liability under § 1983, plaintiff must show that constitutional violation occurred as result of county policy; plaintiff must demonstrate that municipal action was taken with requisite degree of culpability, and must demonstrate direct causal link between municipal action and the deprivation of federal rights. Cagle v. Sutherland, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 334 F.3d 980, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 82 Fed.Appx. 216, 2003 WL 22076253. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Before city can be liable under § 1983, plaintiff must show either express policy that, when enforced, causes constitutional deprivation, widespread practice that, although not authorized by written law or express municipal policy, is so permanent and well settled as to constitute custom or usage with force of law, or allegation that constitutional injury was caused by person with final policymaking authority. Roach v. City of Evansville, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 111 F.3d 544. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality may be liable under § 1983 for deprivation of rights protected by Constitution or federal law only if deprivation is inflicted under official municipal policy. Campbell v. City of San Antonio, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 43 F.3d 973. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Permanent and well-settled government custom of laxness or inaction must be moving force between constitutional violation in order for municipality to be subject to § 1983 liability. Tilson v. Forrest City Police Dept., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 28 F.3d 802, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1315, 514 U.S. 1004, 131 L.Ed.2d 196. Civil Rights 1351(1)

There must be an affirmative link between municipality policy and alleged constitutional violation for municipality to be held liable under federal civil rights statute, and proof of single incident of unconstitutional activity is not sufficient unless proof of the incident also includes proof that it was caused by an existing, unconstitutional municipal policy. Sivard v. Pulaski County, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1994, 17 F.3d 185. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality may not be held liable under § 1983 solely because its employees inflicted injury on plaintiff, but rather plaintiff must show existence of municipal policy or custom, and direct causal link between policy or custom and injury alleged; when asserted policy consists of failure to act, plaintiff must demonstrate that municipality's inaction was result of deliberate indifference. Hinton v. City of Elwood, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 997 F.2d 774. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Proof of the mere existence of an unlawful policy or custom is not enough to establish municipal liability under § 1983; plaintiff bears additional burden of proving that the municipal practice was the proximate cause of the injuries suffered; to establish the necessary causation, plaintiff must demonstrate a plausible nexus or affirmative link between municipality's custom and specific deprivation of constitutional rights at issue. Bielevicz v. Dubinon, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 915 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality is liable under § 1983 if there is a direct causal connection between the municipality policies in question and the constitutional deprivation. Berry v. City of Muskogee, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 900 F.2d 1489. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of condoned custom or usage theory of municipal liability, sufficiently close causal link between known but uncorrected custom or usage in specific constitutional violation is established if occurrence of that violation was made reasonably probable by permitted continuation of the custom. Spell v. McDaniel, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1987, 824 F.2d 1380, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 752, 484 U.S. 1027, 98 L.Ed.2d 765. Civil Rights 1352(1)

For a municipality to be liable under § 1983, the policymaker must have authorized policies that led to the violations or permitted practices that were so permanent and well settled as to establish acquiescence. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Estate and survivors of deceased prisoner, who committed suicide by asphyxiating himself with wool blanket, failed to show in civil rights lawsuit that official policy or custom of county department of corrections (DOC) was moving force behind alleged violation of prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights by corrections officers; even though policy did not preclude officers from giving blanket to suicidal inmate, DOC developed very thorough written suicide prevention policies, trained its personnel to carry out those policies, constructed protrusion-free rubber rooms, and installed monitoring equipment that allowed entire cells to be viewed. Estate of Sisk v. Manzanares, D.Kan.2002, 262 F.Supp.2d 1162. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In order to hold governmental entity liable under § 1983, plaintiff must show: (1) that constitutional tort was committed pursuant to official policy, custom or practice, and (2) causal link between policy, custom or practice and injury. Cain v. Tigard-Tualatin School Dist. 23J, D.Or.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1351(1)

School district may not be held liable in § 1983 action under theory of respondeat superior. Cain v. Tigard-Tualatin School Dist. 23J, D.Or.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1346

In order to determine whether actions of school board members give rise to entity liability under § 1983, jury must determine whether board's decisions have caused deprivation of rights at issue by policies which affirmatively command that it occur or by acquiescence in long-standing practice or custom which constitutes standard operating procedure of local entity. Cain v. Tigard-Tualatin School Dist. 23J, D.Or.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Even assuming that city, through the actions of police captain, violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights by causing police department to unlawfully search and/or seize his person, plaintiff failed to establish claim for municipal liability under section 1983; plaintiff did not identify an official policy of the city which resulted in the allegedly unlawful search and seizure, nor did he identify a pervasive and well-settled custom or practice responsible for the allegedly unlawful search and seizure nor identify an official deemed to represent city's policy who participated in the allegedly unlawful search and seizure. Caruso v. City of Cocoa, Florida, M.D.Fla.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 1191. Civil Rights 1351(4)

For city to be liable under § 1983 on ground that execution of one of its customs or policies deprives plaintiff of his or her constitutional rights, the policy or custom must be the moving force of the constitutional violation. Boone v. City of Burleson, N.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 156. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal custom, for purposes of § 1983, requires illegal practice to be widespread, i.e., involving series of decisions. Singer v. Denver School Dist. No. 1, D.Colo.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1325. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City council and mayor, not police chief, were final policy makers for purposes of determining whether city could be held liable for constitutional violations committed by police department employees, and thus municipal liability could be established only if those policy makers were deliberately indifferent to constitutional violations and if their deliberate indifference caused those violations; police chief departed from city policy if he ignored civilian complaints or dismissed complaints that were meritorious. Gonsalves v. City of New Bedford, D.Mass.1996, 939 F.Supp. 915. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In order to establish municipal liability under § 1983, plaintiff must establish municipal policy or custom was cause of alleged constitutional violation. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Direct causal link between municipal policy or custom and alleged constitutional deprivation must exist to impose § 1983 liability on municipal entity; it is not enough to allege and prove constitutional violation represents policy for which local government entity is responsible, but policy or custom must be deliberate or conscious choice by municipality's final policy-making official. McMillan v. Department of Interior, D.Nev.1995, 907 F.Supp. 322, affirmed 87 F.3d 1320, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 995, 519 U.S. 1132, 136 L.Ed.2d 875. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Inmate failed to establish § 1983 claim against sheriff's department, in action alleging violation of inmate's constitutional rights in connection with injuries allegedly inflicted by second inmate and deputy, absent allegation that department maintained policy or custom which proximately caused injuries. Edwards v. Harris County Sheriff's Dept., S.D.Tex.1994, 864 F.Supp. 633. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Local governmental entity is liable for damages under § 1983 only if plaintiff can show that alleged constitutional deprivation occurred as result of official policy or custom. Hines v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1994, 845 F.Supp. 1265. Civil Rights 1351(1)

359. ---- Ministerial acts, causation, liability generally

Neither county clerk nor members of county election commission were cause in fact of former city recorder's loss of election for recorder position, which recorder claimed should not have occurred for two more years due to city's classification, as clerk's and members' functions in election process were merely ministerial; thus, clerk and members could not be held liable for alleged deprivation of recorder's civil rights. Calloway v. Miller, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1998, 147 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1032

360. ---- Supervisory personnel, causation, liability generally

Supervisor liability under § 1983 can be shown in one or more of the following ways: (1) actual direct participation in the constitutional violation; (2) failure to remedy a wrong after being informed through a report or appeal; (3) creation of a policy or custom that sanctioned conduct amounting to a constitutional violation, or allowing such a policy or custom to continue; (4) grossly negligent supervision of subordinates who committed a violation; or (5) failure to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Richardson v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 347 F.3d 431. Civil Rights 1355

Liability of supervisory officials under §§ 1983 cannot be premised on respondeat superior; rather, the plaintiff must establish fault and causation on the part of each defendant. Henderson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 129. Civil Rights 1355

Municipal court judge was not liable under §§ 1983 for any Fourth Amendment violation that occurred when college professor, after allegedly being told he could not take notes in judge's courtroom, was detained by bailiff to another judge, where such bailiff was not under control of first judge. Goldschmidt v. Coco, N.D.Ill.2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 949. Civil Rights 1360

Fact that city police official was responsible for day-to-day operations of police department did not render official potentially liable in his individual capacity, based upon his supervisory role, in §§ 1983 action alleging inadequate supervision and discipline of officers who allegedly had used excessive force in effecting arrest; there was no showing that official individually had duty to oversee investigations into incidents of alleged misconduct, to discover results of such investigations, or to discipline officers upon resolution, no evidence that official was aware of specific arrest in question such that his inaction could have been result of deliberate indifference, and no showing that official's inaction was cause of alleged assault on arrestee. Robinson v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 39.

The personal involvement of supervisory officials in their individual capacities, serving as a prerequisite to a damage award under §§ 1983, may be established by evidence that the officials: (1) participated directly in the alleged constitutional violation; (2) failed to remedy a wrong after being informed of a violation through a report or appeal; (3) created a policy or custom that sanctioned unconstitutional conduct, or allowed the continuance of such a policy or custom; (4) were grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed the alleged violations; or (5) failed to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Veloz v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 505, affirmed 2006 WL 1082836. Civil Rights 1355

Police chief did not violate victim's constitutional rights, for purpose of § 1983 supervisory liability claim brought by estate of victim who had been shot and killed by police officer, although chief was aware of officer's substance abuse and violent and anti-social behavior and investigated officer's violent behavior toward victim on more than one occasion but did not arrest officer; officer was not on duty when incident occurred and department was not called or notified as to situation at victim's residence so as to require intervention by department. Burkhart v. Knepper, W.D.Pa.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 734. Civil Rights 1358

To find supervisor liable under § 1983, plaintiff must show that: (1) supervisor's acts or omissions deprived plaintiff of constitutionally protected right; (2) such action or inaction amounted to reckless disregard or callous indifference to constitutional rights of others; and (3) there was affirmative link between street-level misconduct and action or inaction of supervisory official. Alsina Ortiz v. Laboy, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 286 F.Supp.2d 133, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 400 F.3d 77. Civil Rights 1355

Given the lack of respondeat superior liability under § 1983, a supervisor's liability is not for the constitutional deprivation in itself but for distinct acts or omissions that are a proximate cause of said deprivation. Torres Ocasio v. Melendez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 1355

To find a supervisor liable under § 1983, a plaintiff must show that: (1) that the supervisor's acts or omissions deprived the plaintiff of a constitutionally protected right, (2) that his action or inaction amounted to a reckless disregard or callous indifference to the constitutional rights of others, (3) that there was an affirmative link between the street level misconduct and the action or inaction of the supervisory official. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1355

For purposes of establishing supervisory liability under § 1983, there must be a causal connection between the supervisor's conduct and the subordinate's unconstitutional conduct; causal link may be found when the supervisor knows of, or tacitly approves of the conduct, or when he has actual or constructive notice of the ongoing violations but fails to take corrective measures such as better training and oversight. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1355

Sufficient causal connection between supervisor's wrongful conduct and constitutional violation, as required for imposition of liability under § 1983, may be established by showing that supervisor set in motion series of acts by others, which supervisor knew or reasonably should have known would cause others to inflict injury. Dennis v. Thurman, C.D.Cal.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1253. Civil Rights 1355

Prisoner failed to establish supervisors' liability for failure to train police officers, under §§ 1983, where prisoner was unable either to identify a failure to provide specific training that had a causal nexus with his injuries or to demonstrate that absence of that specific training could reasonably be said to reflect deliberate indifference to whether alleged constitutional deprivations occurred. Blacknall v. Citarella, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2006, 168 Fed.Appx. 489, 2006 WL 228588, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

361. ---- Time of policy, causation, liability generally

County sheriff could not be held liable under § 1983 on theory that he caused or implemented policy or custom which subjected arrestee's mother to deprivation of her rights, as he was not elected to office of sheriff until after events in question. Corbin v. Cannon, M.D.Fla.1993, 838 F.Supp. 561. Civil Rights 1358

362. ---- Particular cases causation present, liability generally

In civil rights action against county and county investigator for violation of constitutional right to privacy evidence was sufficient to establish that investigator was proximate cause of plaintiff's injury by disseminating excerpts from diary of plaintiff's wife, who had been murdered, to author of book about the murder, in light of investigator's own testimony that he kept excerpts in his files, was very good friends with author, and that he let author look through his files, while other detectives denied giving the information to author or having copy of diary. Sheets v. Salt Lake County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 45 F.3d 1383, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 74, 516 U.S. 817, 133 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1420

Wife and minor children of arrestee who was shot and killed by state trooper established causal link to harm suffered by arrestee to support claim of supervisory liability, though state trooper's supervisor was transferred 15 months before incident; arrestee's death was natural and foreseeable consequence of supervisor's failure to investigate or address pervasive violent propensities of one of his officers. Shaw v. Stroud, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 13 F.3d 791, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 67, 513 U.S. 813, 130 L.Ed.2d 24, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 68, 513 U.S. 814, 130 L.Ed.2d 24. Civil Rights 1358

City police chief could be held liable in his individual capacity for alleged use of excessive force during search conducted by police officers if he set in motion series of acts by others, or knowingly refused to terminate series of acts by others, which he knew or reasonably should have known would cause others to inflict constitutional injury. Larez v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 946 F.2d 630. Civil Rights 1358

Assistant district attorney who drafted affidavit for investigator was not an "impartial intermediary" whose independent decision could break the causal chain of sheriff's investigator's procurement of arrest warrant for aggravated kidnapping which formed basis of federal civil rights claim against investigator. Hale v. Fish, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 899 F.2d 390. Civil Rights 1088(4) and chairman's public opposition to Governor's bond proposal, if proven, were causally related, as required for chairman to prove §§ 1983 retaliation claim based on chairman's speech, in that there was close temporal connection between those two alleged events. Blankenship v. Manchin, S.D.W.Va.2006, 410 F.Supp.2d 483. Mines And Minerals 92.10

Prison's health services director was not personally involved in any constitutional deprivations in connection with removal of prisoner's wheelchair, and thus was not liable under §§ 1983, where no medical records indicated that director participated in removal decision, failed to act as others he supervised committed constitutional violations, or was placed on notice that prisoner's care was inadequate and failed to remedy that wrong, and prisoner did not contact director regarding his treatment. Veloz v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 505, affirmed 2006 WL 1082836. Civil Rights 1358

Assistant city attorney, who drafted letter unconstitutionally denying permission for anti-abortion group and individuals to hold parade, and deputy police chief who signed letter, were liable under §§ 1983 despite claim that they did not personally cause denial of permit. Lippoldt v. Cole, D.Kan.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1358

363. ---- Particular cases causation not present, liability generally

Parolee who killed girl some five months after he had been released was in no sense agent of California Parole Board, and her death was too remote a consequence of parole officers' action in releasing him to hold them responsible under this section, where girl faced no special danger, as opposed to public at large. Martinez v. State of Cal., U.S.Cal.1980, 100 S.Ct. 553, 444 U.S. 277, 62 L.Ed.2d 481, rehearing denied 100 S.Ct. 1285, 445 U.S. 920, 63 L.Ed.2d 606. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

Administrator of arrestee's estate, who alleged that assault on arrestee was caused by city's policy allowing only officers trained in the use of recording equipment to operate it, failed to show how officer's failure to use the equipment "caused" the alleged assault, such that officer was liable under §§ 1983 in his official capacity; videotape of the incident could not have prevented or caused the assault. Elder-Keep v. Aksamit, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2006, 460 F.3d 979. Civil Rights 1358

Corrections facility's alleged failure to act affirmatively to improve conditions at the jail and alleged failure to act affirmatively to educate and warn inmates and corrections officers about Methicilin Resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) infections and to train them in infection prevention were not the "but for cause" of corrections officer's MRSA infection, as required for officer's §§ 1983 due process claim under the state created danger doctrine; officer chose to remain employed at the jail, in a position that obliged him to work amidst MRSA infections and from the outset of his employment, he was aware of the safety risks associated with working in a prison, and, he was on notice of the jail's standard operating procedures, which described proper methods of handling inmates with communicable diseases. Kaucher v. County of Bucks, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 418. Prisons 8

Village could not be held liable on failure to train claim in civil rights litigation where individual officers did not commit any violation of detainee's Fourth Amendment rights, such that no liability existed on underlying substantive claim. Thurman v. Village of Homewood, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 446 F.3d 682. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Complaint examiners, who processed prisoner's initial complaint, and secretary for department of corrections, who handled prisoner's appeals from his complaints, were not liable to prisoner in his civil rights lawsuit under Eighth Amendment alleging deliberate indifference to his serious medical need, since they merely were non-medical, administrative employees and nothing indicated that they shirked their duty in any way or failed to appropriately handle the claims. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Causation prong was unsatisfied in county jail inmate's §§ 1983 Eighth Amendment action against county alleging county board's custom of inadequate budgeting for sheriff's office and jail, resulting in understaffing, and in turn leading to failure to transport inmate to hospital during medical emergency and consequent paralysis; although injury to inmate may not have occurred "but for" budget decisions, there was no showing that those decisions were highly likely to inflict particular injury in question, especially since jail personnel were instructed to request ambulances to transport inmates with emergency medical needs if jail personnel were unable to do so. McDowell v. Brown, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2004, 392 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1351(4)

White male police officers could not demonstrate causal relationship between their failure to make sergeants' promotional list and alleged affirmative action policies, and thus they lacked standing to challenge their failure to make promotional list, since officers would not have made promotional list even in absence of alleged affirmative action policies; officers' test scores did not place them on original proposed list, and subsequent expansion of pool of candidates was offset by increase of number of officers on promotional list. Byers v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1998, 150 F.3d 1271. Civil Rights 1333(5); Civil Rights 1522

County police chief's decisions to discipline but not discharge officer and to return him to street duty after rape allegations against him were dropped could not, as a matter of law, be found the sufficiently direct cause of rape by the officer some ten years later. Jones v. Wellham, C.A.4 (Md.) 1997, 104 F.3d 620. Civil Rights 1358

No causal connection existed between conduct of municipal court presiding judge and termination of African-American bailiff who was Jehovah's Witness, as required for bailiff to maintain § 1983 action against presiding judge in his individual capacity. Kelly v. Municipal Courts of Marion County, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 97 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1359

In § 1983 action based on allegations that deputy had forced plaintiffs to undress and engage in various sex acts in his presence, chief of police department for which deputy had previously worked was not liable for his failure to recommend decertification of deputy after deputy had offered to fix traffic tickets for three women in exchange for sex; incident that led to suit occurred 17 months after deputy left chief's police department, deputy was clearly not acting as an agent of chief when deputy committed alleged subsequent acts, and chief was not aware that plaintiffs faced any special danger as distinguished from public at large. Doe v. Wright, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 82 F.3d 265, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1088(1)

"Policy-as-effective-cause" theory of municipal liability, as asserted by county employee for deprivation of his substantive due process rights from actual physical assaults during his co-workers' general course of harassment, was not established based on deficiencies amounting to "policy" in county's training program for employees such as victim's coworkers who engaged in harassment, where no direct causal connection between specific training deficiencies and specific injury was demonstrated. McWilliams v. Fairfax County Bd. of Supervisors, C.A.4 (Va.) 1996, 72 F.3d 1191, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 72, 519 U.S. 819, 136 L.Ed.2d 32. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Administrator of Oregon Department of Corrections (DOC) Health Service Department and director of DOC could not be held liable for any violation of inmate's civil rights concerning blood sample taken for DNA data bank even though inmate had not been convicted of predicate offense under data bank statute, absent any evidence of causal connection between conduct of named state officials and order for inmate to provide blood sample. Rise v. State of Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 59 F.3d 1556, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1554, 517 U.S. 1160, 134 L.Ed.2d 656. Civil Rights 1358

Village's corporation counsel was not liable under § 1983 for police officer's unlawful arrest of boyfriend on charge of criminal trespass when boyfriend refused to leave girlfriend's house at which he resided; village's corporation counsel did not detain boyfriend, order officer to do so or render legal opinion that arrest would be lawful, officer arrested boyfriend under state law rather than village ordinance and fellow officer, after consulting with assistant state's attorney, told other officers assembled for roll call that, if girlfriend complained, boyfriend could lawfully be arrested for criminal trespass unless he left voluntarily. Gordon v. Degelmann, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 29 F.3d 295, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1088(4)

For purposes of § 1983 action against school officials by public high school students who were allegedly molested by other students, defendants did not create danger that eventuated violation of plaintiffs' constitutional rights; plaintiffs' allegations did not show that defendants either impermissibly limited freedom of plaintiffs to act on their own behalf or barred their access to outside support, nor did they demonstrate that defendants violated constitutional duty by creating or exacerbating danger posed by student defendants. D.R. by L.R. v. Middle Bucks Area Vocational Technical School, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 972 F.2d 1364, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1045, 506 U.S. 1079, 122 L.Ed.2d 354. Civil Rights 1066

Arrestee, who made charitable contribution so that the criminal charges against him would be nolled by the state, failed to show that the underlying criminal proceeding terminated in his favor, and so was barred from filing §§ 1983 false arrest or malicious prosecution claims. Birdsall v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 163. Civil Rights 1088(4); Civil Rights 1088(5)

State prisoner's conclusory allegations did not establish an individual causal connection between any alleged constitutional infringement and any affirmative action or omission to act by prison officials, and, thus, officials were not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of prisoner's constitutional rights committed by prison employees. Hayes v. Woodford, S.D.Cal.2006, 444 F.Supp.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Alleged actions by employee of Connecticut Department of Children and Families (DCF), of being instrumental in involuntary commitment of psychiatric patient's son and lying at custody hearing regarding son, if proven, could not be basis for liability of employee in her individual capacity under §§ 1983, in connection with patient's involuntary commitment for allegedly stalking television talk show host, inasmuch as such alleged actions were not connected to patient's involuntary commitment. Fisk v. Letterman, S.D.N.Y.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 362. Civil Rights 1360

High school students' detention hearing broke chain of causation between arrest for alleged conspiracy to commit murder, based on plot for armed attack on school, and eventual prosecution, and thus county law enforcement officers who arrested students were not liable under § 1983 for alleged malicious prosecution absent evidence that they participated in advancing criminal proceedings against students beyond date of detention hearing. Smith v. Barber, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1358

Municipality was not liable on § 1983 claim brought by estate of victim who had been shot and killed by police officer, although municipality was aware of officer's substance abuse and violent and anti-social behavior and investigated officer's violent behavior toward victim on more than one occasion but did not arrest officer; officer was not on duty when incident occurred and department was not called or notified as to situation at victim's residence so as to require intervention by department. Burkhart v. Knepper, W.D.Pa.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 734. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Landowner who brought action against town, municipal employees and building inspector, stemming from town's demolition of dangerous structure on premises, failed to establish that building inspection was proximate cause of alleged injury stemming from demolition, as required to maintain § 1983 claim against inspector; inspector merely entered onto landowner's property to fulfill emergency orders of town board, and rendered report determining structure to be dangerous. Davis v. Town of Hempstead, E.D.N.Y.2003, 296 F.Supp.2d 376, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 167 Fed.Appx. 235, 2006 WL 172216, on remand 2006 WL 656995. Civil Rights 1073

sexual assault on student, did not amount to "but for" causation under § 1983; alleged sexual assault was too remote from actions taken by school district and its employees to have been caused by their actions. Doe v. Methacton School Dist., E.D.Pa.1996, 914 F.Supp. 101, affirmed 124 F.3d 185. Civil Rights 1066

To the extent that any violation of 16-year-old Jehovah's Witness patient's rights to bodily self-determination occurred when blood transfusion was ordered over his objection, the order issued by the judge was the proximate cause of injury, and hospital official could not be held liable for civil rights violation. Novak v. Cobb County-Kennestone Hosp. Authority, N.D.Ga.1994, 849 F.Supp. 1559, affirmed 74 F.3d 1173. Civil Rights 1045

Even if bailiff, consistent with alleged pattern of "sewer service" by bailiffs of common pleas court, falsely swore that he had served tenant with complaint and summons in landlord's action for nonpayment of rent, failure of tenant, who was represented by counsel, to appeal judgment and post bond, to satisfy judgment and bring action for damages, or to move out must be considered an intervening cause which cut off bailiff's liability, precluding recovery from bailiff either on tenant's claim under this section pertaining to deprivation of right or her state claim based on abuse of process. Jackson v. Weatherby, E.D.Mich.1981, 515 F.Supp. 492. Civil Rights 1056; Process 168

Property owner failed to establish that any action of licensed architect who inspected his property was proximate cause of injuries arising from demolition of building that town had deemed unsafe, as was required to maintain §§ 1983 action against architect. Davis v. Town of Hempstead, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 235, 2006 WL 172216, Unreported. Civil Rights 1338

Architect, an Asian-American of Indian descent, was not subjected to intentional discrimination by school district's Minority Vendor Involvement Program (MVP), absent showing of causal connection between unconstitutional aspect of MVP and alleged injury, his failure to obtain architectural contract work with district, or other evidence of intentional discrimination. Civil Rights 1031

Improper motive is not prerequisite to suit under this section rendering person who deprives another citizen of any right, privilege or immunity secured by Constitution and law liable to party injured. Roberts v. Williams, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1971, 456 F.2d 819, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 83, 404 U.S. 866, 30 L.Ed.2d 110. Civil Rights 1031

Specific intent to violate constitutional rights is not a necessary element of cause of action under this section. Allison v. Wilson, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1970, 434 F.2d 646, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 43, 404 U.S. 863, 30 L.Ed.2d 107. See, also, Jenkins v. Averett, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1970, 424 F.2d 1228; Banks v. Perk, D.C.Ohio 1972, 341 F.Supp. 1175, affirmed in part, reversed in part on other grounds 473 F.2d 910; Jenkins v. Meyers, D.C.Ill.1972, 338 F.Supp. 383, affirmed 481 F.2d 1406; Bennett v. Gravelle, D.C.Md.1971, 323 F.Supp. 203, affirmed 451 F.2d 1011, certiorari dismissed 92 S.Ct. 2451, 407 U.S. 917, 32 L.Ed.2d 692; Baxter v. Birkins, D.C.Colo.1970, 311 F.Supp. 222; Penn v. Stumpf, D.C.Cal.1970, 308 F.Supp. 1238.

The key component of a political discrimination defense for any type of public employee, whether he be career, regular, irregular or transitory, is a lack of discriminatory animus by the defendants, which is a question of fact proper only for a jury to decide. Flores Camilo v. Alvarez Ramirez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 440. Civil Rights 1370; Civil Rights 1432

Proof of racially discriminatory intent, as evidenced by deliberate indifference, was required to hold public elementary school officials liable under § 1983 for their alleged violation of student's equal protection rights in the school environment when they allegedly failed to protect the student from racial harassment and assaults by other students. Crispim v. Athanson, D.Conn.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 240. Constitutional Law 220(3); Schools 147

Under Title VII and § 1983, plaintiff's ultimate burden of proof requires showing by preponderance of evidence that defendants acted with discriminatory intent. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1421; Civil Rights 1544

In suit brought under this section, the first inquiry is whether plaintiff has been deprived of a right secured by the Constitution and laws; if there has been no such deprivation, state of mind of defendant is wholly immaterial. Baker v. McCollan, Tex.1979, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 443 U.S. 137, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, on remand 601 F.2d 903. See, also, Skipper v. Phipps, N.D.Fla.1980, 483 F.Supp. 1213. Civil Rights 1027

Primary effect of municipal university's temporary campus display of sculpture allegedly disparaging of Roman Catholic Church was not to foster such disparagement, precluding recovery, on grounds of improper effect, in faculty member's and student's §§ 1983 Establishment Clause action against university; although sculpture was prominently placed in area reserved for official use, it was one of 30 outdoor sculptures composing unified art exhibit, several of which were within sight of challenged piece. O'Connor v. Washburn University, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 416 F.3d 1216, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1469, 164 L.Ed.2d 247. Constitutional Law 84.5(6)

Private defendants sued on basis of their invocation of state attachment statute may be held liable for damages under § 1983 only if they failed to act in good faith in invoking unconstitutional state procedures, that is, if they either knew or should have known that statute upon which they relied was unconstitutional. Wyatt v. Cole, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1993, 994 F.2d 1113, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 470, 510 U.S. 977, 126 L.Ed.2d 421. Civil Rights 1056

Parents were not entitled to compensatory relief from agents and employees of Texas Department of Human Resources, who temporarily removed two infant children from family household at separate times, in action under this section absent a showing that those defendants were not acting in good faith. Dorsey v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 719 F.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1360

Law enforcement officer can be held liable for executing facially valid and regular warrant if officer acted in bad faith or with notice of infirmity. Hamrick v. City of Eustace, E.D.Tex.1990, 732 F.Supp. 1390. Civil Rights 1088(3)

366. ---- Scope of knowledge, intent or knowledge, liability generally

The less direct the supervision of the subordinate, the greater degree of actual knowledge or acquiescence by the supervisor which must be shown in order to impose liability on the supervisor under the federal civil rights statute. Smith v. Hill, D.C.Utah 1981, 510 F.Supp. 767. Civil Rights 1401

Under this section, extent of supervisors' knowledge of and participation in acts of their subordinates determines the scope of their liability for their subordinates' action. Crawford v. Dominic, E.D.Pa.1979, 469 F.Supp. 260. Civil Rights 1355; Officers And Public Employees 118

367. ---- Causation, intent or knowledge, liability generally

In civil rights action by foster child against placement agency for failing to supervise placement adequately, causal link between agency's alleged failure to supervise and continuation of abuse of foster child was clear, in that if agency had investigated the child's case with sufficient acuity and diligence to discover abuse, it would have been able to prevent further abuse by withdrawing her from home, and, therefore, key question was whether state of mind was such that agency could be meaningfully termed culpable, and for such requirement, deliberate indifference rather than intentional harm is appropriate yardstick. Doe v. New York City Dept. of Social Services, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 649 F.2d 134. Civil Rights 1057

Former president was subject to liability in action based on allegedly illegal surveillance only if he knew or reasonably should have known that action he took would violate the constitutional rights with the person affected or if he took action with malicious intention to cause a deprivation of constitutional rights or other injury. Clark v. U. S., S.D.N.Y.1979, 481 F.Supp. 1086, appeal dismissed 624 F.2d 3. Civil Rights 1364

368. ---- Collective body, intent or knowledge, liability generally

Alleged racially discriminatory motive of only one member of three-member majority of five-member village council which voted not to reappoint police chief could not give rise to municipal liability in chief's § 1983 action; evidence that other two members of majority shared improper motive was required. Mason v. Village of El Portal, C.A.11 (Fla.) 2001, 240 F.3d 1337. Civil Rights 1351(5)

369. ---- Custom or usage, intent or knowledge, liability generally

Evidence that city police officer acted illegally, albeit without knowledge or complicity of city, in attempting to extort money from father of drug suspect in exchange for "losing evidence," and that other officers attempted to obtain false testimony about father and his son in exchange for "a deal" with man who was arrested on unspecified charges did not support finding of liability under § 1983 against city based on "widespread practice" prong of municipal liability test. Roach v. City of Evansville, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 111 F.3d 544. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To establish culpability for deprivation of public employee's substantive due process rights from actual physical assaults during his coworker's general course of harassment by tacit condonation, employee-victim must have proffered evidence that supervisors knew or reasonably should have known of comparable pattern of coworker conduct that was sufficiently widespread to pose pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury to employee, and that in face of that knowledge they took no action to stop it but remained deliberately indifferent to it. McWilliams v. Fairfax County Bd. of Supervisors, C.A.4 (Va.) 1996, 72 F.3d 1191, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 72, 519 U.S. 819, 136 L.Ed.2d 32. Civil Rights 1359

Mother of victim shot and killed by city police officer, in order to prevail on § 1983 claim against city, was not required to produce evidence of any deliberate or conscious choice by board of police commissioners to adopt unconstitutional policy or custom; mother asserted that city's failure to train officers appropriately and to discipline them when they violated policy amounted to deliberate indifference to rights of city inhabitants. Berry v. City of Detroit, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 25 F.3d 1342, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 902, 513 U.S. 1111, 130 L.Ed.2d 786. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police chiefs could be held liable for deprivation of police officer's due process rights arising from police department's custom of withholding relevant information from officers under investigation, where it was reasonable to infer that police chiefs were well aware of such pervasive activity in their department. Los Angeles Police Protective League v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 907 F.2d 879, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

Superintendent of police department was liable as supervisor for civil rights deprivations arising out of shooting of driver of automobile which was departing as squad of plainclothes police officers approached with guns drawn, having alighted from an unmarked police car and having given no indication that they were police officers; superintendent had knowledge of numerous complaints against leader of squad and had taken no action, and had employed an inadequate disciplinary system permitting officers such as the squad leader to continue improper practices. Gutierrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 882 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1358

In order to impose liability under this section on municipality for deprivation of rights pursuant to official policy by virtue of persistent, widespread practice of city officials or employees which is so common and well settled as to constitute custom that fairly represents municipal policy, actual or constructive knowledge of such custom must be attributable to the governing body of municipality or to official to whom that body has delegated policy-making authority. Bennett v. City of Slidell, C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 735 F.2d 861, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3476, 472 U.S. 1016, 87 L.Ed.2d 612. Civil Rights 1351(1)

County could not be held responsible under § 1983 for prosecutorial misconduct on theory that it was part of a pattern of unconstitutional conduct so pervasive as to imply deliberate indifference despite actual or constructive knowledge; even if there were some instances of prosecutorial misconduct, they were limited to ultimately exonerated plaintiff's case and therefore were not enough to constitute a "pattern" which would have placed prosecutor on actual or constructive notice that he needed to do something in the way of training his staff. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1352(4)

370. ---- Lawfulness of action, intent or knowledge, liability generally

In order for public officials to be liable under § 1983, contours of right which victim claims was violated must be sufficiently clear that reasonable official would understand what he was doing violated that right, that is unlawfulness of action must be clear in context of preexisting law. B Street Commons, Inc. v. Board of County Com'rs of El Paso County, D.Colo.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1266. Civil Rights 1376(2)

Official is liable under this section if he knew or reasonably should have known that action he took within his sphere of official responsibility would violate constitutional rights of person affected; fulcrum is existence, at time of official's action, of clearly established judicial decisions that make his action unconstitutional. Marrero v. City of Hialeah, Fla., S.D.Fla.1984, 581 F.Supp. 1207, affirmed 774 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1376(2)

371. ---- Number of incidents, intent or knowledge, liability generally

Sheriff was not personally liable under § 1983 for battery and false imprisonment inflicted upon debtor by deputy sheriff during attempt to collect debt on behalf of private creditor; even though debtor had allegedly complained to sheriff's secretary about prior harassment efforts of deputy in collecting debt, it was not clear that complaints reached sheriff's attention and report of single incident was not sufficient notice of improper activity. Wright v. Sheppard, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 919 F.2d 665. Civil Rights 1358

Proving one incident of misconduct, however severe, cannot in and of itself engender municipal liability under §§ 1983. Pahle v. Colebrookdale Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A single, isolated violation of constitutional rights is not enough to show knowledge on behalf of municipality for purposes of imposing liability under § 1983 nor is a general laxness sufficient to demonstrate causal connection between a failure to control on behalf of the municipality and the harm suffered by plaintiff. Chalmers v. Petty, M.D.N.C.1991, 136 F.R.D. 399. Civil Rights 1352(1)

372. ---- Policy-making officials, intent or knowledge, liability generally

Knowledge on part of policymaker that a constitutional violation will most likely result from given official custom or policy is necessary element for municipal liability under section 1983. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Assuming that municipal police chief was policymaker, neither he nor city were deliberately indifferent to need to train police officers as to handling of suspects who suffered physical challenges or as to intervening against officers who utilized excessive force, so as to be liable under §§ 1983 for any excessive force used, in violation of Fourth Amendment, against 442-pound motorist after traffic stop; neither had actual or constructive knowledge of need for different training, and absence of training did not present obvious potential for violation or constitute moving force behind alleged violation. Reindl v. City of Leavenworth, Kansas, D.Kan.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1222. Civil Rights 1358

Motorist asserting Due Process violations regarding the suspension of his driver's license for non-payment of a fine failed to establish the personal involvement of the current or former commissioners of a city's department of motor vehicles, or of a police officer, in the alleged violations, thus precluding imposition of liability on those officials in the motorist's §§ 1983 suit; notice of the impending suspension was sent to the motorist by an automated system. Evans v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 308 F.Supp.2d 316, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 433, 2005 WL 348377. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1360 committee not to place employee on jail officer eligibility list or decision of sheriff to terminate employee from her part-time county job, for purpose of employee's §§ 1981 and 1983 claims, alleging that decisions were made as result of employee's involvement in interracial marriage, absent evidence that the employment decisions were the result of an official county policy or custom, or that sheriff or committee members exercised final policymaking authority on behalf of county. Jones v. Adams County, Wisconsin, W.D.Wis.2003, 297 F.Supp.2d 1132. Civil Rights 1351(5); Civil Rights 1359

A § 1983 plaintiff bringing a claim under against a municipal defendant for deprivation of a federal right pursuant to an official policy, practice, or custom must do more than simply allege that such an official policy exists; he must also prove a course of action that was consciously chosen, or officially sanctioned or ordered. Riebsame v. Prince, M.D.Fla.2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 1225, affirmed 91 Fed.Appx. 656, 2004 WL 177567, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 166, 543 U.S. 888, 160 L.Ed.2d 149. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1394

Knowledge of deputy superintendent, assistant superintendent, and principal regarding students' claims that teacher sexually abused them and officials' failure to report claims to board of education or to superintendent at most was negligent inaction on their part and could not form basis of constitutional violation in § 1983 action against board; board liability could not rise from actions of those officials who were not imbued with policymaking authority. Thelma D. v. Board of Educ. of City of St. Louis, E.D.Mo.1990, 737 F.Supp. 541, affirmed 934 F.2d 929. Civil Rights 1352(2)

373. ---- Risk of harm, intent or knowledge, liability generally

To satisfy requirements of knowledge for supervisory liability under civil rights statute, plaintiff must show supervisor's knowledge of conduct engaged in by subordinate that poses pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury to plaintiff. Shaw v. Stroud, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 13 F.3d 791, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 67, 513 U.S. 813, 130 L.Ed.2d 24, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 68, 513 U.S. 814, 130 L.Ed.2d 24. Civil Rights 1355

374. ---- Supervisory personnel, intent or knowledge, liability generally

Director of the state Department of Corrections was not liable in §§ 1983 claim brought by state prisoner with amputated leg, alleging violation of his Eighth and Fourteenth Amendment rights, in connection with correctional officials' alleged conduct in denying him a crutch, failing to provide safe shower facility, and failing to transfer him to another prison that could accommodate his needs, absent evidence that the director was actually aware of prisoner's situation or his complaints. Johnson v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 444 F.3d 579. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisory police officials were not liable, on the basis of supervisory liability, in §§ 1983 action brought by plaintiffs allegedly subjected to a number of incidents of police harassment; only two of the contacts resulted in constitutional violations, and supervisors were not shown to have had contemporaneous knowledge of the incidents or of the existence of a pattern of incidents, except in one case, and in that case the supervisor was not in a position to stop the violation. Glass v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate who sued state prison officials, alleging use of excessive force in incident at sallyport, failed to establish that prison commissioner exhibited deliberate indifference to his rights by failing to act on information that unconstitutional acts were occurring, as required to maintain claim for supervisory liability under §§ 1983; there was no reliable evidence that commissioner had actual or constructive notice of his subordinates committing constitutionally prohibited acts against inmate. Ziemba v. Thomas, D.Conn.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 136. Civil Rights 1358

In a civil rights lawsuit, liability for deliberate indifference on the part of a supervisor may not be established by pointing to a single incident or isolated incidents, and, similarly, a supervisor cannot be held responsible for the deliberate criminal acts of his properly trained employees when he has no basis upon which to anticipate the misconduct; rather, it is a supervisor's continued inaction in the face of documented widespread abuses that provides an independent basis for finding that he either was deliberately indifferent or acquiesced in the constitutionally offensive conduct of his subordinates. Layman v. Alexander, W.D.N.C.2003, 294 F.Supp.2d 784. Civil Rights 1355

Fact questions existed as to whether supervisor of African-American employee at state agency acted with racially discriminatory intent toward employee and thereby aided in creation of hostile work environment, precluding summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in employee's §§ 1981 and 1983 action; allegations included failure to take appropriate disciplinary action against employee's white subordinate who had behaved insubordinately. Hill v. Taconic Developmental Disabilities Services Office, S.D.N.Y.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 955, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 254, 2003 WL 22879684. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

For supervisory liability to exist under § 1983, the supervisor's conduct or inaction must have been intentional, must have been grossly negligent, or must have amounted to a reckless or callous indifference to the constitutional rights of others. Torres Ocasio v. Melendez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 1355

An important factor in evaluating a supervisor's liability for a subordinate officer's violation of a citizen's civil rights under § 1983 is whether the supervisor had notice of the alleged violations. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1355

To establish a supervisor's liability for a subordinate officer's alleged deprivation of a plaintiff's constitutional rights under § 1983, the plaintiff must affirmatively connect the supervisor's conduct to the subordinate's violative act or omission; this affirmative connection need not take the form of knowing sanction, but may include tacit approval of, acquiescence in, or purposeful disregard of, rights-violating conduct. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1355

To establish elements of supervisory liability under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must show supervisor's knowledge of conduct engaged in by subordinate where the conduct poses pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury to the plaintiff. Jones v. Ziegler, D.Md.1995, 894 F.Supp. 880, affirmed 104 F.3d 620. Civil Rights 1355

375. ---- Time of knowledge, intent or knowledge, liability generally

Prison officials could not be held liable in action brought under this section, where, at the time of occurrence which gave rise to suit, opinion making prison officials' conduct unconstitutional had been announced but had not been published, where there was no basis for charging prison officials with knowledge of such opinion, and where officials had no reason to believe that they were violating a constitutional right. Withers v. Levine, C.A.4 (Md.) 1980, 615 F.2d 158, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 136, 449 U.S. 849, 66 L.Ed.2d 59. Civil Rights 1098

One essential requirement of an action under this section, is that the plaintiff show facts which indicate that the defendant, at time he acted, knew or as a reasonable man should have known that his acts were ones which would deprive the plaintiff of his constitutional rights or might lead to that result. Bowens v. Knazze, N.D.Ill.1965, 237 F.Supp. 826. Civil Rights 1031

376. ---- Particular cases intent or knowledge present, liability generally

City was liable under § 1983 for equal protection violations which occurred when city made certain transfers and promotions of African-American police officers; mayor, chief administrative officer, and superintendent of police each knew of and approved transfers and promotions. New Orleans, C.A.5 (La.) 1996, 100 F.3d 1159. Civil Rights 1351(5)

In action under civil rights statute against county and county investigator for violation of plaintiff's constitutional right of privacy by disclosing to author of book about murder of plaintiff's wife excerpts from wife's diary, evidence was sufficient to conclude that investigator intentionally, as opposed to negligently, disclosed the diary information to the author, who was a good friend of investigator and was allowed to look through investigator's files. Sheets v. Salt Lake County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 45 F.3d 1383, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 74, 516 U.S. 817, 133 L.Ed.2d 34. Civil Rights 1420

County board of supervisors had constructive notice of proper procedures to acquire right-of-way across Indian land allotment as of date its agent was notified by Bureau of Land Management, and was also charged with knowledge of the laws, particularly those governing functions within its scope of responsibility, and thus the board's approval and recording of improper quitclaim deeds and its incorporation of road into county system without proper right-of-way deeds, especially after it had been notified that it had no valid right-of-way for the road, constituted reckless disregard of the constitutional rights of the beneficial owners of the land, supporting liability of county under civil rights statute. Hammond v. County of Madera, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 859 F.2d 797. Civil Rights 1071

Attorney most likely was in better position than client to know whether state's garnishment was constitutional and in view of allegations that he refused to comply with client's directions to release plaintiffs' property, attorney could be liable under this section if on behalf of client he or she pursued garnishment or prejudgment attachment proceeding which he or she knew or reasonably should have known would violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights of debtor. Buller v. Buechler, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1983, 706 F.2d 844. Civil Rights 1375

Former prisoner adequately stated that physicians violated his Fourth Amendment rights in his pretrial arrest and incarceration, in lawsuit under §§ 1983, on allegations that physicians, acting as county's coroner or "de facto" coroner, intentionally falsified victim's autopsy report which played material role in prisoner's arrest and prosecution. Marsh v. San Diego County, S.D.Cal.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Former transitory public employees established prima facie case that head of governmental agency knew or acquiesced in decision to not renew employees' contracts due to their political affiliation, in civil rights lawsuit under First Amendment alleging political discrimination, where such person had final responsibility for all hiring and firing, he signed employees' non-renewal letters, employees' political affiliation was known throughout agency, non-renewals occurred simultaneously, implying centralized action, and prima facie case for political discrimination could be built upon circumstantial evidence. Martinez-Baez v. Rey-Hernandez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 428. Civil Rights 1359

Governor, having knowledge of orders requiring release of inmates to cure unconstitutional overcrowding, was bound to respect and refrain from interfering with implementation of those orders, even though Governor was not party to orders or underlying action, and Governor's willful interference and refusal to comply with orders rendered him liable to inmates under § 1983. Tasker v. Moore, S.D.W.Va.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1005. Civil Rights 1096

377. ---- Particular cases intent or knowledge not present, liability generally

Evidence that city planning commission acted with unconstitutional motive, as required for municipal liability, was insufficient for submission to jury in developers' §§ 1983 action alleging that city violated developers' speech rights by denying tentative approval for their proposed building project because developer had run unsuccessfully against city's mayor, inasmuch as developers merely offered opinions of former building inspector that mayor influenced and controlled commission, and there was no evidence that commission knew of and ratified unconstitutional motive. Campbell v. Rainbow City, Ala., C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 434 F.3d 1306. Civil Rights 1428

There was no evidence of racially discriminatory intent on part of city officials toward Native American co-owner of wrecking yard in officials' allegedly improper delay in acting on owners' application for city approval of state wrecking license renewal, precluding owners' §§ 1983 equal protection action against city; mere indifference to effects of decision on co-owner did not constitute discriminatory intent. Thornton v. City of St. Helens, C.A.9 (Or.) 2005, 425 F.3d 1158. Licenses 22

Municipal university did not have improper motive of disparagement of religion when it selected for temporary campus display sculpture allegedly hostile to Roman Catholic Church, nor when it displayed sculpture, nor when it retained sculpture in face of complaints, precluding recovery, on grounds of improper purpose, in faculty member's and student's §§ 1983 Establishment Clause action against university; there was no evidence of any motives other than aesthetic and educational ones in selection and placement, and likewise no evidence of endorsement of complainants' interpretation of sculpture in decision to retain it. O'Connor v. Washburn University, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 416 F.3d 1216, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1469, 164 L.Ed.2d 247. Constitutional Law 84.5(6)

Elementary school psychologist failed to show that education board's response to employment discrimination that allegedly resulted from gender stereotyping by school principal and district personnel director was clearly unreasonable under the circumstances, and thus to show that board evinced such deliberate indifference to alleged discrimination that it was subject to municipal liability under § 1983 and Equal Protection Clause as having intended for discrimination to occur, given that board appointed independent review panel to investigate psychologist's situation and panel recommended that tenure denial was merited. Back v. Hastings On Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 365 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Without evidence in addition to the alleged racial epithets, football player's mother failed to come forward with sufficient claim from which a reasonable juror could infer racial animus by a state official, and therefore failed to establish that school defendants violated equal protection; while school officials may not have adequately responded to all of mother's numerous complaints of racial harassment, record did not show that the officials' inaction on some of the complaints rose to the level of an equal protection violation, and mother presented no evidence establishing that the alleged racial harassment went unpunished while other types of misconduct was punished or that the school did not document the racial harassment in its records. Priester v. Lowndes County, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 354 F.3d 414, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 153, 543 U.S. 829, 160 L.Ed.2d 44. Constitutional Law 220(3); Schools 164

State hospital administrator was not liable under § 1983 to patient who was assaulted by hospital security officers in absence of evidence that administrator implicitly authorized, approved, or knowingly acquiesced in any of conduct which formed basis for complaint. Durham v. Nu'man, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1996, 97 F.3d 862, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1337, 520 U.S. 1157, 137 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1037

High school principal could not be held personally liable to female student who brought § 1983 action alleging that principal acted with deliberate indifference or reckless disregard for her civil rights in connection with sexual assault committed against her by teacher, in absence of evidence that principal had any notice of sexual misconduct by teacher or that he was deliberately indifferent or tacitly authorized teacher's sexual abuse of plaintiff; although there might have been some negligence on part of principal in failing to adequately investigate rumors of inappropriate conduct by teacher, liability could not be predicated on negligence. Gates v. Unified School Dist. No. 449 of Leavenworth County, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1993, 996 F.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1356

State officials connected with mental health institutions could not be held liable under § 1983 to patient confined under the Illinois Sexually Dangerous Persons Act past the date on which psychiatrist decided patient was no longer in need of treatment; even if officials "should have known" of required release, officials asserted that they were not aware of the order for release. Pacelli v. deVito, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 972 F.2d 871. Civil Rights 1037

Evidence failed to show that police department employees knew or should have known that charge that police officer had stolen battery was false, and thus employees could not be held liable for violation of discharged officer's constitutional rights on that basis, where another officer had told police department employee that officer had stolen battery, and that employee stated that he believed that other officer was truthful. Los Angeles Police Protective League v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 907 F.2d 879, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1421

Municipality, police chief, postmaster and two officers of National Guard did not violate rights of relatives of postal employees to associate with those employees by failing to take appropriate action to prevent employees from being killed and injured by gunman who had trapped them in post office; there was no evidence indicating that municipality or officials intended to deprive anyone of their associational rights. Bryson v. City of Edmond, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 905 F.2d 1386. Constitutional Law 91; Militia 19; Postal Service 7(1)

Shopping center managers were not liable in § 1983 action for allegedly illegal arrests which took place on shopping center parking lots, even though managers requested assistance of officials to protect their property, and supported charges once made by proper officials; nothing suggested that managers had any role in, or even notice of, official decision to make those arrests. Morgan v. City of DeSoto, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 900 F.2d 811, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 346, 498 U.S. 940, 112 L.Ed.2d 311. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City councilmen were not liable under this section for deprivation of civil rights of arrestee who was shot by city policeman where there was no evidence that any councilman acquired any specific knowledge of policeman's propensities for violence to and maltreatment of persons under arrest; city mayor likewise could not be said to have acquired knowledge of policeman's tendency toward violence and maltreatment of prisoners by virtue of fact that, during other judicial proceedings in which major presided as judge, there was evidence, disbelieved by mayor, that policeman had mistreated another prisoner. Russ v. Ratliff, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1976, 538 F.2d 799, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 740, 429 U.S. 1041, 50 L.Ed.2d 753. Civil Rights 1358

Absent evidence that school administrators had any knowledge that teacher was abusing middle school student prior to his arrest or that they failed to take any action in response to knowledge, school district's policies could not have played affirmative role in teacher's conduct, so as to give rise to civil rights liability on custom, policy, or practice claim. Kline ex rel. Arndt v. Mansfield, E.D.Pa.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 258. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Prisoner's allegation that deputy prison superintendent ordered him placed in a housing unit with more stringent restrictions was not sufficient to establish superintendent's personal involvement in alleged due process violations, as required to establish §§ 1983 liability, absent evidence that superintendent had any involvement in or knowledge of the conditions of plaintiff's confinement there, particularly the alleged denial of food. Brooks v. Chappius, W.D.N.Y.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 220. Civil Rights 1358

Citizen did not sufficiently allege that police officers' superintendent was liable under § 1983 for police officers' malicious prosecution of citizen under theory of supervisory liability; citizen's complaint outlined the legal standard of supervisory liability and alleged that supervisor failed to train and supervise officers, but did not establish that superintendent had notice of officers' purported violation of citizen's constitutional rights or connect superintendent's conduct to officers' actions. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Police officer was not liable, under § 1983, for failing to intervene to prevent fellow officer's alleged use of neck restraint against arrestee, where there was no evidence first officer knew or should have known of degree of force used by second officer to restrain arrestee or that arrestee cried out or indicated in any manner that restraint was causing him pain, and first officer denied that second officer was even restraining arrestee by the neck. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Section 1983 liability cannot attach to a supervisor merely because a subordinate violated someone's constitutional rights. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1355

No reasonable jury could find that social worker's conduct directly caused foster parent's license renewal and thereby caused foster child's murder by foster parent, and thus, social worker had no § 1983 liability; foster child was not assigned to social worker, there was no evidence that social worker had heard reports that child was abused or that social worker could have removed child from foster home, and there was no evidence that foster care license would have been revoked prior murder if social worker had investigated more fully the reports of abuse of other children he was alleged to have heard. Speed v. Ramsey County, D.Minn.1997, 954 F.Supp. 1392. Civil Rights 1057

Absence of evidence that sheriff had actual knowledge of substantial risk of serious harm to which sheriff was deliberately indifferent precluded individual liability of sheriff in § 1983 civil rights suit arising from death of pretrial detainee who was assaulted and killed by cellmate while both were on suicide watch; constructive knowledge to sheriff from county records documenting perpetrator's violent propensities was not sufficient. Clark v. McMillin, S.D.Miss.1996, 932 F.Supp. 789. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City's violation of § 1983 would not be intentional, absent showing that city knew that Justice Department manual precluded its requirement telecommunications devices for the deaf (TDDs) emit audible tone so that emergency phone calls could be transferred to city's TDD, hearing-impaired users of emergency telephone dispatch service and that the manual had force and effect of law. Ferguson v. City of Phoenix, D.Ariz.1996, 931 F.Supp. 688, affirmed 157 F.3d 668, as amended, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 2049, 526 U.S. 1159, 144 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1462

School counselor did not "knowingly refuse" to terminate teacher's sexual predations, and, thus, could not be held liable on that basis under federal civil rights statute for teacher's alleged criminal sexual attack on student, where only evidence that counselor knew of teacher's sexual assaults on children in public schools consisted of report of incident that took place at least three years after alleged assault on student. Doe By and Through Knackert v. Estes, D.Nev.1996, 926 F.Supp. 979. Civil Rights 1356

Evidence that supervisor made comments to different people indicating that promotions in state agency were awarded on the basis of political patronage and that supervisor allegedly appointed a former state senator's chief of staff to personnel committee and consulted with her on personnel matters did not indicate that supervisor had actual knowledge of political discrimination and that he abstained from voting on personnel matters to allow the discrimination to continue and that this abstention fostered atmosphere that tolerated or encouraged political discrimination and thus, supervisor could not be held liable under § 1983. Christy v. Pennsylvania Turnpike Com'n, E.D.Pa.1996, 912 F.Supp. 146. Civil Rights 1359

State's secretary of corrections was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 or state law for allegedly improper inter-prison transfers of protective custody inmate, absent allegation that secretary had any knowledge of inmate's complaints and requests regarding his placement. Chavez v. Perry, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2005, 142 Fed.Appx. 325, 2005 WL 1635361, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Members of board of trustees for public library system and director of system waived argument that they were entitled to qualified immunity from Caucasian librarians' § 1983 action, alleging that their transfers were result of race discrimination, because reasonable public official in defendants' position would not have known transfers were adverse employment actions; at trial, defendants stipulated that transferring people because of their race was contrary to law of the United States. Bogle v. McClure, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 332 F.3d 1347, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 77 Fed.Appx. 510, 2003 WL 21804722, certiorari dismissed 124 S.Ct. 1168, 540 U.S.

Captain's conduct in allegedly giving female correctional officer less favorable work assignments did not constitute adverse employment action which could support officer's claims of sex discrimination and retaliation under § 1983 and civil rights conspiracy statute. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1169; Conspiracy 7.5(1); Civil Rights 1249(1)

To extent that records maintained by state officials erroneously identified parents as child abusers for some period of time, when investigation had "ruled out" child abuse, this was not actionable under civil rights statute. Hodge v. Jones, C.A.4 (Md.) 1994, 31 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 581, 513 U.S. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1057

If defendants conspire to deprive plaintiff of his right of action, under this section, to seek redress for use of force in violation of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, he might have had actionable deprivation of federally protected rights, but in view of successful state tort action there was not cognizable injury or damage. Landrigan v. City of Warwick, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1980, 628 F.2d 736. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Prison inmate lacked any injury, and therefore lacked standing to bring § 1983 action against state court judge for alleged violation of his due process rights for alleged collusion with state court clerk to deny inmate an appeal in connection with his second postconviction relief petition, where inmate filed document in state court to attempt to persuade the judge to assist him in perfecting his appeal, the judge interpreted the document as a third postconviction petition and denied it as untimely, and on inmate's appeal from that order, the state appellate court determined that the state court judge was correct in dismissing the second postconviction petition. Quarles v. Lineberger, E.D.Pa.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 208, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396362, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 874, 543 U.S. 1060, 160 L.Ed.2d 787. Civil Rights 1333(4)

If a governmental superior fails to perform an explicit statutory duty and constitutional injury occurs, liability may attach under this section. Penick v. 379. ---- Custom or usage, injury or damage, liability generally

Only when implementation of municipality's policy or custom is cause of injury may municipality be liable under § 1983. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal liability under § 1983 may not be imposed merely because municipality employed person responsible for constitutional violation, but is triggered only when injuries were inflicted pursuant to government policy or custom. Brown v. City of Elba, M.D.Ala.1990, 754 F.Supp. 1551. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Inmate could not recover from District of Columbia for alleged constitutional violations in transferring inmate from one prison to another, absent any allegation that policy of District of Columbia caused harm. Nowlin v. Director, District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections, D.D.C.1988, 689 F.Supp. 26. Civil Rights 1351(4)

When execution of governmental policy or custom, whether it is formally adopted or informally but uniformly adhered to, inflicts injury, government as an entity may be held responsible under this section. Rucker v. Martin, W.D.Okla.1980, 505 F.Supp. 20. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Under this section, governmental entity may be liable for its employees' acts, but only if the injury is inflicted by execution of government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy. Owens v. Haas, E.D.N.Y.1978, 456 F.Supp. 1009, reversed on other grounds 601 F.2d 1242, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 483, 444 U.S. 980, 62 L.Ed.2d 407. Civil Rights 1351(1)

380. ---- Risk of harm, injury or damage, liability generally

In assessing whether official conduct at issue is arbitrary or conscience-shocking in constitutional sense, as will allow recovery in federal civil rights action based on substantive violation of plaintiff's due process rights, risk of harm must be weighed against justification for creating that risk, and conduct that is justified and therefore not arbitrary in one circumstance may be so unjustified as to be unconstitutional under different circumstances. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Constitutional Law 253(1)

Establishing pervasive and unreasonable risk of harm for supervisory liability under civil rights statute requires evidence that conduct is widespread, or has been used on several different occasions, and that it poses unreasonable risk of constitutional injury. Shaw v. Stroud, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1994, 13 F.3d 791, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 67, 513 U.S. 813, 130 L.Ed.2d 24, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 68, 513 U.S. 814, 130 L.Ed.2d 24. Civil Rights 1355

In § 1983 Eighth Amendment case in which prison inmate claims that his right to medical care was violated due to supervisor's failure to train subordinates, "deliberate indifference" test to determine municipal liability differs from test applicable in individual liability cases; in municipal liability case, there is no subjective component, and inmate need only show objective risk of injury and failure to train. Ginest v. Board of County Com'rs. of Carbon County, D.Wyo.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1190. Civil Rights 1352(4)

381. Deliberate indifference, liability generally

State prison director was not deliberately indifferent to rights of inmate in authorizing, at warden's request, special team to conduct cell invasions to find loaded gun, and thus could have no supervisory liability for alleged use of excessive force, absent any showing suggesting that director was aware of substantial risk of serious harm to cellmate of targeted suspect and wanted to harm inmates or planned to ignore any harm done. Serna v. Colorado Dept. of Corrections, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 455 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1358

City's release of personnel files of its police officers to criminal defendant's counsel without notice or any attempt to redact sensitive personal information did not rise to the level of deliberate indifference, as required to establish officers' §§ 1983 substantive due process claim; although city employee who released files admitted that she would not want her personal information released to a criminal defendant for personal safety reasons, the employee did not consider and disregard specific risk of harm to officers when she released the files in response to counsel's subpoena. Hart v. City of Little Rock, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2005, 432 F.3d 801, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 2006 WL 1521439. Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

In §§1983 action alleging that municipality's facially valid actions violated plaintiff's constitutional rights, plaintiff must demonstrate that municipality's lawful action was taken with deliberate indifference as to its known or obvious consequences. McDowell v. Brown, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2004, 392 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1343

Where alleged official policy or custom is facially innocuous, establishing requisite official knowledge of custom, as required for liability to attach under § 1983, requires that plaintiff establish that an official policy was promulgated with deliberate indifference to known or obvious consequences that constitutional violations would result. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1352(1)

In limited set of cases, plaintiff, unable to show pattern of constitutional violations, may establish "deliberate indifference," as required to establish culpability on part of official under § 1983, by showing single incident with proof of possibility of recurring situations that present obvious potential for violation of constitutional rights, but exception will apply only where facts giving rise to violation are such that it should have been apparent to policymaker that constitutional violation was highly predictable consequence of particular policy or failure to train. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1355

"Deliberate indifference" to one's constitutional rights, for purpose of § 1983 claim, is satisfied by something less than acts or omissions for very purpose of causing harm; rather, it implies at minimum actual knowledge of impending harm easily preventable, so that conscious, culpable refusal to prevent harm can be inferred from defendant's failure to prevent it. Dixon v. Godinez, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 114 F.3d 640. Civil Rights 1039

Evidence that former director of state Department of Criminal Justice had known of correctional officers' allegations of sexual harassment by captain and of investigation reports prepared by department's Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) office which rejected such allegations did not establish former director's deliberate indifference to the officers' constitutionally protected rights, and therefore former director was entitled to qualified immunity with regard to officers' sexual harassment and hostile work environment claims under § 1983 and civil rights conspiracy statute; former director had known that EEO office had independently investigated each complaint and he followed office's conclusions, EEO reports had contained earmarks of detailed investigation, and former director had asked regional director and director of personnel to investigate some questions raised by the reports. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Past conduct of school teacher did not present former and current superintendents of county school district and high school principal with widespread pattern of constitutional violations such that actions or inactions of supervisors amounted to deliberate indifference to danger of teacher sexually abusing students, and thus, supervisors could not be held liable in their individual capacities in federal civil rights action brought by student who was sexually abused by teacher; while teacher had past record of improper conduct, supervisors did not approve or knowingly acquiesce in abuse, and had no knowledge of abuse. Doe v. Claiborne County, Tenn. By and Through Claiborne County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 495. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Physicians who treated state hospital patient after patient was assaulted by hospital security officers did not display deliberate indifference in treatment so as to be liable for § 1983 damages even though physicians initially failed to order tests which would have permitted diagnosis of broken arm where it was not readily apparent that arm was broken and patient received medical treatment after incident. Durham v. Nu'man, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1996, 97 F.3d 862, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1337, 520 U.S. 1157, 137 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1045

In order to establish § 1983 liability in action against state official for injury to prison employee caused by inmate, employee must show that official participated in creating dangerous condition and acted with deliberate indifference to known or obvious danger in subjecting employee to it; only if official was deliberately indifferent does analysis then proceed further to decide whether the conduct amounts to constitutional violation. L.W. v. Grubbs, C.A.9 (Or.) 1996, 92 F.3d 894. Civil Rights 1125

Prison officials would be liable to inmate if they acted intentionally or with deliberate indifference to defendant's liberty interests in deciding to place him in protective segregation and increased security confinement; their motives for denying due process in form of a hearing were irrelevant to issue of their liability. Howard v. Grinage, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1996, 82 F.3d 1343. Prisons 10

Indifference which rises to level of being deliberate, reckless or callous, suffices to establish supervisor liability under Civil Rights Act. Gutierrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 882 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1355

Estate of county jail inmate who was fatally assaulted by other inmates sufficiently alleged a §§ 1983 claim against the sheriff in his individual capacity; estate alleged that sheriff was directly liable under §§ 1983 for being deliberately indifferent in failing to supervise and train jail officers in the appropriate, lawful, and constitutional policies and procedures for providing a safe environment for inmates, and that sheriff was deliberately indifferent in fostering, encouraging, and knowingly accepting formal and informal jail policies condoning brutality among the inmates and indifference to proper supervision. Wilson v. Maricopa County, D.Ariz.2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 987.

Parents and child who sued foster care agency, stemming from assault that allegedly occurred while child was in foster care after removal, failed to establish that agency employee acted with requisite deliberate indifference necessary to support §§ 1983 claim; employee did not have reason to know of facts creating high degree of risk of physical harm to child, and did not deliberately fail to act in conscious disregard of or indifference to that risk. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Civil Rights 1057

To give rise to a local government's §§ 1983 liability under Monell, a municipality's failure to train its officers must amount to deliberate indifference to the constitutional rights of its citizens. Matican v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 497. Civil Rights 1352(1)

A public official is sufficiently involved in a constitutional violation to support a §§ 1983 claim if she acts or fails to act with a deliberate or reckless disregard of plaintiff's constitutional rights, or if the conduct causing the constitutional deprivation occurs at her direction or with her knowledge and consent. Koutnik v. Brown, W.D.Wis.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 871. Civil Rights 1354

Child failed to state cause of action in complaint for supervisory liability under § 1983, in connection with alleged taking of emergency custody of child by county child protective services supervisor and caseworker, absent allegation that, prior to date of taking custody, caseworker was engaging in pattern of egregious behavior posing risk of constitutional violation such that supervisor could fairly be described as deliberately indifferent to that risk, or that citizens were facing pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional violations. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1395(1)

A supervisor's continued inaction in the face of a subordinate's documented and widespread constitutional abuses may satisfy the deliberate indifference requirement to establish supervisory liability for a subordinate's constitutional injuries under § 1983. Mandsager v. University of North Carolina at Greensboro, M.D.N.C.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 662. Civil Rights 1355

Graduate student who also served as teaching assistant in the department of counseling and educational development at state university did not plead sufficient facts to support § 1983 claim that dean of graduate school program was liable under theory of supervisory liability for professor's alleged sexual harassment of her in violation of her constitutional rights; she complained to dean after professor sexually propositioned her, and there was no allegation that professor committed any offensive acts toward her after she spoke to dean. Mandsager v. University of North Carolina at Greensboro, M.D.N.C.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 662. Civil Rights 1356; Civil Rights 1359

In order to establish that a city's failure to train its employees constitutes deliberate indifference to plaintiffs' rights, as required to establish § 1983 claim against city, plaintiffs must show that the city had notice that its procedures were inadequate and likely to result in a violation of constitutional rights; this notice may be actual or implied. Fakorzi v. Dillard's, Inc., S.D.Iowa 2003, 252 F.Supp.2d 819. Civil Rights 1352(1)

"Deliberate indifference" to rights of citizens, sufficient to subject municipality to liability under § 1983, may be inferred from failure to supervise employees, such as when meaningful attempts to investigate repeated claims of excessive force are absent, but existence of repeated complaints, alone, is not sufficient; for deliberate indifference to be shown, municipality's response must amount to persistent failure to investigate complaints or discipline those whose conduct prompted complaints. Knicrumah v. Albany City School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1352(1); Civil Rights 1401

School district was not deliberately indifferent to risk that teacher would sexually harass or molest students, as required to hold school district liable for teacher's deprivation of student's Fourteenth Amendment right to bodily integrity by acts of sexual misconduct; when it made decision to hire teacher, district did not have knowledge that teacher had conducted bogus scholarship programs to lure students to his home, as he did with student, or had committed similar acts against students at other schools. Hackett v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Attorney arrested for criticizing an officer's conduct during the arrest of a third party and for refusing to leave the scene of the arrest failed to prove that the officer's supervisor had actual or constructive knowledge of the circumstances of the arrest, thus defeating the attorney's § 1983 claim against the supervisor; the supervisor arrived on the scene after the arrest had concluded, and evidence that he spoke to both of the officers on the scene was insufficient to establish deliberate indifference. Wilson v. Kittoe, W.D.Va.2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 520, affirmed 337 F.3d 392. Civil Rights 1358

Generally, only actions of school district officials with final policy-making authority can subject school district to "deliberate indifference" liability under § 1983. Mirelez v. Bay City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1998, 992 F.Supp. 916. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Supervisor's "deliberate indifference" to plaintiff's rights, as required for supervisor to be liable under § 1983, is something more than ordinary negligence, is probably something more than gross negligence, can be described as "recklessness" in criminal-law sense, requires actual knowledge of impending harm, and is type of conduct that would offend evolving standards of decency in civilized society. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1355

County and county officials did not act with deliberate indifference to rights of plaintiffs such that they could be held liable under § 1983 failure-to-supervise theory in connection with alleged unauthorized removal of corneas from plaintiffs' relatives' bodies during autopsies; at time autopsies were performed, state law expressly permitted nonconsensual removal of corneas, and county and its officials could not know that federal court would later determine that that law violated due process rights of next of kin. Whaley v. County of Saginaw, E.D.Mich.1996, 941 F.Supp. 1483. Civil Rights 1352(6); Civil Rights 1360

To demonstrate deliberate indifference on part of government official to rights of individual, as will allow official to be held liable in federal civil rights action for conduct of subordinate which violates those rights, plaintiff must show unusually serious risk of harm, official's actual knowledge of, or at least willful blindness to, that elevated risk, and official's failure to take obvious steps to address that known, serious risk. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1355

Termination procedures followed by school district formerly employing teacher accused of sexually assaulting student in another district, even if constitutionally inadequate, did not encourage or further teacher's abuse of children as required for liability under civil rights statute. Doe v. Methacton School Dist., E.D.Pa.1996, 914 F.Supp. 101, affirmed 124 F.3d 185. Civil Rights 1066

Plaintiffs in § 1983 action complaining of actions of police officers while plaintiffs were collecting signatures to petitions failed to establish deliberate indifference by municipality with respect to training of officers. Tate v. Lau, D.Nev.1994, 865 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Alleged failure of city to establish policy regarding high-speed pursuit by police officers as required by state law did not indicate deliberate indifference to rights of suspects or establish that city had policy or custom subjecting it to liability for § 1983 civil rights claim on behalf of motorcyclists who sustained fatal injuries in roadblock accident resulting from high-speed chase. Donovan v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1992, 845 F.Supp. 1312, affirmed 17 F.3d 944. Civil Rights 1351(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

382. Personal involvement in deprivation, liability generally--Generally

Since a §§ 1983 cause of action is against a person, in order to recover damages under §§ 1983, a plaintiff must establish that a defendant was personally responsible for the deprivation of a constitutional right. Johnson v. Snyder, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 444 F.3d 579. Civil Rights 1335

Personal involvement in discriminatory conduct, for purposes of determining whether public official can be held liable under § 1983, can be shown through allegations of actual knowledge and acquiescence. Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Civil Rights 1354

"Personal involvement," such as will support liability under § 1983, means direct participation, failure to remedy alleged wrong after learning of it, creation of policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or gross negligence in managing subordinates. Black v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 76 F.3d 72, on remand 15 F.Supp.2d 311. Civil Rights 1355; Civil Rights 1335

Defendant may be personally involved in constitutional deprivation within meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 in several ways: defendant may have directly participated in infraction; supervisory official, after learning of violation through report or appeal, may have failed to remedy the wrong; supervisory official may be liable because he or she created policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred or allowed such policy or custom to continue; and supervisory official may be personally liable if he or she was grossly negligent in managing subordinates who caused unlawful condition or event. Williams v. Smith, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1986, 781 F.2d 319. Civil Rights 1354; Civil Rights 1355

A defendant will not be held liable under this section proscribing a deprivation of rights unless he was personally involved in causing the deprivation of a constitutional right or he either has or is charged with having actual knowledge that his subordinates are causing deprivations of constitutional rights. Triplett v. Azordegan, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1978, 570 F.2d 819. Civil Rights 1335

Defendants who were not personally involved in the deprivation of Eighth Amendment rights alleged by prison inmate in his §§ 1983 action, or who were not demonstrated to have acted in such manner as could be characterized as having a sufficient causal connection to inmate's alleged injury, were not liable. Wesley v. Davis, C.D.Cal.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 888. Civil Rights 1358

To be liable in a § 1983 action, a defendant must have been personally involved in the alleged violation. Perkins v. Brown, E.D.N.Y.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 279. Civil Rights 1335

Personal involvement of supervisory official for purposes of liability under § 1983 may be established by evidence that official: (1) participated directly in alleged constitutional violation; (2) failed to remedy wrong after being informed of violation through report or appeal; (3) created policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed continuance of such policy or custom; (4) was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed wrongful acts; or (5) exhibited deliberate indifference to rights of others by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Hill v. Taconic Developmental Disabilities Services Office, S.D.N.Y.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 955, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 254, 2003 WL 22879684. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisors present when constitutional violations take place are liable under § 1983 if they participate in the wrong or watch what is occurring and fail to intercede. Herrera v. Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 154 . Civil Rights 1355

Personal involvement of defendants in alleged constitutional deprivations is a prerequisite to an award of damages

under § 1983; one way of demonstrating personal involvement is by showing that the defendant personally participated in the alleged constitutional violation with knowledge of the facts that rendered the conduct illegal. Kantha v. Blue, S.D.N.Y.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 90. Civil Rights 1335

"Personal involvement" of defendants in alleged constitutional deprivations for purposes of § 1983 action means direct participation or failure to remedy alleged wrong after learning of it, creation of policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or gross negligence in managing subordinates. Adams v. Galletta, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1335; Civil Rights 1355

Liability against person in his individual capacity under § 1983 is predicated upon personal responsibility and, thus, he cannot be held liable unless he personally caused or participated in alleged constitutional deprivation. Ryan v. Illinois Dept. of Children & Family Services, C.D.Ill.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1490, reversed 185 F.3d 751. Civil Rights 1335

Direct participation is not necessary to hold official liable under § 1983; rather, any official who causes citizen to be deprived of her constitutional rights can also be held liable. Ryan v. Illinois Dept. of Children & Family Services, C.D.Ill.1997, 963 F.Supp. 1490, reversed 185 F.3d 751. Civil Rights 1354

Four ways exist in which defendant may be personally involved in federal civil rights violation, and thus may be held liable under statute: (1) by participating directly in deprivation, (2) by failing to remedy wrong after learning of violation through report or appeal, (3) by creating policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or (4) in managing subordinates who caused deprivation in grossly negligent way. Show v. Patterson, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 182. Civil Rights 1355

Prison official's personal involvement in alleged deprivations of prisoner's constitutional rights, as prerequisite to award of monetary damages in § 1983 action, may occur in one of following ways: (1) direct participation in infraction; (2) failure by supervisory official to remedy wrong after learning of violation through report or appeal; (3) creation by supervisory official of policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowance of such policy or custom to continue; (4) gross negligence by supervisory official in managing subordinates who caused unlawful condition or event; and (5) gross negligence or deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of prisoners by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional practices are taking place. Roucchio v. Coughlin, E.D.N.Y.1996, 923 F.Supp. 360. Civil Rights 1358

For state officer to be properly brought into suit individually under federal civil rights statute, officer must be shown to have been in some manner personally involved in alleged deprivation of rights. Feliciano v. DuBois, D.Mass.1994, 846 F.Supp. 1033. Civil Rights 1354

Defendant may be personally involved in causing constitutional deprivation, as required to support § 1983 claim against him if: defendant participated directly in alleged infraction; or, acting in supervisory capacity, defendant failed to remedy continuing or egregious wrong after learning of violation, created policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred or allowed such policy or custom to continue, or was grossly negligent in managing subordinates who actually caused constitutional deprivation. Candelaria v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1992, 787 F.Supp. 368, affirmed 979 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1355

Individual liability under § 1983 of civil rights statute, regardless of particular constitutional theory, must be based upon personal responsibility; official is personally involved if he participates directly in constitutional deprivation, acts or fails to act with reckless disregard of plaintiff's constitutional rights, or if conduct that deprived plaintiff of his constitutional rights occurred at official's direction or with his knowledge and consent. Patrick v. Staples, N.D.Ind.1991, 780 F.Supp. 1528. Civil Rights 1354

Although defendant's direct participation in deprivation of civil rights is not required to prove § 1983 violation, some involvement in deprivation, such as knowledge, reckless indifference, or authorizing deprivation, is still necessary. De La Paz v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 909. Civil Rights 1335

Personal involvement can be shown through personal direction or through actual knowledge and acquiescence for purposes of principle that defendant must be personally involved in alleged wrongful conduct to be liable under § 1983. Saunders v. Horn, E.D.Pa.1996, 959 F.Supp. 689, report and recommendation adopted 960 F.Supp. 893. Civil Rights 1335

A city official need not have personally participated in a constitutional deprivation for causation to be established in civil rights action, but may be held liable if he breaches duty imposed by state or local law, and breach causes plaintiff's constitutional injury. McQurter v. City of Atlanta, Ga., N.D.Ga.1983, 572 F.Supp. 1401, appeal dismissed 724 F.2d 881. Civil Rights 1354

Under the "affirmative link" standard, government official may be liable under this section even lacking literal personal involvement if he breached a duty which proximately caused injury. Knight v. People of State of Colo., D.C.Colo.1980, 496 F.Supp. 779. Civil Rights 1354

To incur liability under this section, government official need not directly subject person to deprivation of constitutional rights; it is sufficient if official causes person to be subjected to such deprivation. Bradford v. Edelstein, S.D.Tex.1979, 467 F.Supp. 1361. Civil Rights 1027

Personal involvement prerequisite to liability under this section, namely, that defendant must personally and directly participate in acts which were allegedly violative of plaintiff's rights under federal law, is perhaps more correctly stated in terms of a causation test, that is, that defendant must have caused or subjected defendant to a deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. University of Missouri at Columbia-National Ed. Ass'n v. Dalton, W.D.Mo.1978, 456 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1335

Liability under this section is personal. Duisen v. Administrator and Staff, Fulton State Hospital No. 1, Fulton, Mo., W.D.Mo.1971, 332 F.Supp. 125.

383. ---- Necessity, personal involvement in deprivation, liability generally

Arrestee could not recover on § 1983 claim against city and police chief for maintaining allegedly unconstitutional policy on use of police dogs, absent showing that individual arresting officers violated arrestee's constitutional rights through use of police dog to search and detain arrestee. Quintanilla v. City of Downey, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 353, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 972, 519 U.S. 1122, 136 L.Ed.2d 856. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Claim brought against city by parents and child, stemming from assault that allegedly occurred while child was at pre-placement facility after removal, would not be dismissed as matter of law on Monell grounds, where complained-of injuries were not solely attributable to named individual city employees, but instead arose from all those involved in child's care while she was at city's pre-placement facility after removal. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether corrections officers' supervisor was personally involved in alleged violation of inmate's rights by failing to ensure that the officers allowed the inmate to shower on a regular basis precluded summary judgment on inmate's §§ 1983 claim against the supervisor. Roque v. Armstrong, D.Conn.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 382. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A § 1983 plaintiff alleging excessive force by police need not establish who, among a group of officers, directly participated in the attack and who failed to intervene. Jeffreys v. Rossi, S.D.N.Y.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 463, affirmed 426 F.3d 549. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Commissioner of the state department of correctional services could not be liable for damages under the federal civil rights provision absent allegations of any personal involvement in the prisoner's placement in involuntary protective custody and his subsequent transfer to a maximum security facility. Gomez v. Coughlin, S.D.N.Y.1988, 685 F.Supp. 1291. Civil Rights 1358

This section does not require that only defendant who is immediate, direct, or precipitating cause of plaintiff's injury be liable, but, rather, direct personal involvement is not required, as language of statute, "subjects, or causes to be subjected," is broader than direct personal involvement, and includes failure to perform duty if that failure causes deprivation of protected rights. Knight v. People of State of Colo., D.C.Colo.1980, 496 F.Supp. 779. Civil Rights 1335

Personal involvement is a necessary element of a cause of action under this section and a superior official is not liable for the acts of his subordinates merely because he is the superior official. Ruffin v. Beal, E.D.Pa.1978, 468 F.Supp. 482. Civil Rights 1355

384. ---- Acquiescence or inaction, personal involvement in deprivation, liability generally

State hospital security officer who witnessed beating of shackled patient could be held liable under § 1983 without having actively participated in beating; officer had badge of authority and duty to protect patient from assault by other officers. Durham v. Nu'man, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1996, 97 F.3d 862, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1337, 520 U.S. 1157, 137 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1037

Evidence was sufficient to support finding that county prosecutor had actual knowledge of discriminatory conduct against employee and acquiesced in it, and thus was liable to employee under § 1983. Coleman v. Kaye, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1996, 87 F.3d 1491, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 754, 519 U.S. 1084, 136 L.Ed.2d 691. Civil Rights 1421

Standard of liability for supervisor for failure to supervise is demonstrated deliberate indifference or tacit authorization of offensive acts. Tilson v. Forrest City Police Dept., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1994, 28 F.3d 802, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1315, 514 U.S. 1004, 131 L.Ed.2d 196. Civil Rights 1355

Superintendent of Attica Correctional Facility was supervisory official who, after learning that inmate had been confined in special housing unit (SHU) for 67 days without hearing, failed to remedy the wrong and could not escape liability by denying personal involvement. Wright v. Smith, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1994, 21 F.3d 496. Civil Rights 1358

Deputy sheriff could be held liable for violation of civil rights of apartment residents whose doors were broken down by police officers searching for a suspect even if he never kicked in any door nor entered any of the rooms. Melear v. Spears, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 862 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1358

Corrections commissioner could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of inmate's constitutional rights on the sole basis that he did not act in response to letters sent by inmate protesting her placement in segregated confinement without sufficient process. Smart v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1358

A supervisory official's personal involvement in an alleged constitutional deprivation, for purposes of a §§ 1983 claim against the official in his individual capacity, may be shown by evidence that: (1) the defendant participated directly in the alleged constitutional violation; (2) the defendant, after being informed of the violation through a report or appeal, failed to remedy the wrong; (3) the defendant created a policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed the continuance of such a policy or custom; (4) the defendant was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed the wrongful acts; or (5) the defendant exhibited deliberate indifference to others' rights by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Withrow v. Donnelly, W.D.N.Y.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 273. Civil Rights 1355

To satisfy the personal involvement requirement of §§ 1983, a plaintiff need not show direct participation in the constitutional violation by the defendant; however, he must show that the defendant knew about the violation and facilitated it, approved it, condoned it or turned a blind eye for fear of what he or she might see. Koutnik v. Brown, W.D.Wis.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 871. Civil Rights 1335

Officer may be liable under § 1983 not only for his personal use of excessive force, but also for his failure to intervene in appropriate circumstances to protect an arrestee from the excessive use of force by his fellow officers. Herrera v. Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 154. Civil Rights 1088(4)

City manager was subject to personal liability under § 1983, not only if he directed third party to deny newspaper publisher's First Amendment rights and publisher was arrested for installing newsrack without license, but also if he had actual knowledge of or acquiesced in such deprivation. Jacobsen v. Lambers, D.Kan.1995, 888 F.Supp. 1088. Civil Rights 1360

Supervising official may be personally involved in constitutional deprivation by failing to remedy wrong after learning of it. Fominas v. Kelly, W.D.N.Y.1990, 739 F.Supp. 139. Civil Rights 1355

Allegation that supervisors intentionally avoided taking any corrective action whatsoever after being repeatedly told of alleged sexual abuses against employee by her fellow staff attorneys in transit authority was sufficient on which to imply a discriminatory intent under equal protection clause and, hence, was sufficient to support a cause of action under personal responsibility requirement of the civil rights statute. Murphy v. Chicago Transit Authority, N.D.Ill.1986, 638 F.Supp. 464. Civil Rights 1395(8)

385. ---- Active or direct participation, personal involvement in deprivation, liability generally

Superintendent did not violate equal protection rights of elementary school psychologist who allegedly was denied tenure and then terminated based on impermissible gender stereotyping concerning employment suitability of mothers with young children, given lack of allegation that superintendent engaged directly in any discriminatory conduct and absence of evidence suggesting deliberate indifference by superintendent, who conducted his own inquiry into tenure question and investigated psychologist's claim of discrimination by principal and personnel director, precluding determination that superintendent meant to discriminate when he recommended against tenure. Back v. Hastings On Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 365 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1359

State hospital nurse who refused shackled patient's request to use restroom and who witnessed subsequent beating of patient by hospital security officers could be held liable under § 1983 without having actively participated in beating; precedent holding police officers and correctional officers liable for failure to intervene was sufficient to place nurse, who caused conflict, on notice that she had duty to protect patient while under her charge. Durham v. Nu'man, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1996, 97 F.3d 862, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1337, 520 U.S. 1157, 137 L.Ed.2d 496. Civil Rights 1037

Necessary involvement to show supervisory liability under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 can be shown either through proof of personal direction or of actual knowledge and acquiescence. Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 895 F.2d 1469. Civil Rights 1355

Even though personal involvement of defendants in alleged constitutional deprivations is prerequisite to award of damages under § 1983, their participation is not always necessary. Al-Jundi v. Estate of Rockefeller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1989, 885 F.2d 1060. Civil Rights 1336

Because corrections employee had no authority to order prisoner's release or continued confinement in involuntary protective custody (IPC), he could not be found personally involved in determination to continue prisoner's confinement based on his IPC recommendation, and therefore he was not subject to §§ 1983 liability. Smart v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1358

In regards to a defendant sued in his supervisory capacity under §§ 1983, personal involvement may be shown by evidence that (1) the defendant participated directly in the alleged constitutional violation, (2) the defendant, after being informed of the violation through a report or appeal, failed to remedy the wrong, (3) the defendant created a policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed the continuance of such a policy or custom, (4) the defendant was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed the wrongful acts, or (5) the defendant exhibited deliberate indifference to the rights of inmates by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Locicero v. O'Connell, S.D.N.Y.2006, 419 F.Supp.2d 521. Civil Rights 1355

Liability under §§ 1983 must be based on a defendant's personal involvement in the constitutional violation; in order to satisfy the personal involvement requirement, a plaintiff need not show direct participation, however, he must show that the defendant knew about the violation and facilitated it, approved it, condoned it or turned a blind eye for fear of what he or she might see. Borzych v. Frank, W.D.Wis.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 955, reconsideration denied in part 2004 WL 2491597. Civil Rights 1335

Town attorney who served as advisor to board members, drafted release for terminated Assistant Building Inspector to sign to get his compensation, and investigated allegations regarding terminated employee's receipt of free wood while on duty in violation of town Code of Ethics was not liable under § 1983 for employee's termination, withholding of compensation based on his refusal to sign release, and town's subsequent failure to rehire employee; complained-of decisions were made by board vote, and town attorney was not voting member of board and did not have authority to require release of all claims or to rehire employee. Zdziebloski v. Town of East Greenbush, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 194. Civil Rights 1359

In prison inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging cruel and unusual punishment, in violation of Eighth Amendment, corrections officers alleged to have been personally involved in at least one of the instances of constitutional deprivation were not entitled to dismissal of complaint; inmate alleged that denial of a noon meal and exercise periods during four days served in keeplock, as well as two 21-day periods of keeplock confinement, constituted cruel and unusual punishment. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1358

Under "state-created danger theory," if state actor affirmatively creates danger which harms plaintiff or renders him or her more vulnerable to that danger, it may be liable under § 1983 even though state actor does not directly harm plaintiff. Collier by Collier v. William Penn School Dist., E.D.Pa.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1209, reversed 191 F.3d 444. Civil Rights 1039

Supervisory official may be said to have been personally involved in alleged deprivation of inmate's constitutional rights, as required for inmate to maintain civil rights claim against official, if that official directly participated in infraction, official failed to remedy wrong after learning of violation through report or appeal, official created policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred or allowed such policy or custom to continue, or official was grossly negligent in managing subordinates who caused unlawful condition or event. Garcia v. Senkowski, N.D.N.Y.1996, 919 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1358

Town, town supervisor, zoning officer, town clerk, and court appointed receiver were not personally involved in alleged constitutional violations resulting from exposure of former county jail inmate to cigarette smoke while he was incarcerated for contempt based on failure to comply with court order issued in connection with town's efforts to close junkyard; accordingly, defendants could not be held liable under § 1983 for the alleged constitutional violations. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Official such as county sheriff is considered to be personally involved for purposes of liability under § 1983 in individual capacity: if he participates directly in constitutional deprivation; if he acts or fails to act with reckless disregard of plaintiff's constitutional right; or if conduct that deprived plaintiff of his or her constitutional rights occurred at his direction or with his knowledge and consent. Lile v. Tippecanoe County Jail, N.D.Ind.1992, 844 F.Supp. 1301. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Supervisory liability arises under § 1983 when there is a showing that supervisor encouraged specific incident of misconduct or in some other way directly participated in it. Timberlake by Timberlake v. Benton, M.D.Tenn.1992, 786 F.Supp. 676. Civil Rights 1355

Section 1983 liability does not require direct participation in deprivation of plaintiff's constitutional rights; personal responsibility may be established with evidence that officer acted with deliberate or reckless disregard of plaintiff's constitutional rights, or with evidence that conduct causing constitutional deprivation occurred at officer's direction or with his knowledge and consent. Tomasso v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1991, 782 F.Supp. 1231 . Civil Rights 1335; Civil Rights 1355

Without direct participation by defendants, plaintiff seeking recovery for violation of civil rights must show that defendants failed to remedy a wrong after learning of the violation, created an unconstitutional policy, allowed an unconstitutional policy to continue, or acted with gross negligence in managing those who caused the wrong. Smith v. Meachum, D.Conn.1991, 764 F.Supp. 260. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

Deputy sheriff did not have sufficient personal involvement in eviction of landowners from their property to be liable under §§ 1983 in landowners' suit for violation of their Fourth Amendment and due process rights, where at most he ordered the landowners to leave the area on third day of removal of property from the premises, and the evidence that he did even that much was conflicting. Hansen v. Cannon, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 122 Fed.Appx. 265, 2004 WL 2829016, Unreported. Civil Rights 1357

Single unlawful discharge, if ordered by a person whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, can by itself support employment discrimination claim against municipality under equal protection principles and § 1983. Back v. Hastings On Hudson Union Free School Dist., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2004, 365 F.3d 107. Civil Rights 1351(5); Constitutional Law 238.5

In order to impose liability under this section on various city officials, it was not necessary that the officials directed any particular action with respect to plaintiffs but only that they affirmatively promoted a policy sanctioning the type of action which caused due process violations. Duchesne v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1977, 566 F.2d 817. Civil Rights 1354

Director of New York City's Child Welfare Administration (CWA) was not personally involved in alleged abuse of foster children and thus was not liable in her personal capacity under §§ 1983, absent evidence that she personally established allegedly unconstitutional policies, affirmatively approved them, or was aware of them. Tylena M. v. Heartshare Children's Services, S.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1360

The causal connection between a supervisor's wrongful conduct and an alleged constitutional violation is sufficient, for purposes of a §§ 1983 action, if there is evidence that the supervisor implemented a policy so deficient that the policy itself is a repudiation of constitutional rights. Wesley v. Davis, C.D.Cal.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 888. Civil Rights 1355

Public transportation authority could not be liable under § 1983 for supervisor's alleged sexually discriminatory action of holding pregnant employee's light duty request to higher evidentiary standard than other requests; authority did not have custom of holding all light duty requests by pregnant women to higher standard, and, although authority gave some discretion to supervisor in that regard, it did not delegate complete discretion to him. Ascolese v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1995, 902 F.Supp. 533, on reconsideration 925 F.Supp. 351. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Where subordinates act pursuant to policy or procedure adopted by their supervisor and their compliance with policy or procedure results in constitutional violation, promulgation of policy or procedure is sufficient personal participation in constitutional violation to give rise to individual liability on part of supervisory official in civil rights suit. Doe v. Angelina County, Texas, E.D.Tex.1990, 733 F.Supp. 245. Civil Rights 1355

387. ---- Sufficiency of personal involvement, personal involvement in deprivation, liability generally

Village police officer was not sufficiently connected to owner's estranged husband to transform husband's private seizure of owner's personal property into public seizure, for Fourth Amendment purposes, even though officer observed seizure and took no steps to stop husband, where owner was not present at her residence at time, husband's motivation appeared to have been to comply with instructions that police gave him earlier that day to call for police escort before retaking his belongings, there was no evidence that owner or her neighbor were deterred from calling police due to officer's presence, officer had never met or heard of husband, and there was nothing under circumstances to indicate to officer that husband was not entitled to enter residence, did not own television set, or would vandalize apartment. Pepper v. Village of Oak Park, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 430 F.3d 805.

Former employee of the Puerto Rico Highway Authority (PRHA) who alleged that his termination constituted First Amendment political discrimination failed to state claim against members of the PRHA's Appeals Committee who were to hear his administrative complaints concerning termination, where claim consisted entirely of speculation about possible future conduct by officials and officials had nothing to do with termination decision. Cepero-Rivera v. Fagundo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 414 F.3d 124. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Governor's involvement in decision and formulation and implementation of plan to retake prison from inmates and to rescue hostages was insufficient to establish § 1983 liability for injury to inmate, even though Governor was abreast of events; Governor ratified decision by New York State Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services to abandon negotiations, to order state police to formulate plan to regain control of prison, and to approve commencement of actual retaking. Al-Jundi v. Estate of Rockefeller, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1989, 885 F.2d 1060. Civil Rights 1358

Action of district attorney in obtaining indictment against individual who allegedly had already been acquitted on same charge did not sufficiently involve district attorney in arrest of individual pursuant to said indictment so as to render him liable for false arrest under this section, despite unsupported averments of conspiracy. Weathers v. Ebert, C.A.4 (Va.) 1974, 505 F.2d 514, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1480, 424 U.S. 975, 47 L.Ed.2d 745. Civil Rights 1376(9)

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether fire marshals were involved in decision to seek to prosecute school custodian for storage of flammable or combustible materials at a school, whether there was probable cause to arrest custodian, and whether fire marshals acted with malice, precluded summary judgment for fire marshals on custodian's §§ 1983 claim for malicious prosecution. Brown v. Aybar, D.Conn.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 374. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

By alleging superintendent's failure to release her from involuntary protective custody (IPC), prisoner alleged superintendent's personal involvement in the violation of her due process rights resulting from her confinement. Smart v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1395(7) nursing assistant for abuse of nursing home patient did not initiate or continue criminal prosecution, a required element for malicious prosecution claim against him, notwithstanding his statement that he had "input" with prosecutors; investigator did not create false information, withhold evidence, or otherwise assume responsibility for prosecution in manner that would rebut presumption that proceedings were initiated by prosecutors. Mitchell v. Home, S.D.N.Y.2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 219. Malicious Prosecution 4

Chief of police was not liable, under § 1983, for alleged arrest without probable cause of high student, for plotting armed attack on school, since chief did not participate in arrest by members of county sheriff's department, and was in different room of student's house when he was arrested. Smith v. Barber, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1358

Chief administrator of nursing home operated through county's Department of Human Services (DHS) was not individually liable under § 1983, absent evidence she was in any way involved in sexual harassment allegedly experienced by black female food service worker in dietary unit at nursing home, or evidence which established with appropriate specificity that she personally directed or had actual knowledge of racial harassment and hostility allegedly directed at that worker by food service manager and assistant manager and deputy director of county DHS. Hargrave v. County of Atlantic, D.N.J.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 393. Civil Rights 1359

Commissioner of New York State Correctional Services did not have sufficient personal involvement in prison disciplinary hearing to be liable under § 1983 for hearing officer's alleged violation of inmate's due process rights in imposing punishment based on uncorroborated testimony of confidential informers. Zavaro v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1991, 775 F.Supp. 84, affirmed 970 F.2d 1148. Civil Rights 1358

Mayor did not have sufficient personal involvement in eviction of landowners from their property to be liable under §§ 1983 in landowners' suit for violation of their Fourth Amendment and due process rights, where he apparently told contractor hired to remove the landowners' personal property from the premises that the landowners, who owned lot adjacent to that foreclosed on, owned just one property, and may even have done so without adequate investigation, but had no involvement in the seizure of their property. State supervisor's approval of use of special team to conduct search of cells in response to report of loaded gun was insufficient to constitute failure to supervise that could give rise to supervisory liability when team, which had on-site commander, allegedly used excessive force. Serna v. Colorado Dept. of Corrections, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 455 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1358

For a supervisor to be liable for actions of his subordinate under §§ 1983, the plaintiff must show an affirmative link between the subordinate and the supervisor, whether through direct participation or through conduct that amounts to condonation or tacit authorization. Velez-Rivera v. Agosto-Alicea, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 437 F.3d 145. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisor liability in a § 1983 action depends on a showing of some personal responsibility, and cannot rest on respondeat superior; to establish the liability of a supervisory official, a plaintiff must show the defendant's personal involvement in the alleged constitutional violations. Richardson v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 347 F.3d 431. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory official is liable for constitutional violations under § 1983 if he or she directly participated in violation, failed to remedy violation after learning of it through report or appeal, created custom or policy fostering violation or allowed custom or policy to continue after learning of it, or was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who caused violation. . Civil Rights 1355

Medical director of prison was not liable to prisoner for inadequate medical treatment following beating by prison guards, under § 1983; director's liability was premised on his duties as supervisor of prison physician who allegedly failed to treat prisoner, in violation of Eighth Amendment, and no affirmative link was established between alleged constitutional deprivation and director's personal participation, exercise of control or direction, or failure to supervise. Green v. Branson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 108 F.3d 1296. Civil Rights 1358

Municipal police chief, viewed as supervisor rather than policymaker, was not liable under §§ 1983 for any excessive force used by police officers against motorist, in violation of Fourth Amendment, in that he did not personally participate or acquiesce in any instances of excessive force, and there were no widespread and flagrant instances of unconstitutional conduct. Reindl v. City of Leavenworth, Kansas, D.Kan.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1222. Civil Rights 1358

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether prison director, captain, and deputy superintendent were personally involved in acts that allegedly deprived prisoner of his constitutional rights, as would preclude summary judgment for officials, on basis of qualified immunity, in prisoner's civil rights action under §§ 1983, if prisoner stated a claim under §§ 1983. Felton v. Lincoln, D.Mass.2006, 429 F.Supp.2d 226. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Fact that director of police training academy did not personally teach course did not absolve him of supervisory liability under §§ 1983 for failure to adequately train officers concerning interactions between on-duty and off-duty officers. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1359

An individual's general responsibility for supervising the operations of a prison is insufficient to establish personal involvement, as required in a §§ 1983 action alleging a deprivation of constitutional rights by prison personnel. Wesley v. Davis, C.D.Cal.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 888. Civil Rights 1358

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether commissioners of children's services agency were involved in establishing or failing to correct alleged policies and customs underlying constitutional deprivations claimed by mother in connection with removal of her children, precluding summary judgment as to whether damages were available under §§ 1983. Velez v. Reynolds, S.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 293. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Chancellor of university health center, who had no personal involvement in any alleged deprivations of constitutional rights of African-American employee and did not harass employee on basis of her race, could not be personally liable for damages, under § 1983; chancellor's position of high authority with center was not sufficient basis for imposition of personal liability on him. Ozenne v. University of Connecticut Health Care, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 425. Civil Rights 1359

Chancellor of university health center, who had no personal involvement in any alleged deprivations of constitutional rights of Hispanic employee and did not personally harass her because she was Hispanic or Puerto Rican, could not be personally liable for damages, under § 1983; chancellor's position of high authority with center was not sufficient basis for imposition of personal liability on him. Delrio v. University of Connecticut Health Care, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 412. Civil Rights 1359

Chancellor of university health center, who had no personal involvement in any alleged deprivations of constitutional rights of African-American employee and did not harass employee on basis of his race, could not be personally liable for damages, under § 1983; chancellor's position of high authority with center was not sufficient basis for imposition of personal liability on him. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Chancellor of university health center, who had no personal involvement in any alleged deprivations of constitutional rights of nurse's aide, could not be personally liable for damages, under § 1983; chancellor's position of high authority with center was not sufficient basis for imposition of personal liability on him. Sanchez v. University of Connecticut Health Care, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 385. Civil Rights 1359

To establish supervisory official's personal involvement in deprivation of a federal right, plaintiff must demonstrate either (1) direct participation by the supervisory official; (2) a failure to remedy an alleged wrong after learning of the violation; (3) creation of a policy or custom under which the violation occurred; or (4) gross negligence in managing subordinates. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Civil Rights 1355

For a supervisor to be liable under § 1983, the plaintiff must show some affirmative conduct by the supervisor which played a role in the violation; such personal conduct may be shown by demonstrating that the supervisor participated in violating the plaintiff's rights, or that he directed others to violate them, or that he, as the person in charge, had knowledge of and acquiesced in his subordinates' violations. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1355

Public school director could not be held liable on supervisory liability theory under § 1983 for alleged acts of police officer temporarily assigned to the school who allegedly sexually abused a minor student at the school in violation of her due process rights where the director did not have any supervisory status over the police officer; her contact with the officers assigned to the school was very limited and she would only call to request one when the assigned guard failed to appear. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1356; Civil Rights 1358

In prison inmate's § 1983 complaint alleging cruel and unusual punishment, in violation of Eighth Amendment, supervisory corrections officials alleged to have been personally involved in at least one of the instances of constitutional deprivation were not entitled to dismissal of complaint; officials were involved in hearings and appeals of infractions which allegedly resulted in unconstitutional denial of a noon meal and exercise periods during four days served in keeplock, as well as in two 21-day periods of keeplock confinement. Gill v. Hoadley, N.D.N.Y.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 113. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations by former patient of state psychiatric center and mental illness advocacy group that three of center's supervisory officials failed to train employees with respect to conducting patient searches, resulting in unconstitutional search of patient and potential risk of illegal searches of other center patients, stated sufficient personal involvement by the three officials to hold them liable in their individual capacities under § 1983. Aiken v. Nixon, N.D.N.Y.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 211, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 146, 2003 WL 22595837. Civil Rights 1360

There are four ways in which supervisory official may be personally involved in alleged constitutional violation as required for imposition of damages in § 1983 claim against official: directly participating in infraction or being directly involved through ordering that action be taken, failing to remedy wrong after learning of violation, creating or allowing policy to continue under which violation occurred, or being grossly negligent in managing subordinates who caused violation. Jemzura v. Public Service Com'n, N.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 406. Civil Rights 1355

Personal involvement of supervisory defendant, permitting award of damages in civil rights action under § 1983, may be shown by evidence that: defendant participated directly in alleged constitutional violation; defendant, after being informed of violation through report or appeal, failed to remedy wrong; defendant created policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred; or allowed continuance of such policy or custom; defendant was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed wrongful acts; or defendant exhibited deliberate indifference to rights of plaintiffs by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Interboro Institute, Inc. v. Maurer, N.D.N.Y.1997, 956 F.Supp. 188. Civil Rights 1355

In order to be liable for violation of public employee's liberty interest under federal civil rights statute, supervisory official need not have participated personally in act, but there must be some causal connection between act of official and alleged violation, and supervisory failure must amount to gross negligence or conscious indifference, rather than mere negligence. Willbanks v. Smith County, Tex., E.D.Tex.1987, 661 F.Supp. 212. See, also, Hamrick v. Lewis, D.C.Del.1981, 515 F.Supp. 983. Civil Rights 1359

For supervisory official to be liable for civil rights violation, he must be personally involved, that is, the constitutional deprivation must take place at direction of supervisory official or with his knowledge and consent. Perry v. Elrod, N.D.Ill.1977, 436 F.Supp. 299. Civil Rights 1355

State prison commissioner and warden were not subject to supervisory liability under §§ 1983 for failing to remedy violations inmate complained of and failing to adequately supervise prison employees, absent evidence that commissioner or warden personally participated in constitutional violations, or were deliberately indifferent to inmate's rights. Ziemba v. Clark, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2006, 167 Fed.Appx. 831, 2006 WL 354422, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

389. ---- Policy-making officials, personal involvement in deprivation, liability generally

State agency employee's coworkers other than agency head who had made ultimate decision to terminate employee could not be liable in employee's § 1983 First Amendment action alleging retaliation for making sexual harassment report; no conspiracy between agency head and coworkers was alleged. Johnson v. Louisiana, C.A.5 (La.) 2004, 369 F.3d 826. Civil Rights 1359

Municipal liability under § 1983 attaches where, and only where, deliberate choice to follow course of action is made from among various alternatives by official or officials responsible for establishing final policy with respect to subject matter in question; in order to have final policymaking authority, official must possess responsibility for making law or setting policy, that is, authority to adopt rules for conduct of government. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Borough could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly unlawful conduct of a non-party mayor in an action brought by a police officer challenging his non-selection for a promotional position where, under state law, the final decisionmaking authority rested with the borough council, not the mayor; fact that the council sought the recommendations of the mayor and apparently gave that recommendation substantial deference was their prerogative, but it did not change the conclusion that, pursuant to the borough code, the borough council and not the mayor was the decisionmaker with final, unreviewable discretion for the purposes of §§ 1983 liability. Dolly v. Borough of Yeadon, E.D.Pa.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Under Maine law, school superintendent was not an authorized policymaker, as would support imposition of municipal liability under §§ 1983 against school district based upon superintendent's alleged retaliation against former school district employee, where superintendent did not have authority to develop and implement employment policies. Craig v. Maine School Administrative Dist. # 5, D.Me.2004, 350 F.Supp.2d 294. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Even if superintendent of school district and high school principal had official-policy making authority, they did not personally participate in alleged arrests without probable cause of high school students, for plotting armed attack on school, as required to hold school district liable under § 1983 for false arrest. Supervisory police officer was sufficiently involved in search of apartment during which tenant was allegedly forced to remain naked to be subject to liability in tenant's subsequent civil rights action; officer planned and initiated search and participated in search once inside dwelling. Hall v. Shipley, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1991, 932 F.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1358

Special FBI agent who was present when affidavit supporting warrant for aggravated kidnapping arrest was presented to state judge, possibly lending credibility to affidavit, and who took an active role in physical arrest of alleged kidnappers, had assisted state official in depriving arrestees of Fourth Amendment rights for purposes of arrestees' federal civil rights claim. Hale v. Fish, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 899 F.2d 390. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Caseworkers and site supervisor of nonprofit corporation's home for young adults satisfied "personal involvement" criterion in resident's §§ 1983 action alleging failure to intervene in assault committed by second resident; defendants were present at scene of incident, and thus directly participated in alleged violation. Vega v. Fox, S.D.N.Y.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 172. Civil Rights 1341

County District Attorney (DA) had sufficient personal involvement to be named as defendant in village police chief's §§ 1983 action although he was not chief's employer and did not participate in decision not to renew chief's contract; chief's allegations suggested that DA was personally involved in decision not to rehire chief and that statements made by DA to chief's prospective employers were connected to chief's loss of job. Hoffman v. Kelz, W.D.Wis.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 1007. Civil Rights 1359

Former prisoner adequately stated that causal link existed between physicians' involvement in autopsy and prisoner's wrongful imprisonment for 21 years, in civil rights lawsuit under Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, on allegations that physicians improperly exerted pressure, knowingly provided misinformation, concealed and destroyed exculpatory evidence, and were actively instrumental in causing legal proceedings to be brought against prisoner. Marsh v. San Diego County, S.D.Cal.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1395(7)

State higher education center official who was responsible for scheduling and assignment of location of special events on the campus was personally involved in events that violated First Amendment free speech rights of nonstudent group that was restricted from demonstrating at the campus's designated public forum area, as required to be held liable under §§ 1983, where he not only applied the center's unwritten regulation that assigned the group

Caseworker was personally involved in alleged constitutional deprivations against mother whose children were removed, as required for award of damages under §§ 1983, where she filed petitions charging mother with neglect and seeking extension of placement. Velez v. Reynolds, S.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 293. Civil Rights 1360

School district's director of special education had personal involvement in placement of student in private school, that school's termination of student, and subsequent development of new Individualized Education Plan (IEP), satisfying personal participation requirement for § 1983 action claiming director violated Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). P.N. v. Greco, D.N.J.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 221. Schools 63(3)

State psychiatric center program director's conduct of placing a standing order in patient's record, which ordered staff in crisis unit to carefully search patient whenever he appeared for admission, stated sufficient personal involvement by program director to state a § 1983 claim against her in her individual capacity for her implementation of center's allegedly unconstitutional policy for search of patients. Aiken v. Nixon, N.D.N.Y.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 211, affirmed 80 Fed.Appx. 146, 2003 WL 22595837. Civil Rights 1360

Correctional officer who placed inmate in keeplock, without filing misbehavior report, with result that review officer never advised inmate of charges against him and no hearing was scheduled, was personally involved in alleged deprivation of inmate's due process rights, as required to support inmate's § 1983 claim against him. Schmelzer v. Norfleet, S.D.N.Y.1995, 903 F.Supp. 632. Civil Rights 1092

Inmate's complaint sufficiently alleged personal participation of Commission of Correction and warden in alleged constitutional wrong to sustain claim under § 1983 arising out of alleged sexual assault by another inmate. Johnson v. Meachum, D.Conn.1993, 839 F.Supp. 953. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Police chief had sufficient personal involvement in eviction of landowners from their property to be liable under §§ 1983 in landowners' suit for violation of their Fourth Amendment and due process rights, where the chief was present on third day of eviction crew's removal of personal property and ordered the landowners to leave or be arrested, and directed the eviction crew to continue moving property out of garage on separate lot after they had stopped when landowners objected. that the police chief failed to supervise the police detectives who conducted the investigation. Kohler v. Englade, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 470 F.3d 1104. Civil Rights 1358

State prison director's receipt of periodic reports about progress of special team that was attempting to retrieve loaded gun reportedly located in one of three cells was not direct participation in operation that might give rise to supervisory liability for team's alleged use of excessive force; evidence did not suggest that director directed application of force or used communications to instruct officers to behave unconstitutionally. Serna v. Colorado Dept. of Corrections, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 455 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisors of members of parole board did not have authority to override board, and thus could not be liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violations of prisoner's due process and equal protection rights related to imposition of conditions on parole, since they had no personal involvement in the alleged deprivation. Mayorga v. Missouri, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 442 F.3d 1128. Civil Rights 1358

City's street superintendents and mayor were entitled to qualified immunity, in African-American property owner's § § 1983 retaliation claim, alleging that city officials towed her sister's mobile home restaurant in retaliation for property owner filing suit challenging officials' failure to maintain drainage ditch along owner's property, absent showing that mayor or street superintendents had anything to do with the towing of the mobile home. Wilson v. Northcutt, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 441 F.3d 586, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Even assuming that a consultant for Puerto Rico Government Development Bank (GDB) had protected due process interest in the continuation of his employment contract, President of GDB was not liable, in consultant's §§ 1983 claim alleging that cancellation of his contract violated due process, absent showing that President was directly involved with the contract cancellation. Velez-Rivera v. Agosto-Alicea, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2006, 437 F.3d 145. Civil Rights 1359

Neighboring county did not have legal custody of foster child, and thus it could not be liable under §§ 1983 to child under special relationship exception to rule that government ordinarily did not have substantive due process duty to protect private citizens from doing harm to each other; although neighboring county granted courtesy license that allowed foster child to be placed in home of foster parent and home of foster parent was in neighboring county, foster child, inter alia, lived in other county and attended school there, other county took him from his grandparents' custody after his involvement in petty crime, and it processed foster care application. Waubanascum v. Shawano County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 416 F.3d 658, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1045, 163 L.Ed.2d 858. Constitutional Law 255(4)

Former employee of the Puerto Rico Highway Authority (PRHA) who alleged that his termination constituted First Amendment political discrimination failed to establish that various officials of the PRHA were personally and directly involved in alleged violation of his rights, as required to support his §§ 1983 claim against officials; claim against officials was a general and unsubstantiated conspiracy theory that they all conspired with Executive Director of the PRHA to provoke employee into confrontations in order to justify his dismissal. Cepero-Rivera v. Fagundo, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2005, 414 F.3d 124. Conspiracy 19

In Puerto Rico municipal employees' political discrimination case under § 1983, stipulation that human resources director was strictly following orders and had no participation in act or official decision not to renew employees' contracts meant she could not be found individually liable for any constitutional violation associated with that decision. Gomez v. Rivera Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 344 F.3d 103. Stipulations 14(10)

Mayor and city attorney could not be held liable under § 1983 in civil rights claim brought by arrestee pro se alleging multiple constitutional violations, absent allegations of an affirmative link between the alleged deprivations and either the mayor or city attorney's personal participation, exercise of control or direction, or failure to supervise. Ledbetter v. City of Topeka, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 318 F.3d 1183. Civil Rights

State prisoner's two letters to state Department of Corrections commissioner concerning appeal from administrative segregation hearing and commissioner's responses, referring first letter to prison official for decision and informing prisoner that official had rendered decision, did not demonstrate requisite personal involvement on commissioner's part to make commissioner liable under § 1983 for alleged due process violations arising from prisoner's administrative segregation. Sealey v. Giltner, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 116 F.3d 47, on remand 997 F.Supp. 316. Civil Rights 1358

Prison administrators were not liable under § 1983 for prisoner's injury resulting from altercation with other prisoner that was not stopped by prison officials, even though administrators had helped develop training programs used at prison in years preceding incident, which acknowledged need for prison guards to be trained in use of nonlethal weapons to control prisoners, since administrators were neither personally involved in incident in which prisoner was injured nor ever supervised any guards involved in incident. Grimsley v. MacKay, C.A.10 (Utah) 1996, 93 F.3d 676. Civil Rights 1358

Commissioner of state department of correctional services could not be held liable under § 1983 for civil rights violations committed against prisoner, absent showing that commissioner personally participated in the violations. Black v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 76 F.3d 72, on remand 15 F.Supp.2d 311. Civil Rights 1358

Relatives of alleged victim of police abuse failed to show that police superintendent was liable for death of alleged victim; no competent proof was presented of actual participation, policy of tolerating similar violations, or of deliberate indifference, and administrative complaints naming police officers were not related to charges in instant case so as to put superintendent on inquiry notice. Maldonado-Denis v. Castillo-Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 23 F.3d 576. Civil Rights 1358

Parole officer's supervisor was not personally involved in parole officer's decision to hold parolee pending revocation hearing and thus could not be held liable to parolee in civil rights suit. Mee v. Ortega, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1992, 967 F.2d 423. Civil Rights 1358

State prison official was not personally involved in treatment which inmate received after his classification to administrative segregation so as to make prison official liable under § 1983 for violation of inmate's Fourteenth Amendment rights due to failure to provide periodic review of inmate status. Hardin v. Straub, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1193. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee could not maintain action against chief of police alleging false arrest, illegal detention and malicious prosecution under § 1983; chief did not participate in any of activity leading up to the arrest, there was no evidence from which it could be inferred that chief was more than negligent in failing to investigate arrestee's claim of innocence and chief could not be held vicariously liable for conduct of subordinate officers. Sanders v. English, C.A.5 (La.) 1992, 950 F.2d 1152. Civil Rights 1358

Police chief could not be held liable in civil rights for actions of subordinates in making of arrest in the absence of any allegation that police chief was personally involved in incident. Hansen v. Black, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 885 F.2d 642. Civil Rights 1358

Federal Government was not liable for allegedly wrongful execution of search warrant in civil rights action under § 1983, where federal agents were not present at time of search which was conducted by county officials, even though Drug Enforcement Administration had provided county information and had planned joint raid with county officials. Bergquist v. County of Cochise, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1986, 806 F.2d 1364. Civil Rights 1364

Sheriff was not liable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for illegal arrest performed by his deputy, where sheriff was neither personally involved in arrest or detention of arrestee, nor was there causal connection between his acts and violation of arrestee's federal rights. Dennis v. Warren, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1985, 779 F.2d 245. Civil Rights 1358

Allegations that county executive received a letter from jail nurses regarding treatment of mentally ill jail inmates was insufficient to establish county executives' personal involvement in any alleged violation of inmates' constitutional rights, as required to state § 1983 claim against county executive. Atkins v. County of Orange, S.D.N.Y.2003, 251 F.Supp.2d 1225. Civil Rights 1358

High school principal, in his official capacity, could not be liable, under § 1983, for teacher's alleged use of excessive force against student in violation of student's rights under the Fourteenth Amendment; principal's only involvement in incident was his receipt of investigative report from school's director of security regarding incident. Knicrumah v. Albany City School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1356

Regional medical director of several prison facilities who denied prisoner treatment with Rebetron Therapy for his Hepatitis C based on mistaken diagnosis that prisoner also suffered from Hepatitis B, for which Rebetron Therapy was contraindicated, was not subject to civil rights liability on deliberate indifference claim based on error in his diagnosis and treatment recommendations, particularly where inmate was approved for Therapy one day later. Johnson v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 352. Civil Rights 1358; Prisons 17(2); Sentencing And Punishment 1546

Director of state department of corrections and chief of prisoner classification and planning were not liable under § § 1983 for classification committee's classification of state inmate as sex offender based upon a prior dismissed rape charge, where director and chief had not been personally involved in classifying inmate as a sex offender, did not engage in any wrongful conduct that was causally connected to inmate's classification, and did not implement a policy so deficient that it was a repudiation of inmate's constitutional rights. Kritenbrink v. Crawford, D.Nev.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 1139. Civil Rights 1358

Territorial corrections official who was in charge of corrections department's criminal records and who alerted department's legal division to fact that inmate's recorded good-time credits were incorrect, resulting in amendment of those records and inmate's immediate release, could not be liable in inmate's subsequent §§ 1983 action alleging that her term of imprisonment had been unconstitutionally prolonged; official had no direct contact with inmate and there was no showing of any action by him that could have resulted in violation of inmate's rights. Ayuso-Figueroa v. Rivera-Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 456 F.Supp.2d 309. Civil Rights 1358

Police sergeant who investigated and wrote report regarding arrest of felon in possession of firearms, and shooting of arrestee's pit bull, did not have degree of personal involvement required for liability in §§ 1983 action claiming that arresting officer and animal protection personnel violated arrestee Fourth Amendment rights. Chambers v. Doe, D.Del.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 858. Civil Rights 1358

State prisoner's letter to prison superintendent, which complained about certain matters, and superintendent's denial of several grievances filed by prisoner concerning those matters did not demonstrate requisite personal involvement by superintendent to subject him to liability under §§ 1983 for alleged due process violations; superintendent denied grievances based on conclusions of investigation by department of corrections personnel, that there was no evidence to support the grievances. Brooks v. Chappius, W.D.N.Y.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 220. Civil Rights 1358

Police officers who were not involved in initiating or pursuing citations against a motorist could not be held liable on the motorist's malicious prosecution claim. Siegel v. Miller, E.D.Pa.2006, 446 F.Supp.2d 346. Malicious Prosecution 3

Because the final determination whether to continue an inmate on involuntary protective custody (IPC) status was made by corrections superintendent rather than committee, and because committee members did not exercise de facto power over inmate's continued confinement, committee members had no personal involvement in any due process violation resulting from that decision. Smart v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2006, 441 F.Supp.2d 631. Civil Rights 1358

Commissioner of the New York State Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) was not liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly inadequate mental health care received by state inmate, absent evidence that Commissioner participated in any of the alleged violations of the inmate's rights, that he knew of but failed to act on information about such violations, or that he was grossly negligent in supervising any subordinates who committed the wrongful acts. Goodson v. Evans, W.D.N.Y.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1358

State university chancellor, who oversaw 27,000 employees, was not liable, in §§ 1983 suit, for alleged wrongful termination of wrestling coach, when there was no showing of personal involvement. Burch v. Regents of University of California, E.D.Cal.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1359

Commissioner of city agency having responsibility for foster placement of children lacked sufficient knowledge of, and had not personally participated in, placement of children in allegedly unfit foster homes, precluding liability in §§ 1983 action claiming deprivation of children's substantive due process rights. Richards v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 433 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1360

Supervisors of police officers did not personally participate in alleged malicious prosecution of arrestee by refusing to discipline police officers after arrestee filed complaint with internal affairs department, and thus municipality could not be liable on arrestee's §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim under Colorado law; although officers allegedly filed false reports, supervisors did not assist in prosecution of arrestee and otherwise did not know about charge against arrestee until after it had been dismissed. Barton v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1358

Mayor was not liable under §§ 1983 for subordinate city officials' alleged harassment of property owner, where there was no evidence that mayor directly participated in any unconstitutional conduct, and owner's only allegation against mayor was that he sent copies of correspondence from owner to various city employees. Petricca v. City of Gardner, D.Mass.2006, 429 F.Supp.2d 216. Civil Rights 1357

Employees of county environmental health department, who had investigated possible violations of environmental laws and permits by operators of septic tank pumping business, were not instrumental in initiating criminal prosecution of operators, precluding operators' §§ 1983 malicious prosecution claim against employees; district attorney alone had initiated prosecution, and employees' involvement, primarily consisting of referral of information to district attorney, was tangential to that decision. Ayala v. KC Environmental Health, E.D.Cal.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1358

In §§ 1983 malicious prosecution action against individual other than prosecutor, liability depends on whether defendant was actively instrumental in causing prosecution; presumption of prosecutorial independence can be overcome by showing that defendant, e.g., improperly exerted pressure on prosecutor, knowingly provided misinformation to him, concealed exculpatory evidence, or otherwise engaged in wrongful or bad-faith conduct instrumental in initiation of prosecution. Ayala v. KC Environmental Health, E.D.Cal.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1404

Supervisor of police officers who were deployed to neighborhood due to drug trafficking activity was not liable under §§ 1983 for officers' actions in allegedly assaulting certain neighborhood residents, absent evidence that he was personally involved in any action that might have deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Nieves Cruz v. Com. of Puerto Rico, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 188. Civil Rights 1358

Commissioner of Correctional Services did not retaliate against corrections officer, in violation of section 1981 or section 1983, where Commissioner did not review officer's termination, and Commissioner was never notified of officer's allegations of retaliation against lieutenant. Henderson v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 129. Prisons 7

Police chief was not liable, in §§ 1983 action, for alleged false arrest and unlawful detention of bystander watching fight; required personal participation in altercation was not shown, and in any event bystander's plea of nolo contendere to charges arising out of altercation precluded any damages award. Reynolds v. Smythe, E.D.Pa.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 724. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisory officials at state court clerk's office were not personally involved in processing father's visitation petition, and thus were not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of father's constitutional rights as result of office's refusal to process petition, where officials were not personally responsible for docketing or filing custody and visitation petitions, were not contacted by clerks regarding any defects in father's petition, had no personal knowledge of any contact between lawyers representing mother and clerk's office, and had never seen father's petition. McKnight v. Baker, E.D.Pa.2006, 415 F.Supp.2d 559. Civil Rights 1360

Police officer who observed altercation between security guards at public hospital and illegally parked motorist when responding to call about the incident was not liable for alleged deprivation of motorist's rights under §§ 1983, where officer never touched nor arrested motorist, and his role in the events that transpired was merely to call for police assistance and to restrain motorist's wife from joining the altercation. Monge v. Cortes, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 413 F.Supp.2d 42. Civil Rights 1358

Puerto Rico teacher could not bring §§ 1983 claim against school director based on alleged deprivation of teacher's protected liberty interest from his suspension and referral to psychiatrist by former Secretary of Department of Education (DOE); although director had sent letter to DOE official requesting that teacher be mentally evaluated based on several alleged incidents of verbal aggression at school, director was not personally liable to teacher for any due process violations that Secretary's actions almost a year later may have entailed. Santiago-Rodriguez v. Rey, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 404 F.Supp.2d 400. Civil Rights 1356

Failure to connect county commissioners with any events leading up to suicide of jail detainee precluded individual capacity liability for being deliberately indifferent to detainee in violation of his due process rights. Gaston v. Ploeger, D.Kan.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 1211. Civil Rights 1358

Town employee was not liable under §§ 1983 for violating equal protection and due process rights of citizen, who wanted to speak out against employee at town board meeting, when first selectman of town board of selectmen prevented citizen from making such comments, since employee did not have any personal involvement with decision of selectman. Piscottano v. Town of Somers, D.Conn.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 187. Civil Rights 1360

Inmate who sued county sheriff, stemming from attack by other inmates while incarcerated, failed to establish that sheriff was personally involved in alleged Eighth Amendment deprivation, as required to maintain claim for supervisory liability under §§ 1983; sheriff was not present at facility at time of attack, and there were no facts showing that sheriff knew of attack and failed to act to prevent it, or promulgated or implemented policy so deficient that policy itself was moving force behind constitutional violation. Collins v. County of Kern, E.D.Cal.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 964. Civil Rights 1358

City caseworker's supervisor was not personally involved in alleged abuse of foster children and thus was not liable in her personal capacity under §§ 1983, even if she was assigned specifically to children's cases, where she was not informed of violations prior to children's removal from foster home, did not create policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, and was not grossly negligent in supervising a subordinate who committed constitutional violations. Tylena M. v. Heartshare Children's Services, S.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil

Sheriff's deputies who arrived on the scene after arresting deputy had already apprehended arrestee did not participate in the arresting deputy's alleged use of excessive force, and thus, could not be liable, in arrestee's §§ 1983 claim. Marley v. Crawford County, Arkansas, W.D.Ark.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 1129. Civil Rights 1358

Mayor's alleged lobbying of supervisor to terminate city employee was insufficient to establish mayor's participation in purported conspiracy to violate employee's civil rights, absent allegation that mayor acted out of racial animus toward employee or that mayor harbored any racial animus against employee. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 373 F.Supp.2d 385, subsequent determination 379 F.Supp.2d 475. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Neither mayor's failure to file a declaratory judgment action challenging borough ordinance giving hiring preference to Native Americans nor his authorization of hiring under the ordinance demonstrated that he participated in decision not to hire unsuccessful applicant or, if he did, that he considered applicant's race or national origin, in violation of state and federal antidiscrimination laws. Welch v. North Slope Borough, D.Alaska 2005, 364 F.Supp.2d 1074. Civil Rights 1238; Civil Rights 1359; Civil Rights 1736

Amended complaint alleging that county clerk failed to turn over transcript of Sandoval hearing as part of conspiracy by city and city police department to violate pro se plaintiff's civil rights was insufficient to state §§ 1983 claim against the clerk, absent allegation of how the clerk was personally involved in alleged conspiracy, or the alleged "policy" of independent municipal corporation for whom clerk did not work and to whom he had no responsibility. McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, S.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 574. Conspiracy 18

Prisoner failed to state §§ 1983 claim against prison officials for allegedly failing to protect him from incident of verbal sexual harassment by prison guard or for denying his grievance, absent any allegation of officials' personal involvement in alleged sexual misconduct or allegation that misconduct continued after officials became aware of prisoner's grievance. Ornelas v. Giurbino, S.D.Cal.2005, 358 F.Supp.2d 955. Civil Rights 1358

Governor and other high ranking state officials were not subject to personal liability under §§ 1983 for allegedly wrongful removal of attorney from list maintained by state board of prison terms (BPT) from which attorneys were appointed to represent parolees in parole revocation proceedings, despite attorney's contentions that "the buck stops here," and "the fish rots from the head down," absent factual allegations showing officials' personal involvement in decision. Jacobson v. Schwarzenegger, C.D.Cal.2004, 357 F.Supp.2d 1198. Civil Rights 1360

State higher education center's vice president of administration could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for violation of nonstudent group's First Amendment free speech rights when the group was restricted from demonstrating at the campus's designated public forum area, where there was no evidence that the vice president was personally involved in any way with the determination to assign the group to an alternative area on the campus. Mason v. Wolf, D.Colo.2005, 356 F.Supp.2d 1147. Civil Rights 1356

Alleged conduct by commissioner of child welfare administration of responding to letters written by Jewish mother of foster care child regarding mother's concerns with administration's failure to place child in Jewish foster home and failing to take action on such complaints was insufficient to establish that commissioner was personally involved in alleged violations of mother's constitutional rights, as required to attribute liability to municipality in mother's § 1983 claim alleging violations of mother's First Amendment free exercise rights. Bruker v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 539. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Personal involvement by elected commissioner of Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI) was insufficient to hold him personally liable for alleged constitutional violations involving nonrenewal of farm and forest labor contractor's license; commissioner was not involved in either underlying investigation of alleged unlawful practices, including employment of untrained firefighters and wage and hour violations, or issuance of nonrenewal and penalty orders but instead had delegated relevant responsibilities to subordinates. Lumbreras v. Roberts, D.Or.2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1191, affirmed 156 Fed.Appx. 952, 2005 WL 3304174. Civil Rights 1360

Chief of police did not personally participate in search of high school student's home, as required to hold chief liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of Fourth Amendment based on lack of probable cause; chief only stood inside doorway while sheriff's deputies searched home. Smith v. Barber, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1358

Present and former village mayors and commissioners of public safety were not subject to liability under § 1983 for village constables' allegedly illegal detentions of motorists, absent allegation that mayors and commissioners personally participated in detentions. Brewer v. Village of Old Field, E.D.N.Y.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 390. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner failed to show in civil rights lawsuit that any acts or omissions by sheriff in his individual capacity amounted to reckless or callous indifference to prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights, where prisoner failed to affirmatively link any allegedly illegal conduct by corrections officers to any act, omission, or policy of sheriff; prisoner merely alleged that other corrections officers took actions which were against policy of correctional facility, or that officers violated past practices whereby correctional officers took reasonable steps to protect inmates during large scale altercations. Broner v. Flynn, D.Mass.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 227. Civil Rights 1358

Prison superintendent and state corrections commissioner had insufficient personal involvement to be potentially liable in prison inmate's § 1983 Eighth Amendment action alleging corrections officers' assault on and retaliation against inmate; commissioner never saw inmate's letters containing allegations against officers, and superintendent received one letter alleging excessive force on part of officer involved in § 1983 action and forwarded it for investigation, resulting in finding that allegation was meritless, and did not receive notice of imminent assault by corrections officers or indications of substantial risk of serious harm from officers. Liner v. Goord, W.D.N.Y.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 550. Civil Rights 1358

Department of Children and Families (DCF) officials who did not have anything to do with scheduling, continuance, or conduct of administrative hearing at which foster parent was deemed to have abused foster child could not be held liable under § 1983 for violating foster parent's Fourteenth Amendment procedural due process rights. Carroll v. Ragaglia, D.Conn.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 324, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 109 Fed.Appx. 459, 2004 WL 2165397. Civil Rights 1360

Part-time city employee, whose involvement in plaintiff's arrest and subsequent detention was limited to having issued misdemeanor citations to plaintiff which provided the basis for his arrest after plaintiff failed to appear for hearing, could not be held liable for violations of arrestee's due process rights resulting from arrestee's excessive detention. Bunyon v. Burke County, S.D.Ga.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1310. Civil Rights 1358

Police commissioner could not be held personally liable for alleged unconstitutional conditions of confinement that arrestee encountered in holding cell, even assuming personal knowledge of those alleged conditions, where holding cell was within jurisdiction of corrections department, rather than police department. Maxwell v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 285, reconsideration denied, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 380 F.3d 106, supplemented 108 Fed.Appx. 10, 2004 WL 1800645. Civil Rights 1358

Conduct of superintendent of state mental health facility did not cause facility's alleged failure to comply with state law mandates regarding patient care, on § 1983 substantive due process confinement condition claim by patients who had been adjudicated not guilty by reason of insanity (NGRI); superintendent did not participate in direct patient care, was not involved in grievance process, did not control patient discharge, although he recommended discharge, and no evidence showed how state's general mandates regarding minimum levels of care gave superintendent power to make facility compliant. Neiberger v. Hawkins, D.Colo.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1140. Civil Rights 1360

Motorist failed to show that township chief of police was personally involved in alleged use of excessive force by township police officer during his arrest, as required to impose supervisory liability under § 1983; chief did not learn of incident until after motorist filed suit, and immediately investigated incident after learning of the suit. Pahle v. Colebrookdale Tp., E.D.Pa.2002, 227 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1358

County employee who acted as homemaker, parental aid, and foster parent to children was not personally involved in alleged deprivation of mother's constitutional rights to visitation with the children, and therefore, was not liable under § 1983. Young v. County of Fulton, N.D.N.Y.1998, 999 F.Supp. 282, affirmed 160 F.3d 899. Civil Rights 1360

Neither warden's knowledge that subjective selection criteria had been used by interview panel to determine final applicant scores in promotion process nor his subsequent acceptance of such scores were sufficient, by themselves, to establish warden's individual or supervisory liability under § 1983 for alleged violation of equal protection rights of unsuccessful African-American promotion applicant. Beckett v. Department of Corrections of the State of Del., D.Del.1997, 981 F.Supp. 319. Civil Rights 1359

Police chief did not personally create or maintain policy or custom of tolerating or encouraging use of excessive force, so as to warrant § 1983 liability in individual capacity arising from officers' alleged use of excessive force on arrestee during booking; arrestee's bits and pieces of evidence evinced, at best, a lack of oversight on chief's part as to unrelated issues. Amato v. City of Saratoga Springs, N.D.N.Y.1997, 972 F.Supp. 120, affirmed in part, vacated in part 170 F.3d 311. Civil Rights 1358

Claimant's failure to present any evidence to establish that excessive force used by deputy during her arrest was pursuant to official policy or custom of sheriff precluded claim that arresting deputy personally and sheriff in his official capacity were liable for § 1983 claim. DuFour-Dowell v. Cogger, N.D.Ill.1997, 969 F.Supp. 1107, motion to amend denied 980 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1358

Parish sheriff was not personally involved in alleged violation of constitutional rights of individual who was fatally shot by off-duty deputy sheriff with revolver issued by parish after child custody dispute, and thus, sheriff could not be held liable on that basis in federal civil rights action, even though sheriff had witnessed dispute between deputy and individual's attorney, in which deputy had threatened to bring lawsuit; at most, sheriff could be credited with acquiring suspicion that deputy might bring lawsuit, which could not be characterized as participation in shooting. Read v. Attaway, W.D.La.1996, 944 F.Supp. 480. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Supervising state trooper was qualifiedly immune from speeding motorist's action alleging that motorist's right to be free from unreasonable seizure was violated when state police set up roadblock to prevent his escape; roadblock was reasonable and, even if it were not, supervising trooper was not personally involved in acts which caused injury, and did not fail to supervise or train officers. Seekamp v. Michaud, D.Me.1996, 936 F.Supp. 23, affirmed 109 F.3d 802. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Prison warden had to be dismissed from inmates' civil rights lawsuit where complaints did not allege that warden participated in any of the alleged acts, or that he knew of such acts and acquiesced in their occurrence. Hancock v. Thalacker, N.D.Iowa 1996, 933 F.Supp. 1449. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Prison supervisors could not be deemed personally involved in medical staff's actions that inmate claimed to have violated his Eighth Amendment rights on the sole allegation that supervisors responded to inmate's letter complaining about his medical treatment. Abdush-Shahid v. Coughlin, N.D.N.Y.1996, 933 F.Supp. 168. Civil Rights 1358

South Dakota Department of Game, Fish and Parks officials were not subject to supervisory liability under § 1983 for their subordinate's placement of spikes on hill to curtail hill climbing activities, which resulted in trucker's death when spikes punctured two of his tires, causing his truck to roll downhill; officials were not personally responsible for placement of spikes, and they did not even know about such devices. Furgeson v. Bisbee, D.S.D.1996, 932 F.Supp. 1185. Civil Rights 1360

Superintendent of correctional facility and commissioner of state Department of Corrections were not personally involved in violating inmate's Eighth Amendment rights by allegedly exposing him to asbestos and thus were not liable under § 1983; there was no evidence that either defendant was aware that there was asbestos in area where inmate was working or that they assigned him to work in that area, inmate did not allege that defendants had knowledge of asbestos prior to inmate's exposure, and there was no evidence of a policy or custom of exposing inmates to asbestos. Napoleoni v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1996, 932 F.Supp. 559. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisor who played no part in transfer or transport of prisoner could not be held personally liable under § 1983 for alleged violation of constitutional rights. Wilson v. Cooper, N.D.Ill.1996, 922 F.Supp. 1286. Civil Rights 1358

Claimant could not maintain § 1983 action against governor for violations of her civil and constitutional rights when she was allegedly ordered to sign and file tax return against her will in marriage dissolution proceedings, where claimant did not allege that governor had any personal involvement in her alleged constitutional deprivation. Del Marcelle v. State of Wis., E.D.Wis.1995, 902 F.Supp. 859. Civil Rights 1360

Employee could not maintain § 1983 claim for sex discrimination, based on denial of request for light-duty work, against employer's chief administrative officer, since testimony indicated at most that officer and her subordinates collectively played role in considering request, not that officer herself did. Ascolese v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1995, 902 F.Supp. 533, on reconsideration 925 F.Supp. 351. Civil Rights 1340

City police department's issuance of four tickets to father for violating residential zoning ordinance, although improper, did not qualify as act of harassment or retaliation with respect to city, county attorney, mayor, and city chief of police, for purposes of family's § 1983 claim of conspiracy to retaliate against family for exercising their First Amendment rights, where it did not appear that any defendants were involved in decision to issue tickets. Libbra v. City of Litchfield, Ill., C.D.Ill.1995, 893 F.Supp. 1370. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Commissioner of New York Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) was not liable under § 1983 for prison officials' misdiagnosis of inmate as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) and their removal of inmate from general prison population to AIDS Room; there was no evidence that commissioner was personally involved in misdiagnosis or decision to remove inmate to AIDS Room, and there was no evidence that commissioner was negligent in managing subordinates who were so involved. Timmons v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Services, S.D.N.Y.1995, 887 F.Supp. 576. Civil Rights 1358

State attorney general was not liable in civil rights action brought by city police officer who was acquitted of criminal charges that he had appropriated proceeds from parking meters; prosecutorial work had been done by others in his office, and he had been told only told essentials of case and been updated. Pansy v. Preate, M.D.Pa.1994, 870 F.Supp. 612, affirmed 61 F.3d 896. Civil Rights 1358

Prison warden was not liable for allegedly poor medical treatment inmate received, where there was no evidence that warden condoned or directly participated in allegedly unconstitutional treatment. Brown v. Thompson, S.D.Ga.1994, 868 F.Supp. 326. Civil Rights 1358

Inmate could not establish § 1983 liability on part of sheriff, in action alleging that inmate was injured by second inmate and deputy when fight between inmates arose, where inmate did not allege that sheriff was personally involved in alleged incident, that there was causal connection between act of sheriff and alleged constitutional deprivation, or that widespread abuse existed which gave sheriff knowledge of potential constitutional violations. Edwards v. Harris County Sheriff's Dept., S.D.Tex.1994, 864 F.Supp. 633. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Police officer who had no communication with arresting officer, who was his supervisor, from time arrest signal was given until arrestee arrived at jail could not have committed any Fourth Amendment violations arising from the arrest and, thus, was not liable, under § 1983, on arrestee's false arrest and excessive force claims. Frigo v. Guerra, N.D.Ill.1994, 860 F.Supp. 524. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Students failed to establish that school superintendent was individually liable under § 1983 for constitutional violations arising out of claim that security guard had assaulted and raped students in absence of evidence that superintendent had any personal involvement with events giving rise to complaint. Floyd v. Waiters, M.D.Ga.1993, 831 F.Supp. 867, affirmed 133 F.3d 786, vacated 119 S.Ct. 33, 525 U.S. 802, 142 L.Ed.2d 25, on remand 171 F.3d 1264. Civil Rights 1356

Neither sheriff in his individual capacity nor others who were not shown to have personal knowledge or involvement in treatment of detainee and her medical condition could be held liable for alleged violation of detainee's civil rights. Rubeck v. Sheriff of Wabash County, N.D.Ind.1993, 824 F.Supp. 1291. Civil Rights 1358

Tenured employee of public college failed to show that college's board of trustees, which was responsible for setting policy, coerced his resignation, so as to support his § 1983 claim of due process violation; board's only involvement in employee's resignation was fact that it held closed meeting to allow him to explain his position on charges at issue, and there was no evidence that board resolved to coerce employee into resigning, or to terminate him if he did not resign. Griffin v. Triton College, N.D.Ill.1993, 822 F.Supp. 1322. Civil Rights 1421

Neither township nor its police officer could be held liable under § 1983 to motorist injured in collision with officer from another jurisdiction while officers were involved in high-speed chase, absent showing that either township or its officer were proximate cause of motorist's injuries; township's officer, though participating in pursuit of suspect, was not involved in collision. Fulkerson v. City of Lancaster, E.D.Pa.1992, 801 F.Supp. 1476, affirmed 993 F.2d 876. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Incontinent prisoner failed to establish personal involvement of director of state Department of Corrections in prisoner's alleged deprivations of his Eighth Amendment rights as result of denial by prison medical staff of prisoner's request for daily showers, and thus prisoner could not maintain § 1983 civil rights action against director; director's mere position at Department of Corrections was insufficient to render director liable. De La Paz v. Peters, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 909. Civil Rights 1358

Deputies who were at the scene where the alleged excessive force took place were not liable under §§ 1983, absent evidence that they were directly involved in the alleged use of excessive force. Bias v. Lundy, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 188 Fed.Appx. 248, 2006 WL 1877275, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

County sheriff could not be held liable under §§ 1983 in prisoner's action alleging civil rights violations, since sheriff had not personally participated in alleged violations, and purported harms were not result of any alleged policy or custom. Justice v. Wallace, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 185 Fed.Appx. 745, 2006 WL 1704467, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Assuming roles of county airport authority employee and Public Utilities Commission (PUC) official in notifying police that limousine service operator's operating rights had been suspended made them personally involved in alleged violation of operator's Fourth Amendment rights, employee and officials were entitled to qualified immunity in §§ 1983 action; private citizen informed official that operator was operating his limousine service at airport with suspended PUC certificate, and after verifying information with PUC's Bureau of Transportation and Safety, official informed airport authority employee that operator had no insurance on file with PUC, and employee reasonably forwarded information to police. Joseph v. Allegheny County Airport Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 121, 2005 WL 2562614, Unreported. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Deputy sheriff had sufficient personal involvement in eviction of landowners from their property to be liable under §§ 1983 in landowners' suit for violation of their Fourth Amendment and due process rights, where he was the vehicle identification officer who disposed of the landowners' cars, and told landowner, when landowner came to retrieve cars towed from the property, that he was a little guy who would have to pay towing and storage fees when the deputy sheriff felt like releasing the cars. Hansen v. Cannon, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 122 Fed.Appx. 265, 2004 WL 2829016, Unreported. Civil Rights 1357

There was insufficient evidence of police officer's involvement in an arrest to support imposition of liability on the officer in the arrestee's §§ 1983 suit; the officer's "Good, he should go" comment upon seeing the arrestee handcuffed and being escorted away from a protest march scene, and the placement by an unknown third party of the officer's name in the "arresting officer" space on an investigation and arrest report were insufficient, given undisputed testimony of the officer that he had no personal involvement in the arrest. Bennett v. Schroeder, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 99 Fed.Appx. 707, 2004 WL 1193963, Unreported. Civil Rights 1420

Absence of evidence placing two female police officers at scene at which emotionally disturbed man was shot and killed by police officers, or showing their involvement in alleged constitutional violations arising from incident, required dismissal of § 1983 claims against female officers. Busch v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22171896, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Prison official who ultimately denied prisoner's grievance alleging deliberate indifference by medical personnel at correctional facility from which prisoner had been transferred was not personally involved in the alleged deliberate indifference, and thus, he could not be liable for money damages under § 1983 for alleged violation of prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights. Graham v. Wright, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22126764, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Facts that certain corrections officers filed or reviewed a misbehavior report which formed basis of disciplinary charges and that both testified at hearing were insufficient, for purposes of § 1983, to find personal involvement in alleged disciplinary hearing due process violations. Muhammad v. Pico, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21792158, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

Director of state department of corrections, and prison warden, lacked any personal involvement in alleged failure to protect inmate from attack by fellow inmate, as would allow recovery against director and warden under § 1983. Island v. Norris, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2000, 242 F.3d 375, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

392. Conspiracy, liability generally--Generally

Conspiracy with state official and use of state official's office provides state action element of cause of action under this section. Goldschmidt v. Patchett, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1982, 686 F.2d 582. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Cause of action based upon alleged conspiracy may be posited either upon § 1981 of this title or upon this section. Mizell v. North Broward Hospital Dist., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1970, 427 F.2d 468.

To establish a civil conspiracy under § 1983, plaintiff has the burden of showing (1) that two or more people entered into an agreement to violate the victim's civil rights, (2) that the alleged coconspirators shared in the general conspiratorial objective, and (3) that an overt act was committed in furtherance of the conspiracy that caused injury to him. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Unavailability of conspiracy claim under § 1985 does not preclude conspiracy claim under § 1983. Ahlers v. Schebil, E.D.Mich.1997, 966 F.Supp. 518. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Elements of civil rights conspiracy claim are conspiracy for purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of equal protection of the laws or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws, and act in furtherance of conspiracy whereby person is either injured in his person or property or deprived of any right of a citizen of the United States; conspiracy must also be motivated by some racial or otherwise class-based, invidious discriminatory animus. Ippolito v. Meisel, S.D.N.Y.1997, 958 F.Supp. 155. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Conspiracy claims are actionable under § 1983. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

In order to state claim for conspiracy under § 1983, complaint must establish conspiracy in some detail and provide some factual basis supporting existence of conspiracy; conclusory statements suggesting conspiracy are not enough to state claim. Spiegel v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1996, 920 F.Supp. 891, affirmed 196 F.3d 717, as amended, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2688, 530 U.S. 1243, 147 L.Ed.2d 961. Conspiracy 18

Essential element in claim of conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of his constitutional rights is agreement to do so among alleged coconspirators. Sales v. Murray, W.D.Va.1994, 862 F.Supp. 1511. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

"Conspiracy" is agreement between two or more individuals, where one individual acts in furtherance of objective of conspiracy, which causes injury to person or property, or deprives person of exercising any right or privilege as United States citizen; conspiracy under § 1983 must further allege that injury was caused by person who is state actor, or whose conduct is chargeable to state. McKenzie v. Doctors' Hosp. of Hollywood, Inc., S.D.Fla.1991, 765 F.Supp. 1504, affirmed 974 F.2d 1347. Conspiracy 1.1; Conspiracy 7.5(3)

When a nonstate actor conspires with state officials to deprive an individual of his constitutional rights, action under § 1983 will lie against that nonstate actor. Smith v. U.S., C.D.Ill.1989, 723 F.Supp. 1300, affirmed 964 F.2d 630, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1015, 506 U.S. 1067, 122 L.Ed.2d 162. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Conspiracies to deprive one of his constitutional rights are actionable under this section, and a showing of class-based discrimination is not a prerequisite to liability. Pizzolato v. Perez, E.D.La.1981, 524 F.Supp. 914. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

The existence of a conspiracy to violate federal rights, when coupled with state action, is actionable under this section. Croy v. Skinner, N.D.Ga.1976, 410 F.Supp. 117. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Action for conspiracy may be maintained under this section. Slavin v. Curry, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 574 F.2d 1256, modified on other grounds, rehearing denied 583 F.2d 779. See, also, Birnbaum v. Trussell, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 371 F.2d 672; Cohen v. Norris, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1962, 300 F.2d 24; Sowell v. Israel, D.C.Wis.1980, 500 F.Supp. 209; Bricker v. Sceva Speare Memorial Hospital, D.C.N.H.1972, 339 F.Supp. 234.

393. ---- Necessary element of action, conspiracy, liability generally

Conspiracy may be charged as part of alleged civil rights violations as legal mechanism through which to impose liability on all defendants without regard to who committed particular act, but conspiracy claim is not actionable without actual violation of civil rights law. Hale v. Townley, C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 45 F.3d 914, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 51 F.3d 1047. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

To claim under this section, giving civil action for deprivation of civil rights, conspiracy is not an indispensable element as it is under § 1985 of this title, expressly conferring action for conspiracy to interfere with civil rights, but it may be charged as legal mechanism through which to impose liability on each and all of defendants without regard to person doing particular act, and conspiracy is asserted in that situation on more or less traditional principles of agency, partnership, joint venture and the like. Nesmith v. Alford, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1963, 318 F.2d 110, rehearing denied 319 F.2d 859, certiorari denied 84 S.Ct. 489, 375 U.S. 975, 11 L.Ed.2d 420. Civil Rights 1434

Absence of allegations concerning conspiracy of police officers to cover-up beating and denial of medical care did not alter validity of civil rights claim based on cover-up, as conspiracy is not required to establish right to recover. Gonsalves v. City of New Bedford, D.Mass.1996, 939 F.Supp. 921. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Conspiracy is not necessary element of § 1983 claim, but proof of civil conspiracy may broaden scope of liability under § 1983 to include individuals who are part of conspiracy and who do not act directly to deprive plaintiff of federal statutory or constitutional rights. Pryor v. Cajda, N.D.Ill.1987, 662 F.Supp. 1114. Civil Rights 1304; Conspiracy 7.5(1)

394. ---- Actual violation, conspiracy, liability generally

To demonstrate conspiracy under § 1983, plaintiff must show actual abridgement of some federally-secured right. Torres-Rosado v. Rotger-Sabat, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 335 F.3d 1. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

For conspiracy to be actionable under this section, it must be found that there was not only agreement but actual deprivation of rights secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and laws, the conspiracy merely supplying element of state action or imposing liability on one defendant for acts of others performed in pursuance of conspiracy. Landrigan v. City of Warwick, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1980, 628 F.2d 736. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

This section does not provide a cause of action for a conspiracy to deny due process, but there must be an actual denial of due process before a cause of action arises. Hanna v. Home Ins. Co., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1960, 281 F.2d 298, certiorari denied 81 S.Ct. 751, 365 U.S. 838, 5 L.Ed.2d 747, rehearing denied 81 S.Ct. 1905, 366 U.S. 955, 6 L.Ed.2d 1247. See, also, Jennings v. Nester, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1955, 217 F.2d 153, certiorari denied 75 S.Ct. 888, 349 U.S. 958, 99 L.Ed. 1281.

Section 1983 conspiracy claim is not actionable without actual violation of § 1983. Owens v. Board of Regents of Texas Southern University, S.D.Tex.1996, 953 F.Supp. 781. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Conspiracy under § 1983 merely provides mechanism by which to plead or prove constitutional or statutory violation. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

A conspiracy is actionable under § 1983, but only if the plaintiff can prove an actual deprivation of a constitutional right. Rhodes v. Mabus, S.D.Miss.1987, 676 F.Supp. 755. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

To maintain conspiracy action under § 1983, it is necessary that there have been an actual denial of due process or of equal protection by someone acting under color of state law. Mullinax v. McElhenney, N.D.Ga.1987, 672 F.Supp. 1449. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

There is no cause of action for conspiracy per se under civil rights statute, section 1983, nor is there a cause of action for conspiracy to deny due process; plaintiff must prove deprivation of a specifically protected constitutional right to sustain conspiracy claim. Dean Tarry Corp. v. Friedlander, S.D.N.Y.1987, 650 F.Supp. 1544, affirmed 826 F.2d 210. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

395. ---- Intent to violate rights, conspiracy, liability generally

To survive motion for summary judgment, plaintiff's evidence of Section 1983 conspiracy to deprive him of his First Amendment right to free speech must, at least, reasonably lead to inference that defendants positively or tacitly came to a mutual understanding to try to accomplish a common and unlawful plan. Stein v. Janos, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 256. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

To establish prima facie case of civil conspiracy, plaintiff must demonstrate: express or implied agreement among defendants to deprive plaintiff of secured constitutional rights; and actual deprivation of those rights in form of overt acts in furtherance of agreement. Fantasia v. Kinsella, N.D.Ill.1997, 956 F.Supp. 1409. Conspiracy 1.1

Section 1983 plaintiff stated conspiracy claim against police officers involved in his arrest, who allegedly had agreement to deprive him of his federal rights; plaintiff allegedly heard one officer say to another that, "we are going to have to say we were chasing him," and plaintiff alleged that other officers were aware that that officer testified at grand jury, that his testimony was false, and that he had falsified documents in connection with his testimony. Crespo v. New York City Police Com'r, S.D.N.Y.1996, 930 F.Supp. 109. Conspiracy 18

Conspiracy cannot exist, for purposes of § 1983, where public officials are unaware of violative nature of their actions due to misrepresentations of private parties. Gilbert v. Feld, E.D.Pa.1992, 788 F.Supp. 854. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Conspiracy claims are not actionable under § 1983 unless the conspiracy is designed to violate plaintiff's constitutional rights. Spear v. Town of West Hartford, D.Conn.1991, 771 F.Supp. 521, affirmed 954 F.2d 63, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 66, 506 U.S. 819, 121 L.Ed.2d 33. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

In order to sustain § 1983 conspiracy claim, there must be some evidence of some concerted effort or plan between private associations and state actors to deny plaintiffs their constitutional rights. Lawline v. American Bar Ass'n, N.D.Ill.1990, 738 F.Supp. 288, affirmed 956 F.2d 1378, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 551, 510 U.S. 992, 126 L.Ed.2d 452. Conspiracy 7.5(1); Conspiracy 7.5(3)

396. ---- Pleadings, conspiracy, liability generally

If complaint makes only conclusory allegations of conspiracy under §§ 1983 or 1985 and fails to allege facts suggesting agreement or meeting of minds among defendants, court may properly dismiss complaint. Sales v. Murray, W.D.Va.1994, 862 F.Supp. 1511. Conspiracy 18

To plead civil rights conspiracy, plaintiffs must allege an express or implied agreement among defendants to deprive plaintiff of his constitutional rights and deprivation of those rights in the form of overt acts in furtherance of agreement. Carreon v. Baumann, N.D.Ill.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1290. Conspiracy 18

In order to plead a § 1983 conspiracy between private persons and state officials, plaintiffs must allege an agreement to deprive them of their constitutional rights; boilerplate allegations of such an agreement are insufficient. Theis v. Smith, N.D.Ill.1988, 676 F.Supp. 874. Conspiracy 18

To sustain § 1983 action against private individual, plaintiff must allege in complaint some evidence of concerted plan or agreement between private party and government officials, and mere allegations of conspiracy are not sufficient to withstand motion to dismiss. Copus v. City of Edgerton, W.D.Wis.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1047, affirmed in part, reversed in part 151 F.3d 646. Civil Rights 1396

397. ---- Preclusion of claims, conspiracy, liability generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Claim under statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1985] prohibiting conspiratorial violations of civil rights could be maintained against alleged coconspirator, despite preclusion of claims against city and its official. Doyel v. City of Marianna, E.D.Ark.1985, 611 F.Supp. 857. Conspiracy 13

398. ---- Private actions, conspiracy, liability generally

Private party involved in conspiracy with state official may, even though not himself official of state, be liable under this section. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1326(5)

A § 1983 conspiracy claim may arise when a private actor conspires with a state actor to deprive a person of a constitutional right under color of state law. Dixon v. City of Lawton, Okl., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1990, 898 F.2d 1443. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Private parties who corruptly conspire with state officials to maliciously prosecute an individual act under color of state law and can be sued by that individual under federal civil rights statute; plaintiff attempting to prove such a conspiracy must show that the parties reached an understanding to deny plaintiff his or her rights, the conspiratorial acts must impinge upon the federal right, and the plaintiff must prove an actionable wrong to support the conspiracy. N.A.A.C.P. v. Hunt, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1990, 891 F.2d 1555. Civil Rights 1326(5)

A private person does not conspire with a state official for purposes of this section merely by invoking an exercise of the state official's authority. Tarkowski v. Robert Bartlett Realty Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 644 F.2d 1204. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Private individuals who conspire with state officials are acting "under color of state law," for purposes of this section whether or not the state official is actually joined in the suit arising from such conspiracy. Slotnick v. Staviskey, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1977, 560 F.2d 31, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 1268, 434 U.S. 1077, 55 L.Ed.2d 783. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Where state officers conspire with private individuals to defeat or prejudice litigant's rights in state court, litigant is thereby denied equal protection of laws by persons acting under color of state law, and cause of action is created cognizable by federal courts under this section. Dinwiddie v. Brown, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1956, 230 F.2d 465, certiorari denied 76 S.Ct. 1041, 351 U.S. 971, 100 L.Ed. 1490, rehearing denied 77 S.Ct. 29, 352 U.S. 861, 1 L.Ed.2d 72. Federal Courts 225

Shopping center owner did not conspire with a state official to commit an unlawful act, as would establish actions under color of state law on part of owner allowing recovery by shopping center tenant under § 1983, when owner accepted lump sum payment from state as part of settlement after state took portion of shopping center's common area through its eminent domain power for expansion of state highway; state was not obligated to apportion payment between owner and its tenant, but was required only to pay just compensation for value of property taken. Weingarten Realty Investors v. Albertson's, Inc., S.D.Tex.1999, 66 F.Supp.2d 825, affirmed 234 F.3d 28. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private party can be liable under § 1983 if state officials and private party somehow reached understanding to deny plaintiff his or her constitutional rights; in such situation, state official's involvement provides requisite state action. Guy v. State of Ill., N.D.Ill.1997, 958 F.Supp. 1300. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private defendant may only be held liable under § 1983 as willful participant in joint activity with State or its agents, and therefore, in order to recover from private defendant, plaintiff must demonstrate that private defendant collaborated or conspired with person acting under color of state law to violate plaintiff's constitutional rights; plaintiff bears burden of proof on this issue and must produce more than conclusory allegations or naked assertions of joint or conspiratorial action. Niemann v. Whalen, S.D.N.Y.1996, 911 F.Supp. 656. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1396; Civil Rights 1401

Farmer could not be held liable under civil rights statute for retaining truck and trailer during dispute over shipment of watermelons, absent evidence of conspiracy between farmer and any state actor, including deputy sheriffs who intervened in dispute between farmer and truck driver. Padgett v. Palmer, S.D.Miss.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1185, affirmed 58 F.3d 636. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private parties are liable under § 1983 if they have reached agreement with state actor to violate individual's constitutional rights. Copus v. City of Edgerton, W.D.Wis.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1047, affirmed in part, reversed in part 151 F.3d 646. Civil Rights 1326(5)

399. ---- Attorneys, conspiracy, liability generally

Although appointed counsel in state criminal prosecution does not act "under color of" state law in normal course of conducting defense, otherwise private person acts "under color of" state law when engaged in conspiracy with state officials to deprive another of federal rights. Tower v. Glover, U.S.Or.1984, 104 S.Ct. 2820, 467 U.S. 914, 81 L.Ed.2d 758. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Private parties who corruptly conspire with judge in conjunction with judge's performance of official judicial act are acting under color of state law for purposes of federal civil rights statute, even if judge himself is immune from civil liability. Kimes v. Stone, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 84 F.3d 1121. Civil Rights 1341

Allegations that a public defender has conspired with judges or other state officials to deprive a prisoner of federally protected rights may state a claim under § 1983. Manis v. Sterling, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1988, 862 F.2d 679. Conspiracy 18

Conclusory allegations that court-appointed defense counsel in state criminal proceeding conspired with prosecution and state trial judge when he agreed to proceed on an altered indictment, when he gave the accused erroneous legal advice, and when he refused to provide the accused with an opportunity to examine personally certain exculpatory evidence were insufficient to establish attorney's involvement in conspiracy such that he could be held liable under § 1983. Mills v. Criminal Dist. Court No. 3, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 837 F.2d 677. Conspiracy 18

Former defendant in a criminal case failed to state a cause of action against public defenders under civil rights statue [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] for allegedly conspiring with state appellate judges to deny him a proper appeal, as allegations that public defender rendered ineffective assistance and that judges failed to take any corrective action when informed of this fact fell short of factually suggesting a mutual understanding or meeting of the minds in any conspiracy. Deck v. Leftridge, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1985, 771 F.2d 1168. Conspiracy 18

Where defendant's lawyer, investigator, and prosecutor allegedly conspired to deprive criminal defendant of his civil rights, private conduct was converted to "state action" for purposes of bringing action under this section. Black v. Bayer, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1982, 672 F.2d 309, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 230, 459 U.S. 916, 74 L.Ed.2d 182. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(10)

Although privately retained criminal counsel, private physician and hospital at which castration was performed, were not prima facie liable under this section for alleged misrepresentation as to side effects of castration, they could be held liable if the government defendants, including prosecuting attorneys who participated in plea bargain whereby plaintiff was allegedly permitted to plead guilty to a lesser offense than child molestation provided he consented to castration, were found to be without immunity for their participation in the bargain and the nongovernment defendants were found to have conspired with them. Briley v. State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1977,

564 F.2d 849. Civil Rights 1339; Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Complaint alleging that defendant's attorney had special relationship with state court judge which he used to obtain favorable results for investor in state court suit against plaintiff failed to state cause of action for conspiracy to violate § 1983, absent any allegation that attorney acted through combination, agreement, understanding, plot, plan, or conspiracy with judge. Spencer v. Steinman, E.D.Pa.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1011. Conspiracy 18

Whether former wife's attorney, who petitioned for civil arrest of former husband based on his failure to pay alimony as ordered by state court divorce decree, engaged in joint action with state officials, for purpose of husband's § 1983 action against attorney arising from arrest, would be determined under higher standard requiring conspiracy among attorney and state officers involved, not lower standard requiring only "aid and assistance" by public officials, since state law remedies were available to husband. MacFarlane v. Smith, D.N.H.1996, 947 F.Supp. 572, affirmed 129 F.3d 1252. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Plaintiff made sufficient allegations of deprivation of rights and of state action to maintain § 1983 action against private attorneys, where plaintiff alleged that his defense attorney participated with assistant district attorney in plan to obtain unsupported felony conviction on sexual misconduct charges by depriving plaintiff of his right to effective assistance of counsel, and that private attorneys were willful participants in plan by then filing collateral civil suit on behalf of alleged victim; fact that overt acts attributed to private attorneys did not directly involve them with assistant district attorney did not deprive overall conspiracy of necessary element of state action. Jackson v. Faber, D.Me.1993, 834 F.Supp. 471. Civil Rights 1395(5)

An attorney appointed to represent the interests of a father did not "conspire" with state officials to deprive the father of his civil rights in violation of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 when the attorney refused to disclose the son's whereabouts to the father as required under the terms of a court order that the attorney, as an officer of the court, was bound to follow. Koenig v. Snead, D.Or.1991, 757 F.Supp. 41, affirmed 977 F.2d 589. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

In civil rights action against former husband and his attorney alleging that they were responsible for series of misrepresentations made to state court judge, as result of which former wife was incarcerated, in order to proceed to trial, former wife was required to allege that there existed between attorney and state official an understanding, agreement or conspiracy to deprive former wife of federal right. Celano v. Celano, E.D.Pa.1982, 537 F.Supp. 690. Conspiracy 18

Action lay against Attorney General and Assistant Attorney General under this section dealing with civil actions for deprivation of constitutional rights for alleged conspiracy to incarcerate plaintiffs illegally in mental institution. Scolnick v. Winston, S.D.N.Y.1963, 219 F.Supp. 836, affirmed 329 F.2d 716, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 49, 379 U.S. 825, 13 L.Ed.2d 35. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

400. ---- Judges, conspiracy, liability generally

Absence of evidence that judge serving as attorney for mother in custody proceedings conspired with judge hearing matter precluded §§ 1983 liability on part of judge serving as attorney. Plaisance v. Reese, E.D.La.2004, 353 F.Supp.2d 735. Conspiracy 19

Allegations of conspiratorial conduct between a state court judge and plaintiffs in a nonjury state court libel action stated a procedural due process violation which could be addressed in a § 1983 action; civil rights plaintiffs alleged covert ex parte meetings and telephone conversations during course of trial in which plaintiffs and judge conspired to produce a verdict based on extra-judicial considerations. Lipson v. Snyder, E.D.Pa.1988, 701 F.Supp. 541. Conspiracy 18

401. ---- Government officials, conspiracy, liability generally

Property owners' allegations that chairman of industrial and business development commission of town, town inspector of buildings, chairman of town planning board and former town attorney conspired to deprive property owners of equal protection of local zoning laws and to prefer the interest of owners of factory which adjoined property owners' land constituted valid cause of action under this section. Harrison v. Brooks, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1971, 446 F.2d 404. Conspiracy 18

Allegations in civil rights action that defendants acted individually and as members of conspiracy to deprive horse owner of her constitutional rights by ordering her horse returned to her after it was claimed in a "claiming race" and claiming price forfeited because of drug violation failed to state a claim under this clause, since Board of Stewards and State Racing Commission lawfully interpreted existing state law to require rescission of claiming contract. Boetti v. Ogden Suffolk Downs, Inc., D.C.Mass.1984, 587 F.Supp. 1048. Civil Rights 1395(1)

402. ---- Intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, liability generally

"Intracorporate conspiracy doctrine" bars a civil rights conspiracy case under § 1983 where proof of the discriminatory or retaliatory act reflects the collective judgment of two or more executives of the same firm. Rojicek v. Community Consol. School Dist. 15, N.D.Ill.1996, 934 F.Supp. 280. Conspiracy 2

Intracorporate conspiracy doctrine barred student's claim under federal civil rights statute against school administrators for allegedly agreeing with each other and with school counselors to disregard state law by not reporting to Illinois Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) a teacher's alleged sexual abuse of female students, even though student named administrators in their individual as well as their official capacities. Doe v. Board of Educ. of Hononegah Community High School Dist. No. 207, N.D.Ill.1993, 833 F.Supp. 1366. Conspiracy 2

The "intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine" could not prevent imposition on members of single municipal lighting commission of liability under this section for alleged conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 rights to be free from purposeful sex discrimination by paying plaintiffs less than males holding positions allegedly entailing "equal responsibilities." Stathos v. Bowden, D.C.Mass.1981, 514 F.Supp. 1288. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

403. ---- Miscellaneous conspiracies, conspiracy, liability generally

Catholic priest failed to state claim that district attorney and his employees conspired with private actors to release sexually oriented materials found in priest's room in violation of priest's constitutional rights; publication of material by some of private parties more than one year after issuance of subpoena at request of Catholic Church was too attenuated from initial state action to support agreement among parties. Cinel v. Connick, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 15 F.3d 1338, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 189, 513 U.S. 868, 130 L.Ed.2d 122. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

Alleged conduct of former co-worker of police officer in approaching police officer's subsequent employers to urge that police officer be fired was not enough for police officer to establish his § 1983 claim against former co-worker based on alleged conspiracy with state actors. Mylett v. Jeane, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 879 F.2d 1272, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Complaint alleging that defendant conspired to violate plaintiff's constitutional rights so that plaintiff would be denied fair trial on criminal charges, and that defendant was guilty of libel, and that conspiracy was formed in retaliation for plaintiff's suit against defendant for libel, and that alleged errors occurred in criminal trials of plaintiff because of conspiracy failed to allege any violations of this section and § 1985 of this title. Kamsler v. Chicago Am. Pub. Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1965, 352 F.2d 57. Conspiracy 18

Mother could not recover under this section for damages allegedly resulting from conspiracy by defendants to take away her minor child, in absence of any evidence of common law conspiracy or conspiracy to deprive mother of equal protection of laws or any other constitutional right. Harris v. Turner, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1964, 329 F.2d 918, certiorari denied 85 S.Ct. 202, 379 U.S. 907, 13 L.Ed.2d 180, rehearing denied 85 S.Ct. 673, 379 U.S. 985, 13 L.Ed.2d 578. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Neighbor did not conspire with sheriff's department, and thus neighbor did not act under color of state law, where sheriff's department responded to call from neighbor, upon arriving at scene sheriff's department observed plaintiff with pick-axe, witnessed damaged timbers, investigated matter, including conversing with plaintiff, neighbor, and local lumber yard to ascertain value of timbers, and arrested plaintiff in response to neighbor's signing of criminal complaint. Serbalik v. Gray, N.D.N.Y.1998, 27 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Police officers and police chief could be held liable to arrestee for § 1983 civil rights conspiracy based upon their claimed involvement in alleged post-arrest coverup; reasonable jury could view alleged falsification of police records and failure to properly investigate arrestee's arrest as efforts to deprive arrestee of his § 1983 right of action as to alleged use of excessive force. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Conspiracy 13

Landlord who obtained police officer's assistance to enter tenant's apartment to fix water leak that had resulted in lack of heat and water for entire building did not conspire with police officer to violate tenant's constitutional rights, and thus could not be liable for civil rights violation. Osipova v. Dinkins, S.D.N.Y.1995, 907 F.Supp. 94. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Prisoner failed to establish that prison officer conspired with other staff members to deprive prisoner of his constitutional rights by coercing confidential informants into making statements against prisoner during his hearing for possession of weapon charges, where prisoner neither identified purported conspirators, nor set forth any allegation of agreement on their part to deprive prisoner of his constitutional rights. Sales v. Murray, W.D.Va.1994, 862 F.Supp. 1511. Conspiracy 19

Private citizen who brought allegations of bribery to attention of prosecuting authorities did not participate in conspiracy with prosecutors to violate constitutional rights of subjects of bribery investigation; mere suggestion or request for investigation did not make citizen a conspirator, absent proof that he could have done or could have helped to do any acts which were objects of purported conspiracy. Sluys v. Gribetz, S.D.N.Y.1994, 842 F.Supp. 764, affirmed 41 F.3d 1503, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1316, 514 U.S. 1005, 131 L.Ed.2d 197. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Suburban-licensed airport limousine services did not enter agreement with city to exclude city-licensed airport limousine services from livery dispatch booths and did not engage in § 1983 conspiracy to deprive city services of constitutional rights, even though city decided to implement terminal system after meeting with representatives of suburban services; suburban services were forced to accept city's decision to implement some form of livery dispatch system and were not voluntary participants in joint venture with city; and city rejected suburban services' proposed contract to exclude city services from booths. Pontarelli Limousine, Inc. v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1989, 704 F.Supp. 1503. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

Complaint did not state §§ 1983 claim for conspiracy to deprive former dog control officer of his liberty and property when former dog control officer asserted only that his former employer, which provided towns with animal control services, and towns and their officials "allegedly acted in a concerted effort," allegedly agreed not to hire former dog control officer and informed other municipalities and private entities to refrain from hiring former dog control officer, and allegedly engaged in overt acts to effect such common plan. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Civil Rights Act of 1871 will not support a claim based on a respondeat superior theory of liability. Polk County v. Dodson, U.S.Iowa 1981, 102 S.Ct. 445, 454 U.S. 312, 70 L.Ed.2d 509. Civil Rights 1336

There is no respondeat superior liability in suit brought pursuant to § 1983. Nicholson v. Scoppetta, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 344 F.3d 154, certified question accepted 807 N.E.2d 283, 775 N.Y.S.2d 233, 1 N.Y.3d 538, certified question answered 820 N.E.2d 840, 787 N.Y.S.2d 196, 3 N.Y.3d 357, answer to certified question conformed to 116 Fed.Appx. 313, 2004 WL 2712425. Civil Rights 1336

Supervisor cannot be held liable under § 1983 on basis of respondeat superior; rather, misconduct of subordinate must be affirmatively linked to action or inaction of supervisor. Southard v. Texas Bd. of Criminal Justice, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 114 F.3d 539. Civil Rights 1355

Employer cannot be held responsible under § 1983 for actions of its employees on basis of respondeat superior. Kelly v. Municipal Courts of Marion County, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 97 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1336

There is no respondeat superior liability under federal civil rights statute. Harris v. Ostrout, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1995, 65 F.3d 912. Civil Rights 1336

Respondeat superior liability is insufficient to sustain § 1983 action. Copeland v. Machulis, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1995, 57 F.3d 476. Civil Rights 1336

Doctrine of respondeat superior cannot serve as basis for imposing liability in federal civil rights action. Randle v. Parker, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 48 F.3d 301. Civil Rights 1336

Respondeat superior generally does not apply in actions under this section or in Bivens-type actions. Ellis v. Blum, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 643 F.2d 68. Civil Rights 1336

An official's liability under this section authorizing civil actions for deprivation of constitutional rights may not be based on respondeat superior or vicarious liability. Thompson v. Bass, C.A.5 (Ala.) 1980, 616 F.2d 1259, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 399, 449 U.S. 983, 66 L.Ed.2d 245. Civil Rights 1355 merely because he held a high position of authority. Veloz v. New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 505, affirmed 2006 WL 1082836. Civil Rights 1336

Doctrine of respondeat superior standing alone does not suffice to impose liability for damages under §§ 1983 on a defendant acting in a supervisory capacity; evidence of a supervisory official's personal involvement in the challenged action is required. Van Eck v. Cimahosky, D.Conn.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 265. Civil Rights 1355

The doctrine of respondeat superior, under which a supervisor may be held liable for an employee's actions, has no application to § 1983 actions. Wilson v. Vannatta, N.D.Ind.2003, 291 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1336; Civil Rights 1355

The personal involvement of a supervisor necessary to hold the supervisor liable under § 1983 may be shown by evidence that: (1) the defendant participated directly in the alleged constitutional violation, (2) the defendant, after being informed of the violation through a report or appeal, failed to remedy the wrong, (3) the defendant created a policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed the continuance of such a policy or custom, (4) the defendant was grossly negligent in supervising subordinates who committed the wrongful acts, or (5) the defendant exhibited deliberate indifference to the rights of inmates by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional acts were occurring. Porter v. Selsky, W.D.N.Y.2003, 287 F.Supp.2d 180, affirmed 421 F.3d 141. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory liability under § 1983 may not be grounded upon a theory of respondeat superior. Torres Ocasio v. Melendez, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 505. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory liability under § 1983 is ultimately determined by pinpointing the persons in the decision-making chain whose deliberate indifference permitted the constitutional abuses to continue unchecked. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1355

The doctrine of respondeat superior, whereby liability is imposed on employers for the acts or omissions of their employees is inapposite in actions brought under § 1983. Herrera v. Davila, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 154. Civil Rights 1336

The doctrine of respondeat superior may not be used under § 1983. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1336

Although there is no respondeat superior liability under section § 1983, the theory of supervisory liability allows a plaintiff to hold supervisors accountable for their own acts or omissions if (1) the supervisor's acts or omissions deprived the plaintiff of a constitutionally protected right, (2) his action or inaction amounted to a reckless disregard or callous indifference to the constitutional rights of others, and (3) there was an affirmative link between the street level misconduct and the action or inaction of the supervisory official. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1355

There is no respondeat superior liability under section 1983. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1336

Constitutional violation by subordinate is predicate to supervisor's liability under § 1983; if subordinate did not violate plaintiff's constitutional rights, supervisor cannot be held liable. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1355

When monetary damages are sought under § 1983, general doctrine of respondeat superior does not suffice and showing of some personal responsibility of defendant is required. Porter v. Coughlin, W.D.N.Y.1997, 964 F.Supp.

Federal civil rights statute does not create respondeat superior liability. Davie v. Wingard, S.D.Ohio 1997, 958 F.Supp. 1244, 166 A.L.R. Fed. 709. Civil Rights 1336

Doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply in § 1983 actions. Williams v. Morris, W.D.Va.1996, 956 F.Supp. 679. Civil Rights 1336

Supervisor cannot be held liable on basis of respondeat superior for acts of his inferiors under § 1983. LaFleur v. Wallace State Community College, M.D.Ala.1996, 955 F.Supp. 1406. Civil Rights 1355

Although supervisor may incur liability for civil rights violation, there is no strict supervisor liability under § 1983; for supervisor to incur liability based on conduct of subordinates, it is not enough for plaintiff to show that defendant was in charge of other state actors who actually committed violation, nor is supervisor responsible for violations of which supervisor had no knowledge. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1355

Respondeat superior is not valid basis for imposition of liability under federal civil rights statute, and cannot be used as substitute for necessary personal involvement. Show v. Patterson, S.D.N.Y.1997, 955 F.Supp. 182. Civil Rights 1336

Superior officer cannot be held vicariously liable under § 1983 on respondeat superior theory. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1355

Respondeat superior theory of recovery is unavailable in § 1983 suits. Weimer v. City of Johnstown, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1996, 931 F.Supp. 985. Civil Rights 1336

Individual will not be held vicariously liable under doctrine of respondeat superior pursuant to § 1983 simply by virtue of that individual having position of authority. Mandala v. Coughlin, E.D.N.Y.1996, 920 F.Supp. 342. Civil Rights 1355

In an action under § 1983, doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply. Sherk v. Lieback, M.D.Pa.1995, 909 F.Supp. 960. Civil Rights 1336

Liability under § 1983 may generally not be premised on theory of respondeat superior. McGuinness v. DuBois, D.Mass.1995, 891 F.Supp. 25, affirmed 86 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1336

There is no respondeat superior liability under § 1983. Franklin v. Gilless, W.D.Tenn.1994, 870 F.Supp. 792. Civil Rights 1336

Supervisor must know about conduct and facilitate, approve of, condone, or turn blind eye to it to be liable under § 1983 for acts of subordinates. Antonelli v. Sheahan, N.D.Ill.1994, 863 F.Supp. 756, affirmed in part, reversed in part 81 F.3d 1422. Civil Rights 1355

There is no "respondeat superior liability" in the ordinary sense of that concept under federal civil rights statute, that is, defendant supervisor cannot be held liable for constitutional violations of subordinate merely by virtue of defendant's status as supervisor. Feliciano v. DuBois, D.Mass.1994, 846 F.Supp. 1033. Civil Rights 1336; Civil Rights 1355

Respondeat superior is not acceptable basis for liability under § 1983. Durmer v. O'Carroll, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1993, 991 F.2d 64. Dockerty-Bostron v. Waukesha County, E.D.Wis.1990, 744 F.Supp. 877.

405. ---- Causation, respondeat superior, liability generally

While doctrine of respondeat superior cannot be invoked in § 1983 cases, supervisory officials may be held liable in certain circumstances for constitutional injuries inflicted by their subordinates; liability in those circumstances is not premised on respondeat superior but on recognition that supervisory indifference or tacit authorization of subordinates' misconduct may be a causative factor in constitutional injuries. Reid v. Kayye, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1989, 885 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1355

A suit under this section against police supervisory officers cannot be based on the theory of respondeat superior and an action will not lie against supervisory officers for failure to prevent police misconduct, absent showing of direct responsibility for the improper action, and what is required is a causal connection between the misconduct and the official sued. Harris v. Pirch, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1982, 677 F.2d 681. Civil Rights 1358

Superiors of Federal Bureau of Investigation agent who, in violation of Bureau regulations, disclosed arrest record of plaintiff to a security officer of plaintiff's employer were not monetarily liable to plaintiff, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, for the agent's action, even assuming that plaintiff was deprived of some constitutional right, as there was nothing in the record to show that any defendant instigated the investigation of plaintiff, directed its course, or participated or acquiesced therein, as there was no proof of lack of training or of declaration wrongful policy, and as, in sum, plaintiff failed to establish the "affirmative link" required by Supreme Court's "Rizzo" decision. Kite v. Kelley, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1976, 546 F.2d 334. Civil Rights 1363

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether supervisor fired city mechanical inspector because he was speaking out about cronyism in the department, rather than because of insubordination or lying, precluded summary judgment for supervisor on inspector's §§ 1983 First Amendment retaliation claim due to inspector's inability to show that his constitutionally protected speech was a substantial or motivating factor in termination decision and that supervisor would not have taken the same action in any event. Donnell v. City of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, N.D.Iowa 2006, 437 F.Supp.2d 904. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

A city cannot be held liable for a constitutional violation under §§ 1983 solely for employing a tortfeasor because it cannot be held liable on a respondeat superior theory; instead, there must be a direct causal link between the policy and the alleged constitutional violation such that the municipality's deliberate conduct can be deemed the moving force behind the violation. Ali v. City of Louisville, W.D.Ky.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 527. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Affirmative link between acts of supervisor and acts of subordinate, as required for supervisor to be liable under § 1983, contemplates proof that supervisor's conduct led inexorably to constitutional violation. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1355

There was no causal connection between acts of correctional facility and of its manager and alleged civil rights violation committed by facility employee, as required for inmates to recover under Bivens for sexual harassment perpetrated by employee, where employee met or exceeded all requirements for employment at the facility and signed document acknowledging that he would abide by facility had policy not to discriminate on basis of sex, and facility had implemented grievance procedures for inmates to follow if they had complaints about their treatment. Smith v. U.S., M.D.Fla.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1183. United States 50.10(3)

Condominium association did not directly cause citizen's arrest of resident of complex by resident manager, and thus, association was not liable for unlawful arrest under § 1983; resident made no showing that association participated in or directed citizen's arrest, knew of citizen's arrest and failed to act to prevent it, or failed to properly train or supervise resident manager or permitted custom or policy of unlawful arrest by its employees. Fraser v. County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 1994, 855 F.Supp. 1167. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Under certain circumstances, supervisory officials can be held liable under § 1983 for constitutional injuries inflicted by their subordinates; supervisory liability is not premised on respondeat superior, but on recognition that supervisory indifference or tacit authorization of subordinates' misconduct may be causative factor in constitutional injuries they inflict on those committed to their care. McNeal v. Harper, E.D.Va.1993, 816 F.Supp. 421. Civil Rights 1355

Section 1983 claims require that plaintiff establish both defendant's fault and causal connection between defendant's actions and plaintiff's injuries; thus, liability of supervisory official under § 1983 cannot be premised on principle of respondeat superior. Herrera v. Scully, S.D.N.Y.1993, 815 F.Supp. 713. Civil Rights 1355

Pharmacies could not be held liable under § 1983 for actions of their employees in allegedly furnishing false information to state in connection with its investigation of doctor's prescription-writing practices, where no evidence was presented that pharmacies had authorized, supervised, caused or participated in their employees' alleged misrepresentations, and doctor's claims against pharmacies were all based on invalid respondeat superior theory. Taliaferro v. Voth, D.Kan.1991, 774 F.Supp. 1326. Civil Rights 1341

406. ---- Custom or usage, respondeat superior, liability generally

Protection of municipality from being held liable under § 1983 on respondeat superior theory does not encompass "immunity from suit"; unlike various government officials, municipalities do not enjoy immunity from suit, either absolute or qualified, under § 1983, and they can be sued under that section, but merely cannot be held liable unless policy or custom caused constitutional injury. Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, U.S.Tex.1993, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 507 U.S. 163, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, on remand 993 F.2d 1177. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1376(4)

Municipal liability in § 1983 action may not be premised on employment of tort-feasor with liability imposed under respondeat superior theory; municipalities can be held liable only when injury was inflicted by execution of government's policy or custom. Cannon v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1993, 998 F.2d 867. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipalities may be held liable under § 1983 for actions which result in deprivation of constitutional rights, but cannot be held liable on respondeat superior theory; municipal liability is incurred under § 1983 only when execution of government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts injury. Davis v. Mason County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 927 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

To impose supervisory liability under §§ 1983 on government contractor for actions of its employees, plaintiff must show that there was specific supervisory practice or procedure that contractor failed to employ, and that: (1) existing custom and practice without that specific practice or procedure created unreasonable risk of constitutional violation, (2) contractor was aware that this unreasonable risk existed, (3) contractor was indifferent to that risk, and (4) contractor's failure to follow that practice or procedure resulted in plaintiff's injury. Green v. First Correctional Medical, D.Del.2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 383. Civil Rights 1336

County could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for clerk of county court's alleged discriminatory treatment of plaintiffs based on their national origin in violation of equal protection, absent allegation that clerk acted pursuant to any formal or informal policy or custom of county. Cichowski v. Sauk County, W.D.Wis.2006, 409 F.Supp.2d 1098. Civil Rights 1351(6)

African-American employee of city police department failed to establish municipal liability for city's alleged constitutional violations related to employee's suspension, as required to support employee's claim under § 1983 against city; city had not adopted a policy to discriminate or retaliate against African-American police officers, and chief and captain who imposed suspension were not final policy makers. Jones v. City of Wilmington, D.Del.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 380. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Child failed to state cause of action in complaint for supervisory liability under § 1983, in connection with alleged taking of emergency custody of child by county child protective services supervisor and caseworker, absent allegation that, prior to date of taking custody, caseworker was engaging in pattern of egregious behavior posing risk of constitutional violation such that supervisor could fairly be described as deliberately indifferent to that risk, or that citizens were facing pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional violations. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1395(1)

One way to establish existence of policy or custom sufficient to impose § 1983 liability on municipal government is to show that individuals, from whose actions liability arises, have final decision-making authority. Wallace v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1996, 956 F.Supp. 965. Civil Rights 1351(1)

There is no § 1983 liability under respondeat superior without a showing that the allegedly illegal acts were committed pursuant to an official policy or custom. Lovanyak v. Cogdell, E.D.N.Y.1996, 955 F.Supp. 172. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality and its supervisory employees cannot be held liable for civil rights violations committed by municipal employees based solely upon respondeat superior; to establish liability, plaintiff must establish existence of municipal policy or custom which caused deprivation of constitutional rights, and will prevail by proving existence of municipal policy or custom which is facially unconstitutional, or existence of constitutional policy which is unconstitutionally applied because employee has not been adequately trained out of deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom employee comes into contact. Bennett v. Town of Riverhead, E.D.N.Y.1996, 940 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1345

When municipality itself is cause of constitutional deprivation, liability may lie against municipality in federal civil rights action; however, municipality may not be held liable on basis of respondeat superior, but only when constitutional injury is inflicted by execution of government's policy or custom, which must be moving force of constitutional violation. Hilliard v. Walker's Party Store, Inc., E.D.Mich.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1162. Civil Rights 1345

Liability under § 1983 is not vicariously imposed under doctrine of respondeat superior; municipal policy or custom must be moving force behind constitutional violation. Elk v. Townson, S.D.N.Y.1993, 839 F.Supp. 1047. Civil Rights 1345

407. ---- Deliberate indifference, respondeat superior, liability generally

Sheriff's practice of delegating to others such duties as reading mail and responding to communications regarding jail inmates did not amount to deliberate indifference to pre-trial detainee's serious medical needs, as required to be held individually liable for pre-trial detainee's death in §§ 1983 action brought by pre-trial detainee's sister under the Due Process clause. Vaughn v. Greene County, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 438 F.3d 845. Civil Rights 1358

In the context of a failure-to-supervise claim for municipal liability under § 1983, deliberate indifference may be established by showing that policymaking officials deliberately ignored an obvious need for supervision; in the failure-to-train context, on the other hand, plaintiffs must establish that the officials consciously disregarded a risk of future violations of clearly established constitutional rights by badly trained employees. Amnesty America v.

Town of West Hartford, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 361 F.3d 113. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipality shows deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact, as required to hold municipality liable for police officers' violation of constitutional rights under when it fails to train officers to handle recurring situation that presents obvious potential for constitutional violation and failure to train results in constitutional violation. Dunn v. City of Elgin, Illinois, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 347 F.3d 641, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Wardens were not liable under civil rights statute for alleged deliberate indifference of prison physicians to inmate's serious medical needs, where wardens insured that inmate received medical treatment and there was no suggestion why they should not have been entitled to rely on their health care providers' expertise. Miltier v. Beorn, C.A.4 (Va.) 1990, 896 F.2d 848. Civil Rights 1358

There was no support for finding that supervisors of school bus driver were grossly negligent or deliberately indifferent to constitutional rights of school district students, such as was necessary to hold them liable in federal civil rights action on respondeat superior theory for actions of school bus driver, in connection with injuries sustained by student during fight on school bus. Lopez v. Houston Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1987, 817 F.2d 351. Civil Rights 1418

City firefighter did not establish that fire chief was deliberately indifferent to her complaint that assistant fire chief had sexually harassed her, as would be required for fire chief, as supervisor, to incur liability under §§ 1983; when firefighter made oral complaint, fire chief followed departmental procedures by requesting firefighter's allegations in writing, and when he was informed, in writing, that no complaint would be filed, it was not unreasonable for him to consider the matter settled. Hogan v. City of El Dorado, W.D.Ark.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 876. Civil Rights 1359

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether city police chief was deliberately indifferent to life-threatening risks associated with police department policy requiring off-duty officers to be always armed and always on-duty, and whether chief failed to ensure adequate training of officers to avoid misidentification of off-duty officers precluded summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds in §§ 1983 action against chief alleging that failure to train resulted in death of off-duty officer in friendly fire incident. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City was not liable under §§ 1983, pursuant to failure-to-train theory, for any excessive force by police officers in fatally shooting mentally ill homeless person, in that city did not fail to act in response to repeated complaints, and it could not be held responsible for one act of failure to properly apply training it gave officers. Ali v. City of Louisville, W.D.Ky.2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 527. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police chief's approval of internal affairs investigation that absolved officers of any fault in connection with traffic stop, detention, and search did not demonstrate deliberate indifference necessary to establish municipal liability under §§ 1983; alleged violations had already taken place, and there was no evidence that chief had actual knowledge of alleged prior constitutional violations, or of custom or policy of using excessive force for which chief failed to take any remedial steps. Cole v. Doe 1 thru 2 Officers of City of Emeryville Police Dept., N.D.Cal.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 1084. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Sheriff was not deliberately indifferent by failing to have a formal review process in place following incidents of arresting deputy's use of force, and thus, sheriff was not liable in his individual capacity for failure to properly supervise deputy, for purpose of arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force action; there were no prior citizen complaints or allegations of unfitness for duty involving deputy. Marley v. Crawford County, Arkansas, W.D.Ark.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 1129. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee's allegations that police superintendent acted with deliberate indifference and failed to properly sanction or discipline police officers for violation of citizens' constitutional rights, thereby causing police officers to engage in unlawful conduct, and that superintendent was grossly negligent in training, supervision, and discipline of officers, were sufficient to state claim against superintendent for supervisory liability under §§ 1983. Hernandez-Lopez v. Pereira, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 380 F.Supp.2d 30. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Detainee, who suffered a serious head or brain injury following a blow, failed to establish §§ 1983 official capacity claim against sheriff for failure to implement policies and procedures additional to those implemented regarding the monitoring and care of unconscious inmates since detainee failed to show to that such failure constituted deliberate indifference or led to his injuries. Layman ex rel. Layman v. Alexander, W.D.N.C.2004, 343 F.Supp.2d 483. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether supervisors of Puerto Rico agency acted with reckless or callous indifference to public employee's complaints of harassment in the workplace, precluding summary judgment in their favor on public employee's § 1983 claims seeking to hold supervisors liable for supervisee's political discrimination under the First Amendment. Velez-Herrero v. Guzman, D.Puerto Rico 2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 62. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Detainee failed to establish that city was deliberately indifferent as to whether police officers implemented express city policy that, under certain circumstances, officers stopping vehicles for investigative purposes were to surround vehicle and order driver out at gunpoint while shouting commands laced with profanities, in unconstitutional manner, as required to hold city liable under § 1983 for stop of detainee; detainee presented no evidence of pattern of constitutional violations caused by use of sensory-overload tactic. Brown v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2003, 288 F.Supp.2d 962. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

"Deliberate indifference," which supports imposition of liability on supervisory official under § 1983, requires more than negligence, but less than conduct undertaken for the very purpose of causing harm. Morris v. Eversley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1355

For purposes of § 1983 claim based on failure to train, plaintiff demonstrates deliberate indifference only if she establishes a strong likelihood, rather than mere possibility, that constitutional violation that she suffered resulted from defendants' failure to train. Harper v. Southeast Alabama Medical Center, M.D.Ala.1998, 998 F.Supp. 1289. Civil Rights 1352(1)

City's alleged failure to supervise and discipline police officers engaged in misconduct did not constitute deliberate indifference giving rise to § 1983 liability in arrestee's action alleging civil rights violations relating to arrest and subsequent charges against him, absent sufficient evidence of any identifiable policy regarding supervision and discipline of officers in connection with type of claims asserted by arrestee. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Supervisory official displays reckless or callous indifference to rights of others, as required for imposition of supervisory liability under federal civil rights statute, when it would be manifest to any reasonable official that his or her conduct was very likely to violate individual's constitutional rights. Fernandez v. Rapone, D.Mass.1996, 926 F.Supp. 255. Civil Rights 1355

Allegations by plaintiff, who had been sentenced to term of imprisonment after she had failed to pay fines imposed following her convictions for violating town ordinances, were insufficient to establish that policy of town in seeking imprisonment established deliberate indifference to her civil rights as would allow imposition of liability against town and its attorney in his official capacity; no showing had been made that town attorney's position in seeking imprisonment was result of overarching policy or failure to train attorney rather than handling of single case. Fahle v. Braslow, E.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 145, affirmed 111 F.3d 123. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil

School superintendent and school officials were not deliberately indifferent to parents' reports of sexual misconduct, religious proselytizing and interference with family relationship by teacher, as required to impose liability under § 1983; although superintendent may have been negligent in failing to recognize high risk to students, he did act and investigate, although, arguably, inadequately. Shepard v. Kemp, M.D.Pa.1995, 912 F.Supp. 120. Civil Rights 1066; Civil Rights 1070

Plaintiffs alleging supervisory liability under § 1983 have heavy burden of proving that supervisor was deliberately indifferent to or tacitly authorized practices amounting to pervasive and unreasonable risk of harm from some specified source, and thus plaintiff ordinarily cannot meet this burden by pointing only to single incident or isolated incidents of subordinates' misconduct. McNeal v. Harper, E.D.Va.1993, 816 F.Supp. 421. Civil Rights 1355

Former county employee, a court security officer, failed to prove that the response of her former boss, a sheriff, to her complaint that she was sexually harassed by a fellow officer was so inadequate as to show deliberate indifference to or tacit authorization of the alleged conduct, as required for imposition of supervisory liability under §§ 1983; one day after learning of the complaint, the sheriff put the alleged offender on administrative leave, and shortly thereafter contacted an independent fact-finder to conduct an investigation into the matter, following which the sheriff immediately asked the alleged offender to resign. Mikkelsen v. DeWitt, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 141 Fed.Appx. 88, 2005 WL 1655026, Unreported. Civil Rights 1359

Sheriff did not have sufficient notice of possible constitutional deprivations, as would support holding sheriff personally liable, under §§ 1983, for deputy sheriff's violation of elementary school student's Fourth Amendment rights by handcuffing student following student's alleged making of physical threat toward teacher, absent evidence of widespread and obvious handcuffed detentions of students by the deputy involved or other deputy sheriffs. Gray ex rel. Alexander v. Bostic, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 458 F.3d 1295. Civil Rights 1358

Female student offered no evidence that state-university professor's superiors intentionally treated her differently from other similarly-situated students after she reported professor's alleged sexual harassment, as required to support student's "class of one" theory of discrimination under § 1983. Hayut v. State University of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 733, 197 A.L.R. Fed. 659. Civil Rights 1067(3)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether supervisory police officer was aware of, and concealed complaints about, a subordinate's alleged racial profiling and illegal search and seizure practices, discouraged other officers from testifying as to the alleged misconduct, failed to take any disciplinary action, and indicated to officers that he would protect the subordinate from reprimands or sanctions, precluding summary judgment for supervisory officer in §§ 1983 action alleging Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment violations. Johnson v. Anhorn, E.D.Pa.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 338. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Child failed to state cause of action for supervisory liability under § 1983 in complaint, against directors of county department of family services and mental health center, absent allegations with respect to directors' role in decision to remove child, or allegation that directors had knowledge of decision to remove. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Absent showing that county knew its training of sheriff deputies on recognition of mental disorders that would support detention of patients for psychiatric evaluations under state statute was so deficient as to create unjustifiable risk to citizens that they would be detained in violation of their Fourth Amendment rights, county could not be liable under § 1983 for deputies' alleged unconstitutional conduct of detaining hospital patient for psychiatric evaluation, without probable cause to believe she had a mental disorder. To demonstrate supervisor's deliberate indifference, as required for supervisor to be liable under § 1983, plaintiff must show that supervisor had culpable state of mind. Mendez Marrero v. Toledo, D.Puerto Rico 1997, 968 F.Supp. 27. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory officer may be held liable under § 1983 for failing to intervene to stop discriminatory conduct of other employees if supervisor had actual or constructive knowledge of gender discriminatory policy and that he permitted to conduct to continue, or was grossly negligent in his management of subordinates who promoted the conduct. Wise v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 355. Civil Rights 1359

Correctional facility and its manager were not liable for acts of facility employee, even if such acts amounted to inhumane conditions of confinement, absent showing that facility and manager knew about employee's conduct and did nothing to stop it. Smith v. U.S., M.D.Fla.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1183. Prisons 10

Elementary school principal did not violate disciplined student's substantive due process rights, under supervisory liability theory, absent showing that principal had notice of acts creating pervasive and unreasonable risk of harm or that principal's corrective inaction amounted to deliberate indifference or tacit authorization of offensive practices; principal was aware of only one prior disciplinary incident involving teacher in question, and had reprimanded teacher for that incident. Meyer by Wyrick v. Litwiller, W.D.Mo.1990, 749 F.Supp. 981. Constitutional Law 278.5(6); Schools 176

Absent showing of knowledge or accountability, chief-of-police could not be held liable under theory of respondeat superior for unlawful searches conducted by off-duty policemen of rock concert patrons at public auditorium, which searches were instigated by auditorium manager and members of auditorium commission. Stroeber v. Commission Veteran's Auditorium, S.D.Iowa 1977, 453 F.Supp. 926. Civil Rights 1358

409. ---- Number of incidents, respondeat superior, liability generally

Single incident, or series of isolated incidents, usually provides insufficient basis upon which to assign supervisory liability in action based on alleged Eighth Amendment violations. Howard v. Adkison, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 887 F.2d 134, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

County can be held liable under §§ 1983 for a single decision by a policymaker. Shape v. Barnes County, N.D., D.N.D.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 1067. Civil Rights 1351(1)

410. ---- Personal involvement in deprivation, respondeat superior, liability generally

State prison director's approval of use of special team to conduct cell invasions to retrieve gun believed to be in one of cells was not a direct participation in cell removals for which he might have supervisory liability for alleged excessive force violation occurring when officers acted contrary to authorized, constitutionally appropriate procedures. Serna v. Colorado Dept. of Corrections, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2006, 455 F.3d 1146. Civil Rights 1358

Patient's allegations that nurse's aide assisted county hospital supervisor during the same hours that the supervisor worked and that the supervisor was present, in charge, and working with the aide on the dates on which patient was allegedly sexually assaulted was insufficient to state a §§ 1983 claim against the supervisor for violations of constitutional rights, absent any allegations that the supervisor engaged in any intentional or deliberate acts against the patient or that she personally directed the violation or had actual knowledge of the violations and acquiesced in its continuance. Beedle v. Wilson, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2005, 422 F.3d 1059. Civil Rights 1360

Female student offered no evidence that state-university professor's superiors participated in any of professor's alleged sexual harassment or that they knew or should have known of harassment of other students by other professors, as required to hold superiors liable under § 1983 for professor's harassment in violation of student's equal protection rights. Hayut v. State University of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 352 F.3d 733, 197 A.L.R. Fed. 659. Civil Rights 1356

Under § 1983, liability cannot be imposed on supervising officers under respondeat superior theory of liability; instead, supervising officers can be held liable under § 1983 only if they play an affirmative part in the alleged deprivation of constitutional rights, by setting in motion a series of acts by others which supervisor knew, or reasonably should have known, would cause others to inflict the constitutional injury. Graves v. City of Coeur D'Alene, C.A.9 (Idaho) 2003, 339 F.3d 828. Civil Rights 1355

Members of county board of supervisors could not be held liable under § 1983, without having personally participated in violating county employees' constitutional rights. Weisbuch v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 119 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1359

Federal civil rights statute requires personal involvement in, rather than mere respondeat superior responsibility for, any alleged constitutional deprivation. Hendricks v. Coughlin, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 114 F.3d 390. Civil Rights 1336

Supervisory personnel cannot be held liable under § 1983 for actions of subordinate under theory of respondeat superior; they may be held liable, however, if they personally participated in acts comprising alleged constitutional violation or instigated or adopted policy violating constitutional rights. Adams v. Poag, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1995, 61 F.3d 1537, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 70 F.3d 1287. Civil Rights 1355

Warden of federal medical center could not be held liable under doctrine of respondeat superior for alleged inadequate treatment of federal prisoner, and some showing of personal involvement by the warden in the alleged negligent acts was required. Sanders v. U.S., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1985, 760 F.2d 869. Civil Rights 1364

Although this section proscribing the deprivation of rights must be read against background of tort liability that makes a man responsible for the natural consequences of his actions, liability will only lie where it is affirmatively shown that official charged acted personally in the deprivation of the plaintiff's rights, and doctrine of respondeat superior has no application under this provision. Vinnedge v. Gibbs, C.A.4 (Va.) 1977, 550 F.2d 926. Civil Rights 1355

Under §§ 1983, a supervisor may be liable only if there exists either: (1) his or her personal involvement in the constitutional deprivation, or (2) a sufficient causal connection between the supervisor's wrongful conduct and the constitutional violation. Strong v. Woodford, C.D.Cal.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 1082. Civil Rights 1355

Where defendant is employed in supervisory capacity, personal involvement in violations of plaintiff's constitutional rights, showing of which is required for recovery under § 1983, can include (1) direct participation in alleged violation, (2) failure to remedy wrong after learning of it, (3) creation or maintenance of policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, (4) gross negligence in supervising subordinates who committed unconstitutional acts, and (5) exhibiting deliberate indifference by failing to act on information indicating that constitutional violations were occurring. Hayes v. Sweeney, W.D.N.Y.1997, 961 F.Supp. 467. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisor can be liable in civil rights action for employee's violation of plaintiffs constitutional rights if supervisor either encouraged specific incident of misconduct or in some other way directly participated in it. Kelly v. Wehrum, S.D.Ohio 1997, 956 F.Supp. 1369. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory liability under federal civil rights statute may not be predicated upon theory of respondeat superior; supervisor may be found liable only on basis of his or her own acts or omissions, and plaintiff must show that supervisor's conduct or inaction amounted to reckless or callous indifference to constitutional rights of others. Fernandez v. Rapone, D.Mass.1996, 926 F.Supp. 255. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisors cannot be liable under § 1983 unless they actually participated in the allegedly wrongful act or unless causal connection exists between their acts and the alleged violation. Smith v. U.S., M.D.Fla.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1183. Civil Rights 1355

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) could not be liable under § 1983 under theory of respondeat superior for actions of undercover informant who through his business activities defrauded plaintiffs where agents were not alleged to have been directly involved in the informant's activities. Norris v. Davis, W.D.Ky.1993, 826 F.Supp. 212. Civil Rights 1364

Superintendent of correctional facility could not be held liable on § 1983 civil rights claim for failing to protect inmate from another inmate diagnosed as having AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome), absent any allegation of personal involvement; concept of respondeat superior could not be basis of claim. Cameron v. Metcuz, N.D.Ind.1989, 705 F.Supp. 454. Civil Rights 1358

411. ---- Corporations, respondeat superior, liability generally

Though private company had entered into lease agreement with state so that lands on which plaintiff had been arrested by state game and fish rangers were established as a game and fish management area, respondeat superior would provide no right of recovery against the company under this section based on alleged false arrest and malicious prosecution by the rangers, nor did the contractual lease agreement constitute concerted action with the state such as is necessary to make out an independent cause of action against the private individual under this section. Howell v. Tanner, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 650 F.2d 610, rehearing denied 659 F.2d 1079, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1775, 456 U.S. 918, 72 L.Ed.2d 178, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1777, 456 U.S. 919, 72 L.Ed.2d 180. Civil Rights 1339

Private corporation could not be held liable under a theory of respondeat superior in §§ 1983 action. Lassoff v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 483. Civil Rights 1336

Charitable corporation that maintained residential facility for juveniles and that received child for temporary placement from county pending resolution of the child's mother's petition alleging that the child was a person in need of supervision (PINS) could not be held liable, under §§ 1983, on respondeat superior theory, for alleged violation of the child's Jewish mother's First Amendment right to raise her child in the religion of her choice when the child, while living at the residential facility, was baptized in a Christian church while on an outing with a counselor at the residential facility who took the child to his church. Whalen v. Allers, S.D.N.Y.2003, 302 F.Supp.2d 194. Civil Rights 1341

Corporation could not be held vicariously liable under this section for conduct of its agent under doctrine of respondeat superior. Price v. Parks-Belk, Inc., E.D.Tenn.1976, 72 F.R.D. 84. Civil Rights 1341

Corporations that were named as defendants to inmate's § 1983 claim that alleged corporations' employees had violated his constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment could not be vicariously liable for acts of their servants under § 1983. Baker v. Simmons, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 231, 2003 WL 21008830, Unreported. Civil Rights 1339

412. ---- Independent contractors, respondeat superior, liability generally

Security consultant to family planning clinic was independent contractor rather than employee, and clinic thus was not subject to respondeat superior liability for his actions in antiabortion protestors' § 1983 suit, where consultant billed for his services, was not on salary, did not receive any benefits or any training from clinic, and was not provided with instruction on how he was to perform his services. Powell v. City and County of Denver, Colo., D.Colo.1997, 973 F.Supp. 1198. Civil Rights 1341

413. ---- Governmental units, respondeat superior, liability generally

Local government entities, while considered potentially liable "persons" under §§1983, cannot be liable on theory of respondeat superior. McDowell v. Brown, C.A.11 (Ga.) 2004, 392 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1345

Governmental liability under § 1983 may not be proven under respondeat superior doctrine, but must be founded upon evidence that government unit itself supported a violation of constitutional rights. Bielevicz v. Dubinon, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 915 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1345

Doctrine of respondeat superior is not available in Bivens constitutional tort actions against United States or in § 1983 actions. Marsden v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, S.D.N.Y.1994, 856 F.Supp. 832. Civil Rights 1336; United States 50.2

Respondeat superior liability does not by itself warrant finding of liability on part of governmental unit in § 1983 employment discrimination action. Long v. Board of Educ. of City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1993, 812 F.Supp. 525, affirmed 8 F.3d 811. Civil Rights 1345

414. ---- Local governments, respondeat superior, liability generally

Governmental body is liable for damages under federal civil rights statute for constitutional violations resulting from official policy or custom; local government is responsible when execution of government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent the official policy, inflicts injury, but local government may not be held liable for unconstitutional acts of its nonpolicy-making employees, and thus, may not be held liable on theory of respondeat superior. Flores v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 92 F.3d 258, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Respondeat superior is not basis for imposing civil rights liability on local governments. White by Swafford v. Gerbitz, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1989, 892 F.2d 457. Civil Rights 1345

Local governmental liability under this section cannot be grounded on the doctrine of respondeat superior. Walden v. Wishengrad, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1984, 745 F.2d 149. See, also, Smith v. City of Oklahoma City, C.A.10 (Okl.) 1983, 696 F.2d 784; Phelan v. Corning, N.D.N.Y.1983, 568 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1345

Georgia city and county, which were consolidated into a single local government entity, could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for the acts and policies of sheriff and his deputies in connection with multi-jurisdictional narcotics task force since local government did not control sheriff's law enforcement policies with regard to task force operations, and sheriff did not act as a final local government policymaker with respect to those operations. Beaulah v. Muscogee County Sheriff's Deputies, M.D.Ga.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 1342. Civil Rights 1351(4)

If a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by a municipality's officers directly caused a constitutional violation, then the municipal body may be sued directly pursuant to §§ 1983. Ashby v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2004, 354 F.Supp.2d 616. Civil Rights 1351(1)

415. ---- Municipalities, respondeat superior, liability generally

A municipality cannot be held liable for violation of civil rights solely because employee is a tortfeasor; a municipality cannot be held liable under this section on a respondeat superior theory. Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 436 U.S. 658, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. Civil Rights 1345

City was not liable under §§ 1983, for any constitutional violations that occurred in connection with search warrant requiring suspect to provide DNA sample as part of serial murder investigation, absent showing that alleged violations were caused by city's policy, practice, or custom. Kohler v. Englade, C.A.5 (La.) 2006, 470 F.3d 1104. Civil Rights 1351(4)

There is no respondeat superior theory of municipal liability, so a city may not be held vicariously liable under §§ 1983 for the actions of its agents; rather, a municipality may be held liable only if its policy or custom is the "moving force" behind a constitutional violation. Sanford v. Stiles, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 456 F.3d 298. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A municipality may not be held liable for an alleged civil rights violation where there was no underlying constitutional violation by any of its officers. Camuglia v. The City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 448 F.3d 1214. Civil Rights 1345

Vermont statute requiring actions against town officers to be brought against town in which officer serves could not make all Vermont municipalities susceptible to respondeat superior liability for the §§ 1983 violations of their employees. Coon v. Town of Springfield, Vt., C.A.2 (Vt.) 2005, 404 F.3d 683. Civil Rights 1345

Respondeat superior is unavailable against municipality under § 1983. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1345

A unit of municipal government may be held liable under § 1983 only for its own policies, not for the improper acts of its agents and employees. Nisenbaum v. Milwaukee County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 333 F.3d 804. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Under § 1983, a municipality may not be held liable on a theory of respondeat superior; instead, the plaintiff must show that the unconstitutional actions of an employee were representative of an official policy or custom of the municipal institution, or were carried out by an official with final policy making authority with respect to the challenged action. Ledbetter v. City of Topeka, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 318 F.3d 1183. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipalities may not be held liable under § 1983 under either theory of respondeat superior or vicarious liability. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1345

For purposes of municipal liability under § 1983, proof of existence of municipal policy or custom does not require plaintiff to demonstrate numerous similar violations. Hall v. Marion School Dist. No. 2, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1994, 31 F.3d 183. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality had no Monell liability under § 1983 for decision of police officers to transport critically wounded shooting victim to hospital in police wagon rather than waiting for ambulance crew, where officers did not violate victim's substantive due process rights under state-created danger doctrine and no municipal policy by itself deprived victim of his rights. Hansberry v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 404. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Town was not municipally liable under §§ 1983 for constitutional torts allegedly committed against arrestee by police officers, absent evidence that the alleged unconstitutional acts of the officers were the product of an official policy, custom, or practice. Ostroski v. Town of Southold, E.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 325. Civil Rights 1351(4)

No liability attaches to a governmental agency under §§ 1983 pursuant to a mere respondeat superior theory; rather, there must be a direct causal link between the municipal policy or custom and the alleged constitutional deprivation. Walsh v. Town of Lakeville, D.Mass.2006, 431 F.Supp.2d 134. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Under §§ 1983, a municipality cannot be held liable solely because it employs a tortfeasor, or, in other words, a municipality cannot be held liable under §§ 1983 on a respondeat superior theory; instead, it is when execution of a government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts the injury that the government as an entity is responsible under §§ 1983. Dolly v. Borough of Yeadon, E.D.Pa.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Doctrine of respondeat superior is insufficient to support a §§ 1983 claim against a municipal employer, as are conclusory assertions of a custom or policy in the absence of factual allegations or inferences. Prowisor v. Bon-Ton, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 165. Civil Rights 1394

In order to impose liability against a municipality pursuant to §§ 1983, a plaintiff must allege that the violation of his constitutional rights was part of a governmental custom, policy, ordinance, regulation or decision. Feliciano v. County of Suffolk, E.D.N.Y.2005, 419 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipalities may not be held liable for constitutional violations of their employees in §§ 1983 suit based on respondeat superior theory of liability. Rodriguez-Rodriguez v. Ortiz-Velez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 405 F.Supp.2d 162, subsequent determination 405 F.Supp.2d 170. Civil Rights 1345

A municipality cannot be held liable in a §§ 1983 action under a theory of respondeat superior for the actions of its employees or agents. Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2004, 357 F.Supp.2d 187. Civil Rights 1345

A municipality cannot be held liable under §§ 1983 under the doctrine of respondeat superior. Ashby v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2004, 354 F.Supp.2d 616. Civil Rights 1345

County did not ratify deputy sheriff's allegedly improper conduct, so as subject itself to potential Monell municipal liability under §§ 1983, when it issued report "exonerating" deputy's decision to draw, or attempt to draw, gun on motorist based on deputy's report that he acted with reasonable suspicion and out of safety concerns. Martiszus v. Washington County, D.Or.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 1160. Civil Rights 1351(4)

A municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 for the acts of an employee if there is no underlying constitutional violation. Schroeder v. Kochanowski, D.Kan.2004, 311 F.Supp.2d 1241. Civil Rights 1345

A city, as a municipality, does not bear respondeat superior liability for the constitutional torts of its employees; municipal liability under § 1983 attaches only when execution of a government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts the injury complained of. Jones v. City of Wilmington, D.Del.2004, 299 F.Supp.2d 380. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Allegations by business owner that city manager and city mayor ordered police officers to shut down his business, and that officers followed the order, carried out multiple raids on his business resulting in constitutional violations, and that officers harassed him and tried to force him to leave town stated claim for municipal liability under § 1983. Dickerson v. City of Denton, E.D.Tex.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 537. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1351(6)

Certain failures to act, such as failures to train or supervise subordinates, may evince municipal policy, so as to support imposition of liability on municipality under § 1983, where municipal decisionmakers continue to adhere to approach that they know or should know has failed to prevent constitutional violations, but for plaintiff to prevail, decisionmakers' decision must reflect deliberate indifference to risk that violation of particular constitutional or statutory right will follow decision. Houghton v. Cardone, W.D.N.Y.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 268. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on a respondeat superior theory; liability is only imposed on a government when that government, under color of some official policy, causes an employee to violate another's constitutional rights. Massey v. Town of Windsor, D.Conn.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 160. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipalities cannot be held liable under § 1983 pursuant to a theory of respondeat superior for the constitutional violations of their employees acting within the scope of their employment. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1345

Although municipality or municipal agency may not be liable under § 1983 for unconstitutional actions of its employees under doctrine of respondeat superior, it may be held responsible for its own conduct caused by unconstitutional policies. Gagne v. DeMarco, D.Conn.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 390. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A municipal policy or custom, required for municipal liability under § 1983, may be established by evidence that the deprivations were the result of: (1) a formally adopted rule or policy; (2) a pattern of unconstitutional conduct which suggests a custom or usage; or (3) the acts or omissions of an officer with final policy-making authority. Gonzalez-Caratini v. Garcia-Padilla, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal liability under § 1983 may not be based on respondeat superior principles; rather, it is only when municipal employees are acting pursuant to a municipal policy or custom which results in a deprivation of federally protected rights that liability attaches. Gonzalez-Caratini v. Garcia-Padilla, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 278 F.Supp.2d 189. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

A municipality or governmental entity cannot be found liable under § 1983 on a respondeat superior theory; such liability can be imposed only for injuries inflicted pursuant to an official governmental policy or custom. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

A municipality cannot be found liable in a § 1983 action unless its officers violated the plaintiff's constitutional rights. Flowers v. Fiore, D.R.I.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 173, affirmed 359 F.3d 24. Civil Rights 1345

Police chief, mayor and city could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged negligent supervision of municipal employee in responding to complaints of alleged criminal conduct by automobile dealership; negligent conduct was insufficient to impose municipal supervisor liability. Wesley v. Don Stein Buick, Inc., D.Kan.1997, 985 F.Supp. 1288, vacated in part 996 F.Supp. 1299. Civil Rights 1358

There is no municipal respondeat superior liability under § 1983, and municipality can only be held liable if municipal policy or custom caused the constitutional injury. Suarez v. Camden County Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, D.N.J.1997, 972 F.Supp. 269. Civil Rights 1345

Doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to municipal entity in § 1983 action. Ferguson v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1997, 969 F.Supp. 674, affirmed 141 F.3d 1189. Civil Rights 1345

Municipality may not be held liable under federal civil rights statute for the alleged unconstitutional actions of its nonpolicy making employees solely on the basis of respondeat superior. Merriman v. Town of Colonie, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 501, affirmed 112 F.3d 504. Civil Rights 1345

Although municipal liability does not attach under § 1983 under theory of respondeat superior, law allows plaintiff to impute police chief's conduct to town to make municipality liable provided police chief is policymaker within town's hierarchy. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Monell decision that municipalities would not be held liable solely on theory of respondeat superior exempts city from paying damages in respondeat superior for acts of its employees, but it does not exempt city from cost of defense. Daniels v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1996, 920 F.Supp. 901. Civil Rights 1345; Municipal Corporations 220(1)

Municipal liability would attach where police, while exercising their discretion, so often violate constitutional rights that need for further training must have been plainly obvious to policy makers who were deliberately indifferent to need. Spiegel v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1996, 920 F.Supp. 891, affirmed 196 F.3d 717, as amended, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2688, 530 U.S. 1243, 147 L.Ed.2d 961. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on respondeat superior theory. Oliver by Hines v. McClung, N.D.Ind.1995, 919 F.Supp. 1206. Civil Rights 1345

Federal civil rights statute does not impose liability upon municipality or its supervisory officials solely on basis of respondeat superior, and in order to establish municipality's liability on basis of acts by its lower echelon employees, violation of constitutional rights based on policy or custom must be demonstrated; inference that constitutionally deficient policy exists may be drawn from circumstantial proof, such as evidence that municipality so failed to train its employees as to display deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of those within its jurisdiction. Fahle v. Braslow, E.D.N.Y.1996, 913 F.Supp. 145, affirmed 111 F.3d 123. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1401

Municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on basis of respondeat superior. Velez v. City of New London, D.Conn.1995, 903 F.Supp. 286. Civil Rights 1345

Municipality liability under § 1983 for actions of police officers may not be premised on principles of respondeat superior; rather, to establish liability on behalf of entity, it must be shown that actions of officers were unconstitutional and were taken pursuant to custom or policy of entity. Roberts v. City of Forest Acres, D.S.C.1995, 902 F.Supp. 662. Civil Rights 1348

Although municipality can incur § 1983 liability if its allegedly unconstitutional action implements or executes municipal policy or custom, municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on respondeat superior theory; in other words, municipality cannot incur § 1983 liability merely by employing someone who violates plaintiff's federal rights. Garg v. Albany Indus. Development Agency, N.D.N.Y.1995, 899 F.Supp. 961, affirmed 104 F.3d 351. Civil Rights 1345

Municipalities cannot be held liable under § 1983 under a respondeat superior theory; thus, municipality is not liable solely because it employs a tort-feasor; instead, it is only when execution of municipality's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts the injury that the municipality as an entity is responsible under § 1983. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

866 F.Supp. 272. Civil Rights 1345

For a valid claim of municipal liability under § 1983, municipality itself must be wrongdoer rather than one of its employees because § 1983 liability cannot be based on respondeat superior theory. Velaire v. City of Schenectady, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 774. Civil Rights 1345

No respondeat superior liability exists for municipality under § 1983. Gallardo v. Board of County Com'rs, Kearny County Kan., D.Kan.1994, 857 F.Supp. 783. Civil Rights 1345

Municipality cannot be held liable under civil rights law on basis of respondeat superior theory. Bowen v. City of Manchester, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1992, 966 F.2d 13. See, also, Baugh v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1993, 823 F.Supp. 1452, motion to amend denied 829 F.Supp. 274, affirmed 41 F.3d 1510; Fields v. District of Columbia Dept. of Corrections, D.D.C.1992, 789 F.Supp. 20.

416. ---- Cities, respondeat superior, liability generally

City could not be held liable on respondeat superior theory in civil rights action based on actions of off-duty police officer that it employed. Robles v. City of Fort Wayne, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 113 F.3d 732. Civil Rights 1348

Imposing § 1983 liability on city for county's policy of permitting only fire department divers to rescue drowning victim would effectively and improperly be based on respondeat superior theory; city and county had properly agreed to leave county with sole responsibility for emergency services on lake; and city was not merely trying to escape legal liability. Ross v. U.S., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1422, rehearing denied, on remand 764 F.Supp. 1308. Civil Rights 1360

City cannot be held liable for violation of constitutional rights on theory of respondeat superior. Los Angeles Police Protective League v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1990, 907 F.2d 879, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1345

City could not be held liable on theory of respondeat superior for city police officers' violations of civil rights. Wise v. Bravo, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1981, 666 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1348

City could not be held liable in restaurant owner's §§1983 action against city and restaurant inspector alleging due process violations arising from inspector's decision to temporarily close restaurant, where inspector had been found not to have committed any due process violations. Camuglia v. City of Albuquerque, D.N.M.2005, 375 F.Supp.2d 1311. Civil Rights 1350

City was not liable under §§ 1983, pursuant to respondeat superior theory, for any constitutional violations that occurred in connection with search warrant requiring suspect to provide DNA sample, inasmuch as alleged violation was not caused by any city policy or custom. Kohler v. Englade, M.D.La.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 751. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Given the significant autonomy Commissioner of the Human Resource Administration (HRA) had in deciding whether to certify organization's proposal, and fact that twenty-five percent of funding came from City, Commissioner was not acting as arm of the state when he withdrew certification for contractor as vendor for state's contracts, and thus city could be subject to liability on §§ 1983 claim that Commissioner denied certification in retaliation for contractor's exercise of its First Amendment rights. Housing Works, Inc. v. Turner, S.D.N.Y.2005, 362 F.Supp.2d 434. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Municipality may not be held liable under § 1983 under theory of respondeat superior; instead, municipal liability may result only from enforcement of municipal policy or custom. Smith v. Barber, D.Kan.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 992. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Estate of victim who had been shot and killed by off-duty police officer failed to state § 1983 supervisory liability claim that police chief violated victim's constitutional rights, for failure to plead causal connection between chief's alleged de facto policy of deliberate indifference and victim's death at hands of officer. Burkhart v. Knepper, W.D.Pa.2004, 310 F.Supp.2d 734. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City was responsible under § 1983 for mayor's violation of police officer's due process rights in predetermining outcome of officer's pretermination hearing; mayor's conduct in ordering that officer be terminated regardless of what transpired at hearing constituted deliberate choice to follow course of action made from among various alternatives, and mayor was the city official responsible for establishing final policy with respect to the subject matter. Wagner v. City of Memphis, W.D.Tenn.1997, 971 F.Supp. 308. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Lack of evidence of inadequate training or supervision of officers cooperating in investigation of police corruption precluded § 1983 claim against city based on allegedly deliberate indifference to rights of police officer who was shot during argument with cooperating officer; possibility that cooperating officer would shoot another officer was not highly predictable, cooperating officer did not need to be trained not to relieve stress by shooting fellow officers, and city did instruct supervisors to monitor cooperating officers for signs of stress. Morrissey v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 963 F.Supp. 270. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Section 1983 plaintiff cannot rely on theory of respondeat superior to hold city liable for individual actions of its police officers. Wallace v. City of Montgomery, M.D.Ala.1996, 956 F.Supp. 965. Civil Rights 1345

City's alleged failure to supervise and discipline police officers who violate civil rights of others did not "shock the conscience" and thus did not support arrestee's substantive due process claim based on city's own conduct, in connection with arrest for driving under influence of alcohol (DUI) and charge of resisting arrest. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City may incur direct § 1983 liability based on unconstitutional act by employee if municipal policy amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of public with whom municipal employee comes in contact, regardless of whether policy itself is constitutional. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1351(1)

In his § 1983 civil rights claims against defendants, each of whom was municipal corporation or affiliated arm of local government, plaintiff could not prevail on theory of respondeat superior, that is, simply by demonstrating tortious behavior of employee or other agent. Britton v. City of Erie, Pa., W.D.Pa.1995, 933 F.Supp. 1261, affirmed 100 F.3d 946. Civil Rights 1345

There was no evidence that policymaker knew to "moral certainty" that city emergency workers would face situation involving refusal of medical treatment by disabled individual unable to speak, that training would have made any difference to outcome, since individual was unable to breathe and had to be taken to hospital with working ventilator, or that this was sort of case where wrong choice would "frequently" cause deprivation of constitutional rights, as required to support § 1983 claim against city for any constitutional violation committed by its emergency workers in transporting individual to hospital against his wishes. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 213009, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(6)

City could not be held liable pursuant to § 1983 under respondeat superior theory for police officers' allegedly negligent failure to obtain positive identification from individual who impersonated plaintiff, even if officers' negligence resulted in plaintiff's wrongful arrest and detention, absent evidence of existence of municipal policy or custom, and of direct causal link between policy or custom and plaintiff's injury. Sanchez v. City of Albuquerque, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2003, 65 Fed.Appx. 241, 2003 WL 21027948, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Alabama counties are not liable under theory of respondeat superior for sheriff's official acts that are tortious. McMillian v. Monroe County, Ala., U.S.Ala.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1734, 520 U.S. 781, 138 L.Ed.2d 1. Counties 146

County's liability under § 1983 may not be based on doctrine of respondeat superior. Grech v. Clayton County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1326. Civil Rights 1345

Under § 1983, county cannot be held liable on theory of respondeat superior merely due to its employment of tort-feasor. Esteves v. Brock, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 106 F.3d 674, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 114 F.3d 1185, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 91, 522 U.S. 828, 139 L.Ed.2d 47. Civil Rights 1345

Holding county liable for sheriff's abuse of powers inherent in his role as chief policymaker for how peace would be kept in county would not run afoul of rule against respondeat superior liability on part of county in civil rights for actions of its employees, despite county's contention that it did not authorize sheriff to violate law. Turner v. Upton County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 915 F.2d 133, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 788, 498 U.S. 1069, 112 L.Ed.2d 850. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Under Tennessee law, county deputy sheriff acted for the county when he seized judgment debtor's automobile and its contents pursuant to writ of execution, and, thus, county could be liable under §§ 1983 for deputy sheriff's alleged violation of automobile owner's constitutional rights under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments. Buchanan v. Williams, M.D.Tenn.2006, 434 F.Supp.2d 521. Civil Rights 1347

County board of commissioners was not liable under §§ 1983 for any wrongful termination of deputy sheriff; board had no responsibility for conduct of sheriff, who was state official, and in any event wrongful conduct, consisting of alleged defamation, was not done pursuant to any policy or custom of board. Hughes v. Keath, D.Kan.2004, 328 F.Supp.2d 1161. Civil Rights 1351(5)

A county may be held liable under § 1983 only for its own unconstitutional or illegal policies and not for its employees' tortious acts; a county will only be liable if its employees committed a constitutional violation, and its official policy or custom was the moving force behind the alleged injury alleged. Estate of Sisk v. Manzanares, D.Kan.2002, 262 F.Supp.2d 1162. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

County liability for damages under § 1983 cannot attach on basis of respondeat superior. Bland v. Madison County, Fla., N.D.Fla.1995, 895 F.Supp. 1515. Civil Rights 1345

Warden of county prison did not have final policy-making authority necessary to hold county liable under § 1983 for his alleged wrongful actions. Kis v. County of Schuylkill, E.D.Pa.1994, 866 F.Supp. 1462. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County could not be held liable in § 1983 action solely on basis of respondeat superior. Shoop v. Dauphin County, M.D.Pa.1991, 766 F.Supp. 1327, affirmed 945 F.2d 396, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1178, 502 U.S. 1097, 117 L.Ed.2d 422. Civil Rights 1345

418. ---- Towns, respondeat superior, liability generally

Respondeat superior could not serve as basis for imposing liability on town under § 1983, based on action of its police officers. Armao v. American Honda Motor Co., D.Conn.1996, 917 F.Supp. 142. Civil Rights 1345

Where only liability alleged against town in civil rights suit was premised on theory of respondeat superior, town was immune from liability under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Hedrick v. Blake, D.C.Del.1982, 531 F.Supp. 156. Civil Rights 1345

419. ---- City council members, respondeat superior, liability generally

City councilmen could not be held liable for police chief's allegedly tortious action solely on the basis of respondeat superior. Bowen v. Watkins, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1982, 669 F.2d 979. Civil Rights 1358

420. ---- Parole commissions, respondeat superior, liability generally

Where monetary damages were sought in action by prisoner against Parole Commission, regional commissioner and parole examiners alleging denial of meaningful parole consideration, general doctrine of respondeat superior would not suffice for imposition of liability against Commission and commissioner, and some showing of personal responsibility was required; thus, in absence of allegation of personal responsibility, claim for money damages against Commission and commissioner was properly dismissed. DeShields v. U. S. Parole Commission, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1979, 593 F.2d 354. Pardon And Parole 56

421. ---- Police commissioners, respondeat superior, liability generally

Police chief's awareness that officer twice executed warrant to search arrestees' motel room was insufficient basis upon which to impose liability on chief and village in arrestees' subsequent § 1983 action for unlawful search and seizure and false arrest, even if double execution rendered search warrant invalid; when officer executed search warrant second time, chief knew that officer also carried valid arrest warrants. Simms v. Village of Albion, N.Y., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1997, 115 F.3d 1098. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

Police department and its police chief could not be held liable under § 1983 for officer's false arrest of arrestee, as there was no evidence that police department or its chief had approved of officer's decision to arrest arrestee based on limited information in his possession. Ortega v. Christian, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1996, 85 F.3d 1521. Civil Rights 1348; Civil Rights 1358

In § 1983 action, police chief was not liable in his capacity as officer's supervisor for alleged illegal arrest of father for child abuse. Ripson v. Alles, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1994, 21 F.3d 805, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

Police chief could not be held liable for misconduct of other officers who were defendants in suit under this section, just because he was their supervisor, since doctrine of respondeat superior, which makes employer liable without fault on his part for torts committed by his employees in furtherance of their employment, is not applicable in actions under § 1983. McKinnon v. City of Berwyn, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1984, 750 F.2d 1383, on remand. Civil Rights 1358

Attorney arrested for criticizing an officer's conduct during the arrest of a third party and for refusing to leave the scene of the arrest failed to prove that the officer's supervisor had actual or constructive knowledge of the circumstances of the arrest, thus defeating the attorney's § 1983 claim against the supervisor; the supervisor arrived on the scene after the arrest had concluded, and evidence that he spoke to both of the officers on the scene was insufficient to establish deliberate indifference. Wilson v. Kittoe, W.D.Va.2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 520, affirmed 337 F.3d 392. Civil Rights 1358

Members of sheriff's department could not be held liable on respondeat superior grounds for mistaken arrest of plaintiff by two police officers pursuant to attachment issued by juvenile court, nor could county be held liable absent showing that county was negligent in training and supervision of its employees. Johnson v. Turner, W.D.Tenn.1994, 855 F.Supp. 228, affirmed 125 F.3d 324, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

City and city police department were not liable for decision of deputy police chief and police lieutenant to summarily arrest all violators of city ticket scalping ordinance and subject them to standard processing routine at detention center, for purpose of § 1983 action alleging that arrests and detentions pursuant to ticket scalping ordinance violated the Fourth Amendment, where deputy and lieutenant did not have authority to set official policy under state law, and there was no showing that chief of police or other policymaker was involved in decision. Chortek v. City of Milwaukee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2004, 356 F.3d 740, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 44, 543 U.S. 811, 160 L.Ed.2d 14. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 in connection with its police officers' alleged warrantless entry, false arrest, and use of excessive force, despite arrestee's contention that city failed to properly respond to his citizen complaint, where officer conducted thorough investigation, which included interviews of parties and relevant witnesses and polygraph of arresting officer, and police captain and chief found officer's report to be accurate under circumstances. Thorne v. Steubenville Police Officer, S.D.Ohio 2006, 463 F.Supp.2d 760. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Supervisors and state official were not liable under §§ 1983, on the basis of respondeat superior, for death of individual who was shot and killed by officers during police raid of housing project, absent any evidence that supervisors and officials had formulated a policy or engaged in a practice that led to the alleged violations; fact that supervisors had supervisory authority over officers who conducted the raid was not enough to establish liability. Martinez-Rivera v. Sanchez Ramos, D.Puerto Rico 2006, 430 F.Supp.2d 47. Civil Rights 1358

City could have no civil rights liability where arrestee's constitutional rights had not been violated by officers. Ingram v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2006, 418 F.Supp.2d 1182. Civil Rights 1348

State trooper who allegedly committed torts himself and who was not a supervisor of any kind to any person could not be held liable under §§ 1983 under respondeat superior theory. Lassoff v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 483. Civil Rights 1358

City police chief's reliance on subordinate to adequately train recruits did not absolve chief from supervisory liability under §§ 1983 for alleged failure to ensure necessary training regarding on-duty/off-duty interactions between police officers, where chief was ultimately responsible for ensuring proper training and for continued implementation of department's always armed/always on-duty policy. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1359

Police department superintendent and police sergeant were not liable under §§ 1983 as supervisors for acts allegedly committed by police officers who assaulted individuals when they attempted to file a complaint at police station, absent evidence of a known pattern of previous police misconduct or lack of training, or that superintendent and sergeant committed grossly unconstitutional actions or more importantly, how were they personally involved in the alleged unconstitutional actions. Vega v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 160. Civil Rights 1358

Police chief was not liable under §§ 1983, pursuant to respondeat superior theory, for any constitutional violations that occurred in connection with search warrant requiring suspect to provide DNA sample, where police chief played no role in suspect's arrest. Kohler v. Englade, M.D.La.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 751. Civil Rights 1358

Sheriff deputies' detention of hospital patient, pursuant to state statute, for psychiatric evaluation, after she allegedly became unruly in emergency room while awaiting treatment for suspected heart attack, was not the result of county's policy of providing insufficient training to its deputies on communication skills, and thus county could not be liable under § 1983 for deputies' alleged violations of patient's Fourth Amendment rights to be free from unreasonable seizures and uses of force. Harvey v. Alameda County Medical Center, N.D.Cal.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 960, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 823, 2005 WL 662645. Civil Rights 1352(6)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Sheriff's deputy who ordered unconstitutional strip search of nonviolent minor arrestee who had posted bond was not shielded from civil liability in arrestee's § 1983 action for illegal search simply because he acted upon direction of policy-making superiors. Dugas v. Jefferson County, E.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 1315, affirmed 127 F.3d 33. Civil Rights 1088(4)

423. ---- Prison officials, respondeat superior, liability generally

Evidence that state prison warden was informed that mentally ill inmate had been placed in restraints was insufficient to impose supervisory liability on the warden in inmate's §§ 1983 action; there was no evidence that the warden was notified at any point other than early in the 22-hour period that inmate was restrained, at which time warden would have had no reason to question the need for the restraint. Ziemba v. Armstrong, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 430 F.3d 623. Civil Rights 1358

Prison guard was not liable in federal civil rights action for injuries suffered by prisoner who was attacked by fellow inmate and who alleged that failure of guards to protect him violated his rights under Eighth Amendment where guard was not involved in decision to release inmate who had attacked prisoner from his cell and was unaware that altercation was going to occur, was included as defendant merely because he was shift supervisor, and there was no evidence to show sufficient personal involvement by guard or deliberate indifference or tacit authorization by him of conduct complained of by other guards. Randle v. Parker, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1995, 48 F.3d 301. Civil Rights 1093

Doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to civil rights action against prison official for Eighth Amendment violation, but whether superintendent actually controls or fails to properly supervise a subordinate may be a relevant inquiry. LaMarca v. Turner, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1993, 995 F.2d 1526, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1189, 510 U.S. 1164, 127 L.Ed.2d 539. Civil Rights 1358

Respondeat superior was not basis for liability under § 1983, and thus, chief medical officer of prison hospital could not be held liable for inmate's claims of inadequate treatment by other medical personnel. Smith v. Marcantonio, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1990, 910 F.2d 500. Civil Rights 1358

Corrections director and state prison warden could not be held liable in state prisoner's civil rights suit alleging use of excessive force by prison guards, since doctrine of respondeat superior was inapplicable to action and no other basis of liability for director and warden was alleged. Williams v. Luna, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 909 F.2d 121. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisors at prison are not liable for Eighth Amendment claims brought under § 1983 under respondeat superior theory. Howard v. Adkison, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 887 F.2d 134, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

Warden was not liable under §§ 1983 for correctional officers' alleged use of excessive force against inmate, even if warden instructed officers on how to use expandable baton, where there was no evidence that warden ordered officers' conduct against inmate or knew of conduct and failed to intercept, or that officers used baton during incident. Wilkins v. Ramirez, S.D.Cal.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 1080. Civil Rights 1358

Prisoner's allegations that any prison official's liability was based on his or her status as a supervisor of another official who violated prisoner's rights and that supervisors generally were responsible for the management of the prison or the prison mail system did not state a claim under §§ 1983. Strong v. Woodford, C.D.Cal.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 1082. Civil Rights 1395(7)

California state prison inmate who could not recover in §§ 1983 action from defendant California Department of Corrections (CDC) director and prison warden on respondeat theory based on alleged actions of subordinates would be granted leave to amend claims against those defendants, as it was possible that inmate could cure deficiencies in his complaint by pleading additional facts showing personal involvement by director and warden in alleged violation of First Amendment right to free exercise of religion of inmate, who was follower of Islam and did not consume pork, but was allegedly misled into consuming unlabeled pork product. Lewis v. Mitchell, S.D.Cal.2005, 416 F.Supp.2d 935. Federal Civil Procedure 1838

Prison warden was not liable under §§ 1983 through the doctrine of respondeat superior for alleged violations of pretrial detainee's Eighth Amendment rights where the detainee showed only that he filed grievances, did not show any evidence that the warden had either personal knowledge of, or in any way acquiesced to, the detainee's situation, and failed to allege anything but the mere supervisory function of the warden. Brookins v. Williams, D.Del.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 508. Civil Rights 1358

Prison officials were entitled to respondeat superior defense to inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging unconstitutional conditions of confinement, where inmate failed to provide evidence suggesting personal involvement on behalf of officials with respect to any of his claims; officials' alleged involvement was predicated solely on their names being explicitly listed on complaint. Brown v. Williams, D.Del.2005, 399 F.Supp.2d 558. Civil Rights 1358

Fact that supervisor promotes policy which infringes upon constitutional rights of inmate can be "affirmative link" connecting supervisor to suing inmates, for purposes of § 1983 action. Ingalls v. Florio, D.N.J.1997, 968 F.Supp. 193. Civil Rights 1090

Inmate who was slashed by second inmate after correctional officer allegedly told other inmates that inmate was a "snitch" did not have viable § 1983 claim against superintendent and captain of correctional facility, where superintendent and captain were not personally involved in actions that lead to slashing and superintendent and captain responded to inmate's letter requesting help. Watson v. McGinnis, S.D.N.Y.1997, 964 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisory liability could not be imposed on prison officials for alleged constitutional violations occurring when inmates were strip searched following contact visits; officials did not personally participate in the searches, and there was no evidence that they were deliberately indifferent to inmates' rights. Fernandez v. Rapone, D.Mass.1996, 926 F.Supp. 255. Civil Rights 1358

Commissioner of Department of Correctional Services was not protected from liability under § 1983 for knowing about, but not taking any action to prevent, alleged retaliation by superintendent of correctional facility against inmate for exercising his constitutional right to petition government for redress of grievances, where there was no evidence regarding Commissioner's actual beliefs about superintendent's behavior toward inmate. Pacheco v. Comisse, N.D.N.Y.1995, 897 F.Supp. 671. Civil Rights 1358

State prison wardens cannot be held liable under § 1983 on basis of any respondeat superior theory, but can nonetheless still be culpable for conduct of their subordinates if personally involved in that conduct; personal involvement can take form of formulating and directing unconstitutional policy or of facilitating, condoning or consciously ignoring known unconstitutional conduct. Burton v. Kuchel, N.D.Ill.1994, 865 F.Supp. 456. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisory liability for prisoner's medical needs requires showing that supervisory officials failed to provide prisoner with needed medical care or deliberately interfered with prison doctor's performance. Shanton v. Detrick, N.D.W.Va.1993, 826 F.Supp. 979, affirmed 17 F.3d 1434. Prisons 10

County could not be held liable for alleged due process violation arising out of defamatory statements purportedly made about deputy superintendent of county correctional facility in connection with deputy superintendent's forced early retirement, given absence of evidence that anyone whose actions could be said to represent official policy disseminated defamatory statements. Pierce v. Netzel, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 148 Fed.Appx. 47, 2005 WL 2176010,

Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

424. ---- Private owners, respondeat superior, liability generally

Restaurant owner was not liable in § 1983 action for violations of restaurant employees' right to be free from unreasonable searches and right to privacy, in action arising from detention and search of employees following discovery that money was missing from cash register; claim was based solely on owner's status as owner, and liability under § 1983 could not be based on respondeat superior. Raines v. Shoney's, Inc., E.D.Tenn.1995, 909 F.Supp. 1070, reconsideration denied 916 F.Supp. 719. Civil Rights 1340

425. ---- School districts, respondeat superior, liability generally

For purposes of determining whether school district was liable in teacher's § 1983 action alleging that her dismissal violated First Amendment, question of which district employees maintained final policy-making authority was question of state law to which Court of Appeals applied its independent judgment. Hall v. Marion School Dist. No. 2, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1994, 31 F.3d 183. Federal Courts 755

School district could not be held liable under this section for alleged constitutional violations in reassignment and discharge of school principal where the sole theory of liability was respondeat superior. Padway v. Palches, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1982, 665 F.2d 965. Civil Rights 1349

Independent school districts are liable for the actions of their boards of trustees, not on the basis of respondeat superior but because the only way a school district can act, practically as well as legally, is by and through its board of trustees. Kingsville Independent School Dist. v. Cooper, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 611 F.2d 1109. Schools 55

Since the only way that the school district could act was by and through its board of trustees, school district could be found liable in civil rights action based on unconstitutional action taken by the board of trustees despite the contention that it was being held liable on a respondeat superior theory. Stoddard v. School Dist. No. 1, Lincoln County, Wyo., C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1979, 590 F.2d 829. Civil Rights 1346

Parent of public school student, as next friend of student, failed to state a claim against school district under §§ 1983 for violation of student's right to equal protection, based on actions of school principal in prohibiting students from speaking Spanish in school, since parent did not allege that principal had final authority under state law to establish policy with respect to students speaking Spanish. Rubio v. Turner Unified School Dist. No. 202, D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1295. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Teacher's alleged sexual harassment of high school student fell short of sexual molestation or assault required to hold district superintendent and principal liable under §§ 1983 in their supervisory capacity for teacher's alleged substantive due process violation. Gilliam v. USD # 244 School Dist., D.Kan.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 1282. Civil Rights 1356

426. ---- Sheriffs, respondeat superior, liability generally

Sheriff could not be held liable for deputy sheriff's violation of elementary school student's Fourth Amendment rights on ground that, under Alabama law, a deputy sheriff was the agent and alter ego of the sheriff, since such alter ego theory was equivalent of respondeat superior liability, which was not a permissible basis to support supervisory liability under §§ 1983. Gray ex rel. Alexander v. Bostic, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 458 F.3d 1295. Civil Rights 1358

Sheriff may not be held liable in civil rights action based solely on theory of respondeat superior or vicarious liability. Palmer v. Sanderson, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1358

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Sheriff who was sued in his official capacity could not be held liable under §§ 1983 on a respondeat superior theory for alleged constitutional violations committed by sheriff's deputies when conducting traffic stop during which vehicle's passenger died from cardiac arrest; rather, passenger's mother was required to show that sheriff implemented a policy so deficient that the policy itself was a repudiation of constitutional rights and was the moving force of the constitutional violation. Oliver v. Prator, W.D.La.2006, 438 F.Supp.2d 676. Civil Rights 1358

427. ---- State officials, respondeat superior, liability generally

State's attorney general and other officials not directly involved in child sexual abuse investigation or in placement of investigated individual's name in state registry of child abusers could not be liable in individual's § 1983 due process action challenging placement without hearing; respondeat superior or vicarious liability for allegedly unconstitutional actions of officials' subordinates could not form basis for liability. Smith ex rel. Smith v. Siegelman, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2003, 322 F.3d 1290, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 71 Fed.Appx. 824, 2003 WL 21432580. Civil Rights 1358

State officials do not incur § 1983 liability for acts of their subordinates under respondeat superior theory of liability, but rather are subject to suit only if they play affirmative part in alleged deprivation of constitutional rights. Rise v. State of Or., C.A.9 (Or.) 1995, 59 F.3d 1556, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1554, 517 U.S. 1160, 134 L.Ed.2d 656. Civil Rights 1355

The doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to § 1983 actions, and thus, a state employee cannot be held liable under § 1983 absent a showing that he was personally involved in the violation of the plaintiff's constitutional rights. Porter v. Selsky, W.D.N.Y.2003, 287 F.Supp.2d 180, affirmed 421 F.3d 141. Civil Rights 1336; Civil Rights 1354

Virginia governor could not be held responsible under this section for conduct of state troopers he dispatched to strike scene, as respondeat superior theory was not applicable under this section. United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC v. Dalton, E.D.Va.1982, 544 F.Supp. 291. Civil Rights 1358

The doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply in situations involving state officials. Totaro v. Lyons, D.C.Md.1980, 498 F.Supp. 621. States 112.1(1)

428. Vicarious liability, liability generally--Generally

Actor may be held liable under § 1983 for those consequences attributable to reasonably foreseeable intervening forces, including acts of third parties. Warner v. Orange County Dept. of Probation, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 115 F.3d 1068, on remand 968 F.Supp. 917. Civil Rights 1031

Under § 1983, supervisor may be found liable on basis of his own acts or omissions; such liability can arise out of participation in a custom that leads to violation of constitutional rights, or by acting with deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of others. Diaz v. Martinez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1997, 112 F.3d 1. Civil Rights 1355

Under § 1983, supervisory officials are not liable for actions of subordinates under any theory of vicarious liability. Hansen v. Black, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 885 F.2d 642. Civil Rights 1355

If state law imposes liability upon a public official for the acts of his subordinates, vicarious liability can also be imposed upon him under this section. Johnson v. Duffy, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1978, 588 F.2d 740. Civil Rights 1355

Under Massachusetts Civil Rights Act's (MCRA) counterpart of § 1983, violation element of legal test for liability is not satisfied unless claimant also proves that violation was accomplished by threats, intimidation, or coercion.

Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1036

There can be no vicarious liability in federal civil rights action under respondeat superior theory, and allegations of participation or actual knowledge and acquiescence must be made with appropriate particularity. Youse v. Carlucci, E.D.Pa.1994, 867 F.Supp. 317. Civil Rights 1336; Civil Rights 1394

Vicarious liability is not available under federal civil rights statute. Unterberg v. Correctional Medical Systems, Inc., E.D.Pa.1992, 799 F.Supp. 490. Civil Rights 1336

Vicarious liability is not recognized in § 1983 actions. Jacobs v. Dujmovic, D.Colo.1990, 752 F.Supp. 1516, affirmed 940 F.2d 1392, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 123, 506 U.S. 840, 121 L.Ed.2d 78, rehearing denied 113 S.Ct. 641, 506 U.S. 1015, 121 L.Ed.2d 571. Civil Rights 1336

Theory of vicarious or superiors' liability is unavailable in § 1983 actions. Martin v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1191. Civil Rights 1336

429. ---- Causation, vicarious liability, liability generally

Section 1983 does not impose vicarious or respondeat superior liability on prison warden, and if warden were not personally involved in acts causing alleged constitutional deprivation, prisoner had to allege some other act by warden that caused the violation to support claim against warden in his individual capacity, but complaint alleged no causal connection between any alleged constitutional deprivation and any action or inaction, beyond perhaps mere negligence, on part of defendant warden. Painter v. Whitley, E.D.La.1988, 686 F.Supp. 150.

In civil action alleging deprivation of rights, public officials cannot be held vicariously liable for wrongdoing of others; thus, misconduct by subordinates or third parties cannot be imputed to an official who played no part in causing deprivation of constitutional rights. Redmond v. Baxley, E.D.Mich.1979, 475 F.Supp. 1111. Civil Rights 1355

430. ---- Intent or knowledge, vicarious liability, liability generally

A supervisor may be held individually liable under §§ 1983 if a failure to properly supervise and train the offending employee caused a deprivation of constitutional rights; the plaintiff must demonstrate that the supervisor was deliberately indifferent to or tacitly authorized the offending acts which requires a showing that the supervisor had notice that the training procedures and supervision were inadequate and likely to result in a constitutional violation. Wever v. Lincoln County, Nebraska, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2004, 388 F.3d 601. Civil Rights 1355

Alleged discriminatory intent of school district superintendent could not be imputed to school principal, for purpose of principal's motion for summary judgment based on qualified immunity, as to claims against principal in her individual capacity in action by "acting" assistant principal who alleged racial discrimination; individual liability under § 1983 may not be predicated on doctrine of respondeat superior or on acts and omissions of individual's superiors. Coleman v. Houston Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1997, 113 F.3d 528. Civil Rights 1359; Civil Rights 1376(10)

Constitution does not make public employees strictly, let alone vicariously, liable for injuries that befall their charges; unless they know about problem and intend that it continue, they violate neither due process clause nor cruel and unusual punishments clause, and to be held liable, they must act because of, and not merely in spite of, the objectionable consequences. Pacelli v. deVito, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 972 F.2d 871. Constitutional Law 299.1; Sentencing And Punishment 1580; Officers And Public Employees 114 security in his placement in cell with homosexual who subsequently raped him, where there was no evidence that sheriff was personally apprised of telephone call from third person who informed prison officials of the threats against pretrial detainee by cellmate. Redman v. County of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1991, 942 F.2d 1435, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 972, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L.Ed.2d 137. Civil Rights 1358

Even if chairman of nonprofit partnership, composed of several municipalities, that administered federal funds for implementation of Workforce Investment Act (WIA) programs, knew of, overtly or tacitly approved of, or purposely disregarded alleged political discrimination against partnership's former employees, municipalities that were members of partnership could not be held liable under §§ 1983 on grounds that chairman was also mayor of one of the municipalities; partnership and municipalities were separate and distinct legal entities, and employees were not municipal employees nor were they under contract with municipalities. Caraballo-Seda v. Rivera-Toro, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 144. Civil Rights 1349

431. ---- Personal involvement, vicarious liability, liability generally

Supervisory officials cannot be held vicariously liable under § 1983 for their subordinates' actions; they may be held liable only if they affirmatively participate in acts that caused constitutional deprivation or implement unconstitutional policies that causally result in plaintiff's injury. Mouille v. City of Live Oak, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 977 F.2d 924, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2443, 508 U.S. 951, 124 L.Ed.2d 660. Civil Rights 1355

Vicarious liability cannot be basis for recovery against sheriff for acts of his subordinates in suit under this section; liability may be found only if there is personal involvement of officer being sued. Watson v. Interstate Fire & Cas. Co., C.A.5 (La.) 1980, 611 F.2d 120. Civil Rights 1358

Liability under § 1983 cannot be imposed vicariously or under traditional grounds of respondeat superior; direct, personal involvement by defendant in conduct depriving plaintiff of his rights or active knowledge and acquiescence on defendant's part must be alleged. Gilmore v. Jeffes, M.D.Pa.1987, 675 F.Supp. 219. Civil Rights 1336

432. ---- Custom or usage, vicarious liability, liability generally

County department of public welfare that took custody of children to determine whether they were in need of services so as to warrant their placement in foster homes could not be held vicariously liable to children's mother for social worker's handling of case, absent showing that department had unconstitutional policy that caused mothers' injuries. Millspaugh v. County Dept. of Public Welfare of Wabash County, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 937 F.2d 1172, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 638, 502 U.S. 1004, 116 L.Ed.2d 656. Civil Rights 1351(6)

There was no evidence of municipal policy or custom required to hold municipality vicariously liable under § 1983 for police officers' arrest of young men they mistook for burglary suspects and their use of excessive force during the arrest. Wedemeier v. City of Ballwin, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 931 F.2d 24. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Mayor could not be held liable under § 1983 for isolated actions of individual employees within city jail that were contrary to jail policy or otherwise outside what should have been the mayor's control and attention; there was no vicarious liability for such acts. Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1989, 878 F.2d 1043. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Public corporation's liability under this section does not lie solely because it employs tort-feasor; there must be a showing either of official sanction of agent's acts or of culpable negligence, or impliedly or tacitly authorized, approved or encouraged discriminatory conduct as matter of course on part of employer in failing to correct known slurs or other discriminatory acts of its employees. White v. Washington Public Power Supply System, C.A.9 (

"Custom or usage" may constitute basis for municipal liability under § 1983, even in absence of express policy or of act committed by final policymaker; however, isolated acts committed by nonpolicymaking officials generally do not amount to "custom," which implies habitual practice of course of action that characteristically is repeated under like circumstances. Chapman v. Village of Homewood, N.D.Ill.1997, 960 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of municipal liability under § 1983, which officials have final policy-making authority for municipality on particular issue is question of state law, to be decided by judge by referring to state and local law, as well as custom or usage having force of law. Kis v. County of Schuylkill, E.D.Pa.1994, 866 F.Supp. 1462. Federal Courts 411

433. ---- Training and supervision, vicarious liability, liability generally

Need for training deputy sheriffs as to detention of students was not so obvious that failure to do so constituted deliberate indifference to students' Fourth Amendment rights, as would warrant holding sheriff personally liable, under §§ 1983, for deputy sheriff's violation of elementary school student's Fourth Amendment rights by handcuffing student following student's alleged making of physical threat toward teacher. Gray ex rel. Alexander v. Bostic, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 458 F.3d 1295. Civil Rights 1358

Municipality's alleged actions of failing to properly train officers in the use of deadly force did not violate suspect's constitutional rights, as required to establish municipal liability in §§ 1983 action brought by wife of suspect who was shot and killed by police officer; evidence demonstrated that officers attended annual in-service courses, where they studied, among other subjects, relevant court opinions, the officer who fired the fatal shot testified that he was present at those sessions, and officers were directed to become familiar with updated policy manual, which covered the continuum of force. Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 381 F.3d 235, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 236, 163 L.Ed.2d 219, rehearing denied, rehearing denied 126 S.Ct. 724, 163 L.Ed.2d 621. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Surviving relative of individual shot and killed by security guard employed by city housing agency to patrol agency-managed housing project failed to establish deliberate indifference on part of agency in her §§1983 due process action against agency based on argument that training received by guard was inadequate for particular conditions faced by guards at project; there was no evidence guards at project faced extraordinary situations compared to other security guards, and no evidence that guards at project faced conditions comparable to those faced by security guards in other cities who had received much more training. Larkin v. St. Louis Housing Authority Development Corp., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 355 F.3d 1114. Civil Rights 1352(3)

Official is liable under § 1983 for failure to train only where plaintiff establishes that: (1) official failed to train or supervise officers involved, (2) there is causal connection between alleged failure to supervise or train and alleged violation of plaintiff's rights, and (3) failure to train or supervise constituted deliberate indifference to plaintiff's constitutional rights. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1355

In determining adequacy of training provided to police by city, focus must be on the program, not whether particular officers were adequately trained. Palmquist v. Selvik, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 111 F.3d 1332, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Student failed to show that school district did not adequately train its employees or that inadequate training amounted to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom employees come into contact as would support student's claim that school inadequately trained its employees with regard to implementation of school district regulation prohibiting gang symbols. Stephenson v. Davenport Community School Dist., C.A.8 (Iowa) 1997, 110 F.3d 1303, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1352(2)

In order to find supervisory official personally liable for unconstitutional acts of his subordinate, it must be shown that he was responsible for supervising the wrongdoer, that a duty to instruct the subordinate to prevent constitutional harm arose from the surrounding circumstances, and that the plaintiff was harmed in the manner threatened as result of official's failure to instruct; receding from Carter v. Carlson, 144 U.S.App.D.C. 388, 447 F.2d 358. Haynesworth v. Miller, C.A.D.C.1987, 820 F.2d 1245, 261 U.S.App.D.C. 66. United States 50.2

Sheriff could not be held liable in his individual capacity under §§ 1983 under a supervisor liability theory or a failure to train theory for deputies constitutional violations in stopping vehicle without arguable reasonable suspicion and detaining occupants without arguable probable cause; there was no evidence that sheriff personally participated in the stop of the vehicle or that the deputies were following specific directions from sheriff regarding the stop, detention, or use of force, there was no history of widespread abuse that would have put sheriff on notice of a need to correct the deputies nor any policy or custom that resulted in deliberate indifference to constitutional rights. Beaulah v. Muscogee County Sheriff's Deputies, M.D.Ga.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 1342. Civil Rights 1358

In action brought by occupants of apartment who were injured when police threw flash-bang device into apartment while executing search warrant, city was not subject to municipal liability under §§ 1983 for inadequacy of police training, absent showing of any specific deficiency in city's training regime, pursuant to which officers were trained, that could have caused the injuries occupants sustained. Taylor v. City of Middletown, D.Conn.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 377. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Material issues of fact existed as to whether city failed to adequately train its police officers with respect to proper procedure for submitting search warrants to Internet service providers (ISPs) to obtain subscriber information, precluding summary judgment for town on §§ 1983 claim for alleged failure to train that was asserted by Internet service subscriber whose non-content subscriber information was obtained from his ISP by police officers through unsigned search warrant. Freedman v. American Online, Inc., D.Conn.2005, 412 F.Supp.2d 174. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

A mistake by a police officer does not establish the inadequacy of a city's training program, as required to hold the city liable under §§ 1983 for inadequate training. Gast v. Singleton, S.D.Tex.2005, 402 F.Supp.2d 794. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Allegations that state officials and police department officials had established inadequate policies and procedures and that officials were responsible for employees that they supervised as part of their duties, stated supervisory liability claim against officials under §§ 1983 arising out of plaintiff's arrest and prosecution for rape, robbery, and weapons law violations. Nunez Gonzalez v. Vazquez Garced, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 214. Civil Rights 1395(6)

City was not liable under § 1983 for any Fourth Amendment violations committed by police officers in stopping automobile, conducting pat-down search of passenger, and shooting passenger, where officers were required to attend 40 hours of job-related training and continuing education, and there was no evidence that city had policy or custom of deliberate indifference with respect to excessive force. Holeman v. City of New London, D.Conn.2004, 330 F.Supp.2d 99, reversed in part, appeal dismissed in part 425 F.3d 184. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Governmental defendants could not be held liable under § 1983 on theories of failure to supervise or policy and custom for mistaken identity arrest made pursuant to a valid arrest warrant without some evidence supporting arrestee's view of what a proper identification of arrestees/insurance against wrongful arrest training/policy would look like. Jordan v. Fournier, D.Me.2004, 324 F.Supp.2d 242. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights

There was no basis for independent municipal liability against city for alleged violation of minister's First Amendment rights arising from his arrests for obstructing highways and passageways while preaching the gospel; city did not adopt with deliberate indifference a policy of inadequately training its officers on First Amendment issues. Victory Outreach Center v. Melso, E.D.Pa.2004, 313 F.Supp.2d 481. Civil Rights 1352(4)

For a supervisor to be found individually liable under § 1983 for a failure to properly supervise and train an offending employee, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the failure to provide that specific training could reasonably be said to reflect deliberate indifference to or tacit authorization of offending acts. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1355

County could not be held liable for correctional officer's sexual assault on jail inmate on basis of failure to train, where officer had received training on written policies prohibiting improper personal conduct or commission of any felony, and officer had received specific training on what was appropriate supervision of, and conduct with, jail inmates. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To establish deliberate indifference required for § 1983 claim based on failure to train, plaintiff must show that policymaker knows to moral certainty that her employees will confront given situation, that situation either presents employee with difficult choice of sort that training or supervision will make less difficult or that there is history of employees mishandling the situation, and that wrong choice by employee will frequently cause deprivation of citizen's constitutional rights. Harper v. Southeast Alabama Medical Center, M.D.Ala.1998, 998 F.Supp. 1289. Civil Rights 1352(1)

All that is required for municipality to prevail on § 1983 claim based on theory of inadequate training is compliance with state mandated training standard for its officers. Huong v. City of Port Arthur, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1003. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Supervisors of legal assistants who erroneously issued notice of income withholding for child support were not liable for failure to adequately train and supervise their subordinates, where legal assistants were merely negligent and, thus, violated no constitutional right of father. Roush v. Justice, S.D.W.Va.1996, 949 F.Supp. 449, affirmed 149 F.3d 1170. Child Support 442

To establish liability of local governmental entity under § 1983 for failure to adequately train employees to report and to prevent sexual abuse of students, student must prove entity's failure to train its employees in relevant respect evidenced deliberate indifference to rights of students. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1352(2)

For supervisory liability to attach under § 1983, plaintiff must identify specific supervisory practice or procedure that defendants failed to employ, show that existing custom and practice created unreasonable risk of constitutional deprivation, that defendants were aware unreasonable risk existed, that they were indifferent to that risk, and that plaintiff's harm resulted from defendant's failure to adopt specific practice or procedure. Wagner v. Com. of Pa., W.D.Pa.1995, 937 F.Supp. 510. Civil Rights 1355

Former police chief was not liable for failing to adequately train and supervise police officers and others, who allegedly deliberately interfered with pretrial detainee's safety resulting in due process violation and, therefore, chief was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 action by detainee's estate after detainee hanged himself with shackles left chained to bars of cell; chief had no direct contact with detainee, no knowledge that he had threatened to commit suicide, and estate offered no evidence that chief either knew or should have known of risk generally that pretrial detainees might commit suicide. Denver, D.Colo.1996, 929 F.Supp. 1329. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1376(6)

Need for more or better training alone, sufficient to avoid alleged injury caused by use of excessive force in carrying out arrest, does not trigger supervisor's § 1983 liability. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1358

For purposes of establishing deliberate indifference in § 1983 action brought in connection with alleged sexual misconduct of teacher toward student, member of board of education, superintendent and principal had implied notice that failure to train would likely result in violation of constitutional rights; in light of clear constitutional rights of students to be free from sexual abuse, which was well established by 1987-88, and potentially disastrous consequences of violation of those rights, need to train was patently obvious. Bolon v. Rolla Public Schools, E.D.Mo.1996, 917 F.Supp. 1423. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Under § 1983, supervisor is generally not liable under theory of vicarious liability for actions of subordinate that amount to constitutional deprivation unless supervisor was personally involved in wrongful conduct or unless that supervisor implements policy so deficient that policy itself is repudiation of constitutional rights and is moving force of constitutional violation. Fickes v. Jefferson County, E.D.Tex.1995, 900 F.Supp. 84. Civil Rights 1355

To recover under § 1983 from city for alleged failure adequately to train police officer, plaintiff must show that inadequate training represented city policy and that need for better training was so obvious and so likely to result in constitutional violation that municipality can be said to have been deliberately indifferent to the need; there must also be direct causal link between policy, custom, or deficient training and alleged constitutional violation. Schilling v. Swick, W.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To hold supervisory official liable under § 1983, plaintiff must identify with particularity what supervisory official failed to do that demonstrates his deliberate indifference, and demonstrate close causal relationship between identified deficiency and ultimate injury. Kis v. County of Schuylkill, E.D.Pa.1994, 866 F.Supp. 1462. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory officials cannot be vicariously liable for actions of subordinates. Baker v. Putnal, S.D.Tex.1994, 865 F.Supp. 389, affirmed in part, reversed in part 75 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1355

Mere negligence in training employees will not create § 1983 claim against city; instead, failure to train must amount to "deliberate indifference" to rights of persons with whom police come into contact. Malignaggi v. County of Gloucester, D.N.J.1994, 855 F.Supp. 74. Civil Rights 1352(4)

In order for municipality to be liable for damages under § 1983, decision makers must have acted in unconstitutional manner, either individually or collectively, and either directly or through failure to provide proper training or other preconditions for avoiding unconstitutional acts. Suss v. American Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, S.D.N.Y.1994, 855 F.Supp. 66. Civil Rights 1343; Civil Rights 1352(1)

Arrestee failed to state claim against municipality arising out of its alleged failure to train officers properly, which allegedly led to his being shot in leg during chase, where plaintiff did not show that purported failure to train was cause of his injuries. Deodatti Colon v. Rosado Rivera, D.Puerto Rico 1993, 846 F.Supp. 156. Civil Rights 1352(4)

While supervisory officials may incur liability under § 1983 without personal involvement in particular act of subordinate, there must be evidence establishing improper training or supervision of subordinate officers so as to constitute breach of duty owed by superior; supervisory officer may not be held liable under vicarious liability theory standing alone. Braud v. Painter, M.D.La.1990, 730 F.Supp. 1. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory officials may be liable under § 1983 if alleged deprivation resulted from failure to properly train or supervise personnel, or from policy or custom for which official was responsible. Dennis v. Thurman, C.D.Cal.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1253. Civil Rights 1355

Jury verdict that city police officers did not use excessive force against arrestee or conduct an illegal search of arrestee warranted dismissal of arrestee's claims against city and police chief for promulgating allegedly invalid policies, procedures, and customs, in §§ 1983 action; any verdict against police chief or city could not be harmonized with jury verdict on excessive force and illegal search claims against officers. Coleman v. Rieck, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2005, 154 Fed.Appx. 546, 2005 WL 3068056, Unreported. Civil Rights 1424

Absent constitutional violation on the part of law enforcement officers who shot armed individual who advanced on one officer after being repeatedly advised to drop his knives, officers' supervisor could not be liable under §§ 1983 for individual's death. Huggins v. Weider, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2004, 105 Fed.Appx. 503, 2004 WL 1729793, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

434. ---- Municipalities, vicarious liability, liability generally

Municipality cannot be held vicariously liable under § 1983 for its employees' unconstitutional acts. Wedemeier v. City of Ballwin, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 931 F.2d 24. Civil Rights 1345

Vicarious liability under the common law doctrine of respondeat superior cannot be imposed against a municipality in a §§ 1983 case. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1345

When an official's discretionary decisions are constrained by policies not of that official's making, those policies, rather than the subordinate's departures from them, are the act of the municipality for purposes of establishing municipal liability under §§ 1983; similarly, when a subordinate's decision is subject to review by the municipality's authorized policymakers, they have retained the authority to measure the official's conduct for conformance with their policies. Russo v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 85. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality cannot be held vicariously liable under § 1983 for unconstitutional actions of its employees under theory of respondeat superior, but rather to obtain judgment against municipality, plaintiff must prove that municipality itself supported violation of rights alleged; thus, § 1983 liability attaches to municipality only when execution of government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts constitutional injury complained of. Hargrave v. County of Atlantic, D.N.J.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 393. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 for purported constitutional civil rights violations under ordinarily applicable principles of either vicarious liability or respondeat superior. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1345

Municipalities are liable under federal civil rights statutes only if their policies cause constitutional tort; they are not vicariously liable for constitutional torts of their agents. Warzon v. Drew, E.D.Wis.1994, 855 F.Supp. 1017, affirmed 60 F.3d 1234. Civil Rights 1345

435. ---- Cities, vicarious liability, liability generally

City is not vicariously liable under § 1983 for constitutional torts of its agents; it is only liable when it can be fairly said that city itself is wrongdoer. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1345

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

City was not liable for alleged violation of firefighters' First Amendment rights, based on city manager's decision to initiate administrative disciplinary proceedings against firefighters, allegedly in retaliation for their political affiliation, where city manager had absolute immunity, and sole basis for asserting municipal liability against city was city manager's alleged status of chief policymaker for city. Contes v. Porr, S.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 372. Civil Rights 1349

City, whose police officers stopped a vehicle with six passengers, was not liable in passengers' § 1983 action alleging violation of their Fourth Amendment rights due to city's alleged policy of targeting vehicles, where passengers failed to establish that officers violated their constitutional rights. Lewis v. City of Topeka, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 1209. Civil Rights 1348

Baltimore City, as entity distinct from its police department under Maryland law, did not wield enough control over police department to be subject to liability under § 1983 for department's actions regarding warrantless search. Chin v. City of Baltimore, D.Md.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 546. Civil Rights 1348

City cannot be held vicariously liable under § 1983 for conduct of its employees. Schilling v. Swick, W.D.Mich.1994, 868 F.Supp. 904. Civil Rights 1345

City and county could not be held vicariously liable on theory of respondeat superior in civil rights action based on alleged unconstitutional arrest by two of its police officers. Tokuhama v. City and County of Honolulu, D.Hawai'i 1989, 751 F.Supp. 1385. Civil Rights 1348

436. ---- Counties, vicarious liability, liability generally

That county could be liable not only for participation in civil rights conspiracy by county sheriff, who was county's final policymaker in area of law enforcement, but could be held directly or vicariously liable as well for actions of sheriff's alleged coconspirator would not violate rule against imposing vicarious liability when sole nexus between employer and tort is fact of employer-employee relationship. Turner v. Upton County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 915 F.2d 133, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 788, 498 U.S. 1069, 112 L.Ed.2d 850. Conspiracy 13

County was not liable under § 1983 for alleged racial and sexual harassment of black female food service worker at dietary unit of nursing home operated through county's Department of Human Services (DHS), absent evidence that food service manager or assistant manager or deputy director of county's DHS, the named individual defendants in action, possessed final decisionmaking authority with regard to county's anti-harassment policies, practices and procedures. Hargrave v. County of Atlantic, D.N.J.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 393. Civil Rights 1351(5)

For purposes of arrestee's § 1983 civil rights action alleging malicious prosecution and Fourth Amendment violation, county, as governmental entity, could not be held vicariously liable for acts of its employees, even if they were violative of individual civil rights under § 1983. Sanders v. Fort Bend County, Tex., S.D.Tex.1996, 932 F.Supp. 894. Civil Rights 1348

County could not be subjected to vicarious liability under § 1983; it could not be liable solely because it employed a tort-feasor. Wilde v. County of Kandiyohi, D.Minn.1993, 811 F.Supp. 446, affirmed 15 F.3d 103. Civil Rights 1345

437. ---- Towns, vicarious liability, liability generally

Alleged tort liability of county arising from its alleged unlawful refusal to issue occupancy permits to developers for condominiums in question was not a basis for invoking civil rights statute to obtain monetary relief against newly developed town as a successor to county on basis of vicarious liability; aside from fact that county remained in existence. Lodestar Co. v. Mono County, E.D.Cal.1986, 639 F.Supp. 1439.

City and two townships could not be held vicariously liable for alleged wrong which occurred while their police officers were arresting, "booking," and incarcerating plaintiff because officers were engaged in police activity which is a government function entitled to immunity, notwithstanding plaintiff's contention that conduct of officers in using excessive force during arrest was nongovernmental. Smith v. Yono, E.D.Mich.1985, 613 F.Supp. 50. Civil Rights 1376(3)

Municipalities may be held vicariously liable for official acts of its employees. Mui v. Dietz, N.D.Ill.1983, 559 F.Supp. 485. Municipal Corporations 745

438. ---- Corporations, vicarious liability, liability generally

Private corporate employer may not be vicariously liable for civil rights violations of its employees. Temple v. Albert, S.D.N.Y.1989, 719 F.Supp. 265. Civil Rights 1336

439. ---- Hotels, vicarious liability, liability generally

Hotel could be vicariously liable for acts of its security guard if security guard violated plaintiff's constitutional rights by detaining plaintiff and by signing complaint against him. Carr v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1987, 669 F.Supp. 1418. Civil Rights 1341

440. ---- Police officers, vicarious liability, liability generally

Police interrogator could be held liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly violating police officer's Fifth Amendment rights by threatening officer's termination to compel statements that were later used against officer at trial, even though only representative of state who "used" statements at trial was prosecutor, where prosecution was natural consequence of interrogator's action. McKinley v. City of Mansfield, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 404 F.3d 418, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1026, 163 L.Ed.2d 854. Civil Rights 1358; Civil Rights 1359

Property owner's Fourth Amendment claim against police officers, arising from their allegedly negligent execution of search warrant at property, was personal, and could not be asserted vicariously. Bonds v. Cox, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1994, 20 F.3d 697. Civil Rights 1332(4)

Desk officer at police station, chief of police, and county were not liable for strip search of pretrial detainee, absent evidence that desk officer participated in that search or that search policy promulgated by chief was unconstitutional; chief could not be vicariously liable for acts of his subordinates or on basis of failure to adequately supervise or control their conduct. Abshire v. Walls, C.A.4 (Md.) 1987, 830 F.2d 1277. Civil Rights 1358

Arrestee did not state civil rights claim against supervisors in connection with arresting officers' alleged illegal detention of arrestee in not taking him before judge prior to his incarceration, absent some connection between alleged illegal confinement and supervisors' alleged deficiencies in selecting and training officers and alleged indifference to officers' actions. Garcia Rodriguez v. Andreu Garcia, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1358

While even one action by a chief policy-maker can constitute a "policy" for purposes of Monell, which holds municipalities liable under §§ 1983 for violations of federal law that occur pursuant to official governmental policy, not every action of a chief policy-maker automatically becomes "policy" for Monell purposes. Travis v. Village of Dobbs Ferry, S.D.N.Y.2005, 355 F.Supp.2d 740. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Even if officer's fatal shooting of victim amounted to constitutional deprivation, this single incident was not enough to establish § 1983 liability on part of city; officer had completed, when hired, all minimum training requirements set by state, police department had policies and practices requiring that excessive force never be used, and victim's relatives failed to show that city was deliberately indifferent in adopting or failing to adopt regulations related to use of force. Huong v. City of Port Arthur, E.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1003. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Police officers who were not present at time of arrest were entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's § 1983 claim alleging that arrestee was illegally detained while arresting officer prepared complaint for resisting arrest, which arrestee claimed was "trumped up" charge, as officers who were not present would have no reason to suspect that resisting arrest charge was not legitimate. Mason v. Stock, D.Kan.1997, 955 F.Supp. 1293. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Police officer who does not prevent fellow officer's use of allegedly excessive force despite having had opportunity to intervene may be held liable in federal civil rights action. Crawford By and Through Crawford v. City of Kansas City, Kan., D.Kan.1997, 952 F.Supp. 1467. Civil Rights 1088(2)

Police chief could not be held directly liable in his individual capacity for actions of other members of police department which occurred when he was not present. Handle v. City of Little Rock, E.D.Ark.1991, 772 F.Supp. 434. Civil Rights 1358

Police officers who participated in executing search warrant but who were not accused of striking civil rights plaintiff were not derivatively liable for the actions of the officers who were accused of striking the plaintiff. Willis v. Freeman, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 803, 2003 WL 22852988, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

441. ---- Prison officials, vicarious liability, liability generally

Alleged unreasonable restraint of mentally ill inmate that may have been partly attributable to prison guards' failure to know of his psychiatric problems was not itself sufficient to support imposition of supervisory liability on state corrections commissioner; restraint was not a function of any inadequate training or other supervisory failure, but resulted from staff miscommunication in failing to forward inmate's full psychiatric records at time that he was transferred from one prison facility to another. Ziemba v. Armstrong, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2005, 430 F.3d 623. Civil Rights 1358

Vicarious civil rights liability could not be imposed on warden for guard's negligence and possible deliberate indifference to inmate's right to be free from violent attacks, in leaving post and permitting prisoner who had previously been involved in altercations with inmate to enter inmate's cell and stab him with homemade weapon. Bailey v. Wood, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1990, 909 F.2d 1197. Civil Rights 1358

Texas Commission on Jail Standards could not be held vicariously liable under Section 1983 for acts of county officials in maintenance of their jails. Bush v. Viterna, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 795 F.2d 1203. Civil Rights 1348

Inmate failed to state retaliation claim against wardens who allegedly failed to stop corrections officer's harassment of him for failing to serve as prison informant or "snitch," absent any evidence of their personal involvement; supervisory liability did not exist under §§ 1983, and one warden's alleged motivation, a single event occurring almost 20 years earlier, was too remote. David v. Hill, S.D.Tex.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 749. Civil Rights 1358

There was no causal connection between actions or inactions of prison inspector who was responsible for investigating incidents of alleged abuse of inmates by prison guards and reporting his findings to others and alleged unconstitutional beating of inmate by guards, and thus, inspector was not liable on §§ 1983 supervisory liability claim brought by estate of inmate who died after alleged beating, since inspector was neither responsible for nor had authority to prevent or correct problems relating to abusive guards. Valdes v. Crosby, M.D.Fla.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1084, affirmed 2006 WL 1474726. Civil Rights 1358

Warden of prison was subject to supervisory liability under §§ 1983 for infliction of cruel and unusual punishment on inmate, and denial of due process, occurring when inmate was placed on mattress, with arms and legs restrained, and strap across his chest, for period of 47 hours and 20 minutes, with occasional breaks, even though warden had no involvement with particular case; warden had read incident reports of eight similar cases of inordinate five-point restraint, without taking corrective action. Sadler v. Young, W.D.Va.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 689, reversed 118 Fed.Appx. 762, 2005 WL 19486. Civil Rights 1358

Supervisory prison officials may be held liable under statute that prohibits deprivation of constitutional right under color of state law, if they have direct responsibility for actions of employees who engage in misconduct, but are not vicariously liable. LaMarca v. Turner, S.D.Fla.1987, 662 F.Supp. 647, appeal dismissed 861 F.2d 724. Civil Rights 1358

There was no evidence that supervisory prison officials were responsible for training or supervising other correctional officers, or reasonably should have known or did know that any correctional officer would inflict impermissible injury on inmate or otherwise treat inmate in constitutionally deficient manner, thus precluding inmate from establishing requisite causal connection for imposition of § 1983 liability on supervisory officials in connection with injuries sustained during course of cell extraction. Dennis v. Thurman, C.D.Cal.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1253. Civil Rights 1358

442. ---- Sheriffs, vicarious liability, liability generally

Sheriff may not be held liable in civil rights action based solely on theory of respondeat superior or vicarious liability. Palmer v. Sanderson, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1993, 9 F.3d 1433. Civil Rights 1358

Sheriff was not vicariously liable under section 1983 for acts of his deputies. Nagle v. Lee, C.A.5 (La.) 1987, 807 F.2d 435, on remand 686 F.Supp. 148. Civil Rights 1358

Sheriff's department and county could not be held liable under § 1983 under failure to train theory for off-duty deputy sheriff's shooting of his girlfriend's former boyfriend who had broken into girlfriend's house, where only evidence in support of theory was affidavit of "expert" stating his opinion that deputy should not have been trained as police officer. Hudson v. Maxey, E.D.Mich.1994, 856 F.Supp. 1223. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Sheriff was not vicariously liable under § 1983 for acts of his deputy. Williams v. Divittoria, E.D.La.1991, 760 F.Supp. 564. Civil Rights 1358

443. ---- State officials, vicarious liability, liability generally

Under provision of this section that citizen whose constitutional rights have been violated may sue a state official for redress, state official cannot be held vicariously liable on grounds of respondeat superior for torts of subordinates. Walker v. University of Pittsburgh, W.D.Pa.1978, 457 F.Supp. 1000. Civil Rights 1355

444. ---- Sureties, vicarious liability, liability generally

Surety on bail bond could be found liable under this section on basis of vicarious liability for a beating and robbery allegedly administered by its agents. Hill v. Toll, E.D.Pa.1970, 320 F.Supp. 185. Civil Rights 1339

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

445. ---- Stores, vicarious liability, liability generally

Department store could not be held vicariously liable under this section for actions of its officer. Draeger v. Grand Central, Inc., C.A.10 (Utah) 1974, 504 F.2d 142.

446. ---- Particular cases vicarious liability not established, liability generally

In the absence of testimony that village policymakers were aware of the alleged need for additional training for their police officers in dealing with persons exhibit aberrant behavior, there was no showing that city's actions were cause of deprivation of civil rights of person who was shot by police officers during confrontation. Palmquist v. Selvik, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1997, 111 F.3d 1332, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Failure to establish primary liability on part of police officers, for alleged misconduct, precluded secondary claim for misconduct arising out of police conduct, brought by civil rights claimant against borough council, police department and mayor. Mayer v. Gottheiner, D.N.J.2005, 382 F.Supp.2d 635. Civil Rights 1348

Movie owner, which allegedly directed behavior of its manager and made rules as to whom to eject from theater, could not be held vicariously liable under Section 1983 for actions of off-duty police officers it employed in allegedly beating and ill treating plaintiffs at cinema manager's office. Barton v. Gulf States Entertainment, M.D.La.1987, 655 F.Supp. 782. Civil Rights 1341

Private hospital could not be held vicariously liable under § 1983 for any constitutional violation committed by its paramedics who responded to 911 call and transported individual with communications disability to hospital against his wishes. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 2004 WL 213009, Unreported. Civil Rights 1341

447. Successor liability, liability generally

Section 1983 judgment against Louisiana clerk of court in his personal and official capacities was binding upon successor clerk of court in his official capacity absent showing that notice to prior clerk of court was inadequate or improper, or that prior clerk was denied opportunity to respond to plaintiffs' allegations. Gegenheimer v. Galan, C.A.5 (La.) 1991, 920 F.2d 307. Civil Rights 1448

448. Mistake or ignorance, liability generally

Federal officials will not be liable for mere mistakes in judgment, whether the mistake is one of fact or one of law; but there is no substantial basis for holding that executive officers generally may with impunity discharge their duties in a way that is known to them to violate the Constitution or in a manner that they should know transgresses a clearly established constitutional rule. Butz v. Economou, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 438 U.S. 478, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, on remand 466 F.Supp. 1351. United States 50.1

449. Omissions or inaction, liability generally--Generally

Members of governing board cannot be vicariously liable under section 1983 for conduct by employees, or for failing to overrule that conduct. Weisbuch v. County of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 119 F.3d 778. Civil Rights 1355

To impose liability on local governmental entity for failing to act to preserve constitutional rights, § 1983 plaintiff must establish: that he possessed constitutional right of which he was deprived; that municipality had a policy; that this policy amounted to deliberate indifference to plaintiff's constitutional right; and that policy was moving force behind constitutional violation. Oviatt By and Through Waugh v. Pearce, C.A.9 (Or.) 1992, 954 F.2d 1470. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Although acts or omissions of no one employee of local government may violate an individual's constitutional rights, the combined acts or omissions of several employees acting under governmental policy or custom may violate an individual's constitutional rights; governing Monell rule of municipal liability does not require that a jury find an individual defendant liable before it can find a local government body liable under section 1983. Garcia v. Salt Lake County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1985, 768 F.2d 303. Civil Rights 1351(1)

This section authorizing civil action for deprivation of civil rights against person acting under color of law is applicable in case of acts of omission as well as commission. Azar v. Conley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 456 F.2d 1382. Civil Rights 1039

Police officer was not liable, under § 1983, for his alleged failure to prevent fellow officer from intentionally wrenching arrestee's neck, after arrestee kick first officer in the right upper thigh; according to first officer's uncontradicted testimony, the kick happened so quickly that he was mainly concerned with assessing whether he was injured and preventing further kicks. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1088(4)

Acts of omission, as well as commission, can serve as the basis for finding an unconstitutional policy or custom actionable under § 1983. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1108. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Governmental inaction or individual nonfeasance is not actionable if failure to take any steps does not make another worse off. Pinder v. Commissioners of Cambridge in City of Cambridge, D.Md.1993, 821 F.Supp. 376, affirmed 33 F.3d 368, rehearing granted and vacated, on rehearing 54 F.3d 1169, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 530, 516 U.S. 994, 133 L.Ed.2d 436. Municipal Corporations 723

Mere inaction or acquiescence by government in private wrongful conduct will not convert private right of action into government action, for purposes of civil rights claim. New Hampshire Podiatric Medical Ass'n v. New Hampshire Hosp. Ass'n, D.N.H.1990, 735 F.Supp. 448. Civil Rights 1325

Under this section, liability for omission to act requires showing of exceptional circumstances and conduct so grossly incompetent, inadequate or excessive as to shock the conscience or to be intolerable to basic fairness. Davis v. Oklahoma Dept. of Corrections, W.D.Okla.1980, 516 F.Supp. 5. Civil Rights 1401

450. ---- Duty or responsibility to act, omissions or inaction, liability generally

In action alleging that state social workers failed to protect a minor Native American child from abuse by his natural parents, any allegation that social workers misjudged danger to child, or erred in concluding that they had to defer to Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) in assessing and responding to that danger, did not violate child's equal protection rights or discriminate against him; equal protection was not implicated by allegations of negligence or mistake. Roe ex rel. Roe v. Keady, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 329 F.3d 1188. Constitutional Law 242.1(4); Indians 6.6(1)

Liability under §§ 1983 for nonfeasance of affirmative duties by governmental custodian requires that: (1) omissions were substantial factor leading to denial of constitutionally protected liberty or property interest, and (2) officials in charge of agency being sued displayed deliberate indifference. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Constitutional Law 278(1) from private actions only if placed in a custodial relationship with the individual or if the state created the danger that resulted in harm to the individual; however, a state actor may be subject to liability for an action by private actors if the state actor directed, aided, or abetted the violation, and an officer has the duty to intercede on behalf of a private individual whose constitutional rights are being violated in the officer's presence. Merriman v. Town of Colonie, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 501, affirmed 112 F.3d 504. Constitutional Law 254(4)

The greater the duty a supervisor has to control those employees who actually committed constitutional violation, the less specific knowledge of offending conduct supervisor will be required to have; once duty is established, failure to act is actionable under this section. Santiago v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1977, 435 F.Supp. 136. Civil Rights 1355

451. ---- Deliberate indifference, omissions or inaction, liability generally

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether three members of jail staff acted with deliberate indifference by failing to seek outside assistance for ten minutes after finding arrestee hanging in jail cell, precluding summary judgment in §§ 1983 action related to arrestee's suicide. Bradich ex rel. Estate of Bradich v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 413 F.3d 688. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Evidence that district attorney's office occasionally had to request documents from sheriff's office, that sheriff did not maintain log of all documents sent to district attorney, and that record-keeper for sheriff had no formal training, was insufficient to establish deliberate indifference or knowledge on part of sheriff that Brady violation, such as one which resulted in suspect's wrongful conviction and imprisonment for murder, would be highly likely consequence of manner in which sheriff's office managed its records or transferred records to district attorney, as required to impose liability on sheriff under § 1983. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1358

City's failure to train its police officers for off-duty security positions did not amount to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police officers came in contact and could not form basis for municipal liability under federal civil rights statute in action brought by arrestee who was allegedly assaulted by off-duty officer, absent evidence of pattern of constitutional violations occurring while police officers were performing off-duty security work. Robles v. City of Fort Wayne, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1997, 113 F.3d 732. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To meet deliberate indifference standard for liability under § 1983, failure to train police adequately must reflect deliberate or conscious choice made by city policymakers; plaintiff must also show that city's policy actually caused constitutional injury. Fagan v. City of Vineland, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1994, 22 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To succeed on a §§ 1983 claim on a failure to intervene theory, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant failed to intervene with deliberate or reckless disregard for the plaintiff's constitutional right. Koutnik v. Brown, W.D.Wis.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 871. Civil Rights 1039

Alleged conduct by commissioner of child welfare administration of failing to act in response to Jewish mother's complaints regarding administration's failure to place her child with a Jewish foster family did not amount to deliberate indifference, as required for commissioner to be liable in his personal capacity in mother's § 1983 claim alleging violation of her First Amendment free exercise rights. Bruker v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 337 F.Supp.2d 539. Civil Rights 1360

Official may be personally liable for constitutional violation of another's rights under § 1983 if he acts or fails to act with deliberate or reckless disregard of plaintiff's constitutional rights. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1354

Civil rights plaintiff may satisfy burden of proving deliberate indifference on part of municipality to use of excessive force by demonstrating that need for more supervision to protect against excessive force was obvious, which in turn may be demonstrated by existence of repeated complaints of civil rights violations, and corresponding absence or inadequacy of investigations or actions by municipality to prevent future incidents. Galindez v. Miller, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 190. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Mother of public elementary school student failed to establish deliberate indifference on part of school principal and teacher, as required to hold them liable under § 1983 for their alleged violation of the student's equal protection rights when they allegedly failed to protect the student from racial harassment and assaults by other students, where the allegations were based on several incidents where other students shut the door on him just as he was entering or exiting a doorway and made sarcastic comments as if to suggest they were unaware of his presence when they closed the door; there was virtually nothing to suggest that the incidents were racially motivated, and the offending students were punished. Crispim v. Athanson, D.Conn.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 240. Constitutional Law 220(3); Schools 147

Failure of municipality to adopt policy cannot serve as basis for § 1983 liability unless municipality's inaction amounts to deliberate indifference; when need for policy action is so obvious and likelihood of violation of constitutional rights so high, policy makers of local government entity are deliberately indifferent to the need. McMillan v. Department of Interior, D.Nev.1995, 907 F.Supp. 322, affirmed 87 F.3d 1320, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 995, 519 U.S. 1132, 136 L.Ed.2d 875. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Government official may be held personally liable, even absent direct participation in unlawful activity, if official acted or failed to act with deliberate or reckless disregard for plaintiff's rights. Martin v. O'Grady, N.D.Ill.1990, 738 F.Supp. 1191. Officers And Public Employees 114

African-American municipal employee failed to establish that municipality's management was deliberately indifferent to his complaints, which he claimed was factual basis for establishing municipality's liability for alleged disparate treatment and racial harassment/hostile work environment; municipality's policies provide procedures for employee complaints about prohibited discriminatory conduct, employee delayed filing an internal complaint under these policies and, once he did, municipality conducted an investigation including interviews with employee, supervisors, and co-workers. Mitchell v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 112 Fed.Appx. 662, 2004 WL 2287756, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(5)

452. ---- Intent or knowledge, omissions or inaction, liability generally

Department of Family Services case worker and supervisors were not liable under §§ 1983 for substantive due process violation to father of child who died of abusive head trauma while in foster care, absent showing that case worker and supervisors were not only aware of facts from which an inference could have been drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm to child existed, but actually drew such an inference, or that they acted intentionally to harm child. James ex rel. James v. Friend, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2006, 458 F.3d 726. Infants 17

City's chief inspector was entitled to qualified immunity, in African-American property owner's §§ 1983 retaliation claim, alleging that inspector order the towing of property owner's sister's mobile home restaurant in retaliation for owner filing suit challenging officials' failure to maintain drainage ditch along owner's property, absent showing that inspector was aware of owner's lawsuit, or that mobile home restaurant was owned by property owner's sister. Wilson v. Northcutt, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2006, 441 F.3d 586, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1376(4)

Issues of fact existed as to whether territorial corrections official in charge of making recommendations as to granting of good-time credits should have been aware of fact that inmate's recorded credits were incorrect, and as to whether official's inaction resulted in prolonging inmate's incarceration, precluding summary judgment in inmate's §§ 1983 action alleging that too-long sentence violated her constitutional rights. Ayuso-Figueroa v. Rivera-Gonzalez, D.Puerto Rico 2005, 456 F.Supp.2d 309. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

In "custom" cases, governmental liability under § 1983 is attributed through a policymaker's actual or constructive knowledge of and acquiescence in the unconstitutional custom or practice. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1108. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Liability under this section may be imposed on an official who knowingly acquiesces in the misconduct of others. King v. Cuyler, E.D.Pa.1982, 541 F.Supp. 1230. Civil Rights 1354

Arrestee failed to establish that police officer, who remained in booking room when fellow officers took arrestee to holding cell where alleged assault occurred, had active, personal involvement in alleged assault and conspiracy, as required to sustain a civil rights claim against booking officer; there was no evidence that officer who booked arrestee had any knowledge of alleged assault by fellow officers, and no evidence suggesting that booking officer was informed by her colleagues of alleged assault. McFeeter v. Jones, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 104 Fed.Appx. 552, 2004 WL 1597969, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

453. ---- Number of incidents, omissions or inaction, liability generally

Allegations by state inmates that prison conditions failed to comply with constitutional standards as result of more than 40 unrelated incidents of assault by different corrections officers or other inmates occurring over 10 years at 13 separate facilities did not establish the existence of a policy or practice existing throughout the system, or within a single state department of correctional services (DOCS) facility, sufficient to state a § 1983 claim for constitutional violations. Webb v. Goord, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 340 F.3d 105, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1077, 540 U.S. 1110, 157 L.Ed.2d 897. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable for negligently failing to correct detective's mistaken identification of person as suspect who sold him crack cocaine, or preventing mistake from occurring; her description of only single incident in which detective was mistaken in his identification was not type of persistent, often repeated violation amounting to custom or policy required for § 1983 municipal liability. Campbell v. City of San Antonio, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 43 F.3d 973. Civil Rights 1351(4)

A single incident or isolated incidents are normally insufficient to establish supervisory inaction upon which liability under this section may be based. Avery v. Burke County, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 660 F.2d 111. Civil Rights 1352(1)

454. ---- Grievance procedures, omissions or inaction, liability generally

In determining whether officials exhibit acquiescence in unconstitutional action so as to be liable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, officials' establishment of grievance mechanism which plaintiff has used and about which plaintiff does not complain does not necessarily absolve officials from liability; functional analysis of workings of grievance process and relation of official to such process is appropriate test. Kendel v. Orr, D.Kan.1985, 628 F.Supp. 326. Civil Rights 1359

455. ---- Appointment of counsel, omissions or inaction, liability generally

Claimed omission on part of state district judge, in allegedly failing to appoint counsel to defend indigent defendant in timely fashion, was omission in his capacity as agent of state and would not support § 1983 claim against county. Clanton v. Harris County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 893 F.2d 757. Civil Rights 1088(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

456. ---- Use of force, omissions or inaction, liability generally

Deputy sheriff who did nothing when another deputy used excessive force against woman who protested her husband's arrest could be held liable in civil rights action for injuries suffered by the woman. Thomas v. Frederick, W.D.La.1991, 766 F.Supp. 540. Civil Rights 1358

457. ---- Particular cases omission or inaction not present, omissions or inaction, liability generally

Secretary of Labor could not be held liable for alleged violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights arising out of her termination from employment by city, even though plaintiff's salary had been paid from funds made available to city under Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973, § 801 et seq. of Title 29, where plaintiff did not allege any actual omissions by Secretary or any employee of Department of Labor relating to termination of her employment, Secretary was not even informed of dismissal until almost three years later when suit was filed, and city defendants, in deciding to discharge plaintiff, were not acting as servants of Secretary and therefore their actions were not attributable to him. De Tore v. Local No. 245 of Jersey City Public Emp. Union, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1980, 615 F.2d 980, on remand 511 F.Supp. 171. Civil Rights 1363

City police detective had no duty under federal law or constitution to investigate criminal activity or actions of police officers responding to reports of suspected criminal activity, and thus detective could not be held liable under § 1983 for failing to investigate arresting officer's alleged use of excessive force. Hale v. Vance, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 725. Civil Rights 1088(2); Civil Rights 1358

458. Authority to act, liability generally--Generally

Police chief could be held personally liable for damages flowing from police officer's formal termination by city manager, although only manager had actual authority to fire officer and chief's authority was technically limited to suspending officer or recommending his termination; manager, as well as investigating entities that made recommendations to manager, listened to chief's recommendation and relied on that recommendation for dismissal to some extent, so chief could be held liable to officer on claim that dismissal violated officer's First Amendment rights. Wulf v. City of Wichita, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 883 F.2d 842, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1359

Officers and supervising psychiatrist of state mental institution, who had imposed work program on inmate and had power to alter program, were liable to suit under this section, even though they were state administrative officials, on account of their allegedly having subjected inmate to involuntary servitude, peonage or slavery. Jobson v. Henne, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1966, 355 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1358

Determination as to who is a decisionmaker for the purposes of §§ 1983 municipal liability is not a decision for the jury, but is for the court to decide as a matter of law. Dolly v. Borough of Yeadon, E.D.Pa.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 278. Civil Rights 1426

Boards vested with power to terminate juvenile probation officers were ultimate repository of power to terminate employees and thus had ultimate liability, pursuant to § 1983 for any attendant violation of employee's constitutional rights. Denton v. Morgan, N.D.Tex.1996, 940 F.Supp. 1015, affirmed 136 F.3d 1038, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1349

Only those municipal officials who have final policymaking authority may by their actions subject municipality to § 1983 liability. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1351(1)

If mayor possessed final decisionmaking authority for appointment of town's police chief and his decisions to discharge black police officer and hire white officer as police chief were induced by racial prejudice, then town could be held liable for this conduct under § 1983. Lightner v. Town of Ariton, Ala., M.D.Ala.1995, 902 F.Supp.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

1489. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Sheriff was not liable to former deputy sheriff under § 1983 claim for deprivation of due process respecting deputy sheriff's termination; sheriff did not have power to terminate deputy sheriff and, thus, could not deprive deputy sheriff of due process. Heideman v. Wirsing, W.D.Wis.1992, 840 F.Supp. 1285, affirmed 7 F.3d 659. Civil Rights 1126

459. ---- Scope of authority, authority to act, liability generally

Claims for injunctive relief against various federal agents involved in conducting investigation of targets' financial affairs were not barred by sovereign immunity, in view of allegation that federal defendants acted outside scope of their statutory authority and outside constitutional limits. Liffiton v. Keuker, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1988, 850 F.2d 73. United States 50.10(3)

Where federal officials act in complicity with state officials to deprive person of constitutional rights, such federal officials may be liable in damages under this section, notwithstanding sovereign immunity doctrine, where constitutional violation or ultra vires act is alleged and where remedy would not impose intolerable burden on government functions, outweighing any consideration of private harm. Telegraph Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Federal Sav. and Loan Ins. Corp., N.D.Ill.1981, 564 F.Supp. 862. Civil Rights 1376(1)

460. ---- Abuse or misuse of authority, authority to act, liability generally

Section 1983 does not require proof of abuse of governmental power separate and apart from proof of constitutional violation; although statute provides citizen with effective remedy against those abuses of state power that violate federal law, it does not provide remedy for abuses that do not violate federal law, and does not draw any distinction between abusive and nonabusive federal violations. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., U.S.Tex.1992, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1027; Civil Rights 1031

Motorist's allegation that police officer misused power represented by his police badge did not "shock the conscience" and did not give rise to substantive due process violation that would be actionable in federal civil rights action. Braley v. City of Pontiac, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1990, 906 F.2d 220. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Parents' complaint, seeking damages for death of their son ascribed to gross negligence of city and its employees in the operation of waste treatment plant at which son worked, failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted under section 1983, in that son was not coerced to perform his tasks at plant, and his attempt to rescue co-worker was not controlled by factors attributed to a misuse of power made possible only because city was clothed with authority of state law. Rankin v. City of Wichita Falls, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 762 F.2d 444. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Under this section authorizing civil actions for deprivation of constitutional rights under color of state law, action taken "under color of" state law is not limited only to that action taken by state officials pursuant to state law; rather, it includes misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Brown v. Miller, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1980, 631 F.2d 408. Civil Rights 1324

Provisions of this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of civil rights against person acting under color of law extend to unauthorized abuse of authority by public officials. Azar v. Conley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 456 F.2d 1382. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Acting "under color of state law" requires that the defendant in a § 1983 action have exercised power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Schorr

v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1324

The state action inquiry is necessarily fact-bound in a § 1983 action, but any approach a court uses must remain focused on the heart of the state action inquiry, which is to discern if the defendant exercised power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1325

461. ---- Legislative authority, authority to act, liability generally

Public television stations did not cause any constitutional violation and, thus, could not be held liable under § 1983 for unlawful delegation of legislative authority and for biased decision maker created under statutes establishing Pennsylvania's state-funded public television network and providing that seven of 22-member commission be drawn from governing boards of member stations; any deprivation was caused by Pennsylvania legislature, not by stations. Independence Public Media of Philadelphia, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Public Television Network Com'n, E.D.Pa.1992, 808 F.Supp. 416, reconsideration denied 813 F.Supp. 335. Civil Rights 1054

462. ---- Harassment, authority to act, liability generally

Harassment is cognizable claim under § 1983 only if it is carried out in order to induce someone to give up substantive constitutional right or to deprive a person of a constitutional right. Mullinax v. McElhenney, N.D.Ga.1987, 672 F.Supp. 1449. Civil Rights 1036

Where the plaintiff, a decorator, averred that he was charged with and arrested for criminal violations of building, construction and zoning regulations without just or probable cause, and that the purpose was to harass and drive him out of business and out of the area, a proper due process claim was alleged against borough councilman and building inspector. Di Maggio v. O'Brien, E.D.Pa.1980, 497 F.Supp. 870. Civil Rights 1395(6)

463. Duty or responsibility to act, liability generally--Generally

A state officer named in a suit under this section must be in some manner responsible for alleged deprivation of rights. Dommer v. Crawford, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1981, 653 F.2d 289.

County was not liable, under § 1983, for its alleged failure to adequately investigate incident in which arrestee's neck was broken, where there was no evidence county regularly failed to investigate claims made against its officers. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1352(4)

464. ---- Law enforcement, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether town failed to supervise its police officers, and as to whether police chief witnessed and encouraged acts of brutality, precluding summary judgment as to whether town was liable for any excessive force that occurred during arrests of anti-abortion protestors. Amnesty America v. Town of West Hartford, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2004, 361 F.3d 113. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Officers in municipal police department could be liable under § 1983 for detaining arrestee for too long without arraignment, even though they were not responsible for delay in arraignment; officers were under no obligation to continue to hold arrestee for unreasonable period of time. Wayland v. City of Springdale, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1991, 933 F.2d 668. Civil Rights 1088(4)

In order to impose personal liability on sheriff under § 1983 of the federal civil rights statutes plaintiffs must establish that sheriff was either personally involved in wrongful acts, or that he breached a duty imposed by state law. Quinones v. Durkis, S.D.Fla.1986, 638 F.Supp. 856. Civil Rights 1358

465. ---- Supervisory personnel, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

If supervisor with authority over subordinate knows that subordinate is violating someone's rights but fails to act to stop subordinate from doing so, factfinder may usually infer that supervisor acquiesced in subordinate's conduct, as required for liability under § 1983; but if actual supervisory authority is lacking, mere inaction, in most circumstances, does not reasonably give rise to similar inference. Robinson v. City of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 120 F.3d 1286. Civil Rights 1355

To succeed on supervisory liability claim under § 1983, plaintiff not only must show deliberate indifference or its equivalent, but also must affirmatively connect supervisor's conduct to subordinate's violative act or omission. Maldonado-Denis v. Castillo-Rodriguez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1994, 23 F.3d 576. Civil Rights 1355

Upper level supervisory prison officials could not be held liable based on theory of direct responsibility to supervise in inmate's § 1983 action, where jury did not find lower level and more closely involved supervisors liable. Sanders v. Brewer, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1992, 972 F.2d 920. Civil Rights 1358

Nonprofit organization that performed mental health intake in referral services for county was not liable under § 1983 for alleged due process violation involving severely retarded adult choking to death on sandwich at community building facility to which he had been referred; choking victim's personal liberty was not substantially curtailed by state, and organization did not have responsibility for supervising daily activities at facility, and did not have employment or even contractual relationship with facility. Fialkowski v. Greenwich Home for Children, Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 921 F.2d 459, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Inadequate policies regarding supervision of police officers may serve as a basis for municipal §§ 1983 liability. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Detainee stated a claim for supervisory liability against police chief pursuant to §§ 1983 by alleging that three subordinate police officers, who also were defendants, were acting pursuant to orders and directives of police chief, that members of the police department subjected detainee and other persons to a pattern of conduct consisting of using taser gun and beatings at the time of making an arrest or intimidation during arrest and booking procedures, solely on account of race, and that despite the fact that he knew or should have known of the fact that this pattern of conduct was being carried out, the police chief made no effort stop the conduct. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Once a supervisory official has constructive or actual knowledge of the alleged deprivations of a citizen's civil rights by a subordinate officer, the supervisor's failure to stop the conduct may constitute a constitutional violation for which the supervisor may be liable under § 1983. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1355

A supervisor may be held liable under § 1983 for what he does, or fails to do, if, having received constructive or actual notice of a subordinate's alleged violation of the constitutional rights of a citizen, the supervisor's behavior demonstrates deliberate indifference to the conduct that is violative of constitutional rights. Rodriguez Esteras v. Solivan Diaz, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1355

Protester's allegations that police officials did not implement a sound policy to prevent civil rights violations to citizens and that other police officers showed clear and manifest favoritism toward non-statehood supporters and against pro-Americans were insufficient to support an equal protection claim for supervisory liability under § 1983; protester merely pointed to one incident where he alone was arrested and such an isolated episode, without more, was insufficient to substantiate the existence of a widespread custom. Ramos Bonilla v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 135. Civil Rights 1358

It is not the judicial duty of presiding judge of Missouri state circuit court to train and supervise the other judges of the court in the performance of their duties, and civil rights liability cannot be imposed for failure to do so. Hawley v. Nelson, E.D.Mo.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1372, affirmed 141 F.3d 1168. Civil Rights 1360

Section 1983 creates cause of action based on personal liability and predicated on fault, such that for supervisory official to be liable under § 1983, that official must have had direct responsibility for improper action and there must be causal connection or affirmative link between misconduct complained of and official sued. Spiegel v. Cortese, N.D.Ill.1997, 966 F.Supp. 684. Civil Rights 1355

In order to hold supervisory official liable for violation of civil rights by another, plaintiff must identify with particularity what the supervisory official failed to do that demonstrates deliberate indifference, and must demonstrate close link between alleged failure and alleged injury. Carrigan v. State of Del., D.Del.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1376. Civil Rights 1355

Whether particular municipal official has policymaking authority so that official's actions may subject municipality to § 1983 liability is question of state law to be resolved by trial judge. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1426; Federal Courts 411

Supervisory personnel are liable under § 1983 upon showing of constitutional violation when: supervisor's conduct or inaction amounts to either deliberate, reckless or calloused indifference to constitutional rights of others, and affirmative link exists between street level constitutional violation and acts or omissions of supervisory officials. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1355

466. ---- Warning, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

Property owners had no claim under § 1983 against state deputy attorney general for failing to warn property owners that their property was unsuitable for type of sewage disposable system set forth on reissue permit, which allegedly caused property owners to spend large sums of money to construct dwellings on such property; state official's conduct was at most negligent, rather than actively seeking to deprive owners of their properties or grossly negligent in failing to prevent loss to them. Cole v. Finsel, M.D.Pa.1988, 691 F.Supp. 841. Civil Rights 1073

467. ---- Collective bargaining agreements, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

Fire department employee did not state section 1983 procedural due process claim against chairman of city finance committee with respect to city's discontinuance of payment of his medical expenses, absent evidence that either finance committee or chairman had responsibility for considering or paying employee's medical expenses under collective bargaining agreement. Cushing v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 3 F.3d 1156. Civil Rights 1359

468. ---- Colleges or universities, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

Where university regulations did not place responsibility on board of trustees for dismissal of nontenured members, and board took no action in connection with dismissal of assistant professor who following denial of tenure was serving his terminal year, inaction of board of trustees did not render them liable in their individual capacities in civil rights suit brought by assistant professor, who claimed that termination procedures did not comport with procedural due process and that he was discharged for constitutionally impermissible reasons. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Attorney General was appropriate defendant in student organization's § 1983 action challenging state statute which prohibited state university's use of public funds to support organization that "fosters or promotes a lifestyle or actions prohibited by the sodomy and sexual misconduct laws," notwithstanding Attorney General's contention that university officials were responsible for enforcement of statute at university; Attorney General was chief law enforcement officer of state and, thus, ultimately responsible for enforcement, and officials allegedly relied on Attorney General's opinion in continuing their enforcement of statute. 469. ---- Education, schools and students, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

School district employee failed to rebut presumption that his retirement was voluntary, in his lawsuit alleging that school district was state actor that deprived him of his constitutional rights by violating his Fourteenth Amendment due process property and liberty interests; although employee was not represented by counsel and his options were imperfect, he did not present evidence of how advice of counsel would have altered his decision about retiring, he chose to resign, he understood the nature and ramifications of choice before him, he had reasonable amount of time in which to decide whether to retire, and he had control over effective date of his resignation. Speziale v. Bethlehem Area School Dist., E.D.Pa.2003, 266 F.Supp.2d 366. Constitutional Law 278.5(3); Schools 63(1)

Teacher had affirmative duty to report sexual abuse of students and, thus, student's complaint which alleged that teacher failed to report sexual abuse of student by another teacher in violation of student's constitutional rights stated cause of action under § 1983; teacher had duty to report sexual abuse under provision of Texas Child Abuse Reporting Act. Doe v. Rains Independent School Dist., E.D.Tex.1994, 865 F.Supp. 375, reversed 66 F.3d 1402, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1395(2); Infants 13.5(1)

Compulsory school attendance did not impose upon state affirmative duty under Fourteenth Amendment to protect student from assault by other student so as to make school board, its superintendent and high school principal liable under § 1983 to student who was physically attacked by fellow student in school. Russell by Russell v. Fannin County School Dist., N.D.Ga.1992, 784 F.Supp. 1576, affirmed 981 F.2d 1263. Civil Rights 1065

470. ---- Prisons and prisoners, duty or responsibility to act, liability generally

City police dispatcher was not liable to estate of arrestee who committed suicide in his cell, under federal civil rights statute, even though dispatcher was aware that arrestee had exhibited suicidal tendencies in the past; dispatcher had no obligations with respect to care of prisoners. Williams v. Borough of West Chester, Pa., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1989, 891 F.2d 458, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1091

Former and current pretrial detainees could not maintain civil rights action against state officials for alleged failure to redress unconstitutional conditions and violations of state law that existed in county jail where state officials had no duty under North Carolina law to remedy challenged jail conditions and their inaction could not be seen as a cause of those conditions. Reid v. Kayye, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1989, 885 F.2d 129. Civil Rights 1098

Correctional captain responsible for monitoring prisoners, who confiscated card passed by one prisoner to another, was not liable to prisoner who passed card, in civil rights action by prisoner who alleged that imposition of disciplinary sanctions on him for violating rule proscribing engaging in gang activity based on passing of card violated his due process rights; corrections captain merely responded to immediate concerns of prison security and could not ultimately be said to have been responsible for impositions of sanctions against prisoner. Rios v. Lane, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1987, 812 F.2d 1032, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 3222, 483 U.S. 1001, 97 L.Ed.2d 729. Civil Rights 1358 construction, maintenance, and operation for county jails was not cause of alleged constitutional violations by county jails where the Commission had no obligation to extirpate constitutionally substandard conditions or activities in county jails, and thus, alleged failure of Commission to perform its duties was not basis for Section 1983 relief in favor of county jail inmates against the Commission. Bush v. Viterna, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 795 F.2d 1203. Civil Rights 1098

471. State created danger, liability generally

Link between high school student's suicide and conduct of school district and guidance counselor was far too attenuated to have created a danger to student, as was required to impose liability in a state-created danger case, under the due process clause; student visited counselor on only two occasions, once when counselor initially called student into her office and again when student asked her who she had received note from, there was no evidence student was agitated by these meetings, or that they contributed in any way to his suicidal feelings, there was no evidence suggesting student relied on counselor for support or guidance, and counselor did not in any way interfere with mother's parental relationship with student. Sanford v. Stiles, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 456 F.3d 298. Schools 147

Genuine issues of material fact as to whether social worker with New Mexico's Children, Youth And Families Department exercised her professional judgment by failing to investigate several suspicious events during the period that she was directly responsible for child, precluding summary judgment in favor of social worker on claim seeking to hold her liable for substantive due process violation under "special relationship" theory based on abuse of child by prospective adoptive parents. Johnson ex rel. Estate of Cano v. Holmes, C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 455 F.3d 1133. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County did not create danger for foster child when it issued "courtesy" foster care license to foster parent without performing nation-wide background check on foster parent, for purpose of foster child's civil rights claim under special relationship exception to rule that government ordinarily did not have substantive due process duty to protect private citizens from doing harm to each other, since county did not know who would be placed in home by neighboring county when it issued that license, neighboring county retained legal custody of child, and county was not required to monitor foster parent's license after particular child was placed in home. Waubanascum v. Shawano County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2005, 416 F.3d 658, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1045, 163 L.Ed.2d 858. Infants 17

Woman whose ex-boyfriend attempted to kill her could not establish state-created danger by city police department's failure to protect her, as would allow imposition of municipal liability in woman's § 1983 action, though police failed to investigate tip that ex-boyfriend's private investigator was soliciting people to murder woman; city did not create danger to woman, but at most left her in already dangerous situation. Piotrowski v. City of Houston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 237 F.3d 567, rehearing en banc denied 251 F.3d 159, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 53, 534 U.S. 820, 151 L.Ed.2d 23. Civil Rights 1088(1)

As matter of law, daycare operator and school district which leased classroom space to operator did not act with willful disregard for or deliberate indifference to safety of daycare teacher who was killed by third party, by their act of allowing construction workers to use unlocked back entrance for access to school building in which classroom was located, for purpose of establishing liability of operator and district under state-created danger theory, absent allegation that defendants knew of threat posed by third party. Morse v. Lower Merion School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1997, 132 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1039

School did not create "special danger" that would render school board and school principal liable for shooting of student by third parties while student was waiting for his ride home following school-sponsored function, even if school prohibited students from using telephone in school administration office, as no school policy required student to wait at edge of school parking lot, where student was shot and killed, rather than inside or near school building, and there was no relationship between school and assailants. Mitchell v. Duval County School Bd., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 107 F.3d 837. Schools 89.2; Schools 147

County did not deprive plaintiffs, who were injured when bridge collapsed, of their due process rights by offering bridge as tourist location, where plaintiffs did not allege affirmative act of government placing them on bridge, county did not create danger that caused bridge to collapse, and county did nothing to place plaintiffs in position of danger. Carlton v. Cleburne County, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 93 F.3d 505. Bridges 37; Constitutional Law 291.6

City police officer engaged in no affirmative conduct that placed a vehicle passenger in greater peril than existed before the officer spoke to the driver of the vehicle prior to an accident resulting in the driver's conviction for vehicular manslaughter and driving under the influence, thus defeating the passenger's claim, in a §§ 1983 suit, that the officer violated her Fourteenth Amendment right to substantive due process under the state-created danger doctrine; officer's conduct was limited to (1) speaking to the driver, (2) asking the driver for his identification to determine whether the driver was old enough to smoke, and (3) giving the driver a cigarette. Jamison v. Storm, W.D.Wash.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 1144. Constitutional Law 253(1)

Execution of sting operation by city and its police officers in a way that drug dealer learned that confidential informant had set him up created a state-created danger, for purposes of determining whether informant could support §§ 1983 claim based on officer's violation of his substantive due process rights. Matican v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 497. Municipal Corporations 740(1)

Failure of state investigative social worker to intervene in foster child placement arrangement upon evidence of abusive conditions could not support state-created danger theory in §§ 1983 claim against social worker alleging due process violation, even though foster parent killed child after adopting her, where transfer of custody had taken place before abuse investigation, and investigation showed no evidence of bruising, scratches, scarring, or signs of abuse. Johnson ex rel. Cano v. Homes, D.N.M.2004, 377 F.Supp.2d 1039. Civil Rights 1039

To rely on the state-created danger doctrine to impose §§ 1983 liability for due process violation, plaintiff must be able to articulate an action taken by a state actor that creates or substantially enhances a risk that plaintiff will be harmed by a private actor. Sloane v. Kanawha County Sheriff Dept., S.D.W.Va.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 545. Constitutional Law 253(1)

Complaints against city, police benevolent association, and individual officers by administrators of estates of pedestrians killed by officer who was driving while intoxicated stated § 1983 claim for violation of substantive due process right to be free of state-created danger; defendants allegedly created environment in which officer felt he could drink and drive with impunity and without fear of legal sanction by failing to initiate disciplinary action against officer who repeatedly drank on precinct property with fellow officers including supervisory personnel, and who drove while intoxicated on day of accident, and by establishing and implementing policy in precinct under which officers charged with misconduct were provided with assistance to specifically aid them in avoiding legal sanction. Small v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 274 F.Supp.2d 271, opinion clarified on denial of reconsideration 304 F.Supp.2d 401. Constitutional Law 253(1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Co-administratrices pleaded sufficient facts to state claim against county probation office and probation officers through state created danger exception, in §§1983 action under Fourteenth Amendment, by alleging that defendants knew that parolee had violent propensities towards women, that he was romantically involved with woman whom he later murdered, and that defendants knew that parolee had gotten married, and that defendants' actions and omissions after parolee's release from prison created opportunity to harm decedent. nearby foster home by county youth services organization was insufficient to establish that county created harm to daughter, as required to support § 1983 action against county; complaint failed to demonstrate that county's placement of individual in foster home increased risk that child victim would suffer harm or that county workers knew that perpetrator posed credible danger to others, and complaint failed to allege that county acted with willful disregard for or deliberate indifference to foreseeable risk of harm to child's safety. Pearson v. Miller, M.D.Pa.1997, 988 F.Supp. 848. Civil Rights 1395(1)

The "state-created danger" theory did not provide basis for § 1983 claim against county based on alleged failure of county department of human services to provide licensed foster parents with information about dangerous behaviors of foster children placed in their care; only affirmative act on the part of the department was to arrange for the placement of the children, which was not a one-sided undertaking forced upon the parents, and evidence failed to establish that the alleged failure to inform parents about the background of the foster children rendered them or their natural children more vulnerable to injury than they would have been if they had that information, given the information they did have. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1057

Police officer's action of taking his former wife and others hostage was not foreseeable by city or police officials, and they thus could not be held liable under § 1983 pursuant to state-created danger theory, even though officer was permitted to retain service revolver used to effect hostage taking and former wife had made domestic violence complaints against officer, where her complaints were spread over period of time and were unspecific, and the most specific and recent reported incident apparently was negligently overlooked by official who was carrying heavy workload. Hansell v. City of Atlantic City, C.A.3 (N.J.) 2002, 46 Fed.Appx. 665, 2002 WL 31011142, Unreported. Civil Rights 1088(2)

472. Special relationship, liability generally--Generally

Class of persons who stand in "special relationship with the state," such that they enjoy clearly established constitutional right to protection from known threats of harm by private actors, is limited to those persons who are involuntarily confined or otherwise restrained against their will pursuant to government order or by the affirmative exercise of state power. Walton v. Alexander, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1995, 44 F.3d 1297. Civil Rights 1376(2)

City was not liable to victim involved in automobile accident with driver who was suffering from epileptic seizure at time of accident, for failing to have reported previous accidents allegedly involving seizures suffered by same driver to state driver's license authorities; epileptic driver was not acting as agent of city, nor was there special relationship between city and epileptic driver or between city and accident victim, and while epileptic driver was definite danger behind wheel of motor vehicle, he was no more a danger to victim than to any other citizen on city's street. Jones v. City of Carlisle, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 3 F.3d 945, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 1218, 510 U.S. 1177, 127 L.Ed.2d 564. Automobiles 157

City which was legal guardian of child and which involuntarily placed child in foster care had special relationship with child and therefore, city could be held liable under § 1983 for child's death caused by minor nephew of foster parent; for all practical purposes, child was not free to leave her foster care placement and it was irrelevant whether child's foster parent or child's killer acted under color of state law. Lewis v. Neal, E.D.Pa.1995, 905 F.Supp. 228. Civil Rights 1057

473. ---- Parole boards or officials, special relationship, liability generally

Complaint alleging that negligent failure of state corrections employees who were responsible for postrelease supervision of parolee to reincarcerate parolee rendered them liable under this section for parolee's subsequent criminal acts against plaintiffs failed to state a claim for relief since plaintiffs, who were simply members of general public with no special custodial or other relationship with state, had no federal constitutional right to be protected by the state from parolee's acts. Fox v. Custis, C.A.4 (Va.) 1983, 712 F.2d 84. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Complaint alleging that failure of Department of Corrections personnel and Parole Board to extradite escaped prisoner denied due process did not state claim upon which relief could be granted under § 1983 in action brought by son of woman prisoner apparently married and administrator of estates of woman and her two daughters, although prisoner killed woman he apparently married and her two daughters and abducted and sexually abused woman's son; special relationship of woman and her children with prisoner had been alleged, but there was no allegation as to how the familial relationship placed woman and her children, as distinguished from public at large, in special danger. Massey v. Grant, W.D.Mich.1988, 679 F.Supp. 711, affirmed 875 F.2d 865. Civil Rights 1395(7)

Actions of members of State Department of Corrections, in releasing parolee, were too remote from deaths of victims murdered by parolee to hold members liable in civil rights action, absent showing that special relationship existed between the parties. Beck v. Kansas University Psychiatry Foundation, D.Kan.1987, 671 F.Supp. 1563. Civil Rights 1097

Parole officials may be liable under § 1983 for granting or inadequately supervising convicted criminal's parole, but only where they assume "special relationship" to person who was injured as result of their actions. Doe v. United Social and Mental Health Services, Inc., D.Conn.1987, 670 F.Supp. 1121. Civil Rights 1039

474. ---- Prison officials, special relationship, liability generally

Victim of assault and rape by prisoner who escaped from county detention center failed to establish that danger to her resulting from prisoner leaving center was any greater than that faced by general public in area, and so victim could not maintain § 1983 civil rights action against duty jailer who was responsible for supervising prisoner while prisoner was out of cell; knowledge of center employees that several years prior to rape, prisoner had touched wives of sheriff and his deputy on rear, while shopping at the local grocery store did not establish history of sexual violence toward elderly women as would create unique risk of harm to victim or special duty to protect her. Davis v. Fulton County, Ark., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1996, 90 F.3d 1346, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1098

County officials could not be held liable under § 1983 for murders committed by escaped county prisoner; prisoner was not agent of county, authorities had no reason to believe that victims were in any greater danger than public at large, and there was no "special relationship" between county and victims which created affirmative duty of care and protection. Commonwealth Bank & Trust Co., N.A. v. Russell, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1987, 825 F.2d 12. Civil Rights 1098

Employees of Alabama Department of Youth Services were not liable under section 1983 to victim who was raped in her home by criminal who six months before had been convicted and imprisoned for breaking and entering her home and who, prior to committing rape, had been released by Department employees, even though victim had been instrumental in obtaining the prior conviction and detention, even though employees, in releasing criminal, may have failed to fulfill certain duties of employment under Alabama law, and even if victim may have had state tort action against employees for such failures, where there was no "special relationship" such as would impose duty on state to protect victim, as distinct from public at large, or to warn her of release of criminal. Jones v. Phyfer, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1985, 761 F.2d 642, rehearing denied 768 F.2d 1353. Civil Rights 1088(1)

No special relationship existed between high school student who committed suicide and school district or guidance counselor, which would support §§ 1983 action under the due process clause, as student's parent decided where his education would take place. Sanford v. Stiles, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 456 F.3d 298. Schools 147

Tennessee statute providing that school is in loco parentis to student did not give rise to special relationship between school district and student creating duty under due process clause on part of district to protect student, and thus, student could not recover on that basis in federal civil rights action brought after she was sexually abused by teacher. Doe v. Claiborne County, Tenn. By and Through Claiborne County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 495. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 89.3

For purposes of § 1983 action against school officials by high school students who were allegedly molested by other students, no "special relationship" based upon restraint of liberty existed between defendants and plaintiffs; under Pennsylvania law, students' parents remained their primary caretakers, despite students' presence in school. D.R. by L.R. v. Middle Bucks Area Vocational Technical School, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 972 F.2d 1364, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1045, 506 U.S. 1079, 122 L.Ed.2d 354. Civil Rights 1066

School board did not delegate the authority to make policy for graduation ceremonies to high school principal, as required to subject school district to municipal liability in §§ 1983 action brought by student stemming from student's exclusion from singing religious song at graduation ceremony; school board expected principals to act in accordance with policy of separation of church and state and specifically retained the right to have the final policymaking authority through its grievance procedures. Ashby v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2004, 354 F.Supp.2d 616. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Student seeking to impose liability on school district under § 1983 for district employee's violation of student's constitutional right must rely on either "special relationship" or "deliberate indifference" theory. Mirelez v. Bay City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.1998, 992 F.Supp. 916. Civil Rights 1060

Despite mandatory attendance policy and fact that school has loco parentis authority over children, state did not owe student duty of protection sufficient to support § 1983 claim based on student's sexual harassment by fellow student; student failed to allege any special relationship between herself and the school, or that school officials placed her in dangerous situation. Aurelia D. v. Monroe County Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ga.1994, 862 F.Supp. 363, affirmed in part, reversed in part 74 F.3d 1186, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 91 F.3d 1418, on rehearing 120 F.3d 1390, certiorari granted in part 119 S.Ct. 29, 524 U.S. 980, 141 L.Ed.2d 789, reversed 119 S.Ct. 1661, 526 U.S. 629, 143 L.Ed.2d 839, on remand 206 F.3d 1377. 475A. ---- Miscellaneous, special relationship, liability generally

District of Columbia code provisions requiring District firefighters to give one month's notice or obtain mayor's permission before resigning, forbidding firefighters from leaving the District unless on leave of absence, and requiring them to reside within the District did not sufficiently deprive firefighters of liberty to establish a special relationship between District and firefighters, so as to give District a heightened obligation to firefighters and thus, render District fire chief susceptible to liability under §§ 1983 to firefighters who were injured in fire for a substantive due process violation by deliberate indifference to enforcement of department's standard operating procedures, as opposed to intentional conduct. Estate of Phillips v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.2006, 455 F.3d 397, 372 U.S.App.D.C. 312. Constitutional Law 278.4(1)

Section 1983 liability cannot be based on mere negligence. Wise v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 355. Civil Rights 1031

Deprivation of rights of involuntarily committed individuals by virtue of mere negligence is insufficient for § 1983 liability; liability may be imposed only when decision by professional is such substantial departure from accepted professional judgment, practice, or standards as to demonstrate that person responsible actually did not base decision on such judgment. Gilbert v. Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation, E.D.Tex.1996, 919 F.Supp. 1031. Civil Rights 1037

Liability under § 1983 must be predicated upon deliberate deprivation of constitutional rights by defendant, and not negligence. Foote v. Spiegel, D.Utah 1995, 903 F.Supp. 1463, affirmed in part, reversed in part, dismissed in part 118 F.3d 1416, on remand 995 F.Supp. 1347. Civil Rights 1031

Negligent conduct on behalf of state official does not amount to violation of federal civil rights statute; deprivation of constitutional rights must be intentional or deliberate. Ruiz v. Herrera, S.D.N.Y.1990, 745 F.Supp. 940. Civil Rights 1031

Case for negligence is not cognizable claim under this section which provides for civil action for deprivation of rights. O'Neal v. Evans, S.D.Ga.1980, 496 F.Supp. 867.

This section imposing liability for violations of rights protected by the Constitution was not intended to apply to suit brought by or on behalf of any person injured or killed because of negligent actions of state officials. Heard v. Lafourche Parish School Bd., E.D.La.1979, 480 F.Supp. 231. Civil Rights 1332(1)

Showing of mere negligence will not suffice to show deprivation of constitutional dimension required for claim to be cognizable under § 1983. Braud v. Painter, M.D.La.1990, 730 F.Supp. 1. See, also, Robinson v. Cuyler, D.C.Pa.1981, 511 F.Supp. 161; Smith v. Hill, D.C.Utah 1981, 510 F.Supp. 767; Loopman v. Hurley, D.C.N.H.1979, 475 F.Supp. 98; Joyner v. McClellan, D.C.Md.1975, 396 F.Supp. 912.

In order to be actionable under provisions of this section more than an isolated incident of negligent failure to afford a citizen his constitutional rights must have been involved. Taylor v. Grindstaff, D.C.Tenn.1978, 467 F.Supp. 4. See, also, Barnes v. Armour, E.D.Tenn.1974, 392 F.Supp. 1240.

477. ---- Violation of right as result, negligence, liability generally

Magistrate judge did not abuse his discretion in determining that inmate's allegations amounted to a claim of negligence and did not raise nonfrivolous constitutional claim and therefore, judge properly dismissed inmate's in forma pauperis (IFP) § 1983 failure to protect claim as frivolous. Neals v. Norwood, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 59 F.3d 530. United States Magistrates 21

Negligence by a state official under some circumstances may itself violate constitutionally protected right, and when it does, it is actionable under this section. Withers v. Levine, C.A.4 (Md.) 1980, 615 F.2d 158, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 136, 449 U.S. 849, 66 L.Ed.2d 59. Civil Rights 1031

Action under this section may be based on negligence when it leads to a deprivation of rights. McCray v. State of Md., C.A.4 (Md.) 1972, 456 F.2d 1. Civil Rights 1031

Although negligent deprivation of constitutional right is actionable under § 1983, important distinction is to be made between constitutional deprivation that happens to be negligent, and negligent act that is not constitutional deprivation because applicable constitutional provision is not violated by mere negligence. Edwards v. Cabrera, N.D.Ill.1994, 861 F.Supp. 664, reversed 58 F.3d 290. Civil Rights 1031

Negligence is cognizable under this section although the alleged wrong conduct on part of defendant must be performed under color of state law and must deprive the plaintiff of a right secured by the Constitution and the laws of the United States. Watson v. McGee, S.D.Ohio 1981, 527 F.Supp. 234. Civil Rights 1031; Civil Rights 1304

In order for negligence to provide grounds for civil rights suit, it must be shown to have resulted in violation of some constitutional right. LeBlanc v. Foti, E.D.La.1980, 487 F.Supp. 272. Civil Rights 1027

While every negligent act committed under color of law will not give rise to a civil rights claim, a negligent act which amounts to the deprivation of a right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States is within the terms of this section, and thus an individual who is unlawfully deprived of his liberty because of a negligent act committed under color of state law can bring a civil rights claim. Culp v. Devlin, E.D.Pa.1977, 437 F.Supp. 20. Civil Rights 1027

Inmate injured while playing basketball in jail recreation yard when he fell as he tried to avoid large hole, could not maintain § 1983 action for his injuries; inmate alleged only that hole was present in yard, that it was a dangerous condition and that there was absence of warning present, but did not allege malicious behavior or clearly recognized constitutional right. Burrell v. Griffith, E.D.Tex.1994, 158 F.R.D. 104. Civil Rights 1098

478. ---- Due process claims, negligence, liability generally

The due process clause is not implicated by a state official's negligent act causing unintended loss of or injury to life, liberty or property. Daniels v. Williams, U.S.Va.1986, 106 S.Ct. 662, 474 U.S. 327, 88 L.Ed.2d 662, concurring opinion 106 S.Ct. 677, 474 U.S. 327, 88 L.Ed.2d 662. See, also, Salas v. Carpenter, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 980 F.2d 299; Lavoie v. Town of Hudson, D.N.H.1990, 740 F.Supp. 88; Timko v. City of Hazleton, M.D.Pa.1986, 665 F.Supp. 1130. Constitutional Law 255(1); Constitutional Law 278(1)

District of Columbia Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs' (DCRA) temporary suspension of building permit for contaminated soil remediation facility did not constitute substantial and malicious infringement of District law as required to establish violation of owner's substantive due process rights for purposes of his § 1983 claim against District, but rather at most involved negligence, in light of director's discretionary authority to revoke building permit summarily if he determined that owner's prior civil violation for storage of contaminated soil on premises posed threat to health and safety. Tri-County Industries, Inc. v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1996, 932 F.Supp. 4, vacated 104 F.3d 455, 322 U.S.App.D.C. 412. Constitutional Law 278.1; Environmental Law 432

Negligent conduct by municipal law enforcement officials which causes or contributes to death or bodily injury of a person in custody may violate victim's substantive due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment so as to provide a civil rights cause of action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for the constitutional violation. Holland v. Breen, D.C.Mass.1985, 623 F.Supp. 284. Civil Rights 1088(4)

479. ---- Deliberate indifference, negligence, liability generally

High school student did not demonstrate that alleged failure by school and school district to supervise and discipline teachers by adequately investigating claims of excessive force against students and punishing teachers for such actions amounted to "deliberate indifference" to student's rights, as required to impose liability on school and school district, under §§ 1983, for teacher's alleged use of excessive force against student in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Knicrumah v. Albany City School Dist., N.D.N.Y.2003, 241 F.Supp.2d 199. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Fact that armed security guard employed by city housing agency to patrol agency-managed housing project had received his security guard license from local law enforcement agency after three-day training course did not constitute notice to agency of failure to train so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights that need for more training was patently obvious, precluding finding of deliberate indifference on part of agency in surviving relative's §§1983 due process action against agency following guard's shooting of individual during altercation at project. Larkin v. St. Louis Housing Authority Development Corp., C.A.8 (Mo.) 2004, 355 F.3d 1114. Civil Rights 1352(3)

School district's failure to conduct additional training of employees to recognize signs of abuse could not render it liable under §§ 1983 for middle school teacher's sexual abuse of student, absent showing that additional training would have prevented student's abuse or had any causal nexus to abuse, or showing that their failure to conduct such training reflected deliberate indifference; unsubstantiated rumors of prior incidents involving coach, against whom sexual touching charge was dropped, and administrator, whose accuser later recanted, were insufficient to show indifference. Kline ex rel. Arndt v. Mansfield, E.D.Pa.2006, 454 F.Supp.2d 258. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Although mere negligence by supervisory official is insufficient basis for claim of civil rights violation committed by subordinates, deliberate indifference manifested by actual intent or by recklessness, provides a sufficient foundation. Perry v. Elrod, N.D.Ill.1977, 436 F.Supp. 299. Civil Rights 1355

480. ---- Gross negligence, liability generally

Gross negligence on the part of state actors is not sufficient to impose liability under state-created danger theory; rather, to establish a violation of substantive due process rights, plaintiffs must demonstrate at least deliberate indifference to the state-created danger on the part of the state actors, and "deliberate indifference" is more than negligence or carelessness, and is the equivalent of recklessly disregarding a known risk of harm. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997, 968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1039; Constitutional Law 253(1)

Supervisor who is grossly negligent in permitting his subordinates to engage in gender discrimination can be held liable under § 1983. Wise v. New York City Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.1996, 928 F.Supp. 355. Civil Rights 1359

Allegation of gross negligence will not support § 1983 claim. Gonzalez v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1995, 888 F.Supp. 887. Civil Rights 1394

Failure of state to chain defendant's wrist to his waist and failure to have bailiff sit closer to parties during proceedings in which former wife sought protective order against husband was at most negligence and not gross negligence or recklessness as necessary to allow former wife who was attacked by husband to sue state or state actors. Dorris v. County of Washoe, D.Nev.1995, 885 F.Supp. 1383, affirmed 107 F.3d 15. States 79; States 112.2(2)

Civil rights plaintiff must show that defendant deprived him of life, liberty or property through deliberate intent or arguably through gross negligence; lack of due care is not enough and a "pure accident" will not qualify. Presnick v. Santoro, D.Conn.1993, 832 F.Supp. 521. Civil Rights 1031

Allegations of gross negligence are sufficient to state claim under § 1983. Ryan v. Burlington County, D.N.J.1987, 674 F.Supp. 464, affirmed and remanded on other grounds 860 F.2d 1199, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1745, 490 U.S. 1020, 104 L.Ed.2d 182. Civil Rights 1031

The "gross negligence" which must be shown to impose liability under this section is an extreme departure from the ordinary standard of care characterized by conscious indifference to, or reckless disregard of, the right of others; it is callous indifference to the predictable consequences of one's behavior and one's conduct; such a showing requires evidence of near recklessness or shockingly unjustified and unreasonable action. Smith v. Hill, D.C.Utah 1981, 510 F.Supp. 767. Civil Rights 1031

481. ---- Recklessness, negligence, liability generally

Actions of representative of public employer's Equal Employment Opportunity Office (EEOO), in urging employee to drop second sexual harassment complaint against coworker, did not constitute deliberate, reckless, or callous indifference to coworker's misconduct, as required to impose supervisory liability under § 1983; EEOO representative acted based on her perception that coworker had not engaged in any further harassment after having been disciplined following EEOO's disposition of employee's first complaint, and EEOO did take prompt action on second complaint. Sanchez v. Alvarado, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1996, 101 F.3d 223, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1359

For defendant to be reckless in constitutional sense, it is not enough to show that state actor should have known of danger his actions created, but rather, plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant had actual knowledge of impending harm which he consciously refused to prevent. Hill v. Shobe, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1996, 93 F.3d 418. Civil Rights 1039

State mental health administrators did not act recklessly in conscious disregard of known and serious risk by deciding to eliminate special unit in mental hospital that was reserved for criminally insane, for purposes of § 1983 claim under creation of danger theory seeking recovery for death of activity therapist killed by patient who was transferred from special unit; in response to difficult allocational decisions precipitated by budgetary constraints, administrators set up procedures to address arguably known risk and delegated assignment process to clinical experts. Uhlrig v. Harder, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1995, 64 F.3d 567, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 924, 516 U.S. 1118, 133 L.Ed.2d 853. Civil Rights 1039; Civil Rights 1126

Even if officer could have foreseen that fugitive would have driven away from officer and caused accident that injured bystanders, officer's action of waking fugitive who was sleeping behind wheel of parked car was at most negligence and not "reckless indifference" required for bystanders to state § 1983 claim. Webber v. Mefford, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 43 F.3d 1340. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Police chief could not be held liable for officers' forced entry into bathroom to obtain custody of armed individual who was dying of drug overdose who had previously threatened life of anyone who entered bathroom and had ceased communications where there was no evidence that decision to make forced entry violated federal law or was even reckless or ill advised. Medrano v. City of Los Angeles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1499, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 2415, 508 U.S. 940, 124 L.Ed.2d 638. Civil Rights 1088(3)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether city police chief and director of public safety acted with reckless indifference to city police officer's First Amendment and due process rights by increasing disciplinary action against officer for violation of department policy without procedural due process and in retaliation for officer's protected activity of participating in internal investigation of alleged criminal wrongdoing precluded summary judgment on officer's claim for punitive damages under §§ 1983. Reilly v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.2006, 427 F.Supp.2d 507. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Mere negligence is insufficient for personal liability for constitutional violation; plaintiff must demonstrate that official knowingly, willfully, or recklessly caused alleged deprivation by his action or failure to act. Spiegel v. Cortese, N.D.Ill.1997, 966 F.Supp. 684. Civil Rights 1031

Liability under § 1983 may be imposed based on allegations of recklessness. Irvin v. Borough of Darby, E.D.Pa.1996, 937 F.Supp. 446. Civil Rights 1031

Evidence in suit against social workers by parents of children who were allegedly abused while in foster care failed to establish that social workers knew of any propensity for abuse by the foster parents or intentionally or even recklessly failed to take action upon receiving mother's complaints so as to give rise to due process violation. Pfoltzer v. County of Fairfax, E.D.Va.1991, 775 F.Supp. 874, affirmed 966 F.2d 1443. Civil Rights 1422

Allegations of gross negligence or reckless disregard do not state claim under due process clause. Morton v. City of Little Rock, E.D.Ark.1989, 728 F.Supp. 543, affirmed 934 F.2d 180. Civil Rights 1394

Where constitutional deprivation alleged in civil rights case based on deprivation of rights finds its source solely within due process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, degree of culpability must exceed simple negligence and amount to gross negligence or recklessness. Popow v. City of Margate, D.C.N.J.1979, 476 F.Supp. 1237. Civil Rights 1028

482. ---- Supervision, negligence, liability generally

Commissioners of state departments of children and families (DCF) and social services (DSS) were not subject to liability under §§ 1983 for failing to properly supervise their employees in connection with child welfare investigations and proceedings, despite parents' contention that employees submitted false information to juvenile courts, absent allegations as to content of that information, what additional or correct information should have been submitted, or how that information would have resulted in juvenile court reaching different conclusions. Inkel v. Connecticut Dept. of Children and Families, D.Conn.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 513. Civil Rights 1360

Parent and natural guardian, on behalf of four-year old, non-verbal, autistic child, could assert Monell/Canton claim against school district, school board, and superiors of teacher for failure to train by adopting policies of discriminatory nature and non-compliance with law, since setting discriminatory policies and failure to adequately train subordinates at multiple levels could result in independent liability of those individuals and entities. Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Gross negligence is not enough to impose supervisory liability for civil rights violations; rather, supervisors must know about the conduct and facilitate it, approve it, condone it, or turn blind eye for fear of what they might see, or, in other words, they must act either knowingly or with deliberate, reckless indifference. Hodgson v. Mississippi Dept. of Corrections, E.D.Wis.1997, 963 F.Supp. 776. Civil Rights 1355

No cause of action exists under § 1983 for negligent supervision of employees. Sappington v. Ulrich, E.D.Tex.1994, 868 F.Supp. 194. Civil Rights 1355

Negligent supervision is not a basis for liability under this section. Shirey v. Bensalem Tp., E.D.Pa.1980, 501 F.Supp. 1138.

Negligent supervision does not suffice as basis for liability under this section, but, rather, greater degree of personal culpability is required. Jones v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1980, 491 F.Supp. 284. Civil Rights 1335

483. ---- Municipal liability, negligence, liability generally

Mere negligence is insufficient to establish municipal liability under § 1983. Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1990, 916 F.2d 284, certiorari granted 111 S.Ct. 1579, 499 U.S. 958, 113 L.Ed.2d 644, affirmed 112 S.Ct. 1061, 503 U.S. 115, 117 L.Ed.2d 261. Civil Rights 1343

Common-law negligence does not provide a basis for liability in a §§ 1983 action against a municipality. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1352(1)

A plaintiff may establish municipal liability under §§ 1983 by showing that a municipal policy or custom existed as a result of the municipality's deliberate indifference to the violation of constitutional rights, either by inadequate training or supervision. Russo v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2004, 341 F.Supp.2d 85. Civil Rights 1352(1)

City's conduct before incident in which woman alleged sexual assault during course of gynecological examination by city department of health physician was neither "gross negligence" nor "deliberate indifference" so as to expose city to liability under statute governing deprivation of civil rights, where assault was first of its type brought to city's attention, and city's chaperone policy was consistent with that of Chicago medical community. Jones v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1985, 608 F.Supp. 994, affirmed 787 F.2d 200. Civil Rights 1352(6)

484. Joint and several liability, liability generally

Prison guards could not be held jointly and severally liable to prisoners under §§ 1983 for alleged excessive force during cell transfer and transport procedure, where prisoners had failed to establish that any of the guards violated their constitutional rights; prisoners failed to establish that each and every guard touched them, much less that any of the guards used excessive force. Harper v. Albert, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 400 F.3d 1052. Civil Rights 1358

Police officers could not be held jointly and severally liable for unlawful arrests and imposition of cruel and unusual punishment where injuries to various arrestees were in no sense indivisible, but were personal, individual and discreet and each could be apportioned with reasonable certainty to either one officer or the other. Dean v. Gladney, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 621 F.2d 1331, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1521, 450 U.S. 983, 67 L.Ed.2d 819. Civil Rights 1358

City police officers and fire chief, who played no part in decision of city police chief to send racial protest demonstrators to state penitentiary where they were incarcerated in cells containing inadequate hygienic facilities, were not jointly and severally liable with superintendent under this section for infliction of summary punishment without due process. Anderson v. Nosser, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1972, 456 F.2d 835, certiorari denied 93 S.Ct. 53, 409 U.S. 848, 34 L.Ed.2d 89. Civil Rights 1358

"Joint action" theory did not permit conclusion that private television station was acting under color of law when it broadcast court proceedings despite religious objections of parties to those proceedings, and thus station could not be held liable to those parties under Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA) or § 1983, where no public actors were aware of the objections. Brownson v. Bogenschutz, E.D.Wis.1997, 966 F.Supp. 795. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Police officer who did not deliver allegedly fatal blow to plaintiff's decedent during arrest could be held jointly liable under § 1983 with officer who did deliver blow either on basis of participation in infliction of excessive force or failure to take reasonable steps to protect plaintiff's decedent from use of excessive force causing death, or even on basis of dragging plaintiff's decedent in his mortally wounded limp state along ground to police car and shoving him into back seat. Mathis v. Parks, E.D.N.C.1990, 741 F.Supp. 567. Civil Rights 1348

School system was jointly and severally liable with superintendent for superintendent's abuse of his official authority in reassigning central office employees in violation of constitutional rights under the First Amendment, even though the board of education did not intend to violate the employees' rights but merely followed impermissibly motivated recommendations by the superintendent. Bundren v. Peters, E.D.Tenn.1989, 732 F.Supp. 1486. Civil Rights 1349

485. Individual capacity, liability generally

Under Eleventh Amendment, detainee at state facility for sexually violent persons who brought §§1983 due process and equal protection action against facility employees, arising from detainee's beating at hands of fellow resident, could not seek monetary damages from employees in their official capacities, but could seek monetary damages from employees in their individual capacities. Brown v. Budz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 904. Federal Courts 269

By commencing § 1983 action against state officials solely in their official capacity, parolee forewent any claim for damages. Williams v. Wisconsin, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 336 F.3d 576. Civil Rights 1358

Personal or individual capacity suits seek to impose personal liability upon government official for actions he takes under color of state law, while official capacity suit is only another way of pleading action against entity of which officer is agent. Johnson v. Board of County Com'rs for County of Fremont, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 85 F.3d 489, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1042, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Civil Rights 1354

State officials can be held liable in individual capacities under § 1983, even if those officials are performing governmental duties when committing alleged wrongs. Price v. State of Hawaii, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1991, 939 F.2d 702, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1479, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1480, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Under § 1983, plaintiff may sue state officer in individual capacity for alleged wrongs committed by officer in his official capacity. Price v. Akaka, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1990, 928 F.2d 824, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 436, 502 U.S. 967, 116 L.Ed.2d 455. Civil Rights 1354

Personal capacity suits seek to impose individual liability upon government officers for actions taken under color of state law; thus, on the merits, to establish personal liability in a § 1983 action, it is enough to show that the official, acting under color of state law, caused the deprivation of a federal right. Estate of Phillips v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 69, motion to vacate denied 355 F.Supp.2d 212. Civil Rights 1326(2); Civil Rights 1354

Members of county highway committee could not be held liable in their personal capacities for any violation of private contractor's constitutional rights occurring when county refused to sell road salt and other materials to contractor in alleged retaliation for his comments, absent evidence from which it could be inferred that the committee members were responsible for decision. Schmidt v. Lincoln County, State of Wisconsin, W.D.Wis.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 1124. Civil Rights 1360

Lack of showing of any personal involvement, on part of state attorney general, precluded individual capacity suit seeking monetary judgment for false arrest on federal charges and false imprisonment in federal facility. Channer v. Murray, D.Conn.2003, 247 F.Supp.2d 182. Civil Rights 1358

Parent of public school student, as next friend of student, stated a claim against school principal and teacher in their personal capacities under §§ 1983 for violation of student's right to equal protection, based on actions of principal and teacher in prohibiting students from speaking Spanish in school; parent alleged that with no exceptions, principal and teacher prohibited students from speaking Spanish on school grounds, and that risk of discipline for violating that prohibition fell disproportionately on students who spoke Spanish and limited English. Rubio v. Turner Unified School Dist. No. 202, D.Kan.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 1295. Schools 164

Former Wisconsin Department of Corrections (WDOC) employee failed to state §§ 1983 claim against WDOC where he did not allege that any formal departmental policy violated his constitutional rights, but employee's superiors could be held liable under §§ 1983 in their individual capacities for constitutional violations alleged. Salas v. Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections, W.D.Wis.2006, 429 F.Supp.2d 1056. Civil Rights 1359

Before finding that civil rights defendant is sued in his individual capacity, court considers whether the pleadings offer defendant adequate notice that his personal assets are at stake in the proceeding. Smith v. Central Dauphin School Dist., M.D.Pa.2005, 419 F.Supp.2d 639. Civil Rights 1394

Corporate government contractor could assert a claim against state official alleging the deprivation of a reputation-plus type of liberty interest. Coleman & Williams, Ltd. v. Wisconsin Dept. of Workforce Development, E.D.Wis.2005, 401 F.Supp.2d 938. Civil Rights 1331(6)

Parents of autistic student could not sue teacher and principal, in their individual capacities, under §§ 1983 for violations of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) or Rehabilitation Act; parents could not sue teacher and principal, in their individual capacities, directly under ADA or the Rehabilitation Act, and thus, parents could not use §§ 1983 to do what they could not do directly under these statutes, namely establish individual liability. Stevenson v. Independent School District No. I-038 of Garvin County, Oklahoma, W.D.Okla.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1148. Schools 155.5(2.1)

An employer's agent may not be held individually liable under Title VII, however, individual liability is possible under §§ 1983 and New York's Human Rights Law. Dawson v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 176. Civil Rights 1113; Civil Rights 1340; Civil Rights 1736

Individuals may not be held personally liable under Title VII, the ADA, the Rehabilitation Act, or the ADEA. Murphy v. Board of Educ. of Rochester City School Dist., W.D.N.Y.2003, 273 F.Supp.2d 292, affirmed 106 Fed.Appx. 746, 2004 WL 1682887. Civil Rights 1113

State employees in their individual capacities may be liable for damages under § 1983, even when the conduct in question is related to their official duties. McCoy v. Goord, S.D.N.Y.2003, 255 F.Supp.2d 233. Civil Rights 1354

Where arrestees' § 1983 claim alleging that police chief failed to train officers in use of handcuffs did not specify whether chief was being sued in his individual or official capacity, he was deemed sued in his official capacity only, rendering claim against him redundant to failure to train claim against city. Fakorzi v. Dillard's, Inc., S.D.Iowa 2003, 252 F.Supp.2d 819. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Sheriff had no civil rights liability in individual capacity for officers' alleged use of excessive force in fatally shooting homeowner during execution of warrant, where he did not participate in warrant's execution and there was no evidence that, as a supervisor, he implicitly authorized, approved, or knowingly acquiesced in allegedly unconstitutional conduct. Wingrove v. Forshey, S.D.Ohio 2002, 230 F.Supp.2d 808. Civil Rights 1358

Employee of Territory of Virgin Islands who inflicts injury while acting in his or her official capacity may only be sued under § 1983 in his or her individual capacity. Jarvis v. Government of Virgin Islands, D.Virgin Islands 1996, 919 F.Supp. 177. Civil Rights 1354

Inmate's § 1983 suit against state prison official, alleging deprivation of due process at disciplinary proceeding, was not barred by Eleventh Amendment; officer was being sued in his individual capacity. Bunting v. Nagy, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21305339, Unreported. Federal Courts 269

486. Official capacity, liability generally

Statement in prior decision that officials acting in their official capacities were not 'persons' under § 1983 was best understood as reference to capacity in which state officer was being sued, not capacity in which officer inflicted alleged injury; statement did not make § 1983 relief unavailable against state officers, sued in their individual capacities, for damages arising from official acts. Hafer v. Melo, U.S.Pa.1991, 112 S.Ct. 358, 502 U.S. 21, 116 L.Ed.2d 301. Civil Rights 1360

Detainee at state facility for sexually violent persons who brought §§ 1983 due process action against facility employees, alleging failure to protect detainee from beating at hands of fellow resident, could not assert failure-to-train claim against employees in their individual capacities; such claim could only be asserted against employees in their official capacities. Brown v. Budz, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2005, 398 F.3d 904. Civil Rights 1358

Under Puerto Rico law, mayor's employment decisions ipso facto constituted official policy of municipality, and thus, liability of municipality could not be divorced from mayor's liability in his official capacity, for purposes of municipal employee's civil rights action alleging political discrimination claim. Rivera-Torres v. Ortiz Velez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Civil Rights 1351(5); Civil Rights 1359

Person sued in his official capacity has no stake, as individual, in outcome of litigation. Johnson v. Board of County Com'rs for County of Fremont, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 85 F.3d 489, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 611, 519 U.S. 1042, 136 L.Ed.2d 536. Officers And Public Employees 114

Supreme Court holding, that state or state officials were not considered "persons" under § 1983, does not apply when state official in his or her official capacity is sued for prospective relief. Chaloux v. Killeen, C.A.9 (Idaho) 1989, 886 F.2d 247. Civil Rights 1354

When civil rights complaint is unclear as to whether defendants are sued in their official or individual capacities, court looks to both the complaint and the course of the proceedings to determine the liability plaintiff seeks to impose. Smith v. Central Dauphin School Dist., M.D.Pa.2005, 419 F.Supp.2d 639. Civil Rights 1394

To the extent that inmate purported to sue prison officials under §§1983 in their official capacities, the Eleventh Amendment's bar against suits brought in federal court by a state's own citizens deprived the district court of jurisdiction. Gonzalez v. Narcato, E.D.N.Y.2005, 363 F.Supp.2d 486. Federal Courts 269

Section 1983 actions against individuals in their official capacities are not sustainable since identity of the individual is subsumed in governmental entity's identity. Cordray v. County of Lincoln, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1171. Civil Rights 1354

A municipal liability claim under § 1983 against individual government agents must be pursued against them in their official capacity, and generally represents only another way of pleading an action against an entity of which an officer is an agent. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1354

County sheriff and correctional facility officer were liable in their official capacities for any damages attributable to their not affording jail inmate opportunity to make statement prior to being confined in 24-hour keeplock, where denying inmate that opportunity was consistent with standard policy followed in jail, as set forth in rules and infraction notice. McCann v. Phillips, S.D.N.Y.1994, 864 F.Supp. 330. Civil Rights 1358

Fact that suits against officials in their official capacity are nothing more than actions against governmental entity of which the individual was agent did not mandate dismissal of either borough or borough police chief from § 1983 action; it would be possible for borough to be liable, but for police chief to be liable only in his personal capacity, and multiple defendants, whether corporate, municipal, or individual, are commonplace in § 1983 cases. Coffman v. Wilson Police Dept., E.D.Pa.1990, 739 F.Supp. 257. Civil Rights 1389

Since municipalities are potentially liable under this section, it follows that local governmental officials sued in their official capacities are "persons" under this section in those cases in which a local government would be suable in its own name. Ohland v. City of Montpelier, D.C.Vt.1979, 467 F.Supp. 324. Civil Rights 1354

487. Supervisory personnel, liability generally

Liability under § 1983 cannot be premised upon the doctrine of respondeat superior; therefore, a supervisor is only liable for constitutional violations of his subordinates if the supervisor participated in or directed the violations, or knew of the violations and failed to act to prevent them. Lavender v. Lampert, D.Or.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 821. Civil Rights 1336; Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory personnel cannot be held vicariously liable under § 1983 for the acts of subordinates, but may be independently liable where a reasonable person in the supervisor's position would have known that his conduct infringed the plaintiff's rights and the supervisor's conduct was causally related to the subordinate's constitutional violation. McCurry v. Moore, N.D.Fla.2002, 242 F.Supp.2d 1167. Civil Rights 1355

Documentation of widespread abuses are necessary to establish a supervisor's liability under §§ 1983 for constitutional violations by a subordinate, and the plaintiff cannot satisfy his burden of proof by pointing to a single incident or isolated incidents. Caldwell v. Green, W.D.Va.2006, 451 F.Supp.2d 811. Civil Rights 1355

Issue of whether corrections official was liable on grounds of supervisory liability was for jury in corrections officer's §§ 1983 claim against official stemming from injuries sustained during a practical joke gone awry perpetrated by co-workers. Givens v. O'Quinn, W.D.Va.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 593. Civil Rights 1429

Official with no hiring, firing, or disciplinary power over any supervisory staff or personnel of correctional facilities or no direct power to control or direct customs and policies of facilities has no personal involvement in unconstitutional conduct, and claim under § 1983 cannot be sustained as to that individual. Morris v. Eversley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1358

Elements for establishing supervisory liability under § 1983 are that: (1) supervisor had actual or constructive knowledge that his subordinate was engaged in conduct that posed pervasive and unreasonable risk of constitutional injury to citizens like plaintiff; (2) supervisor's response to that knowledge was so inadequate as to show deliberate indifference to or tacit authorization of alleged offensive practices; and (3) there was affirmative causal link between supervisor's inaction and particular constitutional injury suffered by plaintiff. Jennings v. University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, M.D.N.C.2002, 240 F.Supp.2d 492. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory liability may be imposed under § 1983 when an official has actual or constructive notice of unconstitutional practices and demonstrates gross negligence or deliberate indifference by failing to act. Pizzuto v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 239 F.Supp.2d 301. Civil Rights 1355

High school principal was not liable under § 1983 for teacher's deprivation of student's Fourteenth Amendment right to bodily integrity by acts of sexual misconduct, since there was not sufficient evidence that there was such widespread abuse of students by teachers at high school that principal should have been placed on notice that corrective action was required. Hackett v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1356

Supervisory liability cannot be imposed under § 1983 on a respondeat superior theory; in order for a supervisory public official to be held liable for a subordinate's constitutional tort, the official must either be the moving force behind the constitutional violation or exhibit deliberate indifference to the plight of the person deprived. Figalora v. Smith, D.Del.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 658. Civil Rights 1355

Three-part test is applied for determining whether supervisory official can be held liable for conduct of subordinate in federal civil rights action: plaintiff must show that supervisor failed to train or supervise subordinate, that causal connection existed between failure to supervise or train and violation of plaintiff's rights, and that such failure to supervise or train amounted to gross negligence or deliberate indifference. Callis v. Sellars, S.D.Tex.1996, 931 F.Supp. 504. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory official may be liable under § 1983 only if he was personally involved in constitutional deprivation, or if there was sufficient causal connection between supervisor's wrongful conduct and constitutional violation. Gardner v. Wilson, C.D.Cal.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1224. Civil Rights 1355

488. Subordinate personnel, liability generally

Former city manager's legitimate, nonretaliatory motive in upholding termination or discipline of city firefighters during final step of multitiered termination process did not shield his subordinates, or those found to be subordinates' coconspirators, from liability on firefighters' First Amendment retaliation claims, inasmuch as jury could reasonably have found that former city manager would not have terminated or disciplined firefighters if fire chief and assistant city manager, whose conduct was found to have been motivated by firefighters' protected conduct, had not brought charges against firefighters. Gilbrook v. City of Westminster, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1999, 177 F.3d 839, amended on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 614, 528 U.S. 1061, 145 L.Ed.2d 509. Civil Rights 1359

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

489. Contractors, liability generally

County could not be held liable under § 1983 for the selection and/or funding of a contract public defender; county discharged its basic constitutional obligation under Gideon by contracting with private law firm to provide legal services to indigent criminal defendants, and if firm made decisions about plaintiff's criminal representation based on economic self-interest, the fault for firm's ethical violation could not be blamed on county. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1047. Civil Rights 1088(5); Civil Rights 1351(4)

Private doctor who provides medical services to inmates pursuant to contract with prison may be held liable in civil rights suit. Hetzel v. Swartz, M.D.Pa.1995, 909 F.Supp. 261. Civil Rights 1326(8)

490. Corporate veil, liability generally

Officers of land companies which allegedly discriminated against black purchasers in respect to prices and terms could be held liable for the companies' alleged violations of plaintiffs' civil rights, since the general rule that a corporation and its stockholders are deemed separate entities is subject to the qualification that the separate identity may be disregarded in "exceptional situations" such as the instant case. Clark v. Universal Builders, Inc., N.D.Ill.1976, 409 F.Supp. 1274. Civil Rights 1338

491. Professional discretion and judgment, liability generally

Defendants are not removed from purview of § 1983 action simply because they are professionals acting in accordance with professional discretion and judgment; there is no rule that professionals are subject to suit under § 1983 unless professional was exercising custodial or supervisory authority. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1335

521. Color of law generally

Like the state-action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment, the under-color-of-state-law element of § 1983 excludes from its reach merely private conduct, no matter how discriminatory or wrongful. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, U.S.Pa.1999, 119 S.Ct. 977, 526 U.S. 40, 143 L.Ed.2d 130. Civil Rights 1325

To state claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege violation of rights secured by Constitution and laws of United States, and must show that alleged deprivation was committed by person acting under color of state law. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1304

On the merits, to establish personal liability of a public official in a § 1983 action, it is enough to show that the official, acting under color of state law, caused the deprivation of a federal right, but more is required in an official-capacity action, for the governmental entity is liable under § 1983 only when the entity itself is a "moving force" behind the deprivation. Kentucky v. Graham, U.S.Ky.1985, 105 S.Ct. 3099, 473 U.S. 159, 87 L.Ed.2d 114, on remand 791 F.2d 932. Civil Rights 1354

Under traditional definition of "acting under color of state law," defendant in § 1983 action must have exercised power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law. David v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 101 F.3d 1344, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 157, 522 U.S. 858, 139 L.Ed.2d 102. Civil Rights 1324

Actionable § 1983 claim must allege deprivation of rights secured by Constitution by person acting under color of state law. Scott v. Moore, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 85 F.3d 230, rehearing granted, opinion vacated, on rehearing 114 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1304

Suit under § 1983 may be dismissed if defendants' conduct did not occur under color of state law. Leeds v. Meltz, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 85 F.3d 51. Civil Rights 1324

Liability under § 1983 requires proof that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law and deprived person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution or laws of the United States. Yang v. Hardin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 37 F.3d 282. Civil Rights 1304

To state successful claim under § 1983, plaintiff must identify right secured by United States Constitution and deprivation of that right by person acting under color of state law. Adams v. Metiva, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 31 F.3d 375. Civil Rights 1304

To establish civil rights liability, plaintiff must show that he has been deprived of federal constitutional or statutory right by person acting under color of law. Cullen v. Margiotta, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1987, 811 F.2d 698, certiorari denied 107 S.Ct. 3266, 483 U.S. 1021, 97 L.Ed.2d 764. Civil Rights 1304

Generally, this section applies only to deprivations of civil rights under color of state law. Gonzalez v. Department of Army, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1983, 718 F.2d 926. Civil Rights 1304

Even if activity ostensibly designed to influence public policy has real purpose not to induce governmental action but to injure the plaintiff directly, activity is not actionable under this section unless taken under color of state law. Gorman Towers, Inc. v. Bogoslavsky, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1980, 626 F.2d 607. Civil Rights 1374

This section relating to deprivation of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution and laws gives remedy at law or in equity to any person for infringement of his civil rights by one who acts under color of state authority. Kellerman v. Askew, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1976, 541 F.2d 1089. Civil Rights 1304

One may not recover under this section authorizing civil action for deprivation of civil rights on the basis of acts not done "under color of law." Azar v. Conley, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1972, 456 F.2d 1382. Civil Rights 1324

If conduct challenged by plaintiff constitutes "state action" for purpose of Fourteenth Amendment claim, then that conduct is also action "under color of state law" for purpose of §§ 1983 and 1985 claims. Willis v. Town of Marshall, W.D.N.C.2003, 293 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1325; Conspiracy 7.5(3)

To state a claim under § 1983, the plaintiff must allege that the defendants, while acting under color of state law, deprived her of a federal constitutional or statutory right. Hellman v. Gugliotti, D.Conn.2003, 279 F.Supp.2d 150. Civil Rights 1304

Section 1983 does not create a cause of action in and of itself; it provides redress for certain violations of rights arising under the federal constitution or laws of the United States which are caused by persons acting under color of state law. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1305

In order to succeed on § 1983 claim, plaintiff must prove: (1) that he was deprived of right secured by federal constitution or laws of United States; and (2) that he was subjected to this deprivation by person acting under color of state law. Hale v. Vance, S.D.Ohio 2003, 267 F.Supp.2d 725. Civil Rights 1304

To state a claim under § 1983, a plaintiff must allege the violation of a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and must show that the alleged deprivation was committed by a person acting under color of state law. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1304

Claim under § 1983 requires that plaintiff establish deprivation of constitutional right under color of state law. Bland v. New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 526. Civil Rights 1304

There can be no state action or acting under color of law, for purpose of § 1983 claim, if challenged conduct is not related in some meaningful way either to defendant employee's governmental status or to performance of employee's duties. Teta v. Packard, N.D.Ill.1997, 959 F.Supp. 469. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Where § 1983 action is brought only against government entity and not its employee who allegedly caused injury, court may consider issue of whether employee was acting under color of state law, although its determination as to that issue is not dispositive of whether governmental entity may be held liable. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1326(1)

In employment context, officers and employees of states and their agencies, instrumentalities and political subdivisions will generally be acting "under color of law" for purposes of civil rights claims when their actions are in furtherance or fulfillment of tasks and obligations assigned to them, or made possible by power conferred upon them by government. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1326(11)

To state § 1983 claim, complaint must allege that defendant, acting under color of state law, deprived plaintiff of rights secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States; first step in any such claim is to identify the specific constitutional right allegedly infringed. Roe v. Office of Adult Probation, D.Conn.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1080, vacated 125 F.3d 47. Civil Rights 1394

Plaintiff claiming violation of rights under § 1983 is required to demonstrate that person deprived him of federal law, and that such person acted under color of state law. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1304

For defendant to be liable under § 1983, plaintiff must establish that objectionable acts were performed by state actor. Wilcher v. City of Wilmington, D.Del.1996, 924 F.Supp. 613, affirmed in part, vacated in part 139 F.3d 366, on remand 60 F.Supp.2d 298. Civil Rights 1325

Traditional definition of acting under color of state law requires that defendant in § 1983 action have exercised power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law. Forbes v. Rhode Island Broth. of Correctional Officers, D.R.I.1996, 923 F.Supp. 315. Civil Rights 1324

Initial inquiry in § 1983 action includes following: whether conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law; and whether this conduct deprived person of his rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution. Richmond v. Cagle, E.D.Wis.1996, 920 F.Supp. 955. Civil Rights 1304

In order to prevail under § 1983, plaintiff must prove that person acting under color of state law has deprived plaintiff of rights secured by constitution or other federal laws. Miller v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 1996, 920 F.Supp. 807. Civil Rights 1304 of state law and deprived complainant of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by constitution or laws of United States. Medina v. Minerva, M.D.Fla.1995, 907 F.Supp. 379. Civil Rights 1304

To state viable § 1983 claim, plaintiff must allege that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law and that said conduct deprived plaintiff of right, privilege, or immunity secured by Constitution or by laws of United States. Turiano v. Schnarrs, M.D.Pa.1995, 904 F.Supp. 400. Civil Rights 1304

In order to prevail on § 1983 claim, plaintiff must prove that she was deprived of federal right by someone acting under color of state law. Verney v. Pennsylvania Turnpike Com'n, M.D.Pa.1995, 903 F.Supp. 826. Civil Rights 1304

To state claim under § 1983, plaintiff must allege that right secured by Constitution and laws of United States was violated and that alleged deprivation was committed by person acting under color of law. Jones v. Moran, N.D.Cal.1995, 900 F.Supp. 1267. Civil Rights 1394

In order to establish claim under § 1983, plaintiffs must prove that defendants acted under cloak of state authority when they took alleged actions against plaintiffs and that actions deprived plaintiffs of right or rights secured by Constitution or by federal law. Pettco Enterprises, Inc. v. White, M.D.Ala.1995, 896 F.Supp. 1137, affirmed 98 F.3d 1353, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1248, 520 U.S. 1117, 137 L.Ed.2d 329. Civil Rights 1325

Federal civil rights statute operates as vehicle for imposing liability against any person who, acting under color of state law, violates individual's federally protected rights. Dawson v. Prince George's County, D.Md.1995, 896 F.Supp. 537. Civil Rights 1304

To recover under § 1983, plaintiff must show that alleged violation occurred under color of state law. Glendora v. Cablevision Systems Corp, S.D.N.Y.1995, 893 F.Supp. 264. Civil Rights 1304

To recover on claim brought under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must establish that defendants were acting under color of state law and that their conduct deprived plaintiff of rights secured by Constitution. Wade v. Byles, N.D.Ill.1995, 886 F.Supp. 654, affirmed 83 F.3d 902, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 311, 519 U.S. 935, 136 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1304

To properly state § 1983 claim, plaintiff must allege deprivation of right guaranteed by Constitution or laws of United States by defendant acting under color of state law. Frazier v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, E.D.Pa.1994, 868 F.Supp. 757. Civil Rights 1394

To state claim under federal civil rights statute, complaint must state facts sufficient to show both that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law and that conduct deprived plaintiff of right or privilege secured by Constitution or laws of United States and provide defendant with adequate notice to frame answer; this can be done by alleging time and place of deprivation and persons responsible. Youse v. Carlucci, E.D.Pa.1994, 867 F.Supp. 317. Civil Rights 1394

Person acts under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983 claim, when his or her actions are fairly attributable to state, that is, where person's official character is such as to lend weight of state to his or her decisions. Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, S.D.Fla.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1552, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 1155, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 83 F.3d 1346, affirmed in part, reversed in part 111 F.3d 1530, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 438, 522 U.S. 978, 139 L.Ed.2d 337, reversed 118 S.Ct. 2275, 524 U.S. 775, 157 A.L.R. Fed. 663, 141 L.Ed.2d 662, on remand 166 F.3d 1152. Civil Rights 1326(2)

action is whether defendant was state actor, acting in official capacity. Doe v. William Shapiro, Esquire, P.C., E.D.Pa.1994, 852 F.Supp. 1246. Civil Rights 1326(2)

To successfully state claim under § 1983, plaintiff must identify right secured by United States Constitution and deprivation of that right by person acting under color of state law. Mackey v. Cleveland State University, N.D.Ohio 1993, 837 F.Supp. 1396. Civil Rights 1304

To maintain § 1983 action, plaintiff must demonstrate that he has been deprived, under color of state law, of rights secured by constitution or laws of United States. B.M.H. by C.B. v. School Bd. of City of Chesapeake, Va., E.D.Va.1993, 833 F.Supp. 560. Civil Rights 1304

In any § 1983 action, plaintiff must establish that conduct complained of was committed by person acting under color of state law, and that conduct deprived person of his rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution of the United States. Jones v. Chieffo, E.D.Pa.1993, 833 F.Supp. 498, affirmed 22 F.3d 301. Civil Rights 1304

To state valid cause of action under § 1983, plaintiff must allege deprivation of right, privilege, or immunity secured by Constitution and laws of United States while defendant was acting under color of state law. Kirwan v. Larned Mental Health, D.Kan.1993, 816 F.Supp. 672. Civil Rights 1394; Civil Rights 1396

Party seeking recovery under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 must prove both that conduct alleged occurred under color of state law and that conduct alleged resulted in deprivation of some constitutional right. Wilson v. Township of Middletown, Susquehanna County, Pa., M.D.Pa.1992, 810 F.Supp. 125. Civil Rights 1304

521A. Particular actors clothed with authority

Private hospital which accepted involuntarily committed mentally disabled patients was clothed with the authority of state law and acting under color of state law for purposes of a § 1983 claim brought by parents related to death of their son after he eloped from hospital following his involuntary commitment; involuntary commitments at hospital were processed through the county funded program pursuant to the hospital's contractual duty to provide the service and by virtue of the contract the hospital was obligated to treat confined mentally disabled persons. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1326(5)

522. Nature of activities performed, color of law generally

Fact that state's employee's role parallels one in private sector is not, by itself, reason to conclude that former is not acting under color of state law within meaning of § 1983 in performing his duties. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1326(2)

When distinguishing private violence from violence attributable to state action, for purposes of a §§ 1983 action, an actor's conduct will be attributed to the state when it occurs in the course of performing an actual or apparent duty of his office, or is such that the actor could not have behaved in that way but for the authority of his office. Givens v. O'Quinn, W.D.Va.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 593. Civil Rights 1326(2)

It is nature of act performed by state officials, not status of state officials as such that is determinative of applicability of this section. Phillips v. Rockefeller, S.D.N.Y.1970, 321 F.Supp. 516, affirmed 435 F.2d 976. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Hourly rates of $120.00 for prevailing defendants' lead attorney, $110.00 for associate attorneys, and $50.00 for paralegal services were reasonable for purpose of calculating prevailing defendants' award of attorney fees, in §

1983 false arrest claim. Carrion v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22519438, Unreported. Civil Rights 1488

523. Nature of rights deprived, color of law generally

Recognition or nonrecognition of state action is not governed by the nature of the constitutional rights asserted in complaint under this section. O'Neill v. Grayson County War Memorial Hospital, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1973, 472 F.2d 1140 . Civil Rights 1396

524. Knowledge, color of law generally

In order to show that person has acted under color of a statute, for purpose of provision of this section affording civil action for deprivation of rights, it is essential that he act with knowledge of and pursuant to statute. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1324

Action with knowledge of and pursuant to state law is a minimal requirement to satisfy the under color of state law test for jurisdiction purposes under this section where the alleged state action is based on a private party's actions and such party has no authority or pretence of authority to act as state's agent and is not compelled to act for the state. Gresham Park Community Organization v. Howell, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 652 F.2d 1227. Civil Rights 1326(4)

State action under this section governing deprivation of civil rights will lie only where a federal defendant invokes a state remedy that he knows to be unconstitutional and the defendant either is a state officer or the remedy is among those questionable prejudgment remedies used by private creditors. District 28, United Mine Workers of America, Inc. v. Wellmore Coal Corp., C.A.4 (Va.) 1979, 609 F.2d 1083. Civil Rights 1326(9)

One essential element for taking action under color of state law, within meaning of this section, is that the person act with knowledge of and pursuant to a state law, statute, etc. Adams v. Southern California First Nat. Bank, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 492 F.2d 324, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 325, 419 U.S. 1006, 42 L.Ed.2d 282.

Private defendants may be held liable for damages under civil rights statute only if they fail to act in good faith in invoking unconstitutional state procedures, that is, if they either knew or should have known that statute on which they relied was unconstitutional; such test has both objective and subjective component. Britt v. Whitehall Income Fund '86, M.D.Ga.1993, 891 F.Supp. 1578. Civil Rights 1326(9)

525. Compliance with law distinguished, color of law generally

To violate this section an act need not have been made in compliance with law but merely "under color of law". U. S. v. Wiseman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1971, 445 F.2d 792, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 346, 404 U.S. 967, 30 L.Ed.2d 287.

526. Abuse of authority, color of law generally

Defendant in section 1983 suit acts under color of state law when he abuses position given to him by state. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1324; Civil Rights 1326(2)

Current wife acted under state law for § 1983 purposes when, as an employee of county district attorney's office, current wife illegally used DA office's medical eligibility data system (MEDS) computer system to find her husband's ex-wife at a battered women's shelter in order to serve ex-wife papers relating to child custody issues, since current wife's actions, though improper, related to the performance of her official duties; current wife abused her responsibilities and acted under pretense of her county employment by asserting her state-authorized passcode to enter into MEDS database. McDade v. West, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2000, 223 F.3d 1135. Civil Rights 1326(2)

527. State action, color of law generally--Generally

State action for purposes of § 1983 claim may be found if private party has acted with help of or in concert with state officials, if private party has been delegated power traditionally exclusively reserved to state, or if there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of private entity so that action of latter may fairly be treated as that of state itself. McKeesport Hosp. v. Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Educ., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 24 F.3d 519. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(5)

State action within meaning of civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] can be found only when it can be said that state is responsible for specific conduct of which plaintiff complains. Daigle v. Opelousas Health Care, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1344. Civil Rights 1325

The action inhibited by this section is only such action as may fairly be said to be state action under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Harley v. Oliver, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1976, 539 F.2d 1143. Civil Rights 1325

"State action" is required in order that there be a proper claim under this section relating to civil actions for deprivation of rights, and there must be state action in order that there be a deprivation of rights secured by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Hall v. Garson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1970, 430 F.2d 430. Civil Rights 1325; Constitutional Law 213(2)

Rights of action under this section are limited in their scope to situations where things done have had at least some attribute of state authorization or warrant for having been engaged in. Wallach v. Cannon, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1966, 357 F.2d 557. Civil Rights 1325; Conspiracy 1.1

To make out a claim under § 1983, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the conduct of which he is complaining has been committed under color of state or territorial law and that it operated to deny him a right or rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States; the plaintiff must also establish that it was the acts of the defendant which caused the constitutional deprivation. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1304

To constitute state action for purposes of § 1983, first, the deprivation must be caused by the exercise of some right or privilege created by the State or by a rule of conduct imposed by the state or by a person for whom the State is responsible, and second, the party charged with the deprivation must be a person who may fairly be said to be a state actor; what is fairly attributable is a matter of normative judgment, and the criteria lack rigid simplicity no one fact can function as a necessary condition across the board for finding state action. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1325

In order to determine which state action test should be applied to a given set of facts in a § 1983 action, courts must carefully investigate the circumstances of each case. Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1325

The Massachusetts Civil Rights Act (MCRA) is coextensive with § 1983, except that the Federal statute requires State action, whereas its State counterpart does not, and the derogation of secured rights must occur by threats, intimidation or coercion. Sietins v. Joseph, D.Mass.2003, 238 F.Supp.2d 366. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1719

Traditional definition of acting "under color of state law," for purposes of § 1983, requires that defendant in § 1983 action have exercised power which is possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1324

For state action to be present for purposes of § 1983, deprivation must be caused by exercise of some right or privilege created by state or by rule of conduct imposed by state or by person for whom state is responsible, and party charged with deprivation must be person who may fairly be said to be a state actor. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1325

In cases brought under § 1983, "under color of" state law is treated as equivalent to "state action" requirement of Fourteenth Amendment. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1325

To constitute "state action" for purpose of stating claim under § 1983, deprivation must be caused by exercise of some right or privilege created by state or by person for whom state is responsible, and party charged with deprivation must be person who may fairly be said to be state actor. Palace v. Deaver, E.D.Pa.1993, 838 F.Supp. 1016. Civil Rights 1325

State action is necessary element of § 1983 and Fourteenth Amendment claims. Lawline v. American Bar Ass'n, N.D.Ill.1990, 738 F.Supp. 288, affirmed 956 F.2d 1378, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 551, 510 U.S. 992, 126 L.Ed.2d 452. Civil Rights 1325; Constitutional Law 213(2); Constitutional Law 254(2)

Cause of action pursuant to this section requires state action, which in majority of cases is supplied by fact that named defendants are state officials acting on behalf of state. White v. Beal, E.D.Pa.1978, 447 F.Supp. 788. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Court would treat suit against postal employee, alleging deprivation of Fourth Amendment rights, as Bivens action against federal employee, when originally erroneously brought as § 1983 action available only against state actors. Rueda v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21143084, Unreported. United States 50.20

528. ---- Form of action, state action, color of law generally

State action in any form whether by statute, act of executive department of state or local government, or otherwise will not be permitted to impede, delay or frustrate proceedings to protect rights guaranteed to members of all races under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Bradley v. Milliken, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1970, 433 F.2d 897. Constitutional Law 213(1)

529. ---- Nature of standard, state action, color of law generally

Test for determining whether a given act or actions of an entity constitute state action within meaning of this section is not an inflexible standard. Bach v. Mount Clemens General Hospital, Inc., E.D.Mich.1978, 448 F.Supp. 686.

530. ---- Totality of circumstances, state action, color of law generally

It is "totality of the circumstances" which must be considered in testing for presence of "state action." Barrett v. United Hospital, S.D.N.Y.1974, 376 F.Supp. 791, affirmed 506 F.2d 1395. Civil Rights 1325

531. ---- Federal actors, state action, color of law generally

Where all defendants in federal prisoner's suit were federal employees and his claims arose out of treatment of prisoner in federal prison, there was no "state action" that would support § 1983 claim. Risley v. Hawk,

D.D.C.1996, 918 F.Supp. 18, affirmed 108 F.3d 1396, 323 U.S.App.D.C. 367, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1327

532. ---- Color of law compared, state action, color of law generally

In action brought against state official under 1871 civil rights statute, statutory requirement of action "under color of state law" and the "state action" requirement of Fourteenth Amendment are identical. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., U.S.Va.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 457 U.S. 922, 73 L.Ed.2d 482. Civil Rights 1325

Statutory "under color of law" requirement of Civil Rights Act of 1871 is equivalent, although not identical, to the constitutional doctrine of state action. Cobb v. Georgia Power Co., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1985, 757 F.2d 1248. Civil Rights 1325

Technically, the state action requirement of this section refers not to color of state law requirement but to requirement that the right be secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States; to demonstrate that an action under color of state law, it might be sufficient to show that a private party acted with knowledge of and pursuant to a state statute but to demonstrate that an individual has been deprived of the Federal Constitution right to equal protection or due process, it is necessary to show that state action caused the deprivation. Dieffenbach v. Attorney General of Vermont, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1979, 604 F.2d 187. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1326(4)

Generally, "state action" and "under color of law" are perceived as alternative ways of expressing same legal principle. Greco v. Orange Memorial Hospital Corp., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1975, 513 F.2d 873, rehearing denied 515 F.2d 1183, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 433, 423 U.S. 1000, 46 L.Ed.2d 376. Civil Rights 1325

"State action" requirement of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and the "under color of state law" requirement of this section are substantially the same. Ouzts v. Maryland Nat. Ins. Co., C.A.9 (Nev.) 1974, 505 F.2d 547, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1681, 421 U.S. 949, 44 L.Ed.2d 103.

"Under color of" law provision of this section is congruent to the "state action" concept. Perez v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 499 F.2d 761. Civil Rights 1325

A prerequisite to the vesting of federal jurisdiction for an alleged wrong under this section is a deprivation of a right guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and such deprivation must be "under color of law," that is, there must be state action. Watson v. Kenlick Coal Co., Inc., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1183, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 2639, 422 U.S. 1012, 45 L.Ed.2d 677. Federal Courts 222

Subjecting all behavior that conforms to state law to U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 would emasculate the "state action" concept of this section. Adams v. Southern California First Nat. Bank, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 492 F.2d 324, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 325, 419 U.S. 1006, 42 L.Ed.2d 282. Civil Rights 1325

Any actions found to be "under color of state law" for § 1983 purposes will also satisfy "state action" requirement for Fourteenth Amendment purposes, as terms "state action" and "under color of state law" are functional equivalents. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1325; Constitutional Law 254(2)

Conduct that constitutes "state action" for purposes of Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause also is conduct "under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983 actions. Baltz v. Shelley, N.D.Ill.1987, 661 F.Supp. 169. See, also, Church of Human Potential, Inc. v. Vorsky, D.N.J.1986, 636 F.Supp. 93; Fuller v. Hurley, W.D.Va. 1983, 559 F.Supp. 313. Civil Rights 1325

533. ---- Merger with color of law, state action, color of law generally

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where deprivations of rights under the Fourteenth Amendment are alleged in § 1983 action, Fourteenth Amendment's state-action requirement and § 1983's under-color-of-state-law requirement merge. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, U.S.Pa.1999, 119 S.Ct. 977, 526 U.S. 40, 143 L.Ed.2d 130. Civil Rights 1325; Constitutional Law 254(2)

In § 1983 actions alleging deprivation of due process rights, Fourteenth Amendment's "state action" requirement and "under color of state law" requirement of § 1983 collapse into single inquiry. Landry v. A-Able Bonding, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 75 F.3d 200. Civil Rights 1325

If state official allegedly abuses his or her authority in violation of state law and suit is brought under § 1983, "state action" and "under color of state law" prongs of test for liability collapse into single inquiry. Figueroa v. Fernandez, D.Puerto Rico 1996, 921 F.Supp. 889. Civil Rights 1326(2)

534. ---- Neutrality test, state action, color of law generally

The neutrality test for determining whether there is state action under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 is inapposite where state gives special support to nominally private party or, for other purposes, markedly restricts alternatives to dominion by a private party. Lavoie v. Bigwood, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1972, 457 F.2d 7. Constitutional Law 254(4)

535. ---- Common law codification, state action, color of law generally

Mere codification of common law is not sufficient to constitute significant state involvement for purpose of this section. Shirley v. State Nat. Bank of Connecticut, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1974, 493 F.2d 739, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 329, 419 U.S. 1009, 42 L.Ed.2d 284. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Merely enacting into statutory form what had been the accepted practice for years, and a limited involvement that might be sufficient for racial cases, did not command a finding of "state action" within meaning of this section in an economic due process case. Adams v. Southern California First Nat. Bank, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 492 F.2d 324, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 325, 419 U.S. 1006, 42 L.Ed.2d 282. Civil Rights 1325

More than the statutory ratification of a previously existing common law practice is necessary to provide the factor of "state action" required under this section governing deprivation of civil rights when due process is involved in commercial repossessions. Mayhugh v. Bill Allen Chevrolet, W.D.Mo.1973, 371 F.Supp. 1, affirmed 496 F.2d 16, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 328, 419 U.S. 1006, 42 L.Ed.2d 283. Civil Rights 1325

536. ---- Delegation of authority, state action, color of law generally

Delegation, if any, by State Board of Medicine to private accrediting body for graduate medical training programs was insufficient state action to support hospital's § 1983 due process claim against accrediting body for withdrawal of accreditation for hospital's surgery program, in light of fact that Board remained ultimately responsible for approving such residency programs under Pennsylvania's Medical Practice Act of 1985. McKeesport Hosp. v. Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Educ., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 24 F.3d 519. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Detainee' petition, construed liberally, stated a claim under §§ 1983 against city by alleging that the city's policy-making authority in police matters was delegated to its police chief, that a pattern of widespread abuse existed in the use of force generally, and taser guns in particular, against black citizens, and that police chief's failure to intervene and stop such abuse was an act of omission amounting to an actionable policy of inadequate supervision which was a moving force behind the alleged violation of constitutional rights. Batiste v. City of Beaumont, E.D.Tex.2005, 421 F.Supp.2d 969. Civil Rights 1395(6) malfunctioning septic system, by loaning bucket and hose to town's director of building and code enforcement, watching him perform dye test, observing dye in landowner's basement, and reporting this observation to director; even if code and building enforcement was traditional public function, function was not delegated to neighbors by director's request that they watch for dye in lake, as director retained responsibility for conducting and monitoring test, and determined whether landowner's septic system passed test. Serbalik v. Gray, N.D.N.Y.1998, 27 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1326(9)

City housing authority's contract with private security company did not delegate police power to that company and did not make security guard it employed a state actor for purposes of civil rights claim; there was no evidence that authority employed security company pursuant to its statutory power to establish police force, and primary duty of contract security guards was to control access in and out of authority's building and give people information and assistance. Wade v. Byles, N.D.Ill.1995, 886 F.Supp. 654, affirmed 83 F.3d 902, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 311, 519 U.S. 935, 136 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Combination of hotel's available statutory remedy of initiating criminal process and arrest of plaintiffs for nonpayment of hotel bill with custom of permitting private hotel's attorney to act as state prosecutor constituted delegation of sovereign power and gave rise to state action, within this section. Voytko v. Ramada Inn of Atlantic City, D.C.N.J.1978, 445 F.Supp. 315. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Contractor providing towns with animal control services and contractor's director did not engage in state action, for purposes of §§ 1983, in terminating employment of dog control officer, who was at-will employee of contractor notwithstanding his contention that he was "peace officer" or otherwise a state employee; although state statute authorized municipality to hire dog control officer directly, towns did not do so. Robbins v. Cloutier, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 121 Fed.Appx. 423, 2005 WL 290203, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

537. ---- Violation of constitution and laws, state action, color of law generally

Misuse of state law is not state action for purposes of Fourteenth Amendment. Starnes v. Capital Cities Media, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 39 F.3d 1394. Constitutional Law 254(2)

"State right or privilege" prong of § 1983 state action requirement was satisfied in principal's action against bail bond agency and individual bondsmen, alleging that bondsmen had assaulted principal while arresting him; action alleged constitutional deprivations caused by exercise of privilege created by state, since state law authorized licensed bondsmen to arrest principals. Green v. Abony Bail Bond, M.D.Fla.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 1254. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Private misuse of state procedures or violations of state law does not amount to state action necessary to raise constitutional claim under § 1983. Roemer v. Security Bancshares, Inc., D.Kan.1997, 978 F.Supp. 988. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Actions taken by officer in his or her official capacity are deemed to have occurred "under color of law" even if they violate state law and are not in furtherance of state policy. Irvin v. Borough of Darby, E.D.Pa.1996, 937 F.Supp. 446. Civil Rights 1326(2)

This section is concerned with violation of only state law, and mere state action does not satisfy requirements of this section; and it is only when violation of state law results in infringement of federally protected right that cause of action can be maintained under this section. Stern v. New Haven Community Schools, E.D.Mich.1981, 529 F.Supp. 31. Civil Rights 1027

The "state action" required by this section, must rise to the level of a violation of specific constitutional guarantees. Loewen v. Turnipseed, N.D.Miss.1980, 488 F.Supp. 1138. Civil Rights 1325

538. ---- Inaction by state, state action, color of law generally

Proposed sale by warehouseman of goods in storage was not properly attributable to the State, for purposes of establishing 'state action' under Fourteenth Amendment, on asserted ground that state had authorized and encouraged action in enacting provision of Uniform Commercial Code permitting such action, since a State's mere acquiescence in a private action does not convert that action into that of the state. Flagg Bros., Inc. v. Brooks, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1729, 436 U.S. 149, 56 L.Ed.2d 185. Constitutional Law 254(5); Warehousemen 33

Under some circumstances, state actor's failure to intervene renders him or her culpable under § 1983. Yang v. Hardin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 37 F.3d 282. Civil Rights 1039

Unexercised authority under state law is not action "under color of state law" for purpose of this section. Brown v. Chaffee, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1979, 612 F.2d 497. Civil Rights 1324

State's passive acquiescence in private banks' setting off against funds of depositors the indebtedness incurred on bank credit cards did not render the setoff action under color of state law within this section. Fletcher v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Nat. Bank, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1974, 496 F.2d 927, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 320, 419 U.S. 1001, 42 L.Ed.2d 277. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Action or failure to act by member of municipal board in his or her official capacity is "state action," within meaning of § 1983. Gibbs-Alfano v. Ossining Boat & Canoe Club, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2000, 86 F.Supp.2d 382. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Actions of county and its employees, the sheriff's department, in failing to remove automobiles from side of road which were blocking civil rights plaintiff's move of his house did not rise to the level of state action, for purposes of civil rights statute; real cause of halt in movement of the house and in sheriff's subsequent inaction was a dispute over width of plaintiff's parkway, and plaintiff never alleged that county or sheriff acted in a racially biased, arbitrary or capricious manner. Hibbing v. Sofarelli, M.D.Fla.1990, 733 F.Supp. 1470, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 931 F.2d 718. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Mere inaction or acquiescence by government in private wrongful conduct will not convert private action into government action. Sauls v. Bristol-Myers Co., S.D.N.Y.1978, 462 F.Supp. 887. Civil Rights 1325

539. ---- Joint participation, state action, color of law generally

Operators of sports arena, by seeking police help in dealing with ticket scalpers, did not engage in any joint action with municipal police, precluding § 1983 claim against operators brought by individual allegedly falsely arrested under scalping ordinance. Arlotta v. Bradley Center, C.A.7 (Wis.) 2003, 349 F.3d 517. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Conduct of radio personality and owners of radio and television stations in organizing, sponsoring, and broadcasting gubernatorial debate was not transformed into "state action," for purposes of excluded candidate's § 1983 claims, as result of personality's acceptance of state university's offer to hold debate at university and assistance provided by university and its president in organizing and promoting debate; state university and president did not coerce or control conduct of personality and owners, nor did assistance provided amount to delegation of state authority. DeBauche v. Trani, C.A.4 (Va.) 1999, 191 F.3d 499, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1451, 529 U.S. 1033, 146 L.Ed.2d 337. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Store was not liable for its private security guards' conduct in detaining store customer they suspected of shoplifting, in customer's §§ 1983 action, alleging unlawful arrest and malicious prosecution; neither store or security guards acted in concert with state actor, and guards merely called police to have suspected shoplifter arrested. Prowisor v. Bon-Ton, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 165. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Facts that (1) Board of Nursing was state agency, (2) notice of employee's suspension was made pursuant to state law, (3) hospital and its nurses were licensed by state, and (4) hospital's receipt of government funds required it to treat uninsured patients did not establish state action under "nexus or joint action" test for purposes of nursing shift supervisor's §§ 1983 claim against hospital alleging it suspended her in limitation of her speech rights for making statements that were critical of United States President and of hospital's handling of young patient without health insurance. Connolly v. H.D. Goodall Hosp., Inc., D.Me.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 84, affirmed 427 F.3d 127, on remand 2006 WL 270222. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private family intervention crisis service was "state actor," subject to suit under §§ 1983 for violation of federally protected rights of parent whose child was seized, by virtue of acting in concert with county youth services department in implementing restrictions on parent's custody of child. Bowser v. Blair County Children and Youth Services, W.D.Pa.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 788. Civil Rights 1326(5)

To act "under color of" state law for § 1983 purposes does not necessarily require that the defendant be an officer of the state; rather, it is enough that the defendant is a willful participant in joint action with the state or its agents. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Parents stated claim that foster parent was state actor, amenable to suit under § 1983 for alleged abuse of their child, under entwinement doctrine, when they alleged that state agents knew of abuse and collaborated with foster parent to cover up her activities. Howard v. Malac, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 132. Civil Rights 1326(5)

In determination of whether joint participation state action has occurred for purposes of § 1983 action, the appropriate inquiry is whether plaintiff's allegations raise any claim that state, through its agents or laws, has established formal procedure or working relationship that drapes private actors with power of state. Spencer v. Steinman, E.D.Pa.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1011. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Nonprofit corporation formed to run county fair satisfied control element of state action required for civil rights liability, though corporate board was elected by its members, where its statutory characterization was as agent of county, county had to approve all contracts entered into by corporation, and its budget had to be approved by both county board and State Department of Agriculture. Clark v. County of Placer, E.D.Cal.1996, 923 F.Supp. 1278. Civil Rights 1326(1)

540. ---- State compulsion, state action, color of law generally

State statutory requirement that hospitals report nursing suspensions to Board of Nursing was insufficient "state compulsion" for finding of state action needed for nursing shift supervisor to state §§ 1983 claim in relation to hospital's suspension of her for statements she made in media that were critical of United States President and of hospital's handling of young patient without health insurance. Connolly v. H.D. Goodall Hosp., Inc., D.Me.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 84, affirmed 427 F.3d 127, on remand 2006 WL 270222. Civil Rights 1326(11)

University, in terminating public safety officers, was not coerced or significantly encouraged to act by city, and thus university was not "state actor" under state compulsion test, as required for officers to maintain § 1983 claim against university; although city retained some control over university police hiring activities, it had no rule or regulation that required university to suspend or terminate officers, and city did not participate in investigation or decision-making process concerning officers at issue. Allocco v. City of Coral Gables, S.D.Fla.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 1317, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 380, 2003 WL 22768944. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Medical center employee who served as preceptor to state university student during nursing practicum did not qualify as state actor under state compulsion test for determining whether private party acted under color of state law for § 1983 purposes, given absence of evidence suggesting that anyone associated with university or its nursing college exercised any coercive power over employee, so as to render her actions as preceptor fairly attributable to the state. Siskaninetz v. Wright State University, S.D.Ohio 2001, 175 F.Supp.2d 1018. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Employer's alleged refusal to pay employee who did not have social security number was not result of state compulsion, such that refusal would qualify under state compulsion test as state action for purposes of employee's § 1983 claim that employer violated his constitutional rights to exercise his religious beliefs and to be free of involuntary servitude. Sanders v. Prentice-Hall Corp. System, Inc., W.D.Tenn.1997, 969 F.Supp. 481, affirmed 178 F.3d 1296. Civil Rights 1326(11)

541. ---- Nexus test, state action, color of law generally

Fact that city required festival organizer to coordinate with city agencies regarding regulation of alcoholic beverages, advertising, traffic, and security at festival held in city park did not establish close nexus between city and organizer, so as to make organizer a state actor that could be held liable for violating constitutional rights of street preacher ejected from area outside festival entrance; by conditioning lease, park use agreement, and city council resolution on organizer's compliance with city regulations and authorities, city and organizer clearly established separate spheres of responsibility for festival period. Lansing v. City of Memphis, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 202 F.3d 821. Constitutional Law 82(5)

Mere fact that hospital served public and treated patients pursuant to federal and state law did not give rise to "public function" for purposes of suspended employee's attempt to establish state action so she could bring §§ 1983 claim against hospital. Connolly v. H.D. Goodall Hosp., Inc., D.Me.2005, 353 F.Supp.2d 84, affirmed 427 F.3d 127, on remand 2006 WL 270222. Civil Rights 1326(11)

The traditional definition of action under color of state law requires that one liable under § 1983 have exercised power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Mosley v. Yaletsko, E.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 608. Civil Rights 1324

City did not so far insinuate itself into position of interdependence with university that it was joint participant in university's termination of public safety officers, and thus university was not "state actor" under nexus/joint action test, as required for officers to maintain § 1983 claim against university; city and university were distinct and separate legal entities, university had authority to hire and fire its own employees, university maintained and repaired its own facilities, and university made its own personnel rules, regulations, and procedures. Allocco v. City of Coral Gables, S.D.Fla.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 1317, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 380, 2003 WL 22768944. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Motion picture production company's lease of public facilities from state did not qualify under symbiotic relationship or nexus test as state action for purposes of motion picture extra's § 1983 claim that company violated his constitutional rights to exercise his religious beliefs and to be free of involuntary servitude by refusing to pay him because he did not have social security number. Sanders v. Prentice-Hall Corp. System, Inc., W.D.Tenn.1997, 969 F.Supp. 481, affirmed 178 F.3d 1296. Civil Rights 1326(11)

University was not liable to terminated professor under § 1983, absent facts establishing nexus between termination and any state action. Commodari v. Long Island University, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 62 Fed.Appx. 28, 2003 WL 1785893, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(11)

542. Judicial action, color of law generally--Generally

Losing in state court is not state action for purpose of civil rights jurisdiction; hence, fact that state judge who rendered challenged injunction and sheriff who would enforce it were named as defendants in civil rights suit did not mean that the requisite state action jurisdictional requirement was met, especially absent allegations that the judge did anything but render an arguably incorrect decision or that the sheriff did anything at all. Gresham Park Community Organization v. Howell, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 652 F.2d 1227. Federal Courts 244

Whatever other judicial action may constitute "state action," for purposes of alleging constitutional deprivation in claim for relief under this section, failure of procedural due process does. Dahl v. Akin, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 630 F.2d 277, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1977, 451 U.S. 908, 68 L.Ed.2d 296. Civil Rights 1325

A state's judicial proceedings can be a form of actionable "state action" for purposes of this section. Watson v. Kenlick Coal Co., Inc., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1183, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 2639, 422 U.S. 1012, 45 L.Ed.2d 677. Civil Rights 1325

When private actor conspires with state judge to deprive plaintiff of his or her constitutional rights, the state action required in order for plaintiff to maintain § 1983 action against private actor is present even if alleged conspirator is state judge who is himself or herself immune from suit for damages under § 1983. Spencer v. Steinman, E.D.Pa.1997, 968 F.Supp. 1011. Civil Rights 1326(5)

State action to which this section is applicable encompasses state judicial action, and thus fact that a state trial court has ruled on federal constitutional grounds in issue does not mean that a federal court is precluded from reconsidering those issues in an action brought to enjoin a pending state proceeding because of alleged violations of a plaintiff's constitutional rights of substantive and procedural due process. Brown v. Jones, N.D.Tex.1979, 473 F.Supp. 439. Federal Courts 42

"State action" under this section includes judicial action. Lamb Enterprises, Inc. v. Kiroff, N.D.Ohio 1975, 399 F.Supp. 409, reversed on other grounds 549 F.2d 1052, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 2926, 431 U.S. 968, 53 L.Ed.2d 1064.

543. ---- Enforcement of judicial decisions, judicial action, color of law generally

Even assuming that plaintiff's former wife's custody of their children derived from orders or decrees of one or more Maryland state courts, former wife's actions, whether pursuant to those orders or decrees or otherwise, did not constitute "state action" for purposes of this section. Nouse v. Nouse, D.C.Md.1978, 450 F.Supp. 97. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Action of state and county officers with respect to enforcement of state Supreme Court decision in condemnation case would be under color of state law, although individual defendants, generally, played no active part in state court proceedings. Sotomura v. Hawaii County, D.C.Hawai'i 1975, 402 F.Supp. 95. Civil Rights 1326(2)

544. ---- Filing of pleadings, judicial action, color of law generally

Village police officers did not act under "color of state law" in allegedly persuading attorney to file defamatory citizen's complaint with city about city police officer's conduct in alleged retaliation for city police officer's filing of federal civil rights complaint against them, as required to show civil rights conspiracy; filing of citizen's complaint did not require power possessed only by virtue of state law, and no showing was made as to content of complaint or nature of any communications between officers and attorney. Thurman v. Village of Homewood, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 446 F.3d 682. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Judicial enforcement of Illinois privilege against defamation suit for relevant statements made in judicial proceeding did not constitute state action for purposes of § 1983 action brought against attorney by former judge due to publication of allegedly defamatory statements made by attorney in pleadings on former judge's motion to disqualify attorney from representing former judge's wife in divorce case; for state action, public and private actors had to share common and unconstitutional goal. Starnes v. Capital Cities Media, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1994, 39 F.3d 1394. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Defendant, by filing private criminal complaint pursuant to Pennsylvania Rule of Criminal Procedure, merely called attention of attorney for Commonwealth to alleged violation of the law, so that defendant's filing of complaint did not constitute "state action" as required for action under this section. Weisman v. Sherry, M.D.Pa.1981, 514 F.Supp. 728. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Generally, the filing of a suit between private parties in state court is not state action. Fallis v. Dunbar, N.D.Ohio 1974, 386 F.Supp. 1117, affirmed 532 F.2d 1061. Civil Rights 1326(9)

545. ---- Forum provided by state, judicial action, color of law generally

The fact that the state of Pennsylvania provided a forum for suit to enjoin author from distributing or permitting others to distribute general history allegedly containing false and defamatory statements about reader's father, a Pennsylvania industrial magnate, was not such "state action" as would entitle the author to federal injunctive relief under this section. Stevens v. Frick, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1967, 372 F.2d 378, certiorari denied 87 S.Ct. 2034, 387 U.S. 920, 18 L.Ed.2d 973.

That the state provided the court in which defendant filed an action against plaintiff that resulted in a dismissal was not such as to establish state action necessary for filing of an action for alleged deprivation of civil rights under color of state law. Weisser v. Medical Care Systems, Inc., E.D.Pa.1977, 432 F.Supp. 1292. Civil Rights 1326(9)

State's providing machinery and a forum for hearing of private disputes does not constitute required state action for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 with respect to claim under this section. Mullarkey v. Borglum, S.D.N.Y.1970, 323 F.Supp. 1218. Civil Rights 1326(9)

546. ---- Commitment orders or proceedings, judicial action, color of law generally

"Procedure" constitutes inherently judicial responsibility, and complaint that plaintiff's daughter and her husband had secured plaintiff's confinement in mental hospital through court proceedings by which plaintiff was deprived of due process was sufficient to allege state deprivation of liberty and property without due process of law, for purposes of stating claim for relief under this section, though it yet remained to be determined whether constitutional injury had been caused by persons acting "under color of" state law. Dahl v. Akin, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1980, 630 F.2d 277, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1977, 451 U.S. 908, 68 L.Ed.2d 296. Civil Rights 1395(1)

547. ---- Custody orders or proceedings, judicial action, color of law generally

Court order placing custody of child with State Department of Public Welfare for purpose of providing chemotherapy treatment to child and providing that either child's privately retained physician or any board-certified hematologist of parents' choosing was to supervise chemotheraphy treatment did not clothe child's privately retained physician with the authority of state law necessary to transform him into state agent so as to authorize a civil rights action for damages against physician charging violation of parents' alleged constitutional right to determine child's medical treatment arising out of state custody decree. Green v. Truman, D.C.Mass.1978, 459 F.Supp. 342. Civil Rights 1326(9)

548. ---- Eviction of tenants, judicial action, color of law generally

The requisite "state action" to render the retaliatory eviction of tenant actionable under this section was present in that landlords were utilizing the state court to evacuate the tenant from a federally subsidized housing development built and operated pursuant to federal housing laws. Walton v. Darby Town Houses, Inc., E.D.Pa.1975, 395 F.Supp. 553. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Action of public housing authorities in adjudging tenants undesirable tenants and in ordering their eviction because of crimes committed by children of tenants no longer living with them in project was "state action" within meaning of this section. Tyson v. New York City Housing Authority, S.D.N.Y.1974, 369 F.Supp. 513. Civil Rights 1326(1)

549. ---- Guardianship orders or proceedings, judicial action, color of law generally

Mere existence of state guardianship order for church member, though erroneously issued, did not transform conduct of "deprogrammer" into "state action" under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Colombrito v. Kelly, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1985, 764 F.2d 122. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Use of Oklahoma state court to obtain appointment of temporary guardian over adult plaintiff for purpose of religious deprogramming was insufficient to constitute state action for purpose of claim against religious deprogrammer under this section as court allowed itself to be used without fully realizing the results which would follow and it could not be said that the issuing judge, who was not a defendant, was a coconspirator. Taylor v. Gilmartin, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1982, 686 F.2d 1346, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 788, 459 U.S. 1147, 74 L.Ed.2d 994, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 3570, 463 U.S. 1229, 77 L.Ed.2d 1411, rehearing denied 104 S.Ct. 37, 463 U.S. 1249, 77 L.Ed.2d 1456. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Prison employees' treatment of black female captain as "snitch" did not rise to level of pervasiveness sufficient to sustain hostile work environment claim under Title VII, where treatment lasted only three or four months, and there was no allegation that adverse treatment was result of her race or gender. Hayes v. Kerik, E.D.N.Y.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 193. Civil Rights 1185

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether white employee of city parks department was subjected to racially hostile environment, in light of city's concession that working environment was "racially charged," alleged racial slurs against employee, and evidence that black workers felt pressured not to socialize or work with employee, precluding summary judgment in Title VII action. Brantley v. City of Macon, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1314. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

550. ---- Temporary restraining orders, judicial action, color of law generally

Even if state court order temporarily restraining defaulting debtor from disposing of any property he then owned, in addition to the secured property, violated debtor's right to due process, private creditor's use of state forum to obtain such order did not constitute state action for purpose of this section. Torres v. First State Bank of Sierra County, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1978, 588 F.2d 1322. Civil Rights 1326(9)

551. ---- Miscellaneous judicial actions, color of law generally

State court decision upholding validity of lease provision that no assignment would be effective without lessor's prior consent, with provision construed to entitle lessor to refuse its consent for any reason except those prohibited by this section, did not constitute requisite state action to support claim against lessor, which allegedly refused consent solely because assignee was a female; even if lessor's refusal was motivated by a constitutionally impermissible purpose, any deprivation suffered as consequence was completed prior to state court proceedings and state court action did not effectuate a discriminatory purpose which could not have been secured but for court action. Girard v. 94th St. & Fifth Ave. Corp., S.D.N.Y.1975, 396 F.Supp. 450, affirmed 530 F.2d 66, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 2173, 425 U.S. 974, 48 L.Ed.2d 798. Civil Rights 1326(9)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

552. Administrative action, color of law generally

Michigan Commissioner of Insurance's action in ordering private nonprofit health care corporation to cease and desist its marketing practices with respect to its health care benefits constituted "state action," thus, district court had subject matter jurisdiction over civil rights claims. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Michigan v. Baerwaldt, W.D.Mich.1984, 593 F.Supp. 39. Civil Rights 1326(2)

553. Group action, color of law generally

Section 1983 looks to personal action in deprivation of constitutional rights, rather than damage alleged by a chain of various responsibility; furthermore, this personal action must be fairly attributable to the state, so that the "under color of state law" requirement of § 1983 parallels the state action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment. Sullivan v. State of N.J., Div. of Gaming Enforcement, D.C.N.J.1985, 602 F.Supp. 1216, affirmed 853 F.2d 921. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1335

554. Capacity, color of law generally

District Court's disregard of jury finding that municipality had no policies that allowed or encouraged adverse employment decisions at issue in municipal employee's civil rights action did not unfairly prejudice municipality, where jury also found that mayor's unlawful actions were under color of authority of the state, and inconsistency resulted from fact that jury was unaware that, under Puerto Rico law, mayor's actions were ipso facto "policy" of municipality. Rivera-Torres v. Ortiz Velez, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2003, 341 F.3d 86, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1875, 541 U.S. 972, 158 L.Ed.2d 466, rehearing denied 124 S.Ct. 2433, 541 U.S. 1083, 158 L.Ed.2d 1001, miscellaneous rulings 125 S.Ct. 242, 543 U.S. 805, 160 L.Ed.2d 7. Federal Courts 913

Plaintiff in civil rights suit could not maintain official capacity claims against county employees following the court's dismissal of plaintiff's claims against the county due to plaintiff's failure to establish the existence of a municipal custom or policy. Allen v. Dubois, D.Me.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 49. Civil Rights 1360

In making legal determination on issue of whether officer had acted in his official capacity during incident in which officer's friend allegedly assaulted restaurant patron, so as to determine whether officer acted under color of state law under § 1983, officer's stated intent was factor to consider but was not sole determinant; decision required evaluation of the totality of circumstances based on officer's objective, visible conduct. Neuens v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 894. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Individuals sued in their personal capacities under §§ 1983 or 1985 are not immune from suit in federal court even if performing acts within their authority and necessary to fulfilling governmental responsibilities. Lewis v. Board of Educ. of Talbot County, D.Md.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 608. Federal Courts 269

Condemnation notices and citations issued by borough's fire marshal and assistant building inspector were issued "under color of state law," as required to establish § 1983 claim alleging that such notices and citations were in retaliation for protected activity; fire marshal and inspector were acting in their official capacity when inspecting the properties, observing the alleged violations and writing the citations. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Actions by an official in his/her official capacity are "under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983 even if they are not in furtherance of state policy and even if they violate state law. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1326(2)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Where private individual is a defendant in § 1983 action, there must be showing that private party and the state actor jointly deprived plaintiff of her civil rights. Alexis v. McDonald's Restaurants of Massachusetts, Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1995, 67 F.3d 341, on remand 1996 WL 463675. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Merchant, as private actor, did not act under color of state law by making request to police officer to detain customer on suspicion of shoplifting, for purpose of customer's claim under §§ 1983, since there was no evidence that merchant had understanding that police would detain, arrest, or prosecute every person that merchant identified as suspected shoplifter. Hester v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., D.Kan.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1252, withdrawn from bound volume, vacated 356 F.Supp.2d 1195. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Under Section 1983, private parties may be liable for violations of constitutional rights while acting under color of state law. Lightfoot v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2004, 339 F.Supp.2d 78, clarified on denial of reconsideration 355 F.Supp.2d 414, stay denied 2006 WL 175222, stay granted 2006 WL 573869, reversed and remanded 448 F.3d 392. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Former employee was precluded from bringing § 1983 action against former employer related to his termination, where employer was not a state actor. Soto v. Island Finance, Inc., D.Puerto Rico 2004, 338 F.Supp.2d 299, affirmed 418 F.3d 114. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Company was not state actor, and thus was not subject to liability under § 1983 for personal injuries allegedly sustained by truck driver while unloading cargo for company, absent allegation that company acted under color of state law. Poucher v. Intercounty Appliance Corp., E.D.N.Y.2004, 336 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Township manager did not act "under color of state law" in connection with his dispute with neighbor, and thus neighbor could not state claim under § 1983, even though manager tried to curry favor with judge in criminal prosecution of neighbor by emphasizing his position as public employee, where manager explicitly wrote victim impact statement as private citizen. Nadig v. Nagel, E.D.Pa.2003, 272 F.Supp.2d 509. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Providing false information to police officer is not, by itself, sufficient to state claim against private party under § 1983. Boykin v. Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.1995, 893 F.Supp. 409, affirmed 91 F.3d 122, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 739, 519 U.S. 1078, 136 L.Ed.2d 678. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private individual, who questioned former director of dental services of state psychiatric facility in connection with workers' compensation investigation, one year after director of dental services' resignation could not be sued under § 1983, as none of his actions were under color of state law; there was no factual basis provided in complaint to support conclusory allegation that private individual was sent by employees of State Department of Mental Hygiene to harass former director of dental services. Koch v. Mirza, W.D.N.Y.1994, 869 F.Supp. 1031. Civil Rights 1396

This section is based solely on power given to Congress in U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and does not touch purely private action. Boyd v. Shawnee Mission Public Schools, Unified School Dist. No. 512, Johnson County, D.C.Kan.1981, 522 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1005; Civil Rights 1325

This section does not reach purely private conduct. Adkins v. Adkins, S.D.W.Va.1978, 459 F.Supp. 406.

This section providing civil remedy for deprivation of constitutional and civil rights where deprivation is alleged to have occurred under color of state law does not protect individuals against individual invasion of constitutional rights. Ehn v. Price, N.D.Ill.1974, 372 F.Supp. 151. Civil Rights 1325

Private action cannot form the basis for relief under this section. Edwards v. Philadelphia Elec. Co., E.D.Pa.1974, 371 F.Supp. 1313, affirmed 510 F.2d 969. Civil Rights 1325

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

This section may not be circumvented by ruse of denominating private that which is truly public. Sims v. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, D.C.Mass.1972, 343 F.Supp. 112. Civil Rights 1326(4)

This section does not extend to all controversies between individual citizens, but only to deprivations of constitutional rights arising from the actions of persons acting under color of state law. Palermo v. Rockefeller, S.D.N.Y.1971, 323 F.Supp. 478. See, also, Dahl v. Akin, C.A.5(Tex.)1980, 630 F.2d 277, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 1977, 451 U.S. 908, 68 L.Ed.2d 296. Civil Rights 1324

This section is applicable only where deprivation is accomplished under color of law and does not protect one from invasion of his private rights by individual action. Schetter v. Heim, E.D.Wis.1969, 300 F.Supp. 1070. Civil Rights 1325

Private actors cannot be sued under § 1983 or a Bivens theory. Sato v. Plunkett, N.D.Ill.1994, 154 F.R.D. 189. Action 2; Civil Rights 1326(4)

There was no evidence that minor had a special relationship with state, as required to support minor's § 1983 claim against New York State Canal Corporation and New York State Thruway Authority alleging defendants violated her rights by allowing her to work at lock and by allowing her to be sexually assaulted by employee; employee was not acting under color of state law. Rose v. Zillioux, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 84 Fed.Appx. 107, 2003 WL 22849850, Unreported. Civil Rights 1039; Civil Rights 1326(2)

556. ---- Discrimination, private action, color of law generally

This section does not provide remedy for private acts of racial discrimination. Gonzalez v. Southern Methodist University, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 536 F.2d 1071, rehearing denied 543 F.2d 756, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1688, 430 U.S. 987, 52 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1325

Civil rights statute, § 1983, was inapplicable to employment discrimination suit against a private employer. Harris v. Home Sav. Ass'n, W.D.Mo.1989, 730 F.Supp. 298. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Purely private action, whether discriminatory or not, is not prohibited by this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law. Bailey v. Boilermakers Local 667 of Intern. Broth. of Boilermakers, N.D.W.Va.1979, 480 F.Supp. 274. Civil Rights 1325

Under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, full range of discriminatory conduct is proscribed if, and only if, that action is taken by a party acting under color of state law; in other words, private discrimination is not actionable under this section and U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Kennedy Park Homes Ass'n v. City of Lackawanna, W.D.N.Y.1970, 318 F.Supp. 669, affirmed 436 F.2d 108, certiorari denied 91 S.Ct. 1256, 401 U.S. 1010, 28 L.Ed.2d 546. Civil Rights 1326(4); Constitutional Law 213(4)

Private discrimination is not inequality before the law unless there is some manipulation of the law or its agencies to give sanction or sanctuary for doing so, and accordingly, plaintiff who was allegedly wrongfully arrested on shoplifting charge was not denied equal protection because her treatment by store manager, store detective, and others was not the treatment that would have been or should have been accorded a person in similar circumstances. Weyandt v. Mason's Stores, Inc., W.D.Pa.1968, 279 F.Supp. 283. Constitutional Law 250.2(1)

557. Statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage generally, color of law generally

Plaintiff suing under statute providing civil action for deprivation of rights must prove that defendant deprived him of right secured by Constitution and laws of United States and that defendant deprived him of this constitutional right under color of a statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of a state or territory; second element requires that plaintiff show that defendant acted under color of state law. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1304

Before recovery can be allowed in civil action for deprivation of rights, plaintiff must prove that defendant has deprived him of right secured by Constitution or laws of United States under color of statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage of any state or territory; thus plaintiff must show that defendant acted under color of law. Davis v. Paul, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 505 F.2d 1180, certiorari granted 95 S.Ct. 1556, 421 U.S. 909, 43 L.Ed.2d 773, reversed on other grounds 96 S.Ct. 1155, 424 U.S. 693, 47 L.Ed.2d 405, rehearing denied 96 S.Ct. 2194, 425 U.S. 985, 48 L.Ed.2d 811. Civil Rights 1401

One may seek redress, pursuant to this section, for the deprivation of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States only when such deprivation occurs under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any state or territory. Penthouse Intern. LTD. v. Putka, N.D.Ohio 1977, 436 F.Supp. 1220. Civil Rights 1324

558. Statutes, color of law generally--Generally

State officials acting pursuant to a state statute are acting "under color of state" for purposes of a federal civil rights provision regardless of whether state law gave them any discretion in carrying out their duties. Jackson v. Galan, C.A.5 (La.) 1989, 868 F.2d 165, rehearing granted. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Unless state statute compels private party to act in a certain way, that party's action will not constitute "state action" for purposes of invoking subject-matter jurisdiction of this section. Waters v. St. Francis Hospital, Inc., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 618 F.2d 1105. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Individual's conduct is engaged in under color of state law if clothed with authority of state and purporting to act thereunder, whether or not conduct complained of was authorized or, indeed, even if it was proscribed by state law. Roberts v. Acres, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1974, 495 F.2d 57. Civil Rights 1326(4)

A person acts "under color of state law," within meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, when exercising power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Church of Human Potential, Inc. v. Vorsky, D.N.J.1986, 636 F.Supp. 93. Civil Rights 1324

If a policy of state neutrality is expressed in statutory form, such does not necessarily tint the discriminatory acts of discriminating persons with "color" of state law. Larsen v. Kirkham, D.C.Utah 1980, 499 F.Supp. 960, affirmed, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 157, 464 U.S. 849, 78 L.Ed.2d 144. Civil Rights 1324

While mere existence of statute acknowledging legality of private conduct is not sufficient to bring conduct "under color of state law," statute authorizing conduct which would otherwise be impermissible provides for "state action." Tedeschi v. Blackwood, D.C.Conn.1976, 410 F.Supp. 34. Civil Rights 1325

559. ---- Legislative resolution, statutes, color of law generally

Resolution of state senate creating committee for purpose of investigating "riotous and unlawful activities" on state university campus was a "statute" for purposes of this section subjecting every person who, under color of statute, subjects any citizen to deprivation of rights, and in any event, action against investigating committee was maintainable on theory that committee acted under implied power or "usage" by which legislature was authorized to conduct investigations. Goldman v. Olson, W.D.Wis.1968, 286 F.Supp. 35. Civil Rights 1326(6)

560. ---- Commitment, statutes, color of law generally

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Husband's initiation of and participation in hospitalization and guardianship process that led to wife's involuntary commitment to mental institution was not sufficient to render him state actor for purposes of wife's civil rights claim; although husband had to comply with requirements of state statutes, private commitment remained private action, and there was no indication that state compelled or encouraged commitment. Harvey v. Harvey, M.D.Ga.1990, 749 F.Supp. 1118, affirmed 949 F.2d 1127. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Psychiatrist's issuance of a certificate which resulted in plaintiff's continued involuntary confinement at hospital was not sufficient to constitute state action for purposes of this section. Landry v. Odom, E.D.La.1983, 559 F.Supp. 514. Civil Rights 1326(1)

In view of RSA N.H. 135-B:19, 135-B:20 delegating to private physicians the right to commit a person whom they determine creates a potentially serious likelihood of danger to himself or others as a result of mental illness clothes the physician with state authority so substantial in nature as to render his actions in issuing an emergency diagnostic detention certificate "state action" for purposes of this section. Kay v. Benson, D.C.N.H.1979, 472 F.Supp. 850. Civil Rights 1326(4)

561. ---- Custody, statutes, color of law generally

Invocation of state statute, which required that any time custody of illegitimate child is relinquished by mother, father's parental rights will be automatically cut off unless notice of paternity previously has been filed by biological father, by private individual such as adoption agency or attorney constitutes state action for purposes of § 1983 civil rights action brought by biological father for purposes of regaining custody of infant. Swayne v. L.D.S. Social Services, D.Utah 1987, 670 F.Supp. 1537. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

562. ---- Hospital privileges, grant or revocation of, statutes, color of law generally

Private hospital's revocation of physician's hospital privileges did not involve "state action" necessary to state § 1983 claim, though state legislation authorized revocation and made available optional review of procedural fairness in state court system. Wong v. Stripling, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1989, 881 F.2d 200. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Physician complaining of revocation of staff privileges at hospital did not show state action by showing that hospital was licensed and regulated by state and that it received funds from medicaid and medicare. Sarin v. Samaritan Health Center, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1987, 813 F.2d 755. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Texas Medical Practices Act under which members of medical peer review committee were granted immunity from civil liability as result of report or investigation on physician's incompetency did not make actions of hospitals in suspending physician's staff privileges at hospitals, state action for purposes of statute creating federal cause of action for denial of civil rights under color of state law. Goss v. Memorial Hosp. System, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 789 F.2d 353. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Hospital's termination of physician's professional privileges did not involve state action for purposes of asserting claim under statute governing deprivation of civil rights, where state was involved only to point of encouraging hospital to comply with its regulations controlling abuses in medicare and medicaid programs, and hospital's fear that private organization, acting under contract with United States to perform functions of professional standards review organization, could terminate hospital's medicare and medicaid payments because of inefficient health care was a too slim basis to predicate finding of state action. Carter v. Norfolk Community Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., C.A.4 (Va.) 1985, 761 F.2d 970. Civil Rights 1326(1); Civil Rights 1326(7)

For purposes of physician's civil rights suit challenging the probationary sanctions imposed by hospital, and the related actions by hospital and its employees, the hospital's receipt of governmental funds, the extensive governmental regulation, and localized geographic monopoly enjoyed by the hospital did not establish state action required for a suit under this section, since physician made no allegation that those facts involved the state in any significant manner in the specific conduct of which he complained. Loh-Seng Yo v. Cibola General Hosp., C.A.10 (N.M.) 1983, 706 F.2d 306. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Because F.S.A. § 395.065 authorizing hospitals to revoke staff privileges for good cause merely codified right which hospital had at common law, private hospital's placing conditions on surgeon's staff privileges did not constitute "state action" for purpose of invoking this section. Waters v. St. Francis Hospital, Inc., C.A.5 (Fla.) 1980, 618 F.2d 1105. Civil Rights 1326(7)

563. ---- Inspections, statutes, color of law generally

Town building inspector, who was acting under authority of state law when he required a proposed outpatient abortion facility to obtain a special use permit to operate a hospital, was liable for monetary damages caused by his actions. P.L.S. Partners, Women's Medical Center of Rhode Island, Inc. v. City of Cranston, D.R.I.1988, 696 F.Supp. 788. Civil Rights 1326(2); Civil Rights 1357

564. ---- Liens, statutes, color of law generally

Commercial relocator's retention of a trespassing vehicle, removed from private property pursuant to request from or contract with private landowner, until relocator received money payment from vehicle's owner, as permitted by Illinois S.H.A. ch. 95 1/2 , ¶ 18a-501, did not constitute an act by state actors properly attributable to the state of Illinois upon which action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 could be maintained. Hinman v. Lincoln Towing Service, Inc., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1985, 771 F.2d 189. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Retention of automobiles by garagemen pursuant to Pennsylvania's common law garageman's lien did not constitute action under color of state law for purposes of this section and did not constitute state action for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1. (Per Garth, Circuit Judge, with three Judges concurring and three Judges concurring specially). Parks v. "Mr. Ford", C.A.3 (Pa.) 1977, 556 F.2d 132. Civil Rights 1326(9); Constitutional Law 254(5)

Foreclosure sale to satisfy warehouseman's lien was conducted "under color of state law" within meaning of this section where it took place by virtue of provisions of NDCC 41-07-16 which did not require warehouseman to prove either his lien or amount due under it. Cox Bakeries of North Dakota, Inc. v. Timm Moving & Storage, Inc., C.A.8 (N.D.) 1977, 554 F.2d 356. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Warehouseman's proposed sale of stored goods pursuant to West's Ann.Com.Code § 7210 for failure to pay storage costs did not constitute "state action," inasmuch as enactment of West's Ann.Com.Code § 7210 together with regulation of private activity thereunder did not significantly involve state in private warehouseman's lien enforcement; thus owner of storage goods suing for injunctive and declaratory relief from proposed extrajudicial sale did not state claim for deprivation of any rights under color of state law. Melara v. Kennedy, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1976, 541 F.2d 802. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1396

565. ---- Picketing, statutes, color of law generally

Growers, as private litigants, "acted under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983 liability when they sought temporary restraining order under Texas mass picketing statutes, where action arose out of deep seated community hostility, attorneys hired to represent growers were also criminal district attorneys, and attorneys sought advice from Attorney General on unconstitutionality of mass picketing statutes, which advice could only be solicited under Texas Law by public officials in their public capacity. Howard Gault Co. v. Texas Rural Legal Aid, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 848 F.2d 544.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

566. ---- Reports, statutes, color of law generally

Making representations to a state official, even in a report required by law, is not acting "under color of law" within this section creating right of action for deprivation of rights. Schatte v. International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Emp. and Moving Picture Mach. Operators of U.S. and Canada, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1950, 182 F.2d 158, rehearing denied 183 F.2d 685, certiorari denied 71 S.Ct. 64, 340 U.S. 827, 95 L.Ed. 608, rehearing denied 71 S.Ct. 194, 340 U.S. 885, 95 L.Ed. 643. Civil Rights 1326(1)

567. ---- Self-help and seizure generally, statutes, color of law generally

Provision of McKinney's N.Y. Uniform Commercial Code § 7-210, permitting a self-help sale by warehouseman of goods entrusted to him for storage does not delegate to storage company an exclusive prerogative of the sovereign thus constituting sale by warehouseman "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, since such statute is not only means remaining for resolving the purely private dispute. Flagg Bros., Inc. v. Brooks, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 1729, 436 U.S. 149, 56 L.Ed.2d 185. Constitutional Law 254(5)

Hotel manager's seizure under Arizona statute of the belongings of tenants following eviction of tenants for nonpayment of rent constituted action taken "under color of state law", within the scope of this section. Culbertson v. Leland, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1975, 528 F.2d 426. Civil Rights 1326(9)

On issue of state action requirement for action under this section, private repossessions are not infused with "state action" merely because state enacted 12A P.S. § 9-503 pertaining to so-called self-help repossessions. Gibbs v. Titelman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 502 F.2d 1107, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 526, 419 U.S. 1039, 42 L.Ed.2d 316. Civil Rights 1326(9)

State's passage of "self-help" remedies under which bank seized borrower's funds and collateral in form of accounts receivable without foreclosure or notice did not so significantly involve state in the procedures followed by bank as to constitute an act under color of state law giving rise to a claim under this section. Bichel Optical Laboratories, Inc. v. Marquette Nat. Bank of Minneapolis, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1973, 487 F.2d 906. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Use of self-help procedures under the Uniform Commercial Code does not constitute "state action" for purposes of this section. Sciolino v. Marine Midland Bank-Western, W.D.N.Y.1979, 463 F.Supp. 128. Civil Rights 1326(9)

568. ---- Attachment or garnishment, statutes, color of law generally

Debtor who was subjected to prejudgment attachment procedure under state law was deprived of his property through state action, corporate creditor and its president having acted under color of state law in participating in that deprivation, and thus debtor presented valid cause of action against corporation and its president under this section insofar as debtor challenged constitutionality of Virginia Code 1950, § 8.01-533 but not insofar as he alleged only misuse or abuse of that section. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., U.S.Va.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 457 U.S. 922, 73 L.Ed.2d 482. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Allegations in complaint, that ex parte attachment order obtained by private creditor under an allegedly unconstitutional Puerto Rico attachment statute violated debtors' due process rights, did not sufficiently allege requisite "state action" to make out claim under § 1983, where debtors did not allege how state attachment procedures violated their due process rights, but complained only of creditor's alleged improper motives and misrepresentations in seeking attachment, and of Puerto Rico court's alleged incorrect assessment of evidence. Gonzalez-Morales v. Hernandez-Arencibia, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 2000, 221 F.3d 45. Civil Rights 1326(9) state actors for purposes of § 1983. Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 20 F.3d 1250, on remand 1995 WL 141465. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

A private creditor's misuse of state prejudgment attachment and garnishment statutes by falsely representing that the statutory requisites for such relief were satisfied did not constitute "state action" for purposes of federal civil rights claim, and, thus, debtor failed to meet the under color of state law requirement for bringing of such claim. Gene Thompson Lumber Co., Inc. v. Davis Parmer Lumber Co., Inc., C.A.11 (Ga.) 1993, 984 F.2d 401. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Where defendants' pursuit of garnishment action apparently denied plaintiffs the proceeds from sale of their property for three months, there was "taking" for purposes of action under this section as against contention that because garnishment papers were served on auctioneer before auction began the auctioneer did not have possession or control of any of plaintiffs' property. Buller v. Buechler, C.A.8 (S.D.) 1983, 706 F.2d 844. Civil Rights 1071

In suit under this section alleging that private party debt claimants in state court action maliciously invoked prejudgment attachment procedures, there was "state action" in ultimate taking of property charged as deprivation of constitutionally secured rights, but question whether specific action charged to private defendants as contributing cause of that deprivation was taken under color of state law was properly referable only to specific conduct chargeable to particular defendants i.e., their invocation of and participation as litigants in judicial proceedings resulting in challenged seizure of plaintiff's property, and test of application of this section was whether private actors by such conduct could be said to have engaged or participated jointly with those state officials whose overt involvement supplied state action element. (Per Phillips, Circuit Judge, with two Judges concurring in result and three Judges dissenting.) Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., C.A.4 (Va.) 1981, 639 F.2d 1058, certiorari granted 101 S.Ct. 3078, 452 U.S. 937, 69 L.Ed.2d 951, affirmed in part, reversed in part 102 S.Ct. 2744, 457 U.S. 922, 73 L.Ed.2d 482. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Plaintiff had no cause of action under § 1983 for private party's alleged illegal use of Virginia attachment procedure, and to extent plaintiff claimed that private party violated his constitutional rights by invoking Virginia's attachment procedures, plaintiff was challenging facial validity of attachment statute where there was no allegation that any state official abused his authority by applying properly invoked attachment procedures in manner contrary to state law. Keystone Builders, Inc. v. Floor Fashions of Virginia, Inc., W.D.Va.1993, 829 F.Supp. 181. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Use by attorney and law firm of state garnishment procedures did not support finding of state action, an essential element of federal civil rights claim, and pleadings failed to indicate any colorable basis to infer that alleged breach of fiduciary duty to class plaintiffs equated to state action. Winslow v. Romer, D.Colo.1991, 759 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Prejudgment garnishment was "state action" and plaintiff in garnishment was acting under power of state law, for purposes of this section where such garnishment proceeding was possible only because of state law, though state employee and not plaintiff actually served garnishment writ. McMeans v. Schwartz, S.D.Ala.1971, 330 F.Supp. 1397. Civil Rights 1326(9)

569. ---- Distraint, statutes, color of law generally

Distraint of plaintiff's personal effects pursuant to authority of M.G.L.A. c. 255 § 23, allowing boarding house keepers, without court order, to take and maintain possession of lodger's property while charges for fare and board are outstanding did not involve such significant action on part of state or its instrumentalities as to be cognizable under this subchapter governing deprivation of civil rights under color of state law, notwithstanding plaintiff's characterization of distraint as a "public function" which the state was actively "encouraging." Davis v. Richmond,

C.A.1 (Mass.) 1975, 512 F.2d 201. Civil Rights 1326(9)

570. ---- Eviction of tenants, statutes, color of law generally

Use of state procedure for improper purpose of evicting month-to-month tenant in retaliation for exercise of constitutional rights would not be "state action," for purposes of provision of this section. Higbee v. Starr, C.A.8 (Ark.) 1983, 698 F.2d 945. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Private landlord's posting of a notice of distraint under the Pennsylvania Landlord and Tenant Act, 68 P.S. § 250.101 et seq., on subleased premises, depriving sublessee of its property on the premises, did not constitute state action such that landlord could be liable to the sublessee under this section. Luria Bros. & Co., Inc. v. Allen, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1982, 672 F.2d 347. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Eviction of tenant pursuant to R.S.A.N.H. 540:2 affording landlords methods of vindicating property rights without inquiring as to landlords' motive in doing so or without accepting evidence of their motive if offered constituted "purely private action," even though landlords sought eviction because of tenant's exercise of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1 and eviction did not constitute a state action within U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Lavoie v. Bigwood, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1972, 457 F.2d 7. Constitutional Law 254(4)

After portion of tenants' civil rights claim as it related to police officer's assisting landlords in evicting mobile home tenants for nonpayment of rent was settled and dismissed, landlords' detention of tenants' property under authority of Indiana innkeepers' lien as applied to mobile homes did not constitute state action so as to support § 1983 claim; statutory expansion of common-law innkeepers' lien to include mobile home owners did not provide basis for existence of state action, and statutes merely allowed mobile home owners to exercise self-help remedies and did not compel procedures landlords used to detain property. Jenner v. Shepherd, S.D.Ind.1987, 665 F.Supp. 714. Civil Rights 1326(9)

571. ---- Foreclosure, statutes, color of law generally

Fact that state permits use of foreclosure procedures and subsequent sheriff sales as execution of judgment is not sufficient to constitute state action for purposes of § 1983. Harper v. Federal Land Bank of Spokane, C.A.9 (Or.) 1989, 878 F.2d 1172, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 867, 493 U.S. 1057, 107 L.Ed.2d 951. Civil Rights 1326(9)

572. ---- Repossession, statutes, color of law generally

Police officer who was present at site during self-help repossession of collateral by creditor did not know and should not reasonably have known that his actions or failure to act translated into participation in private foreclosure to degree tantamount to state action under § 1983, and thus, officer was immune in debtor's § 1983 action, where officer's presence at site was intended to observe and monitor peaceful statutory repossession of personal property under Michigan self-help statute and his language and conduct in addressing employee of debtor while creditor's employees effected foreclosure demonstrated objective good faith actions not inconsistent with his assigned duties of viewing statutorily permitted repossession of property. Haverstick Enterprises, Inc. v. Financial Federal Credit, Inc., C.A.6 (Mich.) 1994, 32 F.3d 989. Civil Rights 1376(6)

For purposes of determining whether damage action could be brought against it under this section, bank's participation in Illinois' statutory procedure for selling automobile after it is repossessed did not constitute "state action" either under theory that, by statute, state delegated its powers to bank, or because of aid, assistance and involvement of state officials in bank's actions. Gibson v. Dixon, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1978, 579 F.2d 1071. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Significant state action such as to permit purchaser of washing machine to bring civil rights action against seller to recover actual and punitive damages for allegedly wrongful repossession of machine was not present either by virtue of fact that repossession was accomplished under V.T.C.A., Bus. & C. § 9.503 or because purchaser's home was broken into during repossession. Calderon v. United Furniture Co., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1974, 505 F.2d 950. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Repossession of automobile pursuant to KRS 355.9-503 did not constitute action of this section. Gary v. Darnell, C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 505 F.2d 741.

Creditor's resort to remedy of self-help repossession as provided for by contract was not "state action" for purposes of application of this section or U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 because of mere existence of T.C.A. § 47-9- 503. Turner v. Impala Motors, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1974, 503 F.2d 607.

On issue of state action requirement for action under this section, private repossessions are not infused with "state action" merely because a state issues a certificate of ownership to secured party enabling it to transfer automobile to third-party purchaser at a sale following repossession. Gibbs v. Titelman, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1974, 502 F.2d 1107, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 526, 419 U.S. 1039, 42 L.Ed.2d 316. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Bank's actions, pursuant to UCC provisions in repossessing automobile upon nonpayment of note secured by automobile and in selling automobile at private sale did not involve such state action as to constitute action taken under color of state law and did not give rise to cause of action under this section. Nichols v. Tower Grove Bank, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1974, 497 F.2d 404. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Actions of Nebraska and Missouri in passing statutes authorizing self-help repossession of automobiles following defaults in payments of installment contracts did not make dealers' actions in repossessing automobile acts under color of state law and did not create a cause of action under this section. Nowlin v. Professional Auto Sales, Inc., C.A.8 (Neb.) 1974, 496 F.2d 16, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 328, 419 U.S. 1006, 42 L.Ed.2d 283. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Peaceful repossession of plaintiff's automobile by assignee of conditional seller, in accordance with terms of conditional sales contract providing for such repossession upon default, did not constitute state action within meaning of this section, since decision to repossess was entirely that of seller's assignee, was authorized by the agreement and the state played no significant role. Shirley v. State Nat. Bank of Connecticut, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1974, 493 F.2d 739, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 329, 419 U.S. 1009, 42 L.Ed.2d 284. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Prejudgment self-help repossession of secured property, as provided for in the security agreements between creditors and debtors and as authorized under West's Ann.Cal.Com.Code, §§ 9503, 9504, did not involve sufficient "state action" to establish a federal cause of action under this section. Adams v. Southern California First Nat. Bank, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 492 F.2d 324, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 325, 419 U.S. 1006, 42 L.Ed.2d 282.

At some point, as police involvement in repossession of vehicle becomes increasingly important, repossession by private individuals assumes character of state action, for purposes of establishing due process or § 1983 violation. Barrett v. Harwood, N.D.N.Y.1997, 967 F.Supp. 744, affirmed 189 F.3d 297, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 2719, 530 U.S. 1262, 147 L.Ed.2d 984. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Where law enforcement officers were merely present throughout entire repossession operation with object of preventing breach of peace, and officers never actually aided in repossession, officers' presence fell shy of creating "action under color of state law" necessary to state claim under statute governing deprivation of civil rights. Wright v. National Bank of Stamford, N.D.N.Y.1985, 600 F.Supp. 1289, affirmed 767 F.2d 909. Civil Rights 1326(8)

M.S.A. § 629.366 was only a self-help provision designed to help merchant protect his property and provide him with immunity for certain actions and only permitted detention of suspected shoplifter for limited purpose but did not grant merchant authority to arrest, and thus actions of store security employee in confronting suspected shoplifter were not under "color of state law" within this section proscribing the deprivation of rights. Battle v. Dayton-Hudson Corp., D.C.Minn.1975, 399 F.Supp. 900. Civil Rights 1326(9)

573. ---- Reversion, statutes, color of law generally

Section 1983 claim against private owners of land that allegedly was no longer used as sailors home and allegedly reverted to State of Hawaii pursuant to conveyance by provisional government of Hawaii could be found to be meritless and frivolous and could be found to justify award of attorney fees under civil rights statute and Rule 11, even though state action concept can be murky. Price v. State of Hawaii, C.A.9 (Hawai'i) 1991, 939 F.2d 702, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1479, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1480, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L.Ed.2d 622. Civil Rights 1484; Federal Civil Procedure 2771(5)

574. ---- Shoplifting, statutes, color of law generally

Absent some compulsion or some overt state involvement, no state action could be found in connection with store employees' detention of plaintiffs and search of their purses because of mere existence of Louisiana statute which insulates merchants from liability for detention of persons reasonably believed to be shoplifters, and which does not compel merchants to detain them but merely permits them to do so under certain circumstances. White v. Scrivner Corp., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 140. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Department store's decision to employ "special patrolman" involved utilization for store's benefit of state law enforcement authority sufficient to satisfy § 1983's "under color" of state law requirement in action by subsequently acquitted shoplifting suspect for wrongful arrest. Rojas v. Alexander's Dept. Store, Inc., E.D.N.Y.1986, 654 F.Supp. 856. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Ill.Rev.Stat., ch. 38, § 16A-5, authorizing any merchant to detain any person he has reasonable grounds to believe has committed retail theft, did not in itself convert conduct of private parties acting under its authority into state action and, hence, was not a basis for establishing a cause of action under this section on ground that the defendants, who were private parties not holding any governmental or official positions, acted under color of state law in effecting an allegedly unlawful arrest of plaintiff. Davis v. Carson Pirie Scott & Co., N.D.Ill.1982, 530 F.Supp. 799. Civil Rights 1326(9)

575. ---- Usury, statutes, color of law generally

Action of retailer in allegedly not following mandate of state Supreme Court granting prospective relief under state usury statutes, SDCL 54-3-7, 54- 3-12, to revolving charge account customers would not give rise to state action within meaning of this section on theory that the state Supreme Court was supporting retailer's actions. Ellingson v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., D.C.S.D.1973, 363 F.Supp. 1344. Civil Rights 1326(1)

576. ---- Voting and elections, statutes, color of law generally

Procedures outlined in reconsideration section of Florida statute governing access to presidential preference primary ballot in Florida constituted "state action" for purposes of civil rights action brought by presidential candidates whose names were not included on ballot after reconsideration alleging that reconsideration process violated their constitutional rights; state-created procedures, not autonomous political parties, made final determination as to who would appear on ballot. Duke v. Smith, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1994, 13 F.3d 388. Civil Rights 1326(1)

577. ---- Workers' compensation, statutes, color of law generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Workers' compensation claimants' characterization of their § 1983 claim that private insurers' withholding of benefits for disputed medical treatment pending "utilization review" pursuant to Pennsylvania law deprived claimants of rights under Fourteenth Amendment, as "facial" or "direct" challenge to utilization review procedures, did not relieve claimants of their obligation to establish that insurers were state actors within meaning of Fourteenth Amendment. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, U.S.Pa.1999, 119 S.Ct. 977, 526 U.S. 40, 143 L.Ed.2d 130. Constitutional Law 254(4)

There was no joint participation between state of Texas and worker's examining physician and workers' compensation insurer, vis-a-vis Texas workers' compensation law, as required for § 1983 claim alleging that worker's benefits were terminated based on physician's uninformed diagnosis. Barnes v. Lehman, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1988, 861 F.2d 1383. Civil Rights 1326(5)

578. ---- Wrongful birth, statutes, color of law generally

Neither Pennsylvania Wrongful Birth Statute nor the Pennsylvania's denial of wrongful birth cause of action encourages negligent behavior by doctors or laboratories providing fetal screening diagnostic services, as needed to convert physicians and laboratories into state actors for purposes of § 1983 civil rights claim by parents of child born with undiagnosed spinabifida; Pennsylvania law did not provide significant encouragement to private doctors and laboratories to infringe on woman's right to make informed choice regarding her pregnancy. Flickinger v. Wanczyk, E.D.Pa.1994, 843 F.Supp. 32. Civil Rights 1326(4)

579. ---- Miscellaneous statutes, color of law generally

Transit authority acted under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983 claim asserted against it, when it pulled from city buses an advertisement mocking mayor based on conclusion of mayor's office that advertisement violated New York statute prohibiting use of living person's name for trade purposes without that person's written consent. New York Magazine, Div. of Primedia Magazines, Inc. v. Metropolitan Transit Authority, S.D.N.Y.1997, 987 F.Supp. 254, affirmed in part, vacated in part 136 F.3d 123, certiorari denied 119 S.Ct. 68, 525 U.S. 824, 142 L.Ed.2d 53. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Where U.C.A.1953, 34-35-1 et seq. provided religious schools with no more relevant freedom to discriminate on basis of religion than they possessed under either common law of Utah or under § 2000e et seq. of this title, it could not be said that the exemption constituted "state action" for purposes of a claim under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Larsen v. Kirkham, D.C.Utah 1980, 499 F.Supp. 960, affirmed, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 157, 464 U.S. 849, 78 L.Ed.2d 144. Civil Rights 1326(11)

In petitioning California court for ex parte conservatorship order, plaintiff's parents and program allegedly engaged in business of "legal deprogramming" were exercising a power not conferred by statute upon select few but upon all citizens of state, and thus their resort to state court for such order did not constitute action under color of law for purposes of this section. Baer v. Baer, N.D.Cal.1978, 450 F.Supp. 481. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Existence of Maine "conscience law" providing that no physician or hospital that refuses to permit the performance of an abortion shall be liable to any person for damages allegedly arising from such refusal did not so involve State of Maine in private hospital's abortion policy as to constitute the latter "state action" where the Maine statute neither prohibited nor required the performance of abortions but was neutral in meaning and effect and had no direct or indirect impact on the hospital's abortion policies. Jones v. Eastern Maine Medical Center, D.C.Me.1978, 448 F.Supp. 1156. Civil Rights 1326(4)

580. Ordinances, color of law generally--Generally

Alford, W.D.Tenn.1976, 410 F.Supp. 1348.

581. ---- Licenses, ordinances, color of law generally

County's unsuccessful attempt to secure injunction under allegedly unconstitutional ordinance that required licensing of assemblies of more than 250 people did not itself deprive rock concert promoters of First Amendment rights under color of state law, where ordinance was not plainly unconstitutional, where enforcement action was not pretext for suppression of expressive activity based on content, and where county merely sought to enforce ordinance believed to be constitutional. Andree v. Ashland County, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1987, 818 F.2d 1306. Civil Rights 1088(1)

582. ---- Towing, ordinances, color of law generally

Private towing operator could not be held liable for violation of automobile owner's civil rights because of his towing of owner's vehicle from private property pursuant to defective city ordinance where tower had no occasion to doubt validity of the regularly adopted ordinance, which ordinance had not previously been called into question. Huemmer v. Mayor and City Council of Ocean City, C.A.4 (Md.) 1980, 632 F.2d 371. Civil Rights 1341

583. ---- Zoning, ordinances, color of law generally

Town planning and zoning commission acted under color of state law, for purposes of § 1983, when it denied request by personal wireless service provider for special permit to reconstruct church steeple, and install cellular telecommunications facility within steeple, and thus, commission's denial of request, which violated Telecommunications Act of 1996 and thus deprived provider of its federally guaranteed rights, provided basis for recovery by provider on § 1983 claim. Cellco Partnership v. Town Plan and Zoning Com'n of Town of Farmington, D.Conn.1998, 3 F.Supp.2d 178. Civil Rights 1326(2)

City's passage of comprehensive zoning ordinance constituted "state action" under § 1983. Burkhart Advertising, Inc. v. City of Auburn, Ind., N.D.Ind.1991, 786 F.Supp. 721. Civil Rights 1326(7)

584. ---- Miscellaneous ordinances, color of law generally

Actions, by city park use permit holders who sought to exclude street preachers from permitted areas, were not state conduct, under § 1983, on facial and as-applied challenges to city ordinance provisions prohibiting First Amendment activities such as distribution of literature in areas of city's parks for which short-term permits had previously issued for private or public events, even if city authorized exclusionary conduct, assisted it by citations and other enforcement actions by police, and retained ultimate control over permitted areas by power to revoke permit. Diener v. Reed, M.D.Pa.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 362, affirmed 77 Fed.Appx. 601, 2003 WL 22326515. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Zoning and planning board member removed as chairperson failed to allege municipal policy or custom that caused her injury to support her claim of municipal liability under § 1983 on ground that mayor deprived her of First Amendment rights, where she failed to allege express municipal ordinance, pled no facts supporting allegation that custom existed, and failed to allege that mayor was policymaker for purposes of removal of chairperson. Dulceak v. Paxson, N.D.Ill.1992, 803 F.Supp. 164. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Decision by city commission and board of county commissioners to bar county board of health from contracting with Planned Parenthood for family planning services involved state action under § 1983 and equal protection clause, whether decision was resolution or ordinance. Planned Parenthood of Kansas, Inc. v. City of Wichita, D.Kan.1990, 729 F.Supp. 1282. Civil Rights 1326(2); Constitutional Law 213(2)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

585. Regulations, color of law generally

Statute authorizing county political committees to remove members who give support to candidate for another party did not convert committee's private action in removing homosexual members for purportedly giving such support into state action for purposes of federal civil rights suit under state compulsion test for finding state action; statute in no way compelled members to remove other members because of their sexual orientation. Johnson v. Knowles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1114, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 559, 522 U.S. 996, 139 L.Ed.2d 401. Civil Rights 1326(7)

"State action" within this section may be premised upon rulings and regulations of administrative or regulatory agencies as well as upon legislative or judicial action. Palmer v. Columbia Gas of Ohio, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1973, 479 F.2d 153, 72 O.O.2d 337. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Mere fact that persons are engaged in highly regulated business does not mean that they become state actors for civil rights purposes. Lovell v. Peoples Heritage Sav. Bank, D.Me.1991, 776 F.Supp. 578. Civil Rights 1326(7)

586. Constitutions of states, color of law generally

Court would assume that this section extends to a deprivation of rights under color of a state Constitution, although it might be argued with some force that the enumeration of "statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage," purposely was confined to inferior sources of law. Giles v. Harris, U.S.Ala.1903, 23 S.Ct. 639, 189 U.S. 475, 47 L.Ed. 909.

Plaintiff who prevailed at trial on civil rights claim that officer recklessly violated her civil rights, but was awarded only nominal damages of $1, and was unsuccessful on other claims either at trial or summary judgment stage, would be awarded four-fifths of fees requested for litigation at pretrial stage to reflect claims that were dismissed at that stage, and one-third of fees requested for remaining litigation, given limited success achieved. Lockhart-Bembery v. Town of Wayland Police Dept., D.Mass.2006, 447 F.Supp.2d 11. Civil Rights 1487

Section 1983 did not provide vehicle to hold police officer and municipal police department liable for alleged violations of state constitution, based on officer's actions in accidentally shooting motor vehicle passenger in the head while trying to extract passenger from vehicle. Tallman v. Elizabeth Police Dept., W.D.Ky.2004, 344 F.Supp.2d 992, affirmed 167 Fed.Appx. 459, 2006 WL 166610. Civil Rights 1088(1)

Clause authorizing redress against "deprivation under color of any state law" may also mean "deprivation under color of any state Constitution". Gannon v. Action, E.D.Mo.1969, 303 F.Supp. 1240, affirmed in part, remanded in part on other grounds 450 F.2d 1227. Civil Rights 1324

587. Court orders, color of law generally

Present and former state Commissioners of Public Safety were not individually liable for violating rights of Ku Klux Klan members who had been subjected to indiscriminate weapons searches at Klan rallies; Commissioners obtained state court orders banning weapons at rallies, and applicable law was not adequately clear and settled so as to warrant award of damages. Wilkinson v. Forst, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1987, 832 F.2d 1330, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1593, 485 U.S. 1034, 99 L.Ed.2d 907, on remand 717 F.Supp. 49. Civil Rights 1358

Mental hospital employees who acted pursuant to facially valid court order and who had no reason to believe that mental commitment proceedings deprived patient of due process were not liable to patient under this section. Sebastian v. U. S., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1976, 531 F.2d 900, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 153, 429 U.S. 856, 50 L.Ed.2d 133. Civil Rights 1376(1)

Prothonotary of Superior Court of Pennsylvania was not liable to prisoner under this section for refusing to accept for filing certain papers, where action of prothonotary was pursuant to superior court order. Lockhart v. Hoenstine, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1969, 411 F.2d 455, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 378, 396 U.S. 941, 24 L.Ed.2d 244. Clerks Of Courts 72

Prison warden and Director of Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Corrections, who were not responsible for crediting inmate's sentence in any event, could not be held liable in damages in inmate's § 1983 action for simply carrying out mandate of sentencing court. Wright v. Baker, N.D.Ohio 1994, 849 F.Supp. 569. Civil Rights 1098

Where bank and bank's attorney merely complied with court order to produce certain records in connection with prosecution for failure to file federal income tax returns, bank and its attorney could not be held liable for participation in enforcement of Internal Revenue Service summons. Jarvis v. Roberts, W.D.Tex.1980, 489 F.Supp. 924. Civil Rights 1341

Though individuals who administered school district boundary changes were state officials, where their acts were ministerial in nature and were accomplished only pursuant to order of state Supreme Court, officials could not be said to have committed acts to further or effect transfer of affected areas so as to be held liable under this section for alleged violations of constitutional rights. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 53 of Oklahoma County, Okl. v. Board of Ed. of Independent School Dist. No. 52 of Oklahoma County, Okl., W.D.Okla.1975, 413 F.Supp. 342, affirmed 532 F.2d 730, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 253, 429 U.S. 894, 50 L.Ed.2d 176. Civil Rights 1356

588. Prejudgment remedies, color of law generally

Before judicial prejudgment remedy can be basis of cause of action under this section, constitutional question must exist concerning state's prejudgment remedy procedure and if constitutional question does not exist there is no state action and no deprivation of rights secured by Constitution. Coltharp v. Cutler, D.C.Utah 1976, 419 F.Supp. 924. Civil Rights 1326(9)

589. Foreclosure, color of law generally

There was no significant state involvement in the conduct of a trustee's sale under Missouri law of extrajudicial foreclosure and thus no state action for purpose of § 1983 civil rights claim. Mildfelt v. Circuit Court of Jackson County, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1987, 827 F.2d 343. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Fact that Louisiana permitted foreclosure and subsequent sale of land as execution of judgment obtained in private adversary proceeding was not sufficient to raise issue of state action in plaintiffs' action alleging that the foreclosure proceedings constituted deprivation of their constitutional rights under color of state law; foreclosure on the mortgage was a purely private dispute, immune from coverage of the statute lacking a showing of further state involvement. Earnest v. Lowentritt, C.A.5 (La.) 1982, 690 F.2d 1198. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Foreclosure and sale of property pursuant to deed of trust agreement did not have requisite "significant state involvement" to constitute act under color of state law within this section. Hoffman v. U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, D.C.Tex.1974, 371 F.Supp. 576, affirmed 519 F.2d 1160. Civil Rights 1326(9)

590. Power of sale, color of law generally

No state action is involved in the exercise of the power of sale given in a mortgage so that civil rights action cannot be maintained on the basis of the sale or the manner in which it was handled. Dieffenbach v. Buckley,

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

D.C.N.H.1979, 464 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1326(9)

591. Land grants, color of law generally

Alleged discriminatory actions of trustees of community land grant in leasing common lands within grant were not within provision of this section governing deprivation of civil rights "under color of state law," notwithstanding whether trustees were considered by state to form a quasi-municipal corporation, where common lands within grant were private and not open to public and state, in providing statutory machinery for election and qualification of trustees, sought only to direct creation of an organization to manage and control grant and did not otherwise seek to supervise private functions of trustees by approving matters and considerations leading up to execution of leases. Mondragon v. Tenorio, C.A.10 (N.M.) 1977, 554 F.2d 423, certiorari denied 98 S.Ct. 305, 434 U.S. 905, 54 L.Ed.2d 193. Civil Rights 1326(1)

592. Commonwealth or territory, color of law generally

Deprivations of equal protection under color of laws or regulations of Commonwealth of Puerto Rico are redressible under this section. Rivas Tenorio v. Liga Atletica Interuniversitaria, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1977, 554 F.2d 492. Civil Rights 1028

Puerto Rico is a "state" for the purposes of this section which provides redress against any person who under color of "state" statute or regulation deprives any citizen or other person within the jurisdiction of the United States of rights or privileges secured by the Constitution and laws. Berrios v. Inter Am. University, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 535 F.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1325

Alleged actions of residence for abused children and its employees, of carrying out policy preventing child from visiting with her parents, after employees had been told to do so by county child protective services caseworker, if proven, were taken under color of state law for purposes of § 1983, even if residence was private institution. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Complaint of parent of minor, filed on the minor's behalf, alleging that police officer assigned to the minor's school, acting under color of state law, sexually molested the minor in violation of her substantive due process right to bodily integrity, stated a valid § 1983 claim against the officer. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 291. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Municipal Corporations 747(3)

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was not "State or Territory" under this section. Thompson v. Kleppe, D.C.Hawai'i 1976, 424 F.Supp. 1263. Civil Rights 1325

This section and its jurisdictional counterpart are as applicable with respect to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico as they are with respect to any state of the union. Comtronics, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., D.C.Puerto Rico 1975, 409 F.Supp. 800, affirmed 553 F.2d 701. Territories 33

593. District of Columbia, color of law generally

Barr Amendment, which prohibited use of any funds in District of Columbia Appropriations Act to conduct ballot initiative on legalization of marijuana, although passed by Congress, applied only to the District of Columbia and was be treated as a statute of the District of Columbia for the purposes of § 1983 action for violation of constitutional or federal statutory rights under the color of a "statute of any State or the District of Columbia." Turner v. D.C. Board of Elections and Ethics, D.D.C.2001, 170 F.Supp.2d 1, vacated 354 F.3d 890, 359 U.S.App.D.C. 332, rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 55, 543 U.S. 817, 160 L.Ed.2d 24. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

594. Federal law, color of law generally--Generally

Actions of soldiers during Vietnam War were not taken under the color of state law, thus residents of village in Vietnam were precluded from bringing §§ 1983 action against soldiers on their own behalf and as representatives of deceased victims and survivors of a massacre during War. Van Tu v. Koster, C.A.10 (Utah) 2004, 364 F.3d 1196, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 88, 543 U.S. 874, 160 L.Ed.2d 124. Civil Rights 1327

Postal Service was not subject to suit under § 1983, which did not allow for suit based upon actions taken under color of federal law. Flamingo Industries (USA) Ltd. v. U.S. Postal Service, C.A.9 (Cal.) 2002, 302 F.3d 985, certiorari granted 123 S.Ct. 2215, 538 U.S. 1056, 155 L.Ed.2d 1104, reversed 124 S.Ct. 1321, 540 U.S. 736, 158 L.Ed.2d 19, on remand 366 F.3d 789. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1364

This section which creates remedy to redress a deprivation, under color of state law, of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States is directed to state wrongdoing only. Williams v. Rogers, C.A.8 (N.D.) 1971, 449 F.2d 513, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 976, 405 U.S. 926, 30 L.Ed.2d 799. Civil Rights 1325

Section § 1983 provides relief against defendants who act under color of state, not federal, law. Khan v. U.S., E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 409. Civil Rights 1327

Section 1983 does not provide basis for suit for actions taken under color of federal law. Meyer v. Reno, D.D.C.1996, 911 F.Supp. 11. Civil Rights 1327

Liability under § 1983 will not attach for action taken under color of federal law. Rourke v. U.S., E.D.Pa.1988, 744 F.Supp. 100, affirmed 909 F.2d 1477. Civil Rights 1327

Generally, plaintiffs may seek relief, pursuant to federal civil rights statute, for violation by state actors of federal statute that creates substantive rights in plaintiffs, so long as Congress has not expressly or impliedly foreclosed enforcement under statute. McNeill v. New York City Housing Authority, S.D.N.Y.1989, 719 F.Supp. 233. Civil Rights 1027

Requisite for pursuing remedy under this section is that defendant act under color of state law; thus that civil right remedy was not available to plaintiff who complained about actions of federal officers acting under color of federal law. Pugh v. Internal Revenue Service, E.D.Pa.1979, 472 F.Supp. 350. Civil Rights 1327

This section authorizing action against person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage of any state or territory deprives another of constitutional right does not extend to persons acting under color of federal law. Williams v. Wright, D.C.Or.1976, 432 F.Supp. 732. Civil Rights 1327

This section applies only to individuals acting under state, as opposed to federal law. Stockheimer v. Underwood, W.D.Wis.1977, 428 F.Supp. 192. Civil Rights 1327

Conduct alleged to be in violation of this section must occur under color of state law; and if the conduct is practiced by a citizen or organization acting privately and not under color of state law, or by a citizen or organization acting under color of federal law, then there is no civil rights claim and no federal jurisdiction. Syrek v. Pennsylvania Air Nat. Guard, W.D.Pa.1974, 371 F.Supp. 1349. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(4); Federal Courts 222

This section applies to officers acting under color of state law, not federal law. Davidson v. Kane, E.D.Va.1972, 337 F.Supp. 922. Civil Rights 1327

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Provisions of this section relating to deprivation of citizen's property implement U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 13 and 14 , rather than U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5, and protect against oppressive state action rather than federal excesses. Vigil v. U. S., D.C.Colo.1968, 293 F.Supp. 1176, affirmed 430 F.2d 1357.

This section grants cause of action against those acting under color of state law and not against those acting under color of federal law. Johnson v. District of Southern Mo. Com'rs, W.D.Mo.1966, 258 F.Supp. 669, affirmed 368 F.2d 184. Civil Rights 1327

Claims under § 1983 only lie against persons acting under color of state law; claims against federal agencies or their officers are not cognizable. Caraveo v. Nielsen Media Research, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 169767, Unreported, report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part 2003 WL 1745064, affirmed 96 Fed.Appx. 738, 2004 WL 608590. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1362

595. ---- Mixed federal and state programs, federal law, color of law generally

Actions of state administrators of a "mixed" federal and state program may, as a matter of law, be actions "under color of state law" as required for application of this section. Rowe v. State of Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1979, 609 F.2d 259. Civil Rights 1327

596. ---- Conspiracy with state, federal law, color of law generally

Joint conspiracy between federal and state officials may carry same consequences under this section as joint action by state officials and private persons. Kletschka v. Driver, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1969, 411 F.2d 436. Conspiracy 7.5(1)

To extent that alleged illegal actions of federal officials were carried out under color of state law, this section provided adequate and exclusive remedy, but action under Constitution could be asserted against federal officials for any conduct which was not undertaken in complicity with state officials. Hampton v. Hanrahan, N.D.Ill.1981, 522 F.Supp. 140. Civil Rights 1322; Civil Rights 1327

597. ---- Executive orders, federal law, color of law generally

This section was inapplicable to support claim that district court had jurisdiction of Maryland corporation's action to enjoin Social Security Administration Commissioner, Civil Service Commission, and Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare [now Secretary of Health and Human Services] to enforce regulations adopted pursuant to Executive Order concerning equal opportunity in federal employment. Congress of Racial Equality (Target City Project) v. Commissioner, Social Sec. Administration, D.C.Md.1967, 270 F.Supp. 537.

598. ---- Lien statutes, federal law, color of law generally

Actions of federal officials taken pursuant to federal law cannot form the basis of a claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983; hence, since defendant was an Internal Revenue Service employee acting under color of federal law while issuing a third-party collection summons and authorizing a federal tax lien, § 1983 was inapplicable to employee's acts. Church of Human Potential, Inc. v. Vorsky, D.N.J.1986, 636 F.Supp. 93. Civil Rights 1327

599. ---- Social Security, federal law, color of law generally

State officials who sent pretermination notices to social security disability benefits recipient were acting under color of federal law, rather than state law, so that claim for damages could not be predicated on this section. Ellis v. Blum, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1981, 643 F.2d 68. Civil Rights 1327

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

State's conduct in administering its medicaid program could be properly characterized as being "under color of state law," as was necessary for state to be liable in federal civil rights action challenging administration, in that only federal involvement in program was triggered by state's request to receive matching funds; state could not be characterized as purely passive actor so as to preclude federal civil rights liability. Mitson By and Through Jones v. Coler, S.D.Fla.1987, 670 F.Supp. 1568.

Since social security benefits are composed entirely of federal funds and state agencies function solely as agents of federal government, a denial of benefits would not be under color of state law, so that suit under this section claiming such denial would fail. Lynn v. U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services, S.D.N.Y.1984, 583 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1327

600. ---- Taxes, federal law, color of law generally

Trustees of local union vacation fund, who paid funds held in vacation fund on taxpayer's behalf to Internal Revenue Service pursuant to two tax levies in compliance with federal law on tax liens, were not liable to taxpayer under the civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Carman v. Parsons, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1986, 789 F.2d 1532. Civil Rights 1341

Actions complained of by taxpayer, namely, levying of his wages by Internal Revenue Service, were taken pursuant to federal law by federal agents and private parties, and therefore taxpayer failed to state cause of action against defendants under this section because this section only provides redress for actions taken under color of state law. Zernial v. U.S., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1983, 714 F.2d 431. Civil Rights 1396

601. ---- Miscellaneous federal laws, color of law generally

Card dealer failed to state cause of action under § 1983 in complaint against National Indian Gaming Commission (NGIC) and its chairman, arising from suspension of her gaming license without hearing and tribe's failure to adopt certain gaming ordinance, where complaint alleged only actions taken under color of federal law. Hartman v. Kickapoo Tribe Gaming Com'n, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 319 F.3d 1230. Civil Rights 1327

Joint participation of government necessary to give rise to state action to support a federal civil rights claim need not entail anything more than invoking aid of state officials to take advantage of state-created procedures, but the private defendant must make use of state procedures with the overt and significant assistance of state officials. Cobb v. Saturn Land Co., Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 966 F.2d 1334. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Federal prisoner, who brought action against United States Parole Commission for unspecified damages for period of alleged excess custody, could not claim jurisdiction under this section, since such provision did not apply when Commission was acting under color of federal law. Hubbert v. U. S. Parole Commission, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1978, 585 F.2d 857. Civil Rights 1097

Allegations that movie theater operators and motion picture producers acted under color of federal law to deny close-captioned movies to hearing impaired viewers failed to state § 1983 claim for violation of Free Speech and Assembly Clauses of First Amendment, absent showing of state action; operators and producers did not engage in activities that were traditionally associated with sovereign governments, nor was there sufficient nexus between operators and producers and government as would subject operators and producers to limitations of the Constitution. Todd v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., S.D.Tex.2003, 222 F.R.D. 118. Civil Rights 1327; Constitutional Law 90.1(6); Constitutional Law 91

602. Approval by Federal government, color of law generally

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Requirement of federal approval of Interstate Compact creating regional planning agency did not foreclose finding that agency's conduct was "under color of state law" within meaning of this section. Lake Country Estates, Inc. v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, U.S.Nev.1979, 99 S.Ct. 1171, 440 U.S. 391, 59 L.Ed.2d 401, on remand 474 F.Supp. 901. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Requisite "significant state involvement" for bringing action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 governing deprivation of civil rights was missing in airline passenger's action against airline carrier and airport authority for search at airport, where both carrier and authority were required to present their respective security plans to Federal Aviation Administration for final approval, and although authority was required to be cognizant of carrier's security program in order to accommodate its planning, authority did not regulate program, but merely functioned as conduit of information. Wagner v. Metropolitan Nashville Airport Authority, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1985, 772 F.2d 227. Civil Rights 1327; Civil Rights 1326(7)

Federal approval of state statutory and regulatory scheme did not render state's administration of its program any less "state action" within meaning of this section. Lidie v. State of Cal., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1973, 478 F.2d 552. Civil Rights 1327

603. Conspiracy, color of law generally

Employee terminated by private employer could not establish "state action," required for her § 1983 claim, by alleging conspiracy between employer and appeals referee for state employment security commission (ESC) to conceal material facts and evidence pertaining to employee's unemployment claim, where complaint failed to plead any facts suggesting that employer and referee reached a meeting of the minds, and neither employer nor its managers acted under color of state law. Howard v. Food Lion, Inc., M.D.N.C.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 585. Civil Rights 1396

Private parties willfully participating in conspiracy with state officials are acting under color of law, for purposes of § 1983. DiBenedetto v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1994, 873 F.Supp. 106. Civil Rights 1326(5)

631. Attribution of private actions to state generally

Ultimate issue in determining whether person is subject to suit under federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights is same question posed in cases arising under Fourteenth Amendment, i.e., whether alleged infringement of federal rights is "fairly attributable to the state." Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, U.S.Mass.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2764, 457 U.S. 830, 73 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1325

For "fair attribution" of action to state, as required by § 1983, deprivation must be caused by exercise of state-created right or privilege, by state-imposed rule of conduct, or by person for whom state is responsible, and party charged with deprivation must be fairly described as state actor. Landry v. A-Able Bonding, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 75 F.3d 200. Civil Rights 1325

Generally there may be a finding of "state action or action under color of state law," within meaning of this section, when a private party's action occurred in conjunction with the business in which the state may be considered a partner or joint venturer in a profit-making field, when a state statute or custom or usage compels the result, when a state agency affirmatively orders or specifically approves the activity in the course of its regulatory rule making, or when a private agency in effect is acting on behalf of and furnishing a typical government service. Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1973, 483 F.2d 754, certiorari granted 94 S.Ct. 1407, 415 U.S. 912, 39 L.Ed.2d 466, affirmed 95 S.Ct. 449, 419 U.S. 345, 42 L.Ed.2d 477. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Danger creation exception to rule that state actors could be held liable under §§ 1983 only for their own acts, and not for acts of third parties, applied to Fourteenth Amendment due process claim against state, school district, and school board brought by parent and natural guardian, on behalf of four-year old, non-verbal, autistic child who also suffered from tuberous sclerosis, a genetic disorder that caused tumors to form in many different organs including brain, eyes, heart, kidneys, skin, and lungs, on allegations that preschooler on four occasions was made to walk from bus to classroom without shoes, preschooler was slapped by teacher or taken by his hands and forced to slap himself, and preschooler was "slammed" in a chair by teacher. Roe ex rel. Preschooler II v. Nevada, D.Nev.2004, 332 F.Supp.2d 1331. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 89.2

Section 1983's "color of state law" requirement excludes from the reach of § 1983 all merely private conduct, no matter how discriminatory or wrongful, but includes within its scope apparently private actions which have a sufficiently close nexus with the state to be fairly treated as that of the state itself. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1325

The ultimate issue in determining whether a person is subject to suit under § 1983 is the same question posed in cases arising under the Fourteenth Amendment: is the alleged infringement of federal rights fairly attributable to the State? Schorr v. Borough of Lemoyne, M.D.Pa.2003, 265 F.Supp.2d 488. Civil Rights 1325

There are three discrete tests to determine whether there has been "state action" within meaning of § 1983 and Fourteenth Amendment: first test determines whether private entity exercises powers that are traditionally exclusive prerogative of state; the second test addresses whether private entity has acted in concert or with help of state officials; last inquiry involves situations in which state has so far insinuated itself into position of interdependence with acting party that it must be recognized as joint participant in challenged activity. Johnson v. Cullen, D.Del.1996, 925 F.Supp. 244. Civil Rights 1326(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

Conduct by private entity may constitute "state action" for purposes of § 1983 in three types of situation, when: there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of regulated entity such that those actions may be fairly treated as those of state; when state has regulated entity to such extent that action must in law be deemed to be that of state; and when private entity exercises power traditionally exclusive to state. Davis v. Hudgins, E.D.Va.1995, 896 F.Supp. 561, affirmed 87 F.3d 1308, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1440, 520 U.S. 1172, 137 L.Ed.2d 546. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Whether person is subject to § 1983 suit turns upon ultimate question of whether alleged infringement of federal rights is fairly attributable to state. Davis v. Olin, D.Kan.1995, 886 F.Supp. 804. Civil Rights 1325

There are three criteria that court may apply to determine if conduct by private actor is attributable to the state so as to satisfy "state action" requirement for purposes of § 1983 action and if none of these elements are present, there is no "state action" and the elements are: (1) if state has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that choice must in law be deemed to be that of the state; (2) when heavy regulation of private actor exists, there must be sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of the regulated entity so that action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the state itself; (3) in public function area, there can be state action if private group is serving public function that has been traditionally the exclusive prerogative of the state. Federspiel v. Ohio Republican Party State Cent. Committee, S.D.Ohio 1994, 867 F.Supp. 617, affirmed 85 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private party can be held to be "state actor," for purposes of § 1983 claim involving deprivation of constitutional rights by such actor, where there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of private party so that action of party may be fairly treated as action of state itself, when private party has exercised powers that are traditionally exclusive prerogative of state, or when state has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, so that action of private party must in law be deemed to be that of state. Lewis v. Law-Yone, N.D.Tex.1993, 813 F.Supp. 1247. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fair attribution test of whether conduct of private individual allegedly depriving a party of his federal rights may be attributed to state for purposes of civil rights statute has two components: a state policy and a state actor. Boulter v. Jordan, D.Colo.1990, 733 F.Supp. 85. Civil Rights 1326(4)

First question in determining whether conduct of private actor may be attributable to the state in a § 1983 action is whether the claimed deprivation has resulted from the exercise of a right or a privilege having its source in a state authority and the second question is whether, under the facts, defendant who is a private party may be appropriately characterized as a state actor. Steele v. Stephan, D.Kan.1986, 633 F.Supp. 950. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Performance of a public function, significant involvement of state in private activity, or state enforcement of agreements affecting private parties may confer "state action" upon private parties for purposes of suit under this section. Vuksta v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., D.C.Pa.1982, 540 F.Supp. 1276, affirmed 707 F.2d 1405, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 121, 464 U.S. 835, 78 L.Ed.2d 119. See, also, Arment v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, E.D.Pa.1981, 505 F.Supp. 911. Civil Rights 1326(4)

In resolving question of existence vel non of state action in civil rights case, the following are to be examined: private entity's degree of dependence on governmental aid; extent and intrusiveness of governmental regulation involved; whether or not aid is given to all similar institutions or is suggestive of government's approval of activity challenged in particular case; whether or not institution under attack performs public function, and legitimacy of organization's claim to be regarded as private in character, in associational or constitutional terms. Ludtke v. Kuhn, S.D.N.Y.1978, 461 F.Supp. 86. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private, individual conduct may be found to constitute state action (1) where state courts enforce an agreement affecting private parties, (2) where the state "significantly" involves itself with the private party and, (3) where there is private performance of a government function. Magill v. Avonworth Baseball Conference, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1328. See, also, Sament v. Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1976, 413 F.Supp. 434, affirmed 547 F.2d 1164. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1326(4)

Factors important to determination of "state action" by private organization are the degree to which the organization is dependent upon governmental aid; the extent and intrusiveness of the governmental regulatory scheme; whether that scheme connotes governmental approval of the activity or whether the assistance is merely provided to all without such connotations; the extent to which the organization serves a public function or acts as a surrogate for the state; and whether the organization has legitimate claims to recognition as a "private" organization in associational or other constitutional terms; and each of the factors is material and no one factor is conclusive. Jackson v. Statler Foundation, C.A.N.Y.1974, 496 F.2d 623. See, also, Rackin v. University of Pennsylvania, E.D.Pa.1974, 386 F.Supp. 992. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1326(7)

632. Facts of each case as controlling, attribution of private actions to state

Determination of whether there is sufficient "state action" by nonstate persons, rendering applicable this section, must be made by sifting facts and weighing circumstances case by case. Sims v. Jefferson Downs, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1980, 611 F.2d 609. Civil Rights 1325

Determining whether there has been sufficient "state action" to give rise to a claim under this section requires a sifting of the circumstances of each case. Life Ins. Co. of North America v. Reichardt, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 591 F.2d 499, on remand 485 F.Supp. 56. Civil Rights 1325

No easy answer exists to the question whether particular discriminatory conduct is "private" or has such a state involvement or nexus as to permit relief under this section creating a federal cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another; rather, the facts in each case must be sifted and the circumstances weighed before a determination as to whether "state action" exists can be made. Broderick v. Associated Hospital Service of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 536 F.2d 1. Civil Rights 1325

Question whether utility company is acting under color of state law, within purview of this section, when it terminates service to individual customer for alleged nonpayment of bills can only be determined by examination of facts of each particular case. Palmer v. Columbia Gas of Ohio, Inc., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1973, 479 F.2d 153, 72 O.O.2d 337. Civil Rights 1326(7)

In order to determine whether nongovernmental entity has engaged in "state action" within meaning of this section, courts must carefully sift facts and circumstances. Trivits v. Wilmington Institute, D.C.Del.1976, 417 F.Supp. 160. Civil Rights 1325

633. Wrongfulness of conduct, attribution of private actions to state

Purely private conduct, no matter how wrongful, is not within protective orbit of this section. Ouzts v. Maryland Nat. Ins. Co., C.A.9 (Nev.) 1974, 505 F.2d 547, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1681, 421 U.S. 949, 44 L.Ed.2d 103. Civil Rights 1326(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

This section preserves constitutional rights from infringement by persons who act under federal statute or authority but not from infringement by private citizens who commit wrongful acts, however willful and malicious they may be. Spampinato v. M. Breger & Co., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1959, 270 F.2d 46, certiorari denied 80 S.Ct. 409, 361 U.S. 944, 4 L.Ed.2d 363, rehearing denied 80 S.Ct. 597, 361 U.S. 973, 4 L.Ed.2d 553.

Bail bondsmen who allegedly assaulted principal while arresting him were not state actors under "nexus/joint action" test for potential private-party liability under § 1983, even though bondsmen's authority to arrest derived from state law; bondsmen received no instructions, directions, aid, comfort, succor or anything else from state in pursuing principal, but acted unilaterally for their own private financial interest, and did not identify themselves as agents of state. Green v. Abony Bail Bond, M.D.Fla.2004, 316 F.Supp.2d 1254. Civil Rights 1326(9)

This section proscribes state action only, and private action however wrongful cannot form basis for relief under this section. Brownley v. Gettysburg College, M.D.Pa.1972, 338 F.Supp. 725. Civil Rights 1325

Conduct involving exercise of some power possessed only by virtue of private citizenship, even when wrongful, does no violence to rights protected by this section. Elders v. Consolidated Freightways Corp. of Del., D.C.Minn.1968, 289 F.Supp. 630. Civil Rights 1325

634. State compulsion, attribution of private actions to state

Absent indication that there existed any coercion or encouragement of a state entity, official or agent in the complained of conduct by condominium board and board members, owners of condominium unit did not demonstrate state action, for purposes of their §§ 1983 claim against condominium board and board members, under the state compulsion test. Miller v. Board of Managers of Whispering Pines at Colonial Woods Condominium II, E.D.N.Y.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1326(4)

School bus driver sufficiently alleged "state action" component of §§ 1983 claim against school defendants where he alleged that his private employer did not want to fire him and only did so at the direction of a school district official. Fernandez v. Taos Municipal Schools Bd. of Educ., D.N.M.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 1040. Civil Rights 1396

State did not so significantly encourage actions of advocate for family violence victims in purportedly giving false information to the police and requesting police to obtain a warrant to search alleged abuser's home for guns, so as to make advocate and private agency she was employed by "state actors" for purposes of civil rights suit; statute compelling state, local and private agencies to cooperate with Victim Advocate referred only to public official occupying that position, not private contractors; moreover, even assuming that advocate attempted to compel police to take action, this did not make her state actor, absent evidence that State exercised coercive power over advocate or provided significant encouragement, either overt or covert, for her actions. Szekeres v. Schaeffer, D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Applicant failed to state cause of action against under § 1983 against private company which had been contracted by Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to administer employment screening tests, where he failed to allege an independent substantive basis for such claim. Nabozny v. NCS Pearson, Inc., D.Nev.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 1201. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Although private defendants were not performing a public function when they acted to involuntarily confine plaintiff in mental hospital, genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether public defendants compelled the private defendants to take action and as to whether the private defendants conspired with public defendants in violation of plaintiff's due process rights so as to render the private defendants state actors for purposes of plaintiff's § 1983 claim, precluding summary judgment in favor of private defendants. Ruhlmann v. Ulster County Dept. of Social Services, N.D.N.Y.2002, 234 F.Supp.2d 140. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

State compulsion test, for determining whether private conduct is attributable to state for purposes of § 1983, requires that state, or political subdivision thereof, exercise such coercive power over private actor to take a particular action that the choice was really state's and not private actor's. Sanders v. Prentice-Hall Corp. System, Inc., W.D.Tenn.1997, 969 F.Supp. 481, affirmed 178 F.3d 1296. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Under state compulsion test for determining whether private entity's conduct is fairly attributable to the state for § 1983 purposes, private company providing administrative and management services to city hospital was not acting "under color of state law" for § 1983 purposes when it terminated employee who was hired by company to serve as administrator of city hospital; hospital did not exercise any coercive power, either overt or covert, over company's decision to terminate employee and hospital had no involvement in the decision to terminate employee. Perdue v. Quorum Health Resources, Inc., M.D.Tenn.1996, 934 F.Supp. 919. Civil Rights 1326(11)

635. Symbiotic relationship with state, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

To prevail under the symbiotic relationship test, a §§ 1983 plaintiff must show that the State has so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with the private defendant that it must be recognized as a joint participant in the challenged activity. Mitchell v. Home, S.D.N.Y.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Section 1983 "color of state law" criterion was unsatisfied in action brought by residents of private low-income housing facility challenging owner's rule prohibiting residents from having overnight guests, where city, state, and federal officials were not involved in promulgation and enforcement of rule, or even aware of it; significant levels of federal and state funding for facility, including its private security service which enforced rule, and regulatory requirements overseen by city, did not amount to "symbiotic relationship." Young v. Halle Housing Associates, L.P., S.D.N.Y.2001, 152 F.Supp.2d 355.

Under the symbiotic relationship/nexus test for determining whether private party's conduct is attributable to the state for purposes of § 1983, private company which provided administrative and management services to city hospital was not acting "under color of state law" for § 1983 purposes when it terminated employee who was hired by company to serve as administrator of hospital; employee failed to allege symbiotic relationship or nexus and there was no intimate involvement of hospital in decision to terminate employee. Perdue v. Quorum Health Resources, Inc., M.D.Tenn.1996, 934 F.Supp. 919. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private day school located in federal office building was not federal actor, as required to support father's claim that school violated his First Amendment rights when it deprived him of access to his son's records; although father claimed that school officials violated the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) and that federal employees acted at school's behest when they escorted him from building, his allegations failed to show there was "symbiotic" relationship between school and federal government. Williams v. Discovery Day School, E.D.Pa.1996, 924 F.Supp. 41. Constitutional Law 82(10); Schools 8

Cable television company that cancelled cable television program was not "state actor" for § 1983 purposes under either state-function approach or symbiotic relationship approach, for purposes of cable television programmer's § 1983 action against company; ownership and operation of entertainment facility were not powers traditionally exclusively reserved to state, nor were they functions of sovereignty, and symbiotic relationship did not exist between state and company. Glendora v. Cablevision Systems Corp, S.D.N.Y.1995, 893 F.Supp. 264. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Volunteer fire company was not "state actor" under symbiotic relationship test for purposes of § 1983 action against company for allegedly failing to adopt prudent practices in admitting members to company, in view of evidence that company had title to buildings and equipment, with municipality having only reversionary interest, that only indicia of state involvement between company and municipality where financial assistance and routine state regulation, and that company was self-governing and set its own standards. Mark v. Borough of Hatboro,

E.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 966, affirmed 51 F.3d 1137, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 165, 516 U.S. 858, 133 L.Ed.2d 107. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Private action is transformed into "state action" for purposes of § 1983 under symbiotic relationship test when state has so far insinuated itself into position of interdependence with private party that it must be recognized as joint participant in challenged activity; in sum, symbiotic relationship test seeks to establish whether overall interest of government and private actor overlapped to such extent as to virtually coincide. Chan v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1992, 803 F.Supp. 710, affirmed 1 F.3d 96, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 472, 510 U.S. 978, 126 L.Ed.2d 423. Civil Rights 1326(5)

For § 1983 purposes, economic association between private defendant and state is not conclusive evidence that defendant's conduct amounts to state action; rather, there must be "symbiotic relationship," i.e., close nexus between defendant and state, such as when defendant performs traditionally public function. Domenech Fernandez v. Diversified Information Systems Corp., D.Puerto Rico 1991, 762 F.Supp. 1544, affirmed 957 F.2d 44. Civil Rights 1326(5)

An independent organization may be found to have state involvement under this section if it is involved in a symbiotic relationship with state government, or if there is nexus between challenged action and state regulatory scheme. Baker v. Cincinnati Metropolitan Housing Authority, S.D.Ohio 1980, 490 F.Supp. 520, affirmed 675 F.2d 836. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Under symbiotic relationship concept satisfying requirement of state action under this section, state action can only be effected by act of sovereign, not by plethora of private power and focus is not on private deprivation but on state authorization. Weiss v. Willow Tree Civic Ass'n, S.D.N.Y.1979, 467 F.Supp. 803. Civil Rights 1325

State action may be found under this section governing deprivation of civil rights if state and private institution have entered into a "symbiotic relationship" in which state has so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with private party that it must be recognized as a joint participant in challenged activity, or there is a sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of regulated entity so that action of latter may be fairly treated as that of state itself. Milner v. National School of Health Technology, E.D.Pa.1976, 409 F.Supp. 1389. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Finding of "state action" is proper when state and private party enter into "symbiotic relationship" conferring mutual benefits, a relationship sufficiently close that a state can be said to be the "partner" of the private party. Isaacs v. Board of Trustees of Temple University of Com. System of Higher Ed., E.D.Pa.1974, 385 F.Supp. 473. Civil Rights 1326(5)

The state must become a symbiotic partner with private enterprise in order for civil rights action for deprivation of rights under color of state law to lie. Ellingson v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., D.C.S.D.1973, 363 F.Supp. 1344. Civil Rights 1326(5)

636. ---- Education, schools and students, symbiotic relationship with state, attribution of private actions to state

"Symbiotic relationship" did not exist between nonprofit, privately operated school for maladjusted high school students and state so as to render school subject to suit under federal statute governing civil action for deprivation of rights, notwithstanding that virtually all of school's income was derived from government funding, where school's fiscal relationship with state was not different from that of many contractors performing services for government. Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, U.S.Mass.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2764, 457 U.S. 830, 73 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1326(7)

in enforcing its policies prohibiting alcohol, drugs, and video and tape recorders from center were insufficient to establish symbiotic relationship between university, concert promoter, and private firm providing security for concert to satisfy state action requirement for § 1983 action by concertgoers alleging that they were subjected to unreasonable pat-down searches in violation of Fourth Amendment. Gallagher v. Neil Young Freedom Concert, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1442. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Under symbiotic relationship test, relationship between Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and university which was "state-aided" but not "state-related" was insufficient to establish "state action" required to support imposition of § 1983 liability on university for revocation of resident physician's medical degree; neither receipt of state funds nor conditions appended to them required Commonwealth's extensive involvement with university, which retained autonomy of private institution operating in state-regulated field. Imperiale v. Hahnemann University, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 966 F.2d 125. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Pennsylvania had so far insinuated itself into position of interdependence with two universities that "symbiotic relationship" existed between Commonwealth and universities, and actions taken by those two institutions were, therefore, actions taken under color of state law and were subject to scrutiny under this section. Krynicky v. University of Pittsburgh, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1984, 742 F.2d 94, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 2018, 471 U.S. 1015, 85 L.Ed.2d 300. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Fact that City of Providence conveyed, in 1948, a building to postgraduate school, that school granted to the state an easement in other property for historical purposes, that five of the 43 directors of the school were state and local officials serving ex officio, that school received federal funds channelled through the state council on arts, and that there were statutory requirements for annual report and visitation rights for the state department of education did not create such a symbiotic relationship between the school and the state so as to make conduct of school in denying tenure to female teacher attributable to the state. Lamb v. Rantoul, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1977, 561 F.2d 409. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private day school located in federal office building was not a state actor, as required to support father's civil rights claim arising when he was allegedly denied access to his son's records, where state was not responsible for choosing any of the school's officers or agents, was not responsible for setting school's tuition and was not required to fund school absent act of state legislature. Williams v. Discovery Day School, E.D.Pa.1996, 924 F.Supp. 41. Civil Rights 1326(6)

637. ---- Employment, symbiotic relationship with state, attribution of private actions to state

Pennsylvania's characterization of foster parents as employees of the county children and youth services agency that designated them foster parents did not automatically make foster parents state actors for purposes of foster child's §§1983 action against them alleging deprivation of Fourteenth Amendment right to be free from physical harm. Leshko v. Servis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 423 F.3d 337. Constitutional Law 254(2)

There was not a symbiotic relationship between the Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority and private management company, for purposes of finding indirect state action in discharge of management company's employees for purposes of civil rights action, although management contract was clearly beneficial to the Authority, where the company was essentially independent in the conduct of its daily affairs and there was nothing to suggest that the Authority profited in any way from discriminatory practice allegedly utilized by the company. Rodriguez-Garcia v. Davila, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 904 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1326(11)

For purposes of claims of former employees that their rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 4, 5, 6, and 14 had been violated by unauthorized searches and by discharges, company which was responsible for providing the necessary personnel, materials, transportation, logistics, management, and services required to support United States Sinai Field Mission, which was to play a dominant part in the Mission, which was required to work closely with the governments of Israel and Egypt, and whose employees were immunized from all local criminal, civil, tax, and custom laws was engaged in state action under both the public function and symbiosis theory. Dobyns v. E-Systems, Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1982, 667 F.2d 1219. Constitutional Law 82(5); Constitutional Law 254(4); Searches And Seizures 33

Employer and its chief executive officer were not liable under §§1983 for alleged racial discrimination, where they were not alleged to be officers of the state, and employee did not allege any collaboration between them and agents of the state. Matthews v. Marten Transp., Ltd., W.D.Wis.2005, 354 F.Supp.2d 899. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Mere fact that person who molested child was teacher employed by school district at time of sexual assault was insufficient to show "state action" required to support civil rights action under § 1983 against school district and school officials where the molestations occurred five to six months after the teacher/student relationship had ended by virtue of child's withdrawal from the school, and while teacher was visiting child's home and family on his own volition, with permission of child's mother, and pursuant to personal relationship that he had developed with the family. Becerra v. Asher, S.D.Tex.1996, 921 F.Supp. 1538, affirmed 105 F.3d 1042, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 111 F.3d 894, supplemented on denial of rehearing, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 82, 522 U.S. 824, 139 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Fact that area bridge and tunnel authority subsidized private employer hired to count toll receipts and fact that authority was employer's only major client was not proof of "symbiotic relationship" which would allow finding that actions of private employer were those of state actor for purposes of § 1983 action. Atkinson v. B.C.C. Associates, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1993, 829 F.Supp. 637. Civil Rights 1326(11)

For purposes of § 1983 action brought by employees of private corporation which provided auxiliary services to public and nonpublic school students, state statute governing wages and benefits for public school employees did not create symbiotic relationship between corporation and Commonwealth; corporation was independent contractor whose services could be discontinued by local school board by simply not renewing contract, corporation was not created by state statute, was not part of public school system, and was not instrumentality of Commonwealth, neither corporation itself nor its operation were established by law, and there was no indication that corporation enjoyed contractual relationship with Commonwealth. Denchy v. Education and Training Consultants of Pa., Inc., E.D.Pa.1992, 803 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Railroad employee failed to sufficiently allege facts that would fulfill either "symbiotic relationship test" or "close nexus test" for finding that railroad was acting under color of state law when it allegedly caused employee to be prosecuted criminally, discharged him, and published allegedly libelous letter, and thus employee failed to state claim for such actions under federal civil rights statute, where employee merely alleged that railroad was corporation organized under various New York laws, including Public Authorities Law. Hannah v. Metro-North Commuter R. Co., S.D.N.Y.1990, 753 F.Supp. 1169. Civil Rights 1396

638. ---- Gambling and wagering, symbiotic relationship with state, attribution of private actions to state

Action of purchasers of harness racing facility in perpetrating fraud on industrial development agency, in representing that purchasers intended to continue operation of track, did not give rise to state action such as would support § 1983 action against purchasers by horse breeders' association and its members; there was no symbiotic relationship between purchasers and the agency. Standardbred Owners Ass'n v. Roosevelt Raceway Associates, L.P., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 985 F.2d 102. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Racing magazine publisher seeking injunction prohibiting nonprofit racing association from limiting publisher's access to association's racetracks established likelihood of proving state action under symbiotic relationship test, where association was in real sense merely conduit through which money passed from betting public to state's coffers, state legislature placed power, prestige, and good name of state behind association in order to assure betting public that racing and wagering were conducted legitimately, and state was entangled with association's board of trustees and its property. Stevens v. New York Racing Ass'n, Inc., E.D.N.Y.1987, 665 F.Supp. 164. Civil Rights 1326(1)

639. Nexus between state and challenged activity generally, attribution of private actions to state

Although contract between county and private employer that operated correctional facility allowed county to regulate employees to some degree, contract did not establish nexus between county and employer's decision to fire employee, as required for employee to bring § 1983 action against employer on grounds that firing was state action; contract required employer to follow regulations for training and monitoring of employees and gave county right to preclude employment of any particular individual, but did not regulate termination or disciplinary processes. George v. Pacific-CSC Work Furlough, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 91 F.3d 1227, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 746, 519 U.S. 1081, 136 L.Ed.2d 684. Civil Rights 1326(11)

"Nexus test" for establishing state action in § 1983 claim insures that state will be held liable for constitutional violations only if it is responsible for specific conduct of which plaintiff complains. Gallagher v. Neil Young Freedom Concert, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1442. Civil Rights 1325

"Nexus test" for determining whether private conduct is fairly attributable to the state for § 1983 purposes requires sufficiently close relationship, such as through state regulation or contract, between the state and the private actor so that the action taken may be attributed to the state. Ellison v. Garbarino, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1995, 48 F.3d 192. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Under state compulsion test, nexus/joint action test, and public function test, private physicians and private hospital who involuntarily admit mentally disturbed person pursuant to Massachusetts statute do not act "under color of state law" and, thus, are not subject to suit under § 1983. Rockwell v. Cape Cod Hosp., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1994, 26 F.3d 254. Civil Rights 1326(4)

For purposes of § 1983 claim, under "governmental nexus test," private party acts under color of state law if there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of regulated entity so that action of latter may be fairly treated as that of state itself. Lopez v. Department of Health Services, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 939 F.2d 881. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Nursing home's claim against nurse surveyor, an employee of Wisconsin Department of Health and Human Services, arising out of her malicious filing of "notice of violations" against nursing home and agency's subsequent placement of nursing home on "suspension of referrals" list, the legal effect of which was to preclude state social service agencies and departments from referring patients to nursing home, did not state a cognizable claim under this section, as nexus between infringement upon nursing home's constitutionally protected rights, namely, placement on list, and nurse surveyor's issuance of the notice of violations was simply too attenuated to permit finding that she subjected or caused nursing home to be subjected to deprivation of due process. Cameo Convalescent Center, Inc. v. Senn, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1984, 738 F.2d 836, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 780, 469 U.S. 1106, 83 L.Ed.2d 775. Civil Rights 1395(1)

Absent sufficient state connexity i. e., sufficient connection of the state with a particular aspect of defendant's conduct so that the act is treated as that of the state itself, a nonstate defendant's private conduct is not actionable under this section. Sims v. Jefferson Downs, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1980, 611 F.2d 609. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Mere state action is insufficient to support a cause of action under this section; there must be a sufficient nexus between the state action and the private discrimination. Life Ins. Co. of North America v. Reichardt, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1979, 591 F.2d 499, on remand 485 F.Supp. 56. Civil Rights 1325

State involvement in any manner in activities of private institution does not necessarily establish state action required for civil rights action for deprivation of rights; its existence depends on whether there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of private entity so that action of latter may be fairly treated as that of state itself. Graseck v. Mauceri, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1978, 582 F.2d 203, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1048, 439 U.S. 1129, 59 L.Ed.2d 91. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Parents stated claim that foster parent was state actor, amenable to suit under § 1983 for alleged abuse of their child, under nexus doctrine, when they alleged that state agents knew of abuse and collaborated with foster parent to cover up her activities. Howard v. Malac, D.Mass.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 132. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Standard for determining existence of state action, for purposes of § 1983 action, is whether there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of defendants so that action of latter may be fairly treated as that of state itself. Eggert v. Tuckerton Volunteer Fire Co. No. 1, D.N.J.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1230. Civil Rights 1325

To find state action for § 1983 purposes, there must be sufficient nexus between alleged act and the state. Federspiel v. Ohio Republican Party State Cent. Committee, S.D.Ohio 1994, 867 F.Supp. 617, affirmed 85 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1325

"Close nexus test" for determining whether there is state action in § 1983 action inquires whether state can be deemed responsible for specific conduct of which plaintiff complains. Mark v. Borough of Hatboro, E.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 966, affirmed 51 F.3d 1137, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 165, 516 U.S. 858, 133 L.Ed.2d 107. Civil Rights 1326(1)

In determining whether state action exists for purpose of action under this section, relevant inquiry is whether there is sufficient nexus between state and challenged activity, or whether state had sufficiently insinuated itself in position of interdependence with defendant so that it is joint participant in activity. Lyon v. Temple University of Com. System of Higher Ed., E.D.Pa.1981, 507 F.Supp. 471. Civil Rights 1325

For purposes of bringing an action pursuant to this section, there must be a sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of regulated entity so that action of latter may be fairly treated as that of state itself. Johnson v. Heinemann Candy Co., Inc., E.D.Wis.1975, 402 F.Supp. 714. Civil Rights 1326(7)

640. Concerted or joint action with state officials, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

Joint action with state official to accomplish prejudgment deprivation of constitutionally protected property interest will support claim against private party under 1871 civil rights statute. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., Inc., U.S.Va.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 457 U.S. 922, 73 L.Ed.2d 482. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether landlord opened tenant's apartment door at the direction of police officer precluded summary judgment in favor of police officer, on issue of whether officer was a state actor, in tenant's §§ 1983 claim, alleging violation of her Fourth Amendment rights in connection with warrantless entry into tenant's apartment to enable her former boyfriend to obtain his belongings. Harvey v. Plains Tp. Police Dept., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 421 F.3d 185, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2325. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Customer who was arrested by police officer for violating Massachusetts criminal trespass statute did not establish § 1983 claim against restaurant's manager, absent evidence of joint discriminatory action between manager and officer--whether by plan, prearrangement, conspiracy, custom, or police--to deprive customer of any right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Alexis v. McDonald's Restaurants of Massachusetts, Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1995, 67 F.3d 341, on remand 1996 WL 463675. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Pat-down searches by private security officers before concert at public university auditorium did not satisfy joint action test for state action under § 1983, where there was no evidence that university officials jointly participated in pat-down searches. Gallagher v. Neil Young Freedom Concert, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1442. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Generally, private use of state-sanctioned remedies will not rise to level of state action, for purpose of imposing § 1983 liability; however, state action will be found when private parties make extensive use of state procedures with overt, significant assistance of state officials. Apostol v. Landau, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 957 F.2d 339, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Private contractor that provided mental health services for jail was not engaged in joint action with warden when contractor discharged counselor allegedly for disclosing sexual abuse of female inmates by jail personnel, was not acting pursuant to delegated authority, and did not act under color of state law within meaning of § 1983, even though warden wanted counselor discharged; no government employees were shown to have knowledge of sexual abuse disclosures. Cunningham v. Southlake Center For Mental Health, Inc., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1991, 924 F.2d 106. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Mere furnishing of information to police officers does not constitute joint action under color of state law which renders private citizen liable under this subchapter. Benavidez v. Gunnell, C.A.10 (Utah) 1983, 722 F.2d 615. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Joint conduct sufficient to support finding that private parties acting with state officials in unlawful conduct are acting under "color of law" exists when the private and public parties act with the common understanding or a meeting of the minds. McNally v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1976, 532 F.2d 69, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 150, 429 U.S. 855, 50 L.Ed.2d 131. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Conduct which is part private and part governmental must be more strictly scrutinized in determining whether conduct constitutes "state action" when claims of racial discrimination are made. Jackson v. Statler Foundation, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1973, 496 F.2d 623, amended, on remand. Civil Rights 1325

State action for § 1983 purposes did not exist under joint activity test with respect to actions taken by state employees credit union in connection with former employee's termination and post-termination efforts to collect on former employee's past-due loans, inasmuch as credit union's receipt of peripheral services from state, for which credit union reimbursed state, did not render state joint participant in challenged actions, and state did not receive any benefits from either former employee's termination or credit union's attempts to collect delinquent loans. Hauschild v. Nielsen, D.Neb.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 995. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(11)

Former employer's conduct in merely providing law enforcement authorities with employee's personnel records, which led to employee's subsequent criminal conviction and discharge, did not constitute joint action with state rendering former employer liable under § 1983; state made independent decision to pursue criminal prosecution against employee, and former employer's termination of employee was singularly private act. Heaning v. NYNEX-New York, S.D.N.Y.1996, 945 F.Supp. 640. Civil Rights 1326(5)

If private party acted with help of or in concert with state officials, private actor may be liable under § 1983 based on state action; state action may also be found when private party has been delegated power traditionally exclusively reserved to state, or if there is sufficiently close nexus between state and challenged action of regulated entity so that action of latter may fairly be treated as action of state itself. Budnick v. Baybanks, Inc., D.Mass.1996, 921 F.Supp. 30. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Generally speaking, acts of private persons may constitute actions under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 action when private persons act jointly with state officials, or when their conduct may be chargeable to state.

Rullan v. Council of Co-Owners of McKinley Court Condominium, D.Puerto Rico 1995, 899 F.Supp. 857. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(5)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether store acted jointly with city police department in conducting surveillance of store's bathrooms for homosexual activity and whether store should be held liable in a § 1983 action brought by arrestee, precluding summary judgment. Gilbert v. Sears, Roebuck and Co., M.D.Fla.1995, 899 F.Supp. 597. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Former band director could not recover under § 1983 from assistant superintendent/business manager of school district, for jointly engaging with high school principal, who was alleged to be state actor, and intentionally or recklessly interfering with band director's continued expectation of employment by giving false and misleading information to principal about band director's disciplinary actions toward assistant superintendent's son and encouraging principal to force band director to resign; mere allegation that assistant superintendent was jointly engaged with state actor was insufficient to state claim of state action based on joint action, and providing information and encouraging state actor to act in certain way, without more, does not constitute joint action. Howard v. Board of Educ. of Sycamore Community Unit School Dist. No. 427, N.D.Ill.1995, 876 F.Supp. 959. Civil Rights 1326(11)

A private party's adherence to the law, or a state-tolerated disregard for the law, does not support a joint action or conspiracy claim sufficient to establish the "under color of state law" element of a cause of action under civil rights statute. Patty v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., A Nynex Co., D.R.I.1990, 745 F.Supp. 806. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Federal officials who are not acting in concert with state agents are not considered to be state actors for purposes of § 1983 and thus are not acting under color of state law. Yocum v. Dixon, C.D.Ill.1990, 729 F.Supp. 616. Civil Rights 1327

Even a considerable degree of cooperation between a private party and the state does not, standing alone, justify a finding that challenged action occurred under state law or that civil rights action for deprivation of rights could thus be maintained. Jones v. Taibbi, D.C.Mass.1981, 508 F.Supp. 1069. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Federal inmate could not bring §§ 1983 action against private attorney for refusing to represent him, absent allegation that attorney was state actor, that attorney had acted together with or had obtained significant aid from state officials, or that attorney's conduct was otherwise chargeable to state. Nagy v. Spence, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2006, 172 Fed.Appx. 847, 2006 WL 766926, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Church hierarchs were not "state actors," for purposes of action brought against them under § 1983 by former parishioners of suppressed congregations, where there was no joint participation between hierarchs and any state officials in disposing of parish property; fact that hierarchs' authority to suppress parishes and dispose of parish property flowed from general state property law, and existence of state law mandating state deference to hierarchs' exercise of authority over church property, merely reflected constitutionally compelled prohibition against state meddling in religious affairs. St. Matthew's Slovak Roman Catholic Congregation v. Most Reverend Wuerl, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 106 Fed.Appx. 761, 2004 WL 1618530, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(5)

641. ---- Immunity of officials, concerted or joint action with state officials, attribution of private actions to state

Fact that a state official is immune from liability under this section does not mean that his actions are not sufficiently improper to fall within rule that acts of private parties acting jointly with state agents constitute state action for purposes of this section. Gresham Park Community Organization v. Howell, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1981, 652 F.2d 1227. Civil Rights 1326(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

In determining whether a private individual, actively conspiring with an absolutely immune state official with the intent to purposely and knowingly deprive another of his rights secured under the Constitution and laws of the United States, is acting under color of law as required by this section, the critical inquiry is whether plaintiff has demonstrated the existence of a significant nexus or entanglement between the absolutely immune state official and the private party in relation to the steps taken by each to fulfill the objects of their conspiracy. Norton v. Liddel, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1980, 620 F.2d 1375. Conspiracy 7.5(3)

When private persons engage in prohibited conduct with nonimmune state officials, they are acting under color of state law for purposes of this section. Grow v. Fisher, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1975, 523 F.2d 875. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Police officer ordering strip search of arrestee was not entitled to qualified immunity from arrestee's suit claiming violation of Fourth Amendment; no reasonable officer could possibly conclude, as had officer in present case, that strip search could be conducted merely because arrest had been on drug charges, without further particularized reasonable belief that arrestee was secreting drugs, and search did not comport with county policy. Sarnicola v. County of Westchester, S.D.N.Y.2002, 229 F.Supp.2d 259. Civil Rights 1376(6)

Even if chief of police and mayor would enjoy a qualified immunity with respect to suit by police officer under this section, joint participation by fraternal order of policeman and three fellow officers in a conspiracy with them would imbue such other defendants with "color of state law" within meaning of this section. Shoemaker v. Allender, E.D.Pa.1981, 520 F.Supp. 266.

Where public defendants, as municipal corporations, were not "persons" within this section, and were thus immune from suit, private defendants could not be found to have acted "under color of State law" on basis of joint activity with the public defendants. Russell v. Town of Mamaroneck, S.D.N.Y.1977, 440 F.Supp. 607. Civil Rights 1326(5)

642. ---- Knowledge and intent, concerted or joint action with state officials, attribution of private actions to state

To act under color of state law for purposes of this section does not require that the defendant be an officer of the state; it is enough that he is a willful participant in joint action with the state or its agents; private persons, jointly engaged with state officials in the challenged action, are acting under color of law for purposes of this section. Dennis v. Sparks, U.S.Tex.1980, 101 S.Ct. 183, 449 U.S. 24, 66 L.Ed.2d 185. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private person who discriminates on basis of race with knowledge of and pursuant to state-enforced custom requiring such discrimination is participant in joint activity with state and is acting under color of custom, for purposes of this section. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Private individual may be subject to liability under § 1983 if he or she willfully collaborated with official state actor in deprivation of federal right, while state actor may be subject to liability for action physically undertaken by private actors in violation of plaintiff's liberty or property rights if state actor directed or aided and abetted the violation. Dwares v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1993, 985 F.2d 94. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1354

For purposes of § 1983 claim, under "joint action test," private party acts under color of state law if he is willing participant in joint action with state or its agents. Lopez v. Department of Health Services, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1991, 939 F.2d 881. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Nothing more than understanding and willful participation between private and state defendants is necessary to show kind of joint activity that will subject private parties to § 1983 liability. Bendiburg v. Dempsey, C.A.11 (Ga.) 1990, 909 F.2d 463, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 2053, 500 U.S. 932, 114 L.Ed.2d 459. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Joint actions between state and private citizens exist and private parties are acting "under color of law," for purposes of § 1983, where private party is willful participant in joint action with state or its agents. Collins v. Womancare, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1989, 878 F.2d 1145, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 865, 493 U.S. 1056, 107 L.Ed.2d 949. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private parties act under color of state law, for purpose of § 1983 liability, if they willfully participate in joint action with state official to deprive others of constitutional rights. United Steelworkers of America v. Phelps Dodge Corp., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1989, 865 F.2d 1539, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 51, 493 U.S. 809, 107 L.Ed.2d 20, on subsequent appeal 896 F.2d 403. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Private racetrack's general manager was willful participant in joint activity with state or its agents where general manager solicited use of state power to enforce unlawful private unilateral eviction of horse trainer who held valid license from Louisiana State Racing Commission and, without participation by stewards, who were state officials, there could have been no eviction and no claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Sims v. Jefferson Downs Racing Ass'n, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 778 F.2d 1068. Civil Rights 1326(5)

To act under "color of" state law for purposes of this section does not require that defendant be an officer of state; private parties may incur liability for their conduct when individual actor is a willful participant in joint activity with state or its agents. Annunziato v. The Gan, Inc., C.A.2 (Conn.) 1984, 744 F.2d 244. See, also, Martin-Marietta Corp. v. Bendix Corp., C.A. 6 (Mich.) 1982, 690 F.2d 558; Gresham Park Community Organization v. Howell, C.A. 5 (Ga.) 1981, 652 F.2d 1227; Fraser v. Schultze, N.D.Ill.1987, 663 F.Supp. 512; Baltz v. Shelley, N.D.Ill.1987, 661 F.Supp. 169. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Mere fact that defendant, rather than plaintiff, was hired for position as town assessor did not establish that defendant "acted" or that any act was "under color of state law," as elements of §§ 1983 claims for violation of First Amendment rights of political affiliation and free speech and for violation of equal protection rights. Bailey v. Town of Evans, New York, W.D.N.Y.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 427. Civil Rights 1359

Store manager's lodging of complaint with police that employee had in the past threatened he "had a gun and was going to shoot the place up," which allegedly caused police officers to escort employee to store parking lot and search his car, did not amount to "willful collaboration" giving rise to §§ 1983 liability. Johns v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., S.D.N.Y.2004, 221 F.R.D. 400. Civil Rights 1326(11)

642A. ---- Particular cases action joint, concerted or joint action with state officials, attributions of private actions to state

Casino patron's allegations that two of casino's private security guards acted in concert with state trooper during joint custodial questioning of patron, denying patron assistance of counsel, were sufficient to state a §§ 1983 claim against security guards. Lassoff v. New Jersey, D.N.J.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 483. Civil Rights 1326(5)

643. ---- Conspiracy, concerted or joint action with state officials, attribution of private actions to state

Incoming mayor and council-elect did not conspire with city attorney to deprive city clerk of his job, in violation of city clerk's protected interest in completing appointed term, as required under the joint action theory to establish that incoming mayor and council-elect were acting under the color of state law for purposes of clerk's §§ 1983 action alleging that he was deprived of his job without due process; although city attorney advised the council-elect about the possible legal implications of their decision not to reappoint the clerk, no evidence indicated that attorney advised the council-elect to terminate the clerk and the attorney actually tried to persuade the council to reappoint the clerk. Burrell v. City of Mattoon, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2004, 378 F.3d 642. Civil Rights 1326(11)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Hotel could not be held liable for civil rights conspiracy on basis of respondeat superior liability for joint actions taken by its employee with sheriff's deputies in arresting and detaining hotel patrons. Zivojinovich v. Ritz Carlton Hotel Co., LLC, M.D.Fla.2006, 445 F.Supp.2d 1337. Conspiracy 13

Class member's mere belief, based on his "experience" that such meetings may occur during litigation, that an ex parte chambers meeting, at which state trial court judge and attorneys conspired to allow attorneys to obtain excessive attorney fees as part of class action settlement in antitrust litigation in state court, must have occurred, did not establish that attorneys, as private parties, engaged jointly with a state official with respect to challenged action, as basis for meeting state action requirement for §§ 1983 claim against attorneys. Copple v. Astrella & Rice, P.C., N.D.Cal.2006, 442 F.Supp.2d 829. Civil Rights 1422

New York state teacher who was terminated from position as Special Projects (SP) Coordinator stated §§ 1983 conspiracy claim against union official by alleging he acted in concert with other defendants to deprive her of her constitutional rights and performed overt act in furtherance of their goal by coercing her to sign letter forcing her to give up her contractual and due process rights in connection with disciplinary proceedings, which allegedly led to her termination from that position. Peres v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 15. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Mother's attorney who reported information to police in connection with investigation of father for fleeing with child was not liable to father under §§ 1983 for alleged arrest and detention without probable cause; merely reporting information to the police did not make attorney an interdependent joint actor with them, the encouragement that domestic violence advocate gave to continue gathering information did not make attorney a state actor, and attorney's cooperation with police did not establish conspiracy to deprive father of civil rights. Meuse v. Stults, D.Mass.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 358. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Failure to show that police officer, called at time separated wife and friend searched house owned by recently deceased husband, conspired in search, precluded existence of state actor required to bring §§ 1983 claim that search violated Fourth Amendment privacy rights of owner's girlfriend, who was continuing one year, four month period of residency. Ostensen v. Suffolk County, E.D.N.Y.2005, 378 F.Supp.2d 140. Searches And Seizures 33

Alleged violations of due process and equal protection rights of former employee of state employees credit union did not result from exercise of coercive power by state, and therefore challenged actions by credit union's president and member of its board of directors in connection with former employee's termination and credit union's post-termination loan collection efforts did not qualify as state action for § 1983 purposes, given absence of evidence that either state or state agent or employee had any input or communication with credit union regarding former employee's termination by and subsequent interaction with credit union, much less exercised any coercive influence. Hauschild v. Nielsen, D.Neb.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 995. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(11)

To establish conspiracy under Section 1983 to deprive plaintiff of his First Amendment right to free speech, plaintiff must prove either by direct or circumstantial evidence (1) agreement between two or more state actors, or state actor and private entity, (2) to act in concert to inflict unconstitutional injury, and (3) overt act done in furtherance of that goal. Stein v. Janos, S.D.N.Y.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 256. Conspiracy 7.5(2)

Evidence that wife and her sister appeared together with police officers at marital home where husband lived, for purpose of carrying out court order which permitted wife to retrieve various household items from home for use while divorce proceeding was pending, and required presence of officers, was insufficient to establish that there was a conspiracy between wife, her sister, and officers to violate husband's constitutional rights against search and seizure, for purposes of establishing liability under §1983. Todd v. City of Natchitoches, Louisiana, W.D.La.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 793, appeal dismissed 72 Fed.Appx. 969, 2003 WL 21997581. Conspiracy 7.5(2); Conspiracy

644. Governmental character of action, attribution of private actions to state

Neither this section nor U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 erects shield against merely private conduct, however discriminatory or wrongful, but conduct which is formally private may become so entwined with governmental policies or so impregnated with governmental character as to become subject to the limitations placed upon state action. Barrett v. United Hospital, S.D.N.Y.1974, 376 F.Supp. 791, affirmed 506 F.2d 1395. Civil Rights 1325

Conduct that is formally private may become so entwined with governmental policies or so impregnated with a governmental character as to become state action within this section. Pendrell v. Chatham College, W.D.Pa.1974, 370 F.Supp. 494. Civil Rights 1325

645. Exclusive government function, attribution of private actions to state

Indian Health Service (IHS) clinical psychologist who practiced on Indian reservation was not a state actor under § 1983 on theory that in participating in placing Indian child in protective custody she was performing a function exclusively reserved to the states, even assuming that her conduct could be viewed as removing the child from her mother's custody; tribal agreement with state under which social services were provided to reservation children specifically provided that a reservation child could not be removed from her home or maintained in a place other than her home except pursuant to tribal law provisions, and that tribal social service agency and its agents and employees were not agents of the state. E.F.W. v. St. Stephen's Indian High School, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 2001, 264 F.3d 1297. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Under exclusive government function approach for detecting presence of action under color of state law for purposes of § 1983, public funding and service to the public were insufficient by themselves to show that volunteer first aid squad was performing exclusive government function in its treatment of arrestee such that squad was acting under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 liability. Groman v. Township of Manalapan, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1995, 47 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1326(7)

In determining whether action performed by alleged state actor is an exclusive state function, to provide basis for § 1983 liability, function must be of type which state could not be permitted to escape its responsibilities by delegation. Johnson v. Pinkerton Academy, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1988, 861 F.2d 335, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1325

646. Public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

In certain instances, the actions of private entities may, within meaning of this section, be considered to be infused with "state action," if those private parties are performing a function which is public or governmental in nature and which would have to be performed by the government but for the activities of the private parties. Perez v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 499 F.2d 761. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private entity may be considered to be infused with "state action," supporting entity's potential liability under §§ 1983, if it is performing function public or governmental in nature and which would have to be performed by government but for entity's activities. Vega v. Fox, S.D.N.Y.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 172. Civil Rights 1326(4)

"Public function test" for determining whether a party is a state actor for purposes of § 1983 action is satisfied if private party performs a function that is traditionally exclusive prerogative of state. Okunieff v. Rosenberg, S.D.N.Y.1998, 996 F.Supp. 343, affirmed 166 F.3d 507, certiorari denied 120 S.Ct. 1002, 528 U.S. 1144, 145 L.Ed.2d 945. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Public function test for determining in § 1983 action that private entity has engaged in state action holds that state action may be established when private entity acts in capacity of state by engaging in activity that has traditionally been exclusive prerogative of state. Chumbley v. Gashinski, M.D.Fla.1997, 983 F.Supp. 1406, affirmed in part, reversed in part 196 F.3d 1260. Civil Rights 1326(4)

To hold a private party liable under this section, plaintiffs must establish that private party's actions are properly attributable to the state and hence constitute "state action," but private party can be held liable for discriminatory acts if, in performing the acts, it asserts powers or rights traditionally exclusively reserved to the state. Stewart v. Hannon, N.D.Ill.1979, 469 F.Supp. 1142. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Delegation of a public function to a private citizen or tolerance of private performance of a public function is indicative but not determinative of existence of state action for this section. Jacobs v. Huie, N.D.Tex.1976, 447 F.Supp. 478. Civil Rights 1326(4); Constitutional Law 254(2)

In respect to this section, questions of "state action" generally arise when the state has somehow involved itself in the activity under scrutiny or when a private entity has assumed a state or public function. Baron v. Carson, N.D.Ill.1976, 410 F.Supp. 299. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1326(4)

The public function-state action theory holds that when the state delegates the performance of essential governmental functions to an otherwise private entity, the performance of that function cloaks that entity with the aura of the state, and the entity's action in discharging that function are taken under color of law. Player v. State of Ala. Dept. of Pensions and Sec., M.D.Ala.1975, 400 F.Supp. 249, affirmed 536 F.2d 1385. Civil Rights 1326(4)

"State action" for purposes of this section does not exist merely because individual or institution in question performs "public function" that the state, in its own panoply of activities, performs. Isaacs v. Board of Trustees of Temple University of Com. System of Higher Ed., E.D.Pa.1974, 385 F.Supp. 473. Civil Rights 1325

Private conduct will not support action under this section but private persons performing traditionally public functions may become liable. Magro v. Lentini Bros. Moving & Storage Co., E.D.N.Y.1971, 338 F.Supp. 464, affirmed 460 F.2d 1064, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 2074, 406 U.S. 961, 32 L.Ed.2d 349, rehearing denied 92 S.Ct. 2505, 408 U.S. 932, 33 L.Ed.2d 345. Civil Rights 1325; Civil Rights 1326(4)

647. ---- Banking and lending, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

In action under this section brought by borrowers against lenders, with whom wage assignment agreements had been entered into, seeking a judgment declaring New York wage assignment statute, McKinney's N.Y.Personal Property Law, § 46 et seq., to be unconstitutional as violative of the process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, there was no "state action" on theory that the statute vested the lenders with a function traditionally performed by the state, since the wage assignment function has always been that of a private levy without a prior court order and there was no "state action" on theory that state was entwined with and had become a partner of the creditor finance companies, where the companies were not recipients of state aid by grant or loan and where their facilities were privately owned. Bond v. Dentzer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 494 F.2d 302, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 65, 419 U.S. 837, 42 L.Ed.2d 63. Civil Rights 1326(9)

648. ---- Citizen's arrests, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Airline employee's alleged "citizen's arrest" of airline pilot for trespass did not make employee a "state actor," for purposes of pilot's § 1983 claim against airline and employee. Carey v. Continental Airlines, Inc., C.A.10 (Okla.) 1987, 823 F.2d 1402. Civil Rights 1326(1)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

That police officer informed resident manager of condominium complex about offense of harassment, gave him copy of statute defining offense, and advised him about procedures for making citizen's arrest after discussing matter with his supervisor was sufficient to establish that, upon officer's advice, resident manager exercised his right under state law to make citizen's arrest and satisfied state policy requirement for resident manager's liability under § 1983 as "state actor." Fraser v. County of Maui, D.Hawai'i 1994, 855 F.Supp. 1167. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Person making arrest is acting under color of law, within this section, if he is in fact acting as public officer. Bryant v. Donnell, W.D.Tenn.1965, 239 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1326(8)

649. ---- Commitment of persons, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Because physicians and hospitals confining persons pursuant to mental commitment statute are exercising power historically exercised by government, such acts constitute state action. Brown v. Jensen, D.C.Colo.1983, 572 F.Supp. 193. Civil Rights 1326(1)

650. ---- Contracting of function, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

State contractor and its employees are not "state actors" simply because they are carrying out state sponsored program and contractor is being compensated therefor by state; nor does fact that activity being performed is public function render contractor and its employees state actors. Black by Black v. Indiana Area School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 985 F.2d 707. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Victim advocate and not-for-profit corporation for which she worked were not subject to §§ 1983 liability as "state actors" under public function doctrine based on their provision of services to family violence victims in working with courts, absent any evidence that victim support services were exclusive prerogative of state. Szekeres v. Schaeffer, D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1326(4)

651. ---- Custody of children, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Foster parents, by providing care to child in foster home, did not perform a traditionally and exclusively public function under Pennsylvania law, and thus, they were not state actors for purposes of foster child's §§1983 action against them alleging deprivation of Fourteenth Amendment right to be free from physical harm; foster child's care was not delivered in institutional setting, hands-on care of foster children was not exclusively governmental, but could be tendered by families, private organizations, or public agencies, and placing children in foster homes traditionally was function of private organizations in Pennsylvania. Leshko v. Servis, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 423 F.3d 337. Constitutional Law 254(4)

In accepting and retaining custody of children alleged to have been "neglected" or "abandoned," private child-caring institutions perform a "public function" and there is thus "state action" within meaning of this section. Perez v. Sugarman, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 499 F.2d 761. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Fact questions existed as to whether nonprofit corporation that operated home for young adults transitioning out of foster care or psychiatric facilities was entwined with state, precluding summary judgment, on nonstate-actor grounds, in 19-year-old resident's §§ 1983 action against nonprofit and individual employees alleging failure to intervene in assault committed by second resident; care of mentally disabled, abused or neglected young adults was within duty of state under New York law, nonprofit's public function was directly related to specific acts alleged, and home was originally developed with state support. Vega v. Fox, S.D.N.Y.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 172. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Private foster care agency acted under color of state law for purposes of foster child's §§ 1983 claim based on injuries he sustained while in foster care when it assisted county in the child's placement, regardless of whether child was forcibly taken from his home. Harris ex rel. Litz v. Lehigh County Office of Children & Youth Services, E.D.Pa.2005, 418 F.Supp.2d 643. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Non-profit provider of foster care services performed function that was exclusively prerogative of the state, and provider and its officers and employees were thus "state actors" for purposes of § 1983 action arising from death of involuntarily removed child. Donlan v. Ridge, E.D.Pa.1999, 58 F.Supp.2d 604. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Minor children placed by state in private facility failed to allege sufficient state action to state § 1983 claim against facility operator and related individuals based upon condition of facility and alleged failure to provide adequate security, supervision, and food, where service contract did not link state to challenged actions, there were no allegations in complaint to demonstrate that state directed commission of alleged wrongdoing or do show that state controlled, operated, or owned facility, and complaint contained no factual basis for inference of agreement or conspiracy between state and private individuals; it was not sufficient to allege that symbiotic relationship exist between state and facility or that state employees routinely visited facility to enforce applicable regulations. Letisha A. by Murphy v. Morgan, N.D.Ill.1994, 855 F.Supp. 943. Civil Rights 1396

652. ---- Detention, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Store and its employees, whose central motivation in detaining persons that they believed were stealing property was self-protection, not altruism, did not perform public functions in detaining plaintiffs as suspected shoplifters, in searching their purses and in detaining them after gun was found that would meet under-color-of-law requirement of this section. White v. Scrivner Corp., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 140. Civil Rights 1326(1)

653. ---- Education, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Teammate's alleged conduct in committing racially motivated attack on football player could not be fairly attributable to the state so as to satisfy state action requirement for holding school district officials liable under § 1983 for due process violation; record showed no evidence of an agreement between teammate and football coach, and school's inaction and indifference in responding to either player's history of racial abuse at the school or teammate's assault did not rise to the level of legal action under the fair attribution standard. Priester v. Lowndes County, C.A.5 (Miss.) 2004, 354 F.3d 414, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 153, 543 U.S. 829, 160 L.Ed.2d 44. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Nothing in the Puerto Rico Constitution or in the educational policy of Puerto Rico made higher education at a private university in Puerto Rico a public function or called into question the traditional status of private colleges and universities, despite contention that provision of Puerto Rico Constitution that "every person has the right to an education," taken in conjunction with the Commonwealth's regulation and support of higher education, warranted conclusion that higher education was a public function and that university was thus subject to standards of lawful activity applicable to public institutions. Berrios v. Inter Am. University, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 535 F.2d 1330 . Colleges And Universities 2

Illinois' declaration of the importance of higher education, i.e., that it is a public function, could not convert activities of private university, which allegedly discriminated against female faculty member, on basis of sex, into powers traditionally exclusively reserved to the state and, hence, state action. Cohen v. Illinois Institute of Technology, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 524 F.2d 818, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1683, 425 U.S. 943, 48 L.Ed.2d 187. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Since meaningful regulation of the intercollegiate aspect of higher education is beyond effective reach of any one state, a college athletic association by taking upon itself the role of coordinator and overseer of college athletics, in the interest of both the individual student and his institution, is performing a "traditional governmental function" and is thereby subject to federal civil rights jurisdiction. Parish v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, C.A.5 (La.) 1975, 506 F.2d 1028. Federal Courts 222

Private university did not perform such a "public function" as to render its regulation of student demonstrations on football field, not open freely to public, "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, but the action of the private university in establishing demonstration guidelines and in enforcing them with respect to students in a state supported institution which university operated under contract with state of New York, constituted "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Powe v. Miles, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1968, 407 F.2d 73.

State statute permitting public-school students to initiate prayer at various compulsory and noncompulsory school events constituted "state action" within meaning of § 1983, even though statute authorized private parties to take action. Ingebretsen v. Jackson Public School Dist., S.D.Miss.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1473, affirmed 88 F.3d 274, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 388, 519 U.S. 965, 136 L.Ed.2d 304. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private college did not assume all attributes of governmental subdivision, nor was education such a uniquely public function as to warrant finding that private college was engaged in "state action" within purview of this section. Lorentzen v. Boston College, D.C.Mass.1977, 440 F.Supp. 464, affirmed 577 F.2d 720, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1254, 440 U.S. 924, 59 L.Ed.2d 478, rehearing denied 99 S.Ct. 2021, 441 U.S. 917, 60 L.Ed.2d 391. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Private college was not subject to liability under § 1983, absent showing that state had ceded governmental functions to college that state would otherwise have been obligated to perform, or that state had effectively assumed control of its policies and operations. Phillips v. Sage Colleges, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 83 Fed.Appx. 340, 2003 WL 22513580, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(6)

654. ---- Employment, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Non-profit anti-poverty corporation was not "state actor," and thus was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 in former employee's wrongful discharge case, even though corporation received 95% of its funding from government, one-third of its board members were public officials, and corporation served general public, where services provided by corporation were not exclusive province of state. Ashby v. Economic Opportunity Com'n of Nassau County, Inc., E.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 27. Civil Rights 1326(11)

University, in terminating public safety officers, did not perform function that was traditionally exclusive prerogative of state, and thus university was not "state actor" under public function test, as required for officers to maintain § 1983 claim against university; although university served public function by providing officers on campus, termination concerned strictly personnel matters. Allocco v. City of Coral Gables, S.D.Fla.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 1317, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 380, 2003 WL 22768944. Civil Rights 1326(11)

655. ---- Fire protection, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether volunteer fire company and its officers expressly, or effectively, expelled member precluded summary judgment in member's § 1983 action on issue of whether there was "action" by state. Eggert v. Tuckerton Volunteer Fire Co. No. 1, D.N.J.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1230. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Volunteer fire company was not "state actor" under public function test for purposes of § 1983 action against company for allegedly failing to adopt or follow prudent practices in admitting members to company, in view of evidence that municipality exercised no control over company, that company elected its own officers, whom municipality agreed to recognize, that municipality provided no input into recruitment or training practices and was completely uninvolved with all personnel matters, and that company prepared its own budget, subject to approval by municipality. Mark v. Borough of Hatboro, E.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 966, affirmed 51 F.3d 1137, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 165, 516 U.S. 858, 133 L.Ed.2d 107. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Municipality's policy or lack of policy regarding volunteer fire company's screening of new applicants was not actionable under § 1983, where fire fighting function was not exclusive governmental function, where company was private autonomous association, and where municipality had absolutely no control over company's membership screening practices. Mark v. Borough of Hatboro, E.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 966, affirmed 51 F.3d 1137, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 165, 516 U.S. 858, 133 L.Ed.2d 107. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Volunteer firefighting company was not state actor, for purposes of § 1983 action by one of its members; fire fighting in Maryland was traditionally the province of volunteers, not the state or its subdivisions, despite various statutes, charters, and the like dealing with the subject. Haavistola v. Community Fire Co. of Rising Sun, D.Md.1994, 839 F.Supp. 372. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Fact that function of town volunteer fire department, to provide fire fighting and ambulance services for the town, was clearly affected with the public interest was not sufficient to establish that the department was carrying on a "public function" and, therefore, was an agency of the state so as to be liable for civil rights violations. Janusaitis v. Middlebury Volunteer Fire Dept., D.C.Conn.1979, 464 F.Supp. 288, affirmed 607 F.2d 17. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Voluntary fire department is performing function normally governmental in nature for purposes of this section providing civil action for deprivation of right under color of statute, ordinance regulation, custom or usage of any state or territory. Everett v. Riverside Hose Co. No. 4, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1966, 261 F.Supp. 463. Civil Rights 1326(1)

656. ---- Medical care, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

It is physician's function within state system, providing treatment to prison inmates, not precise terms of his employment, that determines whether his actions can fairly be attributed to state under this section. West v. Atkins, U.S.N.C.1988, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 487 U.S. 42, 101 L.Ed.2d 40. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Former prisoner stated that close nexus existed between government and challenged action of physicians from hospital, for purpose of determining in civil rights lawsuit under Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments whether private individuals had been acting under color of state law, on allegations that county delegated public function of county coroner in child death cases to physicians and autopsy and related activities by physicians resulted in prisoner's wrongful imprisonment for 21 years. Marsh v. San Diego County, S.D.Cal.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Under the public function test for determining whether private entity's conduct is attributable to the state for § 1983 purposes, employer which was a private corporation providing administrative and management services to city hospital was not acting "under color of state law" for § 1983 purposes when it terminated employee who was hired by employer to serve as administrator of hospital; management of hospital services was not a power which has traditionally been exclusively reserved to the state and hospitals which are supported by municipalities are often given the freedom to contract with public or private companies to provide services. Perdue v. Quorum Health Resources, Inc., M.D.Tenn.1996, 934 F.Supp. 919. Civil Rights 1326(11)

social worker employed by corporation as psychotherapist performed "public function," alleged misconduct of psychotherapist with respect to patient who sought counseling would not be considered state action for purposes of § 1983 civil rights action on public function theory; the public function which was performed had not traditionally been exclusive prerogative of state. Faulk v. Ludwig, W.D.Pa.1990, 732 F.Supp. 591. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that private, nonprofit health care facility had agreed to provide free medical assistance to indigents and that it provided an essential public service in that it was the largest and best equipped hospital in the area did not suffice to establish that the hospital performed a "public function" and was thus an instrumentality of the state so as to make its policy on elective nontherapeutic abortions "state action" for purposes of this section. Jones v. Eastern Maine Medical Center, D.C.Me.1978, 448 F.Supp. 1156. Civil Rights 1326(4)

"Public function" exception to usual test of "state action" did not apply to function of private hospital in hiring and firing of doctors, nurses and other staff personnel. Barrett v. United Hospital, S.D.N.Y.1974, 376 F.Supp. 791, affirmed 506 F.2d 1395. Civil Rights 1325

657. ---- Maritime shipping, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Maritime shipping industry is not a traditional public function even though, in Puerto Rico, maritime shipping services are essential and thus may be regarded as a public function, with result that public function analysis did not provide basis for finding indirect state action, for purposes of civil rights statute, by a private company which had contracted to provide management services to the Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority. Rodriguez-Garcia v. Davila, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 904 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1326(4)

658. ---- Police, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Delegation of police powers, a governmental function, to otherwise private individuals or groups renders such individual agents for instrumentalities of the state for purpose of holding that their actions are performed "under color of state authority" and within purview of this section. Henderson v. Fisher, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 631 F.2d 1115, on remand 506 F.Supp. 579. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Dependency of citizens and private organizations on the state for certain services on which the state had an effective monopoly, such as police and fire protection, does not alone convert activities of private individuals or private organizations using such services into state action. Magill v. Avonworth Baseball Conference, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Decision of city police commissioner and deputy commissioners to terminate police officer, whether regarded as termination for disciplinary purposes during probation as city claimed, or as termination reflecting retaliatory action for officer's public criticisms as she claimed, was "official action" of city, resulting in § 1983 liability of city. Walton v. Safir, S.D.N.Y.2000, 122 F.Supp.2d 466. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City housing authority's employment of private security guard to implement its visitation policy did not give rise to inference that it encouraged guard to engage in challenged activity of allegedly shooting victim, as required for guard to be state actor under federal civil rights statute. Wade v. Byles, N.D.Ill.1995, 886 F.Supp. 654, affirmed 83 F.3d 902, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 311, 519 U.S. 935, 136 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Calling police or security force to a function does not make that function state action for purposes of § 1983. Federspiel v. Ohio Republican Party State Cent. Committee, S.D.Ohio 1994, 867 F.Supp. 617, affirmed 85 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1326(8)

659. ---- Prisons and prisoners, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Private entity that operated correctional facility did not "become the government" for employment purposes, as required for employee to bring § 1983 lawsuit against it, notwithstanding that it was granted certain powers and privileges under the law to allow it to function adequately as prison. George v. Pacific-CSC Work Furlough, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 91 F.3d 1227, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 746, 519 U.S. 1081, 136 L.Ed.2d 684. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Private jail corporation that was sued by pretrial detainee alleging civil rights violations, stemming from attack while incarcerated, was potentially liable under §§ 1983, since corporation performed same public functions as municipal entity in maintaining jail facilities. Stephens v. Correctional Services Corp., E.D.Tex.2006, 428 F.Supp.2d 580. Civil Rights 1326(8)

Actions of a private company operating a corrections facility under a state contract did not qualify as "state action" under the public function test, as urged by a former employee in support of a §§ 1983 claim that her termination violated her rights under the Fourteenth Amendment; it was undisputed that the state had no input in, and no regulation applicable to, the company's internal personnel actions. Bell v. Management & Training Corp., C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 122 Fed.Appx. 219, 2005 WL 280465, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(8); Civil Rights 1326(11)

660. ---- Speech regulation, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Private entity's regulation of free speech activities on city-owned land leased by private entity was "public function," and thus, private entity engaged in "state action," for purposes of street preachers' § 1983 action against private entity to enjoin entity from such regulation, where that land was traditional public forum, private entity engaged in exclusive regulation of free speech on that land, and city retained little, if any, power over free speech policies governing the land. Lee v. Katz, C.A.9 (Or.) 2002, 276 F.3d 550, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 2358, 536 U.S. 905, 153 L.Ed.2d 180, on remand 2004 WL 1211921.

661. ---- Wiretapping, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

There was no "state action" for civil rights purposes on ground that telephone company in installing pen register was performing "public function", in view of want of any evidence that state law enforcement officers had ordered telephone company to acquire the information in question or had delegated responsibility to telephone company for developing prosecution. Von Lusch v. C & P Tel. Co., D.C.Md.1978, 457 F.Supp. 814. Civil Rights 1326(7)

662. ---- Particular functions public, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Typical examples of "public function test" for determining whether private conduct is fairly attributable to the state for § 1983 purposes include running elections and eminent domain. Ellison v. Garbarino, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1995, 48 F.3d 192. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Exclusively governmental functions, the performance of which will make private party accountable under § 1983, fall within narrow, carefully confined category such as administration of elections, operation of company town, eminent domain, peremptory challenges in jury selection, and, in limited circumstances, operation of municipal park. United Auto Workers, Local No. 5285 v. Gaston Festivals, Inc., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 43 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Where private corporation undertakes to perform duties which have been largely within province of the state, and wherein it receives substantial sums of money from state for performance of such duties, there exists a sufficient relationship between it and the state to make the private corporation subject to suit for violation of individual's civil rights. Kentucky Ass'n for Retarded Citizens v. Conn, W.D.Ky.1980, 510 F.Supp. 1233, affirmed 674 F.2d 582, certiorari denied 103 S.Ct. 457, 459 U.S. 1041, 74 L.Ed.2d 609. Civil Rights 1326(7)

663. ---- Particular functions not public, public or governmental function, attribution of private actions to state

Assemblyman's actions in securing ouster of homosexual members of county central committee of political party were not taken under color of state law where they were not related to the performance of his duties as public official, rather than as ex officio member of committee; mere fact that prestige of his office may have enhanced his influence over committee was not enough to convert his actions into state action. Johnson v. Knowles, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 113 F.3d 1114, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 559, 522 U.S. 996, 139 L.Ed.2d 401. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Organization, management, and promotion of municipal festival were not within domain of functions exercised traditionally and exclusively by government and, thus, activities of private organizer of festival were not "state action" for which organizer could be held accountable under § 1983, even if festival could be compared to ongoing management of public park. United Auto Workers, Local No. 5285 v. Gaston Festivals, Inc., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 43 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Alleged discriminatory decision to publish disparaging articles about white attorney because of his representation of black clients did not constitute act involving "public function" which would allow attorney to bring action under federal civil rights statute. Phelps v. Wichita Eagle-Beacon, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 886 F.2d 1262. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that a business serves the public does not transform private action with otherwise insignificant state involvement into action under color of state law. Scott v. Eversole Mortuary, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1975, 522 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Fact that condominium board was allegedly sole provider of water to the complex and operated and maintained waste water treatment plant did not constitute state action, for §§ 1983 purposes, under the public function test; the supplying of utility service was not traditionally the exclusive prerogative of the state, and a heavily regulated, privately-owned utility was not necessarily a state actor. Miller v. Board of Managers of Whispering Pines at Colonial Woods Condominium II, E.D.N.Y.2006, 457 F.Supp.2d 126. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Former husband had no cause of action under §§ 1983 against ex-wife, wife's lawyer, and purchaser and current occupant of marital residence, for alleged violations of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments resulting when wife and lawyer allegedly effected sale of marital residence by submitting perjurious affidavits to city sheriff, although they used city sheriff in lieu of husband to effect sale of residence, where they were private citizens, not state actors, and sale of privately-owned residence was a purely private transaction. Tornheim v. Eason, S.D.N.Y.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 209, subsequent determination 363 F.Supp.2d 674, affirmed 2006 WL 897865. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

"Public function" analysis finding state action by private entity for purposes of § 1983 when private entity is the functional equivalent of a municipal corporation was not applicable to planned community association, where association had the authority to maintain the community's roads and utilities, and collect dues to fund such maintenance, but could do little else. Kalian at Poconos, LLC v. Saw Creek Estates Community Ass'n, Inc., M.D.Pa.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 578. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Even assuming that state constitution mandated provision of low-cost housing for needy, such mandate did not satisfy § 1983 "color of state law" criterion in action brought by residents of private low-income housing facility challenging owner's rule prohibiting residents from having overnight guests; public function doctrine applied only to functions exclusively associated with the sovereign and delegated to private actors. Young v. Halle Housing Associates, L.P., S.D.N.Y.2001, 152 F.Supp.2d 355. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Motion picture production company's alleged use of state courtrooms, lease of state property, and employment of state officers did not constitute exercise of powers traditionally exclusively reserved to state, so as to qualify under public function test as state action for purposes of motion picture extra's § 1983 claim that company violated his constitutional rights to exercise his religious beliefs and to be free of involuntary servitude by refusing to pay him because he did not have social security number. Sanders v. Prentice-Hall Corp. System, Inc., W.D.Tenn.1997, 969 F.Supp. 481, affirmed 178 F.3d 1296. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Lack of action "under color of state law" precluded claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 against individual who caused civil rights claimant to be arrested in dispute concerning work to be performed for her when she was acting in a purely private capacity and was not exercising a traditional state function. Zebrowski v. Denckla, E.D.N.Y.1986, 630 F.Supp. 1307. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Existence of common law repairman's lien conferring right of retention, and of statutory remedy of sale did not so infuse otherwise private acts of detention and sale with state involvement that they, in turn, became state action within U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 or conduct "under color of state law" within this section, notwithstanding contention that state action was present under doctrines of "public function" and "authorization and encouragement." Parks v. "Mr. Ford", E.D.Pa.1974, 386 F.Supp. 1251, post-trial motions denied 68 F.R.D. 305, reversed on other grounds 556 F.2d 132. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Hospital's mobile crisis team that attempted involuntary commitment of citizen on emergency basis was not a private party exercising powers traditionally reserved to the state, and thus, was not a "state actor" under the public function test, for purposes of civil rights statute, where traditional authority for involuntary commitment was not exclusive to the state in Ohio, and there was evidence that private actors had authority to commit people involuntarily for around two hundred years, which predated precursors to civil rights law. Ellison v. University Hospital Mobile Crisis Team, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 108 Fed.Appx. 224, 2004 WL 1543951, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(9)

664. Sanction by state, attribution of private actions to state

For purposes of statute affording civil action for deprivation of rights, settled practices of state officials may, by imposing sanctions or withholding benefits, transform private predilections into compulsory rules of behavior no less than legislative pronouncements. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1326(7)

665. Use of remedies or procedures, attribution of private actions to state

Private misuse of state statute, without more, is not state action that would subject private party to § 1983 liability. Osipova v. Dinkins, S.D.N.Y.1995, 907 F.Supp. 94. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Mere action by private party under state statute, without more, is insufficient to convert party into state actor and satisfy state action requirement for civil rights liability. Clapp v. LeBoeuf, Lamb, Leiby & MacRae, S.D.N.Y.1994, 862 F.Supp. 1050, affirmed 54 F.3d 765, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 380, 516 U.S. 944, 133 L.Ed.2d 303. Civil Rights 1326(9)

666. Use of courts, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

Mere recourse to state or local court procedures does not, by itself, amount to "joint activity" with state that would be sufficient to subject private party to liability under § 1983; "joint activity" theory requires, at minimum, some overt and significant state participation in challenged action. Hoai v. Vo, C.A.D.C.1991, 935 F.2d 308, 290 U.S.App.D.C. 142, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 1578, 503 U.S. 967, 118 L.Ed.2d 220, rehearing denied 112 S.Ct. 2007, 504 U.S. 936, 118 L.Ed.2d 602. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Use of courthouse is not "state action" for purposes of this section, and thus carrier's forcible entry and detainer action did not satisfy this section. Bloomer Shippers Ass'n v. Illinois Cent. Gulf R. Co., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1981, 655 F.2d 772. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Passing an unconstitutional statute in a state legislature and enforcing it in state courts is action fairly attributable to the state, and can subject private litigants who make use of the statute to liability under § 1983. Yanaki v. Iomed, Inc., D.Utah 2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1261, affirmed 415 F.3d 1204, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1910. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Filing of state court lawsuit, including mailing summons and complaint, filing lis pendens, and requesting transferor to appear for deposition, were not sufficient "state action" to permit federal civil rights lawsuit against attorneys who filed original state court complaint; state's role was passive and did not encourage commencement and prosecution of civil litigation, and attorneys were not willful participants in joint action with state. Parker v. Byrd & Wiser, S.D.Miss.1996, 947 F.Supp. 245. Civil Rights 1326(10)

Plaintiff's use of enforcement mechanisms of federal courts, allegedly causing deprivation of defendant's First Amendment rights, was not "under color of state law" and, thus, could not be basis for defendant's § 1983 counterclaim. Texaco Refining and Marketing Inc. v. Davis, D.Or.1993, 835 F.Supp. 1223, affirmed 45 F.3d 437, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 2000, 514 U.S. 1127, 131 L.Ed.2d 1001. Civil Rights 1327

667. ---- Abuse of process, use of courts, attribution of private actions to state

If state merely allows private litigants to use its courts, there is no "state action" within meaning of § 1983 unless there is corruption of judicial power by private litigant. McCartney v. First City Bank, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 970 F.2d 45. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Absent indications of improper motive or abuse of state-powered process, person who invokes and follows statutory procedure not then declared unconstitutional cannot be liable in damages under this section because no state action is involved when state merely opens its tribunals to private litigants and because no improper motive can be attributed to persons who avail themselves of presumably constitutional state enactments; however, person who abuses statutory procedure, even if it is presumptively constitutional, may be found to have deprived another of federal due process rights. Hollis v. Itawamba County Loans, C.A.5 (Miss.) 1981, 657 F.2d 746. Civil Rights 1326(9)

For purposes of § 1983 claim, use of state discovery rules to obtain search order in separate civil litigation, which permitted search of plaintiff's home and seizure of plaintiff's property, was not caused by use of a privilege created by state, and thus was not state action. Yanaki v. Iomed, Inc., D.Utah 2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1261, affirmed 415 F.3d 1204, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1910. Civil Rights 1326(9)

668. ---- Litigant status, use of courts, attribution of private actions to state

Participation by a private party in litigation, without more, does not constitute state action, a necessary precondition to a claim under this section. Slotnick v. Garfinkle, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1980, 632 F.2d 163. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Mere fact that private individuals were complainants and witnesses in a criminal action which itself was prosecuted under color of law did not make their complaining or testifying anything other than the action of private persons not acting under color of law, and thus not within the scope of this section. Grow v. Fisher, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1975, 523 F.2d 875. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

Neither plaintiff nor her attorney acted under color of state law in initiating contempt proceeding against defendant

in divorce case, and civil rights action against them was properly dismissed. Glasspoole v. Albertson, C.A.8 (Minn.) 1974, 491 F.2d 1090. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(10)

The inappropriate use by private litigants of a constitutional statute or rule does not constitute state action for the purposes of § 1983. Yanaki v. Iomed, Inc., D.Utah 2004, 319 F.Supp.2d 1261, affirmed 415 F.3d 1204, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 1910. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Individual who instituted and prevailed in state court suit in which purported purchaser of real property was required to transfer title to him was not a "state actor," for purposes of this section, by instituting legal proceedings that resulted in a judgment by a state organ that allegedly deprived purchaser of a constitutionally protected right, and therefore purchaser could not maintain suit under this section against that individual. Franco v. Marin County, N.D.Cal.1984, 579 F.Supp. 1032, affirmed 762 F.2d 1017. Civil Rights 1326(9)

A private litigant does not act "under color of state law" merely by bringing a lawsuit in state court. International Molders and Allied Workers, AFL-CIO v. Buchanan Lumber Birmingham, N.D.Ala.1978, 459 F.Supp. 950, affirmed 618 F.2d 782. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Mere filing of complaint by private citizens does not constitute "state action" for civil rights purposes. Von Lusch v. C & P Tel. Co., D.C.Md.1978, 457 F.Supp. 814. Civil Rights 1326(9)

669. ---- Prejudgment remedies, use of courts, attribution of private actions to state

Resort to state courts by private parties does not amount to action under color of law and does not raise constitutional question within meaning of this subchapter; state court prejudgment remedies fall into one of the exceptions to this general rule. Coltharp v. Cutler, D.C.Utah 1976, 419 F.Supp. 924. Civil Rights 1326(9)

670. ---- Eviction actions, use of courts, attribution of private actions to state

In bringing eviction proceeding in state court, lessor and related parties were not state actors and did not act under color of state law, and thus could not be liable to lessee for wrongful eviction under § 1983; lessee did not allege that litigants abused the state judicial process in bringing the proceeding, nor did lessee show any nexus between his injuries and the eviction. Eidson v. Arenas, M.D.Fla.1995, 910 F.Supp. 609. Civil Rights 1326(9)

Filing an eviction action in state court was not action by landlord under color of state law within this section and did not give rise to claim upon which relief could be granted even if eviction action was in retaliation for tenants' having insisted upon their rights. Fallis v. Dunbar, N.D.Ohio 1974, 386 F.Supp. 1117, affirmed 532 F.2d 1061. Civil Rights 1326(9)

671. Use of public facilities, attribution of private actions to state

Private organizer of municipal festival was not afforded and did not assume sufficient control over any municipal powers and, thus, its activities were not "state action" for which organizer could be held accountable under § 1983; organizer needed permit, indicating that city retained control over use of public property and facilities, city provided essential services to support festival, permit required organizer to comply with city regulations, city reserved right to reopen streets in area, and organizer did not attempt to exercise all power conferred upon it by permit when it denied union's request for booth space to distribute literature during festival. United Auto Workers, Local No. 5285 v. Gaston Festivals, Inc., C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 43 F.3d 902. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mere use of a public park by a private organization does not satisfy the state action nexus test so as to constitute the private action as state action. Magill v. Avonworth Baseball Conference, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1328.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Civil Rights 1326(4)

No governmental action was involved in state political party's decision to invite some, but not all, qualified primary candidates to debate on state university campus so as to support one qualified candidate's civil rights claims and demand for injunctive relief. Koczak v. Grandmaison, D.N.H.1988, 684 F.Supp. 763.

672. Use of state name, attribution of private actions to state

Although the use of a state's name may give rise to an appearance of state involvement in challenged activities, unless the appearance of state support either facilitates the activity in question or provides evidence that the institution is, in fact, a state instrumentality, use of the state's name is of no relevance in determining whether the challenged action is state action. Cohen v. Illinois Institute of Technology, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 524 F.2d 818, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1683, 425 U.S. 943, 48 L.Ed.2d 187. Civil Rights 1326(7)

673. Ministerial acts, attribution of private actions to state

Apparently, an automatic ministerial act suffices to transform what would otherwise be private action into the "affirmative command" of the state for purpose of state action requirement of this section. Dieffenbach v. Attorney General of Vermont, C.A.2 (Vt.) 1979, 604 F.2d 187. Civil Rights 1325

674. Aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

Fact that festival organizer received a small part of its funding from government sources did not convert its decisions to state action, as would be required to hold organizer liable for violating constitutional rights of street preacher ejected from area outside festival entrance; organizer never received more than three percent of its revenues from government sources during the period at issue, and such limited public support was not enough to impute organizer's actions to the state. Lansing v. City of Memphis, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2000, 202 F.3d 821. Constitutional Law 82(5)

A private person's conduct may be fairly attributed to the state and be actionable under §§ 1983, if the state has so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with a private person that the two must be recognized as a joint participants in the challenged activity; a plaintiff may invoke this interdependence theory of state action only where a private defendant is aligned so closely with the state that the undertow pulls them both inexorably into the grasp of §§ 1983. Meuse v. Stults, D.Mass.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 358. Civil Rights 1326(5)

The "under color of" provision of this section encompasses only such private conduct as is supported by state, and private person does not act "under color of state law" unless he derives some aid, comfort or incentive, either real or apparent, from the state. Jenkins v. White Castle Systems, Inc., N.D.Ill.1981, 510 F.Supp. 981. Civil Rights 1326(4)

In order to attribute acts of private party to government so as to render private party subject to suit under this section, government must exercise its power in aid of private conduct and thus provide means whereby private party commits act generally associated with power exercised by sovereign. Fuzie v. Manor Care, Inc., N.D.Ohio 1977, 461 F.Supp. 689. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Satisfaction of "under color of state law" language of this section requires that private conduct involved must be significantly and affirmatively supported by state action in such manner that private person derives real or apparent "aid, comfort or incentive" from state. Weiss v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc., N.D.Ill.1976, 414 F.Supp. 52. Civil Rights 1325

675. ---- Threshold of aid, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

There is no precise formula for determining threshold at which reception of aid or regulation by state cloaks private actions with color of state law. Chrisman v. Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace, C.A.9 (Or.) 1974, 506 F.2d 308. Civil Rights 1326(7)

676. ---- Contracts with state, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

Acts of private contractors, who build roads, bridges, dams, ships, or submarines for government, do not become acts of government by reason of their significant or even total engagement in performing public contracts. Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, U.S.Mass.1982, 102 S.Ct. 2764, 457 U.S. 830, 73 L.Ed.2d 418. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Private medical contractor was not liable under § 1983 for injury suffered by jail inmate when he was not scheduled for surgery on severed tendons during his incarceration absent showing that injury was result of policy or custom of contractor. Johnson v. Karnes, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 398 F.3d 868. Civil Rights 1339

Fact that private entity contracts with government or receives governmental funds or other kinds of governmental assistance does not automatically transform conduct of that entity into state action required for § 1983 liability. Gallagher v. Neil Young Freedom Concert, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1442. Civil Rights 1326(5); Civil Rights 1326(7)

Pharmacy was not liable under § 1983 to federal pretrial detainees by virtue of supplying allegedly inferior product to detainee for use in treating his lice infestation; pharmacy did not act under color of state law because it contracted with private, intermediary third party and had no contact with state actor and pharmacy's alleged action did not deprive detainee of any federal rights. Kost v. Kozakiewicz, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 1 F.3d 176. Civil Rights 1326(8)

State contractor and its employees are not "state actors" simply because they are carrying out state sponsored program and contractor is being compensated therefor by state; nor does fact that activity being performed is public function render contractor and its employees state actors. Black by Black v. Indiana Area School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 1993, 985 F.2d 707. Civil Rights 1326(1)

For purposes of judging whether civil rights action lay under this section, employer's actions did not constitute state action despite contentions that employer received substantial income from contracts with state and certain beneficial tax treatment. Tucker v. Harley Davidson Motor Co., E.D.Wis.1978, 454 F.Supp. 738. Civil Rights 1326(11)

677. ---- Financial assistance, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

Decision to terminate employee by unincorporated organization funded through federal Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) was not state action that could support federal civil rights action; although organization received federal funds that were distributed by the Governor of Pennsylvania and was under contract with the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, the organization did not receive state funding, its employees were not paid by the state, and employees did not participate in any employment or pension benefits offered by the state. Boyle v. Governor's Veterans Outreach & Assistance Center, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1991, 925 F.2d 71.

Fact that corporation was incorporated for the specific purpose of providing management services for an agency of the government of Puerto Rico did not establish financial or regulatory nexus with the government of Puerto Rico so as to satisfy state action requirement of civil rights statute, even though corporation's sole business was the performance of public contracts, nor was such nexus established by fact that management contract and sales agreement granted the government agency significant control over the operations of the corporation, where corporation was given complete freedom to hire most employees and approval by government agency of choices of top executives could not be unreasonably withheld. Rodriguez-Garcia v. Davila, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 904 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Salt River Project Agricultural Improvement and Power District, although designated as a political subdivision under Arizona Constitution, was not a "state actor" when it discharged an employee; in area of hiring and firing its employees, District, which was privately owned, privately run, and not financed in any way by the state except for some tax exemptions, acted as a private company. Gorenc v. Salt River Project Agr. Imp. and Power Dist., C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1989, 869 F.2d 503, certiorari denied 110 S.Ct. 256, 493 U.S. 899, 107 L.Ed.2d 205. Civil Rights 1326(11)

In determining whether university was so intertwined with the Commonwealth as to be subject to standards of lawful activity applicable to public institutions, district court properly refused to take into account financial assistance from the federal government to the university. Berrios v. Inter Am. University, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1976, 535 F.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1326(6)

678. ---- Implicit agreements, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

If there was explicit or implicit agreement that local police officers would not interfere with abduction of member of religious group for purpose of deprogramming, parents of member and deprogrammers who carried out abduction could be held liable along with police officers for any violation of this section. Cooper v. Molko, N.D.Cal.1981, 512 F.Supp. 563. Civil Rights 1339

679. ---- Monopoly status, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

In suit brought against private utility corporation, which held a certificate of public convenience issued by the Pennsylvania Utilities Commission, by customer who sought damages under this section for the termination of her electric service allegedly before she was afforded notice, a hearing and an opportunity to pay any amounts found due, the alleged monopolistic status of the utility was not determinative in considering whether its termination of service to the petitioner was "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14. Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., U.S.Pa.1974, 95 S.Ct. 449, 419 U.S. 345, 42 L.Ed.2d 477. Constitutional Law 254(4)

Fact that private corporation enjoys an economic monopoly which is protected and regulated by state does not necessarily bring its every act within purview of this section. Martin v. Pacific Northwest Bell Telephone Co., C.A.9 (Or.) 1971, 441 F.2d 1116, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 89, 404 U.S. 873, 30 L.Ed.2d 117. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Monopoly status and heavy regulation by state do not in themselves comprise action "under color of state law" within purview of this section. Boling v. National Zinc Co., N.D.Okla.1976, 435 F.Supp. 18. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Water salesman's generalized assertion that distributor of natural spring water retaliated against him for filing race and national origin discrimination suit against it was insufficient to state cause of action; salesman did not give any explanation as to when or how distributor engaged in retaliation. O'Diah v. New York City, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22093482, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(8); Civil Rights 1532

680. ---- Pension funds, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

Private school's participation in state-operated teacher pension fund did not render school a state actor sufficient to impose § 1983 liability on it for firing teacher for wearing a beard in violation of school rules. Johnson v. Pinkerton Academy, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1988, 861 F.2d 335, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(11)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

681. ---- Rent subsidies, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

Fact that apartment complex had been constructed on designated urban renewal site, was financed by FHA-insured mortgage, that managing corporation was recipient of certain tax exemptions, rent supplement subsidies and other financial assistance from city, state and federal authorities, and that daily operations were ultimately supervised by city housing authority and Federal Housing Administration, indicated sufficient government participation in project so as to bring any discriminatory operational practices within ambit of constitutional prohibition. Colon v. Tompkins Square Neighbors, Inc., S.D.N.Y.1968, 294 F.Supp. 134. Constitutional Law 213(4)

682. ---- Tax exemptions, aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

Fact that private hospital was recipient of federal funds under the Hill-Burton Act, § 600 et seq. of this title, and that it received both state and federal tax advantages as a nonprofit corporation did not constitute state action under this section for purpose of determining whether hospital's refusal to allow licensed chiropractic physician to use its clinical laboratory facilities constituted invidious discrimination. Aasum v. Good Samaritan Hospital, C.A.9 (Or.) 1976, 542 F.2d 792. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Provision of 13 percent of hospital's construction costs since 1961 through Hill-Burton and Department of Health Education and Welfare [now Department of Health and Human Services] programs, exemption from taxes, and regulation by state, did not provide basis for finding that hospital, which was not the only hospital in the area, acted under color of state law within purview of this section in denying woman patient a sterilization. Chrisman v. Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace, C.A.9 (Or.) 1974, 506 F.2d 308. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Finding of state action within purview of this section governing civil action for deprivation of rights may not be grounded, without more, on tax-exempt status, on financial contribution, on financial assistance to private university, on government regulation, or on presence of both financial involvement and regulation by government. Weise v. Syracuse University, N.D.N.Y.1982, 553 F.Supp. 675. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Holding of prehearing unitization conferences at private club, i.e., those conferences required prior to application for formal hearing before Commission of Conservation of Louisiana Department of Natural Resources, did not constitute significant "state action" for purpose of civil rights challenge to club's males only policy as such conferences were set by private parties at a place of their own choosing in that rules of procedures required only that such conferences be held in the state and after becoming aware of club's policy the commissioner ordered that no official meetings be scheduled at facilities which were not open to all citizens alike; further, fact that club enjoyed a tax-exempt status; and, had liquor license issued by State of Louisiana, was insufficient to involve the state, for "state action" purposes, in membership and service policies of the club, which had a males only policy. Whitten v. Petroleum Club of Lafayette, W.D.La.1981, 508 F.Supp. 765. Civil Rights 1326(4)

683. ---- Miscellaneous aid, comfort or incentive from state, attribution of private actions to state

Absence of state action precluded Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment claims arising from private actors' removal of volunteer fire company's rescue truck and other items for delivery to other volunteer fire company; assuming that police officer was present when the property was taken, there was no evidence that he provided the type of assistance necessary to lend state authority to the conduct of the private actors. Breiner v. Litwhiler, M.D.Pa.2003, 245 F.Supp.2d 614, affirmed 98 Fed.Appx. 75, 2004 WL 557335. Civil Rights 1326(9); Constitutional Law 254(4)

Nebraska statute authorizing its Attorney General to represent medical services provider in the same manner as a state officer or employee in state prisoner's civil rights action under §§ 1983 did not make physician a state employee for purposes of statute governing tort claims against state employees. Smith v. Clarke, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2006, 458 F.3d 720. Health 800

Factors that courts take into consideration, in determining whether a police officer's involvement in a repossession of an automobile by a private party constitutes state action, as required for a viable §§ 1983 claim, include intervening at more than one step, failing to depart before completion of the repossession, standing in close proximity to the creditor, and unreasonably recognizing the documentation of one party over another. Marcus v. McCollum, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2004, 394 F.3d 813. Civil Rights 1326(8); Civil Rights 1326(9)

Tow truck operator was not state actor, and towing of car was not state action, for purpose of car owner's § 1983 lawsuit against operator alleging procedural due process and equal protection violations under Fourteenth Amendment, although private person, who requested tow, consulted with officers prior to incident, police officers were present during towing of car, and officers told car owner that her car was going to be towed and towing without her cooperation could possibly cause damage to car; tow truck operator was not called by officers to tow car, officers did not give order to tow, and officers did nothing more than lend their presence as peace keeping measure. Longmoor v. Nilsen, D.Conn.2004, 312 F.Supp.2d 352. Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

State did not compel actions of victim advocate for family violence victims in purportedly giving false information to the police and requesting police to obtain a warrant to search alleged abuser's home for guns, and thus victim advocate and her private agency could not be deemed "state actors" subject to §§ 1983 liability, where agency provided services under contract with another private entity, statute did not mandate police request, and there was no evidence of any state control or involvement beyond referral of victim to victim advocate, even though state might be viewed as third-party beneficiary of agreement between two private agencies. Szekeres v. Schaeffer, D.Conn.2004, 304 F.Supp.2d 296. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Alleged inaccessibility to wheelchair users of items in grocery store was attributable to grocery store, not state, and therefore grocery store was not state actor for purposes of wheelchair user's §§ 1983 claims, notwithstanding grocery store's sale of state lottery ticket forms and receipt of money from state for ticket sales. Douris v. Genuardi's Family Markets, Inc., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 132 Fed.Appx. 425, 2005 WL 1307799, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(7)

684. Authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state-- Generally

Traditional definition of "acting under color of state law" requires that defendant in § 1983 action have exercised power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law. Parker v. Boyer, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1996, 93 F.3d 445, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1081, 519 U.S. 1148, 137 L.Ed.2d 216. Civil Rights 1324

Before private persons can be considered state actors for purposes of § 1983, state must significantly contribute to constitutional deprivation, for example by authorizing its own officers to invoke force of law in aid of private persons' request. Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1994, 20 F.3d 1250, on remand 1995 WL 141465. Civil Rights 1326(5)

Where grievances alleged by plaintiff had no incidence of state authorization, warrant, sanction, or sanctuary for being done, and whatever alleged fraud may have been perpetrated on plaintiff was purely private and was without any touch of state law, state instrumentalities, or state manifestations of sanction or sanctuary in relation to its being done, action could not be maintained under this section. Wallach v. Cannon, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1966, 357 F.2d 557. Civil Rights 1326(1); Conspiracy 1.1

In order to determine whether actions taken by officers were under color of state law, court must look to source of power or authority which was allegedly abused and determine if such power or authority existed by virtue of grant from the state. Temple v. Albert, S.D.N.Y.1989, 719 F.Supp. 265. Civil Rights 1326(2)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

685. ---- Scope of authority generally, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Teacher's violation of state statute, requiring that sexual abuse of children be reported within 48 hours, did not constitute "state action" required to sustain § 1983 action; in order for state action to be involved, teacher would have to possess authority, i.e., either as teacher or citizen, exercise control over alleged abuser, a fellow teacher, and she did not. Doe v. Rains County Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 66 F.3d 1402, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(6)

Informal, behind the scenes exertion of state authority is as much within scope of this section as more usual examples of formal and open action leading to denial of federal rights. Kletschka v. Driver, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1969, 411 F.2d 436.

Under § 1983, individuals may be held liable for otherwise "state" actions where those individuals violate Federal Constitution and plaintiffs seek nominal damage remedy; in individual capacity suit, individual charged with liability must have acted in manner outside scope of his respective office or, if within scope, acted in arbitrary manner, grossly abusing lawful powers of office. Florida Paraplegic Ass'n v. Martinez, S.D.Fla.1990, 734 F.Supp. 997. Civil Rights 1354

Although it is true that state officials can act under color of state law for purposes of § 1983 action even if they overstep their authority, such rule has no application where official has no colorable authority to act in jurisdiction in which he purports to act. Firman v. Abreu, S.D.N.Y.1988, 691 F.Supp. 811. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Defendant in suit under this section acts "under color of state law" when he acts within authority of his office. Johnson v. Cushing, D.C.Minn.1980, 483 F.Supp. 608. Civil Rights 1326(2)

A state or local official who exceeds his lawful authority may still be acting under color of law for purposes of this section. Hoopes v. City of Chester, E.D.Pa.1979, 473 F.Supp. 1214. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Officer or employee of state or one of political subdivisions thereof is deemed to be acting under "color of law" as to those deprivations of rights committed in fulfillment of tasks and obligations assigned to him. Atkins v. Lanning, N.D.Okla.1976, 415 F.Supp. 186, affirmed 556 F.2d 485. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Under this section, any person who, under color of law, deprives another of his federal constitutional rights is liable to the injured party at law or in equity, and if a person acts under color of law, it is irrelevant whether the official was acting within or without the scope of his employment by common law standards. Smyth v. Lubbers, W.D.Mich.1975, 398 F.Supp. 777. Civil Rights 1326(2)

To come under "color of state law" within this section, a state officer's conduct may not be authorized and may even be patently illegal. Simon v. Lovgren, D.C.Virgin Islands 1973, 368 F.Supp. 265. Civil Rights 1326(2)

686. ---- Apparent authority, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Action taken by state official who is cloaked with official power and who purports to be acting under color of official right is state action and is taken under color of state law whether or not action is in fact in excess of authority actually delegated to official under state law. Lopez v. Vanderwater, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1980, 620 F.2d 1229, certiorari dismissed 101 S.Ct. 601, 449 U.S. 1028, 66 L.Ed.2d 491. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Finding of state action cannot be based solely upon plaintiff's beliefs concerning employee's activity no matter how well-founded those beliefs were. White v. Scrivner Corp., C.A.5 (La.) 1979, 594 F.2d 140. Civil Rights 1325

A state officer is not necessarily acting in his official capacity merely because he is clothed in official garb.

Robinson v. Davis, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1971, 447 F.2d 753, certiorari denied 92 S.Ct. 1204, 405 U.S. 979, 31 L.Ed.2d 254. Civil Rights 1326(2)

Defendants' conduct is under "color of state law" within this section if defendants were clothed with authority of state and were purporting to act thereunder, whether or not conduct was authorized or, indeed, even if it was proscribed by state law. Marshall v. Sawyer, C.A.9 (Nev.) 1962, 301 F.2d 639. See, also, Basista v. Weir, C.A. 3 (Pa.) 1965, 340 F.2d 74; Cohen v. Norris, C.A. 9 (Cal.) 1962, 300 F.2d 24; Watkins v. Oaklawn Jockey Club, D.C.Ark.1949, 86 F.Supp. 1006, affirmed 183 F.2d 440. Civil Rights 1324

Action taken by state official in purported exercise of authority conferred by state is action "under color of" a statute, etc., within this section. Wall v. King, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1953, 206 F.2d 878, certiorari denied 74 S.Ct. 275, 346 U.S. 915, 98 L.Ed. 411.

Municipality may be held liable where it has, in some way, affirmatively adopted a policy or custom, albeit one that is required by the state, which is the driving force behind a civil rights violation. Conroy v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 879. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Question of whether official was acting in his official capacity at the time of the acts complained of is not controlling for purposes of determining whether he was acting under color of state law; the proper inquiry focuses on the source of authority for the defendant's conduct and, if the state has clothed the defendant with apparent authority to act, he is acting under color of state law. Kedra v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1978, 454 F.Supp. 652 . Civil Rights 1326(2)

"State action" is generally found to exist for purposes of this section when what is involved is the exercise of power possessed only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law. Bellnier v. Lund, N.D.N.Y.1977, 438 F.Supp. 47. Civil Rights 1325

There are two methods by which a private individual may be construed as acting under color of state law and therefore be held liable under this section: private individual may be found to be clothed with authority of the state so as to render his actions substantially identical to actions taken by the state or the individual may jointly engage or conspire with state officials to deprive another of constitutionally protected rights. Dennis v. Hein, D.C.S.C.1976, 413 F.Supp. 1137. Civil Rights 1326(4)

687. ---- Employment, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Actions of Virgin Islands power company and its employees, in deciding that switch needed to be changed and assigning employee to perform that work, constituted action under "color of law" for purposes of civil rights claims, as power company was created by Virgin Islands legislature and authority to make work assignments and personnel decisions stemmed directly from authority provided under Virgin Islands Code. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1326(7)

688. ---- Proprietary capacity, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Textile plant operator stated claim under § 1983 against city, alleging that operator had been overcharged for public enterprise services of water, sewer, gas, and electricity by city, despite contention that § 1983 did not provide remedy for wrong committed by municipal official acting in proprietary, rather than governmental, capacity. General Textile Printing and Processing Corp. v. City of Rocky Mount, E.D.N.C.1995, 908 F.Supp. 1295 . Civil Rights 1054 governmental unit when they act in proprietary and not governmental capacity. Sherman v. City of Pasadena, C.D.Cal.1973, 367 F.Supp. 1115. Civil Rights 1326(2)

689. ---- Ultra vires actions, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Community college was not liable, under § 1983, for alleged violations of college administrators' civil rights where ultra vires actions of university president, rather than any action on part of board of trustees, were responsible for university's failure to transfer administrators into academic positions they requested. Chonich v. Wayne County Community College, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1992, 973 F.2d 1271, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 2740, 512 U.S. 1236, 129 L.Ed.2d 860. Civil Rights 1349

Actions of state and local officers may be "under color of law" for purposes of § 1983 even if they perform acts in excess of their authority or without authority. Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Authority, D.Virgin Islands 1997, 955 F.Supp. 468, on reconsideration 961 F.Supp. 113. Civil Rights 1326(2)

690. ---- Self-proclamation of authority, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Private association's self-proclaimed authority to act as sheriff's posse comitatus and wearing of badges substantially identical in design and appearance to badges worn by sheriff's deputies did not constitute actions taken "under color of state law" within purview of this section. Canlis v. San Joaquin Sheriff's Posse Comitatus, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1981, 641 F.2d 711, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 510, 454 U.S. 967, 70 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1326(1)

This section requires some vesting of authority by state to create liability of a defendant and a defendant's self-proclaimed authority will not suffice; wrongdoer must actually represent state whereby his act is act of state or there is no action under color of state law. Warren v. Cummings, D.C.Colo.1969, 303 F.Supp. 803.

691. ---- Subpoena, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Issuance of subpoena by State Personnel Board of Review is an act of state so that, when such subpoena is caused to be issued by a private litigant or attorney pursuant to the subpoena privilege granted by the state, such action is "state action" for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 § 1 and action "under color of state law" for purposes of this section, it is not the status of the attorney as attorney which is determinative, rather it is fact that he has invoked direct power of the state. Timson v. Weiner, S.D.Ohio 1975, 395 F.Supp. 1344. Civil Rights 1326(10); Constitutional Law 254(2)

692. ---- Supervisory personnel, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Authority of defendants over plaintiff could have been "under color of state law" within this section where, though it was not contended that defendants, who were national guard technicians, possessed any direct civilian supervisory authority over plaintiff, defendants exercised some control over scheduling and assignment of past tasks as a technician so as to demonstrate that they might have had some authority over plaintiff which they could have misused. Rowe v. State of Tenn., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1979, 609 F.2d 259. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Male state trooper did not enjoy a position of authority over female state trooper, and therefore, male trooper was not acting under color of state law during the time that he allegedly sexually harassed female trooper, as required for her § 1983 claim; male trooper could neither alter female trooper's workload nor would she face charges of insubordination if she failed to follow male trooper's orders. Zelinski v. Pennsylvania State Police, M.D.Pa.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 251, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 108 Fed.Appx. 700, 2004 WL 1799234. Civil Rights 1326(11)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Supervisors acted under color of state law in sexually harassing lifeguards, for purposes of § 1983 action; supervisory authority over lifeguards lent weight of city to supervisors' decisions and conduct toward lifeguards. Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, S.D.Fla.1994, 864 F.Supp. 1552, affirmed in part, reversed in part 76 F.3d 1155, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 83 F.3d 1346, affirmed in part, reversed in part 111 F.3d 1530, certiorari granted 118 S.Ct. 438, 522 U.S. 978, 139 L.Ed.2d 337, reversed 118 S.Ct. 2275, 524 U.S. 775, 157 A.L.R. 693. ---- Misuse of authority, authority granted by state, attribution of private actions to state

Police officers and police dispatcher did not use their positions as policemen to accomplish prank in which they staged armed robbery of store clerk, and thus officers were not liable to clerk under § 1983. Haines v. Fisher, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1996, 82 F.3d 1503. Civil Rights 1088(1)

This section covers some actions taken by private citizens; misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law is action taken "under color" of state law. Culbertson v. Leland, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1975, 528 F.2d 426. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law, is action taken "under color of any statute", within this section. Henig v. Odorioso, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1967, 385 F.2d 491, certiorari denied 88 S.Ct. 1269, 390 U.S. 1016, 20 L.Ed.2d 166, rehearing denied 88 S.Ct. 1814, 391 U.S. 929, 20 L.Ed.2d 671. See, also, Basista v. Leslie & Clay Coal Co., D.C.Ky.1952, 101 F.Supp. 774; Siegel v. Ragan, D.C.Ill.1949, 88 F.Supp. 996, affirmed 180 F.2d 785, certiorari denied 70 S.Ct. 1015, 339 U.S. 990, 94 L.Ed. 1390, rehearing denied 71 S.Ct. 12, 340 U.S. 847, 95 L.Ed. 621; Gordan v. Garrson, D.C.Ill.1948, 77 F.Supp. 477.

The "color of law" inquiry, for purposes of determining right to bring civil rights action, centers on whether person affiliated with state government or political subdivision has used his position to deprive another of his constitutional rights. Colon v. Lomelo, S.D.Fla.1983, 575 F.Supp. 664. Civil Rights 1326(2)

For action to be considered as taken "under color of state law" as required for right of action for deprivation of constitutionally secured rights, it was necessary that there be misuse of power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because defendant is clothed with authority of state law. Montgomery v. White, E.D.Tex.1969, 320 F.Supp. 303. Civil Rights 1324

Misuse of power possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state law is "action under color of state law." Harbert v. Rapp, D.C.Okl.1976, 415 F.Supp. 83. See, also, Timo v. Associated Indem. Corp., D.C.Okl.1976, 412 F.Supp. 1056; Augenti v. Cappellini, M.D.Pa.1979, 84 F.R.D. 73. Civil Rights 1324

694. Miscellaneous authority, attribution of private actions to state

There was no direct state action in connection with sale of management corporation by agency of the government of Puerto Rico prior to discharge of two employees of the corporation, so as to support a civil rights action; the decision of the government agency to sell the corporation could not be considered the requisite action where there was no evidence that the political views of the discharged employees, which allegedly motivated the discharge, were a motivating, much less a deciding, factor in the decision to sell the corporation. Rodriguez-Garcia v. Davila, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1990, 904 F.2d 90. Civil Rights 1326(11)

State of Ohio's authorization of Ohio Republican Party State Central Committee's power to choose which committee shall be recognized as the rightful county central or executive committee did not make Republican Party and the state intertwined, such that actions of the party were "state action" for purposes of § 1983. Federspiel v. Ohio Republican Party State Cent. Committee, S.D.Ohio 1994, 867 F.Supp. 617, affirmed 85 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Driver employed by private transportation company, under contract with Chicago transit authority to provide transportation services, could not be regarded as acting under color of state law when he attempted to rape two minor passengers, and thus, driver was not liable to minors under § 1983; assuming that driver was clothed in authority of state when performing his duties as transit worker, attempt to rape two young girls was not act even remotely related to performance of his job. Thomas v. Cannon, N.D.Ill.1990, 751 F.Supp. 765. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Prisoner failed to comply with local rule requiring plaintiff to file completed form for in forma pauperis motion with his complaint; thus, United States District Court clerk was acting within scope of her authority in returning prisoner's petitions, and could not be liable in prisoner's § 1983 action. Fixel v. U.S., D.Nev.1990, 737 F.Supp. 593, affirmed 930 F.2d 27. Civil Rights 1056

Private actors' transfer of fire truck and equipment, from old volunteer fire company to new company, was not state action, precluding suit under §§ 1983. Breiner v. Litwhiler, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2004, 98 Fed.Appx. 75, 2004 WL 557335, Unreported. Civil Rights 1326(9)

695. Approval, acquiescence or concurrence by state, attribution of private actions to state

Life insurer's conversion from a mutual company to a stock company pursuant to state statute authorizing such conversion was not "state action" required to support claim under § 1983; although conversion was approved by state's superintendent of insurance, superintendent merely found that insurer met statutorily mandated standards for granting such reorganization, and there was no allegation that state ordered or coerced insurer into reorganizing. Tancredi v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 308, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 2610, 539 U.S. 942, 156 L.Ed.2d 628. Civil Rights 1326(4); Civil Rights 1326(7)

School board's refusal to review school superintendent's decision to terminate former school district employee was not sufficient to show that board ratified superintendent's decision, as support imposition of municipal liability under §§ 1983. Craig v. Maine School Administrative Dist. # 5, D.Me.2004, 350 F.Supp.2d 294. Civil Rights 1349

State's mere approval of or acquiescence in initiatives of private party is not sufficient to establish state action under § 1983; state can normally be held responsible for private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that choice in law must be deemed to be that of state. Integrated Information Service, Inc. v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., D.Neb.1990, 739 F.Supp. 488. Civil Rights 1326(5)

The "under color of state law" requisite for bringing claim within civil rights statute can be fulfilled if plaintiff can show that state official and private persons reached an understanding between themselves to deprive plaintiff of rights guaranteed under the Constitution. Boulter v. Jordan, D.Colo.1990, 733 F.Supp. 85. Civil Rights 1326(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Voluntary concurrence of state in a decision of organization or other body, not a state, state instrumentality or sovereign equivalent, does not make the acts of the organization "state action" in a constitutional sense; rather, it is the concurrence by the state, its instrumentality or sovereign equivalent that is state action which must be measured by due process and equal protection requirements. McDonald v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, C.D.Cal.1974, 370 F.Supp. 625. Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(3)

696. Influence, involvement or control by state generally, attribution of private actions to state

Even where governmental regulation and funding of an ostensibly private organization are present, state action will not be found for purposes of federal civil rights action absent evidence of state influence, involvement, or control over challenged personnel decisions. MacDonald v. Eastern Wyoming Mental Health Center, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1991, 941 F.2d 1115. Civil Rights 1326(11)

697. Significance of state involvement, attribution of private actions to state

"State compulsion test" for determining whether private conduct is fairly attributable to the state for § 1983 purposes requires proof that the state significantly encouraged or somehow coerced the private party, either overtly or covertly, to take particular action so that the choice is really that of the state. Ellison v. Garbarino, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1995, 48 F.3d 192. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Enforcement of "no camera" rider contained in contracts between performers and private promoter of musical events at city civic center, by employees of civic center, constituted sufficient state involvement so as to constitute action "under color of state law" within meaning of the Civil Rights Act. D'Amario v. Providence Civic Center Authority, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1986, 783 F.2d 1, on remand 639 F.Supp. 1538. Civil Rights 1326(4)

Neither general government involvement nor even extensive detailed state regulation is sufficient for a finding of "state action" sufficient to support assertion of federal jurisdiction under this section; rather, the state must affirmatively support and be directly involved in the specific conduct which is being challenged. Cannon v. University of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1976, 559 F.2d 1063, certiorari granted 98 S.Ct. 3142, 438 U.S. 914, 57 L.Ed.2d 1159, reversed on other grounds99 S.Ct. 1946, 441 U.S. 677, 60 L.Ed.2d 560, on remand 605 F.2d 560. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Only when state has significantly involved itself with invidious discrimination is there a violation of this section. Aasum v. Good Samaritan Hospital, C.A.9 (Or.) 1976, 542 F.2d 792. Civil Rights 1325

In respect to this section for "state action" to be found where the impetus for the discrimination is private, the record must demonstrate that the state has become significantly involved with the discriminatory action alleged. Broderick v. Associated Hospital Service of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 536 F.2d 1. Civil Rights 1325

Although the degree to which a state's involvement through regulation concerns the allegedly discriminatory activity complained of is relevant in determining whether state action should be found, it is not a sine qua non. Weise v. Syracuse University, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1975, 522 F.2d 397. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Although application of the state involvement test in determining whether private, individual conduct constitutes state action is on a case-by-case basis, the polestar of analysis is whether the state involvement in the challenged action is "significant." Magill v. Avonworth Baseball Conference, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1325

Only when the state becomes to some significant extent involved in the conduct of the affairs of a private institution can that conduct be classified as state action and thus run afoul of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Ascherman v. Presbyterian Hospital of Pac. Medical Center, Inc., C.A.9 (Cal.) 1974, 507 F.2d 1103. Constitutional Law 213(4); Constitutional Law 254(4)

Finding that state action is present is insufficient; state action must rise to the level of significant involvement. Turner v. Impala Motors, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1974, 503 F.2d 607.

In order to be regulable under constitutional standards through this section or § 1331 of Title 28, the very activity of a private entity which a plaintiff challenges must be supported by state action which significantly fosters or encourages such activity. Driscoll v. International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 139, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1973, 484 F.2d 682, certiorari denied 94 S.Ct. 1490, 415 U.S. 960, 39 L.Ed.2d 575. Federal Courts 191; Federal Courts 222

Private entities are subject to civil rights laws only if their activities are significantly affected with state involvement and mere existence of some government tie to private organization is not sufficient to support finding of state action where state has not sufficiently involved itself in invidious discrimination and, moreover, state must be involved in more than some activity of the offending institution itself; it must have been involved with activity that caused injury to plaintiff. Feldman v. Jackson Memorial Hospital, S.D.Fla.1981, 509 F.Supp. 815, affirmed 752 F.2d 647, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3504, 472 U.S. 1029, 87 L.Ed.2d 635. Civil Rights 1326(4)

698. Inspections by state, attribution of private actions to state

Fact that State Board of Health inspected hospital did not constitute state action within meaning of this section for purpose of determining whether private hospital's refusal to allow licensed chiropractic physician to use clinical laboratory facilities constituted invidious discrimination. Aasum v. Good Samaritan Hospital, C.A.9 (Or.) 1976, 542 F.2d 792. Civil Rights 1326(7)

699. Licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

Merely acting under state license is not state action within this section. Ouzts v. Maryland Nat. Ins. Co., C.A.9 (Nev.) 1972, 470 F.2d 790, on rehearing 505 F.2d 547, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 1681, 421 U.S. 949, 44 L.Ed.2d 103. See, also, Dreyer v. Jalet, D.C.Tex.1972, 349 F.Supp. 452, affirmed 479 F.2d 1044; Montanez v. Colegio de Tecnicos de Refringeracion y Aire Acondicionado de Puerto Rico, D.C.Puerto Rico 1972, 343 F.Supp. 890; Van Daele v. Vinci, D.C.Ill.1968, 294 F.Supp. 71. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Existence of state licensing scheme does not necessarily make licensee's actions those of state for either U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 purposes or purposes of this section. Jenkins v. White Castle Systems, Inc., N.D.Ill.1981, 510 F.Supp. 981. Civil Rights 1326(7)

On question of presence of action under color of state law to support action under this section, mere fact that defendant holds state licenses which permit it to conduct its business is immaterial, unless state is otherwise connected with challenged conduct. Holmes v. Elks Club, Inc., M.D.Fla.1975, 389 F.Supp. 854. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Bare grant by a state of a license to do certain acts does not make all subsequent conduct of the licensee action taken under "color" of state law, within meaning of this section. Hatfield v. Williams, N.D.Iowa 1974, 64 F.R.D. 71. Civil Rights 1326(7)

700. ---- Professional or occupational licenses, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

City acted under color of law, as required to establish prima facie case under § 1983, in abrogating occupational license previously issued for supervised residential program for ex-offenders and in prohibiting continued use of motel property for housing program participants. Bannum, Inc. v. City of Fort Lauderdale, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1990, 901 F.2d 989, on remand 996 F.Supp. 1230. Civil Rights 1326(7)

701. ---- Attorneys, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

Although states license lawyers to practice and although lawyers are deemed officers of the court, such is insufficient basis for concluding that lawyers act "under color of state law" for purposes of this section. Henderson v. Fisher, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1980, 631 F.2d 1115, on remand 506 F.Supp. 579. Civil Rights 1326(10)

702. ---- Child-care institutions, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

Alleged actions of residence for abused children and its employees, of carrying out policy preventing child from visiting with her parents, after employees had been told to do so by county child protective services caseworker, if proven, were taken under color of state law for purposes of § 1983, even if residence was private institution. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1326(4)

The licensing of child-care institutions which allegedly discriminated against black children did not make actions of the institutions "state action" where none of the regulations or licensing requirements related to the admissions practices of the institutions or defined the types of children which could be accepted. Player v. State of Ala. Dept. of Pensions and Sec., M.D.Ala.1975, 400 F.Supp. 249, affirmed 536 F.2d 1385. Civil Rights 1326(7)

703. ---- Hospitals, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

State licensing of private hospital defendants was not sufficient state action nexus to permit civil rights action against private hospitals and physicians for excluding podiatrist from membership on hospital medical staffs. Feldman v. Jackson Memorial Hospital, S.D.Fla.1981, 509 F.Supp. 815, affirmed 752 F.2d 647, certiorari denied 105 S.Ct. 3504, 472 U.S. 1029, 87 L.Ed.2d 635. Civil Rights 1326(7)

704. ---- Liquor licenses, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

Bar's liquor license did not make it "state actor" for purposes of § 1983. Comiskey v. JFTJ Corp., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1993, 989 F.2d 1007, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1326(7)

705. ---- Physicians, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

South Carolina's grant of license to practice medicine did not establish adequate nexus between state and defendant physician to convert his behavior into that of the state for purpose of U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 14 or this section. Sumpter v. Harper, C.A.4 (S.C.) 1982, 683 F.2d 106. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Former prisoner stated that physician acted under color of state law, for purpose of prisoner's civil rights claims under Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments that were based, in part, upon autopsy that resulted in his wrongful imprisonment for 21 years, on allegations that physician signed report as person licensed to practice medicine as deputy coroner for county that prosecuted prisoner. Marsh v. San Diego County, S.D.Cal.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1035. Civil Rights 1326(8)

706. ---- Private detectives, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

Fact that defendants, two of whom were licensed under state Private Detective Act, were authorized by state statute to detain plaintiff whom they suspected of shoplifting did not mean that defendants were acting "under color of state law", and damages could not be recovered on theory defendants had violated this section. Weyandt v. Mason's Stores, Inc., W.D.Pa.1968, 279 F.Supp. 283. Civil Rights 1326(9)

707. ---- Racetracks, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

Harness racehorse driver failed to show symbiotic relationship between state and private owner of racetrack licensed by state to conduct parimutuel wagering as would render owner's exclusion of driver state action for § 1983 purposes; state had neither proprietary interest in racetrack nor direct financial stake in racetrack's success. Hadges v. Yonkers Racing Corp., C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 918 F.2d 1079, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1583, 499 U.S. 960, 113 L.Ed.2d 648. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Fact that defendant operated a race track under a license from the State Racing Commission did not make it an administrative agency of the state so as to render its action in operating the race track and excluding or ejecting persons therefrom "state action" within the provisions of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 and this section granting a cause of action for violation of such rights. Watkins v. Oaklawn Jockey Club, W.D.Ark.1949, 86 F.Supp. 1006, affirmed 183 F.2d 440. Constitutional Law 254(4)

708. ---- Restaurants, licensing by state, attribution of private actions to state

Restaurant incorporated for profit and open to the public during all of its business hours acted under color of state law within meaning of this section in refusing to serve women from 11:00 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, in view of licensing arrangement with state Department of Liquor Control. Bennett v. Dyer's Chop House, Inc., N.D.Ohio 1972, 350 F.Supp. 153, 33 Ohio Misc. 153, 62 O.O.2d 269. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Acts of corporation which operated public restaurant on park property of city under license from Commissioner of Parks, who had meticulous control over operations of corporation, were acts of an instrumentality of state and within ambit of protection afforded by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14 against deprivation of civil rights and where organization's dinner scheduled at restaurant was cancelled by restaurant owners allegedly solely because of unpopularity of views held by organization and its members, organization could maintain action under this section for alleged deprivation of rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Anderson v. Moses, S.D.N.Y.1960, 185 F.Supp. 727. Civil Rights 1326(7); Constitutional Law 213(4)

709. Corporate charters, attribution of private actions to state

Fact that unincorporated association of private citizens filed charter with county recorder's office did not render association's actions taken "under color of state law" within purview of this section. Canlis v. San Joaquin Sheriff's Posse Comitatus, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1981, 641 F.2d 711, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 510, 454 U.S. 967, 70 L.Ed.2d 383. Civil Rights 1326(1)

Congressional chartering of corporation was insufficient to establish "state action" for purposes of employee's action against corporation for alleged wrongful discharge in alleged violation of rights protected by U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Yiamouyiannis v. Chemical Abstracts Service, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1978, 578 F.2d 164, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 573, 439 U.S. 983, 58 L.Ed.2d 654. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Every private corporation, whether profitable or charitable, is chartered by the state; unless the charter contains a special authorization or directive to engage in the challenged conduct, the fact that it is granted by the state is of no significance for purpose of determining whether the challenged action is state action. Cohen v. Illinois Institute of Technology, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 524 F.2d 818, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1683, 425 U.S. 943, 48 L.Ed.2d 187. Civil Rights 1326(4)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

710. Leases by state, attribution of private actions to state

Leasing of land by a hospital from a state agency is insufficient to convert a private hospital into one acting "under color of" state law within this section. Spencer v. Community Hospital of Evanston, N.D.Ill.1975, 393 F.Supp. 1072. Civil Rights 1326(7)

711. Regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state--Generally

Existence of governmental regulations, standing alone, does not provide required nexus for state action in § 1983 claim. Gallagher v. Neil Young Freedom Concert, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 49 F.3d 1442. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mere fact that business is regulated by state law or agency does not convert its dealings into acts "under color of state law" and thus disabled employee, whose complaint established that defendant insurer made contract with private employer in Montana and that she was claiming benefit under that contract, failed to show requisite state action to state claim under this section against insurer. Freier v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.A.9 (Mont.) 1982, 679 F.2d 780. Civil Rights 1396

State action for purposes of this section can be found either when state and entity whose activities are challenged are joint participants in a symbiotic relationship, in which case all of the entity's actions are state actions and a nexus between the state regulation and the action need not be shown, or when the entity is pervasively regulated by the state and sufficient nexus exists between the state and the challenged activity. Benner v. Oswald, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1979, 592 F.2d 174, certiorari denied 100 S.Ct. 62, 444 U.S. 832, 62 L.Ed.2d 41. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mere fact of state regulation alone does not transform what is essentially private action into "state action" for purposes of this section creating a federal cause of action against persons whose misconduct under color of state law violates the constitutional rights of another. Broderick v. Associated Hospital Service of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1976, 536 F.2d 1. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mere existence of detailed regulation of private entity does not make every act or even every regular act, of the private firm, the action of the state; unless it is alleged that the regulatory agency has encouraged the practice in question, or at least given its affirmative approval to the practice, the fact that a business or an institution is subject to regulation is not of decisive importance. Cohen v. Illinois Institute of Technology, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1975, 524 F.2d 818, certiorari denied 96 S.Ct. 1683, 425 U.S. 943, 48 L.Ed.2d 187. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Nondiscriminatory regulation of a business by the State does not transform the activities of a private party into state action for purposes of this section. Scott v. Eversole Mortuary, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1975, 522 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Pervasive state regulation, without more, is insufficient to constitute state action. Magill v. Avonworth Baseball Conference, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1975, 516 F.2d 1328. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Regulation alone does not make actions of the regulated party state action for purposes of § 1983 action. Federspiel v. Ohio Republican Party State Cent. Committee, S.D.Ohio 1994, 867 F.Supp. 617, affirmed 85 F.3d 628. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mere fact that a business is subject to state regulation does not by itself convert its action into that of state for purposes of bringing an action pursuant to this section. Johnson v. Heinemann Candy Co., Inc., E.D.Wis.1975, 402 F.Supp. 714. Civil Rights 1326(7)

711A. ---- Agriculture, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Prospective exhibitors who sued county agricultural society, stemming from ban of livestock at county fair following positive test for prohibited substance, failed to establish strong likelihood of nexus between state and challenged action for purposes of §§ 1983 claim, as required to obtain temporary restraining order (TRO); although state regulated or funded county agricultural society, record did not otherwise contain facts from which nexus could have been inferred. Farmer v. Pike County Agr. Society, S.D.Ohio 2005, 411 F.Supp.2d 838. Civil Rights 1457(7)

712. ---- Banks or banking, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

Banks' setting off against funds of depositors their indebtedness on bank credit cards was not action under color of state law within this section, although banks were closely regulated by state, in absence of showing that state gave special support to defendant banks restricted depositors' alternatives or contributed in any way to banks' operation. Fletcher v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Nat. Bank, C.A.1 (R.I.) 1974, 496 F.2d 927, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 320, 419 U.S. 1001, 42 L.Ed.2d 277. Civil Rights 1326(9)

In action under this section brought by borrowers against lenders, with whom wage assignment agreements had been entered into, seeking a judgment declaring New York wage assignment statute, McKinney's N.Y. Personal Property Law, § 46 et seq., to be unconstitutional as violative of the process clause of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, there was no "state action" on theory that state had become a partner or joint venturer with the lenders by reason of state licensing regulations, since state receives no revenue from the licensing of lenders and since they do not enjoy any monopoly in the lending of money on the security of wage assignments. Bond v. Dentzer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1974, 494 F.2d 302, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 65, 419 U.S. 837, 42 L.Ed.2d 63. Civil Rights 1326(9)

No elaborate financial or regulatory nexus existed between government employee savings association and government of Puerto Rico and, thus, association's conduct was not state action for purposes of § 1983 claims; although created by law and regulated by government, association was funded by its members and governed by board of directors which was elected by delegates of members and managed organization without interference from government agencies. Velazquez v. Asociacion De Empleados Del Estado Libre Asociado De Puerto Rico, D. Puerto Rico 1995, 892 F.Supp. 42, affirmed 84 F.3d 487. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Mere fact that national banking associations are regulated by federal government does not make them subject to civil rights actions. C.A.R. Leasing, Inc. v. First Lease, Inc., N.D.Ill.1975, 394 F.Supp. 306. Civil Rights 1326(7)

713. ---- Corporations, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

Generally, fact that a corporation is subject to some degree of state regulation, or is granted some special rights or privileges by the state, is not enough to convert the essentially administrative or business actions of the corporation into that state action which this section proscribes. Palmer v. Columbia Gas Co. of Ohio, N.D.Ohio 1972, 342 F.Supp. 241, 32 Ohio Misc. 16, 61 O.O.2d 31, affirmed 479 F.2d 153, 72 O.O.2d 337. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Complaint against private corporations by individuals who sought damages for personal injuries, medical expenses, and damage to property allegedly resulting from defendants' polluting the air, did not allege quantum of state or municipal regulatory involvement necessary to clothe defendants with mantle of state so as to permit action under this section. Tanner v. Armco Steel Corp., S.D.Tex.1972, 340 F.Supp. 532. Civil Rights 1396

714. ---- Credit unions, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

Pervasive entwinement did not exist between state and state employees credit union, such that actions taken by credit union's president and board member in connection with former employee's termination for violating credit union loan policies and credit union's post-termination pursuit of normal collection efforts on former employee's past-due loans qualified as state action under § 1983, even though credit union was organized under state law and regularly audited by state, credit union's purpose was to provide services to state employees, and credit union received some peripheral services from state for which credit union reimbursed state. Hauschild v. Nielsen, D.Neb.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 995. Civil Rights 1326(9); Civil Rights 1326(11)

Where state had only power to regulate credit union and it was not alleged that state in any way sanctioned alleged discriminatory policies or encouraged discrimination by the credit union but merely permitted it to continue to exist, by not requiring surrender of its charter, there was no state action which was legal cause of deprivation of civil rights, and no cause of action under this section. Ingram v. Dunn, N.D.Ga.1974, 383 F.Supp. 1043, affirmed 514 F.2d 1070. Civil Rights 1326(7)

715. ---- Education, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

No special relationship existed between public elementary school student and the state at the time of alleged harms to the student arising from principal's and teacher's alleged failure to protect the student from racial harassment and assaults by other students so as to create a duty on the part of the principal and teacher under the due process clause to protect the student, where, under state law, it was up to the parents of compulsory-school-age children to decide whether education would take place in the home, or in public or private school, and where there was no showing that the principal's and teacher's actions created a danger or made the student more vulnerable to attacks. Crispim v. Athanson, D.Conn.2003, 275 F.Supp.2d 240. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 147

University did not act pursuant to city rule or regulation in terminating public safety officers, and thus terminations did not involve "state action," as required for officers to maintain § 1983 claim against university; agreement between city and university specifically provided that officers would not be subject to city trial board hearings, but would instead be disciplined pursuant to university policy. Allocco v. City of Coral Gables, S.D.Fla.2002, 221 F.Supp.2d 1317, affirmed 88 Fed.Appx. 380, 2003 WL 22768944. Civil Rights 1326(11)

No sufficiently close nexus between action of private university dental school in suspending student for desecrating cadaver and state existed as would allow suspension to be considered "state action" under nexus/state compulsion test and support action by student alleging that suspension deprived him of rights under Federal and State Constitutions where state regulation of school's handling of cadavers and school's participation in governmentally regulated projects were not even remotely connected to disciplinary process which resulted in student's expulsion and there was no act of government which motivated disciplinary action. Tynecki v. Tufts University School of Dental Medicine, D.Mass.1994, 875 F.Supp. 26. Civil Rights 1326(6); Constitutional Law 254(4)

Commonwealth's regulation of university through accreditation council established under state statute did not so involve it in university disciplinary procedures as to make those procedures subject to constitutional scrutiny under this section, where regulation of the accreditation council did not trench on university's discretion to follow whatever policy it wished, but required only that some general policy be publicly announced. Berrios v. Inter American University, D.C.Puerto Rico 1975, 409 F.Supp. 769, affirmed 535 F.2d 1330, appeal dismissed 96 S.Ct. 2665, 426 U.S. 942, 49 L.Ed.2d 1180. Civil Rights 1326(7)

716. ---- Environment, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

Alleged deprivation of surface owners' constitutional rights by reason of mineral owners' strip mining of the property was not, for purposes of this section committed under color of law, since the environmental laws and regulations of Kentucky are not sufficient to constitute a necessary degree of state involvement, nor can the decisions of the Kentucky court of appeals interpreting "broad form" deeds in unrelated cases be construed as "state action." Watson v. Kenlick Coal Co., Inc., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1974, 498 F.2d 1183, certiorari denied 95 S.Ct. 2639, 422 U.S. 1012, 45 L.Ed.2d 677. Civil Rights 1326(7)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

717. ---- Medical care, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

A mental health center could not be considered a state actor for purposes of a § 1983 action merely because of pervasive state regulation and monitoring of the center's personnel standards and its receipt of state funds, absent evidence tending to prove that the state was involved in center's decision to discharge employees. MacDonald v. Eastern Wyoming Mental Health Center, C.A.10 (Wyo.) 1991, 941 F.2d 1115. Civil Rights 1326(11)

Even if state regulates hospital, regulation does not establish requisite state action to support § 1983 claim against hospital. Purgess v. Sharrock, S.D.N.Y.1992, 806 F.Supp. 1102, supplemented. Civil Rights 1326(7)

It is not a hospital's receipt of hospital money under Hill-Burton program that converts private action into state action for purpose of this section, rather it is the elaborate and intricate pattern of governmental regulations, for which a hospital becomes subject in return for federal aid, that may render the hospital's conduct state action. Manning v. Greensville Memorial Hospital, E.D.Va.1979, 470 F.Supp. 662. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Where applicable federal regulations did not in any way encourage alleged improper conduct of private nursing home toward medicaid recipient, regulations could not be basis for characterizing nursing home's action as state action so as to subject it to civil rights suit by recipient. Fuzie v. Manor Care, Inc., N.D.Ohio 1977, 461 F.Supp. 689. Civil Rights 1326(7)

718. ---- Nursing homes, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

In awarding attorney fee to civil rights plaintiff under §§ 1988, district court did not make sufficiently specific findings of fact or provide adequate explanation respecting how it determined number of attorney hours that were related to plaintiff's successful claims against one defendant, rather than unsuccessful claims against other defendants, such that Court of Appeals could not determine, on appeal, whether district court's assessment of the evidence was clearly erroneous, warranting remand for more definite statement of how district court reached its conclusion with respect to its award of fees and expenses. Patterson v. Balsamico, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 440 F.3d 104. Federal Courts 947

Existence of state regulation of nursing home industry and receipt of state funding by private nursing home did not create state action that would support suit under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] against nursing home operator and employees to recover for death of nursing home patient as an alleged result of beatings sustained in nursing home. Daigle v. Opelousas Health Care, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1985, 774 F.2d 1344. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Under symbiotic relationship test, private nursing home was not state actor subject to terminated employee's §§ 1983 action arising from patient-abuse investigation by office of New York's Attorney General (OAG) and subsequent criminal prosecution, inasmuch as State did not have interdependent relationship with nursing home such that they could be considered joint participants. Mitchell v. Home, S.D.N.Y.2005, 377 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1326(11)

719. ---- Postal services, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

There was no evidence of affirmative state approval of rule adopted by parcel delivery service relating to grooming requirements of its employees which would have made any deprivation of civil rights arising out of the grooming standards a matter of state action. Howe v. United Parcel Service, Inc., S.D.Iowa 1974, 379 F.Supp. 667. Civil Rights 1421

720. ---- Racing and racetracks, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Race track's denying stalling privileges to a professional trainer, allegedly resulting in loss of employment, constituted "state action" for purpose of suit under this section, considering particularly intrusive nature of Louisiana's regulation of horse racing and participation of racing secretary, an official having functions directly under control of both state officials and track management, in the decision to deny stalling and considering secretary's intimate and continuous involvement in actual day-to-day management of racing-related activities at the otherwise private track. Roberts v. Louisiana Downs, Inc., C.A.5 (La.) 1984, 742 F.2d 221. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Where raceway president performed as private individual discharging his corporate duties in attempting to exclude driver trainer from race, and raceway was private corporation, president's attempted exclusion of driver trainer did not constitute "state action" for purposes of driver trainer's action under this section, notwithstanding that state heavily regulated horse racing industry and derived revenue from race track operations. Bier v. Fleming, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1983, 717 F.2d 308, certiorari denied 104 S.Ct. 1283, 465 U.S. 1026, 79 L.Ed.2d 686. Civil Rights 1326(7)

State of Florida did not engage in "state action" with regard to business of greyhound racing by virtue of its extensive regulation of such business, its sharing in business' revenues, or its allocation of dog track racing days; greyhound breeder and racer therefore could not proceed under this section against partners of private greyhound kennel club on his allegations that such partners violated his civil rights by refusing to renew his booking contract to race his greyhound dogs at such club, and that such partners' conduct was attributable to State for purposes of U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14. Fulton v. Hecht, C.A.5 (Fla.) 1977, 545 F.2d 540, rehearing denied 548 F.2d 355, certiorari denied 97 S.Ct. 1682, 430 U.S. 984, 52 L.Ed.2d 379, rehearing denied 97 S.Ct. 2941, 431 U.S. 975, 53 L.Ed.2d 1073. Civil Rights 1326(7)

Racetrack owner's exclusion of licensed driver, trainer and horse owner from track did not constitute state action, and thus did not give rise to § 1983 liability; though track was heavily regulated and licensed by state, track's exercise of its retained common-law right to exclude certain persons was based on its own business judgment without involvement of state officials. Hadges v. Yonkers Racing Corp., S.D.N.Y.1990, 733 F.Supp. 686, affirmed 918 F.2d 1079, certiorari denied 111 S.Ct. 1583, 499 U.S. 960, 113 L.Ed.2d 648. Civil Rights 1326(7)

721. ---- Solicitors or solicitation, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

State fair operators' requirement that solicitation of money for religious purposes be restricted to a booth was "state action" for purposes of this section. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. Barber, N.D.N.Y.1980, 506 F.Supp. 147, reversed on other grounds 650 F.2d 430. Civil Rights 1326(1)

722. ---- Television, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

City ordinance governing cable television which required that private corporation which installed and operated cable television system not discriminate on basis of sex did not cause otherwise private action to be under color of state law, as purpose of regulation was to protect city from suit; therefore, discharge by corporation of female employee under circumstances employee claimed constituted sex discrimination did not state cause of action under this section. Cox v. Athena Cablevision, E.D.Tenn.1982, 558 F.Supp. 258. Civil Rights 1326(11)

723. ---- Utilities, regulation by state, attribution of private actions to state

Private corporate utility company was not brought within purview of "state action" merely because it was state regulated; employee's complaint against such utility therefore did not state cause of action under this subchapter. McLellan v. Mississippi Power & Light Co., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1976, 526 F.2d 870, vacated in part 545 F.2d 919. Civil Rights 1326(11)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Extensive state regulation of telephone company, standing alone, was insufficient to convert otherwise private business operation into "state action" for purposes of this section, and thus black citizens of county could not recover against telephone company under this section requiring that defendants have acted under color of state law in order for liability to be imposed. White v. Walnut Hill Tel. Co., W.D.Ark.1979, 84 F.R.D. 138. Civil Rights 1326(7)

751. Custom or usage generally

To establish liability on part of county under § 1983, plaintiff had to demonstrate policy or custom that caused alleged constitutional deprivation. Brooks v. George County, Miss., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1996, 84 F.3d 157, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 359, 519 U.S. 948, 136 L.Ed.2d 251. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipalities and other local governments, such as counties, may be sued under §§ 1983 for constitutional torts, and such a local government may be held liable where its action itself violates federal law, or it directs an employee to do so; in order to establish liability, the government official must have committed a constitutional violation, and the entity itself must have been the "moving force" behind the alleged deprivation, so the entity's "policy or custom" must have contributed toward the constitutional violation. Keehner v. Dunn, D.Kan.2005, 409 F.Supp.2d 1266. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Police officers were not entitled to summary judgment on constitutional claims on basis of qualified immunity where disputed issues of fact concerning the existence of exigent circumstances remained with respect to unlawful entry claim, where genuine issues of fact concerning the reasonableness of force employed by officers with respect to excessive force claim, and where factual issues remained underlying malicious prosecution and First Amendment retaliation claims. Webster v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 184. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

For purposes of municipal liability for enforcement of unconstitutional policy, policy may be established by either a policy or decision adopted by the municipality or a single act of a municipal official with final policymaking authority. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff must meet two requirements to maintain a § 1983 claim grounded upon unconstitutional municipal custom or practice: custom or practice must be attributable to municipality, in that it is so well settled and widespread that policymaking officials of municipality can be said to have either actual or constructive knowledge of it, and the custom must have been cause of and "the moving force" behind deprivation of constitutional rights. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of imposing governmental liability under § 1983, "custom" differs from "policy" in that it is not necessary that the custom has received formal approval through the municipality's official decisionmaking channels. Gausvik v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2002, 239 F.Supp.2d 1108. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Freight company's failure to have a policy regarding its employees' interactions with law enforcement officials in connection with a controlled pickup of drug shipment did not make it liable under § 1983 for acts of those employees in alleged violation of arrestee's constitutional rights; company's policymakers did not know to a moral certainty that its employees would confront that given situation. Mejia v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 234. Civil Rights 1339

City was not liable under § 1983 for any constitutional violations resulting from participation of its emergency response team (ERT) in hostage-rescue training exercise at public high school, in which county ERT members allegedly seized staff members who were unaware of the exercise and used excessive force, absent any allegations that an unconstitutional city policy or custom caused plaintiffs injury or allegation that a city employee directly violated plaintiffs' constitutional rights. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In order to establish liability of governmental body under § 1983, based on government policy or custom, plaintiffs must identify the policy at issue, connect the policy to the governmental body, and show that their injuries were incurred because of the execution of that policy. Reed v. Knox County Dept. of Human Services, S.D.Ohio 1997,

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

968 F.Supp. 1212. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Policies of government entity, required for § 1983 liability, are not limited to formal guidelines or practices that have been reduced to writing; widespread practice may be so permanent and well settled as to constitute custom. Reynolds v. Glynn County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ga.1996, 968 F.Supp. 696, affirmed 119 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Five avenues are available to establish official policy and to impose § 1983 liability on municipal body: (1) actions by municipal legislative bodies are official policies; (2) actions by municipal agencies or boards exercising authority delegated by municipal legislative body may be official policy; (3) actions by those with final decision-making authority in municipality are official policy; (4) official policy may be proven by demonstrating a policy of inadequate training or supervision; and (5) official policy may be shown by proving existence of a custom by a municipality or political subdivision. Torian v. City of Beckley, S.D.W.Va.1997, 963 F.Supp. 565. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To hold city liable under § 1983, plaintiff must prove that city had custom, policy or practice which was responsible for inflicting plaintiff's constitutional injury; plaintiff must show direct causal link between city policy or custom at issue and alleged constitutional deprivation. Bogle v. City of Warner Robins, M.D.Ga.1997, 953 F.Supp. 1563. Civil Rights 1351(1)

In order to prove municipal liability under federal civil rights statute, plaintiff must prove that alleged constitutional violation resulted from official policy or unofficial custom; "policy" is made when decisionmaker possessing final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to action issues official proclamation, policy, or edict, while "custom" arises when, though not authorized by law, such practices by state officials are so permanent and well-settled as to virtually constitute law, and may also be established by evidence of knowledge and acquiescence. Torres v. Kuzniasz, D.N.J.1996, 936 F.Supp. 1201. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal liability under § 1983 may be predicated upon a showing that government employee's unconstitutional action implements or executes a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers or is visited pursuant to governmental "custom" even though such "custom" has not received formal approval through body's official decisionmaking channels and the term "custom" includes persistent and widespread practices, permanent and well settled practices, and deeply embedded traditional ways of carrying out policy. Hammer v. Hillsborough County Through Bd. of County Com'rs, M.D.Fla.1996, 927 F.Supp. 1540. Civil Rights 1351(1)

In order to hold city liable for § 1983 violations, plaintiff must plead and prove official policy or custom that causes plaintiff to be subjected to denial of right guaranteed under Constitution. Canney v. City of Chelsea, D.Mass.1996, 925 F.Supp. 58. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To hold municipality liable under § 1983 for unconstitutional acts of its employees, plaintiff must plead and prove that his constitutional rights were violated, that alleged actions by employees were result of official policy, custom, or practice of municipal defendant, and that policy, custom, or practice caused plaintiff's alleged injuries; proof of single incident of unconstitutional activities is insufficient to demonstrate existence of policy. Nocera v. New York City Fire Com'r, S.D.N.Y.1996, 921 F.Supp. 192. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff in federal civil rights action may establish existence of municipal policy or custom, as will potentially allow imposition of liability against municipality, in two ways; policy or custom is established where decision-maker with final authority regarding matter at hand issues official proclamation, policy, or edict, or through course of conduct when, though not authorized by law, such practices of municipal officials are so permanent and well-settled as to virtually constitute law. Hilliard v. Walker's Party Store, Inc., E.D.Mich.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1162. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For § 1983 purposes, "custom" requires proof of more than random acts or isolated events; there must be proof of permanent and well settled practice which although not authorized by written or express municipal policy, constitutes usage with force of law. Anthony v. County of Sacramento, E.D.Cal.1995, 898 F.Supp. 1435. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Local government entities such as municipalities are liable for civil rights violations if those violations result from implementation of their official policy or are due to governmental "custom"; municipal liability can be found for constitutional deprivations due to governmental custom even though that custom has not received formal approval through government's official decision-making channels. Robertson v. Johnson County, Ky., E.D.Ky.1995, 896 F.Supp. 673. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To establish existence of practice or custom sufficient to hold municipality liable under § 1983 for act of its employee, it is generally necessary to show persistent and widespread practice; actual or constructive knowledge of such customs must be attributed to governing body of municipality, and, normally, random acts or isolated incidents are insufficient to establish custom or policy. Crenshaw v. City of Defuniak Springs, N.D.Fla.1995, 891 F.Supp. 1548. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A public employee can establish municipal liability under § 1983 in either of two ways: (1) by showing that decision maker possessed final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to action ordered, or (2) by showing that her injury was the result of a municipal custom, defined as a wise practice, that although not authorized by written law or express municipal policy, is so permanent and well-settled as to constitute a custom or usage with the force of law. Lawrence v. Metro Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.1994, 872 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For § 1983 liability of municipal body or employees, actions must be taken pursuant to institutional policy, practice or custom. Fox Fuel, a Div. of Keroscene, Inc. v. Delaware County Schools Joint Purchasing Bd., E.D.Pa.1994, 856 F.Supp. 945. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of actions brought against counties under this section subjecting to liability every person who, under color of any custom, or usage, of any state subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States to deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by Constitution and laws, "custom" of county is deeply imbedded traditional way of carrying out county policy, and "usage" is regular and repeated response to situation. Knight v. Carlson, E.D.Cal.1979, 478 F.Supp. 55. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Although this subchapter requires that the defendants have acted under color of state law, it is not necessary that the alleged acts involved be enforcement of a state statute or regulation; a persistent practice by state officials can constitute action under "color of state law." Vazquez v. Ferre, D.C.N.J.1975, 404 F.Supp. 815, motion denied 410 F.Supp. 1385. Civil Rights 1326(2)

A "custom or usage" for purpose of this section providing for federal action for deprivation of rights requires state involvement and is not simply a practice that reflects longstanding social habits, generally observed by the people in a locality. Ellingson v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., D.C.S.D.1973, 363 F.Supp. 1344. Civil Rights 1325

For a plaintiff to bring a § 1983 claim against a municipal defendant, such as a county, a plaintiff must allege facts demonstrating the existence of an officially adopted policy or custom of the municipal defendant that caused plaintiff injury, and a direct and deliberate causal connection between that policy or custom and the deprivation of a federally protected right. Conway v. Garvey, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22510384, Unreported, affirmed 117 Fed.Appx. 792, 2004 WL 2786380. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1394

752. Force of law, custom or usage

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

"Custom or usage of a state", for purpose of this section affording civil action to one deprived of rights under color of such custom or usage, must have force of law by virtue of persistent practices of state officials. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., U.S.N.Y.1970, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 398 U.S. 144, 26 L.Ed.2d 142. Civil Rights 1324

Intravenous drug user, as participant in needle exchange program, adequately pleaded personal involvement by police commissioner, in § 1983 action under Fourth Amendment, where user otherwise adequately pleaded that city and police chief had policy or custom of violating constitutional rights of needle exchange participants by falsely arresting and prosecuting them, and personal involvement included creating policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed such a policy or custom continue. L.B. v. Town of Chester, S.D.N.Y.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 227. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Indian tribe could not be liable under § 1983 for actions of employee who arrested and removed newspaper reporter from Indian lands, absent allegations that policy or custom of Indian tribe caused injuries underlying reporter's claims arising from allegedly false arrest. Armstrong v. Mille Lacs County Sheriffs Dept., D.Minn.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 972, affirmed 63 Fed.Appx. 970, 2003 WL 21212166. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Municipal liability under § 1983 may be supported by either official policy or practices of state officials so permanent and well settled as to constitute custom or usage with force of law. Cox v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 821 F.Supp. 1, as amended, affirmed 40 F.3d 475, 309 U.S.App.D.C. 219. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Neither gross negligence nor deliberate indifference are proper test for adjudging civil rights claim against municipality; rather, test is whether municipality promulgated unconstitutional policy or custom having force of law which was moving force of constitutional violation. Brown v. City of Clewiston, S.D.Fla.1986, 644 F.Supp. 1407, affirmed 848 F.2d 1534. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Monell requires plaintiff to prove existence of policy or custom which is of long standing so as to have force of law causing unconstitutional deprivation of claimant's civil rights. Roman v. Appleby, E.D.Pa.1983, 558 F.Supp. 449. Civil Rights 1401

753. Formal approval of policy, custom or usage

Local governments may be sued for constitutional deprivations visited pursuant to governmental custom even though such a custom has not received formal approval through the body's official decision-making channels. Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 436 U.S. 658, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Local governing body may be sued under § 1983 for causing constitutional tort through act of its officer, if officer committed act pursuant to official formally adopted policy or official policy of established usage or custom. Adkins v. Board of Educ. of Magoffin County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 982 F.2d 952. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality cannot be held liable under federal civil rights statute solely because it employs a tort-feasor; however, local governments like every other "person" under the statute may be sued for constitutional deprivations visited pursuant to governmental "custom"; it is not necessary that such custom receive formal approval through official decision-making channels. Garza v. City of Omaha, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1987, 814 F.2d 553. See, also, Avery v. Burke County, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1981, 660 F.2d 111; Martin v. New York City Dept. of Correction, S.D.N.Y.1981, 522 F.Supp. 169. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Act performed pursuant to "custom" that has not been formally approved by appropriate decisionmaker may fairly subject municipality to liability, under § 1983, on the theory that relevant practice is so widespread as to have the force of law. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Civil Rights 1351(1)

© 2007 Thomson/West. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Paul D. Coverdell Teacher Protection Act of 2001 did not insulate school officials from liability for alleged gross negligence and flagrant indifference to rights of high school student, who was forcibly removed from school to police station after she failed to identify herself. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Schools 63(3)

Intravenous drug user, as participant in needle exchange program, adequately pleaded personal involvement by police commissioner, in § 1983 action under Fourth Amendment, where user otherwise adequately pleaded that city and police chief had policy or custom of violating constitutional rights of needle exchange participants by falsely arresting and prosecuting them, and personal involvement included creating policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed such a policy or custom continue. L.B. v. Town of Chester, S.D.N.Y.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 227. Civil Rights 1395(6)

To prove that municipal policy or custom caused his injuries, civil rights plaintiff must allege existence of formal policy which is officially endorsed by municipality, actions taken or decisions made by government officials responsible for establishing municipal policies which caused alleged violation of plaintiff's civil rights, practice so persistent and widespread to be custom or usage and imply constructive knowledge of policy-making officials, or failure by official policy-makers to properly train or supervise subordinates to such extent that it amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of those with whom municipal employees will come into contact. Moray v. City of Yonkers, S.D.N.Y.1996, 924 F.Supp. 8. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

It is not necessary that municipality enact formal policy, in order for imposition of liability in federal civil rights action based on failure to train employees to be appropriate, when there exists unconstitutional custom that amounts to policy, and plaintiff is not required to produce evidence of deliberate or conscious choice to adopt unconstitutional policy or custom; it may happen that in light of duties assigned to specific employees need for more or different training is so obvious, and inadequacy so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights, that policymakers can reasonably be said to have been deliberately indifferent to need. Hilliard v. Walker's Party Store, Inc., E.D.Mich.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1162. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Local governments can be sued for constitutional deprivations that are pursuant to governmental custom or usage, even though such custom has not received formal approval. Rowson v. County of Arlington, Va., E.D.Va.1992, 786 F.Supp. 555. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Not only can municipality be sued for allegedly unconstitutional action which implements or executes policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers, but it can also be sued for constitutional deprivations pursuant to governmental custom even though such custom has not received formal approval through body's official decision-making channels; however, civil rights liability may not be imposed upon municipality under theory of respondeat superior. Agresta v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1988, 694 F.Supp. 117. Civil Rights 1351(1)

754. Inference of policy, custom or usage

It was reversible error, in action under Civil Rights Act of 1861 [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] to hold city liable for fatal shooting of plaintiff's husband by police officer, to instruct that city could be held liable if a municipal policy caused the claimed deprivation of constitutional rights and that jury could infer from a single, unusually excessive use of force that it was attributable to inadequate training or supervision amounting to deliberate indifference or gross negligence on part of the city officials in charge, notwithstanding that plaintiff introduced independent evidence of inadequate training. (Per Justice Rehnquist with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment.) City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, U.S.Okla.1985, 105 S.Ct. 2427, 471 U.S. 808, 85 L.Ed.2d 791, rehearing denied 106 S.Ct. 16, 473 U.S. 925, 87 L.Ed.2d 695. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1437

Receipt of notice of Appeals Council's decision on Social Security benefits by either claimant or claimant's attorney, whichever occurs first, triggers 60-day limitations period for filing civil action to challenge decision. Bess v. Barnhart, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 337 F.3d 988. Social Security And Public Welfare 146

Plaintiff in § 1983 action against municipality need not show that municipality had explicitly stated rule or regulation; inference that policy existed may be drawn from circumstantial proof, such as evidence that municipality customarily failed to train its employees and displayed deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of those within its borders or that municipality repeatedly failed to make meaningful investigation into charges that police officers used excessive force in violation of civil rights. Powell v. Gardner, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1989, 891 F.2d 1039. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1401

Municipal policy or custom sufficient to predicate municipal liability under this section may be inferred from continued inaction in face of a known history of widespread constitutional deprivations on part of city employees or, under quite narrow circumstances, from manifest propensity of a general, known course of employee conduct to cause constitutional deprivations to an identifiable group of persons having a special relationship to state. Milligan v. City of Newport News, C.A.4 (Va.) 1984, 743 F.2d 227. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Single act of city commission, in denying synagogue's application for special exception to allow operation of place of worship in single-family district, pursuant to zoning ordinance that was unconstitutionally vague, constituted municipal policy or practice sufficient to impose liability on city under §§ 1983 for violation of synagogue's right to free exercise of religion. Hollywood Community Synagogue, Inc. v. City of Hollywood, Fla., S.D.Fla.2006, 436 F.Supp.2d 1325. Civil Rights 1351(3)

In federal civil rights action against municipality, a municipal policy may be inferred from informal acts or omissions of supervisory municipal officials but mere assertion of municipal policy is inadequate to show such a policy and generally, a single incident by nonpolicy makers will not raise an inference of existence of a policy; policy or custom can be inferred from evidence that municipality so failed to train its employees as to display a deliberate indifference to the constitutional rights of those within its jurisdiction but plaintiff must do more than state that there was a failure to train. Merriman v. Town of Colonie, N.Y., N.D.N.Y.1996, 934 F.Supp. 501, affirmed 112 F.3d 504. Civil Rights 1401

Former city fire fighter's allegations, that he was subject to derogatory and ethnic slurs and anonymous threats on basis of his religion, and that such acts were "condoned, permitted, encouraged and/or ratified" by his supervisors and high officials in fire department, were sufficient to support inference that conduct complained of was part of official policy or custom so as to support § 1983 claim against city. Diem v. City and County of San Francisco, N.D.Cal.1988, 686 F.Supp. 806. Civil Rights 1405

755. Capacity, custom or usage

Suit under § 1983 against state official in her official capacity should be treated as suit against state, and because real party in interest in official-capacity suit is state and not named official; state's "policy or custom" must have played part in violation of federal law. Hafer v. Melo, U.S.Pa.1991, 112 S.Ct. 358, 502 U.S. 21, 116 L.Ed.2d 301. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Sheriff's deputy and assistant district attorney who were not acting pursuant to official custom or policy in arresting and charging father with rape of daughter, on what later proved to be fabricated complaint of daughter, could not be held liable in their official capacities in § 1983 action alleging constitutional torts. Donovan v. Briggs, W.D.N.Y.2003, 250 F.Supp.2d 242. Civil Rights 1358

City and public school officials, in their official capacities, were not liable to former student under § 1983 for governmental custom of failing to supervise its employees to prevent or stop sexual abuse of student; aside from two occasions, all sexual contact was alleged to have occurred off school property, no other students were alleged to have engaged in sexual conduct with teacher, there was no evidence of existence of any continuing, widespread, persistent pattern of sexual abuse by subordinates, and there was no evidence school committee showed deliberate indifference to sexual contact or manifested tacit authorization of such misconduct after notice that it was occurring. Armstrong v. Lamy, D.Mass.1996, 938 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Liability could not be imposed on city, or its police chief and police officers, in their official capacities, under § 1983, absent showing by detainee that her injuries from being sprayed with mace by officer were result of unconstitutional policy or custom of city. Wallace v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31844688, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1358

756. Number of incidents, custom or usage

Proof of a single instance of unconstitutional activity is not sufficient to impose civil rights liability on a city under the Monell rule, unless proof of the incident includes proof that it was caused by an existing, unconstitutional municipal policy, which policy can be attributed to a municipal policymaker; otherwise, existence of the unconstitutional policy and its origin must be separately proved and where policy relied on is not itself unconstitutional considerably more proof than the single incident is necessary in every case to establish both the requisite fault on part of the municipality and the causal connection between the "policy" and the constitutional deprivation. (Per Justice Rehnquist with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment.) City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, U.S.Okla.1985, 105 S.Ct. 2427, 471 U.S. 808, 85 L.Ed.2d 791, rehearing denied 106 S.Ct. 16, 473 U.S. 925, 87 L.Ed.2d 695. See, also, Lavoie v. Town of Hudson, D.N.H.1990, 740 F.Supp. 88; Anderson v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1987, 657 F.Supp. 1571. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Allegations of isolated incident are not sufficient to show existence of custom or policy such as would subject municipality to § 1983 liability. Fraire v. City of Arlington, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 957 F.2d 1268, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 462, 506 U.S. 973, 121 L.Ed.2d 371. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Generally, isolated incident of police misconduct by subordinate officers is insufficient to establish municipal policy or custom required to hold municipality vicariously liable under § 1983; by the same token a single deviation from written, official policy does not prove conflicting custom or usage. Wedemeier v. City of Ballwin, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1991, 931 F.2d 24. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Isolated misconduct of fire department's director of personnel and medical director in refusing to furnish retirement board of fireman's annuity and benefit fund with medical certificate that fire fighter contended was condition precedent to award of disability benefits was the type of random and unauthorized act which, even if deliberate, was not an act of their municipal employer. Schroeder v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1991, 927 F.2d 957. Municipal Corporations 747(3)

A single act by a municipality may give rise to civil liability under civil rights statute if it is shown that the officials of the municipality responsible for establishing the challenged policy made a calculated choice to follow the course of action deeded unconstitutional. Pachaly v. City of Lynchburg, C.A.4 (Va.) 1990, 897 F.2d 723. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Although an inference of an unconstitutional policy may not be taken from a single incident, a single incident may be enough to establish municipal liability under federal civil rights provision so long as action taken that caused the loss was pursuant to a policy of the municipality. Ruge v. City of Bellevue, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1989, 892 F.2d 738. Civil Rights 1351(1)

based solely on occurrence of single incident of unconstitutional action by nonpolicymaking employee. Davis v. City of Ellensburg, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1989, 869 F.2d 1230. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Statements by publicly-employed physicians and nurse, as to how often city corrections officers had been referred to psychiatric hospital for evaluation, including physician's statement he had referred officers to hospital 30 times when he had been concerned about "dangerousness," because "[t]hat's what we do here," and "[i]t's generally what the doctors do," did not establish policy or custom of detaining correction officers without finding of dangerousness or with finding of dangerousness made on basis of criteria substantially below standards generally accepted in medical community, and, thus, physicians were not liable in their official capacities for due process violations under §§ 1983. Algarin v. New York City Dept. of Correction, S.D.N.Y.2006, 460 F.Supp.2d 469. Civil Rights 1359

An isolated incident or a meager history of isolated incidents is insufficient to prove the existence of an official policy or custom, as required for municipal liability under § 1983. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Evidence of a single incident cannot establish the existence of a policy or custom, for purposes of § 1983 claim against a municipality. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Handful of isolated and unrelated incidents, apart from female police officer's own experiences in attempting to transfer to canine unit of police department, was insufficient to establish liability of county under § 1983 on a municipal custom theory for any alleged discrimination in excluding woman from special units such as canine unit given that female officer was not able to tie the incidents to gender discrimination. Lawrence v. Metro Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.1994, 872 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Actions of police officers in confining plaintiff, who was collecting petition signatures in front of public building, to area outlined by red line in front of building, provided no basis to impose § 1983 liability on municipality; even if officers gave plaintiffs incorrect understanding of when they could collect signatures, that did not qualify as practice so permanent and well settled as to constitute custom or usage with force of law. Tate v. Lau, D.Nev.1994, 865 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Even assuming that social worker's alleged conduct in spreading malicious stories about parents and threatening to take children away from them was unconstitutional, county social services agency could not be held liable therefor, where parents failed to allege more than a single instance of activity or existence of notice of prior misbehavior. Rinderer v. Delaware County Children and Youth Services, E.D.Pa.1987, 703 F.Supp. 358. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Police officer, who was transferred to another unit, failed to establish that a city policy existed which "propelled" police officials to "punish" her after her mother lodged complaints on her behalf, and therefore city was not liable on Monell claims. Martinez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 2006619, Unreported, affirmed 82 Fed.Appx. 253, 2003 WL 22879401. Civil Rights 1351(5)

757. Pattern of conduct, custom or usage

Social Security disability claimant's failure to receive timely notice of administrative denial of benefits did not warrant equitable tolling of limitations period for filing civil action to challenge denial, where untimely notice was result of claimant's failure to notify Administration of change of address. Bess v. Barnhart, C.A.8 (Ark.) 2003, 337 F.3d 988. Social Security And Public Welfare 146

Municipal liability in § 1983 action for improper custom may not be predicated on isolated or sporadic incidents; rather, it must be founded upon practices of sufficient duration, frequency and consistency that conduct has become traditional method of carrying out policy. Trevino v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 99 F.3d 911, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1249, 520 U.S. 1117, 137 L.Ed.2d 330. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To prove official governmental custom of failing to receive, investigate, and act upon complaints of sexual misconduct of school district's employees so as to render district liable under § 1983 to parents of female handicapped student who had been sexually abused by school van driver, parents had to show: existence of continuing, widespread, persistent pattern of unconstitutional misconduct by governmental entity's employees; deliberate indifference to or tacit authorization of such conduct by governmental entity's policymaking officials after notice to officials of that misconduct; and that plaintiff was injured by acts pursuant to governmental entity's custom, i.e., that custom was moving force behind constitutional violation. Larson by Larson v. Miller, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1996, 76 F.3d 1446. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Government policy or custom used to anchor municipal liability, under § 1983, for alleged constitutional violation by municipal employees need not be contained in explicitly adopted rule or regulation, rather, policy can be shown when practices are persistent and widespread, such that they could be so permanent and well settled as to constitute a custom or usage with the force of law. Dean v. New York City Transit Authority, E.D.N.Y.2004, 297 F.Supp.2d 549. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal custom or usage may serve as a basis for the imposition of municipal liability under § 1983, and the existence of such a custom may be found in persistent and widespread practices of municipal officials which, although not authorized by written law, are so permanent and well-settled as to have the force of law. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Civil rights activists who brought § 1983 action against city, stemming from their arrests by police officers while attempting to film traffic stops, adequately alleged that city had pattern or practice of retaliating against those who criticized police activity, since their allegations referred to multiple retaliatory actions by officers, and thus they stated a claim for § 1983 municipal liability against the city. McCormick v. City of Lawrence, D.Kan.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 1292, amended 289 F.Supp.2d 1264, affirmed 130 Fed.Appx. 987, 2005 WL 1221632. Civil Rights 1395(6)

One incident of unconstitutional conduct by a city employee cannot be a basis for finding an agency-wide custom, for purposes of imposition of municipal liability under § 1983. Davis v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 327, affirmed 75 Fed.Appx. 827, 2003 WL 22173046. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff seeking to impose liability upon municipality under § 1983 must prove that constitutional harm suffered was result of municipal policy or custom; to establish such "policy or custom," plaintiff must allege specific pattern or series of incidents supporting general allegation of custom or policy, and alleging one specific incident in which plaintiff suffered deprivation will not suffice. Brown v. Costello, N.D.N.Y.1995, 905 F.Supp. 65, affirmed 101 F.3d 685. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Chicago transit authority's knowledge of prior incidence of rape of passenger by employee of contractor of authority was insufficient to establish "pattern of conduct or series of acts" which would establish custom or policy of inaction on part of authority or second contractor which would make them liable, under § 1983, for second contractor's employee's attempted rape of two female passengers. Thomas v. Cannon, N.D.Ill.1990, 751 F.Supp. 765. Civil Rights 1341; Civil Rights 1351(6)

Young black men adequately stated basis for holding city liable for incident in which police officers allegedly ordered them into squad car, drove them around, verbally abused them, and then dropped them off in neighborhood known to be hostile to blacks; allegations of failure to discipline officers involved in use of excessive force showed pattern of conduct on part of city. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

To establish municipal policy or custom sufficient for municipal liability under civil rights statute, plaintiff must allege specific pattern or series of incidents that support general allegation of custom or policy; alleging one specific incident in which plaintiff suffered deprivation will not suffice. Doe v. Bobbitt, N.D.Ill.1987, 665 F.Supp. 691. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Supervisory personnel may expose themselves to civil rights liability by knowing and acquiescing in unconstitutional conduct by subordinates, but such unconstitutional conduct, without actual knowledge of the specific wrong being committed, can only result in liability under Civil Rights Act of 1871 when there has been a pattern or practice of constitutional violations. Gann v. Schramm, D.C.Del.1985, 606 F.Supp. 1442. Civil Rights 1355

758. Official policy, custom or usage

Liability under § 1983 attaches where deprivation of right protected by the Constitution or by federal law is caused by an official policy, and official policy can be found in following forms: (1) policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision that is officially adopted and promulgated by municipality's lawmaking officers or by official to whom the lawmakers have delegated policy-making authority, or (2) persistent, widespread practice of city officials or employees, which, although not authorized by officially adopted and promulgated policy, is so common and well settled as to constitute custom that fairly represents municipal policy. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1351(1)

County is liable under § 1983 only when county's official policy causes constitutional violation. Grech v. Clayton County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1326. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff may establish that county's official policy caused constitutional violation, as required to hold county liable under § 1983, by identifying either (1) officially promulgated county policy, or (2) unofficial custom or practice of county shown through repeated acts of final policymaker for county. Grech v. Clayton County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1326. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff alleging that county's official policy caused constitutional violation, as required to hold county liable under § 1983, (1) must show that county has authority and responsibility over governmental function in issue, and (2) must identify those officials who speak with final policymaking authority for county concerning act alleged to have caused particular constitutional violation in issue. Grech v. Clayton County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1326. Civil Rights 1351(1)

High school principal's decision to deny student permission to sing religious song at graduation ceremony did not rise to the level of official policy, as required to subject school board to municipal liability in student's §§ 1983 action, absent evidence that prohibition of student-presented religious songs had happened at any previous time or that prohibitions of such songs was so pervasive throughout the school district as to constituted custom or usage. Ashby v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2004, 354 F.Supp.2d 616. Civil Rights 1351(2)

An "official policy" of a municipality, for purpose of imputing municipal liability under § 1983, may include: an express oral or written policy, decisions of a person with final policymaking authority, an omission, such as a failure to properly train law enforcement officers, that manifests deliberate indifference to the rights of citizens, or a practice that is so persistent and widespread as to constitute a custom or usage with the force of law. Cole v. Summey, M.D.N.C.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 591. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(4)

For purposes of § 1983, a "policy" is a deliberate choice to follow a course among other alternatives. Hedgepeth v.

Washington Metropolitan Area Transit, D.D.C.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 145, motion denied 2004 WL 595070, affirmed 386 F.3d 1148, 363 U.S.App.D.C. 260. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of civil rights statute, "official policy" consists of guidelines constraining free exercise of discretion by subordinate government agents. Moenius v. Stevens, D.Md.1988, 688 F.Supp. 1054. Civil Rights 1351(1)

759. Omissions or inaction, custom or usage

Official policy rendering local government liable under § 1983 for deprivation of rights for injury caused by policy or custom made by law makers may be established by omission of supervisory officials as well as from their affirmative acts. Battista v. Cannon, M.D.Fla.1996, 934 F.Supp. 400. Civil Rights 1351(1)

760. Authority to make policy, custom or usage--Generally

Deputy executive director and manager of public transit authority who were immediately responsible for placement of employee on leave of absence and his eventual termination were not decision makers with final authority to establish public transit authority policy, and therefore public transit authority was not liable for actions of such officials in employee's subsequent § 1983 action which alleged he was not allowed to return to work in retaliation for exercising his free speech rights, where deputy executive director and manager reported directly or indirectly to the public transit authority's executive director, and there was no evidence that the public transit authority board had conferred policymaking authority on such officials. Radic v. Chicago Transit Authority, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1996, 73 F.3d 159, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 2505, 517 U.S. 1247, 135 L.Ed.2d 195. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Codirectors of four-county drug enforcement task force did not possess final policymaking authority with regard to investigation and arrest of individual, for purposes of her § 1983 claim for unlawful arrest; although they held positions of authority within their respective law enforcement departments and as codirectors of task force, nothing in record suggested that either was vested with policymaking authority. Eversole v. Steele, C.A.7 (Ind.) 1995, 59 F.3d 710, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

For purposes of municipality's liability under § 1983 for official's actions, officials can derive their authority to make final policy from customs or legislative enactments, or such authority can be delegated to them by other officials who have final policy-making authority. Feliciano v. City of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 988 F.2d 649, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 90, 510 U.S. 826, 126 L.Ed.2d 57. Civil Rights 1351(1)

In § 1983 proceeding, municipality is liable for acts of its "final policy-making authority" and may also be liable for actions of employee who is not final policy-making authority if widespread practice exists to end that there is "custom or usage with the force of law" or final policy maker ratifies subordinate's recommendation, and basis for it, thus rendering final decision chargeable to municipality. Butcher v. City of McAlester, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1992, 956 F.2d 973. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Only conduct of municipal officials whose decisions constrain discretion of subordinates constitutes acts of municipality for purposes of municipal liability under § 1983; however, it is not necessary that responsible decision maker be specifically identified by plaintiff's evidence to establish municipal liability; practices so permanent and well settled as to have the force of law are ascribable to municipal decision makers. Bielevicz v. Dubinon, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 915 F.2d 845. Civil Rights 1345

Where particular course of action is authorized by municipality's authorized decision makers, it represents policy readily attributed to governmental entity, and in § 1983 case, there is no need to resort to proof of policy's multiple applications to attribute its existence to municipality. Ross v. U.S., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1990, 910 F.2d 1422, rehearing denied, on remand 764 F.Supp. 1308. Civil Rights 1351(1)

If employee inflicts constitutional injury when executing government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, government as an entity is responsible under § 1983. Flanagan v. Munger, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1989, 890 F.2d 1557. Civil Rights 1351(1)

County sheriff, as agent of state, could not set policies regarding use or force on county jail inmates that could provide jurisdictional basis for inmates' § 1983 suit against county for deprivation of constitutional rights. Hammond v. Gordon County, N.D.Ga.2002, 316 F.Supp.2d 1262. Civil Rights 1351(4)

An official represents government policy, for purposes of section 1983, if he or she has final policy making authority, and whether an official is a final policymaker is a question of state law to be determined by the trial court. Caruso v. City of Cocoa, Florida, M.D.Fla.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 1191. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1426; Federal Courts 411

In general, final policy making authority is lacking, for purposes of section 1983, when an official's decisions are subject to meaningful administrative review. Caruso v. City of Cocoa, Florida, M.D.Fla.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 1191 . Civil Rights 1351(1)

Regional security manager and a cartage supervisor for freight company did not have final policymaking authority for purposes of imposing §§ 1983 liability on company for acts of those employees in connection with a controlled pickup of drug shipment in alleged violation of arrestee's constitutional rights; both employees were subject to review by their superiors and there was no evidence that there was a custom of not reviewing the decisions of those employee as to controlled pickups. Mejia v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 234. Civil Rights 1339

"Custom" of local government body, sufficient to impose liability on body under § 1983 for violation of federally protected rights, is some action or position taken by someone with final policy making authority in that area of the local government's business. Ghassomians v. Ashland Independent School Dist., E.D.Ky.1998, 55 F.Supp.2d 675. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City can be held liable for § 1983 civil rights violations if final decision makers participate in establishing policy which directly or indirectly results in constitutional violation, even though municipality is not normally responsible for unauthorized actions of lower level employees. Brown v. City of Margate, S.D.Fla.1993, 842 F.Supp. 515, affirmed 56 F.3d 1390. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of civil rights claim against municipality, custom is not precondition to municipality's liability, and policy may be made by decision of municipal employee with authority to act. Santella v. Grishaber, N.D.Ill.1987, 654 F.Supp. 428. Civil Rights 1351(1)

761. ---- Acquiescence or inaction by final policy maker, authority to make policy, custom or usage

Evidence was sufficient for reasonable jury to have concluded that public transit authority board acquiesced in practice or custom of terminating white per diem professional independent contractors, so as to support transit authority's § 1983 liability under reverse discrimination theory, even though general counsel who had taken allegedly discriminatory actions lacked policy-making authority, as transit authority board made final decisions regarding hiring and firing of per diem independent contractors, board was aware of inordinate number of reverse discrimination grievances and did not limit general counsel's authority in personnel matters. McNabola v. Chicago Transit Authority, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 10 F.3d 501. Civil Rights 1421

Single isolated incident of wrongdoing by nonpolicy maker is generally insufficient to establish municipal acquiescence in unconstitutional conduct, so as to support imposition of municipal liability under § 1983. Cornfield by Lewis v. Consolidated High School Dist. No. 230, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1993, 991 F.2d 1316. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Police Commissioner, who was policy maker for Police Department, did not authorize or acquiesce in conduct which constituted sexual discrimination; thus, city could not be held liable for that discrimination under § 1983. Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1990, 895 F.2d 1469. Civil Rights 1351(5)

762. ---- Agreements concerning, authority to make policy, custom or usage

Where city and county had agreed that city would operate jail facility owned by county, duty to manage and operate facility belonged to city, and custom or policy which it chose to implement did not become that of the county for purposes of holding county liable for violation of inmates' civil rights, where city had separate statutory authority to house prisoners. Deaton v. Montgomery County, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 989 F.2d 885. Civil Rights 1351(4); Prisons 1

763. ---- Delegation of authority, authority to make policy, custom or usage

County Sheriff, as part of a standing policy to request legal advice from district attorney, did not delegate his authority over service and execution of court orders to assistant district attorney, so as to make assistant district attorney's advice to deputy sheriff that deputy could seize mother's children while executing protective order official county policy, for purposes of mother's civil rights claim; although sheriff and his deputies usually followed advice of district attorney, there was no evidence that sheriff required deputies to follow that advice. Hollingsworth v. Hill, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1997, 110 F.3d 733. Civil Rights 1351(6)

That independent school district's board of trustees may have delegated to superintendent final decision in cases of protested individual employee transfers did not mean that it had delegated to superintendent status of policymaker, much less final policymaker, whose actions could form basis for imposing § 1983 liability upon district. Jett v. Dallas Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1993, 7 F.3d 1241, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Delegation by local governmental entity of decision making to another official arises when the subordinate's decision is couched as a policy statement expressly approved by the policymaking entity or when the decision manifests a customary usage of which the entity must have been aware, and entity may be held liable for violation of civil rights by the official in such circumstances. Ware v. Unified School Dist. No. 492, Butler County, State of Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 1990, 902 F.2d 815. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Very fine line exists between delegating final policymaking authority to official, for which municipality may be held liable, and entrusting discretionary authority to official, for which no municipal liability attaches, which distinction lies in amount of authority retained by authorized policymakers; incomplete delegation of authority, i.e., right of review is retained, will not result in municipal liability, whereas absolute delegation of authority may result in municipal liability. (Per Floyd R. Gibson, Senior Circuit Judge, with three Circuit Judges and the Chief Judge concurring and one Circuit Judge concurring in a separate opinion.) Williams v. Butler, C.A.8 1988, 863 F.2d 1398, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 3215, 492 U.S. 906, 106 L.Ed.2d 565. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Firing of police officer who exercised his rights under U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1 was an official act for which city was liable under this section, where city had delegated to city manager ultimate responsibility for personnel decisions so that city manager's actions did not have to be approved by city council and represented "official city policy." McKinley v. City of Eloy, C.A.9 (Ariz.) 1983, 705 F.2d 1110. Civil Rights 1351(5)

If school board approves superintendent's decision to transfer outspoken teacher, knowing of superintendent's retaliatory motive for doing so, governmental entity itself may be liable under §§ 1983; but if school board lacks such awareness of basis for decision, it has not ratified illegality and so district itself is not liable. Sherrod v. Palm Beach County School Dist., S.D.Fla.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 1341. Civil Rights 1349 nursing department was appropriate remedy for alleged retaliation in violation of § 1981 precluded summary judgment for board of trustees of state technical college on grounds of laches arising from hiring of innocent replacement. Smith v. Paladino, W.D.Ark.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 884. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

African-American nursing instructor's allegation that board of trustees of state technical college delegated official policy-making authority to provost to remove department chairpersons was sufficient to state claim that racial and retaliatory animus that allegedly motivated provost's demotion of instructor from position as chairperson of nursing department resulted from "policy or custom" of board, as required to seek reinstatement from individual board members, in their official capacities, in §§ 1983 action alleging retaliation in violation of § 1981. Smith v. Paladino, W.D.Ark.2004, 317 F.Supp.2d 884. Civil Rights 1359

Mere failure to investigate the basis of a subordinate's discretionary decisions does not amount to a delegation of policymaking authority for purposes of imposition of municipal liability under § 1983, especially where the wrongfulness of the subordinate's decision arises from a retaliatory motive or other unstated rationale. Davis v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 327, affirmed 75 Fed.Appx. 827, 2003 WL 22173046. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Since county auditor had final authority on personnel decisions in auditor's office, county council provided funds with which auditor hired and paid his employees, and county delegated and vested final authority and discretion on actual personnel choices to auditor, his decisions and acts, including the termination of plaintiff from her position as supervisor of branch of county auditor's office for political reasons, had to be viewed as official acts of county, and thus auditor in his official capacity in county was liable for plaintiff's deprivation of a constitutionally protected interest. DeLaCruz v. Pruitt, N.D.Ind.1984, 590 F.Supp. 1296. Civil Rights 1351(5)

764. ---- Number of decisions by final policy makers, authority to make policy, custom or usage

Municipal liability may be imposed under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for a single decision by municipal policymakers under appropriate circumstances. Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, U.S.Ohio 1986, 106 S.Ct. 1292, 475 U.S. 469, 89 L.Ed.2d 452, on remand 792 F.2d 57. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal liability under § 1983 may be premised upon single illegal act by municipal officer only when challenged act may fairly be said to represent official policy, such as when that municipal officer possesses final policymaking authority over relevant subject matter. Morro v. City of Birmingham, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 117 F.3d 508, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 127 F.3d 42, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1299, 523 U.S. 1020, 140 L.Ed.2d 465. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Local governmental entities are only liable under § 1983 for acts of local officials pursuant to official government policy; there must have been execution of government policy either by lawmaker or by person whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, and single decision by local official is official policy only when official has final policy making authority under state law. Guidry v. Broussard, C.A.5 (La.) 1990, 897 F.2d 181, rehearing denied 902 F.2d 955. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Where action is directed by those who establish governmental policy, municipality is equally responsible under § 1983 whether that action is to be taken only once or to be taken repeatedly. Wagner v. City of Memphis, W.D.Tenn.1997, 971 F.Supp. 308. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Single incident unaccompanied by supporting history will likely be inadequate basis for inferring custom or usage by city that can be basis for § 1983 liability on part of city, unless actor or actors involved have been given official policy-making authority. Boone v. City of Burleson, N.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 156. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Single act of governmental official or employee does not give rise to municipal liability for alleged civil rights violations unless act was taken pursuant to or caused by official policy or unless official or employee was one who possessed final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to conduct at issue. Simpkins v. Bellevue Hosp., S.D.N.Y.1993, 832 F.Supp. 69. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal liability under § 1983 may attach to single decision of municipal officer only when decision maker possesses final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to action ordered. Dawes v. Pellechia, E.D.N.Y.1988, 688 F.Supp. 842. Civil Rights 1351(1)

765. ---- Ratification by final policy maker, authority to make policy, custom or usage

City council members' vote to indemnify individual police officers for punitive damage judgments entered against them in excessive force case did not amount to ratification of officers' action of shooting robbery suspect, and thus city was not subject to municipal liability in § 1983 action brought by daughter of suspect on basis that it ratified officers' actions. Trevino v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 99 F.3d 911, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1249, 520 U.S. 1117, 137 L.Ed.2d 330. Civil Rights 1348

City director of public safety did not, as final policymaker, ratify actions of city chief of police who allegedly unconstitutionally tested city police academy cadets for drugs so as to render city liable to cadets under § 1983, despite facts that chief informed director of his intention to drug test cadets and that director fired cadets based upon results of drug test; there was no showing that director or any other official expressly ratified decision. Feliciano v. City of Cleveland, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1993, 988 F.2d 649, certiorari denied 114 S.Ct. 90, 510 U.S. 826, 126 L.Ed.2d 57. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Failure of prison guards' supervisors to take any remedial or disciplinary action following inmate's stabbing by another inmate did not ratify guards' failure to prevent stabbing or conditions leading to stabbing, so as to permit supervisors to be held liable in civil rights action; prisons' internal affairs division investigated stabbing and prepared incident report, which supervisor submitted to district attorney and disciplinary board. Walker v. Norris, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1990, 917 F.2d 1449, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1358

City was not liable to city police officer who was terminated for exercising his First Amendment rights, where city manager who was official policymaker whose actions could bind city did not violate officer's constitutional rights when he decided to terminate officer, although police chief who recommended firing of officer was liable; chief was not official policymaker, and manager did not ratify chief's unlawful decision. Wulf v. City of Wichita, C.A.10 (Kan.) 1989, 883 F.2d 842, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Even though county board of supervisors delegated responsibility for acquisition of rights-of-way to subordinates, the board ratified misconduct of the subordinates with respect to establishment of roads on Indian land allotment, giving rise to county's liability under civil rights statute, where the board accepted and approved documents obtained by right-of-way agent without ever questioning agent as to their propriety and even approved an improper deed several years after it incorporated road into the county system. Hammond v. County of Madera, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 859 F.2d 797. Civil Rights 1347

School board's vote to discharge teacher did not ratify superintendent's retaliation against teacher for engaging in protected speech, and thus school district was not liable under §§ 1983 for superintendent's violation of teacher's First Amendment rights under ratification theory, where there was no evidence that any member of district board was aware of superintendent's retaliatory motive. Sherrod v. Palm Beach County School Dist., S.D.Fla.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 1341. Civil Rights 1349

School board did not ratify high school principal's decision to exclude student from singing a song at graduation that had religious themes but to allow another student to give a speech with alleged religious themes, as required to subject school board to liability in student's §§ 1983 claim for equal protection violations, absent evidence that any member of the board was even aware of the contents of the other student's speech, or any other student presentation, prior to the actual delivery of that speech at the graduation ceremony. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; Ashby v. Isle of Wight County School Bd., E.D.Va.2004, 354 F.Supp.2d 616. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Police chief did not ratify alleged constitutional violations by detective, who allegedly deliberately fabricated evidence of sexual abuse by means of excessive coercion of children during interviews, so as to create municipal liability under §§ 1983, absent evidence that he had actual or constructive knowledge of violations. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1179. Civil Rights 1351(4)

766. ---- Reviewability of decisions, authority to make policy, custom or usage

Municipal official does not have final policymaking authority over particular subject matter, such that his decisions could be basis for municipal liability under § 1983, when that official's decisions are subject to meaningful administrative review. Morro v. City of Birmingham, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1997, 117 F.3d 508, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied 127 F.3d 42, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1299, 523 U.S. 1020, 140 L.Ed.2d 465. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City manager's termination of unclassified employee for retaliatory reasons subjected city to § 1983 liability, where city's charter eliminated authority of any official or body to review city manager's decision. Martinez v. City of Opa-Locka, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 1992, 971 F.2d 708. Civil Rights 1349

Existence of meaningful review by city counsel indicated that city officials who suspended employee were not, in that respect, final policymakers, as required for city to be liable under § 1983 for their single decision. Worsham v. City of Pasadena, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1989, 881 F.2d 1336. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County's department heads did not exercise final policymaking authority in area of personnel matters, and thus county was not subject to liability under § 1983 for department heads' allegedly discriminatory failure to promote African-American employee, where department heads did not have any final authority to establish hiring policy, county and collective bargaining agreement's (CBA) grievance process allowed employee to challenge their decisions, and county retained right to review hiring decisions. Stewart v. Board of Com'rs for Shawnee County, Kan., D.Kan.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1143. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Mayor was not final policy-maker for city in connection with personnel matters and, thus, city could not be held liable based solely on mayor's actions in discharging fire chief; all of mayor's employment decisions were subject to review by entire city council. Payung v. Williamson, M.D.Ga.1990, 747 F.Supp. 705. Civil Rights 1351(5)

767. Official policy makers, custom or usage--Generally

Local government is liable under § 1983 for its policies that cause constitutional torts; these policies may be set by government's lawmakers, or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy. McMillian v. Monroe County, Ala., U.S.Ala.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1734, 520 U.S. 781, 138 L.Ed.2d 1. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For purposes of imposing § 1983 liability upon municipality, challenged action must have been taken pursuant to policy adopted by official or officials responsible under state law for making policy in that area of city's business. (Per Justice O'Connor with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in the judgment.) City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, U.S.Mo.1988, 108 S.Ct. 915, 485 U.S. 112, 99 L.Ed.2d 107, on remand 879 F.2d 1573, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Identification of policymaking officials, for purposes of § 1983 analysis, is question of state law. Hyland v. Wonder, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1997, 117 F.3d 405, opinion amended on denial of rehearing 127 F.3d 1135, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1166, 522 U.S. 1148, 140 L.Ed.2d 177. Federal Courts 411

For purposes of municipal liability under § 1983, alleged policymaker must have final policymaking authority with respect to action alleged to have caused particular constitutional or statutory violation; official or entity may be final policymaker with respect to some actions but not others, more than one official or body may be final policymaker with respect to particular action, and final policymaking authority may be shared. McMillian v. Johnson, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1996, 88 F.3d 1573, certiorari granted 117 S.Ct. 554, 519 U.S. 1025, 136 L.Ed.2d 436, affirmed 117 S.Ct. 1734, 520 U.S. 781, 138 L.Ed.2d 1. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Imposition of municipal liability based on a policy requires a decision by a final policymaker, not a "principal" one. Church v. City of Huntsville, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1994, 30 F.3d 1332. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To succeed on theory that governmental official has caused constitutional infringement because of establishment of unconstitutional policy, plaintiff must demonstrate that the official against whom liability is asserted has the power, vesting either formally or as a practical matter, to formulate that policy and has exercised that policy-making authority to generate improper practices. Haynesworth v. Miller, C.A.D.C.1987, 820 F.2d 1245, 261 U.S.App.D.C. 66. United States 50.20

Genuine issue of fact, as to whether allegedly unconstitutional termination of public employee could be attributed to person or entity with municipal decisionmaking authority, precluded summary judgment in §§ 1983 case on ground that termination was not product of municipal custom or policy as established by conduct of decisionmaker. Waters v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.2006, 416 F.Supp.2d 628. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

A "policymaker," for purpose of § 1983 municipal liability, is an individual who is held responsible, through actual or constructive knowledge, for enforcing a policy that caused plaintiff's injuries. Dickerson v. City of Denton, E.D.Tex.2004, 298 F.Supp.2d 537. Civil Rights 1351(1)

For the purpose of distinguishing between the acts of employees and acts of the municipality to support liability for constitutional violations resulting from an official policy or custom under § 1983, a policy is made when a decision maker who possesses final authority issues an official proclamation or edict. American Marine Rail NJ, LLC v. City of Bayonne, D.N.J.2003, 289 F.Supp.2d 569. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Individuals who have municipal policymaking authority, so as to subject municipality to § 1983 liability, can be identified by their receipt of such authority through express legislative grant or through their delegation of policymaking authority from those to whom power has been expressly granted. Soto v. Schembri, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 751. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Acts of single official with final policy-making authority can be sufficient to establish municipal liability under § 1983. Franklin v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1997, 960 F.Supp. 394, supplemented 1997 WL 403418, vacated in part 163 F.3d 625, 333 U.S.App.D.C. 334, rehearing denied, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied 168 F.3d 1360, 335 U.S.App.D.C. 60. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To be "final policymaker" whose act can subject municipality to liability under § 1983, government official must have final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to action ordered. Chapman v. Village of Homewood, N.D.Ill.1997, 960 F.Supp. 127. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Assuming, arguendo, that former city employee's allegations against city receiver and other city officials were true, employee failed to show that there was policy or custom that originated with city officials, a failure which was fatal to his § 1983 claim against city; even if city officials were shown to have been part of alleged retaliation against employee, they would have been powerless to act since their authority to do so had been taken by legislature and delegated to city receiver through Receivership Act. Canney v. City of Chelsea, D.Mass.1996, 925 F.Supp. 58.

Civil Rights 1351(5)

In order to impose § 1983 liability on municipality, it is not enough to allege and prove that constitutional violation represents policy for which local government entity is responsible; policy or custom must be deliberate or conscious choice by municipality's final policy-making official. Tate v. Lau, D.Nev.1994, 865 F.Supp. 681. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipal liability may result in civil rights action for single act of high-ranking governmental official where official is policy maker for government. Washington v. Lake County, Ill., N.D.Ill.1989, 717 F.Supp. 1310. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Policy or custom may be attributed to municipality for purposes of imposing liability under § 1983 if it is created or ratified by official of such rank that he or she could be said to be acting on behalf of municipality. Easterling v. City of Glennville, S.D.Ga.1986, 694 F.Supp. 911. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City or other governmental entity may be held accountable under § 1983 for deprivations of federal rights only if alleged constitutional deprivation was result of municipal custom or policy, or took place pursuant to instructions of final or authorized decision maker. In re Scott County Master Docket, D.Minn.1987, 672 F.Supp. 1152, affirmed 868 F.2d 1017. Civil Rights 1351(1)

768. ---- Attorneys, official policy makers, custom or usage

In ordering deputy sheriffs to enter physician's clinic to serve capiases on third parties in an investigation of alleged welfare fraud, county prosecutor was acting as final decision maker for county; therefore, county could be held liable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for alleged violation of physician's Fourth Amendment [U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4] rights. Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, U.S.Ohio 1986, 106 S.Ct. 1292, 475 U.S. 469, 89 L.Ed.2d 452, on remand 792 F.2d 57. Civil Rights 1348

District attorney qualified as "municipal policymaker," and any deliberate indifference by whom to plaintiff's constitutional rights might render municipality liable under § 1983. Walker v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 974 F.2d 293, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1387, 507 U.S. 961, 122 L.Ed.2d 762, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1412, 507 U.S. 972, 122 L.Ed.2d 784. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Acts of county district attorney in prosecuting sexual assault case as representative of state could not fairly be said to represent official policy of county, and thus there was no local custom or policy to form basis for holding county liable for alleged unconstitutional bias of prosecutors. Michels v. Greenwood Lake Police Dept., S.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 361. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Deputy county attorney was "authorized decisionmaker" in federal civil rights claim for matters involving child abuse interview where he was attorney responsible for child abuse matters in county attorney's office and office was specifically authorized by statute to represent state in proceedings involving rights and interests of juveniles. J.B. v. Washington County, D.Utah 1995, 905 F.Supp. 979, affirmed 127 F.3d 919. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Assistant county district attorneys, even if they were municipal policymakers, were subordinates to county district attorney and their decisions to seek criminal indictment against city police officers arising out of search and to proceed with grand jury presentation in particular fashion were individual exercises of judgment and did not reflect municipal policy so as to preclude liability against assistant district attorneys in their official capacities under § 1983. Feerick v. Sudolnik, S.D.N.Y.1993, 816 F.Supp. 879, affirmed 2 F.3d 403. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Police officer stated cause of action under § 1983 against city, based on respondeat superior liability for alleged acts of city manager and police chief of suspending him in violation of his free speech rights for engaging in secondary employment without permission; officer alleged that city delegated authority to chief and city manager to formulate employment policies, that acts complained of represented official policy, and that chief's decision to uphold denial of permission was final decision. Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1999, 178 F.3d 231. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Where plaintiff in federal civil rights action against city alleges that city's policy is itself unconstitutional denial of substantive due process, liability against city is sought not derivatively on basis of unconstitutional conduct by individual officer, but directly on basis of unconstitutional nature of city's policy itself. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Even assuming that crime victim's "state-created danger" theory raised cognizable constitutional claim against city under § 1983, victim failed to allege facts implicating city itself, as required to impose municipal liability for claimed substantive due process violation, absent allegation of causal link between city policy or custom and alleged state-created danger; victim alleged that police officers increased threat to her life through their actions and inactions after informant notified them that he had been solicited to murder her, but she did not allege that increased danger resulted from city's policies. Piotrowski v. City of Houston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 51 F.3d 512. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City policy "causes" constitutional injury, for purposes of determining city's liability under § 1983, where it is moving force behind constitutional violation or where city itself is wrongdoer. Chew v. Gates, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 27 F.3d 1432, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1097, 513 U.S. 1148, 130 L.Ed.2d 1065. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City could not be liable under §§ 1983 for police chief's decisions to hire and retain police officer, who allegedly used excessive force against arrestee in violation of the Fourth Amendment, where any decisions made by city with respect to the hiring and discipline of its police officers were vested with city council, so that chief's decisions were subject to meaningful administrative review. Reed v. City of Lavonia, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1347. Civil Rights 1351(4)

A city may be held liable under § 1983 for violation of the First Amendment if the acts in question were undertaken pursuant to official policy or custom. Telemundo of Los Angeles v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Plaintiff seeking to hold city liable under § 1983 for acts of its employees can prove the existence of a municipal policy or custom with proof that: (1) a municipal official with final policymaking authority directly committed or commanded the constitutional violation; (2) a policy maker indirectly caused the misconduct of a subordinate municipal employee by acquiescing in a longstanding practice or custom which may fairly be said to represent official policy; or (3) a municipal policymaker failed to adequately train their subordinates, if such failure amounts to "deliberate indifference" to the rights of the individuals who interact with the municipal employees. Hennessy v. City of Long Beach, E.D.N.Y.2003, 258 F.Supp.2d 200. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

For purposes of a § 1983 action, the existence of a municipal policy or custom may be shown where the allegedly unconstitutional action implements or executes a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by the municipality's officers, by persistent and widespread constitutional violations so pervasive that acquiescence of policy makers may be presumed, by circumstantial proof, such as evidence that the municipality's failure to train its employees displayed a deliberate indifference to constitutional rights, or by actions taken by persons whose activities reflect official policy. Maneely v. City of Newburgh, S.D.N.Y.2003, 256 F.Supp.2d 204. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

Developers who paid bribes to city officials for permits and approval could not maintain federal civil rights claims against city as there was no direct causal link between alleged municipal policy of demanding bribes and alleged constitutional violation; any substantive or procedural deprivations were fault of developers as once bribery payment was made, developers became causal link and essentially waived any further right to protest using federal civil rights statute. Roma Const. Co., Inc. v. aRusso, D.R.I.1995, 906 F.Supp. 78, reversed 96 F.3d 566, on remand 1998 WL 156708. Civil Rights 1351(3)

City could not be held liable under § 1983 for constitutional violations resulting from sexual abuse of child while she was in foster care, absent showing by child as to what person, group of people, or official office was responsible for alleged custom, policy, or practice of failing to adequately review social workers' reports. Wendy H. By and Through Smith v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1994, 849 F.Supp. 367. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City could not be liable under § 1983 as official policymaker responsible for approving or condoning actions of police officers who allegedly beat plaintiff, even if failure of police report to identify officers in connection with beating supported contention that official policy of racial discrimination existed; Missouri statute indicated that neither city nor its agents had authority to make official policy concerning actions of board of police commissioners or individual police officers. Crigler v. City of St. Louis, Mo., E.D.Mo.1991, 767 F.Supp. 197. Civil Rights 1351(4)

770. ---- City councils, official policy makers, custom or usage

City and city council member's alleged denial of equal access to television broadcast corporation seeking to broadcast official ceremony was state action undertaken pursuant to official policy or custom, as would support corporation's municipal liability claim under § 1983 against city, alleging that city violated its First Amendment free speech rights, where city had longstanding practice of sponsoring ceremony and partnering exclusively with corporation's competitor to broadcast it, and denial of equal access was committed or ratified by an official with final policy-making authority. Telemundo of Los Angeles v. City of Los Angeles, C.D.Cal.2003, 283 F.Supp.2d 1095. Civil Rights 1326(7); Civil Rights 1351(6)

Person serving as city manager and Recorder's Court judge was not liable, as ultimate policy-maker, for police officers' alleged use of excessive force in arresting bar patron; final policies on question were developed by city council. Mizell v. Lee, M.D.Ga.1993, 829 F.Supp. 1338. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City council, rather than chief of police, had final authority to set policy in area of arrest procedure, for purposes of arrestee's action against city under § 1983 for police chief's alleged use of excessive force. Ingram v. Lee, M.D.Ga.1993, 829 F.Supp. 1333, vacated 862 F.Supp. 368. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City could be held liable under federal civil rights statute for actions of its city council in allegedly wrongfully withholding sanitary landfill license; city council was final policymaker in area of granting such licenses. Browning-Ferris Industries of St. Louis, Inc. v. City of Maryland Heights, Mo., E.D.Mo.1990, 747 F.Supp. 1340. Civil Rights 1351(3)

City council, rather than mayor, city administrator and two police chiefs, was "final policymaker" for city on personnel matters, so that city, absent showing that city council had ratified allegedly unlawful retaliatory actions of these other parties or delegated authority to them, was not liable under §§ 1983 for any actions taken against police officers by mayor, city administrator or police chiefs in alleged retaliation for officers' exercise of their free speech and due process rights; city council had final authority to review any discipline imposed on officers and had not, in fact, accepted discipline imposed by city administrator at mayor's request, but had adjusted discipline as it thought appropriate. Dempsey v. City of Baldwin, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2005, 143 Fed.Appx. 976, 2005 WL 2002512, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

771. ---- City officials, official policy makers, custom or usage

Borough mayor had final policy-making authority to constructively discharge borough manager, as required for municipal liability to attach in manager's §§ 1983 claims against borough alleging deprivation of a liberty interest in reputation without due process and violation of the First Amendment, notwithstanding fact that mayor did not have the power to fire the borough manager outright; mayor's constructive discharge of the manager was final in the sense that it was not reviewable by any other person or any other body or agency in the borough, that is, there was no one above the mayor who had the power to curtail his conduct or prevent him from harassing the manager to the point where the manager had no alternative but to leave his position. Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 455 F.3d 225.

Alleged constitutional violation by city alderman, in harassing and abusing plaintiff, did not result from any policy or custom of municipality so as to impose liability on municipality under § 1983; alderman's actions were not taken with city knowledge, a single alderman had no final decisionmaking power for city, alderman had no authority to be engaged in police functions or taxicab regulations, and thus any actions of alderman regarding these matters were so far beyond scope of his responsibilities as alderman that they negated any causal link between city's conduct and plaintiff's rights. Waters v. City of Morristown, TN, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 2001, 242 F.3d 353. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City manager and public safety director's termination decisions were subject to meaningful administrative review by city civil service board and thus manager and director were not final policymakers, as required for city to be liable, under § 1983, for their decision to terminate fire department employee; although employees had to request review, Board was empowered to reverse terminations and there was no evidence that Board merely rubber-stamped decisions of appointing authorities. Scala v. City of Winter Park, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 116 F.3d 1396. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City's public safety director was not acting as a "policymaker" when he took adverse personnel actions against police officers, and thus, city was not liable under § 1983 for director's actions; city's administrative regulations declared that city council and city manager, not director, retained exclusive right to decide most appropriate means of utilizing city personnel, and authority of the other officials in city to countermand director's personnel decisions was more than titular. Morrash v. Strobel, C.A.4 (Va.) 1987, 842 F.2d 64. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City manager was only official who possessed policymaking power in termination proceedings sufficient to hold city accountable under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, where city code designated city manager as administrative head of municipal government, empowered city manager to appoint or remove all subordinate employees, provided that city manager seek advice of city commission before appointing or removing department heads, but did not limit his authority with regard to hiring or firing other subordinate employees, city manager acted in lieu of governing body in deciding whether to fire employee, and his authority in that area was exclusive. Neubauer v. City of McAllen, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 766 F.2d 1567. Civil Rights 1351(5)

When constitutional rights are alleged to have been violated by a city employee's single tortious decision or course of action, inquiry as to whether §§ 1983 suit may be brought against city focuses on whether the actions of the employee in question may be said to represent the conscious choices of the city itself, on grounds that employee was one of city's authorized policymakers. Wallace v. Suffolk County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether first selectman of town board of selectmen had authority to set policy on who spoke at board meetings, and on what topics, precluding summary judgment in civil rights case against municipality under free speech clause of First Amendment. Piscottano v. Town of Somers, D.Conn.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 187. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

County commission was not liable, under §§ 1983, to dog owner for failure of county prosecuting attorney, county sheriff, and county deputy sheriff to investigate alleged theft of dog by deputy sheriff's cousin, where there was no evidence of an official policy or custom of the county commission regarding the issue at hand. Curry v. Weiford, N.D.W.Va.2005, 389 F.Supp.2d 704, appeal dismissed 133 Fed.Appx. 50, 2005 WL 1220816. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Corporation counsel did not have responsibility for, let alone final authority over, city's issuance of code violations to city residents, and thus, counsel's alleged conduct in directing various city agencies to issue violations against property owners was not sufficient to establish municipal liability under §§ 1983. Moran v. City of New Rochelle, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 507. Civil Rights 1351(3)

Mayor, city administrator, and police chiefs were not final policymakers on personnel matters, and city thus could not be held liable under § 1983 for any actions taken by them in retaliation against police officers in violation of their speech and due process rights, where city council had final policymaking authority, and, although officials in question had discretionary authority to supervise, discipline, and suspend employees, such authority was subject to review by city council. Dempsey v. City of Baldwin City, Kan., D.Kan.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 1055, affirmed 143 Fed.Appx. 976, 2005 WL 2002512. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Plaintiff must meet two requirements to maintain a § 1983 claim grounded upon unconstitutional municipal custom or practice: custom or practice must be attributable to municipality, in that it is so well settled and widespread that policymaking officials of municipality can be said to have either actual or constructive knowledge of it, and the custom must have been cause of and "the moving force" behind deprivation of constitutional rights. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Mayor who ordered removal of flagpole from city cemetery, after it had been installed by Confederate war memorial association, was acting as final decision-maker on behalf of city when he took actions, and thus mayor's actions were imputed to city for purposes of association's § 1983 claim against city; mayor acted as policy-maker when he made decision to remove flagpole, and decision was final since flagpole was in fact removed. Jackson v. City of Stone Mountain, N.D.Ga.2002, 232 F.Supp.2d 1337. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City manager lacked final policy-making authority with regard to employment matters, and city thus could not be held liable under § 1983 for his action of terminating employee, where city's personnel manual provided for review that could set aside his employment decision, and city charter restricted his role in employment policy formulation to that of recommendation, leaving final policy making to city commission. Scala v. City of Winter Park, M.D.Fla.1996, 971 F.Supp. 528, affirmed 116 F.3d 1396. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Municipal liability may attach in § 1983 action for single decision by municipal policymaker where policymaker possesses final authority to establish municipal policy with respect to action ordered. Pirela v. Village of North Aurora, N.D.Ill.1997, 966 F.Supp. 661. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Inspector general of city, which was established to investigate performance of governmental employees, did not have final policymaking authority, and, thus, city could not be held liable under § 1983 for wrongful conduct of employees of inspector general investigating governmental employee misconduct; city council, not inspector general, had final policymaking authority. Angara v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1995, 897 F.Supp. 355. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City's managing director had sufficient authority to implicate city in § 1983 action for director's apparent concurrence in decision to let fire burn after bomb was dropped on house following police officers' failed attempt to execute search and arrest warrants on members of organization within house. In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, E.D.Pa.1994, 849 F.Supp. 331, affirmed in part, reversed in part, dismissed in part 49 F.3d 945, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing in banc denied, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 176, 516 U.S. 863, 133 L.Ed.2d

116, on remand 910 F.Supp. 212, on remand 938 F.Supp. 1264. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In civil rights action by assistant chief fire marshal against city, mayor, public safety director, and fire chief, latter three defendants were policymakers of city, as they jointly possessed final authority regarding employment of fire department members; thus, their official acts were deemed policy of city for purposes of § 1983 liability. Myers v. City of Fort Wayne, Ind., N.D.Ind.1990, 729 F.Supp. 625. Civil Rights 1351(5)

When mayor denied applicant's application for liquor license without a hearing or reasons, he was acting pursuant to authority given him by city council and thus his actions were to be viewed as those of the city. Katris v. City of Waukegan, N.D.Ill.1980, 498 F.Supp. 48. Civil Rights 1350

Mayor could not be held liable under § 1983 on city council employee's claim that mayor retaliated against employee for her exercise of First Amendment rights, where it was city council, not mayor, that was decisionmaker with regard to terms and conditions of her employment. Poppy v. City of Willoughby Hills, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2004, 96 Fed.Appx. 292, 2004 WL 771281, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Citizen, who was prosecuted for littering and dumping, could not assert civil rights claims against city officials in their official capacities, where those claims were essentially against the city, but no municipal policy had been identified which would impose liability on the city. Cochran v. Municipal Court of City of Barberton, Summit County, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2003, 91 Fed.Appx. 365, 2003 WL 23095546, Unreported. Civil Rights 1360

Head of city's department of parks and recreation was final policy maker whose acts could fairly be said to represent city's official policy, and thus city could be held liable under § 1983 for department head's alleged institution of illegal policy of harassing employees for exercising their First Amendment rights, where city charter vested city's executive and administrative power in its departments, and provided that head of each department "shall exercise the powers and perform the duties vested in and imposed upon the department," and department head had final say regarding hiring and firing of employees. Shehee v. City of Wilmington, C.A.3 (Del.) 2003, 67 Fed.Appx. 692, 2003 WL 21061233, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

772. ---- Constables, official policy makers, custom or usage

Elected constable of Texas county did not occupy a policy-making position so as to expose county to civil rights liability for his unconstitutional acts where constable had duty to make arrests and serve warrants and process, but did not have authority to define objectives and choose means of achieving them. Rhode v. Denson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1985, 776 F.2d 107, rehearing denied 778 F.2d 790, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 2891, 476 U.S. 1170, 90 L.Ed.2d 978.

773. ---- County officials, official policy makers, custom or usage

County sheriff was not county policymaker for his law enforcement conduct and policies regarding warrant information on state computer systems or training and supervision of his employees in that regard, as required to hold county liable under § 1983 for alleged false arrest and violation of due process arising from arrest of arrestee on expired bench warrant which had not been withdrawn from computer systems. Grech v. Clayton County, Ga., C.A.11 (Ga.) 2003, 335 F.3d 1326. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Although chief juvenile probation officer of county may have become de facto policymaker with respect to the juvenile detention facility, he had not been delegated final policy-making authority and county could not be held liable for civil rights violations resulting from his decisions. Flores v. Cameron County, Tex., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 92 F.3d 258, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(4)

regarding the sale of road salt and other materials, county could not be held liable under civil rights statute for board members' alleged role in refusing to sell materials to private contractor in retaliation for his comments at county board meeting. Schmidt v. Lincoln County, State of Wisconsin, W.D.Wis.2003, 249 F.Supp.2d 1124. Civil Rights 1351(6)

There was no evidence of an official county policy or custom, as required to hold county liable under §§ 1983 for alleged violation of homeowner's and his family's constitutional rights arising from alleged harassment by county police officers, notwithstanding the homeowner's and his family's allegation that they complained to county's police chief about the alleged harassment and that he failed to take any action to stop it. Kashaka v. Baltimore County, Maryland, D.Md.2006, 450 F.Supp.2d 610. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Former county employee who brought action against county legislature, alleging disclosure of her sexual harassment accusations and identity to news media, failed to allege that constitutional violations were caused by official policy or custom, as required to state §§ 1983 claim; complaint averred wrongdoing by only one member of legislature, and failed to ascribe any aspect of his conduct to legislature as whole, its policies or customs, or to allege condonation by its members. Nassau County Employee "L" v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 293. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County commissioner could not be held liable under §§ 1983 in prisoner's action alleging civil rights violations, since commissioner had no policymaking authority at jail, and there were no allegations that commissioner had personally participated in alleged violations. Justice v. Wallace, C.A.10 (Okla.) 2006, 185 Fed.Appx. 745, 2006 WL 1704467, Unreported. Civil Rights 1358

774. ---- Hospital officials, official policy makers, custom or usage

Officers' alleged conduct of illegally detaining involuntary committee before state writ authorizing his detention was signed did not support § 1983 liability against county, given that officers were not official policy makers for county, and therefore their conduct could not bind county under § 1983, and committee failed to allege facts showing that he was illegally detained pursuant to official county policy or custom. Bass v. Parkwood Hosp., C.A.5 (Miss.) 1999, 180 F.3d 234. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Hospital district could be found liable to discharged x-ray technician under this section, since the discharge was pursuant to a policy of hospital district and was effected by hospital's administrator, who was the person whose edicts and acts could fairly have been said to represent official policy. Kay v. North Lincoln Hosp. Dist., D.C.Or.1982, 555 F.Supp. 527. Civil Rights 1351(5)

775. ---- Judges, official policy makers, custom or usage

City would not be liable under §§ 1983 for municipal judge's decision to incarcerate mother for her daughter's truancy, since the judicial order was not a final policy decision. Granda v. City of St. Louis, C.A.8 (Mo.) 2007, 472 F.3d 565. Civil Rights 1351(2)

County probate judge was not delegated final policy making authority for terminating probate office clerks, and thus, county, county commission, and county commission members, in their official capacities, were not liable under § 1983 for judge's decision to terminate clerk, where county policies and practices provided for review of county official's decision to terminate employee. Johnson v. Waters, M.D.Ala.1997, 970 F.Supp. 991. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Maryland county circuit court judges were not "policy makers" for counties in which they sat, for purposes of § 1983 liability; thus, counties could not be liable for acts of judges of their respective circuit courts in relation to custody dispute. Williams v. Anderson, D.Md.1990, 753 F.Supp. 1306. Civil Rights 1351(6)

776. ---- Municipalities, official policy makers, custom or usage

City administration for children's services' (ACS) practice of removing children from custody of their mothers under New York law based on mothers' failure to prevent children from witnessing domestic violence against mothers constituted policy or practice, as required to hold city liable under § 1983, if practice violated mothers' or children's constitutional rights. Nicholson v. Scoppetta, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 344 F.3d 154, certified question accepted 807 N.E.2d 283, 775 N.Y.S.2d 233, 1 N.Y.3d 538, certified question answered 820 N.E.2d 840, 787 N.Y.S.2d 196, 3 N.Y.3d 357, answer to certified question conformed to 116 Fed.Appx. 313, 2004 WL 2712425. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Municipal judge did not act as a policymaker, and thus could not render city liable under § 1983 on pretrial detainee's claim that he was arrested on an invalid warrant issued by judge; the judge's authority to issue arrest warrants was circumscribed by his judicial duty to follow state law, and any procedural trailblazing on his part, i.e. allowing a signature stamp to be used without personally reviewing the warrant, was not done under the auspices of the City and could not be interpreted as promulgating municipal policy. Ledbetter v. City of Topeka, Kan., C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 318 F.3d 1183. Civil Rights 1351(4)

"Municipal policy," for which municipality may be held liable under § 1983, is decision that is officially adopted by municipality, or created by official of such rank that he or she could be said to be acting on behalf of municipality. Sewell v. Town of Lake Hamilton, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 117 F.3d 488, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 852, 522 U.S. 1075, 139 L.Ed.2d 753. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality can be sued directly under § 1983 where action pursuant to municipal policy or custom causes constitutional tort. Fagan v. City of Vineland, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1994, 22 F.3d 1283. Civil Rights 1351(1)

In order to hold a municipality liable under §§ 1983, a plaintiff must allege a link between the constitutional violation and an identifiable municipal policy, practice or custom. Prowisor v. Bon-Ton, Inc., S.D.N.Y.2006, 426 F.Supp.2d 165. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Town did not have any municipal civil rights liability for alleged violations of divorcing husband's equal protection rights based on actions of police officers in refusing to allow him to remove silverware set from home of his wife in retrieving personal items or in refusing to investigate, arrest wife, or issue search warrant when husband later complained that wife had stolen pieces from silverware set, given facts that alleged discrimination arose from single incident of alleged unconstitutional activity, that there was no proof of official policy of not pursuing criminal complaints arising between spouses or ex-spouses, and that police officers were not municipal policymakers. Fedor v. Kudrak, D.Conn.2006, 421 F.Supp.2d 473. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City could not be held liable, under §§ 1983, for threats allegedly made by mayor to coerce author into abandoning writing project, absent claim that mayor was acting in his official capacity or that city had notice of mayor's conduct but tacitly approved or was deliberately indifferent to it. Wright v. City of Las Vegas, Nevada, S.D.Iowa 2005, 395 F.Supp.2d 789. Civil Rights 1352(6)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for alleged surreptitious video and audio surveillance of employees, absent claim that official policy or custom caused the alleged harm or allegation of municipal action deliberately indifferent to a known consequence that would cause plaintiffs harm; bare assertion that supervisors named as individual defendants were "of high enough order in the City" was insufficient. Williams v. City of Tulsa, OK, N.D.Okla.2005, 393 F.Supp.2d 1124. Civil Rights 1421

Allegations by arrestee that magistrate judge issued a warrant for her arrest and charged her with violation of domestic protective order, even though the sheriff had not yet served the arrestee with notice of the protective order against her, that arrestee was held in custody for some portion of a day until her case was dismissed, and that the magistrate later refused to issue a warrant another person's arrest and demanded that arrestee leave his office, did not state § 1983 claim for civil rights violations against municipality; although magistrate and sheriff were municipal employees, there was no allegation of any official municipal policy or of any act taken by an official with authority to make municipal policy decisions. Cole v. Summey, M.D.N.C.2004, 329 F.Supp.2d 591. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In the § 1983 context, a municipal policy is established when it is officially adopted, whether through the execution of a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted by the body's officers. Hedgepeth v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit, D.D.C.2003, 284 F.Supp.2d 145, motion denied 2004 WL 595070, affirmed 386 F.3d 1148, 363 U.S.App.D.C. 260. Civil Rights 1351(1)

To establish municipal liability in an action under § 1983 for unconstitutional acts by a municipal employee below the policymaking level, a plaintiff must show that the violation of his constitutional rights resulted from a municipal policy or custom. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439 . Civil Rights 1351(1)

If challenged action is directed by official with final policymaking authority, municipality may be liable under § 1983 even in absence of broader policy. Gagne v. DeMarco, D.Conn.2003, 281 F.Supp.2d 390. Civil Rights 1351(1)

A single incident involving only municipal actors below the policymaking level, generally will not suffice to raise an inference of the existence of a municipal custom or policy, as required to establish municipal liability in civil rights action. Hernandez v. City of Rochester, W.D.N.Y.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 599. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Genuine issues of material fact, as to whether consensual sexual relationships between correctional officers and female jail inmates were so widespread that policymaking officials had constructive knowledge of them yet did nothing, precluded summary judgment on claim that sexual assault on female jail inmate by correctional officer was result of municipal custom or practice of ignoring sexual misbehavior. Faas v. Washington County, D.Me.2003, 260 F.Supp.2d 198. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Borough's assistant building inspector and code official who issued citations to landlord was not a policy-making official, as would render borough liable under § 1983 for any due process violations resulting from the citations. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1351(3)

For purposes of determining if municipality can be held liable under § 1983 for acts of its agents, once a court finds that a government official is a policy-maker, it is for the jury to determine whether the policy-maker's decisions have caused the deprivation of rights at issue by policies that command that it occur, or by acquiescence in a long-standing practice or custom which constitutes the standard operating procedure of the local government. Grimm v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 606, amended 2002 WL 737497. Civil Rights 1426

Municipality can be held directly liable under § 1983 when execution of municipality's policy or custom, whether made by its law makers or those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts constitutional injury; this is direct, not vicarious, liability premised on existence of some policy fairly attributable to municipal government itself. Cook v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Wyandotte, D.Kan.1997, 966 F.Supp. 1049. Civil Rights 1351(1)

If government official who possesses final policymaking authority in certain area makes decision, that decision constitutes municipal policy for § 1983 purposes and will be understood as act which municipality officially sanctioned. Singer v. Denver School Dist. No. 1, D.Colo.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1325. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality is liable under § 1983 when execution of government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or those who edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts injury. Wohl v. City of Hollywood, S.D.Fla.1995, 915 F.Supp. 339. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality cannot be held liable for employees' unconstitutional acts unless those acts were taken pursuant to municipal policy, custom or usage. Lindsay v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.1994, 863 F.Supp. 220. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Municipality cannot be liable under § 1983 in absence of official policy or custom. Nichols v. City of Jackson, S.D.Miss.1994, 848 F.Supp. 718. Civil Rights 1351(1)

777. ---- Police commissioners, official policy makers, custom or usage

Actions taken by superintendent of police in his official capacity were sufficient to impose liability on county in § 1983 action by county police officers who alleged that they were deprived of their property rights in continued employment when their resignations were coerced; superintendent had final policymaking authority in county police department, was highest ranking police official in county, was responsible for entire department, and was responsible for drafting and approving many of department's general orders. Angarita v. St. Louis County, C.A.8 (Mo.) 1992, 981 F.2d 1537. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City could be held liable if police chief and city manager were found to have violated black police officer's rights by firing him as long as state law assigned to chief and manager final authority to make personnel decisions for police department. Brown v. City of Fort Lauderdale, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 923 F.2d 1474. Civil Rights 1349

City's municipal code did not provide meaningful review of police chief's policy decisions or actions with respect to determination to undertake inquiry of other agencies concerning particular individual, so that city could be held liable for any violation of civil rights as the result of police chief's action in that regard. Patrick v. City of Overland Park, Kan., D.Kan.1996, 937 F.Supp. 1491. Civil Rights 1351(4)

"Policymaker," for purposes of making municipality liable in § 1983 action for conduct of police chief, need not have official authority to make final decisions, and such authority can be implied from continued course of knowing acquiescence by governing body in exercise of policymaking authority by agency or official. Comfort v. Town of Pittsfield, D.Me.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1219. Civil Rights 1351(4)

In § 1983 action alleging gender-based discrimination on part of municipality in de facto policy of treating domestic violence disputes less seriously than other complaints, jury instruction identifying chief of police as final policymaker was erroneous; no evidence was presented identifying final policymaker and trial court lacked authority to implicitly take judicial notice that chief of police was municipality's final policymaker. Ricketts v. City of Columbia, Mo., W.D.Mo.1993, 856 F.Supp. 1337, affirmed 36 F.3d 775, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1838, 514 U.S. 1103, 131 L.Ed.2d 757. Civil Rights 1437; Evidence 23(1)

In order for police chief to be held liable to plaintiff, in suit against chief in his official capacity under § 1983, plaintiff must show that chief established and/or maintained pattern, practice or policy, the enforcement of which deprived plaintiff of specified constitutional right. under First Amendment, commissioner's position, which gave him authority to set department-wide personnel policies, provided sufficient basis for holding county liable, under § 1983, for commissioner's adverse decisions with respect to inspector. Mandell v. County of Suffolk, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 316 F.3d 368. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Male police sergeant did not act as "official policymaker" for city when he allegedly made sexual demands on female officer and thus, municipal liability under § 1983 could not be predicated upon his actions; although sergeant was supervisor, he was not official responsible for establishing final policy with respect to subject matter in question. Collins v. City of San Diego, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1988, 841 F.2d 337. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Genuine issues of material fact as to which of police officer's supervisors had authority to make decision about what disciplinary action to take for officer's violation of police department procedure, and as to which supervisor actually made decision, precluded summary judgment on former city police officer's §§ 1983 claim that he was deprived of procedural due process because someone other than person vested with authority to make final disciplinary decisions made decision as to his discipline. Reilly v. City of Atlantic City, D.N.J.2006, 427 F.Supp.2d 507. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Detective who ordered plaintiff's arrest and detention did not have authority to establish policy for District of Columbia regarding any aspect of arrests and detentions, as required to hold District liable under §§ 1983 for detective's single act of alleged false arrest or imprisonment. McKnight v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2006, 412 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City police chief possessed final policymaking authority on police department training issues, and thus chief's actions on training issues could constitute policy and subject city to Monell liability under §§ 1983, even though city charter gave commissioner of public safety ultimate authority over department, where commissioner testified that he "shared" department policymaking responsibility with chief, that he delegated authority for training to chief, and that chief's attitude was "obstacle" regarding reforms within department, and chief testified that he was ultimately responsible for ensuring that all officers in his chain of command were properly trained. Young v. City of Providence, D.R.I.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Terminated police officer stated §§ 1983 claims against Utah municipality related to alleged violation of her equal protection rights from police chief's decisions to remove her from strike force, refuse her promotion, and fire her, even though officer did not claim that city had official policy of discrimination and even if chief's actions were subject to review by committee, facts discovered during litigation could demonstrate that chief had final decisionmaking authority. Sivulich-Boddy v. Clearfield City, D.Utah 2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1395(8)

For purposes of establishing municipality's liability under §§ 1983, detective was a not a policymaker by virtue of his assignment as detective in charge of crimes against persons, including investigation of child abuse; there was no proof that city somehow delegated final policymaking authority to detective, who simply made discretionary decisions as an employee of the city. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1179. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County's training materials did not evince an official policy of permitting sheriff deputies to detain individuals, under state statute, for psychiatric evaluation in absence of probable cause to believe detainees had mental disorders, as required to hold county liable, under § 1983, for deputies' alleged violation of hospital patient's Fourth Amendmenprt rights to be free from unreasonable seizures that occurred when she was detained for psychiatric evaluation, allegedly without probable cause. Harvey v. Alameda County Medical Center, N.D.Cal.2003, 280 F.Supp.2d 960, affirmed 123 Fed.Appx. 823, 2005 WL 662645. Civil Rights 1351(6) show that city engaged in policy or custom of failing to adequately train its police officers, or that city engaged in persistent, repeated, and constant violations of constitutional rights by virtue of this alleged failure to train. Boone v. City of Burleson, N.D.Tex.1997, 961 F.Supp. 156. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Allegations of two incidents of aggravated police misconduct in executing search warrants, one very aggravated, i.e., search of wrong address that was improperly expanded beyond its stated object, even though officers should have known they were searching wrong residence, without any imposition of discipline by city was sufficient to support claim against city under § 1983 for constitutional violations caused by city's official policies, including unwritten customs; failure to impose discipline in case of two incidents of aggravated police misconduct could support inference that there was policy against discipline and it was inferable that lack of discipline and its deterrent effect was municipal policy that caused, in some sense, bad acts alleged in complaint. Daniels v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1996, 920 F.Supp. 901. Civil Rights 1351(4)

County could not be held liable under § 1983 on theory of municipal policy for police department's canine unit's alleged exclusion of women; neither officer in charge of canine unit, commander of special patrol unit, nor director of public safety had final policy-making authority to establish eligibility requirements for positions in unit, although director of public safety had been delegated authority to establish specific employment policies for police department, his decisions were constrained by ordinances and resolutions passed by board of county commissioners and administrative orders in policies promulgated by county manager, and there was no showing that any county official above rank of police department captain had knowledge or reason to know that canine unit was customarily excluding women. Lawrence v. Metro Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.1994, 872 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1351(5)

779. ---- Fire departments, official policy makers, custom or usage

Terminated female volunteer firefighter/paramedic sufficiently alleged that her constitutional injury with respect to sex discrimination was caused by official with final policymaking authority so as to state § 1983 claim against fire protection district board of trustees and volunteer fire department; firefighter/paramedic alleged that department was headed by department chief, who was final policy maker, that chief interviewed male applicants for paid position but did not offer firefighter/paramedic an interview or consider her application, and that chief terminated her from volunteer position. Vickery v. Minooka Volunteer Fire Dept., N.D.Ill.1997, 990 F.Supp. 995. Civil Rights 1395(8)

780. ---- Prison officials, official policy makers, custom or usage

Official conduct and decisions of director of city bureau of corrections, at least in those areas in which he was final authority or ultimate repository of city power, had to necessarily be considered those of one whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy for which city might be held responsible in suit by former prison guard alleging that she was constructively discharged for exercising her rights under U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1. Schneider v. City of Atlanta, C.A.5 (Ga.) 1980, 628 F.2d 915. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Arrestee who brought action against county, stemming from his lengthy detention prior to initial court appearance, established that sheriff and jail administrator, as officials with final policymaking authority, adopted detention policy for which county was responsible, as required to maintain § 1983 claim against county; sheriff had custody, rule, and charge of jail and all prisoners within county, sheriff was authorized to appoint jail administrator for whose conduct he was responsible, and both officers developed county's official policies and procedures. Hayes v. Faulkner County, Ark., E.D.Ark.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 1132, affirmed 388 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1351(4) board member's recitation, on his own initiative, of Christian prayer at graduation ceremony; district policy or custom was not shown either by inclusion of prayer in rehearsal for ceremony, which led to district's cancellation of planned prayer due to objections and in turn led to board member's recitation to protest cancellation, nor by district's failure to disclaim recitation. Doe ex rel. Doe v. School Dist. of City of Norfolk, C.A.8 (Neb.) 2003, 340 F.3d 605, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Special education teacher sufficiently alleged government policy adopted by school district and school board to assert municipal liability claim against those entities in §§ 1983 action arising from alleged campaign against special education teachers; teacher alleged existence of unwritten administrative policy to cut services to special education pupils and to punish and intimidate special education teachers who advocated for pupils as well as action by board authorizing superintendent to harass certain teachers. Montanye v. Wissahickon School Dist., E.D.Pa.2004, 327 F.Supp.2d 510. Civil Rights 1351(5)

High school student and parents who brought action against school district and football coach, stemming from coach's purported mistreatment of student in retaliation for parents' criticism, alleged facts showing that district's policy and custom of acquiescing in coach's behavior caused constitutional injuries to student and parents, as required to state claim for entity liability under § 1983; district's failure to discipline or terminate coach, despite repeated complaints of abuse, was alleged to have become customary. Cain v. Tigard-Tualatin School Dist. 23J, D.Or.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 1120. Civil Rights 1351(2)

School board, its superintendent, and principal were not liable in their official capacities, under § 1983, for principal's alleged unconstitutional acts associated with high school student's forcible removal from school to police station after she failed to identify herself; principal's actions were not taken pursuant to official board policy or custom. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Civil Rights 1351(2)

School district did not have policy or custom of authorizing or condoning discriminatory employment practices by its principal or other employees, as required to impose liability on district under § 1983, arising out of termination of African-American teacher; district had official policy prohibiting discrimination, and district's practice of gathering data on teachers when disciplinary measures or termination were being considered was not applied in discriminatory manner. Bluitt v. Houston Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 703. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Mailing of letters to school board employees was not officially-adopted policy or unofficially adopted custom of school board sufficient to serve as basis for imposition of municipal liability on school board under § 1983 for alleged constitutional violations resulting from mailing of letters to particular employees indicating board's suspicion that they had violated district policy against drug and/or alcohol abuse, absent any indication that mailing of such letters was custom so entrenched and long-standing as to carry force of law. Cox v. McCraley, M.D.Fla.1998, 993 F.Supp. 1452. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Policies and customs of school board were relevant in school employee's § 1983 action against board, where Georgia law required that all school personnel be employed only upon recommendation of superintendent and subsequent approval by school board; when board approved hiring recommendation, it acted as official policy maker for school district. Reynolds v. Glynn County Bd. of Educ., S.D.Ga.1996, 968 F.Supp. 696, affirmed 119 F.3d 11. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Though high school student alleged only a single incident of alleged wrongful conduct, in disciplining him for displaying Confederate flag, allegations of "unwritten ban" of Confederate flags and symbols was sufficient to allege governmental custom or policy to support § 1983 claim against school board and school administrators in their official capacities. Denno v. School Bd. of Volusia County, M.D.Fla.1997, 959 F.Supp. 1481, affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded 182 F.3d 780, rehearing granted and vacated 193 F.3d 1178, reversed in part

Board of education, through its policies and customs, was moving force behind alleged due process violations resulting from use of isolation as form of student punishment, and therefore, county could be held liable for such alleged violations and was not entitled to summary judgment; board created system which allowed alleged abuses to occur. Orange v. County of Grundy, E.D.Tenn.1996, 950 F.Supp. 1365. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Junior high student, alleging violation of constitutional rights arising from strip search, failed to present evidence of such pattern or series of incidents sufficient to impose § 1983 liability on school board based upon custom or practice of such unconstitutional conduct; students pointed to only two prior searches, neither of which was nearly as intrusive as one at issue and deposition testimony regarding two prior searches failed to indicate that they were in fact illegal. Oliver by Hines v. McClung, N.D.Ind.1995, 919 F.Supp. 1206. Civil Rights 1418

Former school teacher, who brought § 1983 action against board of education and principal, failed to establish the existence of board's religion or profanity rules, for purposes of establishing that implementation of such rules violated First Amendment rights, where teacher acknowledged that board did not have written policy to restrict unconstitutionally the academic freedom or freedom of speech of teachers in its employ and presented no evidence indicating existence of such policies. Sekor v. Capwell, D.Conn.1995, 889 F.Supp. 34. Civil Rights 1421

Single allegedly unlawful act by supervisory employee of school board in denying director's position to female employee could not serve as basis for imposing liability on board under § 1983; supervisor did not have final policy-making authority over any of board's business, and state law vested board with exclusive authority over management and operation of school system. Green v. Fairfax County School Bd., E.D.Va.1993, 832 F.Supp. 1032, affirmed 23 F.3d 400. Civil Rights 1351(5)

School building inspectors, area manager for school board's buildings division, and division's director were not policy-making employees, and, thus, § 1983 liability for inspectors' alleged scheme to extort kickbacks from contractor could not be imposed on board on basis of alleged policymaking by the officials; statute grants policymaking power and authority exclusively to board. Nu-Life Const. Corp. v. Board of Educ. of City of New York, E.D.N.Y.1992, 809 F.Supp. 171, affirmed in part, vacated in part on other grounds 28 F.3d 1335. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Board of education could not be held liable under civil rights statutes in action brought by school bus driver who was decertified as result of decision of school board employee, absent showing that employee had final authority to determine policy with respect to procedures of decertification hearings or with respect to decertification decision. Hill v. New York City Bd. of Educ., E.D.N.Y.1992, 808 F.Supp. 141. Civil Rights 1351(5)

New York community school district superintendent was policymaker whose decision to transfer principal, if made in her official capacity, could impose liability on Board of Education under § 1983. Hurdle v. Board of Educ. for City of N.Y., S.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 22080721, Unreported, affirmed on other grounds 113 Fed.Appx. 423, 2004 WL 2413499, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 1646, 544 U.S. 921, 161 L.Ed.2d 479. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

782. ---- School officials, official policy makers, custom or usage

Despite student's allegation that assistant principal's previous altercation with an opposing football coach and the way it was handled by the school administration created a policy, practice, or custom of deliberate indifference to physical abuse of students generally, student failed to allege a direct casual connection between any such practice and her injury allegedly resulting when assistant principal pushed her on the shoulder after she was brought to his office for disciplinary reasons, for purposes of establishing liability of the school district under § 1983, as the previous conduct was not sufficiently similar to draw a direct causal connection to student's injury. Gottlieb ex rel. Calabria v. Laurel Highlands School Dist., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2001, 272 F.3d 168. Civil Rights 1351(2)

School district did not delegate to principal the policymaking authority over school's response to allegations of sexual abuse, for purpose of holding district liable for alleged abuse under § 1983, even if district had no formal policy for addressing allegations of sexual abuse, and principals were given discretion to handle individual allegations of sexual abuse. Doe on Behalf of Doe v. Dallas Independent School Dist., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1998, 153 F.3d 211. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Superintendent did not act as "final policymaker" in denying school board employee continued public employment, where decision was not pursuant to board policies, and where decision required board approval under Kentucky law and, thus, superintendent's actions were not those of school board and board could not be held liable for any violations of employee's § 1983 rights. Adkins v. Board of Educ. of Magoffin County, Ky., C.A.6 (Ky.) 1993, 982 F.2d 952. Civil Rights 1351(5)

School district could not be held liable under § 1983 for superintendent's alleged isolated act of advising teacher not to speak publicly on issue of students' standardized test scores, in violation of First Amendment, because superintendent did not have final policy-making authority to order teachers to curtail their speech. Partee v. Metropolitan School Dist. of Washington Tp., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1992, 954 F.2d 454, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Vision specialist employed by agency providing educational services to eleven school districts sufficiently demonstrated existence of policy, practice or custom for purposes of her §§ 1983 claim, against school district and officials following her involuntary transfer to another district after she engaged in protected speech; top-level officials of school district and agency directed and complied with request to transfer agency employee after she had raised issues of public concern. Jones v. Indiana Area School Dist., W.D.Pa.2005, 397 F.Supp.2d 628. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Absent proof of existence of official custom or policy authorizing strip searches, school district was not liable for alleged violation of student's right to be free of use of excessive force during detention or search when school employees allegedly required special education student to submit to strip search without the consent of her parent following her sexual assault by another student. Teague ex rel. C.R.T. v. Texas City Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 893. Civil Rights 1351(2)

School board was not liable, under § 1983, for implementation of policy allowing teacher to sexually harass female elementary school students, in violation of their equal protection and due process rights; highest ranking school official with knowledge that teacher had history of sexual harassment lacked authority to formulate policy that would bind district. Rasnick v. Dickenson County School Bd., W.D.Va.2004, 333 F.Supp.2d 560. Civil Rights 1351(2)

New York Commissioner of Education was final policymaker with regard to school board elections, and thus school district was not subject to liability under § 1983 for school district officials' decision to interpret results of malfunctioning voting machines and to then reset machines before they could be inspected. Gilmore v. Amityville Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 305 F.Supp.2d 271. Civil Rights 1351(2)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Texas law places final policymaking authority for an independent school district in its board of trustees only, and thus school district could not be liable, under § 1983, for single unconstitutional action of non-policymaking employee. Bluitt v. Houston Independent School Dist., S.D.Tex.2002, 236 F.Supp.2d 703. Civil Rights 1351(1)

While there were numerous incidents and rumors concerning teacher's relationship with students, none of them implicated school superintendent or school district to degree that it could be concluded that failure to train, supervise, oversee, discipline, or remedy, constituted policy, practice or custom that played affirmative role in bringing about those incidents, as required to impose liability under § 1983; there was no evidence of concealment, of encouragement or acceptance of improper behavior of teacher and there was absence of teacher complaints or intimidation or discouragement of student complainants. Shepard v. Kemp, M.D.Pa.1995, 912 F.Supp. 120. Civil Rights 1351(2); Civil Rights 1356

783. ---- Sheriffs, official policy makers, custom or usage

Sheriff's broad discretion to set policy and county attorney's testimony that sheriff had exclusive authority to fire deputy sheriff supported finding that sheriff had discretionary, policy-making authority necessary to hold county liable for discharging deputy sheriff in violation of his First Amendment free speech right; deputy was discharged for writing letter to judge concerning sentencing of convicted defendant. Buzek v. County of Saunders, C.A.8 (Neb.) 1992, 972 F.2d 992. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Dorchester County sheriff in managing and operating county jail in Maryland essentially acted in guise of county official and held final county policy-making authority over county jail, so if sheriff were without funds to satisfy settled upon attorney fee in inmates' federal civil rights suit, county, rather than state, was required to satisfy sheriff's obligation. Dotson v. Chester, C.A.4 (Md.) 1991, 937 F.2d 920. Civil Rights 1485

Sheriff was official policymaker regarding law enforcement practices for purposes of § 1983 municipal liability claim arising from deputies' use of excessive force while arresting citizens, even though sheriff did not have final authority over all employment practices; training of officers on use of force was type of law enforcement practice that fell squarely within sheriff's policymaking authority under Washington law. Davis v. Mason County, C.A.9 (Wash.) 1991, 927 F.2d 1473, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 275, 502 U.S. 899, 116 L.Ed.2d 227. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Although county sheriff was state employee, sheriff was exercising county power with final authority when he hired and promoted chief jailer who subsequently kidnapped and raped arrestee, and county could be held liable for any constitutional violations arising from sheriff's actions; county rather than state had responsibility for running county jail and could not avoid liability by vesting power over jail to sheriff. Parker v. Williams, C.A.11 (Ala.) 1989, 862 F.2d 1471. Civil Rights 1348

County was liable in § 1983 action for acts of county sheriff in terminating deputy, where sheriff was separately elected under Florida Constitution but, in his capacity as sheriff, had absolute authority over appointment and control of deputies and sheriff's and deputies' salaries were paid by local taxation and according to budget approved by county commissioners. Lucas v. O'Loughlin, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1987, 831 F.2d 232, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1595, 485 U.S. 1035, 99 L.Ed.2d 909. Civil Rights 1349

Deputy sheriff stated §§ 1983 claim against sheriff defendants for acts of former sheriff who allegedly terminated her; sheriff had final decisionmaking authority in that regard. Briggs v. Waters, E.D.Va.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 508. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County could be held directly liable under §§ 1983 for any violations of terminated jail employee's constitutional rights, even if sheriff/county jail administrator was not final policymaker in that regard, where board of commissioners had discussed employee's termination and denied employee's reinstatement request, thereby ratifying termination decision. Shape v. Barnes County, N.D., D.N.D.2005, 396 F.Supp.2d 1067. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Arrestee stated claim against sheriff in his personal capacity for violation of his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizures in detaining him for eight days without judicial probable cause determination pursuant to alleged policy, over which sheriff was final decisionmaker, of not ascertaining whether such determinations had been made. Lingenfelter v. Board of County Com'rs of Reno County, Kan., D.Kan.2005, 359 F.Supp.2d 1163. Civil Rights 1358

Deputy county sheriff's actions were specifically ratified and approved by county sheriff for purposes of federal civil rights claim, and constituted county policy, procedure or custom, where sheriff testified he approved of what deputy did as being in accordance with policies, procedures and practices, as sheriff's approval was chargeable to county. J.B. v. Washington County, D.Utah 1995, 905 F.Supp. 979, affirmed 127 F.3d 919. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable under § 1983 for allegedly unconstitutional employment practices of sheriff, where, under Virginia law, sheriff was constitutional officer with sole and exclusive discretion to hire and fire deputies. Olivo v. Mapp, E.D.Va.1993, 838 F.Supp. 259. Civil Rights 1349

784. ---- Miscellaneous official policy makers, custom or usage

Manager of loss prevention at amusement park did not exercise final policymaking authority concerning arrests effected by officers of special park police department, either as a matter of state and local positive law, or of custom or usage having force of law, and thus, manager's decision to acquiesce in intention of sergeant of police department to effect arrest of park patron, after she was falsely identified by park employees as individual who had previously passed bad checks at park, was not based on official policy, and could not support recovery by patron against park operator under § 1983. Austin v. Paramount Parks, Inc., C.A.4 (Md.) 1999, 195 F.3d 715. Civil Rights 1339

Physician's assistant was acting as final policymaker for county with respect to medical affairs at road prison, for purposes of imposing § 1983 liability based on deliberate indifference he displayed to prisoner's medical needs. Mandel v. Doe, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1989, 888 F.2d 783. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Based on the fact that under Pennsylvania law the solicitor lacked independent authority and derived all of his power from the mayor or council, it did not appear that borough's solicitor was a "policymaker" for purposes of officer's §§ 1983 claim alleging that the borough filed criminal charges against him in retaliation for his pursuit of posttermination remedies in violation of his First Amendment rights. Koltonuk v. Borough of Laureldale, E.D.Pa.2006, 443 F.Supp.2d 685. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Private employers are not liable under § 1983 for the constitutional torts of their employees unless the plaintiff proves the action pursuant to an official policy of some nature caused a constitutional tort. Goodnow v. Palm, D.Vt.2003, 264 F.Supp.2d 125. Civil Rights 1336

Under Ohio law, municipal court supervisor did not and could not act as policy-maker for city when she disciplined municipal court employee, as was required to establish city's liability to employee under § 1983; even though city played significant role in employment of both supervisor and employee, including issuing paychecks and offering health and insurance plan, supervisor lacked final authority to demote employee, and her decision was subject to approval of municipal court judges. Mace v. City of Akron, N.D.Ohio 1998, 989 F.Supp. 949. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Assuming county airport authority exercised authority over airport police, who stopped limousine service operator and asked for his insurance information, operator failed to identify an organizational policy or custom of authority, the implementation of which resulted in a violation of his Fourth Amendment rights, as was required to maintain §§ 1983 action. Joseph v. Allegheny County Airport Authority, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 152 Fed.Appx. 121, 2005 WL 2562614, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Under Illinois law, mayor, in his capacity as local liquor commissioner, was not "final policymaker" with regard to liquor licensing, and thus city could not be held liable under § 1983 for alleged violations of bar owners' constitutional rights arising out of mayor's refusal to renew bar's liquor license; city, not mayor, had power to pass ordinances, regulations, and resolutions regarding liquor licensing, and state law charged local liquor commissioner only with administration of laws. Gianessi v. City of Pekin, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2002, 52 Fed.Appx. 265, 2002 WL 31641568, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(6)

785. Time of policy, custom or usage

Even if town officials adopted supervisor's assault on plaintiff as town policy by virtue of their inaction at time of assault, which occurred in their presence, by their failure to accept supervisor's resignation and by failing to cooperate with authorities investigating the assault, the town could not be held liable under § 1983 in that town policy would have been created after the assault. Borek v. Town of McLeansboro, S.D.Ill.1986, 629 F.Supp. 657. Civil Rights 1351(6)

786. Random and unauthorized actions, custom or usage--Generally

Parratt /Hudson doctrine, under which random and unauthorized deprivation of plaintiff's property will not violate procedural due process if state provides adequate postdeprivation remedy, did not bar due process claims brought by judgment debtor's girlfriend arising out of search of storage facility and safe deposit boxes held in girlfriend's name; defendants' conduct was not random or unauthorized, but rather was taken under state court orders allowing court-appointed receiver to take possession of judgment debtor's property and to search storage units, and predeprivation provision of notice and hearing to parties specifically named in state court's orders was not infeasible. Davis v. Bayless, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 70 F.3d 367. Civil Rights 1321; Constitutional Law 319.5(1)

School officials' authorization of sexually explicit AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) awareness assembly at public high school, without following school policy and state law requiring that parents be given advance notice and opportunity to opt out of sex education programs, was "random and unauthorized" act, for which Parratt -Hudson doctrine precluded § 1983 claim alleging violation of procedural due process when teenagers were compelled to attend the assembly, where state could not have predicted, or provided any reasonable predeprivation measures to forestall, officials' deprivation of teenagers' and parents' assumed liberty interest in freedom from exposure to content of assembly and in being afforded opportunity to opt out. Brown v. Hot, Sexy and Safer Productions, Inc., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1995, 68 F.3d 525, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1044, 516 U.S. 1159, 134 L.Ed.2d 191. Civil Rights 1317

Parratt /Hudson doctrine, under which state actor's random and unauthorized deprivation of plaintiff's property does not result in violation of procedural due process right if state provides adequate postdeprivation remedy, did not foreclose adjudication of § 1983 suit alleging that district attorneys (DAs) and assistant DAs conspired to violate due process rights of owner of seized car by failing to timely institute forfeiture proceeding against car, as "random and unauthorized" element necessary for application of doctrine was absent; although actions of DAs in delaying for nearly three years was unreasonable, such actions were not in conflict with their statutory authority, which did not specify time period within which to bring forfeiture proceeding, and it was alleged that defendants were following their common practice. Alexander v. Ieyoub, C.A.5 (La.) 1995, 62 F.3d 709. Civil Rights 1319

Claimant alleging that police chief had told her neighbor that he could shoot cats straying onto his property could not maintain § 1983 action for damages based upon deprivation of her Fourteenth Amendment property rights in her cat when neighbor shot animal; chief's advice, if given, would be random and unauthorized conduct for which state provided adequate postdeprivation remedy. Cathey v. Guenther, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1995, 47 F.3d 162. Civil Rights 1319

Alleged action by Louisiana Agriculture Commissioner, who was elected head of the Louisiana Department of Agriculture (LDOA) and who enjoyed considerable authority, and other officials were "random and unauthorized" actions for which crop duster had adequate postdeprivation remedies, and thus, crop duster could not maintain civil rights suit against Commissioner and his employees for alleged procedural due process violations by engaging in ex parte contacts with committee members and soliciting perjured testimony to present to them. Johnson v. Louisiana Dept. of Agriculture, C.A.5 (La.) 1994, 18 F.3d 318, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1321

Complaint of stockholder in cooperative building, alleging that building's board of directors caused random and unauthorized deprivations of his property interest in violation of state law, failed to state § 1983 claim inasmuch as New York law provided adequate remedy. Katz v. Klehammer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1990, 902 F.2d 204. Civil Rights 1318

Hospital corporation and its founder had adequate remedies under state law to redress alleged due process violations in connection with application for certificate of need to build hospital and, therefore, could not bring § 1983 action, even if state remedy would provide less relief or benefit than § 1983; defendants' allegedly intentional acts were random and were not taken pursuant to established state procedures. Huron Valley Hosp., Inc. v. City of Pontiac, C.A.6 (Mich.) 1989, 887 F.2d 710. Civil Rights 1321

School board's termination of teacher without hearing, while believing that teacher was probationary and not entitled to one, was not a "random and unauthorized action" which would avoid § 1983 liability under Parratt even though termination was potentially in violation of state statute. Matthiessen v. Board of Educ. of North Chicago Community High School Dist. 123, Lake County, Ill., C.A.7 (Ill.) 1988, 857 F.2d 404. Civil Rights 1133

Plaintiffs who can establish nothing more than unintended irregularities in conduct of state elections are barred from obtaining relief under § 1983 in federal court, provided that adequate and fair state remedy exists, and rather, to state claim under § 1983, plaintiffs must allege willful action by state officials intended to deprive individuals of their constitutional right to vote. Dickie v. Rabbit, D.Mass.1997, 956 F.Supp. 67. Civil Rights 1032; Civil Rights 1321

State officials may not characterize their conduct as random and unauthorized, for purposes of § 1983 civil rights claim, if state has delegated to them power and authority to effect the very deprivation complained of. Gall v. City of Vidor, Tex., E.D.Tex.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1062. Civil Rights 1315

State actor's random and unauthorized deprivation of plaintiff's property does not result in due process violation, as required to proceed with § 1983 civil rights claim, if state provides adequate postdeprivation remedy. Gall v. City of Vidor, Tex., E.D.Tex.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1062. Civil Rights 1318

Random acts or isolated incidents are usually insufficient to establish municipal "custom or policy," for purpose of holding municipality liable for its employees' acts under § 1983. Gomez v. Metro Dade County, Fla., S.D.Fla.1992, 801 F.Supp. 674. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Former sheriff's department corrections officer had no § 1983 claim for violation of procedural due process against his supervisors arising out of his suspension where supervisors' actions were random and unauthorized and state provided officer not only with proper predeprivation procedure but also with remedy if such process was not afforded due to unforeseen negligence or even maliciousness of supervisors. F.Supp. 1432. Civil Rights 1320

Motorcyclist who lost thumb and forefinger when arresting officer jerked him from fallen but still running motorcycle following high-speed chase could not maintain civil rights action under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for a claim of denial of procedural due process, where officer's acts were random and unauthorized and at most constituted a negligent deprivation of motorcyclist's liberty and where Ohio provided adequate postdeprivation remedy in light of statute [Ohio R.C. § 2743.02(A)(1)] waiving state's Eleventh Amendment immunity to extent that motorcyclist could proceed against the state for damages in the Court of Claims. Johnson v. Pike, N.D.Ohio 1985, 624 F.Supp. 390. Civil Rights 1088(4)

787. ---- Post deprivation procedures, random and unauthorized actions, custom or usage

Inmate of Nebraska prison, whose packages containing mail order hobby materials were lost when normal procedure for receipt of mail packages was not followed, failed to state claim for relief under this section, since, although he had been deprived of property under color of state law, he did not suffer such deprivation without due process of law inasmuch as deprivation did not occur as a result of some established state procedure, and moreover, Nebraska had tort claims procedure which provided remedy to persons who had suffered tortious loss at hands of state, and which prisoner did not use. Parratt v. Taylor, U.S.Neb.1981, 101 S.Ct. 1908, 451 U.S. 527, 68 L.Ed.2d 420. Civil Rights 1098; Civil Rights 1319

Evidence that county had policy which allegedly authorized county officials to euthanize animals deemed to be sick or injured would not preclude application of Parratt/Hudson doctrine, barring relief under §§ 1983 for procedural due process claims if the officials' conduct was random and unauthorized and a meaningful postdeprivation remedy was available, to §§ 1983 procedural due process claim asserted by owner of dogs and cats that were seized and euthanized without prior hearing, contrary to state law; owner failed to show that policy was in place at time that dogs and cats were seized, that officials relied upon that policy, or that policy actually sanctioned officials' conduct in performing the euthanization. Bogart v. Chapell, C.A.4 (S.C.) 2005, 396 F.3d 548. Animals 43.1; Constitutional Law 293

Under Parratt /Hudson doctrine, prisoners could not maintain § 1983 civil rights action on basis of coercive conduct of jail's medical personnel in allegedly requiring prisoners to sign charge document to allow prison to charge prisoners' accounts for prisoners to receive medical services, despite their exempt status as indigents, since state had adequate postdeprivation remedy. Myers v. Klevenhagen, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 97 F.3d 91. Civil Rights 1319

"Parratt/Hudson doctrine" barred § 1983 claim against police officer based on his participation in alleged deprivation of property without due process when he met with partners seeking to remove partnership property from resigning partner's office; police department had policy of neutrality in civil matters, officer met with partners with understanding that they had court documents authorizing removal but thereafter learned that partners had no such documents, and department could not have, through additional safeguards, foreseen partners' conduct or prevented officer's violation of neutrality policy in face of partners' conduct, and state law offered postdeprivation remedy to resigning partner. Charbonnet v. Lee, C.A.5 (La.) 1992, 951 F.2d 638, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 2994, 505 U.S. 1205, 120 L.Ed.2d 871. Civil Rights 1318

Intentional, substantive violations of constitutional rights are not subject to rule of Parratt that existence of adequate state remedy forecloses federal civil rights claim based on procedural violations of constitutional rights. Morello v. James, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1987, 810 F.2d 344. Civil Rights 1315

Availability of postdeprivation state law remedy for alleged violations of constitutional rights, concerning placement in maximum security during pretrial detention, was not sufficient basis to dismiss § 1983 complaint as matter of law, where deprivation at issue was allegedly neither random nor unauthorized and where city officials involved did not show that predeprivation hearing would not have been possible or practicable. Adams v. Galletta, S.D.N.Y.1997, 966 F.Supp. 210. Civil Rights 1319

Parratt doctrine permits dismissal of procedural due process claims brought under federal civil rights statute based on fact that state provides claimant adequate postdeprivation remedy if deprivation was unpredictable or random, predeprivation process was impossible or impracticable, and state actor was not authorized to take action that deprived plaintiff of property or liberty. Spruytte v. Govorchin, W.D.Mich.1997, 961 F.Supp. 1094. Civil Rights 1315

788. Acquiescence or inaction, custom or usage

City's failure to repeal unconstitutional portion of disorderly conduct ordinance against unreasonable noise was municipal policy or custom partially causing allegedly unconstitutional arrest for unreasonable noise and fighting language, and, thus, city was improperly dismissed from § 1983 suit. Buffkins v. City of Omaha, Douglas County, Neb., C.A.8 (Neb.) 1990, 922 F.2d 465, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 112 S.Ct. 273, 502 U.S. 898, 116 L.Ed.2d 225. Civil Rights 1351(6)

School district could be held liable for acts of band teacher in conducting prayers prior to practices and concerts where school board members knew of the practice yet took no official steps to correct it, individual members expressed support for the prayers, and one member urged objecting parent to drop the issue. Steele v. Van Buren Public School Dist., C.A.8 (Ark.) 1988, 845 F.2d 1492. Civil Rights 1346; Civil Rights 1352(2)

School board did not act with deliberate indifference to teacher's First Amendment rights in approving his termination, and thus school district was not liable under §§ 1983 for superintendent's retaliation against teacher for having engaged in protected speech, where teacher had been observed by administrators and professional staff over extended period of time during site-assistance plans at two different schools, findings from both site-assistance plans indicated that teacher's job performance did not meet professional standards, and members of school board did not have reasonable cause to believe that investigation was inadequate or deficient. Sherrod v. Palm Beach County School Dist., S.D.Fla.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 1341. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Supervisory officials can be held liable under this section for conduct of their subordinates if plaintiff can show that the supervisory officials had some specific knowledge of unconstitutional conduct and intentionally acquiesced in the conduct by failing to establish proper procedures or train and supervise the subordinates adequately. Dobson v. Green, E.D.Pa.1984, 596 F.Supp. 122. Civil Rights 1355

Sheriff's failure to act to correct harmful conditions which are substantially likely to violate plaintiff's rights may constitute implicit acquiescence in or approval of employee conduct resulting from those conditions so as to give rise to cause of action under this section providing for civil action for deprivation of rights. Doe v. Burwell, S.D.Ohio 1982, 537 F.Supp. 186. Civil Rights 1355

State can be held liable for violating constitutional rights of local school children in state through racial discrimination if, through custom or practice, unlawful acts of subordinates are intentionally condoned by inaction when a foreseeable consequence of such inaction is an intrusion on constitutional rights and inaction is proximate cause of the injustice. Penick v. Columbus Bd. of Ed., S.D.Ohio 1981, 519 F.Supp. 925, affirmed 663 F.2d 24, certiorari denied 102 S.Ct. 1713, 455 U.S. 1018, 72 L.Ed.2d 135. Civil Rights 1351(2)

One type of inaction involving neglect or refusal to enforce laws already on the books, or a systematic maladministration of those laws, can qualify as a "custom" within the scope of this section. Mayes v. Elrod, N.D.Ill.1979, 470 F.Supp. 1188. Civil Rights 1039

789. Checks, custom or usage

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Maker of dishonored check failed to demonstrate existence of municipal policy of seeking criminal charges to force payment of checks even when city employees know that person issuing such check did not know check was insufficient when made, as was necessary to establish city's liability in § 1983 action for alleged unlawful arrest and prosecution; maker did not allege any other specific incidents involving illegal arrest of any other person and did not present any factual allegations to support her theory of existence of municipal policy. Culpepper v. Biggers, E.D.Ark.1990, 742 F.Supp. 528. Civil Rights 1351(4)

790. Child care services, custom or usage

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether city had policy or custom of removing children from their mothers based on mothers being victims of domestic abuse, precluding summary judgment as to whether city could be liable in §§ 1983 action alleging due process and other constitutional violations. Velez v. Reynolds, S.D.N.Y.2004, 325 F.Supp.2d 293. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Municipal policies or customs could have proximately caused alleged constitutional violations connected with removal of child from her home, as required for municipality to be liable under § 1983, inasmuch as alleged policy of severing contact between children and families, or failure to properly train county employees, could have caused county child protective services worker to institute "no parental contact" restriction. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1351(6); Civil Rights 1352(6)

Complaint stated cause of action against officials of Illinois Department of Children and Family Services with respect to placement of siblings who were wards of the court by alleging that they enforced and maintained policies regarding sibling visitation notwithstanding their knowledge that those policies were causing severe emotional harm to the siblings. Aristotle P. v. Johnson, N.D.Ill.1989, 721 F.Supp. 1002. Civil Rights 1395(1)

New York City Department of Social Services was not liable for violating civil rights of mother and grandmother of allegedly abused child by retaining child beyond effective date of retention order where mother and grandmother did not allege that Department was acting pursuant to any custom, policy, practice, or regulation. Lester v. Brezenoff, E.D.N.Y.1982, 548 F.Supp. 616, affirmed 722 F.2d 728. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Father's allegations that Administration for Children's Services (ACS) adopted and pursued racially motivated policies, practices, customs, and procedures pursuant to which his children were removed from his custody and placed in foster care, where there was no threat of imminent danger to children's life or health, on the basis of incompletely investigated allegations of neglect or abuse, made a sufficient allegation of a municipal "policy" for imposition of § 1983 liability on ACS. Southerland v. Giuliani, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2001, 4 Fed.Appx. 33, 2001 WL 127293, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(1)

791. Commencement of actions, custom or usage

Initiation by court officer of private criminal prosecution of plaintiff pursuant to city policy permitting private individuals to commence criminal actions did not constitute state action under § 1983; state's mere acquiescence in private action did not convert that action into state action, district attorney's office did not have policy of conducting unconstitutional prosecutions itself, nor did it ratify any unconstitutional prosecutions brought by private citizens. Rochez v. Mittleton, S.D.N.Y.1993, 839 F.Supp. 1075. Civil Rights 1326(9)

792. Construction contracts, custom or usage

Minority-owned construction firm failed to state § 1983 claim against county on ground that county deprived it, without due process, of property interest in contract to perform general contracting work on county project, as complaint failed to allege that county acted pursuant to "policy or custom"; although it alleged that county failed to comply with California public bidding procedures, it did not allege that failure constituted official policy or custom of county. Federation of African American Contractors v. City of Oakland, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 96 F.3d 1204. Civil Rights 1395(1)

793. Deliberate indifference, custom or usage

Assuming school district's "Suicide Referral Process" constituted a "policy" or "custom" of the district, which could form the basis for holding district liable under §§ 1983 for a constitutional violation of the policy, parent of high school student who committed suicide failed to prove district disregarded a known or obvious consequence of its action in counseling student; there was no evidence of a pattern of student suicides in district, evidence that the policy had failed in the past, or evidence that student's reasons for taking his own life were related to guidance counselor's intervention, which was undertaken in accordance with school policy. Sanford v. Stiles, C.A.3 (Pa.) 2006, 456 F.3d 298. Civil Rights 1352(2)

In order for § 1983 plaintiff to establish municipal liability on theory that facially lawful municipal action has led employee to violate plaintiff's rights, plaintiff must demonstrate that municipal action was taken with deliberate indifference as to its known or obvious consequences. Rasche v. Village of Beecher, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2003, 336 F.3d 588. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Deliberate indifference requirement is not related to the degree of fault that may be an element of the ultimate constitutional violation at issue but, rather, exists as a necessary fault basis for imposing direct, not vicarious, municipal liability for any constitutional violation by municipal employees that is caused by policy decisions. Jones v. Wellham, C.A.4 (Md.) 1997, 104 F.3d 620. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City could be held liable under civil rights statute only if procedural deficiency alleged with respect to impoundment and sale of vehicle either was direct manifestation of city's formal policy or informal custom, or resulted from failure to train city personnel that, under the circumstances, evidenced a deliberate indifference to citizens' rights sufficient, in itself, to constitute a policy or custom of the city. Summers v. State of Utah, C.A.10 (Utah) 1991, 927 F.2d 1165. Civil Rights 1351(6); Civil Rights 1352(6)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether municipality had practices or customs to operate emergency response vehicles at unnecessary and excessive speeds, to only slow down and prepare to stop-rather than stopping-when approaching a negative right-of-way intersection, and to select only the most direct route when selecting an emergency response route, precluding summary judgment for municipality in §§ 1983 action alleging a violation of the substantive due process rights of the motorist struck by the fire truck. Becerra ex rel. Perez v. Unified Government of Wyandotte County/Kansas City, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 974, reversed 432 F.3d 1163, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1130534. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Determination that school district and school officials took reasonable measures in response to reports of pupils' racial harassment of Asian-American elementary student rendered it unnecessary to consider whether officials acted in violation of student's constitutional rights pursuant to a district policy, practice, or custom under § 1983; officials were determined not to have acted with deliberate indifference toward student's rights under § 1983, and § 1983 did not create independent substantive constitutional rights but was rather a vehicle for enforcing such rights. Yap v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 284. Civil Rights 1305; Civil Rights 1351(2); Civil Rights 1352(2)

City's alleged failures to implement various procedures amount to policy or practice, and may provide basis for liability in § 1983 action, only if plaintiffs show that city was deliberately indifferent to others' constitutional rights; standard is stringent, and single incident is ordinarily not enough to prove that city, through inaction, has unconstitutional policy or practice. Rodriguez v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1997, 957 F.Supp. 1055. Civil Rights 1351(1)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Civilian complaint review board's (CCRB) consistent and utter failure to abide by statutory deadlines for hearing cases brought by citizens involving excessive force complaints against police officers became "custom" of deliberate indifference to citizens' complaints of excessive force; although CCRB was mandated to schedule hearing within 30 days of citizen's complaint, that requirement was virtually ignored since promulgation. Cox v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 821 F.Supp. 1, as amended, affirmed 40 F.3d 475, 309 U.S.App.D.C. 219. Civil Rights 1352(4)

If municipality acts with "deliberate indifference" in establishing practice or custom, as required for liability under § 1983, then it expects or reasonably anticipates injuries to its citizens as a result of practice or custom. Lincoln Nat. Health and Cas. Ins. Co. v. Brown, M.D.Ga.1992, 782 F.Supp. 110. Civil Rights 1351(1)

794. Discrimination, custom or usage

Firefighter failed to establish custom or practice of discrimination on basis of union activity for purposes of imposing § 1983 liability on city despite lack of formal approval through official decisionmaking channels; he failed to show that practice was so widespread and permanent that, even though city's written policy was one of union neutrality, city in fact pursued policy of opposing union activity. Greensboro Professional Fire Fighters Ass'n, Local 3157 v. City of Greensboro, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 64 F.3d 962. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Disproportionate impact of municipal custom on one gender is only relevant in § 1983 action against city to extent it reflects discriminatory purpose. Ricketts v. City of Columbia, Mo., C.A.8 (Mo.) 1994, 36 F.3d 775, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 1838, 514 U.S. 1103, 131 L.Ed.2d 757. Civil Rights 1351(1)

County could not be held liable under § 1983 for any alleged sexual discrimination against county secretary; there was no indication that county attorney's individual acts relating to secretary were officially sanctioned or ordered and specific acts of county attorney did not rise to level of policy or custom within county attorney's office. Sauers v. Salt Lake County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1993, 1 F.3d 1122. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Chief of police could not be held liable in his individual capacity for subordinates' conduct in discharging black employee; evidence of chief's failure to enact written policy prohibiting use of racial slurs, even in light of his awareness of general complaints of racial discrimination and use of racial epithets, was not substantial evidence such that reasonable minds could disagree as to whether causal connection existed between chief's action and deprivation of employee's rights. Busby v. City of Orlando, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1991, 931 F.2d 764. Civil Rights 1359

Absence of evidence that county maintained racial discriminatory policies and customs precluded county's liability under § 1983 based on allegations that county engaged in pattern, policy, or practice of race discrimination by disciplining corrections officer more severely than non-African American employees, in violation of Equal Protection Clause. Moreland v. Miami-Dade County, S.D.Fla.2002, 255 F.Supp.2d 1304, appeal after remand from federal court 879 So.2d 23, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Plaintiff failed to establish that city had policy to discriminate against African-Americans by not offering them employment and by firing them without cause; mayor, in deciding to hire African-American police officer, conditionally offered plaintiff job despite fact that his test scores were inferior to those of two Caucasian male candidates, and city refused to grant plaintiff permanent position on police force only after it was revealed he had misrepresented scope of his prior criminal record. Watson v. City of Salem, D.N.J.1995, 934 F.Supp. 643. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Hispanic police lieutenant failed to show widespread custom or practice of discrimination by city employees against Hispanics as result of their national origin in any respect as necessary to impose civil rights liability on city.

Garza v. City of Inglewood, C.D.Cal.1991, 761 F.Supp. 1475, affirmed 967 F.2d 586. Civil Rights 1351(5)

795. Education, schools and students, custom or usage--Generally

White former athletic director and head football coach at public high school could prevail on his claim for damages against the school district based on alleged discrimination by black superintendent and white principal only if athletic director could show that alleged violation of his "right to make contracts" protected by § 1981 was caused by a custom or policy of the school district. Jett v. Dallas Independent School Dist., U.S.Tex.1989, 109 S.Ct. 2702, 491 U.S. 701, 105 L.Ed.2d 598, on remand 7 F.3d 1241, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County school board did not have custom that was moving force behind student's arrest for distributing anonymous pamphlet containing essay in which author "wondered what would happen" if he shot principal, teachers, or other students, such that school board could be liable to student for any constitutional violations connected with arrest, inasmuch as school board police exercised independent judgment before arresting, and made arrests in only 14.91% of incidents reported to them. Cuesta v. School Bd. of Miami-Dade County, Fla., C.A.11 (Fla.) 2002, 285 F.3d 962. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Mother of child who died following seizure on school bus could not establish § 1983 liability on part Board of Education or its officers on grounds of practice, policy, or custom of taking home children who had seizures without medical intervention, absent evidence that defendants, by deliberate choice, adopted and maintained such practice; bus driver's statement that on separate occasion Board employee had merely taken child home was not enough to establish custom, practice, or policy. Sargi v. Kent City Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 70 F.3d 907. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Punitive and preventative actions taken by school district, school superintendent, and school principal in response to reports of pupils' racially-motivated verbal and physical abuse of Asian-American elementary student, and district's denial of student's request for school transfer or to skip a grade, were not so inadequate so as to shock the conscience, as required for district and officials to be liable under § 1983 for alleged violations of student's due process rights; officials took reasonable measures to prevent abuse and imposed discipline on allegedly abusive pupils, and district's decision not to break well-established transfer and class-acceleration rules was reasonable. Yap v. Oceanside Union Free School Dist., E.D.N.Y.2004, 303 F.Supp.2d 284. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1); Schools 154(1); Schools 163

When student attempts to hold school district liable under § 1983 for sexual abuse by teacher based on custom or policy of failure to act to prevent abuse, student must establish: (1) existence of clear and persistent pattern of sexual abuse by school employees, (2) notice or constructive notice of abuse to district or school board, (3) district's tacit approval of conduct, or deliberate indifference from failure to correct problem, and (4) that district's failure to act was moving force behind violation of student's constitutional rights. Hackett v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1352(2)

School district was not liable under § 1983 for teacher's deprivation of student's Fourteenth Amendment right to bodily integrity by acts of sexual misconduct, since there was not sufficient evidence that district had any custom or policy that was driving force behind teacher's actions; even if district was negligent in its failure to detect fabrications and omissions on teacher's employment application, failure to conduct thorough background check in one instance did not equate to custom or policy of hiring sexual predators through failure to conduct proper background checks. Hackett v. Fulton County School Dist., N.D.Ga.2002, 238 F.Supp.2d 1330. Civil Rights 1352(2)

School district was not liable, under § 1983, for violation of high school student's due process right to be free from unjustified intrusion on personal security, occurring when student was sexually harassed by track coach; there was no policy of condoning such practice, and coach was not district official capable of creating policy through his own conduct. K.P., ex rel. S.C. v. Corsey, D.N.J.2002, 228 F.Supp.2d 547, reversed in part 77 Fed.Appx. 611, 2003 WL 22338566. Civil Rights 1351(2)

One-time decision by school district, through school board, not to hire certified athletic trainer to attend to health and safety of students participating in school-sponsored sports, did not constitute official policy of school district, as would potentially support recovery in § 1983 action brought after high school football player collapsed following practice and later died. Burden v. Wilkes-Barre Area School Dist., M.D.Pa.1998, 16 F.Supp.2d 569. Civil Rights 1351(5)

There was no evidence that school district engaged in unofficial policy or custom of delaying tutoring services, as required to support handicapped student's § 1983 claim that district's delay in providing tutoring to her was a deliberate deprivation of her right to receive free appropriate public education. Hoekstra By and Through Hoekstra v. Independent School Dist. No. 283, St. Louis Park, Minn., D.Minn.1996, 916 F.Supp. 941, affirmed 103 F.3d 624, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1852, 520 U.S. 1244, 137 L.Ed.2d 1054. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Action taken against teacher at direction of superintendent of schools represented official policy of board of education under New York law, and thus board was liable for violation of teacher's First Amendment rights. Rothschild v. Board of Educ. of City of Buffalo, W.D.N.Y.1991, 778 F.Supp. 642. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Evidence did not support contention, made on behalf of elementary school students who were allegedly verbally and physically abused by their teacher, that school district had policy or custom of retaining teachers who engaged in abusive disciplinary tactics by transferring them instead of firing them and by discouraging complaints; therefore, school district could not be held liable in § 1983 action. Gonzales v. Brown, S.D.Tex.1991, 768 F.Supp. 581. Civil Rights 1418

Board of education could be held liable under federal civil rights statute for alleged single act of discrimination against teacher; decision to request teacher's resignation was within school board's exclusive power, and thus represented act of official government policy. Haag v. Board of Educ., N.D.Ill.1987, 655 F.Supp. 1267. Civil Rights 1351(5)

796. ---- Corporal punishment, education, schools and students, custom or usage

Individuals charged with misdemeanors were subjected to sufficient deprivation of liberty to constitute "seizure" necessary to support their § 1983 malicious prosecution claims against police officer, even though they were never placed in custody and no restrictions were placed on their right to travel, where they were required to submit to processing and to attend court hearings as result of charges. Roskos v. Sugarloaf Tp., M.D.Pa.2003, 295 F.Supp.2d 480. Civil Rights 1088(5)

To sustain § 1983 claims against municipality and its officials in their official capacity, plaintiff has to establish that allegedly unconstitutional acts were official policy or custom of municipality, and allegations based upon respondeat superior are insufficient to support cause of action under § 1983. M.W. ex rel. T.W. v. Madison County Bd. of Educ., E.D.Ky.2003, 262 F.Supp.2d 737. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

Student who claimed his constitutional rights were violated by teacher's alleged overuse of physical force could not maintain § 1983 action against school district, school superintendent, and school principal; there was no evidence to indicate that school's policy concerning use of physical force by teachers was "moving force" that would have caused teacher to act with malice. Thrasher v. General Cas. Co. of Wisconsin, W.D.Wis.1990, 732 F.Supp. 966. Civil Rights 1351(2); Civil Rights 1356

Even if parent suffered constitutional deprivation when she was arrested on school premises while attempting to give her child a private reading lesson from textbook she did not find objectionable, parent was not entitled to recover in civil rights action against city, school board and school and city officials in their official capacities, since alleged deprivations were not proximately caused by custom or policy of city or board; parent failed to produce evidence as to how board's policy of requiring all students to use only approved textbooks led to constitutional deprivation or how city participated in arrest. Frost v. Hawkins County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1988, 851 F.2d 822, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 529, 488 U.S. 981, 102 L.Ed.2d 561. Civil Rights 1351(2); Civil Rights 1351(4)

798. Employment, custom or usage--Generally

African-American bus driver, who was terminated for unfitness for duty, failed to establish any Monell liability against her former employer since there was no proof of any custom, policy or practice to treat the her differently from white bus operators nor were there any discriminatory actions by employer or any policymaker of employer. Perry v. Metropolitan Suburban Bus Authority, E.D.N.Y.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 251. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 in connection with private non-profit corporation's decision to terminate its employee, despite employee's contention that county encouraged corporation to terminate her employment, absent allegation that there was causal connection between any county policy or custom and alleged violation of her civil rights, or that county exercised any influence or control over corporation's decision to terminate her. Ashby v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 351 F.Supp.2d 30. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Employee of transportation authority failed to allege municipal policy or custom of violating employees' due process rights, and thus failed to state cause of action in complaint against authority under §§ 1983. Palumbo v. Manhattan and Bronx Surface Transit Operating Authority, S.D.N.Y.2004, 346 F.Supp.2d 493. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Because city manager, the only city official authorized to make policy on personnel matters, had not ratified the decision to transfer police officer, city could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for allegedly unconstitutional transfer of officer, who had not identified any policy enacted by the city manager or the city commission designed to retaliate against officer or anyone similarly situated, in retaliation for officer's complaints about a superior interfering with an ongoing murder investigation. Pino v. City of Miami, S.D.Fla.2004, 315 F.Supp.2d 1230. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Male homosexual co-worker's claim that his complaint of harassment was "brushed off" and female co-worker's claim that no one investigated her complaints about male employee's mistreatment did not give rise to an inference of a policy or custom of unlawful retaliation by county, as required for white male employee's § 1983 claim. Kulikowski v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Boulder, D.Colo.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1053. Civil Rights 1405

African American coemployees' alleged use of term "nigger" when referring to fellow African Americans was not policy and practice of District of Columbia Department of Corrections, and Department was not liable to African American employee on his § 1983 discrimination claim; Department had detailed grievance procedure to address discrimination charges, and employee's claim, which was unique and rarely seen, was not persistent problem that had been brought frequently to attention of Department's management and ignored. Ridley v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1996, 945 F.Supp. 333. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Even if town terminated park manager's employment improperly, park manager failed to identify any conduct that could constitute a custom, policy or practice of the town which led to the deprivation of his employment and as such, park manager failed to establish § 1983 municipal liability claim. Hispanic-American former city employee failed to establish a citywide policy or custom of race discrimination and, therefore, failed to establish city's § 1983 liability; employee failed to alleged or otherwise establish that city or individual city employees engaged in conduct causing deprivations of rights at issue by policies which would affirmatively command that discrimination occur, or by acquiescence in longstanding practice or custom which would constitute standard operating procedure of city, but merely alleged the occurrence of random remarks or isolated incidents, and employee alleged that violative discriminatory conduct occurred in relation to her and not as a custom or policy of city. Underwood v. City of Fort Myers, M.D.Fla.1995, 890 F.Supp. 1018. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Plaintiff, who alleged that officers of municipality actively participated in selection of African American as Deputy Director of Emergency Ambulance Bureau of District of Columbia Fire Department on basis of his race, stated § 1983 claim against municipality, since he alleged that selection resulted from policy adopted and promulgated by municipality's officers. Zervas v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.1993, 817 F.Supp. 148. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Complaint by terminated housing authority employee failed to allege facts sufficient to establish municipal liability on the part of the authority under civil rights statute, where no facts were alleged which implicated the authority's board in plaintiff's termination and it was not claimed that the board promulgated an unconstitutional termination policy but that certain authority employees failed to follow or honor the due process provisions set forth in the authority's manual and where, though complaint implicated some fairly high-ranking officials, the applicable statute did not specifically vest any of those officials with final policy-making authority over personnel matters. Parker v. Chicago Housing Authority, N.D.Ill.1989, 730 F.Supp. 115. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Allegations that former employee was terminated from position with city's commission on human rights in violation of constitutional rights, that she was terminated by deputy director who acted pursuant to mandate issued by acting director, and that acting director was responsible for establishing final policy with respect to employment with commission satisfied requirement for imposition of municipal liability under section 1983 that constitutional deprivation was caused by governmental official acting in accordance with municipal policy, and thus stated cause of action against city. Walker v. City of Chicago, N.D.Ill.1986, 645 F.Supp. 269. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Dismissed teacher's § 1983 claims of deprivation of due process could not be maintained against the board of education where teacher could not show that a policy or practice of the board caused the alleged deprivation. 799. ---- Demotions, employment, custom or usage

Police officers' allegations that they were transferred from prestigious positions to street jobs and passed over for promotions after speaking with coworkers and union representatives about deputy inspector's order forbidding officers from conducting follow-up investigations or assisting detective bureau without inspector's direct authorization failed to show that city had policy or custom that caused officers' injuries, as required to state § 1983 claim against city. Gustafson v. Jones, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1997, 117 F.3d 1015. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Whether firefighter was demoted by budget ordinance of city, which abolished training captain's position and created new lieutenant's position into which firefighter was demoted, or by city manager, who informed firefighter that the training captain's position was abolished and that firefighter was being demoted to his former rank of lieutenant, city was subject to liability under this section for firefighter's demotion. involved official policy as the moving force of the alleged constitutional violation so that those bodies could be sued and held liable for the equitable relief of back pay under this section. Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, U.S.N.Y.1978, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 436 U.S. 658, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. Civil Rights 1351(5)

801. ---- Promotions, employment, custom or usage

Fire chief's decision not to promote firefighter, allegedly based on his union activity, did not implement municipal policy, for purposes of § 1983 liability; "final policymaking authority" over employer-employee relations in city rested only with city council and city manager, record showed that city manager had adopted official policy of neutrality toward union activities of city employees, and thus firefighter and union could not establish that city formally adopted municipal policy embodying anti-union animus,or that fire chief was authorized to adopt such a policy. Greensboro Professional Fire Fighters Ass'n, Local 3157 v. City of Greensboro, C.A.4 (N.C.) 1995, 64 F.3d 962. Civil Rights 1351(5)

New police superintendent's allegedly discriminatory demotions and promotions of senior staff did not establish municipal policy that could serve as basis for imposing municipal liability; if superintendent did discriminate on basis of race or politics, he violated rather than implemented municipal policy calling for merit selection and banning discrimination on basis of race or politics. Auriemma v. Rice, C.A.7 (Ill.) 1992, 957 F.2d 397. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County's failure to promote any African-American employees until lawsuit was filed did not establish custom of discriminatory employment practices, and thus did not subject county to liability under § 1983 based on failure to promote African-American employee, where county had official policy against discrimination and promoting equal opportunity employment and affirmative action, percentage of black males in civilian labor force was similar to percentage of county employees, there was no evidence of discrimination against county's other African-American employee, and employee was later promoted to position. Stewart v. Board of Com'rs for Shawnee County, Kan., D.Kan.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1143. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City could not be held liable for single employment decision of city clerk not to promote city employee, for purposes of determining municipal liability under § 1983 for alleged discrimination based on age in violation of equal protection; city clerk merely exercised discretion in carrying out officially pronounced policy of city, inasmuch as city council established policies applying to selection of candidate, established selection committee comprised in part of its members, and then directed to city clerk a list of acceptable candidates according to that policy. Mummelthie v. City of Mason City, Ia., N.D.Iowa 1995, 873 F.Supp. 1293, affirmed 78 F.3d 589. Civil Rights 1351(5)

802. ---- Retaliatory discharge, employment, custom or usage

City employee failed to prove existence of unconstitutional municipal policy which resulted in series of employment actions against employee, including his ultimate layoff in retaliation for his appealing original job decision to civil service commission, so as to impose liability against city under § 1983, where aldermen and mayor enacted no ordinances designed to retaliate, and employee's own attempts from adverse personnel decision repeatedly brought him at least partial relief. (Per Justice O'Connor with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in the judgment.) City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, U.S.Mo.1988, 108 S.Ct. 915, 485 U.S. 112, 99 L.Ed.2d 107, on remand 879 F.2d 1573, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Mayor's discretionary hiring and firing decisions in executing layoffs of city employees during budgetary cutback constituted municipal policy for which civil rights liability could be imposed on city. Gronowski v. Spencer, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2005, 424 F.3d 285. Civil Rights 1351(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Constructive discharge of city assistant fire chief, who was forced to retire for making statements protected by First Amendment, was pursuant to final policy attributable to city, for purposes of determining whether city was liable under § 1983; assistant fire chief appealed to civil service commission which ruled against him on ground he had voluntarily retired, and such determination was substantive and marked end of city's appeals process. Meyers v. City of Cincinnati, C.A.6 (Ohio) 1994, 14 F.3d 1115, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City employee who was transferred and laid off failed to establish that city was liable under § 1983; supervisors responsible for transfer and lay off were not vested with final policymaking authority in area of personnel administration and lay offs and no evidence existed of an unconstitutional municipal policy authorizing or otherwise permitting any form of retaliatory action for exercising right to appeal adverse employment decisions to Civil Service Commission. Praprotnik v. City of St. Louis, C.A.8 1989, 879 F.2d 1573, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1351(5)

School district's vote to discharge teacher did not reflect policy of retaliating against teachers who engaged in protected speech, and thus district could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for superintendent's retaliation against teacher for having engaged in protected speech, where district terminated teacher for unsatisfactory performance during two site-assistance plans at different schools, and there was no proof of retaliatory animus by majority of district or of custom or practice of retaliation against outspoken teachers. Sherrod v. Palm Beach County School Dist., S.D.Fla.2006, 424 F.Supp.2d 1341. Schools 147.12

County sheriff was final policymaker for his department, providing basis for claim that county had illegal policy under which sheriff could terminate assistant county jail administrator in retaliation for exercising First Amendment rights, and providing basis for § 1983 action against county. Shepard v. Wapello County, Iowa, S.D.Iowa 2003, 303 F.Supp.2d 1004. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Allegations of three former county employees that their former supervisor had deprived them of equal protection when she had discharged them while not discharging similarly situated individuals who had not filed workers' compensation claims, disability claims or made complaints regarding county's unauthorized activities were sufficient to allege county custom, for purposes of stating § 1983 claim against county. Langford v. County of Cook, N.D.Ill.1997, 965 F.Supp. 1091. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Discharged employees' allegation that county hospital authority had policy or custom of discharging employees who complained about illegal activities at the county hospital authority was insufficient to state § 1983 claim against county hospital authority and county hospital authority officials in their official capacities; discharged employees did not allege county hospital authority implicitly authorized, approved or knowingly acquiesced in unconstitutional conduct of its officials. Ketron v. Chattanooga-Hamilton County Hosp. Authority, E.D.Tenn.1996, 919 F.Supp. 280. Civil Rights 1395(8)

City transit authority was not liable under § 1983 for failing to return employee to work following disability leave, allegedly in retaliation for his exercise of free speech regarding proper method of fabricating parts used to repair elevated train structure; supervisors who allegedly made final decision not to return employee to work had no authority to establish official policy, and employee failed to produce evidence from which jury could conclude that authority had custom or practice of retaliating against employees. Radic v. Chicago Transit Authority, N.D.Ill.1995, 878 F.Supp. 1130, affirmed 73 F.3d 159, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 2505, 517 U.S. 1247, 135 L.Ed.2d 195. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Former police department employee failed to establish municipal liability in her § 1983 action alleging that she was discharged due to her handicap and in retaliation for filing industrial injury claim, notwithstanding contention that "entire cadre of supervision" in department was involved in discharge decision; it was city's official policy not to discriminate against handicapped persons or those who receive workers' compensation, and there was no evidence of unwritten policy to discriminate. Kelley v. City of Mesa, D.Ariz.1994, 873 F.Supp. 320. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Former state employees adequately pleaded existence of municipal custom, policy or practice so as to state § 1983 claim against agency commissioner in his official capacity for retaliatory discharge, where they alleged that they were discharged from positions with department by commissioner for political reasons, and that commissioner was delegated authority to make final decisions regarding employment of department employees. Busa v. Barnes, N.D.Ill.1986, 646 F.Supp. 615, reconsideration denied 646 F.Supp. 619. Civil Rights 1395(8)

Employee failed to show that she suffered adverse employment action through constructive termination, in § 1983 lawsuit under First Amendment free speech clause claiming retaliation, since employee did not produce any admissible evidence which would have permitted rational trier of fact to find that constructive termination occurred. Quoka v. City of West Haven, C.A.2 (Conn.) 2003, 64 Fed.Appx. 830, 2003 WL 21223422, Unreported. Civil Rights 1123; Constitutional Law 90.1(7.2)

803. ---- Hostile environment, employment, custom or usage

Municipality did not have custom or widespread practice of condoning sexual harassment, for purpose of employee's equal protection claim in lawsuit under §§ 1983 that was based upon alleged sexual harassment by male co-worker, where employee's allegations related to one harasser and two supervisors, one supervisor responded to employee's complaint almost immediately by transferring him to another job site and reporting him to municipality's sexual harassment office (SHO), and SHO investigated complaint and municipality suspended male co-worker without pay for nearly one month. Valentine v. City of Chicago, C.A.7 (Ill.) 2006, 452 F.3d 670. Civil Rights 1351(4)

To establish racial and sexual hostile work environment claims, under §§ 1983 and 1981, New York State Human Rights Law (NYCHRL), and New York City Human Rights Law (NYCHRL), plaintiff must establish that, in context of her relationship with her employer, workplace was permeated with discriminatory intimidation that was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of her work environment, and if plaintiff does not subjectively perceive environment to be abusive, conduct has not actually altered conditions of the plaintiff's employment. Bland v. New York, E.D.N.Y.2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 526. Civil Rights 1147; Civil Rights 1185

Incidents of hostility towards female county employee who complained about female supervisor's discriminatory behavior toward white male employee and the general lack of morale in the department did not support an inference of widespread or customary retaliation, as required for white male employee's municipal liability claim under § 1983. Kulikowski v. Board of County Com'rs of County of Boulder, D.Colo.2002, 231 F.Supp.2d 1053. Civil Rights 1405

Female clerical employee of municipal housing authority failed to establish existence of sexual harassment hostile work environment, in violation of Title VII and New York Human Relations Law, or under § 1983, when she alleged that supervisor said he was buying erectile dysfunction medication in order to be with employee, once blocked her passage down hallway, asked her to date him, and whispered in her ear; incidents were not sufficiently frequent or egregious to establish hostile environment, especially given informal atmosphere of office. Parisi v. Buffalo Mun. Housing Authority, W.D.N.Y.2003, 2003 WL 21382893, Unreported. Civil Rights 1185

804. ---- Investigation of complaints, employment, custom or usage

Male homosexual co-worker's claim that his complaint of harassment was "brushed off" and female co-worker's claim that no one investigated her complaints about male employee's mistreatment did not give rise to an inference of a policy or custom of unlawful retaliation by county, as required for white male employee's § 1983 claim.

804A. ---- Political affiliation, employment, custom or usage

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether county executive, deputy county executive, and hiring officials for federally funded regional workforce development system had policy of basing system's hiring decision on applicants' political party affiliation precluded summary judgment in former employee's §§ 1983 action alleging that failure to hire her violated her First Amendment right to free association on ground that there was no evidence of officials' personal involvement. Krause v. Buffalo and Erie County Workforce Development Consortium, Inc., W.D.N.Y.2006, 425 F.Supp.2d 352. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

805. Execution of judgments, custom or usage

Actions of judgment creditors, in unlawfully using facially constitutional execution of judgment statute to levy upon property of sureties on supersedeas bond without obtaining judgment against sureties on the bond, did not constitute "state policy" and, thus, were not fairly attributable to the State of Iowa so as to permit sureties to recover damages from judgment creditors under § 1983 for deprivation of their property without due process. Roudybush v. Zabel, C.A.8 (Iowa) 1987, 813 F.2d 173. Civil Rights 1326(9)

806. Freedom of speech, custom or usage

Municipal liability under § 1983 was established by police commissioner's knowing approval of request to transfer female and male detectives and sergeant for engaging in protected activity of free speech and association by speaking against gender discrimination concerning female detective. Keenan v. City of Philadelphia, C.A.3 (Pa.) 1992, 983 F.2d 459, rehearing denied. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Where defendants, who suspended county employee for making speech at county board meeting, attributed employee's suspensions to his failure to abide by county's chain-of-command policy, and where individual defendants were acting in their official capacities pursuant to their interpretation of that policy, county and county board were liable under this section for the damages resulting from the suspensions. Czurlanis v. Albanese, C.A.3 (N.J.) 1983, 721 F.2d 98. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether private university had a custom of allowing its security guards to violate First and Fourth Amendment rights of evangelists speaking to assembled groups on campus, and as to whether or not university and its security guards conspired with the city police officers in asking evangelist to move, and arresting him when he failed to move, precluding summary judgment in favor of either university or evangelist on his §§ 1983 claims. Victory Outreach Center v. Melso, E.D.Pa.2004, 371 F.Supp.2d 642. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

Town manager could establish, through his actions, policy regarding hiring of police chiefs that would support liability of municipality for §§ 1983 claim that police lieutenant was denied interim appointment as chief in retaliation for his exercise of First Amendment freedom of speech rights. Putnam v. Town of Saugus, Mass., D.Mass.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 151. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City building inspector established that city had a custom or policy of violating individuals' First and Fourteenth Amendment rights, as required for inspector's § 1983 claim against city after he was terminated; inspector was counseled for publicly voicing his concerns with the building department and for publicly disagreeing with his supervisor, and director of public safety made decision to terminate building inspector. Hoover v. Radabaugh, S.D.Ohio 2000, 123 F.Supp.2d 412, affirmed in part, appeal dismissed in part 307 F.3d 460. Civil Rights 1351(5)

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

Software program developer failed to state claim under § 1983 that city violated her right to free speech and assembly arising out of incident in which city's director of libraries withdrew city's sponsorship of developer's speech to be given on city property where developer did not allege that director acted pursuant to policy or practice of city. Davis v. City of Palo Alto, N.D.Cal.1996, 930 F.Supp. 1375. Civil Rights 1351(6)

Corporation that managed city park, a quasi-municipality, could not escape liability for First Amendment violation by claiming reliance in good faith on its own policy. Nemo v. City of Portland, D.Or.1995, 910 F.Supp. 491. Civil Rights 1373; Civil Rights 1376(4)

There was no evidence that township embraced any policy of silencing citizens at public hearings or that it directly or by knowing inaction condoned council president's conduct of not permitting plaintiff to speak, as required to impose liability on township; nor could president's isolated act be considered an exercise of policy-making power by one in power to make policy for the township. Wilkinson v. Bensalem Tp., E.D.Pa.1993, 822 F.Supp. 1154. Civil Rights 1351(6)

City was liable under § 1983 for violating city fire fighter's First Amendment rights by refusing to permit fire fighter to address city council at public meeting; city charter provision requiring city employees to deal with city council only through city manager represented official policy of city and enforcement of prohibition at meeting was made by entity which possessed final decision-making authority over area in question. Pesek v. City of Brunswick, N.D.Ohio 1992, 794 F.Supp. 768. Civil Rights 1376(10)

Town could be held liable for police chief's violation of news photographer's First Amendment rights at accident scene; under New Hampshire law, police chief's conduct represented town policy. Connell v. Town of Hudson, D.N.H.1990, 733 F.Supp. 465. Civil Rights 1351(4)

807. Harassment, custom or usage

Employee failed to demonstrate that her supervisor's harassment and assault occurred as result of a municipal custom or policy as would support municipal liability under § 1983 where there was no indication that either city or supervisor's superiors knew of supervisor's alleged womanizing, and record did not reveal that, prior to alleged assault, employee or anyone else had ever complained about supervisor to city or to employee's superiors. Kern v. City of Rochester, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 93 F.3d 38, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 1335, 520 U.S. 1155, 137 L.Ed.2d 494. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City could not be held liable under § 1983 to female employees of police department for former police chief's alleged sexual harassment of them, where there was no allegation or evidence suggesting city had official policy favoring harassment and, in fact, there was evidence city had written policy expressly forbidding it, aldermanic form of government did not authorize police chief to hire or fire employees nor to make official policy as a matter of state law, there was no indication that former police chief materially changed employment duties or status as part of his harassment but, rather, case exemplified a situation where former police chief was committing private, rather than public, acts of sexual harassment, and city did not acquiesce to former police chief's actions but, rather, took steps that resulted in preventing further harassment. Lankford v. City of Hobart, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1996, 73 F.3d 283 . Civil Rights 1351(5)

Defendant's alleged sexual harassment of female employee of county assessor's office occurring before defendant became assessor, while he was still employee's co-worker, was not actionable under § 1983; defendant had no supervisory authority over employee before he became assessor, and there was no allegation of policy or custom of allowing sexual harassment in assessor's office. Noland v. McAdoo, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 39 F.3d 269. Civil Rights 1190; Civil Rights 1351(5) was liable under § 1983; whereas assessor's ability to hire and fire necessarily carried with it official authority and sanction, the other acts of sexual harassment complained of were private rather than official acts. Starrett v. Wadley, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1989, 876 F.2d 808. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City was liable under § 1983 to dispatcher hired by fire department, for ongoing sexual harassment to which dispatcher was subjected by her supervisors, where fire department had no policy against sexual harassment, where management officials responsible for working conditions at department knew of harassment, and where no corrective action was taken. Bohen v. City of East Chicago, Ind., C.A.7 (Ind.) 1986, 799 F.2d 1180, on remand 666 F.Supp. 154. Civil Rights 1352(5)

If city impliedly or tacitly authorized, approved or encouraged harassment of individual, it promulgated "official policy" such that it could be liable under this section; "official policy" may be inferred from informal acts or omissions of supervisory municipal officials. Turpin v. Mailet, C.A.2 (Conn.) 1980, 619 F.2d 196, certiorari denied 101 S.Ct. 577, 449 U.S. 1016, 66 L.Ed.2d 475. Civil Rights 1351(1)

City could not be held liable under this section for alleged harassment and unlawful searches and seizures by municipal police officers in absence of any evidence that the city "acted" through its policies, formally or informally adopted, to deprive plaintiff of his constitutional rights. Reimer v. Short, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1978, 578 F.2d 621, certiorari denied 99 S.Ct. 1425, 440 U.S. 947, 59 L.Ed.2d 635. Civil Rights 1351(4)

City was not liable for alleged pattern of harassment of plaintiffs by police officers, even if police commissioner could be deemed to have had knowledge of the harassment and to have failed to prevent it; city's process for investigating complaints against police officers was commensurate with the best practices employed by other police departments of similar size. Glass v. City of Philadelphia, E.D.Pa.2006, 455 F.Supp.2d 302. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether sexual harassment was so widespread as to be departmental policy or custom, precluded summary judgment on female county police officer's §§ 1983 claims against county; officer offered evidence of harassment over extended period by multiple officers and she and other female officers had repeatedly complained of harassment to their supervisors. Ensko v. Howard County, Md., D.Md.2006, 423 F.Supp.2d 502. Federal Civil Procedure 2497.1

Borough was not liable, in §§ 1983 suit claiming invasion of federal rights of borough tax collector, due to lack of policy or custom under which member of borough council ordered collector's office relocated to borough building garage, accused collector of stealing from colleague and sending member threatening letter, and ordered surveillance camera installed to cover collector's desk. Konopka v. Borough of Wyoming, M.D.Pa.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 666. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City employee's allegation that city had delayed five months, after employee first complained about sexual harassment by city alderman, before it took corrective action in passing ordinance prohibiting sexual harassment of employees by elected officials was not sufficient to establish city custom or policy of nonresponsiveness to harassment complaints, for purposes of holding city liable under § 1983 for alderman's harassment. Jarman v. City of Northlake, N.D.Ill.1997, 950 F.Supp. 1375. Civil Rights 1351(5)

County could not be held liable under § 1983 for sexual harassment claim of former employee by supervisor from county sheriff's office due to official policy of county; county had official policy against sexual harassment and employee had not presented evidence that supervisor's sexual harassment of her was in accordance with official policy of county. Farris v. Board of County Com'rs of Wyandotte County, Kan., D.Kan.1996, 924 F.Supp. 1041. Civil Rights 1351(5) for failing properly to investigate and address allegations of sexual harassment when, through this failure, the conduct becomes an accepted custom or practice of the public employer. Cohen v. Litt, S.D.N.Y.1995, 906 F.Supp. 957. Civil Rights 1189; Civil Rights 1359

Failure of municipality's policy-making officials to take action to prevent or stop sexual harassment could constitute deliberate indifference even in absence of actual knowledge of particular acts against employee; failure to inform employees of policy against sexual harassment and to institute procedures for reporting and investigating allegations could create extremely high risk that constitutional violations involving sexual harassment would occur. Reynolds v. Borough of Avalon, D.N.J.1992, 799 F.Supp. 442. Civil Rights 1352(5)

Chief of police, deputy chief of police and township clerk adequately responded to civilian dispatcher's sexual harassment allegations, precluding liability under § 1983. Foster v. Township of Hillside, D.N.J.1992, 780 F.Supp. 1026, affirmed 977 F.2d 567. Civil Rights 1189

City had no informal policy or custom condoning police chief's alleged sexual harassment of a female subordinate, thus precluding imposition of liability under §§ 1983; city had a comprehensive sexual harassment policy, of which all employees were aware, and there was an immediate response by the mayor after the subordinate lodged her complaint. Howard v. City of Robertsdale, C.A.11 (Ala.) 2006, 168 Fed.Appx. 883, 2006 WL 304552, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

808. Hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage--Generally

Under certain circumstances, municipality can be held liable in civil rights action under § 1983 for constitutional violations resulting from its failure to train municipal employees. City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, U.S.Ohio 1989, 109 S.Ct. 1197, 489 U.S. 378, 103 L.Ed.2d 412. Civil Rights 1352(1)

For purposes of rule that failure to train subordinate municipal employees will trigger §§ 1983 municipal liability where the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights of members of the public with whom the employees will interact, where municipal employees in exercising their discretion so often violate constitutional rights that the need for further training must have been plainly obvious to the city policymakers, deliberate indifference will be found. Green v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 465 F.3d 65. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Claim of inadequate training, supervision, and policies under § 1983 cannot be made out against supervisory authority absent finding of constitutional violation by person supervised. Webber v. Mefford, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1994, 43 F.3d 1340. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

To sustain a cause of action based on a theory of "supervisory liability," brought under § 1983, a plaintiff must establish that (1) the behavior of the supervisor's subordinates results in a constitutional violation and (2) the supervisor's action or inaction was affirmatively linked to the behavior in the sense that it could be characterized as supervisory encouragement, condonation or acquiescence or gross negligence of the supervisor amounting to deliberate indifference. Ramos Bonilla v. Vivoni, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 135. Civil Rights 1355

The inadequacy of police training may serve as the basis for § 1983 liability only where the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights of the persons with whom the police come into contact. Miskovich v. Independent School Dist. 318, D.Minn.2002, 226 F.Supp.2d 990. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To assert violation of substantive due process for failure to develop policies or afford training for detection and investigation of alleged incidents of child abuse, students must show that: (1) policy or failure to have one was inadequate; (2) school supervisory officials were deliberately indifferent in adopting or failing to adopt policy; and (3) inadequate policy or failure to have policy directly caused students' injury. Does v. Covington County

School Bd. of Educ., M.D.Ala.1996, 930 F.Supp. 554. Constitutional Law 278.5(5.1)

Supervisor may be liable under § 1983 for permitting proper procedures to be ignored or failing to adequately supervise personnel. United Steelworkers of America v. Milstead, D.Ariz.1988, 705 F.Supp. 1426. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory liability cannot automatically be ruled out in a § 1983 action and a supervisor or supervising body may be held liable under that statute for failure to adequately supervise or control or where the supervising defendant is responsible for a policy or custom which results in the deprivation of rights. McAdoo v. Toll, D.C.Md.1985, 615 F.Supp. 1309. See, also, Cooke v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1984, 578 F.Supp. 179; Smith v. Jorden, S.D.Ohio 1981, 527 F.Supp. 167. Civil Rights 1355

809. ---- Causation, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Student who had been sexually assaulted by teacher failed to show that alleged custom of county school board in allowing "good old boys network" to operate was proximate cause of assault, and thus, could not recover in federal civil rights action against board; even assuming that claimed "network" did constitute custom for purposes of municipal liability, no direct causal connection existed between such a custom or policy and sexual abuse which occurred. Doe v. Claiborne County, Tenn. By and Through Claiborne County Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1996, 103 F.3d 495. Civil Rights 1351(2)

Negligent hiring or supervision of municipal employees is proscribed under Monell, but such negligence must be proximate cause of § 1983 injury. Van Ort v. Estate of Stanewich, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 92 F.3d 831, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 950, 519 U.S. 1111, 136 L.Ed.2d 837. Civil Rights 1345

For purposes of municipal liability under civil rights laws, claims of inadequate training require proof that failure to train was policy or deliberate choice made by municipality and that there is direct link between municipality's policy and constitutional violation. Bowen v. City of Manchester, C.A.1 (N.H.) 1992, 966 F.2d 13. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Liability may be imposed on municipality under § 1983 upon showing of deliberate indifference exhibited by pattern of inadequate training, supervision, and discipline of police officers, provided there is causal connection between such inadequacies and risk of harm to others. Parker v. District of Columbia, C.A.D.C.1988, 850 F.2d 708, 271 U.S.App.D.C. 15, certiorari denied 109 S.Ct. 1339, 489 U.S. 1065, 103 L.Ed.2d 809. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Parents and child who sued city failed to establish §§ 1983 claim based on inadequate training, stemming from assault that allegedly occurred while child was at pre-placement facility after removal, where there was no triable issue of fact that facility workers were inadequately trained, that such lack of training caused child's injuries, and that city acted with deliberate indifference in disregarding risk posed by lack of training. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Municipality's alleged failure to train employees can be the basis for liability under §§ 1983 when the municipality inadequately trains or supervises its employees, the failure to train or supervise is a municipal policy, and that policy causes the employees to violate a citizen's constitutional rights. Payne v. DeKalb County, N.D.Ga.2004, 414 F.Supp.2d 1158. Civil Rights 1352(1)

School district was not liable under §§ 1983 for injury sustained by special education student who fell on icy sidewalk leading from the regular school bus into high school since there was no showing that alleged constitutional violation was causally linked to an actual policy, custom, or failure to train; practice of assigning only high school students utilizing wheelchairs to ride the wheelchair accessible buses did not constitute a municipal custom of denying any form of special education transportation to all students who qualified for it and no showing that school district Defendants actually chose a training policy with deliberate indifference toward special education children. Ms. K v. City of South Portland, D.Me.2006, 407 F.Supp.2d 290. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Former employee who brought action against county official, alleging sexual harassment by former supervisor, failed to allege causal connection between alleged failure to supervise supervisor and her injury, as required to state §§ 1983 claim in official's individual capacity; official's review of supervisor's background would not have rendered sexual misconduct foreseeable. Nassau County Employee "L" v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2004, 345 F.Supp.2d 293. Civil Rights 1359

Allegation that school district had policy of not hiring employees who had previously been terminated due to reduction in force (RIF) was insufficient to state § 1983 claim by former employee who claimed that he was not rehired because of gender and national origin discrimination; alleged policy was not cause of complained-of discrimination. Pyne v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2002, 298 F.Supp.2d 7. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Motorcyclist who was injured during high-speed pursuit by police officer failed to establish § 1983 claim against municipality for failure to adequately train police officers as to high-speed pursuits, absent causal connection between municipality's alleged failure and injury that occurred. Carroll v. Borough of State College, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 47 F.3d 1160. Civil Rights 1352(4)

810. ---- Intent or knowledge, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Where official policy or practice is unconstitutional on its face, it necessarily follows, in determining liability under § 1983, that policymaker was not only aware of specific policy, but was also aware that constitutional violation will most likely occur. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Town, sued for violation of plaintiff's civil rights when he was shot by a police officer, would not be automatically liable based on finding of gross negligence on part of police chief in training officer, absent showing whether town knew of chief's violation of statute mandating police officer training and town could only be found liable if it or the town manager, who had responsibility for hiring of police officers and had some supervisory authority over the chief, knew or should have known that the chief was not training his police officers properly and then failed to take reasonable measures to rectify the situation. Voutour v. Vitale, C.A.1 (Mass.) 1985, 761 F.2d 812, certiorari denied 106 S.Ct. 879, 474 U.S. 1100, 88 L.Ed.2d 916. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Personal representative of the estate of a police shooting victim failed to prove that city had notice that its actions or inactions regarding the supervision of the shooting police officer would likely result in an unconstitutional or improper shooting, so as to warrant imposition of municipal liability under §§ 1983, even though the city had institutional knowledge of the officer's history of at least eight shootings, resulting in five deaths, in four separate events, as well as a record of threats and abuse; no shooting was ever found to be improper, the officer was disciplined and required to take additional training, and several years had passed since his last discharge of a firearm. Estate of Smith v. Silvas, D.Colo.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 1015.

School personnel who exhibit deliberate indifference by failing to take appropriate action when they have knowledge that the abuse is occurring can be held liable under § 1983. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1356

Supervisory liability, for purposes of a claim brought under § 1983, does not require a showing that the supervisor had actual knowledge of the offending behavior; rather, a supervisor may be held liable if he formulates a policy or engages in a practice that leads to a civil rights violation committed by another. Ramos Bonilla v. Vivoni,

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

D.Puerto Rico 2003, 259 F.Supp.2d 135. Civil Rights 1355

Even if police department maintained an unwritten policy of allowing its gang task force (GTF) officers to conduct unconstitutional searches of private residences, city could not be held liable under § 1983 for shooting death of occupant of apartment during warrantless entry and search on basis of a failure to provide adequate training and supervision to the gang task force officers; there was no evidence showing that city policymakers had actual or constructive knowledge that GTF officers were expected to conduct narcotics investigations for which they needed specialized training or standard operating procedures that differed from those to which they were already subject as patrol officers, or that GTF officers were in fact conducting such narcotics investigations, or that city policymakers had actual knowledge that the city's training program failed to prevent its GTF officers from engaging in tortious conduct, and there was no evidence that city was deliberately indifferent to a lack of adequate supervision for the GTF. Pineda v. City of Houston, S.D.Tex.2000, 124 F.Supp.2d 1057, dismissed 252 F.3d 1355, affirmed 291 F.3d 325, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 123 S.Ct. 892, 537 U.S. 1110, 154 L.Ed.2d 782. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City officials may be found "deliberately indifferent," as required to establish municipal liability under § 1983, where policy or training program is, on its face, clearly inadequate and likely to give rise to constitutional violation or, while not plainly deficient, policy or training program has in past so often led to violations of constitutional rights similar to those claimed that need for further training must have been plainly obvious to city policy makers. Brown v. City of Elba, M.D.Ala.1990, 754 F.Supp. 1551. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

To hold a city liable under § 1983 for failure to properly train its police force, plaintiff must show that municipality knew to high degree of certainty that some constitutional violation would occur unless a more effective training policy was implemented, and that city shirked its responsibility to the public by demonstrating a deliberate indifference to need for more effective training. Cawthon v. City of Greenville, N.D.Miss.1990, 745 F.Supp. 377. Civil Rights 1352(4)

811. ---- Deliberate indifference, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Plaintiff must demonstrate that municipal hiring decision reflects deliberate indifference to risk that violation of particular constitutional or statutory right will follow decision in order to establish that municipality acted with deliberate indifference and may be held liable in § 1983 action based on inadequate screening, and only where adequate scrutiny of applicant's background would lead reasonable policymaker to conclude that plainly obvious consequence of decision to hire applicant would be deprivation of third party's federally protected right can official's failure to adequately scrutinize applicant's background constitute "deliberate indifference." Board of County Com'rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, U.S.Tex.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1382, 520 U.S. 397, 137 L.Ed.2d 626, rehearing denied 117 S.Ct. 2472, 520 U.S. 1283, 138 L.Ed.2d 227, on remand 117 F.3d 239. Civil Rights 1345

Incident reports of alleged abuse by substitute teachers in school district were insufficient to establish that school district was deliberately indifferent, in failing to train or supervise student teachers, for purpose of elementary school student's §§ 1983 claim against school district, arising out of substitute teacher's alleged corporal punishment of student; although 10 incident reports documented some type of corporal punishment, only two incidents were serious, and those two incidents did not put district on notice of problem with its training and supervision of student teachers, as district operated 127 schools with over 69,000 students. Ellis ex rel. Pendergrass v. Cleveland Mun. School Dist., C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 455 F.3d 690. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Proof of "deliberate indifference," as required to establish culpability on part of municipality under § 1983, generally requires showing of more than single instance of lack of training or supervision causing a violation of constitutional rights, instead, deliberate indifference generally requires that plaintiff demonstrate at least pattern of similar violations arising from training that is so clearly inadequate as to be obviously likely to result in constitutional violation. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied,

Where proper response is obvious to all without training or supervision, then failure to train or supervise is generally not "so likely" to produce wrong decision as to support inference of deliberate indifference by city policymakers to need to train or supervise; thus, failure to train or supervise in such circumstances will not lead to municipal liability under § 1983. Sewell v. Town of Lake Hamilton, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 117 F.3d 488, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 852, 522 U.S. 1075, 139 L.Ed.2d 753. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Inadequacy of school bus driver training can form the basis of liability under § 1983 only when that failure to train constitutes deliberate indifference to rights of those students with whom school bus driver comes into contact; showing of "deliberate indifference" requires showing of something more culpable than negligent failure to recognize high risk of harm. Sargi v. Kent City Bd. of Educ., C.A.6 (Ohio) 1995, 70 F.3d 907. Civil Rights 1352(2)

Only where municipality's failure to train its employees in relevant respect evidences deliberate indifference to rights of its inhabitants can such shortcoming be properly thought of as city policy or custom that is actionable under § 1983; mere allegation that municipality failed to train its employees properly is insufficient to establish municipal custom or policy. Neighbour v. Covert, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1995, 68 F.3d 1508, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 1267, 516 U.S. 1174, 134 L.Ed.2d 214. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Failure of sheriff and county to adequately train police officers in proper procedures for conducting strip searches of female arrestees did not constitute deliberate indifference to training needs, as required to serve as basis for § 1983 liability in action brought by two female plaintiffs who were subjected to strip search incident to their arrest for possession of marijuana, but rather was consistent with county's well-established policy prohibiting warrantless strip searches of temporary detainees, which, at time of arrest, included all female arrestees. Warner v. Grand County, C.A.10 (Utah) 1995, 57 F.3d 962. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358

Three requirements must be met before municipality's failure to train or supervise its employees will constitute "deliberate indifference" to constitutional rights of citizens sufficient to subject municipality to liability under § 1983 when employees violate plaintiff's constitutional rights; plaintiff must show that municipal policymaker knew to moral certainty that municipal employees would confront given situation, that situation would present employees with difficult choice, or choice that employees had history of mishandling, and that wrong choice will frequently cause deprivation of constitutional rights. Walker v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1992, 974 F.2d 293, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1387, 507 U.S. 961, 122 L.Ed.2d 762, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 1412, 507 U.S. 972, 122 L.Ed.2d 784. Civil Rights 1352(1)

County jail inmate who was injured in cell and allowed to remain in a paralyzed condition for 18 hours before medical help was provided did not establish that sheriff had adopted deliberately indifferent policy of inadequate screening of personnel, even though two of his jailers had been treated for suicidal depression and alcoholism; sheriff had been furnished with letters from their doctors indicating fitness to return to work, and they had satisfactory work records. Benavides v. County of Wilson, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1992, 955 F.2d 968, certiorari denied 113 S.Ct. 79, 506 U.S. 824, 121 L.Ed.2d 43. Civil Rights 1358

Immediate supervisor of police officer in charge of squad which fired upon driver of parked automobile after he had attempted to leave as officers were approaching him in plain clothes from unmarked police vehicle with drawn pistols, displayed indifference equivalent to recklessness or callousness required for liability for civil rights deprivation statute; he was aware that there had been numerous civilian complaints against lead officer, and that the officer had a reputation for a violent character in mistreating citizens. Gutierrez-Rodriguez v. Cartagena, C.A.1 (Puerto Rico) 1989, 882 F.2d 553. Civil Rights 1358 to support civil rights violation, when failure to train, supervise, or discipline its employees evidences deliberate or conscious indifference to citizens' constitutional rights. Walter v. Pike County, Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.2006, 2006 WL 3437384. Civil Rights 1352(1)

To establish that municipality's failure to train employees evidenced a deliberate indifference to the rights of its inhabitants, §§ 1983 plaintiff must present some evidence that the municipality knew of a need to train and/or supervise in a particular area and the municipality made a deliberate choice not to take any action, which may be demonstrated in one of two ways: (1) where a pattern of constitutional violations exists such that the municipality knows or should know that corrective measures are needed, and (2) where municipal employees face clear constitutional duties in recurrent situations even without prior incidents to place the municipality on notice. Payne v. DeKalb County, N.D.Ga.2004, 414 F.Supp.2d 1158. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Single incident is insufficient to establish existence of policy amounting to deliberate indifference, and thus insufficient to support §§ 1983 inadequate training/supervision claim against municipality. Robinson v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2005, 403 F.Supp.2d 39. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipality's deliberately indifferent failure to train, for purposes of §§ 1983 claim, is not established by: (1) presenting evidence of shortcomings of individual; (2) proving that otherwise sound training program occasionally was negligently administered; or (3) showing, without more, that better training would have enabled officer to avoid injury-causing conduct. Davis ex rel. Davis v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 790. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Only where the failure to train or supervise amounts to a deliberate indifference to the rights of persons with whom the police come into contact may the inadequacy of police training or supervision serve as the basis for a §§ 1983 claim; moreover, a plaintiff alleging municipal liability under §§ 1983 must show there is a direct causal link between a municipal policy or custom and the alleged constitutional deprivation. Nauman v. Bugado, D.Hawai'i 2005, 374 F.Supp.2d 893. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether fire department customs and practices of traveling at excessive speeds, failing to stop at negative right-of-way intersections, and choosing the most direct route regardless of possible danger, were the moving force behind a collision of a fire truck with an automobile which resulted in the death of the automobile's driver, precluding summary judgment for municipality in §§ 1983 action alleging a violation of the substantive due process rights of the driver of the automobile. Becerra ex rel. Perez v. Unified Government of Wyandotte County/Kansas City, Kansas, D.Kan.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 974, reversed 432 F.3d 1163, petition for certiorari filed 2006 WL 1130534. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City was not deliberately indifferent in training its police officers to handle free speech issues, and thus city was not liable under §§ 1983 for officers' violation of protesters' First Amendment rights during parade, despite letter from protesters' attorney requesting that city police officers receive training regarding protection of unpopular messages, where officers completed state-mandated training, which included training on First Amendment issues, and there was no evidence of pervasive pattern of inadequate training in area of protecting First Amendment rights. Grove v. City of York, Penn., M.D.Pa.2004, 342 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestee's claims, arising from allegedly improper training and supervision of assistant district attorneys in connection with impermissibly suggestive showup identification of arrestee, failed to support §§ 1983 claim on motion for summary judgment because deliberate indifference could not be established; there was no showing that there was possibility of proving history of assistant district attorneys mishandling evidence of showup identification, which, as in instant case, took place in jail cell and followed arrest based on police witnessing commission of crime. Wray v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1352(4) training must be so obvious, and inadequacy of training so likely to result in violation of constitutional rights, that jury could reasonably attribute to policymakers a deliberate indifference to training needs. Rex v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 1008. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Merely showing that a municipal officer engaged in less than careful scrutiny of an applicant resulting in a generalized risk of harm is not enough to meet the rigorous requirements of deliberate indifference necessary to impose Section 1983 liability on a municipality based on inadequate hiring theory; municipal liability in the hiring context requires a finding that particular officer was highly likely to inflict the particular injury suffered by the plaintiff. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1352(1)

City police department's alleged failure to adequately investigate single incident of officers' use of excessive force against fellow officer misidentified as perpetrator of armed robbery and carjacking, and departmental memorandum of agreement, were insufficient to establish existence of municipal policy, as required to state claim under § 1983 for department's alleged demonstration of deliberate indifference to officer's constitutional rights; single incident was insufficient to establish city's liability, and memorandum that did not cite specific examples of misconduct was merely evidence of department's awareness of prior problem and an effort to improve city's practices relating to investigation and discipline of police misconduct. Byrd v. District of Columbia, D.D.C.2003, 297 F.Supp.2d 136, affirmed 2004 WL 885228. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1352(5)

Where municipality, in face of objectively obvious need for more or better training or supervision of its employees, fails to take action, custom or policy that deprived plaintiff of his constitutional rights may be inferred in determining whether to hold municipality liable under § 1983 for inadequate training or supervision of its employees. Jessamy v. City of New Rochelle, New York, S.D.N.Y.2003, 292 F.Supp.2d 498. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Assuming that new police chief's failure to act in his first weeks in office to remedy city's alleged unconstitutional policy or custom regarding use of excessive force was a violation of a clearly established constitutional right, he was entitled to qualified immunity from § 1983 excessive force claim of police detainee; it was reasonable for the chief, given that he had only recently been appointed head of the department, not to have acted yet to address the alleged problem. Jones v. City of Hartford, D.Conn.2003, 285 F.Supp.2d 174. Civil Rights 1376(6)

If a municipal employee violates another's constitutional rights, the municipality can be held liable under § 1983 if it had a policy or custom of failing to train its employees and that failure to train caused the constitutional violation, providing the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Policy or custom that permits unconstitutional practices to occur or continue, which would support imposition of liability in § 1983 action on supervisory officials, may be inferred from acts or omissions of supervisory officials serious enough to amount to gross negligence or deliberate indifference to constitutional rights of the plaintiff. Morris v. Eversley, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 196. Civil Rights 1355

To establish municipal liability under § 1983 with proof that a policymaker failed to adequately train their subordinates so as to establish that the municipality acted with deliberate indifference to an individual's civil rights, deliberate indifference can be proven with evidence that the municipality was given notice of the possibility that its employees were violating citizens' constitutional rights, and failed to make any meaningful investigation into the charges or failed to discipline subordinates who violated civil rights. Carbajal v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 415. Civil Rights 1352(1)

To establish deliberate indifference, as required for a supervisor to be held liable under § 1983, a plaintiff must show that the supervisor had notice that training procedures and supervision were inadequate and were likely to result in a constitutional violation. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx.

127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1355

Supervisory liability under § 1983 is premised upon a showing that the supervisory official was deliberately indifferent or exhibited reckless disregard to the conduct by his subordinate that violated plaintiff's constitutional rights. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1355

To demonstrate deliberate indifference of a supervisor for purpose of establishing supervisory liability under § 1983, a plaintiff must show (1) a grave risk of harm, (2) the defendant's actual or constructive knowledge of that risk, and (3) his failure to take easily available measures to address the risk. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 263 F.Supp.2d 291. Civil Rights 1355

Given fairly particularized training police officers received at police academy in use of neck restraints and other specific defense tactics, county's force policy was reasonable, did not exhibit a deliberate indifference to rights of county's citizenry, and was insufficient to establish that county disregarded a known risk that its officers would ignore their training at the police academy and improperly utilize neck restraints while in action on the field, for purposes of § 1983. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1351(4); Civil Rights 1351(2)

Allegations that a particular officer was improperly trained are insufficient to prove liability, as are claims that a particular injury could have been avoided with better training; only where a municipality's failure or to train or supervise its employees in a relevant respect evidences a deliberate indifference to the rights of its inhabitants can such a shortcoming be properly thought of as a city policy or custom that is actionable under § 1983. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1352(1)

County's alleged failure to provide additional training on the use of neck restraints was so not unreasonable as to constitute deliberate indifference toward arrestee, for purposes of § 1983; in all likelihood, any training provided by county would have been duplicative of training already received by the officers at police academy, and there was no evidence of any prior incidents involving neck restraints by county officers, so as to require corrective measures. Fultz v. Whittaker, W.D.Ky.2003, 261 F.Supp.2d 767, appeal dismissed 88 Fed.Appx. 896, 2004 WL 360389. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To demonstrate deliberate indifference, for purposes of establishing supervisory liability under § 1983, a plaintiff must show (1) a grave risk of harm; (2) the defendant's actual or constructive knowledge of that risk; and (3) his failure to take easily available measures to address the risk. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1355

Complaint was sufficient to state a claim against superintendent under § 1983 based on failure to properly evaluate, select, train, instruct and supervise police officer, who sexually molested female student; superintendent's alleged negligence could have resulted in deliberate indifference if superintendent knew or had reason to know that officer was prone to such improper behavior. Medina Perez v. Fajardo, D.Puerto Rico 2003, 257 F.Supp.2d 467. Civil Rights 1395(5)

City did not act with deliberate indifference consistent with an official custom or policy in allegedly failing to adequately train police dog that bit arrestee, and thus city was not liable in arrestee's §§ 1983 action, where city extensively trained dog for use by police force and there was no showing that city was aware of dog's alleged vicious tendencies. Chatman v. City of Johnstown, PA., C.A.3 (Pa.) 2005, 131 Fed.Appx. 18, 2005 WL 1127125, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4) concern, or any combination thereof, so as to support imposition of municipal liability on city in § 1983 suit brought by former police officer claiming retaliation in violation of his First Amendment rights; evidence did not show that police commissioner knew about any retaliation against officer by his subordinates, or show that he was deliberately indifferent. Davis v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 75 Fed.Appx. 827, 2003 WL 22173046, Unreported. Civil Rights 1421

Conclusory allegation of citizen in civil rights action, that "these officers did not have the proper training or supervision, if they did they would have acted in Gross negligence," failed to allege facts that municipality acted with deliberate indifference and that police officers' actions were directly caused by inadequacy in training or supervision by the municipality. Canady v. Unified Government of Wyandotte County/Kansas City, KS, C.A.10 (Kan.) 2003, 68 Fed.Appx. 165, 2003 WL 21399030, Unreported. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Detainee did not show that city or county acted with "deliberate indifference" to rights of persons with whom police came into contact, as required to succeed on failure to train claim against city or county under § 1983, arising out of incident in which detainee was sprayed with mace by police officer and denied immediate medical care. Wallace v. City of Columbus, S.D.Ohio 2002, 2002 WL 31844688, Unreported. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's alleged negligence in training its employees to distinguish between races when preparing affidavits and warrants for arrest could not form basis for liability in arrestee's §1983 false arrest action; there was no showing of deliberate indifference, i.e. obvious need for more or different training together with high likelihood of violations of constitutional rights from inadequate training. White v. Oklahoma ex rel. Tulsa County Office of Dist. Attorney, N.D.Okla.2002, 250 F.Supp.2d 1319. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Criminal defendant failed to establish that city displayed deliberate indifference by failing to train or to supervise police officers, and thus, city was not liable in § 1983 action, where first officer was exonerated of charge at departmental hearing, defendant provided no evidence about nature of charges against second officer other than charge concerning covering badge numbers which was pursued in disciplinary proceeding and did not demonstrate propensity for violence, and defendant provided no evidence that third officer's discharging firearm was reckless. Velasquez v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.1997, 960 F.Supp. 776. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Evidence that 17 complaints had been filed by individuals against one or more sheriff deputies over five-year period was insufficient to demonstrate sheriff's deliberate indifference to false arrests, for purposes of § 1983 action against sheriff by arrestee who was acquitted of drug charges for which he was arrested; there was no evidence of civil rights complaint that was not properly investigated, nor any instance where discipline should have been, but was not, meted out by sheriff, and arrestee did not cite single inadequacy in sheriff's rules governing discipline of deputies or defect in rules governing use of informants. Lewis v. Meloni, W.D.N.Y.1996, 949 F.Supp. 158. Civil Rights 1358

Municipality and police chief were not deliberately indifferent, for purposes of claim under federal civil rights statute, in failing to train police officers regarding restraining and transporting individuals, including the mentally ill, where all officers were trained, consistent with state law enforcement procedures, in how to deal with potentially emotionally disturbed individuals, use of verbalization skills, taking emotionally disturbed individuals into custody for mental observation, handcuffing, use of force, and monitoring individual when handcuffed, plaintiff failed to assert specific training deficiency known to municipality or police chief, and plaintiff failed to identify pattern of unconstitutional conduct so pervasive as to imply actual or constructive knowledge of conduct on part of municipality or police chief. Estate of Phillips v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.1996, 928 F.Supp. 817, affirmed 123 F.3d 586, rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 1052, 522 U.S. 1116, 140 L.Ed.2d 115. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Circumstances under which municipal liability will attach to claim that municipality failed to adequately train its police officers are fairly limited: inadequacy of police training may serve as basis for § 1983 liability only where failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to rights of persons with whom police come into contact. Pyka v. Village of Orland Park, N.D.Ill.1995, 906 F.Supp. 1196. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Once plaintiff who brings federal civil rights action based on alleged failure of city to train its employees has identified specific training deficiency, plaintiff must establish that inadequacy is result of "deliberate indifference"; "deliberate indifference" standard is not state-of-mind requirement independent of that necessary to state violation of underlying constitutional right, but is test employed to determine when inadequate training can justifiably be said to represent city policy. Hilliard v. Walker's Party Store, Inc., E.D.Mich.1995, 903 F.Supp. 1162. Civil Rights 1352(1)

City did not maintain policy or custom of deliberate indifference to safety of its citizenry which came into contact with members of its police department and thus was not liable, under § 1983, to bystanders allegedly injured when officer fired at fleeing suspect; city's policy forbade officers from applying deadly force unless threat posed by assailant to officer or public outweighed risk, to public, from use of deadly force, and evidence did not support inference that city ever disregarded policy or failed to train officers to conform their conduct to policy. Porter v. Jameson, M.D.Ala.1995, 889 F.Supp. 1484. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Municipality's guidelines addressing police officers' conduct during high-speed pursuits did not constitute deliberate indifference on part of municipality policy makers with respect to possible violations of constitutional rights resulting from such pursuits, where guidelines directed pursuing officers to weigh necessity of immediate apprehension against danger created and to abandon pursuit if concerns did not justify its continuance; thus, motorcyclist injured during high-speed pursuit could not maintain § 1983 action against municipality on grounds of deficient guidelines. Carroll v. Borough of State College, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 47 F.3d 1160 . Civil Rights 1352(4)

County was immune from suit under both Maine and Federal Civil Rights Acts in action brought by husband of victim who was shot and killed in her home by police officers during attempt to execute warrantless entry and arrest, where sheriff who was county's primary policymaker was not deliberately indifferent to need to provide additional training to police officers and thus alleged failure to provide such training could not justifiably be said to represent county policy. Hegarty v. Somerset County, D.Me.1994, 848 F.Supp. 257, stay granted 25 F.3d 17, affirmed in part and remanded 53 F.3d 1367, certiorari denied 116 S.Ct. 675, 516 U.S. 1029, 133 L.Ed.2d 524. 812. ---- Negligence, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

County did not deprive swimmer of his right to life for purposes of civil rights statute on ground that it grossly negligently trained one of its lifeguards who then failed in attempt to rescue swimmer from peril of ocean, which was not peril created by governmental agency. Bradberry v. Pinellas County, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1986, 789 F.2d 1513. Civil Rights 1039

No act or omission of city in areas of recruiting, hiring, training, supervising, or disciplining police officer constituted reckless conduct or gross negligence that would render city liable under civil rights statute [42 U.S.C.A. § 1983] to survivors of fellow police officer shot and killed by first officer while in pursuit of a fleeing suspect. McKenna v. City of Memphis, C.A.6 (Tenn.) 1986, 785 F.2d 560. Civil Rights 1088(1)

City could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for any unreasonable detention and seizure of plaintiff who allegedly was beaten and arrested for creating public disturbance when he was having epileptic seizure, based on theory of negligent hiring of police officer, absent showing of facts in officer's background indicating that obvious consequence of hiring him would be violation of specific rights assertedly violated. Adams v. City of Camden, D.N.J.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 263. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Parents and child who sued city failed to establish §§ 1983 claim based on inadequate hiring, stemming from assault that allegedly occurred while child was at pre-placement facility after removal, where each facility employee who worked directly with children prepared employment application and submitted to criminal background check, and all facility employees were cleared through State Central Register. Phillips ex rel. Green v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2006, 453 F.Supp.2d 690. Civil Rights 1352(6)

It was not plainly obvious that janitor at county courthouse would rape minor performing community service at courthouse, and thus county was not liable under §§ 1983 for negligent hiring of janitor, even though background check would have revealed numerous convictions, where criminal record did not indicate that janitor had any history of violence towards women, violence towards minors, kidnapping, or any type of sexual assault. Doe v. Patton, E.D.Ky.2005, 381 F.Supp.2d 595, reconsideration denied, affirmed 2006 WL 959812. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Negligence was not adequate basis for imposing liability upon municipality under § 1983, where motorcyclist alleged that city's failure to adequately train police officers as to methods for conducting high-speed pursuits resulted in constitutional injury to motorcyclist; motorcyclist was required to show deliberate indifference as to constitutional rights on part of municipality's policy makers. Carroll v. Borough of State College, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 47 F.3d 1160. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Supervisor may be liable under § 1983 where there is complete failure to train subordinate employees or where training offered is so reckless or grossly negligent that future misconduct is nearly inevitable. Wilson v. State of Kan., D.Kan.1993, 816 F.Supp. 670. Civil Rights 1355

There was no showing of gross negligence on the part of city in connection with its training of officers in methods to check accuracy of information on which they base arrest of persons for failing to register as sex offenders, so that city could not be held liable by arrest by one officer who had allegedly failed to make sufficient checks before arresting the plaintiff. Kirk v. Hesselroth, N.D.Cal.1988, 707 F.Supp. 1149, affirmed 914 F.2d 262. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Village could not be held liable to former police officer under §§ 1983 when village officials did not violate former officer's constitutional rights and former officer did not identify official village policy under which officials were supposed to have acted. Voyticky v. Village of Timberlake, Ohio, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2005, 412 F.3d 669. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Absent showing that alleged inadequacy of training of police commander was result of deliberate or conscious choice such as is necessary to establish municipal policy, municipality could not be held liable for shooting of plaintiff's decedent in his home on theory that city failed to train commander adequately in proper procedures for arresting suspects in their homes. Alexander v. City and County of San Francisco, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1994, 29 F.3d 1355, certiorari denied 115 S.Ct. 735, 513 U.S. 1083, 130 L.Ed.2d 638. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's failure to train police officers regarding arrest procedures was proper basis for liability in civil rights action arising from injuries sustained by arrestee. Rymer v. Genuine issues of material fact, regarding whether borough had policy or custom of arresting and detaining juveniles for underage drinking, precluded summary judgment on minor child's Monell claim against borough under §§ 1983, stemming from his arrest and detention after dropping bottles of beer that he was holding and fleeing from officer. Davis ex rel. Davis v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 790. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City could not be liable under §§ 1983 for failure to supervise and train police officer, who allegedly used excessive force on arrestee by hitting arrestee with baton, on the proper use of his baton, where city had official policy that no officer could use or carry a baton unless he had been properly certified by a training officer or the police training academy on its use, officer received such training, and there was no showing that city had notice that officer required additional training or supervision. Reed v. City of Lavonia, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1347. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Complaint alleging unreasonable arrest by officer was sufficient to state § 1983 claim against municipal employer for inadequate training; complaint alleged that officer's conduct was caused by or was in conformity with official policy of city, thereby providing city with fair notice of claim. McGrath v. MacDonald, D.Mass.1994, 853 F.Supp. 1. Civil Rights 1395(6)

814. ---- Discipline of subordinates, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Minor child who sued borough and police officers, alleging constitutional violations in connection with his arrest and detention, failed to establish that borough had policy or custom of inadequately training its officers in use of force, as required to maintain Monell claim against borough under §§ 1983; child did not show how alleged failure to train reflected deliberate or conscious choice by borough, in light of officers' training with respect to force continuum. Davis ex rel. Davis v. Borough of Norristown, E.D.Pa.2005, 400 F.Supp.2d 790. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Failure to discipline subordinate for unconstitutional conduct gives rise to separate constitutional claim against superior under § 1983 only if failure to discipline is result of custom or policy. Greiner v. City of Champlin, D.Minn.1993, 816 F.Supp. 528, rescinded 27 F.3d 1346. Civil Rights 1355

815. ---- Disclosure of information, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

District attorney was not liable under §§ 1983 or 1985 for failure to train prosecutors under his supervision based upon prosecutors' alleged failure to disclose exculpatory evidence in criminal trial, as required by Brady; although prosecutors had failed to disclose exculpatory evidence in a small number of cases during 25-year period, the office had handled tens of thousands of criminal cases during that period, and there was no evidence that district attorney's training or supervision was obviously inadequate and plainly would result in violations of constitutional rights. Cousin v. Small, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 325 F.3d 627, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 181, 540 U.S. 826, 157 L.Ed.2d 48. Civil Rights 1358; Conspiracy 13

Physician who obtained writ of habeas corpus based on state's failure to produce confidential informant essential to his entrapment defense to charge of selling cocaine, which led to his acquittal on retrial, failed to state valid § 1983 claim that city violated his civil rights by failing to train prosecutors to produce confidential informants, as city could not be held liable for exercise of trial court's discretion in refusing to compel identification based on determination that disclosure was immaterial to defense. DiBlasio v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 1996, 102 F.3d 654. Civil Rights 1088(5)

County's alleged failure to train employee as to confidentiality of presentence reports of youthful offenders did not amount to policy or custom for which county or employee in official capacity could be held liable in § 1983 action; youthful offender relied only upon one alleged incident of improper disclosure and did not allege that county repeatedly ignored or failed to investigate prior, illicit disclosures by probation personnel. Soucie v. County of Monroe, W.D.N.Y.1990, 736 F.Supp. 33. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Borough was liable to family members for police officer's public disclosure of fact that husband/father was infected with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) virus because it failed to adequately train officers about AIDS and need to keep identity of AIDS carriers confidential; failure to provide officers with any training despite knowledge that other departments had taken such precautions due to nature of disease and public perceptions amounted to deliberate indifference to privacy rights of family members. Doe v. Borough of Barrington, D.N.J.1990, 729 F.Supp. 376. Civil Rights 1352(4)

816. ---- High speed chase, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

City police department's policy relating to high speed pursuits was not unconstitutional, and there was no evidence of additional incidents of allegedly unconstitutional actions stemming from policy, to impose municipal liability for police officer's actions in blocking path of fleeing motorcycle with his squad car. Donovan v. City of Milwaukee, C.A.7 (Wis.) 1994, 17 F.3d 944. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Municipality policy makers were not liable for alleged failure to train police officers in pursuit techniques under § 1983; officer involved in pursuit at issue testified that he received instruction and training on pursuit driving, including practice driving sessions, and in determining when pursuit should be abandoned due to safety concerns, and criticism of expert on behalf of plaintiff injured during police pursuit was not supported by facts and did not support conclusion that policy makers were deliberately indifferent. Carroll v. Borough of State College, M.D.Pa.1994, 854 F.Supp. 1184, affirmed 47 F.3d 1160. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Representatives of motorcycle passenger killed during high speed chase with police officer clearly alleged that town provided no specialized training to its law enforcement officers on subject of high speed chases which supported inference of deliberate indifference to rights of public and stated claim of inadequate training against town which could serve as basis for § 1983 liability. Frye v. Town of Akron, N.D.Ind.1991, 759 F.Supp. 1320. Civil Rights 1395(5)

Failure of police sergeant to order termination of highspeed chase did not give rise to liability under § 1983 where motorcyclist posed danger, pursuit may have been attempt to mitigate potential harm that might result from his actions, chase was justified in order to ascertain license plate of motorcycle, state trooper knew location of motorist at all times, and sergeant did not know of any intention by town constable to establish roadblock. Stanulonis v. Marzec, D.Conn.1986, 649 F.Supp. 1536. Civil Rights 1088(1)

817. ---- Municipalities, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Monell civil rights claim does not provide a separate cause of action for the failure by the government to train its employees; it extends liability to a municipal organization where that organization's failure to train, or the policies or customs that it has sanctioned, led to an independent constitutional violation. Segal v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2006, 459 F.3d 207. Civil Rights 1352(1)

City was liable under § 1983 for administration for children's services' (ACS) practice of removing children from custody of their mothers under New York law based on mothers' failure to prevent children from witnessing domestic violence against mothers, if such practice violated mothers' or children's constitutional rights, based on failure to train ACS employees; city policy-makers knew that ACS staff would face instances where children had seen their mother battered, that there was history of removals in that circumstance, and that wrong choices in those circumstances would cause ACS to deprive parents and children of their constitutional rights. question conformed to 116 Fed.Appx. 313, 2004 WL 2712425. Civil Rights 1352(6)

Woman with Down Syndrome failed to establish that city had a deliberate policy of failing to train or supervise its officers in how to act with non-violent disabled individuals, as required to establish municipal liability, for purposes of woman's § 1983 claims against city and police officers in their official capacities alleging Fourth Amendment violations occurred when she was seized and involuntarily hospitalized by officers; even if the officer's conduct indicated that the officer personally was untrained in this area, the evidence made available through discovery showed that the city did have training procedures in place to assist its officers in interacting with non-violent disabled individuals. Anthony v. City of New York, C.A.2 (N.Y.) 2003, 339 F.3d 129. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Claim of violation of § 1983, which is based on persistent, widespread practice of city officials or employers, may in appropriate case also encompass allegations that policymaker failed to act affirmatively, including failure adequately to train subordinate. Burge v. St. Tammany Parish, C.A.5 (La.) 2003, 336 F.3d 363, rehearing denied, certiorari denied 124 S.Ct. 1074, 540 U.S. 1108, 157 L.Ed.2d 895. Civil Rights 1352(1)

In order to hold municipality liable under § 1983 for its employees' acts, plaintiff must show that policy of hiring or training caused those acts, and such showing requires proof that training or hiring procedures of municipality's policymaker were inadequate, municipality's policymaker was deliberately indifferent in adopting hiring or training policy, and inadequate hiring or training policy directly caused plaintiff's injuries. Baker v. Putnal, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1996, 75 F.3d 190. Civil Rights 1351(1); Civil Rights 1352(1)

Township, county and district attorney's office were entitled to municipal immunity as to civil rights action brought by family of murdered township officer, alleging that defendants failed to protect officer despite threats from perpetrator; family failed to identify municipal policy or custom that resulted in alleged violations, family did not allege failure to train employees, and risk for harm to public due to lack of employee training was not obvious. Walter v. Pike County, Pennsylvania, M.D.Pa.2006, 2006 WL 3437384. Civil Rights 1376(9)

City was not liable under §§ 1983 for its police officers' alleged use of excessive force in effectuating plaintiff's arrest where there was no formal policy allowing the use of excessive force, and no showing that police chief, as a final policy-making authority, ratified or condoned the officers' alleged actions. Phillips v. City of Fairfield, E.D.Cal.2005, 406 F.Supp.2d 1101, reconsideration denied 2006 WL 335472. Civil Rights 1351(4)

A municipality may not be held liable under §§ 1983 where the officer's conduct did not actually violate the plaintiff's constitutional rights, even if the municipality has a custom or policy which authorizes or causes constitutional violations. Aguilera v. Baca, C.D.Cal.2005, 394 F.Supp.2d 1203. Civil Rights 1351(1)

Mere assertion that municipality has custom or policy that results in constitutional deprivation, for purpose of §§ 1983 claim against municipality, is insufficient in absence of allegations of fact tending to support, at least circumstantially, such inference. Bradley v. Village of Greenwood Lake, S.D.N.Y.2005, 376 F.Supp.2d 528. Civil Rights 1417

County was not liable under §§ 1983 for failure to discipline or properly supervise individual responsible for forgery of declination letter that removed candidate from the list of eligible candidates for position in police department; there was no evidence of a history of county employees mishandling preservation of authentic declination letters, and whether to forge declination letters was not a difficult choice for county employees, as might require county to put procedure in place to detect such forged letters. Gallo v. Suffolk County Police Dept., E.D.N.Y.2005, 360 F.Supp.2d 502. Civil Rights 1352(5)

A municipality may not be held liable under §§ 1983 solely because it employs a tortfeasor; rather, a municipal "policy" or "custom" must have caused the plaintiff's injury. Perez v. Miami-Dade County, Florida, S.D.Fla.2004,

348 F.Supp.2d 1343, affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded 168 Fed.Appx. 338, 2006 WL 372321. Civil Rights 1345; Civil Rights 1351(1)

If a municipal employee violates another's constitutional rights, the municipality can be held liable under § 1983 if it had a policy or custom of failing to train its employees and that failure to train caused the constitutional violation, providing the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference. Gedrich v. Fairfax County Dept. of Family Services, E.D.Va.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 439. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Proof of repeated complaints against the accused official followed by the failure of any meaningful attempt on the part of the municipality to investigate or prevent further incidents is proper evidence of the failure to supervise, train and discipline so as to constitute a basis for imposition of § 1983 liability against municipality. Dejesus v. Village of Pelham Manor, S.D.N.Y.2003, 282 F.Supp.2d 162. Civil Rights 1352(1)

A plaintiff must produce some evidence from which it can be inferred that the municipality had a custom or practice of failing to make a meaningful investigation into a charge that one of its employees had violated citizens' constitutional rights, or failed to discipline subordinates who violated civil rights, to establish municipal liability for failing to adequately train subordinates to the extent that the failure amounted to deliberate indifference to the rights of citizens under § 1983; mere conclusory allegations are insufficient when unsupported by facts showing that policymakers were aware of the constitutional violations and failed to properly respond. Carbajal v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2003, 271 F.Supp.2d 415. Civil Rights 1417

A municipality may be liable under § 1983 for deficient policies regarding hiring and training where: (1) the municipality's hiring and training practices are inadequate, and (2) the municipality was deliberately indifferent to the rights of others in adopting them, such that the failure to train reflects a deliberate or conscious choice by the municipality. Okocci v. Klein, E.D.Pa.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 603, affirmed 100 Fed.Appx. 127, 2004 WL 1396358, certiorari denied 125 S.Ct. 878, 543 U.S. 1061, 160 L.Ed.2d 790. Civil Rights 1352(1)

Municipality was not liable to arrestee under § 1983 for failure to train police, where evidence of its deliberate indifference was primarily jury verdicts or settlements in handful of excessive force cases and ensuing police department request for review by U.S. Department of Justice, all occurring after incident involving alleged use of excessive force that was premise of lawsuit; although underlying events giving rise to jury verdicts occurred before her arrest and thus might help to establish causation, plaintiff arrestee did not produce evidence that police chief or other municipal policymakers knew or should have known before her arrest that officers were misbehaving to degree that failure to institute excessive force training after earlier events but before her arrest showed deliberate indifference. Forbis v. City of Portland, D.Me.2003, 270 F.Supp.2d 57. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality was not liable under § 1983 for shooting death of house occupant, due to failure to properly train police officers in use of deadly force, when shooting officer had received state mandated training on subject, despite claim that training was inferior to that given in adjacent state. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality was not liable under § 1983 for any excessive force applied by police officer, who shot and killed occupant of house who was to receive mental health evaluation, on grounds that municipality had not adequately trained officer in using deadly force when dealing with emotionally disturbed persons; police had been present at 2,000 prior evaluations, performed without violence, and there was general training involving the emotionally disturbed. La v. Hayducka, D.N.J.2003, 269 F.Supp.2d 566. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Municipality cannot be held liable in § 1983 civil rights action for actions of employee, whether on a failure to train theory or a municipal custom and policy theory, unless employee is found liable on the underlying substantive constitutional claim. Friedman v. City of Overland, E.D.Mo.1996, 935 F.Supp. 1015. Civil Rights 1345

Supervisor's alleged conduct toward two African-American municipal employees over seven years did not reach the level of a policy or custom of discriminatory employment practices at municipal agency, as was required to establish municipality's liability for alleged disparate treatment and racial harassment/hostile work environment; although employee alleged supervisor made four racial comments to the other African-American employee, caused delay in filing his paperwork for a training session, reported employees for driving violations, and gave employees unfavorable assignments, he did not claim municipality had an official written policy of racism. Mitchell v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 2004, 112 Fed.Appx. 662, 2004 WL 2287756, Unreported. Civil Rights 1351(5)

818. ---- Narcotics, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Director of human services did not implement municipal policy by ordering juvenile detention center counselor to submit to a drug test, and thus there was no municipal liability under § 1983, where final policymaking authority with regard to the employee substance abuse policy rested with the director of personnel and the city manager. Hassell v. City of Chesapeake, Virginia, E.D.Va.1999, 64 F.Supp.2d 573, affirmed 230 F.3d 1352. Civil Rights 1351(5)

Lack of nexus between pretrial arrestee's death in cell from prior drug ingestion and town's failure to provide drug training to its police officers precluded town's liability for arrestee's death. Carapellucci v. Town of Winchester, D.Mass.1989, 707 F.Supp. 611. Civil Rights 1088(4)

819. ---- Police officers, hiring, training or supervision, custom or usage

Finding of culpability on part of municipality in § 1983 action based on failure to perform adequate screening prior to hiring of employee cannot depend on mere probability that any officer inadequately screened will inflict any constitutional injury; rather, it must depend on finding that particular employee in question was highly likely to inflict particular injury suffered by plaintiff, and connection between background of particular applicant and specific constitutional violation alleged must be strong. Board of County Com'rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, U.S.Tex.1997, 117 S.Ct. 1382, 520 U.S. 397, 137 L.Ed.2d 626, rehearing denied 117 S.Ct. 2472, 520 U.S. 1283, 138 L.Ed.2d 227, on remand 117 F.3d 239. Civil Rights 1088(1)

City had no civil rights liability for officers' conducting mock arrest of airline employee at behest of her supervisors, where allegedly unconstitutional seizure neither implemented nor executed official policy, ordinance, regulation, or decision by city or any municipal custom. Fuerschbach v. Southwest Airlines Co., C.A.10 (N.M.) 2006, 439 F.3d 1197. Civil Rights 1351(4)

Suspect who brought §§ 1983 failure to train claim against city, related to his being shot with beanbag propellant during riot, failed to submit any facts from which Court of Appeals could infer that city failed to train officers in use of beanbags; suspect submitted no evidence regarding number of incidents of beanbag misuse, any delays in implementing agreement regarding use of beanbags, and officer went through annual trainings regarding use of beanbags. Ciminillo v. Streicher, C.A.6 (Ohio) 2006, 434 F.3d 461. Civil Rights 1420

Woman bringing § 1983 action against city for its alleged failure to prevent her ex-boyfriend and his private investigator from hiring police officers to harass her could not establish a city policy of inadequate investigation into police officer wrongdoing and inadequate discipline of police officers, though city failed to investigate hired officers upon woman's complaints; woman could not establish pattern of failing to investigate complaints. Piotrowski v. City of Houston, C.A.5 (Tex.) 2001, 237 F.3d 567, rehearing en banc denied 251 F.3d 159, certiorari denied 122 S.Ct. 53, 534 U.S. 820, 151 L.Ed.2d 23. Civil Rights 1352(4)

To hold municipality liable under § 1983 for failure to train and supervise police officer, it is not enough to show that situation will arise and that taking wrong course in that situation will result in injuries to citizens; rather, there must be likelihood that failure to train or supervise will result in officer making wrong decision. Sewell v. Town of Lake Hamilton, C.A.11 (Fla.) 1997, 117 F.3d 488, certiorari denied 118 S.Ct. 852, 522 U.S. 1075, 139 L.Ed.2d 753. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City's actions in hiring police officer who had poor driving record despite concerns raised by some officials in hiring process, and failing to require officer to take remedial training following nine incidents of unacceptable driving after he was hired, while not to be condoned, did not shock the conscience as would allow recovery in federal civil rights action against municipality based on substantive due process violation created by city's own conduct after officer hit and fatally injured motorist while speeding through intersection against red light and without using siren while responding to nonemergency call. Williams v. City and County of Denver, C.A.10 (Colo.) 1996, 99 F.3d 1009, rehearing granted, opinion vacated 140 F.3d 855, on rehearing 153 F.3d 730. Civil Rights 1088(1); Civil Rights 1352(4)

Off-duty deputy's private actions in assaulting and attempting to rob victims were intervening causes which precluded any county liability under § 1983 for alleged negligent hiring and supervision even though deputy's disciplinary record may have put his supervisors on alert that he could be violent and prone to use excessive, even illegal, force while performing his duties; county could not reasonably have foreseen that deputy would become free-lance criminal and attack victims as he did. Van Ort v. Estate of Stanewich, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1996, 92 F.3d 831, certiorari denied 117 S.Ct. 950, 519 U.S. 1111, 136 L.Ed.2d 837. Civil Rights 1348

Police chief could not be held liable under section 1983 for failing to properly supervise or train police officer; three prior incidents involving the officer offered by the plaintiff did not sufficiently prove that the chief failed to supervise or that the chief knew that the officer had a propensity for improper use of force and the evidence overwhelmingly indicated that the chief properly trained the officer. Hinshaw v. Doffer, C.A.5 (Tex.) 1986, 785 F.2d 1260. Civil Rights 1358

Under federal statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, governing civil action for deprivation of rights, city could be liable for failure of police officers to receive basic training at state school where state police officers were trained. Rock v. McCoy, C.A.10 (Okla.) 1985, 763 F.2d 394. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City was not liable to arrestee under §§ 1983 for failure to train city police officers who made allegedly false arrest, absent showing that there was more than the single incident of arrestee's arrest, or that anyone at the policymaking level was involved in the arrest. Damiano v. City of Amsterdam, N.D.N.Y.2006, 2006 WL 3721047. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City could not be held liable under §§ 1983 for any unreasonable detention and seizure of plaintiff who allegedly was beaten and arrested for creating public disturbance when he was having epileptic seizure, based on theory of inadequate training or supervision of police officers, absent showing of municipal policy or custom establishing disregard for plaintiff's constitutional rights, or showing that any failure to train resulted in injury to plaintiff. Adams v. City of Camden, D.N.J.2006, 461 F.Supp.2d 263. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City that had established arrest policies was not deliberately indifferent to rights of detainees, as required to establish municipal civil rights liability for failure to train or supervise it officers, absent any showing that it had prior knowledge of past unconstitutional acts by its officers. Burr v. Burns, S.D.Ohio 2006, 439 F.Supp.2d 779. Civil Rights 1352(4)

After-the-fact evidence, and supervisors' alleged failure to take appropriate remedial action in response to police officers' filing of false police reports, was inadequate in civil rights lawsuit to show that municipality had policy of covering up police misconduct by refusing to hold police officers responsible for illegal searches, seizures, and use of excessive force, which allegedly violated citizens' Fourth Amendment rights. Barton v. City and County of Denver, D.Colo.2006, 432 F.Supp.2d 1178. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County's alleged failure to train officers on the legal definition of simple assault did not demonstrate deliberate indifference to §§ 1983 plaintiff's constitutional rights; fact that officers could not give perfect definitions of the crime did not mean that they were inadequately trained. Payne v. DeKalb County, N.D.Ga.2004, 414 F.Supp.2d 1158. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Personal representative of the estate of a police shooting victim failed to prove that city failed to properly train its police officers on how to react when confronted by a citizen with a knife, so as to support imposition of municipal liability under §§ 1983; there was no evidence that the city knew about the alleged multitude of ways that police training could have been improved, or that the need for improvement was so obvious as to imply deliberate indifference. Estate of Smith v. Silvas, D.Colo.2006, 414 F.Supp.2d 1015. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestee sufficiently pled claims against District of Columbia under §§ 1983 and common law for negligent failure to train and supervise police officers, where arrestee alleged that District had duty to properly train, supervise, investigate and correct improper actions of officers, that police chief and District "recklessly" breached that duty, and that breach was direct and proximate cause of substantial and severe injuries sustained by arrestee when officers attacked him without provocation, and eventually assaulted and battered crowd of bystanders that witnessed melee and questioned officers about their conduct. Kivanc v. Ramsey, D.D.C.2006, 407 F.Supp.2d 270. Civil Rights 1395(6)

Absence of any underlying violation, or evidence that municipality had policy, practice or custom of encouraging discrimination, precluded claim that municipality was liable in §§ 1983 action when police department rejected application for police officer position for nondiscriminatory reason that applicant had psychological problems. Rivera v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 392 F.Supp.2d 644. Civil Rights 1351(5)

City could not be liable under §§ 1983 for failure to supervise and train police officer, who allegedly used excessive force on arrestee by hitting arrestee with baton, on the proper use of his baton, where city had official policy that no officer could use or carry a baton unless he had been properly certified by a training officer or the police training academy on its use, officer received such training, and there was no showing that city had notice that officer required additional training or supervision. Reed v. City of Lavonia, M.D.Ga.2005, 390 F.Supp.2d 1347. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Arrestees who sued county, alleging that police officers used excessive force in breaking up party at arrestee's home, failed to establish that county had custom or policy giving rise to alleged liability, as required to maintain §§ 1983 claims; arrestees presented no evidence regarding existence of similar incidents or quality of training by county. Raphael v. County of Nassau, E.D.N.Y.2005, 387 F.Supp.2d 127. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Shopper, who was allegedly assaulted while at shopping mall food court by off-duty police officers moonlighting as mall security guards, alleged statistical evidence that along with the incident alleged and prior complaints against security guard which raised a material question of fact regarding police department policy or custom of acquiescence in unconstitutional conduct, precluding summary judgment in favor of city on shopper's §§ 1983 claim based on city's failure to train its employees. Wahhab v. City of New York, S.D.N.Y.2005, 386 F.Supp.2d 277. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City, whose police officers came to assistance of anther city's officers who had subdued detainee, was liable for failure to train its officers to provide medical care to detainee where city's officers were not informed as to the details and proper interpretation of cities' mutual aid agreement regarding responsibility for medical care. Estate of Owensby v. City of Cincinnati, S.D.Ohio 2004, 385 F.Supp.2d 626, affirmed and remanded 414 F.3d 596, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied, certiorari denied 126 S.Ct. 2023. arrest at the time he allegedly sustained a blow or blows to the head from arresting sheriff's deputy, precluded summary judgment in favor of county, in arrestee's §§ 1983 excessive force claim and his battery claim under Arkansas law. Marley v. Crawford County, Arkansas, W.D.Ark.2005, 383 F.Supp.2d 1129. Federal Civil Procedure 2515

Estate of detainee who died after being stopped by police and shot stated claim for relief under §§1983 against members of city Board of Police Commissioners by alleging that Board members, pursuant to official policy or custom, intentionally and with deliberate indifference failed to instruct and supervise officers who stopped detainee in the use of deadly force. McNeal v. Zobrist, D.Kan.2005, 365 F.Supp.2d 1166. Civil Rights 1395(6)

City's decision to hire police detective did not reflect a conscious disregard for a high risk that detective would deliberately fabricate evidence in violation of arrestees' constitutional rights, so as to support municipal liability under §§ 1983; arrestees' evidence did not establish that detective was less than forthright with the police department about his previous encounters with the law. Doggett v. Perez, E.D.Wash.2004, 348 F.Supp.2d 1179. Civil Rights 1352(4)

In light of strong statement of Court of Appeals, on arrestee's appeal of denial of habeas relief, with respect to inadequate police activity, arrestee's claim under §§ 1983 that city failed to train and supervise police officers about appropriate identification procedures, would not be dismissed on motion for summary judgment, even though police had at least arguable probable cause to arrest him and confirm their arrest by police station showup. Wray v. City of New York, E.D.N.Y.2004, 340 F.Supp.2d 291. Federal Civil Procedure 2491.5

City was not subject to liability under §§ 1983 as result of city's alleged negligent supervision of police officer in connection with arrest, absent evidence of official policy, custom, or pattern. Kling v. Harris Teeter Inc., W.D.N.C.2002, 338 F.Supp.2d 667, affirmed 86 Fed.Appx. 662, 2004 WL 238337. Civil Rights 1352(4)

County policymaker's awareness of need for training for situation in which wrong choice by county employee would frequently cause deprivation of citizen's constitutional rights was not established by grand jury's failure to indict arrestee, police officers' failure to interview secretaries at school at which arrest and underlying incident occurred, police officer's request that arrestee leave school or be arrested, or county district attorney's conduct in providing arrestee with copy of grand jury proceeding at her request, and therefore arrestee did not establish municipal culpability and causation required to support failure to train claim against county and county police department under §§ 1983. Arum v. Miller, E.D.N.Y.2004, 331 F.Supp.2d 99. Civil Rights 1352(4)

Plaintiff may prove her §§ 1983 claim against municipality for failure to train police officers by showing that municipality failed to train officers to handle situation likely to recur and with obvious potential for constitutional violation, or that municipality failed to provide further training after learning of pattern of constitutional violations by officers. Rex v. City of Milwaukee, E.D.Wis.2004, 321 F.Supp.2d 1008. Civil Rights 1352(4)

City and police officers in their official capacities could not be held liable under Section 1983 on excessive force claims based on theories of inadequate supervision and hiring; victim's estate identified no specific facts demonstrating that city had custom or policy of allowing officers to ignore the chain of command, acted with "deliberate indifference" towards its citizens or that the city had actual or constructive notice that its action or failure to act was substantially certain to result in a constitutional violation nor was there a showing that city's hiring practices were defective in general or with respect to particular officers who allegedly used excessive force. Murphy v. Bitsoih, D.N.M.2004, 320 F.Supp.2d 1174. Civil Rights 1352(4); Civil Rights 1358
